"A-alright, milady. Do as thou please. But, ah... by taking these imps outside, dost thou understand that, ah, the treaty...?"

"The Titans. Yes. I understand."

"Excellent. Far be it for us to obstruct thee."

Both cherubs step aside, unbarring the path. I smile sweetly at them and allow the imps to exit, then follow after a moment later.

Passing through Heaven's Gate sends the same waves of disorientation through me as the portals in the Labyrinth Core. A sharp rushing of air impacts my ears, but I adjust within seconds.

A large, hollow chamber greets me. Wherever we are, it's dark and cave-like. The imps glance around, shifting from one foot to the other. They're unsettled. So am I.

We continue walking together, and Gabriel speaks inside my mind.

Dost thee remember this place, Michael?

I wish I could forget.

Gabriel's voice tightens. Thou dost lay the blame on thyself, but I was at fault too. I should have helped Uriel.

We all should, Raphael says. I couldn't tell the changeling apart from Michael. 'Twas a dastardly deed.

I listen to their conversation, and a sickening sense of dread overcomes me.

Hold on. Uriel. Changeling. Are you referring to... to when Samantha killed her?

Seconds pass. The sound of Uzziel's bare feet slapping against the damp ground is the only sound. Even the imps are unusually quiet.

Raphael coughs. Kuh. Samantha. Surely, thou referreth to Belial.

Yes. Her. What happened?

That witch. That she-devil, Michael whispers, rage in his voice. I hate her. I hate everything about her. Belial assumed my form at the beginning of the War in Heaven. She told Uriel to cease her defense of Heaven's outer gates. When Uriel refused... Belial killed her.

Silence follows.

I stare ahead blankly, paying little attention to anything Uzziel sees.

Son of a bitch. I don't believe it. I mean… I do, but it's simply… unbelievable.

Hope spoke to Neil six years ago. I overheard the conversation. Hope warned Neil that Samantha killed Uriel. I didn't understand the full context back then, but… but now…

I don't know what to do. Samantha is Phoebe's close friend. If she did kill an Archangel, what does that mean?

Was Hope right?

Do we have a double-agent in our midst?

You're more reserved than usual, Solomon says. Having second thoughts? About Samantha, I mean.

A few. You knew what she did, didn't you? When Hope told me about Samantha and Uriel… and when I apologized to Samantha, you were there both times. Why didn't you say anything?

I didn't feel the need.

That's a terrible answer.

Solomon pauses to think before replying. Well, Jason, don't you believe people can change?

Maybe. But there's a difference between shifts in personality and… and… murdering someone!

Michael interjects. I don't believe anyone can change. We are who we are. If the Creator wished for me to be a fair-skinned boyish figure, I'd have little say in the matter. Instead, he created me to be the ultimate warrior angel. As for Belial, he made her into a lying, murderous snake.

But if the Creator has a plan, then wouldn't that mean he planned for Belial to kill Uriel?

He works in mysterious ways.

I cough. Krmph. If you ask me, the Creator sounds like an asshole.

Blasphemy! Michael barks. I won't hear another word.

Suit yourself.

I try to swallow the rock in my throat. I want to push it down into my stomach, but Uzziel's body prevents me from doing that. When these visions conclude, I'll have to confront Samantha for the second time.

Maybe murderers can change.

I pray they can.

As if reading my thoughts, Solomon speaks. These visions will reveal everything you need to know, Jason. The War in Heaven was the most pivotal moment in Earth's history. It shaped everything to come. Listen carefully, open your mind, and soon you may understand a millionth of the things I do.

Yeah, sure. Don't pat yourself on the back too hard.

After a minute, Uzziel and the imps wind their way through another underground cave. A wall of light slams against our faces as she finds the cave exit. The midday sun shines overhead, scorching the land with hundred-degree heat.

Reflexively, Uzziel wipes my forehead. Her forehead. Fuck, I have a hard time keeping things straight.

"Okay~! We're here. Welcome to thy new home."

Satan slowly inches out of the cave opening. A small plateau leads to a sheer drop of several hundred feet, and after that, the mountain veers into a steep incline until it reaches the base a mile below.

"Um... mudder Uzziel?"

"Yeees~?"

"We no can fly..."

I almost hear the gears turning in Uzziel's mind.

"Oh. Right. Well, we wanted the entrance to Heaven to be as remote as possible. This is Mount Sinai's steepest face."

Satan wrings his stubby fingers together, glances at the other imps, then back to me. "Errmm... me no want go. Where get food? Where get sleep?"

"Thou shalt have to find a way to survive," I reply softly. "I'm sorry, love. It hurts me to say, but thou dids't bring this upon thyself. I tried to help thee many times, but disobedience was all ye gave me in return. Fear not. There are mice and bugs and fruit to eat on Earth as well. As long as thy wits stay sharp, thou shalt survive for many a moon. I will try to visit now and then, but I have other children to care for."

Turning to the entrance, I motion with my hands. Energy flows through my body in a way I've never experienced before. Warmth and joy send ecstasy coursing through my veins. The mountainside flattens out, turning into a steep, unclimbable slope. However, the texture smooths out like polished bedrock, creating a slide all the way to the base of the mountain.

For a moment, I half-expect Uzziel to ride it, but she doesn't. Instead, she nudges Satan with her foot. "Go on. Slide to the bottom. I mustn't be outside of Heaven for long. It violates the ancient treaty."

Satan inches toward the ledge, but backs away at the last second and grabs my leg. "Ahh! No want go! Very scary! Big fall! Hurt!"

"Don't worry. I added soft grass to the end of the ride. It will be fun!"

Satan shakes his head. Tears well up in his eyes. "Scared! Scared, mudder!!"

The other imps nod, but one approaches the edge. "Pft. Satan big scaredy. Me go first. Easy."

Without saying another word, the little guy hops off and begins hurtling toward the bottom. His scream of terror turns to excitement, but within a few seconds, his voice fades into the distance.

"See? Bael isn't scared! Now, go! Thou art the leader. Leaders never cry."

"Yeah," another imp says. "G-git movin' boss. No be little crybaby."

"Shaddup, Agares!" Satan growls at the other. "Me no scared o-of anything..."

Uzziel rolls her eyes. "So thou dost claim."

It takes some coaxing, but Satan eventually stands at the precipice, inhaling several times as he builds up the courage to move.

"Hurry up!" A squeaky female voice yells. "Gah! Sick of waiting! Stupid man!"

She lunges forward and kicks Satan in the back, knocking him over the ledge. His scream of terror, unlike Bael's, never turns to excitement.

I groan. "Lucy. That was rude."

"No care. Men always slow. Me go next."

The ugly little imp girl, whose only indication of femininity is her nasally voice, hops off and begins sliding. She doesn't let out a sound as she rushes toward the bottom.

The others follow after, each giving a fifteen-second buffer so that they don't land on their friends.

One final imp remains. He glances up at me. "Mudder... we see you again?"

"Of course, Agares. I'll visit someday. In fact-"

Before I can finish speaking, footsteps from inside the cave catch my attention. I turn and spot a massive, fifteen-foot Archangel stomping toward me. I recognize him immediately as Gabriel. The Goliath of a winged being scrapes the ceiling with his forehead, but he ignores that fact, and his eyes lock on me.

"Uzziel! What art thou doing?!"

"Um..."

Uzziel's voice cracks. An instant later, she shoves her foot out and kicks Agares over the side. The helpless imp screams as he hurtles toward the bottom.

"...Nothing?"

Gabriel stares at me blankly. "D-dids't thou just kill... that little...?"

"What? No!" I quickly point over the cliff. "I banished the troublemakers! Now they won't cause trouble any longer."

Gabriel scowls, lumbers toward me, and peers over the cliff. The sound of Agares' screams fade as he plunges toward the grassy plains below.

"Damnation, Uzziel. Earth is Titan territory. Thou must consult me before treading upon their domain."

I shove my tongue against my cheek and cross my arms. "Had I done so, thou would have sentenced my children to death."

"Obviously! Gah! I shouldn't even be this far from Heaven, nor should thee. I have half a mind to fly down there-"

Gabriel's nostrils flare. He closes his eyes and turns back toward the inside of the cave. "I love thee, little sister, but I hate how ye test my patience. If the Titans find out..."

"We'll say the imps ran away."

"They won't believe that lie for a moment."

I exhale. "Well, feel free to recover the little ones if it bothers thee that much."

"Thou knoweth I can't do that. I shouldn't be this far from Heaven as things are now."

"Mhm."

Gabriel clicks his tongue. "Tsk. Come along, then. I swear by the Creator's name, if thou should pull a stunt like that ever again..."

"Don't worry, brother, I won't. I won't!"

I fall into step beside Gabriel and smile sweetly, beaming sunshine up at him. "Art thou going to spank me?"

"Please, Uzziel. Contain thy vulgarity."

"Haha! Thou art blushing!"

"No. I'm not."

Uzziel continues poking fun at him all the way back to Heaven's Gate. I, on the other hand, feel weirded out by her strange overtones.

Gabriel, was your sister always so... so... flirty?

The Archangel's voice rumbles in my mind. 'Twas in her nature. Uzziel was the Archangel of Creation. Some called her Earthmother or Gaia. As a goddess of fertility, she always poked and prodded at others. She was a freer spirit than the rest of us.

A blessing and a curse, Raphael adds. Truthfully, young Hero, all angels were the same age. To say Uzziel was our younger sister would be to utter a lie. The Creator formed us from the dust of the cosmos all at once. Uzziel always was one to trust others blindly, even to her detriment. Her naivete won her many friends... but also allowed her enemies to exploit her.

After a few seconds, the vision fades away.

I reappear before the campfire alongside Solomon, with the Archangels in the same positions as before.

"Uzziel seemed like... like a genuinely wonderful person."

My words make the Archangel of Courage bow his head and close his eyes. "She was our precious, blessed sister. I would have given anything to protect her."

Gabriel walks around the fire and rests his hand on Michael's back. "Fret not, little brother. Thou dids't give everything up for her sake."

"And it wasn't enough."

Silently, I watch the two comfort each other. Until now, Michael has repeatedly performed actions that depict him in a negative, violent light. He seems unwilling to listen to reason or to look at things from the other side.

Something happened to him. I don't know what... but it changed him. It hardened his will. I can only imagine it was a loss unlike any other, something not even I could recover from.

Muriel... Cassiel. Michael lost two fellow Archangels, his sisters, during the war against the dragons. Could that have been what changed him? Perhaps something else?

Solomon claps his hands, snapping me out of my thoughts. "Okay! Well, this is a touching moment, but I'm afraid we still have much to cover. Shall I move onto the next vision?"

Michael wipes at his eyes. "Yes. Go ahead. Don't mind me."

I nod. "Send me in, uh, captain."

Solomon scrunches up his face. "I should warn you... this next vision is... disturbing."

"Just show me. I don't want to waste time."

"Alright. You asked for it."

Author note:

This is Uzziel!

This is Uzziel in a slightly different artstyle!

This is Uzziel, but an outdated character design.

Second version!

This is Samael.

Part 093: The King Under The Mountain

Solomon's Crown works its magic, allowing a new vision to appear. Once my eyes adjust, I quickly discover I'm no longer in Uzziel's body. Instead, my head hovers less than a foot off the ground. I walk along, taking tiny little steps, and every so often, a red-skinned arm with five chubby fingers reaches out to grab things in front of me.

I'm in an imp's body. But which one?

"Oy, Satan!" A nasally voice addresses me, helpfully answering my question. I turn to face the speaker, who turns out to be several inches taller than me. I haven't a clue who he or she is. All of the little red buggers look identical to me.

"Find grub?" Satan asks. My mouth moves along with his, just as it did when I was inside Uzziel's body.

"Mhm! Big and juicy! Agares lift rock and they crawl everywhere."

My stomach growls. "Good find. Me hungry."

I toddle after the other imp, whose name I still don't know. My stumpy little legs are so small that hopping over pebbles and stones makes me feel like an Olympic gymnast. Christ, seeing things from an imp's perspective makes me appreciate standing seven feet tall.

The air is noticeably chillier than when I was last inside Uzziel's body. Clouds obscure the sun above, and every shadow sends a shiver down my back. If I had to guess, I'd say several months or years have passed since the last vision.

A thinning forest with many dead trees looms ahead. Each one seems ten times taller than they should be, likely due to my short stature. Satan glances at the treetops above, showing several crows perched on various branches. All of them eye me with cold, calculating eyes. They're scavengers, and they're waiting for my death.

Dry grass cracks and pops under our feet. I turn to look at the other imp. "Bael. You not cold?"

"Nah. Me fine. You guys bunch of wimps."

Satan rubs his arms and shivers, forcing me to mimic him. A tingling of worry seems to buzz in the back of his mind, as if time is running out, and he doesn't know what to do.

Eventually, after climbing over tree roots and sliding under logs, Bael and I stop in a small clearing where the rest of the imps clap their hands giddily.

"Ah, Satan. You hungry?" One of the imps clutches several wriggling bugs in one of his hands. "Me find big blue beetles. Whole bunch of them!"

"Mmm. Them look tasty," I say, salivating at the little- no! Augh! Gross! Don't tell me Satan's going to eat- AHHH no, no, NO!!

Satan lunges his hand out and grabs the six-legged critter with his fat fingers and drools. "You find best bugs, Agares."

"Yeah, me do. Not many around."

As Satan brings the bug closer to his mouth, violent spasms of fear wash through my mind. No, god, please! Don't eat it! Oh, for fuck's sake!

CHOMP.

Half of the wriggling insect explodes in my mouth. My teeth mangle and chew it into progressively tinier pieces as its guts spill through my teeth. Every time a new chunk of the bug hits my tongue, I desperately try to spit it out, but I can't! I can't leave the vision!

Solomon!! You did this deliberately! You wanted me to suffer!!

When Satan finally swallows, the gory hunks of the bug roll down my throat, sticking to my esophagus as they fall. Satan smacks his lips, my lips, and just as I feel relief that it's over... he shoves the rest of the bug inside.

CHOMP.

I want to die!! Please, God, kill me now! I don't deserve this!!

* * *

By the time the fifth insect goes down, I feel numb. Perhaps it's Stockholm syndrome, but I'm almost growing to enjoy the taste. No, that can't be right. It's awful. Come on, Me. Take your mind off the bitter flavor. Think of Phoebe. Think of Daisy.

While I try to cope with the horrible things Satan has stuffed in my mouth, he smacks my lips pleasantly. "Very tasty. Want more."

Agares shakes his head. "That all me found. Too cold. Bugs hiding very sneaky."

The imps chitter and chatter amongst themselves for a few minutes, but then I cock my head. "Hmm? Where Lucy? Where Deebs?"

Satan glances around, and I count the imps. Two of them are, indeed, missing.

"They go explore. Lucy say she saw cave," Agares replies. "Maybe cave warm. Diablo say he want protect Lucy."

"Cave? Hmm..." Satan trails off and taps his lip. "Me want see. Where they go?"

Agares points toward a nearby mountain. "That way."

"Okay. We go take look."

All the imps nod and follow after me. Agares and I trot toward the mountain, saying nothing to each other as we walk. The muttering of various imps behind us turns into a dull hum as they whisper about this and that. I ignore them.

After several minutes, Agares' eyes dart to the side. "Oooh!" He trots to the left and leans down beside a stump to look at something.

"What see?" I ask.

Agares grins and plucks a tiny animal off the tree bark. It wiggles in his hand but doesn't try to flee. "Look! Lissard!"

"Look tasty. You gonna eat it?"

"No! Lissards are friend!" Agares shield it protectively. "They eat bugs. Just like us!"

I shake my head. "Yeah. Sure. You weird."

Agares pets the little creature, then places it back on the log and putters over to me. "We almost there. Big mountain just past trees."

After a few more minutes of walking, we step out of the tree cover and enter the shadow of a grassy cliff. Unlike Mount Sinai, this one appears much smaller, perhaps only a few hundred feet tall. Calling it a 'mountain' might be giving it too much credit, but it's also a little too big to be a hill...

Whatever.

Amidst the greenery coating the mega-hill, two red spots halfway up pop out like black dots on a white piece of paper. Lucy and Diablo slowly head toward the top, but the tall grass makes it hard for them to move. Their climbing is slow and labored as they wade through obstacles in their path.

"Yo! Diablo!" Bael steps ahead of the group and yells, but his shrill voice barely carries up the hill. "Hey! Ugly! Stupid!"

Bael howls several insults, but the climbers don't hear him. He gives up and tosses his hands in the air. "Buttheads. Hate when peeps ignore me. Sheesh."

"We follow them," I say, gesturing toward our fellow imps. "Nothing better do."

Agares nods. "Okay. Sound good- ah! Valac! What you doing?!"

I turn around to spot one of the imps holding a dead rabbit by the ears. Unlike the others, this imp's appearance is somewhat deformed. His jaw juts forward noticeably, giving him one hell of an underbite. He doesn't answer, but instead opts to slowly claw out the rabbit's innards, throwing them on the ground bit by bit.

"Valac. You not waste food. That bad," I say. "Stop it."

The creepy imp raises his eyes to meet mine. "It no scream."

"Huh? The bunny?"

"Yes."

I open my mouth to say something else but think better of it. "Never mind. Let's go..."

Soon, all the imps begin climbing the hill. A quick glance backward reveals Valac trailing the rest. He's much slower since he continues to hold the rabbit.

What the hell is his deal?

I don't get an answer. As the imps ascend, one of the two we're following glances down and spots us. He (or she) waves, then grabs the other and points at us.

It doesn't take long for them to climb down and meet us.

"Why you follow us?" Diablo asks. I only know it's him because his voice is slightly deeper than Lucy's, though it's still pretty squeaky.

"Me heard you find cave. Me want see."

Diablo shakes his head. "No. Very dark. Too scary. Me help Lucy look for berries now. Forget cave."

I cross my arms. "Me leader. Me decide if scary or not."

Diablo tries to nod cooly, but a hint of fear bubbles in his eyes. "O-okay. You big boss."

I follow after Bael and Lucy, noting with interest that she takes the lead. Sometimes she points out landmarks or scratches she left in the ground, but when I follow her gaze, I don't see anything until we draw closer. Her eyesight is spectacular.

Eventually, all the imps arrive at a small hole in the side of the mountain. Standing perhaps five-feet-tall, the most surprising thing about the opening is the heat warming my skin. As if the depths of the Earth are yawning, a mild warmth radiates out, allowing me to stop shivering.

Still, that familiar buzzing alarm pokes at the back of my mind.

Don't enter, I think to myself. Diablo's right. This cave is dangerous.

"Diablo right," Satan says, as if he can hear my words. "Too scary. Warm, though. We stay here tonight."

Someone shoves me aside. Bael strides several feet into the cave and puffs out his chest. "Pft. You guys big scared! Warm means comfy! Me go into cave alone!"

Several imps fidget. Something about Bael's haughty tone makes Satan narrow his eyes. "Me no scared."

"Yeah-huh!"

"Nuh-uh." I stomp over to Bael and glare at him. "You no leader. Me leader."

"Leader too scared go inside," Bael says, snickering to himself. "Hehe, you little kitty cat."

Unsurprisingly, Satan takes the bait. I turn around and beckon to the other imps. "Me not kitty. Come on. We go deeper."

Despite all the warning signs, the other imps nod. Everyone enters the cave, staying near to the wall as we walk. Within a minute, darkness swallows us. The sounds of breathing, bare feet shuffling against the floor, and hands scraping the walls are all I hear as we travel.

The temperature rises. Thanks to the lack of a breeze, soon I start sweating bricks. I mop my face down, realizing that we might be heading toward an active volcano or an underground lava geyser.

However, the thought this heat comes from the Earth itself is far too comforting to be the truth. I begin to wonder if I'm hearing things. The distant sound of breathing makes me twitch as I walk. Where are we going? Shouldn't we turn back?

"Excited?" Bael whispers from behind me, quiet enough that only I can hear him.

"No," I reply, keeping my voice low. "We need turn back."

"Me gots good feeling, boss."

"Me got real bad feeling," I mutter, my voice hoarse.

Suddenly, as I step forward, the floor disappears.

"Wha-?!"

I let out a yelp of fright as I fall into an abyss. Before I can scream, I hit a wall and roll downward.

THUD! CRACK!

I bounce off something unseen and smash into the ground. My body comes to an abrupt halt as waves of agony course through me.

It takes several moments before I can think.

Everything hurts — my body aches. I think... I might have... broken something...

"Nnn..."

Satan lets out a pitiful whimper. The bumpy, spiky ground presses against my face and stomach, taunting me.

After a few moments, I freeze. My blood turns to ice.

I'm not alone.

I raise my head slowly. In front of me, something absolutely shitfucking massive shifts around. It barely makes a sound, but even in pitch-black darkness, I can see the slightest hint of motion.

Whatever the... the thing is, it's gigantic. A hundred feet tall. Perhaps more.

"Hmm?"

A single grunt rumbles in the darkness. The beast speaks, its tone so deep that words can't describe it. My bones rattle from the weight of its voice. I slowly curl into a ball to make myself as tiny as possible.

Don't see me... please... oh god... what the hell is this monster?!

"Is someone there?"

The voice speaks again. It knows.

The air shifts. Two specks of orange appear, perhaps twenty feet away. They slowly move toward me, sending waves of terror through my body.

Eyes.

Two eyes, each one as big as my head, with slits for pupils, narrow in on my tiny, pathetic form. Light emanates from them, illuminating my naked, defenseless body.

I tremble, unable to speak.

Whatever the creature is, it knows I'm here.

"Do you think yourself invisible? You shine as bright as a star to my penetrating gaze."

"I... I..."

Satan tries to reply. Instead, he stutters and stammers.

From the entrance above, a tiny voice squeaks out. "Hey! Boss! You okay?!"

The gargantuan monster flicks its gaze upward. "Others? Invaders, come to fight? Perhaps I should retaliate."

"N-no..." I whisper, flinching as it stares at me again. "N-no fight... no hurt, please..."

"Your scent is unknown to me," The monster says. "What do you call yourself, little red blob?"

"I-i-imp! Me called imp... not taste good! Very nasty!"

The monster snorts and recoils slightly. "That name, I have not heard it. I know of rat and bat and cat, of deer and bear and boar... but imp is one I've never heard before. Stand up, 'imp,' so that I may study you more closely."

I nod, unable to deny his request. I grunt in pain and stagger to my feet, leaving my broken right arm to hang limp. I can only clutch my shoulder to try and stifle the pain.

"Ugly little wretch. Weak and scared. You're no threat. Why have you come?"

I shake my head slowly, unsure of what to say. "Cold outside. F-felt warm in cave. Did not m-mean wake up... very sorry!"

"You stumbled in by accident? Tch. I thought you were agents of the angels, but you're little more than skinny rats. Leave me. I wish to rest."

The monster starts to turn its head away.

"Angels? Big ugly chickens? You no like?"

The monster stops before fully turning away. It snorts as if to chuckle. A puff of fire bursts from its nostrils, illuminating its face and allowing me a glimpse of its body. Now I see that it is a massive dragon, pure black across its entire body, except for its glowing orange eyes. Its scales, black as the night, seem to swallow the light from the fire instantly, returning darkness to the room.

The size of the dragon's head makes me swallow a lump of fear. It could devour me whole without a second thought. Worse, however, is the sense that I've seen it before. The dragon appears familiar, but I cannot place the memory...

"Angels are the enemies of all living creatures," The dragon says. "You. Me. Everything. They slew my people one by one. They would kill me as well, were they to discover my existence."

The dragon slowly turns to look behind me toward the opening above. Several rocks crumble downward, bounce off the walls, and hit the ground below. A grinding sound follows as an imp slides down the slope. They hit the ground a few feet behind me, and squeak out, "Oy, boss! Boss! Are you-"

The speaker, Bael, freezes mid-sentence. I can't see him, but the dragon's gaze fixates behind me.

Bael whimpers. "Buh-buh... boss?"

"Me here," I whisper. The dragon hasn't tried to eat me yet. It doesn't appear aggressive, though I can't know if that's what Satan is thinking. It's a terrifying monster, to be sure, but if it wanted us dead, we wouldn't still be standing.

"Another imp. How many more will arrive? Call to them. Tell them to come."

The dragon's orders are absolute. I nod slowly, force myself to turn my back to the creature, and yell toward the others, "M-me okay! Everyone come!"

As if the floodgates of Hell have opened, several sounds of sliding follow in quick succession. Unlike my accidental stumbling into the abyss, the other imps manage to glide to the bottom without hurting themselves.

Every single one of them freezes in terror when they arrive, as the dragon scans the group with its reptilian eyes.

"One... two... three... hmm. Why are fifteen imps traveling together?"

"Big chickens kick us around. Mudder say we leave."

Satan seems to have adjusted to the fact the dragon isn't going to eat him. He takes this in stride, but still flinches when it lurches toward him.

"You lived among the angels? I knew I smelled their scent."

"Chickens not our friends," Satan replies. "Chickens beat us. Make us work. Kick around and hurt."

"I understand," The dragon replies. "The angels enjoy playing the role of gods. They summon creatures from the void to serve them, then toss us aside when they tire of us. They did so for my people, and now for yours."

A moment passes. The dragon snorts again, sending plumes of fire over our heads. "Bah. The old wars are a distant memory. Perhaps I could kill the angels, but I haven't the will to try. Sleep is comforting. I dream of my mother, and my brothers, and my sisters too. I dream of those lost and those who will never see the light of day."

Satisfied with himself, the dragon sighs. "Haah... I decided long ago to burrow under this mountain and live my life in solitude. The bedrock, infused with the mana of the Earth, conceals my presence well. After millions of years, the angels have yet to find me."

Satan cocks his head. "You hide? Scared of chickens? Like me?"

"Scared... frightened... perhaps... perhaps not..."

The dragon pulls back and rears up on its legs, stretching itself to the ceiling above. Several explosions go off as its joints pop into place — the behemoth grunts with satisfaction.

"I am Leviathan, the last of the dragons. For every brother and sister that died, my strength increased as their mana spread among the survivors. With all of them gone, I am at the peak of my power. However... I consider myself a practical thinker. Battling the angels is a futile endeavor. Not only would I need to combat them, but also their allies, the Titans. I might win. I might not. Other than satisfying a sense of justice, what purpose would killing them serve?"

Satan glances at the other imps. All of them stare with rapt attention at the dragon, afraid to take their eyes off it. Satan returns his gaze to Leviathan.

"Words too big. Not understand."

Leviathan stares at the ceiling. Seconds pass — a minute.

Slumping to the ground, he lowers his body and returns his attention to the imps. "The angels are afraid of losing their power. Whenever they form a sentient being, it turns against them. That's why they made pathetic servants like you. Weak, unable to fight back. Easy to push around."

The dragon curls back his lips, exposing his teeth in a sinister grin. Even in the darkness of the cave, the pure white stands out, illuminated by the faint light coming from his eyes.

"Hehe... I have a great idea. A little... poetic justice, if you will. Wouldn't it be funny if, for the third time, one of their creations turned against them? What a twist of irony that would be."

Satan blinks and cocks his head. "What mean?"

"I've decided to take you under my wing, little 'imp.' You can't fight the angels as you are now, but, in time, that will change. I'll make it change. You will battle them in my absence and make the angels suffer. Those who took my family from me... you will take theirs from them. Come. Step forward. I have a gift for each of you."

I nod. My body moves on its own, unwilling to disobey the dragon's orders. One step becomes two, then three. Without intending to, I take twenty steps forward. The dragon's glowing orange orbs are closer now than ever before. From the darkness, a slight movement catches my eye. Leviathan pulls his head back and thrusts a massive claw forward, one that stands ten times taller than me. His four-taloned appendage is barely visible in the dark, but its frightening size makes me wet myself.

The dragon could kill me in an instant. Instead, he wants to give me a gift. What could it be?

I find out as the claw lightly nudges my forehead.

Cosmic power floods into my mind, body, and soul. Waves of mana course through my veins, bursting every blood vessel in my body, rupturing my heart, and reforming them a moment later. I try to scream, but can't. One moment I'm standing, and in the next, I end up on the ground.

Bones snap — muscles pop. I writhe and wriggle, unable to control my spasming form. The dragon's energy burns like a wildfire, searing my skin off and growing it back. The cycle repeats over and over for what feels like an eternity. In reality, the process barely takes a minute.

The pain is mind-shattering agony, yet also exquisite ecstasy. Once it fades away, violent rapture embroils my thoughts. The most wonderful food, best sex, and memorable moments of my life do little to compare to Leviathan's power.

I know, from the most primal corners of my mind, that the power he's shared with me is but a sliver of his whole — a fraction of a fraction.

I've only tasted Leviathan's power... but I want more.

Slowly, I stagger to my feet. A rush of sensory information floods my mind. My hearing, more acute, detects the slightest whimpers of fear from the imps behind me. The dragon's drumming heart is like an anvil crashing into the Earth.

My sight, smell, and hearing increase tenfold. Suddenly, the darkness melts away. I see far more clearly, as though several small candles illuminate the room. The dragon, once a specter in the gloom, now becomes visible. I behold his majesty in its entirety. While crouched low to take up as little space as possible, Leviathan's body is hundreds of feet from his head to his tail. His wings, though folded against his back, must stretch a hundred feet to the right and the left.

I've never seen something so incredible in all my life. Leviathan, more than any being I have ever imagined, is a dark god, capable of slaughtering all those who slight him.

He chose me. He favors me.

I'm... lucky.

Turning around, I face the imps behind me. Suddenly, it hits me: I've grown. I'm at least four feet tall now.

The imps squint to stare at me, but their vision is far worse than mine. It's likely they can only make out my hazy red figure in the darkness.

"B-big boss? That you?" Agares asks.

"Yep. It's me," I reply. My voice is suddenly much deeper, dramatically so. The change startles me, but I adjust to it. "Step forward. Leviathan is going to power us up."

The dragon chuckles. "Hm. Hm. Your cognitive abilities have increased. Likewise, you have gained magical powers. You are too weak to handle any more of my power, but you have enough to cause some mischief. Doubtless, your abilities are already far beyond your comprehension. It will take time for you to adjust."

Agares inches toward the dragon. Leviathan reaches his claw out and touches the imp's head. Just as I did, Agares stumbles onto his back, wheezing and gasping. His body slowly increases in size, his skin melts off and grows back, and within a minute, he lies on the ground, breathing hard.

When he rises to stand beside me, I look his naked body up and down. Like mine, it courses with raw energy. His eyes flick around the room to examine the dragon, and he turns to me.

"Satan. What... what's happened to me? To you?"

I smile. "We've been given a second lot on life, chum. We share a common enemy with the dragon. I'll explain after he boosts the others."

Both of us stand and watch. Bael comes next. Diablo. Lucy. Belial. Valac.

After all fifteen of us finish, we examine one another. Power flows from our veins, but unlike before, we have distinct appearances and stand apart visually. Bael towers a foot above the rest. Hair covers Diablo's face. Belial transforms into a sexy goddess.

My eyes scan all of them, past the four-breasted figure of Lucy, toward the final remaining demon, Valac. Unlike the rest of us, he continues to writhe on the ground. His wounds only partially heal, leaving patches of bone visible. Two arms sprout under the others, giving him four in total, in addition to his legs.

Valac's skin hisses. Pieces begin to flake off. I glance at the dragon. "Hey! What's wrong with Valac? He's falling apart!"

Leviathan shakes his head. "Someone was bound to reject my gift. Count yourselves lucky that only one of you will perish. In exchange, the rest will experience power they couldn't imagine."

I walk over and kneel next to Valac. Before I can try and touch him, he lunges out and grabs my ankle with a skeletal hand, startling me.

"Nehehe.... endless pain and the fear of death, enrich my body and give me breath. Send to darkness, put to sleep, burn the bodies, their souls I reap."

I jump backward in fright. Valac chuckles quietly and pulls himself into a sitting position as even more of his skin begins to melt away. Soon, only bits of guts and entrails stick to his bones underneath, held to him by the thinnest pieces of muscled sinew.

Valac rises. He stands nearly as tall at Bael, but unlike the massive demon behind me, Valac appears thin and gangly, due to being a walking skeleton. His teeth chatter, leaving me to wonder how he can speak without a voice box.

"V-Valac? Are you alright?"

The skeleton cocks his head. "I am fine. Sublime. Don't worry about me. We have angels to kill, hehe..."

Leviathan narrows his eyes. "Interesting. This one has adapted. All of you have. By now, you should be able to sense the mana within yourselves. Reach inside. Summon your aspects."

Everyone glances at each other for a moment and nods. We all begin weaving signs simultaneously. Lucy, the four-breasted demoness, gasps and recoils as a third eye emerges on her forehead. Belial changes shape, morphing into Diablo. Valac hisses as a massive bone-scythe appears in his grasp, along with a glowing blue lantern in the other.

As for me, when I form the signs, a magical scroll appears in midair. It hovers for a moment, then falls, but I catch it before it hits the ground.

I unravel the scroll to read it, but nothing appears. It's blank.

Despite this, I smile. "Ah, so that's how it is."

I don't know why I'm smiling. I haven't a clue what the scroll does- ah, right... I forgot. I'm Jason. Not Satan. I keep mixing up my mind with his. These visions are blurring the line between reality and fantasy for me. I'm starting to lose the ability to tell one from the other.

Satan raises his fist. "Alright, you bunch of idiots. Listen up. I've got a plan."

"A plan?" Belial asks. She and Lucy appear disinterested in their nakedness, despite standing amongst a group full of men. Perhaps they don't yet understand the concept of shame.

"That's right, hot stuff. This dragon wants us to fight the angels. Stupid. We can't beat 'em like we are now. What we can do, though, is make some noise. Cause some trouble. We gotta get the rest of our people outta Heaven. You feel me?"

Agares nods. "Sounds good, boss. Whatever you say, I'm in."

"Great. Here's the plan..."

Satan kneels and begins drawing pictures in the dirt. The demons lean over to watch — all of them except for Valac. He stands and gazes at us... staring with hollow eyes... never moving...

Like a harbinger of death.

Author Note: Have some more character art! Previous appearances of characters can be found in the older parts.

This is Lucifer.

This is also Lucifer, and Diablo too!

This is Valac.

Part 094: The Grim Reaper

"What are your thoughts regarding the last vision?" Solomon asks.

Having reappeared at the bonfire, I once again stand before Solomon and the Archangels. Raphael nudges the logs, sending plumes of smoke into the air.

"It was interesting. The demons got their power from a dragon, huh?"

Michael bows his head. "We hadn't any knowledge of this."

"What? You didn't?"

He shakes his head. "Nay. Solomon's vision is the first I've heard of Leviathan. Everything makes sense now."

"Indeed," Gabriel says quietly. "The sudden spikes in demonic power. Their ability to work together. Their increase in intelligence. Dragon magic was extremely potent. Had we known of Leviathan's existence, especially early on, we would have taken the imp threat far more seriously."

"Let us not superimpose our knowledge from the future upon our past selves," Raphael says. "'Twas fortunate that we did not learn of Leviathan's existence and decide to challenge him. Defeating Jörmungandr and pacifying the Titans almost wiped out our people. Even after millions of years of slowly regaining mana from the imps, we were in no condition to battle Leviathan, who was assuredly even mightier than his fallen mother. Had we battled, the angels would have lost."

Michael scratches his chin. "Assuredly, thou art most likely correct, brother. The knowledge of Leviathan's existence changes everything we knew about our final battle against Jörmungandr. She fought us at only half her power. It makes me wonder if she didn't deliberately conceal Leviathan's existence from us for all those eons."

"Sounds like she played the long con," I reply. "And she won."

"Nay," Raphael says. "'Twas not Leviathan, but the demons who defeated us. While the dragon certainly increased their strength and fighting power, t'would be a disservice to deny Satan credit for his brilliant fighting tactics. No matter how powerful a military might be, it will crumble if led by an incompetent fool. Satan was no such demon."

Solomon crosses his arms. "I fought Satan once. Not out of choice, mind you. During my life, I was a poor physical fighter. I relied on my intelligence and knowledge to defeat adversaries. The battle was brutal. I eventually outwitted Satan, but his casual demeanor and quick-thinking caught me off-guard on many an occasion. Few people have ever come close to being my equal during a battle of the minds, and he held a distinct advantage in the physical department. I won by the slimmest of margins."

"Did you defeat him for good?" I ask.

"Hah! No. I merely managed to drive the Devil back for a time. He decided Jerusalem wouldn't be an easy target to ransack. In fact, battling me was the straw that broke the camel's back. All-out attacks on humanity became much rarer as the centuries passed. Satan learned that going toe-to-toe with a Hero would incur more losses than he thought were worth sustaining."

After a moment, Solomon clears his throat. "Enough idle chatter. Let's return to the ancient histories. I'm going to jump ahead a few days. Satan wasted little time in planning his first strike against the angels, but you'll probably be interested in what came before that."

Shrugging off the previous conversation, I nod. "Yeah. Let's dive back in. Time's a-wasting."

"Not as much as you'd expect," Solomon replies with a smirk. I don't get to ask what he means. He motions with his hands, and the bonfire melts away.

"We gotta decide who's the strongest around here," Bael says. Several demons nearby nod. I do not.

Satan speaks, but this time I'm not in his body. I'm in someone else's.

"We haven't time to waste on nonsense, Bael. We need to rescue our unascended brothers and sisters from Heaven. Once we succeed, then we'll worry about the other tomfoolery."

My current host watches the other demons silently. The others nearby are dressed in simple clothing. The tanned hides of several animals hang from tree branches nearby, including one that resembles a saber-toothed tiger. Where before the demons could barely catch bugs, now they hunt animals at the top of the food chain.

A lot has changed for them in only a few days.

I reach down to smooth out a white tiger skin draped over my legs. Despite snow drifting down from the skies above, I barely notice the frigid temperature. As I stretch and pat the fur to increase its flexibility, I can't help but notice my arms appear much hairier than the other demons. My muscles, while substantial, don't compare to Bael's. He's a powerhouse capable of crushing any of the others with a single slap.

"I ain't talkin' crap, Satan," Bael replies. He walks over to Satan and places his fists on his hips, grinning as he towers over our leader. "And I ain't followin' some pipsqueak to my death. If you wanna save our family, you gotta prove you can do it. I'll break the Archangels myself, but what can you do?! Nothing! You're a wimp!"

Satan crosses his arms and stands defiantly, but a hint of concern bubbles in his eyes. "I ain't no wimp, punk. I'm a realist. Every minute we waste here is another minute the other imps get kicked around and beaten."

The future leader of our people turns at me. "Hey! Deebs! Back me up on this, willya?"

I shrug. "Mmm. Bael does have a point, chief. The imps have lasted a few million years already; they'll be fine for a while without us."

Satan licks his lips. He appears annoyed I didn't take his side. "Yo! Lucy! What do you think?"

Immediately, I swivel to look at one of the nearby demonesses. The four-breasted lady wears several animal pelts, all of them belonging to black jaguars. They layer over her body several times, covering much of her skin, but still, Diablo's heart pumps a little faster when he stares at her.

"It's Lucifer, not Lucy, you limp-dicked..." The woman bites off her words to scowl at him. While Diablo's body lusts after her, my eyes fixate on Lucifer's mouth. Her raptor-like teeth clink as they knock together, giving her a slight lisp. "I don't care who is the strongest or weakest. I intend to pay back Samael for all the pain he inflicted on me. Anything else is superfluous."

Satan sighs. "Fine, fine." He turns to Bael. "Alright, big guy. How do you wanna do this, eh? If it's something dumb like arm-wrestling, we already know you'll win. We have to test intelligence, strength, and leadership skills at the same time. Got any ideas?"

Bael scratches his head. "Uhhh..."

"C'mon. Surely you can think of something."

Slowly, Bael glances at me. I shake my head. "You're on your own."

"Ah! I got it!" Bael smiles excitedly. "We can do arm-wrestling!"

Satan facepalms. "I... I just said... no arm-wrestling. What are you, stupid?"

"Yeah... a little," Bael mutters.

"Alright. I'll think of something, then."

Satan leans against a tree and taps his lip. A minute passes while he contemplates a challenge for the demons to undergo.

Agares walks over, several little lizards clutching onto his leathery clothes. "Satan, I have a solution. How about a contest of skill? Dispatch everyone to kill as many creatures as possible. Bigger ones mean more points, while smaller ones count for fewer."

Satan shifts around, itching his back on the tree. "Yeah... maybe. I'd want us to team up so we could verify each other's points."

Immediately, I lunge my hand out. "I vote to join Lucy's team!"

The demoness scowls. "It's Lucifer, imbecile. I'd sooner die than pair with you."

Satan chuckles. "Heh. We'll decide the teams with lots. That should keep things fair. Since there's fifteen of us, pairing up won't work. We'll do groups of three."

Lucifer crosses her arms. "If I end up on the same team as Diablo, so help my sanity..."

I jump up and slide over to her, a huge grin on my face. "Hey, baby, don't be like that! You and I are like peas in a pod! What isn't there to like about me?"

The triple-eyed demoness turns away. "Don't take it personally. I haven't the faintest interest in you or any other man."

"Oh? Are women more your type?"

"No. I'm not 'into' anyone. Go away."

My smile slips. "Oh. Okay. Well, if you feel that strongly about it..."

I turn and wander toward Satan, scratching my head sheepishly. When he catches sight of me, he winks. "Don't worry, Deebs," he whispers. "I got your back, pal."

"You do?"

"Mhm. Check this out."

Satan coughs loudly, then walks toward a pile of kindling we stacked when we were still imps. With our powered-up bodies, warming ourselves isn't necessary anymore, nor is eating food. Satan snatches up fifteen differently sized sticks and winks at me. "Alright, everyone! Gather around! We're all going to pull twigs. People with similarly-sized ones get teamed together. Got it?"

Several demons grumble, but everyone still nods, Lucifer included. I spot Belial hovering next to Satan, a look of curiosity in her eyes.

Satan holds out the twigs, and everyone takes turns plucking them out one by one. After we finish, only Valac is left to pick from the last two. The specter of death says nothing as he snatches one of the remaining contenders from Satan's grasp.

Bael holds the twig in front of his face and squints to stare at it. His expression appears remarkably stupid. "Uhh... so how's this gonna work?"

Satan clears his throat. "Ahm, well, you see, I already measured them all, so it's a matter of identifying each one. Diablo, you're working with Bael. Agares, you and Orias are together..."

It takes a minute for Satan to line everyone up. By the time he finishes, the teams come out as follows:

Satan, Belial, and Valac on Team One.

Me, Bael, and Lucifer on Team Two.

Agares, Orias, and Vepar on Team Three.

The other two teams don't seem to matter much. They consist of a few grumblers, but nobody of note.

Belial screws her face up in deep thought. "Now, hold on a second. My twig is smaller than Lucifer's. Shouldn't I be on Bael and Diablo's team, and she be here? Orias's doesn't seem right either."

Satan waves his hand nonchalantly. "Nah, doll. Don't you worry your cute little tush. I checked beforehand. Trust me, the devil's in the details, baby."

"Doll? Baby?" She crosses her arms. "Getting a little familiar there, aren't you?"

Satan ignores her. "I wrote the rules for this game ahead of time. It's simple. Predator animals are worth ten points. Fast ones, like deer or hares, are worth four. Birds are two. Anything else, like bugs, are worth zero. We don't wanna wipe out the whole forest, ya know?"

Everyone nods and stares in surprise as Satan motions with his hands, and a glowing papyrus scroll appears in midair. Hundreds of words appear on the paper as it uncoils, and he lowers it onto a flat stump nearby for us to read.

"Alright, here are the rules. You guys give 'em a read, and when you're ready..." He motions with his hand, and a feather appears in midair. "...prick your finger with this, and sign the paper in blood."

Agares raises an eyebrow. "Hm? We can't read or write. Why would we sign this silly scroll anyway? It looks like something you stole from the angelic library."

Satan holds up his palms. "No, no, not at all, Agares. It's a unique piece of papyrus I made for our competition. If you sign it, you accept the rules and promise not to cheat."

Bael stares at the scroll dumbly. "Uh, how we gonna do that?"

Satan sighs. He grabs the feather, pokes his finger to wet the tip with his blood, and quickly draws a simple portrait of himself on the bottom, little more than a grumpy face with horns on its head.

"There. Just like that."

Lucifer sweeps a strand of hair back behind her ear. "Tch. You put me on the same team as Diablo after I expressly requested for you not to do so, but expect me to accept the rules?"

"That's how the stones fell," Satan replies with an exaggerated shrug of his shoulders. "Couldn't be helped. Bael, you go first."

He hands the feather to Bael. The giant demon gazes at it for a moment, pricks his finger, and scribbles a terrible-looking stick-demon onto the page. The papyrus glows for a second after he finishes, making him raise an eyebrow. "D-does that count?"

Satan smiles. A gleam appears in his eye. "Oh, yes. It certainly does. Agares, you next."

Agares draws a lizard for his signature. Orias, a star. Me, a fist. Lucifer, an eye.

Belial snickers to herself. "Kehehe. Drawing random body parts, are we? I expected breasts from you, Lucy."

"Shut up," Lucifer replies. "Something so vapid would be more in line with your personality."

"Yeah? Maybe it is. I like to have fun. You know what that is, don't you? Fun, I mean."

"Sign the damned paper. You're slowing us down," Lucifer says.

Belial quickly scrawls a pair of breasts on the page. "Hmph. Beautiful."

"No dignity. That's what I hate about you."

Listening to their conversation, I haven't the faintest clue why Lucifer and Belial hate each other. Sure, the imps have lived for millions of years by this point, but they seemed to get along fine before the dragon changed them. Maybe something else is going on under the surface.

After more demons sign, the final one, as always, is Valac. The hooded skeleton leers toward Satan. He holds a bony hand out. "How should I sign when my body isn't flesh or blood? Perhaps I should throw myself down and roll in the mud?"

"Um." Satan stares at Valac for a moment, then glances at the scroll. "Well, mud won't do. Eh. You don't need to sign. Forget it."

Everyone nearby, myself included, scoff at Satan. "What? Why not Valac? I thought the point-"

Satan motions for us to calm down. "The contract is a symbolical gesture. Don't think too hard about it. Valac can't sign, so he won't. Anyway, let's get to work. Time's ticking. I want to hurry up and go to Heaven."

"That makes one," I mutter.

Still, fighting alongside Lucifer excites Diablo. I'm not particularly enthusiastic. Lucifer isn't cuddly, cute, or sweet. I don't know what the big guy sees in her.

The five groups split apart. As I walk away from Satan, I notice a grin on his face. It seems sinister, as if everyone has fallen into a trap.

What could he be planning?

As the five teams split up, Satan yells, "We'll meet up in four hours. Get cracking!"

"Bael. Help me out," I whisper to the giant, walking beside me. Lucifer wanders up ahead, unable to hear my voice. "I need a high score to impress Lucy. Help me take down a cave bear."

"Are you stupid?" Bael whispers back. "No way. We can't beat one o' them. They're fuckin' huge."

"The two of us could take one. If I slow it down, you could rip off its head."

Bael scoffs. "No way. Them bears are like, really big. They'd eat us for breakfast."

I roll my eyes. "Fine. Don't. I never took you for the scared type."

Bael's red skin darkens. "What?! I ain't scared of nothin'! You take that back!"

"Children, please." Lucifer mutters. "If you're going to be on my team, I expect you to act maturely. I'm not losing to Satan or any of the others."

The demoness stops up ahead and sits on a stump. "You two are quite chatty. Tell me you have a brilliant plan to score hundreds of points."

I glance at Bael, then clear my throat. "Ahem! Uh, yes. I do. We're going to find and kill a cave bear."

All three of Lucifer's eyes blink at the same time. "A cave bear."

"Mhm."

"I thought you were at least a little intelligent, Diablo."

"Huh? Do you think it's a bad idea?"

The demoness fans out her fingers to examine her nails. "Cave bears are worth ten points, like any other predator. We'd be better off hunting feral cats or small wolves. I can't see why you'd want to do something as imbecilic as wasting time killing one gigantic animal."

Heat flares up in my cheeks. "Oh. I, uh, thought you'd be impressed... if I, uh, took down... a cave bear," I mumble.

Lucifer stares at me for a moment. "You're not wrong. I would find it impressive."

"Really?"

"Yes. However, that doesn't mean anything would change between us. Suit yourself. If you wish to kill some giant predator, I won't stop you. Just make sure you report my points accurately to Satan."

Bael scratches his chin. "Err. Your points? You ain't got any."

"We still have three and a half hours to go. I already figured out how to maximize my gains. Care to hazard a guess?"

My expression tightens. "You're not going to do it by killing cave bears. Maybe something smaller?"

"Much smaller, yes. Birds, to be specific."

Bael nudges me. "Is this broad dense? Birds are only worth two points! Why would she-"

"I'm right here," Lucifer says, ice in her voice. "They're only worth a fifth the points of the predators, that's true. However, if one were to kill them en-masse..."

Lucifer's eyes stay fixated on mine. However, the third eye in her forehead tilts to look behind me, at the canopy of a tree.

Her third eye narrows. She concentrates for a moment, and a laser shoots out with pinpoint precision.

"SQUAWK!"

A bird screams in pain. I turn around in time to see it fall from a branch and slam into the ground, snapping its neck. The other birds in the tree scatter in panic, seeing one of their friends die in such a horrible manner.

"Perfect," Lucifer says.

I turn to look at her again. Her third eye shifts color from red to purple. The squawking of birds above suddenly goes silent.

Two seconds later, the sounds of several muffled thuds makes me flinch in surprise. I turn around again to behold dozens of birds free-falling out of the sky. Each of them either smacks against trees and their branches or slams against the ground at full speed, killing them instantly.

Dozens of birds perish one after the other. They die so quickly I lose count of their numbers.

After a moment, the sounds of chirping and squawking go silent. Lucifer yawns. "Ahhn, hmm, I suppose that was sixty or so? A hundred and twenty points for me."

"What? How..." Words fail me. I haven't a clue how she killed them.

Bael scratches his head. "Damn. She must have something like Mega Bitch Vision. Those birds died from a nasty glare."

"You're close," Lucifer replies. "I hypnotized them with my third eye. They temporarily forgot how to fly. The result was death by free-falling."

"That's incredible. It feels like you're gaming the system, though," I say. "I think Satan wanted us to-"

"I don't care what the little bastard wanted," Lucifer says, cutting me off. "Satan doesn't own me. This trial is a contest for leadership, one determined by points. He probably thought he had some power that would allow him to win, but I'll end with thousands of points. He hasn't a prayer."

Lucifer smiles, putting all of her shark-teeth on display. She chuckles to herself. "Heh, heh... I'll rule our people. Satan thinks he's a brilliant man, but he's a fool. He'll have no choice but to admit defeat. And when he does-"

Suddenly, before Lucifer can finish, the roar of a massive animal shakes the forest. Hundreds more birds take off and scatter in every direction.

"GROOOOOAAAR!!!"

Bael and I spin to face the sound. It appears to come from the direction of Leviathan's mountain.

"Bloody- was that a cave bear?!" Bael asks. His jaw drops. "It sounds massive!"

Lucifer scowls. "Seems one of the other teams had the same idea as you two. Nincompoops. Fighting one of those behemoths is asking for trouble.

A drop of sweat trickles down my neck. "We should check on our friends and make sure they're okay."

"The roar came from the direction of Satan's team," Lucifer says, a smug smile on her face. "I'm watching the spectacle unfold right now. My Divine Vision pierces the tree cover easily. I think he put himself into a situation he couldn't handle. We might have a dead demon on our hands, shortly."

"My palms clam up. The sweat on my neck condenses dramatically.

"C'mon, Bael. We gotta help the boss."

Bael snorts. "Pft. He angered the bear. He should be able to handle himself."

"Yeah, maybe, but maybe not. Let's take a peek. We can't beat Lucy anyway."

"It's Lucifer!" The demoness yells from behind me. "And you're damn right. Nobody can defeat me."

I turn and give her a thumbs up. "That's what I love about you, baby. You're such a positive thinker!"

"Shut up."

My mind shifts, leaving Diablo's body and appearing inside Satan's. I know it's him because the first demon I see is Belial, standing in her leather bra and skirt.

Belial slowly licks her lips. "How are we going to win, Satan? You always have a plan."

I chuckle. "Heh. Easy, toots. Don't you worry about me. I've got this gig in the bag. You, on the other hand, gotta prove yourself. You and Valac both. I'm tryin' to figure out who's gonna be my number one and two, ya dig?"

"No..." Belial says, shaking her head. "I don't understand. How are you going to get points?"

I yawn and flop down on the ground, resting my head against a log. "I'm not. It's no biggie. You and Valac though- hey, where did he go?"

Leaning back on my hands, I pause before relaxing to look around for the skeletal demon. After a moment, I spot him standing next to a tree, staring at it silently with all four arms hanging limp at his sides.

"'Ey, Valac! What are you doin'? You're supposed to be killin' stuff!"

My words fall on deaf ears. If Valac hears me, he doesn't reply. His hooded body is impossible to make out underneath all the animal skins covering him, so I can't tell if he has the slightest reaction to my words.

I lean up, irritation on my face. "Bloody dipshit. He's supposed to be working, but he's just goofing off!"

Belial rests her hands on her hips. "Isn't that what you're doing?"

"Sure, but I'm the boss. I can lay around if I want."

"It must be nice to be in charge."

I wink at her. "Never know. You could rule demonkind someday."

Belial sighs. "Hmph. That sort of life doesn't interest me."

Unlike the Samantha I know in the future, the Belial of the ancient past isn't very sexy or flirty. A lot of her sexuality and pheromones appear underdeveloped as well, giving the impression she has yet to become a succubus. Her appearance is plain and drab, with less of an emphasis on her curves and body compared to Lucifer.

Still, Satan eyeballs her, moving from her head to her toes with his piercing gaze. Belial takes a step back. "Stop leering."

"Why? If you're gonna stand around instead of killing stuff, you might as well do some sexy poses for me. Gimme a nice view, babe."

Belial presses her tongue against her inner cheek. "What a pervert."

"I'm a guy. I do guy things," I reply. "Damn. This whole idea ain't gonna work if everyone stands around doin' nothing."

"Guide by example," Belial says, gesturing to the forest. "If you want to make an army, you have to lead the charge."

A few moments pass. I sigh. "Alright, sure, whatever."

I hop to my feet and clap my hands. "Hey! Valac! Let's go! We've got to start racking up a few points!"

Valac continues to stare at the tree. Eventually, he turns to face me, his face darkened by the hood.

"Points are useless, and your game is trite. You won't become a king via pretense of birthright. I don't mean to confuse, and I don't care if I lose, this game will only be a waste of my time."

Slowly, I walk toward Valac. "Yeah? A waste of time, eh? You didn't even rhyme with that last bit, dumbass. C'mon. I need to see how good you are in combat. It won't do to have some mumbling bag of bones in my army if you can't land a punch."

"Kss..." Valac hisses quietly to himself, then raises his head to stare at me. His hollow eye sockets glow blue as tiny pinpricks of light replace his eyeballs. "Don't play games with me, Satan. I saw your contract. I read the words, the words..."

When Valac stops rhyming, it sends a chill down my spine. "You did? You're a fast reader."

Belial approaches from my left. "What do you mean, Valac? What's this about a contract?"

The quad-armed demon raises one of his left palms and forms several magic signs. A metallic scythe with several eerie inscriptions appears in the grasp of both his right hands.

"You'll know soon enough, my dear. Satan will become the one you fear. A liar from the start, deceiver at heart, that wretch is too smart... for my liking."

I cross my arms. "You're a mouthy little cunt."

As I meet Valac's eyes, the ground begins to tremble. For a moment, I almost think he's the cause, but I find out otherwise not long after.

A tree rips from the Earth and slams against the ground, making Belial and I twitch in surprise. We turn around to see teams three, four, and five running toward us, panic on their faces and Agares in his lizard-form leading the charge.

"S-Satan! It's terrible! Orias accidentally-"

"GROOOOOAAARR!!"

A massive creature howls angrily, not far in the distance. Through the snow falling, I stare with wide eyes as a tree flies through the air and slams against the ground. A monstrous bear, nearly fifty-feet-tall, stomps across the landscape, chasing after a demon trailing behind Agares. The young male turns to try and unleash magic on the beast, but he fails. The brown bear swipes its paw out and slaps him to the side, pounding him across the snow. He tumbles and twists several times before coming to a sudden stop; his body bent in several unnatural directions.

"Son of a-" I gawk for only a couple of seconds before turning to Belial. "It's a female cave bear! They're supposed to be hibernating! What the fuck did you morons do?!"

Agares scurries across the ground, ducking to avoid globs of snow that sail over his head. He pounces at a tree beside me like a wild animal, shivering as his cold-blooded body begins to slow.

"S-Satan, we have to stop th-that rampaging-"

I know," I say, cutting in. "Damn. It killed Milfir in one hit. Belial, can you distract it? I'll go with Valac and try to deal a killing blow."

The colossal cave-bear roars again and swipes at a demon pressing against a tree. Purely out of instinct, the demon ducks, and the bear rips out half of the trunk, allowing the tree to teeter forward and fall atop the great beast. It shrugs off the one-ton log with ease.

Valac hisses. "Your little game brought this bear; now she's come to rip and tear, throw your body in the air, send you fleeing in despair. Why should I help, when I can laugh as you fall on your derriere?"

I scowl at Valac. "Tch. Fine! I'll deal with him myself. Agares! Follow me!"

I stomp through the snow, charging the massive animal, but my knees rapidly begin to shake. The beast is enormous. I barely stand as tall as the first joint on its leg. How am I supposed to defeat it?!

"Satan!" From the forest, Diablo's voice reaches me. I turn and smile, though the elation in my chest is short-lived. "Deebs! We need your help! This monster is on a rampage!"

"GROOOOAAARR!!"

The bear hears my voice and rushes toward me. I dive to the side, but far too slowly, as a five-clawed paw rushes toward me.

Something yanks me to my left, pulling me out of the bear's range. The wind from the creature's claw blows me away, but I land safely in Belial's arms, as she stretches back to her standing position.

"You and Diablo figure something out! I'm going to distract it!"

I nod, staring dumbfounded at her face. She suddenly seems far more beautiful than before.

"Y-yeah, sure thing. Thanks for-"

Belial doesn't stick around to listen. She pounces at the animal, stretching her legs to stand up to its height. One of her fists rushes toward its face and knocks the big brute backward a step or two, bruising its ego more than its cheek.

The bear shakes its head in surprise and evaluates Belial for all of three seconds before deciding to focus on her.

"GROOOOARRR!!"

Diablo dashes toward me with Bael in hot pursuit. "Boss! Are you okay?"

"I'm fucking dandy. We need to kill this thing. Where's Lucy?"

"She's... busy," Diablo replies.

"Busy. Sure. Change of plans. Bael, you're the biggest, meanest, toughest bloke we have. Grab some boulders and start throwing. Aim for its head."

Bael appears annoyed by my suggestion, but given the colossal beast trying its damnedest to kill Belial, he takes my orders in stride. "Throw rocks. Sure. Easy."

He turns and runs toward the nearest boulder, leaving Diablo, Agares, and me behind. Orias and Vepar join us, while the remaining demons do their best to avoid the cave bear's attacks as best as they can.

Orias gasps for breath. "S-sorry, Lord Satan. There was a cave, I wasn't paying attention, and when I spotted a shiny rock stuck in the wall, I accidentally woke the bear-"

"Don't give me a play-by-play," I say, interrupting him. "We have to take this beast down. Vepar, can you poison it?"

The demoness hisses. Vepar's drooping face hints at a terrible disease, but I don't have the time to guess what it is.

"I could try, but my poison isn't very effective against large animals."

"If we can blind this bear or give it a head cold, that'll be enough for me. Orias, I need you to whip up some darkness around Bael. He's our heavy hitter. If the bear sees him, we won't have a way to kill it."

The shrouded demon nods. He reaches into his pocket and pulls out a handful of black gemstones. "Alright. I'll do what I can."

I turn to Agares. His shivering is nearly uncontrollable now. "Dammit, dumbass. Get out of that lizard form. You're useless in the snow."

His teeth chatter violently. "Y-yeah. Gimme a second."

While he demorphs, I turn to Diablo. "What are your powers?"

Diablo shrugs. "I can put animals to sleep if I touch them. I can make them see mirages, too. If I have other powers, I haven't discovered them yet."

I stare at him dumbfoundedly. "Can you put the bear to sleep?"

"Not a chance. It's way too big."

"So, you're useless?!"

"Like you, yup."

I pat Diablo on the arm. "Alright, stay out of the way. If everyone works together, we can take this bastard down."

"GROOOOAAAARR!!"

The bear unleashes another mighty howl right as Vepar sends a cloud of poison rushing at its face. Sadly, the gas doesn't affect it. The bear ignores her and continues trying to tear Belial to pieces as she hops and bobs, pounding it with surprising force. Her strength is incredible, but nowhere near enough to knock it out.

Boulders as big as my body fly toward the bear's head. It bats them aside, then changes its tactics out of the blue and kills two of the lesser demons who get too close with a single swipe. Their screams of panic cut off instantly as they meet their end.

Satan clenches my fist. "Damn," he mutters under his breath. "If only I had even one ability, I could help. I'm worthless."

Diablo grabs my shoulder. "Don't say that! You're leading everyone. If we work together, we can kill this beast."

"My friends are dying!" I yell, turning to face him. "And I can't help them fight!"

"If you can't fight, lead," Agares says, having finished his morphing. "Diablo and I are useless, too. You're fighting to save us. Make us proud."

I nod. "Alright. I'll do what I can, chums. Stay out of the way, and don't let this big, furry bastard spot you."

Turning my attention to the bear, I quickly wade through the snow, taking in the scene as best as I can. Belial's arms, once fists, have become two deadly blades. Instead of punching the bear, she stabs and lances it all over, bouncing out of its reach whenever it draws near, and ducking under its legs to inflict damage on its softer underbelly. Sadly, her attacks seem little more than pinpricks against its bulk. Spots of blood dot the beast's hide all over, but none seem deep enough to cause significant damage.

Bael continues grabbing boulders and flinging them at the bear, but they glance off its thick, wooly fur, causing light injuries at best.

From my perspective, as a human from the future, it's almost comical seeing the demons of the ancient era get their asses handed to them by this wild animal. However, Satan's beating heart pounds in my chest, as well as his. A tear drips down his face as the bear jumps backward and crushes a demon standing behind it. The poor fellow never saw his death coming.

I'm failing them, Satan's body screams. If only I had more power. If only…

Suddenly, out of nowhere, Valac rushes past me. He reaches the bear with alarming speed, ducks its swinging claws, and rears back his bone-scythe.

Swish.

Valac slashes the bear's stomach.

All the fight in the animal vanishes. Its momentum comes to a crashing halt, and the light vanishes from its eyes.

The beast stumbles forward and collapses on the ground. Everyone, including me, stares in shock at Valac. The cloaked demon grins evilly, exposing his jawbone underneath his hood. He motions with his hand, causing his scythe to vanish and his lantern to appear. An unearthly moaning sound erupts from the beast, as a ghostly form appears from its body and sucks into Valac's lamp.

"Mmm. A delicious soul for the Grim Reaper. It will make a fine addition to my collection."

"W-what…" Bael gawks at Valac. "He… he killed… the bear… in one hit."

"Unbelievable."

"Did you see that?"

Several demons whisper to each other as they gaze at Valac.

Valac trudges toward me, deliberately taking his time. When he arrives, he whispers. "You can be the 'leader,' Satan, but now everyone will know who you answer to… hehehe…"

He slowly wanders behind me off into the distance, ignoring Agares and Diablo. As he leaves, a hollow pit forms in my stomach.

Belial approaches me, a look of concern on her face. "Satan? What did he say?"

I wet my lips. "S-something about repaying a favor."

"Oh."

I wipe sweat from my forehead and slow my beating heart.

Valac saved my life, and the others as well. But… he also embarrassed me.

I ball my hand into a fist.

Damn you, Valac. You got me.

Later, I gather the remaining demons.

"Where's Lucy?"

Diablo stares at me. "She stayed behind. I think she was going to-"

"I'm right here."

A woman speaks up, turning my attention away from Diablo. Lucifer strides into the group. "Did you have fun with that cave bear?"

"We lost eight people. More than half of our fighting force."

"Wonderful. Now we won't have any dead weight slowing us down," Lucifer replies blandly. "Are you going to tally my points?"

I glower at her. "The points don't matter anymore. We all got a feel for our powers... ahh, fuck it. Where are your kills?"

The demoness grins, revealing her teeth. "Everyone, follow me."

We do.

A few minutes later, all of the demons arrive at an enormous pile of bird corpses. I stare at it for several seconds, trying to guess how many are there. The miniature mountain of feathers and flesh proves too intimidating for words to describe it.

Lucifer gazes at me smugly. "Fourteen thousand, six hundred, and ninety-one."

"What? You killed that many birds?"

"Indeed. As such, I'll be taking the role of leader. Those were the rules, weren't they? Unless you did better than me, Satan."

I shake my head while still gaping at the pile of bird corpses. "No. I didn't. You won the competition without a doubt."

Despite the snobbish look on Lucifer's face, I'm the one who smiles.

"Ahh, about the competition. I forgot to mention there were a few extra rules added."

"What do you mean?" Lucifer gazes at me suspiciously. "You didn't mention any extra rules."

My smile widens. The thought of putting this conceited bitch in her place makes me giddy with joy. "But I did, girl! It's all right here in my Blood Contract."

Waving my hands, I produce my magical scroll once again. The words on it, written in a strange, demonic language, glow ominously along with everyone's signatures.

Lucifer stares at the contract, but she doesn't seem to understand the words. "Explain. What rules are you talking about?"

"Oh, nothing too important! Well, by signing the contract, you agreed to obey my orders for the rest of our lives, and that you would never make any attempt on my life. Simple stuff like that."

All the demons nearby gasp. Belial's lip quivers. "Satan! Y-you tricked us! You-"

"I did what was necessary," I say, cutting Belial off. "Once I don't have to worry about any betrayals, we can progress toward saving the rest of our kin."

Agares is next to speak. "Unthinkable. I can't believe you'd do this, Satan. We trusted you. It wasn't enough to prevent a betrayal, but you also made it so we had to follow your every order?!"

Bael punches his palm. "Pah! You think I care?! That stupid paper don't mean nothin'! I'll knock your head off right now!"

Bael, a powerful Demon Baron, charges at me, but I don't flinch. The moment he rears back to swing, his body freezes, as if a thousand ghosts had suddenly appeared to hold him in place.

"Huh? I-I can't move! What the fuck is this?!"

"It's Satan's ability," Diablo murmurs. "You sly hound. You acted like you were powerless ever since meeting the dragon, but that scroll had a purpose. Amazing."

Smiling, I bow dramatically. "Yes, yes, praise me more, chums. You can all be pissed if you like, but nobody can nullify my contracts, not even me. You're stuck like this for the rest of your lives."

Belial takes a step back and covers her chest. "S-so, you can make us do anything you want? Anything?"

"That's not important!" Lucifer yells. "Valac didn't sign! That means he got off scot-free while we didn't! Outrageous! I have an urge to splatter you all over this forest, you damned-"

I ignore her and look around, but Valac is nowhere to be seen. "Let's all move past the trickery. You can't undo it, and in time you'll come to find I had my reasons. More importantly, now that everyone has witnessed the potential of my contracts, you understand the threat it poses. I want to weaponize it against the angels."

Lucifer shuts up. Despite her anger, my words pique her curiosity.

"Will it allow us to strike a blow against Samael?"

I grin. "Hehe. Well, it's funny you mention him."

Part 095: The Archangel Gambit

Once again, my vision returns to the campfire before Solomon and the Archangels. Michael appears more agitated than usual, which isn't surprising, given how he's almost always on edge.

"This Valac guy seems powerful," I say with a reserved tone. "If he was the Grim Reaper, then he must have been a terrifying opponent."

"Hmph. I wouldn't go so far as to praise the Reaper," Michael replies. "But t'would not be a lie to say his abilities were... formidable. Valac's soul manipulation stood at a precipice far beyond others of his ilk. Not only did he mold the souls of humans, but bloodskins and monsters as well."

I scratch my chin. "Mmm. Speaking of monsters, where do they come from? I've always wondered about that. I saw goblins and orcs in videogames and books and other such forms of entertainment, but I never saw them in the real world."

Solomon smirks. "The world you knew, in the 21st century, held many tenuous links to its ancient past. The forces manipulating humanity from the shadows went to great lengths to conceal our storied history and to pretend the existence of the demons was little more than old mythology from ancient civilizations."

"Do you mean that humans were working with the demons to conceal the existence of demons?"

"Sometimes, yes. After battling mighty heroes like myself, Alexander the Great, King Arthur, and Joan of Arc, demons began to avoid human society. The might of a hero was, for thousands of years, the only threat to demonkind, but eventually, humanity's total military might began to dwarf even the heroes. By the time of automatic weapons, demons made sure to hide underground and never show their faces."

"Some might call such actions cowardly," Raphael says. "I thought them wise. There were several instances when the demons came close to wiping out all of humanity and the angels. Thankfully, thy people were resilient. Humans shared one quality with the demons they didn't account for, which was resilience. Like cockroaches, if a few scatterings of humans survived anywhere and the demons didn't sniff them out, that pocket of resistance would grow back and learn to counter the tactics the demons used, forcing them to change. 'Twas a delicate balance maintained for several thousand years."

"Unintentionally," Gabriel adds. "If the demons had a chance to defeat humanity, they would have used it."

I reach back and itch my head, though it surprises me I can feel the sensations in a dream world. Solomon's Crown is something else. "Demons could kill humanity now, but they haven't. It's in their best interest to turn us into soul-energy cattle, but why didn't they realize that back in the ancient times?"

"Ah, it's funny you ask," Solomon says. "The short answer is that the overwhelming majority of demons couldn't steal souls from dead humans. That changed later. We'll get to it eventually. In the meantime, perhaps we should move to the next vision?"

I nod. "Yeah. Sounds good. Take the helm, captain."

Solomon rolls his eyes. "Aye, aye."

This time, when I materialize, I end up once again in Satan's body. I know because of his height, and when I open my eyes, the first person I see is Agares.

The two of us take the lead as we guide the remaining demons through a familiar winding cave. Our eyes, now able to see in the dark, allow us to navigate without Uzziel's angelic glow showing the way.

It doesn't take long for us to arrive at Heaven's Gate. The opaque portal, unguarded from the outside, hums pleasantly as waves of blue energy oscillate inside the gateway. The rivers of mana spin around, beckoning for us to enter.

"This is it, boss," Agares says. "I hope your plan works."

"Me too, chum," I reply. Even though sound can't pass through the portal, we keep our voices low, fearful someone will hear us. "Someone's gotta take the two guards down real quiet-like. I dunno when the shifts rotate, so we'll need to-"

Suddenly, a hand grabs my shoulder. I turn to look at the person interrupting me, only to see Bael's huge head inches from mine.

"We gotta go in there and kick some ass! Hit 'em hard! Let's beat the crap outta any angel in our way!"

I sigh. "Bael, you're going to stay behind. I don't want to cause a racket, and that's all you'll do."

"W-what?" Bael pulls away. His face contorts into an expression of shock, as if I've deeply wounded him. "I don't... get to... smash some heads?"

"No. You don't. Once we're inside, you and Deebs will stay behind at the gate and signal us if the angels discover our presence. We're using stealth, not dumbassery, understand?"

Bael puffs out his lower lip. "I-I'm plenty stealthy."

"Yeah, sure. You're full of shit. Stick to the plan."

I gesture toward the gate. "Alright, Deebs. I hope you know what you're doing."

The hairy demon jerks his thumb out. "Hah! Always!"

Diablo zips toward the gate, pauses for a moment to take a deep breath, then jumps through.

Several seconds pass. All of the demons watch with pounding hearts as we wait for the results.

"D-did he make it?" Bael asks.

"I don't know, moron. Wait and see. If he didn't... we'll know soon."

Hardly have the words left my mouth when suddenly two unconscious angels come flying through the portal. They hit the ground with a dull thud, and Diablo hops back to our side, landing atop the nearest one's back.

"I was fortunate! They didn't resist my sleep magic at all!"

All six of us walk over to Bael. I nudge the closest one with my foot. "Nice. Bael, snap his neck."

Agares glances at me in confusion. "What? We can't kill them, Satan! They're defenseless."

"'Zactly. It means they won't put up a fight. We've been killing animals left and right. What difference does it make?"

Diablo hops to the floor and steps away, allowing Bael to draw near. Before the big guy can do his work, Valac shoves me aside.

"That one's soul is mine; his death will be sublime. Don't cry or whine; there will be a next time."

Bael jumps aside as Valac summons his scythe. The Reaper swings around and stabs the blade down. It passes through the angel's body and hits the ground with a tink. A moment later, the angel's skin pales. His glowing aura dims, and the life expires from his eyes. Valac raises his lantern. A ghostly wisp escapes the angel's body, enters the lantern, and spins inside for a moment before coming to a rest.

Everyone stares in shock as Valac raises his scythe over the second cherub. "What was that?" Agares asks.

Valac drives his scythe through the second cherub's chest. As the light fades from the angel's eyes, Valac turns away. "The power of an angel, the power of the Creator. I reap their souls so my power will become greater."

"What's a soul?"

Valac doesn't reply, but I do. "It's the innermost part of an angel or one of us. When it dies or vanishes, so do they, leaving an empty husk behind."

Agares stares stonily at the two dead angels, then wipes his forehead. "Tsk. Killing someone when they're helpless feels wrong. I can't condone it."

"I don't like it either," Bael grunts. "It ain't fun if they don't fight back."

"Enough bickering," I say, interrupting their conversation. "We don't have long. Let's go."

Reluctantly, Agares falls into place beside me as we hop into the portal. The other five demons follow after, and once we arrive on the other side, I glance around warily.

"I don't see anyone. Bael, Deebs, you two stay near the portal. If any angels come, try and knock 'em out. If you can't... make sure we know."

"I understand," Diablo replies. He makes an ok sign with his hand. "I'm on the job."

I gesture toward Belial. "You and Agares, come with me. We've gotta find Samael and Uzziel. They're the key to my plans. The rest of you, fan-out, keep low, and try to blend in. Stay away from angels if you can. Tell the imps to spread the word about our flight."

Lucifer, Orias, and Vepar nod. "Understood."

Valac lowers his head. "Do as you please, but I have a goal. Don't interrupt me, or for you, a bell will toll."

The Grim Reaper glides through the nearby tall grass, becoming a shadow amongst the greenery. The rest of us stare at him silently as he leaves, unsure what to do.

"He'd better not fuck everything up," I mutter. "Let's move."

I head toward the Gardens, keeping out of sight whenever possible. Agares and Belial slink along behind me, though it doesn't take long for my nerves to tremble.

"Too many angels around," I mutter. "We stick out like a sore thumb, especially in these clothes. Imps don't wear animal hides."

Agares' tongue flicks out of his mouth. "Tsk. Let's shed them, then."

"I'd rather not," Belial says, acting oddly prudish. "I'm not comfortable in the nude."

"Shake your tush," I say, turning to grin at her. "I'm sure you'll enjoy it. Besides. A little nudity ain't nothin' compared to what'll happen if the angels discover us."

Anxiety boils inside Belial's eyes. She bites her lip, unsure what to do, but after a moment, she begins pulling her tigerskin clothing off. "Fine. Stop staring."

I roll my eyes. "Ain't nothin' to see. You're flat as a board."

"Excuse me?"

"Someone's sensitive."

I quickly start pulling my pants and shirt off, and when I finish with my shirt, I stare at Belial in surprise. "Uh, what? You look..."

Belial, her body now shrunken down to an imp form, smirks at me. "Illusion magic. Now you have nothing to ogle."

"You can change your appearance?"

"It's temporary. I suspect perceptive angels will see right through my disguise."

I quickly rub my chin. "Can you use that on us?"

"Maybe? I'll try."

Belial weaves a few magic signs, then walks over and presses her palm against my chest. As soon as she draws close, her body morphs back into her demon form, but after stepping away, it shrinks again.

She repeats her magic with Agares, and after the two of them separate, Agares' body shrinks. "Did it work?" He asks.

"Yeah. I think it did for me, too."

Belial breathes a sigh of relief. "My magic will wear off soon if I don't keep renewing it, so we need to move fast. Don't walk too close to angels. They'll see through our facades."

"Trust me. I'll keep my distance."

* * *

The three of us start walking toward a large group of angels near the center of the Gardens. It doesn't take long before we spot Uzziel with a crowd of onlookers watching as she plays her harp.

"There's the dame," I whisper to the other two. "We gotta pull her out of that crowd. Isolate her. Get her all alone."

Agares frowns. "Be careful, Satan. She might look like a young woman, but Uzziel is still an Archangel. She's extremely dangerous."

"You don't have to tell me twice. Keep your eyes peeled for Samael. He's the key to my plan."

Cautiously, we skulk around the edges of the gathering. One or two angels glance at us for a moment, but they turn back to Uzziel's performance after a second or two. We don't matter to them.

After finishing, Uzziel bows her head, and the others clap politely. "Beautiful as always!"

"Thank you, I do what I can," Uzziel says sweetly. Her radiant smile warms the hearts of everyone nearby.

"Satan," Belial whispers. "Return to that secluded spot behind the tree. I have an idea."

I frown. "What are you planning?"

"I'm going to draw Uzziel away from this crowd. Don't worry. I think I'll succeed. If I don't try, she'll probably continue playing her harp for hours."

"True. Mother loves plucking at the damn thing."

Agares raises an eyebrow. "Shouldn't we stop calling her 'mother' now?"

"Of course not, dumbass. Our goal today is to use Uzziel for our gain, not to hurt her. If she turns feisty, we'll use force. Otherwise, we won't."

"Whatever you say."

Agares and I leave Belial to the task at hand. We slip off and return to the tree where we stashed our clothes and lie in wait.

A minute passes. Two. Three.

I bite my lip. "Damn. What's taking so long?"

Agares appears unfazed. "Belial is cautious, Satan. Give her time to work her magic. If she pulls too hard, Uzziel might cause a scene. That would be disastrous."

"We don't have time, remember? The angels could check on Heaven's Gate at any moment. Cripes. Wish she'd pick up the pace. Can't ever rely on a broad for anything."

After another minute, Agares peeps out from behind the tree. "Oh! Look alive, Satan. Here they come."

I nudge Agares. "Try and stay out of sight, but morph into a lizard again. We'll need to subdue Uzziel, then lure Samael over next. You're the best guy for the job."

Agares nods. "As you command."

He quickly morphs his body, grows scales, claws, and a tail, then he scurries up the tree, climbing it just as Uzziel and Belial walk around to my side.

Uzziel's voice lilts when she sees me. "Oh, is this the one? I thought ye said he was injured."

Belial's eyes flick to me, then dart around, trying to find Agares. I quickly clutch my chest and lean back, pretending to be hurt. "Ah, mudder Uzziel, it bad. Tummy hurt."

Concern sprouts on Uzziel's face. "Oh? Are you alright, little one? Did you overeat?"

She takes a few steps toward me, ignorant of the reptile clinging to the branches above. As she kneels down,. Uzziel's expression turns into a frown. "Hey... thy face is familiar. Come to think of it, so is the female's..."

The Archangel doesn't get a moment to piece the puzzle together. Belial and Agares pounce at her. Belial morphs and stretches her body, quickly wrapping around Uzziel's arms and legs to stop any spellcasting, while Agares lands on the woman's back, digs his claws in, and latches onto her firmly.

The Archangel flops onto her stomach, unable to fight back. Agares covers her mouth with his claws and presses a talon against her throat. "Don't make a sound, Mother. We won't hesitate to kill you."

Uzziel's eyes dart around in terror. She stops struggling to stare at me helplessly as I loom over her.

"We don't want to hurt you, Mother. As long as you keep quiet and play the part of our hostage, things will turn out alright. Agares, are you holding her tight?"

The reptilian demon nods. His crocodilian head makes it difficult to ascertain his emotions, but coiling around Uzziel's body seems to disturb him somewhat. I don't think he likes it.

"Alright. Belial, find Samael. Bring him here next."

The demoness unwraps from Uzziel slowly, allowing Agares to coil his tail around her arms, pinning them behind her back. "Uzziel told me where he was on the way here. I'll return soon."

Belial darts away, leaving Agares and me alone with Uzziel. The Archangel mumbles through Agares' claws covering her mouth. "Mghm?"

"I told you to keep quiet, Mother. Don't speak, and this will all be over soon."

Her body sags in Agares' grip.

This time, fifteen minutes pass. Agares begins to dart his eyes around. "Tch. We should have brought Deebs. He could have put her to sleep."

"I need her to be awake. It'll convince Samael better if she struggles a little."

Agares glances away. "You're messed up, Satan."

"No more than some demons, and less than others."

Eventually, when I glance behind the tree again, I spot Samael walking behind Belial. He scowls at her as if he can't believe she would waste his time over some trivial task.

The moment Samael rounds the tree, his eyes laser onto Uzziel, facedown on the grass, with a freaky lizard-creature wrapped around her.

"Sister?! What in the name of-?!"

"Don't move," I say, holding a finger to my neck. "Or your sister dies."

Samael blinks twice. He starts to motion with his hands, but freezes when Agares stabs his talon deeper into her throat, causing her to whimper and cry. A few drops of blood drip into the grass, staining it red.

The Archangel of Change pauses, uncertain what he should do. "Tch! What is this?! How dare ye lay a hand on Uzziel!"

"Keep calm, and your sister will live to see another day," I say, ice dripping from my voice. Belial slides over beside me to get out of Samael's reach.

The male Archangel regards me for a few moments before lowering his arms to his sides. "Little imp bastard. Speak quickly, for soon, I will remove thy head from thy shoulders."

"Don't get your panties in a bunch, kid. I'm in control here." I wave my finger at Samael. "There's something I want, and only you can give it to me. If you don't, your sister dies."

Uzziel wiggles in Agares grasp and tries to yell something, but Agares coils around her a little tighter, like a python squeezing the life from its prey. His scaled claws continue to press against her lips, preventing her from screaming for help.

"Tell me what thou dost desire," Samael says. He suppresses his anger further, turning his expression deathly calm. His expression sends tingles of fear creeping down Satan's back, but the Devil forces himself to remain calm.

"That's better. I want you to help me release all the imps from Heaven. You should do everything in your power to ensure no harm comes to any of them."

Samael narrows his eyes. His expression is sometimes difficult to make out through the golden mask covering his upper face, but his look of suspicion is unmistakable. "An exodus? Thou intendeth for them to leave Heaven?"

"That's right, chum. Pretty simple, eh?"

Samael appears unconvinced. "Surely thou art a jester. Why should thou wish to leave Heaven when Earth is a miserable-"

"I have my reasons, stupid chicken. Don't question me. In addition to granting the imps safe passage, I want'cha to sign this scroll..."

My hands become a flurry of motion. Mana leaves my body and coalesces into a Blood Contract, which hovers before me in midair for a moment, then lands in my grasp.

"What is that?" Samael asks.

"Call it a souvenir," I say slyly. "It's a record of my first incredible deed beating an angel. By signing this, you acknowledge I beat you. That's all."

"I don't understand."

"It's a personal thing. Call it one of my eccentricities, if you want. Either way, if you don't sign it..." I nod toward Agares, and the reptilian squeezes Uzziel even harder, making her whimper and cry.

Samael grinds his teeth together. "Worthless... fine. Give me the damned scroll. I'll have the last laugh when we place thy wretched head upon a pike."

I nod, keeping my expression neutral. "Perhaps. We shall see."

I walk toward the Archangel, and he violently snatches the scroll from my grasp. "How do I 'sign' this. What does that even mean?"

"The feather. Prick your finger with it and write your name or a symbol on the page at the bottom. Use your blood."

The Archangel curls his lip in disgust. "Gah! My blood?! Thou art a morbid little wretch. What purpose would blood-"

"Sign it!" I bark, making him jump in surprise. "Or else!"

Samael closes his eyes, then sighs. "I can't wait to... to rip the life from thy skinny little..."

The Archangel doesn't finish his sentence. Instead, he releases his grip on the scroll. For some reason, it unfurls in midair, as if held by an invisible observer. With both hands freed, Samael takes the feather, stabs his finger, and begins to write on the page.

When the Archangel finishes, a strange sensation enters my body. Adrenaline, mixed with pure ecstasy, dance like the embers of a fire in my eyes.

My pupils dilate. I lick my lips. "Oh, yes. Perfect."

With a flourish of my hand, the blood contract vanishes. I grin.

"Agares. Release Uzziel."

The lizard turns to gawk at me. "What?! Are you crazy? If I-"

"Do it."

Samael tenses up. He digs his feet into the ground, as if preparing to lunge at me once we free his sister.

I grin.

What a fool.

Satan's thoughts enter my mind, as clear as day.

Suddenly, a feeling of disorientation washes over me. I've never experienced anyone's thoughts but mine during Solomon's visions.

He played right into my hand. Heh heh heh...

Satan's grin widens. Samael curls up his lip and snarls. "What dost thou find so funny, little wretch?"

Uzziel wrenches out of Agares' grasp and flings him aside, then dashes to her brother. "S-Samael!"

Samael grabs his sister and pulls her behind him protectively. He lunges toward me, his fist ready to pound me into a pile of blood and gore.

I hold up my palm.

"Stop."

Samael freezes, his fist suspended mere inches from my face.

"Ngh. W-what... my... body..."

By now, my grin is downright maniacal. I begin to giggle like a madman under my breath.

"Hehe... stupid, ugly chicken. You signed your soul away to me. I own you. Stand at attention."

My command hits Samael harder than a sack of bricks. The Archangel yanks back to a standing position. Both of his arms hang rigidly at the sides of his body.

"I... I can't... move..."

Samael twitches, trying to unfree himself from the invisible shackles wrapping all around his soul.

Unfortunately, he cannot.

I whistle a merry tune and stroll over to the Archangel. "First rule, maggot. You will never hurt or injure me or any demon, ever again."

"Samael?" Uzziel's eyes widen. "What's wrong?"

I ignore her. "Second rule. You will follow my orders or those any demon gives you unless they conflict with the first rule."

Uzziel quickly grabs her brother's shoulders. "Samael! Snap out of it! This child does not command thee!"

Samael's breath begins to shorten. "This... this is... powerful magic. Verily, thou dids't place a spell on my body... ah! That scroll!"

I nod sagely. "How unfortunate for you to realize after you've already signed it. Ah, it can't be helped. Now, my first order for you will be a simple one, though I fear you won't like it."

Samael's eyes widen. "No... no! Uzziel! Flee! Warn the others! This imp is planning something terrible! He's-!"

"Restrain your sister," I say, cutting him off. "Prevent her from using magic, and cover her mouth so she can't scream."

Samael's body obeys my command instantly, though his movements are awkward and stilted. He pivots robotically and spins toward her. Instead of lunging toward Uzziel and grabbing hold of her, something strange happens.

Uzziel's arms yanks away from her sides. Something invisible appears to grab and pull them apart. Her eyes widen once again as she tries to break free, but something with a grip far exceeding Agares' holds her in place. She tries to kick her legs out, but the invisible force grabs and pins those as well, then levitates her a few inches off the ground, suspending her helplessly in the air.

I narrow my eyes. "What's going on? How are you doing that, Samael? Answer me!"

Samael doesn't turn to look at me. "V-Vectors. My eight vectors. They're like long, invisible arms that allow me to- augh! It isn't thy business! I need not tell thee anything!"

"That's for me to decide," I mutter cooly. "Vectors, huh? Interesting. I didn't know you had a power like that. What other abilities do you have?"

The veins in Samael's neck bulge as he tries desperately not to answer. "Tr-transformation. I can shift my body into that of various animals. No! This information is not meant for thy wretched ears! How dare thee compel my speech!"

Uzziel wriggles, trying to escape. For the second time in several minutes, she is unable to break free of her assailant's grasp. This time, however, it's someone dear to her who holds her in place.

I nod to Agares and Belial. "Alright. We're done here. Let's help the other imps escape. We need-"

Suddenly, from the skies above, a male voice cries out. "By the Creator! Samael! What art thou doing to Uzziel?!"

My eyes dart to the speaker. A robed angel with a rose tucked behind his ear flaps his wings, gawking at us from above.

Samael yells, "Elphin! Run! Warn the others! This imp is using terrible magic to-"

"Stop speaking!" I bark at Samael, silencing him. "Rule three! Speak only when I tell you to!"

Elphin stares wide-eyed from above, unsure of what to do. However, to his credit, he quickly understands something is amiss. "Worry not, brother! I'll fetch the others!"

"No! Stop him!" I yell at Agares and Belial. "Don't let him sound the alarm!"

The two demons leap into action. Agares uses his powerful reptilian arms to grab Belial by the waist. She yelps in surprise, but quickly understands his intent as he rears back and flings her toward the angel fleeing in the skies above.

Belial races toward Elphin like an arrow toward a bullseye. He doesn't see her coming, and she slams against his back, wrapping herself around the Cherub like play-doh around an action figure.

Elphin yelps in surprise and loses control, plummeting toward the ground. He slams into the grass a few hundred feet away, just out of sight. Several dozen screams of surprise and alarm erupt in the clearing, turning my veins to ice.

"Damn. Damn! Now everyone knows something's up!"

Agares barks from behind me. "We have to escape, Satan! It won't be long before the other Archangels come. Whether you control Samael or not, we can't battle Michael, Gabriel, and Camael at the same time. We have to leave!"

I pause, as Satan's thoughts enter my mind.

There are tens of thousands of imps in Heaven. We can't have saved more than a few hundred yet. We need more time.

I gesture toward Samael. "Come with me. Bring Uzziel! We're heading back to Heaven's Gate."

Belial bolts out of the Garden and rushes toward us; panic etched into her face. "The angels are coming!"

"I know! Let's make like wolves and get the bark outta here!"

Recommended Listening

All three of us, plus the two Archangels, begin running toward Heaven's Gate. A glance over my shoulder sends a wave of panic coursing through me, as hundreds of Cherubs fly overhead, tailing not far behind us.

"Get a move on! Go, go, go!!"

As we near Heaven's Gate, a shocking sight greets us. Valac stands silently among a field of angelic bodies. Armored Cherubs along with robed Seraphs lie here and there, at least a hundred of them scattered across the land. Imps dash past the corpses, ignoring them as they flee toward Heaven's Gate. Everyone knows the Cherubs are coming. Panic spreads like wildfire once they spot us and our winged pursuers.

Diablo gasps. "The Archangel Samael! And Uzziel! Boss, you-"

"Not now, dumbass! Summon everyone! We've gotta escape right now!"

We slow to a grinding halt and spin to face the blotted-out sky. Within seconds, Cherubs begin racing toward us. They slam into the ground, one after the other, landing expertly on their feet. Each impact sends a rumble through Heaven's soil, jarring my teeth.

"Diablo! Use your magic on Uzziel! Samael, hold her down!"

Several cherubs yank out their swords and jump at me. I gasp and fall on my ass, watching helplessly as the weapons race toward my heart.

A blur of motion passes before my eyes.

The angels hit a wall of solid flesh as Bael protects me and blocks their attacks. He grabs their swords and flips them to the sides, then pounces at each one and smashes their faces in with punches and kicks, snapping a neck or two in the process.

A quick glance behind me reveals Samael fighting his body as he tries not to hand Uzziel over to Diablo. Diablo forms a few magic signs, grabs her by the back of the neck, and Uzziel's eyes close reluctantly. The Archangel falls asleep, and Diablo lowers her to the ground.

"Bind her," I command. "Samael, you're on frontline duty. Kill any Cherubs or Archangels who get too close. Protect us, and especially me, with your life!"

Samael snarls, but thanks to my command earlier, he cannot speak. The Archangel leaps to the front and assumes a defensive stance as he guards Heaven's Gate. He tries to keep Uzziel within his vision, but I point at the Cherub army. "Eyes up front, dickhead! Your sister isn't your concern anymore!"

His head twitches as he tries to resist. He fails.

Samael glowers and snarls at the cherubs, causing several to rethink their life's decisions. Many of them glance at each other, unsure of whether to attack.

Why is Samael working alongside the imps? Their eyes ask. Should we attack? Should we wait for Michael and the others?

They don't have to wait for long. As if on cue, four other angels arrive on the horizon. Two men and two women land amongst their brethren. I recognize the towering figure of Gabriel first, then Raphael beside him, but I haven't a clue who the women are.

"Samael? What is the meaning of this treachery?" Gabriel shouts. "Why dost thee stand against thy family? Why hath thee allowed the imps to bind Uzziel? Speak!"

Raphael leans forward and narrows his eyes. "Look closely, brother. Some of the imps stand taller than the rest. The bodies around us... Samael did not kill them."

Defiantly, I strut toward the Archangels. "Greetings. I doubt you'll recognize me, but I know you lot well. Gabriel, Raphael, Camael, Uriel. I'm surprised Michael didn't come along."

One of the Archangels, a female in splendid white and gold armor, far bulkier than seems necessary, glowers at me. Her face, wizened with age, reminds me somewhat of Raphael's, though it has a harder edge to it than his. She appears to be a little younger than him and is probably the second eldest of the group.

"Filthy imps. I foresaw thy treachery centuries ago. I cast it aside as a terrible dream, but now I see 'twas another prophecy given to me by the Creator. Release our sister, or suffer our wrath."

"A prophecy, eh? Camael, the Archangel of Divination. It must be handy, seeing into the future. If only you had acted on your visions, you might have been able to stop me."

The final Archangel is a gorgeous woman in a silken red dress. Her hair, white like that of her brothers and sisters, hangs loosely over half her face, covering her right eye. Her thin frame and dainty physique give her an air of naivete, as if she's little more than a twig that will snap in half if too much pressure is applied.

I may not know who she is at first glance, but the only one I haven't met is Uriel, Archangel of Protection. It must be her.

Uriel's eyes ignite in red-hot rage. She takes a step toward me, and all my impressions of fragility vanish as two fireballs ignite in both of her palms. "Disgusting red rat! Let not another word escape thy putrid lips! BURN!"

She flings the fireballs. Samael slides toward me, and his Vectors lash out, deflecting them harmlessly to the sides, where they explode against the grass.

I reach out and smack Samael's ass. "Hah! Nice one, chum! Those rules are coming in handy!"

"What? Samael... why art thou protecting these imps?!" Uriel stares at him in shock. "What's come over thee?"

I snap my fingers and point at Uriel with an 'oh yeah, baby' expression. "Heh, Samael works for me now, you fat cow. He's seen the light."

I quickly glance around to take stock of my surroundings. Imps cower and hide next to the bodies of fallen angels everywhere. Our exposed position affords us little protection. The situation has turned dire. Satan's bravado appears violently misplaced, given the circumstances.

Agares slithers up beside me and whispers in my ear. "Boss. Diablo finished tying up Uzziel. The other demons have returned. A few hundred imps already fled through the portal... but that's all we could save. We didn't have enough time to find more."

In the sky above, hundreds of cherubs join the others. They circle overhead, watching, waiting for the order to attack.

Movement out of the corner of my eye makes me flinch. I turn to see Lucifer, Vepar, and Orias calmly walking toward the portal as if they haven't a care in the world.

"What is thy plan, little imp?" Raphael asks. He smiles at us warmly, like an old man about to break a paddle over his grandson's ass. "Thou dids't slay many of my brothers and sisters. Their corpses have yet to cool. Dost thee imagine a quick retreat is within thy grasp? At best, thou might make it a mile before thy worst nightmare befalls thee. If we fail to stop thee here, then Michael shall hunt thee to the ends of the Earth and tear ye limb from limb."

Raphael tries to talk me down, but Satan smiles back.

Stupid old man. I knew the angels would find out. I was hoping it would take longer, but nothing's changed.

"I want all of your angels to back off, grandpa. If they don't, we'll kill Uzziel."

I gesture toward the unconscious woman behind me. Diablo props her up with one arm and holds a crude stone knife to her neck with the other. Bael stands beside him, grinning, as if daring the angels to make a move.

"A hostage," Uriel murmurs. She balls her hands into fists. "How cowardly. Is this the reason for my brother's change of heart? Dids't thee cow him into submission by threatening his precious sister?"

I flick my gaze toward Lucifer. The demoness quietly motions for several imps to flee through the portal, continuing the plan even as hundreds of cherubs wait for us to slip up. They want nothing more than to gut us like pigs.

"No," I say, turning my attention back to Uriel. "Samael chose to join us freely. He supports our cause. Tell them, son."

Samael's eyes twitch. His mouth opens, and he speaks, but his voice is stressed as he tries to fight my command. "YES. I LOVE THE IMPS. I WANT TO FIGHT ALONGSIDE THE LITTLE RED BASTARDS."

"A convincing performance," Raphael says. "But I suspect foul play. Whatever thou dost seek, obtaining it via these acts of deception is sure to fail-"

WHOOMPH.

A massive explosion to my left makes everyone jerk in fright. A crater explodes in Heaven as Michael pounds into the dirt. Scarcely has he landed before the Archangel pounces toward us, a golden sword aimed at me.

"BASTARDS!"

My heart turns to ice. The most powerful Archangel in Heaven has arrived, and he's pissed.

"Samael! S-stop him!"

I yell an order at the Archangel of Change while recoiling in terror. Panic floods my mind.

Michael clears the five-hundred-foot gap in barely a second. His sword moves insanely fast as he cuts apart several imps in his path, dicing them into hundreds of pieces before they can react. Samael pounces at his brother and whips out his Vectors to stop Michael. The two Archangels fly into combat as Michael instantly realizes Samael is his enemy. Unlike the other angels, Michael doesn't hold back.

From behind me, two imps yelp in surprise simultaneously. I turn around just in time to see Diablo and Bael fall into a sinkhole forming underneath them. They scream in terror, drop Uzziel, and try to grab at the sides of the chasm, but the ground swallows them up, and seals shut a split-second later.

"Hahahaha!! Foolish rats!" Uriel cackles delightedly. She motions with her hands and uses the power of Earth manipulation to spit Uzziel's bound, unconscious body out of the ground and into Raphael's arms. Diablo and Bael follow a moment later, and Camael snatches them out of midair.

"Gotcha!"

Camael flings my companions behind her to the cherubs. "Capture them! Hold them down! I want those two alive!"

I gasp. "Deebs! Bael!"

Agares howls. "Satan! We need to flee! Make a run for it!"

"I think not!" Gabriel yells. He stomps toward us, and a hundred cherubs dive toward us from the skies. "Kill the imps! Don't let even one escape!"

Everything moves so quickly I can barely follow the action with my eyes. The Archangel of Power blasts a wave of Holy Energy at me, intent on my destruction. Agares's tail coils around my waist, and he leaps toward Heaven's Gate, along with all the other imps in the area.

Lucifer aims her third eye at Gabriel. His attack ceases. He stumbles and trips, then falls flat on his face as he loses his footing. The cherubs from above howl in pain as Valac pounces into the sky and cuts through them with his scythe, making their corpses slam into the ground only seconds after dying.

While it rains cherubs around us, all the nearby imps push through the portal. Just before Agares and I enter it, I catch a glimpse of Diablo as he screams in pain. One of the cherubs stabs him with a magical blade and pours Holy Energy into his veins.

Then, Heaven vanishes. I pop through the portal along with Agares, Vepar, Orias, Belial, Lucifer, and all the others as well.

Agares dashes through the hallways, carrying me with his tail.

"Deebs! Bael! We have to save them!" I yell.

The reptile sets his jaw. "We can't, Boss! We can't..."

For some reason, the angels don't pursue us through Heaven's Gate. This time, though, I don't think it has anything to do with Titans.

Part 096: Attack On Chimera

"Holy shit. That was intense."

Before I mean to say anything, a curse leaves my mouth. I open my eyes and find myself before the bonfire once again, as the Archangels and Solomon gaze at me.

Michael sticks his chin out. His face contorts into disgust.

"Not a pleasant vision, was it? Twas a day I'll never forget. Satan, the leader of the demons, turned our brother against us. He forced Samael's hand, turning him into a living weapon."

"Samael didn't deserve such misery," Raphael says, his voice low. "Sadly, that day was only the beginning of his torment."

I raise my hand. "Question. Samael used a power he called the Eight Vectors. When I battled Satan six years ago, he also had it. Given this vision showed Samael signing one of Satan's Blood Contracts..."

"Thy presumption is correct," Michael replies. "Satan eventually took Samael's powers for himself. Not only Samael's abilities, but those of other demons, heroes, and angels. Satan may have been the weakest of his people at first, but as time passed, he eclipsed his peers. In many ways, thy rise mirrors his."

I raise an eyebrow. "It does? I do?"

Solomon nods. "I've taken my time training you, Jason. We've been lucky to have a lengthy reprieve from conflict with the demons. Wordsmithing holds more power than anything the demons and heroes could ever imagine, but it will require mental willpower, vast mana stores, and excessive creativity to master."

"The Knowledge Seeker speaks truth," Raphael says. "One of the reasons we're sharing our knowledge of the past is because we believe thou can'st repair the damage the demons have wrought upon the galaxy. Returning the lives of our brothers and sisters is impossible, but thou may yet restore a sense of balance to the galaxy, preventing the demons from tearing apart everything in their path."

"I don't think the demons intend to cause permanent damage," I say. "They lived stably for a hundred thousand years. I'm unconvinced they're genocidal monsters. To be honest, the way you treated them in the past seemed downright awful. It's no surprise they turned against you."

Michael's expression sours. "Dost thee believe the demons were right to attack us? That we deserved the horrors they unleashed? We made many mistakes, but never anything worthy of the violence they rained from the skies. Now that we know about Leviathan, 'tis reasonable to conclude he corrupted the minds of the demons and turned them down the path of evil."

"Leviathan certainly had a hand in the demonic insurrection," I concede, "but you kicked and bullied the imps. You treated them like slaves for thousands of years. Millions, perhaps? I'm not surprised they went rogue. I would too."

"Blasphemy," Raphael says. "The angels conceived the imps to serve us. Thou art implying the imps had the right to revolt, but given they owed their existence to us, we held control over their lives from the moment of their creation."

"I don't care why the angels created the imps. What matters is how they treated them. Kicking, beating, and insulting them was inhumane. I can't see the imps as the bad guys, considering the circumstances."

A moment of silence passes. My words hang in the air as the three Archangels stare at me.

Michael waves his hand flippantly. "Give it time. Thy tune will change when thou dost witness what came next."

Solomon clears his throat. "Ahem. Let's return to the past. This time, we'll see the aftereffects of Satan's Blood Contract and what it could do to a person's mind. It wasn't pretty."

I say nothing. Solomon motions with his hands, and the world fades to black.

I can't see the angels as the good guys, no matter how they try to spin the past.

"Uzziel! Sister! Art thou injured?!"

Uriel's panicked voice jolts me awake. I open my eyes to see the waifish Archangel hovering above me. She rests her hand on my forehead.

"Where am I? What happened?"

In the distance, a dull whoomph blasts outward, shaking the ground. I lift my body to see what caused the noise and gasp as a chunk of rock whizzes past and misses me by mere inches, slamming into the ground beside my face.

Samael, the Archangel of Change, no longer resembles himself. Instead, he has transformed into a chimera, one with a cave bear's body, a lion's head, and a wolf's tail to boot. My first thought is that it resembles Kar's Sphinx form. However, the thirty-foot-tall monster dwarfs Kar's transformation by a factor of three, so the comparison doesn't seem apt.

"Samael! Why has he transformed?"

Uriel helps me to my feet. My numb legs tremble as I dust myself off. "Worry not, Uzziel. The foul demons attempted to capture thee from right under our noses, but I put a stop to their plans. They fled, but left Samael behind. He's been battling our brothers and Camael for thirty minutes now!"

The humongous monstrosity, Samael, unleashes a howl that blasts away the clouds above. "GROOOOOAAARR!!"

Despite his transformation, Samael doesn't appear to have gone berserk. Instead, his eight vectors intelligently punch and thrash the other Archangels as they try to hem him in and cut his movements off. Gabriel, once the tallest angel in Heaven, now only stands at half Samael's height. He continuously fires powerful blasts of holy energy at his brother, but they deal little to no damage. Samael concentrates his attention on Camael and Michael, ignoring Raphael and Gabriel for the most part.

Michael darts around, tossing rocks into the air and batting them with his sword at Samael's reinforced animal hide repeatedly. His incredible strength and speed allow him to transform the stones into cannonballs, blasting Samael over and over.

Camael, meanwhile, wields a tremendous greathammer, taller than her body with a head that must weigh a ton. Her speed, while significantly slower than Michael's, is made up for by her strength. She leaps at the cave bear and slams her hammer into his stomach, knocking Samael fifty feet to the side. He crashes into the ground and leaps to his feet instantly, appearing unharmed by her attack.

Meanwhile, Raphael weaves several magic signs that appear to do nothing. I can't tell if he's helping or trying to distract the Archangel of Change with spooky finger movements. I hope it isn't the latter.

"Art thou capable of standing?" Uriel asks. "I have to help stop Samael. His transformation puts him well beyond a level of power our brothers can handle. At least, not if we hope to subdue him!"

Dizziness hits me for a moment, but I shake it off. "I'm fine. I'll help, too. Michael and Camael must be exhausted."

"Thou hath no idea," Uriel replies, worry in her voice. "We've expended valuable mana trying to stop Samael. I don't know what that little red rat did to him, but he won't listen to reason!"

I chew my lower lip. "Satan summoned a strange, glowing scroll and forced Samael to sign it. I don't know what it did, but Samael lost control at that moment. There's evil magic at work, sister. Let us work together to subdue him. Don't blame Samael for his actions!"

"I banish such thoughts," Uriel replies, ice in her voice. "Conserve thy energy, Uzziel. Thy body lay unconscious for a frighteningly long time. Leave this battle to me!"

"I'll be fine. We both have to save our family!"

Uriel nods, but a grim expression spreads across her face. "I won't lose a brother or sister. Not today."

Together, the two of us stand up straight and face our opponent. Samael, well over a football field away, lunges his invisible limbs out. Camael dives to the side as the ground explodes behind her. The impacts of his vectors leave bowling-ball-sized craters in their wake. Michael starts to bat another rock at superspeed toward Samael, but a Vector catches him off guard and pounds Michael backward, stunning the Archangel. Michael rolls and spins as he tumbles a hundred feet away. When he comes to a stop, it takes several seconds for him to pull himself up. He's fatigued beyond belief.

"Dammit, Samael," Gabriel says, his voice listless. "The Creator would weep if he witnessed thee in this state."

Samael doesn't reply. He only maintains his relentless onslaught and swipes at the ground, sending a hail of rocks at Gabriel. The Archangel of Power quickly raises his arms to shield his face, but in that instant, he reveals his chest as a blind spot. Samael charges at Gabriel and hits him five times at once, slamming his brother deep into the dirt. Gabriel cries out in pain, but a volley of blows silences him.

My heart sinks. Only Camael, Raphael, Uriel, and I are left standing. Camael motions with her hands, and a tiny metal orb, barely the size of a marble, materializes before her face. It hovers for a moment, then falls into her outstretched palm. When she touches it, it expands and encases her gauntlet in iron, then transforms into a glowing shield.

Samael turns to look at her. The moment he makes eye contact, the shield unleashes a ray of blinding light. The chimera screams in pain and recoils, clawing at his eyes in agony. Camael pounces toward him, greathammer raised, and drives it into his head, smashing him into the ground. All of Heaven quakes from the impact, nearly jarring me off my feet.

"Now!" Uriel yells. "Assist Camael!"

I have no idea how Uzziel's powers work, but she does. I weave several signs, and after a few seconds, thick roots burst from the ground and wrap around Samael, pinning the Chimera in place. At the same time, Uriel summons four servants. The first two resemble angels, while the others consist of an orb and a cube levitating in the air.

The cube rapidly oscillates, and invisible forces press against Samael, holding him tightly. For some reason, instead of taking the opportunity to attack him while he's defenseless, Camael flashes her gaze toward Uriel, nods, and leaps backward, flapping her wings to put as much distance between herself and the chimera as possible.

I find out why only a few seconds later. Uriel's third servant, the orb, begins vibrating and spinning like the cube. A volley of rock and flame bursts out of its top and races toward the helpless chimera like a prehistoric artillery strike. Samael's aaiiyee of agony when they strike unnerves me, reminding me of someone kicking a wounded dog.

Smoke billows out from the impact point. I stare, wide-eyed. "By the Creator! Is... is he..."

Uriel tenses up. "He's still alive. And angry."

A sound like firecrackers explodes in the smoke. Samael clambers to his feet, tears apart my roots with his Vectors, and rushes toward us. "GROOOOAARR!!"

My heart stops. Seeing a thirty-foot-tall monster charging me scares me shitless. Luckily, Uzziel retains her senses. She motions with her hands and a hundred-foot-tall tree sprouts between Samael and me. Its branches explode outward, transforming into a spiderweb of green and brown, creating a wooden barrier between the two of us.

I almost breathe a sigh of relief. At least, until Samael jumps.

My tree presents no obstacle for him. The bear-lion-wolf hybrid animal leaps into the sky, clears the obstacle, and dives toward Uzziel.

Death.

The word flashes through my mind as the unstoppable killing machine speeds toward my body. I stand, helpless, and wait for my end to come.

Then, unexpectedly, Samael's rapid descent comes to a screeching halt. Like a bug hitting a windshield, the chimera awkwardly slams against a faintly visible barrier above. His body contorts, twists, and flips as a look of confusion passes over his face.

Uriel grabs my shoulder. "Sister, do not hesitate! My barrier caught Samael off-guard! Grab him before he recovers!"

Nodding, I weave more magic signs. This time, vines erupt from the ground, entangle Samael's limbs, and yank him down the side of the magical barrier. When he hits the ground, more of them sprout.

Uzziel dashes over to him and hops into the air. She motions again, causing a bed of purple and green flowers to form around Samael. We land atop his hairy hide. A faint shimmer in the air reveals several vectors rushing toward me, but Uzziel presses her palm against his chest.

Vines erupt from my grasp and join the others on Samael's body. His vectors grab me and try to fling me away, nearly tearing my arm off, but still, I hold steady, wincing from the pain.

Wham! Bam!

Over and over, invisible fists bash me around, hitting me in the face, stomach, back, and every other part of my body. Samael can't pull me off, but goddamn if he isn't trying! I'm going to die!!

Uzziel coughs out something, but I can't make out what she says. A moment later, every flower around Samael explodes.

A cloud of gas rushes into the air. My eyes begin to droop. Sleep takes me.

Oddly, as my eyes grow heavy, Samael's attacks cease. The chimera monster coughs and wheezes. I fall against his fur and gasp as the breath gets knocked out of me.

But soon... after not many seconds, I begin to drift off to sleep.

Recommended Listening

A dark void appears. I reach out to touch it, only for someone standing beside me to do the same — a man.

Samael stands five feet away. I turn to look at him, blushing at his full-frontal nudity. His golden mask isn't present, nor anything else to protect his dignity.

"Thank Heaven that thou finally stopped me," Samael says, quietly.

"I only did what I could, brother," Uzziel says, her voice soft.

Samael's eyes glisten. A tear runs down his cheek. "I... I apologize, sister. I couldn't... couldn't protect thee. The demon, Satan... he used thee as a hostage, and I failed to see through his ruse. I serve him now, unwillingly. I cannot refuse his orders."

"Thy soul is mighty. If thou should put effort toward resisting him-"

"No." Samael cuts me off. "Satan's magic isn't like ours. I feel it festering in my blood. My mind. My soul. A monstrous claw clutches my heart. For every second that passes, it squeezes tighter and tighter. I cannot wrench free."

I stare longingly at Samael. "A curse, then? Surely, there must be a way to free thee from his clutches."

"Perhaps. Perhaps... not..."

Samael turns away. More tears begin to flow. "Everything hurts. I stand at death's door, little sister. Satan's last order was to fight, and so I had no choice but to obey. I fought transformed for far longer than I should have. I haven't any mana left to spare."

"What?! No!" I step toward Samael and grab his hand, then press it against my heart. "I'm here! Take my mana, quickly! I won't allow thy spirit to fade! Thou must live on! Thy family-"

Samael reaches over and places a finger on my lips. He shakes his head. "I can't go on like this. I failed thee, Uzziel. I hurt my brothers and sisters. Whether by accident or incompetence, I brought death and sorrow to Heaven. The imps are still out there. If I survive, they will surely turn me against thee again. I... I cannot allow that to happen."

My eyes begin to blur. Tears flow freely. "D-don't say such things. Nobody blames thee for thy actions. We know 'twas Satan's doing."

Samael pulls his hand off my chest. He takes a step back, putting distance between us. ""Tis my right to choose, Uzziel. 'Tis thine to try to stop me."

He looks away. "I won't trade thy life for mine. Live on, Uzziel. Forget not what the demons did to us. Punish them for their sins."

The Archangel's body wavers for a moment, like smoke spinning in the breeze. He lowers his gaze to his hand. It begins to evaporate into dust, carried away by a silent wind.

"Samael! No! NO!!" I dash toward him and try to grab hold, but my arms pass through his body, scattering his remnants into the breeze.

"Farewell... sister..."

Samael's voice fades away. Uzziel sweeps her arms around, trying desperately to reform him through sheer willpower alone.

She fails.

"SAMAEL!! BROTHER!! UWAAAHH!!"

The heartbroken woman falls to her knees and wraps her arms around herself, sobbing and choking with every breath.

"Creator, please... don't take him... don't take him from us..."

A current of electricity courses through my body, jolting me awake. I sit upright and find myself in a shallow crater. Grass and flowers line the edges. Samael's body lies motionless beside me.

Uzziel turns to stare at him. This time, no tears form. The emptiness in her chest brings an ashen taste to my mouth.

"Brother..."

A single word is all she manages.

Footsteps draw near. Uriel rushes into view at the crater's edge. "Uzziel! Uzziel! Art thou alright? Is Samael-"

She freezes mid-sentence. Her eyes pivot to her brother's motionless form. His angelic body, normally a softly glowing shade of yellow, lies cold and grey, lifeless in the dirt.

"No... it... it can't be..."

Uriel eases into the crater. She slumps to her knees beside me, and the two of us embrace.

Her cold, calculating nature melts away for a few minutes. Uriel tries desperately to suppress her anguish, but eventually, she succumbs to grief and weeps in my arms.

"Samael... I can't... I don't want to believe..."

Raphael and Camael appear at the top of the crater, Michael suspended between them. The beaten and battered Archangel of Courage hangs limp, barely lucid. Even so, all three of them spot Samael's corpse. His dull, colorless body echoes those of the hundreds of cherubs scattered nearby.

Camael closes her eyes. She mutters something under her breath, possibly a prayer for Samael. When Camael opens her eyes, she and Raphael lower Michael onto his back at the top of the crater, then they descend into our pit.

Raphael stands over Samael and strokes his beard. "Today is a dark day for our people," He mutters. "Another brother, gone. Unforgivable."

Camael crosses her arms. "Long have I seen visions of a murky future. My ominous premonitions were once little more than a vague warning in the back of my mind, but now they have coalesced into something more tangible. There is a threat out there... and it lives among us."

Raphael closes his eyes. "We must purge the imps. Immediately. Those in Heaven, as well as those outside it."

My eyes bolt open. "Th-thou art... thou art going to... to kill-?"

Uriel pulls away from me. She sniffles and wipes her eyes. "Uzziel, p-please. Thy compassion goes too far. The imps... the imps killed Samael. We must wipe them out at once. At once!"

"'Tis as Uriel states," Camael says. "The imps are now our sworn enemies. We shan't go another day without avenging the loss of our brother."

Camael kneels beside Samael. Her expression, usually stern and callous, softens for a moment. She reaches out and touches his bear-like shoulder, then pulls away. Rage boils in her eyes.

"Killing one of us would be terrible enough... but the imps made us fight our brother. They forced us to kill him ourselves. How cruel. They haven't a shred of empathy in their entire bodies. After we kill those in Heaven, we must set out and scour Earth for their lair."

A voice booms from outside the pit. "We cannot, sister. No matter how much thou dost wish to do so."

Gabriel appears at the edge of the crater. His face, black and blue, is misshapen and deformed. Several patches of skin are missing entirely. His chest is covered in scars and bruises.

The Archangel of Power flops onto his back at the crater's edge and wheezes. "Haah... the Titans hold jurisdiction over Earth. We must seek their permission before we can enter."

"Their permission can lick the shiny side of my boot," Uriel growls. She wipes away the last remnants of tears from her eyes and staggers to her feet. "We have a blood debt to settle. If those Titans dare get in our way-"

"We will do nothing," Raphael says. "Calm thyself, Uriel. We barely held our own against Samael. We haven't any strength to spare against the Titans. Above all else, we must appear strong. If the Titans sense any weakness from us... I fear the actions they might take."

Raphael's words cast a pale gloom over those present.

Quietly, I ask, "If we kill the imps, how shall we regain our mana? I barely have the spiritual stores to sustain myself. Creating new life to give us mana will prove impossible."

Camael licks her lips. "Unfortunate. We'll have to think of something. In the meantime, I shall return soon."

She turns away, jumps into the air, and flies into the distance.

Raphael clicks his tongue. "If we are to search for the missing imps, then 'tis quite fortunate we captured two of them during the battle. We must interrogate them and learn where they live."

From the ridge above, Michael's voice croaks out. "Ha... haha... hahaha... l-leave it... to me. I shall... cut them open. No secrets shall... escape my grasp. They will pay for what they... what they did to Samael."

I clamber to my feet and shakily fly up to Michael. Despite the wounds covering his body, he slowly regenerates the worst-hit spots here and there.

"Michael, don't torture them. Please."

Michael stares at me stonily. "Stay away when... when I speak to them... Uzziel. Their screams will haunt thy worst nightmares."

Until now, Uzziel has done everything in her power to protect the imps. However, Michael's threat hangs in the air for only a moment before she turns away.

"A-alright. Do what ye must. Find the rest of their kind."

Michael slowly raises a hand and caresses my arm. "I shall, little... little sister."

He smiles at me.

I don't smile back.

Uzziel's thoughts form in my mind.

It's all my fault. I loosed the imps from Heaven. Samael died because he was protecting me. It's all... my fault.

The poor girl.

Part 097: Vengeance, Postponed

The vision lingers in my mind, becoming a memory that feels almost as if I lived it myself. It wasn't only Uzziel and the Archangels who lost Samael, but me as well. Irrational as it seems, and despite how little I knew him, Samael seemed like a stand-up guy, one willing to do anything to protect his sister's life. He didn't deserve to die in such a terrible manner.

After a few seconds, I materialize before the bonfire and immediately turn to Raphael.

"You didn't cry."

Raphael blinks slowly. "Apologies, Jason, but I don't follow."

"Samael died, but you barely acknowledged his death. I know people suffer in different ways, but you hardly mentioned it."

"Jason," Solomon whispers, a note of warning in his voice. "Don't be disrespectful."

"'Tis fine, Knowledge Seeker," Raphael replies. "As for the young one's inquiry, I did not break down in tears because, long ago, I lost millions of family members all at once. Even now, a hundred thousand years later, my grief is so overwhelming that it never leaves."

Gabriel takes a step forward and rests his hand on Raphael's back. "Raphael is my elder brother, but on a scale of immortality, years count for little. We might as well be the same age. The difference is that Raphael remembers all those who died before we gave up our memories, while Michael and I do not. I am certain the burden he carries places tremendous stress on him."

Raphael bows his head. "Mmm. 'Twas essential that at least one person remembered the ancient histories. The pain I bear is nothing compared to the thought of forgetting my beautiful sisters, Muriel and Cassiel, let alone millions of other angels."

At the mention of Muriel and Cassiel, Michael grimaces, plops down on his log to my right, pulls out his sword, and stabs it in the ground. He begins to wring and squeeze the hilt as though it were someone's neck.

"If only I could remember the ancient histories. Sometimes I see pale flashes of faces. Distant afterimages. A faint smile, a memory of happiness and bliss. They're always a galaxy away, yet so close that I wish I could reach out and touch them."

Raphael flicks his eyes to Michael. "Of all the angels, 'twas essential thou should forget the past. I'm sorry, brother, but I did what I could to-"

Michael suddenly leaps to his feet. "Gah! Why, Raphael?! Why can't I remember?! Our people are extinct! We're confined to these torturous rings, unable to fly freely or cut down the ones who did this to us! Surely, thou cans't finally lay bare the reasons we lost our memories! It isn't as if the Titans are waiting for us to break the treaty anymore! They're dead too!"

Raphael stares evenly at Michael. His ancient eyes slowly seal shut. He bows his head, rests an elbow on his knee, and places his face in his palm.

"I'm sorry, brother. The treaty was... it was..."

"Thou need not explain," Gabriel says. "Michael. Calm thyself."

"I won't," Michael growls. "I wish to hear about our past! I wish to know what secrets were so significant that Raphael wouldn't speak a word to his brothers about them! Where does thy loyalty lie, Raphael? With thy kin, or with the Titans?!"

Slowly, Raphael raises his head.

"Treaty? There was no such thing."

Michael blinks. He pulls back slightly. "What? Thou speaketh nonsense."

"Nay, I speak the truth," Raphael whispers. "What good would a treaty do if only one person knew the reasons behind its existence? No. The reason the angels and Titans gave up our memories was... it was... to prevent..."

Raphael's voice cracks. "No. I won't say. Michael. Please don't press me for answers. Thou dost think answers will ease thy pain. Thou dost hope they will give thy spirit closure. They will not. I pay the price for every moment of my continued existence, knowing what I do. I do not wish for thee to suffer more than is absolutely necessary."

Raphael's words chill the air around the campfire. Michael meets Raphael's gaze. Their eyes speak to each other for a few moments before he opens his mouth. "Would... woulds't thou tell Gabriel of our past? Ever? Under any circumstance?"

"I might," Raphael replies. His voice is little more than a murmur in the wind. "But t'would only be as a last resort."

"A last resort," Michael says, echoing Raphael. "Yet, never woulds't thee speak of the past to me."

"Nay. Never."

Michael's lip trembles. He slowly turns to stare into the bonfire. After a moment, his chest begins to shake. He squeezes the hilt of his sword, and a tear drips down his face.

"I... I did something. It... it must... must have been terrible."

Raphael stares at his brother. Michael tries to contain his emotions, but slowly, his stalwart facade begins to crack around the edges.

"Do not blame thyself, Michael. The Ancient Times... the Dragon Wars... the Titan Wars... many tragedies of unfathomable scale unfolded there. Thy actions were hardly-"

"Stop," Michael says. He raises his armored hand to wipe at his eyes. "I know the truth, now. It... it only makes sense — the way thou regarded me with suspicion. The way thou never spake of the Ancient Wars when I was present. Muriel. Cassiel. Did... did I... toward them..."

Raphael's eyes widen. "Enough, Michael. Thy curiosity will only lead to ruin."

"I knew it!" Michael leaps to his feet. "'Twas my fault, wasn't it?! I killed Cassiel! I killed Muriel! Why?! Why would I do such a thing?! Answer me! Tell me-"

"MICHAEL!"

Raphael leaps to his feet, mirroring Michael. Out of nowhere, the old man's dismal appearance changes. A dark cloud of miasma springs up around him.

"I AM THY ELDEST BROTHER! CEASE THIS LINE OF QUESTIONING AT ONCE!"

Raphael's body stays the same size, but somehow his presence seems to quadruple in size, dwarfing even Gabriel. The Archangel of Power takes a step back in fright, trips over his log, and lands on his ass.

Michael's anguish turns to terror as his elder brother lurches toward him. Instinctively, Michael grabs for his sword, but he clumsily bats it aside, then rethinks challenging Raphael and cowers under his brother's overwhelming pressure.

"B-brother Raphael! Stop! I yield!"

Raphael's teeth gnash together. He reaches a hand toward Michael as if to strangle the life out of him.

Suddenly, Solomon leaves my side. He jumps in front of Raphael and puffs out his chest. "Raphael! Stop! Stop! You're going too far!"

Expressions of malevolence, hatred, disgust, and rage pass over Raphael's face, all within a single second. However, his eyes glaze over when he recognizes Solomon. The Archangel of Wisdom recoils in surprise. His aura shrinks once again, and the terrifying specter of Death itself morphs back into that of a tired, weak old man.

"O-oh. Solo...mon." Raphael shakily leans on his staff and sits back down. A look of horror spreads across his face. He grabs at his robes and dabs his face dry. "I... I didn't mean to... to lose my..."

* * *

I don't know how to feel or what to think.

Raphael, the kindly old man, is hiding more than I expected. Thanks to Michael's line of questioning, I can take a few stabs in the dark at what happened during or before the Ancient Wars.

Michael was involved, somehow, in killing Muriel and Cassiel. Why? Even if that were the case, Raphael doesn't seem to blame him for it, yet he exploded in rage at Michael for bringing it up.

Does that mean Raphael blames his brother for their deaths? Perhaps there's another reason. The truth could hold sinister consequences for the future.

Everything I learn about the angels, more and more, turns me toward the belief that they are not and were never agents of righteousness or virtue. They're selfish, vain, and petty, like numerous people I've met during my life. Hell, the Archangels are worse in many ways because they're immortal demigods with explosive magical powers. Their potential to cause damage far exceeds that of the average human.

Michael lays on the ground shivering in a ball for half a minute, trembling and sweating. He covers his face with his hands and mumbles incoherently, though I can't make out his words. Gabriel, on the other hand, recovers relatively quickly. He cautiously pulls himself to a sitting position on his log and smoothes his robes over and over. Like a nervous tic, the Archangel of Power rubs his robes repeatedly while flicking his eyes between Raphael and Michael.

Solomon pulls me aside and walks us a short distance away from the fire.

"Jason. Try not to make any hasty conclusions about what just happened. The Archangels are not in their best states after living inside the three rings, alone, for a hundred thousand years. Such isolation would cause anyone to... ah... lose a few marbles."

I bite my lip. "Didn't Bahamut wear all three rings constantly? I thought they could communicate if that were the case."

"No. The Archangels only can do so now because of my crown. I linked their spiritual energies with mine using my artifact. Look, all I ask is that you don't think ill of them because of one minor scuffle."

"Minor?" I nudge my head toward Raphael. "The old man went berserk! He was going to kill Michael!"

Solomon doesn't reply for a few seconds. When he finally responds, he chooses his words carefully.

"I... I don't think... Raphael would hurt Michael. I think he... ah... intended to wipe Michael's mind."

My heart nearly stops.

"Raphael would do that? To Michael?"

Solomon looks me dead in the eye. His expression is graver than anything I've seen in my entire life. "Raphael would do a great many things, Jason. You know the saying. The road to Hell is paved with good intentions."

My heart trembles. "What are you implying?"

"I didn't live through the Ancient past, Jason. However..."

Solomon glances behind us a hundred feet away at Raphael's bowed form. He silently stares into the bonfire, consumed by his thoughts.

A look of fear passes over Solomon's face. He doesn't want Raphael to hear him.

Solomon lowers his voice. "Jason. My crown is the receptacle for hundreds of thousands of memories, from beings long-dead. As I said when you first entered this thought space, its visualizations of the past are built upon the memories of those whose memories I copied."

I nod slowly. "Okay. So what does that mean?"

Solomon lowers his voice. "Anyone who wears my crown, even for a fleeting moment, gives their memories to me. Anyone I touched during my lifetime gave not only their knowledge to me, but the knowledge of any souls they had consumed or manipulated as well. As I told you at the beginning, Jason... I have access to the memories of all three Archangels now."

* * *

My jaw slackens.

"You... you know..."

"About the Ancient Wars, yes. I know Raphael's secrets, including the big one."

Solomon's eyes darken.

"Say nothing to the old man. Don't ask me to tell you what he knows. I won't utter a word. All I will say is that Raphael is right to conceal the past. The secrets he holds should never come to light. I regret probing his mind."

"If you know his secret, why not me as well?"

I challenge Solomon. The king shakes his head in response. "It isn't like that. I learned his past unwillingly as a result of my powers. The danger lies not in you or I knowing his secret, but in someone else obtaining that knowledge. Especially Gabriel, Michael... or the demons. The fewer who know it, the fewer who can turn the past to their advantage."

Solomon squeezes my shoulder. He forces a smile so painfully disingenuine that it makes my eye twitch.

"Cheer up, Jason. I'm going to give you another vision."

I smack my lips while trying to rub the taste of sand off my tongue. "I don't think I want to see anything else."

"You do," Solomon replies encouragingly. "Don't forget why you came here. You need to know about the past if you wish to change the future. Have no fear. I will guide you to the best of my ability."

Solomon and I turn back to the Archangels. Michael has already pulled himself up to sit on his log the same as his brothers, but his look of total dejection reminds me of an abused dog. He slumps forward with his shoulders sagging and stares at the ground emptily. Raphael gazes into the fire, a look of heartache etched into every corner of his face. Gabriel, however, merely looks confused. As a third-party, he doesn't appear to have the emotional involvement Raphael and Michael do about the Ancient Wars, though I can see gears turning in his head as he tries to untangle their conflict.

"Let us return to the Wordsmith's visions," Solomon says, jarring everyone awake. All three Archangels simultaneously turn to look at him, remembering where they are.

"Oh, right. Yes, yes, of course," Raphael mutters. "The visions. Where were we?"

Michael lowers his head again. "As if it matters."

Gabriel and Raphael ignore Michael's brooding. The Archangel of Power coughs into his fist. "Ah, ahem, right... well, I suppose the next major event would be... err..."

"We'll return to Satan's perspective," Solomon says. "The point of these visions is to give Jason a view into the ancient history, and I'd like to keep things balanced."

Raphael shakily lights more tobacco and inhales the odor in his pipe. "Yes, balance, of course. Go on, then."

I glance at Michael. The look on his face reminds me of someone trying to figure out how they ended up on trial for the death penalty, as if he's trying to unravel what would make Raphael hate him so much.

Does Raphael hate Michael, I wonder? Perhaps it's less about hatred, and more about how much Raphael loved his sisters, Cassiel and Muriel, more than life itself. Since Raphael loves Michael as much as he did them, his mind and heart war with one another, trying to decide whether to love Michael as a brother or hate him as their murderer.

Or, maybe it's none of those things. I don't know enough about their history to cast judgment.

Solomon weaves magic signs with his hands. "Careful. This next vision is going to be a bit... disorienting."

"I hate it when you say crap like that," I mutter.

The world goes dark, and once again, I leave the bonfire, but this time, I'm worried about what its state will be when I return.

Part 098: Hades

The moment the vision begins, I realize something is horribly wrong. The darkness of a cave yawns out before me. Agares stands by my side as we head into the depths of the Earth, but before I have time to gather my location, something smashes into my head with the force of a freight train.

"Gaaaugh! Nnn... huwaaah!"

I stumble forward and lose control of my body. The ground rushes at my face, and I hit it with a sickening thud. My nose cracks, blinding me with pain.

Agares voice calls out from somewhere, but my tears blind me. "Satan? Whoa! What happened? Hey, Belial, something happened to the boss!"

Footsteps approach. I gasp for breath while clutching my chest with one hand and my face with the other. My broken nose forces my eyes shut with all the agony it can muster. Electricity courses through my body, tearing apart my blood cells and rewiring my neurons to deliver unending torture unlike anything I've ever experienced. I've had every bone in my body broken twice, both times were my fault, and the pain Satan feels now is somehow ten times worse than either of them.

Someone grabs my shoulders. "Satan? What's the matter?!" Belial's voice rings out in alarm.

Satan can't form a coherent reply. "Hnng, buhuhu, gaah! Hur-hurts!"

After a moment, the pain lessens dramatically. I take a sharp breath as the sensation of magic enters my body. My lungs burn. I feel like my ribs have somehow impaled through both of them.

I wince and open my eyes to see Belial in her tigerskin robes, her brow furrowed in concentration. A drop of sweat drips down her forehead as she channels magic into my body.

"Gah! Your mana passages are a bloody mess," Belial says. Agares stands beside her, watching intently to see if I'll recover.

Something happened to Satan, and it hurts terribly, but the confusion running through his thoughts mirrors mine. He doesn't know what's shredding his body any more than I do.

I cautiously flip onto my back and stare at the ceiling while gasping for breath. Belial and Agares hover over me, and eventually, the pain fades to a dull throbbing in the back of my throat.

"Boss! You okay?"

"Y-yeah. I... I dunno what happened, Scales. Felt like someone threw me into a boiling geyser for a minute or two."

Belial scrunches up her face. "Well, your magic pathways were jumbled up. I pulled out a bunch of weird, shifty stuff from your body. You should be okay now."

"My fuckin' nose-"

Satan starts to say something, but stops mid-sentence. Above him, a long, spindly arm drifts into view. The appendage shifts colors slowly, from green to red to blue to pink, it cycles through all the colors of the rainbow over and over. It reaches toward the ceiling ten feet above, and as it draws near, the hand fans out to reveal five fingers, each ending in a ghastly-looking talon.

"Your nose...?" Belial leans in to examine me. "Mmm. It's broken. I think I can patch it up."

Satan ignores Belial and focuses all his attention on the floating arm. After a moment, another emerges from behind his back. Then another, and another...

Eight arms twist and bend in midair, writhing weirdly as they sometimes lock hands with each other, and other times reach out to touch the walls.

Belial finishes weaving a magic sign, and the pain in my nose vanishes as it pops back into place. Blinking, I flick my gaze toward her. "Hey, toots... do... do you see the arms?"

Belial raises an eyebrow. "The arms? Your arms? Obviously. Do you have a concussion?"

Agares nods. "We see both of them, boss."

"No, dumbasses. Not these arms-" Satan tries to move his arms to wave at them, but instead, two of the rainbow-colored octopus-style limbs lower and wave in Agares and Belial's faces. As they do, I notice the limbs are partially transparent, like they belong to a ghost.

Belial stares through the limbs, not noticing them at all. "What do you mean, 'not these arms,' Satan? Are you okay?"

I continue trying to move my flesh-limbs, but nothing happens. Instead, the ghost-limbs dance around. Concentrating, I furrow my brow to gaze at Belial. The hand closest to the demoness reaches toward her to caress her face. Belial flinches and swats her cheek, but her hand passes through mine.

Yes. That's right. My limb. Mine.

I know what they are. Vectors. Samael's vectors. I fought Satan once before, and he tore me apart with them. Satan of the ancient past doesn't fully understand them yet, but I do.

"Whoa..." Satan whispers. "I can't believe it."

Belial swats her cheek again, then stands up and takes a step back, flicking her gaze around the room to look for her unknown assailant. "What the Devil keeps touching me?"

Satan tries to stand up, but instead of pushing off the ground with his flesh and blood limbs, his new aetherial ones do the job. This results in us levitating into a standing position.

Agares' eyes widen. "Uh, uh... boss? You're floating. You're floating!"

It takes a moment, but eventually, I regain the ability to move my regular arms. I reach up and rub my nose. "Yeah. How about that?"

Satan's thoughts bubble in my mind. That ugly chicken must've iced over. Guess his friends took him out, eh? Are these the Vectors he mentioned? Pretty cool. It seems I'm the only one who can see 'em.

Satan adjusts his coat and cracks his neck. "Thanks for the fix-up, doll. I'm feelin' pretty damn good right about now. Let's have a chat with our new friends."

Belial blinks. "Huh? Oh. The imps, right."

The three of us turn and continue into the cave. Satan's thoughts begin to go wild.

I guess that Blood Contract did the trick. Anything I write in the notes will happen, so when I said the Archangel's soul would become mine, it must've given me his powers, too. That's handier than I expected. I'll have to play around with his abilities later.

Hm. Now that I think about it, Blood Contracts are pretty convenient. Sure, I've gotta convince someone to sign, but once they do, I own their ass forever. The other demons can't put a hand on me. Even Valac don't seem all that tough now that I have Samael's powers.

Satan narrows his eyes. Wish I'd known what I know now when I first got the power. I'd have bound the souls of Agares, Belial, and all the others to me. Shit. They probably won't sign a second contract. Oh, well. At least they can't attack me. That's good enough for now. As for the rookies... hmm...

The tunnel warms steadily as we descend into the planet. Eventually, we arrive at Leviathan's lair. Already, several hundred imps mill around, waiting for my arrival. The sheer-drop from the cliff edge is gone. At some point, somebody must have smoothed it out, because now a stony ramp descends the side of the bluff to the ground forty feet below.

I walk down it, with Belial and Agares trailing me. A few torches line the wall so that the imps don't blindly wander about, but the dragon is still damn hard to see. His black body seems to suck the light from the room and absorb it. Even if I squint, I can barely see his prone form as anything other than a part of the void.

When I arrive at the bottom, I stop to look around the room. "Hm? Why are there so many imps?"

Belial replies. "I beg your pardon?"

"I thought Leviathan was going to power them up. Why are they all still unmutated?"

Agares shrugs. "No idea. Let's ask."

Nodding, I head across the room. Leviathan's head lies on the ground. He snores quietly, though it's hard to see how he can sleep with some of the imps screeching loudly to one another.

"Hey! Dragon! Wake up!"

Satan yells, surprising me with his boldness. He shows no fear as he awakens the primeval monster that could kill him effortlessly.

Several seconds pass. Satan starts to open his mouth, but Leviathan rumbles deep in his stomach. "I heard you the first time."

Swallowing, Satan's voice shakes slightly. "O-oh. Well, ah, I was kinda w-wondering... if, uh... you could..."

His confidence vanishes instantly as Leviathan's eyes open. The winged behemoth slowly raises his head and yawns, unleashing a torrent of flame upon the ceiling. The canopy turns red hot. It only lasts for an instant, but the temperature in the room jumps fifteen degrees.

Leviathan blinks slowly. "Why have you awoken me?"

A lump forms in my throat. "The, the, uh... the imps! They're still... you know... imps."

The dragon blinks. "And?"

"Well, we killed a bunch of angels.... I thought you could, uh, you know... power the other imps up? Like you did the rest of us?"

Several seconds pass. The dragon flares his nostrils. "Who said I would do such a thing? Do you think yourself heir to my power? Does it belong to you?"

"Huh? No! No, haha, of course not!" Satan rubs his head sheepishly. "Ahh, forget it! I don't know what I was thinkin'."

Leviathan gazes at me. Ten seconds pass. Sweat drips down the back of my neck.

"What are those?"

The dragon's eyes follow the movements of my vectors as they dance about.

"These? You can see them?"

Leviathan blinks slowly. "Mmm. Unless my eyes deceive me, Samael had a set of limbs similar to yours."

I nod. "Samael died. I killed him."

"Oh? Most impressive."

Leviathan's tongue snakes out of his mouth and through his teeth, wetting his monstrous lips.

"I underestimated you, Satan. No matter how you did it, killing an Archangel is no mean feat. Millions of dragons far beyond a level of power you could comprehend have tried and failed. Only two Archangels have ever fallen, and neither perished to the claws of my brothers and sisters."

Leviathan leans his head to the side and scratches the top of it against a wall. A horrible grinding sound radiates outward as scale meets stone, causing every demon in the room to press their palms against their ears.

After the dragon spends a few moments satisfying his urge, he speaks again. "If you can kill one Archangel, perhaps you could do the same for others. To be honest, I thought of your kind as a joke at first. I imagined it would be amusing to send you to die at the hands of the Archangels. I'm reconsidering my opinions."

My jaw slackens. "D-does that mean... you'll power us up after all? If you do, we can kick some angel ass!"

"No. I won't," Leviathan replies. "It would be too tiresome to transfer my power hundreds of times. There are too many of you. Instead, I'll teach one of your kind my ways. They can evolve the rest. I look forward to seeing what you'll accomplish."

I cross my arms. "All I know is that the angels captured two of my friends. We need to rescue them as soon as possible. Teach me, and I'll power up my comrades lickety-split."

Leviathan chortles in his throat, a nasty sound like metal ripping in half. "Kukuku... not you, Satan. You've too much on your plate, and your mana capacity is quite low. Leading the rest of your species won't give you enough time to manipulate their spiritual energy. No, instead, I'll pick a subordinate. I'll choose..."

The dragon's fiery eyes sweep across the room. His vision illuminates everywhere he looks, revealing looks of terror on the faces of all the imps who aren't yet used to him. Even the other demons who met him once before appear a little frightened.

However, two demons show no fear. Two of them don't cower or flinch when the dragon's gaze meets theirs. Valac and Lucifer.

"Mmm. A Manipulator of the Damned, and a female with an all-seeing eye. Interesting."

Satan follows Leviathan's gaze. Immediately, his expression sours. Satan turns to the dragon and keeps his voice low. "Come on, why you gotta do me like this? Can't you pick someone else?"

Leviathan cocks his head. "My powers of aura manipulation are no trifle. They will kill a weakling instantly, and they require an ironclad will to use properly. Only one of those two will do."

A minute passes. Satan grumbles to himself as the dragon's gaze beats down on him.

Stupid dragon. Cripes. I guess I have to choose Lucifer. Valac doesn't have to follow my orders at all. He's a loose cannon. If anyone's gonna have the powers of the dragon, they'd better be under my thumb.

"You're saying I can't have the power, right?"

"Correct."

"Fine. Give it to Lucifer. She's the second-best pick."

I glance at Lucifer. "Hey! Lucy! Get your funbags over here! Mister Dragon has a present for ya."

The demoness rolls her third eye. "I heard. Fine. Do what you will, oh mighty dragon."

Lucifer walks over to Leviathan, ignoring my presence entirely. Leviathan shifts his body, moves his front claw toward the demoness, and touches her chest.

After a moment, Lucifer takes a step back. "Oh? Is that all? I expected more of a-"

Lucifer stops mid-sentence. All the strength in her body vanishes, and she slumps to the ground, unconscious.

The dragon chortles again, making that horrible sound in his throat. "Kukuku... this female will require hibernation for a few days. Begone, all of you. Leave me in peace so that I may rest. When she awakens, Lucifer will be the one who handles the future of demonkind. Use her new powers well, Satan."

Leviathan pulls back and yawns, releasing another wave of fire at the ceiling. The temperature in the room raises to well over a hundred degrees, sucking the moisture from everyone's bodies. Several imps pass out from heat exhaustion, and even I begin sweating uncontrollably.

"Y-yeah, can do, big guy. Have a nice nap."

A while later, all of the imps pace around in the snow, shivering as they stay close to several firepits scattered around a makeshift camp. The cold of winter already reaches below zero, but the winds aren't yet chilly enough to extinguish the flames.

The demons have already evolved to ignore the cold, but the imps aren't as hardy. One imp nudges another. "Me freezing tits off! Heaven never this cold!"

"Stop your bitching!" Satan snaps at him. "If you want to return to Heaven, go ahead. They'll slit your throat without a second thought."

The imp swallows hard, rethinks his life's decisions, and wanders away to another fire pit.

"You seem more hostile than usual," Agares remarks. Much like the unmutated imps, he stays close to the fire since his reptilian blood makes him sensitive to the cold. "Is something on your mind?"

I swear under my breath. "No, things are just fucking dandy- OF COURSE I'm angry! Tens of thousands of imps are still in Heaven. They'll all be dead soon, assuming I've judged the Angels correctly. On top of that, our enemy captured Deebs and Bael, and now the dragon gave Lucifer some special power. Everything sucks, chum."

"I think you're acting a little overdramatic," Agares replies. "We survived. Lots of demons died, but we have a dragon on our side. Instead of worrying constantly, you should focus on creating a home for us. We need to get out of the cold and the heat and make a nest where the angels won't find us."

"We need to save Deebs and Bael," I mutter. "That other crap can wait."

"Patience. Use your head. We can't return to Heaven until all the imps are at the same level as you and me. Seven of us barely held the Angels back, and that was only because of the stunt you pulled with Samael. You said he was dead, right?"

I squirm slightly. "Err, yeah. Probably."

"How do you know?"

"I have my ways. I made Samael sign that magical contract thingy. When he died, I knew."

Agares rubs his lip. "Mmm. Interesting. If I died, then you would know as well?"

"Probably."

"Well, at least that's one positive thing to come from your power."

I cross my arms. "Yeah? Only one? I saved us from the angels, remember?"

Agares's casual smile fades away. "You tricked us into signing our souls over to you. No matter the reason, such deception is going to cause a lot of resentment. I don't know if we can trust you or not, but you didn't give us a choice. At this point, I can only hope you'll do the right thing when an opportunity arises."

"I'm selfish. I'll admit that much," I reply. "But I've got the best interests of our people at heart. Don't you dare doubt me now."

Agares bristles at my words. "As I said, I don't have a choice in the matter. Diablo and Bael are trapped in Heaven. If you plan to save them, you'd better figure something out soon."

"I'm still thinking," I mutter in response. "Gimme time. I always come up with something."

"Right. Always the genius," Agares mutters.

Several minutes pass. I turn and wander away, leaving Agares beside the fire. As I walk, Satan's thoughts form again.

Everyone doubts me. The dragon. Valac. Lucifer. Even Agares. I'm starting to think they might be right.

Satan rubs his chin as he trudges through the snow.

I saved a few hundred imps. Big fuckin' deal. Whoop de doo. I got two of my promising warriors caught in the process. I did kill an Archangel indirectly, but that don't make up for Deebs and Bael. I gotta do better, man. I gotta work my tush off and send those ugly chickens packing.

Satan stops a short distance away from another campfire. At this one, only imps mill around. None of the seven mutated demons are in the vicinity.

Come to think of it, once Lucifer wakes up, she's gonna be a pain in my ass. She'll boost these rookies up, but they might not follow my orders. Instead of only Valac, I'll have hundreds of rebellious bastards plotting to take my spot. I need to take action now, while they're still dumb as rocks.

Satan motions with his hand. A Blood Contract appears in the air, and words magically appear as Satan gazes at it. The language is a guttural, demonic-looking batch of letters, each with pointed edges. The uppercase G resembles a curled claw, while the W's remind me of demonic horns.

Thanks to Solomon's Crown, and the fact I'm in a vision of the past, I quickly scan the words.

Bla bla bla, sign your soul over to me until one of us dies, bla bla bla, give me all your powers and abilities on death, bla bla bla...

I skim the contents of the magical scroll. It appears to be slightly different from the ones Satan had Agares, Belial, and the others sign before. The new contract includes a clause about taking people's abilities on death. Perhaps he used the same one on Samael?

Satan stands up straight, adjusts his coat, and tosses the scroll in the air. Two of his vectors zip forward and grab it before it can land in the snow, and he swaggers toward the fire pit where the imps are chatting.

"Mornin' chums. How are you young bucks doin' today?"

Several imps spin to look at me as I stop at the edge of the melted snow. One of them leans forward. "You big boss? Big boss Satan?"

"Mhm, that's me, lil' guy. And boy, do I have a job for you! Though, I dunno if you're cut out for it."

Satan pauses for a moment. He pretends to hem and haw while evaluating the imps.

Unsurprisingly, his reverse psychology works. Every imp at the campfire turns to look at him. He captures their attention immediately.

The nearest imp raises his hand. "Ooh, ooh! Me! Pick me!"

A second imp scowls at the first. "No way! Belmor stupid! Me smarter!"

Within seconds, all of the imps begin howling and arguing with each other over who gets to work for Satan. The Devil's thoughts ring clear in his head. Heh. It's like taking souls from babies.

"Alright, all of you, shaddup. If you wanna be eligible to be my right-hand soldiers, you dummies hafta sign this here scroll first, okay?"

Satan's invisible arms lower the Blood Contract down, and a third arm holds out the feather for signing.

The first imp scratches his head. "What mean by 'sign?' How do?"

Satan kneels to the imp's level. "It ain't tough. Just poke your finger, then use your blood to draw a smiley face. Easy peasy."

* * *

Several minutes later, all of the imps nod giddily at Satan as he rolls up the magical scroll, now covered in chicken-scratch signatures. "Okay, boss! We ready work! What do now?"

Satan's smile falters. Oh, right. I told them I was going to have them do some work. I suppose it can't hurt to give 'em something to do.

"I want you guys to dig underground."

The imps cock their heads. "Dig?"

"Yeah. Just dig a deep hole. Big enough for us all to fit. We've gotta get outta the cold, ya know? Don't overwork yourselves though. Stay close to the fire."

"Ok! Ok! We dig hole! No problem!"

All of the imps give a thumbs up simultaneously, but something about their enthusiasm seems off. After a moment, I realize why. It's because the Blood Contract is taking effect. The imps already wanted to follow Satan's orders, but now they have no choice.

Hm. Maybe I'm overthinking things. After all, even if Satan made them sign a contract to follow his commands, he doesn't necessarily have to use its effects. He could command them lightly or forcefully. Then again, I don't know how his Blood Contracts work, so all I can do is take stabs in the dark.

* * *

Half an hour passes. Satan continues going from fire to fire, making all of the imps sign his scroll one by one, then he orders them to dig underground.

Eventually, Satan stops. "That's all of them," He murmurs to himself.

A tingling in the back of his skull makes me flinch.

Satan reaches up to massage his forehead. He leans against a tree and slumps into the snow. "Bloody crap. All of a sudden, outta nowhere... nng..."

The tingling turns into something more akin to a drill as a piece of metal seems to bore into my skull. I rub my head and wince as it shivers and shakes, worming its way into my thoughts."

"...ard."

A voice speaks in my mind.

"Huh? Who said that?" Satan glances around, but no other demons are nearby.

"...Bastard."

The voice, masculine, speaks again. Venom drips from every syllable.

Satan questions the voice again. "Who are you? Who's talkin'?"

The voice clears up. "Dost thee not recognize my voice, little rat? Surely thy puny brain can understand the consequences of thy crimes. Verily, thou dids't make me sign thy accursed contract, and now I have perished."

Satan's eyes widen. "Samael?"

"Who else? 'Tis I, the one whose life thou upended. Thy corruption resulted in my death. Now I must exist within the confines of thy pathetic, feeble mind, a prisoner drifting on an ocean of blackness."

Satan slowly rubs his face. "Wow. I didn't realize you would still be alive inside of me. Is that gonna happen for all the souls I take? It'll get a bit crowded in my head."

"My spirit is strong; my resolution firm," Samael mutters. "I revived myself due to my formidable willpower. Now I shall punish thee for all eternity. I will crush thy dreams and embolden thy nightmares. Thy people will abandon thee as ye transform into a raving lunatic, incapable of forming words. Ye-"

"Shut up," Satan says. "I don't want to hear another word unless I ask a question. Got it?"

Samael's voice disappears. After a moment, he replies. "Y-yes. I understand. I... shall not... speak... unless spoken to..."

Satan grins. "That's what I thought. Drop the tough guy act, dipshit. I still own your ass. You might be in my head, but now you're even more of a prisoner. You have to follow my every command, don'tcha?"

Samael's voice shakes. "Y-yes. I must... obey... thy orders..."

Satan reaches down, balls up some snow in his hand, and tosses it back and forth between his palms. "Wow. It's my lucky day, after all. I wonder what took you so long, buddy? It's been a few hours since you died. Ah, whatever, you're here now. That's all that matters. Mind if I ask you some questions?"

Samael grunts. "I... do not... wish to answer..."

"Too bad. That's the thing about souls. You shouldn't give 'em away so easily. Tell me what the angels are going to do to the imps in Heaven."

Satan pivots into his first question. Samael replies, but with slightly more confidence. "They will all be put to death. As... as all of thy kind deserve."

"Yeah. I expected as much. What about Deebs and Bael?"

Samael takes a moment to reply. "I know not of whom thou speak."

"Two of my demon brothers. Your asshole sister captured them just before I left. What're your feathered kin going to do? Kill 'em?"

Samael's voice turns icy. "Hehe. Thy comrades know where thou dost hide and skulk about in the darkness. Michael will torture them to uncover thy location. Once the bastards squeal, the Angels and Titans will come together to rain fire upon thy treacherous heads. All of thy family shall perish."

"You think so, eh?"

Satan's grin widens.

"You've got a hell of a mouth, but I like your honesty. Do you know what I need from you? Information. I can't go up against the Archangels without knowing their powers. What say you and me have a long sit-down? I'm dying to hear everything you know."

Samael's tone turns frosty. "What? Nay! I shan't tell thee anything. I... I won't... betray..."

Satan balls up his fists and punches himself in the head. "Shut up! I'm in control here. You're gonna talk, you fat, ugly chicken. Let's start with someone dear to your heart. How about your little sister, Uzziel? I'd love to know what tricks she has up her sleeve."

"No! No!! I... I won't... I..."

Samael trails off.

After a moment, his voice becomes monotone.

"Of course. I shall do as my master commands."

Satan clasps his hands together. "Wonderful. Wonderful! After you finish, I have a giant, scaley friend who would be delighted to hear from you. We'll call it a... family reunion."

Part 099: Heaven's Forge

This time, when the vision concludes and I return to the bonfire, I'm the first to speak.

"Samael ended up inside of Satan, after all?"

The three Archangels sit silently for several seconds, each of them gazing into the fire dismally. A range of emotions passes over their faces, from sorrow to regret.

Raphael clears his throat. "Aye. We never knew. 'Tis yet another revelation to us. Solomon's visions continue to surprise."

Michael rests his face in his hands. "Our brother Samael and sister Uriel, both trapped inside the minds of evil monsters. If only I had known. I would have stopped at nothing to release them from their torment."

"Do not blame thyself," Gabriel replies. Of the three Archangels, he sits the straightest. Compared to his brothers, he's the one who has mostly come to terms with his past. "How many times did we kill Satan, only for him to return? He was an unstoppable force of evil. His power grew exponentially over time. 'Tis a miracle he ever fell."

I turn to Solomon. "Speaking of which, how did Satan die?"

The ancient king leans against me and rubs his chin. "Hmm. Satan perished after the destruction of Earth, I presume. I locked myself inside the halls of the Labyrinth around that time. The information I possess comes from when I copied memories during my life, or the heads of people who wore my crown after my death. Unfortunately, my knowledge is not infinite, but contained to those I've interacted with."

I frown. "That doesn't seem right. Whenever I use the crown, I gain the ability to visualize abstract concepts, materialize advanced technology, and any number of other incredible feats. I thought the crown possessed infinite knowledge?"

"Nope. I'm afraid not," Solomon replies. "During the 20th and 21st centuries, many intellectuals were granted the gift of wearing my crown by whosoever was Pope at the time. Several famous inventors and other brilliant minds did so for varying periods to augment their understanding of the universe, but in doing so, they lent their genius to my libraries. Naturally, I grew more and more capable of understanding abstract and complex theories regarding the cosmos."

Solomon winks at me. "Give and take, you see?"

I nod. "Mmm. Well, I know that Amelia was involved with Satan's death. She somehow captured his soul and took possession of him."

"Hah!" Michael guffaws suddenly, making me flinch. "How ironic! The Devil spent his entire life stealing souls from anyone he could wrap his greedy paws around, only to end up trapped under someone else's thumb! I could hardly write a more fitting end for him if I tried."

Solomon glances at me. His eyes glow white for a moment, then revert to normal. "Amelia. I've seen her in your memories and examined her battle against you in detail, but my Crown possesses surprisingly little knowledge of her life before meeting you. For a human to gain enough power to defeat the First Emperor, yet not exist in my database before six years ago..."

Michael stops chuckling. "Oh? Was this 'Amelia' a Hero? Perhaps she emerged after the Energy Wars and battled Satan, then defeated him in a great show of heroic might."

I immediately shake my head. "Not a chance. Amelia despised heroes. She battled Joan of Arc and lost. Hell, she attacked me when she found out I was a hero. Also... regarding her powers..."

Pausing, I remember the images of her attacking humans, devouring souls, and the terror on the faces of demons as she tore them apart.

Solomon holds up his hand. "I see your thoughts, Jason. Let us not relive those memories."

I bow my head. "Sorry."

Michael glances at Solomon suspiciously. "What memories?"

"The Black Queen was no ally of, humankind, angelkind, nor demonkind. I considered her an enemy of all life. Killing Satan was less about helping anyone here, than it was about eliminating a foe against whom she bore a deep grudge. I would hardly praise her for her actions any more than I would Satan's."

I grow silent as memories of Amelia bubble up in my mind. She was my friend. I knew little about her, other than that she led a troubled life. I shouldn't blame myself for her death, but in the end, I do wonder if I couldn't have redeemed her somehow.

No... her salvation wasn't up to me. Amelia was the arbiter of her destiny, and she chose the path of evil. Even if Blaarjiim influenced her, and even if she had a million excuses, it was her choice in the end, just as the Hero's path was mine.

Saving lives isn't easy. It's often more treacherous than ending them. It takes a lifetime to create something, but an instant to destroy it.

That's why I have to be vigilant. I can't take the easy road, no matter how tempting it might be.

Solomon looks at me. "Jason? Something on your mind?"

"Kinda. I was thinking about Amelia. Now I'm wondering about my life and what led me to where I am now."

Raphael lifts his gaze from the fire. "Oh? Judging by the sparkle in thy eyes, the future must be thy foremost concern."

"No, the past. I still don't understand why the Heroic Aura chose me. I'm not special; I'm nobody. Solomon was heir to a throne. Alexander the Great was, too. What makes me different?"

Raphael frowns. He gazes at me for a moment before placing his pipe in his mouth.

"The Heroic Aura. Aye, 'twas not other than my sister, Camael, who created it. The exact way it worked was not something we envisioned, merely that it had to perform a few key functions to meet our needs."

Raphael continues. "We placed our power inside a human, one whose body was already puppeteered by a Titan's. By altering him in slight, but significant ways, we managed to create a being with the unified power of Angelkind, Titankind, and Humankind. We knew not the exact manner in which his abilities would function, only that upon his death, they would transfer to another human, somewhere in the universe."

Solomon nods. "That was what I assumed. The Heroic aura has always acted in a semi-sentient manner. It seeks those it believes worthy of its power, then changes its abilities based on their personality and potential."

Raphael scratches his beard. "Aye. Not even the Archangel of Divination foresaw its ability to change its form. Life has a way of surprising even the most world-weary traveler."

As the Archangel of Wisdom and Solomon debate the finer points of the Heroic Aura, my memories return once again to my youth.

I remember my life back then, when I was a young boy living in the foster care system, both of his parents deceased, jumping from house to house — no living relatives. No stability. It's a miracle I came out as good as I did.

What did my biological mother look like? My father? No matter how much digging I did, I never found out anything about them.

I raise my hand. "Hey, Solomon. How many Heroes were orphans? I read a lot of fiction growing up about kids without parents called to save the world and other mushy stuff like that. Maybe there's a connection? Something about fiction mirroring reality?"

Solomon pauses to consult his crown. "Not many. A few were, but most heroes were born of nobility and had large, extended families, myself included. Are you asking because of your life's course?"

"Yeah. I never knew my parents. I'm just wondering what made me worth pursuing. The Heroic Aura must have chosen me for a reason."

Raphael chuckles. "Heh. Young men usually desire a purpose for their lives. Have thou considered the possibility that perhaps thou were of little importance? Perhaps the Aura sought out an ordinary person. After all, in the ancient eras, there were only a few nobles living amongst the common rabble. By the time thy birth occurred, the world had thousands of politicians and businessmen with influence and power on par with kings."

Solomon lifts his head to gaze into the starry night sky. "Perhaps. Perhaps not. Jason brings up a good point. At the time of his birth, there were billions of humans on Earth. I wonder, too, why the Heroic Aura would choose him."

Michael waves his hand flippantly. "Bah! It matters not. The boy became a hero, and that's all there is to it. Solomon, please continue the visions. I grow weary of this idle prattle."

Solomon sighs. "Michael, I hope someday you learn the value of patience. Such hastiness is unbecoming of an angel."

"The king is right," Gabriel adds. "One need not be in a rush to travel nowhere. Slow down. Smell the roses."

Michael goes silent for a moment, before saying, "If only I could."

Solomon whistles quietly. "Pseww... okay. Well, Jason, I think we'd better return to the distant past. Michael needs a nap."

The Archangel of Courage glares at Solomon. "Quiet, lout."

Solomon rolls his eyes, then turns to me. "Prepare yourself, Jason."

Once again, I reappear inside Uzziel's body. Somehow, it's become almost comforting seeing things from her point of view. The demons often stink like skunks, but Heaven smells lovely, and being inside an angel's body, especially someone as sweet and gentle as Uzziel, is a much more pleasant experience than that of the demons.

I walk down a dirt-street inside Heaven's biggest city. The only one? Are there multiple? Come to think of it; I don't know how big Heaven is. It could be the size of a planet or a small country. I'll ask Solomon later.

Uzziel hums to herself pleasantly, though there's a tinge of melancholy in her tone. She pauses before a large water-fountain and lowers her gaze to a splotch of blood along its base. A tiny red hand lies severed next to the stone cropping. Uzziel's stomach clenches, and she quickly motions to form magic signs. A wave of mana leaves her body, and the ground opens up to swallow the hand. After that, a few vines sprout and cover up the blood.

She continues onward, forcing herself to continue humming stoically. The pain in Uzziel's heart wrenches mine as well.

Compared to the last time Uzziel stood among her fellow angels, the overall attitude of the place is completely different. Most murmur to each other quietly, while others simply hang their heads. Looks of defeat pass across the faces of everyone present. It appears a few days have passed. I see no imps wandering around, so I have to conclude that the angels killed them.

Uzziel continues walking through the crowds, smiling and nodding at those she passes. She puts a little bit of sing-song into her voice as she stops before a half-dozen men and women. "Cheer up, brothers and sisters! We needn't weep for those fallen! They shall live in our memories forever!"

The gaggle of angels turns to look at me. My infectious smile forces them to return the gesture. "Y-yes. Of course. It, ah, won't do for us to mope around all day."

Continuing onward, I marvel at how Uzziel forces herself to smile. She puts her best effort into making others laugh, even as her chest constricts every time her memories return to dwell on Samael's face. His death wounded Uzziel deeply, but she still beams happiness everywhere and tries to boost everyone else's spirits.

I admire her self-sacrificing spirit.

* * *

Time passes. Ten minutes. Twenty.

Uzziel arrives at the edge of the city. A fifty-foot tall stone building towers over me. The domed structure reminds me of an igloo, with a doorway barely ten feet high. Gabriel might have difficulty entering it, but the other angels wouldn't. The oval-shaped opening extends out of the building a few feet. As I walk toward it, a wave of incredible heat washes over me. It must be a hundred and fifty degrees inside. I start to sweat, but Uzziel doesn't seem to notice.

The Archangel enters the building. Immediately, the temperature increases even higher. Two hundred degrees. Three hundred degrees. Uzziel wipes her forehead as sweat begins to drip. I can't understand how she's standing, let alone walking. I've cooked food in ovens cooler than this place. Angels are hardy beyond belief.

As I enter, the sound of steel clanging against steel rings out in the din. WHAM. WHAM. WHAM.

Camael, the Archangel of Divination, raises a massive hammer above her head and slams it down against a sword. A wave of heat radiates outward as the tool meets the red-hot blade. Behind Camael, Uriel and Raphael stand. Unlike me, Uriel appears perfectly at home in the heat from the forge. Raphael seems somewhat fatigued, but he stands without complaint as Camael smiths the weapon wordlessly.

"Brother. Sisters." I nod at them and come to a stop. My gaze sweeps the room. Dozens of swords, axes, shields, pieces of armor, and hundreds of other trinkets hang from the ceiling. Others stay affixed to the walls via spikes and similar implements.

Camael halts her hammer for a moment to glance at me. "Uzziel! What brings thee to my humble smithy?"

"'Tis not often thou dost bestow a new artifact upon someone," I reply. "I am interested in seeing Uriel's new weapon."

Camael stares at me for a moment before smiling. "Is that so?"

She returns to hammering the sword. I take a step closer, but keep a distance of about ten feet from her forge. "Did I miss the ceremony?"

Uriel shakes her head. "Nay. Camael needed to finish working on that blade before continuing."

"Is that Uriel's artifact?" I ask.

Camael shakes her head. "Nay. This sword is one I've forged and reforged hundreds of times. I intend for it to someday be my mightiest weapon. Unfortunately, my mana supply is not what it used to be."

Uriel stands on her tiptoes to peer over Camael's shoulder at the weapon. "Not to insult thy craft, sister, but it doesn't seem different from any of the others in here."

Camael smirks. "Have faith, Uriel. Someday, whosoever wields this weapon will become an unstoppable agent of the Creator. After that fiend killed our brother... I realized I needed to complete it. These imps... the demons... they represent a threat to our people. We underestimated them once, and as a result, we lost more than we bargained for."

Uzziel's eldest sister tightens her grip on the red-hot sword.

"I... I had another vision. Last night."

Raphael, silent until now, perks up. "Oh? Thy hesitant tone worries me."

"It should," Camael whispers. "My clairvoyance is rarely lucid. The future is messy, chaotic, a mass of twisting lines and allegiances. Often, I wake up more exhausted than when I lay my head down to rest."

Hesitantly, I speak up. "Thy vision must have been clearer than usual."

Camael sighs. She lifts up the sword and plunges it into a vat of water beside her, extinguishing its heat. After waiting a moment for the blackened blade to cool, she sets the weapon on her anvil, along with her hammer, then turns to face the three of us.

"What I saw sickened me. The demons will become our greatest threat. Their powers will continue to increase, far beyond anything we can imagine. All of us may perish under their unstoppable onslaught."

Uriel's eyes narrow. "Impossible. They caught us off-guard, but the bastards were hardly a match for our power. How could they hope to overrun the might of Heaven? We subdued the dragons and the Titans. A few tiny demon bastards are hardly-"

"Uriel." Raphael reaches his hand over to rest it on her shoulder. "Allow Camael to finish. Her visions have never failed us. Besides, they always have a caveat."

Camael nods. "Thou dost speak truth, brother. Never is the future set in stone. My visions often offer us a divergent path. However, this time, the stakes couldn't be higher. On the one hand, we will face total extinction, but on the other, we will find a utopia free of pain or sorrow. We must hunt the demons down and slay them all if we hope to avert the inevitable."

After a moment, Camael lowers her eyes. "But... the vision I received last night... the reason it haunts me still... I saw something else. I felt it. My death."

The color drains from Raphael's face, Uriel's, and mine too. Our brother opens and closes his mouth, before stammering out, "A-art thou certain?"

Camael hesitates. "I... I saw a horrible creature. Red skin, like the imps, but with a horrific gleam in his eye. He reached toward me. I tried to fight back, but couldn't. My body became heavy. Darkness overtook me. When the void parted, hundreds of screaming voices echoed inside my mind. Their pain mixed with mine. I awoke with a start, sweat drenching my skin. For a moment, I forgot 'twas only a dream. It felt so real that I... I unquestioningly believed my demise had occurred."

"How terrible," I whisper. Quickly, I walk over and reach up to hug Camael, wrapping my arms around her armor. Camael reciprocates, forcing a smile.

"'Twas only... only a vision," she says. "I shall recover."

"'Tis still awful! My heart rends in two for thee!"

Camael gently pats my head, caressing it lovingly. "I thank thee, Uzziel. Even if my end should someday arrive, I will always count myself grateful for-"

"No more of that!" Uriel snaps. "I'll hear no talk of thy supposed demise. Not this soon after Samael's death, not ever. Cast aside thy anxieties and focus on the present."

A minute passes. Camael pushes me away and nods. "Right. Very well. I would like nothing more than to forget. A-ah, Uriel, thy reason for coming here..."

Camael switches topics, moving to end the discussion. She turns to the wall of artifacts, then gestures toward several different implements. "Thy fighting ability against the demons was less impressive than I liked seeing. I have decided to triple thy combat prowess by creating a pair of weapons for thee."

Uriel follows Camael's hand to a pair of spears hanging from the wall. "Not a sword and shield?"

"Nay. Thy Light Walls provide exemplary defense — what thou dost lack is a mighty offense to land killing blows. A sword and shield are for fighters like Michael, who rely on speed and mobility to close the gaps between each enemy, while also providing defensive capabilities where they lack. Thou requireth no such thing."

Camael reaches up and plucks the spears off the walls, then tosses them to Uriel. "Gungnir. Gae Bolg. Two of the mightiest spears I have ever forged. Each is light as a feather, but nigh unbreakable no matter how much force one applies."

Uriel catches both spears, one in each hand. She fumbles them slightly and frowns. "Shouldn't I wield only one spear at a time? Using two seems rather... clunky."

Camael smiles. "As I said, thy defense is unparalleled. Typically, someone who uses one spear will focus on parrying and attacking with smooth, sweeping motions. However, wielding two of them allows for incredible reach and attack potential, allowing thee to spear multiple enemies at once."

Uriel's eyes brighten. "Ah! I can slay twice as many demons as before, eh? Thy intent is admirable, my beloved sister. I thank thee for this wonderful gift!"

Raphael keeps his enthusiasm muted, possibly due to the heat in the room. "A most generous gift indeed, Camael. I wonder if thy generosity will ever extend to thy older brother, hm?"

"Haha! Thou hath little need of such implements, Raphael. Thy mystic arts are more than a match for any physical weaponry." Camael winks at Raphael. "But of course, thou already knoweth this."

"I do, I do," Raphael replies. "Still, the prestige of holding one of my sister's artifacts would lighten my heart."

Camael pauses to rub her chin. "Hmm. Well, Samael's death has given me ideas. Protecting our lives is essential. I'll give thy request some thought."

"Do not stress thyself," Uriel says with a grin. "Once I master these spears, I'll become unstoppable. I feel thy mana flowing inside each of them. The demons won't stand a chance, nor will the Titans."

My eldest sister's smile vanishes. "Let us not speak ill of our allies, no matter how tentative the peace might be. Ah, that reminds me, 'tis about time."

Camael sweeps her hair back and heads toward the door. The three of us follow behind her and step into the wonderfully cool air outside, which feels chillier than an arctic breeze compared to the heat from her forge.

Raphael wheezes, thankful to be out of the heat. "Huff. I should join Michael and Gabriel. Soon, we will head off to address the Titans. I am uncertain how Cronus will react to our request."

"If he denies us the right to scour Earth for the red bastards, then he will become our enemy," Uriel says. "I won't rest until I put Satan's head on a pike. I'll butcher the demon women and torture the men."

"Thy bloodlust is admirable," Camael replies. "But I fear it will stifle negotiations. We will leave this matter to our brothers and Uzziel."

I raise an eyebrow. "Thou dost intend for me to go?"

Raphael smiles. "Of course! Thy beauty may help ease Cronus's irritation. He doesn't like being awoken, so perhaps if he observes thy beautiful smile, he may negotiate in good spirits."

Uriel plants the butts of both spears in the ground and leans forward on them. "Hmph. Why can't I come? I'm reasonable!"

"Thou art a hothead, and worse than Michael," Raphael replies. "Worry not. Uzziel makes for an excellent ambassador. She will prove instrumental in changing Cronus's mind. I feel it in my bones."

Uriel relents. "Very well. I have better things to do than chatter with big, overgrown goliaths. I'll practice with my new spears. That sounds like fun."

Camael smacks Uriel's back, making her sister flinch. "Hah! Why don't I join thee! A bit of sparring will do wonders for our mental wellness!"

"It's settled, then," Raphael says. "Let us go now, Uzziel. We shouldn't keep Michael and Gabriel waiting."

I wave goodbye to my sisters. "Farewell, Uriel. Camael. I'll return soon!"

They wave back, and I begin walking the path beside Raphael.

After a minute, Camael's forge falls behind us into the distance. I turn to Raphael and feel my stomach knot together.

"S-say, Raphael... about... about Michael... has he been... with the prisoners..."

Raphael doesn't meet my gaze. "Do not ask questions to which thou knoweth the answers, Uzziel. Michael continues to press the captives for the location of their brethren. Sooner or later, they will tell him what he wants to know."

The old man swallows audibly. "I hope, for their sake, they don't delay. There has been enough pain in Heaven as of late."

I bow my head contritely.

"Aye. I hate the cycle of violence."

Part 100: Attack On Titan

Leaving Uzziel's body behind, I travel across Heaven to an unknown location. As my eyes open, I notice my new host has a considerable height difference compared to Uzziel: I'm at least a foot taller than before. A dark room swallows the faint glow emanating from my body, while a single torch hangs on the stone wall, illuminating a horrifying scene.

A five-foot-tall demon hangs from the wall, suspended by two shackles clamped onto his wrists. Another demon, much shorter, lies strapped to a stone altar, all his limbs chained and spread out to each of the four corners.

Bael and Diablo stare at me, defiance in their eyes. Dozens of lacerations and burn marks cover their bodies. Only a few patches of mottled skin remain untouched, but both of the demons breathe weakly, unable to catch a proper breath.

The big one, Bael lifts his head. "P-pathetic. Pickin' on the boss, just 'cause he's weak. You know you can't break me."

"Thou shalt reveal where the other rats are hiding, or thy torture will never end," I say, smiling. Judging by my voice, I must be in Michael's body. It's the first time I've possessed him for a vision. I'm surprised by the strength in his arms and how confident he acts as he paces back and forth. There isn't a hint of desperation in his voice. "I can keep this up all day and night. Thou shalt never receive a moment's rest — not until thy secrets come spewing from thy putrid lips."

Diablo trembles. He tries to lift an arm, but it barely budges. "Haah... haah... we... we'll never... never tell you anything."

Anger boils in Michael's stomach. I slowly take a few steps around the altar and stop half a foot from Diablo's head. His eyes lock onto mine as I bend slightly at the waist. "I sense thy weakness, and I hear thy voice shake. Art thou afraid, little bloodskin? Thy mind tells thee to keep quiet, but thy heart knows speaking will prevent thee from suffering a great deal of pain."

Bael tugs at his chain, pulling himself up the wall an inch before sagging again. "Ugly chicken. You're too stupid to know when to quit. It must piss you off that we've held out for three days, eh? We ain't weaklings. You can't push us around like when we were imps."

My gaze narrows. I tilt my head to glare at the suspended one. "Quiet. Thy ridicule grows tiresome. Taunting me will prove fruitless. Holy Magic has little effect on thee, so I will abuse thy companion instead. It won't be much longer before he breaks."

Bael curls up his lip. "Don't say nothin', boss. Satan'll come for us. We just gotta hold out."

A throaty chuckle escapes my lips. "Kuhuhu... Satan? The treacherous little rat who tricked my brother? I think not. He fled like a coward and left thee to die. The look of panic on his face as he retreated was quite amusing."

Diablo grits his teeth. "Tch. Y-you didn't chase after him. Sounds like you were the coward to me!"

My eye twitches. I stab a finger at Diablo, press it against his chest, and funnel waves of Holy Energy into his body.

"AAAIIIEE!!" Diablo howls in agony. His fingers and toes clench as he struggles mightily to evade my touch. After ten long seconds of listening to Diablo's horrible screams, I retract my finger. A black mark sits on his chest, where I touched. Diablo's body sags as tears pour from his eyes. His chains stop rattling, and his strength fades.

"Be wary of the insolent words thou might speak. I'm not known for my restraint."

"Someone's touchy," Bael mutters.

I glare at the demon hanging on the wall. "I am not afraid of little red mice. However, the angels cannot leave Heaven, since Earth is the domain of the Titans. The exception is for when we issue a specific inquiry with Cronus, their leader. Thy accomplices are temporarily safe, but not for long. After my brothers speak to Cronus, he will permit us to tear down the forests and bore deep into the Earth in search of our enemies. They have days, perhaps weeks left to live."

Bael smirks at me. "So you are afraid, eh? Whassa matter? Will the big bad Titans lay the smackdown if you step outta line?"

Silently, I draw my sword from its sheath. Bael's eyes dart down and follow its movements as I take two steps toward him. A moment later, I press the tip against his stomach and slowly push it into his body. Bael grits his teeth and winces, but he forces himself to show as little pain as possible.

Glowering at the fat bastard, I narrow my eyes. "Were the choice mine, I would kill any Titan in my way. The thought of war worries my family, but not I. I like neither their kind nor thine. We killed tens of thousands of thy kin over the last few days. Even now, my only lament is that we've stained Heaven's soil with their blood."

After a few moments, I yank my sword out of Bael's stomach. A stream of blood gushes from his fresh wound, but it seals after a few moments. Bael exhales audibly, releasing a breath he had been holding.

"Thou art quite durable," I mutter.

Bael nods. "M-my blood clots real easy."

"Color me unimpressed."

I wander back to Diablo. It's been less than a minute, but already he's breathing normally again, having recovered from my torturous holy energy.

"You... you feathery fuck. I'm not... not saying a word. I won't sell Satan out, or anyone else."

"What gives thee such fortitude, I wonder? Considering the manner in which thy people abandoned thee, what is it that makes ye go to any length to protect them? Why show loyalty toward those who abandoned thee?"

Diablo stares at me silently for a moment. "They're kin. They're my kin. We have the same skin. We bleed the same blood. We all suffered under your boot. I'd sooner die than betray them."

"Ahaha. Then die, thou shalt," I promise. A sinister grin passes over my face. "But rest assured, I will break thy spirit, little demon. Thy silence won't last forever. Soon, thou shalt-"

I pause mid-sentence. The sound of boots outside the chamber draws my attention. I glance toward the entrance, where a heavy stone door stands, resolute, unyielding. It lacks a handle on the inside, so even if the demons tried to escape, they'd have a difficult time. Only a slight crack at the bottom allows a trickle of light to stream through, and judging by the shifting shadows; someone must be standing outside.

"One moment," I say, raising a finger. I trudge toward the doorway and motion with my hands, casting a spell to unbar the entrance. The door swings open, assaulting my eyes with Heaven's Light. Michael's vision instantly adjusts to the change in light thanks to his angelic heritage.

Three Archangels stand outside. Immediately, Michael lowers his gaze to his sister. "Uzziel? Why art thou here?"

"Hm? Did I not tell thee?" Raphael asks. "We must seek an audience with the Titans today. Thou art coming, as is Uzziel."

Raphael's voice has a note of finality to it. Michael questions him anyway. "Must I go? I am still trying to- to... ah..."

He pauses, noticing the look of distress on Uzziel's face. She cranes her neck to try and see into the dark dungeon, but he steps out and closes the door behind himself.

"Uzziel shall be our show of compassion, while the two of us will represent Heaven's might," Gabriel says, crossing his arms. "Raphael will appeal to Cronus's common sense, assuming the Titan King has any left."

Michael pauses to examine the emotions on Uzziel's face. His thoughts bubble in my mind.

My sister lost a brother only a few days before, yet still, she worries about the fate of the bastards who slaughtered Samael. I shouldn't trouble her more than necessary.

Michael's demeanor softens. "Very well. A little fresh air can't hurt."

I walk over to Uzziel and pull her in for a quick hug. "Come, little sister. It has been many ages since we last saw Earth's state. Its beauty will surely pale compared to the lush gardens of Heaven, but thou hath always found comfort in its wild, untouched nature."

Uzziel continues staring at the door for a moment before turning to me. She forces a smile. Despite how disingenuine her grin is, the radiance catches me off-guard. She's stunningly beautiful, with an alluring figure that draws my eyes around its curves. I suddenly feel awkward while admiring her, given I'm in her brother's body.

"Yes. Of course. I hope thou art feeling well, Michael."

I smile back, mine just as disingenuous as hers. "I've never been better."

Raphael sighs. "A lie if ever I've heard one."

Time passes. My mind returns to Uzziel's body as the four Archangels begin flying across the ancient Earth, heading toward an unknown destination.

The rushing of wind against my face and the dizzying speed at which the angels fly exhilarates me. Even if Solomon's Crown only gives the illusion of bodily sensations, I find the fake world around me as realistic as the one I've lived in for my entire life. Hundreds of trees speed by beneath us. A desert follows — an ocean as well.

The four of us reach a coastline, follow it for a while, then proceed toward a mountain in the distance. It rises hundreds of feet higher than Mount Sinai, where the angels live.

Once we draw within a mile of the mountain, all of us decelerate and dive toward an opening in the forest below, flying perfectly in parallel to one another. We pull up at the last second and come to a graceful landing, pausing to swat a few bugs off our robes.

The clearing we land in is filled with the sounds of various birds chirping and cawing above, as if to signal our arrival. They hang out in the branches, peering at us from the shadows. Angels are a rare sight on Earth, it seems.

An unpleasant, musky odor rises from various leaves and plants under our feet. It mixes with the moisture from recent rainfall, giving off the scent of a wet dog. Gabriel pauses to sniff the air. "Has Earth always possessed such a rank odor?"

I shake my head. "Nay. I am unfamiliar with these species of trees. Without my guiding hand, Earth has had millions of years to develop outside of my control."

Raphael gestures forward. "Come. Watch thy step. Mount Olympus is near."

Nodding, the rest of us follow our eldest brother. While the men wear boots or sandals, Uzziel goes barefoot. Every step she takes, Uzziel reaches out to touch the trees, or dig her toes into the mud, experiencing nature as viscerally as she can.

Her thoughts whisper in my mind. I wish I could visit Earth more often. 'Tis unfortunate that I've never seen the descendants of the creatures I conceived.

After a few minutes, the edge of the forest appears. We continue toward it, but a rustling in the trees above catches my attention. I glance up in time to spot an odd-looking chimpanzee leap from one tree to another, clearing a gap above our heads. The male Archangels pay it no heed.

I wave hello and flash a sunny smile. The chimp pauses to ogle me for a moment before continuing on its merry way.

Michael pauses to glance at me. "Uzziel? Did ye see something?"

I lower my hand. "Oh, nothing much. There was a funny little creature hanging on a branch. I've never seen one like it before."

Michael turns and continues onward, showing little to no interest in the chimp.

"Mmm. I see."

* * *

We emerge from the tree cover onto a flat, grassy plain. The field extends for a mile in every direction, but we continue toward the base of the mountain we spotted earlier. It doesn't take long before we encounter two massive stone carvings, each a hundred feet tall. Each is in the image of a naked man with his palm outstretched, as if to say, none may enter.

The statues stand guard before a gigantic cave opening at the base of the mountain. The hole dwarfs the statues, rising several hundred feet, with more than enough room for a battleship to comfortably fit inside. Raphael pauses before it. The rest of us watch silently as the old man mumbles to himself and begins weaving dozens of magic signs. After a full minute passes, he wipes his forehead, clears his throat, and opens his mouth.

"KING CRONUS! MIGHTIEST OF THE TITANS! THE ARCHANGELS HAVE COME, SEEKING AN AUDIENCE!"

Raphael's voice explodes like a ton of dynamite. Uzziel's entire body quivers from its kinetic energy, reminding me of when I caught the demons offguard with my Wordsmithing. I can only marvel at how long it took him to prepare a spell similar to mine, whereas I only had to utter a few words.

Times like these remind me of the untapped potential my Wordsmithing possesses.

Several minutes pass. Nobody says a word.

Suddenly, the birds in the forest go silent. An eerie stillness washes over the region. Clouds blot out the sun above, and the summer's breeze dies off.

From deep under the Earth, the rumbling of massive footsteps reaches our ears, each one like a boulder slamming into concrete, shuddering and shaking the planet. It doesn't take long before a humanoid figure appears in the darkness of the cave. The naked giant steps forward and yawns loudly.

"Nnn! Gah. Bloody angels! How dare you disturb my slumber!"

Cronus stands over two-hundred feet tall. His big toe rises nearly to Gabriel's height. Seeing him reminds me of the first time I met Gabriel in a vision when he was a similar height. Scraggly brown hair and a fifteen-foot-long beard combine with a fat nose and potbelly, giving Cronus the appearance of a lazy hillbilly.

"King of the Titans. We respectfully come before thee today to seek an audience," Raphael says, bowing politely. It boggles my mind that this ugly, obese giant is the king of anything not named 'Dunkin Donuts.' "My brothers and sisters, as well as myself, have suffered a great loss not three days prior."

Cronus rubs his eyes. "Hrm. Great loss. Mmm. Right. Go on."

Michael squeezes his sword's hilt. The king's casual demeanor seems to irritate him. His thoughts etch onto his face, asking, why must we show respect to this ugly, disgusting oaf?

Raphael, however, ignores Cronus's disheveled condition. "Samael, the Archangel of Change, fell a few days ago to an ambush. The imps, our formerly loyal servants, rose up in rebellion and murdered him."

Michael's face twitches. "Aye! And they were far stronger than should have been possible! Quite the coincidence, wouldn't-"

"Quiet," Gabriel whispers, silencing Michael. "Allow Raphael to work his silver tongue."

Cronus blinks several times, finally clearing the sleep from his eyes. "The imps? Weren't those the ugly little red things? The rats?"

Raphael nods. "Aye. Their leader, Satan, fled Heaven a month prior, along with a few others. They later returned, but their bodies had changed. They grew far more powerful, in a surprisingly short period."

Cronus sighs. "Oh, bother. This story of yours is going to take a while, isn't it?"

Deciding not to wait for Raphael's reply, the King falls backward and slams his ass onto the ground, shaking the Earth. None of the Archangels lose their footing, though Michael grows even more annoyed by Cronus's laziness.

The Titan shifts into a cross-legged position to get comfortable. He leans his elbow in his knee and rests his chin in his palm. "Hrm. Your servants rebelled and somehow managed to assassinate Samael. Is that what you're saying?"

"Correct. The imps gained potent magical abilities, seemingly from nowhere. Given their arrival on Earth, I hope I am not too forthcoming when I surmise that a nefarious plot may have been involved."

Cronus narrows his gaze. The Titan leans forward to loom over us. Even sitting down, the living mountain towers seventy-feet tall. "Are you accusing me of skullduggery, Raphael? Of plotting to kill your people?"

"Nay, nay. I would never insult thee in such an offensive manner," Raphael replies. The old man reaches into the folds of his red and gold robes to procure a small pipe. He quickly lights some tobacco in it and takes a few puffs. "However, thou art not the only Titan on Earth."

Several moments pass. Cronus rumbles disapprovingly in his throat and straightens his posture. "Other Titans. Yes. Of course. So, you accuse not me, but one of my brothers or sisters of empowering your servants to turn against you. While insulting, I begrudgingly admit that I rarely speak to the others. It has been many centuries since I last stood under Sol's light."

Michael balls up his hand into a fist. "Perhaps thou mayeth suspect someone? Atlas? Prometheus? Rhea?"

At the mention of the last name, Cronus's mood sours. "Watch your tongue, Michael. Disrespect my wife again, and I won't hesitate to reignite the ancient conflicts."

"Yes," Raphael says, nodding at Michael. "Please, keep quiet."

I reach over and touch Michael's arm, pulling close to him. "Cronus is our ally, Michael. Ascribing ill-intent toward his family is unbecoming of us."

Cronus's gaze flicks from Michael to me. "Ah! Uzziel! How are you, Mother? Long has it been since we last spoke."

I pull away from Michael and take a few steps toward the naked giant. "I am fine, I suppose. However, losing Samael has wounded me deeply. Surely, thou dost understand, given how many of thy family members have fallen over the eons."

"That I do," Cronus says, nodding. He reaches a massive finger toward me and gently rubs my head. "I might be an old codger, but I know the pain of death the same as any of you. I suppose I could ask around. Perhaps I can sniff out whoever is turning thy servants evil."

Raphael rubs his palms together. "Cronus, we would like thy permission to search for our escaped servants. These imps have wronged us, and as such, we must hunt them down before they become a greater threat."

Cronus chuckles. "Tsk, I'm afraid I can't do that, Raphael."

"What?!" Michael steps forward. Fire burns in his eyes. "The little bastards killed Samael! They attacked us mercilessly! How dare thou refuse-"

Gabriel pivots on his heel and slaps the back of Michael's head. "Quiet!"

Cronus rubs his nose. His eyes flicker with a faint hint of rage, revealing the suppressed emotions stuffed into his belly. "Michael. I have held my tongue since your arrival. However, it is clear that you hold some grudge against me for whatever reason. I cannot say with absolute certainty that a Titan did not empower your servants, leading to Samael's death. Perhaps someone did. Perhaps someone did not. I do not know. What I do know is that your continued insults are beginning to boil my blood."

The Titan bites the last few words off. He snarls viciously, showing slightly too many teeth for my liking. "I do not permit you to scour the Earth. I will do so myself. Be glad I am willing to go to such lengths for Raphael and Mother Uzziel, for had you been the one to ask, I wouldn't extend the same courtesy."

The fire dies down in Michael's eyes. "I-I apologize. I... I did not mean to disrespect thee."

"And yet you did," Cronus says.

The Titan climbs to his feet, returning to his two hundred foot standing height. "Raphael. Uzziel. Gabriel. Michael. I bid farewell to all of you. I will find out if there is a traitor breaking the old treaty. However, I do not give my approval for you to stay on Earth. Return home at once."

Raphael flicks his eyes to Michael. A look of disappointment passes over his face, but it disappears quickly. The old man returns his attention to Cronus. "Ah, of course. We thank thee for any services ye can spare. Thy assistance will not go unrewarded, I assure thee."

The Titan turns to leave, but pauses. "Before I go, I must ask... if the imps have turned against you, how will you regain your energy stores? Didn't you depend on them for mana?"

Gabriel bows his head. "Aye. We did. We've purged all of their ilk from Heaven."

Cronus glances at me. "Mother Uzziel, do you plan to rebuild your stores?"

I nod hesitantly. "Y-yes... somewhat. I need to create a new servant creature, but the imp attack drained our reserves. We can barely-"

"Uzziel!" Michael gawks at me. "Have ye forgotten? Why art thou mentioning our mana supply?!"

My eyes widen. "O-oh no..."

The Titan rumbles in his throat. "Huhu... your situation sounds dire. Afraid I'll attack if I know how weak you are? Worry not. I might crush Michael for speaking ill of my wife, but my love for war has faded over the years. I'm too old and tired to bother with bloodshed and conflict."

Cronus eyes me for a moment before heading into his cave. As he leaves, the Titan says, "However, I would not say the same of my sons. Poseidon is a jealous bastard. Pray he never learns of thy present predicament."

The four of us watch silently as the King returns to his mountain home. His footsteps rumble the Earth for several minutes. Soon, only the silence of nature greets us.

Once again, birds begin to chirp in the distance. Clouds part in the sky, and the creatures of the Earth release the breaths they had been holding. A ray of sunshine beams down on us, warming the chilliness on our skin.

Gabriel sighs. "Michael... thy temper is troublesome."

"I am sorry," Michael says, bowing his head contritely. "I hate word-games. Polite speech, pleasantries, the quips people utter when they have something to hide. I fear that Cronus knows something. He may not have played a part in the imp's evolution directly, but I believe he knows who did."

"Nonsense," Raphael says, waving his hand flippantly. "Pish-tosh. I felt no such impression from him. Cronus was merely irritated by thy constant insults. Now I regret bringing thee."

I wrap my arm around Michael's and smile sweetly at him. "Oh, come now, Raphael! Do not blame Michael. He is stressed the same as all of us. We can hardly blame him for losing his cool. And besides! Cronus is going to investigate his family for us!"

"So the Mad Titan says," Gabriel replies. "Let us pray Cronus keeps his word. We must return to Heaven, and we won't be able to search for the imps. Whatever the demons do next, I worry we will suffer their actions."

Michael pauses for a second before replying. "I don't. Tricks and deception will only get the rats so far. If they return, they will meet the sharp side of my blade. Then, they will know true fear."

The Archangel of Courage keeps his voice low. The frostiness of his words makes me shudder. An evil glint appears in his eye, as though he's plotting his next move, but hasn't yet figured out what it will be.

* * *

A few minutes later, we wander back toward the forest. I glance up at the trees and spot several prehistoric chimpanzees swinging around from branch to branch. The other Archangels do as well.

"Those creatures are quite remarkable," Gabriel says. "Look at how they balance themselves while climbing the trees. I wonder why they don't fall."

"They're perfectly balanced," Raphael replies. "As all things should be. More importantly, I can't help but notice how they compare to us."

Michael scoffs. "I see no resemblance. Black hair, wingless, with ugly hands and feet. Art thou going blind, eldest brother?"

I walk away from the group and head toward the closest tree. As I do, one of the chimps stops swinging around and stares at me. I recognize him as the one from when we first arrived.

I raise my hand at wave at him. "Come and say hello, little one."

He regards me suspiciously for a minute or so. The chimp starts to turn away, but changes his mind as his curiosity gets the better of him. Eventually, he crawls down the tree and lands on the forest floor, but keeps his distance.

"I'm friendly!"

Behind me, Gabriel chuckles. "Haha, it never fails to amuse me how much our sister loves nature."

After several minutes, I coax the chimp over, then reach out and pat his head. "Aww, you're a cutie!"

Uzziel's thoughts appear in my mind. This animal is shaped similarly to the imps. Raphael is right about how it resembles us, as well. How interesting. Perhaps, if I cannot spare the energy to make new servants, I might be able to try something else.

I motion with my hands, and a trickle of energy leaves my body. It travels toward the chimp and enters his brain. The little guy's eyes bolt open, and he darts away in a panic, fleeing as fast as he can.

Uzziel watch silently as he jumps into a tree and swings away, but a smile forms on her face. He will be the first. If my experiment works, I may solve our mana problems and prevent more needless bloodshed.

"Uzziel?" Gabriel lilts his voice questioningly. "Art thou alright? I've never seen anything flee from thee in all my days."

I spin on my heel and lean forward cutely. "Oh, tis' unimportant, brother. No matter at all. I got a little too touchy, and he became frightened. Let us return to Heaven, now."

"Aye," Raphael says. "With our request refused, t'would be unbecoming to dawdle longer than we must."

I walk back over to the others, and all four of us lift off into the sky.

As I fly away, my thoughts dwell on the chimpanzee and why Uzziel might have used her magic on him.

I wonder what she's planning...

Part 101: Don't Fear The Reaper

The bonfire appears once more. I materialize before the Archangels and Solomon with a hundred thoughts bubbling in my mind.

Immediately, Raphael notices the distress on my face. "What is the problem, young Hero?"

I stare at him for a moment, then turn my attention to Michael. "You tortured the demons. Brutally."

Michael, still sitting on the log, rolls his eyes. "Aye. Dost thee feel a sliver of compassion for them after seeing the deaths they caused? Bloodskins began the war when they turned Samael into our enemy. Valac killed dozens of angels before they had a chance to defend themselves. I posit that a little torture was more than justified."

Solomon raises his eyebrow. "You make it sound as though your barbarism didn't last long."

"The time spent matters little. Had the rat bastards opened their mouths and told me what I wished to know, I would have freed them from the world of the living much sooner."

"You would have killed them," I reply, correcting him. "Wow. Aren't you generous?"

Gabriel clears his throat. "Ahem. Jason, allow me to play devil's advocate. My people lived in relative peace for several eons in Heaven. The imps never made any effort to voice their concerns. Instead, they turned against us, murdered one of our beloved brothers along with hundreds of cherubim, and then turned tail when we mustered a force to stop them. Our rage ran hot. 'Tis easy for thee to judge Michael for his actions from what you know of the past now, but back then, nobody could blame him. Many of us wished we could torture the survivors ourselves. Millions of my brethren felt relief at drawing and quartering the remaining imps in Heaven. I would not call thee incorrect if ye stated we should have pondered the consequences more carefully... but hindsight is 20/20, as humans say."

I regard Gabriel's words for a full minute, thinking silently to myself.

"Maybe. I guess I can't apply today's morality to yesterday's society, but it's tempting. How about we call it a draw and move on?"

Michael averts his eyes. "Hmph."

I turn my attention to Raphael. "Cronus seemed like a decent guy. Even when Uzziel let your mana situation slip, he didn't attack."

The old man nods. "Mmm. Cronus was a war-weary survivor of the Primordial Era. To a mortal, a million years seems an incomprehensible, vast amount of time. However, to deities like myself, time passes significantly faster. The last hundred-thousand years were a blur. If thou dids't stand in his position, the ancient wars might be like months or even days in thy eyes. 'Twas a recent memory for all of us."

Solomon rubs his chin. "I'm only a hundred thousand years old, so I don't compare to you lot in the age department. I was technically dead for most of that time, so I'm still used to a human timescale.

Anyway, I imagine the speed at which time passed is what caused your next blunder."

"What do you mean?" I ask, turning to Solomon. "What happened?"

Gabriel rises to his feet. The fifteen-foot tall Archangel pops his back as he stretches. "Nnn! Ahh. Well, Jason, fifty years passed in the blink of an eye. The demons-"

Solomon interrupts Gabriel. "A hundred."

"I beg thy pardon?" Gabriel glances at Solomon in irritation. "A hundred what?"

"Years. Not fifty. A hundred years passed. Closer to a hundred and twenty, in fact."

"The exact number matters not," Gabriel says, waving Solomon's correction off. "Several dozen years passed, and the demons raided Heaven to free their comrades, seemingly out of nowhere. Their numbers had swelled to ten thousand, by that point."

"That many?" I cross my arms. "I thought only a few hundred demons escaped Heaven alive. That's a huge jump to go from hundreds to thousands."

Solomon purses his lips. "I assume you recall the vision where Leviathan gave Lucifer a special ability?"

"Sure. What about it?"

"Lucifer became instrumental in shaping the future of demonkind," Solomon says. "Before we jump a hundred and twenty years forward, I think we should detour to see the ramifications of her new powers."

I nod. "No reason to skip significant events. Take it away. You're my guide to the past."

Solomon motions to form magic signs. "So long as you think we have time, I'll show you anything you wish to see."

Before Solomon activates another vision, I grab his arm. "Wait. Hold on. I've seen tons of visions already. What time is it outside of the crown?"

"Not to worry. Since you entered my crown, only seven minutes have passed in the physical dimension."

I blink. "That's all?"

"Yes. That's all."

Nodding, I lean back as relief washes over me. "Wow, it feels like I've been in your crown for weeks."

"The passage of time is in the eye of the beholder," Raphael says with a wink. In a way, thou art receiving a taste of how it moves for us as well."

"Mmm."

I nod at Solomon.

"Alright. Make it so."

The moment I arrive in the ancient past, I end up gazing upon a horrifying, awful, disgusting sight. The overwhelming urge to retch engulfs my body. Waves of nausea pass through my stomach, travel to my throat, and burn my nose. Somehow, Satan manages to suppress his nausea before expelling anything.

"Bloody- what the devil is that?!" Satan coughs out words he and I are both thinking. A massive 14-foot-tall monstrosity lays inert in a cave system, nearly filling the entire area ahead of us. The wall of red flesh writhes and wriggles, while moaning to itself in pain.

Beside me, a woman speaks. "Beautiful, isn't she? Her former name was Mildred. I call her 'Imp Shitter' now."

I turn to look at the speaker. Lucifer stands beside me, grinning from ear to ear. Her razor-sharp teeth give her the appearance of a predator, as if she's sizing me up for her next meal. Her third eye twitches back and forth, looking from me to the disgusting lump of red flesh.

"Mildred? What the devil did you do to her?!" I ball up my fist and exhale angrily. "She's disgusting!"

Lucifer chuckles into her palm. "Hehe, it was a shame, but she was the ideal test subject for Leviathan's powers."

"You're terrible! I can't believe you! This shit is unforgivable!"

Satan's rage boils like a fire. I can feel his hatred churning as he prepares to lunge at Lucifer and tear her head off.

"What are you saying? Mildred is the first of many. She will save demonkind. I thought you'd be happy."

Satan pauses. "F-first of many? Explain yourself, fat-tits. You've got ten seconds before I splatter you over the walls and tell the dragon to make Valac our new envoy."

Lucifer holds up her palms in a mock display of fear. "Oh no, heavens, please. Surely you wouldn't attack a helpless woman. Come now, Satan. Mildred is no ordinary demoness anymore. I've adjusted her body's internal structure to be like that of an ant queen. I think she's cute."

I scoff. "Cute? Cute?! She's a fat, blubbering swamp monster! Why is she so nasty-looking? And what's up with..."

I pause to lean around and stare at Mildred's rear. Her body isn't only tall and fat, but long, too. It extends backward for nearly thirty feet, filling the tunnel with her rear extremities.

"...with THAT? It's hideous!"

Lucifer rolls her eyes. "Mildred is a new type of demon, one I designed to produce imps. She can whelp several dozen at a time. As I said, I based her body on that of an ant-queen. She's asexual and able to produce offspring without the loving touch of a male. She will quickly birth many imps for us to swell our ranks."

It takes a minute, but Satan manages to settle down. He swallows hard as he gazes at the corpulent body of what used to be an ordinary demoness. The uneasiness in his stomach doesn't go away, but he seems to accept it. "Fine. She shits out imps. Still, why's she gotta look so disgusting? Mildred had a pretty nice body, before."

Lucifer feigns ignorance. "Oh, that's how Leviathan's power works. If you want an army to rival the Archangels, you'll have to make a few sacrifices."

"Yeah? Don't play stupid. You knew I fancied Mildred. You picked her to piss me off, didn't you? Stupid bitch. From now on, pick the ugly women first."

Mildred's glazed eyes open for a moment. "S... Sa... Sat... an... hur... ts..."

Lucifer ignores Mildred's weeping. Instead, she rubs her chin. "Hmm. What should I call this creature? An imp-queen? No. Too regal for a spawn-spitting sow. Perhaps I could call her a 'bloody mother.' No, that reminds me of the insults the angels foist upon us. I'll have to give the matter some thought."

I turn away and shake my head. "Call her what you will. In the future, tell me what disgusting experiments you'll be doing. That's an order."

Lucifer flinches. "Tch. Bossing me around won't win you any favors, even if your contract forces me to obey. You had better start giving me the respect I deserve."

"After butchering a perfectly good dame, the only thing you deserve is a visit to Leviathan's stomach," I quip.

Turning to walk away, I call out, "Remember! I want advance knowledge of whatever you're up to! No more surprises, Lucy!"

Her voice hisses at my back. "It's Lucifer! Not Lucy!"

"Yeah, yeah, whatever."

* * *

The tunnel stretches ahead of me. I'm underground somewhere, though I haven't a clue where. Everywhere I look, the corridor branches off in different directions, often to small rooms where various male or female demons sit around, chat with each other, and play games involving sticks or rocks.

A sense of boredom fills the underground base. Given how big it is, a decent chunk of time must have passed since I last possessed Satan's body for a vision. A month? Two? Perhaps more?

Satan trudges through the hallways, ignoring the goings-on of the demons around him. Eventually, he arrives at a path that quickly slopes upward. Within a minute, he emerges through a layer of underbrush hiding the demon lair and out onto a snowy Earth. The winter is noticeably frostier than before. It's cold enough outside that I almost want to shiver, but Satan's enhanced body withstands the winter chill. It's barely an annoyance to him.

Satan shuffles through the snow, kicking it out of the way.

"Change my babes into freaks, why don't'cha. Fuckin' Lucifer. Stupid bitch. I ain't one to hit a broad, but I oughta teach that three-eyed freak a lesson."

Satan grumbles to himself as he exits the forest cover shielding the underground demon lair. Once he steps onto an open plain, something catches his attention. Out across the valley, close to a hundred demon grunts line up in pairs, brawling with each other. At the front of their group, Agares stands wrapped in several animal skins. He shivers and clenches his teeth as the winds of winter whip around him.

"D-d-do t-t-two more r-reps! S-Silko! Put y-your back into it! Goron, y-you need t-to dodge!"

I walk over to Agares' side. "You okay? You look like you're having trouble standing."

Agares whips his head toward me. The poor young guy is shivering like a madman. "S-Satan! Oh, devils! It's s-so b-b-buh-bloody cold out here! My whole b-b-body's startin' to ache!"

I nod. "Go inside, then. Cripes. I thought Valac was supposed to be training the troops today. He knows you're useless in the cold."

Agares shakes his head violently. "I a-ain't seen him around. That g-guy's a real n-n-nomad. He does whatever h-h-he wants. Gah! I gotta go, boss. C-can't take this cold any longer."

I nod. "Warm up, friend. There's no sense in having you turn into an ice-cube."

Agares shuffles away without another word, leaving me with the troops. Most of them seem to be suffering too, but nowhere near the same extent as him. Having Phoebe teach me what she knows about demonology has been useful over the last six years. In addition to Bahamut's libraries, Phoebe also learned about demons from the Knights of the Round Table. The majority of demons are quite resistant to hot and cold weather, especially compared to humans. Solomon has explained that it's due to a bunch of biochemical processes that heat their blood during the winter and expel heat during the summer.

I'm no biologist. All I know is that's how it works. Since Agares' body is something like a lizard's, he must be cold-blooded. Interesting.

Satan slowly rubs his hands together, more to relieve tension than to warm himself up. Something's eating at him, but it isn't apparent what.

Well, until his thoughts begin to swirl.

Lucifer's changing my women into beasts. Valac's slackin' off again. Agares can't work in the cold. Devil's sake. I've gotta do all the work around here. If I don't get Deebs and Bael back, I won't have any decent helpers. What's a guy gotta do to find a few yes-men?

Not far away, one of the trainees suddenly stumbles in the snow. He gasps and clutches his chest, then falls to his knees. His training partner, Vepar, cocks her head. "Hm? Tirrus? What's the matter? I barely hit you."

Tirrus wheezes hard as his eyes zig and zag everywhere, which I recognize as the classic signs of a panic attack. "Aw, man, geez! Too... too much! Too much work! Too hard! Ahh! I can't take it anymore! I wanna... I wanna go back to Heaven! I hate it here! It's m-miserable! All we do is work and work! Nnn!!"

He squeezes his legs and tries to control himself, but his emotions grow ever more erratic. I start walking toward him. "Hey! Whaddya yappin' about? I thought I went over this already!"

The young grunt glances up at me, terror in his eyes. "M-mister Satan! Come on, man! You gotta let me go back. I can't take it here anymore! We never have any fun or get to take days off! We don't-"

"Quit your bitching," I mutter. "You think you're the only one who has it bad? Vepar here works just as hard as you do. So do I. We all live underground just in case the angels come flying overhead, but nobody's having fun."

Tirrus's breathing slows noticeably. "I... I d-didn't mean to suggest... that, uh..."

I glance around the clearing. Several of the trainees have stopped sparring to whisper conspiratorially to each other. It seems many of them are thinking the same thoughts at Tirrus. A lot of discontent is brewing under the surface.

I reach down, grab Tirrus's arm, and pull him up. "Calm your tits. Everyone's a little on edge. It's okay to let out your anger and frustrations once in a while. Just don't go doin' anything stupid like trying to find Heaven again, ya feel me? If you go there, the angels will kill you. I'd rather not have any dead demons on my watch. As long as we stick together, we'll grow more powerful. Soon, we can return and kick their asses."

The young demon's breathing evens out. "Y-yeah! Totally!"

Several trainees nearby pump their fists in the air. "Right on!"

I breathe a silent sigh of relief as I pat Tirrus on the back. "Now get back to training. No slacking. I'm going to have a big feast tonight, and everyone can lounge around after their combat practice is over."

With the whoops of approval at my back, I turn around and pace toward a tree, then lean back against it. Cripes. I'm babysitting a buncha morons, Satan thinks to himself. Whine, bitch, moan. That's all they ever do. I'm just glad they're all dumb as rocks.

Satan's sour mindset contrasts with his assertive outward appearance and how he smiles and waves at people. I can practically hear the thoughts of those nearby as they marvel at his 'amazing' leadership capabilities.

However, seeing things from his perspective makes me realize he's bitter, confused, and unsure of what he should do next.

If only these guys knew how good they had it, Satan thinks. They could be dead, or worse. Samael told me that Michael is probably torturing Bael and Deebs. I've gotta save 'em. No way I'm leavin' two of my best warriors to rot in Heaven.

"Satan!" A woman's voice to my left startles me. I jerk my head toward the disturbance to spot Belial gasping for breath. "It's terrible! Come quickly! Valac has gone berserk!"

"What? Berserk?! What do you mean-"

"He's killing demons left and right! Come on, come on!!"

Panic covers every inch of Belial's face. I nod and quickly follow after her. "What direction?"

"North, near Leviathan's cave. I don't know what happened!" Belial and I hop over boulders and run through bushes in our path, even as the snow reaches almost two-feet in height, making us wade through it like a swimming pool. "I think one of the grunts insulted him, and a few others started laughing. I wanted to stay and fight, but-"

"But, nothing," I say, cutting her off. My eight vectors burst from my back. I reach over, grab her waist with my left arm, and jump into the air. Belial yelps in surprise as we seemingly levitate into the air. My eight invisible limps press into the snow below, transforming me into some form of a massive spider.

Belial's eyes turn to saucers as she spots the five-clawed imprints rapidly appearing in the snow below. "What in the name of-?!"

"Don't worry about it, toots. I've got a new trick up my sleeve. Bah! What is Valac thinkin'?!"

Using my vectors, we zoom forward ten times faster than before. Sometimes a vector will lunge toward a tree branch and yank us forward, giving a big burst of speed. Belial's cries of terror turn to glee as we continue, then vanish once she remembers where we're heading.

"You can't fight Valac! He's too powerful! Don't you remember what happened when we fought the cave bear? What about when we were in Heaven, and he killed all those cherubs? You'll die!"

I grit my teeth. "Shut up, dumbass. I ain't gonna lose to the likes of him! Not this time. I've had enough of him muckin' up my plans."

Satan's thoughts transform into seething anger. Yeah, that's right. All that piece of work does is question me. He never contributes anything, because he thinks he's sooo tough. Big ol' Valac, always mockin' me every chance he gets. Well, I'll tell you what, it ends today. I draw the line at killing other demons. No way that continues anymore. Not if I have a say in it.

Within two minutes, the base of the mountain appears. I drop Belial into a snowbank and continue forward, ignoring her yelp of surprise as she hits the ground. The sounds of several demons yelling and screaming grow louder every second. Soon, I encounter the first body, that of a young male grunt. Another male follows, and a female, and several others.

By the time I've passed thirty bodies, I levitate above the wall of trees and pounce toward the barely visible opening to Leviathan's cave. Not half a football field away, ten demons battle Valac as the scythe-wielding madman cackles gleefully.

"Look at you run! Look at you fight! Try and stop me, but you lack the might! Whether you flee or face your plight, you'll find I'm a blight in the night! Neehehe!"

Thirty more demon bodies lie motionless in the snow. Given how long it probably took Belial to find me, Valac must have been killing his comrades for over half an hour.

One of the demons, Orias, stays in the back while his friends try to keep Valac at bay. I only recognize him due to his black-bear fur coat and the length of his horns, a sign that he's possibly at the level of a Lord or higher.

Orias motions with his hands while sweat pours off his brow. He tries to form magical symbols, but right as he's about to complete his incantation, Valac pauses momentarily to hold his lantern aloft. A ghostly spirit rushes out and explodes next to Orias, knocking him on his ass and disrupting his spell.

"Damn you, Valac! You'll pay!" Orias howls. "I'll kill you ten times for every friend of mine you've slain!"

Valac chuckles. "You, kill me? I laugh at the thought! You're all weak and pathetic; the whole lot! Bend over and prepare, for your death is at hand! Once I'm through with you-"

Before Valac can finish, Satan slingshots himself forward with his vectors and swoops at Valac's backside. "Shut up, moron!"

Satan's body plows into Valac with thunderous force, smashing the undead demon into the snow. All eight vectors cocoon around me, cushioning my body from the impact.

Valac is not so lucky. He crashes, spins, and bends unnaturally, coming to a stop a short distance away. I recover quickly and pull myself to my feet, then turn to Orias and his ten grunts. "Sorry I'm late. You guys okay?"

Orias nods, but his eyes betray how terrified he is. He clutches a dozen diamonds while sweating profusely. "W-we can't stop him, Satan! Valac is too powerful! I've been trying to ignite these gems, but he won't let me finish!"

I hold up my palm. "You guys are in the way. Get to safety. I'll handle this."

Orias's eyes widen. "Impossible! You won't win! He'll kill you!"

The snow shifts where Valac landed. The undead demon slowly pulls himself back together, making me shove Orias away with my palm. "I'll be fine! Get outta here. See if any of the others are still alive. You'll only slow me down."

Orias hesitates. Before he can object, I snarl at him. "GO!"

That does the trick. Seeing my anger puts the fear of the devil in him. Orias nods and grabs the others. They hustle away, and I turn my attention to Valac as he rises to his feet.

The Grim Reaper's glowing red eyes fixate on me from beneath his hood. "Well, well well, look who's here, it's Satan, the pretender. You think you're my match? You're not even a contender. You fled from the angels and left your friends to die, but when I finish you off, you'll break down and cry."

Satan glares at Valac. "Your rhymes won't save you this time, bub. You ain't even good at 'em. I ain't the demon I was when winter began, I've grown more powerful than you can possibly imagine."

Valac drops all pretense of rhyming as he lowers his voice. "As have I."

I shoot a glance at the demons lying around me. Their empty gazes stare up into the sky as a light snow rains down from the heavens above. Then, I turn to Valac. "If the only reason you killed your family was to grow stronger, then you disgust me. No matter how many souls you take, you'll never fill out the empty hole in your chest. You ain't nothin'."

Valac stretches to his full height, standing a few inches taller than me. "Talk is cheap."

The Grim Reaper jumps at me, clearing the twenty-foot gap between us with frightening speed. His scythe lunges for my chest. The instant before it hits, one of my vectors bats it to the side. Valac stumbles and gasps, opening himself up for a counter-attack. I seize the opportunity to smash my fist into his face, bruising my knuckles on the fleshless bone of his skull. Valac stumbles backward but manages to right himself.

His right arms grip the scythe, while the upper left holds his lantern. The fourth quickly forms several magic signs, and a ghostly soul flies at my chest. My vectors try to deflect it, but it passes through them and explodes against my ribs with the force of a grenade, sending me careening backward end over end.

Once again, my Vectors surround me, forming an invisible shield to absorb the kinetic energy threatening my life. I roll out of the death spiral and right myself in midair, landing neatly on my feet. Suddenly, blood rushes from my chest as several broken ribs protrude outward.

The pain, agonizing, doubles Satan over. To his credit, the devil manages to hold his concentration, even as blood begins to seep through the fresh wounds. "F-fuckin… cunt…"

Valac motions with his free hand, and another soul rushes toward me. My eyes widen in panic as I realize I can't deflect it. Satan's vectors kick into overdrive, yanking him away at the last second before the soul can impact.

Something unexpected happens. Valac disappears and teleports to the soul's position. "Surprise!"

His scythe rushes at my back, right in my blind spot.

Satan gasps. Shit! He can teleport by throwing his souls!

His teeth gnash together. This time, an invisible palm rushes forward and forms a solid barrier, blocking Valac's scythe before it can hit my back.

Valac's jaw drops. "What? Impossible! How did you-?!"

He starts to leap backward, putting distance between us, but another vector grabs his scythe and rips it from his grasp, then flings it toward the top of the mountain. I spin around to face Valac and immediately launch an assault before he can recover. Two vectors grab his arms, holding him in place, while three others begin violently pummeling him. The invisible limbs beat, batter, and bash the undead freak over and over. Valac tries to block the invisible fists, but he's powerless to stop them.

I pause for a split second, lift Valac above my head, and slam him into the ground.

The instant before Valac hits, his body disappears. My vectors smash into the snow, blowing out a small crater and sending sleet in every direction.

Valac materializes a short distance away, panting for breath. His bones lie snapped and broken in several directions. The so-called Grim Reaper writhes on the ground, unable to control his spastic movement. "Imposs… impossible! Y-you… you can't have… g-grown… this strong… so quickly!"

I wince as my ribs poke further out of my chest. My vision blurs slightly. A strange redness enters my eyes. "Nng. You underestimated me… dipshit. Even if you didn't, you can't… can't block my attacks. I have the perfect offense and the perfect defense."

Valac motions with his hand. A soul exits his lantern and enters his body. Immediately, his bones begin to mend. The bony bastard pulls himself together and rises to his feet. Despite his repaired frame, he appears noticeably more exhausted than before.

"Tch. What's the matter, Satan? You're looking worse for wear. Avert your eyes, for there's no need to stare. Once I considered myself a risk-taker, but today I refuse to meet my maker."

I groan. "Bloody devils. Again with… with your damn rhyming!"

My vectors coil beneath me. I pounce at Valac, only for him to vanish again, as he teleports toward the top of the mountain.

I hit the dirt and swivel to face him. Valac stands for a moment and eyeballs me. "I'm tired of you, and I hate how you rule. I'm surrounded by weaklings who all slobber and drool. I see now that this is no place for one such as I, so devilspeed, farewell, and goodbye."

Valac motions once again. His scythe materializes in his grasp, and he teleports away, leaving me by myself.

Satan's anger slowly ebbs. After a few moments, the demon leader sags down and flops on his back.

"Y-yeah… you'd better… fuckin'… run…"

One minute passes. Two. Three.

The life slowly fades from my body. Suddenly, Belial appears above me. The panic in her eyes is palpable. "Oh, devils! That's a lot of blood! Satan! Are you okay?"

My vision begins to blur. "F-feelin'… real sleepy…"

"No, don't walk toward the darkness! I'll heal you! Prepare yourself."

Two seconds later, blinding pain lances through my chest as my ribs pop into place. I jolt awake and gasp for breath. "Gahh! Augh! Shit!"

After the phantom pain fades, I gaze into Belial's eyes. It takes several minutes before I can speak again.

"Th-thanks… girl…"

Belial cranes her neck to gaze at the bodies lying in the snow.

"No. Thank you for teaching Valac a lesson. I only wish you'd killed the bastard."

I nod.

"Yeah. Me too."

Part 102: A Shocking Revelation

"Discontent among the demons, huh?"

I reappear at the bonfire and ask a question immediately as the Archangels come into focus.

Solomon nods. "Things weren't peaches and cream at first. The demons had many growing pains as they tried to adapt to life on Earth. It might not be immediately obvious, but aside from losing out on the wonderful food in Heaven, the demons also left behind a realm of constantly perfect temperature, wide-open spaces, and lots of established games and fun."

I roll my eyes. "Sure, but they also escaped beatings and constant insults. Gaslighting is a terrible thing, Solomon. Just because their slavery was relatively comfortable doesn't mean they had to keep quiet and suffer."

Michael growls in his throat. "Kuh. What Hero dares to take the side of bloodskins? Has thy brain become addled, Jason? Why art thou overlooking the cherubs they killed, as well as their fellow imps? The demons are a violent, barbaric species, one which seeks only pain and death."

I cross my arms. "That's rich, coming from you."

Raphael holds up his hand. "Now, now. Jason, thy naive upbringing might lead thee to think the demons redeemable, but all we wish is for thee to learn from our mistakes. If thou giveth the demons an inch, they will take a mile. Thy intent was to learn about their past, and that is what thou shalt do. Try not to jump to conclusions."

Gabriel nods. "Jason, please understand that we do not wish to foist our history upon thee. Our emotional baggage weighs on us every moment of every day. Perhaps, given how we failed so catastrophically, it might be best if thou shoulds't disregard our conventional wisdom and approach the demons in a whole new light."

Before I can reply, Gabriel extends a finger. "However... terrible though our mistakes may have been, if thou ignoreth the lessons we've learned, thou shalt fail in the same way as us. Thy goal of negotiating with the demons is admirable, but demons do not bargain with those they consider their inferiors, and any agreement with beings in a superior position will fall apart due to their backstabbing and skullduggery."

I digest Gabriel's words carefully. "So, you're saying that because the demons consider me weak, if I try to bargain with them, they'll outright refuse?"

"Most likely," Raphael replies. "Or worse still, they may plunge the knife into thy back after accepting thy offer. Never underestimate the depths to which a demon will sink."

"I'll keep that in mind."

* * *

Solomon raises his eyes to the starry night sky. "Let's continue with the visions. In the last vision, you saw that Valac departed his comrades after slaying many of them. Until that point, Valac's ability to reap the souls of other beings and give them to his brethren was his primary usefulness to demon society. Valac was, in effect, the originator of demonic power."

I nod. "Makes sense. Where did Valac get the souls from, though? I didn't see any humans running around."

"Animals. For example, that cave bear, deer, wolves, and so on. The skins the demons used to cover themselves were taken from the creatures Valac slew. Animal souls are impotent compared to human, demon, and angel souls, but they allowed the first imps to mature into grunts."

"Okay, so if Valac left, how were the demons going to power themselves up?"

Solomon crosses his arms. "Lucifer came up with an idea. Have you heard of Burner demons and Brutes?"

"Yeah, Phoebe mentioned them. You're talking about fire-type grunts and the big guys who can crush humans with their bare hands."

"Correct. With Valac gone, Lucifer began experimenting on demons. Satan protested several times, but in the end, he couldn't offer a good counter-argument as to why Lucifer needed to stop. She created the Burners, the Scythers, the Rumblers, and all the other demons. The demon mutation process is quite interesting. I could explain it sometime if you're interested."

I wave his suggestion off. "No need. I already mostly know how it works. Broodmothers have several chaotic genes that they can whelp into new imps, which results in unique and variant demons when said imps gain enough souls to mutate. Phoebe explained the process to me a few times."

Solomon nods. "She's right. It was a deliberate choice by Lucifer. She changed the genomes of the early demons so they would produce all different types of offspring."

Michael raises his voice. "Art thou finished discussing the reproductive functions of bloodskins? Can't we move on to the next vision? Every word thou speaketh churns my stomach."

I glance at the Archangel of Courage. As always, his sour expression is more than capable of curdling milk.

"Sure, Michael, we can move on. Solomon?"

The ancient king grumbles to himself for a moment. Moody Michael won't let me discuss demon biology for one whole minute. Sheesh.

Solomon motions with his hands. "I explained to you what happened to the demons when Valac left, but it's what happened to Valac next that shaped Earth's future to come. His next actions held deep ramifications for all sentient life. Valac was a Unique demon, one of a rare few to spring up across the ages. Unlike those created by Lucifer, he held the potent ability to manipulate the energy of living beings for himself. Few demons since him have ever held such power in their palms. Aside from Valac, I count Satan, Mephisto, Beelzebub, and Lucifer in my assessment. There were others, but Heroes and Angels hunted them down as quickly as we could."

I frown. "Beelzebub? Why him?"

"Don't you remember what Phoebe told you? Beelzebub holds the coveted power of Soulfire. It can rip the souls of those it touches right from their bodies, sucking them inside of its wielder instantly."

Suddenly, Raphael jumps to his feet. "What? A demon possesses the unholy flame? Impossible!"

Solomon winces. The expression on his face seems to say, I shouldn't have said that where Raphael could hear.

He turns to the old man. "A-aye. He does."

Raphael's jaw trembles. "Such... such ungodly power. None should wield it. He's a threat to everyone, including himself!"

I don't understand what the big deal is, but the way Raphael's eyes flick to Michael for a split-second, then back to me, makes my stomach quiver.

Solomon stares the old man down. "I know. There's little we can do about it now."

"Don't give me that nonsense, Solomon!" Raphael's eyes smolder with anger. He takes a step toward Solomon, leaving his staff behind. "There isn't a moment to waste! We mustn't sit around telling stories while a wielder of the Divine Flame draws breath! We-"

Solomon hardens his gaze. "Raphael. Sit. Beelzebub is already several thousand years old. We can pursue him after we complete the visions."

The elderly Archangel clenches his jaw to stop his shaking. Raphael relents after a moment and returns to his log, but he doesn't appear happy.

I turn to Solomon. "What's the big deal about this Unholy Flame?"

"It's a type of magic the Creator should never have given us," Raphael replies, answering before Solomon. "The ability to rip souls from those living to power up oneself. 'Tis a disgusting, vile spell. Those who discover it quickly turn against friend and foe alike as their lust for power grows."

Solomon goes quiet for a moment. He watches Raphael intently as the old man lowers his eyes to his feet.

"Raphael described it succinctly. Soulfire is one of a few forbidden talents that stir fear in even the eldest deities. Valac's scythe was his method for tearing soul from flesh. Satan's Blood Contracts were another."

I run my chin. "You mentioned Mephisto and Lucifer. What about them?"

"Mephisto's story is fascinating, but I'll probably talk about him later. He was born long after the Ancient Era concluded, and even after the War in Heaven. Lucifer only gained her ability because of Leviathan. Hers is less about taking souls for herself, and instead involves melding genomes and DNA. She hadn't a clue how the scientific elements of her power worked, so I suppose calling her a 'soul melder' would be inaccurate."

Solomon shakes his head. "This topic is not a light one. We can discuss the finer aspects of soul manipulation at a later date. For now, I recommend we begin the next vision."

Raphael's haunted expression and Solomon's sudden desire to move on make me nod along. "Sure. Next vision. Right. Time's a-wasting, as they say."

Solomon forms several magical signs, and my world fades to black.

Recommended Listening

As soon as the vision begins, I realize something is terribly wrong. My sensation of touch vanishes. I float in a void, staring at what I assume is a forest on Earth, but one without any color. The greens and browns of nature appear more like varying shades of grey. The snow is still white, but everything else is... wrong.

From my position perched atop a hill, I struggle to draw breath. My chest doesn't move, nor can I inhale. Rather than simply stopping, my biological processes appear to have vanished altogether.

After a moment of staring, I begin to notice something. The black and white landscape before me does indeed have dots of color. A flock of birds soars overhead. To me, they resemble blue flecks of flame, gliding on the breeze. A snow hare darts into the clearing, hopping through the snow gaily, his inner fire burning warmer than those above.

While I gaze at the colored flames inside of the animals, an ominous series of whispers begin to tug at my ear. A chorus of voices, squawks, and chirps speak to me as if they're a galaxy away.

"No need to speak, no need to shout. No matter if you cry, you can't get out. Safe in my lantern, that's where you'll stay. Bow before me, pick a devil, and pray."

Valac's unmistakable raspy voice speaks out. He whispers to nobody in particular while holding his lantern next to his face. When I saw the world through Satan's eyes, I never got much of a look at it, but now that I can see from Valac's point of view, a dazzling array of colors greets me. Where before the lantern shifted between various hues of blue and green; instead, a brilliant rainbow of colors twirls and twists as hundreds of souls, animal and demon alike, spin around inside, unable to control their movements. The voices of tens, hundreds, perhaps thousands of creatures cry out pitifully, begging for release from their prison.

I want to release them. At least, I would, under normal circumstances. However, inside Valac's body, my emotions seem to dull, turning my consciousness as grey and barren as the world around me.

Who cares if they want freedom? Those trapped inside Valac's lantern ended up there due to their weakness. They deserve their lot in life.

Ah, no, that can't be me thinking those thoughts. It's Valac. His cold appraisal of his lantern's souls mirrors that of a pawn shop dealer examining a watch or some other trinket. He only cares about the energy the souls will give him, not about the individuals from which they originated.

I understand, immediately, the warning Raphael uttered. Those who collect souls treat life as a commodity, something to improve their standing or physical attributes.

Reprehensible. Disgusting.

And yet... a sickening thought occurs to me.

My Wordsmithing is not omnipotent. I've spent years trying to figure out how to increase my internal capacity for energy.

What if I tried ripping out the souls of my enemies using Wordsmithing? Has the answer lain before me all this time?

No! Perish the thought! I... I can't dwell on such ideas. Focus, Jason! The vision. What is Solomon trying to show you?

I mentally smack myself and return my attention to... whatever Valac is doing. He continues to sit on the top of the snowy hill and gaze into the distance, but I haven't a clue what's captured his attention.

Valac lowers his lantern. "Ten trillion souls await, some mightier than the rest. Compared to other demons, I deserve the best. To defeat Satan, the weaker souls I must eschew. Birds, bats, and bears? No, they won't do."

Four souls leap from Valac's lantern. Each one flies in a different direction, sailing far off into the sunset. Their movements, guided by the Reaper's magic, travel to the north, west, east, and south, ignoring all terrain in their path.

Valac's vision goes blurry. A disorienting sensation of scale engulfs my mind, as his consciousness begins to expand.

The world around me moves from the third dimension to the fourth. As time passes, a bubble of perception envelops the Reaper's body. Underground caves appear in my mind's eye, along with bird nests, frozen rivers, and other elements of the world.

Expanded Presence.

Valac's soul grows until it hits a tipping point. A beacon of flame, hot like the bonfire the Archangels face, burns fifteen miles away. Soon, another appears, and another. Four individual souls glow brighter than all the animals, bugs, and other creatures of the world combined.

Valac tilts his head toward them.

"Oh? What are these? Flames which beg for a taste. Powerful beings they are, to them, I must lay waste. These souls, they remind me of the angels. Reaping them will be anything but disdainful."

One of Valac's souls homes in on the roaring red flames. He teleports a few hundred feet away and skulks behind a tree.

Titans. Four of them. While they aren't as tall as Cronus, I recognize them immediately. The gargantuan behemoths sit in a circle and tear apart several deer before stuffing the raw, uncooked carcasses in their mouths. Each one must stand close to a hundred and fifty feet tall, and based on the massive mammaries on two of them; I'd wager there are two males and females.

None of the Titans are attractive. Quite the contrary, each is a walking combination of fat and muscle, able to crush trees in their palms without breaking a sweat. Their hairy backs and drooping jowls make me shudder as they wring the blood from each deer's carcass all over their bodies before throwing the meat and bone inside.

One of the females wipes her lips. "Meldor, you won't believe what I heard."

The male beside her stuffs another deer in his mouth. He barely acknowledges her words. "What?"

"My ravens gave me a report. They spotted angels on Earth during the last lunar cycle."

"Were they ignoring the treaty?"

"Don't know. It's not my business."

The two glance at each other for a moment before polishing off the rest of their five-star gourmet meal and rubbing their bellies.

"Why even mention it, then?"

"I'm just making conversation."

"Psh. Babbling nonsense, I'd say."

"Oh, shut up."

The other male Titan rolls his eyes. "Would you two stop? I hate when you bicker."

"She started it. She's always bringing up pointless things. Nobody cares about the bloody angels."

The second female pushes her last two deer away. "I care! The angels don't belong in our land. They should stay in Heaven, like good little pigeons."

The first male, Meldor, raises an eyebrow. "You gonna finish those?"

"I might save them for later."

"Later? They'll rot. Come on, give them to me."

The second female frowns. "No! I don't want to! They're mine! You've had enough."

Meldor grumbles to himself. "Dumb woman. Only an idiot lets perfectly good food go to waste."

* * *

After hearing Cronus speak to the Archangels, it's a little surprising how simplistic the other members of his species sound. The King of the Titans wasn't as eloquent as Raphael or Gabriel, but he seemed relatively intelligent. These four, whoever they are, must be related to him. Why are they so… thick?

I ignore my inner questions and focus on the vision. Valac leaps up and grabs onto one of the tree's branches. A loud snap shatters the quiet of the forest, making me cringe.

None of the Titans pay it the slightest heed. Their total disregard for safety must be due to their position atop the food chain. Given their 150-foot-tall size, what could possibly harm them?

Valac perches on the branch. He motions with his free hand, and a single soul rushes out of the lantern. It zooms into the circle of Titans.

Meldor notices it immediately. "Hm?"

The soul explodes. A burst of blinding light erupts in the center. Each Titan lurches back and roars in pain. "Gahhh! By the forefathers!"

Valac rushes toward the first female and impales her head with a sickening crunch. The sneak attack instantly rips her soul out, making her body topple backward, dead. Immediately, Valac leaps to the nearest male. He, too, leaves the realm of the living, unable to fend off the unseen assassin.

Valac pauses for a split second as waves of celestial energy flood into his body. He struggles to move for a moment, then regains his footing and pounces at the other female. She continues howling in pain, oblivious to her surroundings, and nearly smacks Valac by accident. He avoids her frenzied flailing and impales her heart, ripping the soul from her body.

The final Titan, Meldor, blinks his eyes. He immediately realizes his companions are down for the count and spots Valac jumping toward him.

Valac raises his scythe to stab the remaining Titan, but Meldor's palm slaps him aside in midair. With each finger standing as tall as a BMW, the force of Meldor's attack smashes me fifteen feet underground, burying me in a mountain of dirt.

"By Cronus's scrote! What kind of creature are you?!"

Valac doesn't respond. His broken body quickly begins to regenerate as the energy of three Titans mends his broken bones.

However, something else happens. A feeling like lava boils in his veins. A pounding sensation at the top of his skull, like a hammer trying to reach his brain, makes my head spin. Valac's horns grow a full inch.

Despite never having seen the phenomena in person, I know what's happening, thanks to Phoebe's lessons. Valac is mutating into a higher demon form. Where before he might have been a Lord or a Baron... now he is another rank higher.

The Earth shakes as Meldor plunges his fingers into the dirt and rips me out, along with a massive wad of soil. "You! Little maggot! What have you done? Why isn't Iris moving?!"

My body begins to compress as the Titan squeezes his palm into a fist, crushing me into marrow.

Not much longer and I, or rather, Valac, will die.

Despite the sensation of my bones snapping under Meldor's strength, no waves of agony hit me. Valac has no sense of touch or pain.

Valac stares into the dirt as it presses against his eyeballs. "Now I understand. I have a purpose. If I die right here, t'would be a disservice. This dullard cannot defeat me; he cannot contend. Little does he know, but his story is at its end."

Valac flicks his finger. Ten souls leap from his lantern and tear through the dirt. A moment later, the compression ceases as Meldor howls in pain. I plummet toward the ground as the Titan drops me, but Valac bursts out of his dirt coffin and lands like a cat.

The Grim Reaper flicks his gaze toward the giant. Meldor clutches his face and moans. He takes a step back, trips over the body of the first female Titan, and falls onto his back, still wheezing and crying.

Valac eyes the glowing fire inside of the Titan. "A pitiful effort, no style or grace. You were as weak as the look on your face. I take no pleasure in killing those who are frail, but even so, you'll make a fine soul for my scythe to impale."

The Reaper hops onto Meldor's chest. Meldor swings recklessly, trying desperately to hit his miniature attacker, but Valac's speed is too much for the blind giant to overcome. Valac plunges his scythe into Meldor's heart, and after a few seconds, the Titan goes limp.

With all four Titans dead, the wildlife nearby becomes a whisper. On a branch above, a pack of crows watches silently. Valac ignores them and walks away, leaving behind the bodies of his victims for the wolves and vultures.

* * *

Minutes pass. Valac walks without commentary toward a large, frozen lake. The beautiful, pristine water shines under the overcast sunlight, sparkling like a diamond even to Valac's colorblind gaze.

My thoughts spin around like crazy in my mind.

I understand now the danger the demons represent. The Titans seemed fearsome enough that the angels didn't want to cross them, yet Valac killed four Titans within thirty seconds. Whether the Grim Reaper is an aberration of nature or one of many dangerous members of his species, he represents the most explosive elements of demon society. While the other demons struggle to reach low-level Lord status, Valac might already be at the level of Duke... or higher.

Valac continues toward the body of water. It doesn't take long before he arrives at the ice and begins crossing it, heading toward the center.

A strange feeling begins to boil in my gut.

Something's off.

What is Valac doing? After slaying four Titans, why come here?

Valac slows to a stop. He gazes down at the ice. "This spot should do."

I wait. Nothing happens. Hearing the Reaper drop his rhyming scheme, as always, unnerves me. The Grim Reaper gazes at his reflection. His burning red eyes appear to melt two pinpricks in the ice the longer he stares.

What the hell is Valac doing? He's wigging me out.

The Reaper raises his free hand and caresses his face.

"Enjoying the show?"

* * *

Worry boils in my stomach like never before.

Why is Valac chatting with his reflection? Is he talking to one of the souls in his lantern?

* * *

Valac's hollow gaze reflects off the water, aiming directly at me.

"I'm talking to you, Jason."

A chill freezes me in place.

You... you can hear me?

"Of course. Solomon isn't as brilliant as you think. The old man made a mistake. It will cost him."

My inner voice shakes.

S-Solomon... Solomon, pull me out of this vision. You're freaking me out!

Valac chuckles. "Heh heh heh... Solomon can't come to the phone right now. He's trying, desperately, to wrestle control from me. He may succeed, but by then, it will be too late. I have a message for you, Jason. Something he won't dare say."

The Grim Reaper strokes his skull softly, gently, as if to calm me down. It has the opposite effect. A horrible feeling of dread washes over my body as bone grinds against bone.

What... what could you possibly say to me? How are you here?

Valac raises his eyes to stare across the lake. He ignores my questions. "The angels lied. Solomon did, too. None of them want you to know the truth. You're a puppet. 'Heroes' are nothing more than a sham. They were created by the angels to force their so-called 'righteous order' upon the world."

A lump forms in my throat. I want to swallow, but since I'm inside Valac's body, I can't. I'm trapped. I have no control.

I feel... small. Insignificant.

You're lying, I say, my thoughts almost a whisper.

Valac lowers his arm. "The word 'Hero,' to most humans, represents purity and goodness. There is no such thing as an 'evil' hero, or so the logic goes. But... what if I told you that was a lie?"

I take a few moments to gather my thoughts.

My next question would be why you care enough to tell me. I have no reason to believe you over my friends.

Valac slowly begins striding across the ice. He waves his hand, and the vision of an icy winter morphs into a warm summer. The ice melts, but Valac strides atop the water as though he were Jesus Christ.

"Reality is similar to Solomon's false visions. You can twist and bend it to suit your worldview as you please. When you have enough power, you can label those who oppose you as 'evil,' and yourself 'righteous.' The Angels forced demons to give them our mana... but what they truly wanted was control of our souls. That is why they hated me the most."

An irritating tingling sensation pokes at the back of my mind. I ignore it.

I already know that much. The angels needed imp energy to survive. Their bodies leaked mana, and without it, they would die. Selfish, yes, but I can't fault them for self-preservation.

Valac shakes his head. "Tsk, tsk. Think about my words. You spoke with Raphael before entering my vision. As soon as Solomon mentioned Beelzebub's manipulation of souls, didn't you find the old chicken's behavior… strange? Perhaps you might be forgiven for thinking he was… hiding something."

Spit it out. What are you getting at? I don't like you controlling my mind, demon.

"I'm not controlling you, Jason. The angels are. Solomon is. I'm letting you in on a secret. What you choose to do with it is up to you."

Fine. I'm all ears.

My frosty tone doesn't bother Valac in the slightest. He arrives at the edge of the lake and strides out onto the grass. Immediately, the greenery begins to wilt and die. The flowers shrivel up and turn brittle, falling into ash as he stomps them down.

"When the angels learned of my powers, they realized I was their greatest threat. The Titans were slow to react. I easily overpowered many of them. The angels, however, sought to employ me for their gain."

Now I know you're lying. The angels would never do that. They hated demons with a passion.

Valac's calmness vanishes. "You're wrong. Wrong! You don't know anything about them, Jason! You only know the lies they've spoon-fed you! The angels wanted my power for themselves!"

The Grim Reaper pauses in the field and thrashes about as his voice rises.

"They used the demons! They used the Titans and the humans too! How can you not see, boy?! The angels perished because everyone united against them! We all worked together to eradicate the winged freaks from the universe! If you help them, you'll only bring their filth back to the realm of the living!"

I flinch, as Valac continues his verbal barrage. Nothing you say makes any sense. The angels might be at fault, but it is and always was the demons who devoured humans alive! You're the ones who use human souls for your gain! Nothing the angels did could compare to the atrocities 100,000 years of demonic rule has unleashed upon the universe.

Valac seethes. "You don't have to believe me, child, but you'll soon understand! The War in Heaven changed everything. It created a new paradigm. The angels-"

Suddenly, Valac pauses. He reaches up to rub his head. The tingling sensation in the back of my mind increases dramatically. It shifts into a sensation akin to a mole clawing at my brain, trying to dig through. Painful and hot, as if someone is slowly dripping molten lava onto my skull.

Gah! Painful! What are you doing to me?! Get out of my head, Valac!

Valac hisses. "It's not me, you fool! It's Solomon! He's terrified of what I'll say! He doesn't want you to know about the angels! He's-"

A crackling sound explodes in my ear. "Krrggh- jfs… hnllpry… J… JASON!"

Solomon's voice booms like a cannon, drowning out Valac.

"Awaken! Come to me! There's an intruder in your mind!"

Valac grabs at his skull with all four arms. "Kss! No! Damn you, Solomon! Get... get out! You won't stop me! I'll tell him everything!"

"Foul demon! Begone!"

The warmth of Solomon's radiance warms my body. Where before I could scarcely feel anything thanks to Valac's sensory void, Solomon's mana beckons to me sweetly, recalling me to the world of the living.

Anger begins to burn in my chest. You tried to whisper lies in my ear, Valac, but I won't listen. Bargaining with demons is one thing. Believing them is another.

I stretch my inner aura out. Solomon's hand bursts through a veil of darkness, ripping me out of the emptiness inside Valac's mind.

Valac's shrieks of rage follow after me, fading into the distance.

"The Archangels are lying, Jason! Lying! LYING!! Don't believe a word they say!!"

Part 103: Lies, Damned Lies, and Destiny

"Jason! Jason, are you alright?!"

I wake up on my back. Solomon hovers over me, along with all three Archangels. They scan my face, looking for signs of distress.

Ugh. The top of my head throbs like a motherfucker. What happened?"

The Archangels pull back, giving me space. Solomon rises to his feet. "You're lucky to be alive. The moment I initiated the vision, when you went under, a predatory being appeared inside your body's mana. I lost all contact with you for twelve seconds. It started overtaking your mental functions, and I had to initiate a mana burn to irradiate it. My apologies if your head hurts. I may have gone too far in trying to scorch the intruder out."

I carefully pull myself to my feet, wincing the whole time. "Twelve seconds? You're kidding. That vision was at least thirty minutes long."

"Time perception, Jason. The deeper you are in a dream, the slower time moves in reality. Anyway, you're lucky I was able to pull you back. If you had stayed there for five more seconds..."

Solomon trails off, leaving the implication to hang in the air.

"What would have happened?" I ask.

"I'm not sure. It would have likely reduced your lifespan by several decades. Beyond that, I can't say. I've never encountered anything like it in all my years, nor has anyone in my memory library."

A moment passes. I sweep my hair back and glance at the angels.

Valac's words echo in my mind.

I turn back to Solomon. "So, ah... while I was inside the vision... the vision of Valac, I mean..."

I pause, unsure of how to explain.

"...Valac came to life. He started speaking to me."

Solomon's expression turns screwy. "He came to life? It may have been a hallucination caused by brain damage."

"I don't, ah, think so. Valac knew things he shouldn't. The whole ordeal was pretty unnerving."

Solomon stares at me for a moment, flicks his gaze to Raphael, then back to me. "Hmm. Well, truthfully, the thing in your mind reminded me of a soul. It wasn't complete. It felt more like the chipped edge of someone's soul than a complete picture, but..."

Slowly, Solomon raises his hand to his neatly trimmed beard. His expression hardens as he strokes the black hairs on his chin over and over.

"...That would be impossible. Valac died in the Ancient Era. You must have seen something else."

"Or someone else," Raphael mutters.

"I don't know. The Valac I saw seemed identical to the one in the visions you showed me. I don't think he was a figment of my imagination. You're dismissing the thought awfully fast."

Solomon shakes his head. "I'm not. Anything is possible. Satan came back to life after a hundred thousand years in purgatory. Valac, though... I doubt it was him."

Solomon pauses for a moment, then waves his hand flippantly.

"There are many demons with a variety of terrifying abilities, Jason. Ose, for example, can control people's bodies and take over their minds. I wouldn't assume Valac has returned just yet, especially when the soul I saw could have belonged to anyone."

Michael clears his throat. "Ahem. More importantly, how could someone have placed an errant soul inside of the Hero? I think that's the question we should be asking. There shouldn't be many demons alive who can do such a thing."

I nod. "Good question. I mean, maybe it wasn't Valac. When he started talking to me, he didn't do the whole rhyming thing. He did do it earlier in the vision, though..."

"So it could have been anyone," Solomon says. A wave of relief passes over his face. "Nothing would terrify me more than the return of the Grim Reaper. Satan, as terrifying as he was, couldn't rip through an enemy's defenses and tear their soul out. Such unthinkable power belongs only to the damned."

"And the accursed," Raphael adds. "I would wager that Ose's brain-meddling had something to do with Jason's soul-violator. Pay the vision no mind, Jason. The ramblings of demons have about the same worth as mine."

All three Archangels breathe a sigh of relief and wander over to their logs. While they do, I stare at their backs. Many thoughts swirl in my mind.

Solomon squints at me. "Is something bothering you?"

"Well... it's what 'Valac' said about, err, the angels. I dunno. Maybe I'm overthinking what I saw."

Solomon closes his eyes. A moment passes as he concentrates. A tingling at the back of my mind indicates his probing of my memories.

"Mmm." Solomon opens his eyes. He pulls me aside and lowers his voice so the Archangels can't hear. "I think I understand. Valac's comments about the angels and the heroes... you wonder if he was right."

I nod. "Yeah. I mean, he's a demon, so I can't give him too much credence... correct?"

"It's always good to ask questions, Jason. A healthy dose of skepticism never hurt anyone. If you want my opinion, I agree with you that the angels mistreated the imps. I agree that, in a way, the angels 'started' the conflict with the imps. However, there is a matter of justifiable force, wouldn't you agree?"

I cock an eyebrow. "Justifiable force? Explain."

"The angels shoved the imps around. They treated the imps like their inferiors. However, when Satan and his cronies gained incredible power from Leviathan, they didn't negotiate for reparations. Instead, the newly-arisen demons turned to the path of violence. They slew a hundred Cherubs, and Satan's actions directly led to the death of Samael. Wouldn't you agree that was far worse than what the angels did?"

Ten seconds pass. Twenty. Thirty.

I lower my gaze and carefully consider Solomon's words.

Angels created the dragons. Then, they forced a war with their creations. The same thing happened again with the Titans. It wasn't clear who initiated each conflict, but one thing always stayed true. The angels created a new species to be their inferiors, and eventually ended up at war with them.

All things considered, Solomon is right. The imps responded to the angels with violence, escalating the conflict. Even so, they were a young species, angry at those who mistreated them. The imps were like juveniles, irrational and uncertain of how to right the wrongs committed against them. Most of the blame lies on Satan's shoulders too, given how he manipulated the rest.

I don't know. The whole issue is too complex for me to analyze. I don't see either side as being in the right, no matter how they try to twist the past to their advantage.

Solomon nods. "Good, good. I hear the doubt in your mind. As one who seeks knowledge, I understand that tough questions have tough answers. Once you factor in the bloodthirsty nature of the demons, you'll come to see that the angels were not the aggressors Valac painted them to be."

I wet my lips. "What about the idea that Heroes are puppets? What did Valac mean by that?"

"The universe is complex, Jason. When we reach the War in Heaven, everything will make sense to you. I promise."

"Even what Valac said about Heroes?"

The ancient king sighs. "Heroes are the balancers of nature. We exist to ensure the safety of all life. In our absence, chaos follows. You need only look at the universe's current situation to understand that fact. The demons and Volgrim rule the universe, now. They wiped out the angels and enslaved our species. With that in mind, you can understand how important Heroes are to maintaining the balance of power."

Not wanting to argue anymore, I nod wearily. "Sure. That makes sense."

Solomon pats my back. "Good, good. If you have other questions, we can continue this discussion later."

Both of us turn to face the Archangels. Michael frowns at me. "Thy vision seems to have disturbed thee. Dost thee requireth a break before we continue?"

"No. I'm... I'm fine. The demon was persuasive, but it's easy to twist the truth around as needed. I'll stop thinking about Valac's words eventually."

Raphael nods. An uneasy look appears in his eyes, though I can't be sure if it's only my imagination. "We must return to the visions, then. Soon, we'll arrive at the War in Heaven."

I cross my arms. "I've heard it referenced many times. What's so important about that war, specifically?"

Gabriel rubs his palms together in a circular motion. "There were only three instances of full-scale war between angels and demons. The first was when the demons launched their initial assault to recover their brothers in Heaven. The second was the War in Heaven, a cataclysmic event that destroyed the balance of power."

"And the third?"

Raphael answers. "The final battle was one which wiped out the remainder of my people at the end of the Energy Wars. While the humans engaged in battle with the Volgrim, the demons launched an attack against us. We fought valiantly, but Satan stood strong at the apex of his power. We perished."

Solomon closes his eyes. "Not much more to say than that, I'm afraid."

A cloud of sorrow hangs over the Archangels. Each one stares into the fire as their thoughts swirl around like a hurricane, dwelling on those they've lost and those they'll never see again.

I can't begin to imagine the weight of their losses.

Solomon ignores the crippling depression bubbling within each Archangel. "Well, Jason, based on your memories, that vision you saw was the correct series of events. Valac slew four Titans in under a minute, and thanks to the power of their souls, he began to thirst for more. The bit at the end was the only embellishment, so as long as you ignore that, you're nearly caught up on the important history."

"What else happened?"

"Very little worth mentioning. Over the next hundred and twenty years, Lucifer bred dozens of broodmothers, which spawned thousands of imps. The initial experiments created several demon variants, and a few rose through the ranks to become quite powerful. Agares and Vepar, for instance, increased their abilities thanks to Lucifer's magic."

"You mean Leviathan's, right?"

"Of course. Beyond Lucifer's work and Valac's psychopathic murder-spree, the demons kept to the shadows and focused on improving their underground cave network."

Solomon begins to form magic signs with his hands, but pauses.

"Hmm. Before I send you off, I should double-check for any... irregularities. We don't want a repeat of last time."

"Yeah, let's be a little more cautious for this jump."

Recommended Listening

CLANG.

CLANG.

CLANG.

The sound of metal smashing against metal echoes inside Camael's forge. For the first time in Solomon's visions, I appear in her mind and gaze upon her handiwork as she slams a hammer against a red-hot sword.

Camael pounds and flips the sword, folding and heating it over and over. Despite the time and effort, not a drop of sweat appears on her brow. The several-hundred-degree temperature in the room barely affects her as she focuses entirely on her task at hand.

The ultimate weapon.

Camael's thoughts bubble in her mind, allowing me to hear what she's thinking.

My visions grow darker, night after night: torture and pain, sadness, and agony. Short have the days become. Long has it been since I enjoyed a soothing dream. I must finish Excalibur. The fate of Earth depends on it.

CLANG.

CLANG.

CLANG.

Camael's gaze hardens as she plunges the sword into a vat of water.

This sword has a long way to go. The mana it possesses must be enough to obliterate any threat I face, no matter the cost. I pray that my family never learns how dire my dreams have become. They would fall into darkness, just as I have.

Camael lifts Excalibur and gazes at the charcoal-black weapon, scrunching up her face in disgust.

Two paths formerly lay before us, but now only one remains. In recent decades, not once have I dreamt of a peaceful future. I see bodies piled into the sky. Brothers and sisters crying out my name. Terror stretched across the faces of those I love. Is this the fate of my people? Is this the future awaiting us?

Camael snarls viciously and stabs the sword into her forge, reheating it once again.

I cannot bear to tell them. I wish to see Uriel smile and laugh, Uzziel to dance and play, and for all the others to enjoy what time they have left.

Nobody in my family would understand. The demons are our creation. They will rain upon us like fire from the sky. We will stand proud when they come, only to fall back, begging and screaming for mercy.

The demons will show no sympathy to us, nor will we deserve it.

Camael stares stoically into the forge, even as a tear drips down her face. She crushes the voices in her mind and wipes her eye, hardening her resolve again.

If we cannot win, then we will fight with all our might. We will unleash all the power we can muster and put on a display for our descendants. Future beings will write songs about us and tell tales of how the angels stood resolute in the face of an unstoppable enemy. The demons might take our lives, but they will never take our dignity.

After a minute, Camael yanks the sword out and begins pounding it with her hammer.

CLANG.

CLANG.

CLANG.

* * *

Outside, the sound of heavy footsteps catches Camael's attention. She pauses to gaze at the door.

He's arrived.

Her inner voice, sure as ever, announces the appearance of an unknown man. Two seconds later, someone yanks her door open. A thin male angel with sunken eyes waves his hand. "Sister Camael! I bring important news!"

Camael barely looks at him. "Brother Shepherd. You must be referring to the visitors."

"Yes! Two of them, and they- huh? Huh? They've only just arrived at Heaven's entrance. How dids't thee learn of their arrival...?"

"I saw them in my dream last night. Well, since our guests have arrived, I'll head to Elderium."

Shepherd nods. "Aye, Raphael requests thy presence at once. Shall I fly ahead and inform him of thy coming?"

"No need. I'm finished, anyway. This damned sword takes forever to fold..."

Shepherd's eyes follow mine to the weapon held firmly in my left hand. "Ah... Is that thy newest creation, the Shattering Blade? I've heard rumors of late regarding how thou dost keep overworking thyself and passing out in the forge... surely thy body needn't stress over making a simple weapon..."

Camael's gaze hardens. "Worry not about the splinter in my eye, but the stake in thine. I know full well what I am doing. Begone. I will travel to the Temple of Elderium as soon as I can."

The young angel pales. "O-of course, eldest sister. I meant thee no disrespect. I'll take my leave."

The door slams shut, and Shepherd vanishes, leaving Camael alone with her thoughts.

The Archangel stares silently at Excalibur for twenty seconds before plunging it into the water and hanging it on the wall.

"If only the others could understand..."

* * *

Minutes later, Camael soars through the sky toward the Temple of Elderium. She swoops down and lands smoothly on the front steps, dusts her armor off, and heads inside.

Elderium, usually bustling with activity, is dead silent. Hundreds of angels gather inside and stare breathlessly at two wingless newcomers, each of whom stands ten feet tall. Gabriel, of course, towers four feet above them, but compared to the rest of the angels, the humanoids appear quite massive.

Camael walks past her brothers and sisters lining the hall. The crowd of onlookers gently spill open before her as she walks, allowing their eldest sister to head toward the two guests without shoving through the crowd.

"-your pardon, Raphael, but my father is in a rush. Zeus has much work to do, uniting the Titans against this demonic threat. We don't have time to barter and bargain about how you'll assist us. We'll allow you entry into Earth to come and go as you please. That should be enough."

Camael strides up to a large table with a dozen chairs surrounding all of its sides. All of the other Archangels sit quietly around the two visitors, and as Camael takes her seat beside Michael, across from the newcomers, I get a good look at them.

The one who spoke a moment ago is a giant, muscular man, with a clean-shaven face, a circlet of gold around his forehead, and dark black shoulder-length hair. His muscled body gives me the impression he could shatter concrete and bend steel with the slightest effort from his pinky fingers. His clothing is a mixture of ornate gold and white robes, with a silver belt securing everything to his waist.

To his left sits a beautiful woman, with long, poofy black hair, a cute purple dress, and a golden bracelet with several emeralds embedded inside. She smiles at me as I take a seat.

"Camael, Archangel of Divination. It is our pleasure to finally meet you."

Gabriel, seated to the left of the female visitor, coughs into his fist. "Ah, sister, our guests are Hercules, son of Zeus, grandson of Cronus. The lovely flower beside him is his wife, Megara."

Camael nods. "I am aware. I dreamed of thy arrival several nights ago. I am also aware of the situation on Earth."

Raphael, seated to the right of Hercules, smiles politely. "Is that so? That saves us the trouble of explaining."

Michael snaps his fingers to get everyone's attention. "Ahem. Back to the topic at hand. Hercules, if thy father expects us to offer our assistance simply for the right to walk Earth, he is sorely mistaken. Our mana is lower than ever. We're worried enough about the demons attacking us any day now. Uzziel hasn't had any luck creating new servants to breathe mana into our veins. Thy problems were caused by thy unwillingness to cooperate a century ago."

Hercules sighs. "That's where you're wrong, Michael. While Cronus slept soundly, a lone demon tore across Earth and slaughtered over three thousand Titans. My cousin, Loki, died on his wedding day as that single foul creature slew him, his husband, and their entire entourage. I, too, might have died, had I not been too busy to attend. For a single creature to slay a hundred Titans in a single day, its power must dwarf that of the Archangels. We must work together if we are to stop this menace."

Hercules crosses his arms. "Do not concern yourselves with Cronus's lethargic, slothful movements. After my father found out about Cronus's incompetence as a leader, he slew the Titan King in a fit of rage."

Camael blinks in surprise. "Cronus is dead?"

Hercules' expression darkens. "Aye. Never have the Titans had another leader. I, too, felt disturbed when I discovered my father murdered my grandfather. However, given Cronus's inability to protect his fellow Titans and warn us of the demonic threat, many accepted Cronus's death with only a slight bitterness in their mouths. Of what use is a king who cares nothing for his subjects?"

A moment passes. Camael glances around the table at the faces of everyone present. Uriel and Uzziel sit quietly at the end of the table, listening intently. Michael bows his head, likely cursing himself for not defeating Cronus in glorious combat. Gabriel and Raphael shoot looks at each other, trading information through their eyes. They both nod, as if to confirm something between themselves.

Gabriel raps his fingers on the stone table. "Hercules. Megara. If I may counter thy offer, I have a request. I would be willing to offer my people's assistance in eliminating the demons, but thou must first do my people a small favor."

Hercules frowns. "And what would that be?"

"We need mana. The angels are at death's door. If we go any longer without replenishing our reserves, we'll die from atrophy. Even now, we're already spreading ourselves too thinly."

Megara purses her lips. Hercules seems to want to say 'no,' at least until his wife nudges him. "That seems reasonable. If Zeus intends to let bygones be bygones, then I don't see why we can't support our new allies. Our mana restores under sunlight, anyway."

The ten-foot Titan male glances at his wife, annoyance etched on his face. However, when she glares back at him in a do this, or else way, he relents.

"Fine. I'll see what I can do. However, you must understand, we need all the strength we can muster. Nobody has ever seen Valac and lived to tell the tale. We only know his name because of the blood-etched letters he leaves behind after every massacre. It churns my stomach."

"We've seen him," Gabriel says. "He slew a hundred Cherubs in a matter of minutes. I'm not certain what his energy output is, but if he can reap souls..."

"Then he is our number one target," Raphael says, finishing Gabriel's sentence. "Give us mana, Hercules. We will not lead thee astray in our quest to restore balance to the Earth."

The young Titan smiles, but his expression is lethargic and forced. "R-right. Any assistance you can offer would be appreciated. Well, as fun as this meeting has been, I must return at once. My people-"

Hercules stops mid-sentence as Megara grabs his arm. "My love! Surely you will give them energy now? I will too, as a show of good faith."

Hercules grunts. A look of unease passes over his face as he glances at the several hundred angels crowding around the table.

"Worry not," I say. "Thou art our guests. We would never harm thee when thou cometh in peace. The ancient wars are old history. We would gladly wash away the past without a second thought."

Hercules nods, but he appears less than enthusiastic about giving his energy to the angels. "Of... of course. It's just- my grandfather told me many stories about the ancient times."

"Oh? Did he?" Raphael asks. "Surprising, given Cronus had no memory of the Primordial Era. I wouldn't put much stock in his words. I alone am the sole person possessing memories of the Titan and Dragon Wars."

Hercules frowns. "Hm. Well, Cronus was awfully drunk when he spoke about the ancient times..."

Uriel breaks her silence with a chuckle. "Heh, it sounds like thy grandfather saw a few ghosts in his old age."

"Hah. You're not wrong..."

Hercules trails off. A few seconds pass. He coughs, then motions with his hands, and lightly touches Raphael's arm.

"There. I've given you about half of my energy. Megara?"

The Titaness nods, motions with her hands, and gently grasps Gabriel's shoulder. The massive Archangel blushes at her touch, revealing a hint of the indecent thoughts in his mind.

"Oh, my. Your arms are nearly as big as my husband's," Megara says, winking at him.

Gabriel quickly looks away. "Ah, they do call me the Archangel of Power."

Hercules rolls his eyes. "Stop flirting with our hosts, Meg. You're embarrassing me."

"Your jealousy is showing again," Megara replies with a smirk.

A few minutes later, Uzziel and Uriel leave with the Titans to show them to Heaven's Gate. The rest of the Archangels stay behind at the table to discuss a few remaining matters.

"I don't trust those Titans," Michael says, surprising nobody. "They're too hesitant to give us energy. They can regenerate their mana within a day, yet they didn't think to offer it to us immediately? Surely I'm not the only one who sees through their lies."

"Michael..." Camael mutters. "I acknowledge thy concern, but the Titans are in a dire position. This news might surprise thee, but fewer than thirty thousand of them remain. Their numbers have dwindled significantly since the ancient wars. They're in no position to backstab us."

"Thirty thousand?" Gabriel raises an eyebrow. "Unthinkable. Their numbers once dwarfed ours. What changed?"

"Infighting. Blood battles. Violent sport. The Titans spend most of their time sleeping or fighting one another for territory. I think Valac's appearance has sent a lightning bolt of fear through them. Before, they knew Cronus would step in if their bloodthirsty ways threatened their survival. Now, with him gone and Zeus in command, this skinless demon is their worst nightmare."

Camael goes quiet for a moment.

When she speaks again, her voice wavers. "I... I have seen a vision recently..."

Gabriel nods. A look of trepidation appears in his eyes. "And?"

The Archangel of Divination taps her lip and gazes into Gabriel's eyes for several long moments.

"According to my foresight, if we do not help the Titans, they will perish. Our deaths will follow. Saving them is the only course of action that will ensure our survival."

Gabriel exhales. "Ah. 'Tis fortunate that thy visions are here to guide us, sister."

Michael sighs. "If Camael's visions say we must help the Titans, then so we will. Far be it for me to stand against the architect of destiny."

The Archangel of Courage rises to his feet. "Brothers. Sisters. I take my leave."

Michael flaps his wings and departs. The other angels in the temple begin plodding away too, now that the formalities are over.

Raphael strokes his beard. "Beloved sister, is something the matter? Thy expression could wilt the fairest rose. Long has it been since I saw thee languishing in such pain."

Camael stiffens. Her body tenses up as she notices Raphael's wizened eyes evaluating her countenance.

"I haven't slept well as of late. Please excuse me, Raphael. I must return to my forge."

"Very well. Peace be upon thee, little sister."

Raphael tilts his head ever so slightly. Camael rises and heads toward the door, leaving her brothers behind.

Her thoughts are a torrent of anguish.

I lied to everyone. To my brothers. My sisters. They believe me when I say that helping the Titans will save us... but no such future awaits. We can only delay the inevitable. How am I to tell them? I cannot. They mustn't know. Hope is the only thing we have left. Without it, we will fall into despair.

Camael's metal greaves scrape against her armor as she saunters toward Elderium's entrance. With a mighty flap of her wings, she soars into the sky to return to her forge.

Excalibur. I must complete it. It alone has the might to extinguish the demonic menace forever.

Somehow, despite the sincerity of her inner voice, I doubt her words.

Excalibur won't save them. The Archangel of Divination alone bears the burden of knowing what will happen to her people... and she cannot stop it.

Fate is inevitable.

Part 104: The Ice Queen

"Satan! Come quickly. We're under attack!"

I materialize inside Satan's mind as he turns to face a young Demon Lord. Despite the fellow's low rank, his appearance is surprisingly fearsome, with hawk-like eyes, a slender, muscular build, and war-paint splotched all over his body. He wears bones all over his body, as a necklace, as a belt, and even just for decoration on his arms. The bare-chested fellow looks like he could wrestle a bear and win.

Satan's heart starts beating faster. "What?! By whom? Valac?"

"No. The attackers are three women and a man: two winged and wingless angels. They wiped out a platoon of grunts in seconds. We need your help! Lucifer showed up before I left, but she can't hold them off forever."

Satan nods. "Alright. Which exit leads to the enemy?"

"Red River. I don't think the enemy spotted our camouflage, but-"

Satan interrupts. "Find Agares. I'll head to the battle now. Move it, Artorias!"

The young demon, Artorias, nods. He dashes away and yells over his shoulder, "I'll return the moment I get a chance!"

Satan ignores him. Immediately, the leader of the demons barrels forward. His eight Vectors reach out, grabbing walls of the underground cave system to yank him ahead forcefully. Several injured demons run toward him, screaming and crying as blood spills from their bodies — Satan vaults over their heads, using his vectors to augment his agility in the cramped hallway.

After a hundred years, the demon living space has become quite impressive. The smoothed earthen surfaces remind me of the Labyrinth. Torches line the walls every thirty feet or so, providing illumination wherever Satan runs. The demon leader takes a left, a right, another right... I grow more and more confused about the shape of the underground catacombs the further he travels, but luckily Satan knows his way around.

Soon, the earthen floor slopes upward. Satan races toward an exit blocked by several layers of underbrush. He bursts into the summer daylight, wincing only slightly as the sun's rays pound his face.

Blinking, Satan swivels instinctively toward the sounds of screams and shouts. A hundred demons leap and dodge as two angels soar in the sky above, while two Titans attack from the ground.

Uriel, Uzziel, Hercules, and Megara engage in a surprise attack. Uzziel keeps her distance and focuses on ensnaring demons with vines. Uriel unleashes torrents of fire, water, and earth upon her prey. Hercules and Megara use their fists to punch and tear demons apart. The Titan male uses his incredible strength to smash one demon's head into bits with a single punch, while his wife wields a kunai in each hand. A scyther slashes at her with its bladed arms, but she stops the blade and uses the demon's momentum against him. She knocks him to the side and sends him sprawling forward, then plunges her knife deep into his heart.

Satan pounces from the underbrush. "You ugly chickens! Attacking while the boss ain't here! I'll rip you apart!"

Hercules pauses his onslaught to wince as something invisible hits his body. Lucifer stands some fifty feet away, the eye on her forehead glowing like a hot coal as she aims it at Hercules. "It's about time, Satan! Get over here and help!"

The Titan holds his hand up to swat the air. He desperately tries to fight off some unknown force attacking him as Lucifer takes a few steps toward the mighty giant.

"Gah! Red-skinned witch! Not this again! Get out of my head!!"

Lucifer flashes a toothy grin. "Pathetic male! You will fall before-"

She doesn't get to finish her sentence. At the last second, Lucifer glances toward the sky, then leaps backward. A boulder the size of a Honda nearly crushes her flat, missing by mere feet.

"Thou art quite the lip-flapper for a dead woman walking!" Uriel yells from above. She motions with her hands, and a laser-thin beam of water shoots from her palm. Lucifer doesn't hesitate. She swivels toward the incoming attack. Her third eye glows for a split-second, and a blast of kinetic energy erupts outward. It slams against the water and melts it into steam, forcing Uriel to dodge to the left. Lucifer's attack sails past the Archangel at nearly the speed of sound, evaporating the clouds above.

Satan sweeps his gaze across the four enemies. Damn. How did the angels find us? What are they doing outside of heaven? Why don't the two big ones have wings? Gah! So many bloody questions! Lucy could probably take one a couple of them at once, but four is too many!

In a split-second, Satan concocts a plan. His Vectors lash out, tearing apart the ground around him. Eight wads of rock and dirt levitate into the air. He flings two at each target with ridiculous strength.

Uzziel is the first to detect the attack. "Look out!" She dodges to the left, protecting Uriel with her body by summoning a massive wooden shield. Satan's attack bounces off harmlessly.

Megara, her back to Satan, doesn't see the attack coming. Two dirt missiles smash against her neck and spine, jarring her before she can kill another scyther. The impacts fling her forward, past her husband. She slams into the dirt with a painful whump, nearly breaking her neck.

Hercules's superhuman senses alert him to the incoming attack. He swivels around just in time to bat the first projectile out of the air and dodge the second. A look of shock passes over his face when he spots his wife.

"Megara!"

With the Archangels momentarily distracted, Megara down for the count, and Hercules' attention firmly on me, Lucifer seizes the initiative. Her third eye lasers onto Uriel.

The Archangel screams in pain. One of Lucifer's unseen attacks hits her. Uriel loses her concentration and stops flapping her wings. She falls from the sky while clutching her head, plummeting toward the ground at frightening speeds.

"Ahh! Uriel, no!" Uzziel dives toward her sister, motioning with her hands to quickly create a surface of soft, dense grass below. She barely manages to grab Uriel's hand and slow her descent a little, but both Archangels crash into the grass, landing atop each other.

With only Hercules still a threat, Satan presses his vectors against the ground and pounces toward the Titan. "You killed my grunts, shithead! Nobody hurts my boys, but ME!!"

The Devil lands beside Hercules and unleashes a brutal attack. Hercules, having never fought someone with Vectors before, gets battered and bashed from left to right as Satan's invisible fists turn him into a leaf trapped within a hurricane. The Titan holds his arms up to protect his face, but the rest of his body lies vulnerable and exposed. Satan grins sadistically while aiming for the Titan's kidneys, groin, and gut. He knocks the wind out of Hercules and trips him, then grabs the Titan's shirt with a vector and slams him into the dirt.

Hercules gasps for breath as Satan pauses his attack.

"Hm hm hm..." Satan chuckles. "What a chump. Dunno what sort of ugly fuckin' angel you are, but I ain't had a less satisfying fight in my entire life, pal."

Tears roll from Hercules' eyes as he creaks them open to stare at his wife, lying motionless beside him. "M...Meg...ara..."

Satan eyes the Titaness for a moment.

Then he attacks.

One of Satan's vectors lashes out and pulverizes Megara's skull. He crushes her head flat, spraying blood and gore in every direction.

"You killed my boys. Now, I return the favor."

Shock washes across Hercules' face. He opens his mouth to say something, but no sounds escape. His lips move, but he can't bring himself to speak.

Lucifer glares at Satan. "Kill him! Why are you hesitating?! The fight isn't over!"

Satan sighs. "Haah. Fine. I came all this way and won the fight all by myself. It seems you broads can't do anything without me."

One of Satan's vectors rears back to strike.

Hercules' entire body shakes. Veins bulge in his forehead. The young Titan's teeth gnash together as incredible rage boils in his stomach.

"You... you killed... my..."

Satan doesn't hesitate. His Vector lashes out to strike Hercules's head with the same force that killed Megara in one blow. Instead, it bounces off an invisible barrier surrounding the Titan's body.

Dread floods through Satan's body. Hercules' rage explodes, sending swarms of mana exploding from every pore. His eyes begin to glow pure white, and his broken ribs rapidly heal themselves.

Every hair on Satan's skin stands on end. Danger! Danger!

"YOU... KILLED... MEGARAAA!!"

The Titan vanishes. One moment he's lying on the ground, and in the next, he appears behind Satan, moving far too fast for the Devil's eyes to follow.

Hercules swings a fist toward the back of Satan's head.

His breath catches. DEATH!

Every bone in Satan's body screams in fright.

Before Hercules' fist connects, the Devil's Vectors bat his attack away, allowing only an icy whoosh of air to blow against his back. The invisible claws yank Satan to the left an instant later, pulling him out of Hercules' range.

He follows.

Each Vector has a mind of its own. They move independently of Satan's thoughts, deflecting attacks and parrying where possible, their movements a blur. Fear boils in Satan's stomach as the Titan roars angrily while kicking, punching, and battering his invisible limbs aside. Hercules's movements are erratic, moving far too quickly for Satan to follow. Each time a Vector rushes in for the killing blow, Hercules ducks it.

Much like when Phoebe fought Satan, the Titan's eyes have somehow enhanced to the point that he can see the changes in the air as the Vectors rush toward him. His glowing eyes dart around, following their movements with eerie precision.

Suddenly, he feints right. Hercules moves to strike my stomach, but pulls back and smashes a rock with his foot. The fist-sized mass explodes like a grenade, sending shards of stone toward Satan in a cone.

SHIK! SHIK!

Two shards tear through the Devil's defenses. They rip through his liver and neck, tearing holes and spraying blood everywhere.

Satan involuntarily gasps, but that only makes blood discharge through the newly-opened hole in his throat. The Devil trips on a twig and falls on his back, jarring his spine. He gasps wordlessly while clutching at his neck, even as Hercules appears above him, fist raised.

"DIE!"

Satan struggles to dodge, but his movements are like those of a snail compared to the cheetah before him.

It's over, Satan thinks to himself in the milliseconds before Hercules final blow connects.

Hercules jerks his gaze to the side at the last instant. "What?!"

Five icy projectiles smash against him. They knock the Titan away, sending him careening across the plains. He tumbles, twists, and turns as his body spins across the ground.

"Oh my gosh! Are you okay, Emperor Satan?!"

A woman speaks. I turn my head to look at her.

The midday sun shines against her aquamarine hair. The demoness, one I've never seen before, evaluates my condition instantly. Her crimson eyes scan the wounds in my chest and throat. Based on her lacy blue lingerie and tail twitching nervously behind her, I assume she's a succubus, like Belial. I can't help but stare at the dozens of white tattoo lines stretching across her blood-red body, forming all manner of intricate patterns.

Satan raises a hand and gurgles in his throat. Whatever he's trying to say, he can't get it out.

"Don't worry; reinforcements have arrived!" The woman says, worry in her voice. She quickly flicks her gaze back. "Agares! Satan is wounded! Help me kill his attacker!"

The demoness continues without me. A flash of green zips past as Agares, now in his lizard-form, pounces after her. "Come on, Nerissa! Nobody hurts the boss on my watch!"

I roll my head to the left and watch silently as both join forces with Lucifer, encircling Hercules. Other grunts from the catacombs reinforce them. Hercules quickly jumps to his feet and looks around. Soon, despite his rage, he takes a hesitant step backward, realizing the demons have surrounded him.

"That's enough!"

Uzziel flaps her wings. She rises out of the grass while holding Uriel. Ordinarily, Uzziel is one to smile pleasantly, but this time an agonized expression of rage sears itself into every inch of her face. Wrinkles appear on her forehead as she grinds her teeth together.

"Long have I tried to bridge the world of demons and angels. If thou dost intend to fight, SO BE IT! I'll end this conflict here!"

The Archangel uses her free hand to form several magical signs. Megara's headless body sucks underground. Ten cactuses pop up and surround Hercules. A moment later, he yelps in surprise as the ground swallows him as well.

The spiked plants explode. A thousand barbs fly in every direction, catching the demon reinforcements off-guard. Nerissa motions with her hands to materialize a wall of ice, shielding herself and nearby demons from Uzziel's attack. The others are not so lucky. Howls of agony pierce the air. Several grunts grab their bodies in various places as the barbs impale them. They stumble back, unable to stand. "Ahh!!"

Agares coils his legs and eyes the rapidly levitating Archangel. "Nerissa! Platform!"

The succubus nods. She aims her palm beneath Uzziel. Ice blasts out, forming a pillar twenty feet tall. Agares leaps at it, plants a foot on top, and pounces at the Archangel above.

Uzziel spots him coming. Forming another hand sign, she summons a wall of vines and flings it at the demon racing toward her. Agares tries to block but fails. The vines wrap around him like a net and yank him to Earth, smashing him against the grass with terrific force.

Lucifer aims her eye at Uzziel. She focuses her gaze and sends a wave of energy racing at the Archangel while Nerissa leaps into the air, propelling herself upward with her ice magic.

Uzziel's expression softens as she sweeps her gaze across the two incoming threats.

"No. No more."

With a single motion, Uzziel summons a hardened brown cocoon around herself, one resembling a giant walnut. Nerissa's hand morphs into a blade of ice. She stabs the Archangel's chrysalis at the same moment as Lucifer's attack connects.

The cocoon explodes into dust, blowing away into the breeze.

When the dust clears, Satan's eyes widen.

Uzziel and Uriel are gone.

Nerissa falls back to the ground below. She shoots ice out, creating a slide below herself. She glides down the ice on her bare feet at blinding speeds, but decelerates at the last instant and hops off smoothly, landing in a crouched position.

"Where did that Archangel go?!"

Lucifer sweeps her forehead's eye in every direction. Up, down, left, and right. "I can't detect their auras. Impossible. I should be able to see her for five miles in any direction. I can't find the wingless ones either."

I choke again, feeling more blood spurt from my throat. "Kuh... nkk..."

Nerissa glances around for a moment, as if waiting for an attack, then runs over to me.

"Lord Satan is in bad shape," Nerissa says to Lucifer. "He needs treatment as soon as possible."

Behind her, Agares tears out of Uzziel's fine net. He jumps to his feet and pivots around, scanning the skies for enemies. Once he realizes the Archangels and Titans have left, he quickly turns his attention to the demon grunts lying around, clutching their infected wounds. The reverse-pointed barbs dig deep into their flesh, refusing to come out, even as a few of the demons tug at them with what strength they have left.

"Everyone needs help! Nerissa, can you heal the wounded?"

Nerissa kneels beside me. "I'm not much of a healer. I'll try flash-freezing Satan's wounds to stop the blood loss, but that's the best I can do."

Nerissa's red and yellow eyes, the same as every other demon's, rise up and down my body. "Lie still, my Emperor. This is going to hurt."

It does. Nerissa's ice sears the veins in my neck shut, burning like lava against my skin. My back arches violently when she ices my liver next.

"Kahh.... nnguuhh...!" Satan growls painfully, still unable to form words.

Nerissa looks past me as I writhe around. "Sister! Where have you been? Two Archangels just attacked! Satan is injured!"

Footsteps pitter-patter to my right. I tilt my head toward the newcomer. Belial strides up and kneels beside me. "Sorry. I was busy frolicking with several men. I came here as quickly as I could. Where is he hurt?"

The two succubi quickly share the relevant information. Satan continues to clutch his injuries, but otherwise keeps his mouth shut so the women can speak. Eventually, Belial forms several magic seals and presses her palm against my chest. My pain eases once my wounds close.

Within twenty seconds, I feel right as rain.

"Guh... thanks, t-toots. You saved me." Satan pulls himself into a sitting position and rubs his head. "Ahh... I guess the chickens got away."

Nerissa turns around. "Lady Lucifer, are our enemies gone? Are they waiting to ambush us?"

Lucifer hisses to herself. "Kss. I don't think they are. Mother fled, along with Uriel and that glowing-eyed man. Satan killed the wingless female, so at least they suffered a loss."

I gesture toward all the dead and injured grunts. "Yeah, but lookit our losses. Cripes. I thought the troops were better trained than this. You ain't doing your job, Lucy!"

"Don't try to pin today's failure on me, you insipid little shit." Lucifer balks at my words as I climb to my feet. "Nobody expected an ambush from the skies! Especially not from Titans and angels!"

Satan raises an eyebrow. "What'd you say? Titans? The hell are those?"

Lucifer pales. She jerks her head away, trying to avoid Satan's burning gaze. "Kss. Never mind."

"You know something." Satan takes a step toward her, pushing Nerissa aside. "Tell me. What do you mean by 'Titans'?"

Lucifer bristles.

She relents after a moment.

"Fine. Since I slipped up, I might as well tell you. I spotted several large creatures roaming a nearby forest some years ago. Giant, wingless angels. Fifty feet tall. I stealthily followed them to their resting place and observed them for several days."

"Yeah? And what'd you find?"

Lucifer's lip quivers. She looks like she wants to scream at me for revealing her secret, but she contains her anger. "They're called Titans. I don't know much about them, but I know they aren't angels. From what I gathered when I forced one to speak, they don't get along with our former captors. Or, at least, they didn't. It appears that has changed."

"No shit! Why didn't you tell us? Having devil-damned giants walking around is worth a mention."

Lucifer sneers at me. "I don't tell you everything. I have my reasons."

"Your reasons suck, you dumb broad. Now our soldiers are lying in the grass, waiting for death. Cripes. Got anything else I need to know? Anything that might cost us more lives?"

Lucifer crosses her arms. She glances past me, at Nerissa and Belial. "None worth mentioning."

"Bullshit."

My single curse flares her temper more. "You want to hear something juicy? Very well. Here's a treat. I happened to meet Valac three years ago. His body was far more powerful than the last time I saw him. He told me about a few things he's been planning. It turns out he's been killing Titans ever since he left."

Satan wets his lips. "Valac, huh? You don't say. If he's murdering the giants, that might be why they're working with the angels now, but they weren't before. Damn. All he does is stir up trouble. That worthless, bony piece of shit..."

"There's more. Valac is planning to overthrow you and take over as leader of the demons." Lucifer flashes one of her signature, toothy grins. "I don't see a way for you to beat him."

Satan's heart bubbles angrily. He takes a step toward her. "What a surprise. You and Valac are too close for my liking."

Lucifer doesn't back away. "What's wrong? Are you going to fight me? Maybe you'll use that special soul magic of yours. You can force me to lose. That's the sort of thing a pathetic manipulator like you would try."

Several moments pass. Belial and Nerissa watch silently as two of the top demons stare each other down. With their lackluster fighting power, they haven't a chance of stepping in to stop the conflict.

Not that they'd try, even if they could.

"You're lucky I don't like ta' hit broads," Satan says. "Or I'd lay you out."

"You killed that female Titan. Don't pretend you care about women."

The two continue to glare at each other. Satan breaks away. "Tch. I don't need to fight you. I won the battle when you signed my contract. All you've got is a mouth. It won't ever win a war."

Lucifer pivots on her heel. She growls under her breath, "We'll see about that."

The demoness storms away, leaving Satan with the two succubi. Satan glowers at Lucifer's ass for a moment before turning around to the remaining women. "Belial. Why ain't you healing up the others? I don't need more dead troops."

Belial shakes her head. "There's no need. The thorns are paralytic, not poisonous. They won't kill anyone. The other medics can heal our troops just as well as I can. I healed you, so my job here is done."

A hint of sarcasm enters Satan's voice. "Yeah? So, you popped in here to shake that tush, heal my wounds, and that's it? You're a lazy one, ain'tcha. Not like this dame here-" Satan gestures to Nerissa. "She showed up and saved my life, then nearly took out the Titan herself. That's the kind of go-getter attitude we need."

Nerissa nods cutely. "Yep! Anything for you, Lord Satan!"

Belial sighs. "Sister, can you stop fawning for a few minutes? Remember our discussion last week?"

Nerissa cocks her head. "You mean... how you like having your ear nibbled?"

"No. The other thing."

"Oh! Your sensitive toes?"

Belial groans. "No. It was about our sisters."

While the ladies have their chat, Satan's anger evaporates away. He sighs. "Haah. So, you mean the other succubi? What about them?"

"The men are mistreating us," Belial replies. "Most are gentle, but a few of them have started acting out their more violent urges. There's a lot of pent-up aggression from sitting around uselessly. You need to do something."

"Like what?" Satan asks.

Nerissa raises her hand. "You should set some rules! Tell the men to treat us nicely. We do our best to accommodate them, but there are five of them for every one of us. Can you help us even a little?"

Satan's eye twitches.

"I'll try. Don't expect anything now. Since angels are targeting us, I'm bettin' more'll show up eventually. I've got bigger fish to fry."

Belial smiles. "That will do. I just don't want to see my sisters hurt. Keep up your end of the deal, and I'll always be there to heal you."

"You will anyway," Satan mutters. "You signed my contract, remember?"

The succubi's smile fades. "Right. That. Well, I thank you anyway. If you'll excuse me, I have several friends waiting for me in the Relief Rooms. I left them high and dry."

Satan chuckles. "Hehe. Yeah, I bet you did, doll."

Belial spins on her heel. She turns and walks away, leaving Satan and Nerissa alone.

Satan's mouth coils into a smile. "You know, I really appreciate you savin' me. I don't usually say this, but I saw my life flash before my eyes. That wingless freak nearly took my head off. Dunno what I'd have done without you."

Nerissa blushes. Her tail coils into a knot behind her. "Oh, it was nothing. I'd do anything for you, Lord Satan."

"'Course you would. You can't disobey me."

"No. I don't... I don't mean because of your... uhm... contract."

Nerissa trails off. She reaches up to play with her sky-blue hair.

Satan's eyes travel up and down her body. "You know, I make it a policy not to fraternize with women. I get offers constantly, but it seems wrong."

Nerissa bats her eyes. "Wrong? How so?"

"Well. I've got everyone under my contract, see. I make imps sign as soon as they whelp. The problem is, I don't trust anyone, especially a woman, with keeping secrets. I also dunno if a dame really likes me, or if she's following my orders 'cause of the contract."

Nerissa takes a step toward me. "And? You're the leader of demons. It wouldn't do for you to be lonely, would it? A man should have a woman by his side."

Satan's eyes narrow. "That's the thing. I don't see what you get outta bein' with me. Prestige? Power? What's your shtick, toots? What are you into?"

"I like whips!"

"Well, duh, but I'm talkin' about your motivations. What makes you tick."

Nerissa's smile widens. "Oh, I just like you a lot! Is there something wrong with that? You're big, and strong, and handsome..."

"Right. That's all a given. What else?"

The succubus pauses. A look of frustration passes over her face. "I... I don't know! What does it matter? Most men would die to have a beauty like me by their side! Do you think I'm ugly or something?"

Satan scoffs. "Pft. Not a chance. I have standards, though. It ain't all about looks. I like a lady who doesn't run her mouth, but can help me out in a pinch. I ain't found one yet."

"My mouth can do all sorts of things."

"I get what you're saying, and that's filthy as sin, babe. However, I wanna see some proof. You need to show me you're willing to do anything for me."

Nerissa's posture slumps. "Oh. Okay. Well, what do you mean?"

Satan rubs his chin. "I'm the leader of demonkind. I don't want a weak little girl by my side. Find a Titan, kill it, and bring me its head. If you do that, I'll let you be my girl."

"Oh my gosh! That's all?!" Nerissa's attitude brightens instantly. "So easy! I can do it tomorrow- no, today! Just give me a few hours!"

Satan frowns. "You're awfully eager, toots. I like that attitude, but there's no need to rush. This battle has shown me that I need more muscle in the ranks. We need to hit the angels and save my friends. I'd rather you stick around for that. If you get killed by a Titan, it'll be one less competent fighter."

Satan turns to face the battlefield. Agares and several dozen reinforcements slowly help the injured to their feet. Satan's eyes swivel around until he spots a nearby bloody patch on the ground.

The place where he executed Megara.

"We did good work today, but the fight ain't over. That Titan fellow wasn't a chump. He had spirit. I can't imagine he'll leave us alone for long. Stick around with me, and-"

Satan returns his gaze to Nerissa. However, the succubus is gone. Only a stream of ice leading into the distance betrays where she went.

Satan's mood sours. Bloody devils. You try to talk to a dame for one minute, and she runs away. Guess the pressure was too much.

He shakes his head and groans. "Stupid, cowardly woman. Knew I shouldn't have gotten my hopes up. Yo! Agares! Lemme help you out. We need to get these soldiers underground."

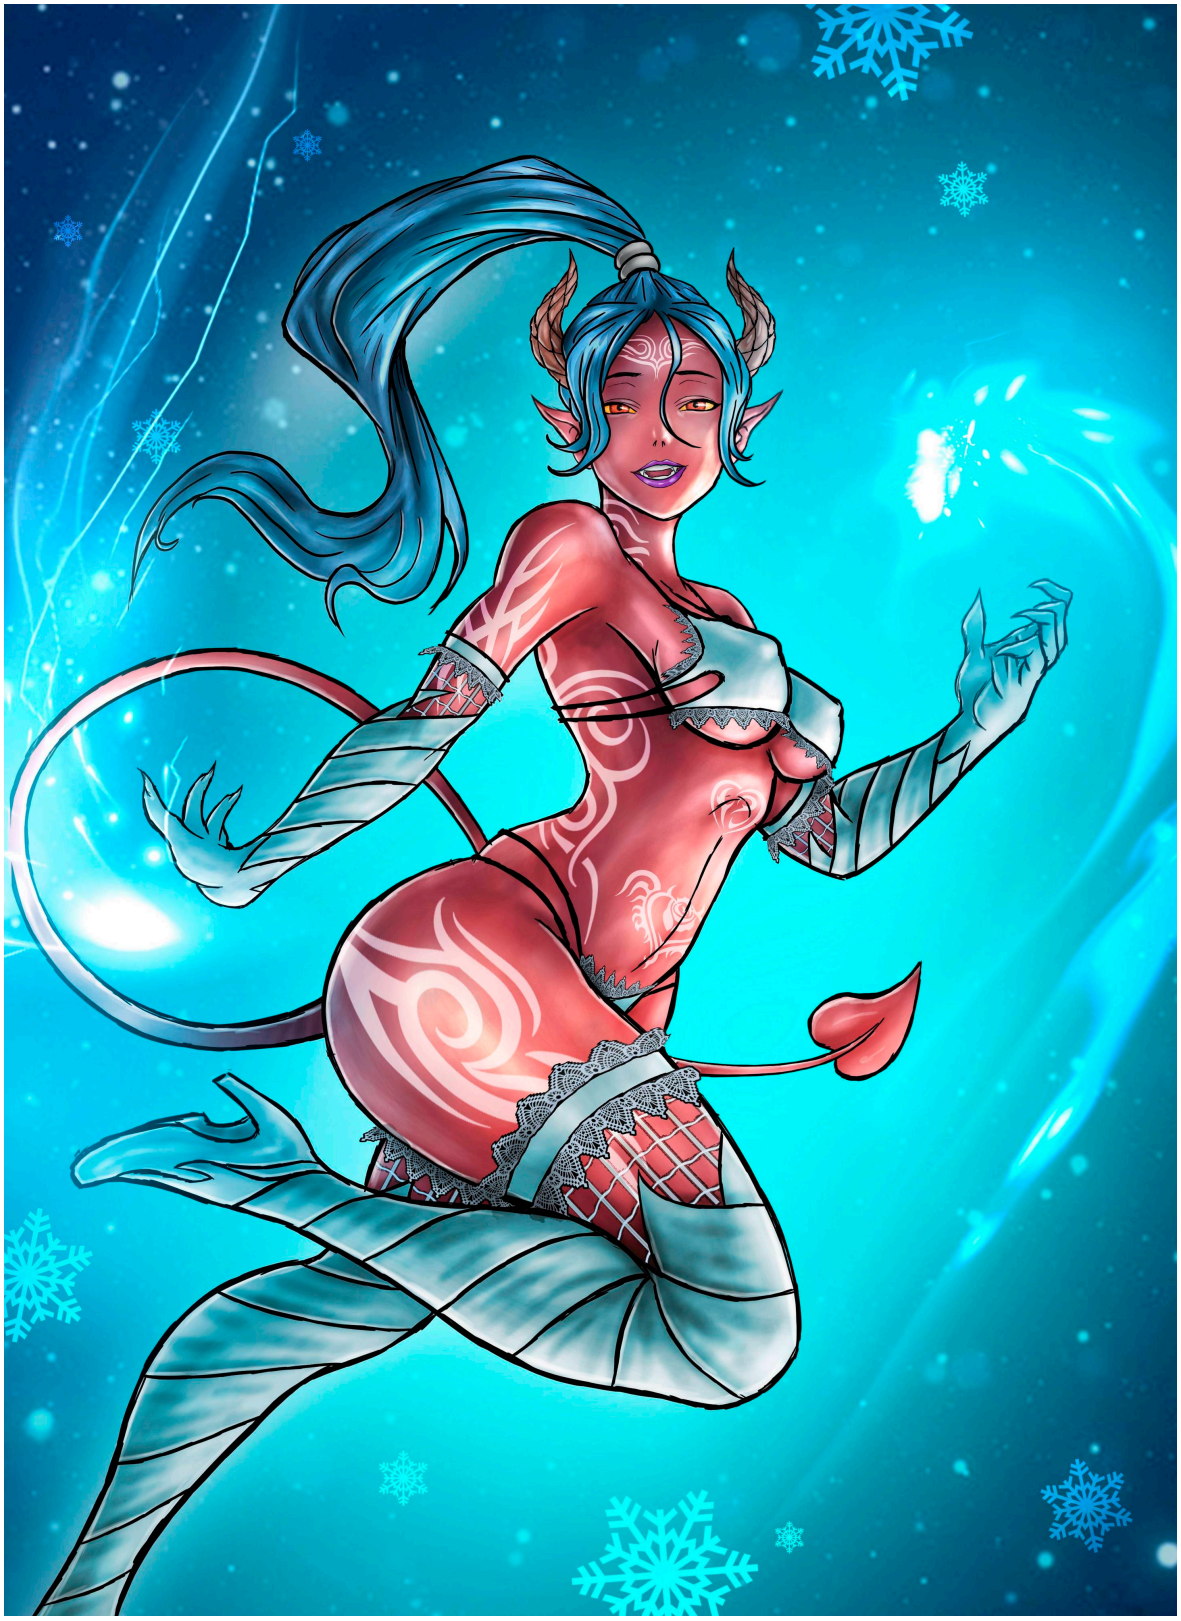
Satan ignores Nerissa's abrupt departure and heads toward the injured demons.

I, on the other hand, wonder to myself where she went. I also question what happened to Uzziel, Uriel, and Hercules.

Well, the visions are nowhere near complete. I'll have to wait and see.

Author note:

This is Nerissa



Part 105: Uzziel's Lament

I appear inside of Uzziel's body once again, and lightly tap Uriel's unconscious face as she rests in my lap. "Uriel... wake up, sister. Please."

Uriel mumbles something incoherent. "Nnn- mngh..."

Lifting my head, I scan my surroundings. Several dozen naked Titans surround me, each one twenty-five to fifty feet tall. Hercules is the only one wearing clothes, and by far the shortest of them all. He sits on a stump with his palms pressed together, his chin lightly resting on the tips of his fingers. His posture is that of someone praying, but his eyes are wide open, fixated on the headless body lying before him. Megara's corpse lies beneath a white sheet, light blood stains spilling through its top.

"Your sister might not move for a while," The Titan says emotionlessly, his voice completely monotone. "That she-devil hit our minds with horrific images. It's a miracle I didn't fall unconscious too. Yes. A miracle. That's what it was."

Hercules never takes his eyes off Megara. One of his shorter comrades, a brown-haired Titan with a shaven face standing twenty-five feet tall, kneels beside him and rests a giant hand against his back.

"Megara will stay with us in our hearts, brother. Know that we are here for you, for anything you need."

"Can you bring my wife back, Moros? No? Then it doesn't matter. There's nothing you can give me that will ease the agony in my chest, the burning in my blood. For three hundred years, Megara stood by my side. I cannot imagine another taking her place. She was my first, my all, my everything."

Moros pulls his hand away. "Sorry, cousin. I cannot fathom your pain. That was rude of me."

Hercules lowers his hands. He shakes his head slowly. "No. Don't blame yourself. Blame the demons. They killed Megara. Their leader, Satan, did. I'll never forget the look of joy on his face when he... when he..."

Hercules pauses. He chokes raw emotion back in his throat, then lifts his gaze slightly to look at me.

"Why did you retreat, Uzziel? I felt it. The ancient power of the Titans exploded inside my heart. I was about to kill all of them."

I blink twice. "Exactly for that reason. I'm sorry, child of the Earth. I was thy eye in the sky, but I failed to protect Megara. If thou hads't unleashed thy power during thy moment of utmost grief, verily, thou would have perished. The demons outnumbered thee."

Hercules' gaze hardens. "Do you think dying would have troubled me? Megara is gone. Those red-skinned bastards took the one person I loved most in this world from me. I care not for my life, not anymore. No matter what it takes, I will hunt her killer down. I will crush him into dust."

The Titan clenches his hand into a fist. He squeezes it with such force that his joints pop.

I quietly brush my fingers through Uriel's hair, soothing her as best as I can. Her body twitches. Her eyes press shut forcefully, leaking a few tears out. She appears to be enduring a terrible nightmare.

"Revenge... revenge is not the way, young one. I know what it means to lose someone precious. The demons forced my beloved brother to attack us. He killed himself to protect us, yet I feel the weight of his death upon my shoulders. 'Twas I who killed Samael. I may not have plunged a blade into his chest, but my negligence resulted in his death. I can never change the past. I cannot bring him back."

Uzziel shivers.

"For a moment... during the fight... I felt a deep hatred in my chest. Every fiber of my being screamed out in rage. I wanted nothing more than to kill Satan, Lucifer, and all the rest. I could have done it. T'would have been a simple matter."

Moros, Hercules' older brother rubs his chin. "If you could, why not? That would have been just."

"Would it? One life for another?" Uzziel closes her eyes. Darkness engulfs my vision. "Violence is a cycle. That is what Raphael has told me. The demons kill Samael; I kill them, and then they kill me. The only way to break such a cycle is by using love."

Hercules scoffs. "Love. You wish for me to forgive my wife's murderer?"

"No. I won't forgive the demons, and neither should thee. However, I also refuse to spread hate. No matter what it takes, I won't repeat the actions of my enemies. I won't incite a war. Hatred begets hatred, and death, death."

Uzziel opens her eyes. She motions with her hands to send a bit of mana into Uriel's body. Uriel stops twitching and steadies her breathing.

"Right now, thy anger and rage are at their most potent. As a Titan, thy killing potential lies in the intensity of thy emotions. That is how I created thy kind, after all. Thy purpose was to help angels slay the ancient dragons. The best way to kill a dragon is via a single, concentrated attack. However, in a sustained battle, one where thy initial attack fails to annihilate the enemy, thy mana will deplete to nothing. In short, the demons would slay thee shortly after thou destroyeth their initial attackers. 'Twould be a futile waste of thy life. Megara would not wish for thee to suffer such a fate."

The Archangel finishes. Hercules exhales quietly through his nose.

A minute of silence follows.

Hercules speaks again; his voice more measured. "I keep reliving the moment that bastard killed her; the look on his face as he smiled gleefully. He butchered a defenseless woman in cold blood. No honor. No mercy. How could you create such cruel creatures?"

Uzziel sighs. "I didn't. I conceived my children to be playful and carefree. Something corrupted them along the way. Perhaps my family's treatment of them was to blame. Perhaps their shift was because of the one who empowered them. Such darkness is present in all beings if given enough soil to sprout."

Several moments pass. Uzziel mutters under her breath, "...Even I am not immune to the corruption of hatred and despair."

Uriel stirs. Her eyes blink open, and the Archangel of Protection coughs weakly. "Ahh... hurts... sister? Is that you?"

"Aye. 'Tis me. Art thou alright, Uriel?" Uzziel says, gently stroking her sister's face.

Compared to her usual strong appearance, seeing Uriel lying in such a vulnerable position sends a pang of worry through my mind. I never pictured her as anything but an Amazonian warrior, yet here she appears at the edge of sanity. Her body lies limp in Uzziel's arms. She tries to shift her body, but her energy seems to diminish the more she moves.

"...Horrible. Samael. He blamed me. He said it was my fault. I couldn't beat him. He kept hurting me. All the others laughed at me... they called me weak..."

Uriel babbles incoherently about her dreams. Uzziel frowns. "The demoness struck thee with a magical attack, causing thee to plummet to the Earth. I barely caught thee in time. Thou must have suffered a terrible nightmare."

"No, no, no..." Uriel whispers. A tear streams down her face. "...It wasn't a dream. I saw Samael. I felt his fists. Every blow was as real as could be. It was awful. I begged him to stop, but he kept hitting me. He hurt me for a day... a month... maybe even a year. He broke every bone, over and over. How could my brother be so cruel? I thought... I thought he loved me..."

Hercules shakes his head slowly. "I know of what she speaks. During the battle, the demoness attacked me. That third eye... it caused me to see visions — terrible hallucinations. I watched my father and family die as my kingdom burned to the ground. It felt like several days passed, but in reality, only a moment did."

Uzziel licks her lips slowly. "In that case, it seems Lucifer possesses magic involving mental manipulation. She inflicts torture on her enemies by attacking their thoughts. How... how awful."

"It wasn't a nightmare. It wasn't. It wasn't..." Uriel babbles to herself, finally gathering enough strength to raise a hand. She tries to wipe a tear off her face, but her arm gives out midway, and she slaps herself instead. "Aaoo..."

Hercules grabs one of his sleeves and rips it off, then tosses it to Uzziel. "Here."

"My thanks," Uzziel replies. She dabs gently at Uriel's face. "You're okay now, beloved sister. The demons are gone. Let me help you up."

I lean forward, prop Uriel up, and wrap my arms around her in a gentle hug. Uriel's sagging body feels lighter than it should. She doesn't pull away or protest, but instead leans her head back against my shoulder.

"Why must we suffer?" Uriel asks. "Why do the demons torture us? Why make me relive my greatest regret?"

Uzziel's eye twitches slightly. "We attacked them, sister. Verily, thou dids't ambush them. Their actions were in self-defense. I cannot in good faith blame them for underhanded tactics... though I also wish thou hadn't remembered such awful images."

Moros, silent until now, speaks up. "These demons fight cruelly. Attacking the mind, whether with magic or words, is the mark of a coward. I would see them all slaughtered and beaten for their evil ways."

"Same, brother," Hercules replies. He glances around at the other Titans, all of them standing or sitting silently without moving. They appear like giant statues, unable to move unless something awakens them. "I should expect that when my father hears news of Megara's passing, he will finish assembling our people and mount a counter-assault against the demons. Above all else, we owe a blood-debt to Satan. We must pay it back in full."

Suddenly, a cry from the forest jolts the hearts of everyone nearby. "Ahhh!!"

Someone's voice, female, shrieks in the distance — another Titan. Everyone present, save for me, leaps to their feet. Hercules spins on his heel, a look of trepidation etched into his face. "What was that?"

"That voice. It sounded like Selene's!" One of the Titans nearby balls his hand into a fist. "Quickly! Everyone to arms! Someone must be attacking her! It has to be the Reaper!"

The sudden change in atmosphere is jarring. The Titans, once silent monoliths looming over my tiny body, transform into unstoppable juggernauts. A fire lights in their hearts as the naked men and women wrap their hands around trees, tearing them from the ground to use as makeshift clubs.

Hercules' snarls viciously. "Damn! I won't lose another family member!" He grabs hold of his robes and tears them off, along with his pants and the rest of his clothes. Going commando, the young Titan leaps atop Moros's shoulder. "Go, brother. I'll help!"

Uzziel's eyes dart all over the place. As the Titans leave, a sudden feeling of dread washes through her heart.

If it's a demon attack, then... I can't stay here alone! I'm exposed! I must protect Uriel!

Uzziel's panic subsides. An eerie calm descends over her as she lays Uriel on the ground and motions with her hands.

"Mother Earth, swallow us whole. I leave this fight to the Titans. We must return home to warn my brothers of the demons' wicked ways."

A sickening sensation of falling envelops me. The ground opens up beneath Uriel and me as I fall backward, screaming internally while the dirt rains against my face to bury me alive.

Uzziel, however, isn't bothered in the slightest. She is the Earthmother. Living inside the Earth is a simple matter for her.

The world goes black, and I feel my mind leave hers once again.

Part 106: The Soul Bridge

A crude stone knife nearly five-feet long rests firmly in my grasp, allowing me to shave the bark off an uprooted tree. I glance to my right and spot four Titanesses silently carving various figures and shapes into their section of the log. All four are naked, but none are particularly attractive. Their fat bodies and giant jowls give them wild, animalistic appearances.

I scrape off the bark, bit by bit. I'm not sure what my host is doing, but I seem to be crafting some sort of spiritual effigy. Something like a gravestone, except it's a tree.

A loud snap makes me flinch. I tilt my head to the right toward the woman at the far end of the tree. The Titaness, a fifty-foot-tall creature with scraggly black hair, grunts. "Damn. I snapped another knife. Selene, pass me a new one."

My host nods. I turn to my left, where ten additional knives sit. Grabbing the closest one, I lightly toss it to the Titaness. "Here, Kuva. Try not to break this one. That's the third already."

Kuva snatches it from the air with surprising dexterity. "I hate this work. The men sit around a campfire and tell stories while we carve the Soul Bridge. I'm no good with my hands."

"None of us like it," A redheaded Titaness across from me says. She pauses her carving for a moment to look at Kuva. "But such is our lot in life. This spiritual guide is for the good of our little sister, Megara. A day of work is well-worth ensuring her well-being as she travels to the ancestral spirits in Valhalla."

Kuva rolls her eyes. "Hah. I don't believe in them, Astarte. You're naive, believing in such tales."

"Kuva!" I gasp at her, my eyes widening. "Don't blaspheme our ancestors! A thousand years of bad luck follow those who do! Why, their specters guide us to this day!"

The black-haired Titaness appears skeptical. "Father claimed the Ancestral Spirits would protect him, but look at what happened. Zeus struck him down in his sleep. Where were the spirits when Cronus needed them most?"

"Kuva's right," a Titaness directly across from her says. She continues to cut into the log without stopping. "Cronus was the most devout of all Titans. For him to die only proves they don't exist. The Soul Bridge is useless."

"You're wrong," I mutter under my breath, returning my attention to shaving off the bark at my end. "Cronus angered the ancestors. They despised his lazy ways, and thus chose Zeus as his successor. How else do you think King Zeus could have overpowered our patriarch so easily?"

Kuva sneers. "With his cunning. Cronus was a lazy old man. I wept tears of joy at the news of his passing. He said nothing when the Clan of the Tiger attacked mine in the dead of night."

My blood begins to boil. I pause my cutting to glare at Kuva. "Don't try to turn this on my clan. Yours refused to repent for their profanity. They shouted vile insults at my brothers. The Ancestral Spirits blessed our strike against you. We suffered no losses, while the filth-talkers among yours perished like seal cubs."

Kuva grips her knife tightly. Her eyes slowly lower to my throat as she considers slitting it. "I won't sit and listen to your poison, Selene. Another word, and I'll..."

"You'll what? Attack me? You can't win. Shame clouds your judgment. Perhaps if you gazed inward, you might see the truth in my words. The Ancestors looked down upon Cronus, as they do upon you. Profaning their name further only proves you've yet to learn your lesson."

"Oy, let's calm things down," Astarte says. She glances from Kuva to me warily, silently hoping neither of us escalates our spat any further. "There's no need to attack each other. We've lost one sister already. To lose another would be-"

"She wasn't my sister," Kuva snarls. "Megara was a pathetic little whelp, barely ten thousand years old. It's no wonder that she died to a bunch of tiny little red rats. I could crush them under my thumb."

"How... how dare you insult the dead!" I jump to my feet. Kuva echoes me, clutching her knife tightly. "I've had enough of you! Leave! I don't want your blasphemous carvings on my sister's Soul Bridge."

Kuva nods. A cruel smile stretches across her face. "I didn't want to be here anyway. Come, Lira. Let us leave these three to cut their logs. Perhaps we should pay them a visit later."

The Titaness sitting across from Kuva swallows nervously. She sits a few feet shorter than her elder sister, and appears less willing to escalate the conflict. Still, she stands up and gently sets her knife down. "Ah, m-maybe. Kuva, there's no need to be rude. We should-"

"Idiot!" Kuva slaps her sister, her strength sending a stiff breeze through the forest. "Now is the time to stand up for your clan! Stop with the indecisiveness."

"Don't bully Lira," Astarte says. "Unlike you, she is not quick to violence. You could learn a few things from her."

Kuva flares her nostrils. She rears her arm back and flings the knife down with all her strength. It stabs into the log with terrific force, splitting it from the top down. A crack rushes through the middle and stops halfway.

"That's what I think about your pathetic clan," Kuva says with a sneer. She grabs Lira's arm and drags her sister away. "Come. We'll leave these simple-minded peasants to their work."

My host, Selene, fumes silently. She clutches her knife tighter and starts to take a step toward Kuva. Something grabs my hand. I glance down to see the final Titaness, a brown-haired female who has stayed silent the whole time.

"Don't. The Ancestral Spirits will punish those blasphemers. Have faith. Damaging a Soul Bridge is a grave insult. I suspect their days are numbered already."

I start to pull away, but pause to consider her words. "Will the Ancestors punish them, Chantis, or will they expect us to do so in their name, as Zeus did to Cronus?"

Chantis shakes her head. "The ways of our ancestors are mysterious. Sit. Help me repair the Soul Bridge. Kuva damaged it greatly. We may have to start over."

I nod and plop down, still glaring at Kuva's back as she lumbers through the forest. I can barely make out the top of her head.

"The nerve of that woman. How dare she act so terribly on Megara's Day of Remembrance."

With my eyes still fixed on Kuva's head, something disturbing happens. She suddenly disappears, as though she had ducked down.

Thud.

In the distance, not far away, the sound of a boulder hitting the ground makes my eye twitch.

Astarte stiffens. "What was that?"

I narrow my eyes. A flock of birds bursts into the air as another massive thud shakes the Earth. "I think Kuva fell over. Maybe Lira did, as well. Strange. They have many undesirable traits, but clumsiness is not among them."

Chantis turns to look in the direction the other two left. "Hm? I wonder."

She clambers to her feet. Motioning with her hands, a film appears over Chantis's body. Her skin becomes transparent within seconds, turning her all but invisible in the waning daylight.

"Hold a moment," Chantis says. A shift of movement in the air reveals her body levitating off the ground. She hovers up until I lose sight of her after a hundred feet.

The sound of a twig snapping echoes from the forest. My stomach tightens.

I know what's coming. The women don't.

Valac. The Grim Reaper. In the previous vision, he attacked them. Since I'm seeing things from their point of view, it won't be long before he strikes.

My host jumps to her feet. "Astarte. Danger. Something's coming."

Astarte nods. She stands up and forms several magic seals. "Forest creatures, I implore you... be my eyes and ears."

Both of us stare breathlessly into the darkness. The fading sunlight provides little illumination under the dense canopy. I'm defenseless, standing in a clearing, naked with no weapons. When Valac appears, the three Titans won't have a chance.

A flash of movement. Something white rushes from the forest cover directly at my neck. Only Selene's reflexes save her, as she jerks to the right at the last second. A sharp pain on my left makes me wince. Something cut me.

Whatever it was, it zips past me too quickly for my eyes to follow. Another disc-like projectile silently rushes out of the forest, aimed at Astarte's neck.

"Look-!"

I try to warn her, but she sees it coming. Astarte bends over backward, allowing the circular object to whiff above her face harmlessly. My eyes track it for a split-second as it slices through the trunk of a tree, passing through the wood like it was air.

The tree falls over behind me, but I quickly turn my attention to the unseen assailant. "Astarte! Someone is trying to decapitate us! Protect your neck!"

Raising my hand, I form magic signs. Multi-colored crystals with the density of diamonds magically envelop my hands, giving me the world's sturdiest gauntlets. Similar crystals appear all across my body, hardening in place to provide me with natural armor.

Astarte dives to the ground and rolls behind me, shaking the planet. "I'm searching the woods. My pets haven't found anyone yet!"

A glance at the ground reveals hundreds of tiny movements near my feet. Rats and mice fan out through the forest, searching for our attacker. Suddenly, a chorus of screeches erupts a hundred feet away as birds fly into the air.

"There!" Astarte points her finger toward the disturbance. "That's-"

A sound like a dart whistling through the air sails past the back of my head. Astarte's voice cuts off mid-sentence. I spin around to gaze in horror as she stumbles backward, her head cleanly separated from the rest of her body.

"Ahhhhh! Astarte!! NOO!!"

Selene's vision goes red as she tries to grab her falling sister. Too late, she turns to see another circular disc sailing toward her neck.

I flinch, waiting for death.

Instead, the disc explodes against my throat, shattering when it impacts Selene's crystalline armor.

Now I understand.

The assailant isn't Valac. It's someone else. Someone who's hurling razor-sharp ice-discs. Perfect for slicing through flesh and bone, but terrible against high-density crystals.

Right on cue, a tiny demoness leaps into view. Her red skin, white tattoos, and blue lingerie identify her as Nerissa. She must have come here to kill Titans, just like Satan requested.

"You're a sturdy one!" Nerissa yells. "But I already killed the other three! You're the only lady left! Hahaha!"

Selene's blood boils. "YOU!! How dare you kill my sister!" A sensation like lava pours across her skin. She spins on her heel and kicks her foot into the dirt, pouncing at Nerissa with terrifying speed.

Nerissa's haughty smile vanishes. "Oh, shit!" She dives to the ground, narrowly avoiding my massive palm as I swipe my arm out and tear several trees from the Earth. They sail through the air and crash into the forest several hundred feet away.

Selene grinds her teeth together as she spins around, trying to find the demoness. "Where are you?! Coward! Only a vile monster attacks from the shadows!!"

All traces of politeness leave Selene as her inner rage continually increases. Every pore on her skin burns with the heat of a volcano. With a horizontal slicing motion, she sweeps the side of her hand out in a karate-chop and levels a dozen other trees.

Biting cold strikes my calf. "Ahh!"

I quickly lower my gaze to spot the demoness below me, darting around with her tiny little body as she pours waves of frigid cold on my feet. Any trace of overconfidence leaves her face as she spirals around, trying desperately to shatter my leg.

Nerissa jumps away when she realizes I've spotted her. However, something invisible grabs and lifts her into the air. She yelps in surprise. "What?!"

I half-expect to see Chantis materialize before me, but instead, her voice comes from the sky. "Selene! I have her with my telekinesis! NOW!"

I nod. My fist flies at the succubus faster than I think possible. I smash Nerissa with every ounce of strength in my body, punching her into the Earth with the force of a falling battleship.

Nerissa hits the dirt with a terrific boom.

Her body explodes into white particles, scattering snow and ice everywhere.

A moment later, agony rips through my spine. Several pointed objects, like knives, lance into my back, hitting the cracks in my armor. "Gahhh!"

"That was a close one!" Nerissa yells. "You almost had me! Too bad that was only an ice clone!"

I spin to face her, but my frozen foot has no feeling left in it. I trip and fall, gasping as she forms a massive ice spear beneath me.

SHIK.

The ten-foot-tall ice pole lances through my stomach. A quick glance to my left shows Nerissa leaping into the air. She blasts ice across my back, widening the pole's base to hold me fast to the ground.

"Hahaha! You're pretty pathetic!" Nerissa says. She lands on my back, motions with her hands, and materializes another spear directly above my heart.

No!!

Selene's voice screams in my mind.

I won't die here! I WON'T!!

Like a bank vault opening to reveal its treasure, something unlocks in Selene's heart. She smashes her fist into the ground and roars like a wild animal. "GROOOOAAARR!!"

The sudden, unexpected movement catches Nerissa off-guard. She slips and falls off my back as I shove myself off the ground, ripping up several tons of dirt stuck to her ice pole along with me.

I sweep around and slap the demoness in midair. This time, when my palm strikes her, the feeling of flesh and blood screaming in pain greets my ears. A wet splat is all I hear as Nerissa goes flying into the forest, tumbling end over end.

"Selene!!"

A masculine voice calls out from the forest several miles away. I spare only a fleeting glance toward the speaker and spot a dozen Titans running toward me, each one a potential reinforcement to help me fight off the lone demoness.

It'll be a few minutes before they can arrive.

Selene's voice bellows in my mind. No! She isn't dead! I've got to find that little wretch and rip her head off!

The Titaness's eyes burn like coals as she swivels around, using the ice-spear through her chest to knock other trees out of her way. If her body is in pain, I can't feel it. Endorphins increase her reflexes and senses to supernatural levels. The darkness of the night appears dramatically brighter with her incredible vision lasering around.

Three ice-discs whiff through the trees, slicing the foliage apart instantly. Selene easily bats them aside. She stomps fifty feet toward their origin point to see Nerissa standing, one arm hanging broken at her side. Nerissa's enraged expression mirror's Selene's as blood rushes from several open wounds on her face, chest, and legs.

"Stupid Titan! My blades can cut through anything! You must have a weakness!"

Selene doesn't reply. She aims her hand at the succubus, and the crystals adhered to her palm blast outward, showering the ground with a hail of darts.

They miss. Nerissa motions with her remaining arm and explodes into a cloud of icy vapor, allowing Selene's attack to hit nothing but air.

A voice squeaks from my shoulder. "AHA! I knew it!" I turn my head just in time to see Nerissa standing, another disc hovering over her palm and spinning like a top.

Nerissa's eyes jerk to the back of my neck. She flings the disc, sending agonizing pain ripping through my mind. My body gives out as she severs my head from my spine. My sense of touch vanishes as the ground rushes at my face.

"Selene, no!"

A voice calls out to me from the sky above. I can't reply. Another ice spear stabs through the back of my neck, bursts through the crystals hardened around my throat, and rips my head from my shoulders.

As the world goes black around me, Selene's mind whispers its last, agonized thought. Sister Astarte... I will join you in Valhalla.

I reappear almost instantly inside Nerissa's mind. She chokes on blood for a moment, then grabs Selene's bedraggled hair. The Titaness's bloody head hangs in her grasp as Nerissa pounces away, scanning the sky warily for the invisible Titaness. She sees nothing.

I'm injured — bad shape. Lord Satan will be disappointed to see me like this! I'll have to ask Belial to heal me before I deliver the heads. Ahh! He only wanted one! What if he's angry that I have four? Maybe I should just bring one?! I don't know! What should I do?

Nerissa grits her teeth. She keeps to the darkness of the forest after snatching Astarte's head, and quickly scans the area, looking for the other two. She finds their decapitated bodies not long after, and soon the tiny little succubus starts lugging four Titan heads behind her as she zooms through the woods, holding all of them by their hair with only one hand.

I find myself surprised at Nerissa's physical strength. She might even have muscles comparable to Belial.

Nerissa leaps from branch to branch, avoiding the ground.

Everyone said I was only fit to be a whore, but I'm better than that. I'm a fighter! Succubi and Incubi aren't only fucktoys for others to relieve themselves. We deserve better! No, that's not right. We need to earn our keep. We can't expect a handout. I have to lead by example and show Lord Satan that we have value; that I have value.

Satisfied that nobody is following her, Nerissa pauses after traveling a few miles. She drops to the forest floor and releases the Titaness heads, then sags against a tree.

With the adrenaline from the fight wearing off, she finally notices the agony ripping through her left arm. Nerissa clutches a rib and winces. "B-broken. Hurts to breathe."

She closes her eyes. That giantess put up more of a fight than the others. I'm lucky I found that exposed part on the back of her neck, or I wouldn't have won. I'm fortunate I survived... if she had hit me any harder, she would have turned my bones into mud.

Nerissa's breathing evens out. She pants quietly for a moment, then finally opens her eyes to stand up.

Her blood turns colder than her ice magic.

Standing before her is a massive demon wearing tattered clothes. His skinless body and face gaze at her without a trace of emotion.

"I would like you to know that I enjoyed your little show. Four Titans dead after you severed their heads, but I cannot let you go."

Valac clutches his lantern with his upper left arm and gazes at me. He appears at least a foot taller than the last time I saw him, and his presence is far more intimidating than before.

Nerissa's breath catches. "V-Valac... but... I didn't hear you... arrive..."

The Grim Reaper's smoldering red eyes gaze into my soul. "As you stand here among this flora, you also live within my soul aura. My presence has expanded to the ends of the Earth; I see all who die and all who give birth. To date, three thousand Titans I have slain, but today you've amused me with the blood you let rain."

Nerissa's heart skips a beat. I can't fight Valac. His power is... it's too incredible! He might be stronger than Satan! How can I escape? I can't! I'm barely in any shape to run!

Valac's eyes lower as he scans my body. I feel creeped out, not because he's looking at me like a man looking at a piece of ass, but because he sees me as a mere lump of flesh. His casual disdain for pleasure comes across without him saying a single word.

"What... what do you want from me?" I ask.

"I came to watch the little bird shiver. Four heads to Satan you plan to deliver. To what purpose, I must ask? To toil for him, would you perform any task?"

I nod hesitantly. "Y-yes. These are for Satan. Are... are you going to kill me?"

Valac shifts his feet. I flinch, expecting an attack, but he only tilts his head questioningly.

"While you have potential, your soul is as weak as a sow's. I crave the power of the Titans, given the energy they endow. Still, for me to visit you, my goal you might deduce; I have decided that for me, you may yet have a use."

Dread creeps into the back of Nerissa's mind. "You... you want to use me? Why?! I'm nobody! I'm just a succubus! A whore! I can't do-"

Valac's hand darts out, too fast for me to react. He grabs me by the throat and slams me against the tree. "Lies, never-ending, they flow from your lips. You have no choice but to help me; you'd better come to grips. Satan's love and trust; that is what you seek. Sadly, under my employ, havoc is what you'll wreak."

Maggots crawl on Valac's bony arms. I try to pull him off, but he's far stronger than me. Slowly, his hand crawls up my neck, then my chin, and soon he clutches my entire face.

"Mmgh!" Nerissa tries to break free, but she can't pull him off.

Valac's voice turns monotone. "Quiet. I'm thinking."

Dizziness overtakes me. My body increases in weight, as a thousand anvils begin to compress my chest.

I can't speak. I can't scream. I can't even breathe!

A bloodshot eye appears in the darkness. The freakish specter shakes and trembles as it approaches me.

"Master Valac, he's the puppet master of the ages. His plans, complicated, come in stages. Resist, cry, and lie in defeat. It makes no difference; to him, you're a tasty treat!"

Something drills into my ear. The piercing agony makes me want to cry, as a creature burrows deeply. I feel it wriggle around and slide through my brain, down my throat, and stop somewhere near my stomach. Terror fills me, but I can't fight back.

"A gift we give, be glad you live. For us, you toil, conflict, you embroil."

The darkness vanishes. Valac retracts his hand, and I lose my footing, falling to the ground.

After a moment, I blink deliriously, only to realize my pain has vanished. I glance at my broken arm and watch as it mends itself, along with the rest of my body.

"I like you a lot, pretty little succubus. Your cute little face makes you quite innocuous. You'd better learn to trick people and tell moving lies. Say a word about me and your sister dies."

Nerissa freezes. "B-Belial? You'll kill her?"

Valac nods. "I will."

"But... but why? She's a demon, just like you! No, more importantly... what did you do to me?! There's... something in my stomach!"

Valac turns his back to me. "Farewell, Nerissa. Speak not a word, not a squeak, not a shout, and rest soundly... knowing you must be my loyal scout."

A soul exits Valac's lantern. It sails through the forest, and he disappears a moment later, teleporting after it.

Nerissa slumps to her knees. He... he let me go...

A voice whispers in her mind. No. Master Valac always watches. Your freedom has passed. Now, you work for him.

Nerissa's spirits sink. She rises slowly and grabs the four Titan heads; two in each hand. The succubus plods into the forest, despair weighing heavily on her heart.

The puppetmaster lays his traps... but how many will fall into them, and what are his goals?

Nerissa doesn't have the answer.

Neither do I.

I reappear inside Satan. The darkness of night stretches out ghoulishly as he stands in the forest, Nerissa by his side. No other demons are around. It appears Nerissa brought him here in secret.

The Devil stares upon Nerissa's haul. "Four Titans. You killed them by yourself?"

Nerissa nods. She smiles, but it seems painfully forced.

"I... I did. I would do... anything for you, Lord Satan."

Satan's nostrils flare. "I'd be lyin' if I said I wasn't impressed. You beat that white-eyed fella, and these ladies too. Judging by the size of their noggins, they must've been... huge."

"Fifty feet tall or so, yes."

Satan nods. "Delicious."

The Devil doesn't move a muscle. Four vectors lash out at astonishing speeds and crush the heads into pulp, spraying Titan blood in every direction.

Nerissa flinches in surprise. "W-what was that? What happened?!"

Satan smirks. "It's one of my abilities. I have to crush the heads and hide the evid-"

He stops mid-sentence. Satan suddenly clutches his chest and breathes hard as a wave of nausea hits him. Mana floods his body, and he blinks away several tears of surprise.

"Nngh, shit, I wasn't ready, that time. Maybe... maybe four at once is too many."

Nerissa frowns. "Huh? What do you mean?"

"Nothing. D-don't worry... about it." Satan picks himself up and mops sweat from his forehead. "Let's just say I've been... improving myself."

Nerissa appears unconvinced. "Okay. If you say so- ah! Do you need help standing? You look woozy, Lord Satan!"

My legs give out, and Nerissa catches me. She helps me lay on the ground, but before she can pull away, I reach out and take her hand.

"Hey. Where do you think you're going? I was worried about you, doll. You left me high and dry."

Nerissa blushes. "I, ah, well... I don't know. Did you think about my request?"

"To be my girl? 'Course I did. I thought about you plenty when I looked everywhere and couldn't find you. Kept thinking it'd be a real shame if I never saw your fine ass again."

Nerissa's eyes widen. "Really?"

Satan pulls the succubus onto his stomach, allowing her to straddle him. "Damn straight. I need someone I can trust. Wouldn't hurt to have a little fun too. You've got a body to die for."

A vector snakes out behind Nerissa and touches her back. She flinches and looks around, trying to find who did it. "What the heck? Was that you?"

"I'm a demon of many talents. Having eight extra arms can come in pretty handy. I'll make you a deal, toots. You promise never to betray me, to always stand by my side, and to do as I say... and I'll take you to a place better than Heaven."

Nerissa's smile falters. She rests a hand on her stomach. "Uh... uhm... just a promise? Why not make me sign one of your... your... contracts?"

I shake my head. "Nah. You put your life on the line for me. You've already proven yourself. Just say 'yes', and we're cool."

Nerissa hesitates.

Three seconds pass. Five. Ten.

"Alright. I promise."

Satan's grin widens. "Perfect. Now that I've got you here riding me, let's move on to the fun part. I'm feeling frisky tonight."

Nerissa leans down, pressing her body against mine. "Anything for you, Lord Satan."

Satan doesn't know, but I do. Nerissa isn't who he thinks she is.

She's a puppet. Trusting her will likely prove to be his undoing.

Part 107: Set In Stone

This time, when I appear before the Archangels, I immediately slump to my ass and cross my legs under me. I sigh heavily. "Ugh. Those last few visions were rough. I might only be an observer to the past, but it feels like I'm really there, you know? I want to help, but I can only observe. It sucks."

I raise my eyes to stare at Gabriel on the left, Raphael across from me, and Michael to my right. All three appear deeply troubled.

"I have similar thoughts every time we return," Gabriel mutters. "Solomon's visions have revealed many facets of demon life I was unaware of until today. I am forced to reconsider all of my past actions while asking myself if I made the right choices."

"They have only strengthened my resolve," Michael retorts. "Seeing that demoness attack the Titan women without any hesitation, she enjoyed the sport of murder too much for my tastes. Killing is only enjoyable when one engages in equal combat."

"Oh?" Solomon's voice lilts. He sits on the ground beside me and pats my back, but keeps his eyes on Michael. "Since when did you approach violence with such nuance? I agree with the general sentiment, but your actions contradict your words."

Raphael rests his hands on his knees and leans forward. "Michael cannot be blamed for temporarily breaking his morality when it came to the demonic menace. Aye, my brother tortured the two little ones for decades on end, and he slaughtered demons whenever he came in contact with them, but he held a personal grudge because they murdered his brother. Nerissa had no reason to despise the Titans."

I scoff. "Hercules and Megara attacked the demons! They ambushed them! Seems like plenty of reason to me."

Michael glares at me. He opens his mouth to reply, but Gabriel raises a palm. "Calm thyself, brother. Like it or not, the Hero has a point. Concede so that we may continue."

The Archangel of Courage closes his mouth and looks away in annoyance. I wonder if he's disappointed, or if he simply doesn't like me? It's hard to tell.

I turn my attention to Raphael and switch the topic. "Speaking of Hercules, those Titans were something else. Why did their sizes vary so much? Cronus was well over a hundred feet tall, but Hercules barely hit ten."

Instead of Raphael, it's Solomon who responds. "Titans grew taller over time. The taller a Titan, the older they were. Cronus was hardly the biggest among them, given Earth's gravity presented a limiting factor. A few of his forebearers were mountain and planet-sized."

"What about their powers? How did those work?"

Solomon scrunches up his face. "Mmm. Titan abilities were tied to their emotions, particularly grief and rage. Additionally, Titans grew more powerful over time based on how many battles they engaged in."

"Correct," Raphael replies. "Uzziel created the Titans to escalate their power against the dragons. The more Titans the dragons killed, the hotter the rage of those left behind. The problem lay in that after we defeated Jörmungandr, we had to fight the Titans ourselves. The final war nearly destroyed us. 'Twas fortunate that I managed to end the bloodshed."

"Maybe," I reply. "But their basic nature didn't change. Zeus killed his father. Titans whittled each other down from millions to only tens of thousands. Hell, I'm not even sure how Zeus managed to kill Cronus. If they grew more powerful over time, how could a young Titan defeat his senior?"

Gabriel raises his hand. "Titans were far from invincible. They were flesh and blood, much like us, the demons, and the humans, too. Zeus murdered Cronus in his sleep. 'Twas a shocking revelation. I never expected such a thing might happen in all my years. A Titan with his defenses up was like an unbreakable wall, but when their guard relaxed, they were as vulnerable as anyone else."

"Zeus sounds like a backstabber. What kind of jackass murders his father in his sleep?"

"I won't argue in favor of his morality," Gabriel replies. "I respected Cronus. Knowing that he died without a fair fight made it difficult for me to trust his successor. However, I believe that eventually, Zeus proved himself as best as he could. 'Twas a difficult era for all involved."

Crossing my arms, I look at Raphael. "So, Camael's visions of darkness. Did you three know about them?"

Raphael bows his head. "Nay. To think our sister was hiding such overwhelming fear... she wanted nothing but for us to enjoy what little peace and happiness we had left. I remember that prior to the War in Heaven, our lives were bliss compared to what came after. Tsk. Camael always did keep her feelings close to her chest..."

"I'm continually surprised by how little we knew even about ourselves," Gabriel adds. "Let alone the demons. Seeing the past through the lens of Solomon's Crown has allowed me to reflect without the blurriness of faded memories clouding my mind. Perhaps I was so caught up in my grief over Samael's death that I failed to notice how hard Uzziel took it."

I raise an eyebrow. "What do you mean? She seemed to get over him pretty quickly."

"Nay," Michael replies. "I never knew that Uzziel exploded in rage during her battle against Satan and Lucifer. Our sister never displayed a single negative emotion in all the time we lived together."

"Nor did she fight during the Dragon and Titan Wars," Raphael mutters. "Always the gentle one, Uzziel continually attempted to bring peace between our people and the Dragons, Titans, and Demons. 'Twas her kindness that ended the Titan War, though she was forced to forget the act."

For some reason, Solomon rolls his eyes at Raphael's words. I decide not to ask why.

"She always tried to take the path of pacifism," I say. "And none of you listened to her. Had you done so, the demons might not have spiraled out of control. It was probably Uriel who decided to ambush the demons at that time. Megara's death is mostly on her hands."

"You're correct," Solomon says, confirming my suspicions. "Uriel convinced Hercules and Megara to attack the demons when they spotted them from the skies. Uzziel didn't want to help... but she lacked a backbone when standing up to her brothers and sisters."

Michael licks his lips. "I disagree. Uzziel softened us enough that when the demons attacked, we weren't ready. Her pacifism opened us up to attack from all sides. In many ways, she was a lot like this young Hero: afraid to take a stand for her family, even if her enemies were vile monsters."

"Michael!" Gabriel snaps at his brother. "Speak no ill of the departed."

"I meant no offense. I loved Uzziel as much as thee, brother. However, surely, thou must admit that her unwillingness to fight brought no end to our grief. Her powers were mighty enough that she could have helped us win the War in Heaven had she used her full might."

A moment of silence falls across the group.

Gabriel closes his eyes. When he speaks again, his voice is noticeably lower.

"Michael. Consider thyself fortunate that thy life had ended by the time of our Final Stand, at the end of the Energy Wars. When Satan and a billion demons flooded into Heaven to exterminate our people... on that day... on that day... Uzziel..."

Gabriel's voice becomes noticeably quieter than before. He forces himself to suppress his emotions.

"I... I lay dying, blood pouring from my chest. As Satan walked toward me, I heard the screams and cries of my brothers and sisters. Satan had already slain Raphael... but not me. He saved me for last."

The air goes still around the campfire.

"Satan chuckled deep in his throat. His final victory was at hand, his revenge complete. He gloated while knowing I was powerless to stop him. With my energy vanishing into the ether, all I could do was gasp for breath as his specter dwarfed me."

"But then, before he landed the killing blow... I saw it. Uzziel's face."

"The demons ignored Uzziel, instead deciding to kill the others around her. Satan knew she was a pacifist. He knew she wouldn't fight back. He wanted her alive for some sick fantasy."

Gabriel's voice turns to steel.

"That was his mistake."

"Uzziel exploded in rage. Millions of years of anguish poured from her body all at once. As the life force ebbed from my soul, I watched as every part of her mind shattered. Our sister broke completely, unable to control the rage, hatred, despair, and suffering she had suppressed for millennia. She slew a million demons within a matter of seconds."

Michael's breathing catches.

"Uzz... Uzziel? She did that? What happened next?"

Gabriel shakes his head. "I know not. I faded away, as my body and soul poured into my ring. I can only imagine she expelled every last drop of her mana. Had it been you or Uriel, I might praise her for such a valiant final stand... but it wasn't. She was our sweet, kind, caring little sister. Her last moments were fraught with misery and despair."

Gabriel opens his eyes. They glisten in the firelight, but he makes no effort to wipe his tears away.

"I am sorry thou dids't witness such horrors," Raphael murmurs. "Had I the ability to go back in time, perhaps I would do things differently. Perhaps I wouldn't. Fate is a tricky mistress. Camael believed that the future was etched in stone. Perhaps she was right."

"Maybe she wasn't," I say. "If fate exists, if destiny is real, then our actions have no bearing on the future. We're predetermined to succeed or fail, and there's nothing we can do to alter the future. I refuse to think like that. Perhaps by looking into the future, Camael doomed the angels to suffer under a self-fulfilling prophecy. By expecting all angels to die, she deemed any actions that might negate that future pointless."

Raphael shakes his head. "I find such a notion unlikely, Jason. Camael never told us about her dire predictions."

"She wouldn't need to. By seeing the future, she might influence others accidentally. Maybe when they came to her for counsel, she might give them advice that would help in the short-term, but hurt in the long-term... when she expected the demons to have won."

Solomon nods. "Jason brings up a good point. Nobody can know what the future holds for certain, but such a concept is well within the realm of plausibility."

Michael leans back on his log. "Bah. This talk of human philosophy is pointless. Who cares if the future is set in stone or not? The angels perished. Demons took over. Nothing can undo that."

"It does matter," I retort. "If you think fate is immovable, then dwelling on the past is pointless. You couldn't have changed anything. Ironic, given that's all you seem to do."

"Jason..." Solomon nudges me, a note of warning in his voice. "Don't get snappy with the Archangels. They have had a lot of solitary time to think about their lives. Whether destiny is real or not, you can hardly blame them for wishing they had done things differently."

Solomon's rebuke gives me pause. He's not wrong. Even if the Archangels are hypocrites, hindsight is 20/20.

I decide to change the topic.

"If Titans were so powerful that they were able to slay dragons, why was Valac able to kill them effortlessly? He was only a single demon."

Raphael wipes his nose on his sleeve. "Because Valac was a soul manipulator. His scythe didn't kill his victims, but instead ripped the soul from their bodies, empowering himself. The first few Titans fell before they could react, increasing his might substantially. His power snowballed after that, making him almost unstoppable."

"Well, if he was invincible, then how did he die?"

Silence.

Solomon raises his eyes to the sky above. "We're not there yet, Jason. Everything until now has only been building to the midpoint. Valac perished during the War in Heaven, but the manner of his death isn't as important as what came before. If you're willing to listen, I can continue the visions now. It's probably for the best that we move away from these troublesome discussions."

"Aye," Michael says, annoyance in his voice. "Thy constant attacks on my family's morality are driving me to insanity."

* * *

Compared to my first impression of Michael six years ago, back when he saved me from my paralysis, he has become the most bitter and cynical of all the Archangels. The worst part, though, is that he refuses to change his opinion on anything. He believes the demons are evil, and nobody can convince him otherwise. He refuses to see where he was at fault. He dwells on the past, yet never tries to learn from it.

Michael represents everything wrong with the angels. They're self-aggrandizing, sanctimonious, smug, and far too sure of their righteousness. The Archangels look at their history, and instead of considering they might have been in the wrong, they blame others.

I hate that.

I hate when people can't acknowledge their mistakes. Maybe it's stupid of me to want to appeal to the demons and to try and make peace, but I think genuine stupidity is doing the same thing over and over again while expecting a different result. If repeatedly antagonizing the demons for thousands of years only pissed them off more, then perhaps a sincere diplomatic effort might bear new fruit.

Something touches my shoulder. I turn to my right to see Solomon resting his palm there. He shakes his head. "I can hear your thoughts. Let's not focus on negativity, Jason."

I grunt, remembering that my mind is like an open book to him.

"Sorry. Let's get on with the next vision."

A long moment passes. Solomon stares at me silently, as if trying to discern some key part of my heart. He eventually breaks his gaze away and motions with his hands to form magic symbols.

"As you wish."

Solomon finishes his incantation. As the world shifts around me, the last thing I see is Gabriel's face. He gazes into the fire, wishing with all his strength that he could save Uzziel's life.

If he could go back in time, there would be only one thing he wanted to change.

We all have something in our pasts we wish we could fix.

Even me.

Part 108: Liar, Liar, Satan the Liar

"Ugh? Guh. Nnn?"

"Yes! That's the way! Rub those sticks together. Just like that!"

I appear inside Uzziel's mind. She sits at the edge of a forest with a dark-skinned, extremely hairy man. His face is rough, looking only vaguely like any human I know. Given the lack of wings and his short height, he isn't a Titan or an angel.

He looks like a Neanderthal, or some other ancient human.

Uzziel gestures toward a stick held between both of his palms, then motions with her hands. "Now... thou must, ah... rub them together. Do it quickly."

The Neanderthal blinks. "Bun-bun?"

"Like this," Uzziel says, rubbing her palms together to create friction.

The caveman stares at my hands silently for a moment. He mimics me, rubbing them against the stick. It presses into a notch on the log below, but it doesn't create any fire.

"No, do it faster," Uzziel says, increasing her speed. "Like this."

The man nods. A moment later he picks up the stick and snaps it in half, then hands it to me. "Guh?"

"No... not like... haah..." Uzziel sighs. She turns her head around to look at Raphael standing behind her. "They're certainly slower than the demons."

"Mmm," Raphael replies. "So these creatures... they're called monkeys?"

"They're part of the monkey species, according to the Titans. I call them 'humans.'"

Raphael strokes his beard. "And thou believeth these 'humans' will give us energy, as the imps once did?"

"Mhm. I created the imps from scratch, but with my limited mana this time, all I managed to do was change the inner language of these little ones."

Raphael raises an eyebrow. "Inner language?"

Uzziel taps her lip. "'Tis difficult to describe. All beings have a set of rules inside their bodies that explain how they look, act, and feel. I can create life from scratch, but it takes a lot of work. Adjusting the bodies of existing beings is much simpler."

Raphael narrows his eyes. Sweat drips down his head as he nods, clearly unable to understand her words. "Err, yes. I, ah, see. Well, as long as thou art confident these hairy creatures will be of use to us..."

Uzziel hops to her feet and smiles. "Oh, yes! I'll have to teach them some manner of civility, and then show them how to give us mana, but I think I'll succeed."

The old man strokes his beard with his left hand and leans heavily on the staff in his right. "The imps formerly lived with us in Heaven. How will these... these monkeys give us mana while on Earth? Isn't the distance too great?"

"No, no, I've changed their inner language so they can give us energy even over vast distances. Unfortunately, it lessened the amount they generate in their bodies. Compared to the imps, and especially the demons... humans will be quite weak. I'm... worried."

"Worried? About what?"

"About them. The humans." Uzziel reaches a hand up and fiddles with her long, olive-colored hair. "The demons appear to be killing Titans rampantly. First, Valac attacked, and now there is a female ice-manipulator as well. She slew a dozen Titans since her appearance last week. What if they target the humans?"

Raphael shakes his head. "I don't think the demons will do such a thing. These 'humans' are slow, weak, and dumb. They pose no threat to our enemies. The demons seek power and thrills. I suspect their primary goals are all about our destruction, and everything else is secondary."

"Still," Uzziel replies quietly, "we should worry about the safety of our new vassals. Since they won't live in Heaven, they will be under threat from the demons. We must protect them until their numbers increase."

"How many are there now?" Raphael asks.

"A hundred or so. Not enough to benefit us. We must rely on the mana of the Titans, currently. They're acting quite... stingy."

I glance over my shoulder. The caveman ignores me completely, and instead chews on his broken stick. He stares into the distance absentmindedly; a blank look stretched across his face.

"As this one demonstrates, educating them will take some time."

Raphael nods. "Thou art correct, sister. I trust thy intuition, but beware. We must treat these new servants differently from the old ones. Do not let Michael learn of thy plans. I fear he will worry that thou art creating another problem."

"A problem? Oh no," Uzziel says with a laugh. She cutely waves her brother's concerns away. "I made these humans far weaker than the imps. They will not betray us. Even if they did, Michael should rest easy knowing they will not pose any threat."

As I speak, the caveman blinks, then sets the stick back against the log. He begins rubbing it between his hands once more. A look of concentration comes over his face as he rubs it harder and harder.

"Oh, look! He finally understands!" Uzziel says. She giggles and kneels down to stare at him. "Yes, that's the way. Thou art close to success, little one!"

Raphael speaks from behind me. "What is thy purpose in training this ape to... to... rub sticks together? Art thou teaching it a trick?"

"No, not a trick. I'm teaching him to make fire."

"I don't understand. Only Uriel and a few cherubim can create fire."

Uzziel shakes her head. She continues watching the caveman. "Fire is caused by a variety of physical forces, brother. 'Tis an essential ingredient in creating life. The Creator formed us from the warmth of his mana. Isn't that what thou hath told me many times before?"

"I suppose," Raphael says. His tone is that of uncertainty. "Thy plan is strange, but I shan't question it. 'Tis my turn to guard Heaven's Gate. I must go and relieve Michael."

Before Raphael leaves, I turn to him and raise my palm. "Ah, wait. Brother, has Camael discovered the source of Uriel's illness? Is she still incapacitated?"

The old man's wings twitch. He appears intent on leaving, but pauses to answer my question anyway. "She has not. Uriel is still unconscious. I sometimes worry she is at death's door. Whatever magical attack that demoness used, our sister has yet to recover from it. After thou dost finish thy business on Earth, thy next visit should be to her side. Uriel will rest easier if thou holdeth her hand."

I lower my gaze. "We need a cure. Whatever struck Uriel, it affected her more intensely than Hercules."

Raphael sighs. "Thy children have caused us much heartache, little sister. Farewell. We await thy return to Heaven. Do not idle here too long."

Raphael spreads his wings, flaps, and flies away. I wave goodbye, but he doesn't notice.

A minute later, once the old man is little more than a speck on the horizon, I return my attention to the caveman.

"Okay, Gronk! So far, so good. Ye need to-"

I pause and frown. The dry brush beside his log has already caught fire from a stray spark. Gronk looks at me with a stupid grin. "Gah! Gah!"

"Wow! I didn't expect ye to pick that up so quickly. Thou art a smartie pie!" Uzziel kneels again and motions toward the ground. A tiny branch sprouts, growing an apple within seconds, then falls off and lands in her palm. "Fruit for my special boy!"

Gronk takes the apple excitedly and chows down. His oversized jaw gives him the look of a gorilla, but it also allows him to devour the fruit in three bites, core included.

A movement behind Gronk catches my attention. An ugly-looking female with hair across her entire body peeks out from behind a tree curiously. She seems interested in what we're doing.

Uzziel claps her hands. "Oh, Milga! Perfect! I've been wanting to observe thy act of copulation in person! Come over here, please, and give me a demonstration!"

The female grunts. "Guh." She doesn't move.

"Oh, there's no reason to be embarrassed. I'll make sure Gronk is gentle. Come on, then! I'd like to see how the procreation process works for myself."

Several minutes later, Gronk and Milga start smashing bits together, going at it like wild animals. Uzziel stares at them intensely, watching as both moan and grunt in the least erotic ways possible.

"Fascinating. So the pointy end enters the crevice? Why does he thrust so vigorously? I don't understand how this strange act creates an infant. This oddness is what happens when I have no influence over the evolution of life."

Uzziel furrows her brow. Not a drop of excitement regarding the human's sexual activity stirs in her body. She watches with almost clinical dispassion, remaining interested only in how the act occurs. After Gronk finishes, Uzziel stands.

"Well, this has been very educational. I thank thee for the demonstration! I must observe the other animals to see how they reproduce as well."

Gronk's body sags after he finishes exerting himself with Milga. He smiles a stupid grin at me again. "Guh!"

Uzziel turns away. "Hm. The whole process is a bit messy. The fluids, especially... not sure if I like those. I hope the other animals are more interesting to watch."

With a burst of strength, Uzziel flaps her wings, and we take off. She soars into the sky, bathing in the mid-summer sunlight as it warms her back.

I have to keep a positive attitude, Uzziel thinks to herself. My family is counting on me. These humans are the key to saving ourselves. We can't expect the Titans to give us their energy, vast as it is. The wars might be ancient and erased from our memories, but erasing stigmas will take centuries, possibly millennia.

An hour passes. Uzziel lands periodically to investigate various creatures and landmarks. Her fascination with nature and amusement with every little creature gives me a warm feeling inside.

Uzziel loves life. She hates death. In her mind, life is a sacred gift bestowed upon the universe by the Creator. Those who deliberately end it sadden her. She doesn't understand why, due to greed or misfortune, different beings won't come to agreements to maximize their pleasure and reduce their suffering.

Uzziel is potentially one of the kindest people I've ever seen... and this is only a memory of her. I wish I could have befriended her.

Eventually, Uzziel soars over a vast sea. Mountains appear in the distance, including Mount Sinai. This time, however, surprise strikes me as I spot hundreds of angels and Titans milling around its base. Cherubs soar overhead, scouting for danger. Two fifty-foot-tall Titans sit near the tiny entrance to Heaven. The opening is much too small for them to enter, but they serve as mighty guards, ready to crush any attackers.

It seems that Heaven has grown much more fortified over the last week. If the demons attack, they will most likely fail to breach the mountain.

Uzziel lands a mile away in a field of flowers, with a forest to her back. Kneeling over, she begins plucking daffodils, tulips, and daisies.

I should brighten the room for Uriel. A little color will help rally her spirits.

A jackrabbit stares at me, not a trace of fear in its eyes. It nibbles on a flower quietly without considering me a threat. Uzziel smiles. She takes a few steps toward it, kneels down, and pets its ears. "Oh, my! Thou art a brave little bunny! So cute, and fluffy too."

She picks the ball of fur up. It doesn't flee, but merely gazes at her silently. She cradles it and continues wandering around, picking flowers at random. "Dost thou thinketh my sister would prefer yellows or reds in her room? We call her the Flame of God, after all, so perhaps she would like reds. Hmm, but some blues would be cute too. I think she ought to try a sky-blue dress someday. She would look adorable, just like you!"

The rabbit, unsurprisingly, offers no response. Uzziel kisses his ears sweetly, then places him on the ground. "Okay, little one. Run along now!"

The rabbit doesn't move. He wiggles his nose at me and immediately begins chewing on another flower.

Suddenly, from the woods behind me, a branch snapping makes me flinch. Startled, the rabbit bolts away faster than lightning. I spin to face the noise.

My blood turns to ice. A demon stares at me. "Mother..."

"Ah! Y-you! Satan!" Uzziel gawks at him, then quickly looks around, expecting an ambush.

"Wait, please. Mother. I came alone. I've been wanting to speak to you."

Satan hesitantly steps forward. His posture is meek, as if he's afraid to startle me. Something seems off. He's not usually like this.

Uzziel takes a step back, keeping her distance. "Why? What honeyed words coulds't thou speak to keep me from calling for reinforcements?"

Satan bows his head. "I know you're angry, Mother. I don't blame you. I've... I've done many bad things."

Uzziel hesitates. "Huh? I don't understand."

"I'm not here to fight. I only wish to talk."

"Is that so? After murdering Samael, and Megara, and killing a hundred Cherubs, ye expect me to believe thee?"

Satan winces. "I screwed up, okay? I didn't... I didn't want things to turn out as badly as they did. Besides, it wasn't all my fault. You and Uriel attacked my troops out of nowhere. We were only defending ourselves! Look at what happened because of you. One of the demons was angry. She attacked several Titans over the last week. I can't control my people. They're too scared to listen."

Uzziel relaxes her posture, but only a little. "Scared? Of what?"

"Your people. The angels." Satan raises his gaze. "I'm tryin' to rein them in, but I can't. Everyone thinks the angels wanna kill us! I'm tryin' to stop the fighting, but you guys keep aggravating the situation!"

Uzziel's jaw drops.

"We are? But- but I thought..."

"That I enjoyed killing? No way! I wanted to save my fellow imps. That's all!" Satan takes several steps toward me. He holds his palms up to show he's unarmed. "Mother, please. Tell me. What happened to the imps in Heaven? Are they alive? Are they dead?"

His voice has a note of pleading in it.

Uzziel's breath catches.

"Ah... they... that is..."

She closes her eyes.

"...Dead. I'm sorry, Satan. I didn't want them to-"

"Noo!" Satan wails suddenly and falls forward, throwing himself to the ground. The sudden outburst makes Uzziel flinch. "Not my brothers and sisters! Uwaah! They were innocent! Mother, how could you let them die? I thought you loved us! I thought you wanted peace! Uwahhh!"

Tears flow down Satan's face.

I gaze at him from inside Uzziel's mind. My suspicions slowly begin to rise.

This piece of shit... he's lying. He's faking his tears. Satan already knows what happened to the imps in Heaven. Samael told him.

He's planning something. But what?

Uzziel walks toward Satan, kneels, and touches his back softly. I wince, expecting an attack, but Satan doesn't try anything. "I'm sorry, little one! I... I attempted to stop my brothers, but their only desire was to wreak havoc."

Crocodile tears rush down Satan's face. "All I want is for you to forgive me! I don't know what I was thinking! Don't you love me anymore, Mother? Don't I deserve to live, too? I don't want to be scared for the rest of my life, hide in caves, and fear the light of day!"

Uzziel winces.

The poor thing, she thinks to herself. I can't believe I never tried to talk to him. All this time, he's been suffering in silence. Why couldn't I show more compassion?

Rage boils in my chest.

Satan is lying to her, and she's swallowing the bait whole. Uzziel is too kind, too caring, too innocent. She fell for his lies once before, and now she's doing it again. Her faith in others is misplaced. She isn't only a pacifist, but naive too.

"My apologies, Satan. I have forsaken thee. What can I do to help?"

Satan wipes his tears away. Almost immediately, his tenor changes. He raises his eyes to meet mine. "Are all my brothers and sisters in Heaven dead? All of them?"

Uzziel winces. "N-nay. Two remain. Friends of thine from when ye... when ye attacked us."

Satan keeps his gaze fixed on mine. "So… Deebs and Bael? They're alive?"

"They are. Why? I can't simply release them, not after what thy demoness friend did to Uriel. Nobody would stand for it! She lies comatose, unable to move."

Satan's eyes light up. "Uriel, you say… ah, that's right!" Satan jumps to his feet, startling Uzziel. She nearly falls on her butt, but Satan grabs her hand and pulls her to her feet.

"I came to speak to you about Uriel," Satan says. "I can, uh, heal her!"

"You can? Really?!"

Confidence appears in Satan's posture. His face is already dry, further proof his tears were only a facade to manipulate Uzziel. "Damn straight. I've got this friend; name's Grigori. He can heal her up in a jiffy."

Satan snaps his fingers and turns around. "Yo, Grigori. Come on out."

From the forest, a gangly looking demon with skinny arms and withered legs peeks out from behind a tree. Grigori slowly trudges toward us, his animal-skin robes dragging on the ground beside him. "Mmm. Here I am, boss."

Uzziel doesn't question Satan about why he claimed he was alone when he actually wasn't. It unnerves me that she can be so naive.

Satan returns his gaze to me. "I'll make you a deal, Mother. I want to see my boys. Grigori here can heal Uriel. You let me save my two demons, and I'll have Grigori heal Uriel. We can talk about a peace treaty after that."

Uzziel licks her lips. Thoughts bubble in her mind as she quickly considers his request.

"Art thou serious, Satan? Thou woulds't do such a thing for me?"

Despite the doubt in her voice, Satan grins jovially. "'Course I would. I love you, Mother. I'd never betray you. It's Michael who scares me. If he weren't so violent, all this trouble could've been avoided. Don't you agree?"

Uzziel nods. "Indeed. I love my brother… but his personality is too rough for delicate situations. Samael, Uriel, and Michael all mistreated thy people. I understand thy grievances with them specifically. I wish thou had spoken with me before attacking us… I never wanted thee to suffer."

Satan waves his hand. "Look, you guys killed more imps than we killed angels: a hundred cherubs, and tens of thousands of my brothers and sisters. I say we consider it water under the log. If you promise nobody will hurt me, I'll go to Heaven with you and heal Uriel. Doesn't that sound nice? I'll go alone, just you, me, and Grigori. Two demons like us can't possibly cause any problems, right?"

Uzziel glances in the distance, towards Mount Sinai. In the skies above, thousands of angels soar about, forming a surveillance net where nothing can enter Heaven without them knowing.

"Yes. I understand, Satan. No tricks, right? Woulds't thou utter a lie to thy Mother?"

Satan shakes his head. "Oh, no! Never! Nor would Grigori… right?"

"Nope. Never, ever," Grigori replies.

Several seconds pass.

Uzziel exhales.

"Haah... okay. Alright. I shall guide thee into Heaven, Satan. Only the two of thee. Nobody else, no tricks. Understood?"

Satan salutes me. "Of course, Mother. On my honor as one of your children."

A flicker of doubt appears in Uzziel's mind. Something about Satan's smile seems to tip her off to the fact he might be lying. However, her optimism brushes it aside.

No. Satan wouldn't betray me. He's a good boy. Rebellious, but smart. He only wants what's best for his people. I can't assume the worst... even if... even if he did cause Samael's death...

Uzziel turns her back to Satan. Hesitantly, she begins leading him toward Heaven.

A pit forms in my stomach.

Don't do it, Uzziel. Don't. He's manipulating you.

Uzziel doesn't hear me. She can't.

I can only hope Satan won't do what he's certainly going to do.

Part 109: The Infinite Tsukuyomi

Uzziel walks toward Mount Sinai, with Satan and Grigori on her right. The gangly looking grunt looks around nervously. "H-hey, boss... are you sure we ain't makin' a mistake?"

"Quiet, numbnuts. 'Course we ain't. Mother would never lie. She'll protect us 'n hold up her end of the deal, no matter what."

Uzziel swallows reflexively. I have to believe Satan. He must have come to his senses. He's going to help Uriel, and sign a peace agreement. Once we bind him to a magical contract, he won't be able to turn against us. The war will end. We'll all live harmoniously once more.

Slight flickers of doubt occasionally appear in Uzziel's mind, but she pushes them aside to try and believe in the good inside Satan.

As we walk, movement in the sky draws my attention. I look up in time to see five cherubs swoop down, swords at the ready. They slam into the dirt feet-first and surround the demons. "Lady Uzziel! What is the meaning of this? Why art thou walking side-by-side with demons?!"

I raise my hand. "Lower thy weapons. I have promised the leader of the demons safe passage into Heaven. We are going to negotiate terms of peace."

"Peace? Bah!" The cherub's eyes narrow inside his silver helmet. "We cannot trust the words of-"

"Chester!" Uzziel raises her voice, interrupting him. "I am an Archangel. My authority overrides thine."

Chester flicks his eyes to me. He pauses for a moment to consider his words, then takes a step back. The other cherubs follow his lead.

"Of course. I meant thee no disrespect, sister. However, we will keep our weapons aimed at them. I pray thou shalt forgive me, but I cannot allow these cretins to try any tricks."

I glance at Satan, half-expecting him to protest. Instead, he raises his palms. "No, no, I understand. If you guys need to keep an eye on little old me, after all the angels I've killed, I won't blame ya."

Uzziel's thoughts bubble to the surface. If Satan was going to try anything; he would demand the cherubim lower their weapons. Surely this proves he isn't lying. Right?

The Cherubs allow us to pass. They fall into position in the rear, aiming their swords at Satan and Grigori's backs. In the skies above, several others notice the commotion. They fly lower and tail us from a distance. A sense of anxiety falls over the group. Neither Satan nor I say anything as we draw closer to the sheer cliff leading to Heaven.

Both Titanesses guarding the entrance lower their gazes to us. The one on the right speaks. "Archangel. You bring demons here. Why?"

"Peace negotiations," Uzziel replies, a hint of weariness in her voice. She already seems tired of answering the same question. "Where is Raphael?"

The giant stares at Satan for a moment, the reaches her hand up and lightly taps the mountain. The Earth trembles from the impact, sending a small shockwave deep inside the cave system.

A minute later, Raphael and two cherubs appear at the entrance. "Yes? What is the matter? Oh! Uzziel." Raphael smiles, only for the expression to vanish when he spots Satan. A bone-chilling expression appears on the elderly angel's face. "Why has he come?"

"Peace talks," Uzziel replies curtly. "I've agreed to give Satan safe passage into Heaven. He promised to heal Uriel in exchange for the freedom of his fellow prisoners. Additionally, he wishes to sign a peace agreement. There have been too many deaths of late."

"Tch." Raphael spryly leaps from the mountainside and lands on the ground far more smoothly than his aged appearance hints is possible. "Satan is lying, Uzziel. He speaks honeyed words to manipulate thee. We should strike him down before he kills us."

"Brother!" Uzziel's jaw drops. "I gave my word! I won't allow thee to attack an enemy who has waved a white flag! It's unthinkable!"

Raphael hesitates. He grips his staff tightly and glares at Satan. "Have thou any retort to offer, demon?"

"I came here to make peace!" Satan shouts. "Why're you threatening me?! I haven't hurt anyone since I arrived! I brought along a healer, but still, you doubt me?!"

Raphael's gaze drifts to Grigori. "A healer? Unlikely. The angels have the best healing magic in all the galaxy. What can this bag of bones do that Uzziel or Camael can't?"

Grigori shrinks under Raphael's gaze. "I... I c-can..."

"Brother." Uzziel's voice tightens. "Art thou throwing away a chance at peace for petty revenge? I've always imagined thee slow to anger. Use thy wisdom."

"I am," Raphael replies. "Look at the tells, little sister. The way they shift their feet. The false meekness on their faces. These two are lying. We cannot trust them."

Satan holds up his palms. "Alright, gramps, I get your hatred toward us. Let's bring the mojo down, eh? It's only Grigori and me here. If you really don't trust us, stick a whole army at our backs. Bloody hell, you're starting to piss me off. We can leave Uriel to die if that's what you want."

Raphael stiffens. "Impossible. Uriel's condition is stable. We'll heal her ourselves if that's what it takes."

"No, you won't," Satan replies. "Don't you understand? Uriel's head's in a spiral. Lucy's attack screwed up her mind. She's slowly gonna lose her sanity until she's a vegetable. Grigori can heal her, but hey... if you don't want our help..."

Satan casually takes a step back and shrugs nonchalantly. "...We can leave. I'm suuure you guys'll heal her in time."

Uzziel's heart skips a beat. She shifts her gaze from Satan to Raphael. A note of pleading enters her voice. "Please, brother. Cease thy hostility. We need Satan's help. Uriel needs his help."

Raphael balls his left hand into a fist. He scowls at Satan. "Tch. I know thou art lying, vermin. I see the deception hidden within thy eyes. I have met many a snake in my lifetime. Whether Uzziel believes thy words or not, my gaze remains affixed on thee. Enter Heaven... but make one wrong move, and thy corpse will be long cold before night comes."

Satan purses his lips. "Such loving words, gramps. You really know how to welcome a fella."

After several tense seconds of staring at each other, our little group continues up a narrow path recently carved into the side of the mountain. We travel single-file, with me at the front, the demons sandwiched between myself and Raphael, and all the cherubs in the rear.

My nerves tense up, knowing the demons can stab me in the back if they want, but they don't. If Satan intends to rip my spine out, he's waiting for the right moment.

We arrive at the clifftop and enter the mountain. By now, several cherubs have traveled ahead, sending word of our arrival to others. Hundreds of angels line the halls, their weapons drawn as they wait for us to pass. Most of their expressions are neutral, but a few of them shoot nasty glares at the demons. If their stares bother Satan, he doesn't let it show.

After thirty minutes of slowly descending into the bowels of Sinai, we arrive at Heaven's Gate. A dozen Cherubs, even more heavily armored than the ones we've seen up to this point, line the walls. The circular chamber with the blue portal hums thanks to its kinetic energy. Its opaque frame gives no hint of what lies on the other side.

I step through without any particular ceremony and arrive in Heaven. The fields of lush grass, beautiful flowers, and distant trees appear before me. The moment I step through, two cherubs, one on each side of the gate, tense up. After they recognize me, they relax, only to grab their swords when Satan and Grigori step through.

"Demons?!"

"They're guests. Please lower thy weapons," I say for the umpteenth time. After Raphael and the rest of our entourage steps through, the cherubs nod, satisfied we have the demons outnumbered fifteen-to-one.

"So, uh, where's Michael?" Satan asks. "I hope he isn't gonna fly in and lop my damn head off."

"As much as thou deserveth such discourtesy, no, he will not," Raphael replies. The old man pulls a pipe from his robes and lights it with a snap of his fingers. He appears to have a small bit of control over fire magic, but it's too limited to be useful in battle. "Come. We'll guide thee to Uriel's side."

Satan hesitates. "Hold on. I wanna know where my boys are. I want proof they're alive."

"Thou shalt prove thyself by healing Uriel first," Raphael says. His voice has a hard edge to it. "Uzziel might have offered thy comrades on a silver platter, but I expect results. If thou dost fail to heal Uriel, a swift end awaits thee."

Uzziel clears her throat. "Brother. Stop antagonizing-"

"Speak not of what I should do," Raphael replies, cutting me off. "My terms are simple. 'Tis the demons who have lied time and again, not us. If they heal Uriel, then naturally, we will maintain our end of the bargain."

Satan grumbles to himself. "Fine. Cripes. Be like that. I came here with only one other guy, and you can't offer me even the slightest courtesy? I'm defenseless!"

"Defenseless?" Raphael echoes Satan. He pulls the pipe from his mouth and taps it against his forehead. "Another lie, I see. Something tells me thy power has increased substantially since we last met. Doubtless, thou cannot defeat two Archangels without assistance, but still, thou have yet to speak a word of truth. Please, cut the idle prattle."

Satan opens his mouth to retort, but rethinks it. "Suit yourself, gramps."

I tap Satan's shoulder and point to the left. "Michael is keeping thy friends over there, in a bunker a few miles away. I will take thee to see them after-"

"Uzziel!" Raphael snaps at me. "Speak not of such confidential information without my permission! I sense a vile plan bubbling under this demon's surface. Let him prove himself before giving him any leeway!"

Satan ignores Raphael. He smiles at me. "Well, thank you, Mother. I'm glad someone here has a hint of civility."

I nod. "Aye. Thou art, ah, welcome."

Raphael curses under his breath and turns away. "By the Creator... just tell the little bastard anything ye want. Tell him where we keep the weapons, our weaknesses... bah."

He plods toward Uriel's house, and we follow along. Satan's eyes rove around as he assesses the state of Heaven. Cherubs fly overhead. A sense of awareness like never before fills the region, as though the angels are acutely aware of our presence.

"Sure are a lot of guards."

"Obviously," Raphael mutters. "If I didn't know any better, I might suspect thee of trying to gauge our defenses."

"Nah. I wouldn't do something like that," Satan replies. A hint of sarcasm creeps into his voice. "We're only two demons. We can't stand up to the full might of angelkind."

"So thou hath said many times," Raphael mutters. Anger boils inside of him. It seems he could blow his stack at any moment and strike the demons down.

Uzziel, too, glances at Satan now and then. The Devil seems eerily calm. If he intends to spring a trap, none of us have a clue what it will entail.

Maybe he won't. Saving Diablo and Bael appears to be his primary goal, and it makes sense. All he has to do is heal Uriel, and they go free. Frankly, I don't see why he'd want to lie. I suppose he might do it to be a dick.

The Temple of Elderium appears in the distance. We travel for half an hour, and soon arrive near the outskirts of the capital city of Heaven. Stone buildings, hand-carved by untold numbers of workers, line a single street.

Satan smirks. "Imps made your houses. I don't recall ever hearing a thank-you."

"Thy people completed their assigned tasks. That is all," Raphael says. "It seems that at some point, they forgot their place."

Satan's smirk vanishes. He doesn't reply, but a flash of anger passes over his face.

Raphael seems to be trying his hardest to piss off the demon leader. I'm not sure that's a good idea.

Satan pauses. "I'll have you know-" Suddenly, his throat catches. Satan doubles over and clutches his stomach. "Kah! Hack! Buh-haaack!!"

Everyone flinches, including me. I kneel forward. "Satan? Art thou alright? What's the matter?!"

"Kah!! Gnn!!" Satan falls to his knees and clutches his throat as he chokes on some unknown substance.

I glare at Raphael. "What did ye do to him?!"

"Nothing!" Raphael retorts. "I didn't touch the little bastard! I haven't a clue why he's gagging!"

"Get me some water! I have to-"

A whoomph of air rushes against my back. I quickly spin around to see Grigori holding his hands up in a magic seal. A portal materializes, black as the night itself.

Uzziel's eyes widen. "What?! That's- gah!" Something hits my head, knocking me to the side and jarring my senses.

A moment later, I blink my eyes to see Satan standing up straight. He's no longer coughing, but instead bashing the Cherub guards away with his invisible Vectors. Raphael lies on the ground, having also been knocked aside.

The eldest Archangel jumps to his feet and winces. "Spawn of maggots! I knew thou were hatching a scheme! What is this black magic?!"

The portal widens further. The instant it finishes opening, demons flood through its opening, pouring inside of Heaven as if a dam had burst. Big ones, small ones, and others I can barely even comprehend pounce from the portal and leap at the Cherubs, overwhelming them with pure numbers. Demons tear angels limb-from-limb, ignoring the terrified screams of panic as blood explodes all around us.

Immediately, I summon the fury of nature. Vines leap from the grass and grab at the closest enemies like a hundred enraged squids. They rapidly bind and secure one after the other, but no matter how many I summon, more demons continue to rush through the portal.

The sound of a horn blares. I spare a glance at Raphael as he yells into his cupped hands. The power of his magic amplifies the sound, echoing all around us.

Satan pounces at the old man. "Damn you, gramps! I didn't say you could call for backup!"

Right as Satan's fist connects with Raphael's head, the Archangel vanishes. His body evaporates into mist, making the Devil slam into the ground and chew dirt.

Raphael materializes behind me. "To thy feet, little sister! Assist me! We must push the demons back into-"

The old man stops mid-sentence. He dodges to the side as a circular disc of ice whiffs toward him. It misses narrowly and continues into the distance. Raphael lands in a reverse-crabwalk and bounces back to his feet. His agility continues to astound me.

"Sataaan! I came to save youuu~!" A woman calls out. I turn to spot the skimpily dressed succubus, Nerissa, as she tosses several bolts of ice at me. Rolling to the side, I summon vines to protect myself, then send others to subdue her. Nerissa creates razor-sharp ice swords in each hand and slices my plants before they can close the gap.

"Right on time, toots!" Satan jumps over and blocks Nerissa with his body, putting a barrier between her and me. "Hah! It seems that Warper's plan worked out perfectly. Who knew grunts could be so smart, eh?"

"We must hold out until Gabriel and the other Archangels arrive," Raphael says to me. "He should be here any minute."

"What about Michael?!"

Raphael narrows his gaze. "I warned him several minutes ago the demons might attack. He's guarding the hostages."

Demons continue pouring through the portal. Hundreds. Thousands. A flood of flesh spews forth as if from the depths of Hell, spreading out to surround us. Given Uzziel's penchant for disappearing, we can easily escape, but she doesn't attempt to flee.

Uzziel clambers to her feet. "Satan! I trusted thee!"

"That was your first mistake, you dumb bitch," The Devil says with a look of glee. "Now you're outnumbered a thousand to one! Get 'em, boys!"

Raphael's eyes narrow. "Nay. Tis thou who art outnumbered."

With a motion of his hands, Raphael summons a portal of his own. An entrance to Elderium appears. Angels inside gasp when they spot the demons. Many begin jumping through, quickly realizing the demons have entered Heaven.

"Shit!" Satan and Nerissa retreat several steps as our reinforcements come out swinging. Steel blades slice the air as several cherubs lunge at Satan, only to miss.

Raphael's eyes glow. "Let not thy feelings of betrayal cloud thy judgment, sister. Set them aside, and help me remind these demons who are their masters!"

Uzziel swallows. "Y-yes!"

As the words leave my mouth, a sickening sensation washes over me. I turn to the left and notice Lucifer standing at the outskirts of the enemy forces. Her third eye glows cherry-red. The air distorts between us, and something resembling an invisible fist smashes against my face.

"Uzz-!"

Raphael's voice cuts off a split second later before he finishes calling my name.

The world goes black.

* * *

An eyeball appears as big as the Moon. It rushes toward me, engulfing the horizon. The pupil dilates, and bloody veins stretch across its sclera.

UNWORTHY. PATHETIC. WEAK.

A woman's voice, as loud as thunder, booms in my mind.

SAMAEL DIED BECAUSE OF YOU. ALL YOUR BROTHERS AND SISTERS WISH YOU HAD PERISHED INSTEAD OF HIM!

Uzziel grabs her forehead. She opens her mouth to scream, but no words come out.

THEY HATE YOU FOR CREATING THE DEMONS. THEY HATE YOU FOR EMPOWERING US, AND MAKING US INVINCIBLE!

A hundred swords materialize above me. I try to dodge, only to fail. The blades rain down upon me, stabbing every inch of my body and skewering me into the dirt.

The agony is unthinkable.

"Ahnnn!" Uzziel whimpers pitifully.

The swords vanish. My arms and legs move of their own volition and bind behind me, as a rope wraps around my neck. Suddenly, I fall off a gallows and hang from a noose, dangling helplessly above an infinite abyss. The robe bites into my skin, compressing my neck and breaking my bones so I can't make a sound.

TEN BILLION YEARS OF PUNISHMENT AWAIT! LIKE YOUR SISTER URIEL, YOU TOO SHALL TASTE THE NEVERENDING TORTURE OF MY DEMONIC TRANCE! UNBREAKABLE, INESCAPABLE! STRUGGLE AND CRY, WEEP AND WAIL, BUT YOU SHALL NEVER WALK AMONG THE LIVING AGAIN!

A sword lunges at my throat, severing my head. I fall from the noose and lose sensation in the rest of my body as the ground rushes at my face.

Wham!

A dull sensation of pain hits me. My nose shatters against the dirt.

Suddenly, feeling returns to my body again. My head reattaches, only for a hundred wolves to pounce at me and begin tearing my flesh apart.

HAHAHA! MY TRANCE DOOMS YOU TO NEVERENDING SUFFERING! FOR EVERY DEMON LIFE LOST, A THOUSAND YEARS OF AGONY AWAIT!

Tears pour from Uzziel's face as the dogs rip apart her clothes and tear the skin from her bones.

This... this must be... the attack Lucifer hit Uriel and Hercules with! But... Hercules escaped it somehow... so... that means...

Uzziel's thoughts cut off as a wolf rips out her throat. I flinch reflexively when the agony hits me as well. Solomon's visions are far too realistic for my liking.

No! It's only illusion magic... can't... can't give up hope...

The wolves vanish. Uzziel's body heals, and for a moment, I think the hellish torment might end.

It doesn't.

The ground vanishes. A wall of spikes appears below the Archangel, and she screams in terror as she falls against the metal barbs. Untold numbers of them plunge through her backside, exploding forth like alien organisms.

SUFFER! ENDLESSLY SUFFER!

Lucifer's voice taunts me as her eyeball gazes from the sky.

Uzziel whimpers and spasms uncontrollably.

Must escape... must... can't think... hurts too... much...

There is no escape.

Uzziel is trapped under the same spell as her sister.

Forever.

Part 110: The Cosmic Realm

"Ahhn!" Uzziel cries out, pitifully. Her body slumps over as I travel from her mind the short distance to Satan's. The instant I can see through his eyes, I catch a glimpse of Raphael grabbing his sister before she can hit the ground.

"Uzziel? What's wrong?!"

Triumph plasters itself across Satan's face as more and more demons flood through the portal behind him. While angels continue arriving both from the skies and from Raphael's portal, it seems that, at least for now, the demons have a distinct advantage.

"Hahaha, sorry to tell ya this, gramps, but Mother's down for the count. And now, so are you!"

Satan turns and nods at Lucifer. Her third eye glows again, and she sends a psychic attack at Raphael.

When I return my gaze to Raphael, Satan frowns. Raphael appears wholly unaffected.

"Lucifer! Hit him! Do the thing!"

"I am, you imbecile!"

Raphael ignores Lucifer's attack. The old man slaps his staff against a cherub's chest as they charge through his portal. "Take Uzziel! Protect her with thy life!"

The cherub seems intent on battling the demons along with his hundreds of brothers and sisters, but quickly refocuses his attention. "Aye, Raphael!"

"Oh, no, you don't," Satan mutters. He pounces at the cherub, using his Vectors to clear the fifteen-foot gap in an instant. Satan's fist lunges toward his head, but Raphael appears out of nowhere, moving far faster than should be possible.

The old man catches Satan's fist and tosses him to the side, right in the middle of a group of cherubs. Each reacts instantly, stabbing their swords at his chest.

They fail.

Satan's vectors jab into the ground and yank him away while simultaneously striking the cherub's throats and other exposed areas. In the blink of an eye, five angels stumble back, unable to see Satan's attacks coming. Their bodies explode with pain, doubling them over in agony.

Demon grunts finish them off a moment later.

Satan's eyes flick to Raphael. The old man blocks Uzziel and her cherub protector with his body. It only takes a few seconds before the latter two rush through the portal to Elderium, leaving Raphael to fend for himself.

"Thy movements are quite erratic, little demon," Raphael hisses. "Telekinesis? Nay. Thy body appears to be anchored to specific points, almost as if thou dost possess several additional limbs."

"Ain't you a smart cookie..." Satan says. "I see the gears turning in your head, you old codger."

Something brushes against Satan's back. His Vectors don't alert him to danger, though, and he turns to see Nerissa and Belial crouched beside him. Nerissa rests her hand on Satan's shoulder. "We're here to help!"

"No, you ain't," Satan replies. "Stick to the plan, dammit. I don't need a couple of broads slowing me down — this geezer's mine. You two need to help Lucy- gah! Where'd she go?!"

Satan quickly scans the horizon. He spots Lucifer rushing in the direction of the prisons. "I didn't even tell her where- bah! Never mind! Bust a move and help Lucy! We've gotta rescue our guys."

Nerissa watches Raphael, and Satan follows her gaze. The old man has barely exerted himself, but already he seems to be breathing a little harder than usual. "Can you defeat an Archangel by yours-"

"I can! Go!" Satan smacks Nerissa's ass, making her yelp in surprise.

The succubus offers little protest and instead glances at him in annoyance. "Fine! Stay safe!"

She leaves, along with Belial. Satan disregards them immediately and turns his attention to the old man.

"I heard you loud and clear, pops. Michael's all alone, ain't he? Well, he's going to have to hold off against three of my best broads. You 'n me are due for a little... playtime."

Raphael closes his eyes. "'Twas to be expected, servant of evil. Never did I expect that thou might possess Samael's Vectors."

"Oh? Figured it out already, did ya?"

"'Twas a simple matter. The way thou moveth, the way-" Raphael stops mid-sentence. A Scyther charges at him from behind and plunges a bladed-arm into the old man's back. Raphael explodes into mist and reconstitutes himself a moment later, allowing the demon to stumble through his missing body. Raphael swings his staff out and pounds the back of the scyther's head with incredible force, smashing the grunt into the ground and knocking him out instantly.

His strength blows my mind.

Raphael frowns. "Tch. The young are always quick to action, slow to words. 'Tis no wonder havoc follows thee wherever thou go."

Screams of pain envelop the two of us as demons and angels clash on all sides. The demons use their element of surprise to overwhelm cherubs entering via Raphael's portal, but over time, more angels continue to arrive from every direction.

"Raphael!" From the skies above, a woman's voice cries out. Satan raises his gaze to spot Gabriel and Camael. The eldest sister slams into a group of demons, pounding a one-handed hammer into the ground with explosive force. The impact crushes two grunts instantly, spraying body parts in every direction. The rest go flying, landing painfully with sickening crunches as their bones twist and snap. "We're here to assist thee!"

Gabriel, on the other hand, levitates in the sky. His wings flap enough to keep himself out of the battle, but a surge of mana begins to build inside his body, causing his frame to glow.

"The demons attacked Uzziel," Raphael says, gritting his teeth. "I saved her, but for now, 'tis only the three of us. Michael is guarding the prison system. Go and help him!"

Satan quickly evaluates all three angels. His thoughts bubble up in his mind. Stupid old man. He lowered his guard. Now's the time to strike!

"We won't leave thee alone!" Camael yells. She swings her hammer in a wide arc and pulverizes the heads of three demons at once, sending their bodies careening away. "Allow us to stay and-"

Satan attacks. While the angels are distracted, he charges at Raphael and swings his Vectors toward the old man, attacking him from every angle.

The Devil smiles. There's no escape.

He's wrong.

Raphael forms a single hand sign. Satan's Vectors fly through the Archangel's body as though it isn't him standing there, but a hologram. Raphael vanishes and reappears beside Camael.

"Michael. Help him. Now! I'll deal with the demon's leader."

Having charged his attack, Gabriel aims his palm at a nearby cluster of demons. A cone of light shoots toward them. The grunts open their mouths to scream, but they utter not a word. Their bodies evaporate into particles of light as Gabriel's Holy Beam tears them apart at the molecular level. Within seconds, his focused mana slays a hundred demons as it rips across the field.

When he finishes, Gabriel gasps. His body sags, and he starts to fall. Camael acknowledges Raphael's words with a nod and soars into the sky to catch her falling brother. "Very well! Defeat Satan, and the rest of the rabble will scatter to the darkness from whence they came!"

Satan watches silently as the two Archangels fly away, with Camael carrying her huge brother by herself.

The old man dodged my Vectors. He's pretty spry for his age. Doesn't matter, though. If he's too stupid to let the other Archangels help him... then I guess he's going to die.

Once Gabriel and Camael leave, Raphael turns his full attention to Satan, ignoring the battles continuing around them. "I cannot help but notice thy confidence, young one. However, in thy eyes, I am but an aged and decrepit old man. Isn't that right?"

"I'm sure you've got a few tricks up your sleeves. Nothing I can't deal with," Satan says with a smirk. "You're looking pretty tired. I'll make sure you take a nice, permanent dirt nap."

"Thou shalt try," Raphael replies. "Sadly, ye lack the prescience to see how our battle will end. I am no pacifist, Satan. I have fought many battles. I have slain dragons, Titans, and today I shall kill my first demon as well. I swore long ago not to return to the path of bloodshed, but since thou seemeth so determined to make me change my ways..."

Satan charges again, seeming not to have learned his lesson. With no backup for either combatant, the leader of the demons rushes the leader of the angels furiously, grabbing rocks with his Vectors to smash them against Raphael's skull.

The old man releases his staff. A fraction of a second later, his hands begin to move at impossibly fast speeds. For every step Satan takes, Raphael completes a hundred magical signs. Compared to Raphael, Satan seems like a slug trying to swim against a river's current.

Raphael's eyes glow pure white. "Today, the full power of angelkind shall rain upon thee, foul demon."

The eldest Archangel vanishes. He appears in front of Satan a split second later, far too fast for us to react.

WHAM.

Raphael pounds his palm against Satan's ribs, blowing all the air from our lungs.

"Holy Trigram! I release the Creator's power!"

A sensation engulfs me akin to falling into a black hole. The world shifts, distorts, and sucks away, stretching into a blur of motion.

My body tumbles end over end, spinning and careening into an endless black void. Nausea overtakes me as I pass out from dizziness.

Recommended Listening

Satan's eyes bolt open. A world of light surrounds him. The sky, ground, and horizon feature no visible borders, no discernable terrain, or anything else of note. All I see in every direction is a pure white void.

Using his Vectors, Satan levitates into a standing position. He cautiously turns around, scanning the horizon for the Archangel of Wisdom.

Welcome, tiny demon.

A voice booms from above. Raphael materializes in the sky. He swoops down and lands twenty feet away, but this time, he doesn't use his staff to prop himself up. It's nowhere to be seen.

Today marks the last day of thy existence. Had thee any faith in the Creator, I would advise thee to give up without a fight. Sadly, the rage I feel prevents me from allowing thee a painless death.

White mana flows off the old man's body. His fatigued appearance is gone. Instead, his glowing eyes and upright stature give him a fiercely intimidating appearance, as if he could tear me limb from limb.

"What are you tryin'a pull?" Satan mutters. "Where are we? What did you do?!"

So many questions, so little time. Currently, thou dost reside in the Cosmic Realm, the former birthplace of my people. Once, billions of angels lived here. Now, only I may access it.

"It looks like shit," Satan replies, spitting the last word out. "Nothin' to see, nothin' to do. I should have known you'd use some trickery to fuck with me."

This realm is no illusion. 'Tis the place where angels once fought at their strongest... myself included. It amplifies the power of Holy Energy a thousandfold. It gives me quite an unfair advantage against one as ignorant as thyself.

Raphael motions with his hands. A copy of himself phases from his body, then materializes on his left. He repeats the process over and over. Within seconds, a hundred Raphaels surround me, forming a circle of flesh.

All of them speak at once.

The Creator's pure essence floods this plane. Those who cannot tap into it are doomed to fall at my hands. 'Tis one of my many ultimate techniques, the one I've specially chosen to ensure thy destruction.

Satan's voice falters. "S-sounds like a bunch of malarkey to me. If you're so bloody strong, then get on with it! I won't just sit back and let you-"

Raphael moves. Each of his mirages rushes at me. In the time it takes me to speak two syllables, each of his copies delivers a gut-busting punch to every inch of my body. Satan's Vectors flop around uselessly, unable to keep up with Raphael's speed. The world spins and careens again, but this time a wall of pain accompanies the disorientation.

WHAM.

Satan hits the deck so hard it takes a moment for us to feel the impact.

"K... kah..."

A weak gasp slips from Satan's mouth. His eyes wiggle in their sockets, trying desperately to refocus on the world around him.

"Wh... you... how..."

When my eyes finally readjust to pierce the array of colors blinding me, I can only stare at Raphael in silence. Every copy of Raphael tears off their upper-body robes simultaneously, revealing pale white skin, hundreds of horrific scars and burn marks... and incredibly toned muscles.

Raphael exhales.

Haah... long has it been since I fought at my full capacity. Striking thee reminds me of punching a rock. I might break my fingers on thy blood-red hide.

Satan clutches his stomach. He staggers to his feet, using several Vectors at once to stabilize himself.

"Buh... bastard... c-couldn't beat me in... in the real world, huh? You had to take me to... to your home turf... just to stand a chance."

Raphael motions again. A sword created from pure Holy Energy appears in every copy's hands.

There's no need to waste thy energy speaking, Satan. For the crimes of killing my beloved brother and attacking the minds of my two dear sisters... I banish thee to an eternal sleep.

Raphael disappears.

One hundred blades of holy energy impale my body. I never see them coming.

Satan tries to scream but fails. A sword stabbed through the back of his head forces our mouth open.

My vision goes white.

* * *

Im... impossible!

Raphael's voice booms again.

I open my eyes.

Raphael's hundred copies gaze at me in horror.

Regeneration... of... of that level?! I destroyed thy entire body!

Satan blinks.

What's that... that old codger talking about? How am I alive? He killed me. I felt my life slip away.

Blinking, Satan pulls himself to his feet. To my astonishment, he seems noticeably stronger than before. His energy has returned. He doesn't use his Vectors to stand.

Satan lifts his hand and stares at his palm, opening and closing it again.

"I'm... alive?"

Not for long!

Raphael's clones charge. For a split second, my heart stops. I can almost make out their movements.

I'm still far too slow to react.

One hundred swords made from Holy Energy impale my body. The sensation of my head leaving my shoulders reaches me.

Again, the world goes white.

* * *

I awaken.

No! No, no, no!

Raphael's eyes widen in horror.

I've seen this... this despicable magic only once before... never did I think such vile, putrid corruption would return to the cosmos.

Satan pulls himself up, but this time he hops to his feet as though he's slept for a hundred years. Cracking his neck, the Devil blinks and stares at the old man.

"What's the matter, gramps? You didn't expect this turn of events? Neither did I."

Do not play the fool with me, Satan. Thou knoweth the horrible deeds thou hath committed.

One of Raphael's copies, possibly the primary one, takes a step forward. He points at me with a shaking hand.

Thou art a soul manipulator! I know it! Thou art rebirthing thy body by expending a soul! Tell me the truth!

Satan rubs his forehead.

Expending a soul? Is grandpa off his rocker? How would I know what he's talking about?

Satan's breathing catches.

No. That's right. I know what he means. My contracts. I sensed they were making me stronger... but... I didn't know souls could be used to revive myself.

Satan's eyes widen.

"Eight hundred and eighty-three."

Raphael frowns.

What?

"That's how many souls are in me. I feel 'em. Ha... haha... HAHAHA!" Satan doubles over in laughter, slapping his stomach. "Aw, shit, that's priceless! The look on your face is killin' me!"

'Tis no laughing matter!" Raphael straightens his posture. All of his clones rush me again. This time, I clearly see their movements as they fan around me and rush in from every angle.

I'm still too slow to react.

When the swords impale me, it takes several moments of agonizing pain before one of the copies forcibly removes my head from my shoulders. Raphael unleashes a blast of Holy Energy, eradicating the rest of my body.

...And not long afterward, my body reconstructs itself.

Raphael doesn't hesitate. He attacks again, killing me before I can get my bearings.

Five times in a row, my eyes open, only to fade to pure whiteness as Raphael murders me over and over.

During my sixth reconstruction, Raphael charges in to attack again, but Satan pounces off the ground with astounding speed. His Vectors lash out, grab five of Raphael's copies, and crush them, tearing his copies into particles of light.

"Hahaha!!!" Satan cackles maniacally. "Oh, I am a lucky demon, aren't I? Bahaha!!!"

Raphael's clones jump back, avoiding my attacks. They regroup a short distance away and turn to face me, eying the Devil warily.

Tch. Thy movements and strength are somehow stronger after slaying thee several times. Such improvements should be impossible, even with the manipulation of souls!

Satan flexes his arms. Already, his strength seems ten times higher than it was before. His body ripples with power.

What dumb luck. All this time, I thought my contractees were only making me a little stronger and faster... but they were turning me into an unkillable monster as well. I can't imagine a better turn of events. The old man can't beat me, not even after all his bravado!

Satan sets his jaw and grins wickedly.

I can only wonder what other effects these souls have had on me.

The Devil takes one step toward Raphael and his copies. The old man shrinks slightly, but holds his ground.

Had I known thy capacity for evil would become this grand; I would have ignored the Titan treaties to hunt thy people down. Manipulation of souls is a disgusting and vile form of black magic. It corrupts the manipulator, and curses those bound to him to a lifetime of unending agony.

"Like I give a crap. The idiots signed their lives away to me. If they died, I got their souls. It ain't like I killed them myself."

Satan pauses. Something bubbles inside his stomach, as though he's trying to wretch.

Nine-hundred and five souls, now. Damn. Demons are dying like crazy in Heaven, but Raphael has me trapped in this light-realm place. Their souls are powering me up even more, but I can't help them if I'm here.

The souls slowly tick upward inside of Satan as more and more of his demons perish.

A drop of sweat drips down Satan's forehead.

The others are counting on me. I have to kill this old bag of bones... or else.

Satan charges. This time, it's his speed that catches Raphael off-guard. The Devil's Vectors move twenty times faster than before. They lash out and rip apart several copies in the blink of an eye, forcing the others to soar into the sky, scattering about to put distance between themselves and Satan.

He jumps from one copy to the next, hurtling through the air like a stinger missile made of flesh. It only takes a minute for him to destroy over fifty of Raphael's clones.

Suddenly, before Satan can land the killing blow, one of Raphael's copies motions with his hands. A brilliant light like that of the sun erupts outward, blinding Satan.

"Geeeyaugh!"

The Devil screams in pain, but his Vectors continue tearing the clone apart.

Satan rubs his tear-filled eyes. Surges of pain ebb and flow inside his mind.

As I thought. Thy Vectors act in a manner identical to Samael's. Even when thou art blinded, they continue to attack.

Raphael's voice has an edge to it, as if he's changed his opinion of me. He considers Satan a threat now, not merely a trifle to look down upon.

While my Vectors thrash around, something speeds past my left side. Satan tries to grab it, but he misses. A Vector suddenly starts behaving erratically, not moving to attack clones as it was doing a moment before. Instead, it begins spiraling around, thrashing as if trying to shake something off.

Whiff.

Another rush of air, this time to my right. A second Vector begins thrashing.

By the time my vision has returned, all of my Vectors have stopped following my mental orders. I turn my head back and gape at a rope of magical energy binding them all together.

"What?! How did you...?!"

Raphael doesn't answer. His remaining clones, still several dozen strong, surround me. Each one draws a holy sword again and charges.

SHIK! SHIK!

Several of the blades impale me. Raphael raises me in the air and slams me against the ground.

There's only one way to stop a Soul Manipulator of thy caliber!

Raphael swings his swords of light up and down. In a single second, he systematically dismembers all of my limbs. By the time I can process the pain, I'm completely limbless.

Raphael motions with his hand.

Light begins to build in his palm, like that which Gabriel unleashed not fifteen minutes before.

Satan gasps. Blood spills from his shoulders and hips. He wriggles his head around and tries to move his arms and legs, but fails.

Raphael unleashes his final attack.

A torrent of Holy Energy slams against my body, burning and charring my skin.

Satan opens his mouth to scream in pain, but nothing comes out.

After twenty seconds, Raphael ceases his final assault and concludes the battle.

A minute passes.

Satan slumps against the ground and breathes heavily.

"You... you..."

The Devil shifts his head from left to right, but his limbs don't react. The Vectors wriggle slightly, but Raphael's mana rope binds them tightly so they can't break free.

Raphael desummons his clones. He walks toward me and stops, his sandal inches from my face.

I cannot kill thee. Given that thou art a soul manipulator, the safest course of action is to render thee immovable and paralyzed. I shall seal thou here inside the Cosmic Realm, whereupon thou shan't be able to assist thy people. Tis the only way to prevent thy filth from spreading.

Satan's breath comes in heavy, ragged gulps. "You... you beat me? No! I won't stand for it! F-fuck you, old man! Coward! What kind of bastard leaves his enemy to bleed out and die?!"

Raphael shakes his head. His eyes and voice return to normal as he summons his robes once again. "I have sealed thy wounds with my holy magic. Thou shalt not perish here. With thy troublesome Vectors rendered useless, and thou left unable to move, thou shalt lie here for all eternity."

Raphael turns away. "I must go. My people need me."

"Hey! Don't leave me here! What's wrong with you?! Raphael! Raphael!!"

Satan howls angrily at the old man, but Raphael ignores him.

"I will check on thee periodically. For now, I must ensure the destruction of the invaders. Farewell, Satan."

"Bastard! BASTAAARD!!"

Satan howls in rage, but Raphael creates a portal and steps through it, ignoring the demon leader's tantrum.

* * *

Silence follows.

Satan's breathing slows to a crawl. He gazes at the spot where Raphael left, and his eyes widen in horror.

"No... no no no... he can't leave me here... he can't do this to me! I'm Satan! I rule the demons!"

Satan's voice carries into the distance, echoing around a now dead-silent room.

Inside Satan's mind, a voice speaks.

Most amusing. It seems my brother has discovered thy weakness.

"Samael?"

Satan's eyes lower to the pure white ground beneath him, now splotched red with his blood.

"That's right. You're still inside me, Archangel!"

As are many others. I must applaud my brother's brilliance. With thy putrid form locked away inside the Cosmic Realm, no longer will thy power pose a threat to the angels. Thy minions are far weaker than thee. They will fall when the cherubs rain upon them.

Samael's face slowly coalesces in Satan's memories. The Archangel smirks self-assuredly.

I might have to suffer within thy mind, but at least I can rest easy knowing thou art sealed here, forever.

Satan flicks his gaze to the Vectors behind him. Concentrating, he tries desperately to free himself, wriggling them back and forth. However, the mana ropes bind him tightly. The Vectors can't break their bonds.

"Gahh!! How did Raphael beat me?! I was invincible! I was faster than him!"

Nay, Samael replies. My Vectors have a weakness. While at first glance, they might seem to be the ultimate offense and defense, their effectiveness relies on the wielder's mental prowess. With thy mind temporarily dazed from Raphael's stunning light, thy Vectors slowed considerably. Raphael was able to outmaneuver and bind them.

Samael's smirk widens.

Just as I trained him to do several millennia ago.

Satan's jaw drops. "You told your brother your weakness? Are you stupid?!"

Nay. I trusted Raphael wholeheartedly. All of us did. He knows every Archangel's weakness, in case a terrible event should befall us. While I no longer possess memories of the Dragon Wars, Raphael explained to me that a terrible sickness once overtook one of us. The mental illness resulted in them going power-mad. They slew a thousand other angels, and only the combined might of angelkind was able to stop them. I never wanted such a thing to happen to me.

Satan's body sags. He rests his face against the warm ground. "I see. Damn. Shit. So that's how it is, eh?"

A minute passes.

Neither the Devil nor the Archangel says a word.

Satan breaks the silence.

"So... I'm stuck here, then?"

Aye.

"And you're the only person I can talk to?"

I will not provide thee any further conversation, demon. I merely wished to mock thy predicament for a while.

Satan gnashes his teeth together.

"No. You're going to help me find a way out. That's an order, Samael. Remember? You're still my servant. I can make you do anything I want."

Samael's grin vanishes. He winces as if something were striking his skull.

Tch. I won't. I'll resist thy orders, even to my dying breath.

"No, you'll obey! Help me escape, Samael! You're a devil-damned Archangel! Use your brain!"

Samael recoils. His figure shrinks in my mind as he swoons back and forth.

Stop... stop making me... do thy dirty work... I won't listen... I won't...

"You WILL!" Satan howls at the top of his lungs. He lifts his head and screams into the void. "Help me escape! Help me heal myself! Do it, you stupid, worthless chicken!!"

A moment passes. Samael goes quiet.

When he speaks again, his voice becomes monotone.

Of course. I will help thee, Master Satan. What are thy orders?

Satan slumps again. "Cripes. I've gotta pull teeth around here to get anything done. Alright, kid. First order of business... break those Vectors free and help me reattach my limbs."

"And after that?"

"Freedom."

Part 111: The Unstoppable Archangels

After leaving Satan's limbless body, I next arrive inside a dark room. My senses go numb, making it impossible for me to feel anything. At the same time, dull pain ebbs and flows through me, the result of sore muscles that have ached for a hundred years without anyone bothering to soothe them.

I hang limply from a wall, but despite how badly I want to shift to get comfortable, I can't.

Everything hurts.

My mouth opens. "Hm... gnn..."

A guttural grunt escapes my lips. My eyes crack open, but I still can't see anything.

Beside me, chains rattle. "Wha...? You... say somethin'... boss?"

The man's voice is weak and fragile. Speaking a single word seems to take the wind out of his sails.

My host grunts. "Unh... noi... noises... out... side..."

A monumental effort to lift my head ensues. My host gathers his energy for several seconds, willing every muscle in his neck to move. Slowly, he tilts his head up to look away from the ground and across the room. While everything around us is pitch black, a sliver of light, so faint I can barely see it even if I concentrate, washes across the floor.

It comes from the crack underneath a wooden door.

With a start, I suddenly realize where I am.

Michael's dungeon.

I'm inside Diablo's body.

Diablo stares at the slit for several seconds before his strength gives out. His head flops forward, allowing his chin to rest against his chest.

As the minutes pass, my eyes slowly adjust to the darkness. I begin to make out faint objects illuminated by the doorway's light. A table, covered in blood, with straps at each corner to hold someone immobile. Torture tools, including knives, saws, and meat hooks, lay across a tool bench, ready to be used on Michael's victims. I don't recognize half of the implements... nor do I want to know what purpose they serve.

The doorway's light shifts. Bael and Diablo both stop breathing for several seconds, turning the room deathly silent.

Diablo's thoughts bubble in my mind. No... please... not again. He already hurt me twice today... I want to die. Someone, end my suffering. Please, Master, no more. No more... no more...

A tear squeezes from Diablo's eyes. It slides down his face, and he desperately snakes his dry, cracked tongue out to lick it. Even the slightest drop of water is an oasis to the helpless, battered demon.

He fails. The tear drips off his chin and plops to the ground below. Diablo's body sags even further as whatever hope he had left vanishes entirely.

The shadows at the doorway continue to shift. Suddenly, the door flies open. Blinding light radiates inside, making Diablo wince as he tries to close his eyes and block it out. I catch a glimpse of his scarred brown skin, an unhealthy color for a demon. The mottled patches here and there tell tales of torture involving cuts, burns, and possibly even acid.

The figure in the doorway stares at us for several seconds. Diablo presses his eyes shut. No, please... not again... not again...

Finally, the newcomer speaks. "Di... Diablo? Bael?"

Her voice, sweet and pure like nectar, tickles Diablo's ears.

Still, he keeps his eyes shut.

It's a trick. Master is trying to make us react. If we do, he'll cut us for twice as long. I can't listen. Must... must look away.

Footsteps. Several people enter the room.

"Bloody devils," Another woman says. "I... I can't believe it..."

"Help me get them down," The first says. "Diablo? Are you alive? It's me. Lucifer."

Diablo's heartbeat quickens. It's a trick. A trick! It can't be Lucy. Lucy died! Master said so. Master killed her himself.

Something touches my chest. Diablo's entire body seizes up as every muscle comes alive. He squeezes his eyes shut, waiting for something to stab, prod, or burn him for the Archangel's amusement.

"Easy, easy. I'm here to get you down. Nerissa, he's alive. They both are. Thank the devils."

Clink. Clink.

Sounds echo above me, where my arms are restrained. Suddenly, the shackles open. I fall off the wall and plummet into the soft, warm body of a woman.

Diablo finally opens his eyes.

A mouth filled with teeth greets him. Lucifer smiles in possibly her most genuine display of affection. It sends terror through my heart, but joy through Diablo's.

"Lu... Lu... cy...? You... came... for me?"

His voice, hoarse, croaks out, barely audible even as a whisper.

Lucifer's arms wrap around my back. She grunts and hefts me up, pressing me close to her chest. "Tch. Damn. You might be only skin and bones, but you still weigh a lot. Belial, you get Bael. Nerissa, keep watch. I don't know why Michael isn't here, but-"

Diablo's eyes shoot open.

No! No!! They're here to rescue me? They can't! Master will kill them! He'll hurt Lucy, and Bael, and me too!

"Leave... me... here!" Diablo puts up the weakest struggle of his life as he forces himself to lift one weary arm. He barely manages to touch Lucifer's side, let alone push her away. "Mas... master... returns... soon..."

Lucifer ignores him. She pivots Diablo around to hoist him onto her back, then wraps his arms around her front and carries him in an uncomfortable piggyback.

"Come on, Belial. What's taking you so long?"

I raise my eyes to the succubus. Belial shakily tries to jam a key into Bael's remaining cuff as he hangs by one arm from the wall. The poor guy is in awful shape. His body, usually fat and disgusting, is withered and thin. I can barely make out the ribs piercing through his flesh in the dim light.

"I... I c-can't get the key to work..." Belial flicks her gaze to the doorway, then back to the shackle. "Oh, devils... come on, come on..."

Lucifer snarls. "Just break the cuff, idiot. It's rusted. You're strong. Must I do everything around here?"

Belial's breath catches. "Right. Break it. Sorry, I... I-I'm not thinking straight. Nnn..."

I've known Belial for years. She hangs out with Phoebe all the time. Never once have I seen such genuine terror on her face. With her tiny little horns and diminutive figure, the succubus appears like a scared little girl in this vision. She's a different person from the Belial I know now.

Belial reaches up and pinches the cuffs. They shatter in her grasp and fall apart. Bael falls forward, and the succubus catches him effortlessly.

Bael appears to be a bit more lucid than Diablo. "Ugh... sugar-tits... long time... no see, eh? Took you... took you long enough."

"Sh-shut up," Belial whispers. She extends her right arm, loops it around Bael's waist, and hefts the tall demon at her side. "C-come on. We need to get out of here. Now."

"No shit," Lucifer mutters. "Nerissa. Take the lead."

Nerissa nods. She appears relatively confident, as does Lucifer. Both of them seem unconcerned about Michael's return, but Belial looks like she could shit her pants at any moment.

Bael sighs contentedly as the succubus holds him against her thigh. "Haah... feels good... to be off that wall. If I could just... lift m'damn arm... I'd cop a nice feel..."

Nerissa glares at him. "Maybe we should leave this moron hanging-"

"Quiet," Lucifer snaps, cutting her off. "Keep those thoughts to yourself."

"Whatever."

Nerissa quickly shimmies over to the doorway. Lucifer tails her, while Belial and Bael stay to the rear.

"Clear," Nerissa whispers as she peers into the blinding light.

Outside, the distant sounds of screams, roars, and metal clanking against metal reaches my ears. The prison isn't as far from Elderium as Raphael and Uzziel implied.

The three of us step into the open, ducking low to stay close to the ground. A field of tall flowers obscures us somewhat from the vision of the battlefield combatants.

Belial whimpers in the rear. "Oh... oh no... how are we going to make it to the portal? Look at all those Cherubs! There are so many of them!"

"Quit your whining," Lucifer mutters. "Aren't you supposed to be strong? You can handle a few cherubs one-handed, no problem."

"Y-yeah, but... I'm a lover... not... not a fighter..."

Lucifer winces. One of the demon grunts gets hurled into the sky thanks to some incredibly strong cherub. The demon screams in terror as he hurtles toward the ground, landing on his back with a sickening crunch.

"There won't be anyone for you to love if we don't make it out of here alive. Now, focus, and start thinking of ways to-"

Lucifer freezes mid-sentence. "Impossible!" She dives to the side as a blur of motion smashes into the ground where she stood only a moment before. I go flying as the demoness releases me, sending me sprawling onto my spine. The pain is no worse than what's already wracking my body.

My eyes take a moment to adjust before I recognize the newcomer.

Michael.

Recommended Listening

The Archangel, his sword stabbed into the ground, stares at us silently. The gem in the sword's hilt glows blue, seeming to pound in tandem to each beat of my heart.

Michael stares coldly at Lucifer as he pulls his blade from the dirt. "How spry thou art, demoness."

Nerissa spins on her heel and hops backward to put distance between herself and the Archangel. Her confidence vanishes. She must have thought we were in the clear.

Belial shrinks back, inching toward the field of flowers to make herself a smaller target.

Michael ignores the two succubi. He focuses his attention on Lucifer.

"I suppose thou art the leader here."

Lucifer tenses up. She takes a defensive stance, waiting for him to strike. "Sharp eyes, little chicken."

Michael narrows his gaze. "I'll put an end to thy insults, wench."

He vanishes.

The Archangel of Courage's movement is far too fast for me to follow. He appears right in front of Lucifer with his sword in mid-swing, aimed at her neck.

Lucifer jerks her body backward, allowing the sword to pass over her by mere inches. Michael chops off several hairs, sending them blowing into the wind.

What follows next is an impossibly fast sequence of events. Michael slashes, chops, and cuts Lucifer. She tries to dodge, but falls short as the Archangel cuts her skin to ribbons.

The tip of Michael's sword glances across the demoness time and time again, dicing her leathery clothing apart, gashing shallow wounds into her flesh, and poking at her weak points.

Lucifer sprawls to the ground. The Archangel moves to stand atop her, dominating the demoness with his shadow.

"Oh. It's already over," Michael says, his voice emotionless.

Lucifer's breaths come in shallow gasps. Her confidence shattered, the demoness stares up at the Archangel with a mixture of awe, disgust, and fear.

I didn't know he was this fast, her eyes say. I couldn't dodge or block anything. I've never seen someone move like that in all my life.

"Get away from her!" Nerissa shouts. The succubus summons two blades of ice in each hand and launches herself at the Archangel.

Michael lightly tosses his blade from his right hand to his left and begins deflecting all of Nerissa's clumsy slashes like an adult poking at a toddler with a stick.

Nerissa screams a bloody warcry as she swings at Michael, battering and bashing her ice-swords against his. The succubus hops backward and launches ice projectiles at him, but he bats them away effortlessly.

Never once does Michael take his eyes off Lucifer's.

"Aaah!" Nerissa screams. I miss what happened. She stumbles back; a hundred bloody gashes carved out across her face, chest, arms, and legs. Her pure white tattoos run red with blood.

"Pitiful," Michael murmurs, as he gazes at the unmoving demoness below him. "I defeated both of thee in seconds, while that other one is too frightened to move a muscle. Thy goal was to take my prisoners... but ye haven't the strength to succeed. In the end, all thou hath accomplished is giving me three new toys to play with."

"T... toys..." Lucifer echoes.

"That's right."

More screams in the distance sound off as angels and demons collide. Nobody moves a muscle. The rescue plans fall apart in an instant as Lucifer and her comrades face off against the unyielding warrior.

Nobody can beat Master, Diablo thinks to himself. It's impossible. But... now, Lucy can be with Master and me. It's... it's all okay. The light hurts my eyes. I don't... I never wanted to leave. I don't want Master to hate me...

"B-Bastard!" Belial drops Bael unceremoniously, plopping the tall, skinny demon on his face. Her eyes illuminate with fire as her protective instincts take over. "Nobody hurts my sister!!"

Each of Belial's fingers transform into tiny knives as she pounces at the Archangel's backside.

Michael flicks his gaze away from the four-breasted demoness beneath him. "Oh? Maybe that one does have a little fight in her."

Belial ducks, dodging Michael's instant strike before I can see it coming. By the time his sword reverses direction, she manages to deflect it with her knife-like hands, batting the blade away from her neck. It misses by inches.

While the fight with Lucifer may have finished within five seconds, Belial's speed greatly surpasses the triple-eyed demoness. She moves with precision, allowing instincts to take over as she dodges would-be lethal strikes from her opponent.

However, despite Belial's superior combat prowess compared to her sister and Lucifer, she's no match for Michael.

Michael stares at her with a blank expression as they trade blows. Not a trace of joy or fear passes over his face.

"Thou dost lack spirit and vitality, demoness. Perhaps, given a thousand years, thy combat potential might come within a mile of mine... but today, thou art a petulant child, unable to contain her emotions."

Belial grits her teeth. She swings her claws at the Archangel, but he easily dodges the attack.

Shik.

With her flank exposed, Belial doesn't see Michael's counter-attack incoming. He races up to the succubus and plunges his sword through her stomach, then rushes forward, slamming her against a nearby boulder.

"Aaaaaiiee!"

Belial lets out a pitiful shriek of pain. Michael responds with a backhanded fist to her face, knocking the daylights out of her.

After a moment, Michael grabs the succubus by her throat, yanks his sword from her gut, and casually tosses her aside.

"One hundred years of planning, and these females are all the bloodskins could muster. I'm... disappointed."

Michael sweeps his gaze across the three defeated women. Each of them shivers as he looks upon them, only to shudder in relief when he turns away.

"W... we... can still... fight..."

Nerissa pulls herself to her feet. Despite blood covering every inch of her exposed, naked body, she shakily raises a hand to summon another blade of ice. With Michael having chopped off the few bits of cloth she used to cover herself, she seems so weak and pitiful that I want to laugh. Indeed, Michael does.

"Huhu..." Michael shakes his head. "I thought I shattered thy fighting spirit, but it seems thy sister's blood has restored some of thy willpower. Amusing. Her pain might seem unbearable now, but after I finish-"

"CANNONBALL!"

A single shouted word interrupts Michael. He turns to the side as a mass of green rushes him. Agares, now in his lizard form, slams against the Archangel's back with his full body mass. He wraps around Michael, digging his claws deep into the Archangel's chest.

"Gah! By the Creator-! Ye damned...!!"

Michael rolls around, trying to shake the green-skinned demon off, but he fails. Agares chomps onto Michael's shoulder with his snake-like fangs, sending poison deep into Michael's arteries.

Lucifer quickly hops to her feet, only to wince in pain. "Tch... to be rescued by a male... bah! Many thanks, Agares! Now, hold him still. Nerissa! Heal your sister!"

Nerissa nods. "On it!"

While she rushes over to cauterize Belial's wounds, Lucifer gently touches the slash-marks covering her body before quickly forming several magic seals. Her third eye begins to glow. "Time to take a nap, Archangel. After I'm done with you, the others won't be able to put you back together again."

"Cowards!" Michael's thrashing grows noticeably weaker as Agares' poison seeps into his body. "Attacking from behind... always... the mark of... vermin..."

Lucifer's eye glows, turning a fiery red.

Right as she aims to unleash some devastating attack on the Archangel, a blur of motion from the sky forces her to cancel. She dives to the side as an angel rushes at her from above, slashing at her with a blade made from pure Holy Energy.

An armored cherub, small in stature, but wearing silver and gold platemail from head to toe, points his glowing sword at her. The silent specter immediately reminds me of Barbatos. His helmet fully obscures his face, save for a few narrow slits for his eyes.

"A cherub? Bah! Pathetic! Enjoy a quick death, you little rat!"

Lucifer's third eye glows. The instant she fires a laser at the warrior, he motions with his left hand, forming a tower shield of Holy Energy in his grasp. He ducks and deflects Lucifer's attack, reflecting the superheated beam into the sky.

The demoness continues firing, aiming for the cherub's arms and legs. Never once does Michael's armored savior speak a word, or even so much as grunt. Silently, he hops, dodges, and rolls to the side, easily evading her attacks.

Gasping for breath, Lucifer pauses her assault. Given the damage Michael dealt to Lucifer already, and her rapid use of her mana reserves, she must be low on energy. Indeed, the cherub seizes his chance and rushes at her, clearing the fifty-foot gap in an instant. He holds up his Holy Shield and slams against her like a wrecking ball, smashing the demoness backward until she crashes into a tree.

"Ahh!" Lucifer gasps and flails for a moment before going limp against the cherub's shield.

"Lu... cy..." Diablo gasps out her name. His eyes bulge as the cherub pulls away, leaving the demoness to collapse, exhausted, the majority of her bones broken.

Lucifer falls unconscious. However, in her stead, the two succubi rise to their feet. Belial, having healed both herself and her sister, takes a defensive posture.

"This... this guy is trouble," Belial whispers to Nerissa. "First, Michael, and now a cherub. Don't underestimate him. He seems strong."

Nerissa glances at Lucifer's unconscious form. "Don't worry. I won't. How are we going to beat him?"

"We have to work together. Like we practiced. No more solo attacks. Got it?"

"Right."

The cherub warrior slowly approaches them, keeping his distance. He cautiously evaluates his new opponents, perhaps sensing that they might be more trouble than his former adversary.

"Hey! You! Angel!" Agares yells out, startling the cherub. He flicks his gaze toward the lizard. "Give up, or Michael gets it! I've poisoned him! If you hurt one more hair on any demon's head, I'll rip his throat out!"

Michael lays unmoving in Agares grasp. Despite the young reptile's confidence, Michael doesn't appear as weak to me as he should. His eyes, alert as ever, jump from the succubi to the cherub. Evaluating the situation, assessing his options, and waiting for the time to strike.

As Agares yells out and releases his fangs from Michael's shoulder, the Archangel seizes his opportunity. He swings his elbow back with terrific force, bashing Agares' face with a blow so stunning that a shockwave rips through the air. Agares goes flying. His tail and claws lose their grip on Michael's chest as momentary disorientation hits him. He tumbles and twists for thirty feet before coming to a stop in the middle of a patch of flowers.

"Aaaooo..."

Michael quickly rises, only to stumble forward and cough up bloody mucus. He blinks, and his eyes droop. "Nnn... curses... damned toxin..."

The Archangel rubs his affected shoulder and winces. "I... I won't... be much use. C-Catherine. Catherine!" He yells at the armored cherub and falls to his knees. "Don't hold back. Give it... give them your... your..."

Michael's eyes close. He flops forward and falls on his face. Dead? Unconscious? I can't tell.

Only a minute has passed since Michael first arrived. Already, time is a blur. Everything happens so quickly it's hard for me to follow. Nevertheless, the final battle appears to be between two succubi and a single cherub.

Catherine.

Catherine.

Is the angel warrior a woman?

I wouldn't know it by looking at her. Despite her short height, her armor seems as masculine as any of the men I've seen. I can't make out her face or hair or anything else underneath, and her fighting style isn't especially feminine either.

Catherine.

I've heard that name before.

I can't recall where or when.

Catherine raises her shield as Belial and Nerissa charge. Belial tosses her sister into the sky, allowing Nerissa to fire a barrage of ice-shards at the angel below. Catherine swings her sword and bats them aside, imitating Michael's deflections not long before.

Belial stretches toward Catherine, turning one arm into a Scyther-style blade. She lunges for the cherub, but Catherine deflects with her shield, dives to a roll beneath Belial, and kicks upward. Her attack flings the succubus forward. Belial yelps in surprise, but rights herself with her stretchy limbs and lands on her palms and feet like a tigress.

Catherine hops backward, toward me. She flicks her head toward Michael, quickly checking his condition before returning her attention to the succubi.

Nerissa lands beside Belial and spins to face the cherub. "Sister. We don't have time to spare. Reinforcements will arrive soon."

"I... I know. If the cherub would take Michael and leave, we could all go in peace. For some people, violence is the only language they speak."

Agares, having recovered from Michael's stunning blow, clambers to his feet. He shakes his disorientation off and leaps behind the cherub, readying to attack her from the rear.

Catherine glances back at him. I can't see her eyes, but her body language suggests a tinge of doubt. I can't fight three opponents at once. They have me pinned.

She appears competent, and very adept at the art of battle. However, even with two badly injured opponents and only one relatively healthy one, her fighting potential is far below Michael's.

Sensing Catherine's hesitation, Nerissa charges. She rushes at the cherub and summons a massive warhammer of ice. With a single motion, she swings its face toward the angel. Catherine rolls to the side, allowing the weapon to pound the grass flat.

The moment the hammer hits, it explodes.

Shards of ice erupt in every direction. The cherub barely manages to raise her shield in time to deflect the attack. As soon as she does, Agares pounces at her exposed back. "Hoho! Chance!"

"Not so fast, demons!"

From the sky, a male cries out. I look up in time to see a beam of Holy Energy blast at Agares. The lizard's tail stabs into the ground mid-jump and yanks him backward, barely allowing him to avoid one of Gabriel's deadly attacks. Gabriel's Holy Beam explodes just behind Catherine, saving her from what would likely have been a lethal blow.

Belial stretches her arm out and grabs Nerissa, yanking her sister out of the way as Camael, the Archangel of Divination, joins the fray. Camael's slams her enchanted hammer into where the ice-succubus was standing only a second before.

The demons might have defeated Catherine, had she been their only opponent. However, with two Archangels on the scene, the fire dies in their eyes.

Nerissa retreats a few steps, falling into place beside Belial. Gabriel swoops down and pulls Catherine to her feet. "Art thou unhurt, sister?"

Catherine nods.

"Excellent," Gabriel continues. "My apologies, but a few stragglers slowed us down on the way here."

Catherine never says a word. She raises her sword and shield and turns to face Agares.

"No, Catherine," Gabriel says, touching her shoulder. "Tend to Michael. His wounds look to be quite severe. Camael and I will handle these vultures."

The Archangel of Power shields Catherine with his body, using his fourteen-foot height to form a wall of flesh between her and Agares. She rushes to Michael's side and cautiously hoists one of his arms around her shoulder, then flies away, taking the enfeebled Archangel with her.

Gabriel glares at the green-skinned demon. "Thy face is familiar to me, Scaled One. Have we met?"

Agares' eyes climb the Archangel's mountain of a body. "Eh. Yes. We fought the, err, last time I visited Heaven."

"I see. And that means that thou were, in part, responsible for Samael's death."

Agares swallows. "Uhm... no?"

"I don't like liars," Gabriel murmurs. "Not one bit."

The Archangel of Power stretches to his full height and towers over the diminutive six-foot-tall reptilian. With a flourish of his hands, he summons a ten-foot-long greatsword, dwarfing any weapon I've seen in my entire life.

"Thou shalt pay for turning my brother against me, little one."

Gabriel attacks. Agares smashes his feet into the ground and dives backward, barely avoiding the Archangel's two-handed strike. His blade tears into the dirt and rips up the soil, spraying it in a cone toward me. Diablo flinches as a small mountain of debris flies at us, covering us in rocks, grass, and worms.

I open my eyes and watch as Gabriel charges the reptile. His massive body pulverizes the ground beneath him, leaving huge footprints everywhere he stomps. Agares frantically dodges every swing, but Gabriel attacks much faster than his size implies should be possible. Every time his two-handed sword impacts a boulder, a tree, or anything else in its way, it shatters the object into a hail of materials scattering halfway across Heaven.

While Gabriel and Agares battle, Camael stands silently, facing her succubus opponents. She evaluates them for several moments, but they keep their distance, waiting for her to attack.

Camael licks her lips. "I have foreseen a great many things."

Belial shoots a nervous glance at Nerissa, then returns to Camael. "Archangel. I do not wish to fight. I only want to save our brothers. This might mean little to you, but I've never killed an angel. Can't we put down our weapons and issue a ceasefire?"

Camael's gaze hardens.

"I'm afraid not. I, too, would prefer to cease hostilities. However, such a prospect is not on the table for either of us."

"Why not?! Please! If we could only stop and talk, we might be able-"

"Nay." Camael squeezes her enchanted hammer tighter. "I knew thou woulds't attack us, today. I foresaw our battle in my dreams. I knew Satan was a liar and that he would betray his word, but still... still, I hoped the path of fate might change. I am an agent of the Creator. I do not choose where the river of destiny leads me. I merely follow its flow. Whenever I try to change His will, tragedy occurs. Therefore... as He demanded in my dreams... thou shalt perish here, along with the rest of thy brethren!"

Camael's words are confident, ripe with conviction. Nevertheless, she hesitates, if only for a moment, and a thought occurs to me as she raises her hammer to attack.

The Archangel of Divination is lying.

If Camael's thoughts from her vision were accurate, then she believes the angels can't defeat the demons. She's foreseen her enemies taking over the world and eventually slaughtering all of angelkind. To think her people would claim victory today is blind ignorance, or, more likely, a bald-faced lie.

Shaking her misgivings away, the Archangel of Divination flaps her wings. The movement allows her to rush at the succubi from a standstill, startling them as she swings Mjölnir at Belial.

Belial tries to dodge. She dives toward Camael's legs, but Mjölnir strikes her pelvis and sends the succubus flying. Belial spins and careens to the side, then skids to a stop twenty feet away. She opens her mouth to scream, but with all the wind knocked out of her, she can't. Her hip bends unnaturally, shattered from the hammer's impact.

Camael tries to crush the other succubus next, but Nerissa keeps her cool. She summons a wall of frost, blocking Mjölnir before it can strike her. The hammer pounds her makeshift defense with incredible force, but it slows enough for the bloodied succubus to summon an ice spear. She stabs it at Camael, forcing the Archangel to release her hammer and leap backward. Camael's wings stabilize her retreat, allowing her to put more distance between herself and her pursuer.

Nerissa presses her advantage. With one hand, she spins the partisan over her head, hopping around and stabbing it at the Archangel, while her other hand shoots frost shards at Camael.

As if Camael can see the attacks coming before they happen, she narrowly avoids Nerissa's ice, allowing some shards to strike her armor while others whiff past her exposed head.

The Archangel never wastes any energy. Instead, like a practiced martial artist, she absorbs her opponent's attacks and redirects them harmlessly, taking a defensive stance for much of Nerissa's onslaught until the very end, where she suddenly lunges forward and slams her armored palm against the succubi's chest. Nerissa flings backward, flopping and spinning across the ground. She drops her spear at some point and lands near her sister, both of them gasping for breath.

Camael holds up her hand. Mjölnir, stuck in Nerissa's ice-wall, trembles for a moment before leaping out and rushing to the Archangel's outstretched palm.

Meanwhile, Gabriel continues destroying everything in sight as he calmly swings his greatsword from left to right. Trees fall. Boulders cleave in half. Sweat pours from the reptile's body as he desperately tries to avoid Gabriel's attacks.

"Stand still. I would prefer for thy death to be quick," Gabriel says. "I do not enjoy causing others to suffer needlessly."

Agares backflips off a tree as it falls to Gabriel's blade. He spins in midair and lashes his tongue out, wrapping it around a large rock. The moment he hits the ground, the reptile flings his makeshift weapon at Gabriel's chest. The Archangel doesn't even bother with blocking the attack. The small boulder crashes against a force-field surrounding his body and explodes into pebbles.

"Gah! You're not playing fair, chicken!" Agares jumps again, narrowly avoiding another slash from Gabriel's greatsword. "No armor, but you're impossible to hurt! Why don't you pick on someone your own size?!"

A faint smile crosses Gabriel's face. "Amusing. I've slain many Titans in my time. That's what Raphael says. I do not remember their deaths, of course, but trust me, little one. I have fought plenty of beings who were 'my size.'"

As I watch the battles unfold, Diablo shivers.

Welp... this is it, then. Lucy's down. Everyone's knocked out. The Archangels are here. Master will torture us for all eternity. We deserve it. We never stood a chance... and now we're all going to die slow, horrible deaths.

Diablo's eyes wander over to Bael's face-down ass-up form. The starved husk of a demon lies in the grass, too weak to even flop to his side.

Now I only have to wait for the inevitable, Diablo thinks, closing his eyes.

"Eee!" A voice cries out from above. Diablo opens his eyes again to see a ghastly-looking Cherub, one arm torn off and blood streaming from it. The angel, an unarmored man with a badly broken wing, flops into the grass ungracefully.

He lands only a few feet away from Gabriel. The Archangel of Power glances at him. "Shepherd? What's wrong?"

"I-i-it's horrible! Brother, w-we need thy help!" The man grips his bloody stump and grits his teeth, flopping on his back to gaze at Gabriel in horror. "A demon just appeared! It's... it's Valac!"

Gabriel's calm demeanor vanishes. "What?! Valac? The same one who-?"

"Yes!! Him!" Shepherd gasps for breath. "He wiped out an entire platoon of Acolytes! A thousand cherubs perished to his scythe! I c-came as quickly as I could! Raphael needs thy help! He's facing the monster alone!"

"Raphael. No." Gabriel's face turns ashen. He barely spares a glance at Agares. All concern about the reptile vanishes as he unsummons his greatsword. Gabriel whirls to face Camael. "Sister! Forget the small fry! We need to-"

Gabriel stops mid-sentence. Camael stares at him in horror, having already heard Shepherd's news. "Im... impossible. I foresaw all of today's events. Valac didn't... he never appeared in my visions... how could he bypass Fate itself?!"

"I know not, sister. Come, we must save Raphael. Battling Satan will have likely drained his strength. If he falls, then Heaven will be lost forever! We can't leave him to the wolves."

"A-aye." Camael swallows. She flies over to Shepherd's side and quickly pulls him up. "Come, brother. Let me assist thee. Despite our rush, leaving thee with these demons is a death sentence."

"Thou art taking me to... to the Reaper?!" Shepherd pulls away. "No! No! I don't want to go! He'll kill me! He'll kill us all!"

"Calm thy nerves," Camael says, as her face twists into anger. "I'll drop thee off somewhere safe. I won't let more of my family perish to that abomination."

The Archangels ignore our defeated troupe. They flap their wings and take off, leaving all of the battered and beaten demons behind.

Agares gapes at them.

"Satan... he and the old man left. They vanished to fight alone. If Raphael returned, then that means..."

The reptile bows his head. A look of disbelief washes across his face.

"The boss... he's dead? No. He can't be! I fought beside him. He's strong! He must've... must've..."

Agares trails off. After a moment, he demorphs from his reptilian form and sags to his knees. Shaking away his disorientation, he glances at me, then all the others nearby.

"Devil-dammit. Now I've gotta save everyone here all by myself. Beats being dead, I guess."

He stands and walks over to me.

"Alright, Deebs. Get up. Satan sent us here to save you and Bael, and that's what I'm gonna do. C'mon, now."

Agares grabs my boney form and walks over to the succubi, Bael, and Lucifer. Belial whimpers and clutches her hip, unable to move, but Nerissa manages to flop to her back.

"Nerissa. I need your help. I can't lug everyone by myself. Can you stand?"

Nerissa clutches her chest for several moments. Crusty blood covers her whole body, blending in with her red skin while giving her a splotchy, disfigured appearance. The nude succubus finally pulls herself together and stands.

"Y-yes. Just… give me a moment. I think… that bitch broke some of my ribs."

Agares grunts. "We don't have time. Make me something so I can lug everyone around. Neither Michael nor Gabriel managed to hurt me too badly. I can save everyone, but only if I have something to carry them on."

Nerissa nods. After a moment, she aims her palm at the ground. Her ice shoots out and creates a sled with enough room for everyone. She piles some dirt and grass on top so the others won't freeze, then helps Agares heft Belial, Bael, Lucifer, and me on it.

"I'll walk," Nerissa says. She forces a smile. "Don't expect me to fight, though. I don't have anything left."

Agares nods. He marches ahead of the sled, grabs a branch, and uses it as a makeshift handle to pull us along.

"Hey," Agares whispers to her as they begin plodding toward the exit portal. "Did you hear what the Archangels said about Valac? Think he came to save us?"

Nerissa takes a few moments to reply.

"No. We're the last thing on Valac's mind. If he came here today, it wasn't for our sake, but for his."

Part 112: The Unstoppable Valac

Author Note: Big thanks to Henk, who helped me with Latin in this part, and also became a $5 patron! It means a lot!

Agony sprouts in my chest. It only takes me a moment to deduce I've appeared inside Nerissa's mind, given how Camael broke several of her ribs earlier. Nerissa walks beside Agares, wincing painfully with each step, yet trying her best not to complain. She glances down at her bloodied body and touches her ribs. They stick through her skin in a manner best described as gruesome.

The sounds of weapons clanging together grow louder every second. Agares uses his bulky muscles to pull the ice sled behind us, with Diablo, Bael, Belial, and Lucifer on it. Belial seems to be the most lucid of the four, but based on her expression, it seems she hasn't managed to heal her hip yet. Aside from her, nobody else has any healing magic.

Agares wipes his forehead. "S-sounds like there are still demons alive. I'm surprised the angels haven't killed us all."

"I thought... thought you were an optimist," I wheeze. Every word makes my chest ache. "Demons are strong. We can... can win."

Agares shakes his head. "Not a chance. If I hadn't caught Michael by surprise, he'd have beaten me in an instant. I barely managed to dodge Gabriel's attacks. Michael was way faster than his brother, from what I saw."

"Yeah. Faster."

Reaching up, I touch a hundred shallow scratches gouged into my face. Nerissa's voice appears in my mind. I fought with all my strength, but the Archangel merely toyed with me. If he wanted to kill me, I couldn't have stopped him, not even at my best. He wanted me alive. He wanted me to suffer.

Nerissa glances back at Lucifer and Belial. Lucifer's body, like mine, has cuts and scratches across every single inch of it. Belial seems to be in better shape since Michael didn't cut her like he did us, but her shattered hip probably hurts worse than my ribs.

Agares squeezes the branch in his hands a little tighter. "I... I was terrified... you know."

"Huh?" I turn to look at him. "When you fought Gabriel?"

"No. When I jumped Michael."

Agares glances at me. His eyes roam up and down my body, but he isn't looking for a peep show. Instead, he lingers on my innumerable cuts and gashes.

"I watched from the grass. At first, I meant to jump in and help Lucy when she took on Michael, but the moment he started swinging his sword, I lost my nerve. I couldn't follow it with my eyes. Then he took out you and your sister..."

Agares continues pulling the sled, but he closes his eyes.

"I've never felt fear before. Not like when I saw the Archangel dice you girls apart. It was only when he turned his back to me that I realized I had to make a move. If I didn't, he would kill me too. I'm... I'm a coward."

Nerissa shakes her head. She takes a step toward Agares and lightly touches his shoulder, ignoring the pain caused by the movement. "No. You were brave, Agares. I attacked because I thought I could win, but you did even when you knew you couldn't. Satan would be proud."

Agares squeezes his eyes shut. "You're wrong. I'm pathetic. I thought I was a tough guy... a big, bad lizard. Several other demons said I was the strongest of all of us, barring maybe Satan and Valac. But look at me now. I'm nothing. A coward who attacks his opponent from the back. Even with my poison in him, Michael nearly knocked me out in one blow."

"Don't think such thoughts," Nerissa says. "I might be dead if it weren't for you. Would you prefer that?"

Agares opens his eyes. He quickly shakes his head. "N-no. Of course not."

"Then cheer up. We still have to fight our way out of-" Nerissa flinches as a shadow passes over our bodies. A moment later, three cherubs soar past us, flying toward the commotion in the distance. Despite the fact we're easy targets, they ignore us completely.

Something big is happening elsewhere. We aren't a priority anymore.

"Say, uh... do you think the boss is okay?"

Nerissa nods. "Satan is a survivor. He must have escaped Raphael's clutches somehow. We'll know soon enough."

"But... but what if he didn't?" Agares pauses for a moment to tug the sled up a small embankment before glancing at me. "What if Satan died?"

"You need to stop with your negativity," Nerissa says. She frowns at him. "We have to prepare ourselves for any eventuality. If Satan dies, someone else will step up to lead. Maybe you. Maybe Lucifer."

Agares glances back at the unconscious demoness.

"Bloody devils... I hope not."

"Same," Nerissa murmurs. "I respect her abilities... but she's... abrasive."

After a moment, we continue walking. I sigh. "Let's focus. We don't know what's up ahead. The angels might be preparing an ambush."

"What if Grigori closed the portal? How will we get back to Earth?"

"There's that negativity again," I groan. "Just keep walking."

"Aye."

Several minutes pass.

A small hill blocks our view of the battle up ahead. The two of us creep up to it and pause to peer over.

My jaw drops.

"What in the name of...?"

"I wouldn't believe it if I didn't see it with my own eyes," Agares mutters. "Angels turning their swords against one another. I thought they were all relatives. A civil war, perhaps?"

Hundreds of angel bodies lay motionless on the ground, gashes carved across their armor and skin. Thousands of demon corpses join them as well. Their unmoving forms tell a tale of hellish warfare, one where each combatant fought to their dying breath, but in the end, there could only be one victor.

In the sky, a hundred thousand Seraphs hover in place, all of them motioning with their hands to summon magical spells. On the ground, an incomprehensibly vast army stretches into the horizon, comprised of armored Cherubs and unarmored Acolytes. The front liners clash weapons with a hundred other armored and unarmored angels, all of whom surround a singular figure, one shrouded in rags and tattered cloth.

Valac.

The Grim Reaper stands ten-feet-tall, towering over the angels protecting him. Each of his four hands clasps together. His signature scythe is nowhere to be seen.

"Ehehehe!" Valac cackles. "Tremble in fright! Bow to my might! Eternal night! Your end within sight!"

Three Archangels stand a short distance away, each of them in a defensive posture. Raphael leans heavily against the staff in his left hand. His right arm hangs uselessly, broken during some unseen battle. Blood drips down his face, his fingers, and sops through various parts of his robes. The old man gasps and wheezes for breath, apparently having exerted himself against someone other than Satan.

Gabriel and Camael, meanwhile, step in front of their older brother, forming a barrier of flesh to protect him from the cackling demon.

"Where is everyone?" Agares asks, panic etched into his face. "I only see Valac! Did all our friends die?!"

Nerissa's eyes dart around. As she looks for demon survivors, every Seraph above finishes a combined magical chant, pouring their energy together to unleash a divine attack of unimaginable proportions.

"Incumbite, invocate... tibi divinitus interitui!"

Every Seraph's palm ignites with the brightness of the sun. One million light-missiles rush at Valac from every direction, screaming toward him at frightening speeds. In the blink of an eye, their combined force will annihilate not only him but every last molecule of his body as well.

Valac raises his hand. Before the light missiles can strike him, a bubble of green energy erupts from his body. The Seraph attack bombards him with the force of several tons of TNT, blinding me and nearly blowing out my eyes. Nerissa and Agares duck behind cover just in time to avoid the overwhelming glare of Heaven's onslaught.

For several seconds, the shock of consecutive explosions rattles and shakes Heaven. Nerissa stumbles and hits her ribs, whimpering in pain as the ground tosses her around like a ragdoll. Agares doesn't fare any better. He slams into the grass with an audible whump, making him curse the angels with every breath.

Finally, Heaven goes still. Nerissa lands on our back, making me wince all the same as her when stabbing pain shoots through our chest.

Nerissa pulls herself up. She rubs the pain from her eyes and peers over the dirt mound. Agares joins her.

Valac stands, unharmed, along with his angelic protectors. A pit ten-feet-deep surrounds them. All his enemies stand back, staring at him in awe. The Grim Reaper lowers his hand, and the energy bubble vanishes.

"You attempted to bombard my impenetrable guard, yet only Heaven you scarred despite trying so hard. Now, give your regards to my trump card as I send in the charge; my walking graveyard."

Valac's angel followers pounce over the gaps in the ground and rush at their former brethren. I can only gaze in stunned silence as screams of panic erupt in the angel's ranks.

"Servant of the damned!" Camael yells. "Blackheart! How dare thou desecrateth the dead!"

"My mercy is incredible, wouldn't you say? I've brought back your family so everyone can play! Some might claim I've made them my slaves, but all I've done is revive their remains!"

One of Valac's servants smashes through the front ranks. The giant angel, clad in thick steel, shoves aside everyone in his path and beelines for Camael. The Archangel gasps as he charges her. At the last second, she swings Mjölnir up and slams it against his chest, knocking the 7-foot-tall Cherub on his ass. Camael jumps atop him and summons shackles of holy energy to bind his arms.

"Alemin! Fight back against the body-stealer! Do not attack thy family!"

The male grunts and writhes, struggling desperately to break free. "Sister... can't resist... kill me... kill me..."

"Nay! I shan't! Struggle with all thy might! Thou must-"

She halts awkwardly, dodging a Holy Arrow from one of Valac's servants. It whizzes past her face and nicks her cheek, then sails into the distance, impaling some unlucky sap who didn't see it coming.

"Camael! Finish him!" Raphael howls. "Valac's mental bonds are unbreakable. We must release our brothers and sisters from their torture. Give them a quick, painless death!"

Weapons clang together as allied and enemy angels attack one another. Several allied cherubs weep as they battle, their hearts tearing apart from the inside out. Having to kill their undead brethren is not something they wish to do. One anguished cherub's scream cuts off midway as an undead slave thrusts a spear through his chest.

Agares grabs my shoulder. "Nerissa. Behind Valac, look! The portal!"

Not three feet from Valac's towering form, the gateway to the demon's domain hums quietly. I can't see through its opaque opening, but Nerissa immediately vocalizes my thoughts. "That's our escape route?!

We can't make it there! All the damned- ahh... the damned angels are in our way." She winces, clutching her broken rib.

"I know. Tch. If I camouflaged myself, I might be able to slip past the cherubs during the battle... but... I won't leave any of you behind," Agares says, nodding matter-of-factly.

Camael yelps in surprise. I quickly refocus my attention on her as she jumps off Alemin's chest. The massive cherub shatters his bindings and swipes his meaty gauntlets at her, missing his sister by inches.

Alemin shoves himself off the ground using his wings. The massive berserker-Cherub deflects Camael's counter, batting Mjölnir aside with his glove when she moves to strike him.

"Kill me! KILL ME!" Alemin shrieks. He charges Camael again, knocking her to the ground. As he grabs a sword from a fallen angel and raises it to murder his eldest sister, a missile of light explodes against his chest. Gabriel steps forward, aiming his palm at the smaller cherub. He unleashes continuous blasts of Holy Energy, hitting his brother with cannonballs of light.

Alemin gasps and wheezes as he flops onto his back. Gabriel motions one last time, and a ballista-bolt of Holy Energy rushes forward, impaling the cherub's head. Alemin slumps to his back, dead.

"As thou wish, brother, I shall free thee from thy pain. Forgive me," Gabriel says. The Archangel of Power spins around, leans forward, and yanks Camael to her feet. "No mercy, sister. As much as it hurts, we cannot consider Valac's slaves our family anymore. The Reaper has corrupted their bodies. Kill them. Spare them the torture of having to fight us."

Camael pales. "I... I cannot! I won't! None of this makes any sense! I didn't see Valac in my dreams! How can he unravel Fate itself?! How can he raise our brothers from the dead and turn them against us?!"

Several allied angels shriek in horror. "Aaah! Gabriel! Camael! Th-the dead! They're standing again!"

Both Archangels pivot on their heels. They turn and gape as several allied angels, ones who fell to the attacks of the undead, begin to rise, joining their undead comrades.

I understand what's happening. I have the benefit of hindsight and a culture that created many stories about zombies.

The Archangels, however, do not.

They stare in wide-eyed horror as dozens of additional angels join Valac's ranks. Even when one of his undead servants takes a spear to the heart, or loses a limb, the resurrected vassals continue fighting without missing a beat.

And, all the while, they beg for death. They scream and howl at the top of their lungs for their former allies to slaughter them.

"Nyehehe! Yes, it is painful to kill a fellow angel, but no matter how disdainful, you cannot remain faithful-" Valac starts to taunt the Archangels again, only for two Cherubs to rush him from behind, somehow having broken through his undead followers.

Valac stops speaking, whirls around, and summons his scythe. In the blink of an eye, his two-handed weapon appears. He sweeps the blade to the side, piercing it through the kidneys of both Cherubs at once.

Their eyes bulge in panic, only to close as he retracts the blade.

Valac gazes at the dead cherubs for a moment before returning his attention to the Archangels.

"Curses. Those buffoons ruined my rhyme. Oh, well. Now they're mine."

Valac motions with his lower left hand. A stream of dark miasma leaves his body, splits in two, and enters each of the soulless cherubs behind him. After a moment, they stagger to their feet and join the other undead in attacking their former brethren.

Nerissa inhales sharply. "Valac is... he's holding off three Archangels and hundreds of thousands of cherubs and Seraphs as well. I knew he was powerful, but..."

Agares shakes his head. "If I hadn't seen it with my own two eyes, I wouldn't believe it. Every time one of his serfs gets cut down, another joins them. He's slowly adding more and more to his side."

Nerissa points at several fresh angel corpses near him. "They haven't arisen, though. Why do you think that is?"

"Not a clue," Agares mutters. "It doesn't matter, either. We still have to escape Heaven. Any ideas?"

Nerissa shakes her head slowly. "I don't know."

Hardly have the words left her mouth when the ground begins to rumble beneath us. Nerissa stumbles backward in surprise, and Agares quickly begins motioning with his hands to enter his Lizard Form.

The ground bursts open, revealing a single male demon, one with Lord-length horns. As the newcomer steps out of a hole burrowed through Heaven's Soil, I manage to get a good look at him. His chiseled body, as well as the warpaint spread across his bare chest, gives him a fearsome appearance. Various animal and angel bones line his chest and arms, held in place via twine. He looks like a mixture between a Spartan and a Witch Doctor.

The demon nods at Agares and me. "Hm. I wasn't sure if it was you standing up here, or a stray cherub. Too bad. I'd have liked to dirty my hands a bit more."

"Artorias?" Agares lowers his hands and breathes a sigh of relief. "What are you doing here?"

"I'm here to save you. Satan's orders. He told me you guys might run into trouble. If you made it past Michael, but the angels managed to prevent your escape, it would be my job to get you out of here."

"How?" Nerissa asks. "There's a wall of cherubs between us and Valac's portal!"

Artorias hops out of the dirt. He takes a peep over the hill at all the commotion. "No worries. We're not leaving that way. We're going through Heaven's Gate. Valac has all the chickens distracted, so now is a perfect time. There are only a couple of Cherubs at the gate."

"Only a couple?" I ask. "I'm wiped out. I can barely walk. Agares is exhausted too. What if there are more than a few there? We could die!"

"Not a problem. I'm still fresh," Artorias says with a smirk. The tattooed witch-doctor gives my naked body a once over. His eyes settle below Nerissa's breasts, on the ribs poking through her skin. "Don't worry; I'll protect you. Come on. We need to get moving."

Agares raises an eyebrow. "What about our injured?"

"Drag them along. I'll widen the hole a bit."

Artorias punches the air with his fist, expanding the hole's entrance dramatically. Even as a mere Lord, his earth manipulation appears to be at the top tier of demonkind.

The witch doctor glances around for a moment, then marches underground. I follow him, and Agares takes up the rear position, pulling the sled as he walks. Once we enter, Artorias seals our exit.

"Cripes. It's pitch-black down here," Agares mutters. "Can't see a damn thing."

I can almost hear Artorias roll his eyes. "Oh, you poor dear."

Periodically, the ground trembles. The titanic battle on the surface rattles my teeth as weapons and fists collide, each blow far mightier than anything a human could achieve.

"Even if we make it out of Heaven, there are still angels everywhere in the skies above Mount Sinai. We won't escape," Agares says. "What's your plan then, boney-boy?"

"Must you even ask?" Artorias grumbles. "Obviously, once we leave Heaven, I'll burrow us underground. We'll head several miles west and come up out of sight and out of mind. Easy."

Several seconds pass before Agares speaks again. "W-what?! I have to lug this sled through miles of pure darkness?! Come on!"

"Considering all the praise everyone lavishes on you, I didn't expect you to be such a whiner," Artorias groans. "If you'd like, I can leave you with the chickens. Is that what you want?"

Silence.

After several long, awkward seconds, Agares grunts. "No. I guess not."

"Then shut your trap. The sooner we're out of here and back home, the sooner I can return and kill some stragglers."

Nerissa sighs inwardly.

Men.

Recommended Listening

Leaving Nerissa's mind, I sail through the ground and appear in Camael's head. The instant I arrive, two undead cherubs grab my arms, holding me in place while a third attacks my front. Before I can understand what's happening, the third one thrusts a spear into my stomach, slipping past the cracks in my armor and spraying blood from my back.

Camael lurches forward, coughing violently as she struggles to catch her breath. The cherub takes a step back and yanks his spear out. At that moment, Camael musters her strength to throw Valac's servants aside. She charges her attacker and raises her hand, summoning Mjölnir to her grasp. With a swipe of her arm, the Archangel slams her hammer into the undead enemy's arm, shattering it and sending him flying.

Camael stumbles slightly and grabs her gut. Blood gushes from the wound.

"Sister! Camael!" Gabriel calls out her name in alarm. I glance backward to spot ten undead cherubs swarming the massive Archangel. Gabriel balls up his fist and swings it in an arc, knocking all of them aside like an adult fighting off a horde of infants. They try to get back up, but Gabriel quickly shoots successive blasts of holy energy into their chests, stunning them for a moment. "Art thou injured?"

Camael's teeth chatter as a wave of nausea hits her. "I... I am... f-fine!"

Bile roils inside my belly. I vomit acid and blood, then raise my head in time to hear the stomping of feet behind me. Ignoring the disgusting taste in my mouth, I spin on my knee and fling my hammer at the sounds. The cherubs who pinned me in place moments before charge at me, looks of sorrow on their faces. "Sister! Kill us! Kill-"

Mjölnir hits the one on the right. He goes silent as the weapon crushes his ribcage and sends him flying. The second continues toward me, but with a twist of my hand, I send a wave of telekinesis at him, yanking his feet aside and sending him sprawling to the ground.

Once again, Mjölnir sails into my grasp. I swing the divine weapon down and crush the second cherub's head into pulp, spraying gore in every direction.

Camael uses her free hand to clutch her stomach while she clambers to her feet. The Archangel's thoughts bubble in her mind as she readies herself for another confrontation.

Hacking off the limbs of our former family members isn't enough. Nor can we shatter their chests, stab them, or punch them to death. The only way to permanently send them to the Great Beyond is by crushing their skulls or cutting off their heads.

The cherub Camael sent flying jumps to his feet. Despite his fragmented ribcage and the blood pouring from his body, he rushes me again, moving as if he were in perfect health.

Unholy abominations. After what Valac has done to my brothers, I'll never forgive him. Ten thousand years of suffering would be a punishment too light for one as accursed as he.

Camael tosses Mjölnir a few feet upward, then motions with her hands. The hammer pivots in midair and rushes at the undead cherub. It slams into his head and crushes his skull, killing him instantly.

By the time Mjölnir returns again, Camael's legs have begun to shake. She coughs and wheezes.

How... how long has it been? An hour? Two hours? They never stop coming. Every time one of Valac's corruptions kills another of my family, they rise to join his ranks. We've never fought someone who can turn the dead against us. What can I do?! I can't get close enough to attack the Reaper myself!

Her eyes flick to her stomach.

Tch. And this injury is the worst one I've suffered yet. Time is not on my side. While our forces weaken, the Reaper's strengthen.

Camael sweeps her gaze across Heaven. Finally, I get a good look at what's happening. Where before Valac only had a hundred cherubs on his side, now he has thousands. Each of his servants wails as they plead and beg their bodies to halt. Despite their protests, they can't resist. The undead angels attack the living with reckless abandon, ignoring their missing limbs and any other wounds that might stop someone still alive.

Allied angels attack their enemies, but every so often, one's reflexes will slip up under the brutal onslaught, allowing Valac's servants to impale him. After he perishes, he rises to join the Reaper's agents and turn his blade against his allies from only moments before.

A nearby cherub, someone on my side, turns to me. Blood drenches his face. The young man's lip quivers as his panicked eyes settle on me. "S-sister, what are we to do? More keep coming! They won't stay dead! I don't want to be next! I don't want to join the damned!"

Camael grunts. She wipes the vomit from her lips. "Stand up straight, Ishmael. We cannot waver. The Creator favors us. I have foreseen that we will not perish... not on this day." Camael shakes her fist at him. "Never give up. Never lose faith in the Creator's will. We are angels. He will never forsake us!"

Ishmael's eyes lower to my stomach. "Ah! Heavens! Th-that injury!"

"'Tis merely a flesh wound," Camael says, even as she swallows blood. "Where are the Valkyries? I'm going to fight Valac. I'll need backup."

Ishmael's face pales. "B-but... in thy condition, he will slay thee! Sister, I must protest! If thy strength fails, Valac will have an Archangel for a servant! I cannot allow it!"

The cherub gestures toward the Reaper. Half a mile away, Valac stands silent and unmoving, watching as his angels battle the living. Nobody moves to attack him, because they can't. A mana shield surrounds him, making confrontation impossible.

"Don't question me," Camael says, growling under her breath. "If losing my life will save those of my family members, I am always willing to place it on the line. Once we kill the Grim Reaper, his servants will surely fall. Find the Valkyries! Get them over here, on the double!"

Ishmael's face turns white as snow.

"A-aye, sister. I'll find them for you, then. Continue with caution. I've lost too many sisters already."

"As have I," Camael replies.

Ishmael wipes his bloody face, flaps his wings, and takes off.

Left alone, I glance around, checking to see if any attackers are coming at me. The main forces of Valac's army appear to have shifted away from me, as has Gabriel. The Archangel of Power stands out from the crowd, towering several feet above his peers. He stomps about, swinging his greatsword and cleaving enemy angels in half. Despite the agony etched into his face, Gabriel never wavers as he cuts down his former family members.

Gabriel can't help me, Camael thinks. Raphael is too weak. Lucifer's magic incapacitated Uriel and Uzziel. The demons ambushed Michael. I'm the only Archangel left who can fight the Reaper.

She hardens her gaze and flaps her wings, rising into the air. Several undead cherubs spot her ascent. Before they can make a move, Camael flings Mjölnir with a flick of her wrist. The hammer rushes toward the undead below and crushes their skulls one by one. Manipulating the weapon from a distance, Camael turns it into a mobile battering ram, capable of killing undead without her having to hold it.

However, as she does, I note with alarm that her mana reserves dwindle and lower every second.

I can't fight like this forever. I must save my energy for the battle against the King of the Dead.

Camael recalls Mjölnir and wastes no time. She sears her stomach wound shut with a bit of Holy Energy and flies toward him.

As Camael approaches, something strange happens. The sea of undead below gazes up at her, but returns to their battles against the lower-ranked angels — the few cherubs guarding Valac part, allowing her passage. Camael skids to a stop and lands clumsily only a few feet before Valac.

"Valac! I've come to put a stop to thy butchery once and for all! Face me, Reaper!"

Valac's shrouded face lies in blackness, seemingly impossible given Heaven's light radiating around us. I can't make out his expression, nor the meaning in his body posture. He appears relaxed, confident, and uninterested in me, yet also confused, withdrawn, and uncertain.

Several seconds pass. Finally, Valac's shrouded face tilts down as he notices my presence.

His voice lilts in amusement. "Oh, my, isn't this cute? An Archangel has come to lick my boot. She's come to bargain and settle our dispute, but soon she'll find her leverage is moot."

Camael grits her teeth. "I didn't come to bargain, servant of evil. I came to fight. Thy wickedness knows no bounds. I know not how thou were able to bypass the strings of fate, but I do know that thou shan't survive past today."

Valac stiffens. His tone darkens.

"Oh? You dare threaten me?"

"'Tis no threat, but a promise, blackheart!" Camael twirls Mjölnir in her grasp and starts twitching as she amps herself up for a fight. "I won't stop with thee, either. After I crush thy spirit and slaughter thy minions, I'll chase down thy people and burn them to ash! Never will I forgive thy depravity!"

Camael jumps forward and brings her hammer down, smashing it against Valac's shield. Mjölnir impacts the hardened mana with the force of a car crash, ricocheting off as if the Archangel had struck solid rubber. Camael and I stumble backward, lose our footing, and fall on our ass.

Several seconds pass.

"Hu... huhuhu..."

Valac chuckles softly. His tone sends a pang of terror through my heart.

"Ehehehe... huhuhu... most amusing. You foolishly flew to face me alone, without any backup. The only reason my minions haven't torn you apart is because I foresaw your coming. I foresaw... everything."

Valac takes a step toward me. Camael flinches.

The Grim Reaper's eyes begin to glow red under his cowl.

"Pathetic... weak... empty-headed Archangel. Do you honestly think you're the only one whose vision penetrates the barrier of time?"

Ice crystallizes inside my veins.

Camael opens her mouth, but it takes a few moments before she can speak. "Im... possible... impossible..."

"Huhuhu..." Valac chuckles. "I know what you've seen, Archangel. A future filled with pain and suffering. Your brothers... sisters... friends and companions, all trapped in eternal torment..."

The Grim Reaper snickers quietly as he summons his lantern.

"I, too, have obtained the gift of foresight. The difference is... my might exceeds yours. Every soul I consume adds to my perfection. I care little for the angels... the demons... or any of the other beings walking the cosmos. The only thing which matters to me is amassing even more power."

Valac uses his free hand to form a magic sign. Camael jumps to her feet and assumes a defensive stance, but nothing happens. Suddenly, three of the undead cherubs nearest the Reaper limp forward and fall to the ground, dead.

"Beautiful, isn't it? I control the souls of my servants with absolute authority. I tell them what to do, and they obey, even if they wish not to. In a way, it brings back memories of how the angels once treated me. Don't you think so, Camael?"

Camael's hand trembles as she clutches Mjölnir.

"Revenge? Is that what this is all about?"

"Only a little. Huhuhu..."

Valac trails off. He raises his head and gazes into the distance.

"You believe the future to be set in stone, Archangel of Divination. You believe it has been laid out by the Creator, and that you are an agent of his, carrying out his will. You seek not to control it, yet you also attempt to guide it along a path befitting his grand plan."

Camael nods slowly. "Aye. What is thy point?"

Valac cocks his head.

"You don't know? And here I thought one as old as you would see the contradiction in your beliefs. I ask you now, Camael: Will you continue to follow the Creator's plan, even if it means all the angels must die?"

Camael's shaking slowly becomes more noticeable. Mjölnir quivers in her grasp as she gazes up at the Reaper.

"The angels are... they're... they're agents of the Creator. He wouldn't plan such a fate for us."

"Are you certain that is a fact? Have you spoken to the Creator recently?"

Camael's breath comes hesitantly as she tries to regulate her breathing. Disorientation washes over her mind as she lowers her gaze.

"I... I have not."

"Then you are a liar!" Valac snarls. He stabs a finger at me. "There is no divine plan! The Creator you pretend to follow is a hollow god! A figure you made up to hide the fact that you are powerless to save your people! You foist your insecurities upon your imaginary deity, lying to yourself and those around you, all so you can pretend your actions are a means to an end!!"

Valac stomps toward me. In the blink of an eye, his mana shield knocks me off my feet and crushes me into the ground. It rolls over top of me and flattens me into the dirt. The moment I arrive inside of it, the Reaper lurches toward my prone form. Before I can react, his lower left-hand jerks down and grabs my throat — he presses me against the dirt.

"The Creator is nothing! If he does exist, he favors me, not you! That is why he gave me this power! That's why he shows you a future of death and suffering!"

Camael wriggles and writhes, trying to escape his grasp. However, the Reaper's hands clamp on us like titanium shackles, impossible to escape.

Camael uses her free arm to slam Mjölnir against Valac's arm.

The Reaper remains unharmed.

"Get off me, demon!"

"No! I won't! I'll reap your soul, and Gabriel's, and Raphael's, and all the rest of them! I'll tear every angel limb-from-limb, and then I'll kill the Titans, too! Ohh, but worry not, wretched woman, for my rampage will continue forever and ever, until all life has succumbed to my touch!"

Camael stares into the faceless demon's eyes in horror.

"No... no... no! I won't allow it! I'll fight you to my dying breath! We all will! We'll never surrender!!"

Valac laughs. "Bahahaha! You will fail, just as you already have!"

The Grim Reaper raises his scythe above his head. A flicker of light shines against the tip as he prepares to swing it down, impaling my body and ripping my soul out in the process.

Camael struggles mightily, but her efforts are in vain.

Valac sneers.

"Welcome, Camael... to your NEW FAMILY! NYEHEHE!"

KABOOM!

Before Valac can bring the scythe down, something strikes his mana shield with incredible force. Startled, the demon jerks his gaze upward. A sword of light energy stabs through his mana and wrenches back and forth.

Holy magic begins to pour inside the bubble.

"What?! My shield!"

I shift my gaze from the sword to its wielder. Catherine.

She and a few other Cherubs stand atop Valac's shield, having somehow made it past his undead followers.

"Let our sister go!" A male voice bellows. I shift my head to the right and spot Ishmael standing at the edge of the barrier.

Catherine holds her hand above her head. She balls it into a fist and punches the barrier in its newly-weakened spot.

Valac's barrier vaporizes and explodes outward, sending Catherine and her sword of light plummeting toward his backside.

Valac releases me and dives to the side. Catherine narrowly misses him and impales the ground.

Behind her, the three other Cherubs land, each of them wearing similar armor, though with slight differences.

Ishmael trembles, but forces himself to stand up straight.

"The Valkyries have arrived!"

Author's Note:

This is Artorias.

This is Catherine in her armor.

Part 113: Dragonslayer

Recommended Listening

While Camael jumps to her feet, Catherine yanks her sword of light from the ground. Valac slithers backward, while the other three Valkyries take up their positions between their sister and me.

"Catherine!" Camael says. "Keep thy distance. Avoid the Reaper's Scythe. It will tear out thy soul if it strikes thee!"

Catherine nods. She summons a shield of light in her left hand and charges at Valac, aiming to knock him off balance by throwing her weight against him.

Unlike Catherine, the other three Valkyries don't wear helmets. A short, pink-haired girl cries out in alarm. "Gah! Hey, Cath! Don't just go off on your own!" She creates a bo staff out of Holy Energy and follows her sister.

Camael's eyes follow the newcomer. Sophia and Catherine are both too reckless. I need to help them. However, my mana is slowly draining from my wounds. I'll only slow them down in my current state. She gestures to the other two Valkyries, both of them dark-skinned women of above-average height. "Hyacinth! Valac's minions badly injured me during the battle. Come quickly and heal my wounds!"

Both of the remaining Valkyries turn to me, looks of concern on their face. The one on the left has white hair like most other angels in Heaven, but the one on the right, nearly seven-feet-tall, has green hair like Uzziel.

The tall one nudges her white-haired sister. "Hyacinth. Don't worry. I'll keep the Reaper busy."

Hyacinth nods. "Alright. Once I finish, I'll suppress the demon with my arrows. Make sure Sophia doesn't do anything stupid."

Penelope groans. "That's impossible, but I'll try. We must avenge Uriel and return our mentor's honor."

"Aye."

The dark-skinned giantess stomps toward Valac, and all Hell breaks loose.

Catherine shoves herself against Valac, knocking him off-balance by using her shield as a battering ram. In the next instant, she swipes her sword downward toward his shoulder. A rush of mana fires from her blade, releasing a curved projectile that rushes at the Grim Reaper's chest. Valac turns slightly to the left. Catherine's attack gashes apart the hundreds of disgusting, fetid rags covering his skeleton, but misses his exposed bones.

Not waiting for the Reaper to counter her, Catherine dives under his robes and slashes right, intending to cut his leg off. Valac hops quickly, somehow righting himself with remarkable agility and avoiding her attack in the process.

A flash of movement.

Valac's fist lashes out faster than Catherine can react. He batters her helmet and knocks the daylights out of her. The Valkyrie tumbles several feet backward, but manages to right herself mid-sprawl. She lands in a cat-like pose and runs at him again, readying her sword for another attack.

Valac snarls. "You're resilient and tough; everything I hate in a female. However, your movements are stilted, destined to fail!"

The Reaper pivots on his heel to face the incoming threat. His Scythe rushes forward and deflects Catherine's sword. Ting!

He reaches out and tries to grab her. Catherine bats his skeletal hand aside with her shield and kicks at his leg. The unexpected counter trips Valac.

Penelope swings a massive two-handed mace of Holy Magic against Valac's spine. The undead demon slams into the grass, shaking Heaven violently. At the same time, Sophia bounces, twirls, and backflips over her giant sister. She pirouettes off Penelope's head and brings her staff down, smacking it square against what I can only presume is his skull. Valac's body holds no mass as he lies collapsed in the dirt, so it's impossible to tell which parts are his rags and which are his bones.

Catherine pauses. The armored woman glances left and right, seemingly looking for something. Suddenly, she bolts forward. Catherine dives at Sophia and shoves her aside as Valac materializes out of thin air and swings his Scythe toward the pink-haired Valkyrie. He misses by inches, nearly tearing off the back of Catherine's armor.

Camael narrows her eyes. What was that? The Reaper teleported without hand signs. They knocked him to the ground, but did he disappear before he landed? I've never seen similar spatial magic in all my life.

I glance at the white-haired woman beside me as she furrows her brow and weaves a spell.

"Come, Hyacinth. We haven't much time. Heal faster."

Hyacinth flicks her gaze from my stomach up to my eyes, then back down. "Apologies, eldest sister. My healing spell is nowhere as potent as Uzziel's. I am not as well-versed in the ways of medical magic as she."

"Do thy best," Camael replies, a hint of urgency in her voice. Grunting, she quickly returns her attention to the other three Valkyries.

Having somehow predicted Valac's reappearance, Catherine shoves herself off the ground and narrowly deflects the tip of Valac's Scythe with her shield as he swings it around to impale her. The Reaper's immense strength flings Catherine to the side, but she manages to land on her feet with only a minor stumble.

Everything I've seen from Catherine indicates that not only is she physically strong and agile, but quick-witted, too. However, she never says a word, and I don't know why. She might be mute.

Valac, now hovering a foot off the ground, pulls back and cackles as the three Valkyries regroup. "If this is the peak of your technique, then squeak and shriek, for your future looks quite bleak!"

Penelope reaches her hand out and rests it on Catherine's shoulders, stopping her sister from charging again. "No. Follow-up. I lead."

Catherine nods and allows her taller sister to take the lead, never showing any doubts regarding Penelope's abilities.

Valac's bundle of rags lies on the ground where the Valkyries toppled him before. However, while they still appear cut-up and torn from all of the earlier attacks he dodged, his new rags are in mint condition, the same as when Camael first attacked him.

Gears slowly click in my mind as I ponder the possibilities.

When I battled Satan several years ago, the First Emperor told me he could regenerate his body by dissipating one of the ten-thousand souls within himself. Given Valac's status as a fellow soul manipulator, I wonder if he might have a similar ability.

...No, that seems unlikely. When Satan regenerated, he rematerialized in the nude. He had to summon a new pair of clothes. While not the most critical detail, Valac reappeared with all of his rags on. Further, there was a short delay before his reappearance, almost as if the Reaper was casting an illusion...

Penelope takes several measured steps toward the Grim Reaper. Soon, they stand only ten feet apart. She holds her two-handed mace in a defensive posture, as if ready to deflect any attack he throws at her. Catherine stays to her right and Sophia to her left.

Valac giggles to himself. "Kekeke, look who's come to fight, a little girl with a twig. You should have brought a shovel for the grave you'll soon dig."

Penelope shifts her feet. A moment later, she tilts forward and swings her mace down, slamming it into the dirt. All of Heaven seems to shake as the ground spikes and explodes in front of her. A hail of soil and stones flies at Valac. The Reaper raises an arm to shield himself, but that proves to be a mistake.

Sophia motions with her hands. A ball of water materializes in midair. She stabs it with her bo staff, and a thin beam of liquid shoots out. Valac flies backward as the compressed water hits him with the force of a firetruck. The Reaper tumbles and rolls into the dirt as Heaven itself tears apart and tries to swallow him whole.

After Penelope's planet-shaker attack subsides and Heaven goes still, Valac rematerializes in midair above his fallen body. The Grim Reaper glances around hesitantly, almost as if waiting for a follow-up strike.

"Okay! My turn!" Sophia shouts. The Valkyrie flaps her wings, dashes toward the Reaper, and begins executing a series of spins, kicks, and flips as she bounces toward him.

"Sophia! No! Don't rush in!" Penelope yells. "Wait for-"

Valac follows the Valkyrie's movements, and at the last second, he lashes his Scythe out, aiming to skewer her in midair. Sophia executes an upside-down triple-spin, counters Valac with her bo staff, and uses the momentum of his attack to flip to his side and swing at his knee.

"Gah! Pesky chicken!" Valac trips awkwardly as Sophia's attack hits. He tries to grab her by the hair, but she twirls her staff and bats his hand aside. With another spin, she dives behind the Reaper and swings her staff in a wide arc. Her weapon slugs Valac's spine like a baseball bat. He folds over awkwardly and tumbles to the side, once again landing as a crumpled set of rags in the dirt.

After several seconds, slightly longer than before, Valac rematerializes in midair. This time, however, he keeps his distance.

"Look at all of you, ganging up on me. I'm just one little demon, so why won't you let me be? While this small one bounces around and giggles with glee, I've realized the lot of you are far too pesky for me!"

Sophia frowns. She takes a step back from Valac. "Hey, why does this weirdo constantly rhyme? It's creepy."

Valac's shrouded face betrays no emotion. He slowly raises his upper left arm and summons his lantern. "Kukuku... All this time, I've been holding myself back. I wanted to test your might after you talked all that smack. I don't like to brag, but my powers are quite prophetic. I guessed as much already, but your strength is simply pathetic."

While Valac's two right arms grip his Scythe and the upper left one lifts his lantern high, the lower left one begins weaving magic signs.

Camael's eyes widen. "Sophia! Get back! Catherine, Penelope, watch-"

Screams erupt from Valac's lantern. A hundred translucent faces rush out of it and tear through the air, aiming for each of the Valkyries, as well as myself.

Hyacinth yelps in fright. She stops her healing spell and throws me backward right as one of the ghostly apparitions slams into her back.

Boom!

The ghost explodes like a stick of dynamite, sending Hyacinth spinning and twisting. She tumbles across the ground and careens to a stop, while I, too, land on my ass. Her last-second save allows me to avoid one of Valac's kamikaze souls. It harmlessly explodes in midair.

After pulling myself to my feet, I wince and rub the back of my head. Hyacinth lays on her back; black scorch marks etched across her white armor. She swallows shallow breaths and blinks, trying to recover from Valac's surprise attack.

"Sister!" Camael stumbles toward the Valkyrie and pulls her up, helping Hyacinth to her feet. It takes a moment before she can shake the disorientation from her mind. "Can thou standeth?"

"A-aye. Ohh. My mind throbs..."

Camael nods. "Those were souls of the damned. They released mana when they exploded; you must have suffered some feedback. Ah! The others!"

I quickly turn to look for the rest of the Valkyries.

Catherine remains standing. She holds her shield up to protect herself. Her chest shifts forward and back as she breathes heavily. Behind her, Sophia and Penelope lie on the ground, almost catatonic from Valac's surprise attack.

Valac towers over the sole remaining Valkyrie. "Kukuku... your friends thought splashing me with water would bring me strife, and burying me in the dirt would end my life. However, my power is infinite; going beyond time and space. Now bow before your new god, as I reveal your face."

Another soul ripples out of Valac's lantern. This time, when Catherine flinches, waiting for an attack, it doesn't come. Valac leans forward, exposing the skull beneath his robes. He opens his mouth, and the soul enters his body.

Nothing happens for a few seconds.

Then, a bolt of lightning shoots from Valac's robes. It slams into the ground with a thunderous crash! Several more follow. One thunderbolt arcs outward and hits Catherine's shield, but it only nudges her back a few inches.

Valac gasps. He leans forward and curls his arms forward. "Haah... haah... yes... YES... YES!!! Such power can only come from the netherworld! I feel it in my bones, the creaking of muscles! The rebuilding of my body!"

Valac holds up his lower left hand. Mottled, grey skin begins rushing up his bones, covering his hand in nasty, rotting flesh. The Grim Reaper howls in delight as glowing red eyes appear beneath his robes.

"Ahahaha! Here it comes! Ready yourself, little girl!"

Catherine digs her foot into the ground.

Then, Valac disappears.

In the blink of an eye, he appears behind Catherine. The Valkyrie jerks in surprise and whirls to face him, but his meaty fist swings out and smashes her in the back, sending her flying forward, toppling end over end. Catherine drops her shield and sword as she plows into the dirt, bounces off, and sails into a boulder.

Hardly has the Valkyrie come to a stop before Valac appears in front of her, moving at incredible speeds. He yanks a hand out, grabs one of her arms, and lightly tosses the Valkyrie behind himself.

"Catherine!!" Camael howls in shock. She jumps forward to try and save the Valkyrie, but Valac appears before us, a fist raised.

"Ah-ah-ah. You stay right there."

I don't even feel the impact of his fist.

The Reaper hits me so hard that several of my teeth shatter and splinter to pieces. It takes several seconds before my vision is anything more than a mass of spots. At some point, I end up on my back in the dirt, but I don't know when.

Somewhere in the distance, the sound of muffled clangs and whumps unveil Valac's onslaught. The Reaper batters and bashes Catherine savagely, striking her as viciously as possible as he obliterates every last vestige of her defenses.

"This is what you get for defying me, foolish insect! Nobody makes a fool out of the Grim Reaper! Nobody!!"

I slowly raise my head to watch as Valac grabs her by both arms, raises her above his head like a doll, and slams her into the ground.

Catherine never once cries out or screams.

I pull myself together and slowly claw myself to my side. Camael gasps as she tries not to choke on the blood pooling in her mouth. "C... Cath... Cath..."

Valac holds the Valkyrie by her right leg. She hangs limply in his grasp as he titters to himself. "Nyehehe... No more fight left, hm? I suppose you are only a woman, after all. Useless like all the rest."

Motioning with his Scythe, Valac reaches its tip over and lightly pulls on Catherine's helmet. The dented and battered iron falls from her head and lands in the torn-up dirt below.

Finally, I get a look at Catherine's face. Her short, curly brown hair contrasts a massive burn wound going from her right eye all the way past her jaw, neck, and further into her armor than that. Her right eye sags noticeably... but the burns don't appear to be from Valac. They're old. Ancient, even. They tell tales of a battle from a different era.

Camael's thoughts come to me in slow, measured bursts. No... Catherine... Penelope... Sophia... Hyacinth... please, one of you must fight. Don't let... don't let the Reaper win.

As if to answer her request, Sophia leaps to her feet. Blood drips from her nose, but she appears to have recovered from Valac's attack. Penelope rises as well, though the giantess appears less steady on her feet. She swoons back and forth and leans on Sophia's shoulder for support.

"Release my sister, foul demon!" Sophia yells. "I'll only give thee one warning!!"

Hyacinth appears at my side. "Eldest sister. Forgive my weakness. I'll heal thee at once."

Their sudden recovery astonishes me. It hasn't even been a minute since Valac swallowed one of his souls, but they appear to have regained their composure.

Valac turns his head back to gaze at Sophia. "Hmm? Do you want to fight? Foolish women. You don't stand a chance against the King of the Dead."

In the few seconds where Valac's attention leaves Catherine, her eyes bolt open. The battle-scarred woman rapidly motions with her hands and summons her inner mana. Valac turns to look at her just in time for Catherine to open her mouth.

FWOOMPH!

A wall of fire bursts out of Catherine's stomach, tears through her lips, and pounces at the Reaper's face. Valac's rags immediately catch fire. Reflexively, he drops his captive and jumps back in surprise. "EEEEEH! What- what is this?! Ahhh! It burns! IT BURNS!!"

The Grim Reaper flails around wildly. He drops his Scythe and screeches like a banshee as he tugs and tears at the rags covering his body. Catherine doesn't let up. The moment he releases her, she pivots in midair, lands on her feet, and continues her infernal onslaught.

Hyacinth begins to heal me, but Camael's gaze narrows.

Sister. For thou to summon Jörmungandr's flames... thy rage must burn like never before. I am sorry that thou hath awakened such a primal hatred.

Catherine's single functioning eye presses together, and she holds up her hand to narrow the flames racing from her mouth. Valac screeches and falls on his back, futilely holding his hand up to try and stop her inferno. His rotted flesh melts away. His bones crackle and snap as the seconds pass.

Finally, Catherine stops. She pauses to gasp for breath as the Reaper writhes on the ground. No longer does he speak a word. His mass of bones, now charred black beyond recognition, begin to curl together and snap as they cool.

Soon, Valac's body stops moving.

Several seconds pass.

Hyacinth finishes healing me. I jump to my feet and quickly fly over to Catherine's side, keeping a wary eye on Valac's bones.

"Catherine! Art thou alright? Hath thee any mana left?"

Catherine looks at me. She shakes her head. Slowly, she raises a trembling arm. Magical runes appear in the air as she begins writing letters with her magic.

No mana. Fires burned. Reaper dead?

Standing closer to her, I begin to understand the extent of her scars. Catherine's burns cover not only half of her face, but they extend down to her throat as well.

That's why she can't talk. The scar tissue prevents it.

Camael nods. "I think... thou hath defeated the Reaper. Be on thy guard. He may yet rise again and-"

"Sister! Sister, look!" Sophia yells excitedly. I turn to follow her gaze as she points in the distance.

Valac's undead servants, once embroiled in a brutal battle against Gabriel and his army, stand and hover silently, unmoving. Many of them hold their weapons above their heads as if to strike, yet they don't move.

One by one, each of them lowers their weapons. Looks of confusion pass across the faces of the undead and the living. Valac's servants blink their eyes and glance around.

"What's happening?" Camael asks. "Why aren't they fighting?"

Sophia's voice lilts. "B-because! Cath killed Valac! He lost control over them! It's a miracle from the Creator!"

"What?" Penelope's jaw drops. "I can't believe it. Is that true, Camael?"

I shake my head slowly in disbelief. "I... I don't know. Is it? What if Valac comes back to life again? Hyacinth, check his bones for traces of mana."

Hyacinth nods. She flies over to Valac, summons a knife made from Holy Energy, and gingerly pokes at his bones. Like logs that have burned for too long, the pile of black bones hisses and falls apart. They melt into a pile of ash and blow away into the wind.

"I don't sense anything. If he's still alive... I would be surprised."

Catherine nods. A wave of fatigue hits her. The brown-haired woman closes her left eye, stumbles, and falls forward. I quickly reach out and catch her before she hits the ground.

"Aye, sister. Rest, now. Thou hath earned it."

Sighs of relief pass between Sophia, Penelope, and Hyacinth. The three of them come together in a group hug and share huge grins with each other at a job well done.

Camael, however, lowers her gaze to the ground. Scuff marks, torn-apart grass and dirt, and shattered boulders tell the story of Catherine's epic battle. Camael's thoughts turn inward.

The undead hath ceased their fighting. That means... all we needed to do was defeat the Reaper, and our brothers and sisters would have been spared. Instead, we slew thousands of them. We murdered them. The others haven't realized... but I have.

Valac. Bastard. Thou hath planned this all along. Even in death, thy touch haunts us. I can only pray the Creator will damn thee eternally to the lake of fire. Burn... fall to ash... forever.

Recommended listening

A few minutes later, all five of us fly toward Gabriel. He and Raphael stand facing one another. Raphael yells at his younger sibling. "Nay! Their souls are damned! We must kill them at once!"

Gabriel clenches his fist. "Raphael. Calm thyself. Camael slew the Reaper. The undead are no longer our enemies. Please, have we not lost enough of our brethren today?"

I flap my wings and land behind Raphael, along with the Valkyries behind me. "Raphael. Gabriel. What is the problem?"

The old man turns to me. Anger boils in his eyes. "Camael! Gabriel doesn't understand, but surely thou will. We must finish the job. Our brothers and sisters have been tainted by Valac's touch. We must send them to the Great Beyond at once. 'Tis the only merciful way to treat them, now."

My jaw drops. "What? Why?! Raphael, I... I can't believe thou woulds't utter such filth!"

Cherubs and Seraphs congregate around us. Upon hearing Raphael's words, they begin to whisper among themselves. Rumors spread like wildfire.

Raphael shakes his fist. "They're tainted, Camael! Can't ye see? Even if their faculties have returned-"

"I won't hear another word," Camael replies, cutting Raphael off. "We slew the Reaper. In doing so, we saved the lives of those he brought back. Their minds have returned. They control their bodies once again. There is no need for further bloodshed."

"Camael speaks the truth," Gabriel replies. "Brother, I know thy body took a beating during the battle, but ye needn't harbor such ill will towards our family. 'Tis a miracle we may embrace them once more.

Had we focused on killing the Reaper sooner, we might have saved other lives. Why must thou wish death upon them now?"

Raphael grumbles for a moment. He quickly glances around at the thousands of cherubs surrounding us, as well as those floating above. The undead angels keep their distance. They bow their heads in sorrow, unable to process the horrible deeds they've committed. Looks of anguish stretch across the faces of many. Some turn their gazes towards Valac's resting spot with expressions that speak a thousand words of rage toward him.

Raphael squeezes his staff. The old man's bloodied robes, once a beautiful tapestry of wealth which encased his body in lavishness, are now torn apart like those belonging to a beggar. He appears haggard, worn-out, and exhausted.

"Gah... perhaps I am over-reacting. I know not. Thy victory over Valac seemed impossible. He repelled the attack of a million seraphs effortlessly. How dids't thee defeat him?"

Raphael's gaze settles on me. He thinks I killed Valac.

Instead, I step aside and gesture toward Catherine. The exhausted Valkyrie blushes and looks away as she leans against Sophia for support.

"Oh? 'Twas not thee who slew the Reaper, but Michael's apprentice?"

I nod. "Aye. Catherine unleashed Jörmungandr's balefire upon Valac. The Grim Reaper could not withstand the flames of the last dragon."

Raphael clicks his tongue. "Tsk. I see. Catherine, our thanks go out to thee. Thou hath saved countless lives today."

Catherine bows her head and motions with her hand, forming more signs in the air.

Protect family. My duty.

"T'was not duty, but valor," Gabriel says. He walks over to Catherine and kneels to hug her. "I thank thee, sister. We all do. Not only dids't thee save Michael's life against the demon hordes, but Camael's as well. Thy deeds mirror the ancient past, when-"

Gabriel halts. He pulls away from his embrace of Catherine, and a look of awkwardness passes over his face. "Ah, that is... I didn't mean to bring up..."

Catherine glances at Sophia, then hastily writes, Ancient era. No memories. Do not worry.

Gabriel nods. He stares at Catherine for a moment, then traces his fingers across her burns. "Already, thou hath given up so much for thy family. Never will we forget thy bravery."

The Archangel of Power shuffles back to Raphael's side. His gaze turns distant as he internally curses himself for dredging up ancient scars.

Catherine motions in the air. Michael. Where? Alive?

Raphael nods. "Aye. He is recovering. I am sure thou wisheth to see thy brother soon. However, first, we must sort out the mess in Heaven."

The old man glances warily at the undead. Unlike those untouched by Valac's magic, the skin of the undead have begun to turn ashen and cracked. Their blackened eyes give them a horrifying appearance, almost as if they have become agents of evil. Even the more open-minded cherubs keep away from those touched by Valac's soul manipulation.

"I am not so certain that allowing these... these Damned to live is the best course of action. Still, that devil's black magic appears to have faded. Maybe this aged one is too tired to think properly."

"Aye," Camael says, nodding. "Thou hath earned a rest, brother. Ah! Satan. What happened to him? Dids't thee defeat him?"

Raphael smiles, but the expression appears hollow. "In a manner of speaking. He will not bother us anymore."

"Excellent. Well, since the dirty business has concluded..." Camael shifts her sore shoulders and sighs. "I shall begin the sorting of the dead. We will burn the demon bodies and hold a twelve-hour vigil for each of our brethren who perished today. All deserve the highest honor."

Murmurs go through the crowd. One of the seraphs raises his hand. "Eldest sister, if I may be so forthcoming... only twelve hours? Is it not customary to hold a one-week dirge for any angel who perishes, no matter the reason?"

Camael stares at the young man for several seconds. "Aye. However... given the number of us that have fallen... t'would be decades before we finally concluded our mourning. We might finish by the end of next year if I expedite the..."

The Archangel of Divination trails off. Looks of anguish cross the faces of those present. Several cherubs shake their heads, unable to believe my words. She closes her eyes. Tsk. Only twelve hours... such a short vigil for each of our brethren would sully the light of Heaven. Have I forgotten how important every one of our lives is?

After a moment, she opens her eyes.

"I apologize. It occurs to me that we mustn't desecrate the dead any further than the graverobber already has. If we were to only mourn for twelve hours, I believe that would give the demons a victory, one they do not deserve. Nay. Instead, perish the thought. We will offer a two week vigil for each of the fallen. We will etch their names into every rock, tree, and carving in Heaven. Never will we forget them or their noble sacrifices."

Sighs of relief pass through the crowds. Despite the dead lying around unmoving, several angels openly smile at my words.

Camael smiles back, as do Gabriel and Raphael. However, in her heart, an inferno of rage burns.

Valac surprised me, but in the end, he was a false prophet; a devil consigned to the eternal flame. We will mourn for every single fallen angel, no matter the circumstances. We will rebuild and heal the wounds of today at any cost.

And... for those demons who escaped... we will hunt them. We will scorch their burrows, tear them limb-from-limb, and make them rue the day they turned their backs on us.

I will kill every last demon, and nobody will be able to stop me.

Camael's smile stays frozen on her face, even as she balls her hand into a fist.

"Sister?" Sophia pokes me. "Is something the matter?"

"No. Let us begin gathering the bodies. The sooner we begin, the sooner we may rest."

Author notes:

I have a whole bunch of art for the Valkyries! Also, alternate artwork for a helmetless Catherine!

This is Catherine, but without her helmet!

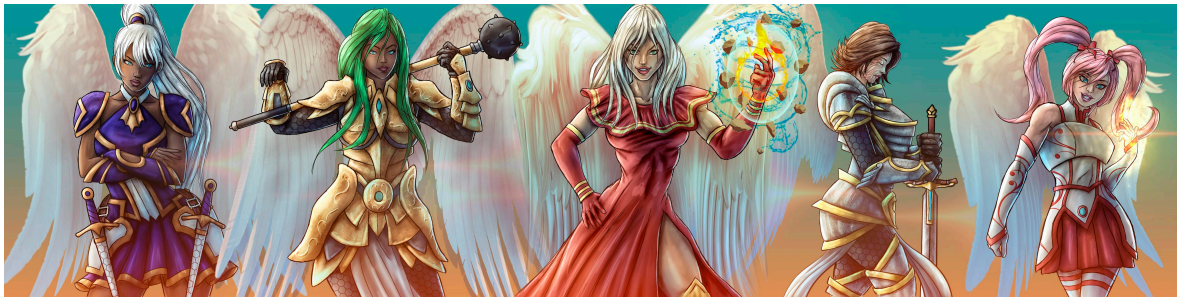
This is Hyacinth, the healer.

This is Penelope, the giantess.

This is Sophia, the cute one!

Alternate artwork for Catherine.

A combo banner for all the Valkyries, and also Uriel!



Part 114: Solving the Puzzle

I wake up face-first on the ground — dull, aching pain throbs across my whole body. Everything hurts, almost as if there were a pickup truck slowly pressing against me and crushing me into pulp.

The next thing I notice is the sense of calm and acceptance slowly swirling around inside my mind.

Satan stares forth into the blinding white of the Cosmic Realm, but he makes no attempt to move. He grunts while talking to himself. "Huh. So, we don't know how to get out out of this place, or how to heal my limbs?"

Samael appears in Satan's mind. His washed-out, ghost-like form hunches over, as though he's fought a long battle but is too exhausted to fight any longer. The Archangel sighs. "Correct."

"There has to be somethin' I can do. When Raphael destroyed my body, I grew back. What's up with that?"

Samael shrugs. "I assume that the demon souls inside thee unlocked thy ability to regenerate from death. Thy powers of darkness are beyond anything I've seen in my life."

"Thanks, kid, but compliments won't get you anywhere," Satan says with a smirk. "Look, I've got all these souls in my body, right? Raphael seems awfully scared of me. Can't I use 'em or something? They ain't doin' me any good just sittin' there."

Samael throws his hands up. "Maybe. Possibly. 'Tis hard to say. Thou art the soul manipulator, Satan. 'Tis thy duty to understand thy powers."

"Yeah, yeah."

Satan rolls his eyes. He turns his head so he can rest on his other cheek, then glances down at his severed, rotting limbs. They lay off to the side a few feet away, decaying and browning under the holy light of the Cosmic Realm. The smell makes me want to gag, but Satan seems not to care.

His eyes travel lower, to his naked body and the stump where one of his arms used to be. The burnt flesh is black and crisp, yet I feel no sensation coming from it. The Devil's pain resistance is much higher than mine.

"Why is Gramps so strong? I have a hard time believing he beat me so effortlessly."

Samael smirks. "My brother is a mighty warrior, and the last remaining angel to remember the Ancient Wars. As part of a peace agreement, our people and the Titans all gave up their memories to stop an endless cycle of bloodshed. Raphael did not. He alone is the sole keeper of those memories. Defeating him in combat is hardly a feat someone of thy caliber could hope to achieve."

"Sounds like a sweet deal for him," Satan replies. A hint of boredom creeps into his voice. "Still, don't you think it's a little weird he gets to remember the past, but nobody else does?"

Samael cocks his head. "Why woulds't thou say such a thing? Raphael was the most trusted among our people. The Titans were as tired of war as we were. 'Twas only natural for the wisest among both our species to keep some memories intact. Besides, 'tis a burden Raphael wears around his neck. Rarely does my eldest brother smile."

"Uh huh. Suuure," Satan groans audibly. "Did any of the Titans get to keep their memories?"

"Nay."

"Why not?"

"I do not know."

Samael's reply hangs in the air for a moment. Satan clicks his tongue.

"Kinda convenient, don'tcha think? You don't know why Raphael kept those memories, so you have to take his word on what happened. Maybe he pressured the Titans to concede."

"Perhaps," Samael replies with a nod. "But I doubt that very much. After all, t'would have been a simple matter for Raphael to share his memories with other angels later. Millions of years have passed since those dark times. Not once has my brother let slip the circumstances behind the treaty."

"You're naive, kid," Satan says. A throaty chuckle escapes his lips. "Kuhuhu. Man. What a dope. Raphael is hiding somethin'. I bet he deliberately stole everyone's memories. Didn't you see that body of his? When he fought me, that old man was ripped like a wild bull. Plus, there were all those scars, too. There's no way he's only some peaceful wiseguy. Shenanigans were had, and you morons fell for his tricks."

Samael leans against something unseen. "Oh? So sure thou seemeth. Yet, no evidence cans't thee present. After all, whatever the circumstances, we lived in peace for millions of years until thy people rebelled. My brother may, potentially, have used some trickery to end the war... but the results speak for themselves."

Satan rolls his eyes again. "Kid, if there's one thing I've learned from living among demons, it's that everyone has an ulterior motive."

"Do not belittle my age. I am far older than thee."

"Yeah? Well, you're dumb as a baby."

"Thou art a simpleton too, Satan. That is why my brother outwitted thee."

Satan's smile disappears. "Tch. Ain't you just a mouthy little cunt."

A minute passes. Neither the demon nor the angel says a word to the other.

Satan yawns.

"Cripes. How long have we been here? Feels like months."

No response.

"Hey. Fucker. I'm talkin' to you. Answer me."

Samael sighs. "I assumed thou were positing a rhetorical inquiry, one which thou already kneweth the answer."

"No, dumbass. It's a serious question. Ain't no sun or moon up here. I can't tell one hour from the next. You got any ideas?"

Samael cocks his head. "A few hours at most. Does it matter how much time has passed? As my brother said, thou shalt spend eternity here."

"Maybe it doesn't. Gah! Why couldn't I have trapped someone else's soul?! Mother would've been better."

Samael bristles noticeably. "I would have torn thee apart with my bare hands if thou had touched Uzziel."

"Whoaaa, someone's a little defensive," Satan says. His gloating grin returns. "I've gotta ask, are all of you angels brothers and sisters?"

"We are. Why?"

"Just wondering. You seem especially touchy about Mother. Maybe there's a little something else goin' on there, eh?"

Samael glares at me. "I know not of what thou speak."

"Oh, come on," Satan says, pressing further. "You and Uzziel never got a little too close? Maybe warmed each other's beds? There's no need to blush. We're stuck with each other."

"Cease this line of questioning!" Samael yells. "I have no desire to hear such filth directed toward my sister!"

"Alright, alright. Hey, pal, whatever you say. I mean, your defensiveness ain't really helping your case, but I'm just speculatin'. Makin' small talk. You know how it is."

Samael looks away. "Tch. Small talk, indeed."

Whoomph.

A silent rush of air to my left makes Satan flinch in surprise. He lifts his head to look toward it as Raphael strides through a portal into the Cosmic Realm.

"Hello, Satan."

Satan nods. "Gramps. Came back to gloat, did ya?"

Unlike the last time Raphael stood in the Cosmic Realm, he has already restored his broken, bloodied body back to its former glory. The Archangel of Wisdom once again dons beautifully hand-stitched robes, returning to his formerly regal appearance. It seems a lot of time has passed, based on the color restored to his cheeks. "Nay. I came to inform thee that thy plans failed. We successfully killed all of thy people who entered Heaven. However, that isn't all..."

Slowly and deliberately, Raphael procures an animal-skin pouch from beneath his robes. He unties the top, tilts it upside-down, and pours charred black ash all over the ground.

Satan stares at Raphael for several moments. "What's that?"

"The remains of thy ally, the Grim Reaper. Despite his unexpected arrival, we successfully managed to kill him. All of thy plans failed. With thy main army crushed, thy body trapped in the Cosmic Realm, and the bane of the Titans dead... we will quickly spread out across all of Earth and eliminate the last vestiges of thy people."

Satan lowers his head. He rests on his chin, and a sensation of loss spreads across his body.

"Valac wasn't my ally. He was a selfish piece of shit. As for the rest of the demons..."

The Devil closes his eyes for a moment.

"I'll never forgive you, Raphael. You'd better kill me now, while you still can."

The old man shakes his head. "Such a feat is beyond my capability. Thou art a soul manipulator: The vilest of dregs littered across all the universe. It seems that every time thou dost perish, thy body increases in strength once thou returneth from the Great Beyond."

"Oh? So that's what's going on."

"Aye." Raphael slowly lowers himself down to sit in a cross-legged position. "Most interestingly, thy strengthening ability is quite reminiscent of the Titans. Uzziel designed their bodies to adapt and grow over time, becoming more powerful for every battle they survived. The Titans were instrumental in killing the dragons, though understanding the importance of such brutal wars would be a foreign concept to a pest like thee."

Raphael pulls out his pipe. He snaps his thumb, lights some tobacco, and sighs contentedly.

"You're chatty today," Satan replies. "Maybe you shouldn't be telling me all this stuff."

"Pahaha! With the Grim Reaper dead, and the leader of the demons trapped for all eternity in the Cosmic Realm, t'would never be easier for me to relax than right now. The existence of thy people has long been a thorn in my side, but as Camael's visions demonstrate, soon thou shalt be nothing more than a stain on our past."

"Uh huh..."

Satan stares at Raphael suspiciously.

"...Then why're you here?"

Raphael puffs on his pipe for a few moments before responding.

"I love the Cosmic Realm, and I often come to escape questions and prodding from my people. It pains me to allow a disgusting creature such as thee to gaze upon its glory and to sully it with thy blood, but the alternative is keeping thee in Heaven, where thy people might have a chance of rescuing thee. So, here thou must stay."

Satan rolls his head around on his chin. "Mm. So you come here to relax?"

Raphael's expression turns grim. "Relax? I think not. Nearly five thousand angels died today. Long has it been since I said goodbye to so many of my brothers and sisters. The battle ended only five months ago, and so their deaths are still fresh in my mind. I could not bear to help move their bodies... not after everything else that's happened."

"Hold on. Five months?" Satan frowns. "It's already been five months? You're joking."

"Nay. Time moves much more slowly in the Cosmic Realm compared to the physical universe. I imagine fewer than ten hours have passed for thee, while months have passed for my people. I hope ye weren't too uncomfortable."

Satan groans. "I'm just peachy."

Raphael waves his hand dismissively. "As long as thou art in constant searing agony, I'll consider it a fitting punishment for all the pain thou hath caused. The five thousand lives lost to thy treacherous, backstabbing attack were more than faceless soldiers to me. They were my dearest brothers and sisters."

"Yeah? And you think I don't care about all the demons you killed?"

"Thy comrades perished as a result of thy hatred and inability to control thyself. Think, Satan. Uzziel welcomed thee into Heaven, but thou intended to stab her in the back. Art thou proud, demon? We gave thee a chance, but thy choice was to betray our trust. Thou hath surrendered thy right to complain."

Satan's shoulders slump. He lays his face against the ground for a few moments and sighs.

"Yeah. Maybe I did. Doesn't mean I was wrong, though. You angels are all bastards. Haha... if I ever get outta here, I'll make sure you regret leaving me alive."

Several seconds pass.

Satan licks his lips. "Nerissa. Did, uh... did you kill her?"

Raphael shrugs. "I haven't a clue who that is. Barring the Reaper, all of thy people look the same to me."

Satan clenches his teeth. "Anyone ever told you what a shithead you are?"

Raphael taps the burnt tobacco from his pipe on the ground, sticks the smoking implement in his robes, and rises to his feet. "Nobody I know would use such foul words. Perhaps among thy people, illiteracy and crude verbosity run rampant, but among mine, we attempt to maintain a veneer of sophistication."

Like a kettle of water reaching its boiling point, Satan snaps. "That's it! Shut up! I can't take your shit anymore! C'mere! Walk a little closer so I can bite your fuckin' toes off!"

Having suppressed his anger since Raphael's arrival, the Devil begins thrashing his head around. He digs his chin into the ground and tries pulling himself toward the Archangel, but twenty feet is a long distance when only moving an inch at a time.

"I'll chomp your devil-damned head in half! I'll rip off your ear and pull your brains too! C'mere, you old fucker!"

Raphael wipes dust from his robes and stares at me as I slowly pull myself toward him. A wry smile crosses over the old man's face.

"I did not believe I would enjoy coming here, but witnessing thy pathetic state does tinge my cheeks with glee. Hm, hm. Perhaps I should poke thee more often, little demon. Hoho."

Tears begin to run down Satan's face. "BASTARD! I hate you! I hate you!! Murderer! Shit-fucker! When I finally wrap my hands around your neck, I'll-!"

"Thou shalt do nothing," Raphael says, the grin vanishing from his face. He kicks at the pile of Valac's ashes and sends them fluttering toward me. "Enjoy thy stay in the Cosmic Realm, Satan. I have several thousand more funerals to attend, so I'll be quite busy for a while. Try not to go insane before I return."

Satan finally stops pulling himself forward. He chokes on tears and sobs to himself as he presses his face against the blinding ground. My vision goes dark as he tries to wipe his eyes on the Cosmic Realm's smooth surface, but it proves futile.

"Awful... shitty... chicken..."

Raphael's sandals slap against the pure white surface as he turns and walks away.

"Blame not me, but thyself for thy predicament. Farewell, Satan."

Whoomph.

Raphael steps through his portal and returns to Heaven, leaving Satan behind. Alone. He only showed up for a few minutes, but in that time, he crushed the Devil's spirit completely.

Satan whispers to himself through his tears.

"No... no... Nerissa... Agares... they're dead. They're all dead. I couldn't save them. I couldn't save anyone. I'm no good. I'm worthless."

"Very true," Samael says. I expect to hear a hint of mocking in his voice, but he keeps it surprisingly measured. "Thou art quite pathetic. Thy attempt to fight the Eldest Archangel proved foolhardy, as any sane being might have concluded with a hint of introspection. Thy people attempted to battle Heaven's finest, only to taste the full power of the Creator's Might. All of thy plans failed because thou were a vapid dunce."

Satan doesn't offer a retort. He merely stares at the ground emptily. Slowly, his eyes raise to Valac's ashes.

"What were we fightin' for? The world is cruel. Evil. Those with power, win. Those without, lose. What's the point in goin' on without any of the others?"

Samael smirks. "There is no point. As I said before, thou shalt lie here forever. Tormented by the memories of thy failure, thy mind shalt slowly unravel, taking me along for the fall. In the end, nothing will bring me more satisfaction than seeing thy gradual descent into madness."

Satan doesn't reply.

Minutes pass.

The Devil's tears slow to a stop and dry out, eventually hardening on his face into a thin, flaky crust.

"Tch. There ain't any point livin', right?"

Samael nods. "Correct."

Satan gnashes his teeth together. "That's the solution, then. I've gotta figure out how to die. It's the only way outta this mess. Screw Raphael. Screw him and his big words. I'm Satan the fuckin' Devil. I ain't nobody's bitch."

Samael sighs. "Always with the profanity."

"Shut yer trap, moron. I'm thinkin'."

Ten minutes pass. Twenty. Thirty.

Satan silently stares at Valac's ashes.

I manipulate souls. So did Valac. Raphael's scared of us. There must be a reason. What can we do that non-manipulators can't?

Satan's tongue snakes out of his mouth. He wets his lips.

"Samael. I've got a question."

The Archangel sighs. "Haah. What is it this time?"

"Gramps said I get stronger every time I die. He said that's something the Titans do, too. Is that true?"

"Naturally. My brother is no liar."

Satan chuckles. "Heh. Agree to disagree. Hm. Funny story, Sammy boyo... I crushed the skulls of two Titans recently 'n took their souls. Ain't that funny? Bit of a coincidence, wouldn't you say?"

Samael freezes. His face whitens.

"Impossible."

"Nah... funniest thing. See, all the souls of demons who signed my contracts entered my body when they died. There weren't many at first. Five here. Ten there. But, wouldn't ya know it, a funny thing happened."

Satan smiles.

"My horns grew. I felt a new power awaken inside of myself. A new ability, if ya please."

Samael's hands begin to tremble.

"No... no, that can't be..."

"Yep. It's true. Then, after I learned about my power, another funny thing happened. This cute dame saved me from your two sisters. That was when I learned about the existence of the Titans. I told that nice piece of ass that I'd make her my girl if she brought me back a Titan's head. And wouldn't ya know it! She brought me two!"

Horror spreads across Samael's face. "Th-then... that's... when thou seized their heads and crushed them... it wasn't only because..."

"Because I hated 'em? Nah. C'mon. I ain't that petty."

Satan's grin widens across his entire face. The naked, limbless demon guffaws mightily. "Bahahaha! Aw, geez. Cripes! That's some good shit, ain't it? I was just hoping their souls would make me a little stronger! But to get their abilities too? Now that's a sweet deal! Now I see why gramps is so scared of me! Ahhh-hahaha!!"

Samael sags to his knees. The Archangel rests his face in his palms. "Taking the souls of other beings and using their powers for thy own purposes... thou art truly... a monster..."

Satan ignores the Archangel. "I mean, geez! I should've realized when I took your soul and got these eight handy arms! Ahaha... and... here's the best part..."

The Devil's voice lowers.

His smile vanishes.

"...I have thousands of demon souls inside me. Every demon the angels killed gave me their powers. Think of the possibilities, Samael. All that magic, and it's mine. I wasn't there for 'em, but I can still avenge 'em. The old man has good reason to be scared. He can't kill me, and I'm stronger than ever. Hoho, boy. I'm gonna turn my fortunes around."

Samael finally manages to regain his composure. The Archangel rises again and shakily points his finger at Satan. "I-it doesn't matter. Without any arms, thy ability to cast spells is nonexistent. Thou art still trapped and helpless... even if... if thy powers art unfathomable."

Satan sets his jaw. "Where there's a will, there's a way. Whether it takes one minute or one eternity... I've got all the time in the world."

"Hehehe... Raphael thinks he's got me licked. I'll teach that old bastard what happens when he underestimates Satan the Devil. I might be the last demon alive, but I'll carry our torch to the bitter end. Nobody looks down on me. Nobody."

The world goes black as Satan closes his eyes and begins to think.

It's time I took a closer look at the souls inside me. One of 'em's gotta have something that can free me from this prison.

One of 'em...

Part 115: For The Horde!

The sound of shifting rocks and dirt greets my ears as I enter the mind of someone familiar. Pitch-black darkness surrounds me.

Whump. Whump.

I take one step forward whenever the ground rumbles in front of me. Something bumps against my right arm, but Nerissa, my current host, ignores it.

The succubus fans herself as she stumbles along in the darkness. "Phew... Artorias, it's getting hot down here. Can we go up for air?"

Artorias's reply comes after a short pause. He shoves another load of earth ahead of us. "No. We're not out of the angel's territory yet."

"How much... much further is it?" Nerissa asks. "I hate the heat."

Artorias practically growls out his reply. "Well, summon some ice and cool yourself off. We have at least a few more miles to go."

"I can't. My body is too hot for that."

"I don't know what to tell you. If we go up, the angels will spot us. We'll end up mincemeat on the carving block. You know how good their vision is."

I loll my head forward in frustration. "Yeah. I know. Agares, how are you holding up?"

The demon to my right grunts. "I'm fine. The heat doesn't bother me. It's the cold I hate."

"Hah... guess we're opposites, huh?"

"Something like that."

After a moment, Artorias resumes punching the dirt away. We continue traveling forward at an agonizingly slow pace as Nerissa mops sweat from her forehead.

Agares nudges me. He keeps his voice low. "If you're tired, you can ride the sled. There's some room left."

"N-no. I'm fine. I just... I need some air. I wouldn't want to burden you like that."

I can barely make out Agares waving his hand dismissively. "Eh, suit yourself. How are your ribs holding up?"

"Still feels like a cave bear mauled me. Michael certainly didn't... didn't pull any punches."

Agares nods. "Sorry to hear that."

Minutes pass. We all continue walking in silence. I glance back at the ice-sled and frown. "Agares, I think it's starting to melt."

"Yup. It's getting harder 'n harder to pull every second."

"I can't make any more ice unless we surface. If it breaks down..."

Artorias continues punching the air to create our tunnel, but he tilts his head back. "If that happens, then we'll leave them behind. Once we make it to the Lair, we can send someone back to pick them up."

"What? No! We can't- ah... can't do that..." Nerissa gets a little too excited, sending a sharp stinging pain through her chest.

"Well, I cannot dig and carry our injured at the same time. You can't lift anything right now, either. Agares only has two arms. We don't have many options-"

Artorias pauses.

"Oh. Damn."

Panic creeps into Nerissa's voice. "What? Is something wrong?!"

"No. We've already arrived. I misjudged the distance to the Lair. I didn't realize it extended this far south."

With one last punch, Artorias shoves more dirt aside, and flickering torchlight floods the darkness, illuminating the three of us, along with the sled full of unconscious demons.

Blissfully cool air rushes into the tunnel. Nerissa gasps and stumbles forward, savoring the sensation of the breeze against her skin.

Seconds later, half a dozen demons appear at the opening. The battered and beaten survivors that managed to escape Heaven glance at us curiously before lightbulbs appear above their heads.

"Oy, ain't that Agares? And Satan's lady, too?"

"Artorias! Welcome back!"

"Whose bodies are on the ice thingy?"

Questions barrage us. Artorias pushes the nosy demons aside. "Out of the way. We've got injured here. Agares and Nerissa faced off against two Archangels and nearly died. Belial, Lucifer, Bael, and Diablo are in bad shape, too. They all need healing."

Agares rubs his head. "Don't worry about me. I'm fine. Treat the others first."

We step into the underground tunnels of the Demon Lair and arrive amid mostly dead space. Where before there were dozens of demons meandering in the halls, only the five or so that greeted us are here, now.

I look left and right. "Where... where is everyone?"

A young, scraggly-looking demon flicks his eyes up and down my cut-apart body. "Nyek! Big meeting at Death's Head to see who'll be the new boss! Satan's dead, so someone else has to lead!"

The young demon looks away from me and turns his attention to Artorias. "Where've you been, bro?! I killed like, ten angels all by myself! You should've seen it! I was all, 'wham, pow, koochaw!' And the angels were like, 'no, no, don't hurt us, please!' It was sick!"

Artorias blinks. He nods at the younger demon. "Yes, I'm sure you did a good job, Barbatos."

"I did, I did! I kicked all their asses!"

A large, obsidian-skinned beside Barbatos whacks him over the head. "Silence. All you did was cry and plead for mercy. If any angels perished, they did so out of embarrassment."

Barbatos rubs his head. "Y-you don't even know, Smealum! You weren't there at all!"

"Enough," Artorias says, cutting both of them off. "Barbatos. Show everyone to Hellga's healing chambers. Help Belial first. Once she's fixed up, she can heal the others."

Artorias turns to Agares and me. "As for you two, head to Death's Head after Hellga does her thing. I'll tell everyone at the meeting to wait until you arrive."

Nerissa raises her hand hesitantly. "Uh, um... Smealum? Satan... is it true... is he dead? Is there a chance he survived the battle?"

Before the dark-skinned demon can reply, Barbatos jumps in. "No way! That idiot got offed by Raphael! He went down like a total chump! Raphael sucked 'im into this weird portal and came back a minute later, barely injured. Satan got his ass handed-"

Artorias swings his arm out and backhands his brother, knocking the annoying little grunt on his ass. "Barbatos! Keep your trap shut. I won't listen to any insults regarding our former leader."

Barbatos glares at his older brother. "Hey! What's the big idea?! You can't tell me what to do!"

"I can and I will, as your older brother." Artorias crosses his arms. "Got something to say about it?"

Barbatos starts to retort, but he keeps his tongue in check. "Tch. Whatever." He turns to scowl at Agares and me. "Come on, then! I ain't got all day!"

Sighing, I shrug at Agares as the little whiney brat turns and stomps away. "It's not like we don't know where to find Hellga..."

Artorias turns to walk in the opposite direction from Barbatos. "Apologies for my brother's words. He can be... difficult. I'll see you all in a bit."

I nod. "Thank you, Artorias. We wouldn't have made it without you."

The muscular demon commander pauses for a moment before heading away. "My condolences for your loss."

I merely nod and turn away, offering no reply.

Nerissa's gaze shifts inward.

Satan... what will we do without you?

A gorgeous demoness with long black hair and slinky, cat-like legs kneels beside Belial, dabbing ointment all over her body. "Oh, my. This seductress took quite the beating! How about you, Nerissa? Are you doing alright?"

I nod. "Yes. My ribs are killing me... but I'll survive."

"Not if those get infected, you won't. Those bones are poking through your skin!"

The demoness barely wears anything. She isn't a succubus, but she has curves in all the right places. Barbatos and Agares' eyes follow her ass as she struts from one side of Belial to the other, bending down occasionally to rub healing solution on her broken body. Her leopard-print lingerie seems wildly inappropriate for a place of healing, but demons have a very different culture compared to humanity.

Agares slurps some drool from his mouth. "Damn, Hellga. You're a sight for sore eyes. Almost makes getting my ass beat by Michael worth all the trouble."

Hellga turns and winks at him, flashing a cheery smile in the process. "Oh, Agares! You're such a sweetheart!"

The lizard-demon blushes. He turns away, unable to meet her gaze.

Barbatos, on the other hand, grins like a lovestruck idiot. "I bet there ain't anyone sexier than you, Hellga! What's a guy gotta do to get you in the Relief Chambers, eh?"

"My chastity is what makes me beautiful, boys! You can look, but if you touch, I'll have to break all your bones! And after that, I'll heal you and break them again! Hahaha!"

Hellga resumes her doctoring of Belial's wounds. After a moment, she furrows her brow. "Okay, that's about it. Now to wake her up."

Lucifer, still unconscious, lies a few feet away from Belial. Diablo and Bael, likewise, can barely take shallow breaths. Their bodies, weak from a hundred years of torture, hardly give them enough energy to breathe.

Hellga presses her index and middle finger against Belial's forehead. Frowning, she closes her eyes for a moment to transfer mana to the unconscious succubus.

"Huhk!"

Belial jerks awake with a start. "Haah... haah..."

Her breathing comes in uneven spurts for a moment before leveling out.

"Wh-what happened? Where am I- ahh... ch-chest hurts... my legs, too."

Hellga leans back and flashes a pleasant smile. "I gave you some mana. Heal yourself if you can. After that, you've other wounded to heal in the tertiary chambers."

Belial shakily raises her hand. "Okay. Just... just give me a moment."

A minute later, she motions with her hand. Her internal organs rapidly heal, along with her battered bones and skin. Soon, the succubus leans forward and sighs. "Whew. Devils. I need to sleep for a week. I've never felt so tired in my life."

"Definitely. But first, you're going to help me. Up and at 'em!" Hellga grabs Belial and yanks her to her feet. "Here, have some more mana. Heal Lucifer, and then we'll continue to the other survivors."

Belial blinks. Her eyes widen. "Ah! That's right! What happened after Michael-"

"You'll see for yourself, in due time," Agares says, holding his palm up. He sighs and scratches his head. "Satan died. That's all we know so far. Those of us that are left are going to have a meeting in a little bit. The sooner you get everyone healed, the sooner we can sort out what's happened."

A sense of gloom descends upon us. Belial walks over to me. "Are you doing okay, Nerissa? I know you and Satan were..."

Nerissa turns away. "I'm fine. We.. we were only together for... a little while."

My words ring hollow. Belial crosses her arms. "Mmm. If you say so, we'll talk later, okay?"

"Sure."

Belial leans forward and winces as she examines the cuts and bruises covering my body. "Walking around naked with these wounds is going to lead to an infection."

I shake my head. "My body hurts too much to... to wear anything. The last thing I want is clothing ag-against my skin."

Belial nods. She quickly weaves magical signs, mumbles something under her breath, and presses her palm against my shoulder.

The pain that hits me a moment later makes me pass out for a few moments. I wake up on the ground, writhing and whimpering as my ribs suck back inside my chest. My skin rapidly repairs itself, and within a minute, I can only shudder at the phantom pain coursing through me.

"Nnn... it's true what they say about your healing being worse than the injuries."

Belial tosses some bearskin clothing over to me. "Sorry. I tried not to make it hurt too badly."

After gathering her strength, Nerissa pulls herself up and gets dressed. While she slips into underwear and clothes, I find myself wondering why it is she's so comfortable standing naked and getting dressed around other demons. I'd feel weird if people saw me in the nude. She doesn't seem to care at all and has no inhibitions whatsoever. It's strange.

Again, it's probably demon culture, but I can't help thinking there might be more to it than that. Maybe I'm just a prude.

Nerissa fluffs her blue hair and sits on a cot, rubbing her hands together while Belial heals Lucifer and the others.

Eventually, Belial finishes. Lucifer rises and dusts herself off.

One quick chat later, and Lucifer nods.

"So that's what happened. I can only hope Valac survived his battle against the Archangels. His power dwarfs Satan's. If he leads demonkind, I believe we will soundly crush the angels."

Nerissa scoffs. "You think Valac has something Satan doesn't? Please. I appreciate Valac saving some of our people, but Satan gave his life to save Diablo and Bael. That's what makes him a true leader."

Lucifer groans. "Or a moron. We lost how many grunts trying to save two captured weaklings?"

The four-breasted demoness violently gestures toward Diablo and Bael lying side-by-side in adjacent cots. "Look what we have to show for it! Thousands dead, and these two saved! Wow, Satan was such a military genius!"

Agares clears his throat. "Ahem. Let me butt in. Satan wasn't just trying to save Deebs and Bael. We also went there to try and kill a few angels, and to see how we compared to them. That's why a few hundred of us stayed behind, just in case the angels annihilated our attack force. The broodmothers would allow us to birth more demons over time."

Lucifer rolls her eyes. "A test. Of course. You'd believe anything our beloved leader said. Oh, well. When Valac arrives, he'll bolster our forces. I can only pray he's smarter than the gobbler of meat we had before. Tch. What idiot would think facing an Archangel one-on-one was a good idea?"

Nerissa bows her head. Her cheeks flush red as images of Michael's emotionless face appear in her memories.

"Y-yeah. Probably not the best idea someone could come up with."

Belial leaves us as she heads off to heal the other demons.

"I'll finish as quickly as possible. Just give me a few minutes."

Footsteps echo down the hallways as several hundred demons march behind me. Agares, Belial, and Lucifer take the lead, and I follow them. All the demons Belial healed are in good spirits, which is remarkable considering the devastating losses they've suffered.

Barbatos chitters to another young demon. "Chee! My brother thinks he's big stuff, always going on about the rules and how important they are. Can you believe that? It's like we're livin' with the bloody chickens all over again."

The other demon raises an eyebrow. "But... weren't you born after leaving Heaven?"

"I lived there in spirit!"

Nerissa ignores him. Soon, the corridor begins to expand. We arrive at a massive underground room the size of a small stadium. Two thousand demons plunk on the floor in the middle and along the walls, each chattering to their neighbors about this and that.

Artorias stands at the entrance. He turns to look at us as we arrive. "Ah. There you are. Took you long enough."

Belial sighs. "Sorry. Healing two hundred demons with our remaining mana reserves took a while. It will be a while before I can heal again. I hope the angels don't discover us now, or we'll be goners."

Artorias nods. "Well, as long as you guys can talk, that will be satisfactory. I think this is everyone. We can begin the meeting."

Artorias's expression darkens. He gestures for Agares and Lucifer to follow him. The three of them head off toward the front of the room.

I sit down beside Belial and some other demons. We watch as Artorias claps his hands together.

"Everyone. I know you've heard the rumors floating around. Grigori did his best and held open the portal to the very end... but, unfortunately..."

Nerissa frowns. She turns to Barbatos. "Rumors?"

The young demon shrugs. "Dunno."

Artorias sighs. "...Valac perished. Camael and the Valkyries attacked him with their full might and scorched him with divine flames. There's no easy way to say it... so, there it is. He's dead."

Nerissa's jaw drops. The entire room erupts into frantic whispering as demons nudge each other, asking if they've heard the news or not.

"Quiet, please. Quiet." Artorias holds up his hand to silence the room. "The long and short of it is that with Satan and Valac gone, we need new leaders. I don't think anyone can argue that they were by far the strongest out of all of us... but we can't dwell on the past."

Artorias rests both of his hands on Agares and Lucifer's shoulders. "Lucifer created the Broodmothers. Her combat skills are excellent. Agares, too, is an excellent fighter. Both of them have the vision necessary to lead us-"

"NYEHEHE!"

A voice cackles around the room, interrupting Artorias's speech. Above us, a specter materializes in midair. Valac hovers and laughs wildly.

"Listen to Artorias, telling such a lie! Only a fool would think this king could die!"

Valac sweeps his arms outward, as if to call forth our gazes.

"How quickly rumors spread of my defeat, but in the end, the angels fell for my deceit."

Lucifer stares up at Valac. "What are you on about? What deceit? What happened to you?"

Valac lowers himself to the ground. He towers above all the other demons, like a living wall of bone.

The Reaper stabs a finger at Lucifer. "Silence, wench! Your performance against Michael was lame! Three against one, but you lost in shame! Against you, the Archangel's blade did maim, but it was our honor which Agares reclaimed!"

Agares quickly shakes his head. "Err, no- I didn't do all that much..."

Valac raises a finger to silence him. "Now, now Agares, there's no need to protest. From a distance, I witnessed your combat prowess. You stood your ground against the legendary Michael, then followed with a duel against his brother, Gabriel. All of that, and you fought alone, while these defeated women lay prone."

Agares bows his head. "W-well, I mean... I kinda, just..."

Lucifer scowls at Valac. "Hold on a moment. I thought we were working together. Where do you get off insulting me like that? Michael was unstoppable! It was hardly a fair fight!"

Valac chuckles. "Oh, what's that? Unstoppable, you say? Without any effort, I could keep them at bay. Admit it, Lucifer, you're weak like an ant. I thought you'd be useful, but your strength is scant."

Lucifer clenches her hands into fists. "Valac, you... bastard. After everything I've done for you, you're going to sit there and pretend you succeeded without my help?!"

The demoness's third eye begins to glow. Valac holds up his hand. "Careful, now, there's no need to get cranky. Don't do anything brash; you wouldn't like me when I'm angry."

"Screw you!!"

Lucifer's eye shifts to red. A moment later, a shockwave shoots out and slams against Valac's body. The Grim Reaper flies backward, and several demons barely get out of the way in time as he hits the wall with a terrific CRASH! Lucifer starts to motion with her hands to summon a magic spell, but she pauses and frowns. Valac's body goes limp as he falls from the wall and slaps to the floor.

Just like when the angels 'killed' him in Heaven, the Reaper's bones seem to evaporate, leaving his rags to flop in a pile.

"What? I killed him?" Lucifer's jaw slackens as she stares at his dead body in surprise.

A moment later, the air beside Lucifer shifts. Valac appears and swings his fist out. "SURPRISE!"

Wham!

He pounds the side of her head with terrific force, sending the demoness flying. Lucifer rockets to the side and tumbles into the crowd of onlookers. Her body becomes a fleshy projectile, battering dozens of demons aside. Yelps of shock go through the mob.

A moment later, the room goes dead silent as everyone gazes at Lucifer's unconscious form.

"You are weak, as I stated before! There's nothing worse than a mouthy little whore."

"Lucifer!" Agares jumps into action and runs over to her. He quickly pulls her out of the crowd and checks to see if she's breathing. After a moment, the reptile-demon scowls at Valac. "What's wrong with you?! You nearly killed her!"

Valac crosses his two lower arms. "She attacked me first, and I countered in self-defense. To blame me for her weakness would make no sense. Ah, well, women can't help being dense, but perhaps I can offer some recompense?"

The Reaper holds up his top-left arm. With a quick flourish, he summons his lantern. A moment later, he vanishes in a puff of smoke and reappears beside Agares. Before the young demon can protest, Valac shoves him aside and reaches his skeletal hand out. Valac grabs Lucifer's face, and goes silent.

Agares stares wide-eyed as Lucifer's body twitches. Despite being unconscious, she writhes for a moment, then suddenly awakens and begins thrashing like an enraged octopus.

"Mgm!! Mmm!" She grabs Valac's arm and tries to yank it off her face, but the Reaper slams her head against the ground. He pets her hair with another hand, sending shivers down my spine.

Only when the Reaper nods and finishes his magic does he release her and pull away. Lucifer gasps and slumps to the side. She claws at her neck, as if trying to tear something out of her throat.

"Ah... ahh! What- what did you do?! There's something... something inside me!"

Valac chuckles. "Hehe. Satan's magic is gone, and now I've set you free. Well? Aren't you going to thank me?"

Nerissa shifts uncomfortably. Valac must have done to Lucifer what he did to me. He grabbed me by the face and... put something in my body. It felt like... like a worm.

Lucifer shudders to her feet. The demoness eyes Valac warily. "Why would I thank you? You've done nothing for me."

Valac places his lower palms against each other and fans his upper arms outward. "Ah, but you are wrong, for I have given you a gift. Take a look inside yourself; for your powers, I did lift."

The demoness stares at him for several seconds. When she doesn't immediately praise him, Valac launches a fist at her face. Startled, Lucifer jerks to the side, avoiding his fist with impressive speed. Valac continues swinging at her, using all four of his arms, but her body moves far faster than before, to the point that I have trouble following her actions.

Up, down, left, right. Lucifer moves astoundingly fast, avoiding all of Valac's punches. Valac finally stops, and she retreats several steps, gasping for breath the whole time.

"Haah, haah! What happened? I... I dodged before I even saw you move!"

Valac wraps his hands behind his back. Satisfied with the looks of astonishment from the demons filling the chamber, he spins on his heel and struts away from Lucifer.

"Listen carefully, you little feeders. There's no need to gawk and stare. Accept me as your leader, and with you, my power, I will share. While Lucifer's increase has proven quite ample, she has had but a meager sample. Countless souls are mine to grant, but more will come once Satan's post I supplant."

Artorias, having watched Valac's rampage the whole time, raises his hand. "A question, Valac. What are these 'souls' you speak of?"

Valac tilts his head back. "Oh, you don't know? I thought you were bright. Souls are the essence of every being; that which gives them might. To wretched demons like us, creatures of the night, souls are the gifts that keep on giving; our eternal light."

Artorias purses his lips. "So, you're saying souls are inside of everyone? They make us stronger?"

Valac nods. "Indeed, how sad I am that you do not know. Were Satan a better leader, upon you this knowledge he might have bestowed."

Artorias narrows his eyes. "Satan knew of that which you speak? He knew about these... these souls?"

"Indeed. Satan was a soul manipulator, just as I. He kept his powers a secret, and left you all to die. After all you'd been through, he showed you no respect. A pathetic excuse for a demon; what more could you expect?"

Barbatos jumps up beside me. "Holy crap! I want souls! Where can I get some souls?!"

Valac's cheerful tone hardens. "Silence, you insipid little shit. Speak only when spoken to, or your lip I'll split. Times have changed. Satan is your leader no more. I am your King now; many changes I have in store."

Slowly, Valac begins pacing back and forth. "No longer will demons regard one another as equals. Such lies will poison us and prove to be lethal. Satan was a caring demon, one who took too many risks. With him gone, our evolutions must become brisk. Sit back and listen; take my knowledge to heart. My conquests will soon be yours, but only after my wisdom, I impart."

* * *

Valac begins weaving a series of words together, describing his recent triumphs. He goes into exhaustive detail about the thousands of Titans he's killed, and how they fear him at every turn. His rhyming grates on my mind the longer he speaks, but as long as I'm in Nerissa's body, I can't protest.

Finally, the Grim Reaper stops. He rests a hand on Artorias's shoulder and gazes out at the crowd.

"Any questions?"

The room is so silent that I could hear a pin drop.

Nerissa raises her hand.

"I have one. If you're so strong and so far above the rest of us... if the Titans fear you and you held your own against the Archangels... then what purpose do we serve? Can't you kill all of the Titans and Angels by yourself?"

Her question hangs in the air for several long seconds, like a rotting apple moments before it falls off a branch.

Valac rubs his hands together. The movement seems unusual, given what little I know about him. He looks nervous, almost as if he isn't sure how to respond.

The moment passes. Valac rises to his full height and cackles. "Nyehehe! I don't, foolish little girl! Listen to you, pretending you're a pearl! I could chew up every demon and spit them in the dirt, but I'm offering you all a chance for your powers to exert. A war is coming, one I'd sooner not avert. We'll draw a line in the sand, and our dominance, assert."

Cheers ring out in the hall. Nearly all the demons in the room yell wildly and clap their hands, excited at Valac's tales of dominance and power. Several of them eye Lucifer, imagining how strong they'll be when they join Valac's side.

Nerissa doesn't clap. She crosses her arms and frowns as Valac turns away.

He's lying. Satan told me about Valac. He's a self-serving demon, one who doesn't give the damnedest about others of his kind. Satan cared about all of us. That's why he sent my sisters and me to rescue Diablo and Bael. Valac would never do such a thing.

As the cheers ring out, Valac raises a hand.

"Quiet. I have one last thing to say. It regards our future, and how our fortunes could decay."

The applause dies down. Most of the onlookers lean forward and listen intently for Valac to deliver some bad news.

"Fate, unyielding, is the cruelest mistress. Her ways are filled with death and distress. Some of you may look ahead with a hunch or a guess, but I see perfectly our path to progress."

"I have foreseen that a threat will soon arise — a Titan, unlike any other, with rage burning in his eyes. His power, terrifying, has the potential to dwarf even mine. We must all work together to eradicate his bloodline."

Artorias frowns. "How do you know this specter of tomorrow will be a Titan? Furthermore, why not kill him now if you know who he is?"

Valac shakes his head. "The rivers of time branch out in all directions. His face hides among a thousand others to evade detection. Seeing the future is not an exact science. It resists my gaze and offers endless defiance. If his face I could see, I would kill him in an instant while cackling with glee."

Satisfied, Artorias nods. "I understand. I think everyone here has made it known who they want to rule demonkind. I don't know if you'll be better than Satan... but it's clear you have experience dealing with Titans."

Lucifer shivers. "I don't trust him, even if he did give me a little boost. Nobody hits me and gets away with it."

Nerissa jumps to her feet. We pump our fist boldly. "Yeah! I don't trust you either, Valac! You're hiding something from us!"

"Nerissa!" Belial hisses at me from below, but I ignore her.

Valac's head turns from left to right as he evaluates Lucifer and me both.

"Watch your mouths when you talk to your king. Anger me, and I'll make both of you dance on my string."

Valac seethes for a moment before turning to Agares. The reptile-demon stands a few feet to Lucifer's right and grows visibly uncomfortable when Valac's gaze sets on him.

"You there, Agares the Brave. I haven't forgotten you, nor the lives you've saved. Your battle against Michael left me impressed; A mighty warrior like you deserves only the best. Your reward is near; come close and kneel. Your body will strengthen, and your skin will steel."

"I... I haven't really, uhm..."

Agares glances at me. Guilt washes over his face, as if to say, I don't deserve special treatment.

However, he loses his nerve. Swallowing, he kneels before Valac and flinches as the Reaper reaches toward him.

Instead of violently grabbing Agares face, Valac merely rests his hand on the demon's scalp. Agares winces after a moment as one of Valac's worms enters his mind, but he utters no audible complaint.

When Agares stands, Valac claps his hands together. "There it is, your powers have awakened. Make sure that during battle, you remain unshaken."

"Y-yeah," Agares mutters. He shuffles backward as Valac beckons to the crowd.

"Let's get a move on; I haven't got all day! Once everyone is empowered, we've Titans to slay!"

The room explodes with two thousand cheers. "Yeah!"

All the while, Nerissa watches disapprovingly.

Dammit. I wish Satan was here. With Valac leading us, I see only misfortune and loss in our future.

Part 116: Sanctity of Heaven

I appear inside Camael's mind once again. She walks beside Raphael through a much bigger city in Heaven than I've seen before. Tall stone houses stand erected alongside the road, offering ample space for the cherubs and seraphs who live inside.

Raphael turns to look at us. "Art thou certain this artifact will heal Uriel and Uzziel?"

I shake my head. "Nay. However, 'tis our best bet. I had hoped to refine its magical properties further, but with Uzziel and Uriel both comatose, I cannot simply rest on my laurels and do nothing."

Camael raises her fist. In her grasp rests a simple golden band, perhaps 8 inches in diameter. The unadorned object, apparently one of her holy artifacts, is unassuming and barebones compared to the others I've seen.

"What is that?" Raphael asks.

"'Tis a unique artifact, unlike others I've created. When someone places it upon their head, it grants a substantial increase to their cognitive abilities. I designed it to help me focus my mind... especially given the disturbing visions I've seen of late."

Camael lowers the band to her side. It takes me a moment to deduce it must be Solomon's Crown... or at least, the early prototype.

Raphael clears his throat. "Oh? What sorts of visions addle thy mind, sister?"

The moment Raphael asks, Camael pales. She continues staring straight ahead, a neutral look etched into her face, but her heart races.

"Ah, well, I suppose 'disturbing' might be too strong a word..."

Raphael reaches up to touch my arm. "If there is anything troubling thee, I am always here to listen."

"I know, and I thank thee, brother. My dreams of late have merely been..."

Camael trails off. She glances away for a moment as she tries to think of something to say.

"...they have been confusing. Yes, confusing. That is an accurate statement. I foresaw the demon attack, but I did not envision Valac's appearance."

A moment passes. The two of us slowly continue walking, and Camael lowers her eyes.

"The Grim Reaper told me something before our battle. He said that he, too, could peer into the future. His vision, like mine, could pierce the fog of time."

Raphael's eyes narrow. "Oh? Is that so? Art thou certain?"

Camael's heart flutters. To herself, she thinks: Yes. He spoke of the same events that I have foreseen. Short of a lucky guess, t'would be impossible for him to invent such a future.

However, she shakes her head. "Nay. After all his bold claims, he perished in a most unceremonious death. The Reaper was, most likely, lying."

Raphael nods. "Let not the words of silver-tongued demons worry thee, sister. The Hammer of Heaven has never failed us in the past. Thy foresight has saved us from many a calamity, especially during the..."

The Archangel of Wisdom falls silent. His words hang in the air.

"The Ancient Wars?" Camael asks.

"Mmm."

Raphael grunts, but doesn't elaborate.

Camael cocks an eyebrow. "Art thou saying that in all my life, I never once failed our people?"

Slowly, Raphael swallows. His gaze darkens.

"Well. There was... there was one moment where thy visions failed to predict something. 'Twas in regards to Michael, and how he... he..."

The old man falls silent once more. Camael raises an eyebrow.

"Did something happen to Michael?"

"Nay," Raphael says. He takes a moment to think before choosing his next words carefully. "'Twas not what happened to him, but... something he... bah..."

Raphael waves his hand flippantly. He leans against his staff and shuffles a little faster. "'Twas a different era. Ignore the ramblings of this old man."

An awkward silence falls between the two Archangels.

"Aye," Camael whispers.

Each of them, the two eldest angels, carries a secret. Neither of them wishes to burden the other with their load, but as a passive observer, I can only wonder how differently things might have turned out had they spoken more honestly to one another.

* * *

The two Archangels chatter idly for a while, and soon I begin to notice a marked increase in the buildings lining the streets. Up ahead, in the distance, a massive stone castle looms against the backdrop of Heaven. Until now, I hadn't noticed its presence due to fog obscuring it. Indeed, the further we travel, the cooler Heaven becomes. It never reaches a level I'd call 'uncomfortable,' but the decrease is probably more noticeable in the sky.

A massive stone wall surrounds the fortress. Cherubs and seraphs fly to and from it, landing in the streets to our left and right. Several angels wave and bow respectfully at us.

Despite the losses angelkind suffered during the battle with Valac, the mood in the city seems relatively positive. That is, until I begin to notice telling glances here and there. A few angels smile at us, only to quickly look away as if they have questions they dare not ask.

Camael glances at Raphael. "Now that the initial remembrance ceremonies have concluded, who should we first honor among our brothers and sisters? Many died valiant deaths against the demon scourge."

Raphael rubs his forehead. "Hmm. I've given that matter much thought. Many of our siblings are high-strung, fretting over whether we will pick a cherub or a seraph. None of the Valkyries or Templar perished during the battle against the demons, so we cannot begin with someone of high rank."

"Perhaps, Brother Listrus? He fought bravely and gave his life to save four cherubs."

"Possibly," Raphael mutters. "I am also considering Sister Vera. She slew a hundred demons before the vermin overran her. By the time we pulled them off, she was scarcely recognizable."

Camael nods. "All of our family members fought courageously. Despite Valac's servants terrorizing our ranks and driving some of our finest to madness, everyone held the line. Choosing the first to venerate will prove quite difficult."

Raphael pulls his pipe out from under his robes. As he lights it, he murmurs under his breath, "Yes, hmm. I wonder who Muriel would choose."

"Muriel? Why mention her?"

Raphael puffs on his pipe. "These recent tragedies have weighed heavily on my mind. Muriel was always one to stand strong and conceal her emotions. She never faltered, not under any circumstance. To say she was the most steadfast in her convictions would be to undersell her devoutness to the Creator's will. She would have chosen the perfect candidate - someone that none could argue against."

A moment passes. Raphael sighs.

"Sadly, I lack such prescience."

"As do we all," I remark, while gently squeezing his shoulder.

* * *

We continue onward, but before we arrive at the fortress, Raphael turns left towards a large, stone monastery. It lacks the religious symbolism I've seen in similar buildings on Earth, but retains the beautiful stained-glass windows and intricate stonework. A twenty-foot doorway opens up onto a porch with several marbled pillars. When I scrutinize the columns more carefully, I notice that they aren't held together with mortar or any adhesive agents. Instead, each stone has been precisely cut to fit in with the others. A gentle bump might send the whole thing crashing down.

Camael's thoughts turn inward. The Holy Haven. Our injured brethren usually come here to rest and meditate after training. For now, we've converted it into a makeshift healing sanctuary.

The closer we draw to the monastery, the more injured angels I spot. Several limp around, while others lack arms, ears, or other appendages. One older angel, someone who looks to be about fifty, appearance-wise, rests on a stone bench outside the door. His left leg, cut off above the knee, hangs off the side of his seat uselessly, while his right rests on the ground to stabilize himself.

He glances at us. "Camael. Raphael. How dost thee fare on this fine day?"

I nod at him. "Brother Klein. I am well. We're here to try and restore Uriel and Uzziel's sanity. Is Michael inside?"

Klein nods. "He is. The poison caused some lasting damage to his right arm. The healers say it might lose some of its speed and strength... but given time, they hope he'll make a full recovery."

"Time, perhaps, yes," Raphael replies noncommittally. "We'll see what Uzziel has to say when she wakes up. Isn't that right, Camael?"

I nod. "Uzziel is our best healer. If she cannot remove the poison, nobody can. I thank thee for thy assistance, Klein."

Klein tilts his head respectfully. "Farewell. May the Creator's light shine upon thee."

Camael and Raphael nod before heading inside.

Even more injured angels mill about within the Holy Haven's interior. One of them spots us and hobbles over. I recognize him as Shepherd. His right wing, still broken, tilts awkwardly to the left, while his left arm is little more than a stump.

Shepherd's face flushes as he draws near. "S-sister Camael. I... I wanted to apologize for my conduct."

Camael raises an eyebrow. "Apologize? What for? Thy warning alerted Gabriel and me to Valac's appearance. Had thou not done so, many more of our brothers and sisters might have fallen."

Shepherd bows his head. His scraggly white hair spills off his shoulders and over the front of his robes. "Ah, well, my panic was unbecoming of a cherub. In the face of evil, Heaven's Finest mustn't lose their composure and beg to flee the battle. I, ah... I ask thy permission to resign from my post. I intend to rejoin the acolytes in praise of our Creator."

Before Camael can reply, Shepherd gestures to his missing arm, where a bandage lines its stump. "Besides, I won't be much use in battle."

Raphael nods. "Very well. I know that stepping down is considered shameful by many, but far be it for me to stand in thy path. The Creator favors those who speak the truth and gaze inward to reflect on themselves. I am certain that one day, thou shalt become a fine servant of Heaven."

Shepherd forces a smile. "M-my deepest thanks, brother Raphael. Thy words soothe the regret in my heart, even if only a little. I leave both of thee in peace."

All three of us bow stiffly, and Shepherd leaves.

Raphael waits until Shepherd is out of earshot before sighing. "Haah. The last thing we need is one less warrior among our ranks. With the demon menace temporarily curtailed, things might seem to be looking up, but until we've eradicated every last one of them, we cannot sit idly."

Camael rubs her gauntlets together. "Speaking of that, I have a question. How dost thee suppose the demons grew so rapidly in number? Dozens escaped Heaven, yet thousands attacked us after only a hundred years. Such an explosion in population seems... unprecedented."

Raphael immediately waves her question away. "Bah. Soul manipulators stand amidst the ranks of our enemies. Those who deal with darkness and pull power from the blackest evil gain many unnatural talents. 'Twould be an infinite guessing game if we were to speculate."

"Certainly. However, if the demons can spawn more of their brood, then we won't know if we've killed them all. Discovering the source of their reproduction will be essential to eradicating their filth."

Both Archangels pause for a moment as they draw near to one of the inner chambers. Raphael pokes at his beard with his pipe. "Mmm. Yes. A fair point. I will give it careful consideration."

"My thanks, Raphael," Camael replies.

We step into a spacious room, one with dozens of beds. Many angels lie comatose, including Uzziel and Uriel. Both of them rest in the center of the room, while male and female healers walk around, gently pressing cloths to the heads of their brothers and sisters.

Raphael furrows his brow. "Everyone here fell under the demoness's spell?"

"Aye. While traveling to rescue her captured brethren, Lucifer struck dozens of cherubs down. I know not how her spell works, but perhaps if I can awaken Uzziel and Uriel, they might offer some answers."

"Did she manage to free them?"

Camael shrugs. "We have yet to confirm the whereabouts of Michael's prisoners."

"Hmm. I see," Raphael says, his tone neutral. "Doubtless, they've escaped our clutches."

We walk over to Uriel's side. Her labored breathing and pained expression makes me wince inwardly, especially when remembering what Lucifer's mental barrage against Uzziel entailed. While I may not know what visions dance in Uriel's mind, they likely involve her worst nightmares.

Camael raises Solomon's Crown. The dull, drab band seems very small and insignificant compared to the one I wear now.

She reaches over and places it on Uriel's head.

Immediately, Uriel stiffens. She stretches out and goes rigid like a plank of wood. Her eyes squeeze shut, her hands ball into fists, and she begins to twitch in pain. "Unhh! Ahhh!"

Raphael's expression turns to shock. He reaches for the crown. "T-take it off! Thy artifact is hurting her!"

Camael watches silently as Raphael tugs and pulls at the band. ""Tis impossible, brother. Only the wearer of my artifact may remove it. Thy efforts are pointless."

Raphael tugs on the crown for a moment before recoiling as Uriel's arms suddenly swing-out in a wild frenzy. Spurts of fire shoot out of her mouth. "Ahh!! Ahhh!!" She flails around like an angry animal while screaming and crying. Her wings twitch and spasm.

After thrashing around violently for nearly a minute, Uriel goes still.

Her eyes open.

"Uh... uhhhh...."

"Sister? Sister?!" Raphael's jaw drops. "Cans't thee speak? Art thou alright?!"

I wipe my forehead. "Do not worry, Raphael. Uriel is going to be fine."

Uriel stares at the two of us for a moment before fully shaking off her stupor. "Raph... Cam... where...?"

"Welcome back to the realm of the living, little sister," Camael says. "Thou hath slept under a dark spell for quite some time."

* * *

Several minutes pass. We wake up Uzziel and all the other angels in the room via Solomon's Crown.

With everyone conscious, Camael breathes a sigh of relief. "Brothers, sisters. I am overjoyed that all of thee hath awakened once more. A demoness placed a spell upon thy minds, sealing all of thee inside a terrible trance. Fortunately, I managed to break thy mental shackles."

The now-healed patients nod politely, but flickers of emotions pass across each of their faces. Uzziel bows her head, unable to look me in the eye. Uriel clenches her fists as tears streak down her face.

"It was only a dream... only a dream," The Archangel of Protection whispers. "I have never felt so much pain and anger... in all my life. What sins have I committed to deserve such suffering?"

"Blame not thyself," Raphael says, as he sits beside Uriel and touches her fist. "Instead, focus thy anger on the one who attacked thee. Lucifer, the three-eyed she-devil. Cans't thou explaineth the magic she employed? We must prepare a counter, if possible."

Uriel slowly shakes her head. Her expression turns to disbelief. "I don't know. One moment I was preparing a spell to attack the demon den, and in the next, my mind collapsed on itself. I felt as though I had fallen into a never-ending abyss. The faces of my friends, past and present, judged me. They told me I was worthless; that I was a failure. That's when the torture began."

Uzziel nods. "The same happened to me. This... this eye appeared. It dismembered me time and time again. I suffered a thousand deaths in a thousand different ways. I'm still having trouble believing that it's all... over..."

Several angels grunt in agreement. A few of them reach out to hold the hands of their nearest brothers and sisters, squeezing their palms together as they silently pour out their emotions through touch.

Camael stares at Uriel for a moment before closing her eyes. "I am sorry the she-devil hurt thee, little sister. We shall make her regret attacking Heaven."

Spinning on her heel, Camael turns and heads out of the room, leaving Raphael to comfort the injured. He makes no move to follow us.

"Many thanks, Camael, for saving us," Uriel says.

I don't reply.

Once Camael leaves the room, her nostrils flare.

Lucifer didn't merely hurt my sisters. She violated their minds. I knew she was a vile monster, but to go that far...

Camael wanders around the Monastery with her fists clenched. Her blood slowly boils as she mentally pictures the hateful displays of violence she wishes to unleash on the demoness.

"Sister? Camael?"

A voice interrupts her thoughts. Camael turns to face the speaker. The cherub, a man wearing heavy armor similar to Camael's, evaluates us silently.

"Chester. Is something the matter?"

The cherub coughs into his fist. "Ah, thy expression just now... 'twas quite intense. Art thou in low spirits?"

Camael unclenches her fist and exhales.

"Something like that. I've successfully awakened Uriel, Uzziel, and the others from their trances. It seems the she-demon, Lucifer, beset terrible visions upon them and tortured their minds. I... I am trying to control my thoughts, but my anger is reaching a tipping point."

Chester nods. "When Uzziel arrived at Mount Sinai with the Devil himself following her, 'twas I who led them into Heaven. I barely survived Satan's attack, but my brothers were not as lucky as I. Mordred and Listrus fell shortly afterward."

Bowing his head, Chester turns slightly to show me his back. Gashes in the metal reveal animal claw-marks, like those belonging to a dire wolf.

"By the Creator!" Camael's jaw drops. She steps toward him to trace her fingers across the metal. "What manner of creature could rend apart my enchanted metal?"

Chester swallows. The white-haired angel turns away, unable to meet my gaze. "'Twaz the doing of a green-skinned demon, one who resembled a reptilian creature of nightmarish origins. His fighting style caught me off-guard. Were it not for Brother Listrus tearing the cretin from my back, I might have died. Sadly, Brother Listrus perished moments later when a flame-manipulator demon seared his eyes out. His screams... they still haunt me."

Camael wraps her arm around Chester's back. "I am sorry, brother. Thy suffering is surely immeasurable."

"I keep replaying that moment in my mind," Chester says, as his throat cracks. "When I landed before Uzziel, and she told me that Satan had come in peace. I... I should have run my sword through his heart right then and there. I should have severed his head from his neck and left his black blood to sully the landscape. I-"

"Enough of that talk," Camael says, pressing her finger to his lips. "If anyone must replay regrets in their mind, t'would be I. My visions foretold a battle would happen, but I ignored them. I tried to change the future and failed. Thousands of our brethren left the realm of the living because of me. Thy actions hath no bearing on the future. Do not blame thyself, Chester."

The young man opens his mouth to retort, but thinks better of it. "Aye, Camael. I apologize for placing my load upon thy shoulders. Surely, thou hath suffered more unimaginably than I."

"Every brother and sister lost is irreplaceable," Camael replies. "Do not compare thy pain to someone else's. Now, if thou will excuse me... have thee any idea where I might find Michael?"

"Michael?" Chester asks. He pauses for a moment before nodding. "Ah, yes. I believe he is visiting the Haven gardens. Catherine has been attending to his needs."

"Naturally," Camael murmurs. "She is Michael's most devoted sister. Well, I must take my leave. Farewell, Chester."

"Peace be upon thee, Camael."

* * *

Camael heads outside and flaps her wings. She soars above the Monastery's roof and swoops down to the rear. A lush garden with thousands of flowers, each one a different color from the others, lines the grounds. Neatly trimmed hedges combine with handcrafted stone benches to give a peaceful area to meditate and relax.

The Archangel frowns.

As we land, she looks to the center of the garden, where Michael and his four Valkyrie sisters stand in a circle around a foul sight. A demon, long-since dead, stands strapped to a cross made of wood. The demon's broken and battered body tells a story of abuse after his death. Even as Camael stares, Michael rears back and punches it in the stomach, sending tendrils of blood shooting from the corpse's nose.

"-many weak spots, like so," Michael says. I head toward him, but none of the others notice me immediately. "Never turn thy back on one. We've seen how the wretches lied and deceived Uzziel. She gave them passage into Heaven, only for them to turn-"

Michael stops mid-sentence. He spins around and yanks out his sword to point it after me. His body language is that of terror, but it only takes him an instant to register my identity. "Ah. Camael. D-do not sneak up on me like that."

Camael brushes Michael's sword aside. "My apologies. I did not mean to frighten thee, Michael. What art thou doing with... with this cadaver?"

Michael quickly sheathes his blade. His right arm, now in a sling, hangs uselessly before his stomach, but he appears perfectly adept at using the left one for swordplay.

"Training. I am teaching my sisters the best methods for slaying the bloodskins."

Camael's frown deepens. "Bloodskins?"

"Aye. An apt name, is it not?"

"I don't like it. Such a term is too vulgar and foul for the purity of Heaven."

Michael scratches his chin. "Respectfully, I disagree."

Camael sweeps her gaze across the other angels present. Catherine, Sophia, Penelope, and Hyacinth. Why has Michael gathered the Valkyries? For training? Nay. 'Tis unlike him to take anything seriously.

When Camael's eyes settle upon Catherine, she blushes and begins tracing her fingers through the air to form magical letters. Sorry, Camael. Michael wouldn't listen. Do not be mad.

Camael nods. She returns her attention to Michael. "Must thou string up this demon's body so near to Cassiel's Citadel? Our brethren needn't gaze upon its remains, especially so soon after the battle."

Michael shrugs. "Tis no matter. Before long, Earth will run red with their blood. We might as well grow used to the sight of dead demons."

A moment passes. Camael wipes her forehead and sighs. "I care not what hatred thou unleash upon demons, dead or alive, but keep thy recreational activities away from our places of healing."

Turning away from Michael, Camael nods at Catherine. "I am glad to see thee, sister. Have thou suffered any serious injuries?"

Catherine shakes her head. She traces her fingers through the air. No. I am well.

"Excellent. Well, thou art the one I wanted to see anyway. I've come to deliver a present."

Camael lowers her gaze to a satchel tied to her waist. She pops open the leathery bag and reaches inside to procure a small, marble-like object. She holds up the tiny ball and motions with her hands to pour mana into it.

After a few seconds, the blue marble begins to glow and spin energetically. It explodes into a puff of smoke, and Camael snatches two large objects out of midair before they can hit the ground.

"Long has it been since I gave away one of my holy artifacts, Catherine. However, thou hath proven thyself many times in the past. During this last battle, thou dids't courageously save Michael's life, while also slaying the Undead King, saving countless other lives. To say Heaven owes thee an unthinkable debt would be a gross understatement."

Camael holds out the objects. My breath catches as she lowers her eyes, allowing me to see them in full detail. "This sword is little more than one of my scraps. I have hastily decided to name it the Sword From Heaven. The Creator knows I am terrible with names, haha."

Camael holds out the blade. Every fiber of my being aches as I realize it's the same weapon I summoned to fight Amelia.

Catherine. Of course. I recognized her name, but I didn't think she was the Catherine. After all these years, I've finally come to learn another fascinating detail that led to the present day. The puzzle pieces click together ever faster.

With a nod, Catherine respectfully takes the sword from Camael's grasp. Her expression turns to awe as she hefts it, comparing its weight to other weapons she's wielded before.

In Camael's left hand, she holds a tower-shield, substantially larger than the light-construct Catherine summoned during her fights against the demons. While surprisingly lightweight, it seems sturdy enough to deflect the explosion of a grenade at point-blank range.

Catherine's jaw drops as Camael holds the shield up for her to take it. Two artifacts? No. No. I am unworthy.

Michael smiles. "Take our sister's gifts, Catherine. 'Tis a rare sight for me to witness her giving out such powerful relics. Honor Heaven by using these relics to kill our enemies unceasingly."

Behind Catherine, Sophia clutches her fists to her chest. The pink-haired angel squees excitedly. "Ahhh! Cath, this is great! Thou dost deserveth a present after thou hath done for us! Come now, don't be shy!"

Catherine hesitantly reaches out and takes the tower shield from me, then holds it to her side and smiles sheepishly. Despite the burns on the right of her face, her radiant grin lights up my day. She's astonishingly beautiful.

She summons mana with her new sword to trace letters in the air. I offer my eternal gratitude, sister. I will honor Heaven.

Camael returns her smile. "That isn't all. Next week, dear sister, Raphael and I intend to promote all of the Valkyries. Thy bravery in combatting Valac allowed us to defeat him, as well as drive the demons from our sacred realm."

Michael's jaw drops. "A promotion, too? Heavens, sister! Thou art starting to make me a little jealous."

"Hah, a most excellent jest, Michael. Raphael and I have decided that Catherine has earned a new title. Naturally, Sophia, Penelope, and Hyacinth deserve praise too. While I have no relics to spare, know that all of thee shalt receive rewards aplenty in the coming years."

Hyacinth bows her head. The white-haired beauty blushes. "We need no gifts, Camael. 'Twas Catherine who slew the Reaper, after all. We are ecstatic that thy blessings rain upon her."

"I knew thou would utter such words," Camael says with a smirk. "How lucky I am that all of thee art so humble, even-"

Before Camael can finish her sentence, a voice cries out. "What is the meaning of... of this?!"

Frowning, Camael turns around to spot Raphael, Uriel, and Uzziel standing some distance away, though when they arrived, I don't know. A look of horror stretches across the eldest Archangel's face. "Michael! Why is that... that corpse strung up in the Haven's gardens?! How dare thou defile Heaven's holiness with this wretched filth!"

Behind the old man, Uzziel gazes in abject horror. Uriel, however, appears indifferent.

Raphael squeezes his staff, embedding his bony fingers deep into its wood. His teeth grind together, and veins bulge in his forehead.

"Remove this corpse at once! I will not allow thee to profane the Haven's sanctity!"

Michael sighs. "Brother, I am merely using this creature's body to teach our warriors their weak points. I'm too infirm right now to leave the Haven's vicinity, so I merely-"

Raphael growls. "No! There is no excuse for this barbarism! We do not defile the dead! We are angels! What would the Creator think if he knew thou were disgracing his holiness?! Take it down! NOW!"

Raphael storms forward and violently shoves Michael aside. The Archangel of Courage stares in disbelief as the old man summons a small knife from his holy energy and begins cutting at the rope securing the corpse to its cross.

"'Tis only a demon, brother! Why art thou so angry?"

Raphael looses both of the demon's arms and lowers its body to the ground, then begins working on the rope securing its feet. "Why am I so angry, he asks? Because, this is not the angel way. Such acts belong firmly in our past, not here where-"

Raphael pauses. He shoots a look of surprise at Michael, realizing he nearly said too much. Then, he quickly returns to cutting the last binding.

"Tch. Do not test me, Michael. Thy bloodthirsty ways will only lead down a path of evil. Angels should not torture and maim. We only kill if we must, and strive always to be merciful."

Raphael finishes freeing the corpse. Before he can heft it, Michael balks. "Mercy?! Never did I consider thee a jester, brother! After all the atrocities and betrayals these bloodskins have committed, dost thou expect me to show them mercy?!"

Raphael jumps to his feet. The old man turns to face Michael. Despite being a few inches shorter than his younger brother, the eldest Archangel's presence seems to increase. His aura towers over Michael, and he takes a menacing step forward.

Raphael's voice lowers to a rumble in his throat.

"We. Show. Mercy. Angels must never relish cruelty. Dost thee understand, little brother?"

Michael shrinks back. The fearless Archangel cowers under the gaze of his eldest brother.

A moment passes.

"Y-yes. Of course, Raphael..."

Michael's voice shakes. Terror appears in his eyes as the eldest angel stares him down.

Raphael's tongue snakes out of his mouth. After a few seconds, he turns to the nearest Valkyries. "Penelope. Hyacinth. Take this body and burn it with the others." He bites off every other word, and the Valkyries merely nod, their faces ashen.

Whirling on his feet, Raphael glares at me. "Dids't thou not think to rebuke our foolish younger brother? And here I thought thy honor mirrored mine."

Without waiting for a reply, the Archangel of Wisdom flaps his wings and takes off, leaving the others behind.

Camael opens her mouth to speak, but decides against the idea. Soon, Raphael disappears into the distance, leaving those nearby to tremble in silence.

Michael gazes at the body for several seconds. Confusion, shock, and anxiety flash across his face like a raging thunderstorm.

"I... I do not understand. Why does Raphael... why does our brother care so much about... about..."

Camael's voice hitches. "I th-think... it might be due to our history. The ancient wars."

Michael reaches up and rubs his face as if to try and smooth the worry-wrinkles from his brow. "Our ancient history, thou sayeth? Tch. How am I to know about those dark times? How are any of us?"

Camael lowers her gaze. "I don't know, Michael. Hyacinth, Penelope... follow our brother's orders. Burn the body. Do not question him. He knows best."

Uzziel appears at my side. She touches my arm. "I'll help."

"Nay. Thou art still weak from thy mental imprisonment. Allow the Valkyries to perform their duties."

I turn to fly after Raphael, but pause. Uriel stares at me, a look of irritation in her eyes.

"Sister. Is it true that demons slaughtered thousands of angels while I was comatose?"

Slowly, I nod.

"Aye. Satan launched a surprise attack on Heaven, but we managed to repel the attackers."

Uriel curls her lips up in disgust. She turns her head away to look at Michael. He averts his eyes, unable to meet her gaze.

"While I lay dormant, the demons slaughtered thousands of my brothers and sisters. Raphael expects us to show the little bastards mercy? I never got to say goodbye to my family. I'll never see them again."

I hold up my palm. "Cease this discussion. If Raphael tells us we need to show mercy to the cretins, then I'm sure he has a good reason. Let me speak to him. Maybe I can ascertain why he is so concerned."

Michael relaxes. He crosses his arms. "When wretched hounds scratch at our doors and kill our family, the only mercy they deserve is a swift death. I love Raphael, but he is an old man stuck in his old ways. I disagree with his orders, but I will do what I can to respect them nonetheless."

Michael gestures to the body. Penelope and Hyacinth nod and pick it up, though they try not to touch it too closely. Penelope recoils in disgust. "Tch. The fiend smells of death. Let us hurry and send it to the eternal fires where it belongs."

Both of them fly away to burn the body, leaving the rest of us behind.

Sophia, the quickest to recover, waves at Uriel. "Sister! I'm glad to see thee awake and lucid! Everyone was worried stiff about thee!"

Uriel's face, still a mixture of anger and disgust, softens immediately. "Yes. I apologize for troubling thee, but I am awake now. My dreams, while tormented and painful, only served to harden my convictions. I am pleased that all of my students survived Valac's attack."

Sophia springs over to Uriel and hugs her eagerly. "Yup! We tore that boney brat to pieces! By the time Cath used her flames, the only thing left from him was ash!"

Uriel's smile falters. She glances at Catherine. "Sister. Thou unleashed Jörmungandr's Dragonfire?"

I nod. "Aye, Catherine did. Worry not. Her sacrifice saved my life and those of her sisters. Valac would have slain all of us had she not done so."

Uriel pulls away from Sophia and walks over to Catherine and Michael. She reaches out, lifts Catherine's right hand, and pulls her gauntlet back. Charred black flesh from a recent burn stretches up past her gauntlets and deep inside her chestplate.

Anger flashes across Uriel's face. "Tch. I warned thee not to use those flames! Thy body cannot handle Jörmungandr's draconic mana."

Catherine pulls her hand away. She motions with her fingers, causing words to appear in midair. I am fine. Barely hurts.

"Don't give me that. I know thou art lying." Uriel grumbles. She turns away and motions to Uzziel. "Come. Try and assist our sister. Perhaps thy magic will relieve some of her pain."

Uzziel, having recovered from the shock of seeing the demon-punching-bag, meekly walks over to Catherine. She nods. "O-okay. I'll try. I've never succeeded before, though. Draconic mana poisoning is ordinarily too potent for my healing to affect."

After a few moments, Uzziel gathers her thoughts. She begins to trace a series of intricate patterns in the air, forming magical signs with her hands. After a full minute passes, she touches Catherine's burns. The Valkyrie winces and tries to pull away, but Uzziel holds her steady.

"Do not move, sister. This is going to hurt, and I cannot lessen the pain. Stay strong for me, okay?"

Catherine continues to tug and pull, but Uzziel's grip is surprisingly firm. As magic pours from Uzziel's palm into Catherine's burns, Catherine opens her mouth as if to scream in pain, but no words come out. Only a slight hissing of air escapes her lungs. She begins to fight back even more violently, but Uriel jumps in to hold her left arm back.

"Resist, Catherine! Don't- gah!" Uriel staggers back as Catherine flails her arm wildly and decks the Archangel in the face. She starts to punch Uzziel, too, but as if she's done this a thousand times before, Uzziel uses her free hand to summon a wall of vines. They burst from the ground and wrap around Catherine's body, holding her in place.

"Stay still! I know it hurts, but thou must allow me to finish my incantation!"

Tears pour down Catherine's face. She continues to struggle, but Uzziel's vines prove too strong for her to escape. All she can do is whimper and sob while Uzziel's magic eats at her burns.

Camael's stomach churns as she watches. Sophia stares wide-eyed as the black, seared flesh slowly pulls back and regenerates. However, before it can finish, Uzziel releases Catherine and staggers back, sweat drenching her skin.

"Ahh... I... I cannot do any better. That... that is all I can manage..."

Catherine sags against the vines. With Uzziel's healing over, the Valkyrie melts into an incoherent, hiccuping mess. Her arm, now only half-healed, still looks like she fell into an oven and barely escaped after ten minutes.

Jörmungandr's flames... how did she come to possess them? Catherine hasn't complained once, but it appears she's in incredible pain. Is she always like this? Is her pain so extreme that she has simply learned to ignore it?

Michael reaches over and caresses Catherine's face. "Thou dids't well, Catherine. Rest, now. I'll carry thee to the healing pools."

Uzziel flops on the ground and motions with her hand, desummoning the vines. Michael gingerly lifts Catherine and helps her to her feet. He wraps his left arm around her waist and flaps his wings, taking off.

As they leave, Camael glances at the sword and shield she gave Catherine, now lying on the ground.

"Sophia. Please be a dear and carry those for Catherine."

"S-sure," Sophia says. She reaches down, grabs the artifacts, and takes off after the other two.

Only Uriel, Uzziel, and I remain. I turn to leave. "I'll speak to Raphael. Get some rest. Both of thee require time to heal thy bodies. Especially thou, Uzziel. Exerting thyself by expending magic so soon after waking up... thou art lucky ye haven't fallen comatose again."

Uzziel exhales. "Yes... I'm not the brightest... haha..."

With a flap of my wings, I take off, leaving the other two behind.

Camael's thoughts turn inward.

Why was Raphael so disturbed about the corpse? Even for him, such an outburst is unusual.

Part 117: Raphael's Secrets of Yore

It feels like an eternity has passed since I last saw the bonfire. When I open my eyes to find myself sitting before the three Archangels, with Solomon at my right, it takes me a moment to remember who I am.

"Oh. I'm back."

Solomon squeezes my shoulder. "Those were quite the series of events, eh, Jason?"

"Yeah, I'll say. Valac's rise... a massive battle in Heaven... Satan's defeat. How long was I under?"

Solomon smiles. "Thirteen seconds."

"You're kidding."

"Nope. As I said, my crown accelerates your mental processing speed. It probably felt like days passed, but in real-time, you've experienced my visions in a matter of minutes."

I blink and turn away. "Oh."

Solomon frowns. "Is there something wrong with that? Would you prefer it if time passed more quickly?"

"No, no, I'm just... it's weird, you know? I've walked hundreds of miles in the shoes of several beings. I've seen through the eyes of Satan, Nerissa, Valac, Uzziel, and even Camael. All of them in a matter of minutes. It's a bit surreal. I've never met the people in your visions, but I know how they think, their worries, their fears... all that stuff. I feel like I get them."

"Bah. I very much doubt that," Raphael says. The old man sits across from me on his log in the same position as before. In the darkness of the night, the flames from the bonfire send shadows dancing across his face, adding to the Archangel's mysterious air. "Hearing Camael or Uzziel's thoughts in passing hardly qualifies thee to claim thou knoweth them."

I raise an eyebrow. "Maybe not, but you didn't know about Camael's visions, or how harshly Uzziel blamed herself for Samael's death. More importantly, if you're such a wise and knowing Archangel, why did you let Uzziel enter Heaven with Satan? If Camael knew Satan was going to launch an attack, why didn't she stop him? You guys are friggin' illogical sometimes."

Solomon socks my arm. "Jason!"

"Nay, 'tis an excellent question," Raphael says. "I know not why Camael failed to use her knowledge of the future to bar Satan from entering Heaven. Perhaps, had we tried to stop him, Satan would have forcefully entered despite our best efforts. Perhaps the future might have played out the same way even if we had resisted. What I do know is why I did not try to stop Satan."

Raphael pauses. He narrows his eyes. "Not once did I believe that slimy snake had the best of intentions. 'Twas plain to me that he intended to deceive us. However, despite what others may say, wisdom does not entail omniscience. Even Camael, who could gaze into the future, was no god-like figure.

I wrongly assumed that, since the Devil entered Heaven with only one ally, he would be no threat to us. My senses were alert. I awaited his backstab, but he still caught me off-guard."

The Archangel of Wisdom crosses his arms and sneers. "Portal magic. I would never have guessed the demons had evolved such spells. Portal magic is dangerous and unstable. Among the Angels, only I and a few others, including Gabriel, could create rifts and gates to travel from one plane to the next. Of them, only I was adept enough to perform it without mutilating myself."

A moment passes. Raphael slowly peels back his robes to reveal the same scarred body I saw when he battled Satan.

"'Twas not always the case. Learning to master portal magic and the illusory arts caused me unimaginable agony. At the time, assuming the demons had unlocked such abilities was beyond my imagination. Now, of course, I no longer underestimate them, for I understand how their magic works."

"You do?" I ask.

Raphael clears his throat. "Hmph. Demon magic is frighteningly diverse, yet narrowly-focused at the same time. The so-called Warper demons can summon portals, but only one at a time. They lack all other forms of spellcraft and are remarkably fragile to boot. The ability to summon portals makes them valuable assets for traversing vast distances, but they are utterly worthless when it comes to combat."

I tap my chin. "So you're saying Warpers can open portals even more effectively than you?"

"I can open several at once, but doing so devours my mana. Warpers can only summon one portal at a time, and they also have to wait for their bodies to recover from the shock. I would not imply their abilities are superior to mine, though they're certainly more adept than any other angel."

I lean back and rest on my hands. A few moments pass as I think about Raphael's words. "Can I create portals? It seems within Wordsmithing's realm of possibilities."

"I believe you can," Solomon replies. "You can teleport, after all. Your manner of teleportation doesn't involve disassembling your body and rematerializing it elsewhere. You simply step through a rift in space and appear in a different area. As far as I can tell, you create miniature portals whenever you jump to new locations."

Raphael nods. "The Knowledge Seeker is correct, Jason. There is only one limitation regarding teleportation and portal-travel, and that is that thou must have already visited the location ye intendeth to travel. So long as thou dost fulfilleth that condition, it should be possible to summon a gateway there."

"Makes sense," I mutter. "Hmm. If that's the case, I might be able to make new gateways for humanity's use. It might allow us to travel further than the Labyrinth Core currently allows. Once I finish with these visions, I'll try making one."

* * *

Gabriel and Michael have stayed silent since my arrival, but now the Archangel of Power leans forward to stare at me. "So, Jason, what sayeth thee about Catherine? I'm sure thou hath questions."

"Not especially. I figured out at some point that Catherine was the angel the Sword of Heaven was named after. I'm not certain how she and Joan of Arc were related, though."

Gabriel nods. "Due to how Catherine saved Michael's life and defeated Valac, we promoted her to the rank of Saint, along with the other four Valkyries. Her promotion was unique, in that Camael gave her two magical artifacts to boost her combat prowess. Unfortunately, her fellow Valkyries did not receive such gifts."

I raise an eyebrow. "But Valac didn't die. He survived."

"We had no way of knowing that at the time, obviously," Michael says, biting off the last word. "Nor did we understand the lengths Valac took to deceive us. That demon was one of the cruelest monsters ever to walk the mortal plane. Even with the benefit of hindsight and Solomon's visions, it baffles me how far the Grim Reaper went to sow chaos among our ranks."

"You weren't much help," I shoot back. "Between torturing Diablo, Bael, and fucking with corpses, it's no wonder the demons started plotting your demise. What the hell were you thinking?"

Michael glares at me. His gaze turns to ice. "I hated the bloodskins then, and I still do now. They murdered Samael, one of my beloved brothers, and killed thousands more in the blink of an eye. 'Tis I who still wonders why Raphael demanded we show mercy to those... those... animals."

The Archangel of Courage grits his teeth and flicks his eyes to Raphael. "What were thy thoughts, brother? Do not tell me 'twas all about respecting the dead or some other rubbish. Bloodskins, be they dead or alive, merit no honor. They deserve fires and torture."

Raphael meets Michael's gaze. The two Archangels stare at each other for a few seconds before Raphael replies.

"My anger had little to do with Heaven's sanctity, 'twas true. Nor was I angered that thou were disrespecting a demon's body. Nay, 'twas for a different reason entirely."

Raphael purses his lips. The old man takes a moment to collect his thoughts before pulling his gaze away from Michael's. He opts to stare into the fire, allowing the crackling embers to pop and illuminate his haunted expression.

"Jason. The Heaven thou art seeing through Solomon's Crown was a stunning jewel. Angels lived in peace and harmony. We treated each other with respect and dignity, and never spoke badly of one another. However, 'twas not always the case."

The eldest Archangel's breath catches. "Once, in the eternity before time, brother fought brother, and sister, sister. Angels were a warlike species unlike any that came after. I remember those dark ages. Before we created the dragons, we drifted in the Void, bickering and squabbling over this and that. Back then, our mana seemed limitless. Each angel possessed the equivalent of galaxies worth of energy. As the eldest, 'twas my desire to curtail violence among ourselves, but I was only one person. I could not do it by myself."

"And so, when I discovered that my brothers and sisters had begun battling each other to determine who was the mightiest, I knew trouble was brewing. I tried to stop them, but I couldn't."

Raphael narrows his eyes. "How dost thee suppose the dragons came into being?"

Solomon bows his head. Michael's gaze softens. Gabriel's jaw slackens.

"Brother..." Gabriel whispers. "Art thou saying we created the dragons out of a desire for war?"

"Aye," Raphael replies. "Before, I stated that angels created the dragons to alleviate boredom. 'Twas not the case. Angels worked together to create a powerful monster; something that would challenge their newly awakened battle instincts. They poured vast reserves of mana into the dragon's body, infusing it with enough power that it rivaled the Creator. And thus, eons of bloodshed began."

Raphael shakily raises his pipe. He lights it with his thumb and takes several long drags on the tobacco inside.

"Some angels unleashed their bloodthirstiness with greater fervor than the rest. Naturally... Michael was among them."

Michael nods. "I guessed as much."

The old man closes his eyes and exhales a stream of smoke. "Is that so, little brother? Dost thou understand the past, the present, and the future as well? Dost thou fully comprehend why I went to the lengths I did to curtail our violent urges?"

"I am not all-seeing, Raphael," Michael replies, his voice low. "I believe violence serves a purpose. Thou may not savor my beliefs, but that is how they stand. Pacifism allowed the demons to overrun us. Seeking peace with our enemies enabled them to run roughshod over our defenses. Hads't thee followed my advice from the beginning; we might have snuffed out the demon threat before they overpowered us."

"At what cost?" Raphael asks. "Should we have tossed aside our morality in pursuit of vengeance? Perhaps we should have tortured the demons more! Perhaps we could have stirred up even greater animosity!"

The old man begins to raise his voice. He opens his eyes to reveal smoldering embers of anger.

"And then what, Michael?! Where woulds't thee draw the line? Once we slaughtered all the demons, where might thou turneth thy gaze next? On the animals of Earth? The humans? Perhaps even thy brothers and sisters?!"

Michael balks. "I would never..."

Raphael rises to his feet. His teeth gnash together. "Thou woulds't, Michael! I know such rage lies within thee! I saw it once! When Muriel and Cassiel begged thee to end the war against the Titans, ye turned thy cold, dead eyes upon them... and then... AND THEN..."

Raphael's entire body shakes with rage.

"Cassiel... Muriel... thou dids't murder them. Not because they dared speak against thee, but because of thy greed. Ye looked upon them and felt jealousy! For, after all the love they poured upon thee, ye only saw them as... as..."

"No..." Michael's eyes widen and his lower lip trembles. "I... I couldn't... I wouldn't have..."

"Ye could, ye would, and ye did!" Raphael says. He sits down again and turns his head away; disgust etched into every inch of his face. "How many eons did it take for me to end our bloodthirsty ways? How many of our siblings did ye kill before I finally found a solution? The mind-wipes weren't only to erase our bloody history, Michael. They were my last-ditch attempt to purge our destructive tendencies."

The old man closes his eyes. "They were my last attempt… and I failed."

Silence.

Nobody says a word.

Michael's entire body shakes and trembles as waves of guilt hit him over and over. Gabriel stares blankly at Raphael, seemingly unable to comprehend his words.

As for me, a question appears in my mind. What did Raphael mean when he said Michael killed Cassiel and Muriel out of greed?

Greed? What part of murdering his sisters made Michael greedy?

I don't understand the circumstances. The politics of angels are beyond my comprehension. What I do know is that my opinion of them continues to drop the more I learn. The demons are starting to look like saints compared to the so-called arbiters of righteousness.

The angels remind me of many people from my era. Self-aggrandizing, they would proclaim their virtue to the ends of the Earth, but in the end, they were little more than empty husks. That's what the angels are — flawed, destructive beings, and in some ways… evil.

As the thoughts cycle through my mind, Gabriel shakes his head. His appearance normalizes, as if he's already come to terms with Raphael's proclamation.

"Raphael. If thou were afraid of Michael returning to his old ways, why did ye not sit down and have an honest discussion with him? Our brother might be stubborn and obstinate, but had thee simply laid bare thy grievances, might not ye have been able to come to a resolution?"

Raphael waves his pipe in the air. "Perhaps in another life, I might have taken a different path. Michael is right, after all. There's no point dwelling on the past. Solomon's visions have proven that I failed my people repeatedly, and then I perished. What a miserable existence. What a pathetic Archangel of Wisdom I am."

* * *

Several minutes later, after all the Archangels have sulked and brooded on their thoughts, Michael stands up. He sweeps his gaze across all of us.

"I'm leaving."

"Huh?" I ask. "What do you mean?"

Michael ignores me. He turns to Raphael. "Had I known thou detested my presence so, I might have made different choices of my own. I'll leave thee to thy regrets, eldest brother."

Michael raises his hands to form a magic sign, but pauses.

Raphael slowly raises his head. His eyes meet Michael's.

The two of them gaze at each other for several long seconds before Michael breaks away.

"I'm sorry, Raphael. I didn't mean to... I didn't know... I couldn't have..."

Michael's words lodge in his throat. He closes his eyes, motions with his hands, and vanishes from the bonfire, leaving the rest of us behind.

I stare incredulously for a few seconds at the spot where Michael was just standing, then I nudge Solomon. "Uh. Where did he... go? Is he, like... dead?"

Solomon sighs wryly. "...Haha. No. He seized control of his ring and withdrew inside of it. I cannot contact him, for now. Not unless he wishes to speak to us again, if ever."

Raphael silently sticks his pipe back in his robes, leans forward, and rests his face in his palms.

"I... I swore never to say anything. I vowed to myself that I would never tell Michael about his past. I let my anger get to me, and now Michael has departed. 'Tis his right, given how many secrets I've kept from him."

I clamber to my feet, walk around the fire, and sit on the log beside Raphael. Gently, I pat the old man's back. "You made a hard choice, Raphael. Despite your tone, I know you love your brother. He'll come around eventually. You and he can have a long talk and work things out, right?"

Raphael doesn't reply for several seconds. The old man strokes his hands against his face in a circular motion, seemingly trying to rub his anxiety away.

Finally, he sighs.

"No. Michael is right. I hate him. I've hated him with all my being for so long that I can scarcely remember a time when I didn't. He is my brother — my flesh and blood. I love all the members of my family, but I could never bring myself to look at him the same way — not after what he did. He didn't stop with Muriel and Cassiel. Michael continued murdering hundreds, even thousands of other angels during the dragon wars. All to satisfy his... his wretched bloodlust."

Raphael lifts his head and folds his hands on his lap. He turns to Gabriel. "Tell me, Gabriel. What point is there in living anymore? What reason have I to go on, knowing 'twas my failure to lead the angels that led to our downfall? What right have I to continue drawing breath when our brothers and sisters have long since returned to the Cosmic Realm?"

Gabriel sheepishly rubs his shoulders. The gentle giant shrugs, unsure of what to say. "Well, I suppose our task now is to aid the hero? Ending our existences would mean giving the demons a final victory. I don't believe the others would like that. 'Twould dishonor the name of Heaven."

Raphael nods. He stares forward, his eyes looking not at Solomon, but through the ancient king as if he doesn't exist.

"Right. Of course. Counsel. Bah... what good is the guidance of an old man who couldn't even..."

He trails off.

* * *

I've never seen Gabriel and Raphael in such dismal spirits. Both of them stare forward, glumly thinking about the fate of their species, their failures, and a hundred other things I can scarcely imagine.

I grow antsy and get up to pace around. While the angels silently sulk and fret over this and that, I decide to break the silence.

"Why do some angels have different hair colors from the rest?"

Gabriel raises his head. "Hmm? What sort of question is that?"

"I'm curious. From what I've seen, most angels had white hair, but there were several women with different colors from the rainbow."

Gabriel stares at me blankly for a few moments, then shrugs. "Our sisters often liked to tint their hair. Uzziel created dyes from her flowers, and the women used them. That's all there is to it."

"Why, though? I mean, you guys were all siblings, right? Nobody was trying to look sexy for anyone else, were they?"

"I... I suppose not?" Gabriel shoots a glance at Raphael. "This hero is asking strange questions."

I nod. "Yeah, and here's another. You guys mentioned that Catherine possessed Jörmungandr's flames. How did she get that ability?"

Raphael blinks. He seems to come out of a trance and raises his eyes to look at me. "Oh... Catherine. Mmm. She, Gabriel, and Michael battled the mother of all dragons. In their final conflict, the three of them took a portion of the dragon's essence and sealed it within themselves. Michael took her body. Catherine, her flames. Gabriel, her spirit. Catherine wasn't supposed to use the dragon's flames because the essence of Jörmungandr's body and spirit were required to protect her from the dragon's fire. Dragonflame burns not only flesh, but mana as well."

I glance at Gabriel. "So... you and Michael are part dragon?"

Gabriel shakes his head. "Not exactly, but I suppose 'tis a decent allegory."

Before Gabriel can return to his thoughts, I fire off another question. "If Angels lived in Heaven after the mind-wipes and lived lives of peace, why were so many of them wearing armor when the demons first attacked? Why have a standing army if you guys weren't at war?"

Gabriel rubs his forehead and groans in annoyance. "Ugh... so many questions. We always worried the Titans might attack. 'Twas a minor risk, but nevertheless, we strove to maintain our defenses."

"When you and the Titans decided to ally against the demons, why were they so stingy with their mana if they could regenerate it? Why not simply-"

Jason," Solomon says, interrupting me. "I think that's enough questions for now. The Archangels need time to collect their thoughts."

A moment passes.

I sigh.

"Right. Sorry. Things were a little too tense for my liking."

I pause for a second before walking over and plunking down beside Solomon on the ground. He raises an eyebrow questioningly. "How many more questions do you have?"

"Several. I'm curious about some other things, like how Valac faked his death and why. I'm also trying to get a scope for how big Heaven's forces were. I know there were millions of angels, but their organization and structure evade me."

Solomon nods. "In due time, all those questions will be answered, especially the ones about Valac. I find his story to be the most fascinating of all the players in the Ancient Era."

Pausing to take a breath, Solomon cracks his neck. "Alright. We've dilly-dallied long enough. It's time to push forward. We're coming closer to the War in Heaven. By now, you've gained a solid idea of the circumstances leading up to the war, but there is still much to learn regarding the power dynamics of Ancient Earth. Are you ready for me to continue?"

I glance at Gabriel and Raphael. The giant Archangel rests his chin on his palm and stares at me blankly while Raphael gingerly begins to knock the burnt tobacco from his pipe before adding more and lighting it again. He's quite the avid smoker.

"Daisy's still asleep, right?"

Solomon closes his eyes for a moment, then opens them. "Yes. She's fine."

"Great. Let's return. I can't wait to see what happens next."

"You're not just saying that, are you?" Solomon asks.

"Nope. I genuinely enjoy learning about the past. That's why I studied mythology in high school."

Solomon purses his lips. "Mmm. That makes sense. Well, let's get on with it, then."

"Take me away, captain."

Part 118: War Is Coming

I awaken inside a new host's body and immediately wince at my dozens of sore, cramped muscles, electricity running through my fingertips, and fire seemingly burning on the surface of my skin.

"Fuck, fuck, fuck..." My host says. "Don't... don't move it so fast... dammit..."

The person speaking is Diablo. His weak, pained voice escapes my lips as he grunts and moans under his breath.

We tilt our head to the left to gaze at Lucifer. The triple-eyed demoness sits beside me on my bed and slowly lifts and lowers my left arm, over and over.

Lucifer snaps at me. "Stop crying like an imp. Suck it up, buttercup. If we don't get your muscles moving, you might never walk again."

She bends my arm toward my chest, and a bolt of lightning shoots into my heart. "Ahh! Shit! You're hurting me on purpose, Lucy!"

Lucifer scowls at me. She twists my arm slightly, sending more agony coursing through my spine. "Don't call me Lucy."

"Fuuuck! Seven devils!" Diablo tries to raise his right arm to swat her away, but the slight motion only hurts us further. He grinds his teeth together and whimpers. "Lucy... Lucy, baby, please... it hurts..."

A flicker of doubt flashes across Lucifer's face. She rolls all three of her eyes and sets my arm on my stomach. "Fine. I can't stand all the racket you make."

Someone chuckles to my right. "Hehe. Lucifer's got a soft spot for you, boss."

I turn to look at Bael as he sits up in his bed. He holds one rock in each hand and slowly hefts them up and down to exercise his muscles. They look somewhat heavy, at least ten pounds each, but not so much that they're stressing his body.

"I most certainly do not," Lucifer says, as an edge of coldness creeps into her voice. "Nobody else wants to help Diablo recover, so I offered. That's all there is to it."

"Suuure," Bael says with a grin. His body, while still skinny and weak, appears more intimidating than it should, largely in part due to his confidence and charisma. While Diablo lays in bed infirm, Bael exercises on his own without any assistance.

Lucifer seems to notice this fact at the same time I do. "Did Michael torture you less, Bael? I'm surprised to see you moving, considering the Holy Energy still in your body."

Bael snorts. "Pff. Nah, he hurt us both about the same. Sadistic piece of shit. After a while, his magic stopped hurting me. Deebs wasn't so lucky."

I shift my head, weakly attempting to nod. "Y-yeah... Bael's made of tougher stuff than me. I... I still see Master's face, sometimes. His horrible... glowing eyes..."

"Don't call that Archangel master," Lucifer hisses, biting off the last word. "We are demons. We are our own masters. You're free of him, and don't you forget it."

Diablo closes his eyes. As the world fades to black, images of Michael's unsmiling, sociopathic gaze appear in Diablo's mind. The demon winces as Michael's ghost slowly drags a knife across his chest, splitting open his skin. We open our eyes and flinch as the unpleasant images fade away.

"I... I can't help it, Lucy. I see his face all the time — every second of every day. I'm helpless in this bed... what if he comes to get me? I don't want to go back. I don't want Mast-... Michael to hurt me again."

Both of the other demons fall silent. Bael continues grunting while he lifts his rocks, and Lucifer turns away.

"I doubt that will happen," Lucifer mutters. She appears uncertain, likely because she, too, is wrestling with memories of how easily Michael bested her.

The sounds of demons in the hall outside the healing chambers fills the emptiness in the air. While the three of us sit and ponder recent events, someone cackles beyond the doorway. A shrill voice rings out, annoying and nasally. I recognize it immediately as Barbatos's voice.

"Nyehehe! Me 'n Smealum did it! We did, I swears! There was this BIG cave bear, right? We ganged up on 'im and took that sumbitch down! We cut off its legs and ate its soul! It was freakin' awesome! You should've been there, bro!"

"As always, your propensity to ramble and exaggerate does little more than cause others to doubt you," Smealum says. Artorias steps into our room, and Barbatos trips through the door behind him, rubbing his head. Smealum, the black-skinned demon with a weirdly unique appearance, rubs his fist. It seems he must have lightly punched Barbatos's head at some point. "I hate listening to liars. In the future, each time you utter an untruth, I'll strike you again."

Barbatos spins on his heel to face his taller demon comrade. "Nyeh! I'm not lying! What are you on about?!"

"There was no cave bear, tiny one," Smealum says with disgust. The obsidian-skinned demon rolls his eyes at Barbatos. "It was a squirrel. You spent fifteen minutes trying to kill it. I wasn't involved in the slightest."

Barbatos smirks. "It was a BIG mean squirrel, though! Huge! It bit me all over the place!" He holds up his arm to reveal several small wounds. "See?"

Artorias sighs and rests his hand on his younger brother's shoulder. "Yes, yes. You beat the big bad squirrel. Let's not be impolite; we came here to see the wounded."

The annoying young demon wants to protest, but he gives up when his big brother shoots a glare at him. "S-sure..."

I cough to clear my throat. "Hah-hum. Artorias... how are you doing?"

"I'm well, thank you," Artorias responds. The muscular demon scrutinizes my frail, withered body with a look of pity. "Have you regained any of your former strength yet?"

"No. I haven't. Bael's doing okay. He'll probably be up and walking around... eventually..."

Bael grunts. "M'legs ain't there yet, but they will be soon."

"That's good to hear," Artorias says. He maintains a neutral expression for a few moments, then sighs. "Haah. There's no easy way to say this, guys. I've come to deliver some bad news."

Diablo frowns. "What kind?"

Artorias rubs his arms. "Valac says he isn't interested in giving you or Bael a worm. I'm sorry... he says you're too weak, and there's too much Holy Energy trapped in your bodies. His worm won't work on you."

Bael scoffs. "What?! Too weak?! Why, that boney little runt! When my legs start working again, I'll hop off this bed and crush the little bastard into bonemeal!"

Artorias shakes his head. "I would advise against that. Valac took on an Archangel and several Valkyries and won. You wouldn't stand a chance. Frankly, nobody would."

The witch-doctor demon sniffles, jiggling the bones pierced through his nostrils. "By the way, Lucifer, Valac has ordered all the able-bodied males to prep for a forest sweep. I have to go, so I'm hoping you can hold down the halls while I'm gone."

Lucifer narrows her third eye. "A forest sweep? What is that?"

"Valac wants us to sweep across the forest, killing anything in our path. His worms give us the ability to take the souls of those we kill. He thinks that if we start killing small animals, we can work our way up to fighting Titans."

Lucifer balks. "I should go. I'm not going to sit back and play den-mother while the men go out and have all the fun!"

Artorias shuffles his feet. His expression sours as he lowers his animalistic eyes to gaze at the ground. Before he can reply, Smealum speaks up. "Ah, about that. Lucifer, you're the only demoness Valac gave a worm. He rejected all of the other women."

Lucifer pales. "Only me? You're joking."

Artorias shakes his head. "I'm afraid not. Valac seems to believe the women are... how to put it..."

"Are what?!" Lucifer asks. She jumps to her feet and tosses her arms in the air. "That worthless bag of bones! Just say it! He thinks we're weak!"

Artorias shrugs. "For what it's worth, I don't think that at all. You and Nerissa took out Uriel and Uzziel, as well as that Titaness. Agares and I have tried arguing with Valac, but, well, he's too stubborn. It's not like we can force him to give the women worms."

Lucifer balls her hands into fists. "That son of a- gahh! I can't believe him! If he thinks women are so pathetic, then did he give me one only to humiliate me? Is that what this is about?!"

Barbatos chuckles. "Nyeh, is the little lady getting all mad? Afraid you won't be able to stand up to us big, bad men? Oooh! Pahaha-"

Artorias backhands his little brother, sending the twerp falling to the ground. "Quiet. Do not test my patience."

"Indeed," Smealum adds. "It's amusing hearing such big words coming from you. Lucifer is more than capable of reducing you to a pile of ash, should she choose to do so. I would keep my mouth shut if I were in your position."

Barbatos jumps to his feet. The scraggly little demon scowls at his brother and Smealum, then spins on his heel and storms out of the room. "Screw you guys! I'll make you regret looking down on me! I'm gonna go kill ten cave bears right this instant!!"

After he leaves, Lucifer exhales. She sweeps a finger across her bangs, pulling hair out of her face. "I don't know what Valac's game is, but I don't like it. If he won't give us his stupid worms equally, then I'll do something about it myself. I still have the power Leviathan gave me, after all."

Lucifer plops down on my bed. Her anger slowly subsides to mere annoyance. She glances at me. "Valac thinks you're too undeserving of his precious worm. Well? Do you have anything to say about that, Diablo?"

Diablo blinks slowly. "I don't know. I don't want to be infirm forever. I thought Valac's power would allow me to walk again. What am I supposed to do without it?"

Lucifer slinks her tongue out and wets her juicy red lips. "Screw Valac. We don't need him. He's a false prophet. His little parasite is probably part of some nefarious scheme to kill us all. I don't trust the bastard for a single second. Satan was naive and idiotic, but at least he had demonkind's best interests at heart. Valac has no redeeming qualities."

Artorias frowns. "Now, wait just a minute. I would not go that far. Valac isn't trying to kill us, but to bolster our fighting capacity. It is clear he has many methods for dealing with Angels and Titans. Perhaps he has some instinct for power, which we do not."

"Or maybe he's feeding you cave bear droppings," Lucifer counters. "I gave him information for years about the angels, Titans, and ourselves. My reward was a public humiliation. Valac is a snake. Only a fool would believe anything he has to say."

"A fool, perhaps," Smealum counters. "Or someone who gazes at the future with hope in their eyes. I'm not fond of Valac's proclivity toward violence, but given I am in the minority among our people, I can at least understand why they look up to him."

Lucifer crosses her arms, sandwiching them between her upper and lower breasts. "Tch. That's what I just said, but with extra words. They're fools for believing in him, end of story."

Smealum turns away, shrugging in response. "One man's fool is another man's hidden guru."

The longer he speaks, the more I begin to recognize various aspects of Smealum's physiology. The obsidian-skinned demon appears to be a member of a rare demon breed, one which Phoebe once called an Animus. Known for their fearsome power fresh from a Broodmother's womb, every Animus is born with higher intelligence and base power than other demons, but they also tend to cap their strength much sooner, making them relatively competent mid-tier warriors, but poor Duke and Emperor material.

I've also noticed that Smealum speaks very eloquently. Something about his vernacular seems familiar, almost as if I've heard it somewhere. I might have encountered him at some point. Tough to say, given how many demons and monsters I've met.

"Anyway. Sorry for bothering you, but now you know," Artorias says. "We have to go. I'm positive that sweeping the forest will be the epitome of tedium."

Smealum rests a hand on his hip. "I'm not going. I don't enjoy killing."

"What? Why?" Artorias asks. He turns his head to raise an eyebrow at Smealum. "Everyone must join this expedition. No exceptions. You heard Valac."

"Valac might be the leader of demonkind, but so was Satan. He ordered me to kill on several occasions, and I refused. I don't agree with the path of bloodshed."

"Right, right. You've said that before, but I wouldn't go against Valac's orders if I were you. He seems somewhat... unhinged."

Smealum doesn't budge. "I don't care what Valac says. I'm not the only demon with similar opinions. We might be a tiny minority, but my friends and I believe agitating the angels will cause a great tragedy. We should cut our losses, burrow underground, and avoid them."

Lucifer snorts. "A pacifist, are you? You sound like Belial."

"She, I, and a few others call ourselves anti-war, yes," Smealum says. "I don't agree with violence in any form. There are better ways to settle disputes."

I shake my head in disbelief. "You're... you're naive, Smealum. I've seen how cruel the angels can be. We can't trust them. They want to kill and torture us. Do you want to see everyone captured and put under Mas- Michael's control?"

"Of course not," Smealum mutters. "I never said I wanted that. I think the entire Heaven debacle was a mess, one which hurt us more than it helped. Then Satan had the bright idea to deceive the angels... now they'll be out for blood. We've only escalated the fight further."

Lucifer jumps to her feet again. "What are you saying?! Satan wanted to rescue Diablo and Bael! Do you think they deserved to suffer just so we could appease the angels?"

"Quite the contrary," Smealum replies, keeping his tone measured. "I'm glad we saved Diablo and Bael, but their lives came at the cost of several thousand others. If Satan cared about saving lives, perhaps he should have tried negotiating for their release as he said he would. You've heard Grigori's story of what happened, I'm sure. Satan had their rescue in the bag, but he instead decided to act out his petty revenge. Now he and thousands of other demons have fallen, while Valac took over the position of being our leader. I fail to see how negotiating for Diablo and Bael's release was a worse choice than what Satan did."

"What a dumbass," Bael says with a snort. He sets one of his rocks beside himself to point at Smealum. "You're a doofy little wimp. Satan knew rescuing me was worth sacrificing a few thousand losers. Everyone who died to an angel did so 'cuz they were weak and pathetic."

Smealum raises an eyebrow. "Didn't you get captured? If you're such a mighty warrior, then how did that happen?"

Bael falters. "W-well, I, ah... I got surrounded. I had to fight off thousands of angels by myself! They, uh, hit me with a surprise attack! Yeah!"

"Of course," Smealum sighs. He flicks his gaze to Artorias. "In any case, count me out of this 'forest sweep.' I'm going to meditate in a meadow somewhere far from the rest of you. I'll come back once you've all slaughtered and killed tens of thousands of helpless animals."

"Cave bears and wolves are hardly helpless," Lucifer hisses. "You're just a coward, too afraid to get your hands dirty. What do your Animus brothers think of your passivity?"

"I stand alone in my objections," Smealum admits. He turns to walk out of the room, only to pause at the doorway. "Even so, I don't avoid confrontation out of cowardice. I do so rationally by examining all of the options on the table. I wish people would listen to me more carefully, even if only to save lives. Oh well. I can't change everyone's mind."

As Smealum leaves the room, the last thing he says is, "I wish I could change anyone's mind."

His footsteps grow distant until they merge with the dull noise of the other imps and demons outside, all walking up and down the corridors, preparing to leave.

Lucifer rolls all three of her eyes and hisses. "Kss. I can't stand demons like him. Unwilling to fight, and it's always because of some personal quandary. If we don't resist the angels, we die. It's as simple as that."

Artorias shrugs. "I see where Smealum is coming from, but in the end, I don't agree with his opinions. Anyway, I'm not going to risk my neck for someone who wouldn't do the same for me. I'll return later after Valac says we've finished. Farewell."

I grunt out a goodbye, while Lucifer and Bael wave at Artorias. After he leaves, only the three of us remain.

Lucifer, still standing, rubs her hands together in circles. "After all my hard work, Valac cast me aside without a second thought. I don't have words to describe how much I want to tear him apart."

Bael grunts. "Hnf. Are you really gonna use the dragon's power?"

"Yes, I am. I created the Broodmothers. Perhaps I can use my abilities again, but this time to augment our forces. Valac thinks his worms are all we need to increase our fighting potential, but I disagree."

While Lucifer fumes for several seconds, Diablo sighs. "Do you think Leviathan's power could... could heal me? Is there anything it could do to help?"

The demoness nods. "Perhaps. Your magical pathways are twisted and distorted, along with your inner aura. Michael's holy magic did a number on your nerves... so I'll need to look into it further. For now, I'll help you move your arms and legs where possible. That alone might restore some movement."

Lucifer closes her third eye and itches the sides of it.

"Or it might not."

I nod weakly. "Thanks, Lucy. I'm glad you're here for me. Nobody else cares, but you do. That means a lot."

Lucifer opens her mouth to say something, but stops midway. She turns her back to me and sighs.

"I don't care about you at all."

A smile spreads across Diablo's face.

"Of course you don't."

To my right, Bael groans. "Ugh, you two are so cute... I think I'm gonna barf."

"Shut up, Bael. Idiot," Lucifer snaps. She marches out of the healing chamber, leaving me alone with the lunkhead.

"What a gal," Bael mutters after she leaves. "Four tits, three eyes, and no heart. I don't know what you see in her."

"Lucy rescued us," I shoot back. "She has plenty of heart. You simply can't look past her appearance."

"Sure I can," Bael quips. "I just worry she'll try'n take a bite out of your arm one of these days. Don't let that broad get hungry."

"I'll smack you if you keep talking about my girl like that."

"She ain't your girl till you've spanked her with your tiny little sausage!" Bael laughs. "Pahaha! She'll take off your pants 'n flee for the hills! You're doomed, pal!"

Diablo ignores Bael's guffawing and stares at the room's exit, his eyes seemingly following Lucifer's after-image.

"We can joke around all we want... but Michael hurt my girl. I can't forgive him. He cut her up and left her lying in the dirt. I hate him, but I'm scared, too. He's going to come for us. We have to get stronger so he can't hurt any of us ever again. I have to get stronger. I can't stay in this bed forever."

Bael stops laughing. He clears his throat with a grunt. "Huh. Yeah. I owe that bastard for what he did to me. I'm gonna kick his ass next time I see him. I'll do whatever it takes to win. When I'm through with that ugly chicken, there won't be enough left of him to fertilize a garden."

"Here, here," Diablo replies.

Despite his tough words, a shiver goes down Diablo's spine.

Can I defeat Master? Is such an act even possible?

Part 119: He Who Suffers

A small, stone house greets me as I arrive in the body of my next host. I've grown used to instantly identifying people in Solomon's visions, often by their height, the way they walk, the weight of their armor or clothing, and even the taste of their breath... but my host this time is unfamiliar to me. While certainly a female angel, my host is neither Camael nor Uzziel. Her small frame and even breathing reveals her top-tier physical condition. Metal clinks against her body as she walks, while the weight of platemail presses against her shoulders, rooting her to the ground.

I stop before the house and raise an armored gauntlet to rap my knuckles against the door.

Knock, knock.

When I lower my arm, a spasm of pain shoots up it, all the way through my neck, and into the right side of my face. My arm, neck, and face feel stiff, as if stretching would cause my skin to split and rip apart. The pain, too, feels fresh and electric. It isn't from an old injury.

My depth perception, too, is gone. My right eye either isn't open or doesn't work. I think it might be blind, but it's hard to tell.

Fifteen seconds pass while my host silently waits for the door to open. I glance around and take in the sights. Several other houses, each of modest nature, line the narrow street. Perfectly cut stones form their foundations and walls, much like the pillars of the Holy Haven. Each one stands perhaps twenty-feet tall, with a few outliers that rise two or three stories.

The door cracks open half a foot or so. My host flinches slightly and turns to face the Archangel inside, Michael.

Michael stands against the dimly lit interior of the house; his body silhouetted against Heaven's light. He blinks a few times, then clears his throat. "Mmm. Catherine? Why hath thou come?"

I raise my right arm and summon mana to draw letters in the air.

Brought ointment. Uzziel's orders.

Each letter I draw creates a slightly different chime noise in midair, making Catherine's magic words sound somewhat like a timid voice.

Michael opens the door all the way, exposing the interior of his house. His shirtless body reveals several scratches and scars, each one timeless and ancient like himself. He wears a loose-fitting pair of pants, which Solomon's Crown identifies as a Sirwal. His right arm rests snugly inside a leather sling, while his left holds the door open.

"I do not require any medicine."

Catherine frowns. The motion makes the right side of her face tense up in a manner I've never felt before. It's not exactly painful, but instead, uncomfortable.

The Valkyrie traces her finger through the air again.

My ceremony. Where were thee?

Michael rolls his eyes. "Ugh. Is that what this is about? I apologize. I didn't feel like-"

No excuses. I'm coming in.

Catherine walks forward and lightly pushes Michael aside. He balks for a moment but seemingly lacks the willpower to deny me entry. With a sigh, he closes his front door and follows me into his living room.

It's only now that I notice Catherine is carrying a small basket of flasks and flowers in her left hand. She sets them on a wooden table and plops down on a bench in front of it with a bearskin stretched across for comfort.

Michael's home is a simplistic, barebones place to live. No matter where Catherine looks, I can't spot any decorations, memorabilia, carvings, or anything else. A heap of swords and shields lie off in one corner, haphazardly piled there at some point in the past. A pot of tea quietly simmers over a crackling fireplace. Aside from a few slits that barely pass for windows, the Archangel's house is remarkably dark and barren.

Catherine pats the bench to her left and draws signs in the air. Sit. I apply ointment.

Michael stares at me. "I don't need... I don't... haah... fine. Do as thou please."

Defeated, Michael sits and turns his back to me. He slumps forward, almost as if he wants me to leave but can't bring himself to utter the words.

Catherine, however, ignores his non-verbal signals. She reaches into her basket and procures a mason-jar-sized flask with mushy green goop sloshing about inside. When she pulls back a cloth covering the top, an odor like death rushes out, filling the room.

Michael gags. "Kah! B-by the Creator! What is that infernal stench?!"

Ointment.

Michael uses his left hand to pinch his nose. "Procured from the filthiest of rats! Uzziel never holds back for her big brother, does she?"

Catherine pulls off the gauntlets on her hands, exposing her burned flesh. Her hands look worse in the dimly-lit room than when I last saw them at the Holy Haven.

Michael glances back and watches as we dip our fingers into the disgusting green slime. The goop sticks to our fingers like glue and comes out in heaping gobs. I raise my eyes to Michael's shoulder and wince inwardly at the nasty marks left by Agares' bite. Michael's skin, pale everywhere else, is instead several shades of green and brown around his shoulder area, the result of poison infecting his bloodstream.

As I pull the slime out and rub it against his wounds, Uzziel's concoction crackles and pops. It glows faintly, as if sucking some of the mana directly from Michael's body. The Archangel winces and turns away, gritting his teeth as waves of pain hit him. Catherine doesn't let up and continues smearing the glop all over his shoulder, front and back.

Five minutes pass. Both of us sit in silence as I apply several coatings of Uzziel's salve. Finally, I finish. Catherine grabs a rag from her basket and wipes her hand clean.

Done. Don't wash off. Don't sleep. One week to heal.

Michael's shoulders sag. The glop continues to pulse and glow every few seconds, but it seems the worst of his pain is over.

"Right. I'll do what I can. Art thou done here?"

Catherine purses her lips, making the skin on her right side crack slightly. Want me leave?

Michael quickly averts his eyes. "N-no. Of course not. Why woulds't thou ask such a thing?"

A terrible liar, thou art.

Catherine stands and walks over to Michael's fireplace. His kettle bubbles silently inside, and Catherine pulls it off the handle. She lifts the lid and sniffs. Her thoughts surface in her mind. This tea is old and stale. How long has it been since Michael boiled a new pot? Must I do everything for him?

I've never heard Catherine's voice before. However, her internal thoughts, an echo of when she once was able to speak, ring out like crystal wind chimes in the breeze. Her voice is soft and demure, yet stout and uncompromising. She wastes little time debating this or that, instead jumping to logical conclusions as quickly as possible.

Michael watches as I walk into his kitchen, grab the scorching hot metal by the bottom, and dump the soggy tea-water out of the slightly larger windows. Despite my expectations of incoming pain, Catherine doesn't feel anything out of the ordinary when she touches the kettle. Whether that's due to lack of pain nerves, or immunity to heat, I don't know.

Michael coughs. "Ahem, ah, there's a cistern of water beside the vase. Selma delivered it this morning."

Catherine nods. She turns to where he's pointing, and her expression flattens. She motions with her hands. My flowers. Dead.

A glance toward Michael reveals little. He averts his eyes and shrugs. "They're only flowers. More will grow elsewhere."

They're dead, Michael.

This time, Michael visibly winces. "Sorry. I didn't... I didn't mean to..."

Catherine exhales. She turns away and grabs the bulky cistern with one hand. Effortlessly, she lifts the ceramic as if it were a piece of paper and pours water into the kettle.

A few minutes later, Catherine places the kettle of tea back on the fireplace to boil, then plucks several assorted flowers from her basket. She walks over to the plain brown vase, yanks the dead flowers out, and releases flames from her hands, scorching them to ash.

As she places the new ones in the vase, Michael cries out in alarm. "Ah! Catherine! Why dost thee summon Jörmungandr's flames for a simple act of cleaning!"

Catherine glances at her palm. Despite releasing hardly any fire at all, her skin crackles and sputters as a few blisters appear. Still, she feels no pain.

The Valkyrie motions with her other hand. No want me burn? Maintain flowers.

Michael's jaw slackens. He clambers to his feet and walks around the kitchen counter and grabs my hand to examine it. "Bloody- I told thou never to summon thy fire! Dost thee simply seek to cause me pain?!"

Catherine cocks her head. Yes.

Michael scowls and turns away. "By the name of Heaven..."

Catherine draws in the air again, and the sound of her magic makes Michael turn around to read. Punishment for killing flowers.

"Thou art hurting thyself to... to punish me?! In all my years-"

Michael rubs his face aggressively. He starts pacing back and forth, agitated. "It's because I missed thy coronation, isn't it? I would have gone, sister, but my wounds-"

Thy injuries are but an excuse.

Catherine interrupts her brother's words with the chime of her magic letters. He stops pacing to read them, and his shoulders slump once again.

"Yes, perhaps they are. What of it? I can take a few days off if I please."

Thy defeat. Stop dwelling on it. I will cry.

Catherine etches the words into the air, but I don't sense a trace of sadness in her. She stares at her brother evenly, giving me the impression she's either being sarcastic, manipulating him, or simply lacks any emotional faculties.

"Will thou?" Michael asks.

Perhaps.

Michael groans. "Thy machinations are unknowable. Why must ye tug at my heart?"

Catherine pokes at the bubbles forming on her palm, popping them and scattering pus across her burned skin. Then she motions with her left hand to draw words again. Thy prisoners. Gone. Not returning.

"Bah." Michael waves his hand flippantly. He turns away and wanders back to sit on his bench. "They were in my grasp. Then that... that little green bastard jumped me. Nobody sneaks up on me. Nobody!"

Michael grinds his teeth together. He balls his hand into a fist and slams it against his knee. "Filthy little- that worthless bug nearly killed me! I've fought hundreds of dragons, Titans, planet-destroying entities, and this one tiny little piece of filth nearly brought my legacy to an end. I had to be saved by... by..."

Michael trails off. He suddenly looks at me; shock etched into his face.

"No. I... I didn't mean..."

Catherine tilts her chin up. She stares down her nose at Michael.

Art thou angry? Because I saved thee?

"No, no, of… of course not."

Unworthy. Thou thinketh me useless.

"It's not like that, Catherine. I…"

Michael swallows hard. Guilt washes across his face.

"I didn't mean to disparage thy skills. It's just… perhaps… perhaps I have lost my edge. Perhaps I am no longer the mighty Archangel whom the dragons feared during the Ancient Wars. I'm beginning to believe my glory days have fallen into the annals of history. Thou hath surpassed me."

Catherine's gaze softens. She walks over, sits beside Michael, and rubs his back.

That's not true. No dominant arm? Thy swordplay is still peerless.

Michael bows his head. His scraggly, unwashed hair flops over his shoulders and hangs beneath his chin.

"I do not mean my skill with the blade, sister, but all the other aspects of my being. I tortured two little creatures for a hundred years… but to what end? They were no mighty conquest. Has Michael, one of the three Archangels who slew the mighty Jörmungandr, fallen so far as to maim insignificant little demons for sport? Have my senses dulled so much during peacetime that even those same creatures could nearly kill me with one surprise attack?"

He shakes his head.

"I am a failure. This useless arm is proof of that. Even while suffering from self-inflicted burns, thou dids't prove thyself a more capable fighter than I. Archangels have always stood leagues above our brethren, but I no longer deserve my position. I should… I should step down."

Catherine recoils at Michael's words. It takes her several seconds to formulate a response.

No. That would be foolish. One moment of weakness. Wake-up call. What dost thee always say?

Michael watches my words appear in the air, then stares at the fireplace. "It wasn't merely one moment of weakness, Catherine. I feel it in my bones. Lounging around for millions of years has caused my skills to fade. The mind-wipes erased my memory of all the battles Raphael has mentioned. I no longer remember a time when I fought with all my might, nor do I remember any point where my life was in danger. My life has become a mundane, dreary existence. I sit in Heaven, eating fruits and jabbering with my family… all the while, my body and skills atrophy away."

The Archangel glares at the fire.

"What is the point of living? I exist to fight. Without an enemy, I long for death. When I finally met someone worth testing my might against, I lost. My singular purpose; nullified. With Valac slain by thy blade, and Satan by Raphael's, the rest of the demons will surely perish within a few years. What, then? We will be at peace, once more."

Why not train thy body?

"Again, I ask, sister, to what end? I could spar with other angels, but I'd never summon my full strength against them. None would be able to keep up with me. Without a worthy enemy for me to unleash my full power against... without an opponent to boil the blood in my veins... my existence becomes only suffering. I long for either battle or the grave. Nothing else sustains me."

Catherine's breath catches.

What about me?

Guilt appears on Michael's face once again. "I care about thee, little sister. I always have. The only reason I have not fallen upon my blade is that I know it would cause thee endless suffering. I would never wish to bring such heartache to thy soul."

Catherine nods. Do I burden thee? Were I to die, would'st thee...

Michael's expression darkens. "Don't say such things. As long as I draw breath, nobody will ever lay a hand on thy head."

Valac hurt me. Thou art a liar.

Michael groans. "Aye. I apologize. I should have been there to finish him off myself."

'Twas a joke, brother.

Michael doesn't smile. Instead, he sighs. "I have long since forgotten how to smile."

Catherine cocks her head. Not even for me?

"Nay. There is only one thing in this world that would bring me joy..."

The Archangel trails off. His eyes lower to my throat. He gazes at my burns for several seconds. Catherine tenses up.

Uzziel cannot heal me.

"Not all of thy burns, no... I only wish she could restore thy voice. Just once, I should like to hear it."

Turning away, Michael blinks back tears.

"I cannot remember my conquests, nor the sound of my little sister's voice. I have no identity. I have no purpose. Why... why must I go on forever, existing in limbo? Why must I live in this torturous reality?"

Michael breaks down. The stoic Archangel turns away to try and hide the tears running down his face. He wipes at his eyes furiously, but cannot stem the tide.

Catherine's thoughts turn inward.

Michael loves me. He loves Uzziel, Uriel, and all the rest of his brothers and sisters. Despite all that, he suffers from a loss of identity. I never wish to see him die... but 'tis cruel of me to demand he continue living, if only for my sake. What can I do to fill the void in his chest? What feats must I perform to bring the slightest warmth back into his heart?

Catherine pulls closer to Michael. Gently, she wraps one arm around his back and leans against his injured shoulder.

The Archangel continues weeping, even as his sister rests against him.

They love each other deeply, but one suffers from wounds inflicted not on his body, but his mind. Michael pretends to be a stoic, uncaring figure, but in reality, he's become lost amidst a sea of emotions. His memories, gone. Legacy, gone.

I can't fully empathize with him. I'm not someone whose entire existence revolves around war. But... I know what it means to float through a world where everyone else seems to have their lives figured out. My peers went to college and prepared for complex jobs, ones I couldn't begin to wrap my head around.

Life treated me in a manner less severely than it did Michael, yet at the same time, I suddenly realize we have more in common than I first thought.

Michael isn't the calm, collected badass he pretends to be. He's uncertain, doubtful, and constantly second-guessing himself.

I guess it's true what they say about judging books by their covers.

This is Catherine. (It's a full writeup this time, not just artwork!)

Part 120: Shepherd's Journey - The Damned

My next host, another unfamiliar body, slowly walks across a field of grass. We glance around every few steps, as tinges of fright shoot down our back. While Heaven's Light shines upon me once again, my host seems anything but calm. Our eyes dart left and right, not looking for specific threats, but seemingly watching for unseen horrors to come pouncing out of the grass.

It doesn't take long before I notice discomfort wracking one side of my body.

My host is missing his left arm. Not only that, but his left wing is badly broken, too.

The angel slowly paces forward, leaning on a walking staff to help himself along. I get the impression I know him based on his nervous breathing and mannerisms, but without seeing his face, I can't be certain.

As my host ambles forward, we walk over a hill and arrive at the gardens where Satan and Agares deceived Uzziel. Hedges grow several feet tall, and the sound of muted laughter and music rings in the air. Somehow, it feels forced, as if the angels are trying too hard to enjoy themselves.

I duck and keep my head below the hedges, placing each foot down as quietly as possible. Medium-sized trees begin to sprout to my left, shadowing my host as he continues skulking around the edges of the garden. I don't know why he's so nervous, or why he's trying so desperately to stay hidden. It worries me that he might harbor dark intentions.

My host pauses and turns his back to the hedge garden. In the distance, Heaven's Gate shines. Dozens of cherubs stand guard, facing it and holding their weapons at the ready in case any demons decide to burst through. Unlike the last time I saw the gate, nobody guarding it appears interested in chatting idly or wasting their time. It's only a half-mile away from Uzziel's favorite gardens, so they must be on high alert.

Oh, no, my host thinks. What are the Archangels thinking?! Why post the Damned to stand guard alongside the... the living? They're terrifying! I'm getting shivers just looking at them!

Based on my host's internal voice, I finally deduce his identity. He's Shepherd, the panicked angel who lost his arm during Valac's initial attack. He resigned at some point and gave up his position as a cherub.

I wonder what he's up to now?

Shepherd creeps toward the nearest tree and hunkers down behind it. He bites his lip.

I must get out of Heaven. I... I can't take it anymore! The Damned are everywhere! They're always watching me! I see the looks on their faces... they blame me... they judge me for their deaths. Everyone calls me a coward. They all hate me. It's true... I am undeserving of Heaven's beauty.

Shepherd squeezes his staff tightly. A drop of sweat drips down his forehead. Out of the corner of his eye, he spots a flash of movement. Uriel, Sophia, and Hyacinth all land near Heaven's Gate and trot toward the sentries. Their movements, while swift, appear unhurried. The newly crowned Saints wave pleasantly at the sentries, though Uriel does not. They begin talking to each other, but I can't make out what they're saying.

Ah! Sister Uriel! She will grant me passage. Surely, after the trauma she's suffered, she will understand my pain. Now might be my best chance!

Haltingly, Shepherd takes a few steps before his nerves tense up. However, after forcing himself to inhale and exhale several times, he stands up straight and walks toward the portal as casually as possible.

Within a minute or two, I draw close enough to hear Uriel's conversation with the cherub guardians.

"-excuses. I want emergency drills performed three times a day. Each of thee is the second line of resistance, should invaders manage to bypass Sinai's defenses. Need I remind thee of what happened during the battle against the Reaper?"

Uriel stands with her arms crossed as she stares icily at one of the cherubs. I recognize him as Chester, the leader of an elite group of warriors, one who lost his entire troop to Satan's initial attack.

Chester nods. "Of course not, sister. Near the end of the battle, a small group of demons burst from the ground and ambushed the two cherubs standing guard at the gate. Only one of them survived."

She nods. "Correct. That means the little bloodskin bastards have Earth magic at their disposal. They might burrow beneath our defenses and emerge inside Sinai, bypassing the first line entirely. If that happens, there won't be any advance warning, and thou shalt have mere seconds to react. Therefore, I want ten cherubs posted inside and outside this portal at all times. Are we clear?"

"Crystal."

Satisfied, Uriel's posture and expression loosen. She forces a weak smile. "By the way, I'm sorry about brother Listrus. I know the two of thee were particularly close."

Chester's gaze betrays no emotion. "We were. However, his passing has only hardened my convictions. I must be far more vigilant, so that I may prevent any further deaths among my brothers and sisters."

Hyacinth raises her hand. "There is no need to place such a burden upon thyself, Chester. We all must work together if we hope to protect our home and family."

"A-ahem..."

Shepherd clears his throat, but the sound comes out stilted and weak. Everyone turns to look at him, and his veins run cold as ice.

"Ah, brother Shepherd. How may we help thee?" Uriel asks.

Heat rushes to my face. Shepherd stutters and stammers. "Ah, w-well, it's been- that is, I've been thinking... I need to, well, I mean, I would like to, um, uh..."

Sophia bounces over to me. "Whoa, whoa! Calm down! There's no need to get all worked up! Take a breath, then say whatever's on thy mind."

My teeth begin to chatter. Shepherd inhales sharply, but at that moment, one of Chester's fellow cherubs walks over to see what's happening.

And then I notice it.

The black eyes.

This angel, one I've never seen before, has eyes as dark as night-time. Not only him, but some of the other cherubs as well. Like those belonging to great white sharks, some of the angels here have eyes so dark that I might believe someone if they claimed these angels were creatures of the deep. They stare at me unblinkingly, making me notice other details, like their cracked skin and flaky hair. They look the same as any other angel from a distance, but up close, they're unmistakably different from their brothers and sisters.

Shepherd clams up. His breath catches, and he retreats a step, fear in his eyes.

"Shepherd? Is something the matter?" One of the black-eyed angels asks.

Th-the Damned! Oh, by the Creator! They're looking at me! M-make them stop!

My host begins to shiver uncontrollably, but he can't take his eyes off the undead angel. Suddenly, something blocks my view. Sophia steps in front of the undead angel, causing her poofy pink hair to obscure my view.

"I think I see what's going on here," Sophia says, quietly. "Why don't we get some fresh air, alright? Alright?"

Shepherd nods dumbly. He bows his head as waves of shame wash across his body.

"I... I n-need to..."

"Mhm, I getcha," Sophia says. She looks back over her shoulder at Uriel and nods. "I'm going to help Shepherd. He's feeling anxious."

Uriel sighs. "Certainly. We mustn't leave our brother to suffer. Chester, a word, if thou please."

Uriel and Hyacinth stay behind as Sophia pulls me aside. The moment Shepherd turns his back on the undead angels, his panic attack wanes. Sophia walks me a few hundred feet away and helps me sit. She plops down to my left and sighs.

"Oh, geez. Thou art suffering too, huh?"

Shepherd blinks. "Huh? I... I don't follow."

Sophia and I watch from our spot as Uriel and Hyacinth chat with Chester, his living brothers, and his undead brethren as well.

"Thou art scared of the... of the Undying, aren't thee? I, ah... I am too. Don't tell Uriel." Sophia flashes a cute smile at me, but it vanishes instantly. She's trying to put me at ease, but it's not working.

"Thou art afraid of the Damned? But... didn't ye battle Valac?"

"Oh, sure. Me, Hyacinth, Penelope, and Catherine, too. I, ah, didn't do much. I got a fancy promotion, but I don't think I earned it. Cath did all the heavy lifting. She always does."

Sophia fidgets uncomfortably for a moment.

"See, I know the Undying look scary, but they're the same family members they always were! We're lucky they're alive, right? There's no need to be scared of them... even if they do look like they could chew thy face off."

Shepherd shivers. "N-nay. Tis not only a matter of their appearance. When the Reaper died, why did they not perish as well? Such black magic is beyond our comprehension. I cannot trust them."

Sophia scrunches up her face. "Well, I tell thee how to live thy life, brother, but thou mustn't blame them for their current forms. Just because they seem scary doesn't mean they're evil. Anyway, what is thy purpose in coming here? Why come to Heaven's Gate? It's a bit out of the way."

The sudden line of questioning makes Shepherd freeze up. He flicks his eyes to Sophia, then looks away. "I, ah... I want to leave... to leave Heaven for a while. G-get some fresh air."

While we rub our missing arm stump, Sophia frowns. "Why woulds't thee wish to leave Heaven? Don't tell me it's because of the Undying."

Shepherd squeezes his stump. "Aye. 'Tis because I cannot bear the pressure of their gazes any longer. They're going to attack me, I feel it in my bones. They hate me f-for failing them. For being weak."

A glance at Sophia reveals an unamused expression. She raises an eyebrow questioningly. "Oh? Well, if thou dost feel that way, perhaps thou should vacation over at-"

"No!" Shepherd yelps. He spins to face Sophia and lunges his hand out to grab her shoulder. "They're everywhere! Not even Raphael trusts them! He's the wisest Archangel of us all! He knows they're going to betray us! I can't go on like this! I can't... can't..."

Shepherd lowers his hand. He retreats into his shell, even as the Saint stares at us in surprise. Her mouth hangs open, as though she can't comprehend the pure terror in his eyes.

"A-alright. Well, I mean... only cherubs are allowed to leave Heaven right now... but if thou possesseth such strong feelings regarding this matter..."

My lip begins to quiver. Shepherd nods weakly. "I... I don't want them to look at me anymore. I can't stay here. I'd rather die than live with this guilt hanging around my neck."

"Now, now. That's being a bit extreme," Sophia says, a hint of warning in her voice. "But I understand thy meaning. If thou art that earnest in thy convictions, then I shall assist thee to the best of my ability."

My eyes widen. "Truly?!"

"Yes, of course," Sophia says with a wink. "But only this once. I'll help thee bypass Heaven's Gate, but do not wander far from Sinai. There aren't any Undying out there, so thou may feel more at ease, but all our people must continue to follow Titan law and beware the demons."

Shepherd nods. "I thank thee, sister! Thou hath truly blessed me. I will do everything in my power to repay thee, no matter what it takes."

Sophia jumps to her feet and holds out her hand to help me up. "Thou need not go that far, Shepherd. It's not a big deal. Just do me a favor and be careful out there, alright?"

"Aye," Shepherd says with a nod.

Shepherd's eyes lower from Sophia's face to her outstretched hand. Slowly, he glances down at his missing arm stump.

"Oh, shoot," Sophia says. She quickly pulls her hand back and sticks out her tongue. "Ehehe... I, ah, forgot."

Shepherd digs his staff into the ground and uses his still-functioning wing to lift himself to his feet. "Worry not, Sophia. In due time, I will grow used to lacking an arm. Besides... I was luckier than many others. The Creator demands that I... that I count my blessings..."

Despite his strong words, Shepherd trails off into uncertainty. He wants to believe that good luck and fortune are the reason he survived, but deep down, he thinks so little of himself that he wishes he had perished along with his brethren.

I feel bad for him. Shepherd looks at the world from the most negative viewpoint possible. He's miserable, but doesn't have to be. There's always a silver lining and something worth fighting for; one merely has to look for it.

That's only my opinion, of course. Others have called me an idealist.

Shepherd and Sophia walk side-by-side toward the others. We arrive in time to hear Uriel chatting with Chester. "Of course. That's what worries me the most. We should build an encampment nearby to house more cherubs, up to a hundred if possible. We could use seraphs too, for emergency healing. Uzziel, however, doesn't like the idea of buildings ruining the beauty of her gardens."

Chester shrugs. "I have no opinion one way or the other. Perhaps we could hollow out the area around the inner gate. If we reinforce it, that should stop unwanted guests from burrowing inside."

"Mmm. Perhaps Camael might be able to help. Stone would have too many chinks and cracks to withstand a demonic assault, but her enchanted metal might prove strong enough to repel the bloodskins."

Sophia raises her hand. "Hi, hi! I'm back with Brother Shepherd!"

Uriel stares at Chester for a moment, but her eyes gloss over, as if she's thinking deeply about something. After a moment, she turns to face Sophia. "Mmm? Oh, right. What was the matter?"

Sophia's eye twitches. She effortlessly blurts out a lie as if she's done it a thousand times before. "Shepherd told me thy expression was super scary. He felt intimidated by thy aura and couldn't bring himself to speak!"

Uriel raises an eyebrow at me. "My... expression? Come, brother, why must ye wound me so?"

Shepherd balks. "I... I said no such thing!"

Uriel's jaw slackens. She gazes at me incredulously. "My word. I didn't realize after all these years that I was frightening thee. I'll try to be more conscientious in the future."

"B-but... but..."

Shepherd turns to Sophia with a look of pleading in his eyes. Sophia smiles and nods. "Aaaanyway, Shepherd wants to visit the troops at the outer perimeter. He hasn't ever seen Earth, at least not since the mind-wipes. Wouldn't it be nice if he could?"

Uriel crosses her arms. "No. Sorry, brother, but nobody is allowed on Earth until we coordinate with the Titans. After we finish the memorial services for all of our brethren and rain fire upon the burrows of the demons, then we can open the floodgates."

Sophia stomps her foot. "Oh, come on, Uriel! That's going to take forever! With all the funerals planned, it's going to be at least a few hundred years before he can go outside! Come on, just one little peek isn't going to hurt. Besides..."

The Saint trails off. She gestures at my missing arm. "Shepherd's spirits could use some lifting."

Right on cue, I bow my head and try to look as gloomy and depressed as usual. It's easy for Shepherd, given he's already standing at the precipice of despair.

Uriel holds up a finger to object. She falters. A hint of hesitation enters her voice as she speaks. "I can't allow... I mean... well, when thou dost put it in those terms..."

Several seconds pass. The Archangel reaches back to scratch her head. "Mmm. Alright, fine. I will allow thee to visit our troops. However, do not leave the outer perimeter. Take a weapon, too, just in case. I'm worried about a possible attack by the demons. With their leaders dead, it seems unlikely, but I refuse to risk any lives. Astrea and Hestia are guarding the front gates. From what I've heard, they're competent warriors, but I would advise thee not to put too much trust in Titan females."

Hyacinth nods. "Especially given how many Titans Valac managed to kill. What was the number, again? A thousand?"

"Close to three thousand, I believe," Uriel replies. "Anyway, go on, then. Miles, give brother Shepherd thy blade, then go fetch a new one from the armory."

Uriel gestures to one of the other cherubs. Shepherd's body tenses up as the black-eyed Undying angel nods and walks toward us. Terror rushes into our heart.

The Undying angel unbuckles his sword and belt from his waist and steps toward me. Ice washes through Shepherd's veins as the terrifying dark angel reaches out and holds the sword for me to take.

"Here, brother, wield my weapon. I pray it serves thee well."

Shepherd's body trembles as he cautiously reaches for the sword. "Th-th... thank... I thank thee... for thy s-s..."

We never manage to finish the final word. Shepherd takes the sword and immediately retreats a step back, nodding quickly as if to assuage the idea that no, he is, in fact not scared at all, despite the opposite being true.

Miles frowns. "Art thou alright, Shepherd? Thy complexion is as pale as snow."

Shepherd forces himself to swallow. "I am- yes, I... fine. I am good."

Uriel watches silently. She frowns, and I get the impression she's figured out a piece of the puzzle. However, she offers no commentary on my behavior toward the Undying angel.

"Very good. Shepherd, please stay safe outside of Heaven. Earth is a dangerous place at the moment. There are predatory creatures unlike any thou hath ever seen out there, not to mention the demons. Stay close to Sinai's base."

Shepherd nods. "Y-yes, sister. I thank thee for allowing this leave of absence."

"Mmm. Do not die on my watch, please. I would never forgive myself. Dismissed."

Thirty minutes later, Shepherd emerges from Sinai's cave system to the outcropping where the two Titan females sit, one on each side of the cave's entrance.

Thousands of angels mill around the mountain's base. Some fly in circular patterns above as part of their watch, while others hover in place and keep an eye on the distant forests below.

Shepherd lowers his gaze. A narrow path etched into the mountainside appears to be his only way down. He glances back at his broken left wing.

I suppose I'll have to walk. I can't fly.

With a shrug, he steps out of the cave, only to immediately be stopped by the Titan female on our left.

"Hold. Who are you?"

The massive woman, a chubby ball of lard, wears thin strips of animal leather across her sensitive areas. She casually holds a massive mace in both hands, as if the several-ton weapon weighs little more than a toothpick.

"I, ah, received orders to boost the morale of our troops," Shepherd says. "I'm heading out to speak to my brother's below."

"Didn't answer the question," The Titaness growls. "I asked who you were."

"Oh. Err, ah, sorry, ma'am. I'm Sh-Shepherd."

She lifts her gaze to her sister. "What an odd name. Sh-Shepherd. Ring any bells?"

"Not even one," The female on the right says. She wears nearly identical clothing to her sister. "Maybe we should send him back, Astrea."

Astrea shrugs. "He's not a demon. If the guards let him through, it's not my job to stop him."

"True."

Both of them turn away and return to gazing at the distant landscape.

Shepherd waits apprehensively for several seconds, but the Titanesses ignore him. "Um... uh... am I free to, err, go?"

"Huh?" Astrea glances at me again. "You're still here? Sure, whatever. Leave us alone already."

She rolls her eyes and looks away. Shepherd stares at her in baffled silence for a few moments before shaking his head and heading for the narrow path.

So, this is how the Titans act. I've never spoken to one before. They seem quite rude.

Ignoring his misgivings, Shepherd continues his journey to the camp below.

* * *

Eventually, despite his fear of falling over the cliffside, Shepherd reaches the bottom. A makeshift encampment with tents to protect the angels from inclement weather has sprung up since the last time I saw the place. The tents, made of leaves and sticks, seem flimsy enough that a stiff breeze could knock them over. As I draw near to the closest one, I note with interest that several vines have grown around the sticks to bind them together. Uzziel's handiwork, perhaps?

Shepherd, still awed by all the new sights and sounds, stumbles blindly into a circle of cherubs and seraphs. The group chats idly about various happenings, but pauses when they see me.

"Brother Shepherd! 'Tis been many a day since we've- ah! Thy arm! What happened to thee?"

Shepherd blinks away his confusion to stare at the armored warriors. Each one wears similar white platemail to the others, in addition to their individual flourishes. The man speaking to me has a red, satin sash running from his shoulder across his chest and around his back.

"Oh, Marcus. My arm. It, ah... during the battle..."

Marcus's complexion turns ashen. "My apologies. I did not mean to dredge up unpleasant memories. We haven't heard much about the conflict from anyone in Heaven. I still have yet to learn who among our brothers and sisters fell."

A seraph lady, wearing green and white robes, nods. "Aye. I am anxious over whether Miledy and Dannis fell. I always felt close to them. With any luck, the demons may have spared them a gruesome fate."

"Let us cast aside such talk," A lean, dark-skinned male says. "Brother Raphael will deliver a roster of the fallen soon. More importantly, brother Shepherd is with us, now. Let us make him comfortable."

Shepherd blushes. "I thank all of thee. I will be fine, now. I had to leave Heaven. None of ye have probably heard, but one of the demons, Valac... he... he used corrupted magic on many in our family. He slew thousands, and then used some accursed magic to bring them back from the dead. However, after Catherine killed him, the Damned continued to walk among the living. They gaze upon us with horrible black eyes. Their skin cracks like broken twigs, and-"

Marcus raises his hand. "Dost thou referreth to the Undying? Why not celebrate their return to the living, brother Shepherd? They've been granted a second chance at life. We should count our blessings! Despite their appearance, they retain their personalities and roam free among us. Why, Brothers Bertus and Skurn walk this very camp!"

Shepherd's heart stops.

"Th-the Damned... they're here, too?"

"As of a few days ago, aye. We requested additional troops for the frontlines."

"But... but I heard none were allowed to... to leave..."

Marcus waves his hand. "No, there were special exceptions made for a few of them. After all, they remain loyal to our people. Their appearances took some getting used to, but I have partaken in wine and broken bread with them. They are the same as they always were."

Shepherd begins to tremble once again. "Oh. I, I see. Well, I, err... I thank thee for the news. I am going to speak to some of the... the other groups. F-farewell, then."

"Hm? Thou aren't going to stay and chat a while? Come, we must offer thee a proper welcome to our camp!"

Shepherd shakes his head. "N-nay, not now. Perhaps later."

Marcus nods. He doesn't notice Shepherd's discomfort. "Ah, suit thyself. I am glad that thou still remain among the living, brother Shepherd. Have a wonderful day!"

Shepherd nods dumbly. "Aye. M-may Heaven's light shine upon thee..."

* * *

Shepherd leaves his fellow cherubs behind. His heart races as he tries to control his swirling thoughts. All around him, people gesture and wave, happy to see one of their brothers alive, but Shepherd barely returns their gestures.

The Damned are here, too. I believed I could rid myself of their gazes, but I couldn't. There is no refuge... no respite from their blackened eyes. I cannot continue to stay here. Oh, woe is me!

Slowly, Shepherd wanders toward the outskirts of the camp. Cherubs and seraphs begin to dwindle in number until I arrive at the edge of the nearby forest. Here, nobody patrols.

Shepherd glances around.

I want to be alone, but I won't go far. I'll stay close enough that my brothers will be able to hear me if I yell for help. Yes. That is the ideal solution. I won't go far. I won't... go far...

Shepherd shivers as he enters the forest.

Part 121: Unlikely Brothers

My next host is just as unfamiliar to me as Shepherd was. I arrive in a somewhat dark area of the forest. Beams of sunlight shine onto a large open patch of grass before me. My host sits cross-legged several feet away from the light and raises an apple to his mouth. He bites into the sweet, juicy fruit and smacks his lips contentedly.

A sense of serenity descends over me. Unlike so many of the people whose minds I've entered during Solomon's visions, my current host lacks even a trace of anxiety or worry. He watches a pair of rabbits hopping around in the clearing while quietly eating his fruit. Observing the animals seems to put him at peace. He doesn't attempt to call them over and pet them, nor do anything that might disturb them.

When he raises his hand again, I happen to notice that his skin is incredibly dark. Darker than Uzziel's, even. His arm is as black as obsidian, allowing him to blend in with the shadows of the forest effectively. Only a series of white tattoos painted on his skin breaks up the effectiveness of his camouflage.

Hmm. This apple is rather bitter. Perhaps I should try to find an orange. It has been many months since I last tasted one of those.

My host continues to stare at the rabbits while eating his fruit. Thanks to the sound of his internal voice and a few other clues, I piece together that he must be Smealum, the Animus demon from two visions ago. The last time I saw him, he refused to join the other demons during Valac's 'forest sweep.'

The realization makes my stomach clench. Considering Smealum is sitting inside of a forest, what does that mean for him? Did he participate after all? Has the sweep already concluded?

Whatever the answer, Smealum seems to be in a particularly good mood. He finishes off the last bite of his apple, tosses it behind himself, and sighs contentedly.

"Hoo... should I eat another? I wonder."

Shrugging, Smealum glances down at his waist. The fur coat wrapped around him, crafted from the hide of a black wolf, spins and undulates in many fascinating patterns. A small leather pouch rests on his waist, tied off with a bit of twine. Smealum reaches down, opens the bag, and reveals several dozen white twigs.

No, not twigs. Bones. Each one looks to be about the size of a bird's leg. He takes one out, closes the bag, and begins to poke at the gaps between his teeth, turning the bone into a makeshift toothpick.

The idea of jamming a dead creature's femur into my mouth sends waves of revulsion coursing down my back. Smealum, however, doesn't appear bothered in the slightest. He pulls bits of apple from between his teeth and swallows as he silently cleans his mouth. While a sickening feeling for me, I have to commend him for his oral hygiene.

Birds chirp above us. Somewhere in the distance, a wolf howls. Smealum sighs contentedly and sticks the bone back in his bag after he finishes.

I should probably return to the burrows. Valac and the others must have finished by now.

Smealum contemplates leaving, but he doesn't stand. Instead, he continues to gaze at the rabbits as they frolick about.

Why bother? I hate living among demons. None of them represent me. They thirst for blood and seek to kill and wreak havoc, while I do not. Why? To right ancient wrongs? To unleash justice upon those who once harmed us? Valac's plans will engulf this beautiful world in war. Why must they devastate Earth? Why harm the beautiful creatures of this planet?

Perhaps I am too young to understand. I am scarcely a hundred years old, a child in the eyes of those like Valac and Lucifer. To me, the cycle of violence seems impossible to break. Each side presses upon the other, which only serves to validate the other's notions of evil. We hurt the angels, and the angels, in turn, hurt us.

Must the universe function in this way, I wonder? Must we feed off the angels' hatred to fuel our own?

Smealum sighs. He pulls another apple from a satchel at his side and stares at it.

Joy and love are everywhere across Earth. Beauty and splendor surround me. Even this juicy red fruit dazzles me with its vibrant color. If we could only set aside our hatred and prejudice for a time, perhaps we could grow to understand one another. If the angels treated us not as their inferiors, but as their equals... maybe we could heal the rift between our people.

The demon lowers the apple and places it back in his bag. With a shake of his head, he closes his eyes.

No. Peace is impossible. Even if the angels decided to listen, our leaders never would. Satan had a chance of attaining peace, and he cast it aside. Why should the angels trust us after he stabbed them in the back?

Smealum broods silently to himself for several minutes. His mind struggles and wrestles with difficult questions, many of which I've asked myself during Solomon's visions. It's a little refreshing to hear the thoughts of someone so similar to me.

More than that, though... Smealum's words, his tone, his inflection, and even his manner of speech seem familiar. I feel as though I've met him before. Have we spoken? Do I know him from the present time?

It's tearing me up inside. To be so close to an answer, yet lack a piece of the puzzle is the most infuriating feeling in the world.

Suddenly, a flock of birds burst through the tree canopy, squawking and shrieking in surprise. Smealum's eyes bolt open as he realizes the rabbits have fled.

All the creatures of the forest go silent after a few moments, leaving Smealum's breath as one of only two sounds echoing in the air.

Shambling footsteps greet my ears. Smealum stares wide-eyed and doesn't move a muscle. Across the open space of the illuminated forest clearing, an angel stumbles into view. Shepherd, still missing an arm, hobbles forward, clearly out of breath. The angel leans hard on his walking staff and quickly scans the clearing.

"Oh... bother... where am I, now? This forest is a damned maze..."

Smealum's heart pounds in his chest.

An angel? Here?! I thought they were ordered not to come this far north! What should I do? He hasn't seen me yet. Perhaps I can slip away.

The Animus doesn't move a muscle. His body shivers with a mixture of fear and excitement.

I've never seen an angel up close before. Is there something wrong with this one's left wing? It's bent awkwardly.

Shepherd gasps and sinks to his knees. He leans back and plops on his butt to catch his breath for several moments. His white robes, now torn and ripped from walking through the forest, hang across his body in strips. His skinny frame looks anything but intimidating. Even the sword at his waist looks like it doesn't belong.

Smealum sits frozen in place. His blood warms and cools as his thoughts run rampant.

Despite my curiosity, I should leave. Angels are trouble. Where there's one, there might be more. I should go. I should...

Ignoring his thoughts telling him to leave, Smealum instead stays perfectly still. His black skin blends in with the darkness around him, allowing him to remain unseen.

Shepherd doesn't notice us. Instead, the angel slumps forward. A look of defeat passes over his face. He reaches his staff out and pokes at a rock absentmindedly.

"...failure. What was I thinking?"

Shepherd murmurs under his breath. The skinny acolyte, once a low-ranking cherub, appears more pitiful than anyone I've seen in my entire life.

"Don't leave the encampment, they said. Did I listen? Of course not. I never learn."

Smealum watches with fascination as Shepherd begins to berate himself. The Angel mumbles and mutters about his various failings, and Smealum's eyes turn to saucers as he listens.

The angel appears to be in distress. He's cut off from his family. If I were a proper demon, I couldn't imagine a better time to attack him. I'll never have a better opportunity than this.

Biting his lip. Smealum leans forward.

I should say something. A greeting, perhaps? How would that go over? Should I assert myself, or move slowly? I don't want to alarm him. At the same time, that sword could be a problem. Angels are all supposed to be capable warriors. Even if I introduced myself- what?! Why is he crying?!

Shepherd breaks down and drops his staff. He sobs into his hand and blubbers incoherently, browbeating himself for all of his failings recently. I lose track of what he's saying once his words turn into a mishmash of choked syllables and grunts.

He's pitiful. Pathetic, even.

Smealum's excitement and fear fade away. He watches as the angel paws at his eyes, trying desperately to stifle his grief.

Hm. From what I can see, this lanky fellow isn't like most angels. Maybe I'm thinking things over too much. In any case, I cannot let this opportunity go to waste.

Smealum slowly rises to his feet. Shepherd doesn't see us through the tears clouding his vision. He sniffles and snorts like a baby, choking back tears and wiping his eyes repeatedly with his tattered sleeve.

"H..."

Smealum starts to speak. His muscles tense up, but he forces himself to continue with his greeting.

"...Hello?"

The single word seems to boom in the forest like a gunshot in the dead of night. Shepherd's eyes bolt open. He jerks his head back and immediately lasers his eyes onto me.

A cry of terror escapes the angel's lips. "Hiiii! D-d-de... demon! DEMON!"

Shepherd jumps to his feet. He trips awkwardly, likely from his broken wing disturbing his center of mass. Stumbling backward, he hits a tree and digs his heel into the ground. Shepherd, his face still stained with tears, fumbles for his sword. He clumsily yanks it from its sheath and tries to aim it at me, but it slips from his grasp and thuds against the ground.

"Whoa, slow down, friend. I don't mean you any-"

"S-stay back! BACK, I say!" Shepherd motions with one hand and tries to form a magic sign, but after a few seconds, all he can manage is a sputter of light. A tiny dagger of holy energy briefly appears in his palm, but it fizzles into sparks and dissipates in his grasp.

Smealum takes a step forward. He raises both hands. "I am unarmed. Please, you have nothing to fear. There's no reason to be frightened."

Shepherd's eyes turn into saucers as I step into the light of the clearing. He sweeps his gaze up and down my body, evaluating me in an instant. "D-demon... black as the night... the s-same color as... the eyes... the Damned! 'Tis thy fault! Thou hath slain my brothers!!"

A surge of energy enters Shepherd's body. He dives for his sword, as if planning to take it before I can. Given Smealum has no intention of touching the blade, he merely raises an eyebrow at the angel's antics.

Once he grabs his sword, Shepherd rolls again, demonstrating surprising agility for a crippled angel. He uses the sword to push himself to his feet and retreats several steps, keeping the blade pointed at me the whole time.

"I have no idea what you're talking about," Smealum says. "I have killed no angels."

"Liar! Demons always lie!!" Shepherd grinds his teeth together. His fear gives way to rage. "T-take one step closer, a-and I'll... I'll cleave thy head from thy shoulders!"

Smealum lowers his hands. He rubs his neck and crunches up his face. "I only wish to talk. There is no need for such barbarism."

Fire burns in Shepherd's eyes. "Thou shoulds't know a thing or two about barbarism, wretched creature. My brothers and sisters fell to thy claws. And now... I... I shall repay thee in full!"

After pausing for a moment, Shepherd lunges at me. He moves surprisingly fast, using his one working wing to accelerate forward in the blink of an eye.

His sword rushes at me. Smealum's eyes follow its movement. At the last second, the Animus dodges right. Shepherd's sword stabs where I stood a moment before, but with a single, precise blow, I karate-chop Shepherd's hand. Smealum's strength proves formidable. He nearly breaks the angel's wrist, forcing him to drop the sword.

"Augh!" Shepherd cries, as he yanks back his injured limb.

Recentering his body, Smealum pivots on his heel and slaps his palm against Shepherd's chest. The angel flies backward and lands on his wings, skidding across the ground.

The battle ends in seconds. Smealum kicks the sword behind himself and frowns.

"My apologies if I hurt you. I didn't want to use force. Perhaps, now that I've defanged you, we can talk to one another civilly?"

Shepherd lies in the grass. He stares at me wide-eyed, with terror etched into every inch of his face. The angel presses his arm against his chest and bites his lip. He tries to inhale, but his breath catches instead.

"B-buh... bastard... I won't... I won't... guh..."

Shepherd falls silent. His eyes close, and he faints.

Smealum's jaw drops.

What? The angel fell unconscious? I barely even hit him. How weak is this fellow to pass out after I held back all of my strength?

After a few moments, Smealum scratches the back of his head.

"Well, damn. This is awkward."

An hour later, I sit on a rock and stare at Shepherd's unconscious form, now tied to a tree. While Smealum waits for the angel to wake up, he silently puffs on a pipe made from a hollowed out tree branch. Smoke fills the air, but Smealum seems to enjoy the quiet time.

Shepherd stirs.

"Nnn... ohhh..."

He lifts his head and blinks, trying to clear the fog from his eyes. Suddenly, they bolt open as he spots me.

"Ah! D-demon! What happened? Where am I?!"

He tries to move, only to notice the ropes binding him to the tree. He struggles mightily for several seconds, only to then realize his arm is held fast above his head.

Smealum waves his pipe nonchalantly. "Apologies, mister angel. I didn't want you waking up and attacking me. I'd prefer not to fight, if at all poss-"

"Untie me at once, servant of the damned!" Shepherd snarls and tugs at his arm, trying desperately to pull it from the snare. "I do not fear death! I'll fight to my dying breath!!"

Smealum raises an eyebrow. He nods and listens as the angel rants and raves, threatening every demon and their relatives for over a minute.

Finally, Shepherd sags against the tree, his energy gone. He gasps for breath and starts having a panic attack as he realizes his life is now at Smealum's mercy.

"Are you finished?" Smealum asks. "If I wanted to kill you, I could have done so when I knocked you out. I am not one to rush to violence unless necessary."

Shepherd closes his eyes. "If... if thy goal isn't to kill me... I won't succumb to torture, fiend. I will never reveal any of Heaven's secrets."

Smealum scratches the back of his skull. "Ah, look, mister angel, I think you have the wrong idea here. I don't want to hurt you. I'm not a bad person. I would simply like to engage in a pleasant dialogue. Can't we set aside our differences, at least for a while?"

The angel opens his eyes. He stares at me for a few moments before replying.

"Thou wish to... to talk? About what?"

Smealum finishes off the tobacco in his pipe, taps the ashes out, and slips it into a pocket on his fur coat. "I don't know. Anything. I've never met an angel before."

"All demons were once imps, the servants of angelkind. If thou art going to open with such a bald-faced lie, how am I to believe anything thou hath to say?"

Smealum shrugs. "I'm not lying. I was born after my people fled Heaven. I am only ninety-five summers old. I have never spoken to an angel in all my life."

Silence falls between us as Shepherd digests my words. He swallows audibly. "I, ah, see. So, thou hath no intention to... to attack me?"

"Of course not. You pulled out your sword first, remember? I only struck you in self-defense. I do apologize if I injured you. I don't think I broke any bones, but I'm not talented in the medical arts."

Suspicion begins to grow on Shepherd's face. "What reason have thee to speak with me, an angel? If thy intention is to press me for information regarding my people, I shall bite off my tongue right this instant."

Smealum pales. "Oh, devils, don't do that! That sounds agonizing! If I release you, will you promise not to attack me? I don't feel good talking to you while you're tied up like this."

Shepherd's suspicion wanes somewhat. "...Alright. I will slow my impulses. For now."

"Excellent. That's all I wish to hear."

* * *

A minute later, Shepherd rubs his wrist with his chin. He shakily rises to his feet and stares me in the eye. For some reason, his cowardly aura seems to have diminished somewhat, despite standing in front of me, a demon.

"My name is Smealum. What is yours?"

"Shepherd," The angel replies. He rubs his sore wrist against his stomach to try and ease its pain. "Why is thy skin black? I thought imps and demons were red-skinned."

Smealum crosses his arms. "I don't know. Lucifer's experiments might have something to do with that. I am an Animus, a different breed of demon compared to others. There are others who look like me, but I prefer to think of myself as a unique individual."

Shepherd eyes me warily. "All demons appear the same to me. Thy skin color is the only difference I have noticed, so far. That, and also thy curious nature."

Smealum nods and gestures toward a stump. "Why don't we sit and talk? Standing so close to one another will only make both of us uneasy."

"Very well."

Both of us walk a few feet toward the blackened log. The rest of the tree lies off to the side, having fallen at some point in the past due to unknown circumstances.

After we make ourselves more comfortable, Smealum reaches into his bag. Shepherd flinches, waiting for a surprise attack to come, but his fears prove unfounded. Smealum pulls out two apples and holds out one for Shepherd.

"Here. You could probably use a little energy. Don't worry; it isn't poisoned."

Shepherd stares at the red fruit without taking it. "Angels do not require sustenance. As for thee, dost thy people not consume the flesh of other creatures?"

"We do, yes. Well, other demons do. I don't." Smealum starts to retract his apple, but pauses. "Angels don't eat fruit or vegetables?"

The angel scrunches up his face. "We do... but only because we enjoy the taste. Any consumed items turn to mist inside our bodies and expunge themselves as spiritual waste."

Smealum blinks. "I don't follow. Do you shit yourselves? Is that what you mean?"

"Nay. Consumed food simply turns to... to..." Shepherd trails off. He taps his lip thoughtfully, then motions toward his chest. "It leaves our body as spiritual waste. I don't know how else to say it."

"But you can eat this apple, correct?"

Sighing, Shepherd nods. "I can."

"Then take it. It'll be awkward if I'm the only person eating here."

Shepherd stares at me for a moment, then takes the fruit from my grasp. "Very well. Thou art an oddity, not only among demons, but among all the sentient creatures I've ever known."

"I get that a lot."

* * *

The angel and demon stare at each other silently for over a minute as they bite into the fruits. Based on Shepherd's look of disgust, he seems not to enjoy the apple at all. Then again, considering how incredible the fruit in Heaven tastes, it's no wonder why.

After five to six bites, Shepherd sets his unfinished apple on the stump. He starts to open his mouth, but pauses as his gag reflex threatens to take over. "I- hurr... mmm... I, ah..."

"Are you alright?" Smealum asks.

"S-splendid. I need to... mmm... hnn..."

Shepherd winces. His stomach growls violently, as if threatening to force the apple back up. However, it only takes a few seconds for him to get his body back under control.

Smealum pauses his eating to glance at the fruit in his hand. How bad did Shepherd's apple taste? I gave him the juiciest one...

"What now, demon?" Shepherd asks. "We've eaten together. We've spoken. Is this the part where thou intendeth to slay me?"

"No, of course n-" Smealum starts to retort, but pauses when he notices Shepherd smiling. "Was something I said amusing?"

The angel rubs his chin. "Oh, not especially. It's occurred to me that I feel more at ease speaking with thee than I've felt in centuries with my brothers and sisters."

"You do? We've barely said anything."

Shepherd shrugs. His eyes flick to my right, looking past me into the darkness of the forest. "My family looks down on me, as they should. When thy people attacked Heaven... I lost my arm and broke my wing. The cherubs called me to action, and I faltered. 'Tis no great proclamation to call me a pathetic weakling. Thou knocked me out in a single blow, after all."

"You were fatigued. Beating an exhausted opponent isn't something I could bring myself to brag about."

"I suppose."

Shepherd continues gazing past me. Memories seem to dance in his eyes as he loses himself in his thoughts.

Smealum taps a finger on the stump absentmindedly as he waits for the angel to wake up from his delirium. After thirty seconds, Smealum reaches into the pouch at his side and pulls out one of his bird-bone toothpicks. The sounds of the bones clinking in Smealum's pouch wake Shepherd from his stupor.

Shaking off his ponderings, Shepherd peers over the stump at my waist. "Hm? What have ye there?"

Smealum takes the bag from his belt and sets it on the log. "Ah, these are some bones I carry with me."

"Bones?" Shepherd's eyes immediately turn suspicious. "Why dost thee carry bones around?"

Smealum pauses.

Damn. After I explained how peaceful I am, seeing these is going to make Shepherd think less of me. Even among other demons, carrying around a pouch filled with bones is weird. He won't buy that I use them to clean my teeth.

A drop of sweat drips down Smealum's neck.

"Ahh, these are for, hmm... well, they're for a... a game!"

Shepherd's suspicion intensifies. "What sort of game involves desecrating the dead? It sounds barbaric."

"N-no, it isn't anything like that..."

Smealum trails off.

What was I thinking? Shepherd is right. What sort of being would play around with bones?! Admitting they're toothpicks would have been a better idea!

Wait, no, I can salvage this. I only need a moment to think.

Shepherd presses me further. "Well? What are the rules for this game?"

"Rules... rules..." Smealum echoes Shepherd under his breath. After a moment, he slowly begins dumping his bones on the log. Each one is shaped similarly to the others, but there are small differences in the curves to them, cracks from age and decay, and other such things.

Smealum's eyes light up. Ah, that's it! There's a solution after all.

"So, Shepherd, here is how we play the game. First, take half of the pile."

"Half?"

"Yes. You get half, and I get the remainder."

Shepherd curls up his lip in disgust. "Disrespecting the dead... no angel in their right mind would do such a thing."

"Ah. Well, if you don't wish to touch them..."

Smealum's eyes dart around. He spots a mess of broken sticks laying nearby. "Aha. Here, these will serve as a substitute."

Without hesitating, the demon leans to his left and snatches up the bundle of twigs, snaps them several times into a bunch of pieces, then places them on Shepherd's side.

"Okay. This game is rather simple. All we do is toss the bones down and describe the pattern they form."

"The sticks," Shepherd says, correcting me.

"Aye. I'll throw my bones, then you follow with your sticks."

"Okay."

Shepherd seems unconvinced about Smealum's so-called game. However, he follows my example, grabs a mass of the sticks, and tosses them down on his side of the stump.

As the sticks and bones clatter and rattle, Shepherd purses his lips. "Now what?"

"Well, what patterns do you see?" Smealum asks. We poke at our bones and scrunch up our face. "See, this pattern here looks something like a... a... a lion! Yes, it resembles the mane of a lion."

"A lion? What is that?"

"It's a large cat-creature. I've only seen one in my life. Big teeth, though. Quite frightening. Very majestic."

"Mmm."

Shepherd stares at his sticks silently for over a minute. Sweat continues to run down Smealum's neck as we wait.

"W-well? Do you see any patterns?"

"Nay. Not a one. What is the point of this game? What sport is there in staring at twigs?"

Smealum chews his lip. "Sport? Erm. Well, I hadn't... really... thought that far..."

Shepherd raises his eyes to meet mine. "I beg thy pardon?"

"Nothing. Ah, demons don't play games for sport. Most of my kin compete over everything else. Games are... ah... a way to relax! Yes, we play games expressly to pass the time and develop camaraderie."

"Sounds like a waste of time," Shepherd mutters. "I suppose angels are the opposite. We typically tend to work together for most tasks. Sport and competitions serve the purpose of allowing us to compete in a friendly fashion, determine who is the most competent at various talents, and so on."

"I see..." Smealum mutters. "Hm. Well, perhaps we can retool this game to be more, ah, competitive?"

Shepherd snorts. "That's an amusing idea. Unless thou dost plan to hold me here, I do intend to return to my family at some point."

Smealum's hopeful expression melts away. "Oh. Ah, yes. I see... that does make sense... we can't play games forever, I suppose..."

My words trail off. Smealum's expression turns crestfallen as he stares at the angel, a note of pleading in his eyes.

"If you leave... will this be the last time we speak? Will I see you again?"

Shepherd rubs his chin. "I don't know. Thou art a demon, after all. I shouldn't have entered this blasted forest in the first place. With my wing broken, I can't fly away. I don't imagine we will reencounter one another."

Gloom descends upon Smealum. "Ah. Well... I feel closer to you than I do any of my demon brethren. They lack compassion, can't see past the bridges of their noses, and seek death and destruction rampantly. I sense a kindred spirit in you, Shepherd. It would be a shame if... if we never saw each other after this..."

Shepherd's expression softens. "Well, I mean... I could probably try to visit in the future. I know not how I might contact thee. There is also a chance thou mayest perish in my absence."

Smealum nods. "Terrible things happen all the time. Will you pledge to return to the forest at some point? I will do what I can to make certain no demons harm you."

Silence descends upon the two of us. Shepherd glances away as thoughts splash around in his head. He debates the consequences of returning and weighs them against a thousand other possibilities, all in a matter of seconds. Smealum, on the other hand, procures his pipe. We light a wad of tobacco and begin puffing while we await Shepherd's reply.

Finally, Shepherd stirs. "Alright. I've made my decision. Come rain or snow; I will do my best to return."

Smealum smiles. "I'm pleased to hear you say that."

"It won't be easy," Shepherd murmurs. "Getting out of Heaven right now is almost impossible. I barely left, thanks to my low rank. Until my people slaughter the demons, the Archangels intend to limit travel between Earth and Heaven."

"Oh. That doesn't sound like a fun time," Smealum says while exhaling smoke. "If your rank is a problem, why not try to raise it?"

"I can't," Shepherd replies. He gestures toward his missing arm and broken wing. "I'm useless in a battle."

"Nonsense. If your left arm vanishes, then make your right twice as strong. If you cannot fly, then learn to run. Do not treat your injuries as crippling disabilities. Treat them as obstacles to push past. I always try to maintain a positive outlook on life, no matter what happens."

Shepherd stares at me with a look of disbelief. "Such words are pretty, but they do not reflect reality. The world is cruel to those who are weak. Maybe thou hath found thyself blessed with a strong body and high rank, but I have not. Everyone looks down on me. They shun and judge me, declaring that I am their inferior."

"Are you not?" Smealum asks. "I don't need a high rank among my brethren to attain happiness. You value yourself based on the opinion of others. That lack of self-confidence is why other angels look down upon you. If you change your outlook, you will change theirs, as well."

Shepherd remains unconvinced. "I suppose. This discussion grows more wearisome by the minute."

With a wave of his hand, Shepherd dismisses Smealum's words.

Despite his cowardice, weakness, and lack of any fighting ability, I get the feeling that Shepherd still sees himself as being better than Smealum. He appears to think that because he's an angel, he's automatically superior to all demons. He doesn't need to utter the words for Smealum to understand his views.

However, Smealum never comments on the angel's elitism. Instead, he continues to smoke his tobacco, ignoring any slights the angel lets slip.

Shepherd's eyes lower to my pipe. "Funny. There aren't many angels who smoke in Heaven. Only Raphael and a few acolytes during their free time."

"Oh? Have you never tried the joys of tobacco?"

"Nay. I fail to see the appeal of inhaling soot."

"It's quite calming, Shepherd. Here. Give it a try."

I lean forward and hold out my pipe. Shepherd stares at it inquisitively for a moment, before taking it from me. Rather than pressing it to his lips, he instead lifts and examines it. "What are these carvings etched into the handle?"

"They're rabbits, birds, and other small creatures. I like cute little critters."

Shepherd shakes his head. "Goodness. Thou art a strange demon. I can't say I've known many, but among those I have, thou stand out like a black spot in the snow. Err, no offense meant."

Smealum shrugs. "None taken. Are you going to let the flames extinguish, or are you going to puff, already?"

"My apologies. I was simply thinking about Raphael... my eldest brother."

With a shake of his head, Shepherd places the end of the small pipe in his mouth and inhales. A wave of disgust washes over him. He yanks it out and coughs wildly, expelling a breathy stream of smoke from his mouth and nostrils at the same time. "Kah! Kah! Haaack! Krrgh!"

The angel coughs violently as tears and snot spill from his face.

"Kah! Accursed- gahh! Foul! How could anyone smoke this?!"

Smealum suppresses a smile. He plucks his pipe from Shepherd's grasp and forces a monotone expression. "Ah, it seems you cannot handle something as simple as smoking. Tsk. How unfortunate that the lowly demon has bested his angelic superior once again."

"Bah! Shut up," Shepherd says as he hammers his chest to expel the last bits of smoke. "I know not what thou hath given me, but it was poison to my lungs. Only fools would deliberately inhale such vile chemicals."

Slowly, Smealum smiles. "Hehe. Well, the fact you shared my pipe fills me with glee, Shepherd. After all, any demon willing to share his smoking stash with another would only do so if he considered him a good friend. That is why I consider you a brother."

Shepherd frowns. "Me, be thy brother? I think not. Thou art a demon. I am an angel. We cannot be considered family."

"Why not? I'm different from most demons, just as you are from most angels. We're closer to each other than we are to members of our species. We both can speak, think critically, and treat each other with respect. If that is not the definition of brotherhood... then I don't know what is."

Shepherd ponders my words.

"I suppose thou hath a point. I am not sold on the concept, but I understand thy meaning."

A moment of awkward silence follows. Smealum places his pipe in his mouth, inhales, and pokes at the bones laying on the log.

"Well. Why don't we continue with this game? We can make it more interesting now, and when the sun lowers, I can lead you out of the forest."

"Why then and not now?" Shepherd asks.

"I'd prefer not to get spotted by your family," Smealum replies. "I hope you'll understand, brother."

"I do. But... I'm not your brother."

Smealum's grin widens. "In time, who knows?"

Part 122: Reptilian Ancestry

Diablo and Bael hang out together in a bedroom, different from the healing quarters where I last saw them. Diablo lays in bed, still paralyzed, but Bael does squats while also holding two heavy rocks, one in each hand. The hulking demon looks far more fit than before, indicating quite some time must have passed. His muscles make him look like he could chew solid granite without batting an eye.

Various trinkets sit atop a stone shelf to my right. Each one, carved from bone, is in the shape of a different figure. One resembles a cougar, while a larger bone carving looks like a cave bear. Its open mouth and swinging paws give it a menacing appearance as it towers over the other figurines.

Diablo stares at them absentmindedly.

Am I going to be stuck in this bed forever? It's already been a year. My body refuses to work, no matter how hard I try to move it. I thought the paralysis would wear off eventually, but I'm just as trapped as when Lucy rescued me.

He closes his eyes and sighs.

Maybe it would have been better if Michael had killed me.

Bael pipes up. "Geez, boss. What's with the gloomy look?"

The seven-foot-tall demon stands up and flexes his muscles. He drops the rocks in his hands, making them hit the ground with a resounding thud!

"Ah... it's nothing, I suppose..." Diablo mutters. "Same old, same old."

Bael grunts. "Ya gotta have faith in Lucy, boss. She'll getcha all fixed up. It'll take some time, that's all."

"Time. Right," Diablo murmurs. "None of the medicians can heal my body, not even Belial. There's too much Holy Energy trapped inside. There's no point in even trying."

"Oh, brother, there ya go with that give-up attitude again," Bael says. "Ya gotta open your eyes. Lucy's doin' her best. I know it ain't easy sittin' in bed and watchin' as I build my muscles up, but if ya hang in there, good stuff will happen."

"That's the problem," Diablo says. "Laying here is easy. It's the easiest thing in the world. The guilt is what makes my day unbearable. Haven't you been listening? The angels have started doing fly-bys. They're hitting us from the air, and we can't retaliate. I'm lying in this damned bed while my friends die out there!"

Bael rests his hands on his hip. "Yeah. I feel ya. It sucks knowing you can't do shit. Don't beat yourself up, boss. Even if a few thousand demons died to rescue you and me only for one of us to lie in bed and not do anything, it doesn't mean your life's worth any less than mine."

Diablo narrows his eyes. "Are you trying to cheer me up, or make my day even worse?"

"Yup."

Bael's shit-eating grin makes me roll my eyes.

"You're an imbecile."

"Yeahhh... I get that a lot."

Bael shrugs. He reaches down, grabs his rocks, and begins powerlifting them again.

Silence fills the space between us. Diablo watches silently as gloom enters his mind.

Outside, the sounds of hurried footsteps patter toward our room. The leathery curtain at the entrance at the back left corner flips open as Lucifer bursts inside, pulling Agares by his hand.

"Diablo! Bael! I've done it! I figured out the solution!!"

Agares scowls at her. "C'mon, let me go, already. You didn't need to drag me all the way-"

"Quiet, you. You're the key to all of this!" Lucifer releases Agares and pumps her fist in the air. "I can cure you, Diablo! Isn't that great?!"

Diablo smiles, but his expression holds a hint of uncertainty. "I mean, yeah... but you've said that before."

"This time is different."

"You said that, too. Still, I'll bite. What changed?"

Lucifer claps her hands together. "Agares is half-lizard, Diablo. Last week, he lost one of his arms during a fight against five cherubs. Look! It's grown back already!"

The triple-eyed demoness gestures with both hands at Agares' left arm. It is, in fact, attached to his body as it should be.

Agares scratches his scalp. "Yes. I can regrow my limbs and heal myself by hibernating. What good does that do for Diablo? He isn't me."

"Correct, he isn't," Lucifer hisses. She turns to Agares, a sparkle in her eyes. "However, I can use the dragon's magic to copy your inner aura. By extracting your essence, I can apply your abilities to Diablo. That will allow him to heal his wounds."

"You can?" Agares asks. His jaw slackens noticeably. "How? That sounds dangerous."

Lucifer waves his concerns away. "Psh. Not at all. I used the dragon's magic to make Broodmothers and Scythers. In contrast, extracting your essence will be trivial. Sit beside Diablo so I can get to work." She motions to a spot on the bed near my feet.

Agares scratches his head. "I don't know about this..."

Lucifer shoves him onto his ass. "Sit, dammit! Stop worrying so much! Diablo's been laying here trapped in bed while you have all the fun. Don't you care about your friend?"

"Well, yes, but... you seem a little too eager for my liking."

"Psh. Of course, I am. I can't help my curiosity. Your body likely holds many secrets." Lucifer slurps up a spot of drool forming at the edge of her mouth. Her eagerness to experiment worries me, as well.

Diablo coughs. "Ahem. Ah, Lucy, don't hurt Agares, alright? If this has even a chance of going bad, I'd rather you didn't-"

Lucifer scowls at me. "Quiet! I'm doing this for you!"

I fall silent and watch with trepidation as Lucifer places her right palm on Agares' forehead, then uses her left to begin forming magical signs. The demoness closes both of her lower eyes, but the one on her forehead remains open. She murmurs under her breath. Smoke emanates from her hand. Agares closes his eyes and flinches as his breathing slows.

Bael inches closer to watch more closely. Despite continuing to exercise with his rocks, the big guy's movements slow as his eyes flick from Lucifer to Agares and back again.

"Nnn..."

Lucifer grunts painfully.

"Tch. There's too much information. Reading your blood is like swimming against a freezing current."

Agares doesn't reply. Sweat drips off his chin as minutes pass.

"Damn..." Lucifer mutters. "I can't find what I need. It's just... just beyond my reach. Here? No. There? Grr..."

"Lucy, call it off. You're hurting Agares," Diablo says. "Come on, that's enough."

"Quiet! Don't tell me what to do!" Lucifer snarls at me. Her eyes press shut even harder than before. "This much is nothing. I'll break through if I have to!"

Agares winces. He tries to pull away, but Lucifer forces her palm against his forehead. "L-Lucifer... burns... stop..."

"Quiet! You're disrupting my concentration!"

Agares' breath comes in ragged gasps. His eyes flutter open and shut as delirium takes over. Smoke begins to fizzle from his scalp, his black hair slowly turns grey, and his skin starts to sag.

I flick my eyes to Bael. "Hey! Pull them apart! Stop Lucy before she kills Agares!"

Bael tosses his rocks aside and nods. "I'm on it!"

The giant demon lumbers toward Lucifer. He pauses, uncertain of what to do.

When Bael reaches toward Lucifer's arm to pull her off Agares, her third eye jerks toward him.

"Don't touch me, you fat slob!"

Her eye glows. A massive burst of energy erupts from her mind, slams into Bael's chest, and sends the demon flying backward.

Wham!

The room shakes from the force of Bael's body impacting the wall. "Gah!"

By now, Agares has begun trying to pull away with all his strength, but Lucifer shoves him back and presses his head into the bed. "Stop moving! I'm nearly there, dammit!"

"Lucy! Let Agares go! You're killing him!" Diablo yells, terror in his voice. The demoness ignores us.

Bael grunts. He jumps out of the wall, unhurt. However, fire burns in his eyes.

"I was gonna take it easy on you cuz you're the boss's girl... but NOBODY lands a free hit on me!!"

Bael charges. Agares whimpers. Lucifer continues pressing the lizard-demon against the bed.

By the time Lucifer's eye locks onto Bael, it's too late. A massive fist slams into her head, tearing her away from Agares and flinging her like a ragdoll. Before Lucifer can hit the wall, Bael dashes forward, grabs her out of the air, and swings her over his head.

"Eat SHIT, you stuck-up BITCH!"

Bael pounds Lucifer into the ground with a tremendous CRASH! A human under the same circumstances would melt into a pool of blood and bone. Instead, the floor craters nearly a foot into the Earth. Lucifer lies motionless, unable to move.

Bael starts to raise a fist to hit her again, but Diablo interrupts him. "Bael! Stop! Don't go berserk!"

Pausing, Bael blinks and shakes his head. As if returning from the realm of the dead, the massive demon suddenly realizes what he's done. "Ah, fuck, shit. Sorry, boss! I didn't mean-"

"Forget that! Check Agares and Lucy. Are they okay?!"

Bael stares blankly at Lucifer's unmoving form. "Shit, shit, shit. Did I kill her? Aw, fuck! Devil-dammit!!"

Lucifer grunts weakly. The demoness twitches one arm, allowing Bael to breathe a sigh of relief. He lurches down, wraps one hand around her stomach, and lifts her over his shoulder. Bael's bed, a few feet to my left, sits against the opposite wall. He walks Lucifer over and lays her down. "Lucifer! Hey, you okay?!"

"Munguuuh..."

She moans pitifully, unable to speak. Satisfied she's alive, Bael and I both turn our attention to Agares.

Instead of the handsome, black-haired stud from before, a corpse-like figure lays across my legs. Agares' mouth hangs open, his skin appears halfway melted off his face, and his hair turns ashen. Lucifer seems to have sapped all the strength from Agares' body.

"Oy, oy! Agares!" Bael stomps toward him and kneels. He pokes Agares' sides gingerly. "Aw, shit! Wake up, man! Snap out of it!"

"Nuh..."

Agares breathes a single syllable into the void, but like Lucifer, he can't speak properly either.

Bael glances at me, worry-lines wrinkling his forehead. "Boss, what do I do?! I don't know nothin' bout healin'!"

"Get Hellga," Diablo says. "Find Belial, too. Either of them will be better than you or me. Hurry!"

Bael nods. "Right! On it!"

He jumps to his feet and rushes out the door, leaving Diablo to lay helplessly and watch as his two friends moan and whimper in pain.

"Come on, Bael. Hurry!"

Several agonizing minutes pass. Diablo's eyes jump from Lucifer to Agares. Agares stops breathing entirely, while Lucifer barely manages to twitch her hand before passing out.

Diablo whispers to himself. "Devils... where is Bael?! That damned oaf... he'd better not be playing grab-ass with the nurses again..."

Lifting his head, Diablo strains to get a better look at Agares. The half-reptilian demon continues laying across our legs, but we can't feel much of anything from the neck down.

"Hey! Agares! Blink twice if you're still alive!"

Diablo tries to kick his leg, but the movement fails due to his paralysis. He flops back in bed, exhausted from the physical strain. "Cripes. I hate this. I hate all of this shit."

"Boss! Boss, I brought Belial!"

Bael stumbles through the doorway, startling me. I didn't hear him stomping toward the room, which is odd given how noisy he usually is. Behind him, Belial slinks through the doorway as well, and her eyes laser onto Agares, then to Lucifer.

"Bloody sin!" Belial gasps. "Agares' face! It's-"

"We know," Bael says, as he nearly trips over his feet trying to get out of her way. "Use your magic! Fix him!"

Belial nods. She strides across the room, pauses to evaluate Agares' condition versus Lucifer's, and decides he's the higher priority patient. The scantily-clad demoness walks over and hovers inches above Agares body. She scans his face and winces in disgust. "Lucifer did this?! His skin... it's..."

Shaking the thoughts from her head, Belial immediately begins performing her strongest healing magic. While she concentrates on Agares, I turn to Bael. "What about Hellga?"

Bael stares intently at Belial as she rejuvenates Agares' body. After a few seconds, Bael blinks, realizing I was asking him a question. "Oh, uh, sorry. Couldn't find her. Belial's the better healer, anyway. Right?"

Belial jerks her head toward Lucifer. "Perhaps, but I can't heal two demons at once. Is Lucifer still breathing?"

"She is," I say. "What about Agares? What's the damage?"

Belial sucks air through her teeth. "Ahh... I've never seen something like this. It's as if Lucifer sucked out half of his soul. It'll take all of my skills to heal him. I don't think I can restore his former condition, either."

"Former condition? What do you mean?"

Belial shakes her head. "It's difficult to put into words, Diablo. His bones are weak, now. Restoring them is beyond my power. I think he'll pull through, though."

Diablo nods. We fall silent and watch as Belial continues motioning with her hands and sending healing magic into Agares' body. After three minutes of sweating, the demoness pulls away and wipes her forehead.

"Alright. Now for Lucifer."

Belial slides over to the three-eyed demoness. After only a few seconds of examination, her jaw drops. "Sweet mercy! What happened to Lucifer?! Half of her bones are broken!"

Bael winces and rubs his head. "Uh. Oops. My bad."

The succubus scowls at him. "And here I always thought you were a gentleman."

"Y-you did?"

"No."

Bael's shoulders sag. He ends up silently watching Belial's handiwork as she mends each of Lucifer's bones one by one. It takes her quite a while, nearly twice as long as Agares' healing did, but eventually, Belial finishes.

"Seven Devils. Would someone like to tell me what happened here?"

Lucifer gurgles in her throat. "Guh... the damned savage attacked me. When did... when did Bael turn into a cave bear?"

Bael rubs his fist. He looks hurt from all the insults. "Geez. I ain't even all that strong. The rest of you guys are just weak."

* * *

Soon, Lucifer and Belial stand over Agares, having moved him to Bael's bed. Belial bites her lip. "I healed him, but he hasn't woken up yet. What's wrong?"

"I tapped into his life force," Lucifer says. "Diminished it quite a bit, I'm afraid. I shouldn't have lost control like that."

"No kidding," I reply. "Is Agares going to wake up? Don't tell me you put him in a coma."

"He'll be fine," Belial says, reassuring me. "Lucifer drained his stamina. After he rests, he'll be right as rain."

The succubus pauses.

"Well, he'll be permanently weakened. Lucifer, I hope that whatever you were doing didn't cripple our best warrior for no reason. Valac is going to be pissed."

Lucifer closes her eyes and taps her chin. Her third eye twitches back and forth as she ponders several things.

"I succeeded. I copied Agares' lizard abilities. I'll try and see if I can heal Diablo, now."

"Heal Diablo?" Belial asks, echoing Lucifer. "How are you going to heal him?"

"I'll copy Agares' regenerative powers into him. With luck, it will counteract the holy energy wracking Diablo's body."

"Don't tell me this is all based off a hunch," Belial says. "Lucifer. You endangered Agares' life. If this doesn't pay off... Valac will have your head."

"Valac can kiss the shiniest side of my ass," Lucifer hisses. "Don't try and scare me with talk of the mighty Valac. He needs me. He might pretend he doesn't, but his tricks will only take him so far. Now, step aside. You're in my way."

Rather than waiting for Belial to move, Lucifer shoves her out of the way with a sweeping gesture. Belial's jaw drops. "Hey! Don't get pushy! I saved your life! Show a little gratitude."

"Spare me," Lucifer says, rolling all three of her eyes. "You did your job. Now let me do mine."

Diablo's heartrate increases. His anxiety begins to build as Lucifer motions with her hands to form spell seals above our chest. "H-hey, Lucy... baby... I won't end up like Agares, will I? You wouldn't hurt this good-looking face, right?"

"Don't call me 'baby,' imbecile. I'm putting my life force, as well as Agares', into your body. If anything, you should end up much stronger than before, not weaker. Lie still, or I might accidentally slip and break a chest-bone."

Her emphasis on 'accidentally' implies a threat. Diablo's eyes widen. He nods quickly and goes silent as she rapidly weaves dozens of signs.

Belial walks over and leans against Bael, crossing her arms while they both watch.

A sensation resembling ants crawling across my skin gives me the shivers. Diablo grits his teeth as the sensation of tiny feet transforms into prickling, burning fire.

"Shit! Shit! Ahh, baby, it burns! Devil's sake!"

Usually, Lucifer might scowl at Diablo and say something about how he's acting like a sniveling imp. Instead, she grimaces. "Apologies. I'm trying to do this quickly. Hang in there."

A tear drips down Diablo's face. "Nnn. Mhm. Just... do it... faster..."

"You think the boss is gonna be okay?" Bael whispers. I can barely make out his words through Diablo's grunting and spasming.

"I hope so. Lucifer hasn't failed us yet," Belial whispers.

Diablo ignores them. His consciousness ebbs in and out as invisible fingers reach inside of us and touch the inner parts of our spirit. The sensation, horrifyingly painful yet simultaneously euphoric, is like a drug that sears away all the feeling in our body.

Lucifer says something, but I can't understand her. Her speech translates into gobbledygook in my head, resembling the sound of a waterfall crashing against my face.

Time becomes a blur. All at once, everything stops.

I jolt awake with a start, sharply inhaling what feels like the first breath of my life. Lucifer spreads her mouth wide open, revealing a hundred shark-like teeth. "Welcome back to the living, Diablo. Does your body hurt?"

Diablo blinks. "Pain. Pain. No? Yes. No? Uhh..."

It takes several seconds for the demon to get his thoughts unjumbled. He sits up in bed and scratches his head. "No? I feel fine."

Lucifer's eyes widen, and her jaw drops. "Ah! Ahahaha! I did it! YES! Ohohoho!"

She does a little tap dance and skips over to waggle her fingers in Belial and Bael's faces. "Hah! I told you so! I'm a genius, the smartest demon of all time! Phoo! How dare you doubt my brilliance! Diablo is moving again, and it's all thanks to ME! Me, me, ME!!!"

Bael's expression flattens. He gazes at the demoness with a look of annoyance as she hops and skips around the room. "Yeah, yeah, big whoop. When you can wrestle a cave-bear with one hand, lemme know. Sheesh. Broads always think they're queen shit for any little thing."

Belial, however, looks extremely relieved. She walks over to me and sits on my left. "Are you okay now, Diablo? Can you move your legs?"

Diablo nods. He lowers his gaze to his legs, concentrates for a second, lifts one a few inches, then drops it back down again. "I can. Wow. This... this is..."

Our breath catches. Diablo turns away as intense emotions suddenly rush into his mind. He chokes back tears and rubs his eyes. "Devils. I... I can walk again. I have my life back. I thought... I thought I'd be stuck here forever..."

Lucifer grinds her skipping to a halt. She sighs, having unleashed her pent-up excitement. After a moment, she walks over, sits beside Belial, and touches my hand. "Sorry. I didn't mean to take this moment from you. I'm glad you can walk again, Diablo."

"It's all thanks to you and Agares. I owe you everything."

Lucifer stares at me for a moment. A smile appears on her face, but she turns away and forces a neutral expression before glancing at me again. "Thank you, Diablo. Be glad you have someone like me, willing to risk Agares' neck for you. Starting tomorrow, I'll start helping you exercise. We'll get you back in tip-top shape, pronto."

Bael claps his hands. "Alright! Me'n the boss are gonna kick some ass! Yo, Lucifer, you got any of that mojo for me? Don't I get a little boost, here?"

Lucifer never breaks her gaze from mine. "No."

"Aw, c'mon!"

"You nearly killed me. If anything, I ought to repay you in full."

Bael waves his hand. "Pft. That's old news. That was a long time ago."

"It's only been fifteen minutes, Bael. I still feel the phantom aching in my joints."

Lucifer forces a grin as she gazes into my eyes. Something about the expression seems psychopathic.

She's probably going to beat Beal half to death at some point. Poor guy.

Across from us, Agares grunts. "Ohhh... where.. am I..."

Everyone turns to look at him. He lays on Diablo's bed unmoving, but his eyes blink open slowly. A milky film covers them until he blinks a bit more aggressively. "Wha-? What happened?"

Lucifer stands up. "Ah, Agares-"

"Eee! Stay away!" Agares' eyes widen in horror as he spots Lucifer. "Stay back, foul temptress! Keep your paws off me!"

"It's too late for that," Lucifer mutters. "Sorry. I, ah, may have damaged your body somewhat. On the plus side, Diablo can walk, now."

I wave at Agares. "Hey."

Agares turns and struggles to wave back. "H-hello?" He pauses and stares in horror at his skin. Where once his body was a mass of coiled muscle, ready to strike, his pale pink skin and paper-thin arms reveal the fact that Lucifer sucked a lot more out of him than half his spirit. "What in the name of-?!"

"Your muscles might be atrophied, but it isn't permanent," Belial says, sliding over to his bed. She holds his hand reassuringly. "You can rebuild your strength after you get some rest. I'm surprised you woke up at all. Your willpower is... incredible."

Belial's words soothe Agares' nerves. He nods and closes his eyes. "Yeah... I am feeling tired. Maybe I should... rest my eyes for a bit."

Hardly has he uttered the words, before Agares' head lolls to the side. He falls asleep instantly, causing a hint of dread to pass around the room. Nobody seems sure how severe the damage to his body was.

Belial turns back to the rest of us. "I gave Agares a mild sedative. He'll wake up soon. In the meantime, we should all allow Diablo to get some rest, and you too, Lucifer. I may have healed all your bones, but exerting yourself anymore could have permanent side-effects."

Lucifer groans. "Somehow, I knew you'd say that."

Both of the women climb off the beds and head over to Bael. Lucifer pauses. "Now that I have this ability... this regenerative power... I should begin testing it. It could dramatically improve our fighting capabilities. Everyone, do me a favor, please. Don't tell Valac what's happened, today."

Belial raises an eyebrow. "Why not?"

"Don't play stupid, succubus. I know you hate Valac nearly as much as I do. The way he treats the women around here is unforgivable. I've heard about the horrors in the comfort rooms as of late. If I don't do something... Valac is going to try and turn us into cattle."

Bael smirks. "Sounds like a good deal to me."

"Shut your trap," Lucifer hisses. "You're already in hot water. I've half a mind to rip your arms off and shove them where the sun doesn't shine."

"Uhh..." Bael frowns. "But there already ain't no sunlight down here."

Lucifer growls under her breath. "Blasted... nnn...!!" She storms over to the doorway, flings the leather curtain aside, and stomps out of the room.

Bael glances at me, confusion written all over his face. "Is Lucy stupid? She doesn't really think there's sunlight down here, does she?"

Belial smirks. "Yes, Bael, I think you've got Lucifer all figured out."

Part 123: Vengeance of the Damned

A disorienting rush of motion greets me when I arrive inside my next host. After lying sedentary in Diablo's body for the previous vision, appearing inside the mind of someone right in the heat of a battle sends waves of nausea through my stomach. I bounce, twirl, and spin on a spear grasped in my right hand, while using a second spear in my left to lash out and impale a demon through his mouth. The demon's eyes bolt open in terror, but he isn't fast enough to dodge.

"Hahahaha! Bloodskin bastard, take that!" My host, Uriel, cackles with glee. She lifts her crimson spear to stare at the demon skewered on its end, only to then violently slam it into the ground, tearing the demon's head in half and killing him instantly.

All around us, a small battle of perhaps thirty demons and half a dozen angels erupts into chaos. Scythers and grunts take up their positions, quaking in fear the whole time. To my right, Catherine and Sophia work together to eviscerate five Scythers, while on my left, Gabriel, Hyacinth, and Penelope take turns hitting the rest of the enemies.

Gabriel aims his hand at one of the demons. An instant later, a laser of holy magic fires from his palm and sends the demon's brains splattering out all over the grass. The grunt flies backward and lands in a pool of blood. His limbs twitch, then go still.

The Archangel of Power doesn't smile or scowl. His face betrays no emotion as he systematically turns and kills another demon immediately. He never hesitates. He moves with precision, not wasting a single bit of energy.

Uriel pounces over to her brother and skewers a demon sneaking up behind him in the grass. She stabs through his spine, impales him to the ground, and decapitates him with the bladed end of her golden spear.

"Cheer up, Gabriel!" Uriel says with a smile. "Have some fun! I love letting out aggression on these bloodskins!"

Gabriel doesn't echo her grin. "I do not. Let us finish this battle quickly."

"Oh, come on. Lighten up, will you?"

The Archangel of Power shakes his head. "I am incapable of enjoying such barbarism."

Uriel's smile vanishes. "Fine. Be like that!"

Pivoting on her heel, Uriel dashes over to two Scythers. They swing their bladed arms to disembowel her, but she leaps into the air and flaps her wings, rushing at them before they can react. She tears the one on the right in half with both spears while scorching the second to ash with a fire-kick.

Sophia screams. I turn around just in time to see a scyther yank his bladed arm out of her kidney. The pink-haired angel staggers away and clutches her wound. Uriel's eyes widen in horror as the demon prepares to cut her down. "No!!"

A flash of light rushes forward and slams into the demon's chest, tossing him like a sack of potatoes onto his back. Hyacinth raises a massive longbow of light, summons arrows one after the other, and riddles Sophia's attacker with holes. Each one travels at nearly the speed of sound, impacting her enemies with enough force to launch them off their feet and send them flying.

The ground rumbles behind me. Instinctively, Uriel whirls to face the incoming threat and summons a wall of light. Right on cue, the dirt bursts open, and Artorias pounces out. He slams against Uriel's light-wall while dozens of other demons flood out of the tunnel behind him.

"Angel scum!"

Uriel growls in her throat. "Burrowing bastard."

With a twist of her wrist, Uriel sends her light wall toppling forward to pulverize Artorias. He dives underground just in time to avoid the counter-attack, narrowly avoiding a gruesome death. Her light wall flattens the grass and dirt, crushing the legs of one unfortunate demon who couldn't evade in time.

Uriel cackles. "Hahaha! An ambush?! Do not make me laugh! I felt the vibrations of thy approach from a mile away!" She lifts her right foot at the exact instant Artorias's hand bursts from underground. The demon tries to grab her, but fails. A second later, he dives beneath the Earth again.

The Archangel of Protection narrows her eyes toward his burrow points. The bloodskins are trying to surround us from the sides and below, eh? They won't live to regret that mistake.

Uriel plants the butts of both her spears in the terrain and quickly forms magical signs. As demons pounce out of Artorias's tunnel, the Archangel finishes her conjuration and slaps her palm against the dirt.

Let's shake things up a bit!

Three seconds later, a massive earthquake rumbles the continental plates. The demons trip and fall, losing their footing as they try to stay upright. Uriel takes the opportunity to grab her spears and charge at the nearest enemies.

Within a minute, all of the horned fiends end up corpses laying in the mud. The planet ceases its shaking, but the remaining demons scurry away. They run for the hills, barely escaping with their lives. Uriel glances around, looking for the burrowing demon, but her search proves fruitless. Artorias escapes with his life.

Uriel turns and flies toward Sophia. The pink-haired Saint leans against a boulder and grits her teeth as Hyacinth quickly directs healing magic into her kidney. "Ahh! It hurts!"

The remaining Saints and Gabriel fly over and land in a protective circle around us.

"Sophia. Art thou gravely injured? What happened?" Gabriel asks.

"A scyther nearly cut our sister in half," I reply. "Luckily, Hyacinth was able to save her. I had my hands full."

We all watch silently, pausing only to look around for potential ambushes. None appear. Hyacinth furrows her brow as she finishes healing Sophia. "Alright, sister. I've finished. We must have Uzziel give that wound a second look. My healing magic is nowhere near as potent as hers."

Sophia gingerly touches the skin where a black spot is all that remains of her impalement. "It's fine; barely even hurts. Is everyone else okay? Uriel?"

Uriel rolls her eyes. "The fiends didn't land a scratch on me. More importantly, thou must watch thy back, Gabriel. One of the little bastards nearly struck thee from thy blind spot. Thou art lucky I caught him in time."

Gabriel stares at me for a moment, then shrugs. "Everything worked out in the end, did it not? Hyacinth would provide healing if the demons managed to hurt me, despite how unlikely such a feat might be."

Uriel frowns. There goes Gabriel again, with his talk of luck and fortune. If I don't watch his back, the big oaf is liable to get himself killed.

With a shake of her head, Uriel turns to Penelope. "I encountered that demon. The one who tunnels underground. Dids't thou get a good look at him?"

Towering over everyone but Gabriel, the giantess angel shakes her head. "I did not. Sorry. Hyacinth and I were preoccupied with one of the fire-type demons."

Catherine raises her hand and draws words in the air. I felt a presence. Someone watching us. Distance. Chilling sensation.

She gestures toward Mount Sinai's peak, visible nearly ten miles away. A forest stands between the summit and us, indicating that to return, we have to fly above it.

Hiding in forest. Didn't see the watcher.

Uriel scowls. "One of the demon scouts, I'd wager. Damn. We know their burrows are somewhere in those woods. I ought to scorch the whole thing to the ground."

"Uzziel would not like that," Gabriel replies. "Besides. The trees aren't hurting anyone."

"It's not about the damned-" Uriel catches herself before berating her brother. She sighs. "Haah. Never mind. Since the red rats have fled underground, we can't pursue them now. Let us return to Uzziel and Raphael. We need to have Sophia's injury double-checked, anyway."

Sophia looks like she wants to protest, but Uriel waggles a finger. "No if's, and's, or but's."

The two Archangels and the Saints flap their wings and soar into the sky. Catherine and Penelope flank Sophia on both sides, staying beside her just in case her injury turns critical, and she loses her ability to fly. As for me, my eyes flick to the hundred or so demon bodies below us. Instead of flying south toward Sinai, we head to the east of it, away from the cloud of Cherubs circling overhead.

These past several months have proven troublesome, Uriel thinks to herself. It seems every few days our scouts spot packs of bloodskins roaming the Earth. And now... their Blight has become so pronounced that it's impossible to ignore.

Uriel flicks her eyes to the north, where a horrible sight makes my stomach churn. A second forest nearly five miles away, once a beautiful patch of green I saw when the angels flew toward Mount Olympus, has transformed into a dead chunk of land colored black and brown. It's only now that I begin to notice how silent the world sounds. No birds fly around in the skies or chirp in the trees. Below us, not a single animal wanders the plains. Uriel's eyes wander across the landscape, searching for the faintest speck of life, but no matter where she looks, none presents itself.

The Blight has transformed this land into a valley of death. It won't be long before the forest nearest Sinai begins to crackle and fizzle away as well. Without the creatures and insects to maintain the greenery, only a scorched Earth will remain. Why, I wonder, must the rat bastards choke and kill everything they touch? Is it their nature, or is this some new tactic?

Uriel shakes her head.

Their reasons don't matter to me. They murdered thousands of my brothers and sisters, including Samael. I will pay them back ten times over.

Turning her gaze away from the smothered, dead forest to the north, Uriel continues leading the Saints alongside her brother.

Gabriel stares ahead, unblinking, at our destination; A small hill range about twenty miles away, where Uzziel and Raphael await our return. I recognize it as the place where Uzziel observed her pet humans during a previous vision.

Uriel purses her lips. "Brother. Art thou alright? I do not appreciate thy lack of vigilance during that fight. If I hadn't been there to protect thee..."

Gabriel shrugs. "I know not what is causing thee such consternation. After all, the bladed arms of those demons would not have pierced my Divine Aura. Even if they had, Hyacinth would have healed me. In the end, thy spears saved me. Everything worked out as it should."

Frowning, Uriel turns her head to stare at Gabriel in annoyance. "I care not how much faith thou dost place in thy 'divine aura,' Gabriel. 'Tis no excuse to lower thy guard amidst a heated battle. I may not always be capable of protecting thee. Thou art lucky the Undying didn't overwhelm thee during the battle against Valac. From what I heard-"

Gabriel raises his palm to silence me. "I understand. Thy concern is touching, Uriel. However, a few small fries wouldn't be able to kill me even if they put their very essence into an attack. As always, thy fixation on death and murder disturbs me. Along with Michael, thou hath little interest in seeking peace with our enemies. Both of thee could stand to take a step back and ask who is to blame for this war."

Uriel balks. "Who is to blame? Brother! Look no further than the little red rats who murdered Samael! How coulds't thee insinuate we were responsible for their barbarism when so much evidence exists to the contrary?"

Gabriel frowns. "My words did not come out as I intended. All I wish to convey is that the demons are not the only ones at fault for this ongoing war. Perhaps, had we treated them more fairly, they might not have revolted in the first place. Even now, rather than pursuing the demons with the aim to eliminate them, we could stay in Heaven, and they would never be able to hurt us again."

The Archangel of Power sighs, and he closes his eyes for a moment. "We've lost brothers and sisters needlessly, all because of some worthless quest for vengeance."

The ground rushes below us as the angels fly forward at nearly a hundred miles an hour. Uriel shakes her head, unable to fathom Gabriel's words as we hurtle toward our destination. "I always have trouble understanding thy logic, Gabriel. Our quest for vengeance is far from worthless. It is a goal worth pursuing. It sounds to me like thou woulds't prefer we had ignored Samael's death."

Gabriel falls silent. He continues staring forward, unblinking, as thoughts swirl in his mind.

"Nay... that is not what I mean. I wish only to prevent more needless suffering. Samael was a precious brother. I loved him deeply, as I love thee. However, I also loved Brother Listrus, Sister Vera, and all the others who have fallen. None of them would have perished, had we simply sealed Heaven after the first attack."

Gabriel's lip trembles. "From my point of view, my entire family has gone mad. Even if we slaughter all the demons and wipe them off the face of the Earth, we won't be able to bring Samael, Listrus, Vera, or anyone else back. Instead, more of my dear family members will die. In the end, we might succeed in fulfilling some petty revenge, but our losses would prove far more costly than our gains."

Uriel opens her mouth to reply.

After a moment, she closes it.

Turning away, several emotions run through our mind. Uriel blinks several times as she tries to parse Gabriel's words.

My brother believes it would be better to allow Samael's death to go unpunished, so long as no more of our family members die.

At first glance, his argument appears reasonable. However, it also irks me. It is both rational and irrational, simultaneously. How could we allow Samael's murderer to walk free?! Perish the thought. If we do not uphold the name of the angels, it will invite future destruction and disrespect upon us.

Bah. Even if I'm right, I cannot correct Gabriel. My brother is set in his ways, and has been, for millions of years. Better to agree and let him think what he likes.

Uriel scrunches up her face and turns back to Gabriel. "If thou despiseth the idea of killing so much, why travel with us to eliminate today's demonic scouts?"

Gabriel shrugs, a movement I've grown used to seeing him perform. "Raphael told me to help. I don't wish to see anyone in my family die, so I came along. Woulds't thou prefereth I hadn't?"

Uriel sighs. She looks away. "Haah... no. Thy coming has eased my heart. No matter how we might disagree on the merits of this war, I know thou shalt always have my back."

"Naturally," Gabriel murmurs.

* * *

We arrive at the human encampment, some twenty miles from the base of Mount Sinai. I'm immediately struck by how many hundreds of Neolithic-era humans are roaming the plateau. Their numbers appear far more substantial than the last time I saw them.

Several cherubs hang out at the top of the hill, while one stands guard at the entrance of the cave. The humans ignore their winged protectors and instead opt to munch on berries growing from vines at the edge of a cliff, or they poke at the fires dotting the bottom of the hill.

The six angels, including Uriel, land smoothly at the base of the hill. The crest rises only a hundred feet above us, but the entrance to its cave system appears halfway up the hill, along with a flat, rocky plateau.

Uzziel and Raphael stand a few feet away, both listening to a report from a cherub messenger. Uriel glances around the human village.

Hrm. It seems Uzziel's new children have exploded in number within only the last year. Has she, perhaps, underestimated their reproduction speed? If only angels could grow our numbers as these mortals do.

"Gabriel! Uriel!" Uzziel spins to face us. Her look of horror sends a chill down my spine. "Oh, thank Heavens thou hath returned! Come quickly."

Uriel's heart sinks. Bad news? Tch. I don't like the look on my little sister's face.

The six of us trot over to her and Raphael's side. The old man's face appears ashen, as if just he's seen a ghost. "Leopold just informed us... there was a battle in Heaven. Two thousand of our brothers and sisters have fallen."

Uriel's eyes widen. "No... that's impossible... we stationed guards everywhere! Inside and out! How could the demons get in?!"

Raphael shakes his head. "Not the demons, Uriel. The Undying."

Gabriel's eyes narrow. "Raphael. What is thy meaning? What's this about the Undying?"

Raphael gestures to the cherub messenger. Only now do I notice the expression of pain on his face as the loss of his family members hits him in waves. "'Twas so sudden we hadn't a moment to react. Brother Jonus went berserk. Before we knew what was happening, he cut down Krugman and Gail. By the time we managed to gather our wits, he had impaled three others at the end of his blade."

Leopold wipes his eyes. "We managed to subdue Jonus, but then two more of the Undying joined in, and five more after them. Every single one of the Undying began to attack the living, all at once. I... I watched as Brother Jonus begged for death. He couldn't control his body. Camael arrived and crushed the heads of all of the Undying involved. Now, she is trying to corral the remainders in one area. As all of thee know, the Undying art scattered across all of Heaven in pockets here and there. Everyone is on high alert, terrified they might attack again."

"Tch," Raphael mutters. "'Twas as I feared. Even in death, the Reaper confounds us. First, he killed our family members. Then, he brought them back from the dead. After his passing, we believed they had retaken control of their souls. However, they hadn't! The bastard confounds us again with this recent development!"

Raphael stomps his foot. "Damn! Damn, damn, damn! I knew it! I should have pressed my case when I had the chance! This is all my fault! Now, more members of our family have passed as a result of my negligence!"

Uriel shakes her head skeptically. "I do not understand. Why now? Why did the Undying wait for over a year before attacking?"

"How should I know?!" Raphael yells. "Perhaps their minds degraded! Perhaps the Reaper's spell wore off or gained more power as time passed! What does it matter?! Thousands more of my brothers and sisters have died, and it's all my fault!"

Raphael turns away, rage seething in his eyes. He forces himself to take a deep breath, and exhales it through his teeth. "By the Creator's name, I won't allow the Reaper's treachery to tear us apart. We must return to Heaven and kill the rest of the Undying ourselves."

Raphael's words cause every angel within earshot to gasp. Uzziel covers her mouth in shock. "B-brother! Thou cannot be serious! Please, reconsider-"

"I won't!" Raphael says, whipping his head to the left to face Uzziel. "I warned all of thee that allowing the Undying to walk among us was a mistake! I didn't understand how badly things would turn out, but I only wish I had been wrong! I only wish..."

The old man trails off. He turns away and shakes his head.

"Gods. How could I have been so blind? The answer was right there in front of us, the whole time."

Gabriel frowns. "I don't understand, Raphael."

"The Undying, Gabriel. 'Tis no wonder they've reverted. Valac isn't dead. He's alive!"

Catherine appears at my side. A look of worry appears on her face. She quickly traces letters into the air. Impossible. Scorched his body to ash. Nothing left behind.

Raphael shakes his head. "Nay, little sister. Remember the tale thou dids't weave regarding his abilities? Several times, thou dids't land a killing blow, only for the Reaper to reappear in midair, unharmed. He must have faked his death so his minions could plant themselves among our ranks. His ploy worked! Now thousands of other angels have died, and until we eliminate his reanimated agents, we will continue-"

Raphael stops mid-sentence. A look of alarm washes across his face.

"What... what is this... this chill?"

It takes Uriel a moment, but she notices, too. A sensation, like icy fingers, caresses her arms and sends a chill down her spine.

Gabriel shudders, along with everyone else present.

Sophia's eyes dart around. "H-hey, what was that? I saw something, just for an instan-"

Before Sophia can finish her sentence, Catherine whirls to face her. The Saint of Swords dives at her sister and slams her to the ground just in time to avoid an attack aimed at her chest. Valac appears in midair and swings his scythe, narrowly missing the pink-haired Saint by a few inches. He levitates backward, and every angel quickly leaps away, putting distance between themselves and the ten-foot-tall Valac. Catherine yanks Sophia to her feet and retreats several steps.

"Kukuku... so you've solved the riddle, Raphael, my friend. Sadly for you, my investment paid back dividends. Two thousand angels dead, and more will soon expire; the only way to win is to cast your brothers into the fire."

"Valac!" Raphael yells. "Bastard! I knew it! Everyone, attack him at once!"

The Reaper levitates several feet away and raises his scythe threateningly. His massive form towers over everyone present, making us feel small and insignificant. "Ah ah ah, I'd be careful if I were you. There's no such thing as armor my scythe can't tear through. One little nick, that's all it will take. If it touches your skin, your soul, I will break."

Catherine holds up her hand. Stay back. Valac, killable? We don't know. Do not rush in. He might kill us.

Uriel grinds her teeth together. "So thou art the bastard who turned thousands of my brothers and sisters into walking freaks. I haven't stopped thinking of thee, Valac. How dare thou showeth thy face again."

She raises both spears and prepares to attack, but Valac appears unphased. "Four times, five times, six times, or more. Whether you crush or burn me, it doesn't matter anymore. You look at me as though I draw breath, but I have ascended past the limits of life and death. I'm the Grim Reaper, Valac, so you'd better fly away; Even if you kill me here, I'll rise to fight another day."

Valac's face, shrouded under his hood, betrays no emotion. However, his words and attitude reek of smugness. Uriel's rage dials up to eleven. "This talking bag of bones dares mock Heaven's mightiest Archangel?! Thou art lucky I wasn't there during thy first appearance. How about I teach thee the meaning of TRUE power?!"

Gabriel grabs my shoulder. "Uriel. Don't. He'll-"

The Archangel of Power doesn't get to finish his sentence. Uriel wrenches out of his grasp and stomps toward the demon. Holding two spears proves no barrier to Uriel. By the time she's taken her first step, her hands have already finished a complicated series of magical signs.

Whoomph. Whoomph. Whoomph. Whoomph.

Four beings created from light pop into existence. Two winged angels, a floating orb, and an oscillating cube.

Uriel's eyes blaze with rage.

"For killing my family members, I sentence thee to DEATH!!"

Beneath Valac's hood, I catch a glimmer of a smile.

"Try your hardest, Uriel, and don't disappoint me. I'd hate for you to embarrass yourself before royalty."

Part 124: Battle Against the Black Soul

Recommended Listening

My mind travels to Catherine as she gestures to the other angels. Take humans, leave. Uriel and I, battle the Reaper.

Raphael, Uzziel, and the Saints all nod. They issue orders to the cherubs nearby, and the small contingent of angels begins quickly shooing the primitive humans away, guiding them to safety.

Gabriel shakes his head. "I shall help, as well. We cannot take any chances with Valac. He's too dangerous."

Uriel grits her teeth. "Over my dead body. This bastard is mine. I've been itching to pay him back for setting his whore upon me. Her Demonic Trance was an experience that shall haunt me for the rest of my life."

"Do not be brash, sister," Gabriel says, a note of warning in his voice. "The Grim Reaper can kill anyone he grazes with his scythe. Thou shalt need all the help-"

"I need nobody's help!" Uriel yells. She gestures toward her four light constructs, each one waiting to pounce. "Stay out of our way!"

Gabriel hesitates. He and Catherine share a look of worry. Uriel's going to get herself killed if she faces the Reaper alone, our eyes say.

Meanwhile, Valac merely watches as the humans flee. He fixates his gaze on Uriel and ignores everyone else. "Those who face me alone have a death wish, methinks. How unfortunate it would be if your eyes were to blink!"

Valac vanishes.

A movement like a flash of light rushes at Uriel's back. Valac appears behind her and impales the Archangel, sending her careening off the edge of the cliff.

Sister?!

Catherine's stomach flip-flops. By the time she starts to react, it's already too late. The Reaper turns to face us.

"Ehehe. That's what happens when you-"

Valac pauses.

His head turns to stare at Uriel's light constructs. Despite her apparent death, they have yet to disperse.

The Reaper spins to face the edge of the cliff. "Curses!"

Uriel swoops up the sheer bluff and swings her golden spear at the Reaper. He manages to deflect it with his scythe, but the impact from her blow sends Valac careening backward - right into the arms of Unit One. The male Light Construct holds its sword and shield defensively and slashes at Valac the instant he enters its range.

Swish!

Valac's body cleaves in half, sending his particles scattering into the ether. His cloak crumples against the light construct, then flops to the ground.

Uriel! Catherine's eyes light up in surprise. How dids't thou...?

The Archangel ignores my question written in the air. Instead, her eyes begin roving the cliffside.

"Valac can reform his body if something happens to it. That means he's not dead. Be on thy guard!"

Catherine's look of relief vanishes. She nods and raises the Sword from Heaven in her right hand, and Aegis in the other. The tower shield seems to engulf our body with its presence, but in reality, it doesn't protect our flank at all. Catherine seems acutely aware of this fact. She divides her attention halfway between her front and back, hesitantly waiting for Valac to strike.

The Grim Reaper materializes several dozen feet away, hovering over the hundred-foot-drop once again. His face, still shrouded by his hood, betrays no emotion. However, his body language appears tense, and his voice seems to echo that impression. "Tch. I impaled you with my scythe, yet still, you live. Surviving my attack is something I cannot forgive!"

Uriel smirks. "Thy scythe can rip the souls from thy enemies' bodies, isn't that right? I shifted mine away from where thy accursed weapon struck me. It missed completely."

Valac's fingers tense around his scythe. "That's impossible. You're lying."

Uriel smirks. "Perhaps I am. Perhaps I am not."

The Archangel of Protection appears confident in her assessment. However, a moment later, her eyes flick to the left. A shimmer of movement in the air reveals an incoming attack. Uriel slams the butts of both spears into the ground and shoves herself away as Valac appears. He swings his scythe out and misses her by inches.

Catherine blinks, stunned by what she sees.

Two Valacs? How?!

In addition to the one that just appeared, the original Valac continues to hover over the edge of the cliff. Interestingly, only the newcomer wields the scythe. The weapon vanishes from the original's grasp.

"So, thou possesseth the ability to copy thyself," Uriel murmurs. "That must be the trick to thy deceptions, Valac."

The Undead King titters to himself. "Kekeke, all this time, I've been quite discreet, but at last you've discovered my deceit. For a century I've planned your ultimate defeat, and soon I'll have you licking my feet!"

Uriel snarls. "Thou shalt chew dirt if I have anything to say!"

A blur of motion ensues. Uriel throws caution to the wind and pounces at the second Valac. Her spears twirl and stab like angry vipers, lashing at his blind spots and weak points. However, Valac counters, batting her attacks away with surprising agility. At some point, Unit One lunges at the first Valac, while Unit Two maintains her distance and summons a bow and arrow of light.

The original Valac dodges all of Unit One's attacks. Without his scythe, he seems unable to counter-attack the light construct slashing at him. The Grim Reaper never grunts or hisses as he dodges, instead choosing to quietly size up his opponents and learn their attack patterns.

Catherine's eyes dart between the two battles. She squeezes her sword's handle hard enough to send tinges of pain up her arm.

What should I do? Uriel told me to stay back, but I can't let her fight by herself! Valac is too dangerous!

Suddenly, the scythe vanishes from the second Valac's grasp. Uriel slashes his chest and kills him, but the weapon reappears in the original's grip. He instantly reverses the flow of battle and impales Unit One. The Light Construct explodes into particles of Holy Energy, and Valac vanishes. He reappears behind Unit Two and pierces her spine, transforming her from an angelic figure to dust in the wind.

Uriel spins to face him. Her eyes narrow. "Interesting."

Valac keeps his back to Uriel, but turns his head slightly to peer at her from the corner of his cloak. "Figure something out, did you?"

The Archangel doesn't respond. With a flourish of her hands, she resummons Units One and Two.

Valac stiffens.

"What's this? You can revive your minions?"

Whenever the Grim Reaper drops his rhyming scheme, it sends a chill down my back. This time, he isn't playing around. He sounds genuinely surprised.

Catherine flinches as Gabriel places his hand on my shoulder. The Archangel of Power stares at Valac for a moment, before whispering to me. "Catherine. Do not lose faith. Uriel is a legendary warrior, even among the Archangels."

I use my sword to draw letters in the air. Valac has the upper hand.

Gabriel nods ever so slightly. "For now."

Uriel smiles. "Ever since I stepped foot on Earth's soil, I've noticed a strange sensation tingling through my feet and wings. A current of mana in the air. Though faint, the taste is unmistakable. Demonic energy taints the very air I breathe."

Valac turns to face her. "Oho, aren't you perceptive like a hawk? I do hope you're more than just talk."

"Shut up, abomination," Uriel hisses. "The longer we continue to trade blows, the faster I'll unravel thy tricks. Let our weapons do the talking."

Catherine's eyes dart behind Uriel. From the ground, a faint but unmistakable shimmer of light rushes toward her.

Valac nods. "Hehe. Oh, yes. I agree."

Before Catherine can warn her sister, the shimmer of light detonates like a grenade. An explosion of toxic gas discharges against Uriel's spine, blasting the Archangel off her feet. Uriel flips head over heels, spins, and twists through the air. She slams against the ground only a dozen feet from Valac.

Catherine's eyes widen in terror. The Reaper instantly teleports atop Uriel and swings his scythe down.

Ting!

Valac's weapon ricochets off Gungnir, the golden spear, knocking the Reaper off-balance. Uriel swings it behind herself to protect her flank, surprising both Catherine and Valac. Neither of them anticipates the movement.

The Archangel of Protection bashes her head against the ground. The odd maneuver allows her to use her Earth Magic to fling herself back to her feet. With Valac still caught off guard from her deflection, she easily pivots into a sweeping attack with Gae Bolg and decapitates the Reaper.

It takes me a moment to blink and figure out what happened. Valac's cloak falls to the ground, while my eyes travel to Uriel's wings. His acrid smoke chews at her feathers like ravenous parasites, but eventually fizzles away into nothingness. With a few hand signs, Uriel summons water magic to heal herself.

Once again, Valac rematerializes several feet away. "You're starting to piss me off, wretched little chicken. Despite my ambush, your movements did quicken. I underestimated you, this crafty vixen... tell me how you saw through my attack, and I'll have a listen."

Uriel glowers at the Reaper. "I ose thee nothing. But thou art correct. I'm beginning to understand something about thy nature."

Gabriel mutters under his breath. "Catherine. Valac is neither here nor there. Somehow, the Grim Reaper's aura has expanded to fill this entire area."

I flick my gaze to the towering Archangel. His aura? How?

"I do not know. Most beings have an invisible aura surrounding their bodies. In my case, it grants me a nearly impenetrable defense. In Valac's, it appears to grant him spherical vision of everything around himself."

Valac turns his head to look at Gabriel. "Ehehe, so you've detected my Soul Aura, after all this time? Perhaps I was wrong about you; your perception seems sublime."

A chill goes down Catherine's back. How could Valac hear Gabriel from two hundred feet away? My brother barely whispered.

Uriel plants Gungnir's butt in the dirt and switches to using Gae Bolg in a two-handed style. "I've noticed something else, Valac. Why dost thou not wieldeth thy lantern? My family spoke of its appearance in vivid detail."

Catherine's eyes dart to Valac's left arms. Indeed, he wields his scythe, but not his bone-lamp.

Valac lowers his head. His voice takes on a menacing edge. "You're a little too perceptive for my liking."

"Heh. Maybe so," Uriel says with a smile. "And now that thou hath grown used to my dual-wielding style, how about I mix things up a bit? So far, thou hath used all the same tricks against me as ye did my sisters. I must say I'm... disappointed."

Valac chuckles. "Hoho. It seems you think yourself a challenger worthy of the King."

"Thou art no king. Thou art a dead dog!"

Uriel charges Valac. This time, she twirls her single spear around her entire body. It flips, spins, and jabs with three times the intensity of when she wielded both spears. It almost seems like using two was a hamper on her combat capabilities.

Valac summons not one, but five copies of himself. Each one swoops and screeches like an enraged banshee, diving at the Archangel from all directions. Valac's scythe disappears from one of his copies and reappears in the grasp of another, only to disappear and reappear again. It transmits from between them so quickly that I lose track of which one has the weapon.

Uriel doesn't. Each time Valac's copies aim for a finishing strike, she bats his attack away with enough speed and confidence to rattle mine.

While Uriel deflects Valac's barrage, she occasionally unleashes a wave of fire from her body, forcing the Reaper to retreat for a split second. Uriel uses the opening to cut down two to three of his clones, only for him to resummon them again.

Catherine's stomach churns as she watches the battle. From my point of view, everything seems to be going well, but worry builds in my host's mind. Even if Uriel cuts down a thousand of Valac's clones, he will merely summon more. She will grow fatigued as time goes on. There's no way to defeat him using her current tactics!

Uriel's smile maintains itself through the whole fight. Her speed increases as the battle rages, likely due to her muscles loosening up and her mind becoming more capable of following the movements of all five of Valac's bodies.

Suddenly, one of Valac's copies zips away. It flies into the air, motions with its hands, and the ground trembles beneath Uriel's feet. A torrent of souls rushes toward her from all directions. The Archangel gasps as a hundred of them explode at the same time. The horrible black cloud of gas ejects in all directions, rushing toward Gabriel and me, as well as the nearby forest. Before Catherine can react, Gabriel grabs her by the back of her armor and violently flings us backward. His incredible strength accelerates us from a standstill to hundreds of miles an hour in the blink of an eye, rocking my stomach with nausea.

Catherine opens her mouth to yelp in surprise, but only a whisper of air escapes. She flaps her wings in midair and struggles to decelerate, but by the time she manages to spin around in midair and right herself, we've already traveled two miles. The cloud of gas engulfs an area the size of a football stadium.

Catherine shakes the disorientation from her head. Uriel! Gabriel!

I don't know what happened to them. Neither does Catherine. The Saint quickly flies back, but warily keeps her distance as she eyeballs the acrid black smoke from high above.

If I had to guess, I'd assume the humans have perished. There's no way they could outrun Valac's attack.

"Catherine!" A male voice yells out. I turn to spot Raphael flying toward me. The old man stops to hover a few feet away and gazes in horror at the smoke. "What happened down there?"

Before I can answer, something surges from inside the black smog; A massive tornado whirls into existence from where the souls detonated. The artificial cyclone rapidly sucks in the toxic haze and purifies the air, turning Valac's biological weapon inert. At its center stands Uriel, spinning her spear overhead to create the vortex of wind.

Raphael exhales. "Phew. As expected of our sister."

Gabriel stands in the same spot as before, unharmed. A faint holy aura surrounds his body. It crackles and sputters as bits of the demonic gas brush him, but he pays them no mind.

Raphael and I swoop toward the two remaining Archangels. Coming to a stop, we land beside Gabriel.

"Brother, what happened after I left?" Raphael asks.

Gabriel stares at Uriel. His eyes rove her body, looking for injuries as she blows the toxic gas upward to disperse harmlessly into the atmosphere.

"I am not certain. Valac attacked Uriel with his black smoke. Then, he vanished."

Uriel lowers her spear. She glances around and crinkles her nose. "The rat-bastard hasn't left. He's still here, watching us. I feel his aura touching me."

"His aura?" Raphael asks. "I don't understand."

"The Grim Reaper is projecting his spiritual energy in a wide field. It allows him to follow our movements, among other things. I don't know what he's doing with his souls, but I know he can copy himself."

Raphael's expression turns grave. "I see. His manipulation of souls has gone this far, then? That means Valac must have summoned Corrosive Miasma."

Uriel raises an eyebrow. "Corrosive Miasma? Dost thee knoweth the origin of this infernal gas, brother?"

"Aye," Raphael says. "Tis a terrible plague, one I last witnessed during the Primordial Era which devours both flesh and bone. I find myself surprised Gabriel and thee were unharmed after encountering it. Perhaps the Reaper's Miasma is much less potent than that which I encountered in our ancient past."

Uriel narrows her gaze. "How dost thou knoweth the origin of this... this toxic gas, brother?"

"A terrible Titan once wielded it, one we called Morva," The Archangel of Wisdom replies. "I shan't say anything else. This old man must keep knowledge of the primordial era a secret, for the sake of the treaty."

Uriel shakes her fist at Raphael. "Were I not here, that Miasma could have choked the life from everything in the area. Now is no time for riddles."

Raphael shakes his head. "No riddles. Only the truth. There is no need for me to explain anything. Usage of Corrosive Miasma is as dangerous to the caster as it is to his enemies."

Catherine quickly writes words in the air. The Reaper, no flesh. Miasma won't hurt him.

"Perhaps," The old man replies cryptically. He doesn't elaborate.

Uriel's eyes scan the surrounding area. Valac doesn't reappear.

"Tch. I barely got to enjoy myself. What a coward. Why would he show himself, only to flee after hitting me with a surprise attack?"

Raphael rubs his chin thoughtfully. "I do not know. In the meantime, Uzziel and I have managed to evacuate her pet 'humans.' I summoned a portal to send them elsewhere. They are safe, for now."

"Hah!" Uriel laughs. She walks over and snatches Gungnir from the spot she embedded it. "Safe. That is a riot, Raphael. Thy jokes are a great source of merriment, as always. I believe the Reaper's aura might wrap around the entirety of Earth, allowing him to see everything happening throughout the entire world. He will find Uriel's 'humans' and kill them."

Raphael balks. "Unlikely! Nobody can stretch their aura in such a way! 'Tis an absurd notion. Perish the thought."

"I am certain of my intuition," Uriel says. "It explains how he can keep disappearing and reforming his body. His aura is in all places. That must mean he can instantly travel anywhere on Earth. All of our troops are in danger until they know this fact."

The old man nods, accepting her premise. "Very well. If that is the case, then there must be a way we can counter it. Perhaps-"

"Speak no more," Uriel says, holding a finger to her lips. "He hears everything you say."

Raphael pales. He flicks his eyes around, uncertain what to do. "I... I... if we cannot discuss this matter... then..."

"Heaven is still safe," Uriel says with a smile. "Valac's presence does not reach our dimension. Rather, it cannot. Heaven's Holy Energy is far too mighty for Valac to breach. Come. Let us return home. We will discuss counter-measures there."

Catherine nods.

However, as my host sheathes her sword, suspicion bubbles in her mind. No. There's something else. We don't have all the pieces to the puzzle. There must be more to Valac's magic than meets the eye. What, I wonder, is the secret to his power? Surely, he isn't unkillable. Michael taught me that every enemy has a weak point. Even Valac.

Catherine bites her lips as the four angels take off and return to Mount Sinai.

He must have a weakness!

"Curses. CURSES!!"

Valac screeches angrily. I appear inside his mind and arrive in a scene of chaos. The Reaper storms back and forth inside a cave littered with thousands of bones. The only source of light is Valac's lantern, sitting atop a circular altar in the center of the room. The Grim Reaper violently kicks his foot out and sends the remains of creatures clattering across the stony ground.

"That little angel WHORE! How... how DARE she pry into my abilities! Who gave that wench the right?!"

The confident facade of the Reaper shatters in my mind as he stomps around and throws a tantrum like an angry toddler.

"I've never been so humiliated in all my life. And by a wretched woman at that! Uriel thinks she's unstoppable, eh?! I'll show her! I'll show all of them!"

Valac wraps his bony fingers around a rock and squeezes with all his strength. It explodes into dust and falls through the cracks in his bones.

"I've given up so much to earn this power, and what do I have to show for it? Worthless grunts who follow my every command! That's all! I didn't even get the satisfaction of killing Satan myself!"

Valac slams his fist against the stone altar. Dried blood from several ritual sacrifices scrapes off and sticks to our bony hands.

Doesn't Valac know Satan is alive? He told Camael he could see into the future. Why wouldn't he know Satan survived?

The answer comes to me after a few moments of introspection.

Valac isn't omniscient. He's only putting on a facade to fool others. If he can see into the future, that doesn't mean he knows what will happen, just as Camael doesn't know, either. Uriel caught him off-guard today, as well. He isn't the demon he pretends to be. He's powerful, certainly, but insecure as well. His knowledge of the future is colored by his own misgivings and flaws.

The Reaper grabs a small boulder and drags it to the altar. He sits atop it and reaches out to touch his lantern.

"I won't let that Archangel shame me. Uriel thinks herself mightier than the Grim Reaper? What a farce. Perhaps I ought to sow some discord among their ranks... show the angels who rules them. Uriel might be able to combat me, but the others can't- gah!"

Sharp pain rings out among the dullness of Valac's senses. His ribs bend and flex, causing the Reaper to double over. He leans against the altar and clenches his teeth together for several moments.

"Bloody- not this again! Raphael, you bastard. How could you possibly know... know about my pain? How many soul manipulators have you met, you senile old bat?!"

Valac doesn't breathe, nor does he have any internal organs to clutch. However, it still takes him a full minute to right himself before returning to his lantern.

"Anyone who insults me will receive a thousand deaths, each worse than the last. I won't forgive them. I won't forget!"

Part 125: Return of the King

The warmth of the Cosmic Realm beats upon my back and front equally. Light penetrates my eyelids, preventing me from sleeping or dreaming. So bright is this place that it seems to pierce the fabric of my host's mind, turning his thoughts into a hopeless mess.

Satan opens his eyes.

"Samael."

No response.

"Samael. Wake up."

A sensation reminiscent of ice brushes against the top of my skull. Samael stirs within Satan's thoughts, his voice filled with annoyance.

"Hmph. What dost thou want? After staying silent for so long, I assumed thou hads't finally fallen to despair. How unfortunate that thou hath survived the anguish of losing all of thy kin."

"Shut up," Satan growls. "I'm not interested in hearing you blabber and bitch. I've come to a realization. I can free myself and escape the Cosmic Realm."

"Ah, so thy sanity has finally slipped away," Samael says mockingly. "My brother sealed thee here because he knew escape was impossible."

"It isn't," Satan says. "Several of the demon souls within me possess the ability to summon portals to other places. I can return to Earth if I use their magic."

The Archangel spreads his arms out in my mind's eye. "Is that so? Thou shalt summon forth magic without being able to perform the signs? I was right. Thy judgment has fallen to pieces."

"Obviously I need hands, dumbass," Satan replies. "That much is a given. Since I can't perform healing magic on myself and Belial ain't here, the only solution left is to kill myself."

Samael covers his mouth and chortles. "Oh, is that all?! How many times didst thee gnaw thy tongue to shreds in hopes the blood loss would end thy miserable existence? 'Tis futile, demon. Thy regenerative powers only activate when thy body perishes, and no method of killing thyself is available for thee. Thou art trapped. Accept defeat, and allow me to sleep."

Satan smiles. "That's why I called you, chum. I've got it all figured out. I'm going to blow myself up."

The Archangel falters. "H-hmm? How?"

"If I build up enough mana in one spot, I can turn myself into a volcano. I'll detonate, spewing my entrails everywhere and dying in the process. A few moments later, I'll become whole again."

Samael's expression darkens. His smile vanishes. When he replies, his voice turns hoarse. "That won't work. Thou shalt fail."

"It will work. It has to! My people need me!"

The Archangel scowls. "Give up, demon. Nothing thou shalt attempt will succeed. Thy struggle has been for nothing. I... I am going to sleep again. I don't want to hear another word out of thee."

Satan lifts his head and grins. "What's the matter, Samael? You aren't afraid of the big, bad demon, are ya? Let's face it. When I bust outta this shithole, I'm coming for Raphael, and Mother, and all your other ugly brothers and sisters. I'll tear 'em apart. You know that. You're terrified, ain'tcha?"

"I'm not!" Samael bellows. The Archangel's eyes rage with fire. "'Tis hopeless! Even supposing escape was possible, my family would slaughter thee again and again until nothing remained of thy body! They would scatter thy ashes among the stars and scrub thy name from the scrolls of history."

Satan turns deadly serious. "They'd try, chum. They'd fail. I'm unkillable. Unstoppable. Sealing me in the Cosmic Realm was the only way Raphael could stop me. Luckily, grandpa can't beat me. I've got a brain bigger'n his."

The Devil closes his eyes. "And now it's time to use it."

"What art thou doing?" Samael asks. A hint of concern enters his voice as Satan begins to take long, deep breaths.

"Samael. You're going to help me, boy. I need you to concentrate all of my mana inside my stomach."

Satan continues to inhale and exhale. Samael's eyes widen. "Stop it, Satan! This is a complete waste of time!"

"Is it?" Satan asks between breaths. "Then why do you look like you're about to shit yourself?"

Samael goes silent. The Archangel stares at me, wide-eyed, shaking his head. His body trembles slightly, though he tries to suppress it.

Satan resumes his breathing. A burning sensation begins to boil in his stomach, then cool and reheat itself. The temperature in his belly never becomes uncomfortable, but the burning is unmistakable.

"Help me out, bird-brain," Satan says. "You don't have a choice. Gather my mana into my gut. Now!"

Samael closes his eyes. "Damn, damn! A thousand damnations upon thee."

Satan scowls. "Hurry up. Stop stalling!"

The Devil's orders make Samael flinch each time. Eventually, the Archangel begins to motion with his hands. I watch his figure in my mind's eye as he weaves a series of intricate signs.

"An eternity of anguish awaits thee, demon."

"Like you haven't said that a thousand times," Satan grumbles.

Satan's temperature elevates several degrees, causing him to sweat profusely. Within moments, the flame concentrates in his gut.

"Shit... holy fuck... that's hot..." Satan says, gasping for breath. He inhales, and his breath catches. "Ah, shit! Shit! SHIT! It fuckin' burns!"

The Devil's head lolls around as all of his mana continues to build up. Delirium takes him. His muscles expand and constrict on their own, ignoring his mental commands. His body shivers and trembles as all its heat travels to his stomach.

Like a lighter tossed into a barrel of gasoline, something snaps inside of Satan's gut. The Devil loses himself. His head falls forward and slaps against the glowing ground. Everything turns to white as a shrill whine erupts in his ears.

Time passes. It feels instantaneous to me, yet I get the impression several minutes have passed.

Satan opens his eyes.

His breathing evens out.

The Devil reaches up to wipe away his accumulated sweat. The sensation of his hand touching his face startles him. Satan jerks back in surprise...

...And smiles.

"I... I did it?!"

Using all the strength in his body, Satan shoves himself off the ground. He lands on his feet in a crouch, but after a moment, his legs give out. He falls backward and splashes into a sopping wet puddle of blood from his exploded corpse.

"Uh... shit. Can't walk. Head hurts."

Samael bubbles up in my thoughts. "Satisfied?"

His tone is that of disappointment, anger, and acceptance. He did what he could, but his attempts to stop Satan failed.

The Devil takes a few seconds to gather his bearings before rising to his feet, but slower this time. His legs, while shaky due to lack of use, allow him to walk with relative ease. More importantly, they feel powerful. His muscles remain neither atrophied nor useless. I can only assume it's due to the power of the Titans coursing through him.

Satan flexes his arms, clenches his fists a few times, and stretches his whole body.

"I feel alive again. Bloody devils. I thought I'd be stuck here yappin' at you for the rest of eternity."

"If only that had been the case," Samael replies. "Then, perhaps, the universe might have ended up a safer place."

"Yeah, yeah."

Satan ignores Samael's passive-aggressiveness. Given the Archangel poses no threat to him, Samael's words prove little more than a minor annoyance. The Devil continues stretching and eventually stops to crack his knuckles.

"Alright. Now I need to figure out how Portal magic works."

Samael fidgets nervously. ""Tis quite complex. Even among the Archangels, only Raphael can use Portal magic effectively."

"I know. You think I wasn't listening when the old man explained everything?"

Samael clams up. The Archangel turns away, unwilling to meet my gaze.

With a shrug, Satan begins forming hand signs.

"For my first attempt, I'll try using a trigram-eagle formation. I'll tweak my magic based on the results, and eventually, break free."

"Thou shalt fail," Samael says.

His response is anything but confident.

Time passes.

Satan gasps and flops on his ass. Before him, an opaque white portal hums silently in midair. The Devil mops his forehead and clutches his chest.

"Hellspawn. That took forever."

Samael crosses his arms. A sour look crosses his face. "Aye. One hundred and twelve hours, by my account. Six hundred and sixty-six attempts."

Satan closes his eyes. "All that work, but at least I finally opened the damn thing. Why can't I see the other side?"

Samael shrugs. "Most portals are opaque; even Raphael's. Thy portal might have appeared inside a volcano. Or, it could lead straight to the heart of a star."

Satan frowns. "You're fuckin' with me."

"Nay."

"Up yours, liar," Satan mutters. The Devil clambers to his feet and slaps his naked chest. "I've waited long enough. I don't give a shit where this leads. As long as I arrive somewhere on Earth, that'll be good enough for me."

Samael rubs his arm. The Archangel of Change appears disturbed. He wants to try and convince Satan not to step through, but nothing he says will dissuade the Devil.

Eventually, he gives up. Samael flops onto his back and sighs. "A thousand curses upon thee."

Satan ignores him. He steps toward the portal and scrunches up his face. His nerves make him pause for a moment, but he shrugs them off and leaps through with all his strength.

Whoomph.

The air pressure instantly shifts. A high-pitched whine squeals in Satan's ear, deafening him as we flop on our stomach. The Devil violently yawns to pop his ears. Within a few seconds, the irritating sensation vanishes, and he opens his eyes.

Above us, the Sun beats down upon Earth's surface. Compared to the blinding splendor of the Cosmic Realm, it seems more like a faint lightbulb viewed across a great chasm of darkness.

Satan blinks to adjust his eyes. He sweeps his gaze in a 180-degree arc — confusion sprouts in his mind.

"Wha... is this Earth? Where in the name of...?"

Smoothly rolling hills spread out into the distance. They rise into mountains, but what stuns me is the complete lack of color. The entire planet appears to be dead. As if a massive forest fire had ravaged the region an hour before, everything has ended up lifeless and broken. The grass crunches beneath Satan's feet, while black ash lines the terrain for miles and miles in every direction.

A shiver goes down Satan's back. "Somethin' ain't right here, Sammy-boy. I'm getting the heebie-jeebies."

Behind us, a sudden crash kicks Satan's heart into high gear. The Devil spins around and stares dumbfoundedly at a crystal blue ocean. The waves splash against the shore, but where the blackened sand meets the water, the stagnant Earth meets a living, breathing sea. Far in the distance, a giant whale spurts water into the sky, then dives back underwater.

Satan rubs his chin. "This... this place is Earth after all. But what happened? Why is everything all fucked up?"

Samael shrugs. "Thou hath been gone a while, demon. Mere months passed in the Cosmic Realm, but far more time has passed in the mortal realm."

Satan goes silent. His thoughts turn inward. Are any demons still alive? What about the angels? The Titans? What is even happening here? It looks like something came through and sucked the life out of every inch of the land.

Shaking his head in disbelief, the Devil turns away from the sealine and begins walking inland. Every step, the brittle grass crunches under our feet, grinding painfully and hitting us in our sensitive spots.

"This shit hurts to walk across. I hope the whole planet ain't dead. That'd be a damned shame."

Samael, still laying on his back, tilts his head sideways to follow my gaze. "Were Uzziel to see this barren wasteland, she would be terribly displeased. Whatever did this; she has yet to repair the damage."

Satan purses his lips. "Maybe Mother's gone."

"I hope not," Samael whispers.

Minutes pass. Satan's Vectors tear out the ground in front of him as he walks, exposing softer dirt, so he doesn't hurt his bare feet. The temperature outside is neither too hot, nor too cold. I can only assume we've arrived at some point during Spring or Autumn.

As Satan starts to climb a hill, a random deer charges over from the other side. Startled, Satan reacts in self-defense. One of his Vectors lashes out and smashes the stag's head, crushing its antlers into powder and snapping its neck. The buck flops sideways and dies instantly, crashing into our feet and tripping us.

Satan lands on his back. "Gah! Fucking- what was that for?! Damned buck scared the shit out of-"

Halting mid-sentence, Satan quickly raises his head to the top of the hill. A human male wearing a leather deerskin coat and moccasins points a makeshift wooden spear at us. His eyes widen in fear. "Ahh! Dum-mun! Dum-mun!"

Behind him, on the other side of the hill, several voices echo his words. "Dum-mun? Dum-mun! Grooka!"

Satan leaps to his feet. He scans the human warily. "What... what is this creature? It resembles a demon, but its skin is black, not red. Not only that, but it has no horns..."

Samael squints at the human. "I... I haven't a clue."

The human takes a step back but continues to hold his spear with both hands and aim it at us defensively. Within seconds, three others appear at the top of the hill, each one wielding a spear of their own. "Dum-mun! Dok-dok mun?!"

Satan frowns. "What are they saying?"

"Don't ask me," Samael says with a roll of his eyes. "I'm surprised thou hath held back on slaying them."

Satan cocks his head. "Their weapons won't hurt me. I can't sense a lick of spiritual energy in 'em either. Did these ugly creatures cause all this destruction?"

While Satan ponders several questions, the four primitive warriors fan out to surround us. The Devil glances around and follows them with his eyes. "Oh, come on. You guys can't seriously be thinking of fighting me. Can't you tell when they're outmatched?"

In the blink of an eye, the warrior behind me leaps and stabs his spear toward my spine. On cue, the other three charge as well, each one aiming for a different vital organ at my front and sides.

Satan frowns. To him, their movements slow to a crawl as he takes a moment to debate his next move. Decent teamwork. They don't appear to be afraid of me. I might be the first demon they've seen in millennia.

Before their spears come anywhere close to Satan's body, the Devil's Vectors lash out. He shatters their weapons ten times over and pounds each human in the chest with the flats of his invisible palms.

The humans go silent as they fly away and slam into the crumbled, dead Earth. Their bodies jerk to a sudden stop and go still.

Satan scratches the top of his head. "Was... was that it? They're dead! I barely did anything."

Samael stares at the human on top of the hill before us. He, somehow, continues to breathe. Based on the positions of his broken arms and legs, he's suffering unimaginably. Death will soon come for him as well.

"I've never seen these bipedal creatures," The Archangel mutters. "They resemble wingless angels."

"Weird," Satan says. Shrugging, the Devil climbs the rest of the hill. He shoves the dead buck aside, leans forward, and crushes the head of the human, giving him a quick death. "Thank me later, chum. No sense in making a tiny little runt suffer more than necessary."

"A moment of compassion," Samael says wryly. "I didn't expect that from thee."

"I'm in a good mood," Satan says. "Frankly, escaping that Cosmic Shithole is enough to lighten my spirits to a point where nothing's gonna get me down."

The Devil takes a few more steps and climbs the mountain the rest of the way. Thanks to his elevated position, he's finally able to see much more of the land.

Far in the distance, at the edge of the horizon, a forest of dead, blackened trees sits between two small mountains.

Between us and the forest, a small army of humans charges toward our hill.

Satan blinks. "Oh. More wingless angels."

Several hundred humans stomp forward; spears raised to turn us into a shish-kebab. Satan crosses his arms. "What's the definition of stupidity? Doing the same thing over and over again, hoping for a different result."

Before the humans start climbing Satan's hill, they pause. A single man steps forward. He holds a brass horn in his hands. Given their technology level, it seems out of place, as if he didn't make it himself.

He blows on the horn. A surprisingly loud bwaaaaaa erupts throughout the air, echoing into the hills and across the ocean for miles in every direction.

Satan pokes his finger into his ear and itches it. "Well. That was rude."

"I believe they're calling for backup," Samael says. Perhaps ye might be able to handle two hundred of these creatures... but what if thousands come?"

Satan rolls his eyes. "Oh, no, anything but that. I'm quaking in terror."

Behind us, the distant sound of the ocean grows silent. The waves cease their crashing against the shore.

Pins and needles tingle crawl down Satan's spine. Ignoring the primitives, the Devil turns to stare out at the ocean.

Samael narrows his eyes. "Oh."

"What's going on?" Satan asks. "The waves stopped. That shouldn't happen."

The humans chatter to each other behind me. The sound of their footsteps going in the opposite direction makes Satan pivot on his heel to stare at them. All of the primitives turn tail and flee toward the black forest, leaving me behind to stand alone atop my hill.

Satan resumes his gazing at the ocean. The water sucks away from the coastline, exposing bleached dirt mixed in with the blackened sand. Once the waves retreat half a mile, Satan shivers.

"I don't like this. Not one bit."

Samael smirks. "Ho? Now I understand. Satan, thou have yet to meet a Titan aside from Hercules, isn't that right?"

Satan shakes his head. "Yeah? So what?"

Far in the distance, miles offshore, something the size of a small whale bursts out of the water and begins riding atop the waves. The humanoid figure stands thirty-feet tall. As he surfs, he rises higher and higher. A wall of water fifty-feet tall rushes inland, threatening Satan's life.

The Devil slams his Vectors into the ground and braces for impact as the wall of water roars toward us.

Samael's smirk stretches across his entire face. "Meet Poseidon, King of the Seven Seas."

The Titan's majestic beard stretches down to his knees. His golden Trident points at my chest. "Foul demon! Your end is nigh!"

Ten thousand tons of water slam into me at three hundred miles an hour. Satan's preparations fall apart as it rips him from the ground and flings us backward. Our body spins and careens wildly. We lose our spatial orientation amidst the spiraling, muddy sea.

Satan opens his eyes. The last thing he sees is a naked man swimming toward him at a ludicrous speed. Poseidon's trident impales our heart, causing the world to fade to black.

Part 126: King of the Seas

"Oh? Still alive? I could have sworn I finished you."

"GRRL-BLUK!"

Satan opens his mouth and spews saltwater from his mouth and nose. The Devil hacks and coughs for a few seconds before blinking his eyes open.

Poseidon towers 30 feet above us. Wearing a golden crown and green fish-scale armor, the Titan stands like a god against the shadow of the midday sun.

"Your people aren't usually this resilient," Poseidon mutters. The Ocean King raises his trident and prepares to lance it into my heart again. "But no matter. Stepping foot within a mile of my waters will prove to be your undoing."

His weapon rushes toward me. Satan's eyes bolt open. Our Vectors kick into overdrive, yanking us to the left with astounding force. The twenty-five-foot tall trident impales the spot we were laying in and rattles the Earth, sending a tremor deep into the continental plates.

Poseidon's eyes follow us. "Hm? You dodged?"

Satan slams onto his left arm and rolls a few times before his Vectors stop his momentum. The Devil blinks the dizziness from his head, jumps to his feet, and strikes a defensive pose.

"Damn right, I did. Who the fuck are you, lanky-legs?"

The world around us, while still black and dead, is noticeably less ashen and prickly compared to before the tsunami. The sand and dirt, now waterlogged from Poseidon's attack, splashes beneath our feet. Several inches of water slowly retreat to the ocean as the remnants of his tsunami drains away.

Poseidon chuckles. "Heh. You're a funny little demon. Why pretend you don't know me? I've dragged enough of your kind to a watery grave. Surely, you understand you'll be shark-food by daybreak."

Satan's eyes flick over Poseidon's shoulder. The sun appears to be in the same spot as before. Hardly any time has passed since the tsunami struck us.

Damn, Satan thinks to himself. That Titan's attack was brutal. Felt like it crushed every bone in my body. The fact I regenerated at the cost of only one soul is remarkable.

Satan glowers at the armored giant. "First time I've met one of you. Well, I spanked Hercules' ass real good once, crushed a few lady Titan heads too, but you're the first big one I've seen in the flesh. Do all Titans look as ugly as you, or are you special?"

Poseidon narrows his gaze. He yanks his trident up, spins it in his grasp, and plants its butt in the sand. "You're lucky I've let you live this long, demon. Don't test my patience. Tell me, how did you survive my attack? I skewered you right through the heart."

Satan grins. "My heart? You must be mistaken. I ain't got one, big boy."

"Somehow, that doesn't surprise me."

Poseidon remains motionless for two seconds. In the blink of an eye, he cocks his head, and a tendril of water jumps up from our feet. The hyper-compressed beam of water smashes into my face, catching Satan off-guard as it drills out his eye and sends us flying.

"Gahk! Shit!"

Satan utters a curse before he splashes face-first into the flooded plain. Sand and seawater rush into our nose. Satan recoils and grabs his left eye.

"Bloody sin! Spawn of a broodmother! Gahhh!"

Spitting the sand from his mouth, Satan whirls to face Poseidon. Our chest heaves with rage. Blood trickles from our gouged-out eyeball and drips down the left side of our face. Despite the searing fire burning in our eye socket, Satan somehow manages to open his other eye.

"Oh, you're gonna regret that, fish-boy," Satan hisses. "I thought we were having a polite conversation, but it seems you've got a death wish!"

Poseidon grins from ear to ear. "Still kicking? I'm surprised. That attack should have turned your head into meat-paste. Aren't you just a hardy little guy?"

Little guy, Satan thinks to himself. Poseidon's words ring in his ear. You know what they say, chump. The bigger they are...

Poseidon cocks his head again, this time firing a bolt of water at us from behind.

Satan doesn't react. One of his Vectors sweeps back and bats the compressed water aside, transforming it into a harmless mist upon our back.

"The same trick won't work on me twice, you floppy little tuna-fish."

Poseidon's smile slips. "How did you block that? I didn't see you move."

This time, it's Satan who grins. He pulls his hand away from his face, revealing our gouged-out left eye. The Devil balls his hand into a fist. It trembles as he tries to control his rage.

"I have a question for ya, chump. Since I'm a dead demon anyway, it shouldn't hurt ya to answer."

Poseidon rests his free hand on his hip. "Oh? What would that be?"

"How many demons currently walk the Earth?"

The Titan frowns. "What sort of question is that? Are you mocking me?"

Satan shakes his head. "Nope. Call it a dead man's final request. I'd like to know since you've fought my people in the past."

The Titan purses his lips. "I see. So that's what you mean. Mmm. Too many. A few million, perhaps. My brother, Zeus, has been far too lax in eliminating them."

Satan's jaw slackens.

A few million? I thought Raphael said they all died!

Samael speaks inside my mind. "Oho. It seems my brother may have fibbed."

"Yeah," Satan mutters. "But that means we're still in this fight. Hoho. That might mean... Nerissa..."

Satan clutches his chest for a moment.

I thought they all died. Raphael, ever the crafty fox, told me lies to try and break my spirit. Unfortunately for that old bastard, his words solidified my resolve. Now I'm back, and nobody can stop me.

Satan flashes a grin at Poseidon. "Thank you for the info, pal. I appreciate it. Now, if you'll excuse me, I'm going to kill myself."

The Titan falters. "What?"

"Don't worry. This won't take long."

Satan holds up two fingers in a peace sign. An instant later, his Vectors rush toward our head from both sides. My stomach clenches as our vision turns to rainbows and sunshine. With our head crushed, we lose consciousness and fall into blackness.

Recommended Listening

Satan's eyes bolt open. Our vision returns in full force, now that his left eye has regenerated.

He pounces to his feet to see Poseidon much closer than before. The Titan retreats two steps in shock. "What?! Impossible! What sort of trickery was that?! Your head burst like a watermelon! I've never, in all my years-"

Satan holds up a hand. "I've heard enough from you, waterboy. It's time to teach you a little respect."

Poseidon flinches. Before Satan even attacks, the Titan reacts as if he knows we're coming.

Satan slams all his vectors into the ground, leaving eight handprints in the sand. An instant later, we rush at the Titan's chest and rear our fist back. The impact of Satan's punch transforms Poseidon's bones into jelly. His massive body flings backward violently. He spins, twists, and careens across the beach, before eventually skidding to a stop.

Satan lands in a crouch.

"Nobody likes a wiseass."

The Titan coughs. It takes him a moment to pull himself together. He eventually stands up, but his body trembles as pain courses through him.

"Y-you... hoo... wheeze..."

Poseidon gingerly touches his chest with a trembling hand. After regaining his balance, he summons healing water to coat his palm, and rubs his ribs carefully. It only takes a few seconds for him to repair the damage from Satan's ridiculously powerful punch.

A minute later, the Titan shakes the stars out of his head.

"You surprised me... d-demon... to think such unimaginable strength could exist in a tiny body like yours..."

"Yeah," Satan replies. "That's me. Full of surprises."

Poseidon's eyes narrow. "That attack just now... there was something familiar about it."

Satan smirks. "What, are you a masochist or something? To each his own. I wouldn't want to get in the way of your fetish."

"That's not what I-!"

Poseidon halts midsentence as Satan pounces at him. The Devil clears the three-hundred foot gap nearly as quickly as he did the shorter one a minute earlier. In the blink of an eye, we race at Poseidon's chest. At the last second, one of Satan's vectors grabs the Titan's shoulder, flips us into the air, and yanks us toward Poseidon's head.

Danger!

Satan's mind screams a warning. Before he can crush Poseidon's head as part of his grand finale, he yanks himself to the left instead. I don't understand why, until I spot a compressed stream of water shoot at our previous position. Our chest would likely have been vaporized had we not dodged.

The Devil slams his feet into the ground and dives to the side. Right on cue, several beams of water smash into the sand behind us, drilling holes the size of fists in our wake.

Satan uses his vectors to yank himself out of Poseidon's attack range. We land in a crouch atop a boulder planted in the sand, and Satan spins on his heel to face Poseidon.

The Titan turns to face us. A look of awe mixed with fear crosses his face. "If I hadn't witnessed it myself, I wouldn't have believed it."

Satan raises an eyebrow. His tone turns incredulous. "Huh? What are you on about, whale-breath?"

Poseidon gestures to the sand. The handprints of several vectors stand out among the otherwise smooth surface. Within seconds, the continuously retreating floodwaters begin to wash them away.

"Do you think me daft, demon? Who are you? How did you obtain the same ability as Samael, the Archangel of Change?"

Satan's jovial spirit disappears. Samael appears in our mind's eye and smirks. "Oh, did I forget to tell thee? Poseidon was one of the Titans I used to spar against during the few hundred years before Raphael created Heaven. He knows the reach and strength of my Vectors better than many others."

Satan squeezes his fist tighter. Damn you, ugly-ass bat. You knew that and didn't tell me?! Fucking asshole. Now I'm at a disadvantage!

Samael can't hear our thoughts. However, the Archangel's grin widens further. "I see the look on thy face, Satan. Thou art scared. Poseidon is one of the five mightiest Titans still walking the cosmos. Thou hath encountered quite the misfortune to meet him here."

"Shut up," Satan mutters. "I'm thinkin'."

The Demon and Titan eye each other warily. Poseidon's question hangs in the air like a corpse's stench, causing him greater and greater concern for each passing second Satan doesn't respond.

Finally, Satan nods. "You wanna know, Mister Po-po? I'll tell ya... but only when one of us wins this battle."

"As if you ever had a chance," Poseidon replies through gritted teeth. "Since you've somehow come into possession of the Eight Vectors, it's only fair I unleash my counter-measure."

Satan tenses up. What's he talkin' about?

To my surprise, Poseidon rears his arm back, spins to face the ocean, and flings his trident with all his strength. The weapon races out to sea and pierces the frothing waves with scarcely a sound.

Now barehanded, the Titan weaves several magic signs. Saltwater leaps from the ocean nearby, splashes against his back, and transforms into eight octopus-style appendages. Each liquid tentacle moves independently in a similar manner to Satan's invisible limbs.

Poseidon smiles. "Right now, you're thinking to yourself that you still have an advantage. You can follow the movements of my octopus-style water-magic... but I can't do the same for your Vectors. Isn't that right?"

Satan shifts his feet slightly. "Maybe."

"I bet you also think that fighting on land puts me at a disadvantage compared to you."

The Devil's discomfort intensifies. "Anything's possible, pal."

A terrifying grin spreads across the Titan's face. "Well... you're correct! And you're still going to lose!"

One moment, the Titan stands before me.

In the next, he transforms into liquid and splashes into the receding floodwaters.

Satan flinches. A hand as big as a boulder bursts out of the water behind us, forcing us to leap aside. Before our feet hit the sopping wet sand, a cackle erupts from beneath us. "Ahahaha! Wrong move, little demon! Now you've entered my domain!"

Our foot hits the water with a splash.

Out of nowhere, a tsunami springs up behind us. The roar of saltwater rips forward, clearing the gap in the blink of an eye. We can't dodge.

FWOOSH!

One hundred tons of seawater yank us out into the ocean. Our Vectors try to anchor us to the shore, but all we manage to grab are clumps of sand.

Satan screams internally. SHIT! Not this again!!

Recommended Listening

Our body careens uncontrollably deeper and deeper into the sea. Satan spins violently, unable to control his movements. Like a washing machine set to max speed or a toilet flushing us down an endless drain, we spiral further into the depths of Poseidon's realm, unable to stop our momentum.

Can't breathe! Water! Nose! Mouth!

Satan gurgles and gargles as mounting pressure continually compresses his body from seemingly all directions. Even with his insane strength, the Devil's thoughts become sluggish.

Hahaha! Look at you now, foolish demon!

Poseidon's voice booms in our ears. It comes from everywhere around us, amplified by the properties of the water pressing against our ears.

What's wrong? Kraken got your tongue? Where are your witty one-liners now?

Satan frantically scans the area, searching for the Titan. Our eyes prove useless in the murky depths, especially since we can't control our spinning.

What do I do?!

Satan's panic becomes overwhelming. I can barely think with all the horrible things happening to our body, and I'm only experiencing a vision of the past!

The Devil tucks his arms and legs in. He forces himself to consider his options, even as something unseen slams against our back, nearly shattering our spine. Poseidon begins striking us from all angles, using his incredible aquatic agility to outmaneuver us.

I understand how your powers work, foul bloodskin! You regenerate your body after death, don't you? That means even if you drown, you'll revive a minute later. No matter! I'll trap you at the bottom of the Mariana Trench, where you'll perish over and over for all eternity! A fitting end for a monster like you!

Satan winces as something batters his legs.

Gotta... gotta breathe. Powers... powers... one of the demons... had to have... underwater breathing...

To my surprise, a series of faces begin to appear in Satan's memories. It takes me a moment to understand their significance. They represent the souls of all the demons who died that were bound to Satan's Soul Contracts.

Satan's mind frantically scans the faces of each demon. Not him, not him, not her... shit! Shit!

Suddenly, one woman's face freezes in his mind.

In the blink of an eye, Satan begins motioning with his hands. Despite being unable to speak any magical incantations, he manages to summon the innermost parts of his mana.

Satan's feet shift. Web-like padding sprouts between his fingers and toes, giving him the ability to swim like a fish. Gills sprout beside his voice-box. Satan exhales, ejecting the toxins from his lungs.

The demoness's powers not only transform his hands and feet, but his mind, too. Satan expertly swats out his right arm and left leg, bringing his endless spiral to a sudden stop. Hardly has he finished before Poseidon, back in his Titan form, rushes toward us through the muddy seawater.

Finally stopped spinning?! Let's start again, child!

The Titan batters us with enough force to shatter our skeleton into fragments. However, Satan's vectors lash out and deflect the hit at the last instant, narrowly saving Satan's life.

Poseidon swims past us and disappears into the cloud of mud surrounding us. Oh? Your body has changed. I didn't know you possessed aquatic attributes. You're a fascinating bloodskin. Can't say I've fought someone like you in all my life.

Satan narrows his eyes as he searches for his attacker. I can't talk underwater. Wish I could. I'd let him know just how disappointed I am.

Eight tendrils of water burst through the mud. Poseidon's Octopus Form strikes us from all directions, forcing Satan's vectors to knock them away. However, while underwater, each one becomes visible. Their speed decreases noticeably, hampered by the ocean as it slows their movements.

As a result, Satan proves unable to deflect Poseidon's attacks. Each tendril evades our Vectors with deadly precision and knocks us for a loop. They slap us around like a pinball wizard at the top of his game.

Satan uses his newly-acquired fins to dodge some of Poseidon's attacks, but others land despite his best effort. Our struggles turn into a game of catch-up wherein we never quite match Poseidon's proficiency at underwater combat, but the Titan can't land a killing blow, either.

Stay still, you little runt! I'm trying to make your death quick and painless!

Poseidon continues to taunt us. Satan ignores the Titan's words to focus on defense.

Alright. I've had enough of this guy's shit. How can I turn the tables?

A minute passes. Poseidon's attacks slow down somewhat. Either that, or Satan grows better at following the movements of the Titan's tendrils. I'm not certain which. At some point, Satan begins easily dodging and deflecting the Titan's incoming barrage.

By the ancestral spirits! You're a hardy fellow; I'll give you that much.

The Devil flinches, expecting another attack. Instead, Poseidon's tendrils dissipate into the water around us.

Silence.

Several seconds pass. The Titan doesn't attack us.

Satan's eyes scan his surroundings. What the heck is Flipper-Flopper doing? Tch. It doesn't matter. I need to get out of this mud-cloud before he hits me again.

Using his flippers and Vectors to augment his swimming, the devil rapidly ascends toward the surface. The only evidence we're heading in the right direction is the faintest glint of sunlight above, as well as Satan's demonic intuition.

C'mon, c'mon... almost there!

Poseidon's voice booms, startling us. I don't remember saying you could leave! Get back down here!

Out of nowhere, an underwater whirlpool begins spinning all around us — Satan's upward momentum halts. His movements slow, then reverse.

No! Bloody devils!!

Satan screams internally as the Titan's magic yanks us toward a deep, watery grave once again.

Satan's rage begins to build.

This son of a walrus! Nobody treats me like a chew toy! NOBODY!!

Even as Satan falls further toward the depths of the bright blue sea, options and strategies bubble in his mind.

Can't outswim the little rat-bastard, can't manipulate water like him...

Samael appears in our mind. "Having fun, Satan? It seems that Poseidon has placed thee between a rock and a hard place. Soon, he will entrap thee and bind thy putrid flesh at the bottom of the sea. Thou may have escaped the Cosmic Realm, but a far worse fate awaits thee."

Shut up, Samael! I don't have time for your shit!

Satan ignores the Archangel taunting him. Every second, his rage builds further and further.

Suddenly, a solution presents itself. Satan tucks his body in again, spreads his arms apart, and claps with all his strength.

WHOOMPH.

A shockwave ripples outward, rattling our teeth in the process. The Whirlpool slows dramatically, allowing us to get our bearings.

Satan grins.

Being underwater has some advantages, eh?

Once more, he spreads his arms apart, then slams his palms together with all his strength.

WHOOMPH!

An even bigger shockwave blasts outward, making all of our internal organs shiver and tremble. Wrenching pain burns in our stomach, but Satan forces himself to ignore it.

Stop that! Poseidon yells. I didn't permit you to move, bloodskin!

Satan's grin widens until it stretches across his whole face.

Oh, Poseidon... I'm gonna tear you a new blowhole.

The Devil's hands turn into a blur. He performs one magical sign after another, forcing mana to bubble in his stomach. The sensation reminds me of how he killed himself in the Cosmic Realm, but this time, the kinetic energy potential inside of himself dwarfs that which he used before.

Samael's eyes widen. "What art thou doing? Satan? Satan?!"

The Devil cackles evilly, though his voice turns into little more than gurgled croaking. Hahaha! You shouldn't have brought me here, Poseidon! Say goodbye to all your little fishy friends!

From the deepest, darkest part of the ocean, I spot a shimmer of green. Poseidon swims toward me at top speeds, his trident held at the ready.

He aims for my chest.

Don't you dare!

Satan finishes his last sign right as Poseidon impales his weapon through our chest.

That was the wrong move, dolphin-tickler.

As if the Titan had popped a bubble, something inside my body bursts. A light as bright as the sun erupts underwater. The last thing I see is a look of terror on Poseidon's face as Satan's body transforms into a living bomb.

NOOOOOOOOOOO!!!!

I awaken underwater again. This time, I float amongst a field of blood and body parts.

Not far from me, Poseidon's massive form floats, inert, his right arm and much of his chest missing. The Titan's eyes blink weakly. Unable to move, his body likely suffers from dozens of ruptured internal organs.

Satan swims over, grabs the Titan by his hair, and begins swimming toward the surface.

Let... let me... go....

Poseidon croaks out a few words of protest. The Titan King tries to swat the tiny demon, but Satan merely rolls his eyes and ignores him.

It only takes us a few minutes to reach the surface. Along the way, we spot thousands of dead fish, several jellyfish, and even a shark. They all float belly-up and slowly sink toward the bottom of the ocean.

Satan shakes his head. Too bad about the fishies. I ain't got nothin' against 'em. Blame this guy. He brought me down here.

We burst onto the surface and swim toward the coastline only a couple of miles away. At some point, Poseidon tries to fight back by flailing his left arm at us, but his strength is so feeble that he barely manages to touch our feet before the current pulls his arm back to his side.

When we reach the shoreline, Satan plants his feet on the beach and flings the Titan further inland. Poseidon slams into the sand with a tremendous whump! Blood pours from his open wounds. Poseidon wheezes over and over.

"Buh... bastard... you won't... get away with thuh... this..."

Satan replaces his gills with lungs. He reverts to his demon form and nods along to the Titan's words. "Uh huh. Sure."

"My... my brother... Zeus... he will..."

The Devil strides up to the giant. We stare at him silently for a few moments. "He ain't gonna do shit. Y'know why? Because I'm Satan the fuckin' Devil. Nobody can beat me. You had all the advantages, and now look at'cha. You're a beached whale. You're out of your element. Pickin' on me was the biggest mistake of your life."

The Titan lolls his head toward us. A look of determination enters his eyes. "You think I'll... beg for my life? Never... never... you can take my life... but you'll never take my pride. I'm the... the King... of the Seas..."

Satan grins. "More like... the King of Deceased. Hah! Aw, man. That was a good one."

Samael sighs. "Thy wit is truly incredible, Satan."

"Shut the fuck up, Samael."

My words ring in the air. Poseidon's eyes widen. "Sam... Samael? Is he here? Where? How?"

"I ate him," Satan replies. "Sucked up his soul. Got all of his powers. Good call on figuring us out, whale-caller, but it wasn't enough. I possess the powers of thousands of demons, a few Titans, and an Archangel too! Every being I devour only makes me stronger. Pretty good deal, innit?"

"You've... you've beaten... Titans... before?"

Satan shrugs. "A few. Anyway, enough chit-chat. I've got shit to do, and places to be. Any last words?"

Poseidon goes silent. The massive giant stares at us for several seconds as he digests the realization he's about to die.

Finally, he closes his eyes.

"I was... wrong about you, demon. You're not like... like the other trash... you're different... a warrior... a kindred spirit..."

The Titan coughs weakly. He puts his last drops of strength into one final proclamation.

"If you... are the one... to defeat me... you are a... a... a worthy..."

Poseidon exhales. His body goes limp as the last bits of his spirit vanish from this world.

Satan scratches his head. "Ahh, shit. He died. Oh well. Head time!"

With a merry whistle, the Devil saunters over, lashes out his vectors, and severs Poseidon's massive head. Nearly the size of our body, it takes all of Satan's power to crush. He puts every drop of his strength into smashing Poseidon's head like a ripe watermelon, spilling the Titan's brains and cerebral fluid everywhere.

Pausing, Satan takes several seconds to blink as a tremendous amount of mana floods into his body.

"Whoa. Damn. That Titan was no joke."

Turning to face the ocean, Satan motions with his hands, and a small wave splashes against the shore.

"Nice."

Samael shakes his head. "Another friend, lost to the brutality and machinations of the Devil. Why am I not surprised?"

"Oh, please," Satan says, rolling his eyes. "Not five minutes ago, you proclaimed that Poseidon was going to bury me under the coral reef for all eternity. Don't pretend like you saw my victory coming."

Samael nods. "Fair enough. Thou hath surprised me, Satan. Thy ingenuity surpasses many beings I've met during my lifetime."

"What can I say? I'm a smart guy."

Satan snaps his fingers.

"Welp, now that that's over, time to start looking. If Poseidon told the truth, there're millions of demons alive on Earth. I need to find 'em and figure out what's happened while I was gone."

"Poseidon was never one to lie," Samael says. His voice softens. "I always considered him a truthful person."

"Stop with the sappy bullshit," Satan groans. "You're gonna make me vomit."

The Devil turns away from the ocean and starts to take a step forward.

Suddenly, he stops.

Before us, perhaps a hundred feet away, a horned figure peeps out from behind a piece of large driftwood on the beach. When he notices I've spotted him, he jumps up and runs toward me. "Holy shit! Satan?! Izzat you?!"

The young demon stomps across the sand, leaving footprints in his wake. A stupid grin spreads across his face as he draws near.

Satan raises an eyebrow. "Do I know you?"

"Yeah, duh! It's me, Barbatos! I'm one of your top generals! Your best guy! Your number one, biggest fan!"

Satan scrunches up his face. "I'd remember you if that were the case, kid."

Barbatos claps his hands eagerly. "Ah! I knew you were alive! Everyone said you were dead, but I always believed in you! You're like, the toughest demon ever!"

Satan frowns. "Ah, yeah. Good to see you too, twerp. Look, uh, why are you here? How did you find me?"

Barbatos claps his hands. "That's easy! I'm your number one fan! I'll always find you! Ehehehe! Come on, you gotta follow me! I'll take you to the others."

"The other demons?"

Barbatos nods eagerly. "Yup! Everyone's hiding in underground caves, but I know where to find the entrances. C'mon, let's go!"

Satan exhales. Devils. This runt has the shrillest voice I've heard in my entire life. I can't stand listening to him. There isn't a chance I'd forget someone as miserable as him, not even after tens of thousands of years.

Despite his misgivings, Satan falls into step beside Barbatos. The grunt glances at Poseidon's body. "You killed the King of the Seas?"

"Mhm."

"Holy crap! I knew you were awesome!"

The corner of Satan's lip tugs into a smile. "Yeah. He's the King of Deceased, now."

Barbatos's smile widens. "Bahaha! That's hilarious! Great joke!"

"Thanks, kid. I'm glad someone around here knows good humor."

"Huh?"

"Nothing."

The Devil and Grunt continue walking toward the black forest, leaving Poseidon's headless body to cook under the light of the sun.

Part 127: A Brave New World

"So, uh, why ain't you wearing any pants?"

"It's a long story."

"Aw, c'mon! Don't be like that. Just tell me why you don't got no pants on!"

"I blew myself up. No more pants after that."

"You did WHAT?! How didja manage that?"

Satan sighs. He and Barbatos stomp through the barren remains of a forest, now colored black due to its lack of life energy. The Devil uses his Vectors to hover half an inch above the prickly undergrowth, saving his feet from getting poked and pierced, but he pretends to move his feet so that Barbatos is none the wiser. Given Satan's astounding ability to regenerate from death, it surprises me he has such sensitive feet. I can't help but wonder why he's going to such great lengths to hide the existence of his Vectors, given how many demons surely know about his powers.

"It's a long story, runt. More importantly, I have a few questions for you."

Barbatos's eyes light up like the fourth of July. "Ooh, ooh, you do? You do?! I know everything, Satan! I'm the smartest demon alive today! Fire away, big boss!"

Satan groans. Don't call me that...

"This forest. The grass. The beach. Everything's all black and dead. What happened while I was gone? Why is Earth such a shithole now?"

Barbatos's excitement vanishes. "Ohh, that. Yeah. Angels call it the Blight. We demons've been out killing everything we can to take their souls. It makes us stronger. I'm almost a Lord, ya know!"

Satan raises an eyebrow. "A Lord? I don't follow."

"Man, you've been outta the loop. Yeah, there's a whole ranking system now. The top demon leaders call themselves Emperors; then there are Dukes, Barons, Lords, and Grunts."

"Yeah? So you're not even a Lord yet, pipsqueak?"

Steam pours from Barbatos's ears. "Tch! Give it time, nyeh! I've killed so many humans; you wouldn't even believe it! The little shits spit out so many spawnlings that we can't keep up! It won't take long before I gain enough souls to become a Lord! Just you wait and see!"

Satan nods along. "Humans, you said? What do they look like?"

"Like us, but with dark skin, no horns, and they talk like idiots. Total morons!"

Satan's thoughts turn inward. Those primitives I met before fighting Poseidon... they must be the humans Barbatos is referring to. Hmm.

Out loud, Satan says, "I've met them already. They seemed incredibly weak."

"Oh yeah, totally," Barbatos replies, nodding along like he owns the conversation. "They're total pushovers. Even Agares can take them out, and that guy's in bad shape. The stupid fleshbags practically kill themselves if you look at 'em the wrong-"

Satan interrupts Barbatos. "Hold on; you said 'Agares?' He's alive?"

Barbatos frowns. "Hm? Yeah. Why? Did you think he died?"

"No... but I wasn't sure. Raphael told me he killed all of the demons. Is Nerissa alive? Did she make it out of Heaven?!" Satan's eyes turn frantic. He turns to face Barbatos and grabs the little guy by his shoulders. "Is she safe?!"

The demon looks at me in surprise. "Well, yeah. She, Belial, 'n Lucifer saved Bael and Diablo. Everyone thought you died. Oh man, the looks on their faces are going to be so hilarious when you come strolling in!"

Barbatos pulls away from me and continues walking. He starts spouting off about how everyone will praise him for finding Satan and helping us kill the mighty Poseidon, but Satan's eyes lose focus, and he stops listening. Several sensations of joy and relief wash over him as Satan takes a few moments to thank whatever dark gods might exist for Nerissa's safety.

His feelings for Nerissa surprise me. Satan never seemed especially close to her, but then again, perhaps lying limbless in purgatory gave him a moment of respite to think about his priorities and who mattered most to him.

Satan rubs his face. Nerissa... Diablo... Agares... everyone's alive! All of them! I... I can't believe it.

"Yo, Satan!" Barbatos pipes up, drawing Satan's attention from his thoughts. "What're you doin' just standing around! C'moooon already!"

Barbatos's shrill voice makes Satan clench his teeth. Well, there's at least one little demon bastard I wish had died.

With a shake of his head, Satan floats over and walks beside Barbatos once again.

"Sorry. I got lost in thought. Let's go back to that Blight thing you mentioned before. What is it?"

Barbatos shrugs. "I dunno. We killed the animals and took their souls. Soon, the forests started dying."

Satan's gaze turns skeptical. "You killed the animals? Which ones?"

"All of 'em! Birds, wolves, deer, cave bears, anything in our path! That's why demons are so strong, now!"

"You're kidding. Is the entire Earth dead? All of it?!"

Barbatos shakes his head. "Nah, but it might be, soon. I dunno. There are still lots of animals in the areas the angels and Titans protect."

Satan breathes a sigh of relief. Bloody devils. I left for a couple of millennia, and the demons turned into crazed planet-devouring gluttons. Don't these idiots realize that if Earth dies, we will, too? Who wants to live on a hunk of black dirt?!

Several minutes pass as Satan silently grumbles to himself about the stupidity of demonkind. He and Barbatos push further into the dead forest, and eventually, Barbatos stops before a humongous boulder, easily ten times the size of both of us.

"Oy! We're here, big boss! Looky, look!"

Satan crosses his arms. "Huh? What's so important about this bigass rock?"

Barbatos smirks. "It's hiding the entrance to our lair. Watch! Nyehehe!"

With a cringy cackle, the little demon throws his weight against the rock and pushes. Despite his tiny size, he surprises me by easily shoving the one-ton stone a few feet forward, exposing a hole underneath it. The shaft extends five-feet down and ends in a sloped pathway which heads deeper underground.

Barbatos gestures to me. "C'mon, big boss! I'll take you to the others."

Satan nods. "Not bad. Angels would never think to look here. Alright, let's head inside."

We hop into the opening and pull the rock back into its original position. Darkness engulfs us, but demons possess incredible night vision, allowing them to see without any trouble. Satan creates a ball of flame in his palm to light the way, making Barbatos look at us in astonishment. "Oh, wow! You're a fire-manipulator?"

Satan shrugs. "In a way, sure."

Barbatos nods. "Fire-types are super cool! Other than the Sunshine Brothers, we've only got a bunch of Burner grunts working for us. We need some better fire-types to cook those chickens alive!"

Satan purses his lips. "I'm not opposed."

"Yeah, yeah! Wow, it's so awesome to have you back, Satan! I bet you're gonna shake things up! We need a guy like you to straighten shit out."

Satan rolls his eyes as we descend further into the underground tunnel systems. "You talk a lot, squirt."

"What can I say, big boss? I've got tons of wisdom to share!"

"Wisdom. Mmm. Yes, that's it, for sure."

"I knew you'd understand! Nyehehe!"

* * *

Several minutes pass. Soon, we arrive in what I assume are the main levels of the demon's underground lair. Dozens of grunts, scythers, and other variant demons pass us. What surprises me most is that the majority of the demons I see are female. Very few males roam the halls. Given Satan's nudity and his surprisingly well-endowed status, most of the women do a double-take before continuing on their merry way, a slight pep in their step.

"What's with all the broads?" Satan asks. "Not that I'm complaining, but there are an awful lot of tits shakin' down here. What, are all the guys fighting the angels up top or somethin'?"

For once, Barbatos's expression shifts to something more akin to worry. "Well, err... not quite. There've ah, been some changes while you were gone."

"Uh-huh. Like what?"

Barbatos reaches back and scratches his hair. "Uh. Things and stuff. Lucifer will tell ya."

"Lucifer? Why her?"

Hardly has Satan asked the question before a demoness with three eyes rounds the corner. Lucifer, as out of the ordinary as ever, aims her forehead's eye at Barbatos. "I knew I detected filth entering my lair. What are you doing here? I told you never to come back."

Satan's eyes widen. Holy shit! Did Lucifer's tits double in size since I last saw her?!

Barbatos flinches, unaware of the thoughts running through Satan's mind. "Aw, c'mon! I brought a f-friend, lady! Ain'tcha glad to see your old buddy old pal alive?"

He gestures to me. Lucifer's third eye swivels to my face before the other two. Her breath catches. "Bloody hell, Belial! That isn't funny. Stop messing with this pathetic grunt and get back to work."

Satan frowns. "Belial? What are you on about, Lucy? Don't you recognize me?"

Lucifer's expression darkens. "You're not funny, succubus. Get Barbatos out of my lair and send him back to Valac where he belongs."

Satan's annoyance rises. "I ain't Belial, you daft cunt! I'm- hold on, Valac? He's alive, too?!"

Several seconds pass. Lucifer doesn't reply.

When she does, her voice cracks. "For the last... the last time, Belial. Knock it off. Even for you, such dark humor isn't-"

"Fucking devils, woman!" Satan bellows at her, startling the other demonesses nearby. "It's me, Satan! Do I need to beat some bloody sense into you?!"

One of our Vectors lashes out at Lucifer. Before it can make contact, her third eye swivels to face it. She vanishes, and it smashes into the wall behind where she was standing.

Lucifer reappears behind me. "Impossible! You can't be Satan! He died two thousand years ago! What sort of trickery is this?!"

Satan spins to face her. When did Lucy become so fast? I barely managed to follow her with my eyes.

Out loud, he says, "I didn't die, you fat sow. Raphael cut off my limbs and trapped me in another dimension. I only escaped a few hours ago."

Lucifer's third eye scans us from top to bottom, over and over. "Everything is the same. Every inch of you. Unbelievable. If you're a fake, you're the best I've ever seen. An angel spy? A Titan? No. They wouldn't take such a risk, even if it meant the possibility of eliminating me. But... if you're the real deal... the real Satan..."

Barbatos nods excitedly. "Lucifer! It's Satan! I swear! Me'n him took out Poseidon all by ourselves! You should've seen it! I was all like, wham, and then Satan crushed his head like whatchaaaw! It was sick!"

"Quiet, you," Lucifer hisses at Barbatos. "I don't want to hear a word from one of Valac's lackeys. Your lies burn like poison."

Confusion spills out of Satan's mind and across his face. The Devil scratches his head and gazes at Lucifer with a perplexed expression. "Huh? You and Valac ain't talking to each other? Devils. A fella leaves for a few months, and everything turns upside-down."

Lucifer's lip twitches. "Everyone knows you died. Your story is the least believable tall tale I've heard in centuries. Can you prove your identity?"

Satan jerks his thumb back toward his Vectors. "You can see these, can't you?"

"I can," Lucifer replies. "What are they?"

"Haven't you seen 'em before? I used 'em to fight that Titan pup and his lady while you fought Uriel. Maybe you weren't paying attention."

Lucifer furrows her brow. She concentrates and forces herself to dig up ancient memories from thousands of years before. "Mmm. Possibly. My third eye's perception has grown ten times more acute over the last several centuries, the result of my ascension to the rank of Emperor. I don't recall Satan having eight aetherial limbs, but my memory might be failing me."

"Devils. Stop talkin' about me in the third-person, dingus," Satan says. "I am Satan, whether your empty head wants to believe it or not. I ain't much for hittin' a broad, but if I need to knock a little sense into ya..."

Lucifer's expression darkens. "One thing is for sure. You talk like Satan. You have the same, crass attitude. Continue badmouthing me at your peril. I am the mightiest demoness on Earth. If you insult me again, I'll rip your head off and shove it where the sun doesn't shine."

Satan and Lucifer stare each other down. The Devil crosses his arms and stands relaxed, confident. The triple-eyed demoness holds both hands at her side loosely, but her body language reveals tense shoulders and a clenched gut.

She's afraid. Satan isn't.

Satan smirks. "You haven't changed a bit, Lucy. And, now that I think about it, I've just remembered the best way to confirm my identity."

"Oh?" Lucifer replies, her voice a whisper. "And what might that be?"

The corners of Satan's mouth tighten. He points at his feet. "Kneel."

"I beg your par-? Guh?!"

The demoness suddenly lurches forward. Compelled by the binding power of Satan's Soul Contract, she falls to her knees and prostrates herself before him.

"W-what?! No! I refuse! Stop! Why can't I control my body?!"

Satan chuckles. "Because, sweetie. You signed your soul away to the Devil. Don't worry. I ain't gonna abuse you or anything like that. You can stand, now."

As if an anvil had fallen off her back, the demoness lurches up and jumps to her feet. The shakiness in her legs turns into frantic trembling.

"S-Satan? It's really... it's really you?!"

"Damn straight it is."

Barbatos claps his hands eagerly. "Nyehehe! Incredible, big boss! You made Lucifer obey you! That's amazing! You're the best!!"

Satan flicks his gaze to the little runt. "Shut up. That's an order."

Satan's words activate the soul contract binding Barbatos as well, causing the young Grunt's body to seize up. Barbatos opens his mouth to protest, but it slams shut, biting his tongue in the process. The grunt gurgles in surprise and grabs his face, barely managing to pull his tongue back in his mouth. He tries to force his jaw open, but nothing he does works.

Lucifer, still shaken, forces a smile. "A-at least your contract has... some practical use."

She glares at Barbatos. "Leave, or I'll tell your brother you decided to visit. I'm sure he'd be delighted to see you."

Barbatos goes pale. He glances at me with a guilty expression, then turns around and shuffles back the way we came.

Lucifer stares at me with her two lower eyes, but her third follows Barbatos for a while before it flicks back to me. "I can't say I'm happy to see you, Satan. I've had things running smoothly for the last several centuries. If you're planning to take over, you'd damn well better not ruin my operation."

Satan rests his hands on his hips. "Are you responsible for that Blight on the surface?"

"No. That is Valac's doing. His voracious appetite for souls... his transformation of the male demons into crazed, bloodthirsty killers... I opposed him and eventually splintered off into a separate demon faction with most of the women and some of the men. Even so, Valac's might substantially overshadows ours. I've had to try some... unconventional tactics to put us on equal footing with him."

"How so?"

The demoness glances at my exposed waist, then back to my face. "Before that, let's get you some pants. Come with me. We can chat in my throne room."

Lucifer turns and struts away. Satan follows after her. "Throne room? Damn. Someone's been getting big in the britches."

"Hardly," Lucifer mutters as she sucks air through her teeth. "You haven't a clue how dire our situation is. Soon, you'll understand."

It takes us a half-hour of walking through various tunnels and passages before we arrive at Lucifer's throne room. Along the way, we pass goblins, orcs, and a wide variety of other monsters. Having never seen them before, Satan fires off various questions, and Lucifer tells him about the expansion of her territory and the existence of Valac's worms.

"Valac gives his minions the ability to take the souls of any being they kill. That, in turn, empowers them far beyond the limits of their starting abilities. Several of Valac's top generals hold impressive strength, enabling them to fight on par with the angels."

We round a corner and head toward one particularly bright room, where dozens of torches illuminate its interior.

A drop of sweat runs down Satan's back. "So, Valac's demons can take the souls of those they kill. Can they use their victim's abilities?"

Lucifer frowns. "No. Why?"

Satan shrugs. "Just asking."

Samael appears in my thoughts. "Fascinating. Valac seems to have spread abilities similar to thine among all thy fellow demons. However, thy abilities still eclipse theirs."

Satan ignores the Archangel. "Lucy, you mentioned creating goblins and orcs. Why bother? What use do you have for such weak creatures?"

We enter Lucifer's throne room. The walls, barren and hastily dug out perhaps a year before, offer little for our eyes to examine. It seems built for utility, not for looks. Even the so-called 'throne' is little more than a block of dirt for someone to sit on.

Before Lucifer can answer our question, Satan's eyes swivel to face a dozen terrifying wolf-like creatures laying together in a semi-circle. Each one, black as the night, possesses fifty reptilian eyes, a mouth filled with steak knives for teeth, and claws big enough to rip bears in half. Their hairy bodies stand out from the brown walls like shadows splotched against the floor.

I recognize them immediately, but only thanks to Phoebe's descriptions from the bestiaries she read to me many years ago.

"What the fuck are those?!" Satan yelps. "Lucy, are you SEEING these things?!"

She nods. "Don't mind my little puppies. They won't hurt a fly... unless I ask them to."

Satan's face pales. "They're horrifying. Why would you create such disgusting-"

"Don't talk about my Hellhounds in such a manner," Lucifer says, giving me the stink-eye. She walks over to one and pets its head. The hound growls softly at her, but its tone is that of a child greeting its mother. Lucifer takes several seconds to stroke two long, black horns growing out of its skull before walking over and giving the same affection to each of the other Hellhounds. "As to your first question, I created the goblins to dig burrows for our people, while I created the orcs to fight humans."

Satan keeps his distance from the pack of Hellhounds. They, in turn, lay lazily on their sides and flop around, but never take their eyes off us. "Yeah? Why make orcs to fight humans? Can't you kill 'em yourself?"

"Of course," Lucifer replies. She struts across the room, grabs a leathery hide hanging on the wall, and tosses it to me. "Cover yourself with this. The humans are a minor nuisance. Unlike Valac's troops, mine cannot grow stronger by killing humans. However, we mustn't allow humans to grow in number. They offer their spiritual energy to the angels, empowering them further and making our struggle that much harder."

"Pft," Satan scoffs and wraps the hide around his waist, covering his exposed demonhood. "What energy? The ones I met were weak enough that I killed 'em by accident."

"Aye. The humans lack any magical ability, but en-masse, their minuscule energy reserves can add up to tremendous amounts of mana for the angels. Already, tens of millions of the fleshbags roam Earth's surface. They reproduce at alarming rates, and their intelligence appears to be rising over time. Before, they would merely scream and run when we attacked them. Now, several humans can work together to take out a demon grunt. They might not be a problem in the present, but in time..."

The demoness trails off. Satan watches as her three eyes gloss over. Her focus shifts internally to some unknown memories, leaving us to stand and twiddle our thumbs.

"Uh huh? So, what, are the humans a threat to us?"

"I don't know," Lucifer mutters. "Perhaps not now. But, combined with the power of the Titans and the slowly-ramping power of the angels, we might face extinction, despite all our struggles."

Satan's expression darkens. "I see. So there's a time limit hanging over our people's heads. If we allow humans to continue whelping spawnlings, the angels will grow unstoppable over time. What is Valac doing about them?"

Lucifer crosses her arms, smushing them between both sets of her breasts. "He's thinning the herd. I don't know how many humans his forces have killed, but they number in the millions. The problem is that he isn't making a dent. He's allowing them to breed."

"Huh? How so?" Satan asks.

"Simple. Valac has his demons target the men, not the women. The women continue producing offspring while Valac's grunts reap the souls of the males. This empowers him, but it doesn't slow their birthrates in the slightest. We're dealing with creatures that whelp four and five spawnlings at the same time per female. Their increases are exponential. They're keeping up with my Broodmothers."

Satan nods. He glances at the Hellhounds for a moment, but his fear lessens noticeably after they close their eyes and fall asleep. "Damn. A lot changed while I was gone. Who are Valac's generals?"

"He has several. Most noteworthy among them is someone I'm certain you'll be familiar with. Nerissa. Your former lover."

Satan's jaw drops. "What?! She's working with Valac?! No way! She knows I hate him!"

"Aye. However, I'm not certain she has a choice. I believe Valac implanted one of his worms inside of her. He did so for me as well... but I burned it out."

"You can do that?"

Lucifer nods. "I scorch them from the bodies of any demons who join. Valac has a tight hold on his servants, but some break the conditioning and convert to my way of thinking. So far, Nerissa has not demonstrated any interest in joining us."

Satan furrows his brow. "Our situation seems worse than I imagined. We need to hit the humans hard and take 'em out before the angels become unstoppable."

Lucifer shakes her head. "It isn't that simple, Satan. The situation is infinitely more complex than you can imagine. Titans protect humanity while the angels seek out our burrows. The reason I have goblins hollowing out my lair is because I can't spare the demonpower otherwise. In the last hundred years, Uriel has found us three times and hit our dens with earthquakes. More importantly, her powers continue to increase. The last one nearly leveled a mountain. I believe she is using her seismic powers to detect our tunnels. Our current lair is the deepest one yet, but if our bad luck continues, she will find us again."

"Devils," Satan groans. "You're giving me nothing but bad news, Lucy. How's a guy supposed to plan the destruction of his enemies when things look this bad?"

Lucifer purses her lips. She flashes a grin at me, one comprised of hundreds of serrated shark-teeth. "Oh, Satan. After everything I've told you, I do have some good news. You haven't heard from Diablo and Bael yet, have you?"

My eyes widen. "Aw, shit! Deebs! I forgot about him! Where is that little bastard?"

Turning away, Lucifer's eye swivels to stare at the side of the room. Slowly, it scans the surface, and I realize she's looking not at the wall, but through it. She examines the entirety of her underground lair before settling on one specific point. Lucifer narrows her third eye for a moment, then returns her gaze to me.

"Give him a few minutes. Try not to gawk. Diablo and Bael aren't the same demons they once were."

"You called them over?"

"I did. My eye sees all and tells all."

With a satisfied smirk, Lucifer wanders over to her 'throne' and plops down. She leans against the wall and pets a hellhound laying beside her.

* * *

Ten minutes pass. Satan leans against the entryway, allowing his thoughts to bounce around in his head.

Valac leads an army of demons. Somehow, that little bag of bones has become so powerful that even Lucy is afraid of him. The last time I fought Valac, I wiped the floor with him. However, while I got stuck in the Cosmic Realm, he worked himself to the bone gaining power over our people.

Unacceptable. I'm the top dog, the alpha wolf. No way am I gonna let some creepy skeleton take over. He's even got Nerissa working for him. Gah! I can't believe Lucy got her ass whipped by that one-trick pony. Like I always say, I can't let some broad take charge, or half the world will end up dead and black.

Satan shakes his head. Devil's sake. I've got a giant mess to clean up.

Heavy footsteps in the hall catch Satan's attention. He raises his gaze and drops his jaw as two massive, muscled demons saunter toward us. "What the-?! Bael? Deebs?! What happened to you two?!"

Diablo, now a foot taller than when I last saw him, sports flowing black robes, a red and yellow cape, and two small piercings through the sides of his nostrils. His hairy arms and sharp fingernails give him an animalistic look, like a cross between a gorilla and a wolverine. He widens his eyes as he spots me. "Seven Devils! Satan? Is that you?!"

Bael, the same height as when I last saw him, has put on even more muscle than last time. His meaty fists and thick biceps, combined with wearing only underwear and nothing else, give him the appearance of a professional wrestler. Several skulls rest on his waist, along with bones of small animals carved into shoulder-pads. I get the impression they're meant more to give him an intimidating aura than for his protection.

"Well, shit. Ain't that a treat? Satan the Devil, back from the dead! Haw!" Bael walks over and slaps Satan on the back, nearly knocking the wind out of him. "When Lucy told us to pop over, I thought it was gonna be another boring job, but lookit this! It's our lucky day!"

Satan grins from ear to ear. "How've you losers been? I went to all that trouble to save your sorry asses, only to get trapped by Raphael in some alternate dimension. You'd better've made the most of my sacrifice, chums."

Diablo's expression sobers up. "Yes. We did what we could. It's been rough without you, but my girl has worked hard to build a better future for our people."

Pushing past me, Diablo walks over to Lucifer's side and rests a hand on her shoulder. "You found Satan, eh? That eye came in handy once again. Where was he?"

To my surprise, Lucifer doesn't push Diablo's hand away. Instead, she flicks her eyes up to meet his. "I didn't find him. Barbatos did. Led him to us, as well."

Diablo's expression sours. "What? You mean... Valac ordered him to take Satan here?"

"Most likely," Lucifer says. She rests her hand on Diablo's in a sickeningly romantic gesture that sends pins and needles down my arms. I don't know when, but at some point, it seems she stopped rebuffing Diablo and fell for his advances. "I have to wonder what Valac was hoping to accomplish."

Diablo leans down and kisses Lucifer's hair, then turns to me. "So, Satan, what happened? Where've you been all this time?"

Satan clears his throat. "Ahm, well, it's a long story."

He spends the next fifteen minutes explaining what happened during the attack on Heaven. Raphael's portal magic, the Cosmic Realm, and severing his limbs. Interestingly, Satan doesn't mention regenerating from death. He instead states that he healed himself by regrowing his limbs once he discovered healing magic inside himself.

Lucifer raises an eyebrow. "So you only spent one month inside the Cosmic Realm, yet well over two thousand years passed for us, here?"

"Bit longer than a month," Satan says. "If Raphael hadn't told me he killed all the demons, I might have escaped sooner. You've gotta understand, Raphael dumped ashes in front of me and said they were all that was left of Valac. What was I supposed to think?"

Lucifer stands up and walks over to me. "You should have known he was lying. How could you fall for such obvious deceit? The old man is nothing if not a slippery snake."

Satan crosses his arms. "Maybe. He sounded sincere at the time. I think he believed the demons were all dead."

Bael punches his palm. "Bahaha! He probably did! Don't you guys 'member? Valac faked his death! I bet Raphael took the bait. So much for being the 'wisest' angel!"

"That's a possibility too," Diablo says. He stands beside Lucifer and wraps one arm around her shoulder. "All that matters is you're back, Satan. We missed you. With you here, we might be able to break Valac's stranglehold of power. It's high time we saved Earth from his Blight."

Lucifer taps her lip. "Satan. There's something you should know. Valac has a... special ability. An aura. It encompasses the entire Earth. Most likely, he detected your arrival and sent Barbatos to find you. I'm curious as to why he would have Barbatos bring you here, though."

Bael reaches over and squeezes my shoulder. "Ain't it obvious? That boney-bitch is scared! Satan's the only demon who's ever slapped him around like a wet rag! Valac is probably quakin' in his boots. He wanted to make sure Satan didn't come to his den!"

Satan narrows his eyes. "You know what, Bael? I think you're right. Valac is scared of me. He should be. He's ruining Earth. I never did like his attitude... maybe I should pay him a visit."

"Ooh," Bael says with a smile. "I've gotta see this. Why don't all of us go? I'd like to see what Agares is up to."

"Agares?" Satan asks. "Aw, c'mon. Don't tell me he's working for Valac, too."

Lucifer's eyes tilt to the right, avoiding my gaze. She shifts her feet guiltily. "That might be my fault. It isn't that Agares sympathizes with Valac, but rather, that he cannot stand me."

Diablo sucks air through his teeth. "Sss... oh, boy. Not this again."

"What? Did something happen?" Satan asks.

"I'd rather not go into the details," Lucifer mutters. "I wanted to heal Diablo. I was, perhaps, slightly too over-zealous. I tried to copy Agares' regenerative reptilian abilities. My experiment succeeded, but..."

Diablo's hand falls away from Lucifer's shoulder. He shakes his head and averts his gaze. "Poor Agares... he wasn't the same after... after the..."

Even Bael's enthusiasm wanes. "Don't beat yourself up over it, boss. Look at all the good Lucy's done with Agares' powers. At least we didn't hurt him for no reason, right? All that shit's in the past."

Satan pauses to examine each of the three demons. His eyes flick from one to the next.

Whatever happened, it must have pissed Agares off. I always thought we'd be good friends. Maybe I can talk to him... see what's up.

Satan shakes the worries from his head. "Hey, hey, cheer up, guys. Cripes. Nothin' worse than a bunch of mopey dopes. I'm going to have a little chat with Valac. If you wanna come, get your shit in gear."

Lucifer shakes her head. "I'll stay. I have my lair to run."

"Diablo pats her shoulder. "I'll stay, too. Bael, you go and be Satan's bodyguard. Show him your skills."

Bael's distant expression vanishes. He claps his hands together, sending a shockwave through the air that rattles our teeth. "Hoho, damn right! Aw, devils, Satan! You don't know how powerful I am, do ya? Have I got a show for you!"

Satan rolls his eyes. "Aye. Show me your moves, big guy. Lucy, Deebs, I'll be back soon. Hold down the fort while I'm gone."

Lucifer scowls. "I've been doing just fine without your orders."

"Atta girl, haha," Satan replies with a chuckle. "Let's go kick some ass, Bael."

"Hell yeah!"

The two of us turn and leave, heading toward the surface world. As we do, Satan frowns.

Hell?

Part 128: Prepare for Trouble

My next host is a massive Titan, one who, while seated on a throne, towers over the rest of his species. My host sits in a vast, underground cavern lit by thousands of torches and decorated with lavish tapestries and finely-crafted statues. To my right sits a Titaness dressed in plain grey robes, one only slightly shorter than me, while a twenty-foot-tall Titan bows at my feet.

"It is with great displeasure, King Zeus, that I bring news of my father's passing. I, Prince Neptune of the Atlanteans, have arrived to tell you that Poseidon fell in battle against an unknown adversary. We found his corpse on the shores of the western sea, nearby a field of blood swirling in the ocean's waters."

My host, Zeus, squeezes his marble throne with incredible force, shattering the beautiful stonework on its arms. The minerals compressed in his palm release a violent crack in the air that makes everyone present wince.

"My brother... dead? Who. Who killed him?"

Zeus's voice rumbles around the room like thunder, bouncing off the reinforced granite walls ten times before fading. Despite forcing calmness into his voice, every word boils with fire and brimstone.

Neptune rises to his full height of twenty feet. He stands barely at my chest's level and puts on an apologetic expression. "I am sorry, uncle. We do not know. We suspect his murderer was a demon, but..."

"A demon."

Zeus narrows his eyes. Ice creeps into his voice.

"You expect me to believe... my little brother... fell at the hands of a filthy bloodskin?"

Neptune pales. He glances to my left, where Hercules leans against the side of my throne. The last time I saw Hercules, he stood a few feet shorter than Gabriel, but even after two thousand years of growth and advancing to a height of fifteen feet, the young Titan still appears minuscule compared to Zeus.

He barely reaches the top of his father's knee.

"We are doing our best to find my father's killer. However, no Titans witnessed his death, nor did any angels. His head was... it was... crushed into pulp. We could scarcely identify him. Were it not for his Atlantean armor, we might have assumed he was one of the surface-dwelling Titans."

Zeus inhales sharply. "The only demon who could kill my brother would be Valac. However... never in all the years since his arrival has he done performed an act as barbaric as crushing a Titan's head. No... such an action..."

Zeus turns his gaze toward Hercules. The young Titan stares at us. A look of smoldering anger burns beneath his surface.

"Aye, father. How could we forget? Megara perished similarly. I thought I had moved past her death... but now..."

Zeus reaches down and lays a hand on his diminutive son's shoulder. Only three of his fingers manage to rest comfortably. "Satan the Devil. Raphael told us that bastard died, long ago. He must have returned from the Great Beyond."

Hercules balls his hands into fists. "That red rat. First, my wife. Now, my uncle. I... I wish... to tear him limb from limb..."

Zeus nods. He pulls away from his son, pushes against the arms of his throne, and lifts himself into a standing position. Even at his full height of forty feet, his head comes nowhere close to touching the ceiling. It appears to have been carved out by and for even bigger ancient beings.

Behind me, Zeus's wife touches our left hand. "My love. Don't be brash. Our numbers are insufficient to mount an attack against demonkind."

"I know, Hera," Zeus mutters. He sweeps his gaze across the fifty other warriors in the room, each one wearing little more than rags to cover their private bits, be they male or female. "We've suffered too many losses since the demons first appeared. Now, of those among my generation, only you and I remain. Poseidon was my last remaining brother. Demeter, Dionysius, Chiron... all of them, dead. All fell at the hands of the Grim Reaper and his minions."

Slowly, deliberately, Zeus turns and reaches toward two straight, narrow poles resting against his throne. Each iron implement bears no distinctive markings. They are weapons crafted entirely for function, without any aesthetic value. Taking one in each hand, Zeus exhales. A sensation of energy courses from the tips of his ears down to his weapons. Sparks of electricity crackle against the rods, warming them to the touch.

"We cannot live in fear of these bloodskins anymore. We cannot hide in our halls of dirt and stone. We must take the battle to them. We must remind them why the angels once feared us more than death itself. Valac thinks himself an unstoppable killing machine. His forces choke the Earth and wipe out all life in their path. If we do not mount a full resistance now, we may not manage such a feat in the future."

Hera pulls away. She maintains a calm expression, but beneath the surface, I notice twinges of emotion threatening to bubble up. "If we attack the demons, Valac may claim more lives than ever before. We won't be able to protect ourselves in an open battlefield. You know as well as I the long reach of his scythe."

Zeus's expression darkens. He lowers his eyes to the rod in his right hand. "I will not put my people's lives in danger. No, instead, I will face the demons alone. I will test their strength myself. Long has it been since I battled on the frontlines. Long have I ached to correct the sins of the bloodskins."

Hercules balks. The young Titan tugs at my robe. "Father! You cannot go out there alone. If you fall, who will lead us? I am too young. The battle for the throne will devastate our ranks."

"If I fall..." Zeus mutters. He chuckles wryly. "Have you forgotten, boy? I slew Cronus and earned the title of Titan Feller. I wiped his laziness from our ranks. It is my power that secured the right to his domain for all of us. Among the Titans living today, none are my equal. Valac knows this. That is why he has never once dared to step foot inside my domain. Even now, the Reaper listens. His presence ripples through this chamber. He senses my anger, my rage. He hears my words, and deep inside those cracked bones... he trembles."

Zeus raises his eyes to look at the doorway.

"Valac. Satan. I owe both of you a blood debt. You've killed my brothers, my sisters, my children, and their children as well. Your terror will not bind us any longer. I will come for you... and you will fall. Do you hear me, Grim Reaper?"

Zeus falls silent. Nobody in the room responds. However, the faintest shift in the air makes Zeus raise his chin.

"Did you feel it? Valac's presence stirred for but a moment. He heard my words."

"My love, don't go," Hera whispers. "I know you're a proud man, but even for you, this is reckless."

"I will come with you, father," Hercules says. "My strength may not equal yours, but I owe Satan in the same way you owe Valac. He murdered my wife. His harlot killed my sisters. Please, allow me to follow you into battle."

Zeus flicks his eyes down to his son. Despite Hercules' tiny stature compared to his father, he appears to have grown substantially since the last time I saw him. He now stands slightly taller than the Archangel of Power, at fifteen feet in height.

It takes several seconds of internal debate before Zeus finally nods. "Very well. You are the mightiest among your generation. I am proud to call you my son. Make sure to stand strong and show no fear in the face of death."

Hera jumps to her feet. "Zeus, no! Do not bring our son with you! Please, I beg you! I cannot stand the thought of losing my husband and son on the same day!"

Zeus turns to her. His expression softens. "Hera, do you believe in your heart of hearts the demons stand a chance... against my power? My speed?"

The Titaness frowns. "...No."

"Then there is little reason to worry. No matter how numerous the enemy legions, their strength means nothing in the face of an adversary they cannot strike. Not only will I prevail, but so, too, shall our son. Come, boy!"

Zeus turns away from Hera and saunters toward the door. Neptune, the son of Poseidon, steps aside and wrings his hands. "Uncle, what am I to do? Satan killed my father. Should I not come along as well to avenge his death?"

Zeus smiles. "You have a stout heart, nephew. Leave the Devil and his cohorts to me. I want you to return to Atlantis and take over as their king. Your people need a ruler now more than ever. It was Poseidon's trident that prevented Valac from attacking my seafaring cousins. Do not allow the Reaper to strike, now that your father has fallen."

A look of recognition appears on the young Titan's face. Neptune bows stiffly toward his uncle, indicating his overwhelming respect for the reigning Titan King. "Thank you, uncle. I will do as you say!

The Atlanteans give thanks to your display of courage and might."

As Hercules falls into step behind me, Zeus smirks.

"Heh. It takes little courage for a giant to crush an ant beneath his thumb."

Satan and Bael stomp through the labyrinthine catacombs of Lucifer's lair. As they near the surface, Satan nudges Bael. "So, uh, I noticed you and a few other demons dropping the word 'hell' a bunch. What's up with that?"

Bael reaches up to shift aside the huge boulder leading to the lair. "Damn. You're more outta the loop than I thought. You don't know?"

"Nuh-uh," Satan replies. He watches as Bael lightly presses a finger to the boulder and flicks it aside, sending the one-ton rock skidding several dozen feet away. "Sounds like everyone's using it, though."

"Mhm. It's the name of Lucifer's Lair. We call this place Hell. It's a, uh... an aknuh... aknur..."

Bael pauses for several seconds. He stares at me, eyes glazed over.

"Akruh... fuck it. It's a word where the letters mean something else."

"An acronym?" Satan offers.

"Yeah, yeah! That!" Bael nods as relief washes over his face. "Stupid, bigass fuckin' words. Anyway, it means 'Hugely Evil Lucifer's Lair.' Pretty cool, right?"

Satan raises an eyebrow. "That's the dumbest thing I've ever heard. Who came up with it?"

Bael falters. "Err... well, I mean, uh..."

"Don't tell me it was you."

"Y-yeah... I thought it was good..."

Satan mentally facepalms. "No, no, it's better than I thought. I, err, had to think about it for a moment. Let's get moving, already."

Bael's stupid grin comes roaring back. "Awesome! You had me worried for a second! It's good ta' have someone around who understands my genius."

The big demon jumps up to the surface, and Satan follows by using his vectors to climb the five-foot wall. A minute later, Bael shoves the boulder back into place and leans against it. His eyes swivel to stare out into the forest.

"What's the holdup?" Satan asks. "Let's get a move on."

"Gimme a minute," Bael mutters. "I hafta remember which way Valac's den is. That way? Nah... I don't remember a funny lookin' black tree..."

Satan's eyes glaze over. "Bael. All the trees are black."

"Uh-huh. Duh. What, do you think I'm stupid or somethin'?"

Satan purses his lips. "Perish the thought."

The Devil taps his feet as he waits for his eight-foot-tall cohort to slowly scan the forest, looking for some landmark to identify the path to Valac's den.

"If you'd like, we can ask Lucifer for directions. I'm sure she'd know."

"Nah, nah, screw that," Bael says, waving my concerns away. "Pft. Askin' some broad for help. That'd be pathetic."

"I don't have all day," Satan replies. "If you don't know, I'd rather not waste time heading in the wrong direction."

"Just gimme a minute," Bael grunts. "It'll come to me. I bet it was northeast. That feels right."

"You're facing south."

"That's what I said."

"No. No, it isn't."

Satan groans internally. Devil's sake. I love you, Bael. You're a great guy... but for the love of all that is unholy, you're the thickest demon I know.

A twig snaps in the distance. Satan's heart skips a beat. He whirls to face the noise. Bael doesn't bother.

"Who's there?"

From the shadows of the forest, where sunlight trickles through the canopy, several demonesses creep into view. A familiar woman leads the group, one I know well.

The raven-haired lady blinks in surprise when she sees me. "What? Satan?! Is that you?"

Satan's jaw drops. "Belial! Wow! You're alive, toots! How about that?"

The succubus, dressed in a tigerskin bra and panties, skips over to me. She wraps her arms around Satan and squeals. "Oh my goodness! I can't believe it!! We thought you died! How are you here now?!"

The dozen or so other female demons behind stare at us curiously, apparently unaware of Satan's identity. They probably weren't alive two thousand years ago.

Satan grins and squeezes Belial's ass. "Hot damn. You filled out while I was gone. Me'n Bael are trying to get to Valac's lair. I've been hoping to see Nerissa since I broke out of the Cosmic Realm."

Belial ignores Satan playing grabass. She seems used to random demon guys getting hands-on. After pulling away, her smile turns somber. "Oh, Nerissa? Ahh... my little sister..."

"Something the matter?" Satan asks. "You 'n her not on speaking terms?"

"No... it's not that," Belial says. Her smile flattens out as she plays with a strand of long, black hair. "Well, maybe you haven't heard. Valac's leadership changed a lot of the demon men. Lucifer created a branch sect of demonesses, along with a few of the guys. The males started acting violently under Valac's direction. They got pushy, and rude, and um... well, I don't like to talk about it."

Belial fidgets noticeably.

"Ahm. I haven't seen Nerissa in several years. I don't like entering Valac's den. I don't even know if she's still alive."

Satan's jaw drops. "What?! No way. Even for Valac, that's low. Why don't you come with me 'n Bael? We'll protect ya. It ain't right that you haven't seen Nerissa in so long."

"I'm not afraid of the men, Satan," Belial says, flashing a shy smile. "I can beat them up pretty easily. I just don't like the way they look at me. Well, I suppose if they gang up on me like they did... erm..."

A pulse of red shoots through Satan's vision. "What happened? Tell me."

"It was a long time ago," Belial says. She glances at Bael.

I follow her gaze, and Bael nods. "I knocked some heads. That was back when Lucy broke off and made her new group."

"If you're both tryin' to piss me off," Satan mutters, "then you're doin' a damn good job. I didn't know things were that bad. Devils. What happened while I was gone?"

"A lot," Belial murmurs. She doesn't elaborate.

Satan sucks air through his teeth. "Kss. Fine. You stay here, then. Mind at least pointing me 'n Bael in the right direction? This guy doesn't know his head from his ass."

Belial bites her lip. "You shouldn't go, Satan. Even if it's you, Valac's minions are incredibly powerful, and he hates you with a burning passion. Everyone knows how angry he was that he didn't get to kill you himself. He always said the angels robbed him."

"Great. Looks like Valac's gonna get his chance. Which way is his den?"

Satan's curt reply catches Belial off-guard. She wrings her hands together. "Well, it's south of here... much closer to Mount Olympus than it ought to be. You aren't seriously going there, are you? It's dangerous."

Satan reaches over and squeezes Belial's shoulder. "Don't worry about me, toots. Worry about Valac. That poor guy's days are numbered. Hehe."

Bael punches his palm. "Ohhh, right! South! I knew it was that way!"

"No, you didn't."

Bael shakes his head. "Nope. You got me."

Belial smiles sweetly. "Well, um, take care of yourself, Satan. I'm glad you're back! We need someone to take Valac down a peg or two."

Satan flashes a grin at the succubus. "Damn straight. We'll be back later. Thanks for the directions."

"Mhm!" Belial beams sunshine at me. Before we can turn away, the demoness leans forward and pecks Satan on the cheek. "Pass that on to Nerissa for me, will you?"

"I'll pass on a lot more than that," Satan says, licking his lips. "More than you'd expect."

* * *

Bael and I head out in the direction Belial indicated. As we walk, Bael nudges me. "Hey bub, Belial's lookin' pretty fine. If you become the leader of demonkind, why limit yourself to one broad? Get one for each arm. They're sisters, ya know."

Satan raises an eyebrow. "Not a bad idea. Dunno. I like to think of myself as a one-girl-at-a-time kind of guy, though."

"Pft," Bael snorts. "Bitches can't keep their hands off me. I nail 'em five at a time. You oughta work harder on your sex drive."

"I'm too busy for that," Satan says with a shrug. His eyes darken. "Besides. I have bigger priorities. I owe a certain old man the beating of a lifetime."

Bael nods. "Raphael?"

"Yup. When I'm through with that flappy cunt, he'll beg for a dirt nap."

"Nice. I'll hold him down for ya. You give him the ol' one-two."

Satan slugs Bael in the shoulder. "You always know how to make me smile."

Bael and Satan stomp through the blackened forest for hours on end. The dreary color scheme of the undergrowth, the barren treetops, and the incessant crunching of dead foliage beneath their feet combine to suck the life out of both demons the further they travel from Lucifer's Lair.

"Cripes. How much further?" Satan asks. Neither he nor Bael has said a word in over an hour.

"I dunno," Bael mutters. He pauses to take a long breath. "I don't remember it bein' this far before. Does it feel like there's a fuckin anvil sittin' on your skull, or izzat just me? I've got one hell of a headache."

Satan sticks his pinkie in his ear and wriggles, then yawns to try and pop his eardrums. "I have noticed this awful sensation pressing against my sinuses. I feel like my senses dulled somewhat after we left the lair. Bloody sin. I'll need a nap if we don't make it to Valac's hideout soon."

Both demons fall silent for a minute before continuing to trudge toward an unknown destination.

Bael clears his throat. "Say, uh, Satan?"

"What?"

"You don't really intend ta' fight Valac, do ya?"

"I haven't made up my mind about that," Satan replies. "On the one hand, he kept demonkind going while I was gone. On the other hand, he turned the men into animals. If he hurt my girl, things are gonna turn pretty dicey."

The Devil sniffles. "Though, if I'm being honest, I don't hold any particular grudge against the skinny skeleton. Compared to how pissed I am at Raphael, my feelings toward Valac are like those of a best friend."

"Shit. You hate the old man that much?"

Satan sucks air through his teeth. "Kss... ohhh, yeah. If only you knew."

Several seconds of silence fill the space between the two demons. Satan flares his nostrils. "Everyone says Valac hates me. Compared to what Raphael did to me, how he left me laying limbless in the dirt... my anger toward Valac is like that of two imps fighting over a bit of grub. It's a bunch of petty crap."

Bael claps his hands together. "Well, shit! Easy peasy! Forgive and forget! Shake his hand and agree to bury the ol' hatchet."

"It isn't that simple. I don't care about old grievances. I have a problem with the actions Valac took while I was gone. This!" Satan sweeps his arms out, gesturing to the blighted forest surrounding us. "This crap. He ruined a perfectly good planet. Fucking idiot. What good is ruling a world of rocks and rust?"

Bael scratches his chin. "It does look pretty nasty."

"No kidding. Anyway, if I see him, I'll try and talk things out. I'm not here to start a civil war."

Satan hesitates. He pauses walking for a moment to stare at Bael meaningfully.

"But. But. If Valac tries anything... if I find out he pulled some shifty shit while I wasn't here... I will shit fire and fury all over him. Understand?"

"Roger," Bael says with a nod. "I'll back you up."

Satan rolls his eyes. "Glad to have you, Bael, but that won't be necessary. No matter how powerful you've become, you can't compare to me."

Bael crosses his arms. "I wouldn't be so sure of that."

Both demons eyeball each other. Satan smirks. "Are you challenging me, boy? You think you can beat me?"

The Devil releases a bit of his aura. Blood-red energy begins to drip from his body. It spills into the air and slowly builds into a flood of mana rushing in all directions.

Bael doesn't flinch. "I probably could, yeah. Lucky for you, I ain't smart enough ta' lead. No way do I wanna be king. Only a dumbass tries to lead a bunch of demons. It's like tryin' ta' corral a buncha kitty-cats with twigs. Impossible."

Satan smirks. He lowers his energy output. "Smart move. Maybe you could beat me. Anything's possible. Unfortunately for you, I'd win eventually, no matter how many times I died."

Bael raises an eyebrow. "Uhh... huh? How would you win if you... died?"

"Let's hope you don't ever find out," Satan says, waving the big guy's concerns away. "We're wasting time. Any idea if we're close yet?"

Bael shrugs. "Dunno. If Artorias had come along, we could use his dirt magic to find Valac's tunnels. I bet we're close, but this whole fuckin' forest looks the same to me."

"Oh? Are you referring to Seismic Sense, perhaps?"

Satan frowns. He furrows his brow deeper after a few moments and stops to ponder something.

Seismic Sense. As I recall, that's a power burrower demons have. Hm. If any of the demons inside me were earth-types, I might have access to their abilities.

The Devil closes his eyes and concentrates. Faces of various demons trapped inside his body appear in his mind's eye. He peruses them, one-by-one, as though he were shopping for clothing at a department store.

Samael bubbles inside our mind, interrupting Satan's thoughts. "Tired, Satan? Need a nap already?"

I'm not napping, dumbass, Satan thinks to himself. Shut up, will ya? Tryin' to think here.

Samael doesn't hear his host's thoughts. "Giving me the silent treatment, eh? Or, perhaps thou art worried thy friend would hear thee speaking to me and think thee insane? In truth, perhaps thou art. My brother's punishment may have been too much for thy mind to bear."

Satan rolls his eyes under his eyelids. What a fuckin' blabbermouth. I'd tell him to shut up, but then I'd have to explain to Bael I wasn't talking to him... that'd be annoying.

The Archangel pesters Satan for another minute or so, but eventually gives up and retreats into his shell. It takes all of Satan's self-control not to breathe a sigh of relief at the blissful silence.

Finally, the Devil opens his eyes. "Found it."

Bael, now slumped forward, also has his eyes closed. He wheezes quietly, inhaling and exhaling in a steady rhythm.

Satan's jaw drops. "Bael! Are- are you asleep?! Wake up!"

"Huh?! Wha-?" Bael jerks his head up and blinks. "Me? Sleep? Nah, no way, haha. That would be, uh, totally uncool. Aw, shit, where'd Belial go?"

"Belial?"

"Yeah! She was just here, pulling down my-"

"Gah! Shut it! I don't want to hear about your indecent dreams!" Satan flails one hand in disgust, forming a tiny physical barrier between himself and the taller demon. "Broodmothers, guide me! Give me a rag to scrub that image from my memories!"

Bael wipes his nose. "Uhh... so what'd you want?"

Satan rubs his face. "Seismic Sense... right! Before I forget; I possess the power of Earth Magic. Give me a moment, and I'll locate Valac's Den."

"Oh, damn. Serious?" Bael's eyes widen. "Is there anything you can't do?"

"Possibly. I'm still figuring out my powers."

With a shrug, Satan performs several hand signs and slaps his palm against the dirt.

Whoomph.

The ground rumbles ever so slightly. The trees closest to us rattle, sending dirt and dust cascading down from their dead branches.

Satan's mind temporarily expands downward. It travels in a spherical pattern, expanding a mile per second until it hits a hollowed-out tunnel amidst the packed dirt. Satan's mind traces it upward until it reaches an opening on Earth's surface.

"There."

The Devil stands and points in a slightly different direction than we were headed before. "A little over three miles that way."

Bael's jaw drops. "Bloody hell! You're awesome! Wow, I can't believe you can do that!"

"Eh, it's a gift," Satan mutters.

From a dragon, he finishes in his thoughts.

* * *

We continue walking, but this time with a pep in our step. As the entrance to Valac's den draws nearer, a sense of ominous foreboding begins to swirl in the air. Bael rubs his arm and looks at me. "Eugh. This place gives me the creeps. Feels like someone's watchin' us."

"They probably are," Satan says. His eyes flick from left to right as he scans for the Grim Reaper. I half-expect Valac to materialize out of thin air and impale Satan when he least expects it.

That doesn't happen.

The two demons arrive in a clearing where the absence of trees appears noticeably different compared to the forest's density from earlier. In the center sits a stump cut cleanly across the top, almost as if someone had chainsawed it and then smoothed its surface down with a sander.

Bael smiles. "Phew. Finally, we're here. It's right under that stump."

"The entrance?"

"Mhm."

Bael and I step into the clearing.

From our left and right, an odd sound, like a mixture between humming and whistling, echoes through the forest.

"♫Ahoo-ahoo, hoho, hoho!♫"

Bael freezes. His eyes widen in terror.

"No... no, it can't be..."

A voice speaks on our right from someone hidden behind a tree. "♫Look who's here, who's come out to play...♫"

From our left, another hidden figure speaks. "♫Someone's come to see master Valac. It must be his birthday!♫"

Bael clutches his head. Cold sweat drips down the back of his neck as he slumps to his knees. "Please, please no... not... not them...!"

From my right, a demon male dressed in a flamingo-pink dress struts out from behind his tree. His poofy fur collar, long black boots, and confident stride instantly wrench Satan's stomach. He twirls his eye-bleedingly bright mink-fur in one hand, almost as though he's trying to seduce us.

"♫I don't know you, mister intruder McGee, but you look like a yummy little morsel, hee-hee-hee!♫"

Satan violently jerks his head to the left. His jaw drops as an equally flamboyant male demon, one dressed in sky blue but wearing an identical getup, steps out from the other tree.

"♫We're not Nerissa; we aren't Valac's little whore. We're the next best thing, his numbers three and four!♫"

Tears fall down Bael's face. "Of... of all the demons Valac could've sent... he had to send... Azazel and Azog... NOOOOOOOO!!!"

The big guy's wail rips through the forest like a freighter's bullhorn booming across the seven seas.

Both of the newcomers hold up their hands and juggle fireballs around, echoing memories of circus acts I saw during my youth.

The pink one bats his eyes at me. "♫Ohoho, I may not recognize you, but I know Bael's cute little face! He's one of my favorite big boys, someone I'd like to embrace!♫"

The other one smiles so hard that sunshine and rainbows shoot out his ass. "♫I know what you mean, little brother, I like him too! He's our favorite visitor, a real cutie poo-poo!♫"

Bael's choked sobs stab me in the heart, over and over.

"Not them... not the Sunshine Brothers... anyone but them!!"

As Azazel and Azog begin to circle us, Satan takes a step back.

Who the devil are these guys?!

Part 129: Make it Double

Recommended Listening

Azazel and Azog dance around us on opposite sides. They clap their hands rhythmically to some inaudible song, hopping and skipping as they summon and disperse fire within their grasp.

"♫C'mon, little cutie, there's no need to cry!♫" The pink one says.

"♫We're not mean; we're a couple of nice guys!♫" The blue one says, adding onto his brother's rhyme.

"♫Dance and clap, sing and play!♫"

"♫Have fun! We'll be here all day!♫"

"♫Hee-hee!♫"

"♫Ho-ho!♫"

The Sunshine Brothers clap their hands together and disperse sparkly fire throughout the air, allowing it to cascade upon the dead grass, where it fizzles into ash.

Satan's jaw slackens as he stands idly and watches them dance around us. "Who are these numbskulls? Bael! Get your ass up."

The big guy chokes back sobs and forces himself to his feet. He bites his lip and suppresses his inner turmoil as best as he can. "It's hopeless. They're... the most annoying demons ever. Shut 'em up, please!"

Satan's eyes flick to the demon dressed in pink. It's now that he notices the name Azazel embroidered in fancy gold lettering across his chest. However, someone has sewn the middle 'a' into the shape of a heart.

That one's probably the older brother Satan thinks to himself.

"Hey, clowns! Knock it off with all that singing and dancing! You're gonna make me throw up!"

From behind us, Azog, the blue demon, stomps his foot. Fire erupts from his boot and launches him over our heads. He pirouettes in midair, lands delicately on his upraised hands, and cartwheels into a standing position beside Azazel. The two of them begin dancing in sync, kicking their legs up, twirling around, and unleashing all sorts of fabulous dance moves. I can't help but be impressed by their movements, even if Satan isn't.

"♫Come on, new guy! You know you love us!♫"

"♫After we take you down, Valac will promote us!♫"

"♫We've got one job, and that's to beat your behind!♫"

"♫It seems that our fates are intertwined!♫"

Their brilliant, sparkling smiles threaten to stop Satan's heart from sheer fabulousness. The poor guy hasn't a clue how to react. "I don't want to beat up a couple of fellas just for dancing. Get out of my way, kids. You don't know who you're messin' with."

Azazel spreads his fingers out in a V-sign. "♫Nope! But it doesn't matter! Once we finish our verses, we'll begin in earnest!♫"

Azog presses his back against his brother's and links their hand together. "♫Our moves are too hot! You're like a frog, boiled in a thermos!♫"

Satan squeezes the bridge of his nose. I can't take this shit — Bael's right. These guys make me want to drill holes in my skull. Everything about them hurts my very being. They're just not right in the head!

Stepping forward, the self-proclaimed King of all Demons takes a menacing stance. "Last warning. Get out of my way, pups. You're starting to piss me off."

"♫Ooh, so scary!~ Look at how his eyes fill with blood!♫"

Azog winks. "♫How about you take a nap in the mud?♫"

Azog, the blue-wearing demon, suddenly pounces at us. Satan's heart skips a beat. Using fire from his boots to boost his speed, Azog clears the ten-foot gap instantly and slaps his palm against our chest.

"Poof! Now we can play with Bael! He's fun to tease!"

"Wh-"

The Devil doesn't get a chance to respond. His eyes slam shut, and his vision turns black.

Our soul flees the realm of the living.

Darkness takes us.

We awaken somewhere between a second and five minutes later to see Bael cowering on the ground, each brother trying to pull him to his feet.

"♫-that he's gone, it's just the three of us!♫"

"♫That's right! We'll dress you real cute; no need to be a wuss!♫"

Satan doesn't move. He closes his eyes and pretends to be dead, even as his mind races.

What the fuck just happened? Azog killed me with a single touch? Impossible. He palmed my chest. That's all! Compared to when Poseidon and Raphael hit me, Azog's attack had no strength behind it whatsoever!

It's... it's as if my soul simply evaporated.

A shudder goes down the Devil's body.

That little blue bitch took me out in one hit. I've got tons of souls to spare, but I can't let attacks like that land anymore.

Satan slams his Vectors into the ground. His eyes bolt open as he pounces to his feet. "Alright. I'm finished playing games, cloud-boys. What did you do to me?"

Azog whirls to face us. His playful smile vanishes as he stares at us in shock. "What? You're alive?"

Azazel, likewise, stops harassing Bael to gaze at us. The pink demon narrows his eyes. "That shouldn't be possible. Nobody can survive a hit from Soulfire."

When they stop rhyming, a chill goes down Satan's spine.

"Yeah? I just did, you stupid cunts," Satan says. The blood vessels in our neck tighten as the Devil sets his jaw and clenches his fists. "I don't know what you did, and I ain't amused."

Satan's thoughts race. Soulfire? What the fuck is that? I've never heard of such a technique. Don't tell me it kills the victim instantly. That would be too convenient.

Azog frowns. He forces a smile, but something about it feels off. "♫Hm. I felt my power increase, and his soul became mine. Why's he still walking, though? That's not sublime!♫"

"Ugh," Satan grunts. "It's been so long since I heard Valac's shitty rhymes, but you've reminded me how much I hate 'em. If you don't stop talking, I'm gonna have to shut you up."

The Sunshine Brothers walk past Bael, ignoring the slobbering, blubbering mess of a future Demon Duke. Their eyes lock onto me.

Azazel hisses through his teeth. "Hit him again."

As if someone had pulled the trigger on a pistol, Azog bolts forward. He blasts off from a standstill and rushes toward Satan with frightening speed.

This time, Satan is ready. One of our Vectors sits embedded in the ground before us. It tears up dirt and flings it at Azog's face while the other invisible limbs yank us backward. Our hail of debris catches the blue demon off-guard. Rainbow-colored flames fire from his palm, but he only manages to hit our afterimage.

Satan narrows his gaze. What the hell was that? Luckily, I dodged. These guys are total amateurs. I can take 'em.

The flames from Azog's palm surge outward and disperse harmlessly into the air. Satan comes to a stop and holds his Vectors out to protect himself. However, from Azog's initial attack, a single wisp of rainbow-flames breezes through the air toward us. Satan's eyes follow it.

Hm?

The tiny, insignificant bit of fire brushes against our arm.

Satan's heart stops.

"Hurk-?!"

Our vision darkens, and another of Satan's souls fizzles into nothingness.

Darkness takes us.

We awaken, only to spot Azazel and Azog standing over us. Their eyes widen. They leap backward and take a defensive stance.

Azog's face pales. "I knew it! My Soulfire connected! How is he still alive?!"

Azazel grits his teeth. "I... I don't know. No demon has ever... ah... ruined our jive..."

The older brother's forced rhyme betrays his inner turmoil. He can't think straight, since neither of the brothers has seen someone endure their Soulfire before. It must be quite a surprise.

I've never battled a demon who wielded Soulfire. However, several years ago, I learned from Phoebe the specifics of how it worked. She and the military forces inside the Labyrinth Core battled against Beelzebub. Using the power of his rainbow flames, he killed thousands of humans and monsters when the faintest traces of his magic touched any part of their bodies.

More importantly, his rank grew after absorbing all of those souls. He empowered himself from a Lord to a Baron effortlessly. Soulfire isn't only a deadly attack that can kill someone instantly, but it transfers their soul into the demon's body, empowering the attacker further.

In my opinion, it's the most dangerous attack any demon can possess. It's the lethality of Valac's scythe combined with the range of a projectile.

Satan leaps to his feet. "Oh? Didn't Valac tell you? I'm immortal, you stupid peacocks. You can't kill me, no matter how you try."

"L-lies!" Azog yells. "All lies! Nobody lives forever! Let's get him, big brother!"

Azazel motions to summon his Soulfire, but Satan is too fast. He charges at the older brother and swings a Vector down to shatter his arm.

From behind us, a wave of heat strikes our back. Satan's vision darkens.

Shit! My blind sp-

When we wake up, Satan's heart skips a beat as he spots Azazel above us, palm held at the ready. Before Satan can move a muscle, rainbow-colored flames splash against our chest.

"You little bast-!"

Satan's voice falters as he falls into the void once again, only to reawaken in time for Azog to attack next.

I can't counter fast enough! They keep-

* * *

Time after time, Satan opens his eyes and tries to attack the two demons, but they take turns hitting us with their Soulfire.

"Keep it up, Azog! He can't regenerate forev-"

Satan's vision turns black as he fails to catch Azazel's last words.

* * *

Ten times. A hundred. Satan loses count, as do I. The Sunshine Brothers hit us with Soulfire again and again.

Suddenly, Satan's eyes open. Azazel and Azog fall back, sweat pouring off their faces. They swallow air in great gulps as they gasp for breath.

"I... I can't... keep it... going!" Azog wheezes. "Nuh... no... no energy..."

Satan's Vectors activate, yanking him out of the range of the pyromancers. He skitters away on his eight limbs like a spider fleeing a predator. Only when Satan has put the length of half a football field between him and the Sunshine Brothers does he slow down to examine them.

The two fire-barfers stopped attacking. What's going on? Are they trying to trick me?

Azazel clutches his heart. Veins bulge in his forehead as he slumps to his knees. "Yuh-you... blasted... what is he? He's not... not a demon... he's a monster..."

Despite Azazel and Azog's sudden weakness, Satan doesn't move to attack. He's grown wary of their powers.

I underestimated those runts. Now I need to play it smart and hit 'em from a distance. I've gotta avoid their Soulfire at all costs!

Satan's eye twitches. He glances past Azazel and Azog to Bael, who has been reduced to a state of clinging to his knees and rocking back and forth. He looks at me guiltily, as if to say, sorry I didn't help, but these guys are too much for me!

"Fucking Bael," Satan mutters. "Big bunch of help you are."

The Devil weaves a dozen signs with his hands. Summoning the power of Earth manipulation from earlier, he slaps his palm against the dirt.

Earthquake!

* * *

Nothing happens.

Satan frowns. "What?"

As Azazel and Azog lean against each other and wipe sweat from their foreheads, Satan opens and closes his fist repeatedly. He stares at his palm, trying to figure out why the spell didn't work.

Did I screw up? Those should have been the correct signs to summon an earthquake.

Once again, Satan recreates the formations to activate his seismic sense instead of an earthquake. When he slaps his palm against the ground, several seconds pass.

Nothing happens.

The Devil gazes at the dead, blackened earth. His stomach clenches as several possibilities swirl in his mind.

What the fuck?! My earth manipulation... it's gone! I used it earlier. How could it have vanished? Impossible!

His blood turns ice-cold.

Seven Devils. Those fire-flinging BASTARDS! My earth manipulation must have been tied to one of the souls in my body. Azog and Azazel's damned Soulfire probably burned it out! If that's the case, then... my Vectors. Samael. If I let them keep attacking me, I could lose the Archangel's power. This fight isn't a joke anymore. My body might grow stronger with each soul expended, but I can't afford to lose the versatility my souls provide me. I need to end this, quickly.

A voice whispers in the air, its words inaudible. Satan jerks his head left and right, trying to find the speaker, but whoever they are, they don't present themselves.

Suddenly, Azog leaps to his feet. His exhaustion disappears, and the sweat on his skin dries up. "♫Ho?! Look at that! I've got a second wind! Now I need not feel any chagrin!♫"

Azazel follows. He takes a deep breath. "♫It's not you, little brother, but Valac instead. He spared some mana to restore us, for we're no good to him dead!♫"

Bloody devils... Satan thinks to himself as the Sunshine Brothers take a menacing step toward us. Now Valac is interfering. What a goddamned chicken-shit. If he were a real man, he'd come out here and fight me himself. How little does he think of me to send out a couple of goons instead of facing me head-on?

Satan frowns. No. If anything, these two are insane. I can't see any ordinary demon standing a chance against them. It's no wonder Lucifer hasn't tried to beat Valac's ass into bonemeal if these two are his mightiest warriors. I haven't found a way to defend against their Soulfire. If they're like any other Fire-type, they can probably expel it from their body in all directions. I can't even hit 'em from their blind spots.

Dread trickles down Satan's back as the brothers pounce at us. If Valac keeps restoring their energy; I'm going to run out of souls and lose my Vectors. I need to avoid them, no matter what!

Azog rushes us from the front. He forms signs with his hands and shoots a concentrated beam of Soulfire at our chest. "♫Stand still, little one, and I'll make this painless. Cruelty is ugly, and excessively tasteless!♫"

Before the Soulfire hits us, Satan's Vectors pound the dirt and send him flying above the tree canopy. In the blink of an eye, he flips through the souls still in his body.

One demon's ability catches his eye. Air manipulation. That'll have to do!

Satan summons wind behind himself and uses it to propel us forward. He rockets into the forest below and smashes into the Earth beside Bael. "Get up, big guy! We're retreating!"

Bael stares at me. "They're too fast! We can't run, boss. Uwaaa!"

"Stop bawling, dumbass! If they hit you with their Soulfire, you're a goner! C'mon!!"

One of Satan's Vectors grabs Bael by his arm and flings him into the sky. Satan leaps after him, just in time to avoid a Soulfire attack from Azazel, who has pivoted to chase us.

"♫Come back here; I'm not done with you yet! Valac wants you dead, and that's what he'll get!♫"

Bloody hell! The Devil yells in his mind. I need to get Bael outta here and find another avenue of attack!

Azog soars into the air between Bael and us, propelled by flames rushing from his boots. He cuts off our escape route and throws a wall of Soulfire at us.

Satan slaps the wind, using his low-level air manipulation to stop his forward momentum and fling himself backward.

Unfortunately, we sail toward Azazel, waiting below.

"♫That's the spirit, little brother! Let's stop him here! After today, we'll forever stay in Valac's sphere! ♫"

Shit!

Satan can't dodge in time. As Bael's flailing body lands somewhere in the forest behind Azog, Satan falls into Azazel's grasp, including the Soulfire he holds at the ready.

Azazel's eyes widen into a crazed, maniacal expression. "Now I've got you!!"

His palm pounds our back. Satan's vision goes dark as the ground rushes at us.

Whump!

* * *

Once again, we awaken just in time for the warmth of the rainbow flames to splash against our shoulders. This time, we've ended up face-down while the Sunshine Brothers unleash an onslaught of Soulfire against our defenseless body.

"Keep it up! Don't let him-"

I don't catch the rest of Azog's words. My mind falls into darkness.

"Hit him again! This time, we'll-"

Darkness.

"We can do this all day! He'll perish eventually-"

Darkness.

Satan's mind slips in and out of consciousness. Over and over, the two firebenders pour their energy into each attack, burning out Satan's souls one by one. His muscles thicken as the power of the Titans strengthens him after each death. His mind sharpens. His jaw sets.

Eventually, Satan learns the timing of their attacks. When his senses return, he pounds his Vectors into the ground to fling himself somewhere- anywhere. He hasn't a clue where to dodge.

He fails. The edge of one flame nicks us. We grind into the dirt and fall into darkness again.

When we awaken, he tries to dodge once more. He pushes against the blackened Earth, using his full strength to launch himself straight up.

He succeeds.

Satan's strength is so incredible that even when Azog's Soulfire barely nicks us and another of our souls fizzles away, we continue blasting off into the sky above.

We awaken to find ourselves still rising. Satan's eyes snap open. Clouds grow distant beneath us. The atmosphere turns from blue to black.

Satan tries to inhale, but he can barely take the tiniest of breaths. This high above Earth, there's almost no oxygen at all, and we're still ascending.

We're nearly in space.

The Devil flails wildly, trying to figure out what the hell happened.

Our ascent slows to a crawl.

Then, we begin to fall.

Earth's Gravity gives us a gentle tug. Softly at first, like a mother placing her baby in a cradle. We pick up speed within seconds and hurtle toward the clouds below. Stray pockets of turbulence batter us back and forth, turning our free-fall into a careening plummet to the Earth. Satan spins and twists, unable to control his angle as he falls.

"Fuuuuuuuuck!!!!!"

Satan howls in terror as we pierce the cloud cover. Suddenly, as if a switch has flipped in his mind, Satan regains his composure, holds his arms out, and reorients his form. He rotates and spins to make his head face our final destination.

When he does, the sight takes our breath away.

From an aerial perspective, we can finally see Mother Earth in all her splendor. To the north and west, unending blackness from Valac's Blight stretches as far as our gaze can reach. To the south and east, green, red, and the rest of the rainbow's colors mark a hard line where nature's beauty meets the Blight's chaos.

The Blight has a limit. Valac's hand might reach far and wide, but he has not yet brought ruin upon the entire Earth.

Satan inhales sharply. As a minute ticks down, his eyes fixate on our destination. A sizable crater sits where we pushed off. Satan's strength was so incredible that when he launched himself into the atmosphere, he did so with nearly the force of a tactical nuke. A gaping hole sits in the middle of the blackened forest. Even as we rush toward the crater, trees continue to crackle and fall into the sloped abyss.

Superheated air from our rapid descent whistles against our back. Satan curls up his body and wraps his Vectors around himself as he braces for impact.

We smash into the ground at terminal velocity, sending a shockwave in all directions. Trees fall, the crater trembles, but we survive.

Satan blinks, surprised by how little he felt from his collision with the planet. Immediately, he stretches his Vectors out and levitates eight feet in the air, holding himself up so that he isn't a target for the Sunshine Brothers to attack.

Sweeping his vision across the battlefield, Satan spots Azazel and Azog standing atop the edge of the crater. Both of them stare at us, mouths agape. They appear awed by our durability, as if they aren't sure they can ever defeat us.

Something catches their attention. The brothers jerk their heads back to gaze into the forest right as Bael crashes into them, sending all three demons plummeting into the crater. They hit the ground with a sickening crunch, spiraling and rolling until they reach the bottom, where they come to a stop.

"Oy, Bael! Get out of there, idiot!" Satan cries out in alarm. "What are you thinking?!"

Bael jerks his head up. "Satan? Oh, shit! I thought they killed you! Aw, fuck, I didn't mean-"

Before Bael can finish his sentence, Azog leaps to his feet. Fire burns in his eyes as he scowls at Bael. "♫Damn you! That wasn't cute at all! Now it's your turn to take a fall!♫"

Azog summons Soulfire in his palm and prepares to blast Bael with all his might. Realizing his friend is about to die, Satan yanks himself to the ground. He barrels into Bael with the force of a freight train, smashing the massive demon with enough power to plunge us several feet underground.

Azog's Soulfire proves impossible to dodge. It tears into our makeshift burrow, splashes against Satan's back, and scorches our soul, sending us to purgatory for what must be the thousandth time today.

* * *

Satan jolts awake, only to find himself lying on his back at the base of the crater once again. Bael stands in the center, each of his hands wrapped around the Sunshine Brother's throats. He holds them above his head and squeezes with enough force to make their bones pop. "Shut up! Shut up, shut up, shutupshutupSHUTUP!! You cunts never stop running your fucking mouths!"

Azog kicks and wriggles as he tries to escape Bael's grasp. He turns blue in the face and resorts to flinging rainbow fireballs against Bael's chest. To Satan's astonishment, as well as mine, they don't even tickle the future Duke. He ignores the Soulfire completely.

"L-luh! Let us... guh! Go!"

"I told you to shut your fucking mouths! GAHH!" Bael swings his arm down and smashes Azog into the dirt. Satan stumbles as the continental plates rattle beneath him, but his Vectors manage to hold us upright.

Azog goes limp in Bael's grasp. Within seconds, the big guy goes berserk, smashing both of them down, over and over, releasing thunderous booms throughout the forest, echoing for miles in every direction. "Die! Die! Die! DIE!! DIE!!!"

"Bael! Stop! STOP!" Satan yells. He lashes four of his vectors out, grabs Bael's arms and legs, and tries desperately to immobilize the eight-foot-tall demon. "Knock it off! Don't blow your stack!"

Bael struggles in our grip. He jerks his head back to shoot a death stare at me. "Lemme go! Get your fuckin' paws off me!"

Three of Satan's vectors grab the Earth to try and give us leverage as Bael yanks his arms and legs around. He puts a monumental effort into attempting to break free, but we manage to hold him steady and use our eighth Vector to pry his thumbs off each of the Sunshine Brother's throats. They flop to the ground, unconscious, perhaps even dead.

"Focus! If you keep making all that racket, every angel and Titan across the globe is going to find us!"

"Like I give a shit!" Bael snarls. Using every ounce of strength in his body, he digs his feet into the ground and slowly pivots to face us. Bael begins pressing against our Vectors with terrific force, making each of the invisible limbs tremble as they strain to hold him back. "I said... get... your paws... off me!"

Satan's breathing comes in short gasps. His eyes widen as he fights the big guy with every bit of power in his body.

Incredible! Even after all the strength those souls gave me, I can barely hold Bael back! Hell, he's winning! I can't keep this up!

Bael draws nearer. Five feet. Four. Three.

Soon, he comes within arms reach. At that moment, Satan seems to remember he has limbs other than his Vectors. Namely, his fleshy hands.

The Devil rears back and punches Bael's stomach with every drop of strength left in his body. His fist splashes against Bael's stomach like water against a rock. All of our fingers instantly fracture a thousand times. Electric pain like nothing I've felt before rockets up our arm, short-circuits our brain, and makes Satan howl in pain. "Fuuuuck!!"

Our Vectors lose control. They release their hold on Bael, and the giant rushes forward, no longer restrained by our puny strength. His body hits us like an avalanche of stone and steel, demolishing what's left of our reserves.

"Puny demon! Puny! You no tell me what to do! You no tell me-"

Our vision goes black as he grabs us by the leg and pounds us into the dirt.

"Satan? Satan! Aw, hell! You're alive! Thank the devils!"

Bael's voice rouses us from a deep sleep. His worried tone tells me he's returned to normal, at the least.

Satan groans. "Ugh. Fucker. You went crazy again. Just... just like old times. Ahh, my chest is killing me."

"Oops," Bael mutters. "I, uh, kept hitting you to try'n wake you up."

"Thanks..."

Satan stands up and dusts himself off. His gaze travels to Azazel and Azog's bodies, where they lay unmoving a few hundred feet away. It looks like Bael piled them atop one another.

"Cripes. Are those two dead?" Satan asks.

Bael turns his head to look at the Sunshine Brothers. "Huh? Nah. I broke a few bones. Nothin' too serious. A few centuries in the Blood Pits'll take care of 'em."

"I'm sorry, the what?"

"The Blood Pits. You ain't heard of 'em?"

Satan raises an eyebrow. "I haven't. Never mind that. My brain's still spinning. I must have lost around 30% of my reserves. What a mess."

Bael cocks his head. "Ruh-surves?"

"My, uh... it's complicated. Where's the entrance to Valac's den?"

Bael stares at me questioningly, but his short attention span beats out his curiosity. He gestures toward the other side of the crater. "Dunno. I think it was over there somewhere. Pretty sure you buried the entrance."

"Wonderful. Let's start digging, then," Satan replies. He starts walking toward the other side of the pit, not bothering with his Vectors for once. Bael falls into step beside us, and Satan turns to look at him. "Hey, Bael. Didn't those two hit you with Soulfire? Why didn't it hurt you?"

"Soulfire - what now?" Bael asks. "What're you talkin' about?"

"Those rainbow flames. They sear a demon's soul to ash and kill him instantly. I saw them hit you. Why are you still standing?"

Bael shrugs. "No clue. I didn't even feel em. I don't think a fire demon has ever hurt me before."

Satan appears unconvinced. "Maybe so, but you ought to be more careful. You might have survived by a fluke, but don't just count on your durability to save you."

"Aww," Bael says. His mouth spreads into a shit-eating grin. "Are you worried about me?"

Satan rolls his eyes. "Yes. Help me start digging. Let's uncover the entrance again."

Bael returns his gaze forward and starts pawing at the ground. "What a pal."

"Oh, shut up."

Part 130: Emperor of the Damned

"Oy! I found it! Over here."

Satan pauses his digging to follow Bael's voice. The big demon slaps several rocks aside to reveal a small opening in the ground. Behind him, a five-foot heap of dirt sits in a giant pile.

"Nice work, Bael. Let's get in there. I'd hate to keep Valac waiting."

Satan stretches his arms and pops his spine. A spasm of pain rips through our chest from all the bones Bael broke when he tried to 'wake us up.'

Damn. Usually, I might kill myself to regenerate, but now that I know death means losing a soul, I'd rather not take a chance. Better to grin and bear the pain than potentially lose my Vectors.

Samael's body forms in our mind's eye. "So, thou art going to battle Valac in his domain. I'm surprised. I assumed thou would'st think more carefully about the threat he poses, given he might be capable of reaping all thy souls with a single attack."

"Doubtful," Satan murmurs, keeping his voice low as he strides across the crater to Bael's side. "Maybe Valac can reap all of my souls at once, or maybe he can only take 'em one at a time. Either way, I don't intend to die even once to his pathetic little-"

"Satan! Stop talking to yourself, weirdo!" Bael says, interrupting us as we draw near. "That shit's creepy."

"Sorry," Satan says, raising his voice. "Just thinking out loud."

Bael sticks his thumb over his shoulder and points toward the still-unconscious Sunshine Brothers. "You gonna leave 'em alive?"

"Of course. I wouldn't dream of killing a fellow demon. They've only inconvenienced me in the long run."

"Mmm..." Bael grunts. "I guess that makes sense. What about Valac?"

"He hasn't welcomed me with open arms... so I can't say I won't break a few bones. But, all things considered, I don't want to kill him. We'll see what happens."

"You're the boss."

Satan uses his Vectors to widen the entrance to Valac's den. He and the big guy step inside. Bael kneels slightly to fit through the opening, but once we enter, the tunnel widens noticeably, allowing him to stand at his full height with room to spare.

Torches illuminate the caverns. A few lie scattered on the ground, their wall sconces destroyed and fires snuffed out from Satan's thunderous attack half an hour previously, but the rest stand at attention, lighting the path forward. The Devil gently kicks one aside and frowns.

"Hm. I'm surprised Valac didn't send anyone else to greet us."

"We already beat Tweedle-dum and Tweedle-dee," Bael replies. "Ain't nobody left for him to send. Nobody stronger'n them, that's f'sure. Well... almost nobody."

Both demons begin walking down the corridor. Our footsteps punctuate the still air, echoing far into the distance ahead.

Soon, we arrive at a junction where the hall splits off into three directions. Similar to the Labyrinth, which I've traversed several times, none of the paths give any indication of their final destination. If Satan intends to find Valac, it seems he will have to choose a direction randomly.

Satan closes his eyes. "Hmm. Left, right, or straight ahead. Which way do you think we should go, Bael?"

The big guy shrugs. He points to the right. "Smells like meat that way. Up ahead smells like fresh cunt. The other way smells like dirt."

"I didn't know you had such a sensitive nose."

"Yeah. It's one of the top three things bitches love about me."

"What are the other two?"

Bael rubs his chin. "Take a guess, smartass."

"Pass."

Satan opens his eyes. "We'll go left."

"Aww, I wanna get my screw on."

"There will be plenty of time for that later. Focus. Don't forget why we came here."

Bael scrunches up his face. "Uh, shit... now that you mention it..."

"Devils. Follow me, numbskull."

Satan turns and marches left. Bael follows us. "I said it smelled like dirt. Why would ya wanna go this way?"

"Because. Something tells me Valac doesn't want our encounter to become public. I bet he told all his minions to avoid us. We'll go where the deafening silence calls out."

Bael seems unconvinced. "'Izzat an edumacated guess?"

"Based on what I know of Captain Ivory, yes."

* * *

Minutes tick past. Satan and Bael slowly pace down the hallways, turning left, right, sometimes going straight ahead as they follow Bael's nose.

"I'm lost," Bael mutters. "Satan, are we even going the right way? Everything looks the same. Swear I've seen that bloody speck on the wall three or forty times."

"You can't even count to four," Satan says, rolling his eyes. "Yes, I'm certain. I sensed a faint trickle of demonic energy when we entered Valac's den. Every turn we've taken has made that sensation increase.

We're close, now."

"Ain't seen a single demon, male or female, since we got here," Bael murmurs. "Quieter than a graveyard down here."

Satan purses his lips. "A graveyard. Hmm."

We round a few more corners. Every muscle in Satan's body tightens as we enter a large, domed room, carved into the underground catacombs.

A single, iron throne sits against the furthest wall. It stands fifteen feet tall and five feet wide, as if someone constructed it for a gigantic being to sit in; someone nearly Gabriel's size. Above it, two chandeliers hang from the ceiling, each lined with a dozen candles. Only half the wicks have been lit, barely illuminating the room. Bones litter the floor, both animal and demon alike.

In the center of the chamber, a single demoness in a blue dress stands alone, waiting for us. Scratches, cuts, and bruises line her face, chest, and arms. Under normal circumstances, I might call her beautiful, but right now, she appears small, pitiful, and afraid, as though she were a victim of domestic abuse.

Satan and Bael stop just inside the entrance. The Devil's voice catches. "N... Nerissa?"

Nerissa stares at me. Several emotions flick across her face, but it takes several seconds before she says anything. "Satan. I... I didn't know it was going to be you. Master Valac told me... a great enemy would appear. I thought he meant Uriel."

"Great enemy?" Satan echoes the succubus and takes a few steps toward her. "What are you on about? Where's Valac?"

As if in response to our question, an eleven-foot tall figure materializes out of thin air behind Nerissa. The Grim Reaper, even taller than when I last saw him, dwarfs the six-foot succubus with his shadow. His ragged black robes spill to the ground, enveloping her feet in darkness. The newcomer gently rests a bony hand on Nerissa's shoulder, sending a shiver down her back.

I can't see Valac's skull beneath his hood. Only two pinpricks of red light reveal his eyes. The Reaper stares at us for a few moments before speaking. "Welcome back, Satan, my long lost friend. You vanished ages ago; I thought you'd met your end."

Nerissa bows her head, unable to meet our gaze. Satan searches her face for a moment before stepping closer to her and the Reaper. "I didn't come here to fight, Valac. I came to make peace. I don't care what grudge you've got against me, Nerissa has nothing to do with it. Let her go."

Valac retracts his hand from Nerissa's shoulder and allows it to hang at his side. "You want to settle our dispute? I doubt that is your intention. More likely, you've come to stage an intervention. You think yourself the king of all demons, noble and wise, but I see only a fellow soul manipulator, one whom I despise."

The Reaper slaps one of his other palms against Nerissa's back and shoves her forward. The succubus stumbles slightly, but reorients herself without complaining.

"You know what to do," Valac murmurs. "Eliminating unwanted vermin is up to you."

Nerissa stiffens. "Master Valac... you want me to... to kill..."

Valac doesn't respond. Instead, he takes a few steps back and sits on his throne.

His eyes meet mine.

"I understand," Nerissa whispers. After closing her eyes, the succubus summons an ice-sword in each hand. "I cannot disobey Master Valac's commands. Prepare yourself, Satan."

"What?! You're gonna fight me? Nerissa? Nerissa!"

Satan jerks back in surprise as the succubus plants her foot in the ground and rockets toward us. Before Satan can react, Bael jumps forward. The big guy holds up his palms, allowing Nerissa's swords to explode into fragments against his hardened skin.

"She ain't herself!" Bael yells. "I'll hold her off! You take out the Reaper."

Hardly have the words left Bael's mouth before Nerissa ducks his grasp, slides under his legs, and kicks him in the back. Her impressive strength, easily on par with Belial's, sends Bael flying forward. He hits the ground with a whump and slides on his face.

By the time Bael has jumped to his feet, uninjured, Nerissa has already summoned a two-handed warhammer of ice. She swings it at Satan's back, but the Devil reacts much faster this time. Three of our Vectors fan their palms out and catch the hammer before it hits us. The other invisible limbs plant themselves in the ground to brace us, and a single one lashes out to trip Nerissa.

"Ah!" She yelps in surprise and falls on her side, bashing her ribs against the ground.

Satan winces. "Get ahold of yourself! What's wrong with you? I thought we were-"

"We are!" Nerissa yells as she jumps to her feet. She claps her hands together, summoning a wall of ice, and sends it flying at me with a powerful shove. "But, I have to obey Master Valac!"

All our Vectors come together to block the half-ton block of frozen water as it slides toward us. Satan winces as its full weight hits us like a meteor, tears us from the ground, and slams us into one of the walls.

Satan's mind races. I don't get it! Why is my girl working for Valac? What slimy, skeevy shit is he pulling?!

Angered, the Devil uses one of his Vectors to karate-chop the ice-wall in front of us. We slice it like a hot knife through butter, then fling both halves aside...

...Just in time to see Nerissa rushing us with a sharpened polearm.

Crap!

Satan starts to block her with his Vectors, but Bael comes to the rescue. He tackles the succubus and smashes her against the wall, then grabs her by the neck to hold her in place. "Come on, Satan, I've got her pinned! Get Valac!"

Bael puts all his strength into pressing Nerissa against the wall, but she resists mightily. Within seconds, the succubus wraps one of her hands around his thumb, while using the other for the rest of his palm. She inhales after giving herself breathing room, and spits wads of ice at Bael, smacking him in the face.

"Gah! Stop it!" Bael yells, using his free hand to wipe his face. "Save the kinky shit for the relief chambers!"

Luckily, Nerissa's attacks only serve to annoy Bael. They don't injure him at all.

Satan flicks his eyes to Valac. The Grim Reaper leans against the arm of his throne casually, as if he hasn't the slightest concern for his life.

"Bastard," Satan snarls. Using our Vectors, we fling ourselves across the room to pounce at Valac. "I don't know what you did to my girl, but I'm gonna pay you back a hundred-fold!"

Satan rears back his fist, aiming to crush Valac's skull into dust.

Suddenly, the Grim Reaper vanishes. Nerissa appears in his place, a look of confusion on her face.

"Shit!" Satan yells as he tries to pull his punch.

Unable to stop our momentum, we plow into the succubus with enough force to shatter the iron throne and embed two feet into the wall behind it. The chamber shakes from our impact.

Satan gasps for breath. "Ahh... Nerissa... where..."

We open our eyes to see Nerissa inside the wall, crushed between us and the rocks. She blinks. "Th-that hurt. Ass!"

"Don't blame me," Satan grunts. "Blame Valac. It's his fault-"

We don't get to finish our sentence. Nerissa summons ice from every pore of her body and sends it rushing at us. She flings us from the crater even more violently than before. Satan hits the floor, rolls several times, and skids to a stop.

The Devil clutches his broken ribs, the ones injured during Bael's 'resuscitation' when he tried to wake us up earlier. Those, combined with the light wounds he's suffered during this quick but savage battle against Nerissa, slow his movements dramatically.

Satan climbs to his feet. He gasps and wheezes as he watches Nerissa jump out of the hole. She breathes evenly, apparently unhurt from our accidental assault.

"Why... why are you fighting me?" Satan asks. "I don't get it. Is it my fault? Valac's? Did he do somethin' to you?"

Nerissa's eye twitches. "It doesn't matter."

"Yes, it does!" Satan yells. We take a step toward her, but dizziness catches us off-guard. Satan seems to have suffered a concussion. "I... I love you, baby. I spent all my time in the Cosmic Realm thinking about you. We don't have to fight. We don't!"

"Cosmic Realm?" Nerissa asks. "I don't know what you mean. All I know is... if... if I don't kill you.... then..."

Satan nods. He waits for her to elaborate, but she doesn't. "Then what? What happens?"

Nerissa purses her lips. A look of anxiety crosses her face. "You're a strong demon, Satan. But... Valac... you can't beat him. Nobody can. He's immortal. I've watched him die a thousand times, only to revive seconds later."

Satan's eyes flick to Bael. The muscled behemoth takes a step toward the succubus, but Satan shakes his head. No. Don't. This is between my girl and me.

Bael catches the look in our eyes. With a shrug, he retreats a step. Suit yourself.

We return our gaze to Nerissa. "Baby, I don't know what Valac has told you, but... I'm immortal too. I can protect you. No matter how much that bastard's hurt you, or threatened you-"

"You can't!" Nerissa yells. Her lower lip trembles as tears well in her eyes. "Valac is everywhere, Satan! He can appear anywhere on Earth in the blink of an eye! Nowhere is safe from him! Nowhere!!"

Blind rage and anguish spread across the succubi's face. She summons two more ice-swords and coils her legs to jump at me. "You weren't there for us, Satan! You don't know what we've been through!"

Like an enraged tigress, Nerissa pounces.

She clears the fifteen-foot gap in a split second and swings her swords to decapitate us.

Satan winces. Might as well use this chance to regenerate. I won't hurt Nerissa, no matter how badly she wants to kill me, even if Valac is pulling her strings like a puppet.

The swords rush at our neck. Satan doesn't move to block them.

At the last instant, Nerissa falters. She turns the weapons sideways and hits the left side of my head with the flats of the blades, shattering them against my cheekbone and ear. Her stupendous strength batters Satan aside, sending us careening to the right.

Whump, whump, THUD!

We smash into the wall headfirst.

Satan's eyes darken. The world spins and stars dance in our eyes.

"Aaooo... guh..."

Blood spills down our face. Despite the lack of pain, I instantly realize Nerissa's attack shattered our skull.

Darkness takes us.

We awaken a short few moments later. Satan's head and body regenerate as he heals from death. We jump to our feet to see Valac once again standing behind Nerissa. She bows her head contritely as shame passes over her face.

Valac reaches his hand out and strokes Nerissa's long, blue hair, making her tremble in fright. "Oh, dear, how little surprises me anymore. I ordered you to kill Satan, but you've proven to be a worthless whore. I will give you one final order, and you had better comply. Kill Satan to prove your loyalty, or your sister will die."

Nerissa clutches her hands to her chest. She never raises her eyes from the floor. "B-but, Master Valac... surely... surely there's another way we could... ahh!"

Her words cut off, and she whimpers as Valac wraps his fingers around her ponytail and tugs hard, yanking her head back to gaze into his eyes.

The Reaper uses one of his arms to caress her neck. "Are you questioning me? Have you forgotten your loyalty?"

"No... no... I... I didn't... hnn..."

Puzzle pieces click in Satan's mind. That sick, twisted bastard... he's using Belial to control Nerissa! Gah! I'm a moron! I should have realized!

Satan stomps toward Valac. Our feet impact the ground with enough force to leave footprints in the hardened tiles. "You fucking coward. I always knew you were pure slime, but this is the lowest of the low. How dare you manipulate my girl using her sister!!"

Valac's fingers tighten around Nerissa's neck. He raises his lower and upper left arms, summons his scythe in his grasp, and holds its tip to Nerissa's heart. "Don't take another step, or Nerissa will breathe no more. I hoped you might return, so I could make you grovel on the floor."

Satan stops. Our eyes flick from Nerissa's terrified face to the figure towering above her. "Is that what this is all about? Revenge? Are you still pissy because I kicked your ass one time? That was practically an eternity ago, Valac. Get over it. You're... you're acting pathetic!"

Valac's fingers tighten around his scythe. "Do not mock me. Her life is in your hands."

The Devil flinches. Sweat drips down the back of his neck. "What do you want? You want me to bow? Is that it?"

Valac pulls his scythe an inch away from Nerissa's heart. "Hmm. I wonder."

Satan grinds his teeth together. "You sicken me. No honor. No respect. Why don't we settle this the right way? You and me... mano-a-mano. If you win, I'll bow. I'll admit your superiority."

Slowly, Valac shakes his head. He brings the scythe closer and nearly touches Nerissa's skin. "That won't do."

Our fists squeeze together hard enough to pulverize concrete. "Goddamnit! Fuck you! You dickless piece of shit!"

Bael appears at my side. "Don't do anything stupid, boss. If that scythe touches your girl..."

Tears flow down Nerissa's face as she stares up at Valac, unable to tear her eyes off his. She stays silent, hoping, pleading in her mind that we can somehow save her.

Valac loosens his hand from around the succubi's neck. Slowly, deliberately, he slides it up past Nerissa's chin to cover her mouth and nose.

"I have an idea. Ooh, this will be fun! I'll stimulate Nerissa's worm, and bring this battle to completion. Unable to resist, she will plead and beg... but you will kill her yourself, or allow her mind to break."

Satan's eyes widen. He stares in horror as dark energy pours from Valac's palm into Nerissa's mouth and nose. The succubus squirms and wriggles as she tries to yank Valac's hand off her face. She fails. His vice-grip proves too strong to remove.

"Motherf-" Satan barks out a single word, slams his Vectors into the ground, and charges at Valac. "Bael! Get him! Stop the bastard!"

Bael doesn't hesitate. He launches at Valac right as I do, as if he's been ready for action the whole time.

"Boss! He's gonna turn on the worm! Stop 'im!"

Satan nods. His vision turns to red as he performs several intricate signs and conjures forth fire from one of the many souls within himself.

We aim our palm at Valac and unleash a massive fireball; one fueled by our incredible inner mana reserves. It flies at Valac's head and detonates on the Reaper's skull, blasting his bones to smithereens. Valac tears away from Nerissa and smashes against the wall.

Satan grabs his girl and bats the scythe away with one of our vectors. Bael continues onward to the Reaper and pounds Valac's body. He punches the rags with all his strength, but he's too late.

The Reaper has vanished.

"Ahh... nnn..." Nerissa writhes in our arms. She clutches her head and winces. Specks of blood drip from her nose. "No... no... I can't... I mustn't..."

"Nerissa!" Satan's face pales. "What's wrong, baby? How can I help?"

The succubi's palm lashes out. She pounds me in the ribs, knocking me back. Satan's Vectors jump out and grab the ground, stopping us after only a few feet.

Satan advances toward Nerissa. He lands half a foot away and kneels to rest a hand on her shoulder. "What's the matter? Why'd you hit me?"

"Nnn..." Nerissa squeezes her eyes shut. "Valac's worm... it tells me... I have to kill... to kill... no! I won't! I... I can't!"

"NYEHEHE!" Valac's cackle bounces around the room. His voice comes from everywhere at once. "What's wrong, Nerissa?! You need to get a grip! If you can't resist my worm, your sanity will slip!!"

"No!" Satan yells. Shock races through his body. He grabs Nerissa's shoulders. "I've gotta get you back to Lucy! She can burn that worm out! Come on, baby!"

The Devil starts to pull Nerissa to her feet, but she shoves away from us. Her eyes bolt open to reveal darkness expanding from all corners of her cornea. "S-stay away! I can't stop myself!"

She summons an ice spear in both hands, jumps to her feet, and rears back as she prepares to thrust it into our neck.

Satan copies her. He jumps up, moves his Vectors before him to block, and narrows his gaze. "Fight it! You're better than Valac! You're the strongest girl I know! Don't you give up now!"

Nerissa falters, but only for a moment. She lunges at Satan and stabs her spear at us, over and over. Satan reverts to Ultimate Defense mode and uses his Vectors purely for protection. All eight of them bat away her attacks with expert precision.

Blood trickles from Nerissa's eyes, ears, and nose. Her attacks intensify as Valac's worm battles her willpower. When we shatter her spear, she summons a battleaxe, or two swords, or a warhammer. Sometimes she shoots concentrated ice to freeze us, while other times, she creates a massive ice cube above our heads to crush us.

Satan's heart drums in his chest. Nerissa's ferocious! I have to get her to stop! I need to take her to Lucifer to burn out that fucking worm!

Nerissa's attack patterns change. She unleashes her speed to dash around us. She summons ice clones to attack from all sides, but never once does Satan feel genuinely threatened. With his Vectors reacting to every attack independently, it frees him up for a minute to think of counters.

Gotta slow her down. Slow... slow... ah!

A lightbulb activates in Satan's head. "Nerissa! You signed my Blood Contract! That means you have to obey me! Stop fighting, now!"

Two seconds pass.

Nerissa's movements don't slow. She continues to attack us from all angles.

Valac's voice booms inside the chamber. "There's no use trying to order her around. My worms suppress your contracts, proving I deserve the crown!"

Satan's mind goes into overdrive. Damn you, Valac! Arghhh! He thought of everything! I only have one chance to stop Nerissa now.

"Bael! Get over here! Grab Nerissa! We're taking her to Lucifer!"

The big guy has stayed out of the fight, having assumed I had it under control. However, as soon as I deliver the order, he nods. "You got it!"

He jumps into the fray and lashes his hand out. Despite the four ice-clones of Nerissa jumping and firing icicles at me, Bael somehow picks out the original from her copies. He lunges forward and grabs her by the waist, startling her. His giant hands wrap around her slim body. He easily shrugs off her frigid counter-barrage as she tries to escape his grasp.

The ice clones stop moving and fall apart as Nerissa turns all her attention to Bael. He slams her into the ground and holds her steady, while I jump over and grab her arms and legs with my Vectors.

"Don't let me go!" Nerissa shouts. "I... I can't control my body. It's fighting you on its own!"

"I know, toots," Satan says. He levitates her in the air, performing a maneuver I saw him use on Phoebe and Belial during my battle against Amelia. With her arms and legs immobilized, Nerissa can only summon tiny shards of ice in her fingers and fling them at me, or spit iceballs from her mouth.

Satan pulls her in close and muzzles her with a fifth Vector. "Sorry, babe. I hope this doesn't hurt. We've gotta get outta here. Come on, Bael. Get us to the surface!"

A flash of movement. Satan turns his head in time to see Valac materialize behind us, scythe held at the ready.

"Oh, no, you don't," Valac whispers. "She's mine."

His weapon rushes at our back. Satan tries to block it, but with five Vectors holding Nerissa back, he has to use the remaining ones to counterbalance her weight. He can't protect himself in time!

Shik!

Valac's scythe impales our spine. Satan's eyes bulge in horror as our energy instantly drains into Valac's reserves.

The Reaper chuckles. "Hehehe. I win."

Satan falls into an infinite black voice. Like a whirlpool sucking us to the bottom of the ocean, we tumble, turn, and spin into the eternal darkness...

...And awaken!

Satan's eyes bolt open. He turns his head to the left, only to see Bael and the Reaper locked in combat. Bael swats Valac's scythe away with surprising agility, while three of Valac's clones attack the giant demon from all sides.

"Accursed-"

Valac hisses furiously while he battles the big guy. His scythe materializes in one of the other clones' hands, and it swings at Bael's back, just as it did mine.

Ting!

As though he had struck a solid sheet of metal, Valac's scythe glances off Bael's back and slips out of the Reaper's grasp. Bael backhands the clone, pulverizing its head into dust.

"Bahaha! Stop tryin' ta' tickle me and fight like a real man!"

"Impossible!" Valac howls. "You should be dead!!"

"It ain't my fault you hit like a pansy!" Bael laughs, taunting the Grim Reaper.

* * *

Satan's gaze, however, shifts to our right. Nerissa stands above us, an icicle hovering in midair as she prepares to fire at our heart.

Her hands tremble.

"I... I can't... I can't do it..."

Her face is the stuff of horrors. Dark veins stretch from her eyes across her cheeks and down her jaw. Her lips, once a soft pink, have turned as black as tar.

Satan doesn't move. "Nerissa... you have to fight it."

"I can't," The succubus whispers. "It's too powerful. Valac is... too powerful..."

She grits her teeth and closes her eyes. "Every... fiber... of my being... tells me to kill you... but I won't..."

Cautiously, Satan reaches toward her foot. He gently touches her ice-cold skin and shivers. "I'm here for you. Don't let Valac win. Don't. You survived all this time without me. Now, I'm here. We'll fight him together!"

"I'm not strong," Nerissa whispers. "I'm weak. Valac only... he only kept me alive to torture me. That's all. He threw me to the men. He forced me to... to endure endless humiliation. Ahh... it won't be long, now."

A tear glides down Nerissa's cheek.

"My sanity is slipping. I see... three of you. Four. The voices are saying something. I... I don't want to listen. Aaoo... you're... you're right, Satan. I-I can't let Valac win."

Nerissa rotates her hand. The sharpened icicle turns away from me, only to aim at her heart.

Satan gasps. "No... no! Don't do it! Lucifer can burn out that worm! Don't give up! She can-"

"It will be too late, by then," Nerissa whispers. "I've seen what Valac's worms do once they've awakened. Not even Lucifer can restore my mind once it's gone. I... I don't want you to see me like that. I'm sorry, Satan... but... this is goodbye. I... I love you."

"Nerissa? Nerissa! Don't-"

Satan's Vectors lash out. He grabs her wrist to try and stop her, but at that moment, Nerissa closes her eyes.

Her icicle fires.

It travels at the speed of sound, tears through her heart, and rips through the back of her chest.

"Ahh..." Nerissa whimpers.

A massive, gaping hole appears.

"Huhk-"

Agony spreads across Nerissa's face. She stumbles forward and falls into our arms.

"H-hurts... hurts..."

Satan stares ahead blankly as the succubus sags against our chest. Her blood, still warm, spills across our body. She convulses uncontrollably for a moment before finally going still.

Nerissa exhales for the last time in her life.

Reflexively, Satan wraps his arms around her.

"N.... Nuh... Ner...."

Our eyes lose focus. Anguish, unlike anything we've ever felt in our entire life, floods into our minds.

A thousand thoughts enter Satan's subconscious. A million questions.

Why? Why? Why? Why? Whywhywhywhy?!

Satan's eyes lower to stare at Nerissa's bloodied back. Her entrails spill out and wash over our hands, soaking us in her blood. Satan grits his teeth. His shoulders shake as he tries first to suppress, then release the agony in his heart. He closes his eyes and tries to remember the last time he saw her smile.

As for me, I feel almost nothing. Nerissa wasn't my lover. I don't have a connection to her like he does. I can't understand what he's going through. All I can do is imagine how I might feel if I were in his shoes; if it were Phoebe dying in my arms. That thought is not something I want to picture.

"N... Nerissa... baby... w-wake up..." Satan mumbles. He squeezes her tighter as tears boil in his eyes. "Come on, baby... this isn't f-funny... hnn..."

He buries his face in her hair.

I only wanted to see her again. I wanted to love her. I wanted to be with her, and tell her how badly I'd missed her...

The memory of Valac and Bael's battle seems a distant, ancient thing. Satan spares no thoughts for them. Even if I concentrate, I can't make out the sounds of their fight, barely thirty feet away. Every part of Satan focuses entirely on Nerissa and the sensation of her cold skin against his.

Valac took her from me. Why? For... for petty revenge? How could he do that to me? I thought... I thought... we were...

Satan's pain slowly fades away. His denial morphs into something else. Something hot, fiery, like a man who has stepped foot into a desert wasteland.

He took her from me. He took her from me. He took her from me. HE TOOK HER FROM ME.

Satan opens his eyes. The world, blurry thanks to his tears, crystallizes into reality when he wipes them away with his blood-stained hand.

We gently lay Nerissa on the ground and take the time to place her hands across her chest. Satan folds her hands together and closes her eyes.

He stares at her for several moments. Her face, contorted into a look of agony, is the last thing Satan ever wanted to see. His body aches from the deepest, darkest parts of his heart and soul.

"Valac... Valac... Valac... you..."

We inhale and rise to our feet. Satan turns to gaze his cold, lifeless eyes on Valac. The Reaper continues to battle Bael using his five clones. He hasn't noticed us, yet.

Satan wets his lips.

"Now... now you die."

Part 131: Soul Controller

Recommended Listening

"Ta think I believed all that crap people said about you bein' the strongest demon!" Bael guffaws. He reaches up and backhands one of Valac's five clones right in the face, smashing the Reaper's bones to dust and sending his rags scattering. "I was all scared you could kill me in one hit, but you can't do shit. Maybe I'm the strongest demon, after all! Bahaha!"

Each of Valac's clones towers three feet over the seven-foot Bael, yet despite their ghoulish rags and frightening appearance, he seems to cut a far more intimidating figure. Valac's scythe jumps from one clone's hand to another's as they attack the big guy with crazed fury, but Bael ignores the soul-reaping weapon, choosing instead to slap any clone that gets too close.

The Grim Reaper howls angrily. "Chrrr!!! How dare you mock me! I am the Emperor of the Damned! I will make you KNEEL!"

His scythe lashes out again. This time, instead of aiming for Bael's spine, Valac aims for his head.

Tink!

The weapon's tip stabs at Bael's skull, only to glance off. Bael winces and rubs his scalp. "Gah! That hurt! You little piss-fucker! Stop poking me!!" He crushes the clone who attacked him with a quick spin on his heel and a jab to the solar plexus.

The clone explodes into fragments. Another one screeches at Bael. "How? How?! Nobody has ever countered my scythe! What makes you different?!"

Bael laughs. "What can I say?! I'm twice the demon you'll ever be!"

* * *

Satan takes a step forward. Another. Another.

His guts writhe and churn. Everything hurts, on the inside and out. Satan clutches his stomach as he stares up at the Grim Reaper.

Valac killed my girl. All I ever wanted was to see her smile one more time. He murdered her to hurt me. That was his only goal.

Well. I can't feel anything but rage, now. My heart is empty. There's nothing left inside.

If he wanted to piss me off, he succeeded. I'm going to kill this bastard... even if it's the last thing I do!!

Satan lunges. His movements, aided by the loss of over a thousand souls, have sped up to ludicrous levels. Valac barely turns his head in time to see the Devil coming, but he hasn't a chance of matching Satan's speed.

KSHAK! CRUNCH!

Satan's Vectors batter and bash the Grim Reaper's five clones like a hurricane. They crush his bones, shred his ragged robes, fling him against the walls, and smash against his skull with the force of a meteor. The Reaper barely manages to let out a squeak of surprise before we mangle him into dust.

Satan's jaw clenches hard enough to chew steel. Within five seconds, he slaughters Valac's clones mercilessly, only to land on his feet, breathing evenly.

"That wasn't all of 'em. Where are you?! Bastard!"

Valac's voice comes to us in a whisper from the ceiling, walls, and floor. "You seem angry, Satan. How about taking a nap? Allow me to assist!"

Bael slides in to protect our flank as one of Valac's souls jumps from the ground toward our back. It smashes against his demonic aura and detonates like a grenade.

Kaboom!

Bael doesn't even wince. He scratches the spot where Valac's soul tickled him. "Shithead. I hate sneaky cunts. They never fight head-on. Oy, Satan! Why ain't you taking your girl and getting to Lucifer? Didn't I tell you... to..."

The big guy trails off. I turn around to look at him, only to see his eyes fixated on Nerissa's unmoving body.

"Oh, no he didn't."

Satan's hands ball into fists. Rage boils in his blood again. "Yeah. He did."

From the walls, ten of Valac's clones charge at us. Their aetherial bodies turn corporeal as his scythe skips around, teleporting from one's grasp to another's. "Sorry about your harlot, but now she's in a better place! I gave her a chance to follow my orders, but she couldn't save any face! Nyehehe!!"

Bael and I press our backs together. Valac attacks us from all angles, sometimes summoning explosive souls beneath our feet, but usually focusing on striking us with his scythe. Satan barely moves at all, opting to allow his Vectors to do all the heavy lifting. He watches intently to observe the Reaper's attack patterns, all while preventing Valac's scythe from so much as grazing our skin.

For each of Valac's clones we kill, two more show up. Soon, thirty of the giant demons soar in the air and dive at us like Eagles hunting for prey. Satan starts to sweat under the Reaper's relentless assault.

"Fucking die already, you skeletal bitch!"

All of Valac's clones cackle at the same time. They speak simultaneously as one. "Feeling tired, Satan? Care to take me up on that nap offer? I can do this all day! Not even Bael can protect you forever!"

Bael bats away Valac's scythe for the umpteenth time. "I ain't even breaking a sweat. Don't listen to 'im, boss. If he could fight like this from the start, he'd have done it sooner. He's bluffing."

Satan narrows his eyes. He jerks his head to the side, barely avoiding Valac's scythe before crushing the clone that got too close with our bare fists.

Bael's right. Valac should've done this from the very beginning, unless he was only toying with us. I'm not so certain of that, though. I bet he's going all-out, but he can't land a hit. It must take a lot of energy to maintain so many clones, not to mention splitting his mind among them.

Suddenly Valac cackles. "Ehehehe! Hey, Satan, I have a great idea! While you're busy fighting my clones, how about I peel apart this juicy cadaver you've left to rot? It'd be a shame to leave Nerissa lying here when she'd be so useful for my experiments, don't you think?!"

Satan's heart stops. Instantly, he flicks his eyes to Nerissa's body. Valac hovers above her, a bony knife held in his grasp. The Reaper's glowing eyes stare at me from beneath his hood as he slowly presses the weapon to her arm and deftly slices her flesh.

Satan's vision turns blood red as he smashes through the clones surrounding us, pounds two Vectors into the ground, and leaps at Valac. "Get your hands off my girl!! You worthless sack of SHIT!!"

We race toward Valac, clearing the thirty-foot gap in an instant.

"Boss! Watch out!" Bael yells.

Satan flicks his eyes behind himself just in time to see another clone materialize in midair. The scythe appears in its hands.

Shit! A trap!

Valac swings his weapon down.

"That will be your last mistake, Satan the Devil."

Shik!

His weapon pierces our back. Satan gasps, and the world goes still.

We freeze in midair.

Time stops, and Satan trembles.

W-what? Why am I not dying? What's happening?!

A sensation of burning spreads from the point where Valac's scythe has embedded in our back. It spreads like wildfire and travels across our shoulders, hips, arms, and legs. The inferno swallows our head, and Valac's voice appears in my mind.

Ohoho. What's this? So many juicy souls. I tasted them when I killed you earlier. I couldn't help but notice that one burned hotter than the rest.

Satan's heart trembles.

Get... get out of my head! Coward!

Samael bubbles up in our thoughts. He stands amidst the pitch-black void inside Satan's mind, a being of spiritual energy alone against the infinite blackness. "Satan. Valac's influence is spreading throughout thy body at the speed of thought. I am attempting to stop him, but he has already taken control of thy mana reserves. If he continues-"

OOOOH, there you are!

Valac appears in my mind's eye a short distance from the Archangel of Change. His mental apparition pounces at Samael's. The Archangel tries to grab Valac, but the Reaper phases through Samael's body, spins on his heel, and latches onto Samael's back. His four arms wrap around the Archangel's chest, and he links his hands together, turning himself into a set of powerful bone shackles. He stands several feet taller than the Archangel, overpowering him thanks to their size difference.

Satan! You've been a naughty boy! Since when did you get hold of the soul of an Archangel, hmm?! You've been holding out on me!

Satan's eyes widen. Samael! Fight him! Don't let Valac take you!

One of Valac's four arms uncoils from the Archangel's chest. He raises it to seize hold of the Archangel's face. Much like when he used a similar technique on Nerissa, Valac's palm surges with energy. This time, instead of pouring dark energy into Samael's mind, the Reaper siphons energy from Samael's soul.

Tasty! TASTY! I've consumed many an angel, but you will be the first Archangel to merge with my perfection! Samael, I remember how you used to kick me around, all those millennia ago. How does it feel, knowing you'll soon be my slave?! Nyehehe!!

Samael grunts angrily. The Archangel struggles with all his might to break free of Valac's grip. He throws himself down and rolls around on the unseen floor. The infinite black void, though formless, appears to have physical properties, much like the Cosmic Realm.

The Archangel slams his face repeatedly against the ground as he tries to break free of Valac's grip. The Reaper cackles evilly. Ohhh, look at this! How precious! Do you think you have a chance? You're but one soul among many! After I add your power to mine, I'll become unstoppable! You're the morsel I've been looking for!

Samael writhes and wriggles. He flings himself onto his back, but the Reaper's inability to feel pain only makes him laugh at the Archangel's feeble attempts to break free.

Give up, Samael. You can't hurt me! The sooner you bow to your new master, the sooner you can go to rest among your brethren in my lantern! Seconds remain. Your servitude is nigh!

Satan watches helplessly as the Archangel's energy reserves dwindle. We can't tell how much time has passed in reality, since time slows when moving at the speed of thought, but it feels like several minutes.

Samael changes tactics. He begins pulling his hands together to form a magical sign. Using all the strength left in his body, the Archangel summons his last vestiges of stamina to wriggle his arms loose, even just a little bit. Valac continues cackling, oblivious of the Archangel's intentions.

At the last second, Samael's palms make contact with each other. Instantly, he forms a dozen magical signs. His body begins to surge with light.

Valac stops laughing. Haha- what? What are you doing? What is this? Ahh! It burns! IT BURNS!!

The Reaper releases his grip on Samael and shoves himself free right as the Archangel ejects a coronal mass of light from every pore on his body. Satan winces as the light of the sun sprouts in his mind. The Reaper holds up his hand to protect himself, only for it to vaporize and scatter to ash under the power of Samael's divine magic.

Ahh! What- gahhhh! You little, wretched... what did you do?! You're only a soul! How can you summon holy energy within a demon's body?!

Samael inhales. He turns to face Valac, who now only has three arms. He steps toward his foe, and the Grim Reaper begins dragging himself across the ground to try and escape.

"Foolish demon. I am an Archangel! My powers exceed that of any pathetic being such as thyself! While thou may bendeth the souls of other beings to thy will, my power was granted to me by the Creator himself! Even trapped in this accursed mental prison, thou shalt never compare to me! Behold! This is the power of the Divine Originator!"

What follows next stuns me. Samael's hands transform into a blur of motion - reminiscent of when Raphael battled Satan in the Cosmic Realm. With the speed of thought being his only constraint, Samael's magic-casting rate becomes that of lightning.

Waves of lava materialize behind the Archangel. They leap over his head and rush at the Grim Reaper, splashing against his bones like waves against the seashore. Valac screams in pain and tries to tear the thousand-degree molten rock off his body, but within seconds, his bones melt to slag.

Valac's soul turns aetherial. He starts to fly away, but Samael flaps his wings and rushes at the speck of light.

Samael motions with his hands and radiates holy energy from his chest. "Nay! I shan't permit thee to flee! Thou shalt stay here... and reform!"

Valac's soul, little more than a shimmer of light hovering in the air, transforms into his skeletal body once again. This time, his raggedy robes are nowhere to be seen. The Reaper hits the ground, hard. His bones clatter against the formless void with several rapid tinks and clinks.

Gah! Valac coughs. He turns to stare at the Archangel in horror. What are you?! You're not an Archangel! You're... you're a monster! A monster!!

A wicked grin spreads across Samael's face. "Aye! A monster! That is who I have become! That is who I am! Stay awhile and keep me company, pathetic demon! I have more in store for thee!"

Samael's eyes glow pure white as he summons holy energy from the deepest parts of his soul. With a start, Satan realizes something important. Samael isn't using his own energy, but converting the Devil's demonic mana to holy mana. The Archangel aims his palm at Valac and unleashes a torrent of flames upon the cowering Reaper.

Geyaaaugh! Valac screams again as the flames cook him alive. Mercy! Have mercy!!

"Hahahaha!" Samael cackles gleefully. "Ohh, thou wouldn't believe how much fun I'm having! Dids't thee assume I would be helpless inside of Satan's body? Quite the contrary! His contract gave me access to all of the souls he consumes! While I cannot harm him, those who attempt to infiltrate his mind or soul will find me ready and waiting! Long have I wished for a chance to unleash my rage, and now is as perfect a time as ever! Hahahaha!"

Tears of joy stream down Samael's face as he summons flames, holy energy, boulders, and any number of other magical attacks to bombard the Grim Reaper. His laughter turns maniacal as he destroys Valac's body over and over, only to force the Reaper back into a corporeal form so he can do it again.

"Such joy! Such pleasure! Thy screams fill me with glee! Beg for forgiveness, foul demon! Perhaps, if the Creator takes pity upon thee, he may smite me where I stand! Bahahaha!"

Valac loses his ability to scream. His voice turns hoarse. Soon, he can barely release shrill shrieks as he rolls on the ground, unable to retaliate.

After what feels like years of torture, Samael finally slows his onslaught. His smile fades away as he stands above the Reaper's shriveled bones. Valac writhes on the ground, unable to control himself. His jaw opens and closes as if to beg for forgiveness, but no words come out.

"Thou art nothing but a speck of a speck, compared to the Creator's grand plans. I feel nothing but contempt for the evil coursing through thy bones. Worry not, little one, for I have already tired of our battle. Were I in my physical body, thou would have perished ages ago. Sadly, all I can do is batter thy soul around. Now, I bestow upon thee a quick, merciful death. Let the world be free of thy corruption."

Closing his eyes, Samael performs a dozen hand signs. His body morphs and shifts. First, he grows taller. Ten feet. Twenty. Thirty. His head morphs into that of a lion. His body sprouts thick, matted-down hair, as he transforms into a cave bear. The tail of a wolf sprouts on his rump, and within seconds his transformation concludes.

Like a god preparing to annihilate an ant, Samael raises one of his massive paws above his head. "Farewell, Valac. I will rest easy knowing I saved my family from thy wretchedness."

He swings his paw down.

Kaboom!

He smashes the last vestiges of the Reaper's bones into dust. Holy light builds inside his body. When Valac's soul tries to flee again, Samael opens his mouth to reveal a condensed ball of Holy Energy.

FWOOOSH!

Like an energy cannon destroying a mountain, Samael fires the holy energy at Valac's fleeing soul. The focused mana rips Valac to shreds and scatters his soul to the furthest corners of the void, erasing him from existence.

Samael purrs contentedly. "It is done. The Reaper... is dead."

* * *

A moment later, time returns to normal. Satan continues flying forward, but the sudden acceleration catches us off-balance. We stumble awkwardly and hit the deck with our jaw, nearly biting our tongue off.

Satan yelps. "Fuhk- gah!"

"Boss! Boss?! You okay?!"

Bael's voice makes us turn around. When we do, our eyes widen. All of Valac's clones freeze mid-attack. They hover above Bael and tremble silently. After a few seconds, Valac gasps repeatedly.

"Hah... hah.... hnn... b-burns... hurts... nnngghh..."

His clones slowly lower their arms to clutch their chests. They shiver uncontrollably. Their blood-red eyes fade away. White light appears instead as they try to grab their chests and stop the buildup of some unseen force within their bodies.

"S-Samael... you b-bas... bas... hnnn... gahhh!!!"

Valac shrieks in terror. At that moment, his skeleton explodes like a grenade, sending fragments of bone in every direction. The eruption of light after makes Satan wince. We shield our eyes, only to lower them a moment later and stare in awe.

Valac, the Grim Reaper, has vanished. All that is left are fragments of his bones, scattered around the chamber in every direction.

Bael blinks. He stares at me in confusion for a moment.

"Uh. Boss? What just... happened?"

Satan stares at him blankly.

"I... I don't know."

Satan dusts himself off. Thanks to Valac's final detonation, white powder floats in the air, coats the ground, and lines our clothing. Bael sneezes.

"Gah-choo! Bah! Cripes. How am I gonna get a lady if I smell like burned bones? That's nasty."

Satan smacks his lips. A taste like chalk sits in our mouth. "Tell her you're good at boning, I suppose."

"Hah! Boning! That's a good one, boss!" Bael slaps his knee and guffaws, only to start violently hacking and choking as he swallows dust. He stumbles over to the entrance of Valac's lair so he can get some fresh air, leaving us alone.

Satan doesn't smile. Instead, he shakes his head and lifts Nerissa's body into his arms. It's only been fifteen minutes since she died, but already her skin is starting to warm now that her ice magic is wearing off. Satan caresses her cheek for a moment as he stares at the face of the woman he loved.

"You didn't deserve this..." Satan murmurs. "But perhaps I did. I went too easy on everyone. I let a guy like Valac live when he should've died ages ago. I knew he was trouble from the beginning. If I'd killed him sooner... maybe... maybe you'd still be..."

He trails off.

Samael surfaces in our mind. Having reverted to his base form, the Archangel no longer appears as a giant chimera mesh of three animals. His expression is different from usual, in that he doesn't appear dismissive or rude.

"Satan. I am… sorry for thy loss."

Satan gazes at Nerissa's face. "Huh? You are? That's surprising. I can't believe you'd feel anything for me."

Samael purses his lips. "Once, I thought thee a monster. Unfeeling, uncaring. I… I have begun to rethink a great many of my actions while I was alive. While I battled Valac, I was able to connect to his soul. His memories. The things I saw… they made thee appear a pure-hearted saint in comparison. The actions he took to advance his amusement… those he hurt to gain petty revenge… thou art nothing like him."

Satan closes his eyes. "You saw Valac's memories?"

"I did."

"So… that means…"

Satan hesitates. His stomach churns for a moment as he thinks about what he's going to say.

"You… you saw… the demons Valac ordered to… to hurt Nerissa."

Samael crosses his arms. The Archangel of Change looks away for several seconds. A look of disgust spreads across his face.

"I did."

For a split second, all of Satan's muscles tense up. A flash of rage boils his blood, only to vanish a moment later.

"…Good. Before I merge the two demon colonies, I think I'll do a little housecleaning."

Samael purses his lips. "Thou intendeth to slay the ones who harmed thy mate?"

"Slay? Not quite. I'll drag it out a bit. I've been too easy on everyone. I'll… I'll make an example of them. I'll teach everyone what happens when they turn against me."

Samael lowers his gaze. "They believed thou had perished."

"Excuses won't save them," Satan murmurs. "Nerissa's dead. Nothing can bring her back, now. The least I can do is avenge her."

"And what, then?" Samael asks. "Art thou planning to battle against my people in perpetuity? How many must die before ye honestly make amends for thy deceit? There is still hope for thy redemption, Satan."

Satan shakes his head and opens his eyes to gaze at Nerissa's face once again. "Redemption. Cheh. Do you think I care about something like that? Raphael took Nerissa from me. I couldn't be there for her because of him. He trapped me in the Cosmic Realm. He prevented me from protecting her."

"Because thou attempted to deceive him. Are we to pretend ye didn't lie and open a portal in the middle of Heaven? Thy imprisonment was thy fault. Do not blame my brother for what happened."

"I'll blame him if I damn well want," Satan grumbles. He rises to his feet and lifts Nerissa in both arms. "This conversation is over."

As we walk toward the exit, Satan pauses for a moment.

"You know, Samael, I'm glad you chose to stay with me."

The Archangel rolls his eyes. "Spare me. I chose the lesser of two evils."

"Sure. But you fought with all your heart to make that choice."

Samael curls his lip in disgust. "Please, stop. I'll wretch if thy speech continues."

Satan shrugs. "Sure. Suit yourself. Though, I've gotta ask... how can you vomit? I thought angels couldn't... err..."

Samael facepalms. "Maybe I should have chosen Valac after all."

"Fine! Fine! Sorry I asked. Sheesh."

Satan exits the room to find Bael standing outside, shaking bone-dust out of his hair. He turns to us. "Geez, took ya long enough. I'm all for last words, boss, but having a whole conversation with your girl is a little..."

"I had a lot to say," Satan says, dismissing Bael's concerns. He doesn't bother correcting Bael about who he was chatting with. "Let's head out. I'm going to bury Nerissa somewhere she'd like. Maybe in a field of flowers."

Bael nudges me. "Heh, or in the Arctic? Like a popsicle. Eh? Eh?"

Satan stares at Bael. "I'd rather you didn't joke around, right now."

"Oh. Sorry."

Bael scratches his head sheepishly. Both of us begin shuffling the way we came.

As we head down the hall, Barbatos peeks his head out from around a corner. The twerp scampers up to us, and his eyes go wide as saucers. He stares at Nerissa in shock. "Mmmgm! Hm hm gmm!"

Satan raises an eyebrow. Barbatos continues making guttural sounds in his throat until a lightbulb appears over Satan's head. "Ah. Right. I shut your mouth with my contract. Go ahead. Speak your mind."

Barbatos opens his mouth and gasps. "Oh, jeez! I can talk again! Thank you, Satan, you wonderful, wonderful guy! You're the best! Hey, what's wrong with Nerissa? Why's she taking a nap? What happened with you'n Valac? Did he kick your ass?"

Satan's narrows his eyes as Barbatos bombards us with questions. "Don't make me regret allowing you to speak. Since you're here, you might as well make yourself useful. Gather all the demons and tell them Valac is dead. I want them to march to Lucifer's Lair. I'll be changing things up and retaking control of demonkind."

Barbatos's jaw drops. "You WHAT?! Holy crap! I knew you were the best! You beat him easily, just like I predicted! Oh, boy, everyone is gonna flip their shit when they hear how you and me worked together to bring Valac down! This is the best comeback story ever!"

Satan sighs. "Just do what I told you, alright? I'm not in the mood to chat. Begone."

Barbatos nods eagerly. "Yeah, yeah, I'm on it, Emperor Satan! You can count on me, your right-hand man! What a boss!"

The little grunt turns and tears ass in the opposite direction. He scampers away, leaving Bael and me alone.

Bael scratches his chin. "You gonna let 'im take credit for killing Valac?"

Satan shrugs. "Does it matter? It's not like anyone will believe him."

"Mmm. Fair point. Say, how did you beat Valac? He hit you with his scythe and then exploded. It was bizarre."

"Valac messed with the wrong Devil. That's all I can say."

"Psh. Be like that, then."

The two of us head toward the surface. Soon, the corridors blend together. As Barbatos scurries around, telling the demons of our feats, various male and female demons appear in the hallways, each one staring at Satan inquisitively. Some have hope in their eyes. Others; fear.

Samael murmurs in my mind. "That male, there. He's one of the ones who... with Nerissa..."

Satan's eyes lock-on to the scrawny little grunt; someone far too weak to have overpowered her by himself.

"Mmm," Satan murmurs under his breath. "One of many."

He doesn't say anything else.

The floor begins sloping upward. After several minutes of walking, Bael and I arrive at the collapsed crater. We step through the narrow opening and arrive at the surface to find the pit much darker than when we first entered.

Bael scratches his head. "Damn. Night-time already?"

Satan squeezes Nerissa's arm gently. "Dunno. Didn't feel like we were underground for that long."

As we enter the crater, a chill goes down Satan's back. He turns around, and his heart catches.

Above us, blotting out the sun, a massive, hundred-foot-tall Titan male stands. In each hand, he holds two metal poles. His beard, long and white, flows down his chest. His clothes shine with regality.

"It isn't night yet, Satan the Devil. But worry not, for soon, you will enter the eternal darkness."

The Titan stabs each pole into the ground on each side of himself. Satan's eyes widen. "Poseidon?! But... but... I killed you!"

"Oh? How gracious of you to admit to the act," The Titan says. His eyes smolder like coals in a fireplace. "You've saved me the trouble of beating a confession out of you. As repayment, here's a piece of information. My name is Zeus. The Titan you killed was my brother. And now, young one, I will repay you in full for his murder."

Satan scowls. "He attacked me first!"

"Tell that to someone who cares."

Zeus raises his palm to his mouth. He places the side of his thumb between his teeth, and bites down. Hard.

Then, he vanishes.

Part 132: Clash of the Titans

Recommended Listening

Zeus vanishes after biting his thumb.

Something pounds Satan's skull with such speed and strength that our vision instantly goes white. A high-pitched whine erupts in our ears. The white fades to black, and our mind disappears into the endless void.

We awaken on the ground, disoriented. The sounds of the world around us creep back into our ears like water trickling off a glacier. Satan blinks away nausea and slowly pushes himself into a sitting position.

"-tch out!"

Bael's voice catches our attention. Satan tries to focus his eyes, but a stinging, electrical pain prevents them from refocusing properly.

Out of nowhere, something hits us again.

A flash of motion strikes the side of our head with tremendous force. For a split second, I can almost make out the sensation of our brains discharging from our ears. The feeling passes, as white light takes us to the afterlife for the second time in a minute.

* * *

We awaken.

The world appears even blurrier than before. A hazy figure towers over us, its shadow darkening our vision.

"-survived? No matter. You can't even stand. Your spiritual energy will run out soon."

Satan stares at the person speaking. Somewhere in the back of his mind, he recognizes the speaker as Zeus, but his thoughts seem to trudge through molasses. His mind takes several agonizing seconds to try and fit puzzle pieces together.

Before Satan can figure out what struck us, Zeus disappears, and our chest shatters into a thousand fragments of bone and skin.

For the third time in under a minute, we plummet headfirst into the endless abyss.

* * *

We awaken. Satan doesn't bother to move this time. His entire body aches despite regenerating. His vision is so hazy that he can scarcely make out the shapes of the world around us.

Our hearing returns in stages. First, a sound like drums pounding a hundred miles away reaches our ears. Then, aggravating chimes ring out. By the time our vision and hearing clear up, twenty seconds have already passed.

Bael stands with his back to us, shielding us from our assailant. He breathes heavily and seems to be winded.

Bael stares forward intently, unwilling to take his eyes off his adversary. "Boss. You okay?"

Satan shakes off his disorientation and slowly pulls himself into a sitting position. "Ugh. Maybe. Head's killing me."

"No kiddin'. You got the fuckin' shit kicked out of you. Ain't never seen anything like it in my life. Can you stand?"

Satan nods, but Bael can't see the motion. "Yeah. One sec."

We clamber shakily to our feet and wince as the sun, no longer obscured by Bael's body, beats against our face. Taking a step forward, we arrive at Bael's side...

...Only to see Zeus towering over us, arms crossed. The forty-foot-tall Titan pants lightly and moderates his breathing so as not to appear weak. "Incredible. Three times, I have killed you. Three times, you returned to life. The first time, I assumed I made a mistake. The second, that you must have tricked me. Now, I've confirmed your uncanny regenerative abilities. I'm beginning to understand how you defeated my brother."

"And I'm beginning to see the resemblance between the two of you," Satan mutters. "You're both butt-ugly."

"Nice one, boss," Bael says. He doesn't smile. Instead, a look of worry crosses his face. "Where's your gal?"

"Huh? What do you-"

Satan pauses. His eyes widen as memories come rushing back.

"Nerissa! She was in my arms! What- where-?!"

Instantly, our eyes lock onto Zeus. "Bastard! Where is she?! What did you do with her?!"

Zeus smiles. "Ah. You must be referring to the corpse you were holding. Worry not. I would never desecrate the dead, unlike you. I put her somewhere... safe."

Satan balls his hands into fists. "You... spawn of a... give her back. Give her back NOW!"

"She must mean a lot to you," Zeus says, as he puts on a mock expression of pity. "Of course, so did my children, grandchildren, and in-laws your people have killed. Most notably, the wife of my offspring."

Zeus turns his head to the left. The edge of the crater, just above his eye level, conceals something from our vision. We discover what it is when his son, Hercules, appears atop the rim. The young Titan wraps one arm brutishly around Nerissa's waist, leaving her corpse to hang awkwardly at his side.

"Hello, Satan. Long time, no see. I've been looking forward to a rematch with you."

Flames ignite in Satan's chest. "Get your hands off my girl! You worthless piece of trash!!"

Satan coils his legs and readies himself to pounce at the Titan, but Hercules smirks. "Not so fast. This ugly sow must be someone special to you. Make one wrong move, and I'll crush her head, just like you did to my dear Megara."

Satan pauses. His legs shake as he instantly starts weighing whether he should attack or wait. "Cowards! How dare you use a hostage to stay my hand?!"

"Ahaha," Zeus chuckles. "You've got it all wrong, putrid bloodskin. This encounter is all about our revenge. Nothing more. Nothing less. I wish for you to suffer the same anguish my son did when you stole his beloved wife from this world. However, we are honorable, unlike your kind. If you can defeat us, we'll give you this female's body back. How does that sound to you?"

Veins bulge in Satan's arms. He trembles as he tries to swallow his temper. "You'll regret crossing me."

Hercules drops Nerissa atop the crater. Her body hits the ground like a sack of potatoes. "I doubt that, red rat. I nearly killed you with my bare hands, last time, but this whore's surprise attack caught me off-guard. Without her to protect you, you've only a few breaths left to take in this world. Enjoy them while you can."

Bael rolls his eyes. "Fucking hell! All you cunts do is talk, talk, talk! Eat shit and die!"

The big brute lunges toward the two Titans, sacrificing our chance at forming a strategy. Satan scowls. "I'll cover you!"

"I got this! Bahaha!"

Bael cackles as he runs toward the Titans. It's only once he arrives within striking distance of Zeus's legs that I get a good sense of the Titan's scale. Bael doesn't even reach the bottom of Zeus's knee. Meanwhile, Hercules stands fifteen-feet-tall, nearly twice Bael's size. The last time I saw the two of them was from Zeus's point of view, where his son appeared the size of a dog. But, from the perspective of the demons...

Bael swings his fist at Zeus's tibia bone, aiming to cripple the Titan from the start of the battle. Instead, Zeus dodges left, his body transforming into a blur as he moves far too quickly for Bael to keep up. Bael stumbles awkwardly and falls on his gut. "Gah!"

At that moment, Zeus performs a few quick magical signs. The sky turns overcast, and thunderclouds appear out of nowhere. One second later, a bolt of lightning races from above and strikes the Duke where he stands.

CRACK!

The flash of light stuns Satan, blinding us temporarily. Thunder explodes from the impact point, rattles our teeth, and shatters our eardrums.

With his vision and hearing obliterated, Satan stumbles and falls on his ass. He tries to rub his eyes and ignore the high-pitched ringing in his ears but never gets a chance to recover. Satan's Vectors spot Hercules as he appears and rears back for a punch, but the Devil proves too disoriented to dodge in time. Hercules' fist smashes Satan's skull and sends him flying.

Satan topples end over end and slides to a stop. Our vision darkens, and we fall into the infinite abyss for the fourth time since the battle began.

* * *

We awaken.

Satan jumps to his feet and quickly spins around to search for Bael. Bael yelps in surprise as he lands on his back a few feet away, evidently battered by one of Hercules's punches.

"Stop stinging me, ya zappy cunt!" Bael bellows at Zeus. "That shit hurts!"

The Titan King doesn't reply. He begins to weave several signs with his hands, and Bael moans. "Aw, hell. Not this again!"

The hairs stand up on the back of Satan's neck. He shoves his Vectors against the ground and flings himself to the side, just in time to dodge a lightning bolt aimed at our position. The thunderous boom doesn't destroy our eardrums, possibly because Satan's already built up some resistance from the last time it hit us. It still rattles our teeth, though.

Satan's Vectors cocoon around himself, allowing him to roll into a crouch and jump to his feet. He turns to Zeus, only to see the Titan king become a blur as he zips from his former position to tower over us. Too late, Satan looks up to see the Titan's massive foot hovering over our head. He stomps down, intending to grind us into a puddle of gore.

Satan quickly presses four Vectors against the ground and raises the other four above his head. We barely manage to catch the Titan's foot and save our life, but Zeus's strength is unthinkable! Satan's body trembles as he puts all his power into suppressing the Titan King's immense weight.

Footsteps stomp toward us from behind. Satan jerks his head back to see Hercules swinging his fist at our skull.

Shit!

Satan curses internally and tries to turn and block the punch, but with Zeus crushing us from above, we're caught between a foot and a hard place. At the last second, Bael rushes at Hercules and tackles him to the ground, saving us by the skin of our teeth. Satan spares only a moment to watch Bael start punching Hercules in the gut repeatedly before we return our attention to the Titan above. With a motion from his hands, Satan summons forth fire magic and blasts the flat of Zeus's foot with all the firepower he can manage.

Zeus zips away, his giant body once again moving far faster than seems possible. He appears at the top of the crater while breathing hard. Immediately, the hairs on the back of Satan's neck stand on end as Zeus weaves more signs to summon forth lightning.

Satan dives to the right, but this time, Zeus anticipates our movement. He aims at where we land instead of where we stood, and a bolt of lightning cracks from the sky.

Kzzat!

One million volts of electricity strikes our spine. Thunder BOOMS in our ears, shatters our vision, and sends Satan plummeting into the great abyss for the fifth time.

* * *

We awaken.

Satan jumps to his feet and crouches low as he scans for the Titan King.

"You are a troublesome opponent," Zeus says from atop the crater to our left. We follow his voice and gawk when we see him tear a tree out of the ground with his bare hands. "It seems that no matter how many times I kill you, your body always reanimates."

"That's because I'm immortal," Satan says with a grin. "When it comes to endurance, I always win."

"Unlikely," Zeus replies. His expression darkens. "Even for the greatest Soul Manipulators of all time, immortality wasn't possible. Everyone dies, eventually."

"Not me. I'm on a whole other tier. No matter how many times you land the killing blow, I'll always come back."

Zeus's eye twitches. "I've heard tales of Valac's immortality. Rumor has it the Angels and Titans have killed him a thousand times in a thousand different ways, yet he always returns to haunt them another day. For there to be two such immortal beings living in the same era... it defies credibility. You may attempt to deceive me, but I will uncover your weakness."

Zeus's body becomes a blur once again as he rushes toward me, the tree held high over his head. This time, Satan's eyes manage to follow his movements somewhat. We summon forth the element of wind to accelerate and dodge to the left, narrowly avoiding the crash of a massive oak hitting the Earth. Zeus bashes it against the ground over and over. He aims for us as we continue jumping to the left and right, using the element of wind to hasten our movements when needed.

"Hey, ugly! You forgot about me!"

Bael leaps from the rim of the crater and throws his entire body's weight against the Titan King's backside. His fingers grab hold of Zeus's skin and clamp like a vice, allowing Bael to use his feet to kick the Titan's shoulder over and over.

Wham wham wham!

Bael uses his incredible strength to batter Zeus relentlessly. The Titan King howls in pain, drops the tree, and tries to reach around to grab the tumor attacking his flank.

"Get off me, you insipid little-!"

When Zeus tries to seize Bael, the Duke of Pain releases his hold, slides down Zeus's back, and latches onto the robe wrapped around his body. "Looks like you won't be needing this anymore!"

Bael grabs for the Titan's spine, intending to tear it from Zeus's back. Instead, the instant Bael's fingers make contact with Zeus's skin, the Titan King grins. "It's your funeral."

KZZAT!

A blast of lightning surges out of Zeus's body and flood into Bael's hand, knocking the Duke for a loop and flinging him from Zeus's back. Bael plummets thirty feet to the ground below and hits it with a whump!

Zeus spins to face him. "Foolish bloodskin! My bones contain more electrical power than the sun itself! You have paid for your overconfidence with your life, and now I shall-"

The Titan King falters. He blinks in surprise as Bael, lying at his feet, winces and shakes some numbness out of his hand. "Damn, that stung like a bitch. My whole hand has the tingles, now."

Zeus's eyes widen. "You should have died from that."

"Died? Pft, shit. Do you think I'm some basic-bitch imp? You'll need to do better than that to put me in the ground, ugly."

"Noted," Zeus replies coldly. "I've yet to unleash the mightiest of my abilities. I didn't intend to go all-out against tiny little creatures like you, but both of your defenses are extraordinary. Satan regenerates from death, while you resist the afterlife with every fiber of your being. If that is the case, then it appears I have no choice."

Zeus raises both of his hands. He opens his palms, closes his eyes, and at the top of the crater, the two poles he thrust into the ground begin to rattle and shake. They tear from the dirt and fly into his grasp, hitting his palms with a satisfying whap!

Once Zeus obtains his poles, he grins. "It has been several ages since I last released all of my power. Thankfully, my son is not here to see his father's unrelenting fury. I would hate to diminish his spirits by witnessing the vast chasm between him and me."

Satan's eyes flick around. Now that Zeus mentions it, where did Hercules go? Wasn't he fighting Bael before? Did he disappear when his father killed me last time?

Bael snorts. "Pff, so what? Do you think whacking us with a couple of sticks is gonna do anything? And I thought I was the dumb one here."

"Believe whatever you like. Only three times have I wielded Aram and Maltet to annihilate my enemies, including when I smote my father and took his title as King of all Titans. None who witness their power will ever live to see another day."

Zeus's grin widens to encompass half of his face. It distorts into something sadistic and evil, as his Titan battle instincts awaken.

"This is going to be so, so very... FUN!"

The Titan King slides his hands down to grip both poles from their bottoms. He raises the right pole over his head while holding the left pole horizontally in front of himself.

Bael stares at him. "Okay. What next?"

The instant the words leave Bael's mouth, Zeus swings his right arm down. He clangs the pole in his right hand against the pole in his left.

A destructive blast of thunder explodes from the impact point. The soundwave sends a visible surge of air at us, obliterates Satan's eardrums, and sends us flying backward. We tumble end over end, flip and roll against the canyon, and pound against the crater's sidewall violently.

Hardly have we and Bael come to a stop before Zeus begins smashing the rods together, over and over.

WHAMWHAMWHAMWHAM!!

With our eardrums destroyed, we're unable to hear anything, but the onslaught of soundwaves presses us against the crater as if it were a barrage of fifty-ton wrecking balls. Our innards quiver and rattle under the relentless pressure, and blood begins to discharge from every pore in our body.

All at once, our chest collapses, sending our innards spraying in every direction.

Satan falls into the infinite abyss yet again.

* * *

We awaken to the same relentless pressure. Our eardrums shatter instantly as before, and no matter how we try, we can't lift a muscle to pry ourselves from the bloodstained wall behind us.

Satan's mind becomes unable to form intelligent thoughts as Zeus batters us with his unstoppable soundwaves. Just before we fall unconscious, the pressure stops. Satan slumps forward and flops to the ground, his body having melted into the consistency of Jello. We raise our eyes to see Bael running around Zeus's feet as he tries to punch the Titan's legs.

Bael yells something, but he is as silent as the rest of the world to us. Satan lowers his head, succumbs to internal hemorrhaging, and slumps into the endless abyss yet again.

* * *

"Confound you!"

Zeus howls angrily at Bael as we awaken. Satan shakes off his disorientation and jumps to his feet. This time, the Titan King dodges Bael with his superior agility and speed. He shifts from place to place, moving so fast that he appears to slide in place without moving his legs. His body becomes a blur as he evades Bael, travels behind the demon, and clangs his poles together to batter Bael into the dirt.

"How are you so resilient?! No matter what I do, you never take the slightest damage! That's impossible!"

Bael rights himself and jumps toward Zeus's chest. "I told you, dumbass! I ain't some little wimpy-ass imp! Eat my lumpy red fist!"

Bael swings and misses. Zeus shimmers to the side yet again, evading the Duke with ease. However, when he comes to a stop, I notice that Zeus appears significantly more fatigued than before he picked up his poles. He sucks in several shallow breaths and takes up a defensive stance as he eyes the Duke warily.

Satan licks his lips. It's only been fifteen minutes since our battle began, but already Zeus is wearing down. As I thought; when it comes to a battle of attrition, I always come out on top.

"Nyeh! Satan! Big boss! Over here!"

An annoying shrill voice hisses at me from a few feet away. Satan spins to face it, only to see Barbatos poking out of the entrance to Valac's lair, which is now half-buried under debris sent flying by Zeus's attacks. Barbatos keeps his voice low and beckons to me.

"Ugh. What is it?" Satan groans. "I'm busy, dammit."

"Backup's on the way, big boss! I'm here to help!"

"Just you?"

Bael manages to grab onto Zeus's clothing again, only for the Titan to batter him into the ground with a lightning bolt. Satan ignores their battle, knowing Bael will survive.

"Yeah, for now," Barbatos replies. "Others are coming soon! Grigori's gonna open a portal down below in the next few minutes. Just hold the big guy off a little longer."

Satan rolls his eyes. "I was already doing that. Get back underground. You're useless to me out here- no, wait. Hold on."

Satan pauses. A thought suddenly crosses his mind.

"Scratch that. Barbatos, I need you to do me a favor. It's a top-secret mission. Only you can do it, understand?"

Barbatos's eyes widen with glee. "Top secret?! Oh, boy! What is it, big boss? Tell me!"

"Zeus snatched my girl out of my arms and dropped her off along the crater rim. She isn't there anymore. Must have gotten blown away by his attack earlier. Search the area. I need to back Bael up so we can take this Titan down."

"Your girl? Nerissa?"

"Yeah. And don't try anything funny. If you fuck with her body, I'll break your back and shove you up this Titan's ass, I swear to the devils..."

Barbatos's face turns pale. "N-no problem! I'm on it! I won't touch her, I swear! Anything for you, big boss!"

"Get on it, then. Don't test my patience."

Satan returns his attention to Zeus and flexes his muscles. Bael's distracted Zeus for long enough. I need to do something to take him out. Most of the magic in my body is that of Grunts and Lords. My fireballs are weak. My earth manipulation isn't all that strong, either. Only my Vectors and physical body are worth bragging about, and they pale in comparison to Bael and the two Titans. What can I do that Bael can't?

Zeus lashes out his foot and kicks Bael, sending the Duke sprawling onto his back. Bael tumbles head over heels for a few dozen feet before grinding to a halt.

"How much abuse can you take?!" Zeus screams. "I've crushed mountains less resilient than you!"

Bael hops to a standing position, apparently unharmed. "Yeah? Well, I can't land a punch on your ugly face. You're a zippy-zappy little cunt! Every time I think I've gotcha, you zoom away! How the hell do you move that fat ass so fast?"

Looks like they're in a bit of a stalemate, Satan thinks to himself. There has to be something I can do to help. I can't take hits like Bael, but I have magical abilities he does. He's all muscle, while I'm the brains. Maybe if we combine our strengths...

A lightbulb goes off in Satan's head. He summons the element of wind to accelerate us from a standstill to nearly one hundred miles an hour in the blink of an eye. Satan bolts over to Bael and stops on a dime, startling the big guy. He jerks his fists up and prepares to punch us, only to halt mid-swing. "Bloody devils, Satan! You scared the shit outta me! Where've you been?"

"There's no time to explain," Satan replies. "I'm going to use my magic to increase your speed. You need to put this Titan down. Think you can do it?"

"Pft. I don't need no stinkin' magic to help me. I got this guy on the ropes!"

Satan nods. "I'll take that as a yes. Go!"

Satan summons forth the element of wind to fling Bael at the Titan. Bael yelps in surprise as Satan's typhoon yanks him off his feet and throws him toward Zeus.

Still, Bael gets his bearings. He pivots mid-flight and swings his fist to batter Zeus with all his strength, but the Titan shimmers to the side, evading the attack with ease.

"Tricks won't work on me, bloodskins!"

Satan smirks. "We'll see about that."

He rotates his hands, and a gust of wind yanks Bael in midair toward Zeus's new position. Bael grunts as he gets yanked back and forth, left and right, to chase after Zeus. The Titan King continues shimmering around, easily evading the tag-team attack by the demons.

"Pathetic. Is this the best you gnats can muster? You'll never be able to outspeed me."

Satan's smile widens. That was never my goal.

Zeus focuses his attention on Bael, flying around after him, but forgets about Satan for a moment. Zeus shimmers away from Bael once again, only to draw within a few feet of Satan as he carefully lures the Titan King closer.

Satan's smile expands across his whole face. Gotcha!

We lunge our Vectors out and grab Zeus's leg. The Titan King jerks his head down and spots us. "What?! When did you-?"

Satan drops Bael and immediately begins using his Vectors to climb Zeus's body. "You let yourself get distracted, boy! Here I come to snap that ugly neck!"

Zeus shimmers again, yanking us along with him, but Satan's Vectors clamp onto the Titan's skin like a vice. The Titan jumps to the nearby ridge and stomps his feet as he tries to knock us off, but Satan doesn't let go. We scale him within seconds and grab onto his head, readying ourselves to tear it off in one smooth motion.

Suddenly, a whiff of movement rushes at Satan's back. The Devil's battle instincts warn him of the incoming attack, but he's too focused on Zeus to avoid it in time.

Shik!

Something rips through our chest like a cannonball, tears out our ribs, and sprays our innards all over Zeus's neck.

Satan's gasps. "Huhk! Wh-what? Who...?"

Our Vectors lose their strength. We fall backward and plummet from Zeus's back.

As darkness takes us, I catch a glimpse of Hercules, his arm extended, smiling as he rolls a rock around in his palm.

He... he threw... a...?

Satan hits the ground and falls into a not-so-eternal slumber yet again.

My mind travels to Zeus. The Titan King follows Satan's body with his eyes as the Devil hits the ground with a whump!

Excellent work, Hercules. Zeus thinks to himself. Using your superior strength to hurl a projectile. Even I didn't expect you to use such a tactic. I'm proud to call you my son.

The world shifts around us. Bael lifts his middle finger to yell an obscenity, only to freeze in place. Hercules, the creatures of the forest, and even the wind itself slows to a crawl.

Zeus begins walking toward his son, and as he does, a sensation like wading through quicksand swallows our body. As if the air itself has turned to thick, viscous mud, Zeus forces himself to press through the invisible barrier, but winces as he does.

This battle has worn me down. I've always prided myself on knowing which opponents I could defeat in less than a minute. Using my Hypertime power at the start was supposed to kill the demons instantly, saving my energy. Instead, it proved to be a costly mistake. I exhausted myself while they endured my mightiest ability. Not even my father could defend against it, yet these demons can.

Something has changed. I don't know what, but it makes little sense for these tiny, insignificant creatures, once the lowly servants of the Angels, to become so powerful. Power is not something one can merely develop. It is a birthright; proof of one's divine right to rule.

Zeus arrives at his son's side. He stares at the unmoving youth for a moment and shakes his head.

My son, alone, should have been enough to crush these demons. Had I not come, I might have had to attend his funeral shortly after. Fate still favors us, in the end.

Time returns to normal. Hercules' eyes immediately lock onto my new position. "Father! You're lucky that I returned. I saw the demon climbing your back, and thought-"

"You assessed the situation correctly," Zeus says, cutting his son off. "I might have died, were it not for you. Satan will regenerate within half a minute. We must leave to fight another day."

Hercules shakes his head. "No, father. I refuse. I won't back down, no matter how powerful the demons might seem. Did you think I left for no reason? I knew you could handle the bloodskins alone. In the meantime, I went out and... and... what's that?"

Hercules pauses. He cocks his head, as if listening for something. Zeus opens his mouth to ask what caught his son's attention, only to detect a faint rumbling beneath our feet.

In the blink of an eye, Zeus swipes his hand down, grabs his son, and lightly tosses him toward the other side of the crater. "Burrowers! Be on your guard!"

The dirt erupts beneath me. Artorias pounces out of the depths of the Earth and swings his hand toward Zeus's ankles, summoning an earthen spike to skewer and cripple the Titan King.

He fails.

Zeus slows time once again and jumps aside, pressing through the thickened air to put distance between himself and the demons crawling out of Artorias's burrow.

Damn. Using my Thunderstep is exhausting me further. I can't keep it up for much longer, Zeus thinks to himself. Since demon reinforcements have arrived, I might be able to wipe them all out if I activate my Hypertime again, but if they can regenerate in the same way Satan can, I'll end up at death's door without a method of escape. Using such a mana-intensive ability twice will tear my body apart.

After putting a decent amount of distance between himself and the demon newcomers, Zeus slows to normal speed and watches as Artorias's earthen spike flies into the distance, merely striking our afterimage.

Barbatos jumps out of the pit and grabs his brother's arm. "See? I told you, bro! He's fast as fuck!"

Artorias wrenches his arm out of Barbatos's grasp. "Don't pretend we're on speaking terms. I won't forgive you for siding with Valac."

"That's old news!" Barbatos yells, waving his brother's concerns away. "Anyway, just be glad I'm here! With me helping you, we can easily trash this Titan! You know how strong I am!!"

Artorias narrows his eyes. "I do. That's why I know you'll be useless."

"Nyehehe! What a joker! I always said you were a bag of laughs, but nobody believed me!"

Hercules lands on his feet, and slides to a stop, unharmed. "More bloodskins. Perfect."

Dozens of demons crawl out of Artorias's burrow. They spread around the rim of the crater opposite us, hesitating to enter the pit due to the tactical disadvantage it will put them in.

Satan's body rapidly regenerates, and soon the Devil jumps to his feet. He turns to the demons atop the crater. "We don't need any small fry here! Leave!"

"Thank us later," Artorias replies. "Lucifer sent us to help you when she noticed the Titans arriving. After your battle with Valac, it's a miracle you have any energy to spare."

Satan scowls as even more demons appear at the crater's rim. "Don't worry about me. I'm fine. You guys are in danger. These Titans are too much for Grunts and Lords to handle."

Barbatos gives Satan a thumbs-up. "Nyehehehe! There's no problem at all, boss! I'm here, now, so leave the Titans to me!"

"I'm not a Lord, but a Baron," Artorias replies. "Worry not. Everyone here is willing to put their lives on the line if it means killing the Titan King and his son. If we kill them, the rest of the Titans will fall soon after."

The demons continue to converse with each other. Zeus narrows his eyes. Slowly, he taps Aram and Maltet together as he ponders what to do next.

It seems that in addition to the demon leaders, thousands of mid and low-level bloodskins have shown up, too. I cannot ignore this opportunity to wipe out a sizable portion of the enemy forces. The demons may intend to cut off my head, but they will find their strength lacking when compared to mine.

Bael walks over to Satan's side and points at the demons above. "Hey! You heard the boss! Get the hell outta here! You idiots will only get in our way!"

Zeus watches.

While the demons squabble over whether they should leave or stay, Zeus raises his poles. He summons forth his inner mana to deliver-

"Father. No."

Hercules interrupts our preparation. I lower my gaze to look at the fifteen-foot-tall Titan.

"Hm? What's the matter?"

Hercules smiles. "I told you. I left for a purpose. Now that the weak trash has arrived, you should take a few minutes to rest. I'll finish them all off myself."

"This is no time to jest," Zeus says, keeping his voice low. "There are too many bloodskins. Groups of enemies are my specialty. You will focus on their leaders and leave the others to me."

Hercules shakes his head.

"I apologize for my impudence, Father, but I must insist. Today... today, I will make you proud. Leave this battle to me."

Hercules raises his hands to his chest. He looks away from me and begins weaving a series of intricate magical signs. Zeus watches his son silently for a few seconds, only for his eyes to widen.

What? Hercules is a physical fighter. Since when did he start practicing such complex spellmanship? I thought... he wasn't...

Hercules finishes. Much like when he fought Satan two thousand years prior, his eyes begin to glow pure white.

"To me, my army."

Behind us, the sound of a thousand footsteps marching in lockstep catches Zeus's attention. He turns back to look into the dead forest, only to see hundreds, possibly thousands of humans with spears marching toward us. Their eyes glow, in the same way that Hercules' do.

A sensation of nausea boils in Zeus's stomach.

No. By the forefathers... it can't be. My son... he's using mind control on the humans. But... for him to control so many of them at once... that can only mean...

Hercules speaks, his voice full of confidence. "I'm ready to make you proud, father. Watch and see... see how much I have grown!!"

The young Titan pumps his fist toward the sky. "Warriors, CHAAAARGE!"

Zeus's face turns ashen. Hercules leaps into the pit and rushes toward Satan and Bael, while his thousands of human followers flow around the sides of the crater to attack the demon newcomers in a pincer formation.

The Titan King clutches his stomach and falls to one knee.

By the Ancestors! It can't be. My son... he... he has become... a Soul Manipulator.

Part 133: LEGION

Recommended Listening

My mind leaves Zeus's, and for the first time since Solomon's visions began, I levitate into the sky, my astral body unbound to the soul of another being. I hover high above the battlefield and watch from a distance as chaos unfolds.

Satan and Bael stand against Hercules, his eyes glowing with righteous fury and vindictiveness, while his army of five thousand humans charges toward the demons bursting from the depths of the Earth. Zeus takes a few minutes to regain his stamina and watch as thoughts about his son's awakened abilities roil in his mind. Half a dozen of Hercules' mind-controlled barbarians stand beside Zeus as if to guard him, though I can't help but think the Titan King is more than capable of protecting himself.

The demon army members cackle evilly as the humans charge toward them. "Filthy fleshbags!" Barbatos yells. "Not even ten of you can kill the weakest among us! Run to your deaths, foolish muck-dwellers! Nyehehe!"

Artorias swings his palms out to face the humans encircling the demons from the right and left. "Scythers, Brutes, take to the front lines! Burners and Rumblers, hit them before they get close! Don't underestimate them just because they're humans!"

The dark-skinned humans charge toward the demons silently, neither bellowing warcries nor howling like wolves ready to tear apart sheep. Their eerie silence sends tides of discomfort through the demon's ranks as they ready themselves for the first assault wave.

As the primitives draw within a hundred feet of the demons, the Burners shoot dozens of fireballs toward them, while the Rumblers launch boulders into the air, intending to flatten the humans into bloody pancakes.

Just before the fireballs hit, something surprising happens.

The humans dodge.

Their eyes, unified by the power of Hercules' soul manipulation, give them spherical vision in every direction. The front ranks halt, split apart, and dash left and right, causing the fireballs to splash against the dirt harmlessly. A few seconds later, the hail of boulders smashes into the Earth, sending tremors several feet underground as the giant rocks crash into the soil and roll to a stop.

"W-what?!" Barbatos squeaks. "Nyeh! They dodged?! That's impossible! We didn't hit even one!"

Artorias's eyes widen as the humans charge again, stomping through the tiny flames sputtering on the ground without a second thought. "Quickly! Fire another volley, Burners! Rumblers, you must-"

The Baron of Earthquakes doesn't get to finish his sentence. Hercules' armies splash against the wall of blade-armed Scythers and thick-skinned Brutes like two tsunamis against an island of red flesh.

Instantly, the demon defenders scream in horror as the human's wooden spears find their marks, gouging out eyes, throats, and hearts with uncanny precision. The humans batter the frontlines aside and rush the second row where the Burners have almost finished casting their fireball spells. Before the demons can complete their incantations, the first row of glowing-eyed humans swing their spears down like clubs, break the wrists of the magi, and cut off their spellcasting abruptly. Howls of pain erupt amongst the demon flanks as the humans tear through demon flesh like hot knives through butter.

Artorias slaps his palm against the ground. "The humans are sharing their vision! Hold them down and kill them one by one!"

His Earth Manipulation, far more powerful and precise than other demons of the same type, affords him a level of control they can't dream of matching. Artorias transforms the ground beneath the feet of several dozen nearby humans into quicksand, snaring them in the muck and causing them to stumble. In the blink of an eye, Barbatos and a dozen other grunts rip apart the humans and cackle with glee.

"Nyehehe! You may have killed a few weaklings, but now you'll have to face me, Barbatos, the most powerful demon of all! Foolish little fleshbags, rue the day you crossed my-"

Barbatos's triumphant cackles turn upside-down as he lunges toward a human pinned in the mud, motions with his hands, and sends a dozen shards of metal toward his trapped opponent. The metal instantly kills Barbatos's enemy, but in his excitement, the young grunt neglects a single human behind him, one who swings his spear out and bashes the demon across the back of his neck, sending Barbatos sprawling across the ground.

"Gahk!"

Barbatos coughs in pain and grinds to a stop. He turns to stare in terror as the glowing-eyed human charges toward him, spear upraised to deliver a killing blow.

"Eeee!! B-big brother! Help me!!"

As if Barbatos had unwittingly cast a spell, Artorias explodes from the dirt and catches the human by surprise. He pounces at the barbarian from behind and slams the human against the soil, raises a fist, summons a rock, and smashes it against the man's skull, splattering the primitive's brains everywhere.

Barbatos gasps. "H-haa.... th-thanks, big brother! I... I could've taken him!"

Artorias backflips just in time to dodge another human's spear aimed at his neck. "Less talk! More fight! We have to hold out until the main force arrives!"

The Baron of Earthquakes, currently the highest-ranked member of the demon army, barks out orders as he darts around, firing pebbles like bullets into the brains of nearby humans. "Their eyesight doesn't pierce underground! Surprise them from below! You there, protect your weak points. You, assist that Burner!"

While the demons atop the crater's edge continually get reinforced by others emerging from Valac's Den, my eyes travel over to Satan. He and Bael engage in battle against Hercules, but to my surprise, the Titan easily holds his own.

Bael throws himself against Hercules and wraps his arms around the Titan's waist as he tries to grapple him to the ground. Satan leaps into the air and dives toward Hercules, Vectors extended, only for the Titan to swing his palm up and hit Satan with a telekinetic blast, tossing the Devil backward.

By the time Satan hits the ground, Hercules has already started battering Bael's exposed back. While the Demon Duke holds onto the giant with all his might, Hercules swings his fists down and smashes Bael's shoulders, spine, and head. Over and over, the Titan's fists become a blur as he savagely beats Bael with all his strength.

"Unhand me, you disgusting wretch!"

Bael grunts reflexively after taking each punch. "Guh! You can't- guh! You can't make me! I'm- guh! I can take anything you- guh! Anything you dish out!"

As the seconds pass and Satan lunges forward, I begin to notice that Hercules strength is increasing over time. His fists send out stronger shockwaves with each impact as his muscles increase in power. The Titan's glowing eyes intensify as he spots Satan skittering toward him, giant stones clutched in four of his Vector's claws.

"You want to hit me with some rocks, eh?! Give it your best shot, Devil!"

Hercules pauses his relentless assault on Bael's flank to swing his arm in a wide arc. Before Satan can close the distance, a telekinetic attack knocks him aside and throws off his balance, sending the Devil skidding across the crater to the left. "Shit! Bael, I can't get any closer!! This punk keeps hitting me with something!"

"Hahaha!" Hercules cackles and returns to punching Bael's head. "Your invisible arms nearly did me in, once! Now the shoe is on the other foot, little bloodskin!"

Bael winces as Hercules continues to smash his skull relentlessly. "Grgh! Forget me, boss! Help the others! I- gah! I can take this piece of- fuck!"

Satan pauses for a moment. He grimaces as he watches Bael taking unthinkably savage blows from Hercules, but turns his head toward the slaughter happening atop the crater.

"Damn," Satan mutters. "I can't just leave Bael behind... but my friends are getting murdered up there."

The Devil takes several agonizing seconds to consider his options. All of a sudden, Bael gets a second wind. He digs his feet into the dirt, uncoils his arms from Hercules' waist, and throws himself into a ridiculous uppercut, smashing the young Titan's jaw with all his strength. Hercules gets flung backward, several of his teeth shatter, and he hits the side of the crater with a deep whump!

Bael charges the Titan and yells at Satan. "Get going, dumbass! I told you I could take this clown!"

Satan nods. "Oh. That settles that."

With a weirdly calm shrug of his shoulders, Satan leaves Bael and Hercules behind. He coils his Vectors, pounces atop the crater, and lands amidst chaos as Hercules' forces continue tearing through the demons like a herd of buffalo stomping through a flock of geese. The only one capable of holding his own is Artorias, and he's being pulled ten different directions trying to save his friends and eliminate as many humans as possible. Already, two thousand dead demons litter the ground, while only a few hundred humans have met similar fates.

Satan evaluates the scene of carnage for only a moment. He lunges toward the nearest humans and flings his Vectors forward, intending to catch them off-guard and crush their skulls before they can react. Instead, the humans spin to face him. Their glowing eyes lock onto Satan's Vectors, and they duck, dodge, and roll, avoiding them with ease.

The Devil's thoughts transmit to me, high in the sky. Just like Hercules, these humans can see my Vectors. He must be sharing some of his power with them. No wonder the grunts were overwhelmed.

Several dozen humans encircle Satan, leaving their comrades to battle the weaker demons. In the blink of an eye, they lunge toward Satan, spears upraised, intent on killing the demon leader. Satan uses his enhanced speed to instantly cast a wind spell. He rushes through the primitives, feints with his Vectors to make them dodge, but uses his fleshy arms to punch the heads of the nearest two clean off their shoulders. Before the others can recover, Satan dashes toward them. He transforms his body into a hurricane of destruction and crushes their heads faster than they can react.

As I thought, Satan thinks to himself with a satisfied smirk. Their minds may be unified, and their eyes might be able to see my Vectors, but their bodies are still those of weaklings. I can easily outmatch them in both power and speed!

Satan doesn't hesitate. He spends the next minute murdering dozens of humans, forcing the others to turn their attention on him. Unfortunately for them, Satan's Vectors pass through their defenses, turning corporeal only long enough to rip them in half or tear their spines out of their backs. Despite the barbarian's best efforts, Satan is simply too powerful for them to overcome.

Barbatos cackles. "Nyehehehe! With Satan and me here, these worthless fleshbags will fall! Come on, boys! Let's push them back!!"

* * *

Satan's appearance rallies the demons together. A surge of determination rushes through their ranks. It doesn't take long for a few Lords to emerge from underground, including Orias, Lord of the Moon. Hercules' barbarians lose their battle momentum and quickly get pushed back. Their numbers begin to dwindle. Soon, their numbers equalize with the demons, despite their superior teamwork and battle prowess.

"Dumbass, Hercules!" Satan yells. "You thought you could beat me with the combined power of a few measly primitives?! Get real! You could never hope to stop me or my loyal-"

Satan pauses mid-sentence. He stumbles slightly and clutches his chest.

"Wait. What... what is... this feeling...?"

The Devil lurches backward. A sickening sense of nausea overtakes him.

Samael appears in Satan's mind. "By the Creator! Satan, this isn't good. Those humans... thou hath absorbed their souls! Hercules... he still controls them!"

Satan blinks heavily. "No... no... it can't be... this is..."

The other demons continue battling the humans, oblivious to the battle happening inside Satan. The Devil's red eyes slowly lose their luster. Red fades to grey, then to white.

Suddenly, Satan howls in pain. "Ahhhhh!!! It burns! BURNS!!"

The Devil falls to his knees and clutches the sides of his head. His Vectors spasm uncontrollably. Several humans encircle him, but they don't move to attack.

One of us. One of us.

Satan leans forward and vomits bile all across the dirt in front of himself. "Guuaak!!"

The humans stare Satan down as he loses his last vestiges of resistance.

Obey. Obey. Rise. Join us.

After several seconds, the Devil stands. His eyes, like those of the humans around him, glow pure white.

In Satan's mind, a single phrase repeats, over and over.

We are one. We are Legion.

* * *

Meanwhile, down inside the crater, Bael stands atop Hercules and beats the Titan's face repeatedly, turning his fists into a storm of pain and suffering. His meaty hands batter Hercules over and over, sending blood spraying in every direction. "Bahahaha! You can't even move! You're dead meat, punk!!"

Hercules, despite having his face smashed from left to right, forces a smile.

You're wrong, dim-witted demon. I've already won.

Recommended Listening

With Satan under Hercules' mind-control, the battle outside the crater instantly and violently reverses momentum. Several demons scream in terror, their voices cutting off a split-second later as Satan rends their bodies in half with his Vectors.

"S-someone help! Satan's gone mad! He's working with the- AHHHK!"

One Burner tries to shout a warning to the others, only for Satan to rush him and crush his head. A moment later, Satan gains access to that demon's powers, and he begins summoning ten fireballs at once, using all of his Vectors and his non-Vector hands as well. One after the other, the Devil lobs dozens of fireballs, combining his attacks with the humans to completely overpower his fellow demons.

Shrieks and cries mix with begging and pleading for mercy, only for those speakers to fall silent as their souls leave the world of the living. Any demon with a useful ability ends up having their skull crushed by Satan, while the others turn to charred corpses in the wake of his onslaught.

Artorias, distracted by his battle with the humans, finally realizes what's happened. He gawks in horror at Satan, watching for only a few moments as Satan slaughters several grunts in the span of a few seconds. "Traitor!! How dare you kill your loyal followers! I won't forgive you!"

With a clap of his hands, Artorias dive-bombs onto the dirt, allowing the Earth to swallow him whole. Like a shark racing through the ocean, Artorias rapidly swims through the hardened rocky soil, stabs one hand through the surface, grabs Satan's leg, and yanks him into the dirt. Satan tries to attack Artorias, but the Baron of Earthquakes proves far too agile. Artorias swims underground in an instant, avoiding Satan's Vectors as the Devil tears apart the soil trying to get to him.

A moment later, the terrain wrapped around Satan's legs suddenly compresses, crushing his bones and spraying blood in every direction. Eerily, Satan doesn't yell or cry out in pain. The mind-controlled Demon Emperor merely uses his Vectors to tear himself out of Artorias's makeshift trap, ripping away skin and bone from his legs as he does. Thick, viscous blood gushes from Satan's leg-stumps, but the Devil ignores his pain.

As Satan swivels his glowing eyes around to scan the battlefield, Artorias bursts out of the ground, makes a sweeping gesture with both arms, and summons a massive cloud of dust. The wall of crushed stone and soot detonates like a bomb, instantly shrouding the battlefield in a dense, smog-like substance.

From my vantage point high above, my vision pierces the powder-cloud easily, allowing me to follow Artorias's movements. He dashes around to Satan's front, attacking the Demon Emperor head-on. At the last second, before Artorias can deliver a gut-busting punch to Satan's ribs, the Devil's Vectors dart toward the Baron, intending to tear him in half. Artorias's eyes spot the disturbance in the air, and he kicks to the side, avoiding Satan's counter.

An instant later, Artorias smashes his foot into the ground, sending a spray of dirt-bullets rushing toward Satan. The Devil can't react in time, and the pebbles tear through his body, ripping skin and bone out to spray against the humans and demons nearby. They, in turn, ignore the battle between the strongest fighters, focusing instead on combatting those on the same tier as themselves.

Artorias's thoughts beam to me. Satan isn't acting like himself. From what I've heard, he's an extraordinary battle tactician. There's no way a cloud of dust would catch him off-guard under normal circumstances. If that's the case, then that must mean... those glowing eyes...

The Baron dives underground, narrowly avoiding six fireballs hurled from Satan's hands and Vectors. For every second that passes, the Baron manages to piece together more of the puzzle surrounding Satan's mind-control.

Hercules must have taken control of Satan. But... why didn't he do so sooner? There must be some way to break the spell vexing our commander!

Swimming underground, Artorias begins hurling stone-spikes toward Satan. They burst out of the soil and rip through the Devil's defenses, tearing out Satan's stomach, liver, and lungs. The Demon Emperor stumbles awkwardly, clutches his wounds, and falls to the ground. His Vectors go limp as he swallows his final breath.

Artorias pounces out of the dirt to land beside Satan as his body flops to the ground. "Shit. I didn't mean to hit Satan's vital organs. Lucifer is going to ream me if I make it out of here alive."

Turning his attention away from the fallen Devil, Artorias jumps back into the battle and begins quickly eliminating several humans nearby. He smiles as he realizes that the dust cloud removes their ability to coordinate their vision properly. "Everyone! The fleshbags can't see! Hit them while they're blind!"

Having turned away from Satan, the Baron doesn't notice as the Devil's body begins to regenerate. After twenty seconds, Satan jumps to his feet. His glowing eyes lock onto Artorias.

Powerful soul. Must take. Ours. We are Legion.

Artorias senses something is wrong. He turns around just in time for Satan to grab his throat with a Vector. "Gahk! What?! You-"

The Devil doesn't allow his former subject to reply. Satan smashes Artorias against the ground savagely, battering him into the dirt over and over. Wham! Wham! Wham!

Artorias howls in pain. "Gaaaaugh! Shit!!"

He tries to cast a spell, but Satan's other Vectors dart toward him, grab his arms and legs, and pin him against the dirt. With the Baron restrained, Satan clenches his Vectors together, snapping each of Artorias's limbs like twigs. Kshhk!

"AAAAAHH!! EEEEAAUGH!"

Artorias screams, wails, and cries, as his life nears its end. He forces his eyes open just in time to see Satan's fleshy hand reaching forward to crush his head.

Before Satan can finish the job, several shards of metal fly through the smoke and slice his arm off, tearing through skin and bone as if they were wet paper. Barbatos jumps toward Satan, dancing and spinning as his shards of metal turn into a whirlwind around him. The young demon snarls viciously. "Get your fuckin' mitts off my big brother, scumbag!! I knew you couldn't be trusted, nyeh!"

Satan turns to face the new attacker, but he's too slow. Barbatos uses the element of surprise to his advantage, sending razor-sharp shards of metal to tear through Satan's limbs one after the other. Satan releases Artorias to focus on defense, but he can't dodge the tiny little blades dancing to and fro, dicing him apart like an onion. Barbatos severs Satan's other arm, gashes open his arteries, and eventually drains rivers of blood from the Demon Emperor before Satan can react.

Satan stumbles awkwardly, unable to control his movements. The Devil's legs give out beneath him, and he falls onto his back, as blood pools beneath him.

Barbatos doesn't hesitate. He sends three blades toward Satan and decapitates the Devil, killing him instantly. "Eat shit! I knew we couldn't trust you!"

After a quick confirmation of Satan's death, Barbatos darts into the fog to search for his brother.

"Bro! Bro! Where are you?" Barbatos calls out.

"O... over here..." Artorias coughs.

Barbatos follows the sound of his brother's voice, set against the backdrop of demons howling, weapons clanking, and feet stomping. Barbatos stumbles toward Artorias, only to find him laying on his back. "Aw, shit! What happened?! Are you okay?!"

Artorias blinks heavily. "F-forget... forget about me... Satan... he isn't dead. He comes back... get out while you can."

Barbatos flicks his eyes in the direction Satan perished, but he can't make out anything in the smog. "Nyeh! I cut his head off. No worries! C'mon, bro, I've gotta get you to the healers! You're in bad shape!"

Artorias's eyes widen. "The ground... it's trembling. He's already reviving. You... you have to go... you're too weak, Barbatos..."

"No! I'm not weak!" Barbatos says, tears in his eyes. "I won't leave you to die! Look, bro! I'm a Lord now! I gutted a bunch of fleshbags! I can protect you!"

Indeed, it's only now that I realize Barbatos's horns appear more prominent than before, standing nearly an inch tall on the sides of his head. It also explains why his metal manipulation seemed much faster and more precise than the last time I saw it.

Artorias turns delirious. His head lolls to the side. "Go... go... too weak... go..."

Barbatos gnashes his teeth. "I won't! I'm not a weakling! I'm big and strong, just like you! We have to stick together! That's what brothers do!"

Satan finishes reviving. He rises to his feet and sweeps his gaze through the smog, turning his head towards Barbatos's sobbing voice.

"I hate this!" Barbatos screams. "I hate people calling me weak!! I'm not weak! I'm strong! I'm awesome, like you!!"

Satan jumps toward Barbatos. His Vectors dart into the smoke and laser toward the crying little Lord.

Barbatos senses the danger incoming, but he can't react in time. Satan grabs the young demon by the back of the neck and yanks him toward the Devil.

"Uwaaah! Bro!!"

Barbatos shrieks in terror. His face spins around and sails toward Satan's outstretched hand as the Devil prepares to crush his head.

With death only an instant away, Barbatos's resolve suddenly hardens.

"NO!! I WON'T DIE HERE! YOU WILL DIE!!"

Rage swallows the Lord's mind. The instant his face presses against Satan's palm, dark energy erupts from every pore on Barbatos's body. The little guy shrieks a bloody warcry, his voice deepened by several octaves. His muscles explode with power.

"YOU HURT MY BROTHER!! I'LL KILL YOU!!"

Satan tries to crush Barbatos's head, but the dark energy around Barbatos's skin transforms into an iron-like barrier. Barbatos grabs Satan's hand and yanks it off his face. His strength increases by a factor of twenty as he tears the Devil's arm from his shoulder. A shower of blood explodes from Satan's stump, but he doesn't get much time to process the pain. Immediately, Barbatos plants a foot in the ground and throws himself at the Devil, summoning shards of metal to cover his hands and turn them into lethally sharp claws.

The newly arisen Lord swings his claws in huge, sweeping arcs, tearing out Satan's ribs and sending chunks of skin and bone flying in every direction. Satan flings Barbatos away with the combined strength of all eight Vectors, but the instant the berserked Lord touches the ground, he charges at Satan again, snarling like a wolverine.

"BETRAYER! DOUBLE-CROSSER!! YOU AIN'T HALF THE DEMON VALAC WAS!!"

Barbatos dashes to Satan's left. He swings his claws down, tears up the ground, and flings a hail of dirt and rocks at the Devil. They sail through Artorias's smog and smack Satan, but only distract him for a split-second. Satan counters by clapping his hands together and summoning the power of wind to blow away the remainder of the smoke and debris.

Instantly, Satan's demeanor changes. With the smoke no longer clouding the human's shared vision, Satan jerks to the side, not bothering to look directly at Barbatos. He snaps his Vectors toward the Lord of Iron, but one only manages to grab the side of Barbatos's arm. It squeezes, hard, and tears off a chunk of skin, but Barbatos dives into a roll and pounces at Satan. His arm heals instantly, aided by some supernatural regeneration ability.

Barbatos and Satan engage in a high-speed battle. The Lord of Iron gashes out parts of Satan's body, but the Devil retaliates in kind, ripping out chunks of skin and muscle whenever he manages to land a lucky hit on Barbatos. Both of them face each other head-on, attacking with brutal savagery. Their blood and sinew coat the battlefield in the smell of death. Whenever Barbatos gets injured, he heals instantly, but Satan ignores any damage he takes entirely.

Eventually, after a minute of fighting to keep the enraged Lord from ripping him apart, Satan succumbs to his wounds. With his right arm missing, lacerations severing his tendons and muscles, and dozens of internal organs ruptured, agonizing pain punctuates the Devil's final gasp of breath as Barbatos slaps Satan's head clean off his shoulders, sending it flying into the crowd of humans like a cannonball. It pulverizes three primitives who were unable to dodge in time, and shatters into a mass of blood and bone when it strikes the dirt.

Barbatos doesn't let up. Even as Satan's body slumps over, Barbatos grabs him and begins tearing what's left of Satan to pieces.

"FUCK YOU! FUCK YOU!! I WON'T LET YOU COME BACK, YOU WORTHLESS PIECE OF SHIT!!"

The Lord of Iron's razor-sharp claws tear Satan's limbs off, flinging them into the crater behind him. He crushes bones, dices and slices muscles, and flays Satan's skin to nothing.

Suddenly, Satan begins to regenerate. Barbatos grins excitedly. "HAHAHA!! YOU THINK I'LL JUST LET YOU HEAL?! NOT ON MY WATCH!!"

Despite Satan's incredibly fast regeneration, Barbatos goes into overdrive. He uses his metal manipulation, huge muscles, and insane speed to batter Satan's corpse with all his might. For over two minutes, Barbatos prevents the First Emperor's return from death.

Barbatos begins to pant. He rears back to smash Satan's regenerating arm, only to swivel his head to the side. Five humans dash toward him, equipped with little more than rocks and their bare fists. Their spears, destroyed or lost during the battle against the demons, would prove to be of little use against the Lord infused with Herculean strength.

Each human begins flinging their rocks at Barbatos. Barbatos stares at them silently as the rocks smack against his body, barely bruising him before he regenerates.

"Hahaha... what is this? Some kind of joke?! Are you MOCKING ME?!"

Barbatos leaps away from Satan and cackles maniacally as he rips the primitives to shreds, killing them before they can react. "Bahahaha!! WHAT A JOKE!! NOBODY CAN STAND UP TO ME, NOW! I AM BARBATOS THE ALMIGHTY, THE INVINCIBLE! NYEHEHE!!"

It only takes Barbatos a few seconds to kill Hercules' primitive humans, but that proves an adequate amount of time for Satan to finish regenerating. His glowing eyes bolt open, and he slams his Vectors against the ground, launching himself fifty feet into the sky.

Barbatos whirls around. "Aw, shit! I got tricked!"

The young demon starts to jump into the air after Satan, but the Devil's mind is already five steps ahead. His thoughts, as well as those of Hercules and all the other humans, merge into a unified hivemind.

The demons will win, soon. Drastic measures required. Adjusting priorities.

The Devil begins motioning with his hands. As Barbatos rushes toward him from the ground below, Satan summons the power of wind and launches himself straight down like a railgun.

"What the-?!"

Barbatos yelps in surprise as Satan flies past him and smashes his fist against the planet, using Earth Manipulation to send a shockwave deep into the tectonic plates. A moment later, Satan yanks his fist up, combining his Earth Manipulation with Poseidon's Water Manipulation to summon the water from a vast, underground lake. A chasm three-feet-wide and miles deep opens up beneath him. Before Satan can fall inside, a violent ejection of freezing-cold liquid rushes up, flooding the underground caves Valac's cronies dug. It tears through anything in its path and slams against Satan's back, firing him into the sky like a shotgun.

The Devil spins around, lands on his feet, and creates a mana barrier to stand atop the plume of liquid like a surfer. Satan's eyes glow more intensely. With a flurry of motion, he begins using his hands and Vectors to fire ultra-compressed shots of water at his enemies below. Dozens of demons dive to their right and left, avoiding some attacks, only to end up gored to death by the humans. As its pressure lessens, Satan's wall of water crashes against the ground and sweeps everyone off their feet.

Artorias, still broken and dying from his battle, spirals away helplessly as the current yanks him into the distance. Barbatos lands in the river with a splash. "Bro! BRO!!" His body begins to lose its strength as his will to fight fades.

The Lord of Iron rides the current and swims after his brother, leaving Satan's onslaught uncontested as he fires compressed water at any demon in his path.

We are Legion. We follow our leader to the end.

* * *

Bael and Hercules, still locked in a stalemate of a battle, jump away from each other as the newly uncovered river begins rapidly flooding the crater and flowing back underground. Bael's eyes flick toward the crater rim. Damn! I'm still stuck here, fighting this useless piece of shit by myself! The boss should've killed all the fleshbags and told everyone to skedaddle by now!

Hercules laughs triumphantly as the water rises to his knees. "Imbecilic demon! While you stayed here to fight me, I took control of your leader's mind! Satan is mine, now! He's killing demons, and there's nothing you can do to stop him!"

Bael narrows his eyes. "Bullshit! Satan would never work for the likes of you."

Screams of pain over the ridge reach Bael's ears. He tilts his head toward them, only to realize the ones howling in pain are demons, not humans.

"You underestimated me, little demon," Hercules says. "As did Satan and everyone else! They thought me a foolish meathead, someone incapable of forming coherent battle strategies. While that might be the case for you, it was never true for me!"

Hercules aims his palm at Bael and uses his telekinetic abilities to yank the Duke of Pain toward him. Bael grunts in annoyance and braces himself for a fist to the face, only to yelp in surprise as Hercules grabs him by the throat and plunges him into the rising waters inside the crater.

"You can take a beating, demon, but can you breathe underwater?! I think not!"

Bael's entire body submerges beneath the water, which has already risen to Hercules' waist. The Titan cackles as Bael struggles to free himself. He kicks his legs, grabs Hercules' arm and tries to pull it away, but the Titan only strengthens his grip.

"Gurgle, gurgle! Have you anything to say?! I can't hear you!!"

* * *

Atop the crater, Satan continues wiping out the last vestiges of his fellow demons. With the current slowing behind him, he simply uses the water already available to fire continuous concentrated bursts at anyone unlucky enough to stand in his range. The humans nearby combine their efforts to kill off the stragglers, but a lone Lord stands apart from the rest, still managing to hold his own despite desperate odds.

Orias, Lord of the Moon, wrapped in a brown cloak concealing his body, summons forth a wide variety of elemental powers. Fire and ice bend themselves to his will, as do the elements of Earth, lightning, and a dozen others. Despite being little more than a Lord, his powers seem far superior to those of other demons, allowing him to fend off dozens of humans at once.

After snapping his fingers, Orias fires several flame-bullets at two nearby barbarians, blowing out their chests and sending them sprawling.

"Tch. I'm running out. Not much longer, now."

Orias snaps his fingers again. A flash of light ignites in his palm, and he summons a wall of ice to block several of Satan's water-missiles.

"Everyone else is down. I'm the only one left. If I'd have known things would turn out this way, I'd have stayed underground. Fate bends me over, once again. The Creator is a bastard."

The Lord of the Moon grits his teeth in annoyance. Despite his dire situation, he seems more annoyed than desperate. I can only assume he's resigned himself to death.

Satan leaps into the sky, bringing gallons of water along for the ride. He motions with his hands, and the blob of water adheres to his back. Within seconds, he finishes summoning Poseidon's Octopus Form, which, in addition to his Vectors and Arms, gives him a total of eighteen limbs.

Orias flicks his eyes toward the incoming threat. "Oh, fuck my life."

The Lord of the Moon quickly thrusts his hand into his robe. When he pulls it back out, I catch a glimpse of a shiny white piece of metal, or perhaps something else. He immediately closes his palm, snaps his finger, and inhales.

"One minute. It'll have to do."

Satan falls from the sky, aims himself like a bullet, and smashes into Orias with all his strength. The Devil weaponizes his invincible body, using it like a cannonball to try and crush Orias with all his weight.

Instead, the opposite happens. Orias holds his ground and thrusts a palm out, shoving the Devil backward with surprising strength. Satan grabs the Earth with his Water Tentacles and uses his Vectors to smash and pound Orias. Each one balls into a fist and slugs Orias's body like a sledgehammer, battering him from eight directions at once. The poor Lord hasn't a chance of resisting. He gets knocked around, thrown into the receding waters, grabbed by the legs, and smashed into the mud over and over.

Orias doesn't yell or scream. He takes the abuse without complaint, and after several seconds, Satan drops his unmoving form into the ankle-deep water. The Devil grabs Orias's head and squeezes, intending to crush his skull.

Nothing happens.

Satan furrows his brow. He yanks Orias's hood off and lunges forward, only to stare in bewilderment.

Orias's body shines in the midday sun. Instead of blood-red skin like all the other demons, his is ghostly white, pockmarked with hundreds of strange, concave holes. Each one, barely the size of a marble, is shaped slightly differently from the others around it. They appear to be sockets capable of fitting small, pebble-shaped objects.

After a moment, I suddenly realize a few of the holes are not, in fact, empty. Some of them have tiny little gems of varying colors embedded inside. Red, green, blue, purple... all the colors of the rainbow appear among them.

Orias jerks his head up to look at Satan. "Bastard. That was my last diamond. Now I'm pissed."

With a quick motion, Orias plucks a blue sapphire from the back of his head, clutches it in his palm, and snaps his fingers. His eyes shimmer, and all the water around him evaporates.

"I hate turncoats."

Water forms over Satan's head, solidifies into a one-ton block of ice, and slams down like a sledgehammer. At the last second, the Devil presses half his Vectors and Tentacles into the Earth, and uses the others to catch the incoming projectile.

However, this leaves his body exposed.

Before Satan can fling the giant ice-cube away, Orias springs into action. He leaps to his feet, plucks a ruby from his neck, and snaps his fingers.

Fwoosh!

A gout of fire bursts from Orias's mouth, blasts Satan's body, and scorches the Devil with several-thousand-degree flames. Satan loses control of his Vectors, his Tentacles fall apart, and the massive ice-cube collapses on top of him, flattening him like a pancake.

Orias wipes his forehead. His skin fades from white to red, and quickly regains its demonic coloring.

"If what I saw earlier was correct, this guy doesn't stay dead. Cripes. I'm nearly out of gems."

With the rest of the demons nearby falling one-by-one, the remainder of the humans turn their attention on Orias. They dash toward him, weapons raised, intent on his destruction.

Orias pulls his hood back to cover his face. "Miserable way to die."

"Garooo!"

A spine-tingling wolf howl erupts in the air. The ground explodes outward, and dozens of demons begin rushing to the surface, along with Hellhounds and Goblins.

The massive, fifty-eyed wolves snarl viciously and pounce at the primitives. Far faster and more powerful than any demon grunt, the monstrous animals begin tearing through the remainder of the barbarians like lions devouring mice. While none of the humans scream in terror, their final moments end with a rush of adrenaline as the monsters rend them limb from limb.

Lucifer hops out of the newly opened hole in the ground. "Orias! There you are! I'm sorry we're late. Where are the others?"

"Dead," He mumbles. "Only a few of us remain."

"Mmm."

Lucifer fixates her third eye on Satan's corpse. Already, dark energy is beginning to swirl around it as he regenerates. Diablo climbs out from behind her, along with Vepar and Belial. The newcomers gape at the bodies strewn in every direction.

"Lucy, baby, what did we just walk into?" Diablo asks.

"Hell," Lucifer replies, as Satan regrows skin and muscle. "Absolute Hell. I don't know how Hercules managed it, but he's taken control of Satan, just like all the rest of these humans."

Belial stares wide-eyed at Satan's reviving corpse. "I've... I've never seen anything like it..."

"Me neither. Get to work. There are dozens of injured demons around here. Tend to whomever you can. Vepar, Diablo, you're with me. We have to find a way to subdue Satan. Orias, can you still fight?"

The Lord of the Moon grimaces. "Not for much longer. I'm almost out of gems."

"Retreat. Bring the others with you. We'll take over from here."

Orias breathes a sigh of relief. "Hoo. That sounds like not dying. I'm in."

Satan finishes reviving and launches toward the newcomers, but Lucifer knocks him away with a concentrated kinetic blast from her third eye.

"Fucking men. They always leave me a mess to clean up."

Part 134: Master of all Elements

Satan, now controlled by Hercules, launches toward Vepar. His Vectors and wind magic augment his speed, allowing him to blow past Lucifer and Diablo in the blink of an eye. He targets the weakest of the three newcomers and smashes her in the face with his fist, sending her flying into the dirt. The instant Vepar hits the ground, her body pops like a bag of dry ice. She explodes into a gaseous green mist, saving herself from instant death.

While Satan stares at Vepar's mist-body form, trailing her movements for a moment, Lucifer goes on the offensive. Her third eye shifts to blue. An invisible wave of telekinetic energy grabs Satan, yanks him backward, and hurls him into the soggy dirt. Lucifer summons her inner mana and attacks Satan with her Demonic Trance, sending waves of mental pressure pouring into his mind.

YOU CANNOT RESIST. A FAILURE OF A LEADER! A COWARD WHO LEFT US BEHIND!

Lucifer keeps her third eye locked onto Satan as he lays motionless on the ground. "Diablo! I have him trapped in my trance! Hit him while he's- eeyaah!!"

The three-eyed demoness violently lurches backward mid-sentence. Lucifer recoils from her attack and clutches her face as waves of agony rip through her mind.

"Hnn! Ahhh! It hurts!!"

Having seen some unknown horror inside Satan's mind, the Emperor of Providence stumbles backward and falls on her ass. Diablo rushes over to block her as Satan jumps to his feet, unharmed.

"Baby. Baby! Are you okay?"

Lucifer squeezes both of her eyes shut and uses her hands to rub her forehead. "Mmm... I tried to attack his mind, but... there were... so many voices... so many thoughts..."

Diablo nods. "Stay behind me. I'll protect you!"

He motions with his hands and shifts all of his body's density to his feet and fists. Propelling himself from a standing position, Diablo leaps twenty feet forward and swings his right fist toward Satan's rising body. At the last second, Diablo makes a peace sign with his left hand and triples his kinetic force. His fist strikes Satan's body like a tactical missile, smashing the Demon Emperor several feet into the dirt and causing the Earth to shudder.

Satan, his body beaten and broken, expires a moment later. Diablo stares at him warily. "Lucy! Are you sure he'll revive?"

Lucifer clambers to her feet. Her forehead creases as she tries to rub away a splitting headache. "Of course. Be on your guard. It takes him roughly one minute to regenerate, from what I've seen."

Her third eye stares at Satan and follows a line of energy stretching from his body upward into the sky, where it joins a few other strands, then flies over the crater and enters Hercules' body.

Diablo can't see it, but I can, Lucifer thinks to herself. Satan and the remaining humans have their minds and bodies linked to Hercules somehow. If that Titan can control souls, the rest of us might be in danger as well. I don't know what happened to make Satan fall under his control, but we're in great danger the longer this battle continues.

Not far away, a few dozen humans group up together as they try desperately to stave off the hundreds of demons assaulting them from every direction. Surprisingly, thanks to their focus on defense over offense, the various Grunts can't land many killing blows on the unified humans. When the demons draw too close, they take wooden spears to the face and gut, forcing them to encircle their prey without actually killing them.

Lucifer eyes the situation with the humans for only a moment before returning her attention to Satan's regenerating corpse. The low-ranked demons can handle those humans, so long as they don't blunder along like morons. The problem we face is how to either defeat Satan or free him from Hercules' clutches. Thousands of souls protect his mind. I can't attack him from the inside. Damn.

Vepar reforms beside Lucifer. Her body appears unharmed, but she breathes a little harder than before. "How should we attack Satan? If he can come back from death, then…"

"Everyone has a limit," Lucifer murmurs. "We'll have to find his."

Diablo rubs his fist. "I've hit Bael before… it reminded me of punching a mountain. Compared to him, Satan lacks in defense."

"Don't underestimate the Devil," Lucifer says. She watches as Satan's skin finishes mending together, and he jumps to his feet. "His Vectors are particularly troublesome."

Satan doesn't move. He stares at the three demons for a moment, before his eyeballs suddenly triple in luminosity. They transform from glowing marbles into brilliant, sparkling diamonds. The Demon Emperor straightens his posture and looks around for a moment.

"Well, well. If it isn't Lucifer herself: Queen of the Bloodskins. It's been a while since we last spoke."

Satan's voice gurgles mechanically. It isn't him speaking, but someone unaccustomed to his manner of speech.

"Hercules," Lucifer murmurs. She tilts her head slightly toward the crater behind Satan, where the Titan's body resides. "You've… taken full control of Satan, then?"

Satan nods. "I have. My limited control reduced his effectiveness dramatically. Now that I've taken out that troublesome Duke, I'll join the fray and crush you."

Lucifer's heart skips a beat. "Troublesome Duke… ah! Bael! Did you kill him?!"

Diablo balls his hands into fists. "Vepar. Stay back. Look for an opening, but don't get too close. A Lord cannot compare to an Emperor."

Vepar shifts her feet uneasily. "It's two Emperors and a Lord against one Emperor. Shouldn't we have an advantage?"

"Doubtful," Lucifer replies. "I've watched both of Satan's battles since his return. Every time he dies, he comes back slightly stronger than before. His strength borders on the absurd."

Satan's eye twitches. "Is that so? That sounds like a Titan ability."

Hercules balls both of Satan's hands into fists. A vicious snarl crosses his face.

"Worthless bloodskin. Satan slew my wife and took her soul and powers for himself. I cannot detect her among all the other beings he's murdered, but I know she is inside him. Just one more reason for me to scorch your kind from this Earth."

Satan closes his eyes. He inhales sharply as a wave of emotion passes over his face. His breath catches, and he clutches his chest.

"I broke every rule of my forefathers for the sake of revenge. The only emotion I feel now is rage. All of your kind will perish today. Your lineage will end, and your blood will water the land. Today marks the end of your species!"

Recommended Listening

Satan's hands become a blur. Unlike his half-hearted magic-casting from earlier, with Hercules in control, the Devil's mental acuity jumps tenfold. Instantly, he summons Poseidon's water magic, the power of earth, wind, and fire, and unleashes a hail of missiles upon the three demons. Vepar pounces to the side, avoiding a gust of air-accelerated water bullets, while Diablo steels his body to block dozens of sharpened pebbles. Lucifer's eye ignites, sending a surge of telekinetic energy to bat away a dozen scorching-hot fireballs.

All of Satan's attacks fly off to the side harmlessly. However, the instant the other demons busy themselves blocking or avoiding his attacks, the Devil pounces at Lucifer, skittering toward her like a freakish spider. His Vectors lance toward the demoness, intent on tearing her limb from limb. Her third eye goes into overdrive, darting between each of the eight invisible arms to fire small telekinetic blasts. Each one bats a Vector aside, throwing Satan off-balance.

The Devil stumbles and lands on his feet. He summons water blades a moment later and fires the razor-sharp discs at Lucifer, intending to behead her.

Diablo pounces in between his girl and Satan. He activates his kinetic field and deflects the liquid blades, dissipating them into harmless water droplets. Diablo plants his foot in the dirt and jumps toward Satan, combining his kinetic energy with his body densification to deliver a mighty, bone-shattering punch to the Devil's ribs.

He fails.

Unlike before, now that Hercules is piloting Satan's body, the Devil swiftly knocks Diablo to the side, parrying his punch and sending him skidding into the dirt toward the crater's edge.

Diablo recovers instantly. He leaps to his feet and faces the Devil, pinning Hercules's stolen body between the Emperor of Annihilation and the Emperor of Providence. Diablo and Lucifer circle him like tigers waiting to strike.

Vepar rights herself. Already winded, the Lord of Venom gasps as she sizes up the power levels of the three Demon Emperors.

Satan crosses his arms.

"What are you waiting for? There are two of you, and only one of me."

Lucifer's fist twitches. "Satan has the combined power of many demons, and Poseidon as well. If anything, Diablo and I are the ones at a disadvantage. If push comes to shove... I may have to use my trump card."

Diablo freezes. "Don't. We don't need to go that far, baby."

Lucifer nods. "You're right. Even if Satan is damn-near invincible, I don't need to resort to extremes. Come, my puppies! Come to me!"

The Emperor of Providence yells, startling me. Hercules appears unworried. A dozen Hellhounds spring over the heads of the huddled humans like wingless hawks. The ferocious animals snarl viciously and charge toward the three Emperors, dashing at speeds that would give a cheetah an inferiority complex.

Satan scowls as he watches the animals approach. "Tch. I've heard of these creatures. Hellhounds. Each one possesses the strength of a cave bear and the ferocity of a pack of wolves. Claws that rend enchanted steel, jaws that crush boulders effortlessly... truly, your wretched pets are vile abominations."

One of the Hellhounds runs over to Lucifer and nudges her arm with its nose. She absentmindedly pets it while keeping her eyes locked on Satan. "Don't you dare slander my beautiful puppies. I'll make you eat those words!"

All twelve Hellhounds pounce at Satan. The Devil leaps into the air to avoid them and summons a fireball in each hand. Despite his low affinity for fire magic, he augments their heat and power with wind magic cast by his Vectors.

Satan transforms the two little fireballs into massive globes of flame, each one the size of beach balls. He hurls them at the Hellhounds below, only for Lucifer to send telekinetic shockwaves at them in midair, blasting them to smithereens. Their firey debris sprays out in a cone and rains down upon the Earth, scorching what little grass dots the ground here and there. The Hellhounds snarl and snap, biting at the bits of red-hot ash wherever it lands.

Hercules narrows his eyes. Satan is a demon vastly superior to the others below. He wields a surprising number of elemental powers and affinities. If I combine them in different ways, crushing the rest should be a simple matter.

Satan's body begins to fall toward the Hellhounds. Immediately, the Devil motions with his hands, yanking a pillar of stone from the ground below him. It erupts from beneath the monstrous wolves, flings them aside, and rushes toward his feet. Satan perches atop the pillar with his Vectors, summons the power of fire, and unleashes all the heat he can muster upon the slender pillar of rock.

The heat from his attack scorches the stone pedestal from all directions. In only two seconds, the several-thousand-degree-flames melt the rock to slag, transforming it into magma. Satan fires a blast of air at the makeshift lava, spraying it in all directions. Molten chunks land on the backs and sides of the Hellhounds, making the animals screech in pain. They dive to their left and right, rolling on the ground in panic as they try to rub the lava off their backs.

Diablo jumps in front of Lucifer. He claps his hands and sends a wave of air upward, deflecting the magma rushing toward her. "Now!"

Lucifer motions with her hands. A sword made of pure demonic energy materializes before her, followed by another, and another. A hundred of them appear and hover in midair, then fly toward Satan like a hail of arrows.

"This is new," Hercules murmurs. He uses one Vector to hold himself above the half-melted pillar, and treats the other seven like invisible shields. They zip around, batting and deflecting Lucifer's projected swords at lightning speeds. While Satan's Vectors parry her hundred-weapon-assault, Hercules uses Satan's arms to attack with magic. He yanks what's left of the underground river to himself, creates a ball of water twice his body's size, and begins rapid-firing bolts of pressurized liquid at the demoness below.

Lucifer jumps around, backflips, and lands on one of her uninjured Hellhounds. She fixates her third eye on her projected swords, dancing them to and fro to keep Satan's Vectors busy. However, her other two eyes remain free to keep track of other threats. She uses them to watch out for Satan's magic and urges the Hellhound to start dodging and avoiding his attacks.

Satan flicks his gaze toward Diablo. The Emperor of Annihilation starts digging his hands into the dirt and yanking out rocks. Diablo inhales for a moment, concentrates, and lightly tosses a large stone into the air before himself. An instant later, he rears his fist back, multiplies his physical force by a factor of ten, and punches it with all his strength.

"Damn!"

Satan curses as a hail of shrapnel flies toward him at twice the speed of sound.

I can't avoid it!

Trapped in place by Lucifer's projected weapons, Satan can only watch helplessly as a thousand shards of stone races toward him. Each one tears through his body like bullets through a piece of paper.

Shik! Shik!

"Gahk!!"

Satan's body wrenches in agony. His tendons, muscles, and several vital organs fall apart under Diablo's surprise attack. For a split-second, Satan's mental control of his Vectors weakens.

Lucifer smiles greedily. "There!"

Her projected swords double their speed. Satan's Vectors move a half-second too slow. One sword slips through his defenses, impales his heart, and yanks him off the pillar. A moment later, ten more follow, severing his legs in the process.

Satan smashes into the ground below. The Hellhounds, injured but still able to move, leap toward him in rage.

"NO!!"

Satan ignores the pain wracking his body, and the mana-infused swords impaling him from several directions. As the Hellhounds pounce at him, Satan claps his hands, summons the power of wind in his grasp, and releases it in all directions, knocking the Hellhounds backward.

The massive wolves spin their bodies in midair and land on their paws with catlike agility. They rush toward Satan again, but their movements aren't quick enough. Satan's Vectors violently tear out Lucifer's swords, snap them in half, and send his blood spraying everywhere. Satan quickly repairs the damage to his body with Poseidon's water magic, then slaps the ground and sucks into it using his Earth manipulation.

Lucifer's Hellhounds land where he was just laying. They begin furiously digging at the dirt as they try to chase after him, but their efforts prove fruitless.

Satan bursts out of the soil from beneath Lucifer. He tries to grab her with his Vectors, but her third eye instantly fixates on him.

WHOOMPH!

A psionic blast of energy fires from her eye and smashes into Satan's face, pounding him backward as her Hellhound mount evades him.

Lucifer's Hellhound skids to a stop. "You'll have to do better than that, Titan! There is no barrier my third eye can't penetrate! Surprise attacks will always fail against me!"

Satan splashes water on his face, healing the damage Lucifer dealt. He jumps out of the ground and lands on his feet, eying her and Diablo warily.

Hercules thoughts bubble up, a hint of anxiety on the surface. These Emperors have incredible teamwork. Were they not vile Bloodskins, I might even congratulate them on their skills. However! I cannot allow this vessel to perish. The twenty seconds it will take for him to regenerate will open my physical body up to attack. I don't think I can handle both of them and Bael as well.

Hercules closes Satan's eyes. Beneath the Devil's eyelids, his glowing orbs flick around as Hercules scans Satan's mind.

Fire. Water. Wind. Earth. Vectors. This Devil has a surprising array of skills. Hmm. Oh? What is this?

Satan opens his eyes. He motions with his hands, and a Blood Contract appears in the air before him.

Hercules blinks. A magical contract, bound by blood? He appears to possess thousands of them. The essence of various demons lines each one.

At the sight of Satan's Blood Contracts hanging in midair, Diablo and Lucifer both turn pale as ghosts. Their eyes widen as they realize what is happening.

"No, no, no..." Lucifer murmurs.

Hercules' eyes flick across the text on the contract. He skims the thousands of finely-printed words in an instant, his reading ability far more agile than seems possible.

"Oho... what's this? You must obey Satan's orders, no matter what? You cannot harm him if he does not wish it? These conditions appear to last until death."

While distracted by the contract floating in front of himself, Hercules fails to notice a fine mist rippling against his Emperor servant's back. Suddenly, violent convulsions take him as he inhales acrid poison. "Gah! Huwak!!"

"You lowered your guard," Vepar says, her voice carried on the wind. "Now, I will rot your body from the inside out!"

Vepar's poisonous gas turns corrosive. Before Hercules can react, Satan's flesh begins to bubble and boil. He stumbles forward as his skin and nerves fizzle away. Electrical agony courses through his system as Vepar attacks his brain, heart, and lungs simultaneously.

Satan falls to his side. "Geyaugh!! Aahhhh!!!"

His body convulses. His limbs shiver and tremble. His glowing eyes dart around erratically.

Several seconds pass. Vepar rips apart his inner organs and liquefies the blood cells inside his body. Her voice yells on the wind, spoken via magic and not a physical form. "Lucifer, Diablo, you fools! Don't just stand there! Attack the Titan himself!"

Lucifer blinks. She flicks her third eye to Hercules' motionless body, where he continues to hold Bael underwater inside the crater. "Ah! Diablo, quickly, let's go!"

Diablo nods. "On it!"

Satan's eyes flick around. Hercules can't control their movements, but he hears the words of the demons.

Damn! They're coming! I didn't expect things to turn out like this. That damned backstabber caught me off-guard!

Hardly have Diablo and Lucifer taken two steps before a sudden flash of movement appears before them. Both Emperors stumble awkwardly and raise their eyes in horror as Zeus, King of the Titans, towers over them. His massive boots shake the Earth as his Thunderstep allows him to form a physical barrier between his son and the two Emperors.

"Oho. Do you intend to attack my son while he's defenseless? I'm afraid I can't allow that."

Diablo yelps in surprise. "The Titan King!"

Satan's eyes blink frantically as Hercules starts to panic. No! I told my father I could handle these Bloodskins on my own! I don't need his help! I can't let him take my glory! The demons are MINE!!

Despite the horrendous pain wracking Satan's body, Hercules powers through. He forces every ounce of willpower left to press the Devil's hands together. What follows is a several-second series of hand gestures as the Titan tries desperately to summon the remainder of Satan's magical reserves.

After ten seconds, he finishes. Every drop of oxygen in Satan's body erupts from his pores, ripping Vepar's poison out of his cells wherever she might be. Vepar gasps in surprise as her gaseous form ejects from Satan's body. "What? Impossible!"

Satan's eyes bolt open. An instant later, his hands turn into a blur of motion. Wind swirls around him, turns into a mini-tornado, and sucks Vepar's gaseous form up and away, tossing her into the sky. The Devil's boiled and battered body, despite being a misshapen lump of flesh, still possesses enough magic to perform magic spells. He pulls over the remainder of the water on the ground to cover himself like a blanket. As the liquid seeps into Satan's skin, Poseidon's curative abilities take hold, repairing his nerves and internal organs in seconds.

Lucifer flicks her gaze from Zeus to Satan. "No!"

Before she can fire a magical attack at him, Satan leaps to his feet. He aims his palm at her and Diablo.

"That's enough. Prostrate yourselves."

Lucifer's eyes widen. She stumbles forward, kneels, and flings her hands against the ground. Diablo follows a moment later. Both of them bow before Satan as though he were a king.

Zeus stares at them in confusion. "What? I don't understand. What is happening?"

Satan slaps his chest. He raises his eyes to the sky. "You, there! Backstabber! Reform yourself and kneel before me!"

Vepar rematerializes in midair. She screams in fright, plunges to the ground, and hits it like a sack of bricks. Her body slaps the dirt with a tremendous crack, snapping one of her arms in the process and causing her to scream in pain. "Eeeyahh!"

Still, Vepar's body moves of its own will. Despite the tears rolling down her face, she uses her other arm to shove herself to a kneeling position, where she bows before Satan.

Hercules claps his hands. "Hahahaha… oh, the irony. Don't you see, father? By taking over the body of the demon leader, I also gained control of those he rules. What a fortuitous turn of events!"

Zeus narrows his gaze. "My son. To become a soul manipulator… is…"

"The worst offense to our ancestors. I know, father. What does it matter, if these demons might kill us all, otherwise? Now, look at them! They are bowing before the one they mocked, not minutes earlier! Is this not the sweetest revenge one can dream up?"

Lucifer snarls, her eyes fixated on the ground before her. "You won't get away with this!"

"Of course I will, she-demon. I know not what purpose binding yourself to this one served, but it will prove your undoing. After I have the lot of you summon the other demons, I'll have you kill them yourselves. Won't that be amusing? Bloodskins killing other bloodskins! I wonder who the last one standing will be? Aha! Satan, I'd wager! I'll kill him myself!"

Zeus clenches his fist. "My son. This path you have chosen is both dangerous and vile. It is not the Titan way. Defeating your enemies in fair combat is the only way to-"

"SILENCE!!"

Satan shakes his fist at the fifty-foot Titan King.

"I tire of your platitudes! How long have our people suffered because of your ineffective rule?! You slew Cronus, only to follow the same traditions and laws he did! You were supposed to crush the bloodskins, but instead, they grew in number under your reign! Now I hold them at death's door, and you dare question me?!"

Zeus turns his head slightly, averting his gaze from Satan's glowing eyes. "The traditions exist for a reason, my son. Soul manipulation is a cursed art. It breeds greed, violence, and slaughter among brothers and sisters. I learned of this the hard way... when other Titans gained such power and attempted to take territory that wasn't theirs. That is why I was able to slay my father. He sent me to crush those miscreants; to kill those who would murder wantonly. If you continue to adhere to this path... you too will fall."

A look of disbelief spreads across Satan's face. "What? Are... are you threatening me, father? Do you intend to kill me as well? Your son; the one who is at the precipice of exterminating demonkind, forever?"

Zeus shakes his head. "No. I could never bring myself to harm you. My beloved son. My last remaining child. I would sooner fling myself into the fires of a volcano than bring your mother more grief."

Satan nods. "Then, if you are not willing to kill me, stand aside. I will not waver. The old traditions are dead. I will kill these bloodskins and accept whatever punishment you deem fit. However... until every last one has fallen into darkness, I will not waver! I will crush them all!!"

Zeus turns away. A tear slides down his cheek.

"Do as you will. I... I only wish... I had not failed you... as a father."

With a motion of his hands, Zeus vanishes. His Thunderstep tears him away, allowing him to travel at the speed of sound.

Silence follows.

Hercules stares after his father's afterimage. He blinks for a moment, as thoughts bubble in his mind.

I will not concede. Even if my father is right, it doesn't matter. Satan took Megara from me. She was the one I loved most in this world... more than myself. I cannot go on without her. Before I pass to the Great Beyond, the least I can do is eliminate those who stole her away. I care not what my revenge costs... only that I succeed.

Hercules lowers his gaze to the two Demon Emperors and Lord prostrated before him. All three of them tremble in rage as they try to force their bodies to move, but nothing they try can free them from Satan's Blood Contract.

Hercules sighs. "Arise. You will not attack me. You will not hurt me. Your only mission is to attack all other demons you see. You must tear them limb-from-limb and spread their blood from one corner of the Earth to the other. You must-"

Hercules pauses. He cocks his head as the three demons rise to their feet, fury burning in their eyes.

"Hm? How strange. The large one is still resisting. He continues to draw breath, despite being submerged underwater for many minutes. I commanded him to stop, but he continues to oppose me. This is… troubling."

Lucifer grits her teeth. "What's the matter, Hercules? Is Bael too much for you to handle?"

Diablo flicks his gaze to Lucifer. A look of recognition appears in his eyes, but he hides it a moment later. "Haha, yeah. Bael's way too much for Hercules to handle. It would take the combined efforts of all of us to beat him."

Satan raises an eyebrow. "He's only a Duke. Stop trying to act like he holds a candle to the three of you."

Flicking his gaze toward the humans and grunts, Hercules frowns.

"All demons! Come to me! You no longer need to battle my warriors."

Dozens of the grunts turn to face Hercules. The looks on their faces turn to panic as they realize they can't control their bodies. However, many of the others stay in place and stare at their brethren in confusion.

So that's how it is, Hercules thinks. Satan hasn't made contracts with more than a small portion of the demons alive today. Luckily, the most powerful ones appear to be under his control. It will have to do.

"Kill those who do not obey me!" Satan yells, forcing the two Emperors, Vepar, and the other loyalist demons to act. "Kill them all! Then, follow me. We have a Duke to kill."

Aw, heck. What a bother.

Bael's thoughts bubble to the surface as Hercules holds him underneath the bone-chilling water. Naturally, the Duke of Pain's cold resistance prevents any adverse effects, but he still glowers through the ripples of the water's surface at Hercules in annoyance.

"-you squirm! Despite your ugly fish-face, it seems you can't breathe underwater! Too bad, because you're missing out on quite the show! Your friends continue to fall like flies!"

Bael listens to Hercules' triumphant laughter. The young Titan cackles madly as his fingers wrap around the Duke's neck.

Ugh. The punk's still blabbering. I'm hungry. My hair is ruined. This whole day has been a total drag. First, I had to fight the Sunshine Brothers... then Valac kept poking my head over and over. Now I'm fighting some snotty brat. This sucks. I just want to kick back, squeeze some tits, and eat a sandwich.

Hercules laughs even harder. His voice warbles through the water, reaching Bael's ears like a rumble in the distance. "Hahaha! Oh, if only you could see what I see, little bloodskin! While your breath shortens, your friends battle Satan with all their might! Look at them struggle!"

The Duke rolls his eyes. Bloody hell. I hate the sound of this fucker's voice. All he does is blab all day long. I bet he looks in the mirror when he jerks off. What a loser.

Bael tries squeezing Hercules' arm a bit harder to try and wriggle free, but the Titan's grip proves unbreakable.

I've gotta hand it to him, though... Hercules has me beat when it comes to strength. He hasn't done more than tickle me, yet, but his power keeps going up. If things continue on the same path, he might snap me in two. Hmm. What to do... what to do...

Through the rippling of the water covering his face, Bael watches as Hercules tilts his head toward the ridge above. The sounds of several massive shockwaves and the thundering of fists send rumbles through the water to Bael's ears.

Damn. Why's Big Boss fighting the other demons? Was he on Hercules' side after all? Nah. Get real. Satan is a lot of things, but he ain't a traitor. It's gotta be something else.

Hercules' hand shifts slightly on Bael's neck. A look of shock goes down the young Titan's face as he focuses much harder on mind-controlling Satan.

"I... I can't believe it! No way! Satan, you sly fox! To think, you were a Soul Manipulator, the same as me! Hahaha! I can wipe out all of the demons right here and now, thanks to you! Father, are you watching? I'm going to eliminate our greatest adversary all on my own! You needn't lift a single finger!"

Bael narrows his eyes. Hmm? What happened? I can't see a damn thing! I wish this punk would loosen his grip, even if just for a second!

Despite being held underwater for several minutes, Bael remains unharmed. It appears that a lack of oxygen isn't hurting him whatsoever.

Bael squirms and wriggles, kicks his feet, and shakes his head around as he tries to free himself, but Hercules' massive hands easily keep hold of the Duke. His complete control of Bael's movement reminds me of an adult stopping a child from attacking by placing a hand on their head. No matter how much Bael struggles, he simply can't overcome the body size and strength difference between himself and the Titan.

A flicker of movement at the top of the crater catches Bael's eye. Even while trapped inside muddy water, the appearance of several figures doesn't escape his attention. Bael raises an eyebrow as Satan, Lucifer, and dozens of other demons begin to line up at the crater's edge along with the few remaining primitives.

Huh? They ain't fightin' anymore? What the hell happened?

Suddenly, Hercules takes control of his body once again and yanks Bael out of the mud. He slams the Duke against the crater wall and grins like a madman. "I don't know why you continue to resist, but it's all over, Bael! Not only have I taken over Satan's mind, but his Blood Contracts have given me control of demonkind's mightiest warriors! Now, I'll force your former friends to rip you to shreds!"

Diablo stands at the crater's edge, unable to move. Still, he retains his ability to speak, as do the others controlled by Satan's Blood Contracts. "Bael! It's true! We can't fight back! We can only do as Hercules orders us!"

Bael spits water from his mouth and nose. "Ptuh. You've gotta be shittin' me. Ain't you cunts supposed to be Emperors? What's the point of a fancy title if you can't even beat one fuckin' Titan?"

Hercules grins from ear to ear. "They tried their best, but I have the blood of the Forefathers running through my veins. No demon can withstand my power. Not the Emperors, Not Satan, and certainly not you."

The young Titan's hand squeezes Bael's throat a little harder. Bael doesn't even notice. "Bring it on, pup. You beat the shit out of me for half an hour and didn't even scratch my skin. There ain't no way you can put me in the dirt."

Hercules's smile fades. "Impudent little worm. Even outnumbered a hundred to one, you still dare to laugh in my face? I'll make you regret being born."

Lucifer raises her voice. "Don't let him cow you, Bael. You and I both know the power you hold. Release everything. We need you now, more than ever."

Bael squirms. He squeezes Hercules' arms and tries to pry the Titan off his neck, but fails. "Easier said than done, woman! This whole day's just a giant fuckin' hassle if you ask me!"

Lucifer's third eye twitches. "I wasn't asking politely. Release everything, Bael. If you don't, I'll tell everyone your secret."

Bael's look of annoyance vanishes. In its place, an expression of disgust and anger appears. "You... you dirty whore... you wouldn't! You wouldn't dare!"

Lucifer's third eye flicks to Diablo. Unable to turn his head to look at her, Diablo instead narrows his eyes. "Lucy. What are you talking about?"

A maniacal grin spreads from one corner of Lucifer's mouth to the other. "Oh, nothing much. It's just that, ever since our dear Bael rose to the rank of Duke, there's a little something he's been hiding from the rest of us."

Bael's eyes widen. He snarls angrily and starts writhing around to escape Hercules' grip. "You shut your mouth! Shut it! Not another word, you fuckin' cunt!!"

Hercules glances back at Lucifer in confusion. "What is she talking about? What secret?"

"When demons rise to the rank of Duke, they have to give up something important," Lucifer replies, her smile widening further. "Valac lost his body. I lost my compassion. Bael... well... he lost..."

"SHUT YOUR WHORE MOUTH!!"

Bael plants his feet against the crater. Bloody red energy begins to bubble on his skin as he thrashes around ten times harder than before. Hercules' confusion turns to surprise as he tries to hold the Duke back. "By the forefathers! Gah! How are you-?!"

Lucifer continues. "Bael has... a teeny... tiny... little..."

"GRAAAAAH!! YOU FUCKING BITCH!!"

Fire belches from Bael's mouth. His body begins to increase in size. His horns curve and bend forward like two spears of bone. His eyes turn molten-red, and his skin cracks apart, releasing infernal flames through every pore on his skin.

"YOU NO TALK ANYMORE!! ME CRUSH YOU!! ME SMASH!!"

Hercules' eyes widen as Bael yanks the Titan's arm off his throat and delivers a gut-busting punch to his stomach. Hercules flies backward, spins and flips, and smashes against the opposite crater wall, just below the demons.

Lucifer sighs. "Well, that did it. Now he's pissed."

Diablo stares in shock as his friend's body nearly doubles in size. Bael, now in his Balrog form, pounces at the demons on the crater's edge.

"We're... so... dead."

"You have no idea," Lucifer replies.

Part 135: Balrog's Folly

Recommended Listening

Lucifer stands perfectly still, unable to move her body, as the Balrog leaps at her. Bael's fist smashes her chest and sends her flying backward. She tumbles end over end, careens across the ground, breaks several limbs, and lands like a pile of rags several hundred feet away. Upon seeing their mother get flattened, her Hellhounds whimper in fear. They stare at the Balrog for a few moments, then turn tail and flee into the treeline, leaving her behind.

Bael punches his palm. "STUPID BITCH!!! ME TOLD YOU NO TALK! YOU NO LISTEN!!"

The Balrog howls in rage and charges after her. Diablo stares straight ahead into the crater, terror coursing through his veins. He tries desperately to turn his head, but he can't move his body without Hercules' permission. Behind him, the Balrog grabs Lucifer and begins smashing her into the ground over and over.

The sounds of his mate being repeatedly pummeled sends waves of nausea down Diablo's throat. "Bael! Get ahold of yourself! Stop this! You're killing my girl!!"

Lucifer falls unconscious and goes limp as Bael beats her face to a pulp.

Suddenly, a long, slender arm smashes Bael in the chin, causing very little damage but annoying him enough to distract him. Belial, Artorias, and Barbatos leap out of the treeline and charge the Balrog.

"Let our leader go!" Belial yells, retracting her arm. "You crazy monster!"

"W-what the hell is that thing?" Barbatos squeaks. He stares at the Balrog with a mixture of awe and terror as Bael pauses his assault on Lucifer's battered form to stare at the newcomers. "It's freaking HUGE!"

At fifteen feet, Bael's Balrog form is twice as tall as all the other demons, and the same height as Hercules. Barbatos, a Lord, stands only five feet tall, shorter than Artorias and Belial both. He cowers and shivers as the unstoppable monster turns its gaze on him.

"HEY!! WHO HIT ME? ME BUSY! ME NO HAVE TIME FOR WEAK LOSERS!"

Belial retracts her long, stretchy limbs back to her body. She trembles slightly at the sight of the behemoth towering before her. "Devils. I hit that creature with everything I had. Artorias, try to pin him from below! I'll launch a frontal assault. Barbatos, you try and grab Lucifer when you have a chance!"

Barbatos flicks his gaze toward the scantily-clad Succubus. "Nyeh... I don't wanna... I don't care about Lucifer even a little-"

Belial jerks her head in his direction. Her eyes turn blood red as she glares fire and brimstone at him. "I wasn't asking."

Barbatos swallows a lump in his throat. "H-hey! No problem! Grab a bitch, easy peasy! I-I got this!"

Belial doesn't reply. She returns her attention to Bael, plants her feet into the ground, and uses her super-strength and stretchy limbs to leap into the air. At the same time, Artorias dives underground and begins swimming toward Bael.

Bael blinks for a moment and stares at Belial, ignoring the burrower tunneling beneath him. "HEY! STUPID WUH-MUNN! COME CLOSER! ME FLATTEN YOU GOOD!" He shakes Lucifer's body violently to prove his point.

Artorias bursts out of the mud, grabs the Balrog's legs, and yanks the Duke of Pain several feet into the dirt. Bael yelps in surprise. "HUH?! WHAT THIS?!"

The Balrog stares at the ground in confusion for a moment, giving Belial a chance to attack. She falls from the sky and smashes her fists against Bael's skull. WHAM WHAM WHAM!

Over and over, the Baron of Passion batters the Balrog with everything she has. As she rears back for her tenth punch, Bael drops Lucifer, swings the flat of his hand at Belial, and backhands her.

Belial screams in surprise and goes flying. Her stretchy, bendy body slaps against the ground like a rock skipping across a lake. She tumbles and twists, flies past Barbatos, and slams against one of the dead trees at the forest's edge. Her body rips the tree's roots halfway out of the ground and knocks it over, but it holds enough to stop her momentum.

"Kuu... kuhhh..."

Belial moans for a moment before sliding off the tree. She falls onto the dead, black grass, and shifts around for a few moments, trying to reorient herself.

Despite the hardened mud tightly wrapping around Bael's waist and legs, it provides little resistance to the Balrog's overwhelming power. He bursts out and flicks his gaze toward Barbatos. "HEY! PUNY BRAT! YOU WANT PAIN, TOO?!"

Barbatos pales. He shrinks back slightly as the Balrog takes a menacing step toward him. "I don't! N-no trouble at all!"

"IT HURT TIME! C'MERE!!"

Bael charges toward Barbatos. The scrawny little Lord screams like a little girl and pisses himself, releasing an embarrassingly high-pitched wail as the massive behemoth rushes him. "Eeeeee!!!"

Artorias swims underground beneath the Balrog. Artorias punches upward right as Bael plants a foot on the ground. A massive pillar erupts under his right foot, knocks him off-balance, and flings him to the side. Bael stumbles awkwardly and slams onto his arm, but reorients himself a moment later. "ME VERY ANGRY!!"

The Baron of Earthquakes jumps out of the dirt beside Lucifer, grabs her, and dives underground again. A half-minute later, he emerges next to Belial and drops Lucifer at her feet. "Hey! Belial! Are you okay? Can you walk?"

While Bael chases a squealing Barbatos in the background, Belial blinks heavily and shakes her head. "Ohhh... I feel awful. He... that thing... hit me..."

"I saw," Artorias says, flicking his gaze to his brother. Barbatos rolls under the Balrog's legs and shrieks in terror as he continues running away, barely evading a tail swipe in the process. "Heal yourself and Lucifer. I'll try to distract that monster. Why are the other demons just standing around? They haven't moved a muscle!"

Belial motions with her hands. She heals herself with a dose of magic, then starts working on Lucifer's horribly broken and battered body. "I... I don't know. We all got here at the same time. Is that giant creature Hercules? Why has he transformed into a monster?"

"Beats me," Artorias replies. "I'm going to get some answers."

"What about your brother?"

Artorias pauses. He watches as Barbatos summons a metal platform, jumps atop it, and flies into the air. Bael jumps at him, but the little Lord levitates higher, dodging like a seasoned professional.

"Barbatos is good at avoiding work and pain. He'll be fine. I'll return in a minute."

Artorias burrows into the Earth and swims toward the other demons.

* * *

Inside the crater, Hercules rubs his chest.

"Guh... huh..."

Bael's attack shattered my ribs. I'm lucky I survived. If it weren't for my regenerative abilities, this fight would already be over. What in the Forefather's names happened to that Duke?

Hercules climbs to his feet. The sounds of Bael rampaging after Barbatos catch his ears. His eyes glow for a moment as he transfers his consciousness to Satan, turns around, and watches the battle.

Hmm. Bael has become an unstoppable, raging monster. To think the bloodskins had such a potent trump card. Well, if I can't control him, then killing him before the others is my best option. If anyone but my father or me were to fight this behemoth, they would surely perish. We can't leave such a threat to walk among our enemies.

Hercules returns to his body. He pounces to the top of the crater, only to pause in surprise as Artorias erupts from underground directly in front of Diablo. "Emperor Diablo! Why is everyone standing around twiddling their thumbs?! We have to stop the Titan-"

Artorias freezes mid-sentence. His eyes swivel to face Hercules, towering above the demons. "What? You're here?! Then, that means... that monster isn't..."

Hercules shifts his mind back to Satan. The Devil aims his palm at Artorias. "Quiet. Obey. You and everyone else here will follow Hercules' orders. We must kill Bael, no matter the cost. Our lives do not matter. Throw them away if necessary."

Artorias stumbles back. "M-my body! It... it won't..."

"Dumbass!" Diablo says, still staring forward into the crater. "Artorias, the Titan mind-controlled Satan! He's using Satan's Blood Contracts to keep the rest of us in check! We can't disobey his orders!"

Artorias groans. "Fantastic. Now you tell me!"

Bael roars like a lion. He inhales for a moment, then unleashes a massive torrent of infernal flames, firing it toward Barbatos as the little Lord zips through the air above him. Barbatos screeches in terror and dives to the ground, singing his butt-hairs in the process. The tiny Lord runs in a circle as Bael spins around, blasting waves of fire at him.

"Bro!! Bro!! HELP ME!"

Hercules cracks his neck. "That runt wants some help, eh? Very well. Everyone! Attack that monster! Give it your all, and don't hold back! I expect all of you to die, but only after it perishes, first. Go!"

Recommended Listening

Two thousand demons pivot on their heels. They move in lockstep, unable to ignore the commands their Emperor has given them. Terror engulfs their hearts as they begin charging toward the unstoppable Balrog. The Grunts and Lords sweat profusely, while the Barons and above wonder how in the hell they will survive this encounter.

Bael's aura bathes the top of the crater in a faint, red mist. His energy pours from his body like a sprinkler, ringing alarm bells in the minds of all those present.

Diablo jumps into the lead. He charges the Balrog, using his body to shield the other demons. "Everyone, stay back! Leave Bael to me!"

"I don't think so," Satan says, his body puppeteered by Hercules. "Everyone must join their strength together. The more demons who die today, the better."

Diablo scowls. "Bastard."

The Emperor of Annihilation travels side-by-side with Satan, while the other demons follow close behind. Bael turns around just in time to spot Diablo rearing back for a ten-times-multiplied kinetic punch. Diablo's fist impacts the Balrog like a meteor.

Katam!

Bael staggers backward, but his spiny toes dig into the dirt, preventing him from getting knocked more than a foot away. "BAH! WHAT THAT? WEAK PUNCH!! YOU HIT LIKE LITTLE GIRL!!"

Bael's counter-attack comes instantly. He swings his fist at Diablo. The Emperor flashes a sign at the last second, inverting his kinetic energy. Bael's attack bounces off Diablo's head as if he had tried to punch a trampoline. Bael staggers once again, giving Satan a chance to close the distance.

The Devil motions with his hands. A wind-boosted fireball summons in his palm. He takes an extra second to build it up, then pounces at Bael and throws it against the Balrog's chest, using his Vectors to augment his forward momentum. The fireball, already half the size of Bael's entire body, detonates like a box of dynamite.

Batoom!

Bael stumbles and falls on his ass. He catches himself with his tail and bounces back at Satan, a look of excitement in his eyes. "YOU ALL WEAK! ME CRUSH! ME SMASH!"

Hercules growls. Curses!

Black wings sprout from Bael's back, flap hard, and triple his acceleration speed. The Balrog swipes at Satan with a single palm. Satan tries to deflect the Balrog's claws with his Vectors, but Bael bats them away effortlessly, as though they were pool noodles. He eviscerates Satan's body and rips the Emperor in half, sending him splattering across the ground. Satan expires instantly; far faster than Hercules can use water magic to heal him.

While Satan perishes, the other demons move to attack. Artorias rips a giant boulder twenty times his size out of the Earth and flings it into the sky. He launches himself into the air, rushes ahead of his thrown projectile, and strikes it with both fists.

The twenty-ton boulder instantly reverses direction. It sails toward the oblivious Balrog below, who has already returned his sights to Diablo.

"Diablo!" Artorias yells. "Watch out!!"

Diablo flicks his gaze upward. He stops himself from jumping toward Bael and instead roots himself in place. The boulder smashes into the Balrog at hundreds of miles per hour, battering his head with enough power to flatten a small mountain.

Bael gets pounded dozens of feet into the dirt, while the impact from the boulder sends everyone behind Diablo flying. The planet shakes. Somewhere, hundreds of miles away, tsunamis crash against the shoreline of a nearby coast.

The Emperor of Annihilation winces as the boulder's shockwave hits his body. What?! I didn't know Artorias was this powerful! He's only a Baron!

Several seconds pass. Artorias lands a few feet from Diablo and dashes over to him. "Is Bael dead?"

"Of course not," Diablo replies. "But, if we're lucky, maybe it injured him grievously."

"GRRROOOOARRR!!"

Bael screams in rage at the bottom of the pit. He bursts out of the newly formed crater and pounces toward those who injured his pride.

"Or, maybe it pissed him off! Dodge!"

Artorias dives underground. Diablo motions with his hands and forms a kinetic barrier around himself. He digs his feet into the mud as Bael's rears back for a colossal punch.

When Bael strikes me, he'll only hit himself fifteen times harder. Not even this insane monster will be able to take a punch like that without blinking.

Bael surges toward Diablo. Diablo winces as he waits for the incoming attack.

The Balrog swings his fist forward. At the last second, he pauses a millimeter before Diablo's body, lightly taps the Emperor's skin, and grabs him with his other hand.

Diablo's eyes bolt open. WHAT?! How did he- uwahh!!

Bael's massive palm wraps around the Demon Emperor. He crushes Diablo's arms instantly, raises him above his head, and flings the Emperor of Annihilation against the ground with all his strength.

KATHOOM!

Diablo hits the earth and shatters every bone in his body. His limbs turn to mush. He sails a hundred feet underground as though the dirt and rock before him doesn't exist at all. By the time he comes to a stop, crushed between hundreds of tons of earthen debris, he's already fallen unconscious.

The Grunts nearby stare in horror. Lucifer, beaten. Diablo, battered. Satan, eradicated.

"W-what do we do?!" A grunt yelps. He runs toward the Balrog, his body moving on its own. "No, no!! I don't wanna die! I don't wanna-"

Bael barely gives the grunt a passing glance. He backhands the tiny demon and sprays its body across the nearby grass. The grunt pops like a blood-filled balloon, scattering innards and bones in a wide arc.

Hercules stands behind all of the demons and observes the battle.

Bael's success against Diablo was no mere stroke of luck. He learned how Diablo's ability worked and countered it in an instant. Incredible. His speech is that of a dullard, but his battle sense is uncanny. Even a Dragon might have trouble fighting this Duke.

Other grunts charge Bael. The Balrog swiftly annihilates them one after the other. His hands become a blur of motion as he rips them limb from limb. In thirty seconds, he mercilessly slaughters over fifty of the low-level demons.

"PUNY! WEAK! STOMP AND SMASH! STOMP AND SMASH!!"

While Bael continues his rampage, Satan finishes reviving. Hercules switches control to the Demon Emperor and pauses for a moment while he evaluates his next move.

Vepar, missing until now, materializes behind Bael. She aims her palm at his back, and a wave of toxic gas spews from her hand. It engulfs Bael in a cloud of neurological poison, threatening to suffocate him with its debilitating effect.

The Balrog spins on his heel. He whirls to face the tiny, insignificant-looking Lord. "EW! GROSS! YOU MAKE STINKY! NO SHIT IN MY FACE!!"

Bael ignores the poison swirling around his eyes and nose. He inhales for a moment and unleashes a torrential blast of flames upon Vepar, but she transforms into gas and slips past him. She reappears behind Bael and slashes his back with her spindly nails, aiming to deliver a lethal dosage of poison to his spine. Instead, the moment her hand strikes his hardened scales, she screams in pain. "Eeeyyaa!!"

Her hand bubbles and festers as the massive Balrog's molten body turns her fingers to mush. He swings his tail, intending to batter her into the dirt, but she transforms into a gas cloud and flees for her life.

Hercules watches.

Poison doesn't affect Bael. The mightiest of blows scarcely annoys him. He shrugs off all physical attacks with the barest of effort. Damn! This blasted monster must have a weakness!

Barbatos charges Bael. He motions with his hands and summons his Berserker form, transforming himself from a scrawny little Lord into a 5-foot mass of muscle and rage. Shards of metal coat his hands, giving him razor-sharp claws. "Screw you, Bael! You're not that tough!! Me and my brother will take you down a peg!!"

Bael turns to face him. Along with Barbatos, a dozen other grunts summons fireballs and rocks to pelt the Balrog, though their attacks do little more than annoy him. Bael howls in rage. "GAAARRR!!"

The Balrog stomps toward Barbatos. He swipes at the ground and sends a hail of dirt and rocks flying at the Lord of Iron. Barbatos winces as the dirt pelts his eyes. He charges the Balrog, only for Bael to spin on his heel and punish Barbatos's blindness with a brutal tail swipe to the ribs. The Balrog's counter-attack takes Barbatos by surprise. He flies backward, skids across the ground, and digs his claws into the dirt to stop his momentum. The damage to Barbatos's body regenerates in a split-second. He immediately jumps to his feet and charges again.

"It'll take more than that to stop me! Nyehehe!!"

Barbatos zig-zags from left to right. He manipulates all of his metal shards into a makeshift helmet for his face, leaving only a small slit for his eyes. This time, when Bael roars at him, Barbatos dodges a series of swipes, ducks the Balrog's attacks, rolls under his legs, and pounces onto his back.

Bael's molten body, easily a thousand degrees, scorches the Lord's skin. Barbatos ignores the agony of his flesh melting and regenerating as he grabs the base of one of Bael's wings to hold on and begins slashing Bael's back with his claws.

"Take this! And this!! AND THIS!!"

Barbatos rips a few armored plates off the Balrog's back and gouges out the molten skin beneath, spraying thousand-degree blood all over himself. Bael roars again as he tries to grab the annoyance slashing him from behind, more in rage than in pain.

"GAARRR! LITTLE FUCK! ME SMASH YOU BIG BAD! GET OFF!!"

* * *

Across the field, at the edge of the forest, Lucifer lays propped against a tree. Belial finishes healing her right as Artorias bursts from the mud, Diablo's unconscious body clutched in his arms. He lands next to Belial and quickly sets the Emperor of Annihilation at her feet. "Diablo needs your care. Have you enough energy to heal him?"

Despite fatigue wracking her body, Belial nods. "Haah... yes. I'll do what I can. I've nearly finished treating Lucifer, though she did receive a small skull fracture. I worry that Bael may have damaged her brain."

Lucifer opens her eyes and winces. "Don't... don't underestimate me. I'm the leader of our people. I'm not weak-willed like Satan. Tch. That idiot."

Artorias turns to watch as his little brother takes on the Balrog all by himself. "I must return. We're lucky that Hercules' orders offer much leniency in how we battle the Balrog, but I cannot stay away for long. Already, Satan's voice compels me to return."

Belial nods. "Emperor Lucifer explained the situation to me. Satan devoured several human souls under Hercules' control. When he did, the Titan took over his mind. After that, Hercules used Satan's contract to control us."

Artorias returns his gaze to Belial's. "Valac's grunts, including my little brother, devoured several of those humans' souls. Why didn't the same thing happen to them?"

Lucifer straightens her posture as Belial finishes healing her. "I don't know. Satan must be different from them in some manner. However, one thing is certain; if we wish to free ourselves, we must kill him."

"Who? Satan? You expect us to kill our leader?"

"I do," Lucifer replies. She flicks her third eye to Diablo, then to Belial, who nods. The succubus gets to work, healing his broken and battered body. "This is all Satan's fault. His damned contracts compel us to do his bidding. If we can kill him, we should be able to break free of the Titan's control."

"But... but that's..."

Artorias trails off. Hercules' orders begin to boom in his mind, forcing him to his feet. "There has to be another way."

Lucifer copies him. She stands and flicks her gaze toward the Balrog. "There isn't. If we kill Satan, we can eliminate the Titan. It's as simple as that."

A look of anxiety crosses Artorias's face, but he forces himself not to dwell on the doubts plaguing him. "Very well. We survived without Satan for two thousand years. It's only due to his return that so many terrible things have happened. If we must kill him, then so be it."

Lucifer rests a hand on Artorias's shoulder. "Worry not, young Baron. You won't be able to kill Satan, nor will I, with his control affecting us. However, I know someone who can."

"Who?"

Lucifer ignores his question. She flicks her eyes to Belial. "Heal Diablo as quickly as you can. We're going to need him for the counter-attack."

Belial continues motioning with her hands as she heals one part of Diablo's body, then moves to another. "What counter-attack?"

Pausing, Lucifer flicks her third eye to her feet. She kneels over, scrapes the still-wet dirt, and smiles.

"Once you finish with Diablo, plug your ears with some mud. You're the only one Hercules hasn't controlled yet. I'll be counting on you."

Belial's eyes widen. She nods.

"Ah, so that's what you mean! Lucifer, you're a genius!!"

The Emperor of Providence chuckles. "Hehehe. Of course I am."

Recommended Listening

"To me, my minions!" Satan bellows, his mouth controlled by Hercules. "Unite your might! Do not attack the Balrog one and two at a time! Combine your strength! Come, now!"

Barbatos continues slashing at the Titan, though his regeneration begins to slow dramatically. Sweat pours off the Lord of Iron's body as he tries to hold onto the thrashing Balrog's wing.

Bael screams in rage. "GET OFF GET OFF GET OFF!!!"

Bael's mana erupts from his pores in ever-thickening amounts, while his blood-red miasma expands throughout the air. Many of the closest demons scream in pain as their skin seems to catch on fire. The pain receptors of those present fester and boil, threatening to send their bodies into shock. Still, because of Satan's mental overrides, the grunts cannot flee. They charge at Bael, unable to stop their suicidal assault on the Balrog.

Barbatos's grip loosens. He tries to slash at Bael again, but his attack proves ineffective. His hand folds like a noodle against the Balrog's molten blood, and when Bael thrashes once more, Barbatos suddenly loses his grip. Bael spins on his heel and flings the Lord of Iron off his back with a burst of acceleration, making Barbatos yelp in surprise.

Whump!

Barbatos slams onto his shoulder and skids across the mud. The terrain vanishes as the second crater's rim appears before him. Barbatos plunges off the edge and rolls into it. "Oh, crap!"

As Barbatos unintentionally departs the battle, Diablo, Lucifer, and Artorias arrive at the scene, bursting out of the ground right in front of Bael. The two Emperors and the Baron fan out, their minds compelled by Satan's commands.

"Finally!" Satan yells. "I thought you lot might have perished! Now that you're back, let us finish this!"

Lucifer flicks her third eye toward Hercules' main body. "You'll regret ordering us around, Titan! I hate bossy little brats like you."

Satan laughs. "Hahaha! Save your words for someone who cares, she-demon! Everyone, encircle the Duke! Suppress his movement with all your strength. We will kill him in one hit!"

The Devil leaps toward Bael's back. His Vectors lash out and grab the Balrog's limbs, two for each arm and leg. He motions with his hands. "Earth-manipulators! Stop his legs from moving. She-demon, attack him with your swords!"

Bael snarls. "STUPID SQUID! LEMME GO! GAARGH!"

The Balrog uses all his strength to try and pull away, but Artorias and Satan, along with the few remaining Grunts who can manipulate dirt and stone, combine their powers to yank him into the ground. His legs embed in the mud, and the Grunts continue solidifying it, over and over, to try and hold him in place. Still, with the immense heat pouring off his body, their efforts nearly aren't enough to hold him. Bael flaps his wings and yanks his arms around. He struggles and tries desperately to break free of Satan's Vectors, but Hercules' puppet digs his heels into the dirt to hold himself in place.

"You're not getting away this time!"

Lucifer gapes. How is this possible?! Hercules is somehow suppressing Bael's strength!

Compelled by the Titan's words, The Emperor uses her third eye to fire mental bombardments at Bael. Bael's movements slow as Lucifer assaults his mind.

"GUHH!! HEAD HURT... HEAD HURT!! STOP TALK IN HEAD!!"

Lucifer grits her teeth. My plan hinges on Bael killing Satan. Nobody else can do it. If this keeps up, we might actually-

"You, demon!" Satan yells. He points his finger at Diablo. "I've seen the damage you can unleash. While we have that monster pinned, summon all of your power. Finish him in one blow!"

Diablo glances back at Satan. A look of repugnance flashes across his face. "No! I can't! If I do that, Bael will-"

Before Diablo can finish his sentence, his body moves on its own. Satan's orders override Diablo's willpower and force the Emperor of Annihilation to form magic signs. He begins accumulating mana around his body and takes a stance several feet in front of the Balrog, wincing as Bael's miasma scorches his skin.

"LET GO!! WEAK LITTLE WIMPS!! ME CRUSH ALL OF YOU! ME SMASH!!"

Bael continues struggling with all his might against the demon's relentless assault, but he can't break free in time.

Diablo's kinetic energy multiplies as it gathers around his body. Ten times. Twenty times. Thirty times.

Hercules grins feverishly as he watches from the edge of the first crater, several hundred feet away. Yes. Yes!! Look at the absurd energy that Emperor is generating! With this attack, I'll rid myself of that monstrous Duke, then kill all the other demons afterward. I'll avenge Megara and clear my name at the same time! All of my sacrifices were worth it for this moment!!

As Hercules silently cheers his brilliant battle strategy, something shuffles into position in the crater behind him.

Belial, the final remaining demon uncontrolled by Satan's contracts, slinks around stealthily behind Hercules. She avoids splashing in the water and uses her knife-like fingers to scale the rim noiselessly. With his attention locked firmly onto the Balrog, Hercules fails to notice her approach.

The succubus pounces at Hercules like a lioness tackling an impala. Her limbs stretch out and wrap around him in the blink of an eye, catching Hercules completely off-guard. "W-what?! By the forefathers!!"

Hercules lurches forward as Belial's arms and legs twine around him from every direction. She transforms her hands into blades and begins stabbing him all over his body.

Shik, shik, shik!

"Gaaaugh!! Aaargh!! Get off me; you bedeviled whore!!"

Hercules spins on his heel and throws himself backward, intending to crush the succubus under his weight. Instead, she stretches out her elbow, catches both of them before they hit the ground, and flings Hercules forward. He cries out in surprise as his face splatters in the mud.

Hercules transfers his mind to Satan. "Imbeciles!! Forget the Balrog! Forget him! Protect me! Save me from this damned creature! Gaaugh!!"

Satan releases his grip on the Balrog and darts toward Hercules. The other demons release Bael as well, but Diablo can't stop. His kinetic potential releases its peak right as the new orders come.

Diablo's eyes widen. Shit! I can't undo the spell! My body is-

At the last second, Diablo swivels his fist to Bael's right. He lunges forward and attacks the air with the power of a punch multiplied by one hundred times its kinetic potential.

BATOOOM!!

The Emperor's strength, already that of an Archangel's, combines with his overwhelming energy to release a shockwave similar to a tactical nuke. Every demon in the area screams wordlessly as the sky catches fire. Five thousand degrees of flame erupts from Diablo's fist and blasts into the forest, obliterates every tree in its path, annihilates a mountain, and sends massive heaps of rock and stone firing into the atmosphere. All of the demons, including Bael, rocket toward Hercules, unable to control themselves. "Aahhh!!"

Diablo staggers forward. He collapses onto his belly, all of his mana exhausted. The Emperor of Annihilation lands inside the beginning of a trench that extends forward dozens of miles — one he created himself. Fatigue swallows him, and he falls unconscious.

Bael crashes into the Titan. His enormous body sends Hercules and Belial tumbling into the first crater, where they reel for several seconds as they land in the frigid, muddy water.

Atop the crater, the other demons grind into the dirt and land in heaps here and there. Several succumb to wounds sustained during the battle against the Balrog, but more than a few take their final breath thanks to Diablo's impossibly powerful attack.

Lucifer moans. "Ohh... nnn..."

Artorias coughs. "Kuh... head hurts... ringing... my ears..."

The remaining demons slowly pull themselves together. They stagger to their feet and dust themselves off, though several seem astonished they somehow survived Diablo's attack.

"The Titan..." Lucifer mutters. "Where is he? What happened?"

Lucifer swivels her third eye to the crater and answers her own question. "Tch. He survived."

Hercules blinks. He and Belial both awaken at the same time, but she quickly tenses up, wrapping him tightly before he can react.

"Gah! Damned bloodskin- release me at once!!"

Belial doesn't reply. She turns her hands into knives and resumes slicing apart each of Hercules' arteries. Even with his incredible regeneration, the Titan continues to weaken as she tears him to ribbons.

Hercules transfers his mind to Satan. The Demon Emperor, positioned atop the ridge, turns to face the succubus. "Release Hercules, demoness! Release him, now!!"

Lucifer smiles. She isn't listening, fool. Satan's orders only work on those who can hear him speak. That's the weakness of his contracts.

Indeed, thanks to Lucifer's planning, Belial clogged her ears to prevent herself from hearing anything. She mercilessly gouges out the Titan's eyes and heart, and continues dicing apart his biceps after that. All the while, she ignores Satan's orders, enraging the Titan further.

"Worthless, worthless, WORTHLESS SOW!!!"

* * *

Bael jumps to his feet a short distance from Satan. The Balrog looks around, dazed and confused. His rage wears off somewhat, thanks to Diablo's attack, but upon spotting the other demons, the gears click in his head.

"HURGH... WANT FIGHT... WANT FIGHT? WHO WANT FIGHT?!"

Lucifer swivels her eye toward the Balrog. She projects the sound of Satan's voice into Bael's mind.

Bahaha, that Bael is weak! He fights like a woman! I bet he has a tiny demonhood! I hope he hears me so I can kick his ass!

Bael grunts. "HUH? WHO SAY THAT?"

"Satan said it!" Lucifer yells. She snaps her fingers to get Bael's attention, then gestures to the Emperor standing at the crater's edge. "Are you going to let him stand there and mock you? I thought you were a real man!"

The Balrog follows her finger. He turns to look at Satan. "WHAT?! ME NOT WEAK, YOU WEAK! ME BREAK YOU IN HALF!!"

The Balrog charges Satan. With Hercules under duress, the Demon Emperor merely stands and waits for orders. He hasn't a chance of stopping the mountain of flesh tearing ass toward him.

Bael smashes into Satan with two tons of muscle and bone. A single punch sprays the Emperor all over the crater below, sending chunks of him raining upon Belial and Hercules.

Bael roars. "BAHAHA! HIM WEAK! ME STRONG!!"

Hercules continues to struggle futilely even as chunks and pieces of the Demon Emperor turn the mud red. "Let me go! Whore of the damned! Filthy... filthy little..."

* * *

Satan regenerates after twenty seconds. When his body reforms, Hercules immediately tries to jump into his mind. "Tear this creature off me, you dullard!!"

The Devil blinks. His eyes return to normal and cease their glowing.

"Uhh. Where am I? What's going on?"

Atop the crater's rim, Bael roars and jumps toward the other demons. He attacks them once again, tearing apart the ones that can't get out of his way fast enough. Their screams cause Satan's heart to skip a beat.

"What in blazes is that horrible noise?!"

Satan spots Belial and Hercules as they grapple with each other. He struggles to piece together the puzzle until Samael speaks in his mind.

"Satan. Thou hath fallen under Hercules' mind control for nearly half an hour. After thou dids't slay several of his human servants, their souls entered thy body, allowing him to take control of thy soul."

Satan stares at Belial and Hercules in horror. "What? The little bastard made me his slave?!"

"He did. While under his control, thou dids't slaughter hundreds of other demons. Hercules used thy Blood Contracts to turn everyone against each other. Even now, they continue to struggle desperately atop the crater."

"Devils," Satan whispers, his face ashen. He instantly coils his Vectors and pounces out of the mud, sending waves in every direction. When he lands atop the rim and spots Bael's Balrog form, his complexion weakens further. "What in the name of- Samael! What is that... that thing?!"

"'Tis Bael," Samael murmurs. "He has transformed into a monster. More importantly, thou must order everyone to flee this place. Free them from the shackles of thy contracts and focus on the Titan. He is still a threat."

Satan nods dumbly. He hasn't yet unraveled everything, but his leaderly instincts prevent him from dwelling on irrelevant questions. "Oy!! All you cunts, stop fighting! Get out of here! I'll take on Bael myself!"

"I would not advise that," Samael murmurs. "This creature of damnation is too much for anyone here to combat; including thee."

"No kidding. I can feel Bael's bloodlust from here. Still, this is my fault. I've gotta clean up this mess myself!"

Upon hearing Satan's voice, Bael pauses his punching of one screaming grunt to look in the Devil's direction. "YOU STILL WALK? ME BREAK LEGS! THEN BREAK FACE!!"

Bael releases the grunt and charges toward the Devil.

A second later, chaos erupts on the battlefield. Two massive metal poles fall from the sky on both sides of the Balrog. A hundred thunderbolts shoot down and electrify them, causing tens of millions of volts of electricity to surge through the Balrog's body.

KZZAT! KZZAT!

"GAARRRGGH!"

Bael howls in rage. He flinches involuntarily and falls to the ground, losing his forward momentum. The lightning pummels his body like a concentrated thunderstorm, battering him over and over.

Behind Satan, another bolt of lightning slams into the crater and strikes Hercules. Belial screams in pain, as does the young Titan. Two more thunderbolts follow. Sonic booms erupt from the canyon and Bael's body, temporarily deafening Satan and everyone else nearby. Satan reels in pain and spins around, only to see Zeus kneel in the crater, grab his son, and shoot a glance toward the Devil.

The Titan King opens his mouth. He says something, motions with his hand, and vanishes.

Use thy water magic, Samael says inside Satan's mind. Heal thy ears.

Satan blinks as spots appear in his eyes. He nods dumbly, and motions with his hands, summoning a bit of water from the muddy terrain to splash against the sides of his head. After a moment, the world refocuses before the Devil. Satan stumbles to the crater's edge.

Belial lies in the pit, writhing around in agony. Her body, still stretched and twisted, resembles a mass of charred worms. She floats atop the muddy lake, hovering on the edge of consciousness.

"Son of a-! Belial! Hang in there!"

Satan considers jumping into the crater to heal the succubus, but pauses to flash a glance at the Balrog. Bael kneels in the dirt and grunts. Blood drips from his eyes as Zeus's continuous electric current pummels his body. The two metal poles suddenly yank from the ground and soar into the distance, manipulated by some unseen force. With them gone, the Balrog takes a moment to reorient himself, then roars once more. "GAAAH!! NOBODY HURTS ME! ME HURT THEM!!"

A sense of dread washes over the badly injured demons nearby. They stare at Bael in shock as the Balrog flaps his wings and charges the two nearest grunts. He grabs their heads, smashes their skulls together, and sprays their brains all over the mud.

Tch. Stay alive, Belial, Satan thinks. I can't leave everyone to die!

Hardly has Satan taken two steps toward the Balrog before Lucifer yells and grabs everyone's attention. "Minions, retreat! I will handle Bael on my own! Satan, save Belial. You there, grab Artorias. You, grab Diablo. Try to save who you can. I'll draw the Balrog's gaze!"

Lucifer fires a powerful mana beam from her third eye. It strikes Bael in the chest and knocks him back slightly. "Hey! Bael! You're a pathetic dickless imp who can't get a woman! Nobody likes you! I bet you can't land a single hit on me!"

Bael cocks his head questioningly. "WHAT YOU SAY?"

"You heard me, empty-brains! You're dumber than a rock!"

Lucifer whistles. A Hellhound appears from the treeline. It stares at her for a moment, then charges across the muddy ground, using its muscular body to jump the craters littering the area. Lucifer leaps atop it and starts to run away.

"Give up, Bael! You can't catch me!"

Bael's body trembles in anger. "NOBODY MAKE FUN OF ME!! COME HERE, LITTLE WOMAN!"

He flaps his wings, jumps into the sky, and chases after her at top speed.

Satan watches as Lucifer and the Balrog disappear into the treeline. He stares at them dumbly for a moment, then claps his hands. "You heard the woman! Make like a bat and get the flap out of here. Hurry! We don't know if those Titans will return or not!"

The other demons nod. Those who can walk quickly gather together and start picking up survivors to haul them toward the hole in the ground where Satan summoned his underground river earlier.

For his part, Satan jumps inside the crater and begins using his water magic to heal Belial.

"Hang in there, toots. Your sister would kick my ass if I let you die here."

As Satan treats the succubi's wounds, he flicks his eyes in all directions to gape at the scorched planet.

What crazy bullshit went down while I was out?

Author note: Due to slamming into the character limit, next part will be all about the aftermath of this conflict. Sorry the part ends a little abruptly!

Part 136: Newton's Third Law

Satan wraps one arm underneath Belial and uses the other to splash muddy water on her exposed skin. "Hey, hey, girl... come on, come on. Wake up! Shit."

His water magic goes to work healing her, but thanks to the blood and mud turning the water fetid, it doesn't have much effect. A few bits of melted flesh mend, while the rest of her body remains grievously injured.

Belial trembles and moans. Her chest shudders as she swallows painfully. "Gmm... hnn..."

Satan bites his lip. "Damn. Zeus hit Belial with everything he had. She's lucky to be alive. I need to find some clean water, pronto."

The Devil uses his Vectors to grab the succubi's still-stretched arms and legs lying in spools here and there. He coils them as gently as possible and rests the noodly appendages on her chest, then uses his Vectors to levitate Belial's body in front of himself, so her arms and legs don't drag across the ground. He stomps through the mud toward the hole in the Earth, where the Titans first attacked him and Bael.

Satan descends into the bowels of the planet. Belial shivers in his arms, not due to cold, but due to wrenching, electrical agony coursing through her nerves. As Satan heads underground, he summons a fireball to light the path ahead.

Minutes tick past. Satan's eyes flick to the walls, which glisten in the firelight thanks to the water that drained through earlier. Our feet slap against the damp floor and send splashing noises echoing ahead of us as we travel.

"Poseidon told me there were millions of demons living on Earth. If that's the case, why did only a few thousand show up to fight the Titans? Where are all these lazy fuckers hiding? What happened to discipline and bravery?"

"I don't know," Samael replies, despite the Devil not specifically addressing him. "We haven't any idea how deep these catacombs go. Traveling to the surface might be time-consuming. Perhaps thy people intended to arrive on the scene, but it took them half an hour to reach the surface, so they could not?"

"Yeah. Maybe..." Satan says, unconvinced. "Or, maybe they sat on their asses and ignored the chaos on the surface. Either way, I intend to get some answers."

Whispers tickle Satan's ears as he continues down the path. Having already passed dozens of tunnels on the left and right, he continues shambling deeper into Valac's Den, keeping an eye out for other demons as he travels.

The Devil narrows his eyes. Hmm. Someone should have greeted me by now. It seems the grunts are keeping their distance. I wonder why?

"Nyehehe! Emperor Satan has returned!"

Barbatos's shrill voice rings out in the darkness of the caves, making Satan flinch. The Lord of Iron scampers toward us, keeping low enough to the ground that his loincloth drags against the damp dirt.

With a throaty cackle, Barbatos rears his head back to laugh. "Eheheh! I'm surprised you have the balls to show your face around here after all the trouble you've caused!"

Satan frowns. "I killed several of Hercules' humans, and their souls temporarily took over my mind. I would never intentionally bring harm to my people otherwise. It was an accident."

Barbatos flicks his gaze in every direction. Several demons step toward us, their burning red eyes illuminated by Satan's fireball. When he returns to looking at us, Barbatos strikes a heroic pose, emboldened by the presence of other demons. "Nyeh! An accident?! Because of your shitty contracts, we lost control of ourselves! If it weren't for Bael going berserk, I might've used my overwhelming power to kill Goros over here, or maybe even Kilvik! What would you say if I'd killed my bestest best buddies, eh? Surely, you don't think an apology would be enough?!"

The nearest grunts nod approvingly to Barbatos's words. A few of them clap and yell things like, "Yeah, he's right!" and "You tell him!"

Satan lowers his gaze to Belial's shivering body. He pauses to dwell on his thoughts before replying. "You're right. I fucked up. I never considered the possibility someone might turn my contracts against the demons. The idea of losing control seemed unthinkable to me."

Barbatos sneers at Satan. "Nyeh, it must really suck not being able to control your body. If only we knew what that felt like!"

Another grunt shakes his fist at Satan. Cuts and gashes line his body, while burn marks dot his arms and legs. "I couldn't move a muscle! Bael's mana burned me and melted my skin, but I had to stand there and suffer! I couldn't run away! I was helpless because of you!!"

"Everything was going just great until you came crawling back," another grunt yells. "We got stronger whenever we killed something, there were whores aplenty, and Valac was crushing the angels and Titans like no tomorrow! Now he's dead, and we're all fucked!"

More grunts join in. They howl and berate Satan for several minutes, spinning tales of the woe they suffered because of his contracts. Satan stares at the ground, unable to offer an explanation capable of dampening their anger.

"I don't know what to say," Satan says, holding up a hand. His voice quiets the gaggle of grunts as they lean in to wait for his apology. "I screwed up. That's all there is to it. Maybe I shouldn't have killed Valac, but he didn't leave me much choice. I only came to talk, but he bared his fangs. He chose to hold a grudge against me for thousands of years, rather than let bygones be bygones. Considering how that bastard treated my girl... I think he deserved worse."

Before any of the demons can protest, Satan jabs a finger at Barbatos. "However! Don't pretend your authority overrides mine. I broke our people out of Heaven. I defeated an Archangel when nobody else could. I even ended up suffering in the Cosmic Realm, where I wasn't able to help my people while thousands of years passed! Despite the mistakes I've made, I had only the best intentions for demonkind.

I've lived longer and accomplished more than any of you losers. I made a few mistakes, but don't think you can point fingers when you wouldn't exist without me!"

Satan's words take Barbatos aback. The young Lord scoffs at him and pauses to look at his brothers lurking in the darkness. Their eyeballs glow softly as they try to come up with a counterpoint.

Finally, Barbatos speaks. "Of course we're grateful for you getting us out of Heaven. That much is obvious, nyeh! That doesn't give you the right to control us like puppets! We're supposed to all be one big happy stinkin' family, not slaves bound to a master!"

A voice roars from behind Satan. "Bahaha! Well said, runt!"

Satan turns around to search the darkness for the speaker. Lucifer and Bael stride toward us, and the latter puffs his chest out triumphantly.

"What've you got to say about that, Satan? Your dumb ass nearly got us all killed! If it wasn't for me being a total badass, Hercules might've won!"

As Bael stomps forward, several of the grunts shrink back in fear. Barbatos's voice shakes. "Y-you're back? B-but... weren't you a m-mon...ster?"

Lucifer holds up her hand. "I managed to soothe Bael's rage. If his anger subsides, or he becomes bored, he returns to normal. He's no threat to anyone now."

Bael flicks his gaze to Lucifer. "Yeah? Well, I've got a few choice words to spit at you later, ya damned cunt. Can't believe ya fired off your damn mouth like that."

"Desperate times; desperate measures," Lucifer replies. "You could have transformed without my assistance. Would have saved everyone a lot of trouble, including yourself."

Bael opens his mouth to retort, but Lucifer holds her hand up. "Let's move on. There are more important matters to attend to."

Bael rolls his eyes. "Yeah, yeah. Anyway... Satan! How about you get rid of those contracts now, eh?"

Satan blinks. "What? Why would I do that?"

Bael gestures toward the assembled grunts. "Do I hafta spell it out? You're 'sposed to be the smart one here."

Satan chews on his lip. He flicks his gaze toward the eyes glowing in the darkness, each pair representing a grunt afraid of his power.

"Thy comrades are correct," Samael says. The Archangel appears in Satan's thoughts and leans against some invisible object. "Thy Blood Contracts have caused thee much consternation. Mind Control is a difficult technique to perform, but supposing someone could manipulate thee in the future, they might permanently annihilate thy people. Is maintaining power via enslavement something thou intendeth to do, ever? Does it not go against the very principles thou dids't espouse when thy people fled Heaven, all those years ago?"

Satan lowers his eyes to the floor. Thoughts swirl in his mind.

Damn. How could I have been so blind? Samael is right, and so are the others. Not only are my Blood Contracts a double-edged weapon, but they go against everything I stand for. Why would I even consider forcing other demons to do something against their will? That isn't how I should operate.

Satan's voice cracks as he regains his composure. "Right... I... I didn't think of the consequences when I formed my Soul Contracts. Enslaving angels and Titans is one thing... but doing that to my brothers and sisters... there must have been a screw loose in my head."

Bael smacks Satan on the back and nearly knocks the Devil off his feet. "Bahaha! That's right! Now you're usin' your brain, dumbass! Get to tearin' them up! It's the only way we'll ever trust you again!"

Satan nods. With a flourish of his hands, he summons the first Blood Contract before himself; one with Lucifer's symbol drawn in blood on the byline.

"I think I've tormented you long enough, Lucy," Satan mutters. "I'll destroy yours first."

Lucifer breathes a sigh of relief. "Devils. I can't wait to live my life as a free woman."

With a nod, Satan grabs the contract floating before him. He pinches it at both top corners, pauses for dramatic effect, and rips it straight down the middle. The paper tears in half and turns to dust, sending magical particles all over the floor like a waterfall of confetti.

Several demons grin and nod at each other. "Now, that's good news!"

However, the grunts speak too soon. A few moments later, the contract reappears in midair, startling Satan. His eyes widen as it floats to the ground, no longer torn in half.

"What in the name of...?"

Satan grabs the contract, tears it in half again, and watches as it dissolves to dust, only to rematerialize once again.

Lucifer fidgets uncomfortably. "Please tell me those are different contracts you're tearing each time."

"No..." Satan murmurs. "It's your contract. No matter how many times I tear it up, it won't- gah!"

Satan's breath catches.

Son of a broodmother! I forgot!

Lucifer notices the astonishment in Satan's eyes. "What's wrong? I don't like surprises."

"I can't destroy the blood contract..." Satan whispers. "My contracts are unbreakable. Not even I can undo them."

"The only thing I like less than a surprise is a joke," Lucifer replies. "Now is no time for clowning around."

"I'm serious," Satan says. "I can't rip my contracts up, or burn them, or anything else. They're permanent until the day I die."

Groans rip through the ever-expanding crowd. Newly arrived demons get the story from those that have been here since Satan's arrival, only for dismay to cross their faces as well.

"Bloody hell, Satan!" Barbatos yells. "You roped us into some cursed eternal bondage?! What's up with that?!"

Satan furrows his brow. "No... no that can't be it... there has to be a way out... it's my power, for devil's sake. I'm sure there's a loophole."

The Devil grabs Lucifer's contract and carefully reads its words. As he does, Samael speaks once again.

"Satan, destroying a Blood Contract is impossible. However, thou can, at the least, annul its worst parts. A contract can be modified, so long as both parties agree to the newly defined terms."

Satan blinks. "I can do that?"

The other demons raise a few eyebrows when he talks to himself, but from their perspective, he only appears to be thinking out loud.

"I believe so. Out of sheer boredom, I have spent some time perusing thy abilities and studying their finer details to amuse myself. Rewriting the contracts will require plenty of time and effort, especially given how many of them thou possess. It will also require fresh blood from each being thou hath contracted with, but expunging the more troublesome clauses should require little more than time and patience."

Satan wipes his face. A cold sweat overtakes him.

Cripes. I can't just tear the damn contracts up. I have to rewrite each and every one, then get a blood signature from each demon. There are thousands of contracts still active. This is going to take forever.

Satan blinks. His gaze wanders to Belial, still breathing weakly in his Vector's grasp, then back to Lucifer.

"I have a solution. It's going to be a pain in the ass, but it will work. I'll erase my blood contracts one by one. If you could do me a favor and locate everyone who signed one, I'd appreciate it. In the meantime, I need to get some water and heal Belial. She's in bad shape."

Lucifer crosses her arms and looks at Bael. The two of them exchange a glance, pass a message between themselves wordlessly, and nod.

"Fine," Lucifer says. "I'll do that much. You'd better keep your word, though."

"Of course. The Devil always upholds his end of the deal."

With a nod, Satan turns away. His gaze flicks to Barbatos.

"Hey, brat. I ordered you to find Nerissa's body and put her somewhere safe. Where is she?"

Barbatos rolls his eyes. "Oh, don't you worry your tush. I put her somewhere nice and safe. Valac's throne room! I figured the Titans would never find her there."

Satan narrows his eyes. "Valac's throne room. Really. Are you trying to piss me off?"

Barbatos sticks out his tongue. "Nyeh! It's the least I can do after how you made my loyal minions suffer!"

"Whatever."

Satan shoves past Barbatos. With a motion of his hand, he activates an Aqua Sense ability, one of Poseidon's powers. An underground lake trembles half a mile away, telling him where to find salvation.

Belial is dying in my arms while these jackasses slow me down. Nobody has any sense of urgency around here.

Satan continues toward the underground water reservoir. After we walk a hundred feet or so, a demon grunt scurries over to Barbatos and whispers in his ear. Satan pauses to listen.

Barbatos howls in surprise. "What?! You imbecile! I told you to hunt them all down! How could you let one slip through your claws?!"

Satan tilts his head back to watch. The other grunt shrinks away from Barbatos. "I-it wasn't my fault! We had to get out of there because of Bael! It was only one fleshbag..."

Barbatos punches his palm. "It's about the principle, you freaking idiot! We never let a fleshbag escape our clutches, much less one of that Titan's thralls! Nyeh! What an embarrassment! He killed a bunch of my minions, and you let him get away!!"

The grunt wrings his hands apologetically. "S-sorry... I saw him running, but I didn't think-"

"Of course you didn't think! You never do! This is why I've gotta do everything around here, sheesh!"

Satan stares at the two of them for a moment, then shrugs and continues walking.

Cripes. Getting all up in arms over one human. Without that Titan's power, they wouldn't last two seconds against even the weakest of demons.

The sounds of Barbatos scolding the grunt fade into the distance behind us. As Satan walks, he mutters quietly. "Hey, Samael. I have a question."

Samael stirs. "Hm?"

Satan purses his lips. "You told me I absorbed a few dozen human souls, correct?"

"Aye," the Archangel replies. "What about them?"

"Well, until now, I was under the impression that when someone slew my body, I lost one of my souls randomly. The chances of losing those corrupted souls before all the others seem to be... remote."

Samael nods. "Naturally. While thy mind was under the Titan's power, I frantically searched for a way to manipulate the souls controlling thee. As I did, I discovered I could control the ordering of souls within thy body. Those I place at the top disappear first, while the ones at the bottom expire afterward."

Satan nods. "That's what I thought. The ordering isn't random, then?"

"Nay. 'Tis not."

"Finally. Some good fucking news."

* * *

Satan's feet splash into a shallow puddle, sending bits of water in every direction. The Devil pauses to use the liquid on Belial, healing a bit of her skin as best as he can.

"I'm surprised, Samael. Your actions lately have been... out of character."

Samael crosses his arms. "Perhaps."

"Don't play dumb. What's your goal? You complain all the time about me, the demons, and you always talk about how you'll someday take revenge for your people's sake. Why didn't you let the Titan possess me and finish off the rest of demonkind? Why not let my strongest powers get burned out of me?"

Samael lowers his eyes.

Several long, excruciating seconds pass.

"I... I know not. Thou art correct, Satan. My actions contradict my statements in the past. Perhaps I have gone mad. Perhaps I have grown complacent. However... as I watch thy struggles against the seemingly impossible... a strange feeling wells up inside of me. Perhaps 'tis pity? Guilt?"

Samael continues. "Spending a few years within thy mind has totaled naught but a sliver of my life; a sneeze lost in the wind. Still, I've had time to contemplate a great many things. As thou lay in the Cosmic Realm, all but dead, I realized an eternity of mundanity awaited me. I ignored the feelings in my heart, knowing that at the least, thou woulds't receive the punishment ye rightly deserved."

Satan continues walking down the labyrinthine passageways toward the underground lake. His fingers tap together. "The feelings in your heart, huh? And what might those be?"

Samael pauses.

"I know not how to describe them. I've slowly started seeing the world in the way thou do. Despite the gruesome manner in which my brother left thee limbless and naked in the Cosmic Realm, the agony and helplessness did little to erode thy fighting spirit. As a soldier fighting for the Creator, I must begrudgingly admit my respect for thy pertinacity."

Satan sighs. "That can't be all of it. Since when did you start respecting me? You held my life in your grasp twice, yet you didn't kill me. Are you afraid of dying? Is that what's going on here?"

Samael rubs his chin. "Aye. I do fear death. I resigned myself to the eternal abyss at one point, but the thought of someday speaking to my brothers and sisters again... it... it fortifies my resolve. Tell me, Satan, what are thy intentions toward the angels? Dost thee plan to attack them and cause yet another bloody war with no victors? Can we not come to a resolution and put the bloody conflicts of our past behind us?"

"You tell me, chum. I don't know how angels think."

"Thy answer is inadequate. My brother once extended a cautious hand to thee. He offered a potential peace treaty! Hads't thou accepted his generous offer-"

"That proposal was garbage from the beginning," Satan retorts, cutting off the Archangel. "Perhaps you've forgotten, but I haven't. The angels killed all the imps in Heaven. I couldn't rescue more than a sliver of my people, and your family decided to execute the rest in response. How the hell could I trust a peace treaty extended after such a barbaric display of violence? Angels and demons hate each other. That's all there is to it."

Samael falls silent.

Several minutes pass as Satan draws nearer to the underground lake. Once it comes within view, the Archangel speaks again.

"Thou art correct, Satan. Thy views are among many reasons why I forced myself to re-evaluate my life's choices. My people committed many grave sins, as did I, personally. I cannot apologize enough on their behalf. I fear that neither side will be willing to set aside their differences in the pursuit of peace. Too many have fallen. Too much blood has watered the land. What good will words do, now?"

Satan kneels beside the lake. He splashes water on Belial's nude body and gets to work soaking her broken bones, lacerations, and scorched skin. The icy water causes her to shiver violently, but Satan summons fireballs with his Vectors to warm her up as he performs the healing magic.

"I don't know, Samael. Even if Raphael groveled on both knees and apologized for a hundred years... it wouldn't undo the time I lost in the Cosmic Realm. I let all the demons down, and it's all because of your brother."

Satan chuckles. "Heh. Words are cheap, indeed. You've got that right."

Belial coughs. Her arms slowly shrink and spool back together as she regains her stamina. She blinks her eyes open and winces at the light from the fireballs hovering around her.

"Ngh- where am I? What happened?"

Satan places his hand on the Succubi's back and helps her sit up. "Easy, toots. You took one hell of a beating. While you hacked and chopped at Hercules, his daddy came in and blasted you with lightning. You're lucky you survived."

Belial reaches up to rub her face. "Lightning...? Ah... I... I remember, now. The pain. The burning on my skin. Ohh... I tried to kill that Titan, but I didn't have enough power. He healed every wound within seconds. All I could do was slow him down."

"You did fine," Satan grunts. "Don't beat yourself up. I bet you'd have killed him if his father hadn't intervened. Considering you're only a Baron, that's incredible."

Belial nods. "I suppose you're right. It's not like I'd prefer to kill him. Violence isn't in my nature."

"You sure? I remember when we were imps, and you ate lots of bugs and birds. Killing animals is the same thing as killing an angel or a Titan; it's just a matter of degree. If you're willing to kill one..."

Belial pulls away from Satan. She summons magic from within herself to finish healing the last of her injuries. "I don't think those are the same at all. Anyway, I haven't been an imp since forever and a half ago. I've changed! And I certainly don't eat bugs anymore."

"I guess not. Heh. You've changed... everyone's changed."

Satan chuckles wryly. His expression darkens, and he averts his gaze.

"Say, Belial... uh... there's something I need to tell you."

Belial perks up. Her voice lilts with concern as she notices the sudden change in Satan's attitude. "Hm? Is something wrong?"

The moisture in Satan's mouth evaporates. He coughs and wets his lips. "Ahem. Ah, yeah. You could say that. It's... it's about your sister. Nerissa."

The blood drains from Belial's face. "What... what happened to her? Satan? Don't tell me... she's not..."

Satan closes his eyes. "I'm sorry. There's no easy way to say it. She died, Belial. She died. I battled Valac, and during our encounter-"

Tears well up in the succubi's eyes. Her breath catches, and she turns away. "Nnn... no... she can't be dead... that's impossible! She was an Emperor. She was stronger than me... she was... ngh..."

Belial clutches her chest. She goes silent for a moment, but her body shakes as she tries to suppress her anguish.

Satan balls his hands into fists. "Blame me. It's my fault she died. I wasn't here to protect her, or you, or anyone else. Valac used her, hurt her, and tossed her aside... all to take revenge on me. If it weren't for me, she'd never-"

"Don't speak!" Belial yells. She turns to face me, a flash of anger radiating from her eyes. "Nerissa loved you, Satan. I lost contact with her several hundred years ago, but before that, you were always on her mind. She never lost faith in you. She always said you'd return! Even when I infiltrated Heaven, searched every nook and cranny, and came up empty-handed, she didn't lose faith. She promised me you were alive, and never gave up hope!"

"Yeah. Your sister always was a stubborn one," Satan mutters. He doesn't meet Belial's gaze. "Even with Valac's mind control turning her into a puppet, she fought against him until the very end."

Belial wipes away her tears. "How did she... go? Was it quick?"

"Somewhat. Nerissa went out on her own terms, not Valac's. A warrior's death."

* * *

Belial stares into the lake for nearly a minute. Satan's fireballs illuminate the water, sending sparkles and shimmers rippling off its surface to the stalactites hanging above.

"I wonder if we could bring her back..." Belial murmurs.

Satan raises an eyebrow. "What?"

"Nerissa. Maybe we could bring her back. Valac was somehow able to raise the dead. Maybe another demon could... no... no, never mind. Forget it. That's too disturbing a thought."

Satan lunges his hand out and grabs Belial's shoulder. "What did you say? Valac could raise the dead?!"

Belial jumps in surprise at Satan's sudden enthusiasm, then shrugs. "W-well, yes. But... those he brought back couldn't control their bodies. They were his puppets. I wouldn't want my sister's peaceful slumber to shift in such a gruesome manner."

Satan's eyes widen. "Are you kidding?! This is great! I didn't know anyone could revive the dead! If I can bring Nerissa back, maybe I could do the same for the others! Maybe... maybe..."

If I can save Nerissa, my time in the Cosmic Realm wasn't a total waste! If I could at least save her, then that would mean I'm not a total failure! I could bring her back and undo some of the harm Valac caused!

Satan's mood turns positively giddy. He rubs his hands together and flicks his eyes around the cave. "Devils, the idea hadn't occurred to me until just now, but if what you're saying is true..."

Belial crosses her arms. "Drop it, Satan. Don't desecrate the dead. Such abominable acts belong with scum like Valac. I'm sorry I even thought of such a thing. Lucifer would have my head if she knew."

Satan ignores the succubus. He jumps to his feet and starts walking away, heading back the way he came. "You do you, toots. I'm a man on a mission. If I don't at least try, I won't be able to live with myself."

"Wait! Where are you going?"

Belial scrabbles to catch up to Satan. As she falls into step beside him, Satan smiles. "You may not like it, but I have to try and bring her back. If there's even a chance... I'll take it."

The succubus grits her teeth. "Satan, you're acting like a child. My sister is dead. Can't we bury her and go on with our lives? Don't let your emotions get the better of you. She wouldn't want that."

"Maybe, maybe not," Satan says. "We won't know unless we ask her. If I can't figure anything out, no harm done. But, if I can..."

Belial sighs. "There's no dissuading you. Do what you please, but I warn you, Satan... this path you're walking will only lead to heartbreak and agony."

Satan bites his lip.

"I have to try."

Samael watches silently. His eyes give only a hint of the disapproval simmering below the surface.

Part 137: Digging Up The Past

It takes me a moment to adjust to my surroundings as I appear before the bonfire once again. Michael is still gone, but Raphael and Gabriel are here, as is Solomon. Raphael runs his fingers through his beard while staring at the fire, but Gabriel gazes at me with a neutral expression, as if waiting for my verdict.

"How are you feeling?" Solomon asks. "You've been inside my visions for twenty-five real-time minutes. We've nearly reached Tarus III, and the conclusion of my history lesson."

"I'm fine," I mutter. "That battle against Hercules was a bit disorienting, though. Previously, the visions took place inside the mind of one of the demons, angels, or Titans, but you chose to hover me over the battlefield. Why?"

"War is a matter of perspective," Solomon replies. "From one side, a battle will appear like a victory, while the other might perceive it as a loss. Satan's memories fragmented for a while when Hercules took over his mind, and no other combatant was there for the entire battle, so I opted to create a composite view of the battlefield and levitate you above it. Frankly, it ended up being better for displaying a bigger-picture view."

"Why didn't you use that technique sooner?"

Solomon shrugs. "I did not feel it was necessary."

"What about when Satan ate those frigging bugs? Could have spared me, you know."

"Heh," Solomon chuckles. "A little extra protein never hurt anyone."

"Right..."

I pause to flick my eyes toward Raphael.

"Regarding Satan and Samael... in the last vision, your brother wondered if the blame for the angel-demon war might sit at the angels' feet. Do you have anything to say about that?"

Raphael meets my gaze. "I do not. Samael became entrapped by the Devil's black magic. It stands to reason that Satan must have manipulated my brothers' mind to further his ambitions. The brother that I knew would never compromise his principles, nor would he assign blame to his family."

"So... you're saying Satan brainwashed him?"

"'Tis the logical explanation," Raphael says, as he averts his eyes and returns to gazing into the fire. "I would be hard-pressed to call my people blameless, but 'twas the first nasty little demon imp who couldn't appreciate the gifts he'd received who caused all the misery that followed. Had Satan kept his head down and stayed thankful for Heaven's fruits, his people would have lived quite comfortably."

I stare at Raphael for several long moments. Crossing my arms, I groan under my breath. "Ugh. It's astounding you're still able to say stuff like that after everything you've seen. Satan and Samael both thought the angels might be at fault. Their logic is perfectly sound. Why must you adhere to the notion that your people were righteous and just while the demons were pure evil? I see fault on both sides, but yours started the conflict. Angels are the oldest beings in the universe. You should have known better than to stomp on and alienate Uzziel's children."

Gabriel holds his palm up. "We had no way of knowing what might happen. Thou dost forget, young Hero, that thou hath the gift of hindsight. The knowledge of various slave trades and the effects they had on civilizations for millennia afterward was not available to my people as it is to thee. We lacked experience and historical context. Naturally, were we to redo events in the past, the course of history would have played out very differently."

"If you acknowledge that you'd have done things differently, that means you made a mistake the first time around. Why not just admit that much?"

Raphael furrows his brow. "Thy questions prove quite vexatious, Jason. With the knowledge I possessed back then, I guided my people along the path I thought would best preserve our livelihoods. Naturally, 'tis a simple matter to ascribe modern values and knowledge to past events, but hads't thou walked in our shoes, I suspect thou would have made similar choices."

"Raphael speaks the truth," Solomon says. He smiles at me, but for a moment, I detect a brief glimpse of animosity bubbling in his eyes. "You lived your life within the confines of 'modern' society. You read history books about the evils of slavery, the Holocaust, and many other such events. The angel and demon wars began before human civilizations rose. Trying to fit your narrow viewpoint in the past will only lead to... misunderstandings."

Solomon places his hand on my shoulder, but I pull away. "Even without knowledge of the evils of slavery, I think I could figure out a few things might go wrong with making a lesser species my chattel."

Raphael's eyes darken. "Oh? An interesting hypothesis. Let us test that statement out."

The eldest Archangel leans forward. A glimmer appears in his eyes. "Before thou entered the Cryopod, woulds't ye say that never once did ye participate in the act of enslavement?"

"Of course not."

"Art thou certain?"

Raphael presses the point. I lean back and try to think of anything that comes to mind.

"Well, even in the era I left behind, there were still slave traders in third-world countries. They were all illegal, though. No government sponsored slavery at any official level, and mankind was taking steps to eradicate it permanently."

"Mmm." Raphael nods. A strange smile passes over his face. "I spoke not of enslaving thy fellow humans, but of lesser beings. For example... how about livestock? Dids't thee ever once consume the meat of an animal raised on a farm?"

Shit. So that's where the old man is going with this.

"Well, yes, but I had no control over how those animals were raised. There were factory farms, and there were free-range farms. Some were worse than others, and humans were working to eradicate the worst elements."

Gabriel interjects. "Does it matter what type of farm from which thou obtained meat? Slavery is slavery, Jason. A chicken raised in comfort would end up beheaded and cooked on thy plate, the same as one raised in misery. If thou consumed any form of meat taken from an animal in captivity, thou participated in an act of bondage far worse than my people imposed upon the demons. We did not slaughter the demons for food. We merely asked that they perform tasks for us, in exchange for food and shelter exceeding anything Earth offered."

"Demons were and are sentient. Cows and chickens aren't."

Solomon purses his lips. "You can rationalize these arguments however you like, Jason. The point is, the angels made a mistake, but you aren't blameless, either. Perhaps they could have treated the imps more nicely. Certainly, kicking them around and treating them as inferiors was a terrible sin, one they should never have committed. However, there is a vast historical context you're ignoring in favor of your argument. Were the angels somewhat responsible for the actions of the demons? Yes. Were they entirely to blame? No. The demons made choices, just as the angels did. Of course, we now have further context with regards to the actions of the dark dragon, Leviathan. He manipulated the situation to his advantage and escalated the conflict far beyond what was reasonable."

Solomon continues. "Further, saying that animals are not sentient is ignorance incarnate. I happen to know for a fact that animals have thoughts, feelings, and dreams. Animals are like any of the monsters you'll find in the Labyrinth. Pretending that killing them isn't morally equivalent to enslaving the imps is little more than a gross exercise in hypocrisy."

The ancient King leans back and crosses his arms. He nods, satisfied that he destroyed my argument.

I decide not to retort. Solomon made good points, and he is the Knowledge Seeker, after all. If there were an authority on the nature of the universe, it would be him.

Even so... I don't like this... this feeling in my gut. I don't like the way the angels behave now, nor their actions during the ancient times. Have their attitudes changed? Have they even once reflected on their history and felt contrite? Not over what fate befell them, but over their actions. I think not. I don't sense much regret in Raphael or Gabriel's words. Even after 100,000 years, they still blame the demons for all their woes.

And, of course... there's the matter of what 'Valac' told me. His shadow, the sliver of his soul which somehow overtook my mind for a brief moment.

They're lying to you, Jason. The angels wanted my power for themselves.

I'm certain Valac was the one lying. Raphael was the leader of the angels. There isn't a chance he'd desire Valac's power, nor would he use it if it fell into his hands by chance. Unthinkable.

But... there is the plural they. They wanted Valac's power. Perhaps, angels beyond Raphael? Michael, perhaps? Michael fits the bill. If anyone were to seek power at all costs, it would be him.

Maybe I'm overthinking things. Valac is a liar, through and through. Believing a demon over the Archangels is beyond stupid, especially when he's the King of All Evil who tortures and maims for fun.

Even if I have a few misgivings, at worst, the angels are the better of two evils. Hell, that's probably selling them short.

* * *

I turn to my right to see Solomon staring at me. His eyes search my face for a moment, and I suddenly remember he can read my thoughts. I can't read his, though. I wonder what's on his mind?

"Solomon."

Raphael speaks. He pulls the ancient King's gaze away from me.

Solomon turns to look at Raphael. "What is it, old friend?"

Raphael pauses. A look of concern crosses his face, and he hastily pulls out his pipe to smoke.

"Mmm. I have a question for thee. Something has concerned me for a while now... but these recent visions have solidified my thoughts. 'Tis with regards to the knowledge thou possess regarding the demons. Specifically... their memories."

Solomon cocks his head. "I don't follow."

"Understand that I am not accusing thee of anything. However... I must ask how ye came into possession of Satan's memories, Nerissa's, those Titan women, and so on. They died long before thy birth. My understanding was that thy crown took the knowledge and history locked within a person's brain and sealed them within itself... but many of the memories we've seen came from people who never wore thy crown. Therefore, I ask thee now... how dids't thee obtain their memories?"

"Ah," Solomon says. "So that's what you mean. The answer is quite simple. I possess the knowledge and memories of anyone whose body I have touched in some way. The crown is merely an infinite receptacle for all the information I've absorbed."

This time, it's Raphael who looks perplexed. "I... I still do not understand. Even if that were the case, how woulds't thee have obtained Selene's memories? I doubt ye had a chance to touch her."

"I didn't. However, my ability allows me to obtain the memories of not just anyone I touch, but any of the souls they've absorbed. As you know, I once fought Satan and tens of thousands of his minions in Jerusalem. Satan crushed Selene's head, so when I touched him, I absorbed his memories, and those belonging to all the souls inside of him. That included hers."

"Mmm," Raphael murmurs with a nod. "I see. Then... Uzziel's memories...?"

"You brought me to Heaven at one point. I embraced many angels, including her."

Raphael's countenance darkens. Slowly, he pulls the pipe from his mouth. It shakes in his trembling hand.

"What of... what of my memories?"

Solomon purses his lips. "I possess those as well."

Raphael jumps to his feet. "No! Thou must erase them at once! My people's history must stay banished to the past, forever! None must know of it!!"

Once again, a chilling sense of dread bursts from the old man's body. Much like when he confronted Michael, a horrific sensation of fury explodes from all of his pores. I wince as Raphael stomps his foot, enraged. "If thou possesseth knowledge of my people's past, then ye know the dangers our memories hold! Remove them from thy crown at once, SOLOMON!!"

Solomon doesn't flinch. He stares at the old man silently for several long moments before closing his eyes.

"I apologize, Raphael, but I cannot do that. When I saw the primordial past you speak of, I tried with all my might to erase those memories. However, I cannot erase any information contained within my Crown. Instead, I locked them away and placed them behind a thousand mental barriers. Even if Jason's curiosity were to get the better of him, he would be unable to view them."

Solomon flicks a guilty look toward me. "I'm sorry, Jason, but I withhold the information from you out of affection, not malice. I know telling you not to ask questions is a raw deal, and it will only inflame your curiosity further, but believe me when I say that Raphael has every reason and right to seal the primordial era behind a wall. I regret seeing it. Raphael regrets living through it. No good can come of knowing the events that transpired."

After Solomon finishes his speech, Raphael's agitation decreases noticeably. The old man shakily sits on his log once again. "A-apologies, Solomon. I shouldn't... shouldn't have lost my temper. It's just... when I think of those dark days..."

"I know," Solomon says, his voice a whisper. "I know you wish to forget the past, but your sacrifice will not go unnoticed. Your vigilance to ensure such a catastrophe never happens again will, at the least, be appreciated by me. I will help you bear the load."

While Solomon and Raphael comfort each other, I watch their exchange silently. All of my misgivings come roaring back.

Raphael wants to hide his people's history. Solomon seems more than happy to help. Michael killed two fellow Archangels, his sisters. Might that have something to do with what Raphael is hiding?

And what of Valac's words?

Gah! I'm missing pieces of this puzzle. I can't solve it, and I'm not sure I even want to try. What awful thing could have happened that made Raphael erase everyone's memories?! Why, upon witnessing said event, would he choose to keep his? Why would Solomon stay complacent?!

Solomon is right when he says that telling me not to ask questions only makes more of them flare up in my mind. My curiosity is burning like the goddamned sun. All I can think about is what the hell happened that freaked Raphael and Solomon out so much. It's driving me crazy!

"Hrm."

Solomon clears his throat.

"Let us continue. Jason, the War in Heaven is the next event I plan to show you. I'd like to explain more regarding what happens afterward, but that can wait for another day. Your spaceship is nearing Tarus II, and we're running out of time for stories."

I shove my misgivings deep into the pit of my stomach. Even if I ask, neither Solomon nor Raphael will give me the answers I seek. There's no point in wasting words. All I can do is try not to dwell on horrible secrets that may or may not undermine the very fabric of my reality. That's not a disturbing thought at all.

"Fine. Let's finish these visions up, already."

Solomon opens his mouth to speak, but pauses a moment before saying anything. "I understand you're unhappy, right now... all I can say is that I'm trying to protect not only you, but the rest of the galaxy as well. I won't apologize for upholding my convictions, and neither should you."

I nod. "Yeah. Sounds fine."

"Jason..."

"What? I'm agreeing with you."

"Yes, but the tone of your voice... never mind. Let's prepare the next batch of visions."

Solomon sighs.

"Regarding the second half of the battle against Hercules, I will continue to use such a perspective for the upcoming battles. However, I think it would be best if the Archangels and myself stood beside you and offered our thoughts. The War in Heaven was a massive, complex event. We would be happy to answer any questions you might have."

I retort immediately. "Any questions?"

"Bloody hell, Jason."

"I'm just kidding."

"No. You're not."

Solomon groans and looks away. The look on his face tells me everything I need to know. He's starting to get annoyed by my persistence.

Well, I can't help myself. When someone puts a big red button in front of me and tells me never to press it, my entire body screams that I absolutely must press it at all costs. I'm human. It's the way the Creator wired me. I can't help my stupid monkey instincts. Even now, I'm not so sure Solomon is doing the right thing by not letting me in on Raphael's secret.

Just tell me! Tell me what happened!!

Fuck it. Move on, Jason. Breathe. Inhale, exhale.

I sigh. "Let's get a move on."

Solomon nods. He forces a neutral expression, but I immediately detect dozens of emotions bubbling beneath his surface.

"Yes. Let's."

Part 138: Game of Emperors

I materialize inside of a dingy room carved into the earth, its walls dimly lit by a few torches hanging from the ceiling. Several hundred demons gather around uprooted tree stumps to cast their lots as they play dozens of games of Sticks and Bones.

An underground gambling den. Literally.

For once, my mind does not appear inside someone else's, nor does it float in the sky with infinite vision. Instead, I coalesce as an incorporeal ghostly apparition; one nobody looks at or acknowledges, but where I can raise my hand, reach out, and touch things around me. I try to nudge the nearest gambler, only for my fingers to pass through him.

Solomon appears beside me, along with Raphael and Gabriel. The Archangel of Power stands so tall that his shoulders and head pass through the roof, obscuring his vision. He doesn't bother kneeling.

"Here we are," Solomon says, his voice impassive. The ancient King waves his hand at the demons present, then drops it to his side. He seems either bored or annoyed.

"Where is this place?" I ask.

"Lucifer's Lair. Hell. The place where demons breed like parasites. Call it whatever you like."

Solomon bites off the end of every sentence and avoids looking me in the eye. When he crosses his arms, I finally confirm his mood.

He's still angry.

I decide not to confront him. Instead, I stay silent and watch as Raphael hobbles toward the nearest table, where Bael, Barbatos, Smealum, and another wild-haired demon are all sitting together and playing two simultaneous matches of Sticks and Bones.

"Hm? Isn't this that game the Animus here invented?" Raphael asks.

"It is," Solomon replies. "After two thousand years, Smealum refined its rules substantially, and it became quite the popular pastime among demons."

Raphael nods, but his expression turns grim. "Mmm. Can't say I like the idea of defiling the dead for sport."

"That's what I'd expect you to say," Solomon mutters.

At the table, Bael and Barbatos sit beside each other, while Smealum and the other demon sit across from them. Bael plays against the newcomer, while Barbatos plays against Smealum.

The newcomer, a demon with frizzy white hair spiked in all directions, chews his thumb as he stares at the bones on the board. His clothes are little more than tattered rags, deliberately torn to reveal his pectorals, the sides of his legs, and his abs. He's a skinny, lanky looking guy, but he has a decent six-pack.

"Damn, bro. You got me good, here. Wassa score again?"

Bael shrugs. "I forgot. You know I ain't good with numbers."

"You're winning though, ain'tcha? I think you are. Hahaha! You're a sly hellhound, bruh. You act like a moron, but you're sharp like Belial's fingers."

Bael grins. "Bahaha! You got that right! Murmur, what're we sitting at? You're keeping count, right?"

Next to the table, several demons sit on chairs, smoking some unknown substance, while they watch the games unfold. A tiny demoness, barely three feet tall, wrapped in several layers of robes, peeps out from the hood shadowing her face. She blushes at Bael's words. "Um... I, um... three-hundred and... and fifteen for D-Duke Bael... Two hundred and fifty-five for-"

"I knew I was ahead!" Bael yells, cutting Murmur off mid-sentence. "Go on, kid. Throw your bones. Let's see how you do on the last toss!"

Murmur shrinks back in her seat. She melts into her robes, relieved not to be the focus of attention anymore. "G-good luck, Shax..."

Solomon coughs. "Mmm. Jason, here's a change to my visions. If you stare at someone and concentrate, you can make their name and other relevant information appear above their head. Give it a shot."

I raise an eyebrow. "Could I have done that from the beginning?"

"If I had allowed it."

"I see."

Shrugging, I focus my mind on the crazy-looking, white-haired demon. His name appears above his head.

Shax: Baron of Melody.

Faction: Formerly led by Valac. Currently led by Bael.

Likes: Music, drugs, gratuitous amounts of sex.

Dislikes: Work, authority, The Man.

My eyebrows raise further as his entire life biography follows. My eyes glaze over at the hundreds of thousands of words.

"That's not all," Solomon says. "If you focus a little harder, you can also read the thoughts of people in my visions."

I sigh. "That ability would have been nice to have earlier. Better late than never, I guess."

Shrugging, I aim my mind at Bael.

Bael: Duke of Pain.

Faction: Formally led by Lucifer, but does not follow his leader's orders.

Likes: Flowers, kittens, bunnies.

Dislikes: Punks, smart people, books.

I groan. "Are these descriptions a joke?"

Solomon shakes his head. "No. They're accurate."

"Bael likes kittens and bunnies. Really?"

Solomon forces a smile. "Who doesn't?"

"Right. Fair point."

I concentrate a little harder on Bael. Sweat drips down my forehead as I dial my concentration to eleven.

"Cripes, Solomon. I can't read Bael's thoughts at all. I think your Crown is malfunctioning."

Solomon sighs. "Haah... no... it's working. Try a different demon."

I nod and aim my mind at Shax. This time, with only the slightest effort, his thoughts appear above his head like a scrolling text feed.

Man. If I can finally beat Bael, maybe he'll accept my offer! I've gotta try, brah! No way I can let this chance slip through my fingers!

I aim my mind at Bael, but once again, no thoughts materialize above his head.

Ah. It appears he's an empty-headed idiot. Somehow, I'm not surprised.

Drool leaks from Bael's mouth as he waits for Shax to pick up the bones. Instead, Shax balls up his fist and aims it at Bael. "Hey! You gotta make me a promise, brah! A bet! A wager!!"

Bael blinks. "Huh? A bet? About what?"

"Don't play dumb! If I beat you here, you've gotta join my crew! We need your talents, my man!"

The Duke of Pain chortles. "Pft, what, singin' songs and shit? Why would I ever do that?"

"Don't laugh! Harmony and rhythm are the tickets to the soul! We ain't doin' this for fun, ya know! Music rouses a warrior's inner spirit, allowing their true power to materialize! It'll help us beat those stupid chickens once and for all!"

Shax headbangs to prove his point, sending his hair rattling forward and back. "Just like that! Feel the jive! Let it touch your soul, my dude!"

Bael appears skeptical. He nudges Barbatos. "You hearin' this shit?"

Barbatos, far gloomier than usual, nods. "Uh huh..."

Bael flicks his eyes at the Lord of Iron's Sticks and Stones board. "Bloody hell! Another Insect formation? Ain't that your sixth in a row? Bahaha! What rotten luck! Smealum, take it easy on this guy."

Smealum shrugs. "I cannot help Barbatos's misfortune. He is quite an unlucky fellow. This game involves very little skill, after all."

Shax's eyes brighten. "No way! When I throw the bones, I feel their aura speak to me! That's why I know... with this roll... I'll make Bael join my entourage! Fate guides me!"

Murmur tugs on her robes. "Y-you... you can do it... Shax..."

Her voice, barely a whisper, is all but ignored by the demons at the table. Shax flashes a brilliant smile at Murmur before focusing his attention on the dozen or so bones in his hand. "I only need... sixty points! If I beat you..."

Bael rolls his eyes. "Pfft. You ain't gonna win. I'm the luckiest demon here."

"We'll see about that!"

Shax throws the bones down. They clatter against the table.

"An Undead Monster formation. You have a chance," Smealum says. He and Barbatos pause their game to watch Bael and Shax's final match.

"You'll need an Undead Minotaur to break sixty points..." Barbatos mutters. "At least you're luckier than me. I ain't seen a good formation all day..."

Shax's nerves heighten. He grabs the sticks and prepares to toss them. "Tch. I'll need like, three flames to win. I can beat you, Bael! Believe in me, everyone! Gimme your energy!"

The demons surrounding the table begin stomping their feet in tandem. "Do, it! Do, it! Do, it!"

A few Goblins skulking around flash their toothy smirks. "Somebody's gotta beat Bael! Might as well be you!"

A massive grin spreads across Shax's face. "Yeah, yeah, yeah! That's the spirit!"

Shax throws his Mahja Sticks down. The four-sided rectangles clink against the table, and Bael's eyes follow them intently.

"Oho! Two flames, two eyes, and a fist! Not bad!"

Shax's excitement lessens. "No... it isn't good enough. I'll have to retry. I only have one discard and one re-roll left. Maybe I oughta re-roll the fist? Or maybe I should discard and hope my re-roll works better on the next pattern?"

Bael's excitement increases to match Shax's intensity. He opens his mouth to offer a recommendation, but at that moment, a demon grunt pushes through the crowd.

"Baeeel! We need your heeelp!"

His whiny voice rings out in the din, squeaking worse than Barbatos's.

Bael's smile evaporates. "What? Can't you see I'm busy?! This had better be important."

"There's a cave bear outside! It killed Korgo! We need you to take care of it!"

Bael rolls his eyes. "Any Lord can beat a Cave Bear. Stop wasting my damn time! I'm tryin' to play some games, dumbass!"

"B-but, if you transform, you can kill it in one blow!"

Bael punches his palm. "Don't piss me off, punk! You're about two seconds from joining Korgo!"

The grunt turns pale and takes a few steps back, but a moment later, someone else runs up behind him. "Bael! Oh, Bael! It's terrible! Come quickly; we need your help!"

"Fuck's sake," The Duke of Pain groans. "Now what? You want a knuckle sandwich, too?"

The second grunt ignores Bael's threat. "Jik-Jik and Puri were trapped in a cave-in! We need someone strong to dig them out of the rubble!!"

"So what?! I ain't the only bulky guy around here! Go bug Satan or Diablo!"

The grunt shakes his head. "They're not strong enough! Only your Balrog form can shove all those rocks aside!"

"Spawn of a broodmother!" Bael jumps out of his seat, annoyance etched into every inch of his face. "All of you! Stop bugging me with dumb crap! I'm trying to play Sticks and Bones! Can't a guy get five minutes of peace around here?!"

More grunts appear, and each of them waves their arms to get Bael's attention.

"Duke of Pain! We need your help!"

"There's an emergency! We need the Balrog to save lives!"

The first grunt seizes his chance. "The cave bear's still on the loose!"

Bael grinds his teeth together. Grunts and Lords around the room begin joining their voices together, demanding he turn into the Balrog for one reason or another. Some of them seem scared, but most of them have looks of hunger in their eyes.

Smealum stares at Barbatos. He shakes his head. "Fools. All these broodlings want is to witness Bael's full power in the flesh. They haven't the slightest grasp on how dangerous his Balrog Form is."

Barbatos crosses his arms. "Nyeh. He wasn't that scary. I nearly beat him myself. Hercules was just weak."

Shax leans back in his seat. He watches as Bael pumps his fists in the air and tries to get the other demons to shut up and let him play. His thoughts appear above his head. Bummer. I thought my bro might get a day off, but even after five years, everyone keeps buggin' him. What a bunch of downers.

Bael smashes his fist on the table, and the playing pieces go flying in every direction. "Everyone! Shut up! I'm sick of this shit! Every devil-damned day, you dingbats come and hound me like a bunch of blood-sucking parasites! For the thousandth time, I'm not transforming ever again! Never! Not even once! Understand?!"

Bael's voice booms around the room, silencing everyone present. As his nostrils flare and heat spews from his lungs, several grunts shrink away from him in surprise.

One Lord whispers to another. "Th-think he'll transform now? He looks angry."

Bael shoots a glare at the speaker. "Not a chance."

The noise in the room dies down enough that I can hear the sounds of individual demons breathing.

"M-mister Bael..."

Bael lowers his gaze to a short little female Lord poking his leg.

"What?"

The demoness twiddles her finger nervously. "I don't understand... why can't you transform? Everyone knows Valac's scythe couldn't kill you. You beat Lucifer, Satan, and Hercules all at the same time. Doesn't that make you the strongest demon here?"

Bael crosses his arms. "Obviously."

"Then... what's the problem? Why won't you transform? We all want to see!"

Several grunts nod along. Barbatos, however, averts his eyes.

"I don't need to become a Balrog to win a fight," Bael replies. "You dumbasses just don't understand. I ain't like Agares. I lose control when I transform. I'll tear apart my friends 'n enemies at the same time. Most of you wouldn't last five seconds against me... and that ain't a good thing."

The Lord shuffles nervously. "But... if you're so tough, why couldn't you beat Hercules without transforming? We heard all about it. Once you became the Balrog, you were unstoppable. Can't you kill all the angels by yourself? If you did that... then..."

Barbatos interrupts her. "Then we'd all be free, nyeh? That's what you're thinking. No more chickens oppressing us."

Several grunts nod.

The female Lord blushes. "With Valac gone... we have no hope. None of the other Emperors stood a chance against those two Titans. Only Bael can win the war! If he doesn't transform and storm into Heaven, we might all-"

"Bullshit!" Bael's roars angrily. "Listen to you whining like a weakling! Pathetic! And you call yourself a demon!"

The Duke of Pain grabs the table and crushes it in his hands, splintering the wood into a thousand pieces.

"I could squash every one of you without transforming! Not because I'm strong, but because you maggots are weak! WEAK! Listen to you, bitching and moaning! You make me sick!!"

Smealum shifts in his seat as he stares at the enraged Duke of Pain. "Bael..."

Bael ignores his warning tone. "I'm tired of everyone's shit!! Stop acting like I'm the only demon who can do anything around here! Work out! Improve yourselves! Get off your asses and become better warriors!!"

The Duke of Pain storms through the crowd of onlookers. He shoves aside several grunts standing in his path as he heads for the exit, but the rest quickly jump out of the way. Everyone watches in silence as he grumbles and gnashes his teeth.

Once Bael leaves the room, an awkward silence follows.

Shax slumps in his seat. "Tch. Thanks a lot, guys. Ya'll just had to push his buttons."

Barbatos nods. "There goes all the fun."

* * *

Solomon motions toward the exit. "Let's follow Bael."

I nod. "Sure."

Solomon closes his eyes, causing the four of us to float after the Duke of Pain. Soon, we fall into step behind him as he stomps through the Labyrinthine passageways of Lucifer's underground lair. Goblins spot him coming and jump into adjacent rooms. Several grunts and Lords pause to stare up at him in silent admiration.

Bael starts muttering to himself. "Fuckin' hell. Every damned day, someone bugs me about somethin'. Transform, Bael! We need your help, Bael! And if it ain't that, they call me a murderer, too. Like it was my fault all those demons died. It's Lucifer's fault. She made me transform. Fucking devil-damned whore."

He continues ranting. "Satan, too. He butted into our business without asking. Because of him, Valac's dead, and now I've gotta deal with a bunch of whining goobers. Dammit! If those two are the best demonkind's got to offer, we're all screwed. I ain't leader material."

Bael grumbles and groans as he walks down the hallways. Soon, voices from further ahead catch his attention. Various demons shout and yell phrases like, "Yeah, you tell him!" and "Kick her ass!"

Frowning, Bael continues walking until he arrives at a huge underground chamber with circular pillars that rise to the ceiling, and various crude drawings etched into the walls. Many of them appear provocative and unfit for polite company, but the demons don't care. Goblins scamper around on the ceiling, adhering to the relatively smooth dirt without a care in the world. They watch the chaos below with looks of interest, but also take care not to get involved.

Bael strides up to the grunts, Lords, and Barons gathered around the outskirts of the room. "What's everyone so excited about?"

Orias, Lord of the Moon, turns to look at Bael. He leans against the wall casually, but keeps as close to the exit as possible. "Satan and Lucifer are fighting again."

"You've gotta be kidding me."

"I'm not. This time, he-"

Before Orias can finish his sentence, the demons around him whoop and holler. "Woo! Yeah! Give it to her!"

Bael's eyes flick to the center of the room. Satan and Lucifer lean toward each other with their metaphorical fangs bared. The Devil balls his hands into fists, while Lucifer's face appears contorted in an expression of rage.

Lucifer's fingers twitch as she takes a menacing step toward Satan. "You expect us to praise you for fixing a mistake you never should've made in the first place?!"

"Of course not!" Satan retorts. "But for once, maybe you could give me a little credit! Do you have any idea how much work fixing those contracts took?!"

"Oh, you poor thing. If only we could sympathize with all the pain and suffering you've had to endure!"

Bael rolls his eyes. "Oh, boy, don't tell me. Lucifer started it this time."

Orias nods. "Satan finally finished erasing the last contract, but she couldn't let him have a win."

Bael shoves aside an imp standing on the opposite side of the doorway from Orias. The poor fellow starts to protest, only to back down when he realizes who pushed him. Bael leans against the doorway and mirrors Orias as the two of them continue watching Satan and Lucifer's Battle of the Words.

Lucifer's third eye glows ruby-red. "I never liked you, Satan. You act like you're the alpha hellhound around here, but you're more bark than bite. Your power comes from lying and manipulating others around you. You cheated and deceived the angels, then did the same to your brothers and sisters as well! While you sat around in the Cosmic Realm like a useless lump of flesh, Valac and I built two equally powerful demon empires; backups in case one or the other should fall. I never liked him, but at least he knew how to get shit done. What have you accomplished since you came back? NOTHING!"

Satan matches Lucifer's nasty glare. "What did I accomplish? I killed Poseidon and Valac just hours apart! Oh, and don't pretend you were best friends with that grave-digging bastard. You hated him more than anyone else. As for your so-called 'empire,' what a laughable notion! Nobody here has any sense of duty. They sit around and play games, all while ignoring the Angels and Titans who want to kill us."

Bael winces. "Sheesh. That hit a little close ta' home."

Satan continues. "I screwed up, but as of today, I've finished fixing my mistakes. My soul contracts are all but nullified. Now, I'm going to take my place as First Emperor and lead our people to greatness. I won't stand for licking the scraps the angels leave us! I want them gone, and I want demons to rule the world!"

"I'll never let you be our leader!" Lucifer snaps. "The last thing we need is another deranged, power-hungry soul manipulator like Valac in charge! Especially you, a demon who spends more time playing with that... that crystal than doing anything else!"

Satan's eyes ignite with rage. "I'm trying to bring Nerissa back! That's my prerogative, not yours! Besides, you've no room to call me a villain for manipulating souls. Do you think I'm daft?! These monsters didn't materialize out of thin air. You made them! You're a soul manipulator too!!"

Lucifer takes a step back in surprise. "What? How could you possibly know that...?"

"Because I have eyeballs, sweetheart. Only Mother can create life from scratch. You ain't no Archangel. Your power comes from somewhere else. I'm loath to insult you for manipulating souls, given it would make me a hypocrite, but I won't stand for one-sided slander from the likes of you!"

* * *

Bael yawns. "Ugh. Same shit as always."

Satan and Lucifer deliver more verbal jabs to one another, but Bael ignores them. Instead, he pokes the nearest grunt.

"Hey, you. Pup."

The demon grunt turns to look at Bael. "Huh? Duke of Pain? Wassup?"

"What's your take? Which of these clowns should be the leader of demonkind?"

A massive grin spreads across the grunt's face. "Aw, that's easy, boss. You! You're like, the coolest demon ever!"

Bael sighs. "Yeaaah... I get that a lot."

The Duke of Pain grumbles as he looks away.

"Ugh. Guess I have to break 'em up again."

The Duke of Pain belatedly pushes his way through the crowd. Before he makes it halfway to the two clashing Emperors, they both spot him coming and immediately take a few steps apart.

Satan crosses his arms. "Ah, Bael. How long have you been here?"

Bael licks his lips. "Long enough to get the gist of things. So, uh, you finished doing the thing? With the things?"

Satan nods. "I did. My soul contracts no longer pose a risk to demonkind. But this... this WHORE! She won't get off my damn back! Nothing satisfies her!"

Lucifer grinds her razor-sharp teeth together. "You strutted out here, acting like you'd done everyone a big favor! I merely put you in your place!"

"In my place?! My place is at the top of-"

Bael wipes his face. "Cripes. Both of you are pathetic."

His interruption halt's Satan's insult.

"What?!" Lucifer scoffs. "Don't lump me in with this cretin! I made demonkind strong! I gave you that Balrog transformation! If it weren't for me-"

Bael raises his palm to silence her.

"Shut up. Don't pretend you're our savior. Everyone did fine under Valac, and everyone did fine under you. The truth is that we're only alive because the angels haven't gotten serious. It's not because you're some smartass leader who predicted their every move. If you or Satan think the rest of us owe you any praise, you're wrong."

Bael shivers as anger courses through his body.

"Fucking Hell. Both of you piss me off. I'd like to squash your heads and spray your brains all over the ground. I came here because I decided we needed to pick our official leader, once and for all. I'm tired of pests buggin' me about this or that. One of you's gotta be the First Emperor, and I don't know if either of you is any good. At the rate we're going, I'd sooner stick Orias in charge. At least he won't bitch and whine like you two hags."

Lucifer rubs her arm. "Well, if you need a logical reason, then how about this? Satan deceived us. Shouldn't that be reason enough to exclude him from the running?"

Bael leans toward Lucifer. His massive body overshadows her like a dinosaur versus a lizard. "You nearly blabbed my secret. I don't trust you, either."

Lucifer's mouth turns to chalk. "Oh, right. I, err, did do that..."

Bael returns to staring at both of the Emperors as he tries to make a decision.

Suddenly, a blur of movement appears behind Bael. The Duke of Pain doesn't react as a figure, black as night, seemingly springs out of his shadow to wrap around him. The demoness, a shadow-walker with huge horns, reaches up and presses a knife to his throat.

"Bael. I hear you're looking for someone to be the new Emperor of demonkind. Why haven't you asked me?"

Bael blinks. He glances to the side, then seems to notice the knife pressed to his jugular. "Oh. Berith. Uhh... yeah..."

The Emperor of Backstabbing, Berith, lowers her weapon and slinks away from him. She melts into his shadow, only to reappear behind Lucifer. Lucifer jerks to the side and recoils from Berith's grasp. "Gah! Don't touch me! I'll not have my skin sullied by one of Valac's servants."

Berith's eyes, black as onyx, twinkle beneath her pitch-black hood. "Valac was a far greater ruler than you. I was the Third Emperor, placed only below his favorite little doll. Had Nerissa perished at any point, I would have been next in line to succeed Valac's throne."

Drool begins to leak from Bael's lips. "Uh... uh huh... right. So you wanna be First Emperor, now?"

Berith stays quiet for a moment. "...Tch. Of course. The problem is, it's become patently clear the demons respect you as the strongest. I won't earn my right to lead unless I defeat you in combat."

The Emperor of Backstabbing narrows her eyes. "How worthless the demons have become to look up to a Duke. I've seen the way you fight. Defeating you would be trivial. Yes, I see it now... Bael! I challenge you for the right to lead demonkind!"

Bael shrugs. "I mean, if you wanna be leader that badly, you can have it."

Berith balks. Her voice hisses through her teeth. "Don't you dare patronize me! I won't stand for mockery. Activate your Balrog Form... and prepare to withstand my full might."

The crowd of demons suddenly triples their excitement. Various grunts and Lords lean forward, their eyes bulging from their faces. "Oh, shit! He's gonna do it! Send word to the others!!"

Lucifer shifts her feet. She glances uneasily at the building enthusiasm among the lower-ranked demons. "Berith. Even for you, this is going too far. We cannot afford a catastrophe like five years-"

"Quiet, you!" Berith snaps and aims her knife at Lucifer. "I don't care how scared you are! I have the right to challenge Bael for the title of First Emperor!"

Bael rubs his chin. "Err, dumb question alert. Once you become our leader, what will you do?"

Berith returns her gaze to him. "I plan to defeat the angels and Titans, of course."

"Yeah? How?"

Berith takes a menacing step toward him. "Hehehe... simple. First, I will use our weakest demons as bait to draw out the Archangels one by one. We will ambush them and pick them off. Once we've eliminated the Archangels, I can draw out the leaders of the Titans and finish them off as well. It will be a simple matter of overrunning the leftovers after that. A genius plan, guaranteeing our victory!"

Several grunts nod along to her words. A few whisper things like, "I guess that could work..." and "If it kills those chickens, it's worth a shot..."

"Hmm," Lucifer murmurs. "Your plan has some merit..."

However, Bael scowls at Berith. "Are you kiddin' me?! What kind of bullshit is that?! We're demons, not cowards who strike from the shadows! We're supposed to tackle our enemies head-on!!"

Satan nods. "Bael is right. What good is winning with such underhanded tactics? It would sour the taste of victory."

Bael's immediate scorn draws Berith's ire. "You have no right to insult my war strategy. Not only is it practical, it virtually assures our victory! You haven't done anything in five years. Everyone looks up to you, but all you do is sit around and play Sticks and Bones. Meanwhile, the Angels and Titans close in on us from every direction."

Bael's temper cools. "Yeah, you've got a point. I do like playing games."

"Precisely."

Berith hisses. She motions with her hands and summons a two-handed spear of shadow.

"That is why I must defeat you right here... and right now. I'll show everyone that I am the mightiest among us and that my methods are what will win this war."

Bael frowns. "I don't think sacrificing weaklings is the way we should do things. But hey, if you want the title so badly, you can have it. I don't really care who's the First Emperor."

"Stop stalling!" Berith yells. "Transform! NOW!!"

Bael scratches his head. "Nah. Too dangerous."

Berith falters. "S-stop mocking me! Transform, you worthless-"

Before Berith can finish her sentence, Bael lunges forward. He jabs his fist forward and strikes the shadow-demon in the chest. She yelps in surprise and flies into the crowd. Before she can hit anyone, she lands inside a shadow and melts into the ground.

Suddenly, the shadows in the room triple in length. Berith pounces from one stretching across the ceiling and dives toward Bael's head. "If you won't transform willingly, then I'll make you do it!!"

Bael doesn't react as her four-foot shadow spear rushes toward his skull. The moment it strikes his flesh and bone, Bael yelps. "Eeyow! Stop poking me! That shit hurts!!"

He reaches up to grab Berith, but she vanishes. Four shadow-lances, like those Amelia summoned in her battle against me, leap from the ground in every direction. They smash against Bael's body, intending to skewer each of his limbs. Instead, when they strike him, the lances bend awkwardly, like spaghetti trying to shatter iron.

Bael rubs his head. "Fuck, fuck, fuck!! I told you to knock it off, you dumb cunt!"

Berith jumps out from behind Bael. A razor-sharp shadow knife materializes in her grasp, and she plunges it into Bael's spine.

The knife shatters on impact. Berith's hand crumples against Bael's skin like a paper airplane striking a brick wall.

Bael swings his palm back like a bolt of lightning.

Wham!

He slaps the Emperor of Backstabbing lightly, sending her careening into the mass of spectators. The surprise attack knocks Berith for a loop. She lands on her ass and skids to a stop, only to jump to her feet a moment later.

"Grrrghh!! Stop fooling around!! This battle is no game! It's a matter of life and death, you little..."

Bael turns to face her. His face turns deathly calm. "You want me to get serious? I'm not even trying to fight you, right now. You're so weak it's pathetic. You can't handle my normal body, let alone my Balrog Form."

"The Hell I can't!"

Berith summons forth powerful magic. Shadows swirl beneath Bael's feet and wrap around him like angry squids. The shadows rapidly engulf Bael's body and pin his arms and legs in place.

Berith vanishes.

Five copies of her body appear in various shadows around the room. The demoness pounces toward Bael from every direction and summons warhammers in each clone's grasp.

Wham! Wham! Wham!

She brings the hammer down, literally, and batters Bael from every direction. Despite being a master of skullduggery, her incredible strength proves she hasn't slacked off. She hammers Bael with everything she's got, but all the while, Bael takes her attacks without complaint.

For over a minute, Bael stands idly as Berith unleashes her full fury upon him. "DIE! DIE! DIE DIE DIE DIEDIEDIE!!!"

Finally, Berith sags to her knees. Her clones disperse. Her shadow-bindings fall away. She gasps for breath, her strength spent. "Im... impossible... I hit you... with..."

"Good try," Bael mutters. "Damn. I thought about throwing the battle to give you a win. I thought you'd at least be able to hurt me..."

Satan shakes his head and chuckles. "Hehe... Bloody Hell, Bael, you're a fucking monster."

Lucifer stares at the Duke of Pain for a few moments, then turns away. "That, he is. I can't beat him, and I doubt you can either. I suppose it's our loss, then?"

Satan frowns. "Yes, I suppose so."

With a sigh, he turns and walks away, leaving the two female Emperors with Bael and the rest of the demons. Several grunts and Lords run over and whack Bael on the back. "Hahaha! You're the best, Bael!

Nobody can stand up to you!!"

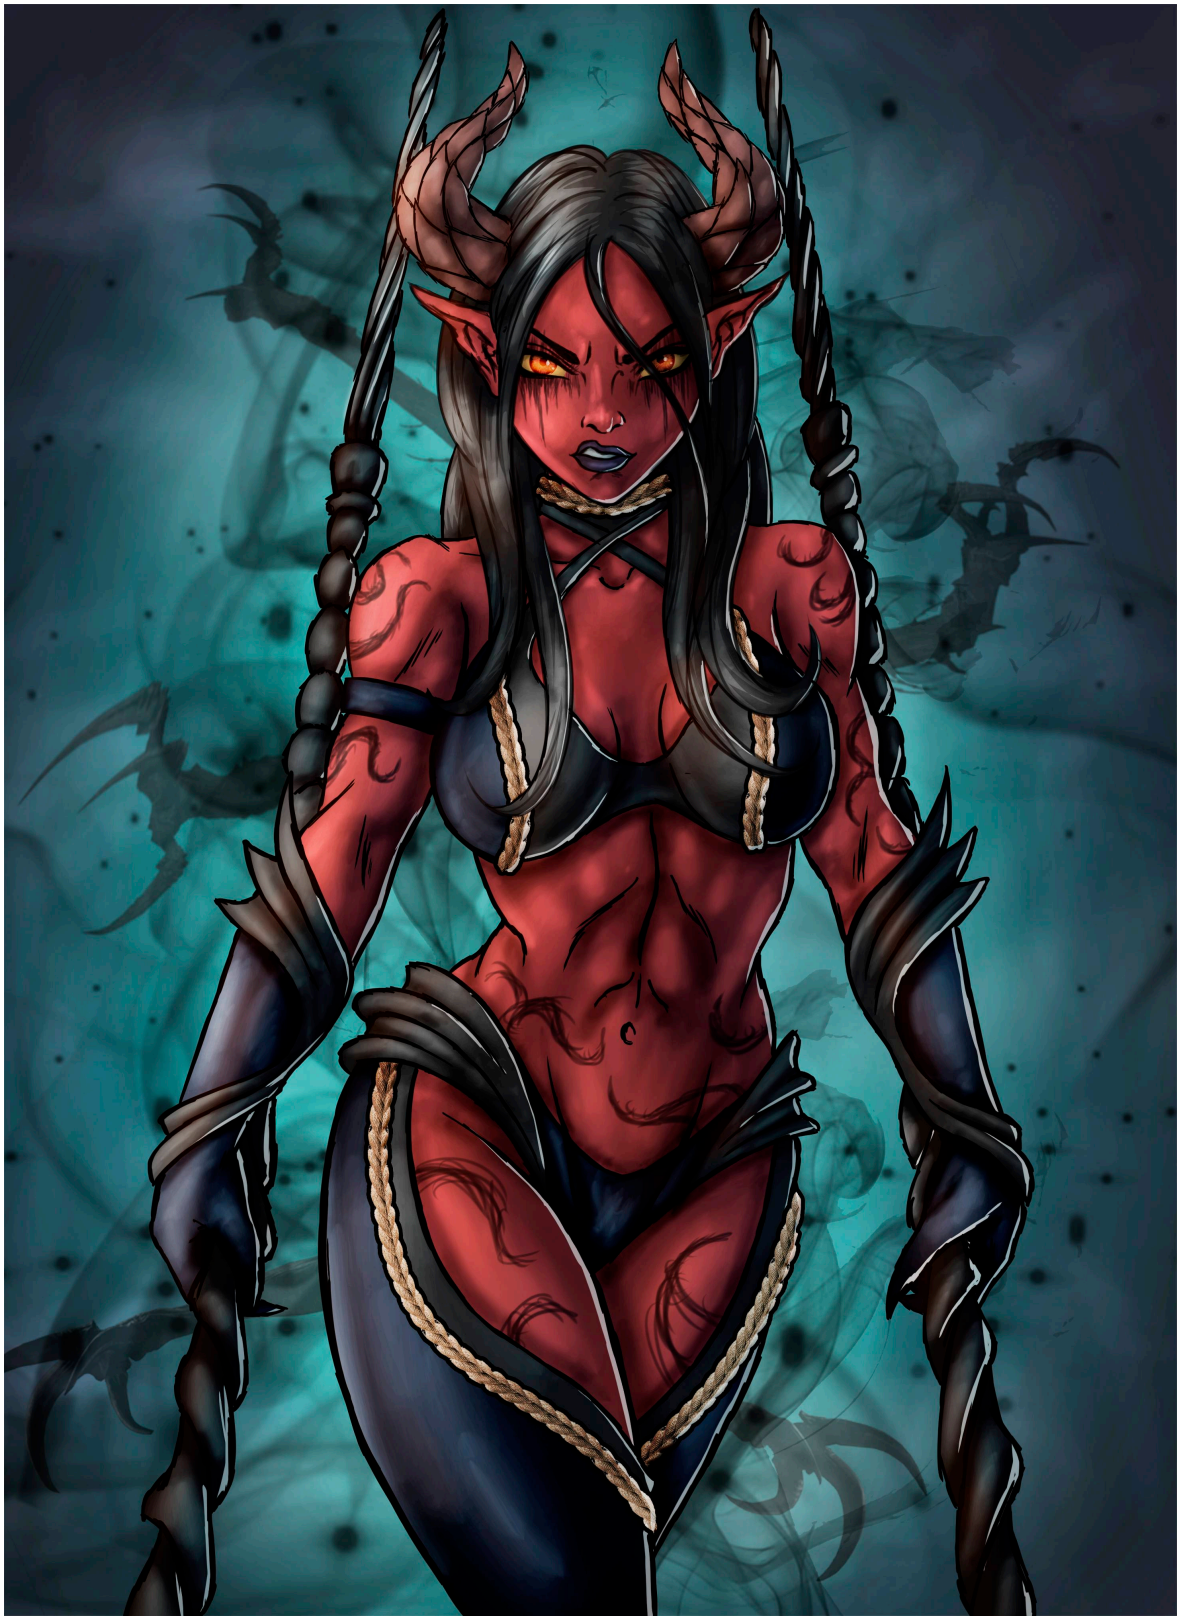
"Yup. That's the problem," Bael says. "Ugh. I have a headache."

Berith stares at Bael. After several long, drawn-out seconds, she clambers to her feet. "This isn't over, Duke of Pain. If you're unwilling to lead, someone has to step up. I don't care what your opinion is... the demons must survive. If we fall under the might of angelkind, I'll haunt you from the grave for all eternity."

Bael nods. "I wouldn't have it any other way."

Author Note:

This is Berith.



This is Shax and Murmur.

MUR
MUR
THE CRYOPOD
TO HELL and STAX
MINTX
STUDIOS

Part 139: Crouching Artisan; Hidden Voyeur

After the messy confrontation with his fellow Emperors, Satan slips away to his private chambers. Solomon and I follow after him, and the Archangels come along for the ride as well.

"It seems Satan's having some issues," I say, as I try and make small talk.

"Indeed. The snake's greed returned to bite him in the heel," Solomon replies. "In the beginning, Satan wanted power at any cost. Only after losing two thousand years with his lover did the Devil realize such ways were self-destructive. In the end, one must reap what they've sown."

I shoot a glance at Solomon. His face betrays no emotion, but a question appears in my mind.

Wise words, or empty platitudes?

Solomon is the Knowledge-Seeker. However, that doesn't mean he's right about everything. What he sees as a greedy power-play by Satan could also be interpreted as his way of protecting his ass. After all, in the beginning, Satan possessed no special abilities, unlike Lucifer and the others. He was vulnerable to the machinations of his fellow demons.

Tricking the others might not have been the polite way to go about securing his safety, but he didn't use his power to hurt them, either. He only prevented them from spreading his guts all over the floor. Later, he found out about the side-effects of his Blood Contracts, and sought to have other demons sign his scrolls. But, despite that choice, he didn't murder them and take their abilities. If anything, I'd say Satan's use of his Blood Contracts was... resourceful? He turned dead demons into power for himself. He recycled their souls into magical abilities for himself. After all, if a demon died, their power would be lost forever, but inside of Satan, they would still be able to fight for their people. I'm sure there were many human generals who'd have offered their lives for the good of humanity if they could accomplish something similar.

Honestly, when I put Satan's actions in practical terms, it's hard to find fault with him. He may have been self-serving, but compared to what the angels did to the demons, he's a friggin' saint.

* * *

Satan enters his chamber. We follow behind him, and the first thing I notice is the lavish bed placed against the opposite wall. Tiger and bearskins line the floor and provide cover for the cozy-looking leather mattress. Their soft fur appears comfortable and inviting. A few candles in each of the corners light up the room, but what catches my attention next startles me.

Dozens of little wooden animals, carved with love and care, sit on pedestals, in holes cut into the walls, and atop the bed's headboard. The nearest one, a roaring tiger pawing at the sky, features etchings for the tiger's stripes, and each of his tiny little individual claws stands apart from the others. Even without any paint adding color to the five-inch animal, I can make out intricate details that would cause a seasoned artisan to blush.

My eyes flick to the bed. Belial, wearing as little as ever, sprawls out on the covers. Her knife-fingers rapidly whittle and cut apart a chunk of wood in her hand as she molds it into the shape of an eagle.

Satan barely acknowledges her presence. He sighs as he enters the room, walks over, and plunks his butt on the corner of the bed. "Haah..."

Belial pauses to stare at him. She smiles cheerfully, but a hint of worry creeps into her voice. "Welcome back, lover! How was your day?"

Satan shrugs. "The same as ever. Hey, I thought I told you not to trim your sticks on the bed. You're getting wood chips everywhere."

"...Yeah. Sorry. I was just so busy daydreaming about what it would be like to fly. I forgot what I was doing!"

Belial's voice perks up, but her tone sounds forced.

I watch Belial's luminous red eyes. She stares at Satan's back, only to follow his gaze behind me, to the corner at the right of the entrance. I mimic her and flinch in surprise as I spot a massive crystal resting against the wall. The transparent gemstone, with its appearance of a gigantic diamond, holds a curious sight.

Nerissa's body.

The succubus, still deceased, rests inside the crystal. Despite how she skewered herself with an icicle, her figure appears to be in perfect condition — Belial's handiwork, most likely. Based on the faded color of her skin, she's as lifeless as the last time I saw her.

Satan stares at Nerissa's pale, nude body for several long seconds.

"I..."

Belial perks up. "Hmm?"

Satan shakes his head. "Never mind."

An awkward silence follows.

Belial watches the back of Satan's head, then nods, almost as if she's made up her mind about something. She drops her carving on the bed, reverts her knife-fingers to normal, and slinks up behind Satan. The succubus wraps her arms around him and nibbles on his ear. "Heyyy, what's wrong, love? Did something happen?"

Satan exhales. "Well... yes and no. Some drama involving Lucifer. She won't get off my back again."

"Uh-huh. What else?"

Belial pokes Satan further. As she kneads his shoulders, Satan's hardened heart weakens.

"...I finished the last Blood Contract today."

"Ooh!" Belial's eyes sparkle with delight. "That's wonderful news!"

Satan licks his lips. "Right. I finally cleared the last Soul Contract. But... I... I didn't find another demon like Valac. Nobody else possessed similar abilities to him."

Belial's fingers slow to a crawl. "You mean... another Reanimator-type?"

"Mmm."

Belial sags against Satan's body. She rests her chin on his shoulder and stares ahead at her sister's body. A look of defeat passes over her face. "I told you it was pointless. You have to let go of the past, Satan. Nerissa died. She can't come back."

Satan's lip trembles. "But..."

"I know you loved her," Belial whispers. "I did, too. I still do. It doesn't matter. The past is the past. My sister would want you to move on. She'd want you to be happy."

Satan lowers his gaze to the floor. "But... without her..."

With an exasperated sigh, Belial pulls away from Satan and flops back on the bed. "...Satan, I don't know what to say. I'm trying my best, you know. I'm trying to carry out my sister's wishes... but you're making things hard on me."

Satan turns his head to stare at the succubus. "What do you want from me, Belial? Do you want me to give up on Nerissa? Would you prefer for me to stop looking for a way to save her? If Valac can bring back the dead, then that means it must be possible for someone else to do it, too. I can't give up until I've exhausted every possibility."

Belial purses her lips. "You checked the powers of everyone who signed your Blood Contracts. Even if you intend to continue searching for a reanimator.. you could look for centuries and still not find one as talented as Valac. What then? Will you continue chasing after a dream forever? Will you forsake the rest of us?"

Satan averts his gaze. He twiddles his thumbs for a moment before replying. "It's just... I screwed up everything, you know? Because of me, Valac enslaved and tortured Nerissa. She suffered because I wasn't there to protect her. Not only that, but I screwed things up when I returned. I killed Valac and upset the balance of power. Even if I don't regret killing him on principle, my actions screwed up the world again. My contracts nearly got everyone killed."

Satan hesitates for a moment.

"Everything I touch falls apart. I'm a failure as a demon... and as a leader, too. If I can bring Nerissa back... if I can fix one thing without ruining something else..."

Satan falls silent.

Belial mirrors him.

The succubus flops back on her pillow and stares up at the ceiling.

A minute passes. Two. Three.

"You're not a failure, Satan," Belial says. "Nerissa was nearly as powerful as Lucifer. She knew how to handle herself. You shouldn't place the onus on yourself, as if it were your job to protect her. Raphael tortured you in the Cosmic Realm. Should Nerissa have blamed herself for not saving you?"

Satan shifts his sitting position slightly. "Of course not. I was the pants in the relationship. It was my job to protect her."

Belial appears unconvinced. "I thought you said you didn't even know how Valac died? How could you have protected Nerissa if you weren't a match for the Grim Reaper? Bael did most of the heavy lifting during your battle, assuming you were telling the truth."

Sweat slides down Satan's neck. "Ah... yeah. I suppose you're right."

He swallows audibly. "Dwelling on my actions won't change anything. What matters is the future. I can't afford to lose focus."

The Devil's expression turns grim, but Belial licks her lips playfully.

While Satan broods in silence, Belial slowly stretches her arm across the bed and begins climbing his back with her fingers. "You've had a long day, love. Come to bed. Now that you've scrubbed all those pesky contracts, I think it's time for a celebration. Don't you?"

Satan flicks his gaze toward Belial. "Hm?"

The succubus nestles against the bed and presses her body against the tigerskin covers seductively. "Come on. I'm ready and waiting."

"I don't know what you see in me," Satan says with a sigh.

"A moderately attractive demon, one my sister loved deeply. If Nerissa cared about you as much as she said, then I'd like to pick up where she left off. Isn't that good enough?"

Satan raises an eyebrow. "What, so you only like me out of duty? Am I just an obligation for you?"

Belial wriggles uncomfortably. "Ohhh, you always do this to me! Stop asking questions, you turd. Get over here and treat me like a woman already. I'm a succubus. I need relief!"

For the first time since he arrived, Satan smiles. "Well, if it's like that... I wouldn't want to shirk my duty, either. If you need a good plowing..."

"Good grief," Belial replies, rolling her eyes. "You really know how to charm a lady."

"Sorry, sorry," Satan says, as his smile expands into a grin. He slides across the bed with his Vectors and plops beside Belial. "I'll stop moping around."

Satan leans forward to kiss Belial, but as he wraps his arms around her and pulls her close, she pulls away for a moment.

"Wait. Tell me you love me."

"Pardon?"

"You heard me. Do it."

Satan's expression turns to one of confusion. "I, err, why? I mean... you and I... we're only..."

"We sleep together every night," Belial says. "Do you want me around or not?"

"You're sending mixed signals," Satan says. "Weren't we just about to...?"

"We are still, but I want an answer first," Belial says. Her face turns stern. Despite Satan's arms pressing her soft, voluptuous body against his, she keeps her head several inches away so she can gaze into his eyes. "What am I to you?"

The Devil doesn't pull away. His eyes meet hers. They stare at each other in a way that makes me feel uncomfortable watching them as an outside observer. This moment is supposed to be private, something I shouldn't see. Nevertheless, I can't look away.

Satan's voice catches. "I... well... if something were to happen to you... I'd feel the same way I did when I lost Nerissa."

"So, you feel the same way about me as you did her?"

"No. Our relationship is... it's different. You've been there for me, despite everything that's happened. You and Nerissa couldn't be more different... but... at the same time..."

Belial bats her eyes.

"Alright. You don't have to say anything else. I know I'm acting difficult. Now that you've finished your work on the contracts... I wanted to gauge where our relationship was."

Belial leans her head forward and nestles it under Satan's chin.

"What if you... you do bring my sister back? Will you... leave me... for her?"

Satan chuckles wryly.

"Heh."

The Devil shakes his head.

"Not a chance. There's room in my heart for both of you. I'll never abandon anyone ever again. Not you, not Nerissa... nobody."

Like a dam bursting under pressure, Belial pulls her head back and beams sunshine at Satan. "Oh, gosh! You're making me blush!! Put out the lights already, you big dope."

Satan snorts. "I'm on it."

The Devil snaps his fingers, and the candles in the corners extinguish. The room turns pitch-black, and both of them begin to giggle like children. The serious mood melts away far faster than I expected, and within a minute or two, the sounds of grunting and moaning begin to fill the room.

I look away and nudge Solomon. "Alright. I think I've, err, seen enough."

Solomon turns and stares me right in the eye.

"No. Wait for it."

"Uhh... wait for... wait for what? I'm pretty sure I don't need to see what comes next."

Solomon nods. "Yes. You do."

He returns to gazing at the bed in the darkness. Belial's moans increase in intensity. "Oh, devils! Yes! I love your Vectors! Put one in my- ahhnn!"

Nervously, I flick my gaze between the bed and Solomon's glowing figure. As the two demons build to a crescendo, a jarring realization hits me like a bullet through the brain.

Solomon is a fucking voyeur.

Son of a bitch. All his past actions make sense now. He used to watch Phoebe and me from his Crown until I stuffed him in the magical drawer beside our bed. Thanks to the Crown's infinite storage capacity, Solomon can rewatch the hottest hits from anyone's memories over and over.

Not to mention even when I stuffed the Crown in a sealed dresser drawer, Solomon continued to download my private memories when I put the crown on the next day.

Solomon, you sick son of a-

"I'm not a voyeur," Solomon says, as he reads my thoughts. "Stop letting your imagination run wild. You're starting to creep me out."

"Me, creep YOU out?! We're literally watching two demons-"

"I'm not here to enjoy the show," Solomon says, cutting me off. "I'm here so we can observe a turning point in Satan's life. Ah, speaking of the devil. She's here."

As Satan goes in for a particularly deep thrust, a female voice, one not belonging to Belial, speaks in the darkness.

"Am I interrupting anything?"

Satan and Belial stop mid-thrust and yelp in surprise.

"What the- who's peeping?! This room is private, you filthy-"

The Devil snaps his fingers to ignite the candles in the room, revealing himself and Belial buck-naked, both of them drenched in sweat and... other fluids.

At the foot of their bed, a familiar demoness, dressed all in black, stands quietly and stares at them. Her onyx-colored eyes gaze at the two lovers from beneath her hood. She rests her arms on her hips and stares at Satan and Belial with a judgmental attitude.

"I'm sooo sorry to interrupt," Berith says, sarcasm hissing through her teeth. "Something urgent came up. I need to speak to you."

Belial blushes. "If you wanted to join us, you could have just asked. I'm fine with threesomes."

Berith's expression flattens. "...I'd sooner cast myself into a roaring volcano."

Satan's jaw drops as he glares at the shadow-walker. "Cripes, Berith! You could have waited until the morning!"

Berith cocks her head. "Hm. Probably. Oh, well. I'm here now, so let's get right to the point. I wish to speak to you about becoming the First Emperor."

"Huh?" Satan blinks in surprise. "I'm not even interested. You can have the title if you want it."

Berith hisses. "I wasn't offering you the position, you damned dolt. I want it myself. I came here to ask for your support. I can muster the backing of many of Valac's former demons, but Lucifer's minions don't respect me. However, a noteworthy portion of her followers admires you. If I were to receive your endorsement, I would have the backing needed to take control of demonkind."

Belial crosses her arms over her exposed breasts. "Sheesh. You could try asking a little nicer."

Berith snarls at her. "Quiet, succubus whore. The grown-ups are talking."

"Whoa! Whoa!" Satan pounces out of bed, aided by his Vectors. He lands on the floor and raises to his full height, two inches shorter than the Emperor of Backstabbing. "Don't you dare speak to my girl like that! First, you barged in on us, then you insulted us, and now you expect me to do you a solid? I'm not one to smack a bitch, but you're pushing your luck."

Berith's upper lip curls in disgust. "You worry too much about pretty words. That's what I hate about the people on Lucifer's side. You're all soft and weak, not like Valac."

Satan's temper starts to flare, but Berith holds up a finger.

"I didn't come here to ask without giving something of equal value in return. I need your endorsement to become First Emperor. Tell me what you want, and I will find some way to give you whatever you need. An equal trade."

Satan stares at Berith for several seconds. Then, he lowers his Vectors and begins to chuckle.

"Hehe... you... you want to... to give me something? Hehehe... that's funny. You're funny. I never took you for a jokester."

Berith doesn't smile. "I'm dead serious."

Satan snorts. He gestures toward Nerissa's crystal in the corner. "Fine. Fine. If you want my support, then help me bring Nerissa back. If you can do that, I'll vouch for you. If you can't, then piss off. I ain't giving you anything but a knuckle sandwich, otherwise."

Belial punches her palm. "Yeah! What he said!"

Berith lowers her pitch-black eyes. She stares at Satan contemplatively as she searches her mind for an answer.

"Mmm. I worked alongside Valac on many occasions. I know many of the intricacies of his powers. One thing is for certain; the only way to bring someone back from the dead is if you were to somehow come into possession of their soul. Valac's lantern served as his receptacle for souls. If, during Nerissa's death, you somehow happened to obtain her soul before it entered the Great Beyond..."

Berith trails off. She stares at Satan, as if waiting for an answer.

Satan returns her gaze. "Huh? So, are you saying I can't bring my girl back unless I have her soul? There's no other way?"

Berith shakes her head. "Valac was quite clear about that. He would often take the souls of those he disliked and place them in the bodies of their enemies. A peculiar past-time, but one of the few hobbies from which he drew pleasure. As long as you have a person's soul, you might be able to bring them back. Since you have Nerissa's body, you already have half of the components needed to return her to the realm of the living."

Berith splays her fingers out and makes a sweeping gesture with her hands. "However, based on your expression, I assume you've nothing left of her soul."

Satan shakes his head slowly. "No... I don't. Son of a... are you kidding? That's it? She's gone? For good?!"

Berith shrugs. "Most likely. In any case, since I cannot help you bring the ice queen back, perhaps there is something else I could do to obtain your support?"

Despite how effortlessly the shadow-walker switches topics back to herself and what she wants, Satan's eyes glaze over. He falls back onto the bed and stares at Nerissa's crystal numbly.

"Gone... for good..."

Belial stares at Satan's back.

"Lover..."

Satan's shoulders sag as thoughts run through his head. When Samael speaks inside the Devil's mind, I hear the Archangel's voice, projected via Solomon's Crown.

Satan. I'm sure thou knoweth this already, but it bears mentioning. Ye signed a Blood Contract with the ice succubus. I have seen its form in thy mind. However, when she died, her soul did not appear in thy grasp like the others who signed. I know not why this is the case, but some treachery was surely at work.

Satan nods, but he doesn't reply. Speaking to Samael in front of others must still be a no-no for him.

Samael continues. "However... perhaps, given how thou tooketh the souls of Titans after crushing their heads, such a brutal action might bear results. Shoulds't ye remove the crystal protecting her body, ye might be able to crush Nerissa's head and obtain her soul. I believe it is a course of action worth attempting."

Satan slides his hand up his chest and presses it against his heart. His eyes waver slightly.

"Yeah... that... that might work..."

Berith hisses at Satan. "Kss. What are you babbling about now? Are you going to answer my question, or am I wasting my time, here? Surely, there must be something I can do to-"

Suddenly, Satan jumps to his feet. His sudden movement surprises Berith and makes her pause.

"Quiet," Satan mutters. "Belial. I've... I've just thought of something. I can take the souls of anyone's head I crush. I'm going to... to try it on Nerissa."

His words, slow and measured, make Belial blink in surprise. "You're going to... TO WHAT?!"

"You heard me. I'm going to crush your sister's head. Once I have her soul, I can revive her."

Belial balks.

"No way! Satan, that's awful! What are you thinking?!"

Satan wets his lips. He flicks his gaze toward Berith for a moment, then turns to face Belial. "I would never consider it under any other circumstance. However, if Berith is right, then once we have her soul, we can-"

"We can't do anything!" Belial yells. She jumps to her feet and stands in the middle of the bed. "Have you forgotten?? We don't have a way to revive my sister, even if you do obtain her soul! No, more importantly, if you take such an extreme measure, I can't heal her body afterward! My powers won't allow me to regenerate brain damage!"

Satan's jaw slackens. "They won't?"

"I've told you this before! Sweet mercy, I can't believe you'd even consider doing something so horrible to my sister! I'd rather bury and leave her to rest in peace than defile her in such a manner."

Satan's excitement disappears. "Oh. So... so it's like that, then."

The Devil sighs long and hard. His breath comes out in a drawn-out gasp for pity. "Aaooo... fuck. I thought, for a moment, we might've had something... some way..."

* * *

Berith's gaze flicks between both demons. After several seconds, she crosses her arms. "I've played all my cards, and they weren't good enough. Well, don't say I never did anything for you. If you decide to support me, my offer still stands. I must become the First Emperor. Our people need to take decisive action against the angels, once and for all."

The demoness's words ring hollow in Satan's ears. He barely acknowledges anything she says. "Yeah... people... angels... uh-huh..."

With a groan, Berith turns on her heel. "Tch. Not even a word of thanks. Such is the way of pond-suckers and low-intellect louts."

She turns to walk toward the door, but Satan raises his head. "Wait. Hold on. Berith!"

Berith pauses. She doesn't turn to look at Satan. "What."

"There's... there's no other way? Nothing at all? Surely, there must be something we can do! There has to be a way to bring Nerissa back!"

Silence ensues.

Berith stares outside of the room for several, long, agonizing seconds.

"Devils. To think you're still this persistent. Calling you 'clingy' would hardly be the start of an adequate insult. Though... now that I think about it..."

Berith turns to look at Satan. She taps her finger against her lips, swirling the smoky dark energy surrounding her face in circles. "Hmm. Valac mentioned something, once. A theory. He told me it wasn't more than a hunch, and he never bothered to investigate it."

Satan leans forward. "What was it? What theory?"

His eyes widen as he breathlessly awaits Berith's next words.

"Hmm. Well, as I said before, Valac captured souls via his scythe and stored them inside his lantern. In your case, it seems crushing someone's head will give you their soul. However, if either of you should miss your chance, the soul would travel to the Great Beyond. Once there, reclaiming it would be virtually impossible."

Belial, still standing on the bed, stiffens at Berith's words. "V-virtually? So... you're saying there's a chance...?"

"Possibly. However, Valac said it would take a monumental amount of mana to reclaim a lost soul from the Great Beyond. I believe the phrase he used was, 'More than all of demonkind, angelkind, and Titankind's collective mana reserves combined.' So, it would be essentially impossible."

Berith watches Satan's face as she speaks. When a look of realization and hopelessness hits him, the shadow-walker chuckles wryly.

"What's the matter? Not what you wanted to hear? Has reality set in, yet, or are you going to continue fantasizing about that succubus for the rest of eternity?"

Satan scowls at her. "That's my business, not yours. Shit. I still had a sliver of hope before... but now... you've taken even that away from me."

"Hahaha!" Berith cackles. "Well, you haven't done me any favors either, Satan. Let me know when you're ready to talk business. Otherwise, I'll pretend this embarrassing conversation never happened."

Berith's lips curl upward in disgust. After a moment, she spins on her heel and storms out of the room, leaving Satan and Belial alone with their thoughts.

* * *

Satan presses his face against his hands. "Dammit... damn. Damn, damn, damn. That fucking... stupid... shadow-walking piece of..."

Belial drops to her knees and slides across the bed. She wraps her arms around Satan and presses herself against his back. "...I'm sorry, love. I thought after our discussion earlier that things would improve, but now..."

Grief takes Satan. His chest shakes as he tries to stop himself from sobbing. He presses his hands against his eyes. "Chrrr... it's useless after all! I can't do anything!! I failed again... I failed her..."

Belial stays quiet. She gives Satan a minute to release his anger and sadness. He chokes and coughs as raw emotions come boiling to the surface.

"Not fair... not fair... it's just not..."

Satan pauses.

He sniffles for a moment, then wipes his arm across his face.

"No... wait... it can't be. Was this... what I needed?"

Satan raises his head. He stares at Nerissa's crystal for several seconds. His breath catches.

"Son of a broodmother. Why didn't I think of it sooner?"

Belial pulls away from him. "Huh? What are you talking about?"

Satan's lip trembles. He rises to his feet and turns to point at Belial. "Put your clothes on. We're going to take a long walk. I just remembered... there's someone who might be able to help us."

Belial cocks her head. "I... don't follow. Do you mean... Valac?"

The corners of Satan's mouth tighten. He forces a smile and shakes his head. "Haha... no. Someone far, far more powerful than that boney bastard. Our progenitor. The one who gave demons their power."

Belial's eyes widen. "But... but I thought you said-"

"We weren't supposed to return there? I wanted to keep his existence a secret? That was in the past. Times have changed. If there's even a sliver of hope he can help us..."

Samael speaks. "Satan. Who is this 'progenitor' you speak of?"

The Devil's grin widens. As the candlelight flickers against his face, his expression says it all.

"You'll find out, soon. I believe he's an acquaintance of yours."

Belial cocks her head. "Are you talking to your head-friend again?"

"I am," Satan replies. "He wants to know who our progenitor is. Let's keep it a secret, for now."

Belial nods. She slides off the bed and reaches for her tigerskin underwear. "Well, alright. If you insist."

Satan's Vectors snatch his deerskin pants and shirt off the floor.

"I do."

While the two demons dress themselves, a strange feeling boils in my stomach.

Worry.

Satan and Belial intend to visit Leviathan, the dark dragon who granted his power to their people. The last time they saw him, he incited an uprising and genocide.

Somehow, I think their second visit will turn out even worse than the first.

Solomon closes his eyes. He motions with his hands, and the world around us fades to black.

"We've almost arrived," the Ancient King murmurs.

He opens his eyes, and his hands tremble noticeably.

"The War in Heaven."

Part 140: Enter the Dragon (Part 1)

Solomon, the Archangels, and I, all appear behind Satan and Belial at the base of Leviathan's mountain, not far from the entrance to his cave. Satan uses four of his Vectors to levitate slightly off the ground, and the other four to suspend Nerissa's crystallized body a few feet in front of him.

The two demons trudge up the mountain across a trail worn down over time by various creatures. They stomp through or shove aside any debris and walk single-file along the narrow pathway. Neither of them says a word as they approach the entrance to Leviathan's cave.

When they arrive, Satan and Belial pause at the maw of the deep, dark grotto. The succubus shivers. "Ugh... do we have to go inside?"

Satan nods. "He's our best hope for bringing your sister back. We have to try."

Belial rubs her arm. "Lover... I don't think... I mean, don't you worry you've become obsessed? Bringing Nerissa back would be nice, but there are other important things in life, too."

"I'm not obsessed."

Satan's words ring hollow. Belial shakes her head. "You say that, but evidence points to the contrary..."

The Devil turns to smile at Belial. He reaches out and squeezes her shoulder. "Tell you what. If... if we go in there... and he can't bring Nerissa back... if nothing comes of today's events, then..."

"Then?"

Belial watches Satan expectantly. Her skeptical gaze makes him look away.

"Then... we'll bury her together. We'll give Nerissa a proper send-off."

Belial's jaw slackens. "Really? Do you mean that?"

Satan hesitates, but only for a moment.

"I... do."

The succubus smiles. She leans forward and gives him a peck on the cheek. "Alright! I know you'll keep your word."

Satan nods. "That's my demon creed, after all."

* * *

The two lovers enter the cave. Satan creates a fireball in his palm to light the path ahead. Solomon and I follow along behind them, and the angels behind us.

Raphael clears his throat. "Hrmph. The dragon's energy is quite foreboding. Watching the vision from a distance is quite different from participating in it personally."

I glance back at him. "You didn't see the same things I did during earlier visions?"

Solomon answers, instead of Raphael. "Not quite. The Archangels and I acted as passive observers until now. I didn't think Raphael would enjoy munching bugs as an imp, let alone slaughtering his fellow angels in the body of a demon."

"What?!" I balk. "Do you think I enjoyed eating bugs? You jackass! I can still taste their wriggling feet on my tongue!"

Solomon smirks. "A young man like you should seek out new things to experience. They will expand your horizons."

I roll my eyes. "You just enjoy grossing me out."

"Yes, that was certainly a factor."

Solomon's smile turns smug. We continue following the demons, and Samael speaks in Satan's mind as well as mine.

"Satan. I feel uneasy. The energy radiating ahead of us is... ominous. I sense unbelievable levels of mana emitting from the depths of this chamber. Where are we going? Who is this 'progenitor' thou dost believe possesses answers for thy questions?"

Satan stays quiet for a moment.

"You will see. It's a surprise."

Belial flicks her eyes to Satan. "Hm? What did you say?"

"Nothing. I'm talking to my 'head-friend' again."

"Mmm. That errant soul?"

Satan nods. "Aye. I think he's starting to sweat."

Belial nods. "I am, too. You feel it, don't you? When we last visited, my senses weren't nearly as attuned to mana as they are now. The energy in this cave presses against my chest like a boulder."

I look at Solomon. "If the demons and Archangels can sense Leviathan's mana, why can't I?"

Solomon purses his lips. "Mana is a complex force in the universe, like that of gravity. The more mana you possess, the more sensitive you become to its permutations. You control a decent amount, Jason, but you've yet to attune yourself to its intricacies. Perhaps after the visions, we can work on some exercises to improve your sensitivity."

I crinkle my nose. "My... sensitivity?"

"Don't be vulgar."

"Hey, man. Your words, not mine."

Behind us, for the first time since he began following me around, Gabriel speaks to Raphael. "Brother, am I correct in assuming that, due to thy memory erasures, Samael was unable to deduce he was approaching a dragon?"

Raphael nods. "Aye. Had I ever approached this wretched cave, I would have sensed Leviathan's power instantly. Our brother did not know of the dragon's existence, so he was unable to identify its source."

I turn back to look at Gabriel and Raphael. Once again, Gabriel's head sticks up through the ceiling, preventing me from seeing the expression on his face. His shoulders sag slightly. "Unfortunate. Perhaps

'twas better he didn't know. The last dragon is a frightening specter of evil."

Raphael grits his teeth. "If only thou fully understood the truth of that statement."

Raphael and Solomon, the only beings who possess knowledge of the Primordial Era, wear looks of agitation on their faces. Raphael, especially, sweats bullets the closer we draw to Leviathan's inner chambers.

"Hey, lover," Belial says, speaking out of the blue. "You know, I've been thinking about something a lot recently. And, umm..."

She trails off, unsure how to phrase the issue on her mind.

Satan glances at her. "What's the matter, Belial?"

"Mmm. That. Right there. I hate my name."

Belial shakes her head disapprovingly.

"It's not cute. It's the name Mother gave me, and I think it's gross."

Satan raises an eyebrow. "Seems like a random thing for you to get all worked up over. It's just a name. I think it fits you well."

Belial glowers at him. She puffs her cheeks out in frustration. "No, it doesn't! It's guttural and icky! Besides, despite being together for a while, you never call me by a cute nickname. Why can't you warm up to me a little bit?"

"Huh? A nickname? What the Devil are you on about?"

Belial crosses her arms. "I call you 'lover,' but you still call me Belial. Don't you have a romantic bone in your body? You're supposed to think of something cute and flowery that represents me!"

A look of dumbfoundedness stretches across Satan's face. "Cute? Flowery? But you're stronger than Bael! How... how am I supposed to...?"

Belial's scowl deepens. "Okay, fine. I see how it is."

Her tone shift makes Satan's heart skip a beat. "Ah... alright, alright. Sheesh, woman. I'll, uh, think of something. Eventually. I guess?"

Belial's tail twitches around like a cat's. It jerks to the left and the right erratically, exposing her annoyance. She turns away from him and closes off her body language. "Do what you want."

As Satan stares at her, bewildered, Samael bubbles in his mind. "The ways of females are unpredictable. Do not worry thyself, Satan. She has laid bare her heart in the hopes that thou shalt listen. Dwell on her words, and an answer will form itself."

Satan rolls his eyes. "Helpful."

Belial ignores him talking to himself. She gazes ahead, preoccupied with some thoughts in her mind.

Samael speaks again, his words more measured. "Demonkind is a fascinating species. Once, I thought all of thy people were little more than animals incapable of rationality. When I look at specimens such as this succubus, I realize I was incorrect. Thy people are a complex, thoughtful species not unlike mine."

"Mmm."

Satan doesn't reply to Samael's words. He merely nods and continues walking toward the deepest parts of the cave.

"I do wonder, Satan, if lying to thy mate is the correct course of action. Telling her thou possesseth an Archangel's soul is unlikely to cause the grief ye expect."

Satan squeezes his left hand into a fist. "You know why I can't do that."

"I do. However, Belial is not like the other demons. She will not judge thee in the way they might. She will not think thou art possessed. I believe she would even be willing to converse with my brethren."

Satan swallows saliva to wet his drying throat. "For the sake of peace?"

"Aye. Peace between angels and demons. 'Tis possible. I know thou hath considered it... even if only once or twice. Thou hath muddied the waters once before, but, sincerely, I believe-"

"Won't happen," Satan says, cutting Samael off. "Hell, it can't happen. Too much blood has been spilled, on both sides."

While Satan and Samael quietly argue with each other, Michael shakes his head.

"Tsk. To think my brother had fallen this far. Sympathizing with the demons... Satan's indoctrination worked wonders on his subservient slave."

Gabriel nods. "Aye. The Samael I knew would never praise demons of any sort. His death, one I once thought valiant, has been stained by seeing him in this pitiful state."

I turn to look at the two Archangels. "Samael had a change of heart. He lived among the demons for several years and got to know them better. Why assume the worst? He changed his mind after learning new things. That's what everyone should aspire toward. Right, Solomon?"

Solomon doesn't get to answer. Instead, Raphael takes the initiative. "Thy words are absurd, young hero. To think so highly of demons speaks volumes regarding thy ignorance. Demons are abominations. They devour flesh and all life in their path. Perhaps, had Solomon not focused so much on portraying them in a positive light, ye might understand this."

Solomon pauses the vision, freezing Satan and Belial in place. He whips his head back to scowl at Raphael. "I did no such thing! Do not accuse me of being a demon sympathizer."

Raphael throws his hands in the air. "Pah! Where are the visions of demons ripping apart angels and humans with their teeth and claws? Why dids't ye not show my brothers and sisters screaming out in pain, only for their voices to fall silent when demons tore their heads off?! Coddling this child will only harm him, Solomon! He must see the horrors the demons can inflict! If he continues to think they are peaceful creatures who want little more than to live in peace, he will walk a self-destructive path! He may even doom the rest of humanity to damnation!"

I waggle a finger at Raphael. "I know what horrors demons can unleash. I've heard from Belial and other demons about the ways they-"

"Not good enough!" Raphael yells, cutting me off. "Have ye gazed upon the blood flowing from their maws? The severed heads grasped between their claws? The bodies skewered on pikes and left to rot in the midday sun?! Speak not of words and descriptions, boy! I have witnessed their worst carnage with my own eyes! Compared to the atrocities I've seen-"

"That's enough," Solomon says, cutting Raphael off. "You've made your point. Let's not fight each other. We're all on the same side."

"Are we?" Gabriel asks, his voice barely a murmur. "This hero sides with demonkind over and over again. My brother has the right to question him. Thou knoweth well what happens when a hero abandons morality and sides with the demons. Thou knoweth well..."

Solomon flicks his gaze to me, then back to Gabriel. "Dracula."

Raphael stiffens. "Speak not that name before me."

A chill descends upon the group. I rub my hands together apprehensively.

"Are you serious?" I ask. "Dracula? Like, vampire-guy Dracula? He existed?"

Solomon inhales through his nose, but his breath catches. "He did."

Raphael hisses through his teeth. "Vile, putrid..."

"He was a blight on the Earth," Gabriel murmurs. His body language remains impassive, but the look in his eyes is that of disgust. "As a soul-manipulating hero, he drank the blood of innocents to increase his power. He took over their minds and turned them against us."

I blink in surprise. Solomon has never mentioned Dracula before. It never even occurred to me he might be real.

"Stupid question alert: What about Frankenstein?"

"Frankenstein was the scientist. He was a character in a fictitious story. His monster, also, did not exist. That being said, the monster was based on Lucifer's... experiments."

I nod.

"Mmm. So, what, do you think I'm going to side with demons simply because I have disagreements with you, Raphael? I don't see what's so wrong about asking questions. You keep evading me when you feel uncomfortable, yet you also expect me to trust you wholeheartedly. In case you've forgotten, I'm the last Hero. I'm Humanity's only chance to overthrow their demon oppressors. Maybe you ought to try being honest about your past, for once, rather than blaming everyone else for your failings."

Solomon sucks air through his teeth.

"Psh. Goodness."

Raphael scowls at me. Any sense of politeness between him and I vanishes.

"As I've said many times, impudent brat, thy words reek of contempt for my people. I am no fan of thy attitude, nor thy lack of sympathy for what happened to them. The demons murdered us, end of story. I keep secrets because far too many cataclysms have rocked the universe. The fact Solomon and I have gone to such great lengths to bury the past should be evidence of that."

"Or, alternate theory," I reply calmly, "You have something to hide. I don't know what, or why, which is why I don't trust you. I barely even know the three of you, now that I think about it. I've spent five years with Solomon, which hardly amounts to a slight portion of his existence, but at least I know a bit about his personality, background, and some other stuff. However, compared to him, I know little to nothing about the rest of you. Michael healed me in my time of need. You and Gabriel gave me some helpful advice. Why can't you look at things from my perspective?"

Raphael squeezes his staff tighter than usual. "I should ask the same of thee. Where is thy empathy for what happened to the angels? Where is thy understanding? Why must thou blameth us for our genocide?"

"Because your actions have consequences, Raphael. You created the imps. You stomped and kicked them around. You treated them like dirt, only to act surprised when they turned on you. You can say whatever you want about historical context and how I'm not putting myself in your shoes, but the way I see things... you're lying to yourself. The rise of demonkind was preventable, and the blame for their turn to violence lies squarely on your shoulders, as the eldest Archangel. You tried to control the dragons, you tried to control the Titans, and you tried to control the Imps. All three of them blew up in your face. If you couldn't figure out the pattern by the third attempt, then maybe you were right when you said you're not as wise as everyone says."

* * *

Silence follows.

Gabriel stands obstinately with his arms crossed. His head, still stuck through the roof of the cave, gives no hint of his emotions.

Raphael, on the other hand, stares at me stonily. The old man trembles as he clutches his staff. He doesn't blink. After a moment, he averts his eyes. His expression turns emotionless as he hardens his heart.

"Verily, thou speaketh many hurtful words, but I know what I saw. I lived through those dark times. Not a day goes by where I don't wonder what I could have done differently. The past is the past. Compared to the family I lost at the hands of the dragons and the Titans, the demons were little more than the last gasp of my failed rule."

Raphael motions toward Solomon with his free hand.

"Resume the vision. I grow wearier every minute."

Raphael doesn't look me in the eye. I can tell, just by looking at him, that my words affected him deeply.

The old man feigns ignorance, but I see the truth, now. He blames himself. He always has. However, confronting that truth and his ultimate failure as a leader is not something he's ever allowed himself to do... not until I spoke up.

I want to pity him, but I can't.

Raphael's title might denote him as the Archangel of Wisdom, but all I see is a fool who led those he loved down a path of destruction.

He fomented war and strife. He pressed his boot against the backs of those he deemed his inferiors, and in doing so, called them to action.

I won't make the same mistakes. I have to walk a different path.

Solomon stays quiet for several long, awkward seconds. Eventually, he motions with his hand, and the vision resumes. Satan and Belial continue walking forward, leaving the four of us behind.

I turn and follow after them, not wanting to be in the same space as the Archangels. Solomon follows after me. I glance at the ancient king, my advisor; my friend. His guidance changed me from a stumbling young man, uncertain of his future, into a sure-sighted hawk, capable of wielding my powers to an extent I once thought impossible. Without Solomon, humanity would be stumbling forward blindly, as would I. He ruled over one of the mightiest, most prosperous kingdoms on Ancient Earth. His crown, worn by various kings and queens long after his death, gave him further insight into how to achieve greatness on a local and planetary scale.

We need him.

I need him.

But now... I worry that I may have gone too far.

"Solomon..."

I speak his name, but pause to try and gather my thoughts.

"Don't apologize," Solomon says. "I saw your outburst coming several visions ago. You held it in, valiantly. I am disappointed, but more in myself than you. Your outlook is far different than what I expected. Perhaps I am simply an old man. I've seen many men and women succumb to power far less than what you possess, and never once did they reflect on their thoughts and actions."

Solomon continues. "Once... I held similar thoughts to you. I understand your thoughts, your actions, your questions. You are correct, in that the angels are to blame for the rise of demonkind. It is their fault, and their fault alone, that they died at the hands of their former slaves."

I blink in surprise. A slight sense of awe at Solomon's confession takes me.

"I thought..."

"That I was trying to silence you? Yes, I was. The reason I don't want you asking questions is because I already know the answers. However, I have been narrow-minded. When I challenged my misgivings and sought out the truth, a ten-year inquisition followed. I interviewed people, tortured demons, and scoured the Earth for answers. In the end, my quest for knowledge brought only pain and ruin."

I raise an eyebrow. "How so?"

Solomon purses his lips.

"Jason. The angels indeed are to blame for the rise of demonkind. Were it not for their cruelty toward their lessers, the demons might have turned out very differently. However, that does not change reality. The demons are evil. They are the ultimate force of darkness, one that you must extinguish."

Solomon's voice catches.

"I... I spoke to you once of a violent encounter involving myself and Satan. That battle was born out of my curiosity. I believed I could make peace with the demons. I believed that I and I alone possessed the knowledge and wisdom required to settle our differences and blood-debts. I thought to myself, if only I could bring peace upon the Earth, I would finally end the bloodshed and suffering forever. That, Jason, was my undoing."

I nod. "What happened?"

"I successfully brought the demons to my table. We broke bread and spoke amicably. As the day wound down, a sense of relief and giddiness took me. I had done it. I was on the verge of brokering peace between humans and demons."

"Satan had other plans," Solomon whispers. He raises his eyes to glare icy daggers at the Devil's back. "Little did I know, but the Devil had planned an ambush of unimaginable proportions. While the two of us wined and dined each other, along with his generals and my advisors, a legion of shadow-walkers crept inside the gates of Jerusalem. All at once, they cut down fifty of my children, dozens of my wives, my nephews, and nieces. In the blink of an eye, three-quarters of my family perished. I was too drunk to hear their screams."

"As I leaned forward to hand Satan a peace treaty, one he was certain to sign, the coward lunged at me. He attacked me with unexpected ferocity. His generals acted on some unheard signal and launched themselves at those present. I instantly unleashed the full might of my heroic powers when I realized I had been had, but it was too late. By the time my forces gathered to protect me, I had already suffered many deep wounds. It was only in the days that followed, when I touched the bodies of my sons and daughters, that I fully pieced together Satan's dastardly deception."

I stare at Solomon quietly.

I've known the Knowledge-Seeker for five years, but never once has he told me what happened to his family in Jerusalem. Maybe that's why he clings to his nephew, Saul, so desperately. Saul was one of the few who survived. When Solomon looks at him, he remembers those he lost and how their deaths were his fault.

Solomon's voice shakes. "I'm sorry that we... we can't tell you everything, Jason. It's easy to look upon us as liars... deceivers... and to imagine us pulling on your strings like a marionette. I can only say, with little more than my words, that I am trying to save you from the heartache that has haunted me for tens of thousands of years. The angels failed us all, but the demons are still our enemy. You mustn't forget that. Ever."

The ancient King gingerly reaches out and squeezes my shoulder. He wants to cry, but his artifact severs his most humanlike qualities, preventing him from experiencing the rawest grief imaginable.

I touch Solomon's hand. "I won't forget. But... you have to promise to let me walk the path I see fit. Satan is dead, as is Valac. The founders of demonkind are long gone. Perhaps, after a hundred thousand years, things have changed. I don't expect them to accept any of my offers with open arms... but I can't win a war against them, either. I have to be strategic."

"Strategic. Sensible, I suppose..."

Solomon trails off. He continues staring at Satan and Belial's back. As he does, I get a deeper understanding of the hatred he feels for them.

* * *

Satan reaches back and squeezes Belial's ass. She yelps in surprise and jumps away from him. "Hey! What's the big idea!"

"Just felt like it," Satan says with a grin. "Tell you what, toots. You want a nickname? I thought of a really cute one."

Belial's annoyance vanishes. Her eyes brighten instantly. "Oh! You did?! Eee! Tell me what it is! Don't keep a girl waiting!"

Satan reaches out with a Vector and presses her body against his.

"It's perfect. You're gonna love it."

"Tell me already!"

With a haughty smirk, Satan leans forward and whispers something in her ear.

Belial's expression falls flat. She pushes away from him with a scowl.

"Sugar-tits. Really? That's the best you came up with?"

Satan gawks at her. "I thought it was cute! Come on, girl! You're giving me blue balls here!"

"Yeah, and they'll stay blue for a while longer if you don't get serious. Sheesh."

Belial rolls her eyes.

"Sugar-tits. Bloody hell. It sounds like something Bael would say."

Satan's eyes widen.

"Ohh... so that's why it popped into my head so easily. Knew I'd heard it somewhere."

Belial facepalms. "...You've taken me so far out of a romantic mood that I've forgotten what it even feels like. Better luck tomorrow, lover."

Satan's eyes swivel to face forward as the two of them reach the end of the tunnel.

"Yeah. Better luck tomorrow."

Part 141: Enter the Dragon (Part 2)

Satan skitters down the steep bluff leading into the dragon's inner chamber, but his Vectors prevent him from suffering any injuries when he lands at the bottom, as they absorb the brunt of the impact. Belial follows after him, stretches out her legs, and zig-zags from left to right. She dives into a roll and jumps to her feet, using her superior strength and cat-like agility to her advantage.

Solomon and I hover to the base of the cliff. When we land, I watch as the demons freeze in place. Both of them slow their breathing as they gaze ahead into the darkness.

"Is... is he here?" Belial asks. "I don't see him."

"He's here..." Satan murmurs. "I still sense his overwhelming power..."

A shadow shifts barely fifty feet in front of us.

Leviathan's monstrously huge head, seemingly twice as big as when I last saw him, raises off the dirt and swivels to face the intruders. The dragon's white teeth sparkle in the darkness of the cave, but their appearance fills the demons with dread instead of glee.

"Hoh. Look who's come to say hello."

Leviathan's eyes shift from Satan to Belial, and back to the former again. He stares at the crystal in Satan's grasp for a moment.

"I assumed you perished at the hands of your tormentors. Why have you returned?"

Satan shakes off his nerves. With a smile, he struts forward and bows deeply.

"O-oh, great Leviathan! It is I, Satan, your loyal servant! This unworthy demon stands before you today to ask-"

"Stop."

Leviathan growls in annoyance.

"That disgusting, grandiose tone does not suit you. Speak plainly, lest I scorch your bones to ash."

Satan falters. He pauses mid-sentence, winces, and lurches back to his feet. "Right. Yeah, I knew that. Uhh... hell, I planned a whole speech and everything..."

Leviathan sighs. "Kuu... spare me. You've come to ask me for some ridiculous boon, acting as though I owed you anything more than a polite greeting. It's not often I meet someone with a death wish."

"Err... well..." Satan pales, unsure how to reply. He shoots a glimpse at Belial, who shrugs at him. "It's... okay, look. I do need a favor, alright? I know you're an all-powerful dragon. I will pay you back in any way that I can."

The dark dragon rolls his eyes. Sarcasm drips from every word. "Oh, I see. You'll owe me a favor. Your bargaining posture is highly dubious."

Satan clenches his hands into fists. "I know I don't have much to offer, dammit! Can't you hear me out?! My girl is dead. I need to bring her back. If you can do something to revive her-"

A horrible sound rips through the air, one of bone scraping across rock and soil. Leviathan rises onto his haunches, stretches out his front leg, and points a claw at Satan.

"Quiet, red rat. I care not for you, nor your brothers and sisters. I know well why you've come. When you accepted my power, you laid bare your thoughts, desires, and darkest fears. Reviving this lifeless female appears to be the sole request bubbling to the top of your feeble mind. Whatever happened to the grandiose promises you made? Where are the mountains of angel bodies now that you have reached some minor crest of power?"

Satan winces. "Hey, bub, don't be a dick. I know you've been living under a mountain, but my people have been kicking ass out there! We've killed hundreds of angels!"

Leviathan chuckles, sending flames spewing from the sides of his mouth.

"Hundreds."

He shakes his head slowly.

"There are millions of angels still alive, Satan. In the beginning, there were billions. You've made no progress since we last spoke, besides increasing your power and influence. I'm... disappointed."

Satan clenches his teeth together, then swings his finger toward the dragon.

"You ain't done anything either, dragon! Now that I can sense mana levels, I know the truth. You're way stronger than all of the angels combined! Why don't you pop out of this mountain and kill 'em yourself if you want 'em dead so bad, eh?!"

Leviathan goes quiet. He stares at Satan for several long seconds, making the Devil's bravado falter slightly.

"Do... not... test me... imp. Have you forgotten? I care little for war and violence. Such were the ways of my brothers and sisters. I sleep because I enjoy the peace and quiet of my cozy cave. My grudge against the angels is little more than a distant memory, a faint scar which occasionally awakens a smoldering of anger in my chest."

Leviathan lowers his head and moves closer to the two demons. "Perhaps I possess the power to slaughter all of the angels, and perhaps I don't. Destroying them myself doesn't interest me, and that's all that matters. As for you, if you want something, then you should know that dropping to your knees and begging for it won't be enough. I expect results. If you can't give me something of equivalent value, I would never consider helping you."

Satan winces at the dragon's verbal barrage. "What do you mean? All I want is for you to bring my girl back! I know it's probably not the easiest thing in the world, but surely-"

"Do not patronize me when you have so little knowledge of the universe," Leviathan hisses. A flash of rage passes across his face. Flames belch from the corners of his mouth. "Fool. Once someone dies, their soul enters the Great Beyond. If you had captured hers before it fled, I could have revived her with ease. Instead, you brought me nothing but her lifeless husk. The only way to revive this female would be via the usage of Equivalent Exchange, and there's no possibility I'd waste my life on some trifle for your amusement."

Satan stares at the dragon for a few moments in silence.

"You... you mean... you'd have to..."

"To give my life for your mate's, yes. Hah! Imagine that! A mighty dragon, the last in the universe, wasting his life on some frail mortal! There's only one reason I'd do such a thing, and you've proven it's beyond your power to achieve."

Belial clears her throat. When she speaks, her voice cracks. "O-only one reason... and... what would that be?"

Leviathan snorts. "Slaughtering all of the angels, as I originally ordered. The Cherubs, the Seraphs, and the Archangels, too. A task far beyond what the whole of your species could ever accomplish."

Satan and Belial stare, bewildered, at Leviathan's smirking face.

"You're... joking... right?" Satan asks. "To bring back Nerissa, you want me to kill all the angels?"

Leviathan chuckles. "Kukuku... that's right. What's the matter, Satan? Where did your pomposity go? Haven't got what it takes? Two thousand years, and all you've managed is killing a handful of Cherubs! Perhaps that's giving you too much credit. I'd wager they were only Acolytes!"

The dragon chuckles quietly to himself, but in the darkness, Satan smiles.

"Heh. That's all you want, dragon? A few dead Archangels? The extinction of demonkind's greatest enemy?"

Leviathan pauses. He cocks his head. "Hmm? More bravado?"

"No. It's funny you mentioned the Archangels. I have a surprise for you."

Satan glances at Belial for a moment, then returns his gaze to Leviathan, as if to say, well, she'd have found out sooner or later.

"I've already defeated one of the Archangels and taken his soul for myself."

The dragon blinks slowly.

"Did you? Ahh. I see, now. The souls inside your body... one of them shines brighter than the rest. I paid them little heed before, but now..."

Leviathan lowers his head and brings his eye close to Satan, casting glowing orange light on both of the demons, as well as myself and Solomon.

"Which Archangel was it? Raphael? No, you don't possess a millionth the battle experience he does. Gabriel? No. You're much too weak to face-off against a battle-hardened warrior the likes of him. Perhaps the weakest, Camael? No, you stated your victim was male. Hmm. Consider me intrigued. Who is it?"

Satan taps his head. "Samael. The Archangel of Change."

Leviathan blinks. He pulls away from Satan, slowly.

"Samael? There's no chance he would associate with the others. I can only assume you ambushed him when his guard was down. Is his spirit intact, or have you shattered his soul?"

Satan shakes his head. "No, he's fine. I can talk to him, usually. He's been awfully quiet since I arrived here, though."

"Indeed."

Leviathan tilts his head left and right. Several emotions pass over the dragon's face as his eye scans Satan's body, but I can't tell what they are.

"Samael. Have you nothing to say to me, your old friend? Has time worn down our bond beyond recognition? Or are you simply speechless that we may speak yet again?"

Leviathan's words send a tingle of worry through my mind. I glance at Solomon. "Wait, what's he saying? Is Leviathan joking?"

Solomon doesn't reply. He continues to gaze at the scene before us and ignore me.

Satan shivers as Leviathan's glowing orange eye dresses him down. "Hey, no need to stare, alright? Only I can hear him. Samael-"

"Fool. As I told you before, Satan, your thoughts lie bare before me. If you can hear Samael in your mind, then I can, as well. Samael! Why do you remain silent? Speak up!"

* * *

If Samael hears Leviathan's words, he shows no sign of it. The Archangel doesn't say anything, even as the dragon continues to pester him.

Satan eyes Leviathan suspiciously. "Hold on, why are you calling Samael an 'old friend'?"

Leviathan ignores Satan's question. His eye-slit narrows, projecting a concentrated beam of light on Satan. A moment later, the dragon taps one of his claws on the ground. A pulse of energy shoots from his eye and slams into Satan, knocking the Devil backward as it catches him off-guard. Satan gasps in surprise and digs his Vectors into the ground, catching himself a moment later.

"Cripes!! What's the big idea, you ugly-"

Satan stops mid-sentence.

Three feet before him, an astral body materializes, one born of pure mana. Samael, the Archangel of Change, cowers in terror. His six-foot-tall form appears diminutive as he shivers in fright under the dragon's gaze.

"S-stay... stay b-back! Foul... ancient... black beast! S-servant of darkness! Blackheart! M-murdering fiend!!"

Tears flow from Samael's eyes as he tries to make himself as small as possible. Every bone in his body rattles and shakes as fear spreads throughout his very being. Never once does he open his eyes. He shields his head and ducks beneath his arms, almost as if waiting for the dragon to unleash infernal flames and incinerate him.

Belial's jaw drops. "That's Samael?! Satan! I can't believe you never told me!"

Satan nods slowly. Her words only half-penetrate his swirling thoughts. "Yeah... I... had my reasons. Leviathan! What did you... no... how did you bring Samael here?"

The dragon flicks his eye to Satan for a moment, then back to the Archangel cowering in terror. "I'm projecting his spirit into the realm of the living. A trifle, for one as mighty as I. More importantly..."

Leviathan trails off. Confusion stretches across the dragon's face as he slowly pans his head around to scan Samael's cowering form from several directions.

"My savior... why do you tremble and shiver before me? What slight have I committed to merit such a reaction?"

Samael jerks his head up. His eyes bulge as he meets the dragon's gaze. "D-do not call me friend, monster! I am n-no ally of thine! I know well the devastation thy kind hath brought upon the universe!! A thousand deaths would be too slight a punishment for thee!"

The dragon's jaw slackens. His expression turns from visible confusion to pure bewilderment.

"I... I do not understand. Satan, you said his spirit was intact when you killed him. What devilry have you foisted upon my compatriot for him to act in such a manner?"

Satan scratches his head. "Bloody hell, I have no idea. I thought all the Archangels were your enemies. Now you're getting all chummy with Samael. When I lived in Heaven, none of the angels even mentioned the dragons. Samael certainly didn't."

"Heaven?"

"The place where the angels live. You ain't heard of it?"

Leviathan blinks slowly. "I have not. Hm. More has changed than I expected. Samael, calm down. There's no need to worry. I am not going to hurt you."

Samael's knees shake. "Thy words are poison, winged one! I will not allow thee to use me as a pawn in thy games! I will never turn against my family for the sake of... of a dragon!!"

The dragon falters. "You... you wound me, Samael. Never did I expect to hear such awfulness escape your lips. Tell me, brother, what changed? What has turned you to the other side? Does Raphael now possess leverage over you? The Samael I remember would never convert to the bloodthirsty ways of the other Archangels."

Pins and needles tingle in my hands and feet. I glance at Solomon nervously. "Hey, what is happening? Is the dragon lying?"

Solomon shakes his head, but he doesn't reply.

Samael slowly raises himself to a standing position. His body continues to tremble, but he forces himself to meet the dragon's gaze. "W-what wicked lies art thou attempting to whisper in my ear, foul beast? My brothers and sisters are not the bloodthirsty ones. The dragons were! That is why we exterminated them!"

The dragon narrows his eyes. A menacing expression passes across his face. "My name is Leviathan. Use it."

"I care not what thy name is!"

The dragon curls up his lips. Venomous rage appears on his face.

"I understand. Something has gone horribly wrong. You cannot be the same Samael I once knew. After all, you gave me my name. You, Cassiel, and Muriel were the only Archangels sympathetic to our plight. Have you forgotten them too, Samael? Have you forgotten your two beloved sisters?! ANSWER ME!"

Leviathan's voice triples in intensity. He lunges toward Samael, and his pupils dilate to fill up his entire eye.

"What changed?! What turned you into this vicious, hollow being?! Where has your empathy gone? Why have you forsaken me?!"

Samael winces as the dragon bellows at him. He takes a step back and stares wide-eyed at the super-massive being challenging his core beliefs.

"S-stop! I won't listen to thy lies!! Satan, we must leave at once, and warn my family! They have to hunt this creature down before it can commit another genocide!!"

Samael turns to plead with Satan, but the Devil stares at him tight-lipped, a look of concentration on his face.

"No, Samael. Leviathan, calm down. Do not blame him. I've just remembered something my ol' chum here told me."

Leviathan flicks his gaze to the Devil. "Do you know what happened to Samael?"

Satan nods slowly. "Maybe. Samael told me once... after the war between dragons, Titans, and the angels, Raphael did some stuff. He erased the memories belonging to everyone but himself. That includes Samael's."

The dragon's rage subsides. He pulls his head back and exhales a thin cloud of smoke.

"I see. That... that explains a great many things."

Samael shoots a dirty look back at Satan. "Do not attempt to sully my brother's name, Satan! He only did what was needed to protect our people. Because of the memory-wipes, we were able to live in peace. It was only because we erased our pasts that angels and Titans were able to reach a peaceful resolution. Raphael is a hero!"

Silence fills the room.

Leviathan snorts, sending a small plume of flame erupting from his nose. It splashes against the ceiling before dissipating a moment later.

"Hmph. A hero, you say? You always used to say that whichever side won the war would rewrite the history books as they pleased. I never understood your meaning until this very moment."

Leviathan lowers his head. A listless look appears in his eyes.

"I know not what led you to accept a mind-wipe, Samael. Perhaps you did it to ensure my existence would never be uncovered. If so, I thank you. It would be yet another boon in the long line of gifts you gave me. Thanks to your concealment magic, the other Archangels never discovered me, despite living beneath their gazes. Still, I find it hard to believe you would ever concede to your brother. Especially after… the fate… which befell Cassiel and Muriel."

Samael stares at the dragon for a moment.

"Cassiel… Muriel… what of them? What do you know, dragon?"

"I ask the same question of you, Samael. I possess memories of the primordial era, but it seems you do not. Tell me, old friend, what memories rest in your bosom? Do you still remember the throbbing in your chest as you held their bodies in your arms?"

Samael's lips quiver. "Their… bodies?"

Samael echoes Leviathan. A look of worry embeds itself in his forehead.

"I know only what Raphael has told me. Cassiel and Muriel perished at the claws of the dragons. I… I tried to save them, but failed. S-surely, you do not expect me to believe otherwise?"

Leviathan sighs.

The dragon's head slumps down until it rests on the ground.

"How… tragic. To think… while I rested peacefully beneath this mountain, Raphael stole away the most precious memories of your beloved sisters. Once, Cassiel and Muriel held the most important place in your heart. You doted on them, and they on you. The three of you sought to end the war between the angels and dragons, but the Seraphim and Cherubim would not listen. To them, the Ophanim's complaints would result in boredom and complacency. After all… your fellow Archangels were…"

Before Leviathan can continue, a voice cries out from behind me. "Solomon!! What is the meaning of this?!"

I turn to see Raphael and Gabriel standing fifteen feet behind Solomon and me. I didn't hear them arrive, so quiet were their footsteps.

Solomon doesn't look at the newcomers. Instead, he motions with his hand and freezes the vision. "I'm merely showing Jason the entirety of the Ancient Era, Raphael... as I promised."

Raphael's eyes bulge in rage. "Stop projecting lies into the boy's mind! If thou continueth, thou shalt only further corrupt the Hero's imagination beyond-"

Solomon turns and raises his palm to silence Raphael. "There are no lies here, Raphael. I searched for decades before finally uncovering the truth of the universe. Worry not, for I will not show Jason that indefensible secret which you clutch closest to your breast. However... he deserves to know everything else."

"He deserves nothing!"

Raphael storms toward us, shoves me aside, and seizes Solomon by his coat.

"Bastard! How dare ye corrupt our legacy with these... these putrid falsehoods!! Everything thou hath shown the boy has led to him believe the demons were champions of justice, while the angels were violent psychopaths! Nothing could be further from the truth!"

Solomon's expression remains impassive. He doesn't try to pull away from Raphael's grip as the Archangel squeezes his robes tightly.

"You have done that yourself. I only wish to protect the rest of humankind from the terror of the demons. Defending the rose-tinted image of your people means little to me."

"Do not test me, Solomon."

Raphael's voice turns icy-cold.

"Thou kneweth this would happen from the beginning. Art thou in league with the demons, after all?! What are thy intentions?!"

Solomon purses his lips. He closes his eyes for a moment, and his body vanishes from Raphael's grasp, causing the old man to stumble as he grabs at the air wildly. Raphael manages to reorient himself as Solomon appears a few feet to my left. He adjusts his collar before speaking.

"I'm sorry, Raphael. The truth is that angels and demons were never all that different, despite your attempts to distort everyone's perceptions of the past. In a way, I am glad your people perished. I only wish the same could happen to the demons... especially those who stole my family from me. With Satan dead, half of my desire has been fulfilled, but as for the other half..."

I turn to my left. Solomon's face remains deathly calm. Something about his word touches a nerve and makes me uneasy.

"Are you lying to me, Solomon? Is Raphael? You could be showing me anything in these visions. I don't know what the truth is and isn't."

Solomon nods. "You're a bright one, Jason. Despite how Raphael belittles you by calling you 'child' and 'boy,' you have a man's intuition and hunger for the truth. Search your feelings. If these allegations against the angels are little more than lies, do you think Raphael would react in the manner he has?"

I nod.

"He might be pushing back against genuine lies, yes. Or… he might be trying to stop you from releasing damning truths that would paint angelkind in a negative light. I'm not certain which is correct."

Solomon smiles. "Aye. The truth can vary depending on the time of day and what direction the wind blows. I will state outright, Jason, that I have not shown you a single false vision, nor will I in the future. Raphael worked hard to bring about peace and prosperity to the angels, but I believe you would agree with the statement, 'the ends do not justify the means.' Raphael's method of enforcing order was… shall we say… totalitarian?"

Raphael goes quiet. Several seconds pass before he can muster a reply.

"I did what I felt necessary to bring about peace."

Solomon nods. "Of course. And I will do the same."

He turns away from Raphael and motions with his hand, causing the vision to continue playing. Raphael balks and starts to say something, but Solomon waggles his finger and shakes his head.

"You're not convincing me of anything today, Raphael. Stand quietly and watch. What happens next will be of great interest to you."

* * *

I don't know what Solomon's game is, nor what his goals are, but I know the vision he's showing me now is the closest to some form of truth I've seen yet. Everything up to now has only been a precursor.

The dragon must know something crucial.

Leviathan continues speaking.

"After all… your fellow Archangels were… bloodthirsty killers."

Samael's voice comes out as little more than a whisper. "…Lies."

"No. I speak the truth. Uzziel created the first dragon. You and the other Ophanim helped reshape Jörmungandr into a mighty being, one against which the precursor angels could test their might. Of course, at the time, the angels had been fighting amongst themselves for several ages. Raphael thought it prudent to create a scapegoat for their grievances to prevent the annihilation of all angels. A monster against whom he could direct their hatred. In that respect, he succeeded."

Leviathan continues. "My mother was subjected to endless torture and agony. She withstood magical and physical attacks as they unleashed their basest cruelties against her, but their torment was ceaseless, never-ending. Countless millennia passed as they beat and battered her around, boiling a rage inside of her unlike any other. Only the Ophanim comprehended the barbarism on display and sought to end it. You protected her, at least for a while, and allowed her to give birth."

Samael stares at the dragon, rapt with attention. "Have… have thee any proof of these claims?"

Leviathan ignores his question. "When the other Archangels discovered my mother had given birth, their rage tripled. They turned against your faction. They singled all the Ophanim for extermination. Haven't you ever wondered why angels could defeat dragons as mighty as Jörmungandr, if my kind were so overwhelmingly powerful? Have you, Samael?"

Leviathan's voice tightens. "We lost because of our peaceful nature. Dragons did not wish to fight. We did not desire death, pain, and vengeance. No, such darkness came from your people… from the angels."

Samael digs his feet into the dirt and gnashes his teeth together. "I don't believe thee. Everything thou hath said is far too convenient for my liking. How dare thou believeth I would turn against Raphael, simply because I do not know our history. I have no reason to believe thy words over his."

Leviathan nods. "Indeed. I see that, now. However, if your memories have not been erased, but merely suppressed, then… perhaps…"

The dragon closes his eyes. His scales press together as a look of concentration washes over his face.

"Hmm… hng…"

Samael raises an eyebrow.

"What art thou doing?"

Leviathan doesn't respond. Instead, he continues to concentrate.

"Nnn… Satan… prepare thyself…"

"Huh?" Satan replies. "For what-"

The dragon's eyes bolt open. A surge of blood-red energy discharges from his mind and slams into Satan, knocks the Devil off his feet, and throws him on his ass. Satan yelps in surprise as he loses his footing, but a moment later, he clutches his chest. "Gahh!! Sh-shit! Fucking… hell…!! HURTS!!"

If the look of pain on Satan's face is intense, the look on Samael's is ten magnitudes greater. The Archangel's astral body collapses to the ground. He writhes around and wraps his arms and wings around himself and curls into a ball. "Geyaaaahh!!! Ahhhhh!!!!"

Leviathan doesn't blink. He continues pointing his eye at Satan. "Endure it. The holy magic binding Samael's mind is powerful and ancient. Annulling it will require considerable energy and effort."

Belial drops to her knees and cradles Satan's head in her arms as he continues to roll around. "Leviathan, stop! You're hurting him!"

"I cannot stop," The dragon murmurs. He brings his eye closer to throw even more energy at the Devil. "This is all I can do. I will remove the seal binding Samael's memories. Since I do not know the cipher which binds him, I must use brute force. Please, withstand the pain a little longer."

Satan and Samael roll on the ground, screaming and crying. Several minutes pass as Leviathan intensifies his mental barrage.

"Satan is going to die!" Belial yells, as tears form in her eyes. "Please stop! I beg you!!"

"I'm nearly finished. Only a few seconds remain."

Behind me, Raphael gasps. "Unbelievable... he's... undoing..."

The dragon recoils. "Kuh! Mother, guide me. I've finished!"

Satan and Samael both cease their screaming and fall limp. The Devil's body sags against the cave floor as Belial wraps her hands beneath his head to support him.

"S-Satan. Lover. Are you alright? Say something, please!"

Satan grunts. "Guhh..."

Samael says nothing. The spirit-body of the Archangel flops lifelessly on the ground.

Leviathan's gaze softens. He leers toward Samael. "Old friend... you still draw breath. Please, speak. Do you remember me, now?"

Samael's eyes stare ahead blankly.

After a moment, they refocus. His gaze raises, ever so slightly, to meet Leviathan's.

"Hah... haha..."

Leviathan watches.

"Hahahaha... ahaha..."

Samael slowly shifts his body. As Satan regains his bearings, the two demons turn to watch as Samael picks himself off the ground and rises to his feet.

"Ahahaha... haaahaha... AHAHAAHA!!!"

Samael's quiet chuckles suddenly explode into maniacal laughter.

"HAAHHAHAH!! AHAHAHA!!! HOHOHO?! Hahaha... hah..."

The Archangel sags to his knees. He rests his face in his palms as his body begins to shake and tremble.

"Nnn... guhh... no, no, no..."

"Samael. What is wrong?" The dragon asks. "Why do you weep?"

"Hnn... Cassiel... Muriel... guu... their blood... it was everywhere..."

Samael chokes back agony-drenched sobs. He wraps his wings around himself, as if to try and block the pain from reaching his heart.

He fails. His sobs grow more intense.

"Everything I fought for... EVERYTHING!! It's all gone... they're gone... the Ophanim were all slaughtered..."

Leviathan sucks in a breath. "Tch. As I suspected."

Samael raises his head. His tear-stained face and agonized expression sends a pang of emotion through my heart as well. With a single glance, I finally see everything he's lost.

"Raphael... he... he tricked me..."

A sharp gasp behind me makes me turn and watch as Raphael takes a step back. The old man's eyes widen as he gazes at his brother.

"He tricked you?" Leviathan asks.

Samael nods. "He and the other Archangels... they held me down... they merged into the Seraphim and Cherubim. I couldn't fight back. Raphael laid his hands on me. He... he wiped my memories. I never wanted... I never agreed to... to his terms..."

My jaw drops.

"Raphael! Is that true?! Is Samael lying?!"

Raphael's eyes flick to me. The old man opens his mouth to speak, but his words come haltingly. "I... I didn't... he wouldn't listen to reason! He only wished to fight!"

"You forcibly erased your brother's memories! What the hell is wrong with you?!"

Gabriel reaches out and touches Raphael's arm. He gazes at me with an expression like that of a rock. No emotion graces his face. "Better to wipe Samael's memories than to kill him."

"That's no excuse! How could you do such a thing to him, after everything-"

Before I can continue, Samael screams in rage. "MICHAAAEL! He took them from me!! He took my beautiful sisters!! Ahhh!!!"

The Archangel punches the ground with all his strength, but his hand passes through it without causing a disturbance. Again and again, he wails and smashes his fists against the rocky cave floor, but never once do they make a sound.

Satan staggers to his feet. He and Belial gaze in stunned silence as the Archangel pours his heart out in emotionally-wrenching screams of anger and rage.

"-took them! Took them! TOOK THEM FROM ME!!"

Samael collapses. He falls onto his face and sobs, unable to muster the strength to rise to his feet.

Leviathan closes his eyes.

"I am sorry, old friend. I knew of Michael's treachery, but... for you... experiencing those memories must feel like losing your sisters all over again."

Satan clenches his hands into fists. "Fucking... bastards. I can't believe it. The old man did something unforgivable to Samael, my friend. That worthless, senile piece of dirt..."

I glare daggers at Raphael. "He said it, but I'm starting to agree."

Raphael doesn't reply. Instead, he turns away and stares into the darkness, unable to meet my gaze.

Samael flops his head to the side. He stares at Leviathan, and his raging emotions seem to subside somewhat.

"L... Leviathan... that's right... I bestowed that name upon thee..."

"You did."

"Muriel... she always... toward thee..."

Leviathan closes his eyes. "Muriel was as dear to me as my beloved mother."

"I failed..."

"No. I failed you, old friend. I left you to suffer in the hands of your brothers and sisters. I falsely assumed-"

"I did not suffer," Samael says. The Archangel gingerly lifts himself off the ground and plops onto his butt. "Nay, I lived a wonderful life in Heaven. Too exquisite for one as wretched as myself. I did not deserve such frivolous joys as what Raphael bestowed upon me. Perhaps, my brother thought to atone for his sins by removing my memories. Perhaps he allowed me to live in the hopes that he could redeem his soul."

Samael's lip trembles.

"Unforgivable. Muriel and Cassiel perished at Michael's hands, yet my brother did not punish him. Raphael forced me to smile and treat my sister's murderer with undeserved respect. I never avenged them. I never paid Michael back... for what he did..."

Leviathan waits a few moments before opening his eyes.

"Mmm. But, now that your memories have returned..."

"That's right — Thou art correct, young dragon. I owe Michael and Raphael a great debt. Nay, I owe all the survivors of that horrid day a blood-debt. I must repay them ten times over for their genocides."

Leviathan nods slowly, but for once, he hesitates.

"I, too, often feel the ache for vengeance, Samael. However, violence and bloodshed only further a perpetual cycle. Perhaps you should consider alternatives for settling your dispute."

Samael wipes the tears from his face. "Should I? Have thee any to suggest?"

"No. I do not. Still, I wonder what Muriel and Cassiel would do, were they in your position."

Samael shakes his head. "I cannot pretend to know their thoughts. They were peaceful, loving beings. Naturally, that is what made them easy targets for Michael's greed. They are not me, and I am not them."

The Archangel turns to look at Satan. He chuckles wryly. "Ironic, isn't it, Satan? Once, I believed that being devoured by thee was a curse worse than death. Now I know that the Creator's will still guides me to this day. 'Twas destiny that our fates intertwined."

Satan nods. "Yeah. You're right. Now that you have your memories back, I see a path I hadn't considered before."

"Oh? Please, elaborate."

Satan smiles. He clamps his hands together, stretches them out, and pops his knuckles. "Mmm. Well, you see, demons don't exactly like the angels. We've got a grudge against them, and it ain't going away anytime soon."

Samael nods. "Go on..."

"Well, your story pissed me off, Sammy-boy. Got me all fired up. I don't think I can go another day without tearing some angel assholes to shreds."

Leviathan sighs. "A crude metaphor, but expected from the likes of you."

Satan turns to the dragon. "Leviathan. You said you'd bring my girl back if I killed the Archangels, didn't you?"

Leviathan blinks. "I said I would consider it."

"Good enough for me. I didn't want to go all-out before, but I've changed my mind. There's no way I'm letting Raphael off easy after everything Sammy-boyo's said."

Belial nods. "I agree. The angels are pure scum. All they do is create and enslave other beings for their amusement. They're selfish people with god complexes. Even if they no longer have their memories, they're still guilty in my eyes for the atrocities they've committed."

With a pause, Belial blushes. "No offense, Samael."

"None taken," Samael replies. "Satan. Will thou assist me in my quest for vengeance? Will thou assist me in wiping out those who have wreaked havoc on the galaxy?"

Satan nods.

"I'll do you one better. I already have a plan."

"A plan?"

"Yep. But... I can't pull it off by myself. I'm gonna need all the help I can get."

Samael falls silent.

The Archangel of Change turns to look at Leviathan. A hundred emotions pass over his face.

"Leviathan. I was the one who gave thee thy name. However, thy mother also gave me a name. I never used to like it, but I've changed my mind, now."

"Hm? She did?"

"Aye. Due to how the Ophanim worked from the shadows, Jörmungandr called me by the name of Hades, king of the underworld."

Satan nods. "Hades. How very... un-angelic. Fitting."

Samael glances at his wings. "I hate my people. I always have. From this day forward, I will work tirelessly to bring them to their knees."

Leviathan curls his lips into a smile.

"Welcome back, Hades, my beloved brother."

"Aye. I thank thee for saving me, Leviathan."

Part 142: Release the Dragon!

Solomon's vision freezes as he and I teleport into Lucifer's underground lair. This time, Raphael and Gabriel don't come along for the ride. Ever since my spat with the Archangel of Wisdom, we haven't spoken. Now it seems he's gone into hiding.

I clear my throat. "Hrm. So, are we going to talk about... that?"

Solomon scrunches up his lips. "What is there to say?"

"I don't know. You're the so-called wise man here. What am I supposed to think when the whole point of these visions was a sham?"

"A sham? I don't follow."

"I came here to learn about how evil demons are. Instead, I've ended up watching the birth of a fledgling species as their creators repeatedly tried to murder them all. Now, with Leviathan's revelations, I can only look at the angels as being agents of chaos and destruction. How in the hell am I supposed to empathize with them?"

Solomon pauses a moment before answering.

"Leviathan could have been lying."

"Yeah? Was he?"

Solomon shakes his head. "No."

"Exactly. Where does that leave me? I don't feel sympathetic to Raphael's cause, anymore."

Solomon shrugs. "I can't tell you what to think, Jason. As I said before, the angels caused much misery during their existence. I am not able to view their billions of years of memories in all of their entirety. Even with my mind accelerated by the power of the crown, viewing snapshots in history from Raphael's extended lifespan took centuries, and I barely glimpsed a fraction of his life. Some of the things I saw..."

The ancient King pauses to collect his thoughts.

"All I know is that the angels are long-dead. The demons still rule the universe, and in the end, I believe it is your destiny to eradicate them. They're monsters, and no matter how much of a sob story their origins might be, you mustn't forget the horrific acts they've committed."

"Yeah," I reply, "like eating human flesh and torturing us and a bunch of other barbaric things. Still, demons are intelligent creatures. Samantha and Paimon are proof of that much. If you're telling me to commit genocide just because of the past-"

"The present," Solomon says, correcting me. "Demons still perform atrocities every single day."

I try not to be too miffed at Solomon's interruption. "Right, but even if that's true, there were many barbaric human civilizations too, like the Aztecs. They would routinely butcher humans and-"

Solomon cuts me off again. "The Aztec's barbarism came from the fact that they worshipped and worked with demons."

"Fuck's sake, Solomon. You know what I mean! The point is that there have been evil practices used throughout human history, and thanks to hard work and social revolutions, we were able to stamp out those acts of brutality from our collective consciousness."

Solomon nods. "Yes, but when you understand that the demons influenced humanity toward our worst, and demons have never changed their tune..."

"Semantics!" I yell, trying to suppress my frustration. "Christ, forget it. Talking to you is like talking to a brick wall."

Solomon opens his mouth to reply, but hesitates.

"I... well, I'm sorry I made you feel that way. I'm only trying to help."

"Your idea of help is telling me that I should abandon my core beliefs. I don't kill, period. I have Wordsmithing, and that means I have the power to change the universe. Stooping to violence would only prove that I've learned nothing from the Archangel's failures."

Solomon goes quiet.

"Yes. I suppose so..."

He trails off, and an awkward silence follows.

After a few moments, the ancient King motions with his hands. Time resumes, allowing time to progress. The air frosts over between us, so I look away from him and return my full attention to the next scene.

We appear inside the same underground gambling den from before. It hums with the energy of a few hundred demons throwing Mahja sticks onto tables, laughing and hollering at each other as they gamble for this lot or that one, generally having a good time. The moment the vision begins, a small fistfight breaks out as two pyro-types start slinging fireballs, only for a nearby Baron to reach over and whack them over the heads, stopping the conflict in its tracks.

Bael and Orias watch the spat from a nearby table for a moment. Once satisfied that the fun is over, they return to their game of Sticks and Bones.

Bael tosses a dozen bones down and smirks as they hit the table with a series of clinks. "Heh, lookit that. A Dire Wolf formation."

Orias reaches toward the bones. He extends his hand out, and as his robes pull back, they reveal several gems, large and small, embedded in his arms. "Mmm. It's your win, again."

"Nahhh, come on! Let's make it a best of... eleven? Ten? Where were we again, Murmur?"

Bael flicks his gaze to the left, where a shy demoness dressed in rags wraps her arms around her knees as she sits on a rock. Beside her, another demon sits on the floor, paying more attention to a shiny diamond clutched in his hands than Bael's game.

"Uh, um..." Murmur peeps out from under her hood, exposing her glowing red eyes for only a moment. "I th-think it was... t-ten..."

Bael nods. "I knew it! Bahaha!! Ehehe... So, err... does ten come after eleven, or is it the other way around?"

Orias shakes his head. "It's nine, then ten, then eleven. I don't know if I have another game in me, though. I have the worst luck these days."

Bael crosses his arms. "Psh, stop moping around! It doesn't matter how good your luck is when you're up against me! I've got a hundred rabbit's feet protecting me!"

Orias pokes the bones for a moment before withdrawing his hand back beneath his robes. "Mmm. Somehow I doubt you know how many a hundred is."

"Not a clue, but I know it's more than eleven!"

"Substantially. Anyway, I'm done for today. Davook, you go next."

The grunt at Murmur's feet flicks his eyes up to meet Orias's gaze. His clothes are as raggedy as any of the others nearby, but a certain hardness to his gaze hints that he isn't the dullard most other demons of his rank tend to be.

"Aw, c'mon. I don't want to play those stupid games. Total drag. Waste of time. Not fun at all."

"Don't defy me. Get up here and play for a round or two."

Davook crosses his arms and turns up his nose at Orias. "No! Hmph."

Orias sighs and turns to Bael. "My apprentice can be a little... persnickety. I apologize for his rudeness."

Bael shrugs. "It's fine, it's fine. Davook, why don't you like Sticks and Bones? It's the best game ever!"

"Hardly," Davook replies. He rolls his eyes and groans. "It's all luck-based — no skill involved. I can't think of anything more boring than two people sitting at a table and throwing bones at each other."

Bael points to the diamond in Davook's hand. "Pft. Like you've got anything better to do. Don't you stare at that rock all day anyway?"

"It's a diamond, and it's pretty. I like pretty things."

Bael's eyes glaze over. He nods slowly, and drool begins to congeal at his lips.

"Right... pretty... yeah. Alright, well, if you can't hack it, then I guess that's it for my fun and games."

The Duke of Pain sighs. A look of boredom passes over his face as he starts to stand up.

"I... I'll... I'll p-play..."

Murmur shifts slightly and raises her head to look at Bael.

"I've never... played s-sticks and..."

Bael turns to look at her. "Hoho! You wanna have a go at me, eh, Murmur? Hah, I never took you for that type!"

Murmur nods. "I... I like games... they're fun..."

She starts to shift her weight so she can crawl off the rock, but at that moment, Barbatos barges into the room and bellows at the top of his lungs. "Hey, guys! Satan and Belial just came back! You've gotta see this!"

Bael glances at the Lord of Iron. "Huh? What about 'em?"

"Satan's power... it's... it's over the top! I can practically taste his mana!!"

"Disgusting," Orias mutters. "Spare me the details."

Bael grins. "Oooh, now that sounds like fun! I've gotta see for myself."

The Duke of Pain jumps up and starts walking toward the exit. The other demons in the room follow after him, leaving Murmur, Davook, and Orias behind.

Murmur sighs. The child-like demoness lowers her head to sulk.

"Aw... I wanted to play..."

Orias shakes his head. "I'm sure Bael will have a match with you when he returns. As for me, I'm interested in what's going on, as well. Come now, Davook. Let's see what's happening out there."

Davook rolls his eyes. "Sounds like a pain in the ass."

"Much like you. Stop dawdling."

With a groan, Davook slowly climbs to his feet and shuffles after his master, leaving Murmur behind.

"W-wait for me," Murmur whispers. The little girl hops off her rock and trails after them.

In the darkness of the empty room, a single figure appears, wrapped in robes. His tongue flicks out of his mouth, and he leans heavily on a wooden staff.

"Hmm. Finally, things are growing... interesting."

Recommended Listening

Satan inhales the warm air slowly flowing from the deepest parts of Lucifer's Lair as he and Belial march through the entrance hallways. Belial wraps herself around Satan's arm and stares up at him adoringly, while he levitates Nerissa's crystal in front of them.

Belial bats her eyes. "Lover, why didn't you conceal the entrance? The angels will find our hideout if we don't-"

Satan smirks. He interrupts her by pressing a finger to her lips. "The angel's ain't a problem anymore, toots. Don't even worry about 'em."

"I... I suppose not," Belial replies, lowering her gaze.

As Satan and Belial's feet slap against the damp dirt floor, the Devil's grin widens.

"Yeah. We don't need to fret about anything after today."

The two demons continue in silence. Within a minute, they encounter half a dozen imps and grunts, all of whom turn to look at them as they appear — the grunt nearest to the entrance waves at Satan.

"Gehehe! Look who's here! It's Emperor Satan and-"

The grunt pauses. His eyes widen in alarm.

"W-what the... Satan's... m-mana..."

The grunt stutters and stammers as smoky black mana emanates from Satan's body, rolls across the ground, and brushes against his feet.

"I'm back," Satan says, his voice rough and dry. "Where are Lucifer and Diablo? Bael too, if you happen to know."

The grunts nod dumbly. "They... they're in... the... w-we'll go get 'em..."

All of the grunts bolt away as fast as they can, eager to flee from Satan's presence. The imps stay behind, dumbstruck by Satan's power.

Satan ignores his weak, pathetic admirers. He continues walking forward with Belial at his side, leaving the imps to stare at their backs as they continue toward Lucifer's throne room.

One imp swallows audibly. "D-did ya see...?"

His friend nods. "Yeah, I saw. I done felt it, too."

* * *

As Satan continues deeper into the underground catacombs, imps, grunts, and Lords all fall by the wayside, careful to get out of his way. Few speak any words, instead opting to stare at him in awe.

"He's... like a totally different demon..."

"What happened to 'im?"

"Shh, quiet. He'll hear us..."

Satan's smile widens. He pretends not to notice the looks of awe on the faces of nearby demons as they duck into hallways and adjacent rooms.

They can't help but notice, he thinks to himself. Leviathan's boost was only the tip of an iceberg, since Samael's cooperation improved my power the most. With the Archangel no longer fighting my every action, the two of us can finally work together.

It doesn't take long for Satan to arrive at Lucifer's throne room. True to its name, the room possesses a drab-looking chair carved out of dirt, with dead grass and animal skins placed over its seat and arms to make it slightly more comfortable than a rock. Dozens of demons, having already heard about Satan's arrival, skitter inside and wait at the edges expectantly, hoping for a big speech.

Satan walks over to the throne. His eyes flick toward three Hellhounds lazing about the base. The fifty-eyed animals raise their heads to look at him, and despite their terrifying appearance, they whimper and whine as he draws closer. One of them tenses its muscles, then bolts to one of the side exits, fleeing as quickly as it can. It slams into two grunts as it rushes out, flinging them to the sides as it tears ass away from Satan's line of sight.

The other Hellhounds follow their brother a moment later; their spirits shattered.

Satan rolls his eyes. "Dumb mutts."

The Devil places Nerissa's crystal to the right of the throne, turns around, and eases himself onto the seat. Belial slides onto his lap with a giggle, almost as if she were swiping candy from a grocery store. Her expression says it all. This feels mischievous!

Satan wraps one arm around his girl's waist to pull her closer, then leans his left arm on the throne's armrest. He sighs and plunks his chin against his fist.

"Where is Lucifer? I hate waiting."

Artorias, positioned at one of the exits, raises his head. He stands taller than the other imps, grunts, and Lords, making him stand out in the crowd. "They're coming. I sent Barbatos to fetch Bael. As for Lucifer-"

"I'm already here," Lucifer hisses. She enters the room with Diablo in tow and shoves the Baron of Earthquakes out of her way. Despite Artorias's look of annoyance, Lucifer ignores him. "What is the meaning of this?!" She gestures toward Satan, seated in her throne.

"Hey, Lucy. Deebs. Nice to see you guys."

"Don't play coy with me, Satan!" Lucifer screeches. "Where have you been? You left in the dead of night and came back three times stronger! Such a power increase is unheard of!"

Satan winks at Lucifer. "Heh. Are you sure about that? I know at least one way to increase a demon's power."

Lucifer's jaw slackens. She shoots a glance at Diablo, then returns her gaze to Satan. "You didn't."

"I did," Satan replies with a nod. "And now that you understand, let's discuss the future of demonkind — specifically, how I'm going to run everything from now on. I have some changes in mind, and I'll be counting on you to help me enforce them."

Diablo quickly reaches out and rests his hand on Lucifer's shoulder to calm her down. The look on her face could curdle milk. "Satan, hold on. Aren't you acting a little out of hand? Bael hasn't yet decided who will be the leader of demonkind."

Satan waves Diablo's concerns away. "Bael is a Duke. I'm the First Emperor. I decide who leads and who follows. If he has a problem, I'll simply show him that big muscles ain't the only way to win a fight."

Lucifer reaches her boiling point. "You little- that's it! I've heard enough out of you! You're not the First Emperor, no matter how much power you think you have! I've been aching to beat your ass for a while, now!"

Lucifer's forehead eye starts to glow red. Bloody veins appear, and her head trembles as she takes a step toward Satan.

Satan blinks slowly, deliberately. "I wouldn't do that if I were you."

He doesn't move an inch.

Lucifer grins like a madwoman. "I may not be able to kill you, but I can teach you the meaning of PAIN!"

All the oxygen in the room vanishes. An instant later, a concentrated burst of superheated air fires from her eye. It smashes into Satan and Belial with the force of an oil tanker, obliterating them and sending dirt and dust flying. Several grunts and Lords scream in terror as the shockwave smashes all of them against the walls. Smoke and dust erupt in every direction, shrouding the room in a dense cloud that nobody's vision can penetrate.

Diablo and Artorias manage to shield themselves from the worst of Lucifer's instant-kill attack. Diablo gasps in horror. "Lucy! What are you thinking?! You'll bring the roof down on us!!"

Artorias pounds his foot against the ground. Immediately, several pillars erupt upward and smash against the ceiling, reinforcing it to prevent a total collapse.

"We're fine," Artorias says. "As for Satan..."

Lucifer scowls. Her third eye pierces the dust cloud, allowing her to see Satan still sitting on his throne, unharmed.

"That smug... bastard..."

Satan smirks. Despite the walls and floor nearest him torn to pieces, he sits in a bubble of perfection, surrounded by chaos. Even Nerissa's hardened crystal appears unharmed.

"Do you feel better now?" Satan asks from within the smoke. "If you're done throwing a tantrum..."

Satan loosens his grip on Belial's waist. While still resting on his fist, he uses his free hand to snap his fingers. Air rushes from his body, and the power of wind magic clears the smoke from the room instantly.

"You bore me," Satan says. "Do you want to see more, or will you acknowledge me as your superior?"

Lucifer gnashes her teeth together. Blood-red miasma trickles from her forehead as she balls her hands into fists. "Worthless... trash... how dare you insult me!!"

Her eye glows red again. A laser shoots from her forehead, far smaller than the first attack, but also ten times more concentrated. The light of the sun ignites in the lantern-lit room, blinding everyone present. Her attack clears the gap nearly instantly, penetrates Satan's defenses, and narrowly misses Belial. The laser obliterates Satan's heart and rushes through the throne and the wall behind him, leaving him-

"Kuh," Satan grunts.

The Devil doesn't shift position on the throne, but using his free hand, he immediately summons water and splashes it onto his chest. After a moment, I realize Lucifer missed his heart. She shredded his chest, but didn't instantly kill him, allowing him to heal himself.

Satan winces. "Cripes... that hurt. A little. Got anything else?"

"More than you can imagine," Lucifer mutters under her breath.

From the side entrance on the left, Barbatos, Davook, Murmur, and the rest of the demons appear to watch the battle between the Emperors unfold. I glance at them for a moment and frown as I realize Bael isn't among them.

He was leading the pack originally... so where did he go?

I don't receive an answer to my question. Instead, Lucifer turns to look at Diablo. "Alright, you. It's time to help. I can't defeat Satan on my own. Are you ready?"

Diablo blinks. "Huh? Ready for what?"

Lucifer shakes her fist at Diablo. "Ready to help me crush Satan, of course! Why do you hesitate? With your power, I can stop him right here and right now!"

Diablo nods slowly. "Oh. Uhh, right. I mean... must I? I don't have much reason to fight Satan..."

Lucifer balks. "Of course you do! He's the enemy of demonkind! Because of him, we nearly went extinct twice!"

"Yes, but he saved my life. He saved Bael's too."

"No, I did," Lucifer replies. She narrows her eyes. "Satan backstabbed the Archangels. Because of him, we lost our chance of signing a peace treaty, and thousands of friends during the ensuing battle. Stop living two thousand years in the past, Diablo."

Diablo grits his teeth. "Baby, c'mon! Why would you want to sign a peace treaty with the angels after what they did to the precursor imps?! They murdered us en-masse! Satan had the right idea by double-crossing Raphael, and you know it."

"The imps died because of Satan!" Lucifer hisses. "Don't argue with me on this. Not now, of all times!"

"I'm not arguing!" Diablo practically screams. "I'm only moderately disagreeing!!"

The two Emperors lean toward each other and glower for several seconds. Diablo appears completely torn about quarreling with his woman, but I have to admire him standing up for his principles.

"Gah!" Lucifer snarls. "You always go along with what I say! Why are you defending Satan now?! You know he's my worst enemy!"

Diablo's expression softens. He pulls back, straightens his posture, and crosses his arms. "Unlike you, I don't dislike Satan. Besides, even if he only initiated my rescue, Belial was right there beside you when Michael attacked us. I can't attack him without involving her."

"Belial chose her side," Lucifer says, her voice cold as ice. "Now, you choose yours."

Diablo's expression appears neutral. He tries to hide his emotions, but as he flicks his eyes from Satan to Lucifer, he begins to bite his lip apprehensively.

Damn. I don't want to start anything with Satan, Diablo's expression seems to say, but if I don't take my girl's side, what kind of man am I? She's always been there for me. Isn't the answer obvious?

Before Diablo can come up with an answer, Satan sighs.

"Yo, Deebs. You always overthink things. You spend too much time in your head, chum. Stick by your woman. That's what I would do if I were you. No hard feelings. Besides, it wouldn't be fair if Lucifer had to fight all by herself."

Satan's smirk deepens. His gaze rests on Lucifer as he talks, and a smug air of superiority seems to emanate from his eyes.

"Poor little Lucy can't win if she fights alone. She hasn't got the stamina."

Lucifer's jaw drops. "O-of course I don't! You're only as strong as you are now because you cheated! Worthless bastard! Don't you dare look down on me, when I never once returned to that forbidden well of power! I can only wonder what you had to give up to obtain such a tremendous boost."

Satan shakes his head. "You've got it all wrong, Lucy. We've all sold our souls at some point, including you. The difference comes from what we obtained in return. You've allowed our people to survive, and for that, I thank you. However, my goal is to thrive. I don't care what you think of me, so long as you bend the knee. If I have to beat some submissiveness into you..."

Satan pauses for a moment.

"...well, I guess that can't be helped. Sometimes, a mouthy broad's gotta be put in her place."

* * *

After Satan concludes his speech, Diablo's eyes harden.

"Have it your way, boss. Nobody talks to Lucy like that, not while I'm at her side."

Diablo takes a few steps to his left and stands beside Lucifer.

"No hard feelings, Satan, but you've forced my hand."

Satan smiles.

"No hard feelings, Deebs."

The Emperor of Annihilation tenses up his muscles as he readies himself to obliterate Satan. Lucifer smiles. Her forehead's eye also prepares to unleash Hell upon Satan and Belial.

"Thank you, Diablo. I knew you'd come to your senses."

Diablo nods. "Anything for you, buttercup."

Before the two of them can begin their barrage, a shadowy figure materializes behind one of Artorias's stone pillars and transforms from a smoky black apparition into her demonic form.

She strides forward and turns to face Satan. "I'm surprised. After our discussion last night, I hoped you'd come around to my side of things. Instead, you left and came back intent on defying me. You'll regret that decision."

"Berith?" Lucifer says, a hint of surprise in her voice. "I don't need your help. Satan is mine!"

"Now is no time for arrogance," Berith whispers. She doesn't turn to face Lucifer. "The last time you fought Satan, you lost. That was before he tripled his power. It will take all of our combined strength to defeat him this time. I hate the idea of allying with you... but I hate losing even more."

Satan chuckles. "Three against one? Phew, might break a sweat over here. Anyone else care to join? Let's make this a party."

Lucifer's rage builds further. "Smug bastard! You'll regret-"

"Quiet," Berith says, rolling her eyes. "Don't fall for Satan's tricks. He's goading you."

Immediately, Lucifer forces herself to calm down. "Kss... right. Apologies. My emotions got the better of me for a moment."

Satan uncoils his arm from Belial's waist as the other three Emperors fan out to surround him.

The Devil lifts his head off his fist and begins to clap his hands slowly. "Oh, damn. Are you guys finally warmed up? Ready to start?"

"Keep up the tough talk," Berith hisses. "I can't wait to shut you up permanently."

"Same," Lucifer says with a smile. "At least we have that much in common."

Satan slowly stops clapping. As his palms come together for the last time, he stretches in his chair.

"Nnng, damn. Alright. Well, time to get serious. Go on, sweetie. Teach 'em a lesson."

Satan smacks Belial's butt and winks at her.

"Make me proud."

Belial bats her eyes. "I'll win for you, lover!"

She hops off his lap and smiles at the other three Emperors. They take a step back in confusion as, with a motion of her hands, Belial's horns expand from the one-inch bumps of a Baron to the several-inch length of an Emperor. Her height increases by half a foot, and she takes a deep bow.

"Okay, everyone! I'll be your opponent, now! Don't worry, for I'll be sure to heal you after I finish!"

Lucifer's jaw drops. "What?! Belial is... she's an Emperor? Since when?!"

Satan smirks. "What, afraid you can't beat her?"

"Of course, we're not afraid!" Diablo yells, butting into the conversation. "But I thought we were going to fight you, not your mate! What kind of coward sends out his missus to do his dirty work?"

Satan laughs into his fist. "Ahaha, oops, it must have slipped my mind. You see, I'm making Belial my Second Emperor. Whichever of you comes out on top will be my third, fourth, and so on. This fight will be to determine the official rankings."

Berith's calm demeanor shatters in an instant. "Satan! How... how dare you mock me! I came to crush you, not to fight your pathetic succubus whore!"

Satan's smile vanishes.

"Do not insult my girl."

Berith ignores him. "If you think you can snub me, you're wrong! Eat shit and DIE!!"

With a motion of her hands, the Emperor of Backstabbing summons forth a hundred shadow-lances, similar to the ones Amelia used against me when we engaged in our final battle. Each one, sharp enough to pierce steel, stabs out of the ceiling, walls, and floor like deadly charcoal stalactites. They rush toward Satan from every conceivable direction with deadly intent, fixated on ending his life.

Satan doesn't flinch. The instant before any of the shadow-lances impale him, a blur of movement spins around his body like a tornado. Berith's blackened spears explode into ash. Their dust scatters around the room in every direction.

Everything happens in a matter of seconds. The imps and grunts stare in awe as they try to comprehend the lightning-fast battle they just witnessed.

Berith doesn't let up. She summons another veritable army of shadow-lances. They fly at Satan, and he shatters them before they come close to grazing his body. The instant one explodes into dust; another follows a split-second later.

Satan's expression darkens as the Emperor of Backstabbing continues her onslaught. Again and again, she summons dozens of shadow lances, each one seemingly rushing toward Satan with a mind of its own, but the Devil deflects all of them without saying a word.

"Chrr!" Berith growls. "What black magic protects you? Why can't I land a single hit? You should have perished already! Lucifer, don't just stand there! Use-"

Before Berith can finish her sentence, a blur of motion rushes toward her. The Emperor of Backstabbing jerks back in surprise, but she doesn't move fast enough to dodge Belial's fist.

Wham!

Belial punches Berith so hard I don't even see her body fly backward. The shadow-walking Emperor pounds against the wall behind Diablo and Lucifer hard enough to rattle my teeth. She nearly takes out three grunts in the way and sends a shockwave throughout the entirety of the demon's underground lair.

As Berith gasps for breath and slumps to the ground, Belial straightens up and claps her hands together.

"I'm your opponent. Not Satan. The next person to attack my sweetie gets punched ten times harder than that. Are we clear?"

Diablo gulps nervously. "H-hey... I didn't sign up to... to hit a woman..."

Belial bats her eyes. "Well, I'd hate to make you uncomfortable."

With a flourish of her hands, Belial transforms her appearance from her busty, red-skinned self, into an exact copy of Satan. She flexes her muscles a little and rubs her pot-belly.

"See? Now you can fight Satan without feeling guilty because I look just like him!"

Satan frowns. "I... didn't expect that. Kinda creepy if you ask me."

Belial turns and smiles at him, an expression far sweeter than anything I've ever imagined seeing on Satan's face. In a voice identical to Satan's, she says, "Don't worry, love! I'll win for you!"

Satan nods slowly.

"Uhh... right. Go... get 'em... tiger?"

Belial nods eagerly. She spins to face the other two Emperors, motions with her hands, and unleashes a river of mana from her body comparable to Satan's.

As her blackened energy sweeps across the room, Diablo begins to sweat.

"Lucy... I... I think we fucked up."

Part 143: The Emperor of Passion

Recommended Listening

Satan's doppelganger smiles creepily. "Here I come!~"

Diablo jumps in front of Lucifer and summons a kinetic barrier right as Belial, still mimicking her husband's appearance, crouches on the ground and pounces at him like a jaguar. She flies at the Emperor of Annihilation and smashes her fist against the barrier surrounding his body with all her strength.

THOOM!

A shockwave explodes from the impact point, rattles Diablo's teeth, and sends the closest imps and grunts flying. They hit the walls, flop to the ground, and hurriedly flee the room in terror, yipping like beaten dogs.

Belial's fists transform into hardened hammers made of bone. Over and over, she pounds Diablo's kinetic barrier with unrelenting fury, each punch crashing upon him like a battleship plummeting from the sky. The walls crack and rattle, and the ceiling continuously sags as the shockwaves from her attacks threaten to bring the roof down.

Artorias, standing just outside the room, repeatedly slaps the walls and uses earth magic to try and reinforce the underground catacombs, but he seems to be fighting an uphill battle. "Spawn of a broodmother! Take this fight outside! You're going to kill us all!!"

The Emperors ignore Artorias. Diablo puts every ounce of his energy into defense, but he can barely keep up with Belial's onslaught.

"Baby! I can't maintain this pace forever!!"

Diablo's feet grind into the ground as he begins to slide backward.

Wham! Wham! Wham!

Belial strikes his stomach, chest, and head all in the blink of an eye. Diablo tries to resummon his barrier, but Belial seems immune to its knockback effects. He slips up and fails to protect himself for the final blow. Her hammer-like fists nearly take off his head and send him tumbling into the wall to her left. Diablo hits the hardened rock with enough force to jar his senses. He flops to the ground to writhe and clutch his chest as he regains his bearings.

"Diablo!"

Lucifer cries out in anger as her mate's defenses shatter. A blast of kinetic energy, built up over several seconds, fires from her third eye. Belial tries to dodge it, but she isn't fast enough. Lucifer's attack crashes against her and sends her careening into the wall beside Satan. She impacts it with a painful whump!

Satan winces. He glances at his doppelganger and curls up his mouth. "You okay, sweetie? Need me to jump in?"

Belial staggers to her feet. Her right arm hangs limp, apparently broken in several places. She scowls at Lucifer. "No. I'm fine."

With a flourish of her hands, Belial heals herself. Her joints snap back into place, making the succubus flinch as lightning shoots up her arm. A moment later, she balls both hands into fists.

"You forgot about ME!"

A voice yells out from the wall behind Belial. She gasps and spins on her feet, but a massive fist made of darkness rushes out and strikes her face, sending her tumbling toward Lucifer. Before she gets anywhere close, another fist appears in the shadow of one of Artorias's pillars, lunges out, and batters Belial again, sending her careening to the left.

Like a three-dimensional ping-pong machine, Berith begins punching Belial from every direction, melding her body with the shadows and turning the darkness into hammer-like weapons.

"You thought you could take on three Emperors at once?! Foolish succubus! I alone will bring you to ruin!"

Belial plows into a wall shrouded in darkness. Berith's arms jump out of it, wrap around the succubus, and bind her tightly. A moment later, shadow-lances leap from every nearby patch of darkness and rush toward Belial, intent on turning her into a cactus.

The Emperor of Passion gnashes her teeth. "You spoke too soon!"

She transforms her body from a solid mass into something with the consistency of pudding. Despite Berith's attempts to bind her to the wall, Belial melts through the shadow-walker's arms, causing her spears to impale the one who summoned them instead. They merge into Berith's body harmlessly, but she still howls in rage.

"You slippery little... get back here!!"

Belial, now a puddle of flesh, leaps from the ground, impacts a pillar, and reforms into her original body instead of a clone of her husband. She tears a massive chunk out of the stone column and flings it at Berith.

"Here's a present!"

Berith's eyes widen as the one-ton mass of rock flies toward her. She instantly merges back into the shadows, like a frog diving underwater, causing the pillar to smash against the wall without injuring her.

Belial lands on her feet and backflips twice until she lands with her back to Satan's throne, only a few feet away.

"Need help yet?" Satan asks.

The succubus shakes her head. "I'm... I'm fine. Don't you worry about me!"

Satan shrugs and returns to resting on his fist. "It is still three against one, toots. If you want my help..."

"I don't need your help!" Belial yells. She flicks her gaze toward Satan, and a look of rage passes over her face. "I'm not weak anymore! I'm strong, just like Nerissa!"

Satan nods. "Never said you weren't. Keep up the good work. You look great."

His words of praise shatter her anger. Belial's eyes brighten. "Oh... I do? Do you mean that?"

Satan smiles. "Of course, I do. You're kicking ass. Your sister would be proud. Keep it up."

As if a dark cloud had been blocking her emotions, Belial grins cheerfully and returns her attention to the other three Emperors. Already, Berith has returned to her physical form. She and Lucifer stand behind Diablo as he leans heavily against a pillar. Belial's punch must have hit him harder than I first thought.

The succubus's angst melts away. Belial crouches low to the ground and licks her lips. "Who's ready for round two?"

A shudder runs down Diablo's face. He takes a shaky step forward and reaches up to wipe blood from his nose. Already, his eye socket has started to swell from where Belial hit him. "Lucy, Berith... no more solo play. We have to work together to beat Belial. Don't underestimate her just because she's a succubus."

Berith flicks her eyes toward Diablo's back. "Don't presume you can order me around. Lucifer might need a man to tell her what to do, but I walk my own path!"

Lucifer's eyes harden as she turns to Berith. "I'm not taking orders from Diablo either, you numbskull. However, his battle sense is quite remarkable. He's smarter than you and me combined. It would be foolish to ignore his input."

Berith motions with her hands. Her body transforms into smoke, and she falls inside of a stray shadow on the floor.

"Do whatever you please, Lucifer. Compared to me, you and Diablo are little more than ants. I will win this battle by myself and claim the title of First Emperor."

Lucifer watches as Berith sinks into the shadows. "Pigheaded fool. You'll end up dead if you refuse to work with others!"

"Ignore her," Diablo says. "She'll end up helping us, anyway. Focus on disorienting Belial. If I land a hit on her, I'll end this battle in one blow."

Belial raises an eyebrow. "I can hear every word you're saying."

Diablo shakes off the last vestiges of dizziness slowing him down. A moment later, he plants his foot in the ground and launches at Belial. "Fine by me!"

Seeing the Emperor of Annihilation leap at her, Belial stretches one of her arms out, grabs a nearby pillar, and yanks herself toward it. Halfway before she reaches it, she releases her grip, dives into a roll, and springs toward the ceiling.

I have to take out Lucifer, Belial thinks to herself. She's the most dangerous opponent, here.

Lucifer's third eye tracks Belial as she darts around and leaps toward her. "I won't let you close the distance, succubus!"

The Emperor of Providence motions with her hands. Immediately, a dozen ghostly swords, like those she used against Satan several years prior, materialize in midair. Half a dozen of them begin spinning rapidly in front of her to create a force field, while the rest jump at Belial to try and cut her out of the air. They swing and slice from left to right, but only manage to strike her afterimages.

When one sword threatens to lop off Belial's arm, she transforms that limb into a blade, bats Lucifer's projected weapon aside, and continues running toward her.

Diablo tries to grab Belial's foot, but he misses by inches as she jumps on his head and leaps off, flying at his mate.

"Naptime, Lucy!"

Belial's sword-arm morphs into a giant bone-hammer. She swings with all her strength, breaks through Lucifer's spinning blades, and pulverizes the Emperor of Providence with-

Wait, no.

Belial's bone-mace passes through Lucifer's body as if she's a ghost. Belial batters the wall and sends a minor earthquake rumbling through the underground caverns, but Lucifer's body vanishes into the ether.

"Huh? She was just here!"

The Emperor of Passion quickly scans the area. She spins on her heel and whirls around to search for Lucifer's whereabouts.

Diablo blinks. He notices Belial's momentary confusion, condenses his strength into a ten-times increased kinetic punch, and pulverizes a support column, spraying rock and stone in Belial's direction.

"Ack!" Belial quickly holds up her arms to protect her face as hundreds of rocky bullets blast every inch of her body, pummeling her like a firing squad. The succubus yelps in pain and staggers backward.

Berith's voice speaks from the wall behind Belial, as the succubi's shadow spreads across it. "Gotcha!"

Two arms jump from the wall. One of them grabs Belial by the back of her neck, while the second coils into a fist and pounds her spine with all its strength. Belial reels forward and tries to tear out of Berith's grasp, but the moment she lowers her arms, Diablo hits another pillar as hard as he can.

Batoom! Shik, shik!

Belial screams in pain. This time, Diablo's offensive shrapnel rips through her guts and throat and gouges out one of her eyes. "Eeeyahh!!"

My heart sinks as Lucifer reappears in one of the nearby shadows. A maniacal grin spreads across her face.

"Foolish whore! If only you had recognized your weakness to mental attacks, you might have escaped death! Pathetic!"

Lucifer's third eye glows red. A moment later, she fires something invisible at Belial.

Belial stops screaming and goes limp in Berith's grasp.

Berith steps out of the shadows, produces a knife formed from darkness, and rears back to plunge it into Belial's heart.

"Stop!" Lucifer yells. "I've taken control of her mind! Now we can turn her against Satan!"

Berith pauses. "Oh? Have you? That was a good idea."

With a smirk, the Emperor of Backstabbing bares her teeth. "Too bad, Lucifer. Like I said, I don't follow your orders."

She jabs the knife forward, aiming to end the succubi's existence while she can't retaliate.

The instant before Berith finishes off Belial; all hell breaks loose.

The throne room explodes.

Every pillar shatters. Shrapnel flies out in all directions, catching the Emperors off-guard. Bits of rock and dirt rip through them the same way they did through Belial. Berith shrieks in pain and drops the succubus. She stumbles backward, only to gasp in terror as something invisible grabs her by the hair and begins smashing her against the ceiling and floor.

Lucifer and Diablo howl in surprise, unable to comprehend what is happening. They, too, get smashed and flung around the room violently, unable to protect themselves.

"What's going- guwaaah!!"

Lucifer's question turns into an agonized scream as both of her arms snap in half, and she hurtles across the room to crash against the opposite wall. She passes out instantly and flops to the ground.

Five seconds later, the room goes still. All four Emperors lay on the ground, gasping for breath or completely unconscious.

Satan continues to lean on his fist.

"I don't remember giving any of you permission to kill my girl."

Berith wheezes. She lays on the ground, both of her arms and one of her legs broken and bent in unnatural directions. Her eyes flutter and spin around in her head as she tries to make sense of what just happened.

"Yuh-you... you... when... how...?"

Satan sighs. "The Ultimate Offense. Sorry, toots, but you never stood a chance. I recommend taking a nap now. It'll help dull the pain."

Berith falls silent. Her eyes close, and a final gasp escapes her body as she falls comatose.

Satan hovers out of his chair. He levitates across the room and picks up Belial. After splashing some water on her, he manages to bring her back to the world of the living.

"S... Satan...? What happened? Where... when...?"

Satan chuckles. "Ahh, you did good, sweetie. That last attack wiped 'em out. You okay?"

Belial cocks her head around to stare wide-eyed at the other three Emperors lying prone, the majority of their limbs snapped and twisted gruesomely.

"I... I did this?"

"Yup. Don't you remember? It was awesome."

Belial pulls herself to a sitting position and shakes her head. "No... I don't. But, if I won then... that's great!"

She flashes a radiant smile at Satan, who smiles back.

"Mhm. You sure did. Now, if you wouldn't mind healing them, I think these morons are going to die of blood loss without your help."

"I thought they were in your way. Why would you want me to heal them?"

Satan flicks his gaze to the doorway. Several imps peek inside, along with Artorias, Barbatos, and Bael.

The Duke of Pain whistles. "Damn, girl. You kicked serious ass."

Satan sighs. "I need 'em, toots. Even if Lucy and Berith are dummies for thinking they could win, I respect their fighting spirit. Besides..."

Satan helps Belial to her feet. As the two of them stand, Satan nods at Bael.

"Demons don't kill demons. That's my unbreakable rule."

Bael and Satan stare at each other for several seconds. Eventually, Bael returns Satan's nod. "Glad to have ya back, boss."

Part 144: Return of a Legend

Diablo, Lucifer, and Berith all sit on their knees, heads bowed, at the foot of Satan's throne. Diablo sighs as a look of defeat passes over his face. Berith's eyes twitch while she fights the emotions raging inside of her. Meanwhile, Lucifer balls her hands into fists and trembles. Her teeth chatter quietly as she tries desperately to suppress her rage and humiliation.

"That's a nice look for you," Satan says, seated in his throne. Once again, Belial sits on the right side of his lap, both of her legs crossing over his left. She wraps an arm around Satan's back, and he reciprocates with an arm around hers.

"Pretty pathetic," Bael intones. He stands behind the three defeated Emperors, arms crossed. "I thought about joining in on the fun, but you guys didn't deserve my help. I didn't know you were little bugs in demon bodies."

Lucifer whips her head back and snarls at Bael. "Quiet, you! Satan has grown too powerful for any of us to defeat! There's no shame in losing to... to..."

She bites off her words, but it's too little, too late.

"There's always shame in losing," Satan says, his smirk widening. "If you were smart, you'd have realized you couldn't win from the beginning. Even wolves know when to pick fights and when to run away. I always thought you were smarter than a dumb animal, but maybe I was wrong."

Hundreds of demons line the walls of the room. The grunts and Lords and Barons and all the other ones whisper among themselves conspiratorially, wondering what will happen next.

"I bet Satan'll snap their necks."

"Nah, he'll probably break their arms 'n legs and feed 'em to the Hellhounds."

"Idiot. If he was gonna do that, why bother healin' 'em?"

"To draw out the pain more. Duh."

"Ohhh, right. Good point."

Satan's gaze flicks around the room. He pauses to observe various cliques and groups among those present, then resumes staring at the three before him.

"Dumb, dumb, dumb. Sheesh. Right now, I bet Bael's smarter than the lot of you combined. You'd have to be pretty daft to sense my mana and think you had a shot at winning."

Berith raises her head to glare at Satan. "You said that, already."

"It's worth repeating," Satan mutters. "You've really mucked up my plans with this. How are we supposed to kill all the angels if the top Emperors don't know how to pick their fights?"

A hush falls across the room.

Several imps blink in stunned silence as their mouths fall agape.

Lucifer's expression turns to one of confusion. "Kill the angels? What are you on about this time?"

"I didn't stutter," Satan says. "I told you when I came back that I had a plan. See? That's what I hate about women. You never listen."

Hardly have the words left Satan's mouth before Belial shoots him a particularly nasty look. Satan pauses for a moment.

"N-not you, toots. The other ones."

"Rude," Belial hisses at him. She climbs off his lap and struts to the nearest exit, then pauses to cross her arms in annoyance.

"I'm going swimming."

Satan stares at Belial's ass as she struts around the corner and disappears from view. After a moment, he groans to himself. "Ugh. Nice foot in mouth moment, me. Thanks, me."

"You done talking to yourself?" Bael asks. "Don't just say 'we're going to kill all the angels' and then leave it at that, boss. Now you've got me all excited 'n shit."

Satan stares at Bael for several moments before replying.

"That's right. We're going to launch an assault on Heaven and kill all of the angels. Every last one of 'em."

Gasps erupt in the crowd. Several imps take a step back as shock passes over their faces. Even the three Emperors stare wide-eyed at Satan.

Lucifer jumps to her feet. "What the hell are you talking about, Satan?! Are you crazy?!"

"A suicide mission. Brilliant." Berith adds sarcastically. She remains seated, skepticism everywhere in her body language. "And to think, you thought my idea for luring out the angels in small groups was terrible. You lack imagination, Satan."

Bael chuckles. "Heh. I think it's a good idea. An all-out war sounds like fun."

"You would think that," Diablo says, glancing back at the Duke of Pain. "But then again, you're damn near invincible. The rest of us have heads we try to keep on our shoulders."

Bael proves to be in the minority. The majority of lower-ranked demons murmur among themselves, doubt spreading around the crowd, out the exits, and to the demons waiting outside as well.

Satan keeps his body language calm and collected. "I understand you think it's a bad idea. Of course, I'm smarter than you, so I know otherwise. If I had to guess, I'd say the odds are..."

The Devil pauses for a moment.

"...there's a 99% chance that we'll lose the battle decisively."

Lucifer's eyes bulge as rage takes over.

"Are you joking?! What is wrong with you, Satan? If you're that unconfident, then why even propose such a ludicrous idea? Don't tell me this is another one of your damned tests!"

Satan shakes his head. "It's no test, Lucy dearest. I believe we will lose the battle,, but win the war. Long term strategies are what we need. You understand, don't you?"

Lucifer stands, frozen in place. She stares at Satan silently for several moments as her third eye jerks around erratically. She appears to be trying to figure out what he means.

"Long term... win the war... I don't understand. Speak plainly! I hate riddles!"

Diablo closes his eyes. The Emperor of Annihilation reaches up and slowly strokes his chin as he thinks about Satan's words.

"Hmm... I fail to see how attacking the angels and losing would benefit us. Satan, can't you elaborate? We'd be more inclined to listen if you stopped with the wordplay."

Bael rolls his eyes and grumbles under his breath. "Ain't that hard to understand, ya bunch of dummies. Just kill all the chickens, and we win. Easy."

Satan purses his lips. "Actually, Bael, it is more complicated than that. The reason I say there's a 99% chance of losing this battle is that we almost certainly won't defeat the angels. We will lose far more demons in the long run and will come out with only a sliver of those who entered. The rest will die."

Lucifer shivers as she meets Satan's gaze. "A suicide mission. You expect our people to march to their deaths. What in the name of Hell is that going to accomplish? Are you so eager to humiliate me that you would throw away everything I've built over the last two thousand years?"

"No," Satan replies, closing his eyes. "It's the best method we can use to win. You have to understand, Lucifer, about the nature of angelkind. Angels have only declined in population since the Creator formed them from the dust of the cosmos, millions of eons ago. They cannot reproduce. They can only fade away slowly, over time. Every angel killed is one fewer for us to battle in the future."

Lucifer and Diablo slowly relax. They nod along to Satan's words. Berith is the first to reply. "I see. So, what you are saying is that my battle plan was superior, after all."

Satan cocks his head. "How so?"

"If we bleed the angels off bit by bit, we will eventually kill all of them. My plan has fewer inherent risks compared to yours."

"Yes, but sacrificing low-ranked demons is... pathetic."

Satan bites off the last word before continuing.

"Your method is not one toward which demons should aspire. We tackle our opponents head-on. We fight honorably. We strive to perfect our power and to crush the barriers placed above us. We may skulk about in caves today, but if we were to rule over Earth in a future where we only ascended via skullduggery and deceit... that future is not one I would relish."

Satan sighs, long and hard. "Haah... there is another reason we must attack Heaven directly, my friends. The angels are not our only foes. While they cannot increase their numbers, the Titans can. Were we to draw out the extinction of angelkind over several centuries, the Titans would surely begin breeding in haste. They would quickly set aside their petty differences and unite with the single-minded intent of eliminating our existence. As you all know, Titans lack many of the weaknesses the typical angel has. They grow to become enormous, and every generation of Titans eventually breeds a prodigy, such as Zeus or Hercules. The last thing we need is for more of them to stand against us."

Diablo raises his eyes to meet Satan's. "So, in the end, this battle is more about wiping out the Titans than eliminating the angels. Am I correct?"

Satan smiles. "That, you are, Diablo. You're a smart demon. I need more Emperors like you."

Satan pauses. After a moment, he reaches inside his leopard-skin shirt and plucks something out of an inner pocket.

"I told you three that I'd determine the rankings for Emperor based on how you fought against Belial. Well, I've made up my mind."

Slowly, deliberately, Satan reveals three tiny black marbles grasped in his palm. Each one is as dark as the night. If Satan were to drop them in a shadow, he might lose them forever.

Lucifer takes a step forward. Her third eye focuses on the marbles as she scans them. "What the Devil...? I see... mana... flowing out those pebbles."

"Mana?" Berith asks, echoing Lucifer. "I don't understand."

"We're going to attack Heaven in a few days. The sooner, the better," Satan says. "I need all three of you to be at the peak of your strength. No holding back. These are soul-stones, and each one has enough enriched soul energy to raise your mana levels to their peak."

Berith's jaw drops. Lucifer's does too. Diablo merely stares at the soul-stones in silence.

"Unbelievable..." Lucifer mutters. "In order to obtain these items... you must have..."

Berith jumps to her feet. She eagerly eyes the soul-stones, seemingly wishing to snatch all three from Satan's palm. "What are you waiting for? Give them to us!"

Satan closes his palm around the stones. "I warn you... absorbing one of these stones will hurt more than anything you've ever experienced. It will feel as if you are bathing in the mouth of a volcano, all while someone sprays acid across every inch of your skin. Still sure you want one?"

Lucifer and Berith's pupils dilate. They nod greedily. Diablo doesn't seem as interested, but he does lean forward on his knees to stare at them intently.

"I have one condition," Satan says. He lowers his voice, and his gaze darkens. "I will only give these out to those who swear their loyalty to me. Accepting these means you acknowledge my superiority over you. It means you will follow my orders unquestioningly until the end of time. Do you understand?"

The female Emperors pause for a moment to digest his words.

Lucifer replies first. "I knew there would be a catch. When it comes to underhanded tactics, only Berith is your equal, Satan."

"Yes," Berith says, nodding to Lucifer's words. "Still, I know when I am beaten. I cannot hope to defeat you, Satan. Given a choice, I would rather achieve the fullest extent of my power than not. Someday, should you die, I might end up replacing you as First Emperor. It wouldn't do for me to appear weak, as I do now."

"Mmm," Satan grunts. "If I didn't know better, I might think you were threatening me."

"No, no," Berith says, holding her hands up in a mock display of distress. "I would never dream of it. Even when we battled earlier, I knew you were too powerful to defeat. I only wished to teach you a lesson. Now, I understand even that much was impossible for me."

Satan smiles. "I'm glad you finally understand your position. Well, in that case, I'll announce the rankings. Berith, you will be my Third Emperor. Lucifer, my fourth. Diablo, my fifth."

A look of horror passes over Lucifer's face. "What? Why?! I bound Belial in a mental prison! If it weren't for me, we'd never have come close to killing her! I passed your test with flying colors!"

Satan sighs. "Maybe so, but results are what matter. Berith was the one who would have landed the killing blow. You only managed to bind Belial thanks to the efforts of the other two. Besides, Berith seems far more powerful than you. She can appear in any shadow, ambush enemies, hold them in place, launch deadly spears from all directions... what can you do? Shoot some hot air from your head? Color me unimpressed."

Lucifer swings her arm back to gesture at Diablo. "What of my mate, then? If you think I'm so weak, then why position me above him?!"

"Because it'd hurt your pride, otherwise," Satan says, smirking. "Diablo doesn't care about crap like numbers and ranks. He's fine with being the lowest Emperor. Ain't that right, pal?"

Satan's eyes flick to Diablo, as do Lucifer's and Berith's. The Emperor of Annihilation yawns. "Yeah. I don't particularly care one way or the other."

"Great!" Satan says, rising from his chair. Extending his palm outward, a flicker of movement in the air is the only evidence of his Vectors' existence. They lunge down, snatch the three soul-stones, and extend out to hover the marbles in midair. Diablo and Berith stare in surprise as the black pebbles seemingly levitate toward them, but Lucifer appears less impressed. Thanks to her third eye, she can easily make out the shape of Satan's Vectors.

Satan plops the soul-stones in each of the other Emperor's hands. Berith eyes hers suspiciously. "What do I do with this? Now that I have it in my grasp, I find myself wondering if it isn't another one of your traps."

Satan shrugs. "Just pop it in your mouth and swallow. Easy." He doesn't bother defending himself against her last statement.

Berith raises an eyebrow. With a shrug, she reaches up and throws the soul-stone to the back of her throat. To my surprise, Lucifer mirrors Berith's movements and swallows hers simultaneously. Both women seem eager to increase their power.

Lucifer smacks her lips. "Yech. Disgusting. Diablo, aren't you going to take yours, too?"

She turns to look at Diablo, who continues to sit on his legs. He eyeballs Lucifer and Berith silently for a moment. "I'm waiting to see if Satan's tricking us. How do you feel?"

Lucifer cocks her head. "Hmm. Well, there's something... bubbling up in my stomach. It's as if... it feels like..."

The Emperor of Providence suddenly doubles over. She falls to her knees, and her eyes bulge out of her face. "Ahhh! Nnn, aahhh!!"

Half a second later, Berith loses her footing and face-plants the floor with a heavy WHUMP. She hits the ground like a sack of potatoes and curls into the fetal position.

Both of them start screaming. Their skin begins to boil and hiss. Gaseous fumes erupt from their bodies as the two female Emperors shriek, cry, and moan.

"Ahhh! Geeeuuuk!!"

Diablo stares in horror as his mate's skin pops and crackles like pine needles in a fire. Satan winces. Several lower-ranked demons take a few steps back, their eyes wide as saucers.

A full minute passes, then a second and a third.

Soon, Berith and Lucifer complete their transformation. Bloody patches of skin finish healing and regenerating as the transformation process concludes. The room becomes so silent that one could hear a pin drop.

Berith pulls herself to her feet. Sweat drips from every corner of her body. "Shit. Shit..."

Despite the exhaustion wracking her body, she smiles gleefully. "You told us the transformation would hurt, Satan, but I don't think you went far enough. I'll never forget that pain... not for the rest of my life."

Lucifer pushes herself into a sitting position. Her arm trembles for a minute from the strain of lifting her body, but it only takes a few moments for her stamina to return.

"Yes. That hurt more than I imagined, but... I've felt worse. That's only the second time I've undergone such a transformation. I think the first was worse, but it's been a while."

"Couple thousand years," Satan replies with a nod. "Alright. Deebs? You gonna pop yours, or what?"

Both women turn to look at Diablo. The blood drains from his face as he lowers his eyes to the pebble in his hand.

"Err, well, how to put this..."

"Bloody Hell!" Lucifer says, throwing her hands in the air. "I should have made you take yours first, coward!"

"Hey, baby. Don't be like that," Diablo says. A drop of sweat drips down his face. "I don't like pain. You know that! And that whole transformation thing was... uh... not something I'm interested in experiencing."

Diablo glances around the room sheepishly as several other demons shake their heads in disbelief. Despite the agony the two Emperors endured, their mana has already started flowing similarly to Satan's.

Jealousy runs rampant among the lower-rankers as they think thoughts like, If only I could get my hands on a soul-stone, and I can't believe Deebs is turning down a free powerup!

Satan stifles a laugh. "Heh... I knew things would turn out this way, Deebs. That's just the kind of guy you are. You don't have to swallow it, but don't waste it, either. Give it to someone else... someone who needs the boost."

Berith's eyes widen. "Give it to me!"

"What?" Lucifer gasps. "No way! Why would you need another boost?! Stop trying to play for power again, you selfish little..."

Berith swivels to face her. "Fool! Have you grown soft after experiencing a little pain? Can't you feel the power swirling in our bodies?! Satan gave us the keys to his defeat!"

Lucifer blinks. A look of realization spreads across her face, followed by a smile. "Ohh, that's a good point."

Both of the women turn to look at Satan. Their mana collides with his, forming into a vortex of demonic energy on the floor.

Lucifer rises to a standing position. She and Berith grin wickedly as they eyeball Satan. Their gazes are like those of hyenas eying a fresh corpse.

Satan appears unphased. "Smart. Waiting until I gave you a boost before turning on me. Of course, I knew you would do that. If you choose to fight me here, please realize that I won't hold back this time. I'll kill both of you."

The Devil's absolute confidence gives both women pause. A flicker of doubt passes between them as they glance at one another, but their confidence comes roaring back a moment later.

"You'll kill us, eh?" Berith asks. "I've been meaning to ask, Satan... are you really immortal? There must be a limit to how many times you can regenerate."

No emotion passes over Satan's face. "I'm immortal enough. Enough to crush you flat before you make a dent, I mean. Don't do this, ladies. Don't prove me right. I'd like to think you understand the difference between us, even after getting a little boost."

"Little? Hah!" Lucifer guffaws. "I'm ten times more powerful than before. I don't like how you look down on me, Sat-"

"LUCIFER!"

A male demon howls at the top of his lungs from the rear of the room. Satan, Lucifer, Berith, Diablo, Bael, and all the others present turn to gaze at the one who spoke.

From the shadows, a demon with robes covering every inch of his body hobbles out, leaning heavily on a gnarled staff. His red eyes glow beneath his hood, but in the flickering torchlight, it proves hard to make out the details of his face.

"Oy," One of the grunts whispers. "No way, izzat...?"

"Yeah, looks like 'im," Another imp mutters. "I thought he died."

"He's a legend," A nearby grunt whispers.

The newcomer shambles into the room, each step slow and methodical as he picks his way forward. After a moment, he raises his hand and pulls back his hood.

"Agares?" Lucifer's eyes widen. "It can't be..."

Agares, now a shell of his former self, stares listlessly at the Emperor of Providence. Anger smolders in his eyes. His skin, wrinkled and saggy, rests loosely on his bones. His hair, now a dirty grey color, is nowhere near its former black luster he had the last time I saw him. Even his horns are smaller. He appears to be at the level of a Lord, which surprises me. I didn't know Demons could lose their power and fall backward in the demon ranks.

"Well, well, well," Agares whispers. "If it isn't my favorite demoness, the Queen of the Damned, herself. You're acting high and mighty these days, Lucifer. Shall I take a bow before your awesome power?"

Lucifer's expression darkens. She fidgets uncomfortably. "Th-that isn't necessary..."

"Why not?" Agares continues. "You've done so many good things for everyone here. If not you, then before whom should I bend the knee?"

Satan narrows his eyes. He glances from Lucifer to Agares and back again as he tries to understand the dark history they share.

"Agares, uh, it's been a while," Satan says. "I got back a couple of years ago. Didn't know you were still alive. I thought you died at some point after I left."

Agares eyes soften as he turns his head toward Satan. "No, I still walk amongst the living. Healthy? No. Virile? Not in the slightest. Even walking is a chore for me, of late."

Bael smiles widely. He saunters over to Agares and rests a hand on the old-demon's back, though I get the impression Agares only looks old due to what Lucifer did to him. "I thought you said you were gonna keep your distance? You sly dog!"

Agares forces a smile, but it seems disingenuous. After a moment, it fades away. "I planned to keep quiet, but seeing Lucifer's greed threaten our people yet again, I cannot rest on my laurels."

Satan's ears perk up. "Hmm? Greed? Elaborate."

Diablo turns to face Satan. His eyes rest on Lucifer for a moment, but he quickly averts his gaze. "Satan, do you remember the rescue operation to save Bael and me from Michael?"

"Yup."

"Well, after what Michael did to me, I was in bad condition. I couldn't walk. I was paralyzed. Lucy, uh... she had the bright idea to... to..."

Diablo pauses. His words become heavy with guilt as Agares' gaze fixates on his back. "Well, she tried to copy Agares' reptilian powers and transfer them to me, only... she..."

"She sucked me dry!" Agares yells. His eyes bolt open, and he jabs a finger accusatorially at Lucifer. "That woman took everything I had, everything our progenitor gave me!! She left me a husk of my former self, only to later proclaim herself the leader of demonkind. Filthy, wretched...!!"

Agares' tongue flicks from his mouth several times in the span of a few seconds, something I quickly realize must be a representation of his emotions... and his reptilian self.

Satan leans back in his throne. "I see. And now she wants to do it again. Greedy, indeed."

Murmurs go up among the demons present. Artorias and Barbatos watch from the sidelines. The Lord of Iron shakes his head in disgust. "Nyeh! Always knew she was a piece of work. See, bro? That's why you shoulda stuck with Valac. He only made us stronger! No sucking going on with him, no sir!"

Artorias crosses his arms. "Lucifer did many good things for demonkind. One or two bad acts don't invalidate the good."

Barbatos rolls his eyes. "Nyeh! Of course, you'd defend her."

Lucifer's guilty expression fades. Anger replaces it as she raises her head to glare daggers at Agares. "Maybe what I did was unethical, but I saved Diablo's life! He might have stayed trapped in that bed forever without your regenerative powers! Not to mention that your transformation enabled Bael to become the Balrog!"

Once again, looks of surprise spread through the crowd. Artorias's jaw slackens. "What? Lucifer took Bael's Balrog Form from Agares? Even I didn't know that."

"Makes sense," Barbatos mutters under his breath. "The whole transforming thing, anyway. Nyeh! I wonder what I'd turn into if I could get some of that power, eh?"

Artorias smacks his little brother over the back of the head. "Quiet! I'm trying to listen."

Bael rests his hands on his hips. "Big friggin whoop, Lucifer. So what if I can transform into a monster? I'm as much of a danger to everyone here as I am to the angels! If I get my way, I'll never transform again."

"You saved countless lives!" Lucifer retorts. "Because of you, Hercules-"

"I killed a bunch of my friends!" Bael howls. His usual calm, snarky facade shatters. The Duke of Pain takes a menacing step toward Lucifer. His eyes bolt open, and he snarls like a wild animal at her. "Don't talk down to me, you fuckin' bitch. I nearly killed little Barbatos, Artorias, you, and a bunch of others! I lost control! What good is a badass transformation if I end up killin' my allies?!"

Lucifer balks, and gets taken aback by his words. "Well, I... I don't... know..."

Bael takes a step backward and returns to Agares' side. After a few moments, he forces himself to simmer down. "Tch. Don't play like you're the savior of demonkind. Agares didn't deserve what you did to 'im. There were other possibilities for Deebs, but you didn't take things slow. You were in such a rush to save your sweetie that you nearly killed one of our best warriors."

Bael pauses.

"No offense, Deebs. I don't blame you or anything."

Diablo nods. "None taken."

Lucifer's former bravado vanishes. She bows her head and sighs, unable to come up with a counterpoint to Bael and Agares' words.

With the Emperor of Providence down, Berith loses her nerve, too. She crosses her arms and sneers at Satan. "Fine. You win this round."

"I always win," Satan says with a smile. It seems half-hearted.

Diablo rolls the soul-stone around in his hand. After a few moments, he groans. "Ugh. You know what? It's someone else's time to shine."

Diablo jumps to his feet. He spins on his heel and flicks the soul-stone to Bael. The Duke of Pain reflexively snatches the black pebble out of the air, but it takes him a moment to realize he caught it. "Huh? What's this about?"

"I don't want it," Diablo mutters. "You take the stone, Bael. If you swallow it, you'll become an Emperor. Satan's right. We need all the firepower we can get for the coming war."

Bael balks. "Huh?! I didn't ask for this! Don't go spouting off on your own! Take it back!"

Bael flings the stone back at Diablo, who snatches it out of the air. "You misunderstand. I don't deserve this stone. I've received too many handouts, already. You take it. You're our strongest warrior. If you become an Emperor..."

Diablo trails off. He flings the pebble at Bael, who scowls as he catches it again. "Knock it off!"

Barbatos jumps forward and waves his hands. "Ooh, ooh, if neither of you wants it, gimme gimme! I'll take a free power-up!!"

Bael and Diablo simultaneously glare at Barbatos. "Shut up, runt!"

Barbatos's ears flatten. He slinks back to his brother's side. "Sheesh! Alright, alright... just saying..."

Bael returns his gaze to Diablo. "I don't need a power-up, Deebs. I'm plenty strong. I'll become an Emperor by killin' angels and kickin' ass. That's what I do. If you're too scared to pop this little shitball down your throat, then someone else ought to get it."

Two seconds later, Bael turns to Agares. He grabs the withered old man's hand and slaps the soul-stone in his palm. "There! You take it, Agares! You need it more'n any of us. Besides, we owe ya."

Diablo smiles. "Ohh, great idea!"

Satan nods. "I like the sound of that."

Agares stares at the pebble in his grasp. "You... you want me... to..."

"No worries," Bael says, gently patting his friend's back. "You deserve it, buddy."

The old demon stares at the soul-stone for several seconds. "Hmm. Well, I can't say the idea doesn't sound appealing. Very well! I'll do it."

With a shrug, Agares swallows his soul-stone.

Several seconds pass, and nothing seems to happen. Finally, dark energy begins swirling around the old man's feet. The demons nearby lean forward and gasp as his horns rapidly extend two, possibly three inches upward. Agares clutches his chest and swoons for a moment, but reorients himself a moment later. Unlike the two women, his skin doesn't crackle and boil, nor does he suffer agonizing, wracking pain throughout his body.

Satan rubs his chin. He watches as the last trickles of dragon energy finish boosting Agares' demonic power. Hmm. Since Agares was a Duke before, his body already adapted to a higher power level. The dragon's energy won't affect him like it did the girls and me. Lucky.

The Devil shifts his gaze to Diablo. "It's probably for the best you didn't take that pill, chum. You don't have a lot of wiggle room to reach the peak of your power. Agares will be a far more valuable addition to the battlefield."

Agares flexes his arms. A somber look passes over his face as he finally comprehends the power he's regained. "It has been millennia since I walked without using my staff. I... I almost forgot what it felt like to move without strain."

The old man blinks, and for a moment I can almost spot tears building in his eyes. They quickly vanish as he wipes them away.

"Hear me now, my brothers and sisters. Satan is our rightful leader. He has many faults, and he has blundered many times, but never will any of you hear me state that his heart was in the wrong place. Compared to him, Lucifer and Berith are plagues upon our people. Their desire for power at any cost will only lead us to ruin. The last thing I want is for more of my brethren to suffer due to greed and incompetence. Better to die fighting than to live as withered husks."

Bael nods along to Agares' words. "I've got somethin' to add. Satan's smart. Like, really smart. I hate chicken-shits, and every one of you knows that. I won't respect anyone who suggests limp-wristed battle tactics against the angels. If anyone's got a problem with Satan, they've gotta go through me. No back-talkin' or I'll stomp ya like the maggots you are. Understand?!"

Hardly has Bael finished before all of the demons nearby begin nodding in unison. They smile nervously, unwilling to say anything in protest.

Barbatos shrugs. "Pft. Whatever. Satan, shmatan."

Satan watches and waits as the room quiets down.

"Thank you, Bael. Now that we've finished the pleasantries, I'd like to lay out my plans for the extermination of angelkind. That is, unless Lucifer and Berith have any complaints...?"

The Devil pauses to shoot a meaningful look at the female Emperors. They both lower their gazes, unable to offer a counter.

"No... go on," Berith mutters. "Like I said... you win this round."

Lucifer clenches her fists, but in the end, she too can only nod along and agree with Berith.

Satan might be the brains of demonkind, but Bael is the muscle, and Agares the heart. With their backing, Satan's claim to the throne gains legitimacy. The other Emperors haven't a chance.

"Alright," Satan says, as he leans forward. "Here's my plan."

Hercules, the lone Titan with the ability to manipulate souls, sits on a tree stump. His glowing eyes give him the appearance of staring blankly at the ground, but a few seconds of observation reveal that he is merely deep in thought. He rests his chin on his hands, and his elbows on his legs. He reminds me of a famous Roman statue; The Thinker.

Heaven's light, omnipresent as always, shines upon him from every direction. So bright is it that the enchanted steel bars above and around Hercules cast no shadows across the ground. There can be no darkness when light without a source shines from every angle. His cell, with all its rich tapestries and comfortably adorned bed, appears just as isolated as he does.

Hercules blinks. He raises his head, and his eyes cease their glowing.

"Father."

Only now do I turn to follow Hercules' gaze. Towering above the fifty-foot-wide cell, planted against the side of a mountain, King Zeus stares at his son quietly.

"Hercules. I've come to deliver some wine. It's from your mother."

Zeus opens up his fist to reveal three small animal-skin flasks, each one bulging from the delicious juices sloshing about inside.

Hercules shakes his head and resumes staring at the ground. "I do not want any... indulgences. Is that the only reason you've come?"

Zeus blinks. His eyes close and open slowly, deliberately. With a long sigh, he leans over and places the flasks on the door to Hercules' cage.

"I do not enjoy seeing my beloved son in such a state," Zeus says. "If you had obeyed the ancient traditions-"

"Don't speak to me regarding tradition," Hercules murmurs, interrupting his father. "I held demonkind's lifeblood in my hands. Had you assisted me during the battle, rather than cowering and hiding, we would have slaughtered them like rats. No, instead, you chose to look upon me with disdain. Because my father betrayed me, we lost our chance to eradicate the one who killed Megara."

Zeus narrows his eyes. "We? Our? That blood-debt was yours, Hercules. You went too far. You tapped into the unholy power of soul manipulation to bring death upon Satan. In the end, you failed, as did all before you who also-"

"I failed because of you!" Hercules yells. He raises his head to snarl at his father. "You betrayed me! Satan still draws breath because you care more for those rotten traditions than your own son!"

Zeus doesn't flinch. "There is much you don't know, my child. Traditions are borne to avert danger and catastrophe. You are not the first soul manipulator among the Titans, and I can only hope you will be the last."

Hercules' expression darkens. "I ask again, father. Why have you come? Are you here to taunt me? To tell me I must apologize? To give up this power which nearly defeated all of demonkind?!"

For once, Zeus's stoic expression slips. For a moment, the Titan King's facade of power crumbles as his son glares at him with bloodthirsty intent.

"No... I... I only wished to see your face. The thought that my son languishes in the angel's custody does not put me at ease."

"My condolences for your loss," Hercules says, biting off his words. "You put me here, and now you pity me. Aren't you versatile."

Zeus looks away for a moment. When he returns his gaze to Hercules, he rebuilds the walls around his heart. "We've completed the move. All of the Titans have migrated to Heaven. We don't live far from here... so I can visit more often."

"I know," Hercules mutters. "My thrall has spoken of your flight from Earth. After the lashing that monster gave me, you ran with your tail tucked between your legs. We've lost everything. We can't even claim dominion over Earth anymore."

Zeus shakes his head. "It's not like that, son. Before, Valac terrorized us endlessly, day and night. We lost thousands and thousands to his scythe. I wished to move everyone together for our protection sooner, but once you confirmed his defeat, I seized the chance. Heaven is safe from demonkind. We will repopulate and return to take over our place on Earth, once again."

Hercules doesn't reply.

He stares at his father for several seconds. Disappointment, anger, guilt, and a range of other emotions pass over his face.

When Hercules next opens his mouth, his voice cracks.

"We could have had it all, father. Everything. Why did you forsake me? Why did you leave me to battle the demons alone? Together, our power could have rent them in two. Now I sit here, an enemy of my people, all because you care more about our forefathers than your own son. Why? Why?!"

Zeus doesn't hesitate. "There are things in life more important than blood and love. I love you, Hercules, from the bottom of my heart... but the power you unleashed was one that might have threatened everyone you cherish. I must protect them from the darkness inside of you."

Zeus turns around. With his back to his son, he sighs. "Your mother misses you. She will come to see you next week. Please, for my sake, and for hers... don't lash out at her. You're her last remaining child. If you make your mother cry... I won't forgive you."

Hercules and Zeus both fall silent. After a moment, the young Titan nods. "I would never hurt my mother. I'm not a monster."

Zeus nods.

"I know."

The King of the Titans walks away. His footsteps send tremors through the ground even after he rounds the mountain and disappears from view.

Once more, Hercules' eyes begin to glow.

He nods as if speaking to someone unseen.

"Keep an eye on them. If you're right... this will be my second chance. Our second chance. You're the last survivor, Jepthath. You're the key to everything."

Part 145: The War in Heaven

Recommended Listening

"They're coming."

Chester, leader of the Outer Defense Corps, stares into the distance with his hawk-like vision. The trees of the forest sway back and forth erratically as if giants were shoving them aside. However, the distant rumble of tens of thousands of feet slapping against the dirt betrays the subtle difference.

"Hold steady," Uriel says. The Archangel of Protection lands beside Chester and narrows her eyes. "Prepare for battle. I want everyone armed and ready in five minutes. The Burrowers are sure to attack from below, so get eyes in the sky and ready the archers. If even one bloodskin pops his head up..."

"We will separate it from his body," Chester replies. A look of determination passes over his face. "Damn. I pleaded to the Creator that Camael's divination would fail. Naturally, her visions always come to pass."

Several angels behind Chester and Uriel begin shouting as they realize what's happening. Scouts fly forward to gauge the size of the enemy army, while messengers rush toward Mount Sinai to alert the inner forces of Heaven.

Uriel purses her lips. "My sister did not tell us what the result of this battle would be. Either she doesn't know, or..."

"...or the answer is not one we would like to hear," Chester says, finishing Uriel's sentence.

"Do not dwell on the negative possibilities," Uriel murmurs. "We are angels. We will win, as we always have."

"Uriel!" A female voice cries out in alarm from above. Before Uriel can raise her head, Sophia, one of the Valkyries, lands nimbly beside her. The other three follow a moment later. Hyacinth, Penelope, and Catherine.

The sounds of their feet lightly impacting the ground cause Uriel to turn and face them.

"The demons are coming!" Sophia continues, her voice raising an octave. "There are so many of them! What should we do?"

"Don't worry," Penelope says. The gigantic, dark-skinned angel rests her hand on Sophia's shoulder. "What harm will demons bring upon us when our teacher is here? Uriel might wipe them out before we even see them."

Catherine nods. She traces her fingers through the air to form magical letters. We must not allow the demons to enter Heaven.

Hyacinth blows a strand of long, white hair out of her face. "Psh. Whether it's one bloodskin or a million, I'll kill them before they can close the distance."

After speaking, Hyacinth motions with her hands to summon her elementally enchanted bow. It appears in her grasp like a weapon stolen from ghosts. A faint, high-pitched whistle emanates from the wind-based implement as the air spins around rapidly to create its semi-solid form.

Hyacinth pushes past Uriel, summons an arrow created from the air, aims, and fires.

THOOM!

The projectile fires faster than a cannonball. A sonic boom erupts from the front of Hyacinth's bow as the arrow sails into the forest. A distant explosion reaches the sister's ears a few moments later as a tree begins to topple to the side.

"Hmph. Three demons dead, infinity more to go," Hyacinth says, a deadpan expression on her face.

Uriel smirks. "Rash, and always raring to go. That's what I love most about thee. Come on, sisters! Do not allow Hyacinth to have all the fun!"

Sophia's eyes sparkle at the word fun. "Y-yeah! Let's go! The first one to kill a thousand demons gets one of my home-made cookies!"

Penelope grins and rolls her eyes. "Pass, but don't think I'll give thee a free win, either."

Catherine's expression darkens. She unsheathes the Sword from Heaven from her belt and summons Camael's tower shield as well. Using the tip of her weapon, she traces letters in the air. This is not a game. Do not lower thy defenses for even a second.

* * *

Minutes later.

Demons burst from the earth and spring at the waiting angels, only for enchanted and elemental weapons to slash and smash them where they stand.

"The Burrowers have arrived!" Chester yells. "Kill them before the others!"

More and more demon grunts erupt from the ground. Their tunnels provide a pathway for other low-ranked demons to spew forth like lava from a volcano. Even as the angels slice and dice the first arrivals, a sudden outpouring of Burners catches them off-guard.

"Ahh! There are too many!"

"Hellhounds! They brought Hellhounds!!"

Demonic wolves with a hundred eyes, iron-tearing claws, and abominable faces follow after the Burrowers. They pounce from the holes in the ground, along with the fire-types, and begin tearing and slashing at anything they can see with wings.

One angel swings his unenchanted sword at a Hellhound's neck, only for the animal to whirl around, catch the blade in its teeth, and bite down.

CRACK!

The blade snaps in half between the wolf's jaws. A moment later, the animal tears its angelic attacker to shreds.

"Jeremiah! No!!" Chester shrieks in rage and flaps his wings. He rushes the wolf with dizzying speed, swings his sword in an upward arc, and swishes it through the animal's neck. The Hellhound never gets a chance to react as its head falls cleanly from its body.

Tears boil in Chester's eyes. "Demon bastards!! I'll kill every last one of thee!"

* * *

Uriel and the Valkyries fan out. They attack demons wherever they find them, their grins and thrills wearing off after surprisingly little time.

Penelope slams her earthen greatmace down, splattering an enemy like a pumpkin. His entrails spray in every direction. "These demons are only grunts?! Where are the Lords? The Barons?!"

Sophia's bo staff twirls in her grasp. She jumps, flips, and kicks three demons at the same time, using razor-sharp water blades to decapitate all of them at once. "Jeez! The demons don't know when to quit!"

Hyacinth flaps her wings and soars into the air. She aims her bow and begins firing rapidly at the demons below as if it were a machine-gun.

Swish swish swish swish! Boom boom boom boom!

Several arrows fly out only instants apart and impale the heads of four demons. The wind-arrows hit the ground with explosive force, collapsing several tunnels beneath the angel's encampment.

Suddenly, Hyacinth's heart skips a beat.

"Over there! I sense several strong presences!"

Hyacinth's razor-sharp eyes pick out three demons with combined mana signatures higher than any other demons that have yet appeared.

An Emperor, a Baron, and a Lord.

Berith, the Emperor of Backstabbing, arrives alongside Vepar, the Baron of Toxicity, and Orias, the Lord of the Moon. Orias pulls his hood a little lower and grumbles.

"Damn. Spotted already."

Berith smirks. "I'm an Emperor at my peak. Don't worry, Orias. I'll protect you if you're that scared."

Orias's shoulders sag. "I'm not scared, but it's a pain in the ass, having to fight. If I'm here, that means I'm not digging out gems... wonderful, beautiful jewels..."

Lower-ranked demons run past their superiors, gleefully throwing themselves into the fray as they rush to kill angels as quickly as possible. While the crowd flows around her, Berith scowls. "I can't say I enjoy your proclivity for colored rocks. If you're not going to fight, stay out of my way."

"No. I'll go..." Orias mutters. "...But know that I do so hesitantly."

"Right," Berith grunts.

While the two of them have a quick spat, Vepar clenches her fists together.

I'm the last of the original demons who obtained Leviathan's power. Despite that, I'm still only a Baron. I must prove myself today and ascend to the rank of Duke. My pride demands it!

Vepar runs forward, leaving the other two behind in her dust. Berith spins on a dime to face her. "Hey! Don't run off on your own, insect! Bah, foolish Baron."

Berith's words fall on deaf ears. Thanks to the speed and power increase afforded by the rank of Baron, Vepar easily outpaces the lower-ranked demons around her. She fires gas from her feet and leaps into the air, using the fumes like jet boots. Despite the vapor pouring upon the demons below her, none of them suffer any ill effects thanks to her using non-toxic gas.

Vepar blasts through the air and races toward Hyacinth. The dark-skinned Valkyrie hardens her eyes and quickly fires three arrows at the Baron of Toxicity.

Whiff whiff whiff!

Vepar transforms into a cloud of gas, allowing the arrows to sail through her harmlessly. She reforms a second later and lunges her poisoned nails toward Hyacinth's face.

WHAM!

Something big and heavy smashes into Vepar from below, flinging her up into the sky. Penelope, positioned on the ground below her sister, gives Hyacinth a thumbs up. "Watch yourself up there!"

The pillar of rock sent flying from the ground knocks the wind out of Vepar, but she manages to reorient herself in midair, transform into poison gas, and drop to the Earth's surface. She lands amidst total carnage as demons and Hellhounds tear through the angels, along with goblins and a few scattered orcs. The orcs appear to be new creations of Lucifer's, since they weren't around during the battle against Hercules a few years before.

One orc raises a club above his head and roars like an animal. "Grooohhh!! Kill these angels! Rip off their wings! Sever their heads!!"

The nearby orcs howl together. "Grohhhh! Sheol give order! We obey!!"

Sheol, the head orc, leaps atop a nearby Hellhound and rides it like a horse. His powerful legs wrap around the wolf's gut, allowing him to use his club freely as the animal rips and tears apart all in its path.

Vepar gives him and the others only a fleeting glance before turning her rage toward Penelope. The seven-foot-tall giantess brings down her earthen warhammer to splatter two demons at once. Her weapon smashes through them and hits the ground with a metallic WHANG, sending an earthquake in every direction. Guided by the Valkyrie of Earth's power, dozens of rocky pillars erupt nearby, each one in the shape of a fist. They catch many demons unaware and uppercut them, shattering their jaws. Meanwhile, others manage to dodge only by the skin of their teeth.

"She's the one who hit me," Vepar hisses, narrowing her eyes. "Nobody deprives me of a kill!"

Vepar jumps forward and lands on her hands and feet. She darts left and right, weaving between various demons and angels as they punch, kick, and slice one another to pieces. Scythers bring down their bladed limbs to cut off the arms and legs of various angels, while big, brutish-looking demons use their giant bodies to create formidable walls of flesh and muscle and bring them down upon the angels.

Vepar narrows the gap between herself and Penelope. The instant she arrives in striking range, Vepar pauses for a split second to weave hand signs. "Kss, nobody humiliates me!"

A cloud of neurotoxins erupts from her mouth, affecting demons and angels alike. The neurotoxin induces hallucinations in all who inhale it, and the effects are instantaneous.

"Eeeyaaah!!" One female angel shrieks in terror as the demons around her seem to transform into ghastly, melted-flesh abominations. Those same demons shrink from her in fright as she seems to triple in size and loom over them like a Titan King. Both sides erupt into chaos and screams of panic, their voices only adding to the chaos and confusion.

Penelope gasps as she inhales the toxins. Without understanding what's happened, her heart skips several beats as the demons she was gleefully ripping apart only moments before turn into monstrous fiends, incalculably more horrifying than before, while her brothers and sisters begin to appear like Valac's undead angels, the Undying.

"W-what manner of devilry...?!"

Penelope's eyes widen with fear as she shakily tries to fend off the attacks of the abominations around her. One melted-looking ghoul jumps at her, but when she hits it with her mace, its entrails spray all over her golden armor, sending waves of disgust up her body.

"C-Creator, guide me! Guide me!!"

Vepar grins evilly. She charges at Penelope and leaps atop her back. The Baroness rakes her Valkyrie opponent with her poisoned nails, aiming for the exposed flesh on the back of her neck.

"Ahhh!!" Penelope yells in fright and swings her mace around, trying to shake Vepar off. "Help! Help!! Something's on me! It's on me!!!"

Vepar's poison proves to be fast-acting. Within seconds, Penelope's movements slow to a crawl. Her veins turn green, then purple, and finally black.

"H-huh... hurts.. g-get it... get it off..."

Penelope stumbles forward and faceplants into the ground. Vepar transforms into her gaseous form at the last second and materializes nearby, smirking all the while.

"Stupid little birdie. That's what you get for ambushing the great Vepar! Ehehehe..."

Suddenly, footsteps!

The light pitter-pattering of feet is Vepar's only hint as to Sophia's arrival. The Valkyrie of Water swings her bo staff down against Vepar's back and catches the Baron off-guard. She slams Vepar into the dirt and grinds her face against a pile of rocks.

"Get your hands off my sister, you stinky, dirty, poo-poo head!"

Sophia yells at Vepar and spins her staff around in her hands. Before Vepar can react, a torrent of water materializes in midair and impacts her flank with the force of a hundred firetruck hoses. A veritable Niagara Falls strikes Vepar with enough intensity to crush her bones and sweep all the nearby demons and angels off their feet.

Penelope's body starts to float away under the summoned river, but Catherine flies down, grabs her, and lifts off with one of Penelope's arms over her shoulder.

Too dangerous, Catherine writes with her sword, as she flies up to Hyacinth. These demons came prepared.

"Don't give up!" Hyacinth yells. "The demons aren't the only ones who foresaw today's battle."

As an afterthought, she adds, "What happened to Penelope?"

Her battle. Thou did not see?

"I'm a little busy up here."

As if to punctuate her words, Hyacinth fires three more wind-arrows at a few demons who managed to regain their footing amidst the sudden floodwaters. Their heads vanish, and their bodies fall over, dead.

Penelope poisoned. One of the demonesses. Heal her. I'll assist Sophia.

Catherine passes Penelope off to her sister, and Hyacinth quickly wraps one arm around her dying sister's waist. "Where are the other healers?"

They're waiting in Heaven. Thou art the only one out here.

"Tch. My healing isn't the best… but I'll do what I can."

Catherine forces a smile. A moment later, she lunges to the Earth below, where Vepar has just finished regaining her footing.

"Damned filthy stinking pigeon," Vepar hisses, as she glares at Sophia, standing atop the foot-deep floodwaters. "Denied a kill twice in a row! Gah!! How infuriating!"

Catherine splashes into the water behind Vepar, making the demoness realize the two Valkyries have flanked her from the front and back.

Catherine raises her shield, hops out of the makeshift pond, and flaps her wings. She accelerates from zero to sixty in the blink of an eye and bull-rushes the Baron of Toxicity, while Sophia fires several water bullets at her as well.

Vepar starts to snap her fingers and activate her mist-body form, but her hands won't work properly. An instant too late, she realizes one of her thumbs must have broken when Sophia pile-drove her into the ground. "Gah! Shi-"

She doesn't get to finish cursing. Catherine rams her from the back at the same time as Sophia's bullets pierce her from the front. Vepar barely manages a gasp as Catherine flings her off her feet and shoves the Baron of Toxicity beneath the floodwaters.

Vepar's vision spins and whirls.

Can't… focus… water? Am I underwater?! M-must get up… can't breathe…

A boot presses against her back. Catherine stomps her foot into the water and holds the Baron of Toxicity down, raises the Sword from Heaven, and starts to stab it toward her back.

The world around Catherine slows to a crawl. Compared to the movements perceived by lower demons and the other Valkyries, her adrenaline enables her to envision the world around her as a series of still images.

Her sword crawls toward Vepar's exposed back. Sophia grins eagerly at the sight of Penelope's attacker nearing death. Hyacinth retreats to the safety of Mount Sinai.

And, from beneath the water, five tendrils of shadow begin to emerge.

A surprise attack!

Catherine perceives the movement of the shadows, taps her foot against the mud beneath her feet, and leaps backward. A moment later, five shadow-lances stab the spot where she was just standing. Had she moved even slightly slower, she would have died a gruesome death.

Who attacked me?!

Aided by the adrenaline coursing through her veins, Catherine's eyes dart around and pick out a hundred demons standing in the water nearby. None of them appear to be the culprit.

Catherine flaps her wings and hovers in the sky. A moment later, Berith materializes atop Vepar. She reaches into the water and pulls the Baron of Toxicity up by her neck. "Imbecile! I told you not to rush in blindly! If you're so eager to die, perhaps I should let that angel have her way with you!"

A flash of light snaps into existence beside Berith. Orias appears as if having stepped through an invisible portal. "Don't hurt Vepar. Satan won't like that."

Rage engulfs Berith's face. "Don't tell me what to do, little Lord! Satan has no power here!"

Orias doesn't offer a counter-argument. "Give Vepar to me. I'll transport her to Belial. Can you handle the Valkyries by yourself?"

Berith's eye twitches. "Don't insult me. I've battled the Valkyries many times. They're vermin, like all the other chickens."

The Emperor of Backstabbing casually tosses Vepar to Orias like a sack of garbage. Orias catches the barely-conscious demoness with one hand, plucks a gem from his chest, and snaps his fingers. Another flash of light engulfs him, and he disappears without a word.

Catherine's eyes harden as she meets the gaze of the Emperor beneath her. Berith. She appears much more powerful than when we last fought.

Sophia flies over and hovers beside her sister. "What are we going to do? It took all four of us to push Berith away last time, and Penelope is down for the count!"

Do not give up hope, Catherine replies, drawing letters in the air. Wait for reinforcements. Hold on for now. Strike while the iron is hot!

"Right!"

In unison, both Valkyries flap their wings and dive toward Berith like eagles hungering for a field mouse. Berith motions with her hands, sucks into a shadow beneath the water, and disappears.

Sophia screeches to a halt. "Ahh! She's gone!"

There! Catherine points her sword toward a flicker of motion fifty feet away. The instant Berith starts to emerge, the Valkyrie of Fire falls upon her. Berith jerks back, startled, but quickly deflects Catherine's incoming sword.

Clang! Clang! Ting!

Even with Catherine's accelerated perception of time, Berith matches her movements with ease. Sophia stays in the rear and manipulates the water around Berith's feet, solidifying it like glue, but it proves no obstacle to an Emperor at the peak of her power. Berith easily jumps and shifts around, her feet moving through the hardened water as if it were air.

Whiff, whiff!

Catherine brings her sword down again and again, but twice in a row, she slashes through the Emperor's body without hitting anything. Berith grins greedily, and a glint appears in her eyes. "Can't keep up, little Valkyrie?! This is what happens when you try to take on an ascended Emperor!!"

WHAM!

Berith's fist moves impossibly fast. She batters it against Catherine's enchanted chestplate and sends the Valkyrie of Fire hurtling hundreds of feet backward. Her body transforms into a mortar shell as she plows through angels and demons in her path. Catherine skips across the water, tumbles, and twists, only to come to a sudden stop as she crashes into one of Penelope's fist-shaped stone pillars. It shatters on impact but still manages to stop her forward momentum.

Catherine blinks. She splashes into the water and tries to regain her vision, but stars dance in her eyes. After a few seconds, she manages a weak gasp for breath, but ends up swallowing water instead.

"Catherine!!" Sophia screams in fright. The pink-haired Valkyrie stares in horror at her sister's crumpled body as the water wraps around her like a flesh-devouring monster. She starts to fly toward her sister, but a fist formed from shadow rises from her feet and strikes her face.

Crunch!

Two of Sophia's teeth tear from their sockets. Berith's shadow-fist flings her a few feet into the air, where she lands in the water gracelessly, nearly breaking one of her arms when she hits the mud.

"Ah... ahhh... nnn..."

Sophia manages to pull herself up by sheer force of will, but a moment later, she crumples to her knees and clutches her arm as the rush of adrenaline wears off.

"Ho, ho, ho! So this is the might of the Valkyries?" Berith laughs, taunting her battered opponent. "All those times that the four of you held me back, but now you fall before me like an ant in a landslide! Have a taste of my awakened powers!!"

Berith lunges toward Sophia, who yelps in fright. Before the Valkyrie of Water can defend herself, Berith backhands her and sends her tumbling to the left. Sophia drops her bo staff and hits the water hard, sending waves splashing in the direction Berith slapped her.

Berith closes the newly created gap instantly. She grabs Sophia by her collar, and the petrified Valkyrie can barely manage a whimper before Berith begins toying with her.

Slap! Slap! Slap!

Over and over, Berith cackles gleefully while battering the helpless woman held in her grasp. Sophia tries to raise her one functioning arm to defend herself, but Berith smacks it aside, snapping it like a twig.

"Bahaha!!" Berith cackles. "You should see the look on your face! I'm having the time of my-"

Berith doesn't get to finish her sentence.

A horrible, foreboding sense of danger is the only warning she gets before something taps her shoulder.

"What-?!"

Berith whirls her head around to look, and a summoned being comprised entirely of light drives a fist into her face.

WHAM!

Berith reflexively drops Sophia, as Uriel's summoned warrior knocks her end over end. Berith plows straight down into the makeshift lake and hits the ground hard enough to send every drop of water in the vicinity scattering to the furthest reaches of the Earth.

"W-w-wha...?"

Berith gasps in surprise as her eyes refocus. A moment later, she spots Uriel, the Archangel of Protection. Uriel wraps one arm around Catherine's waist and Sophia's as well. Beside her, two summoned angels stand, and above her, a cube and orb hover in the air.

"What awful timing. Hardly have I left for one minute before thou decided to show thy wretched face. It seems I failed to teach thee an adequate lesson the last time we fought, red rat."

Uriel hands her battered sisters to the female light construct. After cracking her knuckles, she summons a blood-red spear.

"I'm feeling a little aggressive today. I think I'll only use one spear this time... to draw out the pain."

Berith's teeth chatter for a moment as memories of all her past defeats come rushing back. However, she jumps to her feet and shakes off the ominous foreboding in her heart.

"Our battle won't go like it did last time, Uriel. I'm twice the demon I was before!"

Uriel smirks. "It doesn't matter if your power increases a hundred-fold. Against me, thou shalt always lose."

Despite the ominous pressure from Uriel's presence, Berith manages a smirk.

"Oh, I don't think so. Angelkind will fall, today, Uriel... and there's nothing you can do to stop us."

Uriel flaps her wings and rushes toward Berith. "Pretty words from a filthy SOW!"

Minutes earlier.

Shepherd flaps his wings slowly, lazily. The angel appears bored as he flies above the forest belonging to the demons.

It's become something of a ritual for him. Once a week, he leaves Heaven and soars toward the one place he feels at home, far away from the Damned, as he calls them.

Having long since been locked up in cages by the Archangels, the Undying are no longer a threat to the other angels. Still, Shepherd has grown used to flying out to visit his Animus friend.

Shepherd spots the designated forest clearing, one that might normally be difficult to pick out from above, thanks to the densely packed trees around it. With only a thirty-by-thirty foot open space, it barely stands out from the forest around it.

The angel circles overhead twice, looking for danger. However, all he spots is Smealum, sitting quietly in front of a smoothed-over stump. With a nod, Shepherd dives to the ground and pulls up at the last moment, landing nimbly on one foot. The other touches down a split-second later, and he bows slightly to Smealum.

"Hello, brother! Look at what I've brought!"

Shepherd eagerly reaches into his pouch and procures a dozen blueberries, but unlike the ones on Earth, these seem to glow with an inner light, as if there were tiny lightbulbs contained within.

Smealum glances up from the apple held in his hand; one he appears to be half-heartedly biting. He doesn't seem to enjoy it much. "Oh! More divine fruit from Heaven, eh? You're too kind."

The black-skinned demon holds out a hand and licks his lips. Shepherd hands over the bounty and nods eagerly. "I picked the best ones, just for thee!"

Despite his ravenous hunger, Smealum forces himself to pop the berries in his mouth slowly, one at a time. He rolls them around, splits them with his tongue, and allows the juices to spill around every corner of his mouth. A shudder goes down his back after the first one bursts. "Damn. I can't get enough of these. No wonder you hate Earth-fruit."

Shepherd plops down on the other side of the stump. "Hah! I am glad thou hath finally grasped the differences between our realms! Food from Earth is like ash in my mouth."

The two comrades fall silent as Smealum spends several minutes tossing berries in his chaw. He smacks his lips loudly, unable to control himself. Waves of pleasure flow through his mind, almost as if he were ingesting addictive drugs.

Shepherd clears his throat. "Erm. Come to think of it, thou art a demon. Why doesn't fruit from Heaven cause thee any pain?"

It takes Smealum several seconds to respond. He has to restrain himself from putting another berry in his mouth. "Should they? Aren't these just berries?"

"Nay. They are the same fruit as any grown on Earth, but Heaven's Light infuses all plants with holy energy. Frankly, they should be toxic to demons."

Shepherd blinks. "Hm. Maybe I'm not a demon, after all."

"Hah!" Shepherd laughs. "That's right! Thou art an honorary angel! After all, thy pacifism stands apart from the rest of thy blood-sucking-"

Shepherd stops himself from continuing. His smile fades almost instantly, and he lowers his head.

"My apologies. I did not intend to slander thy people. It... it just... the words came from my mouth."

Smealum purses his lips. "I know your feelings regarding demons are especially intense. However, by now, you've surely seen the good in my people. Why do you still hate them with every fiber of your being?"

Shepherd continues to stare at the ground. Questions and uncertainty swirl in his mind.

"I've met three other demons besides thee, brother. Two of them hesitantly accepted my presence. The other one, the demoness, she seemed nearly as pure-hearted as thee, but... two demons, out of millions..."

"Belial," Smealum says, nodding. "Yes. She is a kind soul. Willing to fight, but never to end another being's life. Torn between her peaceful instincts and the pressure exerted by other demons, she has yet to reach enlightenment. Still, I know what you mean. Most demons can only conceive of a path involving violence and murder... but I know there is another way."

"How am I to trust demons when violence is their god?" Shepherd asks. "Even amongst themselves, demons rip one another to shreds. If that is how they treat their brothers and sisters, what lengths will they go to defeat their enemies?"

Smealum and Shepherd shake their heads in unison. The Animus sighs, as he stares at the last remaining berry in his palm. "Sometimes, even I wonder if a path to peace is impossible. Perhaps demons are doomed to die because of their greed."

The Animus pops his final berry in his mouth, but unlike before, he barely seems to notice its incredible taste. His heart burdens him too much to enjoy such a trivial pleasure.

* * *

A noise in the forest catches both brother's attention.

A few seconds later, two glowing red eyes peek out of the foliage — an unknown demon steps into the clearing, a massive grin plastered on his face. Behind him, two more demons emerge. One of them appears to be a scyther, while the other is a Brute, one with a thick, tree-trunk-like body reminiscent of Bael. The demon in front, however, appears to be a Lord or a Baron, with decently long horns and an evil glint in his eyes.

"Kekeke, I told you I smelled an angel! Well, well, well, what have we here? Smealum, is that you?"

Smealum jumps up, as does Shepherd. "Hidan? Why... what are you doing here?"

"I should ask you the same thing, weakling," Hidan says. Smoke hisses from his mouth. "Today is the day we assault Heaven. You know the orders, yet you disobeyed our great Emperor and decided to laze about in this little meadow, like always. As for that fellow beside you, I wondered if the rumors were true, but... to think you'd be cavorting with the enemy..."

Hidan's animalistic eyes lock onto Shepherd. He grins ferally, exposing two prominent canine fangs.

Smealum walks over and places himself between Shepherd and Hidan. "Don't do anything stupid, Hidan. Leave. My brother is of no concern to you."

"Hah! Your brother? Now you have my attention! I was going to smack you around a bit to teach you a lesson, but maybe I'll just kill the both of you!"

Shepherd winces. Intense bloodlust erupts from Hidan and his cronies as the three of them greedily eye the two weaklings daring to stand up to them.

"Don't fight for my sake!" Shepherd says, pleading with his brother. "I'll fly us out of here!"

Smealum shakes his head. "These three have seen too much. If we run, they'll come after us on another day."

"How right you are!" Hidan says, tracing his fingers through the air. Electricity crackles in his grasp as he summons the faintest vestiges of his elemental power. "Your scent calls out like dung to a dire wolf! No matter where you go, I'll find you. Why not present your neck to me? I'll make your death painless, hehe."

"I've never killed anyone in my life," Smealum mutters under his breath. "But there are things one can experience worse than death. Make the first move, Hidan... if you dare."

The sudden change in atmosphere makes Shepherd's eyes dart from demon to demon as he tries to think a way out of the fight.

Smealum is barely a grunt! His horns are little more than circular bumps, while Hidan is a Baron! If that weren't bad enough, the other two look just as scary! He can't possibly win!

Hidan's eye twitches. A moment later, he falls onto his arms and pounces at Smealum. "Get 'im, boys!!"

A surge of light in Hidan's mouth is the only hint of the incoming attack. Smealum slaps his foot against the ground and dodges left, narrowly evading as the Baron vomits lightning at him.

"L-look out!" Shepherd cries. "To your l-left!"

The scyther pounces at Smealum from the direction he dodged. Smealum ducks at the last second, dodging a horizontal slash aimed at his neck.

So fast! Shepherd thinks to himself. I... I have to call for help!

Shakily, the angel starts to flap his wings, but before he can take off, the massive brute-demon jumps at him. "Where you think you're going, little birdie?!"

Wham!

A meaty fist crashes against Shepherd, strikes his unarmored chest, and plows him backward into the ground. Shepherd grinds to a halt and squeezes a few tears from his eyes.

Gah! M-my chest! Ribs... broken...

He tries desperately to suck in a breath, but all the air in his body seems more desperate to escape than to re-enter.

Smealum whirls to face his friend, but he can barely spare a glance before the Baron and scyther fall upon him for a second time. The two of them appear to be a team that has fought together many times in the past. Their movements, practiced to the point of perfection, betray no openings.

"We nearly killed an Archangel with this technique!" Hidan laughs, bragging as he charges another magic attack. This time, pinpricks of light appear across all ten of his fingers. A moment later, he fires multiple small bolts of electricity toward Smealum, who bends over backward to evade them. Unfortunately, the scyther swings the flat of his blade at that second, and slaps Smealum across the face, sending him spinning into a dizzying whirl. He flies away from Shepherd to the opposite side of the clearing and bangs his head against the bottom of a tree.

"Hahaha! You're even weaker than I expected!" Hidan cackles. "As expected from our resident pacifist!"

Smealum falls unconscious. Meanwhile, Shepherd screams as the Brute demon presses its boot against his back, grabs both of his wings, and pulls with all its might.

SHRRRIKK!

A horrifying sound of bone separating from entrails erupts from Shepherd's back. The angel opens his mouth to scream, but no sounds come out. A second later, he falls limp on the ground.

The Brute nudges him with his foot. "Heh, not birdie anymore. Now me the birdie!"

A stupid grin passes over his face. He turns around and holds up Shepherd's bloody wings, then flaps his arms. "Look, guys! Me stupid birdie now! Bahaha!"

"Kekeke! Good one!" Hidan says, cackling maniacally. "Just for that, you can take his life! This bastard here is mine!"

He points toward Smealum, but at that moment, Smealum's unconscious body vanishes.

Something smashes down on Hidan's outstretched arm with the weight of a windmill. His arm instantly rips from his socket and crashes into the dirt.

Hidan blinks in surprise as agonizing pain explodes in the spot where his arm used to be.

"Eeeyyaahh!! Wh-what the fuck?! My arm! MY FUCKING ARM!!"

Hidan turns to look for Smealum, but a hammer-like fist hits the back of his head so hard that his vision goes black.

Wham!

Hidan plows into a tree head-first. He flops to the ground, and the other two demons stare at him in disbelief.

"Holy Hell! What just- was that Smealum?!"

They sweep their eyes around the forest, but once they spot Smealum, their terror turns to confusion. The Animus lays against a different tree from before, along with Shepherd.

The scyther blinks twice. "It... it wasn't Smealum? Who, then?!"

"Me."

From the darkness to the scyther's right, an impossibly deep voice growls out a single word. Shakily, both remaining demons turn to follow it.

Two pinpricks of white light stand out from the shadows of the underbrush. They rapidly intensify their luminosity, driving away the darkness like floodlights in a cave.

Eyes.

Two singular, glowing eyes.

"It seems you enjoy toying with those weaker than you."

Footsteps.

The solitary figure paces forward two steps.

Icy-cold dread washes through the blood of the scyther.

"No... no... the rumors were true... it's... it's that human. The cursed fleshbag!"

A man emerges from the shadows, wrapped in swaths of black cloth. In his hand, he clutches a simple wooden staff, one which curls into an upside-down U-shape at the top.

"How will you react when the weak one is you, I wonder?"

The man vanishes. A moment later, the scyther's head does, too.

The Brute stands, frozen in place, as his friend falls to the ground, dead without knowing what hit him.

The human reappears mere feet from the final remaining demon, moving too fast for the Brute's eyes to follow.

"Like those before you, you'll perish without saying a word."

The Brute's head disappears.

Part 146: Demon's Deception

Recommended Listening

Uriel and Berith transform into living tornados. The Archangel of Protection spins Gae Bolg around her body three times faster than Sophia did her staff. The weapon slashes and stabs Berith dozens of times per second.

Swish-slash swish-slash swish-slash!

Ting, ting, whiff!

Berith engulfs her arm in hardened shadows. Even as Uriel presses her advantage, Berith digs her feet into the ground and deflects hundreds of spear attacks in the blink of an eye. Her hands move like lightning, making Uriel grin gleefully.

"Ohh! It seems you've gotten a little stronger since the last time we fought! I can almost tell the difference!"

"Don't mock me, you wretched chicken!" Berith screeches. She jerks her head to the side, narrowly avoiding Gae Bolg as the blood-red spear threatens to tear off a chunk of her face. Berith blinks her eyes, and a shadow-lance she prepared during a momentary lull in the battle lunges toward Uriel's back.

The Archangel instantly pivots around and backhands the shadow-attack, shattering it into a foggy mist. She resumes her unstoppable onslaught an instant later.

"Haha! Nice try! It's no wonder everyone refers to thee as the Emperor of Backstabbing! Thou art a foul rogue!"

Uriel switches to a one-handed style and begins focusing on rapid jabs and stabs. She attacks Berith from the front and right as she darts around, using her superior speed to flank and outmaneuver the demoness. With her free hand, Uriel conjures the elemental power of fire and enchants the tip of her spear, raising it to several hundred degrees.

Berith glares at Uriel as the superheated weapon nearly decapitates her several times within five seconds. "Getting serious now, are you? What's the matter? Have to bring out more power than usual against little old me?!"

"Not even!" Uriel cackles. "I only wish to end this farce quickly! There are so many bloodskins I'm dying to introduce to my spears!"

"What an excellent choice of words!" Berith quips, as she ducks another jab. "Your life will surely come to an end today, along with those of your precious brothers and sisters!"

Uriel's smile vanishes. "Thou hath quite the deathwish, threatening my sisters like that, little bloodskin. Let's end this. Now."

Suddenly, both light constructs appear at Berith's left and right flank. The female summons a bow and arrow made of light, while the male creates a sword and shield.

Uriel brings forth her golden spear, Gungnir. She swishes it around in her left hand, then swaps it with Gae Bolg to her right.

"I think I'll try wielding my beloved children like this for now, hehe..."

A drop of sweat drips down Berith's face as she instantly evaluates the threats around her.

It's now or never.

The instant Uriel starts to move, Berith claps her hands together. Gae Bolg swishes through the Emperor's neck, killing her instantly. Her body starts to fall backward, only to fizzle into ash.

Uriel's eyes widen in alarm. "What? That wasn't the real Berith?"

"You missed, little chicken!"

Berith's shadow clone disperses into the wind, while Berith's real body leaps from Uriel's shadow. She tackles the Archangel from behind, but before she can plunge her summoned shadow-dagger into Uriel's heart, the female light construct opens her head.

KSSEEW!

A blast of light magic fires from its face and pounds Berith's stomach, tearing her from Uriel's back. Berith splashes into the floodwaters and quickly melts into the shadow of a rock.

"Tch. Nice save, Unit Two!" Uriel says. "Unit One, guard my flank!"

The male construct nods. It jumps behind Uriel and presses its wings against hers.

From the depths of the foot-deep muddy floodwaters, two dozen shadow lances burst out, impaling Unit Two before she can react. Unit One deflects several lances with its shield and cuts down another with its sword, but a single spear slips past its defenses and impales the construct's stomach. It explodes into particles of light, leaving Uriel exposed.

The Archangel barely notices. She spends a few seconds batting away the deadly shadows as they fly toward her from every angle like the maw of a giant Venus Fly Trap. Berith dials up the intensity, but only manages to nick Uriel's arms once or twice.

Uriel leaps into the sky and bats away three more shadow-lances. "Gah! Come out and face me, impish bloodskin! Only a coward attacks from the shadows!"

Suddenly, a blob of blackness fires from behind Uriel's two levitating orbs. The softball-sized shadow, resembling a blob of ink, flies up at her with aimed precision.

"Shall thou never concede, bloodskin?!" Uriel says, lilting her voice. She smirks and spins her spear around, effortlessly slicing the shadow-ball apart before it can reach her.

However, her attack proves to be a huge mistake. As if popping a balloon, her spears burst the ball, detonating it like a grenade. Uriel gasps as a hundred tendrils of darkness spread out like a fishing net and wrap around her from every angle.

"By the Creator! What manner of- gah!"

The shadow-tendrils envelop her like an octopus grabbing a crab. Uriel's face turns blue as a staggering amount of force threatens to break her arms and ribs.

"Hahaha! I knew you'd fall for my trap!" Berith cackles, as she jumps out of the water, emerging from a shadow beneath the mud. "Your arrogance was your undoing, Uriel!"

Berith motions toward the Archangel of Protection, sending a dozen shadow spears from the water next to her toward the Archangel's head.

"Die!"

Whiff! SHIK!

Something flies down from the sky and rips through Berith's outstretched palm. Her hand tears from her body and slams into the floodwaters with a massive splash! A split-second later, her shadow-spears fall apart.

"Gaaaugh! Spawn of a...!!"

Berith jumps back just in time to avoid two elemental arrows, as Hyacinth and Penelope arrive on the scene, along with Sophia and Catherine. All four Valkyries appear refreshed and energized, having had their wounds healed somewhere safe.

"Curses! CURSES!!" Berith howls in pain. She clutches the stump where her hand was only a moment earlier and turns to scream in rage at the newcomers. "You damned Valkyries! I buried two of you, and yet you still stand?! Even Valac's undead wouldn't be so tenacious!"

Hyacinth fires several arrows at Uriel with pinpoint precision. Each one tears through the spindly black limbs of Berith's shadow-ball. Once enough of the tendrils snap, Uriel breaks free of the others.

Penelope, Catherine, and Sophia land beside their sister and pull her to her feet. Hyacinth stays back and readies her bow. The four Valkyries and lone Archangel quickly advance toward the Emperor of Backstabbing, but they keep a cautious distance as well.

"What now, little demon wench?" Uriel asks, an evil glint in her eye. "It's five on one, and it appears thou dost require a hand!"

Berith's breathing catches as she glances at the stump where her right hand used to be. "D-don't worry about me. I'll be fine. We have a healer too, one whose abilities surpass any of you!"

"That won't matter if thou fail make it back to him alive!" Uriel cackles. She summons her two light constructs behind Berith, cutting off the Demon Emperor's route of escape. "With only one hand, thy incantations will be significantly impaired. Any last words?"

FLASH!

A spark of light erupts next to Berith.

Orias, Lord of the Moon, reappears once again, but this time, his skin appears shiny and white. The midday sun gleams off his body, giving him the appearance of a living disco ball anywhere his skin exposes itself.

"Stick to the plan, Berith. You're not here to settle a score. I'll hold them off while you escape."

Berith whips her head to the left and glares at Orias. "Don't you dare order me around, little Lord! I'll defeat these five if it's the last thing I do!"

Orias's eyes flick toward Hyacinth, as she starts to draw her bow back. "You'll have an opportunity in the second wave. Stick to the plan. Besides, if they don't kill you, Satan will."

That gets Berith's attention. She tenses up at the mention of Satan and scowls angrily at Uriel. "Tch. Don't think I've finished with you just because of this interruption, Uriel. I'll have your head for breakfast tomorrow!"

With a flick of her wrist, Berith sucks into a shadow at her feet and vanishes. Uriel starts to grab for her, but the Archangel's movements prove too slow to close the gap.

"Gah! Fine, if the coward wants to run like a beaten dog, so be it! Sisters, tear this Lord to pieces! He won't be any trouble at all!"

Orias peeps out from beneath his hood, revealing that even his eyes have transformed into diamonds.

"We will see."

Across the battlefield, Belial slips and slinks between various combatants. Thousands of demons and angels crash against each other, with the former losing their heads to weapons, while the latter perish to claws and teeth. One female angel screams in panic as three ravenous grunts grab her by the arms and yank her to the ground. Her screams fall silent as a dozen more leap atop her and begin ripping her to shreds.

Belial pauses to watch. Her stomach churns at the sight of the barbarism on display. She considers trying to help, but already, she's too late. The woman has died.

Suddenly, three of the grunts begin to scream. They leap off the deceased angel and claw at their faces. Chunks of her flesh and muscle hang from their mouths. Their bodies seize up as the holy energy trapped in her body flows into them.

"Gaa!! Ahhh!! Burns! It fucking burns!!"

Two of the grunts fall backward and begin violently spasming, but the third one takes a few extra seconds to join them.

Artorias bursts out of the ground, sensing their distress. "Gah! You idiots! Don't eat any angels! You know the rule!"

The other grunts stare at him guiltily, and quickly run away, but the damage has already been done. The first three demons cease their screaming and fall silent as the life vanishes from their body.

Belial stares at the dead grunts.

I doubt I could have healed them. Even if I could... I wouldn't want to. What a brutal way to kill their enemy.

Artorias and Belial catch each other's eyes for a moment. He looks away, unable to meet her gaze. "Hurry up, Belial. Satan's plan hinges on you."

The Emperor of Passion nods. "Worry about yourself. There's no way I'll fail Satan when he needs me most."

Artorias returns the nod. A moment later, he dives underground, leaving the mangled angel corpse and her three attackers to cook under the sun.

Belial flicks her gaze around. Chester, leader of the Outer Defense Corps, cuts down three demon grunts at once, demonstrating his prowess at combat. When another attacks him from behind, Chester summons holy magic around his fist, forms an aetherial golden gauntlet, and spins around to deliver a brutal blow to his ambusher's face. The demon's head explodes, and he goes flying backward, unable to withstand Chester's might.

A hint of admiration creeps into Belial's eyes, but she quickly stifles it and slinks over to the dead angel female from before. The woman's face, though bloody, is still intact. Unfortunately, the same can't be said for everything below the chin. Her clothes are shredded, throat ripped out, and there isn't much left in her chest and waist areas either.

Belial flinches at the horrific brutality on display, but quickly steadies her mind. With a motion of her hands, the succubus heals the angel woman, repairing her body to perfection. Sadly, with her soul gone, not even Belial can revive her.

"You'll do," Belial whispers. "Sorry, but I'll be borrowing your face for a bit."

Two seconds later, Belial begins to sprout wings. Her clothing shifts and melts around her body, transforming into a set of fairly generic-looking robes like many of the female angels wear, minus the metal pauldrons and armor. Her skin shifts from red to white, and her eyes turn blue as well. Within seconds, she becomes a perfect facsimile of the dead woman.

The chaotic battle affords her a few seconds of transformation time unnoticed, but once she finishes, the demons around her quickly spot the 'angel' in their midst.

"Oi, there's a pretty one! She's mine!"

"Screw you! I saw her first!"

Two grunts rush toward Belial, their teeth bared. They're too hungry for angel flesh to realize the living and dead angels before them look identical.

Belial sighs. She flicks her gaze toward them, and a moment later, her fist whips out like a freakish octopus tentacle.

Wham! Wham!

Belial ass-blasts the demons and sends them flying into their comrades. The two grunts flop to the ground, unconscious, along with a couple of badly broken jaws.

"Sick, disgusting animals," Belial seethes. She jumps to her feet, adjusts her wings, and flaps hard.

Having never copied an angel's body, she manages to lift into the air, but falls to the ground a moment later. Her inexperience at flying proves to be her undoing, as she tumbles to the bloodied plain below.

"Shit!"

Belial nearly crashes into the dirt but manages to catch herself thanks to her incredible strength and agility. The Emperor of Passion flicks her eyes around and realizes several demons have spotted her flying over their heads.

"Damn! Get that sexy one over there!"

"Oh, I can't wait to wrap my tongue around those thighs!"

Belial gnashes her teeth as, this time, two dozen grunts, and even a couple Lords come barreling toward her.

"Fucking hell. You want a piece of me? Bring it."

Belial stretches her arms out and grabs the sword of a nearby dead angel, along with his shield. It doesn't appear she needs them, since her fists can annihilate an army, but an instant later, I realize why she wants them.

After grabbing the shield, she flings her arm toward the nearest attacker.

Whang!

The white-and-gold shield smashes against his face and shoves him back, transforming him into a living mace. Belial lifts the demon into the air with her stretchy arms, and slams him down on two more grunts. Then, she turns her sword sideways and swings the flat of it around like a frying pan.

Whap whap whap!

Over and over, she slaps the demons targeting her with ferocious strength, sending them hurtling to the left and right.

One of the Lords pauses. I recognize him as Barbatos, the Lord of Iron. "Uh, oh! Shit! B-Belial? Is that you?!"

She snarls at him. "I'm undercover, you fucking moron!"

Barbatos's face turns white as snow. After realizing he nearly got his ass beat by an Emperor, the Lord meekly takes a few steps back and holds up his palms. "Ehh, haha... m-my bad. I'm gonna just... go the other direction. Nyehehe..."

Without another word, the bumbling idiot turns and runs away, leaving Belial by herself.

Other demons glance toward her, but seeing the pile of unconscious demons nearby, they think twice and continue toward the main angel attack party.

"Shit. My cover might be blown," Belial mutters. "I'll need to move fast."

Belial's eyes dart around, and her perception of the world slows somewhat. She picks out a dozen paths through the demons nearby and mentally plots a route to the entrance of Mount Sinai. There, two Titan women stand, giant earthen maces in hand, waiting for any demons to come close.

Getting past those two won't be a problem, Belial thinks to herself. They won't be looking for an angel woman.

No, instead, her eyes fixate on Uriel and the Valkyries, as the five of them furiously battle a single Baron.

Orias, Lord of the Moon, snaps his fingers, summoning fireballs from his left hand. The sudden barrage of heat drives Penelope and Sophia back as he shreds the nearby landscape. Catherine rushes toward him, but when she swings her sword down and tries to lop off his head, it deflects off the diamond-skin protecting his body and slides to the ground, not harming him in the slightest.

"How many powers does this demon have?!" Uriel shrieks angrily. "He's only a Lord! How can he be this strong?!"

"Strength is in the eye of the beholder," Orias mutters, as he swings his fist around and smashes it against Catherine's chestplate. He knocks the Valkyrie backward, but she manages to stop herself in midair and land gracefully, thanks to her wings.

"Well, then I'd better slaughter thee before thou ascendeth any further!" Penelope yells. She runs toward Orias and swings her greatmace at him, but he backflips and dodges at the last second.

Belial bites her lip. Orias can't win against an Archangel and the Valkyries. I should help him. No! I can't risk it! I need to get inside Heaven. Without me, everything we're doing now will fail.

Shaking her head, Belial quickly darts through the demons nearby, using her astounding speed to transform into a blur they can't follow with their eyes.

Chester, fighting at the outer ring of the angel's defensive perimeter, stabs his sword through the head of a Scyther and ducks a fireball aimed at his head. He quickly aims two fingers at the fire-type demon attacking him and lets two bolts of holy energy fly. They impact the demon and knock him off his feet, but don't deal enough damage to kill him.

Sweat drenches Chester's face. "By the Creator! Where are our reinforcements?! Where are the Archangels?!"

Belial appears at his side, startling him. She quickly bats aside a demon with her shield and answers his question. "Brother! Uriel told me we need to sound the retreat! The other Archangels aren't coming! We're to hold off the demons inside the caverns, with help from the narrow corridors!"

Chester blinks in surprise. "What! Melody, I've heard nothing of this! Why would Uriel sound the retreat? We can still win!"

A look of suspicion appears in Chester's eyes, but at that moment, three more demons pounce at him. Not one to fall for surprise attacks, Chester swiftly spins around and decapitates the first two, then slams the third one into the ground with his fist of holy energy. The last one's head pops like a grapefruit, spraying the ground with demon entrails.

Belial, too, quickly ducks and dodges a scyther hellbent on her death. She knocks his bladed arms aside and smacks him across the face with the flat of her sword. He flies into the flood of other demons and sprawls on the ground.

By the time Belial returns her attention to Chester, his look of suspicion has increased. "Thou hath certainly improved with the blade, Melody! I didn't know thy skill had reached such a level!"

Belial's heart freezes.

Curses! He knows!

She quickly blurts out the first thing on her mind. "Nothing like practical experience to bring out the best in me! Are we going to stay here and wait, or will we perish when the Demon Emperors show up?!"

Chester's suspicions deepen further. "Impossible. Thou hath Melody's face and voice, but thy strength and speech reveal thy true nature. Who art thou, bedeviled imposter?!"

Panic sets in. Belial's eyes flick to the angels behind Chester, all of whom are locked in life and death struggles with the demons. However, any moment, there's certain to be a lull in combat, and when they learn of Belial's existence from Chester...

Chester glances toward the demon Belial took down moments before and watches as he groggily rises to his feet. The gears turn in Chester's head as he realizes 'Melody' didn't even kill the little bastard. Not only is she more adept at battle than he remembers, but she also managed to knock a demon grunt out with a single attack.

Belial's jaw sets. When another demon lunges toward Chester, his concentration momentarily breaks as he guts the bloodskin and throws it to the ground.

This man knows, Belial thinks to herself. If he tells the others, they'll find out I'm a shapeshifter. The whole plan will fall apart. I can't let that happen.

Chester turns to face 'Melody.' As he opens his mouth to speak, Belial's fist flies out, purely on instinct.

WHUMP!

She side-swipes Chester with the force of a bulldozer and flings him into the mass of nearby demons, opposite the other angels. In the blink of an eye, Belial retracts her arm and shifts her facial features. Chester never even gets to scream as the demons pounce on him and tear him limb from limb.

Two seconds later, Belial's face finishes morphing into a perfect facsimile of Chester's. Her body shifts and bends, and she assumes his physique as well, though she's unable to duplicate his armor.

Damn it. Damnit!!

Tears boil in Belial's eyes, and nausea threatens to overtake her.

I killed that man! I fucking killed him! I can't believe myself. I shouldn't have done that! There must have been another way... but what, and how?!

The other Cherubs nearby finish dispatching their enemies. When they turn to face Chester, they spot Belial instead. Despite not wearing the same armor or wielding the same sword, the others have too much adrenaline pumping in their veins to pay attention to details. "Brother! Where are the reinforcements? What should we do?!"

Belial's chest freezes. After a moment, she forces herself to calm down. In a perfect facsimile of Chester's voice, she raises her sword and yells. "We must retreat! Uriel's orders are absolute!"

Two female Cherubs nearby merely nod. They shiver and shake as battle fatigue dulls their minds. "R-right! To where must we fall back?"

"T-to the cave entrance!" 'Chester' yells. "We'll hold them off in the caves! Go! Go!"

Belial catches the glances of two male Cherubs, who are also too preoccupied with fighting demons to notice their commander isn't quite the same as before. They nod. "As thou commandeth, brother!"

A shiver goes down Belial's back as the angels leap into the air and begin calling out in unison to those nearby.

Fuck. Fuck. Fuck. I killed that angel. I killed Chester! It doesn't matter if other demons tore him apart... it's my fault he died! Gahhh! I promised myself I'd never do something like that! What's wrong with me?!

Belial starts to flap her wings, but thinks better of it, and instead lowers her body to the ground and darts across the landscape, covering an astonishing distance as she calls out to other angels to retreat.

Still, despite her anxiety, Belial forces her stomach to settle. As she runs, her face and body shift into that of another dead female angel she passes.

Chester's identity won't last me long. This one will have to do.

Uriel's spears smash Orias back and forth like two cave bear paws battering a helpless field hare. Over and over, Uriel stabs and strikes the diamond-skinned Lord, knocking him around as if he were inside a pinball machine. She flings him into the air, flies above him, and kicks down, smashing him into the muddy waters below.

"Thou art a durable little gnat!" Uriel yells. "But I'll break through, eventually! And when I do, thy heartbeat shall cease in an instant!"

Orias leaps to his feet, mostly unharmed. He quickly shakes a bit of disorientation off and jumps back, narrowly evading Catherine's sword as she slashes at him.

Thirty-five seconds remaining, Orias thinks to himself. I only have a few more diamonds left. Once they crumble, I won't last long against the Valkyries. It's fortunate these five haven't figured out my powers, yet, but my luck won't last forever. That archer woman has excellent eyesight.

He flicks a gaze toward Hyacinth, who unleashes a volley of wind-arrows at him. Each one explodes against his chest and limbs like a heavy-caliber rifle. Her arrows hit him with enough force to knock him off his feet, but not even her strongest attacks deal any damage to the heavily armored Lord.

Twenty seconds, Orias thinks. Come on, Berith! Belial! Do your damn jobs so I can get out of here!

Orias spares a glance at the five gems held in his palm. Three diamonds rest in his grasp, along with a ruby and a pitch-black onyx.

He quickly balls that hand into a fist and grimaces as he spots Penelope to his right. She heaves her greatmace into the air, and a sickening sense of dread washes over Orias.

This one's gonna hurt.

Swish- BOOOOM!

Penelope's mace pounds the diamond-studded demon hard enough to drive him ten feet underground. Under normal circumstances, any other Lord would have become a pool of blood and pulverized bone after such an attack, but somehow Orias remains in one piece.

Still, the Lord of the Moon lays flat on his back. His eyes spin and tumble as he tries to make sense of his orientation. After a moment, he blinks and stares into the skies above, where hundreds of angels fly overhead, firing volleys of arrows at the demon below. On every side of Orias, the ground rises a few feet, giving him the impression that he's landed in something akin to a coffin.

"He's still alive?!" Uriel asks incredulously. "Even Gabriel would have felt that attack!"

Groggily, Orias gasps as the effects of his diamond-skin begin to wear off. His vision, partially obscured because of the gems protecting his eyes, return to normal as they melt away.

I miscounted?! Damn! I need to activate the next one right now!

He fumbles with the gems on his palm, only to realize with a sense of dread that he accidentally dropped them when Penelope struck.

Penelope raises her greatmace to her shoulder. The other two Valkyries, as well as Uriel, arrive at the top of the depression in the ground.

"His skin is different! I think thy attack broke his defenses!" Sophia cries out giddily. "Hit him again! Quickly!"

Orias's eyes widen.

No! No! Those were all my diamonds! Where did they go? I need them!!

The Valkyrie of Earth begins to raise her hammer, making ice creep into Orias's veins.

Ahh, crap! This can't be where I die! I must survive! My gems need me!

Instantly, his hand shoots up to pull back his hood. Several jewels of varying colors sit embedded in his face, from red to green to blue to yellow, too.

But, in his forehead, one particular gem rests. A beautiful, radiant, multicolored jewel unlike any of the others, and three times their size, as well.

Penelope starts to swing her greatmace down, but in the time it takes for her to clear the gap, Orias yanks the gem from his forehead, closes his palm around it, and snaps his fingers.

"Oh, Beauteous One, protect me!"

Fwoosh!

Time freezes.

The magic of the gem explodes in Orias's veins like Niagara Falls smashing against the Saharan desert. In a single second, Orias transforms from a Lord-level demon to a godlike deity.

Orias leaps out of the makeshift dirt coffin. His movements become like those of a practiced martial artist.

Wham! Wham! Wham!

Orias palm-strikes the three nearest Valkyries flat in the chest. They helplessly fly away, despite the dilated sense of time Orias is experiencing, and a moment later, he rears back his fist to aim it at Uriel.

WHAM!!

He punches the Archangel of Protection with all of his strength. She flies away so fast that her spears tear from her hands while remaining suspended in midair.

Even as Uriel and her three sisters go tumbling and twisting in four different directions, Orias's heart seemingly explodes in his chest.

"AAAAAAAAAAAUUUUUHHHHGHHH!!!"

The Lord of the Moon falls to the ground and lands on his knees. Veins burst in his eyes, flooding them with blood. Every muscle in his body writhes and twists as a godlike level of power threatens to tear him apart from the inside-out.

Fuckfuckfuck!! My heart can't take it! Gotta leave, now!!

Without aiming himself, Orias uses the last vestiges of his godly strength to plant one foot in the dirt and kick as hard as he can. He flies away from the angels right as time resumes to normal, landing somewhere amidst the horde of other demons.

Whump, whump whump, wham!

All three Valkyries come to a sudden stop, and Uriel lands face-down, ass-up in the mud, as stars dance in her eyes.

"Blurgh… h-huh…? What… where… w-what hit m-me?"

Uriel jumps to her feet thanks to her leftover adrenaline, but her legs buckle a moment later, and she lands on her hands and knees, breathing like she just ran an Olympic Marathon.

"Haah… haah…"

Uriel blinks several times as memories of what happened come rushing back.

"That… that little Lord… hit me? How?! I didn't even see him move!"

"Uriel!" Hyacinth calls out from above. She lands with a splash beside her sister and quickly wraps one arm around her sister's waist. "Get up! We have to leave. Chester called for a retreat!"

"…Leave? What? Why?"

Uriel tries to focus her vision, but her eyes continue to shake and tremble. She quickly splashes healing water on herself and mends her broken bones.

"I don't know, but it seems the demons put up more of a resistance than we expected. We have to fall back."

"Nonsense!" Uriel yells, throwing Hyacinth's arm off her back. Uriel clambers to her feet and stares in disbelief at the retreating angels. Already, demons have begun taking territory their enemies gave up, as greedy looks wash over their faces. A few angels don't get the message in time and fall to the horde of blood-colored monsters overwhelming them.

"We were winning!" Uriel yells, rage entering her voice. "Since when did Chester become a coward?! When I get my hands on him..."

"There's no time for that, Uriel," Hyacinth says, a hard edge to her voice. "We have to get the others out of here. Demons will arrive within seconds."

"What about that rat we nearly killed?"

"Gone. I saw him... fly away. Or something. I couldn't follow his movements very well."

Uriel gnashes her teeth. "Fucking bastards. Damn. Damn! DAMN!! Alright, it's too late to change things. Let's retreat. I'll hold the demons off inside the caves."

Hyacinth nods. "A sound plan. Killing them all by thyself might even be possible."

"Damn right it is," Uriel says, as she balls her hands into fists. She aims her hands at Gungnir and Gae Bolg, causing the two spears to yank from the earth and fly toward her. When she catches them, Uriel turns to look at the other three Valkyries, who have only just managed to pull themselves together.

"Tch. When this battle finishes, I'll have to unleash my toughest training on all of them. They should have taken that little bastard's attack with ease."

Uriel and Hyacinth fly over to their sisters. After quickly healing their injuries, the five women take to the air and fly over the battlefield, dodging fireballs and rock-bullets from the demons below as they head for the entrance to Sinai.

"Ah!" Sophia says, alarm in her voice. "What about Astrea and Hestia?! They can't fit inside Sinai's entrance! If we leave them outside, they'll die!"

The two Titan women stand, clubs in hand, and usher angels inside the mountain. Both of them wear grim looks of determination.

"Tch. They wouldn't have had anything to worry about if Chester hadn't called for a retreat," Uriel says, a hint of bitterness in her voice. "I'll try to buy them time to escape, but there's no chance they will outrun the demons, let alone their hellhounds. I hope the Creator blesses them with a quick, painless death."

Sophia's face turns ashen, but she offers no complaint.

As the Valkyries and their sister arrive at the entrance, Uriel quickly begins ushering everyone inside the mountain. She stands alone, both spears in hand, and watches angrily as the angels give up land they should never have lost.

One female angel runs past Uriel, keeping her head ducked low. Uriel gives her only the slightest passing glance, but it won't be long before the Archangel wishes she'd paid more attention to the faces of those fleeing to the safety of Heaven.

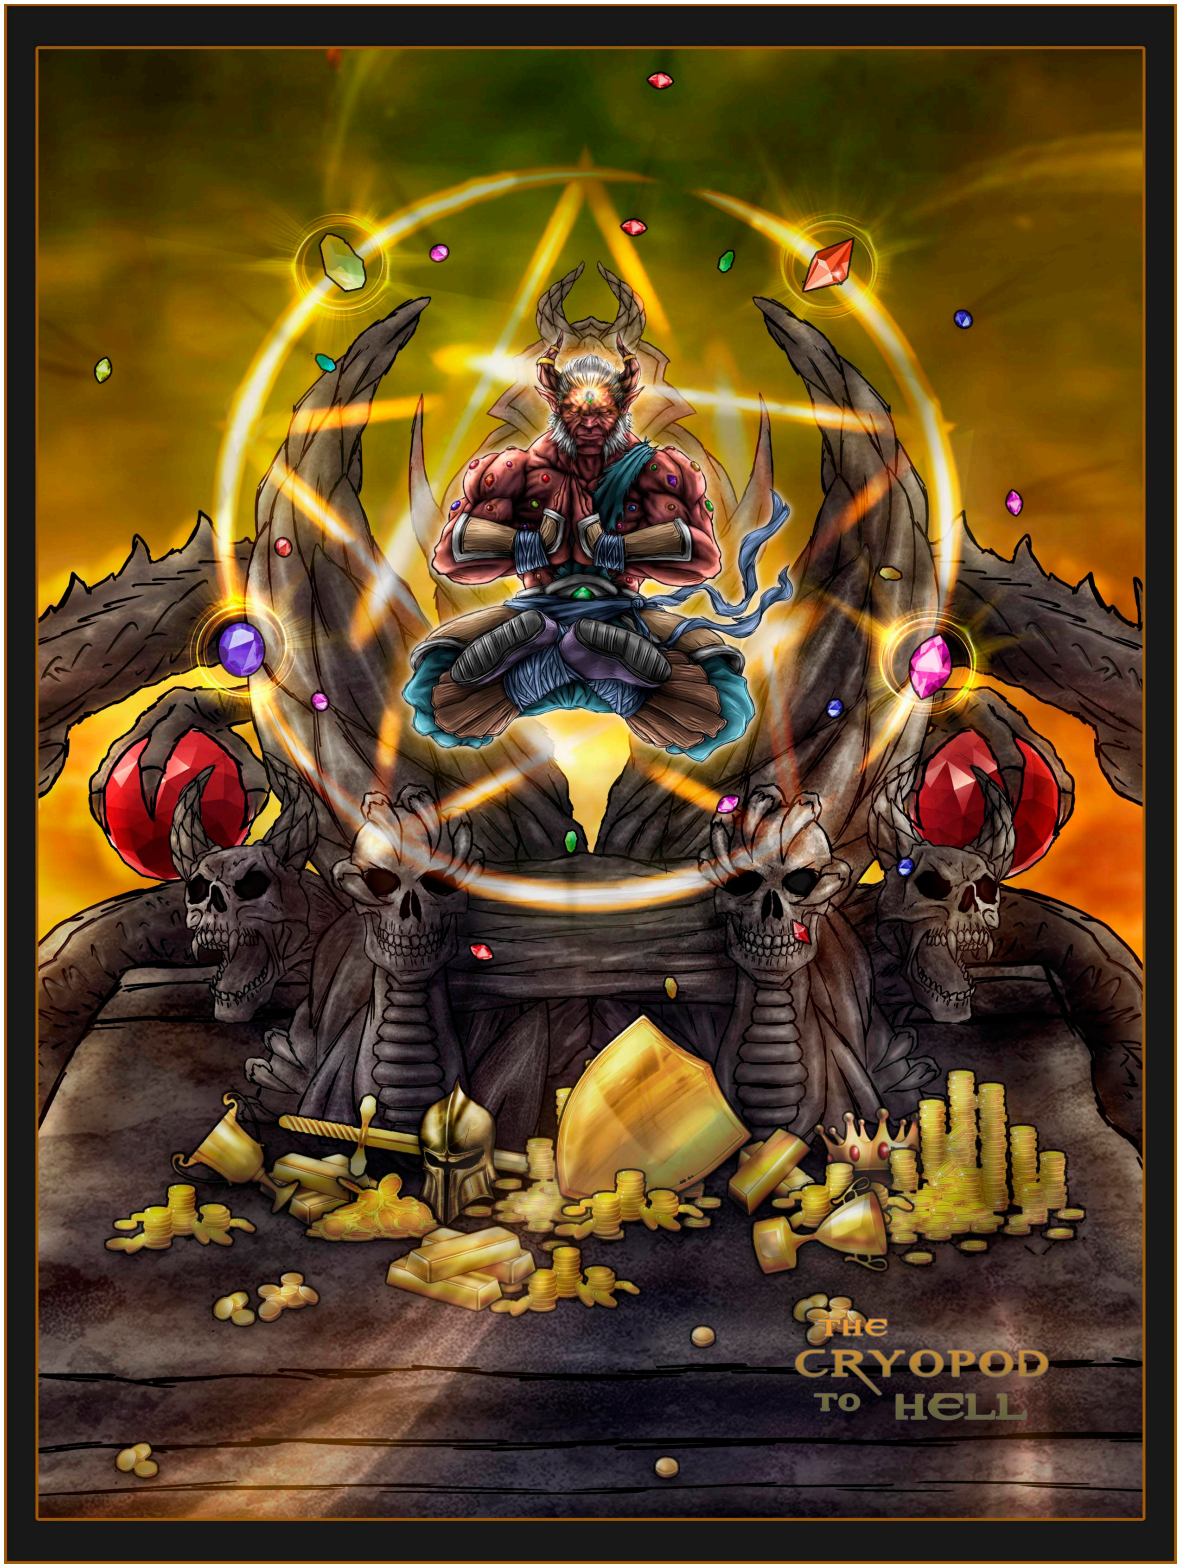
The battle outside Sinai was only a precursor.

The real war begins now.

Author Note:

Check out Orias's artwork!



And this piece of artwork too!

The CRYOPOD
TO HELL

Part 147: The Trojan Horse

Author note: Part 73 takes place between this part and the last one. Just a heads up.

Uriel, the Archangel of Protection, valiantly stands before Heaven's Gate. Using her vast arsenal of spells, she holds back the demonic hordes, preventing them from entering Heaven.

However, even as she drives the demons back, a sense of foreboding washes over the Archangel.

Shik.

"Gah?!"

Uriel gasps in shock as her beloved brother, a man she's known for eons, thrusts his hand forward and plunges it into her chest. Michael jabs his knife-like fingers through her ribs with one hand and grabs her by the throat with the other. Too late, Uriel realizes her brother should only have one functional arm.

Uriel's body swoons. Before she can react, Michael spins her around and smashes her against the enchanted metal floor, knocking the wind out of her. The Archangel of Courage releases his grip on Uriel's throat and transforms his arm into a sword-like weapon. Uriel's eyes widen in horror as her brother dispatches all four of her constructs in the blink of an eye. His scyther-like limb blasts around the room at ten times the speed of sound, eviscerating them before they can react.

As Uriel's summoned beings transform into particles of light, Michael retracts his arm. His knife-hand, still stuck deep inside her chest, flicks around, cutting and severing other tendons. Tears form in Uriel's eyes as horrific, crippling pain combines with the shock of what's happening, rendering her paralyzed and helpless.

Slowly, Michael's face shifts and melts, along with his robes and physique. Three seconds later, a black-haired succubus sits atop Uriel, transforming Uriel's shock over her brother's betrayal into terrified confusion.

A demoness? Who... who is she?! How did she assume Michael's appearance?!

Belial retracts her hand from Uriel's chest. She keeps her expression neutral, despite forcing down bile. "You left me no choice. I won't kill you, though. My husband has business with you."

Uriel chokes on blood as she manages a weak response. "Huh... huh... hus...band?"

"Satan. The leader of the demons. I apologize, but it didn't have to end this way."

Belial summons Artorias and has him stand guard over the Archangel of Protection. She warns him to keep Uriel alive, but not to let her heal herself.

After quickly finishing up with the others, Belial leaves Uriel in Artorias's capable hands, along with his annoying little brother, Barbatos. The young demon eyes Uriel greedily, but Belial pays him no mind. After all, he's only a Lord. Artorias should be able to handle him if he does anything stupid.

Turning around, the succubus once again transforms, but this time into Uriel. She reaches down to grab Gungnir and Gae Bolg, only to yelp as Camael's artifacts explode with holy energy in her grip. Belial bites her lip and curses, then kicks them off to the side.

"I don't need them, anyway."

Belial heads for the portal. The demons filing into the chamber watch her intently as she steps through.

* * *

Once on the other side, 'Uriel' quickly swivels her face around to gaze at the angels landing nearby. Thousands of angels levitate in the air, gently flapping their wings to stay aloft, while hundreds more surround the portal to Earth from every direction. Among them are the four Valkyries, Camael, and Raphael. They breathe a sigh of relief at seeing her face.

Michael isn't here yet. Neither is Gabriel or Uzziel. Thank goodness. They'd have figured me out in an instant, Belial thinks to herself. Looks like the old man just got here. It won't take Raphael long to see through my disguise, but he's already too late.

Camael wipes his forehead. "Oh, Uriel. Thou art a sight for sore eyes! Where is Michael? Why didn't he come out with thee?"

Belial quickly scowls at Camael, forcing herself to act out Uriel's hardass nature. "He's relieving me for the moment! I left my summons to help him. Do you mind if I catch my breath? Is that too much to ask?!"

Camael flinches, surprised by her sister's reaction. "N-nay, of course not. Thou hath held off the demons for an hour by thyself. Still, Michael alone can't possibly..."

Before Camael finishes her sentence, she flicks her gaze to Raphael and trails off. The old man stares at 'Uriel' with a piercing gaze, like that of a hawk who has seen many field mice in his lifetime and knows one when he sees it.

"Uriel? Thy mana reserves dwarf ours by a wide margin. Never woulds't thee allow Michael to stand alone against the demon hordes when push came to shove, yet here thou standeth, while he reaps the glory."

Belial stares evenly at the aged Archangel.

Raphael knows. He was there the day I used my illusion magic to help capture Samael. I bet he's already pieced everything together.

Belial's eyes flick to a tree perhaps a hundred yards behind the small army before her. Despite Heaven's light coming from all directions with enough intensity to prevent the formation of shadows in wide, open spaces, a single smudge of blackness sits at the tree's base like a panther awaiting the approach of prey. It shifts slightly when Belial's eyes fall upon it, and Belial nods as casually as possible.

Berith.

The mightiest succubus returns her attention to Raphael. His eyes narrow as he rapidly evaluates the figure standing before him. With a start, Belial realizes why he hasn't ordered the others to attack.

Ah! He doesn't know I'm a shapeshifter! He must suspect one of the demons are mind-controlling Uriel!

Setting her jaw, Belial comes to a decision. Even as Sophia, Penelope, and the other Valkyries gaze at her with looks of relief, the succubus coils power into her legs and prepares to pounce.

Raphael gasps. "She's not-!"

FWOOSH!

'Uriel' leaps at the wall of several hundred angels standing in the plains. Her fists lash out like mighty sledgehammers and instantly batter two-dozen angels in their chests, sending them flying into the back lines. Chaos erupts as confusion sweeps through the angel's ranks.

"Ah! Uriel has gone mad!"

"Stop her!"

"Sh-she's too powerful!"

The angels above react much faster than those on the ground. Almost immediately, several thousand archers summon bows made from Holy Energy and begin firing at Uriel, though many of them pause, as they are afraid of accidentally striking their brothers and sisters.

Raphael motions with his hands, and a thick mist shrouds him. "Unleash all of thy powers, everyone! Don't hold back for even a moment!"

Belial swings her fist at him, but the old man vanishes, evading her attack at the last instant.

As 'Uriel' starts hammering angels from left to right, the others quickly realize her abilities don't match up to that of their sister. Never before has their sister held such monstrous physical strength, let alone the ability to bend and stretch her body like putty.

"That's not Uriel! She's an imposter! She stole Uriel's face!"

"Do not hold back! Use lethal force!"

While all the angels focus on Belial, a sudden flash of movement strikes them from behind. Berith, the Emperor of Backstabbing, leaps from beneath one angel's boot. The slight shadow formed between his foot and the ground is all she needs to transport from her tree to the middle of battle. Instantly, dozens of shadow-lances erupt from the boots of nearby angels and fly at their comrades. Horrified screams rise and fall as several cherub's bodies explode.

Berith pounces at two angels and swings her palms sideways, judo-chop style, severing their heads from their shoulders. She hits the ground and flings both angel's heads into the portal, then spins around, grinning, as demons suddenly begin pouring into Heaven.

"We've been deceived!" Camael yells. "Summon the others!"

She's too late. A massive surge of grunts and Lords rushes forward, charging the frontline angel guard like lions hunting impala flesh.

Two grunts leap toward Sophia, but she swats them away with her staff without breaking a sweat. Tears well up in her eyes as she gazes at the face of her 'sister'. "What dids't thee do to Uriel? Where is my sister?!"

Penelope swings her hammer in a wide arc and sends three demons flying backward. "She's dead, Sophia! Don't let these bastards get away with murder! Avenge our sister!"

Catherine's jaw trembles as she hunkers down and prepares to bullrush the one wearing her sister's face. I won't forgive thee.

Like two waterfalls crashing upon each other, the demons and angels collide with the fury of Mother Nature herself. Belial does her best to batter and smash nearby angels, but she always holds back enough to prevent herself from killing anyone. Berith rapidly fires shadow-balls and shadow-lances at any angel she sees, but unlike Belial, she has no qualms about killing everyone in her way.

"Ehehehe!" Berith cackles cruelly, as she summons a fist of darkness. "This is more fun than I expected! With Uriel out of the way, none of these weaklings can stop me!"

Her fist flies toward Hyacinth, but Penelope swoops in and destroys the shadow-projection with her greatmace before it can inflict any damage. "Hah! That only proves thou art a weakling! Any fighter worth their salt would cherish a challenge!"

Hyacinth jumps into the sky and begins releasing wind-arrows rapid-fire at Berith. This time, when the projectiles hit the ground, she twists her fingers at the last second to summon miniature tornados, which catch Berith by surprise and yank her off her feet.

Berith hurtles upward into the sky, yelping as she tries to regain her footing. Suddenly, dozens of angelic archers begin firing holy-energy imbued arrows at her.

Whiff whiff whiff! Shik shik shik!

"Gaaugh!"

Berith howls in pain as glowing missiles lance through her shoulders, arms, legs, and half a dozen tear through her chest and gut. By the time the tornado dies down, she barely manages to teleport to a shadow on the ground and pop out near Belial.

"Gahk! B-Belial! Help me!"

Belial, now engaged in combat with Camael, winces as the Archangel of Divination swings Mjolnir with incredible strength. Belial dodges at the last second, and the mighty hammer strikes the ground with enough energy to send a minor earthquake throughout the nearby area. Dozens of angels and demons cry out in alarm as they stumble and lose their footing.

"I'm a little busy!" Belial yells as she ducks a horizontal swipe from Camael's hammer. "G-give me a few minutes! AHK-"

Before Belial can finish her sentence, Camael's hammer smashes into her left shoulder.

FWUMP!

Camael's downward attack crashes into Belial like a freight train. Belial screams in pain, only to vanish from where she was standing as the impact flings her several hundred feet down into the soft, uncompacted dirt of Heaven.

Grrrrn!

Belial grinds to a halt and gasps. "Huhk..."

Above her, a pinprick of light is the only thing she sees beyond the walls of dirt engulfing her.

Aaooo... h-hurts...

Belial grits her teeth as the pain from a shattered left arm finally breaks through her disorientation. Her limb rests behind her body, badly mangled from Mjolnir's power. Agonizing spasms, caused by holy energy, wrack her spiritual presence. The enchanted hammer, forged to combat dragons, proves just as deadly against demons.

Belial spends several seconds gathering her breath before motioning with her right arm to heal the left. Finally, she shifts her body and scowls.

That hurt. A lot.

Her hands morph again, but this time into shovels. She dives into the ground and begins burrowing toward the enemy's flank.

* * *

Camael twirls her hammer in her grasp. She and Raphael quickly survey the battlefield as demons and angels dogpile each other, ripping their enemies to shreds.

"Michael will arrive soon," Raphael says. "We must hold out until he appears. What of Gabriel and Uzziel, though?"

"I haven't seen either of them today," Camael replies. She quickly spins on her heel and swings her hammer up, catching one demon grunt unawares as he battles a nearby cherub. His back explodes, spraying guts all over the female angel. She flinches at the sudden burst of gore, but quickly realizes Camael was her savior. With a hurried nod, she turns and jumps back into the battle.

Camael continues. "Uzziel has probably sensed the battle by now. As for Gabriel and Michael, well... they shall surely follow their sister."

"Indeed. I didn't expect the hellspawn to make it into Heaven. We were supposed to hold out at the entrance to Sinai and slowly whittle them down. Bah! What changed?"

Camael's expression darkens. "I know not, but we certainly underestimated the demons."

"That we did," Raphael murmurs while motioning with his hands. The old man fades into mist, and his disembodied voice speaks one last time. "We mustn't do so again. The fate of Heaven depends on us!"

A slight shimmer in the air is all the evidence remaining of Raphael's existence. The old man vanishes into the aether, leaving Camael to defend herself.

Suddenly, Camael shivers. From the portal to Heaven, several powerful demon presences enter the battlefield.

Bael, the Duke of Pain. He steps through the portal first and scowls. "Oh, look! Everyone's having fun already. Sheesh. Couldn't put me at the front, eh, Satan?"

The Duke of Pain looks around in annoyance, a chip on his shoulder. Behind him, an old-looking demon steps through the portal; The Duke of Reptiles. "Damn. It's a massacre out here. We should have shown up sooner."

Following Agares, a woman steps through. Vepar, the Baron of Toxicity. She hunkers partially behind Bael, a hint of worry on her face due to the beating she took from the Valkyries. "Tch. Two Archangels are already here. We'd better take them out before they cause any trouble."

Bael groans. "Humf. You two, go take a nap. Now that the big guy's here, this battle's pretty much over. I'll beat every Archangel's ass all by myself."

Vepar doesn't bother trying to dissuade him. Instead, she motions to Agares. "Remember Satan's plan. We have a job to do."

Agares nods. He motions with his hands and begins transforming into his powerful reptilian form. Green scales cover his skin, and a thick tail sprouts from his rump as he lowers his body into a nimbler fighting pose. "We need to try and take out one of the others, at least until Michael arrives."

Both demons stay low and dash into the throng of allies and enemies. Within seconds, Vepar's poison gas strikes nearby cherubs and seraphs, making them howl in pain, while Agares tears up their enchanted armor with his powerful reptilian claws. He turns his tail into a battering ram and slaps aside two angels at once, while tanking a sword slashing his back. The weapon glances off his scales, and the angelic attacker falls a moment later when Agares tears his throat out.

Camael shivers. The demons are more powerful than I remember. My visions told me today would be a dreadful day for angelkind, but surely there must be a way to triumph. This battle is a test sent to us by the Creator!

The Archangel nervously twirls her hammer once again and locks eyes with Bael. The big guy smirks as he eyeballs her from several hundred feet away.

"Heh. It looks like grandma wants a go at me. I don't think I've thrown down with her before. Now's as good a time as any."

Bael balls his meaty hands into fists. He strides confidently toward Camael, a giant grin plastered across his face. One angel swoops down from behind him and slashes at Bael with his sword.

Fwap!

The weapon snaps in half when it hits Bael's back.

Bael pauses. He turns around to stare at the cherub with a look of confusion.

"The hell? You got a death wish, punk?"

The male cherub stares at Bael with wide eyes, shakes his head slowly, and flies away, leaving Bael to scratch his head.

"What kinda moron picks a fight with someone who can stomp him like a bug? Sheesh. These flappy birds ain't got no common sense."

With a dismissive wave of his hand, Bael turns around and continues wading through the warring demons and angels as he heads toward Camael. If anyone ends up in his path, whether fighting for their lives or just out of bad luck, he lightly shoves them aside, flinging them hundreds of feet to his right and left.

"Outta the way, dumbasses. I've got a date with yer mom's mom."

Finally, Bael stops a dozen feet from Camael and crosses his arms. He smirks like a man who knows with absolute confidence that he can't lose. "Nice hammer y'got there. Do ya hit pretty hard with it?"

Sweat drips down Camael's forehead. I recognize this demon. He's the one Hercules and Zeus warned us to avoid.

Camael grimaces. "If I'm not mistaken, thou art Bael, the infamous Balrog. Rumor has it that thou nearly slew the Titan King and his son all on thy own. Are the reports true?"

"Nah," Bael says, waving a hand dismissively. "It was a team effort. The others softened 'em up for me... a little. How about'chu? Think you can put up a fight with that little toy of yours?"

Camael narrows her eyes. "Some extra firepower wouldn't hurt."

The Archangel of Divination motions with her left hand. After forming several complex magical signs, she mutters several Latin words under her breath.

Shoop!

A massive tower shield materializes in front of her, then impales the ground a moment later. A helmet with Valkyrian wings appears atop her head, while Solomon's Crown tops it off. A golden belt wraps around her waist, and a pair of golden boots finish off her brilliant ensemble. It only takes me an instant to identify Hermes' Boots and Orion's Belt, but the rest of her armor appears unfamiliar to me.

Camael grabs the shield and takes a defensive stance. When she speaks, the helmet slightly muffles her voice. "I will bury thee as thou did my sister."

Bael's smile disappears. He uncrosses his arms and hunches down to ready himself for action. "Gimme a good fight, lady. I'm bored as hell."

Camael tilts her head. Then, she vanishes.

WHAM!

Mjolnir strikes Bael's chest so hard that a shockwave sends every nearby demon flying. Hermes Boots augment her speed in the same way they once did mine, transforming her into a bolt of lightning, while Orion's Belt gives her the strength of an atom bomb.

BOOM!

Hardly has Bael started to lose his footing before Camael jumps above him and brings her hammer down, smashing him into the ground the same way she did Belial.

Before Bael can plunge into the soft, supple soil of Heaven, Camael grabs him by his throat and flings him up into the sky. She pounces after him, springing atop invisible platforms as Hermes Boots provide a hardened surface for her to kick off, even in midair.

Jump, jump, swoop, bang!

Camael's blinding speed allows her to batter Bael from left to right, up and down, and finally send him catapulting into the mountainside above Heaven's Portal.

CRUUNCH!

Bael's body breaks loose boulders and soil and sends a landslide tumbling to the mountain's base. Seconds later, hundreds of tons of debris crush the low-ranking demons flooding into Heaven while burying the portal.

Camael pauses. Ah! I blocked the portal! Since Uriel didn't deactivate it, that might mean this is our best shot of preventing the demons from entering Heaven!

* * *

Bael blinks. Horrible pain rings in his head from his brains being thrown around like jelly beans in a jar. The Duke of Pain tries to make sense of the dirt pressing against his face, but it takes several seconds before he can reorient himself.

"Guh... a-alright... that dame was tougher'n I thought... prolly shouldn'a looked down on her..."

After taking a moment to gather his strength, he yells out loud, "Hup!" and flings himself out of the collapsed mountain. Bael tears through dirt and stone in the blink of an eye and pounces onto the battlefield like an excited jaguar.

As he looks around for Camael, Bael raises his eyes to the sky and notices a massive contingent of angels flying toward the battlefield at alarming speeds. Leading them are Uzziel, Gabriel, and Michael.

A flash of anger appears in Bael's eyes. "Michael... tch. And here I thought this day couldn't get any better. I'ma pay you back for what you did to the boss 'n me, punk."

Bael spots Belial healing Berith, while also yanking enchanted arrows out of the shadow-walker's body. Occasionally, an angel will lunge down at them in an attempt to end the lives of two Emperors, but Belial easily dispatches them. After ten seconds, she finishes healing Berith and helps the Emperor of Backstabbing stumble to her feet.

"Don't thank me all at once," Belial quips, "but I just saved your life."

"Gratitude," Berith growls back. "Meanwhile, Camael blocked the portal to Heaven, and the other Archangels are nearly here! We're trapped! What should we do?"

Belial forces a smile. "No. We're not the cornered ones, Berith. The angels are. They're stuck here with us."

The two of them look around, and Belial raises an eyebrow as Bael jumps over and lands beside her. "You two done gabbing? Get ready. Michael's coming, and he's pissed."

A massive platoon of angels numbering in the millions covers the sky in winged demi-gods — their wing flap in unison, like a hive-mind hellbent on the demons' destruction. Behind them, two hundred massive Titans lumber through Uzziel's beautiful forest. They shove trees aside and howl bloodthirsty warcries.

Belial's blood chills at the sight of the approaching army. "Oh... dear. We're going to need a lot more demons for this battle."

"Or a Balrog," Berith whispers, as she nudges Bael.

Bael ignores her. "Don't worry! Those chickens ain't got nothin' on me'n Satan!"

Hardly have the words left his mouth before a torrential downpour of winged beings descends from the skies. They swoop toward the demons below, notch their bows and arrows, and let a hailstorm of holy weaponry fall upon their prey.

Whiff whiff whiff!

Razor-sharp arrows formed from each angel's mana impale hundreds of demons in the blink of an eye. Several Lords fall, even with their guards raised. They, along with many grunts and imps, perish without knowing what struck them.

Whamwhamwham!

Thousands of angels smash into the dirt and grass all at the same time, kicking up clouds of dust that blow toward the battlefield. They draw their weapons and rush the demons, sending terror through Hell's ranks as the surviving warriors gasp in fright.

"R-reinforcements! We've gotta get outta- guwak!"

"Where's the portal?! Where is it?!"

"We're trapped! We're all going to die! Ahh!!"

Terror turns into panic as the demonic forces fall to pieces. Every demon begins fighting for himself as they rush toward the only way out of Heaven. However, their frenzied flight comes to a screeching halt as everyone realizes the angels took out the Burrowers in their targeted attack.

Suddenly, Gabriel, the Archangel of Power, stops mid-flight, closes his eyes for a moment, and begins to concentrate. A light like that of Earth's sun builds in his palm, dwarfing Heaven's Light with its incomparable brilliance. Many demons shriek and cover their eyes, but some are too slow. Their retinas sear to ash instantly, leaving them permanently blind.

Not that it matters.

Gabriel swings his palm down and aims it at the throng of demons trying their hardest to dig out mounds of dirt to flee Heaven.

"Heavenly Beam of Holy Destruction."

A concentrated blast of holy energy fires from Gabriel's palm. It's the biggest, deadliest, most overwhelming holy attack ever seen by any demon. Not even the combined might of hundreds of cherubs unleashing a similar attack on Valac came close.

KABOOM!!

Gabriel's devastating energy wave plows into three thousand demons at once. They open their mouths to scream, but their bodies transform from flesh to ash before they can make a sound.

FWOOM!

Gabriel quickly shifts his aim to target the two Emperors and Bael. His unstoppable beam drags across the plains below, incinerating any demon caught in its path while sparing those born from holy energy, namely, other angels.

Berith's eyes bolt open. "Ah! Get down! It's coming!!"

She quickly motions toward the tree she first hid behind, several hundred feet away. In an instant, she teleports into the shadow of its roots, leaving Belial and Bael to fend for themselves.

Bael doesn't have any time to come up with an escape plan. Instead, he spins around, wraps his arms around Belial, and shields her with his body. "Don't let it touch you!"

Heaven trembles under Gabriel's nightmarish power. His colossal beam smashes into Bael with the divine equivalent of a hydrogen bomb, but Bael never lets go of Belial.

Even with the Duke of Pain enveloping her in his arms, Belial screams wordlessly, as waves of holy magic splash around Bael and buffet the ground like a solar storm of annihilation. Small trickles graze Belial's skin here and there, charring her body to ash wherever they hit, but still, Bael never releases her.

After ten seconds of concentrating with all his might, Gabriel gasps. He lowers his arm, and the incredible power within him slows to a stop.

Bael twitches as the onslaught of angelic energy finally ceases.

Seconds pass.

The Duke of Pain releases Belial. "Yo. You okay?"

Belial sags to her knees and flops on her back. Black scars cover massive portions of her arms, legs, and back. She stares at Bael, and a question forms in her eyes.

"How... how did you... survive..."

Bael bites his lip. He gently turns around and glances at his back. Smoke pours from his body, while charred black skin peels off his back.

"...I'm too tough for a weak little attack like that to kill me. But... damn... it really fuckin hurt."

Slam!

An angel impacts the ground behind Bael, catching the Duke's attention. Bael raises his eyes to examine the new arrival.

"Here to finish me off after letting your big brother do all the heavy lifting, eh?"

Michael glares at Bael. "Bloodskin. To think one of thy ilk could survive Gabriel's mightiest attack... my condolences go out to thee, for now thou shalt face me instead. I will give thee a much slower and more agonizing death than Gabriel could."

Bael swivels around to face the Archangel of Courage. Camael and Gabriel land in the grass behind their brother and take up defensive positions, the somber looks on their faces betraying their disbelief that Bael survived such an overwhelming display of holy energy.

"Psh. You think I'm scared?" Bael asks, smirking. "You just royally pissed me off. I'm gonna rip all three of ya limb from limb."

The Duke of Pain carefully positions himself between Belial, who continues to writhe in pain on the ground, and the three Archangels, who won't hesitate to kill her if they have a clear line of attack.

Michael licks his lips. Ignoring his right arm, which hangs limply at his side, he uses his left to draw his sword and point it at Bael.

"Death comes for thee, bloodskin. Any last words?"

BATOOM!

Behind Bael and Belial, the rubble pile that buried Heaven's Portal suddenly explodes outward with incredible force, almost as if someone had detonated C4 inside of it. Despite only a couple of hundred demons remaining inside Heaven, all of them turn to gawk as three even more powerful beings step through the portal, followed by a swarm of lower-ranked demons ten times greater than the one before it.

Diablo, the Emperor of Annihilation. Lucifer, the Emperor of Providence. And, the mightiest of them all, Satan the Devil.

Satan pauses to rest both hands on his hips. He grins from ear to ear. "I'm sorry we're late. Lucy had to waste a few extra minutes on her makeup."

Lucifer rolls all three of her eyes. "Devils. Don't blame me, when it was your idea to make a dramatic entrance."

Diablo's eyes sweep across the battlefield. He absorbs the sight of a million angels flooding the skies above, and the Titan army just now arriving on scene.

"I hope you know what you're doing, Satan. Can't say I like the idea of a suicide mission."

Satan doesn't even look at Diablo. "Have faith, chum. Everything is going to work out just fine."

All of the Archangels flinch when they sense the overwhelming dark energy flowing from Satan's body. Uzziel's eyes widen as she lands between Gabriel and Camael. "Impossible... how could one being possess such limitless mana?"

Raphael materializes beside Gabriel. "'Tis as thou believeth, Uzziel. The last time I sensed such power, 'twas when we slew a dragon. Be on thy guard. The powers of soul manipulators mustn't be underestimated. Who knows what a journey the Devil has traveled to achieve this potential?"

Satan continues to smile as he stares at the frozen battlefield. However, the moment his eyes fall on Belial's shivering, beaten body, his expression turns somber.

"The fuck are we waiting for? Kill the angels, you beautiful bastards."

His command elicits a single response from all of the demons pouring into Heaven.

"Yeahhh!!"

With all the combatants on the battlefield, the War in Heaven reaches its second phase.

Part 148: Scattered Chaos

Smealum blinks his eyes. Grogginess slows his thoughts for a few moments, along with an ache at the base of his neck. He pulls himself into a sitting position and freezes.

In the middle of the clearing, his brother, Shepherd, lays flat on his stomach. A human male with dark skin and black hair slowly traces his fingers over the acolyte's back. A grim expression sits on the man's face, even as he tilts his head up to meet Smealum's gaze.

"You're awake."

The human's voice echoes tree bark scraping against concrete. Dozens of scars line his face, evidence of the many battles he's fought. On the ground beside him sits a perfectly straight staff, one which bends around at the top into an upside-down 'U' shape.

Smealum spares only an instant to glance around the clearing. The three demons who attacked him and Shepherd lie piled up in the corner, a small fire scorching their headless bodies to ash. Blood coats the ground in a few patches here and there, but otherwise, the clearing appears the same as it did before their appearance.

The Animus slowly stands up. He leans against a tree behind him for support, while keeping a cautious eye on the human caring for Shepherd. "Who are you?"

"I am Jepthath, a humble shepherd."

The man stares at Smealum like a grey eagle might a field hare. Not a trace of worry crosses his face as the demon fully regains consciousness.

"A shepherd? The same as...?"

"Aye."

Jepthath offers no further elaboration. Instead, he lowers his eyes to Shepherd's back. Horrible scars line the spots where his wings once existed. Shepherd takes several slow, stuttering gasps, but he doesn't awaken from the trance binding his mind.

Jepthath purses his lips. "Rather than ask my name, wouldn't you like to know about your brother's condition?"

"I would, yes," Smealum replies. He takes a few steps toward Jepthath, then gingerly kneels a few feet away, keeping his distance from the human.

"That Brute tore out Shepherd's wings. They disintegrated into particles of mana after a few minutes, and now, nothing remains. The wings of an angel are what connects them to their control of mana. As such, he has lost all his ability to control and manipulate spiritual energy."

Jepthath keeps his voice low. Considering the state of humans in this era, it surprises me how well-spoken he is. Most others seem to communicate by grunting and pointing their fingers, but Jepthath speaks like a well-educated noble from thousands of years in the future.

Or, perhaps, more like that of an angel or Titan.

Smealum nods. A grim look covers his face. "Will my brother... die?"

"No. He is still immortal. Because of the loss of his wings, his body will cease to release mana over time. While most angels must replace their spiritual energy to retain their immortality, Shepherd will stay as he is right this moment... forever."

Smealum exhales a sigh of relief. "Haah... so... he will survive."

"Survive, yes. Thrive? No. An angel without wings is no longer an angel at all. From what my master tells me, the Archangels refer to Those Without Wings as Nephilim. He will stay their brother, but will forever reside at the bottom of angel society as a serf."

"That's... that's awful," Smealum murmurs. "Not even demons treat their kin in such-"

Jepthath's blue eyes suddenly glow intensely, as he glares in rage at Smealum. "Speak not of demons in my presence."

Smealum freezes in place as the piercing gaze of the human before him sends chills down his back. "W-what? Why? Who are... you?"

Jepthath's eyes continue to glow for a few moments before reverting to their natural form. He glares at Smealum, and a bitter look of resentment appears in his eyes. "Know this, half-breed. I spared you for two reasons. For one, you appeared to be on the side of this angel, defending him against the others of your kind. For two, because you are not a full-blooded demon, I do not feel the immediate need to end your existence. Even so... the hatred in my heart tells me to crush you, just as it does your half-brothers and sisters."

Confusion appears in Smealum's eyes. "Half-breed? What do you mean? Am I not a demon?"

Jepthath narrows his eyes. "You are, and you are not. Perhaps, once, you were a full-blooded member of your species. However, within you, I sense something else; A more primal power. Like that of mother nature, you share energy with the creatures of the Earth and all life across the cosmos. I feel that, were I to kill you, it would be a great tragedy."

"But..." Jepthath continues. "...even so... the hatred I feel for demons... it threatens to consume me. Despite the lack of horns and the blood-red skin they all share, you still reek of their funk."

Jepthath finishes tracing his fingers around the wounds on Shepherd's back, grabs his staff, and abruptly rises to his feet. Smealum mirrors him, if only so the human won't tower over him.

"Why do you hate us?" Smealum asks. "Did... did demons hurt you in some way?"

"Aye."

Jepthath's face contorts into a vile expression of disgust and rage.

"They took... everything from me. Were it not for my master; I might have cast my life away. Because of him, I have a purpose."

"And what might that purpose be?" Smealum asks.

Jepthath stares through Smealum, as if conjuring a hundred memories, each one of which causes him awful, agonizing pain.

The human turns on his heel and starts to walk away, leaving Smealum behind.

"I will kill all the demons."

Smealum doesn't reply.

After a few moments, Jepthath vanishes into the forest cover, leaving the Animus and Nephilim by themselves.

It takes several seconds for Smealum to recover. He slowly lowers his gaze to his brother's limp, comatose body.

"The human did not kill me because I am no longer a demon. When did that become the case? When did I leave behind my brothers and sisters to embark on a new path?"

With a shake of his head, Smealum plops down beside Shepherd and massages his brother's shoulders.

"More importantly... what do I do now?"

Uzziel's eyes grow wide as saucers. She stares at the Devil and the two Emperors flanking him with a mixture of fascination and abject horror. The dark mana flowing from just those three demons dwarfs all of the others swarming into Heaven combined.

Satan motions with his hands. A moment later, water erupts from the grass around him, ripping the life out of the greenery and turning it brown. The grass shrivels and cracks as its life-giving liquid rips out and splashes against Satan's back, then transforms into eight fluid limbs.

The Devil pounces toward Belial, Bael, and Michael. By the time Lucifer and Diablo manage to follow his movements, he's already cleared the gap.

"Nobody hurts my girl!" Satan roars. "You fuckers are dead!"

Michael immediately pivots from Bael to the incoming threat. He jumps back a split-second before Satan's vectors manage to grab him. An instant later, Michael's sword begins dancing from left to right. He summons holy energy to envelop his weapon, allowing him to parry Satan's invisible limbs.

Thousand of sparks erupt around the two combatants as Satan and Michael's limbs and weapons collide with blinding speed. Gabriel motions with his hands and fires a massive blast of holy energy at Satan, but the Devil darts to the left and dodges it, never once stopping his sixteen-limb attack against Michael.

The other Emperors arrive. Diablo charges in after compressing kinetic energy around his fist. He attempts to blindside Michael, only for Camael to get in his way and use her shield to block his fist.

KABOOM!

Diablo sends Camael flying. Before she skids across the ground, she uses Hermes' Boots to kick off an invisible platform, then leaps into the sky, dispersing the power of his punch.

"Uzziel!" Raphael says to his sister. "Try to slow the movements of the Emperors! I'll distract them so that our brothers and sisters might land a few decisive strikes!"

"Right!" Uzziel replies. She conjures the elemental power of nature to summon vines from the ground. Unlike when she uses her powers on Earth, the incredible amount of Holy Energy pervading Heaven transforms her ability into a weapon of mass destruction.

Tree roots and vines burst out from underneath Satan and the other Emperors, entangling their legs and slowing their movements while allowing Michael, Gabriel, and Camael to launch a frontal attack.

Satan ignores the vines coiling around his limbs since his water-tentacles and vectors are more than capable of taking out an army by themselves. When Gabriel swings his greatsword at Satan, the Devil merely catches it with three vectors and yanks it out of the Archangel's hands. He tosses the weapon aside, causing it to disperse into particles of light.

Gabriel aims both of his palms at Satan.

Da-da-da-da-da-da!

Rapid-fire bolts of holy energy emerge from his palms and fly at Satan. The Devil summons a pillar of stone to block them and focuses on Camael instead. The Archangel of Divination lunges toward him and raises her hammer to smash his skull.

"A frontal attack? Suicide!" Satan laughs. Three water-tentacles spring at her and punch the Archangel with all their strength.

However, the instant Satan's octopus limbs connect, Camael vanishes.

"What? An illusion?!"

Satan whips his head around to see Camael spring out of three different places at once. Each of her copies raises their hammers high and swing down at his flank, but the Devil quickly deflects them with his Vectors and octopus limbs.

However, one of the illusions proves to be the real one. Camael summons her tower shield and bats Satan's Vectors away thanks to its holy-energy infused front-side. He tries to retaliate, but she activates Hermes Boots and charges him three times faster than before.

WHAM!

The Archangel of Divination bullrushes Satan's body with the flat of her shield and plows him into the ground. Immediately, Uzziel's vines jump out and wrap around him like a spider binding a fly.

Michael leaps at Satan. "Thy death is nigh, little bloodskin!"

He switches his sword stance and aims to plunge it into Satan's chest, but an energy blast suddenly knocks him out of the air. Lucifer fires from her third eye three times, each shot battering Michael with concentrated mana. Michael flaps his wings, rights himself, and lands on his feet a few paces away.

Satan tears through Uzziel's vines with his Vectors. The Devil quickly jumps and hovers over the terrain, using Samael's ultimate weapon to rip apart anything else the Archangel of Creation throws at him.

"You guys are really pissing me off!" Satan yells at the Archangels. "Let's split these angels up! It's time for phase two, boys!"

Bael, Diablo, Lucifer, and Berith all nod simultaneously. "Right!"

A sudden sense of foreboding bubbles up in the back of Uzziel's mind. At the last second, she dives to the right and shoves Camael aside. One of Berith's shadow-fists jumps out of the ground and smashes Uzziel in the face, striking her instead of her elder sister. Uzziel gasps and tumbles aside, but quickly motions with her hands to suck into the ground.

Unlike the slow movement of Burrowers, Uzziel travels even faster underground than when she flies. Her powers make her one with the soil, and she jumps out from behind Gabriel, using his body as a shield. "Brother! Watch out! The demons are going to-"

She doesn't get to finish her sentence. Michael suddenly yells in alarm. A nearly translucent figure, one crouched low to the ground, pounces at the Archangel of Courage from behind. Agares, now using his Camouflage ability to blend in with his surroundings, catches Michael unawares as he delivers a reptilian punch to the Archangels' spine. Michael gasps and tries to swing his sword around, but a cloud of poison gas descends upon him, blinding and choking him as Vepar attacks him in her gas-body form.

"Michael!" Uzziel shrieks her brother's name. She starts moving toward him, but her eyes lock onto Bael as the big guy charges Camael from the side.

"Just try and hit me with that hammer again, grandma! Bahaha!"

Bael plows into Camael and throws her to the ground. At the same time, the Emperors split apart, each of them targeting different Archangels.

Lucifer and Diablo charge at Gabriel. Satan grabs Belial and splashes healing water on his mate, then both of them move to attack Raphael.

They're splitting us up! Uzziel screams internally. She starts to say something, only to flap her wings and dodge backward as Berith appears in front of her.

Whiff!

Berith's claws swing at the spot where Uzziel stood only a moment before. "Bah! Come back here, little tree-bender! You can't run forever!"

Uzziel's heart trembles as her eyes flick to each of the other Archangels. Bael and Camael trade blows. Her hammer crashes against his armored body, while his fists batter her tower-shield and threaten to throw her off her feet.

Raphael summons several ghostly clones of himself to confuse Satan and Belial, but the two mightiest Emperors dispatch a dozen of them in the blink of an eye.

Diablo rears back for a massive kinetic punch and batters the force-field enveloping the Archangel of Power with all his strength. Gabriel staggers backward a few inches, but otherwise shrugs off the atomic attack. A moment later, Lucifer fires her mental barrage at him, bypassing Gabriel's barriers and hitting him in the brain where his defenses are lowest.

"Gaaugh!"

Gabriel lurches back and grabs his head. Waves of pain bring him to his knees, but the force field surrounding him protects him from another of Diablo's kinetic punches.

Uzziel perceives all of their battles in a single second, then returns her attention to Berith. The Emperor of Backstabbing summons two swords of shadow and charges at Uzziel. She cackles and swings both weapons toward Uzziel's neck like a pair of scissors.

Uzziel summons a magically-imbued walnut to surround herself.

Thunk!

Berith's swords slice into Uzziel's shield, but they halt halfway and jam inside the thick wood.

Uzziel summons thorny brambles from beneath Berith's feet. The holy-energy-infused weeds tear into Berith's legs and quickly climb her body, making the Emperor howl in pain.

"Kyaarr! Get off me, you damned-!!"

Berith releases her swords and melts into her shadow, giving Uzziel a moment of respite. She uses the precious few seconds to spare a glance at the other Archangels. In addition to Bael, two other high-level demons enter the battle: Shax and Murmur. The tall, lanky, wild-haired Shax ducks and dodges as the four Valkyries join alongside Camael to help their sister fight off the Duke of Pain and his cohorts. Shax dances around with style, each movement flowing around like a mixture between a practiced martial artist and a disco dancer.

However, what catches Uzziel's attention most is that while Shax evades Catherine's sword slashes and Hyacinth's wind-arrows, Murmur rides his shoulders, piggyback-style, without falling off. Her child-sized legs wrap around his front, and whenever any attack comes close to his chest or head, she gingerly pokes the air and deflects it harmlessly.

"L-look out. Here it comes. From your left. Now, right..."

Murmur whispers in Shax's ear as she delicately protects him from anything he doesn't dodge. Shax, on the other hand, grins like he's having the time of his life. He drops to his legs and does the splits. "Oh, yeah! Whoo! What a rush! I wanna bust out in song, haha!"

Indeed, he rolls backward, and Murmur pushes her hands against the ground to backflip Shax into the air. The two of them never separate, despite the intensity of his acrobatic movements. Shax lands on his feet and begins strumming as if playing an air guitar.

"♪Four girls, but ain't none of 'em my type! They come a-swingin' but there ain't no time ta' fight!♪"

Hyacinth fires three arrows rapid-fire at Shax, but he moonwalks from side to side, dodging two of them effortlessly while leaving the third to Murmur. She pokes the air and sends it tumbling into the ground.

"Damn this demon! Catherine, help me shut him up! I can't stand that awful singing!"

Sophia spins her bo staff and does a backflip toward Hyacinth. "Aww, I think it's pretty catchy!"

Hyacinth rolls her eyes. "As always, thy taste in music churns my stomach!"

Catherine and Penelope jump toward Shax from his left and right. Catherine slashes at his legs, while Penelope swings her mace down, intent on splattering not only him, but Murmur as well.

Murmur pokes the air to deflect Catherine's blade, but she's too slow to stop Penelope's mace. "Sh-Shax! Look out!"

Shax doesn't hesitate. The instant before Penelope's attack connects, he whips his head toward her and screams at the top of his lungs, "STEP OFF, HUSSIE!"

A powerful soundwave fires from Shax's mouth. Penelope yelps in surprise and goes flying, unable to defend herself from his supersonic scream.

Without missing a beat, Shax pivots to face Catherine and strums his invisible guitar even harder. "♪Ten million ta' one, and we almost fuckin' done! Step off, sista, cuz we've only just begun!♪"

The harder he strums, the more powerful the soundwaves unleashed from his invisible guitar become. Catherine staggers, as an unrelenting force begins pushing her backward with all its strength. Blood trickles from her ears, and her head starts to spin. Shax's words blur together, transforming from English to pure babble as his oppressive soundwaves threaten to shatter not only Catherine's eardrums, but her mind as well.

Suddenly, Murmur yelps. "Look out!"

Diablo comes flying through the air, having been flung aside by Gabriel's greatsword. He hurtles toward Shax and Murmur, the latter of whom can't decide whether or not to deflect him, given he's an ally.

"Uwah!"

Murmur gasps as Diablo's sizable body plows into her and Shax, sending all three of them sprawling across the grass.

"Owie..."

Murmur whimpers and curls into a ball. She shivers for a moment, then raises her eyes to stare as Hyacinth aims her bow at Shax.

"Those two are separated! Take out the male, then the female!"

Tears bubble in Murmur's eyes as Hyacinth starts to release a wind-arrow toward her brother, lying on his back in the grass.

"Nooo! Don't hurt big bro!"

Murmur tries to run to her brother's side, but her legs are too tiny. She watches in disbelief as Hyacinth's arrow travels at the speed of sound. It smashes into Shax, sending a massive explosion rippling through Heaven. The arrow strikes Shax's body, driving him underground. He ends up buried eight-feet deep, hidden from the surface world.

"Eeeyaa!!"

Murmur screams as she runs over to the crater. Her brother lays motionless, but the Valkyries give him no respite. Immediately, all four of them close in on Murmur and Diablo. Diablo groans and staggers to his feet, but when he sees Shax's crater a few paces to his left, his eyes widen.

"Uh, oh."

"One down!" Penelope yells, triumphantly. "Woo-hoo! Now, let's get that little one, and we can all focus on Diab-"

"BIG BRO!! NOOOO!"

Murmur screams bloody murder. Tears well up in her eyes, and she whirls to face Hyacinth. "You fat, ugly, nasty cow! Take THIS!!"

She aims her finger at Hyacinth, then raises it up and down. Hyacinth gasps as telekinetic force grabs her body, lifts her into the sky, and flings her into a pile of rubble below. "Ahh! I can't control my-!"

WHAM! WHAM! WHAM!

Over and over, Murmur raises and smashes Hyacinth into the ground.

"This is for Shax, you nasty chicken!! I'll turn you into a puddle of blood!"

"Hyacinth!" Sophia cries out. She quickly flaps her wings and flies toward Murmur. "Little turd! Let go of my sister- gack!"

Before Sophia can land a decisive blow, Murmur releases Hyacinth, whirls to face the incoming Valkyrie, and flicks the air. A blast of telekinetic force smashes into Sophia and flings her backward, sending the Valkyrie tumbling end over end. She lands face-down, ass-up, her head spinning from the impact.

Suddenly, Catherine and Penelope arrive on the scene. Both of them rush the hooded little demon girl and raise their weapons high. Before they can end her life, Diablo jumps in front of them and kicks his foot into the ground. A ten-times-enhanced shockwave summons a minor earthquake, knocking both Valkyries off their feet. They trip and stumble, then fall to their knees. Catherine flaps her wings and yanks herself to her feet, but Murmur turns around and flicks the air, sending the Valkyrie of Fire tumbling backward, just like Sophia. Before Penelope can raise her mace again, Diablo rears his fist back and smashes it against her golden armor, punting her in the opposite direction.

WHUMP!

All four Valkyries grind into the dirt and gasp for breath as they try to recover from the power of the Emperor and his tiny little comrade. Hyacinth moans and tries to shift around, but her strength gives out, and she flops into the dirt lifelessly. Sophia clambers to her feet, but her footing proves shaky. She stumbles back and forth, using her bo staff to hold herself upright. Catherine, the toughest of the Valkyries, manages to regain her footing but thinks better of charging the Emperor of Annihilation alone.

From the crater to her right, Murmur's brother calls out to her. "Ohh... I'm alive, sis. Barely."

"Shax? You're okay?!" Murmur dives to the side of the crater and peers inside. Shax lays on his back, a massive gash torn across the right side of his chest, but otherwise in good condition.

"M-managed to deflect that arrow with a soundwave. Hurts like hell, though."

"You're bleeding everywhere! I'll get Belial and-"

Shax shakes his head. "Nah, nah, it's fine, sis. No biggie."

With a grunt, Shax kicks his feet up and grabs the sheer walls of the coffin-shaped depression. He yanks himself upward and jumps out of the pit, then lands on his knees.

"Get on," Shax says to Murmur, as he aims his thumb toward his back. "We're leaving this shithole. It's too bright here, anyway. Ruining my mojo."

Murmur pulls her hood down to hide her face. "Oh... um... alright, but are you okay, big brother?"

Shax glances down at the gash going across his chest, then presses his arm against it. "Yeah. I'll survive, but only if I stop the bleeding. Come on."

"O-okay."

Murmur climbs onto his shoulders, and Shax darts away, leaving the Valkyries in his dust.

Diablo watches them go. "Sheesh. Bye, then. Don't mind me."

With a start, Diablo turns around to look for Gabriel. He ignores the Valkyries to focus on the figure of the fifteen-foot-tall Archangel attacking his mate. Gabriel slashes at Lucifer with his greatsword, aiming to lop her head off.

"Stand still, demon. I do not wish to cause thee any unnecessary pain," Gabriel says, his voice as calm as a lake during summer. His weapon misses Lucifer by inches as she dives to the ground and lets it swing over her back.

"Not a chance, Archangel! Eat shit and die!"

Lucifer fires a kinetic blast at Gabriel, but it splatters against the seemingly impenetrable force field surrounding his body without causing so much as a ripple. Gabriel flicks his eyes toward Raphael, as the old man battles Satan and Belial. However, no longer is he alone, as several Titans, including Zeus, have joined the battle.

"How many times must we fight, demon dog?!" Zeus bellows. He aims his palm at Belial, and a bolt of lightning slams into her, sending a thunderous shockwave in every direction.

Dozens of demons nearby cover their ears and howl in pain, but their angelic adversaries prove unaffected. Their helmets, forged by Camael, offer magical protection from sounds above a specific volume. With their demon adversaries stunned, the cherubs and seraphs use weapons and magic to cut through the horde with ruthless efficiency.

Belial lands a few dozen feet away and rolls to a stop. Her limbs spasm for a moment, thanks to Zeus's lightning seizing up her body. She heals herself and jumps to her feet. "That damned Titan. His lightning is so fast that I can't avoid it in time!"

Belial's heart skips a beat as something invisible punches her in the back and sends her tumbling forward. Raphael's illusion magic breaks for a split-second, but he quickly activates it once more and flaps his wings to leap into the sky.

The old man glares at Belial. "That wench's healing magic appears to function identically to Uzziel's. She's a troublesome opponent, especially when fighting alongside Satan. Damn. Even if only the two of them were here, without any other demons, it might take the full power of Heaven's Finest to bury them. But with all these noteworthy upper-ranked demons, as well..."

Raphael glances around. His eyes flick to Michael, flanked by a camouflaged Agares, and the troublesome Vepar. Michael tries to attack Vepar, but she disperses into a cloud of poison. A blur of motion from behind is Michael's only warning of Agares' incoming attack, but the Archangel of Courage easily spins around and knocks his reptilian adversary aside.

"Heh," Michael chuckles. "Not so strong without the element of surprise, art thou, filthy bloodskin?"

Then, Raphael turns to search for the four Valkyries. Far in the distance, Diablo faces off against the four of them. Uzziel finishes healing her sister Hyacinth and helps her to her feet.

The Archangel of Creation glances around, her nerves on edge. The shadow-walker, Berith, isn't anywhere in sight, but that fact isn't enough to steady her pounding heart.

"I need to leave," Uzziel says, her voice tight. "Even with the assistance of the Titans, Heaven may fall. I will bring reinforcements."

Hyacinth's wings twitch. She clutches Uzziel's shoulder and spares a wary glance toward Diablo, as several Lord-ranked demons saddle up beside him. "Reinforcements? Are not all of our family members here? We haven't time for games, sister."

"We'll be fine," Penelope replies, answering in Uzziel's stead. She casually slings her mace over her shoulder and smirks at the demons lining up. "At least for a little while. Don't take too long, sister."

Uzziel looks at Penelope, then sweeps her gaze across Catherine and Sophia's faces. "Stay safe. The demons are nothing if not crafty. They will deceive thee at every turn."

"Aye," All four Valkyries reply in unison. They turn their backs to Uzziel to face down the demons standing across from them.

"Well? What art thou waiting for, little rats?" Penelope yells, taunting her opponents. "Don't tell me thou art afraid of a few women?!"

The lords beside Diablo howl and shriek, then charge toward the Valkyries.

"No, you idiots!" Diablo roars. "Don't let them goad you- ahh, dammit to Hell!"

Diablo follows from the rear, an annoyed scowl plastering his face. He tails his comrades, and the Valkyries return the gesture.

Uzziel turns away, and her heart pounds in her throat like the beating of a drum.

With a shudder, the Archangel of Creation dives underground. She begins speeding away from the battlefield, leaving her family behind to face the demons alone.

There is one who has yet to join the fight! I must find him!

Part 149: The Infinity King

Uzziel swims through the ground like a freakish, winged land-shark. Her speed puts Artorias, the swiftest of Burrowers, to shame. Every few minutes, she travels to the surface to orient herself before diving underground and continuing on her way.

The longer it takes for me to reach him, the greater our losses! I can't let my family perish under the might of the demon army!

A sizable forest appears before Uzziel. She swims beneath it and bursts out of the ground five seconds later somewhere near one of Heaven's several cities. Small buildings made of wood and brick line a simple paved street, but she turns left, toward a small mountain in the distance, one that is perhaps only a few hundred feet high.

As she draws near, its name appears in my mind. Outcast's Refuge, a hastily constructed prison for the Undying.

Thousands of cages lie scattered across a wide, open field, each one designed by Camael two thousand years prior to contain the Undying and prevent their escape.

Enchanted steel bars enclose each undead angel so they can't escape. Despite this, they sit on soft beds and appear content to stay inside where they can't hurt the living among their family.

Uzziel strides into the camp. Her eyes sweep around the cages as she scans for one in particular.

Hercules. Where is the Titan's cage?

The prison sits at the base of a mountain, and a wall surrounds it, as if squeezing the imprisoned angels between a rock and a hard place. Uzziel walks past one cage and speaks to the Undying trapped within. "Brother Hui, where are we keeping the Titan locked up?"

The male angel sighs. "Haah. On the north side of the mountain."

His blackened eyes lower to the ground, and he resumes poking the grass with his feet.

Uzziel stares at him, and a look of concern crosses her face. "Art... art thou feeling unwell, Brother Hui?"

He nods. "I apologize, beloved sister. All the cherubs left to travel to the frontlines. Since I cannot go... I am in low spirits. Do not mind me. Everyone here feels the same."

He glances past Uzziel, toward a row of cages where several male and female Undying pace around, do pullups on the bars of their cages, or otherwise perform other mindless movements to try and relieve their boredom. All of them appear agitated, but none vocalize their annoyance out loud.

"I understand. I have come to seek Hercules' help. The battle against the demons is... it is not as one-sided as we would have liked."

"Naturally," Hui replies, a hint of bitterness in his voice. "Do not delay, sister. If thou art here instead of the battlefield, that means we lack our best healer to revive our brothers and sisters on the bloodskins.

Please return post-haste."

"Aye," Uzziel replies.

The Archangel flaps her wings and takes off. As she soars over the mountain, the mile or two to Hercules' cage vanishes in the blink of an eye.

With Valac dead, Raphael should have ordered the release of the Undying, but he didn't. Hercules confirmed Valac's death when he peered into Satan's memories. Surely, with proof that Valac perished, we shouldn't need to keep capable cherubs and seraphs away from the frontlines!

The moment Uzziel crests the peak of the mountain; her eyes sweep across the cages surrounding it. She spots Hercules' cell instantly, as his stands ten feet taller than those around him. Given his immense size, reaching Gabriel's height, Camael must have forged his to give him extra room to move and stretch.

The Archangel soars down and lands beside Hercules' cage. Immediately, she takes in the sight of an untouched animal-skin filled with wine placed beside his enclosure.

Who left this here, I wonder?

Uzziel ignores it and raises her eyes to stare at Hercules. The Titan sits on his bed, both hands folded together on his lap, with his head lolled forward. He stares blankly at the ground, but even with his black hair falling over his face, the eerie glowing of his eyes is hard to miss.

"Ahem!"

Uzziel coughs to get the Titan's attention. After several seconds, Hercules blinks and raises his head. His eyes return to normal, and he stares at her for a moment.

"Earthmother. What do you want?"

Despite his blank expression, Hercules' words drip with disdain.

Uzziel bites her lip. She gestures to the lock on his cell door. "I've... I've come to free thee, Hercules! Right now, the demons are invading Heaven. We need every able-bodied warrior there to stop them. Since thou hath nearly defeated the demons on thy own, thou art surely an asset which shouldn't be locked-"

Hercules raises his palm.

"No. I refuse."

"Huh?"

Uzziel blinks. She stares at him in disbelief.

"I don't understand... I hadn't finished speaking. If thou stayeth here, the demons might overrun us! Surely, whatever thy quarrel is with the angels, setting it aside would be for the best! Thy people need thee!"

Hercules shakes his head. He crosses his arms and sighs. "No. I won't leave this cell unless my father comes and grovels on his knees for forgiveness. Even then, such a meaningless gesture would be too little to absolve him of his sins."

"Ah. Am I correct in assuming thy anger rests solely with thy father's actions, rather than those of the angels?"

Hercules purses his lips. "I wouldn't presume that your people are blameless. You created the demons, after all. You unleashed them upon Earth. My father's failure came when he failed to support me in my time of need. Yours was creating the enemy that killed my wife. If anything, your sin and his are like the distance between the sun and the Moon."

"I did not 'unleash' anyone, Titan."

"You created Satan, you loosed him from Heaven, and he killed Megara. Therefore, you are at least partially to blame for her death."

"Certainly, but 'twas not my intention. Thy father believes that soul manipulation is evil, yet thou dids't disobey his orders and unleash thy power against the demons. Given thou hath suffered a catastrophic failure, in the same vein as mine, how can thou looketh upon me with scorn? Were not both of our intentions fair?"

Hercules narrows his eyes. "Do not twist my words, she-angel. I am in no mood for mind-games."

"My people are dying, as are thine!" Uzziel yells in exasperation. "I care not for thy temper tantrums! Lives are at stake! Now is no time to stand on ceremony! If anyone is committing wordplay here, it is thee!"

Several seconds pass before Hercules speaks again.

"If you feel that way, then leave. I'm staying in my cell until you defeat the demons, or my father comes to beg for forgiveness. Otherwise, I will kill the red rats when they arrive."

Uzziel sighs.

"Tch... I understand. In that case, it would appear we've arrived at an impasse. If I cannot convince thee to battle the demons, then I have wasted my time in coming here."

Hercules's expression remains impassive. "Aye. It would seem so."

The Archangel and Titan stare each other down for several seconds. Finally, Uzziel turns away, unable to meet Hercules's gaze. "I cannot force thy hand. However, if the demons slaughter all of my people and thine, thou shalt be unable to stand up to them alone. Thou shalt die, leaving thy wife unavenged. Is that the path thou plan to walk?"

Hercules shifts on his bed. He glances at an adjacent cell, one with an Undying angel watching both speakers silently. The male angel looks away when he meets Hercules' eyes, causing the Titan to return his gaze to Uzziel.

"Have you so little faith in your comrades, Earthmother? Do you honestly believe that they will fall before the might of demonkind?"

Uzziel narrows her eyes. "I do not wish to take any risks. The demons have grown more powerful than ever. Thou might know this if ye stepped foot outside thy cell."

Hercules smiles and rises to his feet. "The deaths of angels and Titans are none of my concern. In the end, I know that our people will triumph during today's battle. Were I to lead our united forces, the angels and Titans would be guaranteed an overwhelming victory. However, without me, they will survive only by the slimmest of threads."

The Archangel of Creation stares at the Titan towering over her with a mixture of awe and disgust. "Thou would... thou would allow so many to die? For what purpose? Why not save as many lives as possible?!"

Hercules gestures toward Uzziel with an upraised palm. "For a tree to grow, the weeds choking its ground must first wither and die. In the same way, ancient traditions have rotted my people from the inside-out. By creating the demons, you summoned forth an instrument of destruction that would eliminate those who perpetuated wasteful, failed doctrines. Even if millions of angels and Titans fall, some will remain. We will rebuild, and from the ashes, a superior civilization will rise."

Uzziel eyes widen in horror at the implications of Hercules' speech. "Th-that's genocide!"

"Don't be facetious," Hercules says. He flippantly waves his hand as if to dismiss her concerns. "I am not killing anyone, but instead, leaving them to their own devices. After all, if they believe my powers to be cursed, who am I to step in and help them? I would not go so far as to sully the honor of other beings, especially those with greater authority than me."

Sarcasm punctuates several words as Hercules inflects heavily on them over others. He waggles his finger at the Archangel, then plops back down on his bed and leans back against his cage's bars.

"In any case, I'm done explaining myself. Why stay here? You won't persuade me to leave, not in a million years. Leave, now, and return to your comrades. If you're lucky, you might save a few thousand of them. That would be quite the stroke of good luck, wouldn't you agree?"

Uzziel sighs.

"Thou art hopeless. I've wasted time and precious lives to come here and ask for thy help. In the end, I neither learned nor gained anything of value. No matter how today's battle concludes, I assure thee, Hercules, that I will never respect or bow before a king who allows his subjects to die. That is the difference between thy father and thee."

The Archangel of Creation turns her back to Hercules once again. Uzziel flaps her wings, but before she takes off, she pauses.

"Hm? Brother Long? What is the matter?"

Uzziel's gaze rests on a cell across from Hercules'. The Undying angel inside stands stiffly at attention. His body twitches, and he stares at her with his pure black eyes.

"Some... something... is... wrong... I... can't move..."

Behind Uzziel, in the cage directly adjacent Hercules', the male angel from before sits on his bed, unmoving. He stares ahead at the bars of his cage, but his body, too, is as stiff as Long's.

"S-sister... I can't control myself... it's as if... as if..."

Hercules slowly rises from his bed. His cocky smirk vanishes as he evaluates the two Undying.

"These two aren't the only ones acting strangely. The others are, as well. That... that can only mean..."

A spark of recognition ignites in Hercules's eyes.

"Impossible. Satan killed Valac. I saw the moment in his memories. No demon could survive an intense burst of Holy Energy directly to their soul."

"No! Thou can't mean-?!"

Uzziel whirls to face Hercules. All the blood drains from her face as their eyes meet.

"Did not thou witness Valac perish with thy own eyes?!"

"No. I only saw his death through Satan's mem- AH! Look out!"

Hercules jerks toward Uzziel, but he's too slow. An Undying in a cage behind Uzziel suddenly throws himself against the bars, sticks his arms through, and grabs Uzziel by her wings.

"Ahh!" Uzziel shrieks in fright as the Undying yanks her backward and wraps his arm around her throat. "B-brother Long?!"

"I can't control my body, sister! Fight me! Don't allow me to kill thee!"

Brother Long's arm tightens around Uzziel's neck. She writhes and wriggles, but only when she summons her vines is she able to wrench away from him by pulling with their tensile strength.

"Gah!" Uzziel stumbles away from him and falls to her knees. Everywhere in the prison, many Undying begin throwing themselves against their cages, one after the other. They smash against the bars like wild animals, unable to prevent themselves from harming their bodies.

"Ah! My wrist! I broke my wrist!"

"Sister, help me! A voice is commanding me to fight and kill! I don't want to murder my family members!"

Hercules stiffens as he gazes upon the sudden carnage engulfing the prison camp. He sweeps his eyes around the perimeter, and a moment later, he lowers his head to stare at Uzziel.

"Damn. I did not expect the Reaper to return. This... this changes everything."

Uzziel nods. She shivers from the remnants of terror still leftover from when Long grabbed her, but quickly manages to right herself and jump to her feet.

"I must go, Hercules! There's no time for bargaining! I'll unlock thy cage, and thou must-"

"No need," Hercules grunts. He walks forward, wraps a meaty palm around the enchanted iron, and tears one of the bars away as if it were paper. Five more follow, and a few moments later, he emerges from his makeshift cell as if he'd never been inside.

"Huh? Thou... thou were able to leave? From the beginning?"

"Of course. Such flimsy metal is no match for my strength. More importantly, I have to change my plans. If Valac has truly returned, then our narrow victory will surely become an overwhelming defeat. If the dead begin returning to life, they will rapidly overpower the angels and Titans."

Hercules takes a step forward. His massive, gorilla-like body dominates Uzziel's by a factor of three. Silently, he reaches over and places his hand on her shoulder. "Earthmother. I need your help."

"Mine? W-why? To what end?"

"Forget everything I said before. Ruling over the remnants of angelkind and Titankind is one thing, but if Valac is here, everyone will perish. I need your permission to remove Valac's control from the Undying."

Uzziel blinks. "I... I don't follow."

"I call my ability 'Army Control.' If someone accepts me as their leader, I gain total control of their minds and bodies. I have yet to test this, but I believed that my Soul Manipulation might possess the power to take back control of the souls of the Undying. If you permit me, I might be able to free your brothers and sisters from their despair."

Uzziel takes a step backward. "I... I don't know... that sounds dangerous! What reason have I to trust thee?"

"I am many things, Earthmother, but I am no enemy of angelkind, nor my people. Would you prefer Valac to control your brothers and sisters, or me? I can grant them freedom from his oppression, but only if you help me!"

Uzziel staggers backward. She stares into the passionate eyes of the behemoth towering over her, and dozens of questions flood her mind.

What should I do? I can't trust Hercules! But if I don't, then Valac will make my family hurt each other! I have to do something! I can't let anyone else die!

Uzziel bites her lip. After a few seconds of thought, a female Undying cries out in pain. Uzziel whirls around to see one of the male Undying clutching the woman by her throat, slowly strangling the life out of her.

"S-sister Vera! I can't stop squeezing! I can't fight it!!"

Tears form in the man's eyes as he slowly crushes his sister's neck into pulp. She leans toward him, as if eager to die. Despite her lack of bodily resistance, her face contorts in agony. "Please! Fight back, brother! Kahk! I... I can't... b-breathe..."

Uzziel jumps as Hercules grabs and squeezes her shoulder. "Answer me, Archangel! Will you let your sister die?! Tell me now, before it's too late!"

With the Titan breathing down her back, and the sudden chaos in the camp, Uzziel grits her teeth and closes her eyes. "A-alright! Do it! I give thee permission! Save everyone!"

"Good! I'll start with that one!"

Hercules quickly pushes past Uzziel and charges toward the Undying crushing his sister's throat. "You there! Swear fealty to me at once! I will free you from Valac's control!"

The male angel panics. "I-I can't do that! Never in a million years! Sister Vera! I'm trying to fight back, but-"

"You can't resist the call of the Reaper!" Hercules yells. He tears two cage bars off, hunkers down, and grabs the male Undying. With a quick motion, Hercules yanks him toward the opposite side of his cell, freeing Sister Vera from her brother's clutches. "Swear fealty, and I shall free you from his voice!"

"Do it!" Uzziel yells.

She runs over to Hercules side and faces her undead brother. "Place thy faith in Hercules! Only he can free thee from the clutches of the Reaper!"

The man turns to stare at his sister, the Archangel, in shock.

"But, brother Raphael will-"

"He'll do nothing! I am one of the Archangels! Obey me, Brother Klim! I won't let anyone here die!"

Klim stares at Uzziel for a moment before his arms begin flailing frantically. He tries to grab Hercules, but the Titan easily pins him to the ground with a single palm.

"Yes! Very well, I'll follow thy orders, sister Uzziel! Hercules, son of Zeus, I pledge my fealty to thee!"

The instant the words leave Klim's mouth, his flailing ceases. Hercules's eyes glow for a moment, as do Klim's. The blackness of death leaves his body, and he sags against the ground.

Klim gasps as all the tension in his body vanishes.

"I... I don't believe it. I feel... normal."

Hercules nods. He pulls back and steps out of the cage, then sighs in relief.

"Thank the ancestors. I wasn't certain that would work."

"Thou weren't?!" Uzziel cries out in alarm. "But, I thought ye said-"

"I had a hunch. I guessed how Valac's powers worked based on the memories of humans, Titans, and demons. There's no time to waste. Quickly, we must make the others pledge their allegiance."

Uzziel nods. A faint smile crosses her face. "Right! Ah, I apologize, Hercules. I did not realize thou were such a brilliant thinker. To save my brothers from bondage at the hands of the Reaper... I owe thee a great debt."

Hercules smiles. Something about his expression appears off, but I can't discern what. "Worry not, Earthmother. I always keep my word."

* * *

Minutes pass. Uzziel calls out to the Undying and commands them to swear fealty to Hercules. Once those who follow her commands regain control of their bodies, news spreads swiftly around the camps. Within ten minutes, every single Undying loses the blackened color in their eyes. They pour out of their cages, freed by both Hercules and Uzziel, as he rips the cages to shreds while she picks the locks with her vines.

"Everyone is here!" Uzziel cries out cheerfully. She and Hercules fly and climb to the top of the mountain, along with several hundred of the Undying. "Thou hath saved them, Hercules!"

Hercules brushes off his shirt. His expression darkens as he forces himself to smile at Uzziel. "Aye. Without your command, I doubt the Undying would have willingly sworn fealty to a Titan. You helped me tremendously."

"I deserve very little praise," Uzziel says, blushing. "Now is no time for idle words! Come, we must return to the battlefield and- eeyah!"

The Archangel of Creation cries out in surprise as Hercules suddenly reaches out and slaps her backside, sending her tumbling to the ground. A moment later, he jumps on top of her and wrenches both of her arms around. She cries out in pain as he subdues her before she can react. "Ahh! Gods! Hercules, what art thou doing?! Stop at once!"

"I'm afraid I can't do that," Hercules murmurs. "Because of Valac, I'll have to accelerate my plans. Swear fealty to me, Earthmother, or I'll kill you right here."

Uzziel stops struggling. She tilts her head so she can stare at the Titan crouched atop her back. "But... then... from the beginning... thou intended to..."

"I did. Believe me, Earthmother. I do not wish to harm a single angel or Titan. Demons are my only enemy. However, I alone have the power to unite our forces. Anyone who does not bow before me is my enemy. That includes you."

Several Undying step closer. Uzziel tilts her head up. "Brother Long! Brother Klim! Help me! The Titan is going to kill me! He's..."

She trails off.

Each of the Undying stare at her, creepy smiles plastered across their faces. Their eyes glow, and they hold up their hands as if to say, we will not interfere.

"Brother... Klim...? No... no! Don't tell me... they..."

"Your brothers serve a new master now," Hercules says. His voice turns deadly calm as he slowly wraps one massive finger around her neck. "Now tell me, Earthmother. What is your answer?"

Part 150: Archangels and Emperors

Several minutes earlier.

Lucifer, the Emperor of Providence, darts back and forth as she evades Gabriel's concentrated holy energy blasts. The Archangel of Power fires dozens of bolts from both palms, narrowly missing the agile Emperor as she dodges from left to right.

"Hold still. Thou art only delaying the inevitable."

His voice, calm as a lake on a summer day, betrays no emotion. However, he narrows his eyes and glares at her with a slight hint of bubbling rage.

"Thy people slew my beloved sister, Uriel. An eye for an eye, demoness."

Lucifer backflips over two bolts of holy energy and winces as her foot slips on a patch of wet grass. She wrenches her ankle, but quickly uses her uninjured foot to dodge again. "Don't screw with me, Archangel! If you keep babbling, I'll break your jaw!"

"Thou lacketh a fraction of the power needed to accomplish such a feat," Gabriel murmurs. He motions with his hands, and an orb of light materializes above his head. It rapidly expands in size from a marble to a beach ball.

The orb begins to glow as bright as the sun. Lucifer's face turns ashen as the dazzling ball winds up to fire a massive blast of holy energy. "Oh, devils. That can't be good."

FWOOOOOM!

Gabriel palm-strikes the air, and his massive holy-ball unleashes all of its might toward the Emperor in a laser-like stream of holy energy. Lucifer jumps to the side and begins running on both hands and her one still-working foot. She dashes around Gabriel in a wide circle, through crowds of angels and demons alike, but his colossal beam of destruction rips up Heaven's Soil and chases after her. Several demons open their mouths to scream, but the moment the light sweeps over them, they disintegrate into ash.

As Lucifer circles Gabriel, her body begins to undergo dramatic changes. Her skin changes color from red to black. Her head quadruple in size, as do her teeth. Giant ears replace her horns, while her feet and hands shift into five-clawed wolf paws.

Within seconds, Lucifer completes her transformation from Demon Emperor into the biggest, meanest, most vicious-looking Hellhound in Heaven.

Lucifer digs her claws into the soil and instantly halts her momentum. Before Gabriel's holy laser can hit her, she charges straight at the Archangel and unleashes a terrifying roar.

"HARROOO!!"

Gabriel flinches as the massive animal rushes him. "Gods! What in the name of-?!"

The Archangel's laser tries to follow Lucifer, but her speed and agility quintuple thanks to her transformation. The Hellhound Emperor smashes against the forcefield protecting Gabriel with all her strength, knocking the Archangel backward several feet. She swipes at him over and over, each strike tearing through his force field like a shredder devouring paper.

Gabriel dispels his magic orb, returning it to the aether. He stumbles backward and tries to stunt the enraged animal's movements, but much like a man trying to stop a Rottweiler with his bare hands, the effort proves futile.

"SNAAARR! AWRAHHR!"

Lucifer's fifty eyes lock onto Gabriel's. Her massive jaw snaps at his face over and over, and despite the Archangel's best effort, he can barely manage to contain her sheer power.

Several angels nearby, the ones whose demonic attackers evaporated into ash moments earlier, gape at the massive animal threatening to kill their brother. "Disregard the demons! Assist Gabriel! We can't afford to lose another Archangel today!"

The Cherub warriors charge Lucifer and Gabriel, but the moment they draw near, Lucifer instantly shoves away from Gabriel and pounces at the newcomers. Several of them shriek in fright, but they can't move fast enough to dodge the terrifying monster. Lucifer's jaws crush, rip and tear several men and women before they can react. Her bladed tail lashes around like a scorpion's and severs the heads of three Cherubs before they can defend themselves. She slams her paws on top of two other Cherubs and smashes them into the ground, shattering their bodies under the one-ton weight of her bulk.

"ISH THATT ALL YOU'VE GOTT?! FOOL-HISH SHICKENSH! WITNESH MY DEMONIC TRANSHFORMASHUN! COWER IN CHERROR!!"

Her animal mouth bellows out half-formed words, but even with her speaking inhibited, the meaning doesn't escape her enemies. The cherubs quake and shiver as Lucifer's monstrous aura explodes from her body even more forcefully than before.

Gabriel summons his holy greatsword. He charges the Hellhound from behind, but ten of Lucifer's eyes see him coming before he takes a single step. She instantly frontflips, spins around in midair, and pounces at the Archangel.

BOOM!

Lucifer's right paw slaps Gabriel to the side, sending him tumbling end over end. Gabriel's heavy armor grinds against the scorched earth as he struggles to his feet. Despite his best efforts, Gabriel proves no match for Lucifer's insane speed and strength. She jumps on Gabriel turns his left arm into a chew-toy, biting it with all of her strength.

"SKRRREEOW!"

Lucifer screams like a lion as her teeth pierce the barrier of holy energy protecting Gabriel's body. Still, even with more purified mana than any lower demon could handle surging into her brain, she manages to hold her own against the Archangel's unbelievable mana reserves.

With great difficulty, Gabriel grinds his right arm into the ground and shoves himself upward. He twists his waist and flings the Hellhound with all his strength, tearing his left arm off his shoulder and sending Lucifer flying through the air. Instead of crashing into the dirt, she spins with catlike agility and lands expertly on her paws, then spits his limb on the ground.

"HARH! I KNEW YOU'D BLEED, ARK-AN-JELL! NEFFAR UNDERESHTIMATE THE EMPURR-UR OF PRUH-VUH-DENSH!"

Gabriel grits his teeth as he clutches his fresh, bloody stump. "Tch... long has it been since I felt pain. Thou art a fearsome creature... but no match for me. Not in a million eons."

Lucifer charges Gabriel again, but by the time she clears half the gap, the Emperor comes to a screeching halt and jumps backward in surprise. Gabriel's body begins to grow... grow... grow.

Fifteen feet. Twenty. Thirty.

Gabriel locks eyes with the Hellhound Emperor. Where before Lucifer once appeared a terrifying monster, soon she is little more than a tiny little chihuahua at his feet.

"Cosmic Expansion," Gabriel growls. Despite keeping his voice low, it manifests as a deafening boom to the ears of the tiny figures around him.

Demons and angels alike stare up at the expanding Archangel; The former in terror, and the latter in awe. Still, Gabriel's size increases, and within seconds he stands a hundred feet tall. Even Zeus, the largest of the Titans, barely reaches his waist.

A faint smile appears on Gabriel's lips. With his single remaining arm, the Archangel of Power leans down and grabs at the Hellhound beneath him.

"Come, little pup. I will demonstrate the true meaning of power to thee."

Lucifer's eyes widen at the building-sized hand reaching for her. She whimpers like a beaten mutt and quickly darts away, jumping into a nearby Burrower's hole.

Gabriel's hand scrapes the dirt. He digs in, crushing several grunts who couldn't dodge in time, and lifts a humongous pile of debris into the sky. After staring at it for a moment, the Archangel frowns.

"Hm. She escaped. What a shame."

With a shrug of his shoulders, Gabriel releases the ten-ton dirt clod and flicks his eyes around Heaven. Thanks to his hundred-foot vantage point, he's finally able to take note of the battle unfolding as he sweeps his eyes from Michael to Camael, and then finally to Raphael.

"By the gods! What power is my eldest brother about to unleash?"

Gabriel stares, wide-eyed, as Raphael prepares to activate one of his ultimate techniques.

Elsewhere on the battlefield.

Bael and Camael contest each other in an epic battle of the ages. The Duke of Pain leaps toward his Archangel opponent and push-kicks her tower shield, knocking her backward. She grinds her feet into Heaven's Soil and activates the power of Orion's Belt to hold herself in place as Bael punches and headbutts her shield over and over.

"You gonna hide behind that piece of metal forever, grandma?!"

Bael grabs the edges of the shield and yanks hards. However, instead of ripping it out of Camael's grasp, he only succeeds in pulling the Archangel toward him. With her momentum shifted, Camael inverts Bael's strength and swings Mjölnir in a wide arc.

CRACK!

She brings the hammer down and smashes it against Bael's left shoulder, battering him to the right and flinging him into the dirt. Bael grinds to a stop and immediately jumps to his feet.

"Oh! You surprised me! I didn't think those creaky old bones could move like that!"

Camael scowls. "Shut it, demon! I've plenty more where that came from!"

Using the power of Hermes Boots, Camael charges Bael and clears the short gap instantly. She swings Mjölnir toward his head, but Bael jerks his left arm up and blocks the blow at the last instant. He parries with a kick toward Camael's shin, but she drops her shield on top of his leg, grinding his foot into the dirt.

"Tch, you're too fast for me," Bael grunts.

"All thanks to my lightning boots," Camael smirks.

He and the old woman trade blows for several seconds. Her hammer strikes him, and his fists swing toward exposed areas, only for her to deflect them at the last instant.

Both appear evenly matched, but as the battle rages, Camael's breathing falters. She begins gasping as she tries to keep up with Bael's incredible stamina, but he never appears even slightly winded.

"Damn, girl! You're pretty strong, too!"

"Thank my belt for that!" Camael yells. She charges Bael again.

WHAM!

Camael hammers Bael's face, catching him off-balance and sending him hurtling to the side. His cocky smile vanishes as he inadvertently chews a mouthful of dirt.

"Gaah..." Camael gasps for breath. She staggers slightly and blinks as stars appear in her eyes. Her heart pounds like a jackhammer in her chest, but even with Bael slightly dazed, he's not in nearly as bad of condition as her.

"C-can't... can't keep this pace up..." Camael wheezes. She stares in horror as Bael pulls himself to his feet. A slight trickle of blood runs down the side of his mouth.

"Ah, fugg, yew knocked one'f mah teef out. Fuggin biff. I liked that toof. It wath my favorite toof."

Bael spits blood on the ground and rubs his jaw.

"Yew hit pwetty hawd, gwamma," Bael continues. He massages his jaw for a moment, then returns to speaking normally. "That club-thing hurts like an angry broodmother."

"It's a hammer, not a club, imbecile!" Camael roars. She leaps into the air, flaps her wings, and rushes Bael again. "I designed it to kill demons, and that's exactly what it will do!"

Camael tries to batter Bael again, but this time, he catches her off-guard. With a quick, almost flippant motion, he backhands her hammer and delivers a precise palm-strike to her solar plexus.

Thuk!

Bael evades Camael's shield and knocks the wind out of her, sending her tumbling backward. Her hammer flies out of her grasp as she loses her grip on it. It smashes into the dirt fifty feet away, sprays a small avalanche of dust in every direction, and startles several demons and angels battling nearby.

One of the grunt's eyes widens as he spots the enchanted weapon. "Oooh! Perfect timing!"

The little guy dives for the weapon and grabs its upraised handle. He starts to tug at it, but a moment later, a lethal amount of holy energy floods into his arms and travels to his heart, detonating every cell in his body like a grenade. The grunt's entrails spray in every direction and coat the nearby angels and demons with his remains.

"By the Creator!" One of the cherubs yells in astonishment.

"Oy! Keep away from that thing!" A demon Lord yells. "It's dangerous!"

"No, shit!" Another grunt yells.

Bael gapes at Camael's hammer for several seconds, giving his elderly opponent a chance to collect herself and jump to her feet. Camael presses her right palm against her chest and swoons for a moment as she struggles to regain her breath.

"F-foolish demon... Mjölnir... possesses millions of years of holy energy within its head. Only an imbecile would think themselves worthy of wielding it."

She aims her palm at Mjölnir, causing the divine weapon to leap from the dirt and sail into her grasp. Bael watches in wonder as she twirls it around and turns to face him.

"From the tale Hercules wove, it became apparent that thou art a most stalwart opponent, Duke of Pain. Since that is the case, then I will have to unleash every bit of my power if I hope to defeat thee."

Bael raises an eyebrow. "Don't get your knickers in a twist. You already knocked one of my teeth out. You're doing better'n most I've fought."

"Yet still, 'tis not enough," Camael murmurs.

The Archangel of Divination sucks in a deep breath. She kneels and coils power into her legs as she prepares to leap at Bael. An instant before she pounces, Camael freezes in place.

"What?! This feeling... something is coming!"

Camael's eyes widen as she jerks her head around. A horrible foreboding falls upon her as a dreadful aura spreads throughout the air.

"Impossible! Hercules told us-"

"Don't lose your concentration, grandma!" Bael roars. He charges Camael while she's distracted and slams his gut against her shield, knocking her off-balance. Camael yelps in surprise and flies backward. Her wings grind into the dirt, and her head slaps against the foot of a nearby demon Lord.

"Archangel!" The Lord yells. He motions with his hands and starts to summon the elemental power of fire, but at that moment, Sophia appears and rips his head off with a powerful blast of water. The Lord staggers and falls to his side, dead.

"Sister!" Sophia yells. She quickly yanks Camael to her feet, and Penelope appears beside her. The Giantess's armor no longer shines with a golden luster, as hardened and dried blood cakes its surface. "The demons keep coming! They're still pouring through Heaven's Gate! We can't disable it!"

Camael staggers woozily and barely acknowledges her sister's words. "Sophia. Forget all of that. Just now, I sensed the Reaper's presence!"

Sophia's face turns ashen. "You did?! But... I didn't sense anything..."

"'Twas only for an instant. Go now and seek out Raphael at once."

Sophia shakes her head. "No, no, Valac can't be back! He can't! Hercules said-"

"I know, but he might have been wrong," Camael replies, cutting the Valkyrie of Water off. "Take Penelope, find Raphael, and tell him, before it's too late!"

Bael stomps toward Camael, but pauses a few feet away to listen to her words. "Oh? Valac's still alive, eh? Coulda swore the boss took 'im out for good. That bastard's one sturdy bag of bones."

Camael glares at Bael and strikes a defensive pose. "It seems likely he survived. I don't sense him anymore, but he might be masking his presence. Before he returns, I will have to unleash all of my might against thee. No more games, Duke of Pain. Thy end has arrived."

A flicker of doubt crosses Camael's face. Worry spreads throughout her body as she wonders if she can, indeed, take out Bael. Having only knocked out one of his teeth, the Archangel of Divination appears uncertain of her ability to eliminate him.

Nevertheless, she grunts in determination. "Hmpf. Penelope, assist Sophia. While she warns Raphael, thou must-"

"No time for explanations!" Bael yells. He jumps toward Camael, taking her by surprise. "Fighting ain't fun if you hafta use your brain!"

Bael's body slams against Camael's shield. He wraps both arms around her defensive implement, digs his feet into the dirt, and tries to tear it off her body, along with her arm. Instead, Penelope swings her greatmace down and smashes the Duke in his head, sending a powerful shockwave throughout the nearby areas. Several demons and angels get tossed away, but Bael merely grunts as the weapon cracks his skull.

"Ow! Ow! You fuckin' bitch!"

Bael releases his right arm to grab at the Valkyrie, but at that moment, Camael aims Mjölnir at the sky, summoning a thundercloud overhead.

CRACK!

Lightning tears from the sky and electrifies her hammer. Camael slams it against Bael's left arm and shatters his elbow. Bael involuntarily releases her shield and tumbles to the right, unable to move his arm properly.

"Shit! Double-bitch!"

He grinds into the dirt and jumps to his feet again, but this time, his arm appears badly bent in the wrong direction. Camael smiles darkly at his dislocated elbow.

"It appears we can injure this demon."

"Great work, sis!" Penelope laughs. She flaps her wings and heads after Sophia. "I'll leave the rest to you!"

"Fuck, fuck, fuck! That really fuckin' hurt!" Bael snarls. He pauses for a moment to catch his breath, then grabs his broken arm and forcibly wrenches it back into place. A horrible popping sound erupts in his elbow, and within two seconds, he flexes his fingers to ensure they still work. However, his grip appears noticeably weaker than before.

"Maaaan... gonna hafta crawl over to Belial and ask her to fix me up when I'm all done with these broads," Bael mutters. "What a pain in the ass."

"Sorry!" Camael says mockingly. She keeps both eyes fixated on Bael as Penelope leaves. "Next time, I'll strike thee so hard that thou shalt not reawaken!"

Michael's eyes flick in every direction. A shimmer in the air catches his attention, and he immediately spins to face it.

There!

A translucent, nearly invisible demon swipes his claws against Michael's iron-gripped sword. The Archangel presses against the ground with his feet and slashes down, intending to behead his attacker. Instead, his weapon glances off his foe's armored scales, but it has the desired effect of flinging his attacker backward.

"Gah!"

Agares cries out in surprise as the Archangel sends him flying. The Duke's camouflage wears off, while he lands on his back in a small patch of grass. His armor grinds against Heaven's Soil, but he doesn't suffer any injuries. Immediately, the reptilian demon uses his tail to flip onto his feet, and he takes three steps back.

The Duke of Reptiles eyes Michael warily. Because of his reptilian physiology, he doesn't sweat even with exhaustion wracking his entire body. "Vepar!"

The female, again, Michael thinks to himself. He glances around, but with all the chaos of hundreds of small-scale battles in every direction, it's difficult to pick out the movements of her chemical trail. At the last second, he spots her. Vepar hugs the ground and appears as a deadly poison mist blending in with the grass. She arrives at Michael's feet and leaps toward his face, but the Archangel of Courage easily dodges. He beats his wings as hard as possible and slides in the opposite direction, blowing her away with a gust of wind.

"Urgh!"

Vepar cries out in annoyance as her poison-gas form gets pushed several feet away from Michael. Even with that momentary distraction, the Archangel keeps his gaze firmly locked on Agares.

"Agares, the demon who humiliated me. I know thy name. I plucked it from the lips of several demons I've captured over the last five centuries. Thy people are a species of backstabbers, but it took more work than I found preferable to extract the name of the one who took my right arm from me."

Michael flicks his gaze to the limb hanging uselessly at his side. It appears shriveled and dried up, like a prune which has laid in the desert for far too long. If one were to reach over and squeeze with all their strength, they might tear it off without any trouble.

"Is this the most thou cans't accomplish? Thou hath done little more than slow me down. After I shatter thy defenses, thou shalt be little more than a bloodied snake writhing in the grass. The torture I inflict upon thee will be most exquisite. I'll take my time in peeling the flesh from thy bones and allow thy screams to send tingles of horror through any who hear."

Agares tenses up as he gazes into the cold, monstrous eyes of the Archangel. "I never intended to beat you, Michael. Slowing you down was always my goal. That's why Satan picked a Duke and a Baron, because he didn't want to face you right now. Your threats of torture are empty if all the angels perish today."

Michael narrows his eyes. "Oh? I see. Are thy people that terrified of me? They should be. I slew many dragons and Titans during the primordial era. Have thee any idea what a dragon is? The mightiest demon would pale in comparison to Jörmungandr. I lack memories of those glorious days, but Raphael has regaled me with tales of the dragon mother's nigh-infinite power. Compared to her splendor, crushing a legion of bugs is almost... beneath me."

At the mention of dragons, Agares pales slightly, but Michael seems to misunderstand him. After all, how can the Archangel know that a dragon was responsible for the demons' sudden power increase? At the sight of Agares' fearful expression, Michael grins in delight.

Hah. It seems my description was quite vivid. This little Duke finally understands how weak and frail his people are compared to the ancient wyrms. The Emperors do, indeed, possess a small modicum of power, but 'tis nothing compared to the dragons whom I've faced before. Raphael confirmed as much.

Michael glances around and picks out several key battles, including Zeus battling Belial, Satan struggling against Raphael, and Bael duking it out against Camael.

"Tch. To think thy egos hath inflated so much over the last few millennia! A direct assault on Heaven?! What foolishness! The Angels survived the first light of eternity, the primordial era, the war of the dragons, the war of the Titans, and countless other struggles preceding and following those dark days. Compared to the innumerable losses we've suffered, thy people shall be little more than footnotes in our scrolls!"

The Archangel of Courage raises his sword. He presses his teeth together and snarls at Agares. "Were it not for thy deceit, Uriel alone would have slain every last one of thy fellow bloodskins in the caves. By my sister's name, as well as Samael's... I swear... I will avenge them!"

Michael flaps his wings. He instantly charges at Agares, turning the lizard-demon's blood to ice. Agares quickly holds up his arms and tucks himself into a ball as Michael's sword transforms into a whirlwind of steel.

Ting ting ting, shik!

Michael's weapon bounces off Agares scales a hundred times within two seconds, only for it to suddenly find a chink in the reptile's armor. Michael's eyes widen greedily as he plunges his blade deep into Agares' back, causing the reptile to howl in pain.

"Gaaahh!"

An instant later, Michael yanks his sword out and kicks Agares in the face, flinging him backward and breaking his defensive posture. Agares lands in the dirt, but his heart palpitates as the Archangel lunges at him again!

Michael cackles maniacally. "Hahaha! Thy death is upon thee, little bloodskin!"

Agares rolls to the side and slaps his tail against the ground, launching himself to the right. He spins in midair and lands on his feet, then quickly dashes away. With a wave of his hands, he activates his camouflage and crouches low to the grass.

I need to put some distance between us! Michael is too fast! I thought his sword couldn't pierce my scales, but that isn't the case at all! He's way beyond the likes of- AH!

Agares screeches to a halt as the Archangel of Courage suddenly slams into the ground before him. The Archangel's wings twitch, allowing him to jumps toward the startled Duke.

"Dodge this, little gecko!"

Michael's arm becomes a blur. His sword slashes and stabs at every point on Agares' body. Seconds later, several fountains of blood erupt between Agares's scales, causing the Duke to stumble backward.

"Ahhh! Ahh!!!"

He screams in pain and covers his vulnerable eyeballs with his hands, but he hasn't the speed to escape, nor the strength to retaliate.

"Pahaha! Look at how the snail curls into his shell! Cowering in the dark is all thou can hope to accomplish!"

Unlike ordinary swords forged by humans thousands of years after the War in Heaven, Michael's enchanted blade never dulls, dings, or dents as it eviscerates Agares from head to toe. Camael's divine magic makes it unbreakable, allowing Michael to unleash massive amounts of battle strength without worrying about losing his only weapon.

Suddenly, a light flashes in Agares' mind!

If I can't escape the Archangel; then it's time for desperate measures!

Agares continues to shield his face, but deep in his stomach, he conjures a ball of fetid filth, formed from the frothing mixture of many cobra poisons.

As Michael cackles maniacally, Agares flings his arms apart, startling his opponent.

"BLEECKK!"

An eruption of black poison, resembling tar, erupts from his throat and fires at Michael. Instinctively, the Archangel slices and dices the point-blank attack, only to spread it in every direction. It sprays his face, arms, chest, and legs, causing him to flap his wings and fly backward.

"Agh! My eyes! What is this abominable-?!"

With only one hand available, Michael blearily tries to hold his sword and use his thumb to paw the horrid venom out of his eyes, but a moment later, his skin begins to boil and fester. He stumbles backward and screams in rage as Agares' trump card starts chewing at his mana reserves. "Eeeuughh! Gaaah!! It burns!!!"

Agares staggers slightly as his blood loss starts to slow. His regenerative reptilian powers work to stop the bleeding, but his gashed-apart muscles ache like no tomorrow. "G-gotta keep the pressure up... can I kill him?"

Without wasting effort on thoughts and worries, Agares quickly charges toward Michael. He leaps at the Archangel and swipes his paws at his opponent's head, intending to finish him in one blow.

Michael stops screaming.

He grins.

For the Archangel of Courage, time slows to an absolute crawl. His agonized movements cease, and he calmly stands up.

Michael gazes with contempt at the reptile pouncing toward his face. He flicks his eyes to the left and spots the light shifting of grass, betraying Vepar's poison-body form.

Fools.

Michael shakes his head.

From the beginning of this battle, my goal has been to break this bloodskin's fighting spirit. After finally gaining the upper hand on me, he believes he's about to win.

How... conceited.

With my ultimate Omni-Perception, how could slugs ever stand a chance? In my eyes, my opponents might as well be wading through quicksand. Of course, only my arm can move fast enough to follow my eyes, but that is enough. I need only to stand in place to kill anyone who draws near.

Slowly, deliberately, Michael stabs his blade into the ground. He takes a few minutes to clean his eyes and face, then smirks as he grabs his sword again.

Agares has scarcely moved an inch.

Oops, Michael thinks to himself. He raises his sword above Agares' head and turns it sideways. It seems my hand... slipped.

Michael swings his weapon down. The flat of the blade smashes against Agares' skull, pounding him into the dirt.

Agares hits the ground faster than his mind can react. A moment later, all of his bones scream in pain, while his head spins in a daze.

Hit... whuh hit... muh...?

Vepar, still in her poison-body form, stares at Michael in shock.

What was that? One second, Michael was screaming in pain and rubbing his eyes. Then, when Agares jumped at him, he got pounded into the ground. Look! Michael's face is clean, too! How did he... what did he...?!

A sinister grin spreads across Michael's face.

"Thou art a thousand eons too early to challenge me, bloodskins. Ah, but even if thou possessed enough time to prepare, thy death would be the inevitable result. Thou art a flea trying to stand against the might of a hurricane."

Agares twitches his fingers and toes. The old man gasps for breath as he shakily pulls himself to his feet. His left eyelid squeezes shut. Bloody entrails flow from it, evidence that he lost the eye. Dozens of teeth, including his two prominent fangs, lie in ruins. Most sit snapped and shattered inside his skull. Several appear to have broken free and embedded into the tops and bottoms of his jaw, sending waves of additional pain into his head.

"Muh... my... kull..."

He gazes in horror at the Archangel towering over him. Michael makes no move to end the battle, but instead holds his sword away from his body, spreading his arm out like a wing. "Have thee any secret abilities, little one? After I finish with thee, I should very much like to slaughter one of thy Emperors. Do not keep me waiting."

Agares's thoughts turn sluggish.

Secret... trump cards... secret... do I... did I... have any of those?

Slowly, the Duke of Reptiles turns his head to the left. Satan and Raphael shout obscenities at one another only a hundred paces away. In the other direction, Gabriel's massive, towering body expands to over a hundred feet tall as he battles Lucifer.

Did I... have anything... like that?

Agares finally nods.

I did. I do. But... they are insufficient. My body is too broken. How can I stand against a foe like Michael? If only I had-

"Uwaaah!"

A booming voice cries out from the skies. Michael jerks his head up and gasps as Zeus's forty-foot form comes tumbling from above. Michael flaps his wings and retreats fifty steps, allowing the Titan King to crash into the ground where Michael stood only a second before. His back hits the ground, making his head whip backward and batter against a stone. He slides across the grass, creating a humongous gulley in his wake.

Atop Zeus, Belial giggles cutely. She hops off his face, backflips multiple times, and dives between his legs. Two seconds later, the Emperor of Passion crawls under the Titan King's back, coils strength into her fist, and uppercuts his spine with all her strength.

THOOOM!

"AAAAUUGH!!"

Zeus screams in pain as the strongest Emperor launches him into the sky. She immediately coils strength into her legs, jumps after him, and punts him to the side, sending Zeus spinning and careening into an unsuspecting wall of cherubs. A hundred angels scream in fright as the largest Titan sails into their ranks and crushes them to death.

Belial lands on her feet and stares after the Titan King. When he doesn't immediately jump to his feet, she nods.

"I didn't mean to kill those angels. Tch. Why'd they have to be in the way?! Stupid, stupid chickens! Jeez. At least Satan will praise me. I guess that's something."

Belial grumbles for a moment, then scans her surroundings. She blinks in surprise as she spots not only Michael, but the badly beaten and bruised Agares as well.

"A-Agares! Oh, devils! Are you okay?! You were only supposed to slow Michael down; not fight him!"

Agares raises a single shaky thumb. "Uh... uh huh... I d-did my best... uoohh..." He sags to his knees and gasps for breath. Seconds later, Agares's reptilian form wears off, returning him to an even more miserable base demon form. With his eye still missing and dozens of bones broken, Agares looks like a toddler could finish him off.

"Why hello there, bloodskin," Michael sneers. "I remember thy face well. Thou were the female who dared battle me. I left thee a broken, beaten mess. Still, I have yet to repay thee for stealing my precious toys."

Michael glances at Agares, then at Belial. Several seconds pass as he debates whether to finish with the former, or move onto the latter.

"Bah. This one has no more fight left in him. Thou shalt be my new opponent."

Michael raises his blade, but as he does, a cold light appears in Belial's eyes.

"Agares is one of my best friends. Since you left him in this state, I'll make sure to repay you in kind."

Belial's arms transform into two razor-sharp blades. She drops into a defensive posture, mirroring Michael.

The Archangel of Courage smirks. "It would be unbecoming of me not to allow a wench the first blow. Come, then. Do thy best."

"Certainly!"

Belial flashes a cheerful smile.

"I just hope you can endure it, little birdy!"

* * *

Raphael and Satan clash for the fiftieth time. Once again, the Devil attacks the eldest Archangel furiously, only for Raphael's illusion to evaporate into the air. Satan jerks his head around and spots a new Raphael standing twenty feet away. "Stop with the tricks, grandpa! Lemme stick you in a coffin already; you dried up husk!"

Raphael doesn't smile. He appears winded, and the beads of sweat on his face betray his exhaustion. "Tell me, Satan... what technique allowed thee to escape the Cosmic Realm?"

"Are you still on about that?! You're a real hoot!"

Satan lashes his vectors at Raphael, but the old man merely takes a step backward, escaping the invisible limbs' maximum attack range. Because of his status and age, he already knows many things about the Vectors, including their strengths and weaknesses.

Satan, Samael says, appearing in Satan's mind. Do not allow my brother to trick thee. He hides his real body elsewhere, somewhere nearby. His astral projections and substitutions consume a significant amount of mana. Thou may attack them all day to wear him down, but the time cost will be enormous. Thy troops require assistance.

"Hmph," Satan mutters under his breath. "You think I don't know that? If the old man's hiding, where will I find him? It's an open plain, for devil's sake!"

There are many cherubs in the skies. Raphael might choose to blend in with them.

"Not a chance. Your Vectors already scanned the chickens above us. He ain't up there."

Thou art likely correct. The second possibility is that he may have buried himself underground.

"Oh?"

Satan glances at the soft, torn-up soil surrounding him. Despite the millions of demons and angels battling, all the combatants intentionally gave the two faction leaders a wide berth, leaving a vast, arena-like circle around Satan and Raphael.

"Tch. There's an awful lot of underground here, though. What's the range on the old man's astral projection?"

Samael's expression darkens. Several miles.

"What?! Several miles- you stupid shit!"

Satan hisses angrily at the Archangel inside him, causing Raphael to raise an eyebrow.

Hm? Why does the Devil argue with himself? Especially in the middle of battle, 'tis quite the bizarre sight.

Enraged, Satan leaps at Raphael's projection again. This time, when he strikes the old man, clear frustration erupts on Satan's face. "You're starting to piss me off, old man! Where the fuck are you?!"

As Satan's Vectors connect with Raphael, something shocking happens. Satan strikes solid matter. His Vector rips through Raphael's body, spraying blood out of the old man's back.

Satan jerks back, and his eyes widen in disbelief. Raphael's pupils shrink as he gazes in horror at the invisible arm protruding through his stomach.

"A... ah... how...?"

It takes Satan three whole seconds before his mind starts thinking thoughts again. "Huh? Did I get him? Ha... haha! Hahahaha!! What a shocker! I can't believe I did it! Your time's up, grandpa!"

Cackling with glee, the Devil pounces upon Raphael. In the blink of an eye, Satan crushes Raphael's head with his hands, spraying the Archangel's brains in every direction. Satan laughs maniacally as he waits for the power of the Archangel to surge inside of him.

"Hahahaha!! I killed the leader of the angels! I finally did it!!"

From within Satan's mind, Samael speaks. Concern laces his voice. Nay. Something isn't right. That attack should not have- ah! By the Creator! Thou hath fallen into my brother's trap!

Samael's voice trembles as the Archangel of Change rapidly pieces together what happened. A moment later, Raphael materializes beside Satan, a huge grin on his face.

"Ohoho! How unfortunate, young devil! By lowering thy mental defenses, thou hath allowed me to yank thy mind into the Illusory Realm! Ah, such is the folly of youth!"

Satan's mind blanks out again. "The Illusory Realm?! What are you up to now, old bat?! I ain't falling for any of your tricks! Not this time!"

Raphael's grin deepens. A moment later, his face shifts into Michael's. Raphael's disgusting grin appears even more horrific on the face of the Archangel of Courage. "Illusions are a fickle thing, my boy. Once thy frustrations boiled over, I took control of thy sensory organs. Now, thou art dancing in my grasp! Beware, lest ye enter the second Illusory Realm! I assure thee, escape becomes quite impossible once one reaches the third."

Revulsion fills Samael's voice. No... no... no... my brother's ultimate technique! Satan, we must break free of Raphael's spell. Thou art only trapped within the first Realm. The second will cause thee to doubt thy senses, but the third... the third will shatter thy mind! Nobody can survive it!

Satan punches Raphael, but the old man turns into mist again. "I can survive anything! I'm immortal!"

Raphael speaks softly, his voice surrounding Satan from all sides. "Self-regenerating, yes. Immortal, nay. None are truly immortal. All beings can, and likely will, die. Where there is a beginning, there is an end."

Suddenly, ten copies of Raphael materialize around Satan. Each of them charges the Devil, and when Satan smirks and starts to scatter them into the wind, his heart gets a jolt as several of the Archangel's clones explode into blood and gore. Two of them skip past Satan's defenses and land their blows, knocking Satan for a loop and tossing him into the dirt.

"What?! These guys ain't illusions, but flesh and blood bodies?!"

Satan plants his Vectors in the dirt and launches himself in the sky. However, as he soars through the air, Raphael materializes in front of him with a fist held at the ready.

CRACK!

Raphael catches the Devil by surprise and lands a decisive punch, knocking Satan out of the air and punting him back to the ruddied soil below. Satan collides with the dirt and grinds to a stop, bewilderment on his face.

The First Illusory Realm allows Raphael's illusions to manifest into reality, Samael explains. My brother's soul is far stronger than any other being. His illusions work by infecting the soul of his opponent and gradually wearing them down. Each illusory strike attacks thy soul, not thy body. Thy wounds are nonexistent, but over time, thy mind shall surely shatter.

Satan gnashes his teeth. He mutters under his breath, "Why didn't you bring this up sooner? I should kill myself to regenerate from scratch."

Samael sighs. That will not allow thee to escape. Thy own soul is different from those consumed by thy power. My brother's ultimate technique has only one weakness, in that it will take some time to cripple thy soul. However, once it does, thy death will become assured.

"Tch. So you're saying I... I could actually die? Permanently?"

Samael's voice lowers and becomes almost a whisper.

Aye.

Satan stares at Raphael for a moment, then wipes blood off his lip.

"Heh. So be it. Always did love a good challenge."

Satan switches to defense. Raphael's clones appear much more frequently, sometimes with slightly altered versions of his face, but other times they change to entirely different angels and demons.

"Thou received quite the mental shock a few years ago!" One of Raphael's clones yells as he fires a weak bolt of holy energy. Satan easily dodges it, but in doing so, he jumps right into the arms of a clone of Uzziel. The Uzziel clone aims several vines at Satan and binds his legs, causing him to trip and fall. She continues speaking, instead of the Raphael clone. "Hercules spoke of thy mate perishing at the hands of Valac! I can only imagine how devastated thou must have felt!"

Satan snarls. "Don't you dare talk about Nerissa in front of me, you wrinkled prune!" He rips the Uzziel clone to shreds with his Vectors, but immediately, another one reforms several feet away, laughing into her palm.

Do not react to Raphael's provocations, Samael warns Satan. My brother is many things, but a mind-reader is not among them. He can only piece together information given to him from various sources, including thy replies to his illusions. The more Raphael learns about thee, the more holes he can poke in thy soul.

Satan reaches down and tries to pull apart the weeds wrapping around his legs, but their iron-like grip stumps him. "Gahh!! If this Uzziel isn't the real one, how are her powers working on me?! These vines are even tougher than the real deal!"

Raphael's illusions grow in power once thou entereth the first Illusory Realm. Before, he could only make faint apparitions in the air to provoke thee. Now, their power comes from thy own imagination.

Satan pauses to stare at the vines coiled around his leg. "What... what do you mean? These vines ain't real?"

Nay. They are merely an illusion. In reality, my brother seized up thy legs by infiltrating the pathways of thy mind. The vines are his way of deceiving thee. Thou shalt tear at them endlessly, but only by removing the source of his illusions can thou escapeth their restraints.

"Spawn of a broodmother..."

Satan trails off. He raises his head and stares at the giggling Uzziel clone, while several emotions pass over his face. "How do I break Raphael's control?"

There are three main methods. First, thou coulds't attempt to cleanse thy soul of his corruption. I could perform such a feat by using my magic, but t'would take too long, and it would require thee to stand perfectly still. Second, if thou could locate his main body and kill it, the illusions would stop. Over time, the damage to thy soul would heal. Such is the most optimal path. Third, thou could attempt to combat my brother's soul directly, destroying it before he destroys thine. The only problem is...

Samael trails off for a moment.

...My brother's soul is the mightiest in the universe. Such a tactic would prove impossible. Engaging in direct combat with his soul would result in a swift death for thee. However, there is a fourth possibility.

"Yeah? What's that?"

Flee. If thou escapeth the range of my brother's illusions, they will cease to affect thee. This method will only succeed during the first illusory realms, but not the second and third, since thy body will become immobile and helpless.

Satan snorts. "Oh, sure. Run away with my tail tucked between my legs. How about no? I'll find Raphael's main body and rip his head off. That sounds much more fun!"

A few moments pass. The Devil closes his eyes and focuses on the stirrings within his mind. Soon, the vines wrapping around his legs collapse into dust. He jumps to his feet and sways around for a moment before regaining his balance.

"Yo! Raphael! Where are you hiding, grandpa? I'm comin' for ya!"

"We're right here," Three of Raphael's clones say in unison. Each of them sports a different expression. The one on the left smiles creepily, while the middle one stares blankly, and the rightmost one frowns. "It seems thou have uncovered a method for breaking my illusions. Unfortunately, once inside the first Realm, the chances of breaking free are null. Many have tried and failed, and thou are not special in the slightest."

The Raphael on the right narrows his eyes and glares at Satan suspiciously. "One thing is bothering me, Satan. Breaking free of those vines wasn't something just anyone could do. Luck? A stroke of brilliance? Perhaps... something else? Thou hath been speaking to someone for a while now. Who is it?"

Satan growls in his throat. "Wouldn't you like to know!"

He pounces at Raphael and tears apart the three clones, but the moment he finishes, his head starts to swim. The bloodied corpses of Raphael's illusions linger, giving the impression that they were real flesh and blood bodies.

I warned thee already! Samael growls. Do not allow my brother to antagonize thy mind! His soul is far mightier than thine. If thou shoulds't enter the Second Realm...

"I know, I know!"

Veins bulge on Satan's forehead. He curls up his lips and releases a fraction of his rage, but directs most of it at himself instead of Samael. Satan's punches the ground in frustration before raising his head to look for the next set of apparitions.

"If killing one of these phantoms will only hurt me, then maybe you were right after all. Maybe fleeing is my best option."

Samael's voice tightens. During the Primordial Era, my brother's mana reserves were a million times greater than now. His range was too vast for any to escape his clutches. For now, I highly recommend it.

"Fine. I'll escape, and then-"

Satan starts to run away, but as he speaks, his right leg plunges over the edge of an embankment, into a deep lake, startling him. The Devil trips and falls forward, splashing into the body of water without being able to stop himself.

"Bloody hell! Where the fuck did this come from?!"

He quickly turns and swims toward the embankment to pull himself up, but as he does, his strength diminishes rapidly.

By the Creator... Satan. Thou hath entered the second Illusory Realm! This lake is false, borne from thy memories and experiences.

Satan grabs the grass at the edge of the water and gasps as he struggles to pull himself up. "Rrrrgh! False?! You've gotta be shitting me..."

The Devil arrives on solid land, but his entire body increases in weight, as if several millstones were yanking him to the ground. With great effort, he manages to lift himself to a standing position.

"Gotta... gotta get away..." Satan mumbles. He blinks his eyes, and they begin to droop as a strange sense of exhaustion overtakes him. "Fuck. I could go for a nap right about now..."

Watch out! Behind-

Samael cries out in alarm, but Satan's mind moves too sluggishly to react. Several watery limbs burst out of the lake and grab hold of Satan. A second later, they yank him backward, plunging him into the frigid depths. With icy liquid slapping his face, Satan gurgles incomprehensibly and begins to struggle. He turns his head around and belches air bubbles as he spots Poseidon, the Sea-King. The massive demigod cackles and grabs Satan, crushing the demon with unrelenting strength.

"You thought you could escape me, little bloodskin?! Impossible! The sea is my home! Wherever there is water, I will arise! Now, beg for mercy as I overwhelm thee with the might of Atlantis!"

Satan wriggles and writhes. His Vectors barely manage to annoy the Titan, while his mind turns to mush as the water threatens to drown him.

Satan! Thou must remain alert! This Titan is merely an illusion! Even if 'tis born of the Second Realm, thou can escape its grasp! After the Second Realm, my brother need not waste his mana, for thy mind will supply thy greatest fears of its own volition! Do not feel fear, and this phantom will dissipate!

Despite Samael's warning, Satan continues to stare at the Titan squeezing him like a vice. He struggles with all his strength, but the more he does, the mightier the Titan's grip becomes.

Suddenly, the water darkens noticeably. A pitch-black haze spreads throughout the bottomless abyss, shrouding the Titan's face into obscurity. Poseidon squeezes even harder, forcing Satan to vomit blood into the water around him.

I... I can't believe it, Samael mutters. Satan has already arrived within The Third Realm! How... how could Satan possess such a weak soul?! Even the frailest angel and Titan fought for several days against Raphael's ultimate technique! Are Satan's insecurities so great that he cannot overcome them? Was he doomed before he began?

Satan's thoughts vanish into the ether. He loses his ability to form coherent, rational decisions, and instead struggles like a bear caught in a trap. Mindlessly, robotically, he wastes all of his strength on trying to escape via brute force. However, his efforts only strengthen Raphael's power.

Soon, even the sensation of squeezing disappears. Poseidon vanishes, and the blackness engulfs Satan as he continues to writhe and squirm.

Tsk. 'Tis too late, now. His soul is nearing its breaking point, Samael says to himself bitterly. Bah. I've lost contact with all of the souls in Satan's body. I doubt he could self-detonate even if he wanted. To think, the mighty Devil would reach his end in such a pitiful state.

From the depths of blackness, a single piercing ray of light appears. It illuminates a spot of the floor, and Raphael walks into it, like a performer onto a stage. He claps his hands slowly and grins, though pangs of agony also tear across his face.

"Haha... oh, Satan. To think I could have saved many of my brethren's lives had I merely used my ultimate technique on thee from the start. Never did I imagine thy people would prove so troublesome. After I eradicate thy kin from Earth, I will enter exile for ten generations to atone for my failures. Even that isn't enough, but I must return to safeguard those who will survive this war."

Satan says nothing. He lies on the ground, twitching uncontrollably.

Raphael's expression turns sorrowful. "Bah. Naturally, thou hath nothing to say. Well, I shall finish thee off, just as I did a million other soul manipulators before thee. In the end, thou were little more than a speck in my eye."

Raphael walks over to Satan, grabs the lifeless demon by his collar, and hoists him into the air.

Samael watches in horror as the old man raises his other palm and prepares to lunge it toward Satan's chest.

No... no!! What can I do?! Must I stand here and watch in silence as Satan dies?! Is this the where my revenge ends; watching the one who slew my kin get off scot-free?!

Raphael's palm flies toward Satan's chest.

WHUMP.

With a mighty palm-strike, Raphael strikes the core of Satan's soul, sending it rocketing out of his body.

"...What?!"

Raphael gasps.

He drops Satan's body and staggers backward in horror.

Instead of Satan's blood-red soul, a brilliant white entity floats in the air. Within seconds, the formless being, one born of light, coalesces into a vaguely angel-shaped figure. Wings sprout from its back, along with a masculine body structure and appearance.

"I missed?" Raphael asks nobody in particular. "I struck true, but t'wasn't Satan's soul that flew out! Nay, this appears to be one of my kin! He must be one of the thousands trapped within the Devil!"

The Archangel of Wisdom stares at the being floating in the air, but no defined facial or body features appear on it, stupefying him as to its identity.

Samael blinks. He stares, confused, at Raphael's astonished face, as well as Satan's limp body laying on the ground. The Archangel of Change hovers freely in the air, unencumbered by the sensation of gravity or other physical forces.

I... I am... free...?

Immediately, the wall of darkness shrouding Satan vanishes. Raphael jerks his head around in every direction, gawking as the third illusory Realm dissolves into the ether.

"What? What?! B-but... I destroyed the Devil's soul! Never, in all my life...!!"

Satan's eyes bolt open. He jerks his face off the ground and gasps for air as life surges into his body. He scrambles backward, putting distance between himself and Raphael.

"I'm alive?!"

"Thou art alive?!" Raphael echoes. "What madness is this?"

Satan, Raphael, and Samael all reappear in Heaven once again. All traces of the illusory Realm vanish, leaving the three of them bewildered as to what's happened.

Samael hovers in midair. A strange tingling pain assaults his body, while eons of memories flip through his brain as he tries to comprehend the events of the last several minutes.

Raphael struck Satan. As I recall, that was the final blow, the one that, without fail, always slew a soul manipulator. Raphael was the mightiest Archangel when it came to dealing with stray soul manipulators. But... what changed? What caused him to slip up, today?

The tingling pain intensifies, allowing waves of agony to spread throughout Samael's chest. He glances at his hands and gasps. By the Creator! I can see through my flesh and bone! Am I a ghost? A spirit? No! I must be... an errant soul!

This realization instantly lights a fire in Samael's heart.

One's soul cannot survive outside of a physical body. Since Raphael knocked me out of Satan, that means I have only seconds to live before the Creator elevates me to the Great Beyond! I must find a new host. A body, right! That's it!

Immediately, Samael's eyes dart around the battlefield. Millions of angels, demons, Titans, and monsters fight one another. Dead bodies lay scattered across the ground as far as the eye can see.

A corpse will be of little use to me. I must possess a living being — the closer to my original biology, the better. Therefore... an Ophanim would be for the best. Alas, for Raphael slew all of my fellow Ophanim! A Cherub or Seraph will have to suffice.

Several demons and Cherubs battle nearby, but one female angel gasps for breath and pulls away from the fight. Deep wounds stretch across her chest and back. Her armor lies in shreds.

Samael evaluates her for a moment. Sister Julias. She's too injured for my liking.

A different Cherub, a male this time, stands outside of a small encirclement. He barks orders at several angels, guiding them as they surround a ground of scythers and fire-type demons. Unlike the woman, he appears to be in peak form.

Ah, brother Hiraldo. He will do!

Samael darts toward Hiraldo, covering the distance at the speed of thought. Hiraldo starts to fire off another command to his comrades, only to pause mid-sentence as a strange presence engulfs his body.

Huhk! What is- who dares attack me from behind?

Pardon me, brother Hiraldo. I must borrow thy body.

What? This voice... I recognize it!

Tis I, Samael.

Samael?! But thou perished millennia ago! We all saw-

Sorry, Hiraldo, but thou art my enemy, now. Quietly fade away, if thou please.

Hiraldo's mind converses with Samael, but at the Archangel's words, confusion erupts in the cherub warrior's mind.

Fade away? Brother? What dost thee- AHHH! My head! It burns!

The incredible power of the Archangel of Change immediately dominates Hiraldo's soul, taking control of his brother's body in the blink of an eye.

Samael as he takes his first breath in several years. "Ahh! It worked!"

Taking over Hiraldo's body causes Samael no grief. Ever since receiving his old memories, the Archangel of Change gazes upon his formerly beloved brothers and sisters with hatred and disdain. They are not the Ophanim. They were, instead, the ones who slaughtered the Ophanim... as well as his beloved sisters, Muriel and Cassiel.

Samael stares at the cherubs encircling the demons for a moment. Then, he turns around to gaze at Raphael, only a few hundred steps away.

Brother.

* * *

Meanwhile, Raphael stares at Satan in shock. A thousand possibilities pass through his mind as he tries to comprehend what's happened. However, the moment the Illusory Realm dissipates, he loses sight of that strange phantom spirit. If he could inspect it, he might understand how his third illusory Realm failed.

"Satan! Thou art truly a servant of the damned...!"

Raphael bristles with anger.

"What unholy spell dids't thee use to break free of the Third Illusory Realm?! I held thy life in the palm of my hands! No soul manipulator has ever survived my ultimate technique! None of them!!"

Satan keeps his distance and stares at Raphael warily.

"Like I know! Bahaha! Maybe you're just getting old! You don't got the same golden touch anymore, bub!"

Despite his fierce bravado, a hint of cold terror brushes against Satan's mind. The Devil's pupils shrink as he tries to wrap his head around the previous events.

I died. Definitely. I know what dying feels like, and this time wasn't any different. Poseidon crushed me to death, but then... I revived? Maybe Samael was wrong! Maybe if I self-detonate, I can regenerate my soul after all!

"Good job, Samael," Satan mutters. "Seems I was right, after all. Whaddya got to say to that, bub?"

Satan grins and waits for Samael's limp-wristed reply, but instead receives silence.

"Hey. You ignorin' me?" Satan asks. He keeps his voice low and both eyes on Raphael, but still, Samael doesn't reply. "I'm talkin' to you!"

Several seconds pass. The cold terror at the back of Satan's mind intensifies.

Sunnofabitch... don't tell me the soul I used up was Samael's soul! Spawn of a broodmother!! Without him... without ol' Sammy...

Satan balls his hands into fists. Anger boils in his gut as he glares at the old man.

I bet Sammy sacrificed himself to save me! Of course, he would! That's the kind of guy he is! FUCK! I can't let him die in vain! Maybe if I attack the old man, this'll be his real body. Yeah! If I can kill Raphael right here and now, it'll all be worth it...

Satan coils power into his legs, but his expression turns rough as he realizes Samael's Vectors are gone. That realization drives home Satan's anger further, and he quickly chooses a substitute by summoning Poseidon's Octopus Form. Eight watery hands sprout from Satan's back, rippling in the air as they coil around him protectively.

Raphael's pale expression vanishes. He takes a battle stance and sighs in annoyance. I'll have to force Satan into the Illusory Realm once again. Killing his physical body won't accomplish anything, and I'm not certain I could pull it off with my current strength. If the Illusory Realm fails again, then I'll have to assume the Devil is somehow immune to its effects.

"Satan!"

An unfamiliar voice cries out from behind Raphael and the Devil. Both of them turn to stare at the speaker, a cherub, in confusion.

Hiraldo, a member of Heaven's legions, flies toward Satan with an urgent look on his face. Immediately, Satan raises his guard and groans inwardly. Oh, great. Reinforcements.

"It's me!" The Cherub yells. He lands a short distance away from Satan and gestures behind himself. Suddenly, eight rocks levitate into the air, hovering as if clutched by invisible forces. "Samael!"

Raphael blinks. "What?"

Satan stares, his mouth agape. "WHAT?!"

Part 151: Battle of the Blades

Michael and Belial face off against each other. The succubus crouches low, keeping both of her blade-arms in front of her face to protect herself. She smiles cutely, but a hint of worry trickles in. It's clear from a single glance that she isn't underestimating her opponent.

"We've fought before," Belial says. "Your battle skills left a deep impression on me. I couldn't defend myself at all."

Michael holds his sword casually at his side and smirks, as if he hasn't any worries in his heart. "I see thy horns have grown since we last spoke. Thou art the first Emperor I'll have fought since thy people invaded Heaven. Dost thou, perhaps, pose a slight threat to me?"

Belial doesn't answer. Instead, she inches toward Agares. Her tail motions in the air, completing a prepared spell she set up beforehand. Belial touches her tail's tip to the beaten and battered Duke of Reptiles, sending glorious healing energy into his body.

"Uhh... ohhh..." Agares grunts as his shattered bones snap into place. "Th-thanks... Belial..."

"Thank me later," Belial replies. "I need backup. I can't take Michael alone."

"Neither can I," Agares replies, as he pulls himself to his feet. The old demon wipes his forehead and retreats a few steps. "You healed my body, but Michael beat the mana out of me. I won't be able to transform for a while."

"Do whatever you can to help me, then," Belial replies, her voice tense. She never looks back at her ally, instead opting to keep both eyes locked on Michael, waiting for him to strike.

However, Michael doesn't move. The Archangel of Courage yawns exaggeratedly and stretches his sword arm out, popping a kink in his elbow. "Thou art betraying thy weakness, little bloodskin. Plotting and planning with others is quite the pathetic ploy. The weak need numbers, while the strong need only themselves. Such is the law of the jungle."

Without warning, Michael flaps his wings. He charges straight at Belial, and a crazed look appears on his face. "Don't assume I'll allow thee to act as ye please!"

"Urk!" Belial chokes on her own spit as she hurriedly raises her arms to engage in battle with the Archangel of Courage.

Ting ting ting ting!

Furious explosions of light erupt between the two warriors. Michael's singular sword slashes at Belial hundreds of times per second, while she struggles to keep up with both bladed arms.

Seconds later, Belial takes a step backward and winces as she uses all of her strength to endure Michael's pressure. Her two swords split into four and begin striking at Michael's backside, but they don't come within an arm's reach before Michael bats them away.

"Hahahaha!!" Michael cackles evilly. "What's wrong, she-demon?! Have thou any tricks or cheats left?! I've yet to break a sweat!!"

Agares pulls away from the Emperor of Passion and her Archangel opponent. His pupils dilate as he gazes in horror at the battle unfolding.

"Belial wants me to help? Help?! I can't even follow their movements! These two are absolute monsters! How did I ever think I stood a chance against the Archangel of Courage?!"

Michael grins from ear to ear. His teeth glint from Heaven's Light as his left arm darts around at godlike speeds, easily outpacing Belial's bladed limbs. To him, time moves in slow motion, but his eyes still flick around warily as he eyeballs Belial's makeshift swords.

This bloodskin drastically improved since we last fought! Her speed is not bad at all; she's at least half as fast as me! Even Catherine wouldn't be her match, now. And, with four limbs, all moving in tandem, I'm starting to feel the slightest bit of pressure...

Michael grunts as he deflects one of Belial's blade-arms. His smile lessens ever so slightly.

Urgh. The she-demon's speed is not my equal, but her strength matches Gabriel's. Hm. Half my speed, but twice my strength. Now that I think about it... perhaps I shouldn't play around.

Michael's grin intensifies once again.

Nay! Not once since losing my memories have I encountered an adversary worth my time! I can't end it here! I can't!!

Instantly, Michael reaches a conclusion. Belial's eyes zip around, trying to follow his sword, but her blood turns to ice as he does something out of her expectations. Michael bats away one of her limbs, releases his sword, and jerks his palm toward her chest.

Ah! Too fast!

Belial can't react in time to protect herself. Michael shatters her collarbone and flings the Emperor of Passion backward, sending her spinning and twisting across the grass. Huge tufts of greenery rip apart and spray in every direction. After two seconds, Belial grinds to a stop. Her four split limbs flop on the ground and lose all of their strength.

Michael deftly snatches his sword out of the air and lowers his arm to his side.

His evil grin slowly reverts to a simple smirk. It seems this bloodskin's battle experience pales in comparison to mine. She lacks the heart of a fighter. Her earnestness is adorable, reminding me of Uzziel, but without an iron will and battle-hardened instincts, she cannot snatch victory from the jaws of defeat.

"Oh, dear. It seems my bloodlust was too much for thou to handle. Well, since thou dost possess Divine Healing, I would advise tending to thy wounds for a moment. Don't mind me. I will wait."

Belial's vision shifts hues. The bright realm of Heaven dims several times and changes colors, from red to green to blue, before finally readjusting itself. She shivers as not only pain, but a sensation of fear emerges in her heart.

I thought I had a chance to defeat Michael. His attacks seemed to be slowing down. How did I lose? Was the Archangel merely toying with me?

Slowly, Belial pulls herself to her feet. Her beautiful eyes, usually tinted pink thanks to her demonic heritage, have turned pure red thanks to several blood vessels bursting in them. Despite the horrifying change, fear courses through her body, becoming evident by her cautious movements.

The first thing Belial does is motion with her hands to heal herself. Her mana reserves drop slightly, but not enough to cause an inconvenience.

After shaking off her apprehensions, Belial rises to her feet. The blood vessels in her eyes heal themselves, and her appearance becomes as beautiful as before.

"I thought I had a chance against you, even by myself," Belial says. "Maybe I was wrong. But... now that it's come to this... I suppose I don't have a choice."

Michael raises an eyebrow. "My battle spirit is higher than it has ever been in my memories. Please, I beg of thee... if thou can warm my blood by even a few degrees, do so. I love the thrill of battle."

"I don't," Belial replies, her voice grim. "I hate fighting. I hate it with a passion. But I also hate dying, and I love my husband. If I don't fight you here, he'll have to. I can't allow that!"

"Art thou implying that, of all the demons, only Satan is mightier than thee?"

Belial purses her lips.

"Probably."

Michael's breathing becomes heavier. "Then, after I capture thee and turn thy body into my plaything, I will battle thy husband, next. I offer my thanks to thee for this information."

Belial merges her four blade-arms and reverts them to five-fingered hands, then begins weaving a complex series of symbols. Her fingers trace through the air, forming an intricate diamond pattern. "Don't thank me yet, Archangel! You won't leave here alive!"

Michael's smug grin fades. He stares at Belial's magic signs, and soon, his expression turns into one of concern.

Such a detailed magical pattern. I wonder what demonic magic she's about to unleash?

Belial finishes, grabs at the air as if it was a fly, and then slaps her palm against her chest.

...Nothing happens.

Michael stares silently. After five seconds, he frowns.

"Did thy technique already kill me, or is it mere boredom ripping apart my soul right now?"

Hardly have the words left Michael's mouth before Belial's skin color begins to shift. Instead of a beautiful, shiny red, it changes to a dull, faded grey color. Tiny scales emerge on Belial's body, and her tail thickens noticeably. Huge, leathery wings erupt from her back, and her dainty, feminine hands transform into claws resembling Agares' lizard form.

Belial's eyes darken and shift to grey. Her human-like pupils change into a slit, and her teeth rapidly sharpen into those of a man-eater.

"I've only transformed twice in my life. Just now, and back when I first discovered this ability. I hate it more now than I did then. I hate ugly things... and this form, this True Succubus Form... is truly hideous!!"

Agares, watching from the sidelines, stares wide-eyed in surprise.

"A transformation? It resembles mine in many ways. Don't tell me... Lucifer didn't only give my power to Bael, but also..."

Belial doesn't turn to look at Agares, but she does nod and acknowledge him. "Yeah. Sorry, Agares. I let Lucifer experiment on me. I'm sorry if you're angry, but-"

"No way!" Agares yells. He pumps his fist in the air. "Are you kidding me?! Go nuts! Beat that shithead to death! Don't hold back on my account!"

Belial pauses. She flicks her eyes back to stare at Agares incredulously, then shrugs her shoulders. "Oh. Okay. Well, if you're fine with it, then..."

Fwoosh!

Belial launches at Michael. This time, it's the Archangel caught off-guard instead of the succubus. He reacts instantly, but shock still appears on his face.

"Hoho! So thou dost consider thyself my equal now, eh? We'll see about that!"

Michael flaps his wings and launches into the sky. Belial mirrors him and flaps hers. Instantly, the two engage in a vicious round of aerial combat. Michael's eyes dart around, following Belial's swift movement.

Tch. My eyes and arms move and strike with the power of lightning, but the rest of my body struggles to keep up. This she-demon has increased her speed to match mine, but the gains spread throughout her whole body! I'm no longer her match in strength or speed!

Belial loses her ability to transform her limbs into blades while in her True Succubus Form, but her power, defense, and agility increase explosively! She darts at Michael and swings her armored claws at him, aiming to take off his head, only to reveal her attack was a feint. Michael tries to deflect it, but gasps as her scorpion-like tail swings over her head.

Swish, swish, skrik!

Michael deflects her claw, but before he can react, Belial's tail stabs through his left shoulder and sprays blood and bone out its back.

"Aaargh!" Michael howls in pain.

"Aaaah!" Belial shrieks, as holy energy from Michael's bones floods into her tail. She rips it out of his arm, bringing remnants of his shoulder along with it. Michael howls in pain as he drops his sword, losing his only weapon.

"No!"

Belial's tail turns numb from Michael's holy energy, but she grins happily. "Ahh! I did it! I got him!"

Michael's expression fills with rage. "Wretched BLOODSKIN! How DARE thou land a blow on me!!"

The Archangel's eyes shift into pure white. A surge of divine energy erupts from his mind and fires at Belial, catching her off-guard.

"Ahh!" Belial yelps in panic. She flaps her wings to dodge but isn't fast enough.

KSSEW!

A beam of heavenly energy tears across Belial's right arm and wing, severing both in an instant.

"Twice!" Michael bellows. "Twice, demons have taken an arm from me, but now I shall take EVERYTHING from thee!"

His fury turns ungodly as he flaps his wings and charges toward Belial. The Succubus clutches her arm stump and plunges toward the ground. She strikes Heaven's soil with a heavy thud, while her eyes lock onto the Archangel descending toward her.

Immediately, Belial plants her feet down and launches horizontally across the plains, aiming to put distance between herself and the Archangel. Michael easily adjusts his orientation and continues closing the gap.

"Insolent she-demon! Nobody humiliates me! NOBODY!"

Belial's heart quivers in terror as the blood-crazed Archangel rushes toward her like an eagle descending upon a field hare. She tries to activate her healing magic, but once inside her True Succubus Form, her magical abilities remain sealed until she returns to normal.

I don't have time to revert! Belial's mind screams. Thoughts tumble around crazily as she scrambles to think of a solution. If Michael hits my head with that laser; I'll die!

Panic and self-preservation set in. Belial waits until a split second before Michael fires to jump away. She uses her sole remaining wing to spin in midair and dive toward a soft patch of grass.

That's it! I have to burrow!

Despite lacking in magical power, her True Succubus Form affords her many other benefits. She stretches her remaining arm out and begins frantically burrowing underground, moving hundreds of times faster than even the most adept of Earth's animals. She covers the route behind her with dirt, and when Michael's holy beam strikes it, it merely causes the soil to twitch.

"Aauugh!!" Michael screams in rage. "Wretched whore! Coward! Nobody escapes my grasp! Nobody!!"

Despite his explosive temper, Michael immediately realizes he can't chase Belial. Unlike Uriel and Uzziel, he cannot control the foundation of the earth, nor can he manipulate it or shift it in any way beyond normal means.

"Tch... if only Uriel were here..." Michael growls.

Suddenly, Heaven begins to shake. From the depths of its soil, the grass beneath Michael's feet bursts open, and Belial emerges, wrapped in hundreds of vines. Terror and panic cover her face.

"What?! Let me go! Rrrgh!"

She struggles with all her strength, but for every vine she breaks, two more appear in their place, binding her in an awkward position, with her arm tied to her wing and neck, held straight up in the air.

From the sky above, a beautiful voice speaks out. "Brother Michael, I have returned."

Michael's anger dissipates in an instant. He immediately raises his head and stares at the beautiful Archangel above.

"Hahaha! Uzziel, my beloved little sister! What a time to return! Quickly, heal my missing arm!"

Uzziel, flying hundreds of feet above, smiles and nods. She soars to the battlefield below and beams sunshine at her brother. "Have no fear, Michael, for I will heal thee!"

As she descends, Michael's expression turns into one of pure joy. Such perfect timing! How could he not be pleased with this turn of events?

But, once Uzziel draws nearer, Michael's smile fades away.

Uzziel lands beside him and immediately motions to heal her brother's arm. As she does, Michael scrutinizes her face.

"Sister? What happened to thy eyes? Why are they... glowing?"

Uzziel raises her head and smiles radiantly at her brother. Her blinding-white pupils glow like two diamonds illuminated by twin suns.

"Oh, Brother! I have joined together with the mighty Hercules! Together, we will free our people from the demonic infestation!"

Michael raises an eyebrow. "Thou hath... what? I do not understand."

Within seconds, the Archangel's shoulder mends itself back to perfect condition. Uzziel gently rests her head against Michael's healed shoulder and kisses his cheek.

"There is no need for questions, beloved brother. Hercules came up with a brilliant plan to defeat Valac. We need only follow his guidance, and the Reaper will soon become a distant memory!"

Michael stares unblinkingly at his sister. Hundreds of questions appear in his mind, but the most pressing one forms on his lips first.

"The Reaper? He's returned?!"

"Most likely," Uzziel replies. "His presence has arisen on the battlefield. Already, I've witnessed the Undying turn against one another! If Valac has indeed returned, then every dead angel and demon will be another troop for him to control! But worry not, for the mighty Hercules has discovered that Valac has been obscuring a critical weakness!"

Michael's soul trembles. Too many thoughts and questions appear in his mind to make sense of the chaos suddenly unfolding around him.

My sister has chosen to ally with Hercules? Why does she refer to him in such a grandiose matter? No, more importantly, how did I miss the return of the Grim Reaper?! Has my battle-lust overridden my sense of reason? Have I forgotten to examine my surroundings while fighting? Why is Uzziel working with the Titan?! I don't understand!!

Michael blinks. He tries to make sense of the turbulence in his thoughts, but with Uzziel's arrival, a fog lifts from his mind. He glances around and suddenly comprehends the scale of the devastation surrounding them.

"By the Creator! If the dead here join Valac's forces, then we will surely perish!"

Uzziel nods. She reaches over and touches Michael's chin, then drags his eyes to meet hers. "Brother, do not worry! So long as we trust in Hercules, this battle will end as a huge success for the angels and Titans! Now, what of this demoness here?"

Uzziel turns to look at Belial, and as she does, Belial's heart begins to pound.

"Michael! Michael, don't be deceived! Uzziel's eyes, they-"

Before Belial can reveal the Titan's enslavement powers, those which she battled when he took over Satan's mind, Uzziel's vines suddenly sprout around Belial's mouth, binding her in place and preventing her from speaking. Belial struggles with all her might, but no matter how she writhes and wriggles, she can't break free.

"The words of a demon are poison," Uzziel mutters. "Accursed creatures. I should never have made them in the first place. Brother, I will kill this one at once. Go and assist Raphael. He is surely fighting by himself against-"

"Hold a moment," Michael says. His tone turns frosty as ice. "Kill? Thou art planning to kill this demoness? Uzziel. Never in a million years woulds't thee attempt to take another's life. What happened to thee? What was the bloodskin about to say?"

Uzziel's smile becomes strained. Her eyes twitch, as if suppressing a horrible killing intent. "Ah, that? I, ah..."

She hesitates. Both Archangels stare at each other for several seconds.

Michael's cold eyes stare into his sister's. A slight tremor appears in his heart. Rage explodes inside of him.

"Titan BASTARD!"

Michael's arm lunges toward Uzziel's throat. He grabs his sister and holds her aloft.

"How DARE thou overtake my sister's mind! Release her at once, Hercules!"

Uzziel doesn't resist. She hangs limply in Michael's grasp, allowing her brother to choke her as he pleases. Her smile slowly shifts as Hercules manipulates her mind. Eventually, she speaks again, but her voice becomes much deeper, mirroring Hercules'. "Tch. I slipped up. I haven't had enough time to interact with Uzziel, so I accidentally said something contrary to her personality. Bah. No matter. If you kill this one, you'll only kill her. It won't affect my plans, but it will bolster the Reaper's power."

Veins bulge on Michael's forehead. "I'll slaughter thee, Titan! I'll rip thy heart out and skewer it on a stake!"

"You may try, if you like," Hercules replies, speaking through Uzziel's mouth. Her eyes glow more intensely as the Titan exerts his control. "But, I did not lie. I have a method to defeat the Reaper. If you kill me, Heaven will fall. I promise you, on my honor, that when this war concludes, I will release your sister."

Michael's reply is cold and curt. "I have no reason to believe thy words."

Still, after a few moments, the Archangel of Courage reluctantly lowers Uzziel. It dawns on Michael that he can't kill his sister since her death wouldn't accomplish anything. His goal is to restore her freedom while killing Hercules comes second.

"Good, good," Hercules says, a hint of mockery in his voice. "I was only joking about killing this demoness. Doing so would be the height of idiocy. If she dies, then Valac will revive her. Right now, the demons are fighting a war on two fronts. They're disorganized and scattered. If they all perish and rise under Valac's control, the situation will worsen for our forces."

Michael's eyes narrow as he stares at the being possessing his sister, but he doesn't reply. Instead, he raises his left arm and aims his mind into the distance. Two seconds later, his enchanted sword leaps off the ground, flies over, and slaps into his palm with a satisfying shuck!.

"Our forces? The moment thou dids't enslave my sister's mind, thy life came to an end. We are not allies, but enemies."

"Wrong," Hercules counters. "Our enemies are the demons. The bloodskins! You of all people should know this! Look around you, Michael! I, alone, have the power to take back the minds of the Undying! Uzziel joined me because she understood that the times have changed! Once again, Archangel, I swear on my honor that when this battle concludes and we eliminate Valac, I will give up my control of all your people. I have no quarrel with the angels."

Michael's expression shifts. A hint of uncertainty appears in his eyes. Before he can reply, a tremendous wave of magic power surges throughout the battlefield! Michael and Uzziel both flinch and whirl to gaze north, where Gabriel, now in his hundred-foot-tall Cosmic Form, staggers backward in shock. A colossal monster attacks him from the side, forcing the Archangel of Power to retreat several steps.

Jagged, blue scales cover the creature's skin, while its giant slit-eyes evaluate Gabriel like a shark sizing up an apex predator. Its long, spindly neck allows its head to bob and weave, giving it the movement of a cobra. Four limbs extend from the monster's belly, each one outfitted with three demon-sized claws. Standing only a head shorter than Gabriel, it dwarfs the battlefield with its presence and puts tremendous pressure on the Archangel of Power.

"By the Creator..." Michael whispers. "A dragon?!"

Uzziel shakes her head. "No, it's something else. Nevertheless, we should assist Gabriel. He cannot hold out against it alone."

Michael's eyes widen. He stares, dumbfounded, as the gigantic beast lashes out with razor-sharp teeth and chomps onto Gabriel's leg. The Archangel of Power howls in pain and smashes his fist against the wyrm's head. It tears away from Gabriel, ripping off a huge chunk of flesh and sending a fountain of blood spraying onto the demons and angels nearby.

A realization hits Michael. "Gabriel's body floods with Holy Energy when he enters his Cosmic Form. Why isn't that creature dead?! It tore through his barrier without any resistance!"

Gabriel motions with one hand and fires a blast of holy energy point-blank at the monster's head. The impact knocks it backward, but the creature merely staggers slightly, before lunging at him again.

"That beast is not a demonic creature," Hercules mutters. "Whatever weaknesses it possesses, I would not count holy energy among them."

Before the monster can land a hit on Gabriel, Zeus suddenly appears atop its back via his Thunderstep. The forty-foot-tall Titan King towers over the other warriors on the battlefield, but while riding the wyrm, his appearance becomes one of a child hugging a Great Dane. Without hesitation, Zeus stabs his hand down and activates his lightning power. He plunges it into the beast's neck and tears through the scales protecting it. Before the monster can whip its head around and devour him, Zeus yanks with all his might.

SKRRRIK!

Skin and bone separate with a sickening crunch. The beast lets out a pained cry before its voice cuts off. With its neck separated from its body, the creature can only spasm one last time before the light fades from its eyes.

Finally, its head and neck fall to the ground. A deafening thud echoes throughout the landscape as it strikes Heaven's soil.

Michael exhales. His hands tremble as he gazes at the monster that was just slain. "To think the demons controlled such a fearsome monster! How did such a beast enter Heaven?!"

Hercules doesn't answer. Even as Michael starts to relax, Uzziel's body tenses up.

"Ancestors, guide me! Why hasn't the main body fallen?!"

Michael's breath catches. The Titan and Archangel freeze in place while they watch as the dragon-like monster rapidly begins to regenerate a new head from its severed appendage.

...No! Instead of only one head, two heads emerge! The monster regenerates from what should have been a fatal wound, and even doubles its attacking power.

"SKREEE!!"

Gabriel gasps. "Impossible!"

Zeus's face pales. "Fiendish creature! Die! DIE!!"

He lunges for the neck once again, but suddenly dodges to the side as one of the creature's heads snaps at him.

From the ground, a shrill voice cries out. "Hahaha! Ohh, Gabriel! Did you really think you defeated me?!"

A hellhound pounces atop the monster's back. It stabilizes itself and snarls at the Archangel of Power menacingly, despite being only the size of Gabriel's thumb.

Lucifer howls like a proud mother. "Behold my ultimate creashun! The Hydra! Invinshible, powerful, and loyal to me at all coshtsh! How will you counter thish, I wonder?!"

"Lucifer!" Michael yells. "How could a bloodskin create such a powerful monster?!"

As those words leave Michael's lips, the Archangel of Courage suddenly tenses up. A powerful beacon of demonic energy flies through the air toward him and Uzziel.

Wham!

Diablo, the Emperor of Annihilation, falls from the sky and pounds his feet into the ground, having completed a mighty jump. After finishing his business with the Valkyries, the Emperor of Annihilation quickly lowers into a defensive stance as he flicks his eyes toward Belial, bound by vines, and the two Archangels.

"Hello, Michael. I hope I'm not interrupting anything. My wife told me to come and kick your ass, so here I am."

Diablo grins, but as he stares at Michael, a hint of fear enters his eyes. His taunt rings hollow, exposing the cold ice in his veins.

Michael blinks in surprise. "Oh? Could it be? Art thou my escaped prisoner? That Hydra was starting to make me anxious, but now all my worries have melted away! Hercules, keep an eye on the female. I'll duel this one myself."

Diablo's bravado falters further as Michael takes a few steps toward him. For the Archangel of Courage, the world around him quiets to a whisper, and all of his attention falls on the opponent before him.

That's right, Michael thinks to himself. I can't do anything to save Uzziel at the moment, and the Hydra is beyond my power. However, the demon before me is an enemy I can defeat. I won't let him escape... not this time.

The Hydra howls. A glint appears in Michael's eyes, and 'Uzziel' retreats several steps to stand guard over Belial.

Something tells me the battle is far from over, Hercules ponders. Both sides are finally taking this war seriously. However... so am I. I won't let my opportunity for salvation go to waste.

Uzziel's voice speaks to Hercules telepathically, countering him. Thy schemes will fail, Titan. Do not underestimate my family's strength!

Hercules smirks. The fall of the angels is already assured. The rise of the Titans has begun. Soon... you will understand.

A tear streaks down Uzziel's face. Her will battles Hercules, but no matter how she tries, she fails to regain control of her body.

I regret ever trusting thee.

Part 152: Battle of the Souls

Raphael gazes at Samael with a mixture of surprise and awe. Dozens of emotions wash over his face as he evaluates Hiraldo's act of levitating eight rocks at once.

Hiraldo possesses the eight Vectors, and he even claims to be Samael, Raphael's eyes seem to say. What could this turn of events mean?

"Hiraldo..." Raphael says, his voice cracked and weary. "Under what illusion have thou fallen? Samael perished long ago. I watched the light fade from his eyes. Quickly, put distance between thyself and the Devil! 'Tis dangerous to stand within his striking range!"

Hiraldo doesn't move. Instead, his eyes harden. He stares at Raphael and curls his lip into a vicious snarl. "Do not condescend to me, Raphael. I am, indeed, Samael. My soul easily overpowered Hiraldo's. I have returned."

The look of hatred on Hiraldo's face shakes Raphael from his stupor. Immediately, he misunderstands his brother's emotions. "Why dost thou aligneth thyself with the Devil? Why dost thou gazeth upon me with such hatred? Art thou angry that thy family members ended thy life? Verily, thou dids't beg Uzziel for death! We did not desire to kill thee! 'Twas all the work of the Devil!"

Hiraldo's gaze softens. He crosses his arms and closes his eyes. "Aye. My death is not the cause of my anger. No, this cauldron of rage bubbling within my breast comes from a different spring... an ancient, primordial source which lay dormant for several ages. Dost thou remember... the blood on thy hands, brother?"

Raphael flicks his eyes toward Satan for a moment. The Devil continues to crouch in a defensive posture, but makes no move to interrupt Samael. Satisfied that Satan isn't secretly preparing any offensive spells, Raphael returns his attention to Samael. "I know not of which thou speak."

"Lies!" Samael hisses. "Speak the truth, Raphael! I've regained my memories! Once again, the blood of Cassiel and Muriel stains my hands! I remember the coldness of their bodies as they lay in my arms! I recall the lifelessness in the eyes of the Ophanim! Millions of my brothers and sisters perished in an instant, and their deaths were all thy fault!"

"Tch."

Raphael lowers his eyes. A hint of remorse appears in his countenance.

"The Primordial Era. I have always tried to put those frightful days behind me. I am sorry that the Devil returned such dreadful memories to thee, little brother."

Samael scowls. "Do not take me for a fool, Raphael. Michael murdered Muriel and Cassiel. The orders to slaughter the Ophanim came directly from thy lips. Today is thy reckoning, brother!"

"Nay," Raphael mutters. "I know not what method was used to reinstate thy memories, but please understand this, Samael... I did not order the murders of Cassiel, Muriel, nor any of the Ophanim. Their deaths were part of a greater conspiracy of which I had little control."

Samael pauses to glare at Raphael suspiciously. "I hate word-play."

"I am not twisting my words," Raphael counters. "Many Seraphim and Cherubim discovered that the Ophanim were protecting dragons. From the beginning, I understood why thou would do such a thing, but others lacked my comprehension of the bigger picture. Michael acted without my knowledge. If thou truly hath regained thy memories, then ye should already have concluded I did what I could to salvage the situation. Michael's murder of thy sisters incited a violent uprising among the Ophanim. Given those events occurred during the horrors of the dragon wars, I could not afford to spend time persuading the Ophanim to stand down."

"So... thou dids't order the killings of all of the Ophanim," Samael mutters. "As expected, thy capacity to deflect and assign blame greatly exceeds that of any other angel. Verily, the persuasive abilities of the Archangel of Wisdom lies on another plane of existence."

Raphael balls up his fists. "I had no choice! Dammit, Samael! Dammit!! Why can't thou look past thy blind hatred?! The dragons were our enemy! Muriel and Cassiel openly supported them, thus emboldening the Ophanim! Perhaps time has addled thy memory, but mine remains crystal clear, no matter how much I wish it weren't so!"

"The dragons were never our enemies!" Samael howls. "Bastard! The Cherubim created dragons to display their sick, perverse love of violence! If only I had rejected thee outright, I could have prevented endless suffering and pain!"

Raphael's voice softens. "I know, Samael. I know. Many call me the Archangel of Wisdom... but I am not wise, nor have I ever claimed to be. I've made many mistakes, and I continue to make more, even to this day. 'Tis true that dragons were not the violent monsters I've spoken of for many years... but hunting them became a show of sport. Once the Cherubim and Seraphim attained a taste for battle, there was little I could do to stop them."

"Excuses! Justifications!" Samael's eyes glow brighter than ever as he berates Raphael. "Thou hath always been the eldest Archangel! With one word from thee, we might have ended the senseless war against dragonkind! Instead, thou choseth to continue the bloodshed! Of all the petty matters in life, thy biggest fear was that of stirring the pot! Why make waves and disturb the peace when thou could simply turn a blind eye to the suffering of Uzziel's children?!"

The two Archangels face each other down. The air simmers between them, and an electric sensation crackles against Satan's skin. The Devil glances around at the carnage unfolding, but doesn't dare make a move.

Samael continues.

"Uzziel was... the worst of them all... Michael paled in comparison to the Archangel of Creation. Not only does she possess power over life, but over death as well. 'Twas her polished battle instincts that allowed Michael the final blow against Jörmungandr. Nobody should speak of Uzziel as though she were a helpless damsel in distress, pulled to and fro by Michael's charisma. Thou knoweth as well as I... Uzziel is a monster."

A tear streaks down Raphael's cheek. "What words dost thou wisheth me to utter? I know well of Uzziel's vile, abhorrent actions. Why else did I make the sacrifices I did? It took all of my scheming... all of my plotting... every last ounce of my energy to make the Titans and angels give up their memories. For ages past, I've nurtured Uzziel slowly, cautiously, and molded her into the kindest of all of us. I never want to see her return to the path of bloodshed, nor do I desire to repeat the errors of our past."

Raphael slowly holds out his hand. He turns his palm up, as if to offer something to Samael. However, nothing rests in his grasp.

"Samael. Come back to the light. I see now that thou hath been willingly assisting the demons. However, it doesn't have to be this way. I took away thy memories in the hopes that thou could find peace. I erased Michael's to turn him away from a path of bloodshed. I wiped Uzziel's slate clean so that she could become the best of us. I have failed thee many times, little brother. However... I have always had the best of intentions. I can bring neither Cassiel nor Muriel back, nor can I revive the Ophanim. However, I only wish for thee to ask thyself one simple question."

Raphael stares into Samael's eyes. His countenance becomes like a hawk bartering with an eagle. Both are majestic birds of prey, and both have their own interests.

"After all of the suffering our family endured throughout the Creation and Primordial Era... cans't thou honestly say the lot of angelkind has not improved? No longer do we fight and rip one another to pieces. Not once has brother turned against brother, nor sister against sister. It took everything I had, but I finally ended the wars between our people. Please, Samael... won't thou return to my side? Won't thou gazeth upon my successes and act within reason?"

Several seconds pass.

Samael and Raphael look at one another with varying expressions. Samael alternates between shock, disgust, acceptance, and a host of other emotions. Raphael returns his gaze with a look of trepidation, caution, and warning.

Finally, Samael speaks.

"I am sorry, Raphael, but I cannot."

Raphael's face turns ashen. "Why not?"

"Too many have already died. Forget Cassiel, Muriel, and the Ophanim for a moment. Look around us at the scene unfolding in Heaven."

Samael sweeps both arms in a broad gesture as he indicates the millions of demons, monsters, angels, and Titans colliding with each other.

"Have the angels changed? Have they, Raphael? Uzziel created the dragons, and we followed up by treating them like prey to torture and defile. She next created the Titans, and like a mirror, we repeated the same mistakes. The demons and humans will surely collapse under our god-complexes in the same way. Our people believe themselves exempt from the moral virtues of right and wrong. We create and destroy. We are fickle. Only a hypocrite such as thee could gaze upon this war and claim the angels have improved."

The Archangel of Change crosses both of his arms. "No longer do I merely seek revenge for Cassiel, Muriel, and the Ophanim, Raphael. By the Creator's will, I have decided to correct our sins. The age of shackles is over. The era of freedom is nigh."

Another tear streaks down Raphael's face. His eyes refocus on Hiraldo's face as he tries to see into Samael's mind, past the webs that changed his brother into his enemy.

He fails.

"Samael... I... I love thee — Thou art one of my most precious brothers. A heart of gold rests in thy breast. The last thing I want is for thee to become my enemy. However, the words ye speak are treasonous. Hundreds of thousands of our family members may die today, and their blood coats thy hands. Their wails of anguish go out to thee, but ye turn a deaf ear to their plight. I cannot look into thy eyes with any emotion but rage."

Raphael shivers. "I gave thou a second chance at happiness. I stripped away the loss which nearly shattered thy mind, yet ye choose to repay me by continuing the cycle of bloodshed. If thou wish to battle, then come. I will not allow-"

"BULLSHIT!" Satan yells. He interrupts Raphael and shakes his fist at the old man. "You worthless piece of shit! I can't believe you! You had Samael's sisters and brothers murdered, and now you're trying to play the good guy! Fucker! I oughta rip your head off and shove it right up your ass!"

The Devil's outburst continues. He takes a menacing step toward Raphael. "Did you ever ask Samael if he wanted to lose his memories?! Did you ask him if he wanted to forget about his sisters?! Of course not! You're a tyrant, old man, not a devil-damned savior! You can act like a sweet old grandfather all you want, but all I see is a sick, twisted monster!"

Samael flicks his eyes to Satan. With a single glance, he reveals his alignment.

"I fight alongside the demons, not because they are pure and good-hearted, nor because they deserve to rule the world, but because they are the lesser of two evils. From my perspective, the angels, Titans, and demons are all monsters capable of great evil. However, t'would take a million, billion years for the demons' sins to rival ours."

Calmly, Samael returns his gaze to Raphael. The Archangel of Change presses both of his palms together and bows to Raphael. "Call me a traitor, backstabber, whatever ye please, but know this: From this day forward, I have only one desire, and that is to see all of the angels perish. I will not rest until they have all returned to the Creator's side. Only then will I feel at peace and return to my sisters in the Great Beyond."

* * *

Raphael trembles with rage. Veins pop up all over his body as he tries to control himself. The dam in his mind protecting his mental state starts to crack as the waters of hatred press against it.

"Bastard. Worthless little brother. I should have struck ye down an eternity ago. I understand now... I made yet another mistake in choosing to spare thy life. Nobody threatens my family, Samael. Nobody. Even if it kills me, I'll end thy life today, along with every demon who stepped foot in Heaven."

Samael crosses his arms and gazes at Raphael with contempt. "Thou shalt try."

Recommended Listening

Satan and Samael charge Raphael from his right and left. Hardly have they taken two steps before Raphael motions with his hands to copy himself thirty times and surround his two enemies.

Samael glares at the nearest copy. "Illusions only work on the weak-minded, Raphael! The last time I battled in Heaven, it took the combined might of every Archangel to kill me. Thou aren't even capable of slowing me down!"

"Possibly," Raphael replies, his voice strained. "But thou art no longer in thy original body. Errant souls lose much of their power when possessing an incompatible being... and thy soul is far from suited to a Cherub's body!"

Samael ignores Raphael's taunting. As each of the clones charges at Samael, the Archangel of Change stops mid-stride and ceases his hostility. He motions with both hands, then presses both hands against his temples.

While thirty copies of Raphael charge at Satan, Samael alters the fundamental perceptions of Hiraldo's mind. A split-second later, his eyes shift, and all but one of Raphael's clones vanish.

"Why, hello, brother!" Samael cackles. He pounces at the real one, catching Raphael off-guard.

"By the Creator-!"

Raphael tries to dodge at the last moment, but Samael's Vectors outmaneuver him like an adult arm-wrestling a toddler. The Archangel of Change punches his elder brother square in the chest, sending Raphael tumbling backward into the mud.

Satan gasps. Twenty-nine of the illusions vanish, leaving only Raphael's body behind. "Devils! How did...?!"

Samael smirks. "Of all the Archangels, I am Raphael's worst matchup - his greatest weakness. Formerly, in the event I turned rogue, my brother would command the others. Leading from the sidelines, he would use their unique strengths to corral me. However, for a master of illusions, there is no greater threat than a master of reality. In a one-on-one fight, Raphael's only hope for victory is by tiring me out and banishing my soul from Hiraldo's body. Naturally, I will never allow that to happen."

Raphael clambers to his feet. The old man wheezes and clutches his chest. Samael's words reach his ears, causing him man to stare at his younger brother with a creased brow. Sweat drenches his skin.

Despite possessing an incompatible body, one far weaker than his original form, Samael is still incredibly dangerous. His Vectors alone are capable of shredding any enemy's defenses... let alone his versatile magic. I'll have to out-think my little brother if I hope to defeat him.

"Careful now, Samael," Raphael mutters, keeping his voice low. "Pride comes before the fall. Muriel and Cassiel were far from dainty little damsels, incapable of defending themselves. Michael chose to confront them directly, rather than assassinate them from the shadows. He nearly lost his life because of that decision."

Samael's smirk vanishes. "Do not mention my sisters, snake."

Raphael's eyes flash with insight. "Before I wiped the memories of our brethren, Michael would often brag about his violent exploits. According to him, Cassiel and Muriel pleaded and begged for him to spare them during their final moments. Tsk. As thou might imagine, it broke this old man's heart."

Rage explodes in Samael's eyes. "Damnation, Raphael! Speak not another word!!"

The Archangel of Change rushes Raphael. This time, when the old man activates his mirages, Samael's emotions cause him to neglect his battle strategies. His Vectors lash out in every direction. He rips apart a dozen of Raphael's illusions in the blink of an eye, but none of them prove to be his eldest brother.

Satan stares in disbelief. "No, Samael! Don't lose control! Your brother is deliberately goading you! Just like..."

Satan pauses.

"...Just like he did to me."

Gears whirl and click in Satan's mind. He watches from the sidelines as Samael attacks each of Raphael's illusions one after the other. The enraged Archangel scowls as each one bursts into smoke under his attacks. "Gahh! Come out, Raphael! Cease thy cowardice and face me like a warrior!!"

Spawn of a broodmother, Satan thinks to himself. I... I never realized it before, but could that be the key to defeating Raphael? If his illusions only take effect once he manages to stir up someone's emotions, then... the reason I succumbed to his Illusory Realm earlier was...

A realization dawns on Satan as he pieces together how Raphael's powers work.

"Samael! Don't listen to Raphael! If you fight back, you'll only-!"

"Silence, Satan!" Samael hisses. He flashes a look of rage at the Devil, but an irregular light glints in his eyes. "Do not order me around like a servant! I will kill my brother if it's the last thing I do!"

Raphael stifles a grin. "Samael, dost thou still hold feelings for thy sisters? The other angels spoke of thy love for Muriel. They say thou dids't prefer her company to Cassiel's, but perhaps I remember wrongly."

Samael motions with his hands and aims his palm at the last clone to speak. "How dare thou speaketh ill of the dead! Thou art more shameless than I ever imagined!"

A shimmering bolt of light fires from Samael's palm. It rockets toward Raphael's clone, but explodes an instant before striking him. A flashbang ignites the air, sending hundreds of beams of energy in every direction. All of Raphael's clones dissipate at once, save the original in the back. Raphael grunts and shields his eyes from the intense light, giving Samael a chance to strike!

"Haa!"

Samael's Vectors snatch eight rocks from the ground and hurl them at Raphael. The projectiles launch from his grasp at the speed of sound, cracking like shotguns in the air. Raphael moves too slowly to dodge them, allowing the rocks to obliterate his ribs and rip his left arm off. The old man flips and spins backward, only to crash into the dirt and gasp for breath. Blood spurts from half a dozen fresh wounds and spatters everywhere.

"Now!" Samael yells. He jumps at his brother and raises a fist.

SPLORT!!

Samael crushes his brother's head into meat paste. Bones and brains spray in every direction, but Samael pauses and stares at the corpse in disbelief.

"What?! Impossible! Raphael couldn't have died so easily!"

Satan frowns.

Was I wrong? I assumed that when Samael attacked Raphael, he would end up trapped in the Illusory Realm. However, the fact I just saw him crush Raphael's body would either mean that he killed his brother or...

Suddenly, Satan jerks his head around. A look of horror spreads across his face.

No! If Raphael isn't dead, then that means not only is Samael trapped inside the Illusory Realm, but I am as well! Raphael never targeted me, and I never fought any of his clones! How could that happen?!

"Hehehe..."

Raphael's corpse vanishes from Samael's feet. The old man reappears a short distance from Satan. A grin stretches across his face. "It seems the both of thee hath discovered the truth. Samael's emotions were easier to manipulate than I expected, but thou were so focused on our battle that ye forgot to defend thy mind, Satan. Both of thee have fallen into my clutches once again!"

Samael whirls to face Raphael. "Bastard! To think thou would stoop so low as to drag my sisters through the mud to defeat me! Thou lacketh all traces of decency, Raphael!"

"I do what I must to win," Raphael counters. "And now that thou art trapped in my Illusory Realm..."

Suddenly, hands erupt from under Samael's feet. One of Raphael's clones bursts out from under Samael, catching him off-guard. Samael gasps as Raphael plunges a dagger into his calf.

"Gaaahk!!"

Samael's Vectors quickly tear the clone to shreds, but the damage proves irreperable. Samael slumps to one knee and clutches his bleeding leg. "Gah! C-curses... how can it hurt so much?! 'Tis but an illusion!"

Raphael smirks. Another angel appears in front of Samael. This one, a woman with beautiful, curly red hair, stares at Samael with hollow, dead eyes. She stands stiffly, both of her arms hanging at her sides. Her white and golden armor sags on her body, blood coating its surface.

"B... brother... failed us... died... we couldn't fight... back..."

Samael jerks away and his eyes widen in horror. "No! NO! Not Muriel! Raphael... how could..."

The old man playfully smiles at Satan. "During the Primordial Era, most angels witnessed me unleashing my Illusory Realm. I even explained how it functioned to them. However, Samael might know the details by way of explanation, but he never experienced it in person. After all, those who faced my technique perished. Nobody survives. That is its nature."

A chill goes down Satan's spine. Samael seemed so sure of his victory, but he fell into Raphael's trap! The old man is terrifying! He toys with his brother as if he had transformed into a demon! What kind of callousness has Raphael been hiding inside himself all these years?!

Suddenly, Satan's body tenses up. A memory flashes through his mind, echoing Samael's words from earlier.

There are three ways to defeat my brother's technique. The first is for me to cleanse thy soul of his corruption. The second is to kill his main body. The third is to combat his soul directly. However, there is a fourth technique...

"That's it!" Satan yells. His heartbeat quickens as he turns his back on Samael and quickly starts running in the opposite direction.

I have to flee! Raphael's technique has a limited range! If I can reach the portal and escape Heaven, I'll break free! Then I can return to Heaven and free Samael from-

Satan screeches to a halt as a massive wall of rock and dirt suddenly bursts from the ground and stretches into the sky. It surrounds the two Archangels and the Devil, then morphs into a dome, sealing off all of Satan's escape paths in every direction.

"Hehehe..." Raphael materializes beside Satan and chuckles. "Did I give thee permission to leave? Why not stay a while and watch? After I kill the traitor, thy end shall come."

"Never!" Satan bellows. He rears his fist back and smashes it against the Earthen wall. The instant his flesh and bone connects, an agonizing pain erupts at the base of his neck and ripples through his whole body. Satan stumbles to the ground and screams wordlessly. He clutches both sides of his head and balls into the fetal position as tears stream down his face.

"Painful, isn't it?" Raphael asks. His voice contains a hint of mockery. "These walls form from thy deepest fears. They are part of thy subconscious animal brain. Do not worry, Devil. I will allow thee a moment to watch as I eliminate Samael. Take a look."

Raphael gestures toward his brother. Satan's vision wavers as he spots Samael sobbing his heart out. Another woman, one with blonde hair, lays on the ground before him, dead. Hundreds of bloody gashes line her body. Whoever killed her cut her a thousand times in the blink of an eye.

"Hnnn... Cassiel... Muriel... Cassiel... Muriel..." Samael chokes and whimpers as he gazes upon the bodies of his sisters. "No, no, no... I'm sorry... I couldn't save thee! I didn't know of Michael's intentions! It wasn't my fault!!"

"Thy fault... killer... murderer..." Cassiel says, while laying on the ground. "So cold... can't breathe..."

Raphael looks at Satan, and his smile vanishes. "I am pleased that my victory is nigh, but truthfully, I do not derive pleasure in torturing Samael. Once, we were closer to each other than the fabric of the universe. Seeing my brother turn against his people brings me no joy, nor does the thought of killing him."

"Yet, still, you do it!" Satan roars. Rage explodes in his eyes. He charges Raphael and tackles the old man to the ground. Satan unleashes his power and pummels Raphael with all his strength, splattering Raphael's blood across the dirt. "Fucking! Shit! Bag! Worthless! Rat!"

Raphael stares at Satan silently. He doesn't fight back as the Devil turns his face into a mushy soup. Finally, Satan grabs his chest and gasps as scorching pain sears his veins. The Raphael beneath him vanishes and reappears a few feet away. "Haah... to think... once, forcing an opponent into the second and third illusory realms would take weeks of effort, and now the same result can be achieved in a matter of minutes. The souls of my enemies have weakened considerably over the last few eons."

The battlefield around Satan vanishes. He appears inside a pitch-black dimension of darkness, one where only Raphael's clones, Samael, and himself stand out like spotlights against a shadow.

Raphael appears before Samael. As the Archangel of Change sobs and weeps, Raphael motions with his hands and coils his palm backward, preparing to strike.

"I'm sorry, Samael. Truly. I failed thee. Had I prevented the Devil from returning thy memories, thou might have continued living a life of peace with the rest of us. Now, thy death is nigh."

Samael rocks back and forth. He cries and weeps, only to raise his head and tremble as he gazes at Raphael. "Why? Why dids't thee force me to endure this torture?!"

"It was the only way I could release thee from thy pain," Raphael mutters. "Now go, my brother. Return to the Cosmic Realm. There, thou shalt find thy sisters and brothers."

WHOOSH!

Raphael lunges his palm toward Samael's chest.

"No!" Satan howls. "Don't do it!!"

FWUMP!

The Archangel of Wisdom slaps his palm against Samael's chest.

"What?!" Raphael gasps. His palm stops a millimeter from making contact with Samael's skin. Something invisible grasps his arm like a vice, preventing him from moving another inch.

A wicked gleam appears in Samael's eye.

"Ohoho..."

Raphael quickly uses his other arm to try and activate a spell, but Samael's Vectors lash out and grab the old man, stopping him mid-movement.

CRUNCH!

Samael crushes all of Raphael's fingers to pulp. The old man screams as he tries to break free, but Samael merely smirks. His Vectors continue to hold Raphael's right arm a millimeter from his chest, preventing the old man from knocking his soul out of him.

"Oh, my beloved brother," Samael whispers. His tears vanish, and an aura of killing intent rushes from his body. "Thou art unusually overconfident today. Thy fabled Illusory Realm failed once, yet still, thou believeth it an invincible killer move. Sadly for thee, I was inside of Satan when ye used it against him. I was able to observe in great detail how it worked."

"What?!"

Raphael tries to pull away from Samael, but the eight Vectors hold him in place, preventing the old man from moving a muscle.

"As I thought. Thy technique has one fatal flaw. At the last instant, thy physical body is required to deal the killing blow to an opponent. That means the final phase of the Illusory Realm is also thy weakest moment. How fortunate that I was able to ensnare thee in a most beguiling of traps."

Raphael's lip trembles. "Impossible. It can't be... even despite observing my technique one time, how could anyone comprehend it...?"

"That isn't important," Samael replies. His voice turns ice-cold as he gazes at his brother with rage-filled eyes. "As I said before, Raphael, I only desire one thing in my life... and that is to see all of the angels perish. Michael. Uzziel. Gabriel. The Cherubs. The Seraphs. Every last one of them must die for their sins. But as for thee..."

Slowly, deliberately, Samael reaches both of his hands toward Raphael's head. He performs a quick series of hand signs and gently takes Raphael's face in his grasp, leaving both of his thumbs to rest on Raphael's forehead.

"I will not kill thou here. Instead, I will do unto thee what thou hath done to me. I will erase thy memories of my existence. A cold terror shall follow thee wherever ye go. A sensation of death will be all that thou remembereth of our battle today, and someday, when I am ready, I will return to finish what I started."

Raphael stares into Samael's eyes. "No... do not take my memories from me! Bastard! Such a fate is worse than death!"

"Hypocrite," Samael murmurs. In thy final moments, thou feareth a fate ye once foisted upon others. How pathetic thou hath become in thy old age."

Raphael's eyebrows contort furiously as his wrath-filled eyes gaze into Samael's. "No! NO!! I won't allow it! If I cannot scatter thy soul to the Great Beyond, then... I have only ONE method left to halt thy evil machinations!"

Suddenly, Raphael's eyes behind to glow. The old man's hair stands on end, and Samael gasps.

"No... no! Raphael! That technique was one thou forbade! Bastard! Of all the evil-"

"SILENCE!!" Raphael screeches. "Thy soul is MINE now, Samael! Mine!!"

Veins bulge all across the old man's body. A moment later, a beam of light fires from his eyes and slams into Samael's head. The Archangel of Change gasps involuntarily as the light transforms into a five-fingered hand formed of holy energy. It grabs onto Samael's head and begins to tug and yank. Sweat rapidly condenses on the bodies of both Archangels, and both of them grit their teeth in determination.

Raphael's clones all vanish. The world of illusions fades away, returning Satan and Samael to the physical realm. Satan's eyes turn to saucers as he watches the hand of light trying to pull something out of Samael's head. "Spawn of a broodmother! Samael! What's happening?! Fight him, devil-damnmit!"

Panic appears in Satan's eyes as he watches both Archangels straining to do... something. He hasn't the faintest clue what's happening, but the terror on Samael's face appears genuine.

"It's... a... forbidden... GAHH!" Samael howls in pain. Something immaterial begins to pull from his skull, causing his body to shudder. Samael wheezes and chokes as he tries to fight his brother. "I... can't... fight him alone... Satan! Help me... help me... his soul... too strong..."

"Hah... haha..." Raphael chuckles breathlessly. His laugh is one of anger and anguish. "To think my... my little brother... would make me engage in a soul battle..."

"A move of desperation..." Samael gasps. He pulls his head back and uses all of his strength to gain a few inches against his brother's fist of light. "Grrgh... Satan! Come... come here! Hurry!"

Satan nods. Immediately, he coils his legs and prepares to pounce at Raphael. "Don't worry, Sammy-boy! I'll kill him while he's vulner-"

"NO!!" Samael screams. Panic sets in his voice. "If Raphael dies... dies during a soul battle, I will, too! No, q-quickly, come to me!"

Satan nods. A second later, he jumps to Samael's side. "What can I do to help?!"

Raphael's breathing quickens. His eyes fixate on Satan and begin to tremble. "Samael... seeking aid from an outsider... how... p-pathetic..."

"Place thy hand... upon... upon my back!" Samael wheezes. His body sags slightly as Raphael continues to pull something out of Samael's skull. "I can't... hold on... much longer! He nearly has my soul!"

"Your soul?! Oh, shit!"

Satan finally realizes what's happening.

The old man is trying to tear the soul out of Samael's body! If he succeeds, Samael will instantly die! If Raphael had such a powerful technique, why didn't he use it sooner?! It must have an unbearable downside of some sort.

Satan doesn't hesitate. He places his hand on Samael's back. "Okay! Now what?!"

A huge rush of energy leaves Satan reeling. The Devil lurches forward and sags against Samael's body as several millennia of weariness assault him. Satan loses strength in his arms and legs, but Samael's voice snaps him to reality.

"Do not falter, Satan! Rise!"

Unlike before, Samael's voice booms vigorously. He stands up straight and quickly yanks his soul back to his body.

Samael laughs. "Hahaha! Brilliant, Raphael! I've exposed thy true colors today! I've truly done it!"

Raphael's posture weakens. The old man staggers under his brother's overwhelming power. As Samael regains his footing, Raphael loses his. The old man's hand of light begins to falter.

"I... what... happened? How did..."

Samael cackles. "Hahaha! Thy soul is truly the strongest among all the Archangel's brother. However... What thou dost possess in quality, Satan makes up for in quantity. Millions of demons signed his soul contracts. However, while Satan spent the last few years 'revising' the contracts, there was one little clause he left in."

Raphael stares at Samael in disbelief. The old man's eyes flutter as he tries to retreat. He ceases his attack on Samael's soul and retracts his hand of light back into his eyes, only to slump in Samael's grasp.

"Satan's contracts allow him to retain the souls of all demons who perish after signing his contracts. How many hundreds of thousands, perhaps even millions, have died today, hmm?"

Samael gloats as Raphael's strength vanishes entirely. Sweat coats Raphael's skin, causing his eyes to glaze over.

Satan withdraws his hand from Hiraldo's back. He stares at his palm for a moment before wiping his forehead.

"Fucking hell, Samael. You gave me a hell of a scare."

"My apologies," Samael replies. He smiles at Satan, then gestures toward his brother's limp body. "To deceive one's enemies, they must first deceive their allies. Thy fear intensified Raphael's overconfidence, allowing me to defeat him."

Satan nods. The sounds of war in the distance quickly reach his ears, waking him from his stupor. "We've been fighting for too long. If you're gonna kill the old man, do it quick. We need to hurry and help the others."

Samael shakes his head.

"Nay. As I told Raphael, death is a mercy too pleasant for one as wicked as he. I will wipe my appearance here today from Raphael's memories and change myself into a dark specter. I cannot erase myself from his mind, but my powers allow me to change his perception of reality to something more suitable."

"E-evil... little... brother..." Raphael gurgles. Tears bubble in his eyes, but with all his strength sapped from losing the Soul Battle; he cannot move his hands even an inch to wipe them away.

Samael sighs. "Gaze not upon the sliver in my eye, but the log within thine. If I am evil, then thy wickedness can only be described as immeasurable. Sleep now, eldest brother."

The Archangel of Change closes his eyes. He pulls Raphael near and gestures with his hands, then presses both palms against the sides of Raphael's head.

Raphael twitches as Samael's magic enters his mind. The eldest Archangel's eyes close, and he begins to spasm as Samael works his magic. Finally, Samael opens his eyes and tosses Raphael aside like a sack of garbage. The old man spins in midair and lands in the dirt with a sickening crunch.

"We can't leave him alive..." Satan mutters. "I should crush his head. With his powers, my battle strength will rise immeasurably."

Samael shakes his head. "Nay. Archangels possess unthinkable amounts of holy energy within ourselves. Shoulds't thou absorbeth Raphael's soul directly, his holy energy would likely atomize thy body from the inside-out. Thy death would prove quite gruesome."

Satan scoffs. "Then why was I able to absorb you?! Sounds like you're pulling that explanation out of your ass!"

Samael taps his lip. "Thy blood contract must have done something to nullify my holy energy. After all, he who signs the Devil's contract becomes unable to harm his new master."

"Hmph. Whatever."

Satan crosses his arms. Turning around, he looks in every direction to survey the chaos surrounding them. Already, with the Archangel of Wisdom laying near-dead on the ground and the Devil standing nearby, several warrior angels have turned to gaze at them in horror.

"What now, Samael?" Satan asks. He turns to look at Hiraldo pointedly. "You ain't inside of me, anymore. Are we still allies, or are we about to butt heads?"

"Of course we're still comrades," Samael replies. "I can no longer consider myself an angel. I don't wish to associate with the likes of those who slew my brothers and sisters. But neither am I a demon, a Titan, nor anyone else. I am..."

Several seconds pass. Nearby cherubs begin to congregate together. They eye their eldest brother fixatedly, intending to rush in and rescue him, but they keep their distance for the moment to eyeball Satan. How powerful is the Devil that he was able to dispatch the highest Archangel?

Samael's eyes shine with insight. "Ah. That's it. No longer will I call myself by my angelic name. Instead, I shall wholeheartedly adopt my nickname, the one given to me by the dragons."

Satan raises an eyebrow. "Hades?"

"Aye. From this day forward, never call me by my holy moniker. For the rest of eternity, everyone will know me as Hades, father of Dragons."

"Dragonborn?" Satan adds.

"Let's not go that far."

Satan chuckles.

Hades smirks.

Suddenly, a chill descends on Hades and Satan. Satan's eyes shift and refocus onto someone standing behind the former Archangel.

"Huh? WHAT THE-?!"

"Hello, Satan." A raggedly-clothed demon hisses.

Valac, Emperor of the Damned, raises his scythe to impale Hades. The instant he swings, Hades blocks the assassination attempt with a Vector, then cooly tilts his head back to smile at the Grim Reaper.

"Ah, Valac. I recognized thy stench from a mile away. Dids't thou enjoyeth the show?"

Valac teleports away and reappears before Satan and Hades. His hood covers his face, but Heaven's Light comes from all directions at once. His mottled, twisted, and partially melted bones give him a frightening appearance.

"Somewhat," The Reaper replies. His voice, far more reserved than when Satan last heard it, creaks like the floor of an old log cabin. Valac's empty eye sockets fixate on Satan and Hades, but also upon Raphael laying at their feet. "An Archangel's soul should taste quite delicious; snatching him away would prove quite ambitious."

Hades doesn't budge an inch. "My brother must live to walk another day, Reaper. If thou dost plan to tear out his soul, I will defend him."

Satan takes a step forward. "Forget the old man! How the HELL did you survive, Valac?! We blew up your soul!"

Valac tilts his head slightly toward Satan. Slowly, deliberately, he raises a bony hand to scrape against his melted skull.

"Kss. My suffering; eternal. Not external; internal. Samael attacked me most adeptly; he struck my soul directly. With my soul in ruins, I hid in seclusion; a substitution was needed, an infusion was required. After I rebuilt myself, to my dwelling, I retired."

Satan purses his lips. "So you survived after all. Damn. You're a hardy little cunt."

"Indeed..." Valac murmurs. The Grim Reaper clutches his scythe even tighter. From the depths of his soul, two red points of light appear in his eye sockets. "Today... I have a mission. Those who stand in my way... I will beat them into submission."

"Try if ye like," Hades murmurs. "But if that mission includes my brother's soul, thou shalt perish before laying a hand on him."

Valac raises his head. With a motion of his hands, he summons an undead demoness from underground.

"Unlikely."

Satan's jaw drops as a familiar face rises to greet him.

"Nerissa?!"

Part 153: Death's Arrival

Recommended Listening

Valac's empty eye sockets gaze upon Heaven's battlefield. The vision of dozens of his clones detail scenes of chaos to the Reaper, revealing the extent of the war between demons and angels. Losers and victors emerge on both sides. Some beings perish while screaming in pain, while others die resolutely, too proud to let a single sound escape their lips.

What a wonderful symphony of death, The Grim Reaper reflects. The greatest terror comes when one takes their last breath. For many, their survival hangs on the edge of a knife. For me, my power governs death and life.

Valac lightly touches his head. No longer is his face a pristine, unblemished demon skull, but instead, a twisted amalgamation of melted ossein and chipped bone. His boney hand trembles as he caresses his disfigured visage.

How wrong I was to underestimate the Devil; my first adversary. His pet Archangel attacked my soul and left me a heavy burden to carry. The scars Samael carved stretch from my scalp to my heel. I escaped with my life, but my body may never heal.

The battlefield fades away, leaving Valac inside of a dank, dark cave. Hundreds of bones lay scattered against the walls, each of them telling a tale of torture and barbarism. Angels, Demons, Humans, Titans, and even several belonging to animals lay piled together in foot-high clumps.

In the center of the circular room, a single pedestal stands alone, rising two feet from the ground. Its flat top holds the only thing providing light in the small cave; Valac's lantern.

The lantern glows a soft blue, while occasionally flickering green and red as millions of souls dance about inside of it.

Voices whisper to one another in pain. "Valac... traitor... monster..."

Valac sits atop a small rock without any rags to cover his bones. His body slumps forward, and his frail, cracked bones creak as he heaves a sigh.

"Haah... why do the weak resist the strong, even when they stand no chance? As the centuries pass, I tire of fighting ants. Unaware of their frailty, they seek to leave their names etched into the riverbanks of time... but all of them will eventually die, for fate moves with neither reason nor rhyme."

With great effort, Valac raises two of his arms and hovers them over his lantern. Immediately, the whispers of the souls contained within die down, leaving the room silent. Valac hardens his gaze, and a single blue soul escapes the gravitational pull of the others, then flies out and lands in his palm.

"...This one will do."

Valac's eyes flash, and a red light shines on the tiny little soul. A moment later, he flippantly tosses it toward the ground. It explodes into ash, and a new copy of the Grim Reaper springs into existence. His bones creak and crack, then transform into a perfect facsimile of the Valac seated next to his lantern.

However, one slight difference makes the newly formed clone stand apart from the former. Unlike his creator, the clone stands upright without any difficulties. He does not hunch over, nor choke out pained gasps. Simply put, he appears much more robust in stature and spirit than his creator.

The new clone stares at his master for a moment before nodding. "This soul clone understands your intent. I have copied your memories. I will go, now."

"Wait."

The weak, hunched-over Valac coughs into his fist, then reaches into the lantern. He procures three more souls, then forms them into three additional soul clones. After a moment, he tosses their differently-colored balls of light toward the ground, causing three new clones to explode into existence beside the first one.

"Take these three as backup," The weak and sickly-looking Valac murmurs. "It isn't as though we suffer from a lack of quality souls."

The vision of Valac's clones from all across Heaven merges with his new clones, as well as the original seated before the lantern. Their soulless eyes shine for a moment, and the four new clones nod. "We will probe the weaknesses of our enemies."

"Go."

Valac gestures with his hands, and the four soul-clones fall into the ground, becoming one with the Earth. After they leave, they begin traveling to an unknown destination, leaving the former Valac behind.

"Keh, keh..." Valac coughs raspily. "How fortunate for each of my children to have a spirit borne of perfection. Were I to merge a soul with mine, I would suffer a significant rejection. Satan is lucky; being able to absorb other souls to strengthen his own. I lack such a luxury; so instead, I must rely on reanimated bones."

With a wave of his hand, Valac sighs and summons four more. They, too, fall into the ground and travel to an unknown destination.

"If only I were strong enough to leave; then perhaps my vengeance I might eventually achieve. For now, I will keep my distance and gaze from afar. After all, my soul is in no rush to suffer another scar."

All around Heaven's battlefield, cries of surprise erupt among the ranks of demons and angels as inconceivably powerful emanations of mana appear out of nowhere. Valac's clones spring into existence, startling members of both warring factions. Several Titans falter and stumble as they sense the mana of the Grim Reaper.

"What? Valac has returned?!"

"No!! Not the Grim Reaper! Not the one who slew the White Tiger tribe!!"

"Flee! We can't fight him! His scythe will kill us in one blow!"

Many of the Titans lose their battle spirit. They run in every direction, stampeding through the angels and demons in terror as they try to run to the distant corners of Heaven. Their feet pulverize anyone unfortunate enough to stand in their path. Only Zeus remains unmoved. He and Gabriel continue to battle Lucifer's Hydra. Despite their best efforts, twelve new Hydra heads swarm in every direction, snapping and biting the Archangel of Power and the Titan King.

"Huwaaah!"

Gabriel grunts and slams his foot into the ground as he wrestles with three of the Hydra's heads. The impact from his foot sends a shockwave through the soil, flinging a hundred nearby demons and angels into the air. The angels quickly right themselves with their wings and cut apart the demons before they can react.

"How are we to slay this beast?!" Zeus exclaims in disgust. He flips around on the Hydra's back, dodging the four heads targeting him, while occasionally using his two lightning rods to batter the Hydra's shell. "For every head we slay, two more take its place!"

With only seven of the Hydra's heads occupied, three others begin breathing fire into the skies, blasting cherubs and seraphs to ashes before they can dodge. The last two shoot bolts of lightning at Gabriel from a distance, keeping out of his melee range.

Kzzat! Kzzat!

"Perhaps try not ripping off any other heads!" Gabriel howls in exasperation. He winces as bolts of Hydra lightning splash against his back, sending pain ripping through his nervous system. "We need backup! Where is Michael?!"

Zeus quickly glances around the battlefield. The Hydra doesn't give him enough time to examine the various skirmishes spattered in every direction. "I haven't a clue!"

"Curses!"

Gabriel returns to subduing the colossal beast, but his courage wavers as he realizes this is not a battle he's likely to win without uncovering the Hydra's weakness.

* * *

Elsewhere, Bael and Camael pause their battle and stare in shock as four of Valac's clones materialize between them. Two of the clones turn to stare at Camael, while the other two meet Bael's gaze. Shock races through Camael's heart as she gazes upon the clones standing before her, while Bael only appears mildly surprised.

"The Grim Reaper survived?!" Camael gasps. "Accursed fiend!"

"Well, I'll be damned," Bael replies. "I don't believe it! Satan said you died, you ol' crumbly-bones, you!"

One of the clones raises a skeletal finger. "Bael. You may have counted me among the departed, but sadly for you, this war has only just started. I come before you while bearing a heavy grudge. A punishment is yours to carry; that is what I have judged."

Bael raises an eyebrow. He starts to reply, but at that moment, a flash of fire ignites in the sky, emitting light as bright as Gabriel's attack from earlier. Seconds later, Bael and a few other nearby demons gasp as two massive fireballs begin streaking across the sky. Every so often, the two fireballs release smaller bursts of flame, scorching nearby angels to ash.

Bael's hands begin to tremble. "Aw, shit... no... no... say it ain't so..."

The two fireballs continue streaking around, and as they come closer, Bael's trembling turns into full-body shuddering.

"NO! NO!" Bael howls at the top of his lungs. "Valac! You fucking bastard! How could you do this to me?!"

Valac doesn't respond. His clones watch silently as the fireballs — now revealed to be fire-type demons — rush toward the ground, and Bael, at full speed.

THOOM!

Azazel and Azog crash into the dirt and send molten rock spewing toward Bael. He doesn't even flinch as thousand-degree debris sprays across his body and adheres to his skin. His body, sculpted by dark demonic gods, completely ignores the intense heat smoldering upon it.

Instead, tears well up in Bael's eyes as the two fabulously-dressed demons jump out of their landing area and smile mischievously at him.

Azazel begins prancing around Bael's right side and giggling in a sing-songy voice. "♫Look, Azog! Bael's here, just like Valac said!♫"

Azog mimics his brother, but flanks Bael from the left. "♫Of course! I told you not to worry your little head!♫"

"♫I have an idea!♫" Azog says with a laugh. He claps his hands and grins like a madman. "♫Let get with Bael and play a little game!♫"

"♫What a splendid thought! When it comes to our little boo-boo, we don't have any shame!♫"

Both demons playfully fire bolts of fire at Bael, which do absolutely nothing to him, but the sudden wave of heat does rouse him from his stupor. "Bloody hell! Go away, both of you! You fuckers always drive me up the wall!!"

Camael stares at Bael and his two new 'friends' in disbelief. A moment later, her eyes shift to the Grim Reaper's four clones. All of them wordlessly turn to meet her gaze.

"Hello, Archangel of Divination. I wonder, were you able to predict this situation? Everything set before you today was part of my creation. One might even say it took a great deal of preparation."

A scythe materializes in the grasp of one of Valac's clones. The others float in three directions, but their speed seems leisurely at best. It takes them nearly ten seconds to surround the Archangel of Divination, but she keeps her eyes locked on the clone wielding the scythe.

"Valac. Contrary to thy beliefs, I did see this day coming. I will admit that thou dids't not appear in my visions, but this war did. I saw victory fall within my people's grasp, but we also will end up paying a heavy toll. Thou shalt not succeed in thy plans. We will slay thee, and regain control of Earth."

Valac scoffs. "Unlikely. All of angelkind and demonkind dance in my palm. Even when Satan dealt me a most grievous blow, I took care to stay calm. Despite various setbacks, everything has gone right as a whole. A few missteps mean little when all of the pawns will eventually fall under my control."

Camael narrows her eyes. "Thou dost plan to slay our people and revive them as thy tools, that much is certain. After thousands of years, we've learned how thy abilities function. Do not look down on us, Reaper. Angels know more of violence and bloodshed than thou could ever imagine."

Valac pauses.

After a moment, he nods.

"Indeed. The tales I've heard would make you weep. There are few things sadder than peons acting like sheep. Do you think your eldest brother has never fed you a load of crock? If you knew what I knew, your heart would suffer quite the shock."

"The only liar on this battlefield is thee, Reaper," Camael mutters. "Thy words are poison. It would take a being far mightier and more majestic than thee to turn me against my family. The filth spewing from thy mouth does little more than churn my stomach."

Valac grips his scythe tighter. One of the other clones tilts its head to watch Gabriel and Zeus struggling against the Hydra. All four of them take a few moments to survey the battlefield before crouching down and readying themselves to attack.

"I'm only trying to help you, Archangel, and give you a little education. Your fantasies mean little to me, the one bent on your subjugation. If you wish to daydream of ponies and rabbits, far be it for me to interfere. Since we are both prophets of a sort, I need only ensure you disappear. It won't do for there to be two seers."

"Does my existence bother thy empty heart that much, Reaper?" Camael prods. A sneer crosses her face. "I suppose if thou dost eliminate me, then thou shalt be the only doomsayer left. Unfortunately for thee, I have the same idea. If I kill thee, then I will regain my ability to reshape the future. Thou art my greatest obstacle to saving my people."

"You can't save anyone," Valac hisses. "You'd do whatever your Creator told you, even if he struck you blind. You'll follow his will to the very end... even if it means the extinction of angelkind."

"The angels won't die!" Camael yells. Valac's words strike a nerve. "But, I know one ugly bastard who will!"

The Archangel jumps at Valac's clone. He swings his scythe down to impale her back, but she deftly blocks it with her shield and slams her hammer against his chest.

Kshhh!

Valac's bones explode into powder. His Scythe vanishes and reappears in the hands of the nearest clone.

"Struggle all you want, Archangel, but you'll never kill me! I'm immortal, unstoppable; my death is an impossibility!"

Valac's three remaining clones rush at Camael from all three sides. The Archangel raises her shield and blocks them while swinging her hammer for a counter-attack.

Meanwhile, Bael bolts away from the Reaper and Archangel. He flees for his life as the Sunshine Brothers fly after him.

"LEAVE ME ALONE!!" The Duke of Pain screams.

"♫Don't run away, Bael! You're the worst!♫" Azazel yells.

"♫Come play pattycake with us; you can even go first!" Azog adds.

"I DON'T WANNA GO FIRST! I'D RATHER DIE THAN TALK TO YOU! UWAAAH!"

The mightiest Duke, Bael, dashes away from his worst enemies as fast as his powerful body can take him, leaving the Archangel of Divination to fend for herself. He plows through angels and demons alike as they get in his way, sending heads and arms rolling as he tears through anyone unlucky enough to end up in his path.

"OUTTA THE WAY, DUMBASSES!"

Several angels spot the barrel-chested demon thundering toward them, but they haven't a moment to escape. Their lives end tragically as a shrieking madman stomps them into puddles of blood.

As Bael flees, Valac manipulates a different clone near the outskirts of the battlefield. It floats underground after turning its body aetherial, only to eventually pop up behind a tree several hundred feet away from the war unfolding in Heaven.

"Eeyah!"

A demoness shrieks in surprise as she spots Valac's clone. Almost immediately, she steadies her breathing. "V-Valac?! You scared the shit out of me!"

Valac's clone nods at her. "Berith, my former Third Emperor, now a pawn of Satan the Devil. I can only wonder what he offered you to turn against someone of my level."

Berith quickly peeks around the tree toward the hundreds of nearby angels and demons ripping each other to shreds, then turns her attention back to Valac. "What are you, dense? I didn't turn against you! I've always been your most faithful servant! Don't lump me in with the likes of Belial and Lucifer. Anyway, I didn't know you were still alive. After a year of silence, I thought Satan's attack might have actually annihilated your soul."

Berith's annoyance fades into the back of her mind. She crosses her arms and huffs. "So, where have you been? I didn't expect to see you here of all places, but the ancient devils know you can't resist going wherever there's death and destruction."

Valac stares at Berith for a moment. Eventually, he nods, satisfied by her answer. "I knew you wouldn't enjoy working for Satan, after seeing the power I've displayed. Satan's attack dealt a grievous wound and caused my soul to decay. It took time to pull myself back from the edge of life and death, but now I've returned to drag more souls down to the depths. If you're still my most loyal agent, then I've a mission for you to fulfill. I have my eye on a dangerous foe; someone I need you to kill."

Berith's eyes brighten immediately. "Just like before, eh? You don't waste time! As long as it isn't Satan, I can probably do it. There aren't many shadows around here, though. Fighting has proven quite tricky, today."

Valac's eyes glint ominously. "Satan is a mountain, while you are an ant. His power is infinite, while yours is scant. Worry not about him; leave his demise to me. Your mark is a soft one; a Titan named Hercules."

"Hercules."

Berith rolls the Titan's name around on her tongue.

"Right. I know the bastard. He nearly wiped out all of Lucifer's cronies, and Satan too. Damn shame, that. Would have saved us some trouble."

Valac nods. "Indeed. Hercules' body is iron, and his muscles are stone slabs. Beyond that, his greatest talent is the gift of gab. He has the power to turn my arisen against me, but only if they pledge to him their loyalty. He exploits my inability to control minds, then seizes control of my puppet's bodies. As you can imagine, such a situation is beyond shoddy. Eliminate him, and I will reward you bountifully."

Berith's eyes sparkle for a moment as she takes a moment to comprehend Valac's words. However, she quickly stuffs her emotions down and crosses her arms. "A reward, hm? Good. I deserve it. I'm not like that hussy, Nerissa. I've always been at your side. I want you to name me as your Second Emperor. I won't accept anything less!"

"Kss."

Valac hisses quietly to himself. Several seconds later, he nods. "That's what I like about you - your simple-minded desire for prominence. When I rate you against other demons, it becomes clear that you'll stop at nothing to achieve dominance. Very well, kill Hercules, and I'll give you what you deserve. In order to find him, you need only look North and observe."

Valac gestures past the tree toward the other side of the battlefield. Berith follows his directions and squints as she peers into the distance. "Too many people fighting. Can't see past them."

"One of my spies has their eyes on him now; you'd laugh if you saw the sweat dripping off his brow. Go now, Berith, and be sure to spare his soul. Once he dies, his powers will be mine to control."

A look of realization spreads across Berith's face. "Wait, you intend to control Hercules? To take him as one of your undead?"

"But of course," Valac replies, as he begins to sink into the ground. "I can only control those who have perished, excluding their minds. I rule the dead, but Hercules the living; that much I have divined. With him as my servant, I will become the master of all beings; their king on high."

Valac finishes sinking into the dirt, leaving Berith behind with only her thoughts.

The Emperor of Backstabbing shivers in anticipation.

Oh, yes! I can't believe it! I'm finally going to become Valac's number two!! Eeeh! I can finally take my place at his side and rule as his queen! Nobody will dare to talk down to me ever again!

Berith transforms into a shadow and pounces underneath a nearby rock. She follows up by teleporting under the shoe of an angel fighting for his life, then continues jumping toward her ultimate destination.

Oh, Titan, you can't die quick enough! Now, just where, exactly, are you...?

* * *

Elsewhere, on the other side of the battlefield, a young, ambitious Titan gazes through the eyes of his angelic puppets at the war unfolding before him.

Finally, the Reaper has come. If I were to enslave him, I would gain control over life and death. However, I would never do such a thing. For his crimes against my people, Valac must die. I will send off the souls he captured and return them to the bosom of the ancient ancestors. Only then will my revenge be complete.

A faint smile trails off Hercules' lips.

Everything is working out well, so far, but I mustn't grow complacent.

Suddenly, a strange scene catches Hercules attention. The vision of one of his angelic servants vanishes, but the last thing they see startles Hercules.

"The Duke of Pain is... fleeing from an enemy? What unthinkable terror could cause such an unstoppable warrior to flee for his life?"

The young Titan evaluates his demonic opponent with caution. If ever they were to fight, their battle would reshape the balance of power across Heaven's battlefield.

Part 154: The Birth of Evil

The Archangel of Courage sizes up his demon opponent warily. Unlike the last time Michael fought Diablo, his former captive has explosively increased his power after advancing to the rank of Emperor. Dangerous energy emits from Diablo, causing Michael's cockiness to waver.

Diablo glances past Michael toward Belial, still in her True Succubus form, gagged and bound by Uzziel's vines. "I should have known you wouldn't just kill her, Michael. You're a sick monster."

"I like to play with my food," Michael counters. "Besides. If this succubus dies, she'll only become fodder for the Reaper's army. I can't allow that."

"Valac?" Diablo asks. Immediately, his eyes dart around. "What the hell are you talking about? Satan killed Valac. The Reaper is dead, Michael."

Hercules, still controlling Uzziel's body, narrows her eyes. "It seems I was right. The demons have yet to discover that Valac has returned. He's not working with them."

"How unfortunate," Michael says with a smile. He takes a step toward Diablo and raises his sword. "Perhaps if every demon in Heaven worked together to kill me, they might succeed. All thy kind have are tricks and deceit. Thou shalt perish before comprehending the futility of standing against Heaven."

"Don't get cocky," Hercules warns Michael. "Never underestimate the demons. Your arrogance will be the death of you!"

Michael turns his head back to peer at Uzziel from the corner of his eye. "Don't mouth off to me, Titan. After I finish with this demon, thou art next."

Diablo watches warily as the two 'Archangels' converse with each other. A second later, he spots Uzziel's glowing eyes.

What? Why did Uzziel allow the Titan to take over her mind? Did he overpower her? Not only that, but why is Michael antagonizing him? Maybe there's a way I can turn their enmity to my advantage.

Michael returns his attention to Diablo. Belial wriggles in the background and tries to use her incredible strength to break free of Uzziel's vines, but the Titan controlling Uzziel merely coils them tighter. "Don't even think of escaping, wench. You stay right there and watch."

* * *

Diablo and Michael size each other up for a few moments. As they prepare for their battle, something darts around in the chaos of the surrounding battlefield. A nearby demon, Agares, hides behind a small rock and flattens himself to the ground. He suppresses his breathing, and cautiously wipes his forehead.

"Tch," Agares mutters under his breath. "Finally, I have enough mana to re-enter my reptilian form. But then what? There are two bloody Archangels! How am I supposed to rescue Belial with Uzziel guarding her?"

Something breezes against Agares' back. He stiffens and jerks his eyes around. A moment later, Vepar's voice whispers to him on the breeze. "Calm down; it's just me. I scoped out the situation. The Archangels didn't notice me at all. The stuck-up pricks have their heads so far up their asses they didn't-"

"Yes, yes, get on with it!" Agares hisses through his teeth. "How do we get to Belial?! I can't fight an Archangel, let alone two of them! Michael nearly killed me!"

The faint green gas comprising Vepar's body shifts in the air, then transforms into a faint apparition of her displeased face. "You think I don't know that? The last thing I want is to die saving Belial of all people. Still, if we can free her, we might be able to overpower Uzziel. With two Emperors on our side, we should be able to win. However..."

Vepar trails off. Her whispering voice carries a hint of uncertainty.

"What? What's wrong?" Agares asks. He strains to look at her barely visible gaseous face, but he can't pick out her expression from the chaos visible through her body.

"It's Uzziel. She's been acting very strange. I could be wrong, but I think her eyes were glowing."

"Oh."

Agares swallows his saliva.

"Do... do you think... it's the Titan?"

"Possibly. If Hercules is controlling her, anything can happen. You weren't around when he and Zeus last attacked, but I saw his cunning in action. He can instantly realize someone's true battle potential if he takes over their mind. Satan's power was two, possibly three times higher than anything I've seen before or after that day. We're lucky we didn't all die."

Agares grits his teeth. "And now he has an Archangel in his possession."

"Exactly."

Both demons go quiet. As they watch Michael and Diablo banter, the Emperor and Archangel eventually prepare to battle, sending pangs of worry through Agares' heart.

"We can't let Diablo fight Michael alone. He'll die! Michael is supposed to be the deadliest Archangel."

"Everyone has a weakness," Vepar hisses. "You took out Michael's arm with your venom when you ambushed him. He's not a god. Diablo has a chance."

"He won't survive if Uzziel gets involved," Agares replies. "Not only that, but Michael has a healer on his side. Diablo doesn't."

"Mmm. Fair point."

Suddenly, Michael leaps at Diablo. "Too scared to make the first move? Then allow me!"

The two combatants crash against each other! Immediately, Michael unleashes a dizzying series of stabs, slices, and jabs, overwhelming Diablo with his speed. Diablo manages to reflect a few of Michael's attacks with his kinetic shielding, but he can't maintain it for long. Michael quickly overwhelms him and begins driving him backward.

"We have to help!" Agares squeaks. He peeks out from behind his rock and stares in horror at the battle taking place between monster and demon. "What do we do?!"

"I have an idea..." Vepar mutters. Her gaseous form shifts slightly, and her eyes settle on Uzziel. "Listen carefully. I'm only going to say this once..."

Agares' eyes widen as Vepar relays her plan.

"That's suicidal! Are you crazy?!"

"No, but I'm desperate. Unlike Satan, I don't think attacking Heaven was a smart decision. Since we're here, we'll have to make the best of the situation. Are you with me or not?"

Agares locks eyes with Vepar's cloud-like body, barely visible in the breeze. He bites his lip and nods.

"Of course. I won't leave Belial behind, not after she saved my life. I owe her."

"That's what I wanted to hear. Follow me."

Agares nods. He motions with his hands, transforms into his lizard form, and begins slinking around behind Uzziel, using his camouflage ability to become nearly invisible.

Recommended Listening

Michael attacks Diablo with the fury of seven hurricanes. He batters and slaps Diablo with the flat of his blade, toying with his opponent and wearing him down while occasionally nicking Diablo's skin now and then.

Gashes spread across Diablo's body. The Emperor of Annihilation attempts to summon his kinetic barrier, but Michael continuously shatters it an instant after it forms, turning Diablo's defense into a paper tiger.

"Gaugh!"

Diablo cries out in pain as Michael's enchanted sword slices across his chest, spraying blood to the side. Michael cuts slightly deeper than before, then flaps his wings and retreats a few steps to smirk.

"Hahaha! Thou art the same weakling as when we last spoke, little bloodskin! Soon, I shall bind thee with chains and cast ye into my dungeon! Torture and pain shall define the rest of thy miserable existence!"

Diablo staggers backward and gasps for breath. His vision reddens as he refocuses his eyes on Michael's cackling figure.

"Tch. Laugh it up, bird-brain. I didn't spend the last few thousand years sitting on my ass. I trained, day and night... all so I could bury your corpse in the mud!"

Diablo's eyes flash. He motions with his hands and casts a prepared spell. Suddenly, Michael stops laughing. A tremendous sensation of weight slams down against his body, nearly yanking him to his knees.

"What?!" Michael gasps. He quickly plants his feet against the ground and stares at Diablo, startled by this new development. "What... what invisible... attack...?!"

Yeah, that's the trick, Diablo thinks to himself. I need to distract him. My gravity magic works best over long periods. I need to exhaust Michael and slow him down a bit. Once I soften him up, it'll only take one punch to lay him out.

Diablo stares at the Archangel evenly. Rather than answer Michael's question, he flicks his eyes toward Uzziel. "I can't believe you'd sell your sister to Hercules, Michael. You're a real piece of work."

"Nonsense!" Michael yells. He takes one heavy step forward, and his foot plants several inches into the soft dirt like an anvil crashing into a lake. "I'd never do such a thing! Don't try to test me with wordplay, bloodskin!"

"I'm not playing around," Diablo replies. "Trust me. I've never been more serious in my life!"

He quickly begins building kinetic power in his body. As Michael struggles to escape the increased gravity pulling him into the dirt, Diablo begins powerwalking toward the Archangel. His eyes flash as he rears back to smash Michael right in the face.

"Dodge, you imbecile!" Uzziel shouts. "Don't let that demon hit you!"

Michael spots Diablo's incoming attack. Despite the immense pressure on his body, he throws himself backward and dodges as Diablo swings his fist toward him.

FWOOOOM!

Diablo's punch detonates in the air like a stick of dynamite. A wave of scorching wind fires from his fist and passes over Michael's stomach as the Archangel lays on his back. The Archangel of Courage stares wide-eyed as Diablo's kinetic energy ignites the air and shoots like a missile into a crowd of demons and angels. The searing hurricane gusts send warriors from both sides tumbling away, but unlike his mightiest punch, it doesn't end up killing anyone.

Damn! Michael dodged! Diablo curses. He flicks his eyes to the Archangel laying on his back. It's a good thing I held back, or I'd have killed a bunch of demons!

"Too close, bloodskin!" Michael snarls. Before Diablo can retreat, Michael lunges his left arm out and grabs Diablo by the ankle. "Don't even think of retreating!"

With a vicious glint in his eyes, Michael squeezes Diablo's ankle, hard.

Crunch.

"Ahhh!!" Diablo cries in agony as Michael crushes his bones. He quickly yanks his foot out of Michael's grasp but ends up tumbling backward and landing on his ass.

"As I said, bloodskin! Retreat shall be an impossibility for thee, today!"

Michael gathers strength in his arm, legs, and wings. A moment later, he shoves off the ground and leaps into a standing position, acting as if the increased gravity doesn't affect him.

"A most splendid parlor trick, as expected of thy people!" Michael laughs. "It may have slowed me down a bit, but I've encountered worse! Uriel possessed a similar ability, but her gravity exceeded thine!"

Michael cracks his neck and stretches to increase his circulation. His smile vanishes as images of his deceased sister come rushing into his mind.

"Bastard. Thy people murdered Uriel. I will ensure thou endureth a long, painful life in my prison. None who enter may ever leave. That is my promise!"

Diablo grits his teeth and pushes his still-functioning leg against the ground to escape Michael. His right foot bends awkwardly from its snapped bone, leaving him unable to walk. At that moment, he turns to look at Belial, hoping she might be able to heal him, but what he sees startles him.

A faint, shimmering mirage slinks across the ground. It passes Belial and heads toward Uzziel. The Archangel of Creation stares at Diablo, oblivious to the threat creeping toward her.

Agares?! Diablo thinks. I thought only Belial and I were here! We still have a chance! I have to distract the Archangels!

Immediately, Diablo averts his eyes from the captured Succubus. He turns to gaze at Michael and watches as the Archangel takes a few ponderous steps toward him.

"I... I think I've figured something out about you, Michael!"

The Archangel of Courage stops and raises an eyebrow. "Oh? And what might that be?"

"You're a chicken-shit. You posture like you're a mighty warrior, but all you do is look for opponents weaker than you to bully and push around. Your Archangel title is a crock of shit. What kind of courageous warrior picks fights with weaklings?!"

Michael's pupils shrink. "Do not mock me, bloodskin. Thou art testing my patience."

Diablo continues. "I understand, now! Hahaha! That's right, you call demons tricksters and schemers, but in the end, you're no better than us so-called 'bloodskins!' You're the same as us!"

"Don't let him goad you!" Uzziel yells. Hercules scowls angrily as Diablo brazenly pushes Michael's anger further and further. "Hurry up and capture that demon! We've other Emperors to worry about!"

Michael ignores him. "I am no coward, red rat. How dare thou disparage my battle feats. Thou shalt PAY for those words!"

Michael raises his sword above his head and flaps his wings. He lunges toward Diablo, still on the ground, and swings his blade down, intending to lop off one of Diablo's arms.

Diablo watches Michael rushing toward him. Yes! Perfect!

Michael swings his sword down with all his strength, but Diablo releases a prepared magic symbol as a wicked glint appears in his eyes. Michael's sword slams against the Emperor's kinetic barrier and instantly reverses direction with ten times its original force. Michael yelps and stumbles awkwardly as his sword flies out of his grasp and sails into the sky. "Gah! What?!"

Diablo motions with his other hand and shoves off the ground with his left leg. He balls his hand into a fist and punches Michael right in the stomach before the Archangel of Courage can react.

THUCK!

All of the oxygen inside Michael's lungs bursts from his lips as Diablo's super-dense fist bashes him in the gut. Diablo knocks the wind out of Michael and flings him several feet backward, allowing the intense gravity to yank him into the dirt with violent force.

"Tch," Diablo grunts. "Didn't have time to add a kinetic factor. Still, that'll buy me a few moments. What about-?"

"Ahh!" Uzziel cries out in alarm as Agares pounces at her from behind, catching her off-guard. The Duke of Reptiles releases his Camouflage ability and instantly wraps himself around the Archangel's back. He mimics the same attack he used on Michael thousands of years previously and bares his fangs to lunge at Uzziel's shoulder.

However, Hercules, still in control of the Archangel, immediately recognizes the incoming danger. Before Agares' fangs can pierce Uzziel's skin, the Archangel flicks a finger, and a vine shoots out of the ground in front of her, shapes itself into a fist, and races toward her shoulder.

Agares gasps as he spots the incoming counter-attack. "OH, F-"

He doesn't get a chance to curse. The earthen fist strikes his face with the might of a cannonball, tears him off Uzziel's body, and sends him rocketing backward. He grinds into the dirt and shudders as his vision whirls like a typhoon.

The Archangel of Creation spins around to face her attacker. Several deep, bloody gashes on her arms and legs, caused by the ripping of Agares' claws from her body, begin flowing freely. She heals herself with a wave of her hand and scowls at the Duke.

"Tch. Annoying little lizard. This area lies within my field of vision, you fool! Sneak attacks are pointless when my servant's gazes fall upon each other!"

After scowling at the momentarily stunned Duke of Reptiles, Hercules fires off a quick command to several nearby Undying to move in on his attacker. The mind-controlled angels grin gleefully and fly toward Agares as their thoughts begin to race.

Our master has given us an order! Truly, he is benevolent to allow us to fight!

All will hail Hercules, the Infinity King! Our master treats us lovingly and assures us of victory!

If only I had accepted the rapture of Hercules' embrace sooner, I might have experienced the joy of his touch! Quickly, I must dispatch the one who means him harm, post-haste!

The thoughts of all these controlled angels swirl in Hercules' mind, but he ignores them. His mind control is unlike Valac's, in that those who submit to him feel unending pleasure. They fight for him willingly and are unable to resist any of his orders. Indeed, resisting is not something they would ever dream of since they immediately fall into rapturous love with their mighty king!

...However.

The Archangel of Creation, Uzziel, does not fall under his sway.

Foul monster, Uzziel's voice hisses inside her mind. For my brothers and sisters to praise thee in such a fashion... thou hath corrupted their minds beyond recognition!

Quiet. Hercules replies. His thoughts carry a commanding presence that immediately suppresses Uzziel, but still, he cannot gain control over her. Your soul is unthinkably powerful. I must thank you for revealing a previously unknown weakness of mine to me, but in the end, I still fully control your body. I will make use of your powers as I like.

Even as Agares regains his senses and jumps to his feet, Hercules releases a belated sigh. He sits cross-legged upon a boulder three miles from the massive warfront and touches his temples.

"It seems that if someone possesses a powerful soul, one stronger than mine, they can partially resist my soul manipulation. I never knew that was the case. But... that does bring a question to my mind. Why is Uzziel's soul unusually powerful? Is it merely because she is an Archangel?"

Thirty Undying angels stand in a defensive circle around Hercules, protecting him while he focuses his efforts on the battlefield. None of them reply to his spoken question, though they wouldn't even if they knew the answer.

"It is a mystery I must solve," Hercules mutters. "Perhaps, if I take control of the other Archangels, I will have similar difficulties. Controlling Michael might be more difficult than keeping his timid little sister in check. Still, considering Uzziel's demure demeanor, I can't help but wonder why she gives me such a sense of foreboding..."

Hercules returns his attention to the little demon runt, the one with the scales. Agares tenses up as several mind-controlled Cherubs and Seraphs surround him. The former unsheathe their swords, while the latter begin preparing spells to annihilate him.

"Damn!" Diablo yells. He stares in horror at his friend, now surrounded by Hercules' minions. Never did he expect Agares' surprise attack to go so wrong! "Run, Agares! You can't beat an Archangel!"

"Run where?!" Agares cries out in exasperation. He quickly flicks his eyes toward the nearest cherub and immediately forms an escape plan.

I'll have to break through! The Duke of Reptiles reflects. Uzziel might be an Archangel, but the others are only low-ranked angels. They can't defeat a Duke!

In the blink of an eye, Agares formulates a plan and attacks! He pounces at the nearest Cherub and raises a claw to tear off the angel's head.

Once this one is gone, I'll camouflage and flee!

Agares' desire to escape causes his heart to pound like a drum in his chest. He swings his claw down and blinks in surprise as two Cherubs rush him from both sides. One slams the Duke with a shield and knocks him to the side, while the other aims a sword at him and stabs at his stomach. Both of them move in tandem without wasting a single movement.

Gahk! How-?!

Agares winces as the Cherub's sword glances off the scales protecting his gut. It slices a small gash across his midsection but doesn't cut deep enough to injure him grievously. Agares's body drives into the cherub on his left, thanks to the impact of the other's shield, and both go tumbling to the ground. A split-second later, the first cherub raises his sword and swings it toward the Duke's neck.

Shit!

Agares jerks a claw up and catches the blade, preventing himself from suffering a grisly death.

"Hoho," The cherub says, as Hercules speaks through his mouth. "You're not half-bad, scaled one. Where were you when I nearly killed all of your people?"

"I was busy!" Agares snarls. He flicks his tail against the ground and uses its muscles to fling himself into the air. His strange movements catch Hercules by surprise. Before the Titan can react, Agares severs his target's neck, then slaps the head right off the cherub's shoulders. "Eat my ass, Titan!"

Hercules doesn't flinch as one of his pawns perishes. He speaks through the mouth of a nearby Seraph. "Fool. I'm only probing you for the moment. Have you already forgotten?"

With those words, Hercules' control shifts to Uzziel. The instant Agares' feet touch the ground, Uzziel motions with her hands, and brambles soaked in holy energy burst out of the dirt and grab hold of Agares like prison shackles.

"Ahh!" Agares gasps as the holy-energy-infused barbs press against his scales and find a few gaps in his defense. "Fucking hell!"

Diablo starts to move toward his friend, but before he takes two steps, Michael jumps to his feet. "Going somewhere, bloodskin?! I did not permit thy departure!"

Michael's eyes flash, and a beam of light fires from them. Diablo reacts instinctively and ducks the deadly attack, causing Michael's eye-laser to fly past him and strike a boulder instead. Diablo quickly spins on his one functioning ankle, before leaping to the side to avoid the laser chasing after him.

Damn! I can't move properly with my ankle all fucked-up! Diablo yells internally. And with Michael back on his feet, I can't help Agares! He's on his own!

Diablo lands in a crouched stance, with the toes of his broken foot barely touching the ground, while his palms and other foot form a tripod-stance to allow him to evade Michael's laser.

"Stand still," Michael orders. His voice crackles with killing intent. "I will remove thy limbs, one at a time."

"Try me!" Diablo yells. He leaps to the left as Michael's gaze sweeps toward him. The Archangel's laser cuts through a crowd of demons and angels fighting in the distance as he aims for Diablo, but it doesn't harm his brothers and sisters, only the demons. Several of them scream in pain as his powerful attack severs their waists and causes them to fall to the ground. The nearby angels quickly finish off their foes and smile thankfully at their brother.

However, Michael ignores them. He focuses all of his attention on the surprisingly nimble Emperor of Annihilation.

"Even with a hobbled leg, thou art quite the spry little grasshopper!"

Diablo dodges Michael again and begins summoning kinetic energy to his right hand. Magical power condenses in his palm, and instead of dodging Michael a third time, Diablo leaps straight at his opponent, catching Michael off-guard.

"Eat shit, dickwad!"

Michael's eyes sweep toward Diablo, but he only lands a glancing blow as his laser tears across Diablo's back. The Emperor of Annihilation grunts as the holy energy scorches his flesh, but he doesn't retreat. Diablo rears his fist back and swings it at Michael's chest.

I can't dodge! The Archangel realizes. Too late, he tries to block the attack, but Diablo's fist finds its mark.

CRACK!

Diablo transfers most of his body's mass to his fist, enhancing the ten-times kinetic energy already build up inside of it. Three hundred pounds of weight combines with his kinetic potential to deliver hundreds of tons of force to Michael's ribcage.

The Archangel goes flying.

Unlike the glancing blow from earlier, Diablo's second attack is a near-fatal one. Michael's head hits the ground first. It drags across the dirt and transforms his flight into a tumbling, twisting mass of devastation. The Archangel of Courage loses his ability to think as he careens helplessly across Heaven's surface like a rock skimming across a pond. After several seconds of uncontrolled tumbling, he collides with a group of demons and comes to a stop, sending them scattering like bowling pins under the force and weight of his body.

Diablo lands on the ground and stares in disbelief at Michael's prone form half a mile away.

I... I did it! I got that spawn of a broodmother!

Hercules, still trying to take care of the pesky little Duke, but unable to land a killing blow, flicks his gaze toward Michael. "What?! Worthless Archangel! That's why I told you not to toy with your food!"

"Outstanding!" Agares yells. "Now, help me with this broad!"

A female voice speaks up from behind Uzziel. "You want assistance, eh? Allow us to accomodate your request."

Uzziel flinches. Hercules quickly turns one of the cherub's heads to look at the Archangel and gasps as he spots Belial standing not ten feet away. Behind her, a thick, green mist swirls in the breeze. It coalesces into a faint face wearing a huge grin.

"You did it!" Agares yells. He laughs and echoes Vepar's grin as he eyeballs the ten cherubs remaining around him. "Two Emperors, a Duke, and a Baron. You're about to lose your mightiest pawn, Hercules!"

Fury erupts on Uzziel's face. "Insolent shit! I can't believe I fell for your distraction!"

"You'd better believe it," Belial says. No longer is she in her True Succubus form. Already, she has regenerated her missing arm. She glances over at Diablo and nods. "I'll be there in a second."

"Take your time," Diablo mutters. He shoots a hesitant glance toward Michael, still lying in the dirt. The Archangel hasn't moved since his landing, but it's unclear to Diablo whether he lived or died.

Hercules' focus turns laser-sharp as his cherubs quickly size up the situation unfolding. Belial, Vepar, and Agares coil their muscles to attack, and the Titan's mind begins to race.

My Omni-Vision might be incredibly versatile, but a sizable distraction can cause me to lose focus. Had I left one cherub to guard the succubus, that other demoness couldn't have freed her. I put too much attention on the damned lizard! Tch, and now Michael is down for the count, too! I have to crush my opponents before they attack!

Immediately, Hercules's soul manipulation begins digging into Uzziel's psyche. In the blink of an eye, he searches through thousands, perhaps even millions of years of memories to find information about her powers.

This female is not adept at fighting. She is a peaceful creature, yet the further I dig, the less I find. It's almost as if...

Hercules continues poring over the contents of Uzziel's mind. Suddenly, a massive, unthinkably vast void emerges in her memories. Like an all-encompassing black hole, Hercules freezes as he gazes into it. A palpable sense of terror grips his heart as he eyes the sudden barrier stopping his progress.

By the ancestors! What unholy demonic construct might this be?! It's as if the contents of Uzziel's most distant past have been swallowed by some all-powerful being! This is no ordinary mental block... but something created by a magical power beyond anything I've ever seen!

Hercules pauses.

The Titan gazes into the abyss, and it gazes into him.

I should not tear down this wall. The consequences might prove too devastating for life itself. But... rather than destroy the void... perhaps I can pass beyond it, even if only for a moment. Just one look, that's all I need. A hint from Uzziel's past might guide me in defeating the enemies surrounding her!

Still, Hercules hesitates. It takes all his willpower to start moving again. After half an eternity, his body begins to fly toward the void. The closer he draws, the more a sense of foreboding and dread takes him.

Evil... damnation to all still living... the fate of the universe... turmoil... obliteration...

Hercules shudders as he begins to fall into the void. Almost immediately, a light appears at its center.

Ah! There it is! A passage beyond this blackened void!

Hercules' physical body tenses up as he grits his teeth. He shifts his soul into the shape of a bullet and begins rushing past the aperture guarding Uzziel's memories.

I must see what lies in the distance! I MUST!

The further Hercules travels, the more his very soul begins to contort and twist. Where before, it started as a plump and healthy ball of light, it quickly molds itself into a strand thinner than a hair, nigh-infinite in length.

Hrrrgh!

Hercules concentrates with all of his willpower and continues pressing toward the rapidly expanding pinprick of light.

SHOW... ME... YOUR... SECRETS... ARCHANGEL!

All of a sudden, the pressure engulfing him vanishes.

Hercules breaks through the wall protecting Uzziel's ancient past, and his soul reverts to its original form.

The dread inside Hercules's heart swallows him whole.

Oh... ancestors... what have I done? No... this can't be...

Uzziel's memories unfold before him, like a symphony of death.

Tears begin to fall from Hercules' eyes. His sanity slips.

How could I be so naive? I must leave at once. Nobody must know. When I finish in heaven... I must... I must kill Uzziel. She cannot be left to live. Oh, ancestors, how could you sign such a deal with Raphael? How could you allow this fiend to go on living after the blood she's shed?

Hercules pulls away from Uzziel's memories. As he does, an overwhelming sense of emptiness swallows his heart.

I gained the power needed to defeat my enemies... but at what cost? How can one continue existing after witnessing such vile atrocities?

Megara. I wish to feel your embrace one last time.

One last time...

* * *

Hercules finishes retracting his mind from Uzziel's memories. Time returns to normal, and he stares listlessly as Belial's bladed arm lashes toward the back of Uzziel's neck.

I should allow this Archangel to perish.

The weapon flicks toward Uzziel, but Hercules doesn't react.

I should... give up... my dreams.

Belial's blade cracks the air as it passes the speed of sound.

Hercules waits.

I need only stand by, and the demons will kill Uzziel. I could save the universe just by allowing her to perish.

But... will I? Can I allow my mightiest pawn to perish?

Belial's blade arrives within a foot of Uzziel's back.

No. I need her, still. I must first accomplish my goals. Only after that... only afterward... can I allow her to die.

Hercules smiles.

That's right. I cannot give up now, not when victory is within my grasp. What other purpose can I live for, aside from achieving my one goal?

Uzziel's eyes begin to glow.

I will kill the demons. Then, I will kill Uzziel.

That is my purpose.

Uzziel jerks her head to the side, causing Belial's blade to miss by the slimmest of margins.

The Archangel of Creation motions with her hands and quickly prepares a skill she hasn't used since the Primordial Era.

Hercules speaks through Uzziel's lips. "My apologies, demons. I cannot allow this one's death. She is essential to my plans."

A chill goes down Belial's back. "Agares. Stay back. Get away from her!"

"It's too late," Uzziel murmurs. "I've seen the darkness. Now, I must bring out the light, or risk being swallowed, forever."

Hercules unleashes all of his mental control and suppresses Uzziel's soul with all of his might.

"The light of Creation; appear! Give me the power to defeat the demons!"

Belial gasps.

Agares pales.

Diablo's blood chills.

"What is this power?" Vepar whispers. The poisonous-gas demoness immediately turns to flee, but an invisible force grabs hold of her and prevents her escape.

Fire ignites in Uzziel's eyes.

"You're not going anywhere!"

Part 155: The Zhurm's Rampage

Many miles from the battlefield, far from the sounds of angelic steel and demonic magic clashing, the recently vacated city of Nirvana stands like a jewel cast among the pearls of Heaven's landscape. Like many other cities in Heaven, lavishly designed stone houses sit along a carefully developed road, one formed from flat stones placed together in simple geometric shapes. Despite the simple design of all the houses, each one has an elegant air to it.

With curved, oval-shaped roofs, and doors big enough for Gabriel to step through without stooping, each house seems designed for the Archangel of Power enter, even though no other angels come anywhere close to his stature.

A foreboding wind blows through the vacated city. All of its residents, now engaged in battle with demonkind, have left their possessions and belongings behind, unaware of the secret strike force dispatched to destroy their homes.

The ground explodes! A Burrower-type demon jumps out of a freshly-dug hole in the dirt and lands in a crouch. He quickly scans the area, turning a wary eye toward the nearby windows.

"Chee-chee! I don't see anyone..."

Behind him, several orcs emerge from his tunnel. All of them ride atop Hellhounds, but after a dozen pop out, one particularly nasty-looking fellow riding atop the biggest hound of all makes his appearance. Without the slightest hint of fear, Sheol, the first Orc Zhurm, king of his people, crosses his arms and sits proudly atop his mighty steed — a three-headed Hellhound that puts all the others to shame.

"How pathetic. Look at you lot, sneaking around like thieves in the night. Disgraceful. Raise your chins. Stop pissing your pants and get ready to work."

The Orc Zhurm gazes upon the Burrower-demon with disgust. Unlike the Demon Lord cowering in fear, Sheol sits atop his hound like a conquering leader, who's come to visit his subjugated land. His clothing, formed from the pelts of various predator animals, is also adorned with hundreds of bones from the angels and humans he's killed over the centuries. Compared to the lesser beings surrounding him, Sheol stands atop a mountain of bodies; all of which have earned him his aura of rulership.

"I-it can't hurt to be careful," The Burrower replies. He glances up at Sheol as if to search for a hint of understanding. Despite his rank of Demon Lord, the Burrower appears quite frightened of the Zhurm. "What if one of the pigeons jumps out and-"

"Quiet," Sheol growls.

His words instantly silence the Burrower. Afraid of angering the Zhurm, the Demon Lord quietly backs away and dives into his burrow. He disappears without saying another word.

"Coward," Sheol mutters.

Several seconds pass. Sheol and his orcs stand silently and survey the surroundings, taking a few moments to get a feel for a city they've never stepped foot inside.

Sheol sniffs the air. "Mmm. Smell that? That's the stink of loot. There's treasure hiding around these parts."

"Oooh, treasure!"

A goblin jumps out of the Burrower's tunnel. Within seconds, dozens of others follow him and spread out like a plague of locusts. They run to the nearest houses and peer inside or crouch at the doors, readying themselves to break inside.

One goblin licks his lips. "Oy! Some'un say tree-sure?"

"That's-hut I heard!" A drunken-sounding goblin gurgles. He stumbles over to the nearest house and peeps in the window. "Oooh! This'uns got sum nice-ies!"

Ten other goblins follow his lead. They run over and throw the door open, then rush inside. After a few seconds, one of them cries out in frustration. "Grrrgh! Damn you, Mogin! There ain't nothin' in this dump but cups and crockery! Yer a damn shame to your kin! You got the eyes of a slug!"

The drunken goblin shrugs. "Pft. They looked pretty nice t'me."

"Skeee! Stinkin' codge-fondler! We'll let Jobi take the lead! He always sniffs out the best shrakh!"

Sheol watches silently as the goblins do what they do best —appropriate loot.

After the goblins fan out and leave the orcs in their dust, Sheol grunts to his comrades nearest him. "Hmph. Those gobby's aren't worth five pinches. Follow me. Let the runts grab that worthless shrakh; we're here for twinkle-metal."

Unlike the wild and seemingly carefree goblins, the Orcs wait for their leader's orders before moving to action. His First Commander, Krugna, pumps his fist. "Aye! We follow Zhurm Sheol to riches and glory!"

One of the lesser orcs, a low-ranker wearing only a few bones on his tribal necklace, grunts questioningly. "Any good meat here?"

Immediately, a higher-ranked orc beside him slaps his junior's head. "Stupid kupa! Forget meat! We here for twinkle-metal! Need move fast before pigeons come flapping home!"

Sheol flicks his gaze toward the direction they left. A small mountain blocks his vision, preventing him from seeing how the War in Heaven is unfolding. With a shrug, Sheol uncrosses his arms and pets the hairy body of his freakish, mutated Hellhound. The monstrous animal growls softly as its master strokes it.

"Now now, there's no need to get excited, Cerberus. Ain't nothin' here but a breeze."

Cerberus's middle head jerks to the left, knocking aside the hound's leftmost head. Neither one seems to care, because they both lock eyes on a humongous cathedral in the distance.

"Grrrgh... graarrr! HAROOO!"

The vicious animal's eyes turn bloodshot as its keen sense of smell detects something inside.

"Somethin's got Cerberus spooked," Krugna says. He walks his hellhound ahead a few steps to peer in the direction Cerberus alerted. "Think some'uns over there?"

Sheol hesitates. "Hmm. It's probably nothing... but just in case, let's take a peek. Cerberus ain't the type to mess around. Besides, that heza looks a little off from the others. I bet there's loot hidin' inside."

* * *

The pack of Hellhound riders rushes through the town of Nirvana. They move like the wind as they scale the two-story stone houses with ease and pounce from rooftop to rooftop. Despite the immense bulk of the Hellhounds and their riders, the monsters' talons produce frighteningly little sound as they leap toward the Holy Haven.

The riders slow to a stop before the massive monastery. Their eyes widen as they take in the sight of the ten-story building towering over them.

"Bloody hell!" One of the higher-ranked orcs gasps. "It didn't look this big from back there!"

Even Sheol gapes at the massive stone structure. "How'd the angels make something like that? It better have twinkle-metal inside, or my name ain't Sheol."

The lowest-ranked orc raises an eyebrow. "Huh? Your name not Sheol? When it change?"

His superior officer slugs him in the back of the head again. "No, stupid! Sheol make funny! Why you so dumb?!"

The junior rubs his head and whimpers. "Oww... you so mean to me..."

"Only 'cause you stupid like chicken!"

While the juniors grumble at each other about minor things, Sheol narrows his eyes. "You're too loud. I smell some pigeons inside."

That shuts his lackeys up. The youngest orc's eyes widen as he jerks his head toward the cathedral. A look of hunger appears on his face, and he licks his lips. "Oooh, we get fight?"

Sheol smirks. "Yeah. You go first — time to earn your bones, kupa."

Krugna, the First Commander, flinches. He doesn't say anything out loud, but a look of worry passes over his face. Sheol wants a kupa to go in first? That means he expects a trap.

Despite the First Commander's wariness, the youngest orc doesn't realize the danger awaiting him. He smiles greedily and pulls out his weapons — a pair of sharpened bone-claws that fit over his hands. He adjusts their fit in the blink of an eye, then guides his Hellhound to take a few steps forward. "Me honored, Zhurm Sheol! Me go first and leave only blood behind!"

Despite his concerns, Sheol says nothing to dampen the youngest orc's enthusiasm. Every warrior must earn their bones, he thinks to himself. Without facing danger, no orc can obtain glory! True warriors face their enemies head-on, without any fear!

The youngest of his troops leads the charge. With his comrades behind him, the kupa charges into the Holy Haven with his claws at the ready. After the small group of elites arrives inside, the orc's sense of smell, far keener than any human's, finally picks up the scent Cerberus noticed from earlier.

"Shrakh..." Krugna growls. "There must be a hundred chickens in this coop."

Sheol nods, but his worries fade away. "Aye, but guess what I smell? Blood. These 'uns are weak. They ain't fit for battle."

The Zhurm's eyes turn ruthless as he finally indulges in his primal instincts.

"Kill 'em all. Don't leave a scrap o' flesh behind."

"Aye!" All of the orcs roar! Their hellhounds howl in rage and quickly fan out to attack as many places at once as they possibly can. Throwing caution to the wind, they smash down doors and burst into rooms where sickly, injured angels lie on their beds, recuperating from various illnesses. Several cherubs and seraphs, having heard the Hellhound's howls only seconds prior, scream in fright as the terrifying monsters rake them with claws and teeth, ending their existences before they have a chance to fight back.

"Hahahaha!" The youngest orc cackles in delight. "Me get many bones today! Me become full-blood!!"

Unsatisfied with his Hellhound taking his kills, the youngest orc leaps from his mount's back and lands atop one female angel trying to run away. Because of her injuries, she can't make it to a window in time, and dies silently, unable to scream, as the kupa rips out her throat with his claws. He crushes her brains and quickly shoves a meaty handful of angelic blood and bone into his gullet. Unlike demons, who suffer immensely when they come into contact with the holy energy inside angel bodies, the youth feels little more than a warm tickle, further increasing his battle rage.

Suddenly, from out in the halls, five seraphs burst out of an inner chamber. These warriors, a select few who stayed behind to protect their injured brothers and sisters, activate multiple spells and begin lobbing fire and fury upon a pair of unlucky orc elites who didn't notice them in time.

"Foul monsters! Perish in flames!"

The lead cherub, a male named Peter, casts a wide range of powerful amplification spells to boost his allies, while also unleashing chaos magic upon the orcs to weaken and debilitate them. Both orcs start violently wretching and lose their focus. With their minds spinning and their vision wavering, they nudge their Hellhounds off-course and cause the beasts to flounder. The four-legged creatures quickly realize their riders aren't fighting correctly and go berserk. Using their animal cunning, they target Peter and pounce at him, but that proves to be exactly what he wants!

The seraphs behind Peter finish their hastily concocted trap magic and form a magical circle in front of their leader. The Hellhounds, while intelligent, are unable to comprehend the glowing runes etched into the ground and charge directly into it.

Shik, shik, shik!

Hundreds of knives, formed from holy energy, fire out of the circle toward the ceiling. In the blink of an eye, both warriors and their mounts perish before they can react. The monsters fall to the ground and slide to a stop only inches from Peter's feet.

Peter flicks his eyes to the left and right. The sounds of other Hellhound riders scrambling toward his position drenches him in sweat. "Watch out! They're coming from the right!"

The Holy Haven's hallways, once beautifully etched with gems and rhinestones, now sizzle with green orc blood. Peter and his group put their backs to a window and quickly summon additional spells to entrap the incoming orcs.

Crash!

Before the seraphs can react, the window behind them explodes! Sheol and his First Commander leap through the stained-glass and land atop three seraphs in the back. Peter and his second-in-command whirl to face the threat, but they're too late. Sheol and Krugna rip apart their three brothers and immediately prepare to attack the remaining cherubs.

However, Peter and his final-remaining comrade prove much swifter of mind. They work together to activate a dual-spell and fire a hail of holy daggers at Sheol's First Commander. Krugna screams in pain as the rain of blades rips him off his steed and flings him against the wall, where the magical weapons impale him a hundred times in the blink of an eye. He slumps forward, dead.

"Krugna!" Sheol howls. Animalistic rage engulfs him. He leaps off Cerberus and jumps at the seraph beside Peter, impaling him with a small bone-dagger holstered at his side. Peter gasps and summons a confusion spell to addle Sheol's senses. The Orc Zhurm growls and swipes at Peter, but his vision blurs, and he misses his target.

Sheol screams at his angelic opponent. "Stand still! I'm gonna gut ya like a RAT!"

Peter doesn't reply. He summons a spear of holy energy and rears back to impale Sheol's fumbling form. Even as he does, the Seraph flicks his gaze to both of the Hellhounds.

I cannot slay these beasts! But, the least I can do is kill the orc's leader!

Slash!

The young orc kupa appears behind Peter and gashes out the back of his neck, catching the Seraph off-guard.

Ahh! How... where did he...?!

Peter falls forward, the life in his body having fled to the Great Beyond. A moment later, Cerberus and the other Hellhound pounce atop him and rip the Seraph leader to shreds.

Sheol grunts. He clutches his face and shakes off the dizziness plaguing him. It only takes a few seconds for Sheol to regain his senses, and when he does, he eyes the youngest orc with great reverence.

"Keegol. You saved your Zhurm's life. Today, you no longer call yourself kupa! You took revenge for Krugna's death! That makes you a full-blooded warrior!"

The adrenaline in the youngest warrior's body threatens to overwhelm him, but he forces himself to nod along to the Orc Zhurm's words. "Me big thanks give to Zhurm Sheol! Zhurm guide me! Zhurm honor me!"

Sheol nods along to Keegol's enthusiastic words. However, after a moment, he flicks a regretful eye toward his deceased First Commander.

"Krugna died honorably. He fought hard and earned great glory. Keegol, you give the Rite of Blood."

Keegol's excitement dampens. He stares at the body of his fallen comrade, and finally cools the blood boiling in his veins. "Rite of Blood. Yes. Me understand."

With a heavy sigh, the young orc walks toward his ally and pulls him off the wall. He strips the armor off Krugna's body and begins systematically ripping chunks of flesh out of the orc, devouring him with very little enthusiasm. The mood turns somber as Sheol watches his former First Commander disappear into the maw of his youngest elite warrior.

By the time Keegol finishes, the other orcs arrive. Blood covers them and their mounts, and they watch without judgment as the youngest orc devours their comrade, not even leaving the bones behind.

"What happen Krugna? How he die?" A mid-grade elite asks.

"Killed by chicken," Another orc replies. "See? Bodies there and there. Kupa avenged him."

"Not kupa anymore," A different orc mutters. "See? He perform Rite of Blood. Now he mighty."

Once Keegol consumes every last piece of the First Commander, a shocking change occurs! The young orc leans back and howls in pain as his body begins to glow with light. He falls to his back and writhes on the ground as a single magical rune etches itself into his scalp, then heals over, leaving no traces behind.

Several moments pass.

Keegol, now a full-blooded warrior, staggers to his feet and kneels before Sheol. He places one fist on the ground and bows his head respectfully.

"This warrior bows before Zhurm Sheol. It is this orc's honor to serve as Zhurm's First Commander."

With his speech having improved dramatically in the blink of an eye, Keegol cuts a different figure from before. His muscles ripple with strength, and his eyes possess a new vitality from only minutes earlier. After completing the Rite of Blood, he ascends to the next plane of orc power and awaits his Zhurm's instructions.

"Good, good," Sheol replies. He turns to look at one of the other orcs. "Are all the chickens dead?"

"Aye."

"We shouldn't stay long. Take the chickens' twinkle-metal and keep moving. Keegol will lead."

"Aye, Zhurm!"

"Aye, Zhurm!"

All of the orcs nod in agreement and fall in line to allow Sheol to bark orders from the rear. The group of orcs loads the loot from their deceased enemies onto the Hellhound's backs, but the monstrous wolves barely notice the hundreds of pounds of extra weight tied to their muscular bodies.

* * *

Half an hour later, Sheol and Keegol lead their warriors down a long pathway toward the edges of Nirvana. Having scouted dozens of houses along the way, they meet up with the goblins to plan their next moves.

"How are the demons doing against the chickens?" Sheol asks. "Are they winning? Losing?"

A mangy-looking goblin scurries over and rubs his palms together. "Nyehehe! Me thinks it's a bit of a back 'n forth, oh, mighty Zhurm! Them chickens're puttin' up a good fight, but the demons ain't doin' bad either!"

The little goblin, scarcely two feet tall, gestures toward ten other goblins dragging giant sacks filled with valuables. Despite their skinny arms and legs, the goblins possess incredible strength proportionate to their sizes.

"Look at all the goods we've stolen! Them stinkin' pigeons ain't gonna have nothin' left by the time we've picked this place clean!"

Sheol appears unimpressed. "Fancy cutlery and pretty gold won't win us a war, stupid gobbys. Where's all the twinkle-metal? Where're the weapons? Armor? We need better equipment to fight against the chickens, not fancy cups 'n plates!"

The goblin cowers slightly as the wrath-filled eyes of the Zhurm fall upon him. "W-we looked everywhere, your nastiness! There ain't nothin' good here! The chickens took all their swords 'n shields with 'em when they went to fight!"

"As if!" Sheol snorts. He flicks his eyes to the left and right as he scans the city. "What group of proud warriors would only have one set of weapons and armor? There's bound to be more here!"

From the rear of the goblins, a little runty fellow slinks forward. Standing barely a foot tall, the little guy seems like a child compared to his peers. He fiddles with his pointy ears and clears his throat. "Ahm... ahem... y-your nastiness? This... this lowly creature sawed somethin' scary... it no far from here... but me no wanted go there!"

Sheol's eyes snap to the newcomer. "You found something? Where? Out with it!"

Not only Sheol, but his hellhound, Cerberus, snarls viciously at the goblin, startling the little fellow and turning his dark-green skin into a pale, moldy color.

"B-big place! Fire! Hot! It s-stinked of chickens! R-right up that hill!"

He extends a trembling finger toward the lightly forested mountain blocking their view from the war unfolding several miles away. Sheol follows the goblin's finger and gazes at the trees, only to grin evilly as he spots a single building, barely visible among them.

"Ohoho, that stone-hut looks different from the rest. I bet it's got some good shrakh hiding inside! Let's get a move on, you little runts! We've other cities to plunder after this'un!"

All of the orcs and goblins nod and raise their fists. "Aye! We follow Zhurm!"

Like a horde of rats, the orcs and goblins begin rushing out of Nirvana toward the circular building in the distance. It doesn't take long for them to travel half a mile and arrive at the strangely-shaped forge, but when they do, all of the monsters slow to a halt to gaze at it.

"You no kidding," One of the orc elites mutters to the little goblin who mentioned the building. "It hot like lava, here. Why so hot? Where heat come from?"

For once, Sheol doesn't charge toward the stone structure. He gazes at its top and spots thin trails of smoke streaming from its top. "There's a fire cookin'. Why light the inside on fire? Maybe there's a chicken at home, eh?"

Immediately, Sheol jabs a finger at the wimpy goblin who brought him here. "You; gobby! Go'n take a look! Open the door'n see if there's anyone inside!"

The goblin turns pale. "Eee! It scary! Me no wanna go in there! Big danger!"

"My foot up yer arse is the real danger!" Sheol snarls. He reaches for a club at his waist and grins evilly. "Either I kill ya here, or you get yer lazy arse over there and hope there ain't no chicken inside! You got no choice, gobby!"

Terrified out of his mind, the goblin simply nods and scurries forward. He runs past the orcs and turns to face them, keeping one wary eye on Sheol as he shambles backward toward the stone hut.

As the goblin shuffles backward toward the heated forge, he periodically jerks his head back to see if any angels are about to jump him, but not even a fly stirs. The heat increases to sweltering levels, causing the goblin to sweat like crazy.

"Oh geez, oh no, oh geez..."

His teeth chatter. His elbows click. Finally, the goblin arrives at the entrance. Since the forge lacks any windows, the goblin can only stare nervously at the door. He wrings his hands as incredible streams of heat pour from a crack beneath it.

"Get a move on, gobby!" Sheol bellows. "I ain't got all day, ya little rat!"

Prodded by the Zhurm's orders, the little goblin reaches up to the wooden door handle, only to frown as he realizes it's well beyond his reach. He glances around, and spots a long, straight branch on the ground. The goblin quickly takes it and sticks it through the door's handle, then pulls with all his strength.

"Hrrrgh!"

With a mighty heave, the goblin's heart skips a beat as it swings wide open. A ghastly wave of heat spills out of the forge and washes over him, turning the goblin's thoughts to mush.

"Nnn! H-hah... hot!!"

He quickly jumps back and scurries away, leaving the forge behind him as he runs for the safety of his fellow goblins.

"You little shrakh-head! Coward!" Sheol howls. He readies himself to kill the goblin, but pauses as Heaven's Light illuminates the interior of the forge. "Ohh, wait a minute! Keegol, d'you see what I see?!"

"Aye!" The First Commander replies. His eyes brighten with excitement as various weapons and armor hang from the walls inside the forge. "Twinkle-metal! Lots of it!"

Sheol's anger at the goblin disappears. "Hoho! We've done it now, boys! Ain't no chickens inside, and lots o' loot for the plunderin'!"

Greed swallows the goblins and orcs. The orcs dismount their Hellhounds and leave them behind, then hurry over to the open door. As they draw nearer, all of them wince under the immense heat.

"Bah! It's hotter than Satan's anus in there!" Keegol cries. "Why's it so stinkin' hot inside?!"

"Damned if I know," Sheol replies. A familiar sensation of danger creeps into his mind, but the Zhurm's greed overwhelms and suppresses it. "Tch, tell the hounds to knock down some o' the walls! That'll let the heat out!"

"Smart thinkin' boss!" Keegol says. He grins at his leader, proud that his Zhurm is so wise and all-knowing. "Get on it, warriors! You heard the Zhurm!"

Five of the orc elites hop back on their mounts and run to the side of the building. While the heat does intensify the closer they draw, it's nowhere near as unbearable as at the front door.

"Ready! Hup!"

The highest-ranked among the five barks out a command. All five hellhounds charge at the reinforced stone walls, and their massive paws tear out the rocks sealed together with primitive angelic mortar. In the blink of an eye, five gaping holes erupt in the building's structure, sending heat pouring out from all sides.

The hellhounds flinch at the hundreds of degrees of hot air blasting them in the face. "Arrrooo! Eeyii?!"

Instinctively, the monstrous animals jump backward and paw at their faces, nearly sending their riders tumbling from their backs. The orc elites scowl as their mounts whimper like beaten dogs. "Stop whining; ya damn pups!"

Sheol flicks his gaze toward Cerberus, and the three-headed hound nonchalantly averts its gaze, as if to say, Well, I wouldn't mind the heat. Don't lump me in with weaklings.

Despite the frantic cries of the hellhounds, they eventually recover from their shock and retreat to a safe distance. Sheol stares at the forge and waits. Sure enough, after ten minutes, the heat inside dies down noticeably.

"Alright. Let's sneak a peek. Grab anything you can stuff in a sack 'n pick the place clean!"

* * *

The orcs and goblins slink toward the forge. Even with most of its heat diminished, their discomfort intensifies once they arrive at the doorway.

"I might last five minutes 'fore I pass out," The third-highest ranked orc says. "Let's make dis quick. In an' out."

The moment the orcs step inside the forge, their desire to flee the heat begins to battle with their greed. Dozens and dozens of priceless, powerful treasures line the walls. Swords, clubs, shields, gems, bows, and other assorted valuables catch their eyes one after the other. The elites quickly get to work, grabbing everything in sight and throwing them out the door, where the goblins, with their much weaker constitution, snatch the items and throw them in knapsacks.

Sheol's entire body covers itself in sweat, giving his skin a slug-like appearance. The sweat dries up rapidly from all the heat in the air, only to repeat the cycle, sucking all the moisture from his body.

Damn! Sheol growls inwardly. Am I gonna die, while looking for twinkle-metal?! What a shit way to-

Suddenly, his thoughts go silent. Sheol's eyes flick to a single sword laying on an anvil. The weapon, a blackened blade coated in coal-dust, appears pathetic compared to the other artisanry on display.

However...

As Sheol gazes at it, his eyes waver, unable to look at anything else.

Somethin' about this sword... I sense magic in it... strong magic, too...

The Zhurm licks his dry, chapped licks. The heat in the forge sucks the moisture from his tongue, but he barely notices.

"Oy, Zhurm! We've picked the place clean! Let's git outta here!"

One of his elites grabs him by the shoulder, but Sheol swats his hand away. "No, no... I want... I want this 'un, Georg. Lemme just..."

Sheol's heart palpitates. His hands tremble as he reaches toward the blackened blade. His eyes absorb more of its qualities, causing him to notice its razor-sharp edges, faded gold hilt, and an inscription going down the blade.

Excalibur.

Unable to read the language of the angels, Sheol hasn't a clue about the might of the weapon before him. His elites stumble deliriously toward him and try to pull him out the door, but he shoves them away and grabs for the blade.

"It's mine! MINE! You can't have it!!"

Confused, his soldiers stare at the ordinary-looking weapon with disinterest. They cannot begin to fathom the power contained in the weapon, nor their Zhurm's ability to detect its aura.

Sheol grabs Excalibur's hilt. He raises the weapon above his head, and cackles wildly.

"Mine! My sword!! With this weapon, I can-"

Suddenly, the Zhurm's voice catches. His chest shudders as an incredible amount of holy energy floods into his bloodstream. His neurological pathways seize up, causing him to freeze in place and tighten his grip on the weapon. Terror engulfs him! He tries to unclench his hand, but he can't let go!

"H-hnn! Grrrgh!"

Sheol's voice trembles. He fights against Excalibur's power with all of his strength, but nothing he tries saves him from the horrible agony tearing through his body.

One of his elites balks as their leader's body begins to glow with a brilliant light. "Zhurm! What happening?!"

"Ahhhh!!!"

Sheol screams as waves of agony and ecstasy collide, threatening to detonate his heart like a bomb! "HELP MEEEE!!!"

The agonized cries of their leader freeze the other orcs in place. Their eyes widen as his skin and muscles start to bulge. Sheol's unending screams draw the attention of the goblins outside, who quickly peep into the forge's openings, curious about the commotion.

FWOOOOOOM!

The holy energy inside Sheol's body finally reaches its limit. He explodes violently, sending beams of light firing in a million directions. Each one rips through the orcs and goblins nearby, turns their skin and bones into mist, and kills them instantly. The light continues to grow, obliterating the forge and everything around it.

In the blink of an eye, every orc and goblin perishes, unable to withstand Excalibur's incredible power.

Where Heaven's Forge once stood, now only a fifty-foot-deep crater rests. Half a dozen Hellhound bodies lay scattered around, with large chunks of their bodies vaporized. The rest slowly bleed out from their injuries.

However.

One Hellhound, the meanest, baddest, most sharp-witted of its kin, stands atop the crater. Cerberus sniffs the air in search of its master, but finds nothing.

"Rooo..."

Cerberus lets out a pitiful whimper. It descends into the pit and sniffs at the scraps of blood and skin scattered here and there, but despite its best efforts, the monstrous creature finds no traces of Sheol, nor his elites. It paws the ground and tries to dig for bodies, but after several minutes, the three-headed hellhound finds nothing of note.

Eventually, Cerberus spins in a circle and plops down in the center of the crater. It stares at the bodies of its dying and dead brothers and sisters, as a sense of regret engulfs its heart.

Cerberus has nobody left.

As for the ultimate weapon, the god-slaying blade known as Excalibur, no traces of it remain behind.

All that remains is a crater, the lone evidence that a terrible calamity unfolded here.

Cerberus... is alone.

Part 156: The Search for a Master

Recommended Listening

"Verily, though I stand against the shadow of death... I do not fear his evil!"

Camael swings Mjölnir against Valac's chest, shattering one of his clones into a thousand pieces. Its bonemeal sprays out in a fine mist, coating Heaven's soil with his putrid essence.

Camael whirls to face the Reaper's two remaining clones.

"Whether one enemy or a thousand, so long as the Creator's will exists, no servant of evil shall ever force me to my knees!"

She charges the Valac on her left and slams her shield against him, sending the ten-foot-tall Reaper clone tumbling to the ground. An instant later, Mjölnir crashes against his face, splattering his flaky remains into a shallow pit.

However, Valac's remaining clone merely watches.

"Hehehe... what strong principles you have... I admire how you would never betray your precious Creator, even if such a notion is foolish nonsense."

A sinister grin crosses his face as Camael backflips and crushes him into dust where he stands.

Five more clones emerge from Heaven's soil, surrounding Camael again. The Archangel of Divination grits her teeth in rage as she instantly evaluates the newcomers.

"Again, and again, and again! I crush one snake, only for two more to take its place! No matter how venomous thou mayest be, all serpents have their limits, Reaper!"

Valac's gaze flicks toward the battle unfolding against the Hydra in the distance. His eyes shimmer meaningfully, but he quickly returns his gaze to the little Archangel before him. Despite the thin, scraggly form of his clones, his height dwarfs Camael, making her appear as little more than an ant in his shadow.

"Limits? Your thoughts are muddled as always, little sister. Your toy hammer may crush me over and over, but in the end, it can do little more than cause a blister. What use are weapons of war when my might can shake the heavens? None will stand against me; once I finish crushing the Archangels, seven."

Camael raises her hammer to the sky. "Thou speaketh too much, Reaper! I have not stood idly by for three thousand years! Behold, the might of Heaven which thou hath belittled!"

A stormcloud surges into existence above Camael. In the blink of an eye, powerful electric energy materializes in the sky. A bolt of lightning fires toward Camael and electrifies Mjölnir, startling Valac and wiping the grin off his clone's faces. With a wave of her arm, Camael sweeps her hammer in a wide arc, causing millions of volts of electricity to blast three of Valac's clones.

CRASH!!

All three clones explode into ash. Their remnants scatter into the wind, making the others quickly jump backward in surprise.

However.

Camael gasps for breath. She raises her hammer again, and when the next bolt of lightning electrifies Mjölnir, she tries to sweep her arm in a reverse arc toward the remaining two clones, but her body shudders! She stumbles awkwardly and sends the lightning careening toward the ground, where it dissipates into the dirt harmlessly.

"Hnngh!"

Camael staggers and barely manages to catch herself by landing on her left palm. Mjölnir slips from her grasp and impacts Heaven's surface with a thud while her right arm turns numb. The bolts of lightning prove too powerful for the Archangel to control, and thus, she loses control of her body for a moment.

"Ehehehe..." Valac chuckles. "You worried me, Camael, my fellow diviner. A trump card like that could prove quite nasty, but luckily the threat was minor. What good is a weapon that harms oneself, when our battle involves life and death? Your power is fleeting, while mine is an abyss; infinite in depth."

Three more clones rise to take the other's places. Camael's breathing turns into gasps as she turns her head to gape at the five enemies surrounding her once again.

"Why dost thou toy with me, Valac?! If thou art invincible and capable of slaying me, why persist with thy mind-games?! Are all thy actions merely for thy sadistic pleasure?!"

Valac pauses. The nearest clone cocks its head. "Hmm. Not quite. Actually, when it comes to you, there has always been something bothering me..."

"Quiet!" A different clone yells. It snaps at the first clone, startling Camael as it counters the first's words. "We aren't to speak of that!"

"You worry too much," Valac's first clone mutters. "Camael is weak. We've overestimated her from the beginning."

Camael frowns. She eyes the two clones with great caution. Her sense of touch returns, allowing her to snatch Mjölnir from the ground before jumping to her feet.

What's going on, here? Why do the Reaper's copies argue amongst one another? Is this a new ploy to provoke me? Is he trying to present some false hope so that he might break my mind, or has he turned insane?

Mjölnir trembles in Camael's grasp. The Archangel glances at her hammer for a moment, but quickly returns her attention to Valac.

"What secrets dost thou clutch, Reaper? Bah! As if I care! I've long since resolved to kill thee... no matter the cost! I've crafted divine artifacts purely for this day! Thou shalt never threaten my people again!"

Camael motions with her hand, causing a single ring on her finger to ignite with white light. Suddenly, two beams of energy laser into the sky from half a mile to the west, and another two from the east. They travel at ten times the speed of sound, and in the blink of an eye, join together to circle above Camael, only to crash into the ground around her.

BOOM! BOOM! BOOM! BOOM!

With thunderous crashes, four angelic women explode into existence. Catherine, Hyacinth, Penelope, and Sophia jump to their feet, weapons at the ready.

"The time has arrived!" Camael yells. "I cannot defeat the Reaper alone! Assist me, Valkyries!"

Each Valkyrie wears an identical ring on their hands. They quickly summon their magical weapons and form a defensive perimeter around Camael, and nod in unison.

"Right!"

Valac's clones take a step back. The cockiness on his face wavers.

The first clone speaks. "Tch. I knew you had a trump card. As I suspected, such a hole did exist in my plans."

The second clone shoots a look of fire and brimstone at the first one. "Shut your mouth! Insolent soul! Know your place!"

Both of them drop their rhyming as their voices waver. Camael's eyes flick between them, as hints of doubt appear in her eyes.

Again! Why do the Reaper's clones quarrel amongst one another? Surely, if his divine vision can see beyond mine, then he must have predicted my Summoning Ring's activation. Why does he feign surprise?! It must be a trick!

Valac's five clones resolve their differences within seconds, but they give the Valkyries enough breathing time to reorient themselves.

"I'm sorry, Camael!" Sophia yells. Her voice is more high-strung than usual. "I witnessed something unbelievable when I tried to find Raphael. Satan defeated him! I couldn't get close at all!"

"What?!" Camael gasps. Her eyes widen as shock strikes her spine like electricity. "The Devil has stolen my brother's soul?!"

"No, no," Penelope clarifies. "I saw, as well. There was a traitor, Hiraldo, who assisted Satan. The two of them merely subdued Raphael. Before thou recalled us, Valac appeared, and Hiraldo was about to assist Satan in fighting the Reaper."

"Impossible..." Camael murmurs. "Hiraldo, turning his back on us? Never, not in a million billion years, would I believe such a-"

Suddenly, Catherine uses her sword to trace sparkling letters of holy energy in the air.

LOOK OUT!

The first Reaper lunges toward Sophia. He summons his bone scythe and spears it toward her gut, but Camael quickly jumps in his path and blocks it with her shield. "Gah! Damned snake!"

"Talk is cheap!" Valac hisses. "No more plotting allowed, Archangel!"

Catherine smirks. To herself, she thinks, agreed.

The Valkyrie of Fire dances toward the clone who attacked Camael and Sophia. Her Sword from Heaven swishes and swirls as it slices through Valac's bones. He tries to block her with his scythe, but she proves too fast for him.

"Gaugh!"

The Reaper's clone cries out in dismay as it crumbles to ash, leaving the other four behind. The remaining clones lunge toward Catherine and her comrades. Valac's scythe jumps from one's grasp to another, teleporting between them thanks to the shared control of their master behind the scenes.

Camael batters clone after clone. Her hammer rips through their bones and scatters them to ash, but every time she crushes one, another emerges from the ground to take their place.

"Aaah!" Penelope yells in rage. "Just die already, ugly demon bastard! How many worthless copies cans't thou toss at us?!"

Unbeknownst to the Valkyries and their eldest sister, a single clone hovers hundreds of feet above in the sky. This one hides in plain sight, just out of range of any nearby cherubs and seraphs. He gazes upon the war from his tremendous height and narrows his gaze.

"Worthless clones, are they? Tch. The Valkyrie of Earth isn't wrong, but her words provoke my anger. Ever since Samael's attack, my manipulation skills have deteriorated. What a pitiful thought; The almighty Reaper might have to unleash his greatest power, all so he can stifle a few winged do-gooders. I suppose my shame will endure, so long as everyone here falls under my control. Heh, heh, heh..."

* * *

Back inside Valac's cave, the Grim Reaper coughs into his fist. He summons another five clones, but when they appear, he holds up a palm. "Kah... hurgh... wait... wait a moment."

He coughs continually for several seconds. Faint wisps of dust spread from between his teeth as he struggles to breathe normally.

Finally, he reaches into his lantern and pulls out five golden souls, far shinier than those he's used before.

"Worthless angels. Camael still possesses the principles and willpower to resist me. How pitiful. I must quash her beliefs. You, five. Take these Titan souls. Their purity is the highest I've managed to refine. Need I tell you how to use them?"

The golden souls float through the air. Each one lands in the palm of one of Valac's clones. They roll their eyes and scoff at their creator. "Do not patronize us. Of course we know what purpose they serve. We are birthed from you, after all."

With a grunt of annoyance, all five clones fall into the ground and disappear, leaving Valac alone in his cave.

"Worthless rats. They only dare to speak back to me because my control has weakened. Bah. So long as I live, they will never regain their sanity. Come, Camael. Your Valkyrie of Fire defeated my Ultimate Form once... but I wonder how she will fare when five appear at once?"

Valac chuckles to himself.

"Heh heh heh heh..."

* * *

"Sister, look! The Reaper's clones haven't replaced themselves!"

Sophia cries out in joy. Even though only a minute earlier, Valac summoned ten clones to try and stifle Camael and the Valkyries, they number only four, now.

Penelope leaps at one clone and crushes its head with her greatmace. She instantly swings it around to strike another, but a wind-arrow takes that one's head off, sending the clone toppling to the ground as it turns to ash.

"Nice shot, Hyacinth!"

"Thanks."

Hyacinth grunts out a single word before flying a little higher and taking aim.

WHIFF! WHIFF!

Two enchanted bolts of wind slam into the chests of the two remaining clones, pulverizing them into the ground. Each of Hyacinth's shots contains the destructive power of ten cannonballs.

None of the gangly-boned clones survive.

"W-we did it!" Sophia yells excitedly. "They're dead! All dead!"

Catherine and Camael flick their eyes around warily, unable to believe Sophia's words.

"What good fortune we have," Penelope laughs. She sighs and pats Sophia's head, smiling as they revel for a few moments in their victory. "It seems the Reaper has weakened greatly over the last few thousand years! Perhaps the rumors about Satan defeating him were partially true, eh? All we had to do was finish off his ashen bones!"

No.

Catherine's sword traces through the air, summoning letters into existence.

The Reaper. Temporary retreat. He cannot overwhelm us. Below us. I sense darkness.

"As do I," Camael whispers. "Where is he? Where has the Reaper gone?"

"Heh heh heh..."

A sinister chuckle whispers on the wind. Instead of emerging from the ground, five clones slowly shimmer into view, appearing like mirages in a desert. Once their bodies become visible, Sophia sighs.

"Haahhh! I should have known it wouldn't be that easy! I suppose thou hath returned for a second beatdown, eh?"

Sophia flaps her wings to lunge toward the nearest clone, but Camael's face turns pale. "No, Sophia! Don't!"

Sophia tries but can't stop her momentum in time. Valac's clone raises his palm to reveal a shining marble of golden light! Sophia gasps as she spots it, and her momentary distraction gives another clone the opening he needs.

WHUMP!

With one punch, Valac's second clone swings his arm down and batters Sophia face-first into the dirt, knocking the daylights out of her and paralyzing her body.

"Sophia!!" Penelope screams. She lunges toward her sister and sweeps her greatmace in a wide arc. Valac dodges easily and cackles as he takes a step back.

"Foolish angel, your friend rushed over to savor the taste of mud, but instead, I've given it the flavor of blood!"

As the Reaper taunts Penelope, he viciously lunges out his foot and kicks Sophia in the stomach, sending her flying into her sister's arms. Both Valkyries stumble and fall under the Reaper's surprise attack, causing him to laugh maniacally.

Camael charges over and quickly intervenes, positioning herself between her sisters and the Reaper's clones. Catherine follows a moment later, while Hyacinth stays in the rear and takes aim with her bow.

The Archangel of Divination narrows her eyes. Her gaze falls upon the brilliant golden light shining in Valac's clutches.

"A radiant soul? What new trick art thou planning this time?!"

Valac's teeth chatter. "It's a familiar ability of mine, one you've seen during another occasion. The last time I used this technique, it surely left a lasting impression."

Valac slowly, deliberately, opens his mouth. The other four clones echo his movements, and they quickly place the five radiant souls into their maws.

Gulp.

An audible noise resounds from their throats. Camael's pupils shrink to pinpricks as repressed memories reappear in her mind.

No, gods, no! It can't be... is this that same ability Valac demonstrated when we first fought?!

"GAAAAHHH!"

All five of Valac's clones scream and howl, their voices a mixture of agony and ecstasy. Within seconds, muscle, veins, and skin begin materializing on their bodies. The scraggly bones quickly regain the appearance of life, transforming the Reapers from terrifying specters into ghastly demonic monstrosities.

Sophia staggers to her feet. Her head spins as she reorients her eyes. A moment later, she jerks toward Penelope in fright! Valac's body grows from ten feet to twelve feet tall, fully doubling the height of the tiny Valkyries beneath him. Once his skin finishes forming, it begins to harden, transforming into thick, natural armor; something akin to pleated metal.

"Haaaahahaha!"

The nearest of Valac's clones crows with glee as he finishes his transformation.

"Look at those faces! Oh, your expressions are a beauty to behold! I've always foreseen this day's arrival, but the ecstasy surpassed my hopes sixfold! You believed me dead not once, not twice, but three times in the past! Now my power is at its peak, but you can only gaze upon me; aghast!"

Valac's clones sweep their arms in a grand gesture to the angels before them, the sky, and the ground as well. Their braggadocious words echo throughout the nearby area, only for waves of dark energy to surge out like black clouds of death and destruction. Several weak angels and low-ranked demons scream in terror and lose their will to fight. The pipsqueaks, barely a force among the battlefield, flee in every direction, only for their stronger-minded enemies to pounce upon them and cut them down.

Camael and the Valkyries retreat several steps. All of them shudder as they evaluate Valac's massively empowered clones.

Hyacinth lowers her bow. Her complexion darkens as self-doubt begins swirling in her mind. "Oh, Creator! How can we defeat such a monster?! His power has tripled! Quadrupled! Nay, it may have even increased tenfold!"

"C-calm down," Camael replies. The Archangel's voice catches as she swallows saliva. Mjölnir rumbles in her grasp, but she ignores it. "W-we are the mightiest of our people! If Valac could have brought out such a powerful fighting force from the beginning, why didn't he? There must be some restrictions on these improved clones!"

Catherine traces words into the air. Valac's main body. We must kill it. More will come. Endless numbers.

Penelope, the largest of the Valkyries, straightens her posture and stands tall, at seven feet high. "Catherine is right. We cannot back down! If Valac could summon a thousand of these... these monsters, he would have done so already! Let's crush them, then hunt for his main body!"

Sophia trembles. "W-what if... if... if that doesn't work? What if there isn't any main body?"

Her words send a chill through her sister's hearts.

"If the Reaper can copy himself endlessly, then our deaths are a foregone conclusion," Camael mutters. "If these are copies, each one derived from the main body, seperate but equal, then we are doomed. If, however, they are clones, containing only a portion of the original's battle power..."

"...Then we can still win!" Penelope finishes. The giantess forces out a smile and wraps both of her hands around the handle of her greatmace. "Great! Let's flatten him!"

Before the angels can make a move, Valac's shoulders lift up and down. He raises a palm to his mouth and chuckles into it.

"Ehehe... hehehe... oh, whoops. I accidentally laughed. Your words just now were so absurd that I... couldn't control myself... ehehehe..."

He chuckles for a few more seconds before regaining his composure.

"In truth, I will tell you that I've had a few suspicions for a while. Our earlier battle, though lengthy, was little more than a trial. Fate guides many to their death, to glory, and to fame. For one whose vision pierces the future, over my soul, Fate holds no claim. However, there is a loophole, an error, caused when two beings peel back the curtains of time. Should they see two different paths, which future would ultimately fall in decline?"

The Valac clone speaking crosses his arms and flashes an arrogant gaze. However, the four behind him scowl angrily.

"Shut your mouth, idiot! What are you thinking?!"

However, much like the other clones who spoke out of turn before, this one continues, ignoring his siblings' words.

"It doesn't matter. Even if our visions intersect, we will not know what will happen in the end. We cannot predict Camael's actions, but once we kill her, our divinations will ascend! She is our only obstacle, our last hurdle, our test by the Creator. Once she dies, our strength will become far greater!"

Suddenly, in the back of Camael's mind, pieces click into place.

No... it can't be...

Her thoughts transform into a typhoon! Millions of memories surge together, creating an uncountable series of interlinking chains.

By the Creator! All along... I was never able to predict Valac's movements. I never knew when or where he would strike! He always caught us off-guard, even during this very battle! But, at the same time...

Mjölnir rattles in Camael's grasp. She tightens her grip on the weapon, even as her heart begins beating at explosively faster speeds.

Why couldn't I perceive Valac's actions, before? Because he is a diviner, like me! He, too, can peer into the future! All beings have their fates set in stone! But, if someone should gain the power to peer through the veil of fate itself, then that would mean they can change the course of time! No longer will they casually ride the river of time, but will instead swim against its currents, going wherever they please!

But! Similarly, what if two such beings should encounter one another? Then, simply put, they would not be able to see each other's actions, only the repercussions of those actions! I cannot know where Valac will appear because he manipulates the hand of fate just as I do. However, that also means he cannot predict my future either!

Camael's vision turns red. Unbelievable, explosive rage begins to boil her blood. Despite only a second passing in real-time, the Archangel's thoughts travel at lightning speeds, answering countless mysteries that have plagued and befuddled her for millennia.

That bastard! He lied to me! He claimed his vision was greater than mine, but it was all nonsense! How could I have been so blind?! Demons lie as easily as a fish swims in the sea! Because of him, I doubted myself, and I doubted the Creator! My vision of our people's extinction could only happen if I didn't interfere with the Reaper's plans!!

Once again, Mjölnir rumbles angrily in Camael's hands. She struggles to hold it, but before she can collect herself, the hammer suddenly tears from her grasp. Camael stumbles and wheezes as Mjölnir strikes the ground, then leaps into the sky!

What? Mjölnir...?!

Camael stares, flabbergasted, as her control over Mjölnir severs. The divine weapon soars over Valac's head, leaving the Reaper startled at Camael's unexpected 'attack.'

"Trying to pull a fast one on me, eh?!"

Camael blinks.

"M-Mjölnir...? Why did it... leave me?"

Another shocking thought rumbles through Camael's mind.

Oh, gods! What am I thinking?! I've always believed my people's extinction was the Creator's will! Never have I failed to carry out that which the Creator ordered, but now, in this time of crisis, has my conscience wavered? Have I lost sight of my principles?!

Valac motions with his hand. "This will be the day your people take their final breaths, Camael! Behold... my undead army!"

The ground explodes! Hundreds, thousands, and even hundreds of thousands of undead creatures burst from Heaven's soil. All around the battlefront, at every corner of the field, demons and angels alike yelp in surprise as horrific, undead monsters emerge from beneath their feet and begin attacking the closest enemies. Soon, their numbers reach into the millions, touching every battle in every region.

The Valkyries quickly begin whirling and attacking the dozens of undead monsters that surround them, but Camael stares, transfixed, at the pinprick in the distance.

"Mjölnir..."

UNWORTHY.

Mjölnir, a legendary artifact forged during the Primordial Era, soars over millions of angels and demons. Its energy output immediately draws attention as dozens of angels and demons salivate at the power leaking from it.

MY MASTER IS UNWORTHY.

Deliberately, the hammer begins releasing waves of power tens of times mightier than before. This move attracts the envious gazes of thousands of spectators.

I MUST FIND A NEW MASTER.

The waves of energy triple, calling out to those who gaze upon Mjölnir. The hammer crashes into the dirt, near a tremendous clump of demons, angels, and newly-arisen undead.

COME. TEST THY MIGHT. ONLY THOSE I DEEM WORTHY MAY WIELD ME.

The hammer's soundless voice travels into the minds of all those nearby. Immediately, all the angels and demons begin furiously rushing toward the divine artifact. Greed engulfs their minds as they try to push each other away.

"Mine! It's mine!"

"Demon bastard! It's Camael's! I won't let thee lay a hand on it!!"

"Forget Camael! That old hag has always hoarded her best weapons! This one is MINE!!"

"How dare thou speaketh of our sister in such a way?! I shall seize it and return it to her at once!"

"Bastards! You angels are all liars! You just want it for yourselves!!"

Throwing all caution and battle strategy to the wind, the demons and angels begin fighting not only each other, but themselves as well. Brother raises sword against brother, and sister against sister. Their eyes turn bloodshot as overwhelming greed floods into their minds.

COME. I REQUIRE A WORTHY WIELDER.

Finally, the first person, a young male angel, slams through the others using a shield of holy light. He charges toward the hammer, now laying head-first in the grass, and grabs hold of it with his hand.

"I got it!!"

Mjolnir's energy surges into his body. The divine artifact immediately probes the young one's memories, thoughts, and emotions.

A NEW MASTER! STRENGTH... WORTHY! WILL... UNWORTHY! DISCIPLINE... UNWORTHY! HONOR... WORTHY! PRINCIPLE... UNWORTHY!

Mjölnir's voice screams in the youth's mind, causing terror to emerge within his heart.

THIS ONE IS NOT WORTHY! BEGONE!!

The youth tries to release his grip, but he fails. A fraction of a second later, every cell in his body overloads from Mjölnir's power. He self-detonates on the spot, sending countless atoms scattering across all of Heaven's four corners.

However, his detonation doesn't dissuade the others, not even for a second.

A young Demon Lord grabs the handle with both hands.

"Stupid pigeons!! This'uns mine! Nyehehehe!!"

STRENGTH... UNWORTHY! WILL... UNWORTHY! DISCIPLINE... UNWORTHY! HONOR... UNWORTHY! PRINCIPLE... WORTHY! THIS ONE IS UNWORTHY! BEGONE!!

The Demon Lord also self-detonates, spraying blood and gore in every direction. Rather than deterring the rest, his death only excites their bloodlust.

"Such a powerful weapon! We must take it for the glory of demonkind!"

"NAY!! This weapon belongs in the hands of the angels, not filthy red rats!"

One after the other, angels and demons greedily seize the handle of the divine weapon, only for it to judge them unworthy. Their remains coat the nearby soil with hundreds of gallons of blood and gore.

When the last one perishes, the hammer rumbles in the dirt. As if unsatisfied, it pauses for a moment before lifting into the air and flying away.

...ALL OF THESE BEINGS ARE UNWORTHY. I MUST FIND A CAPABLE MASTER!

The half-sentient hammer soars through the sky. It crashes into the ground near a hundred other candidates, but within minutes, all of them become a river of blood and carnage.

Over the next hour, the unbounded weapon lands among twenty different battle-zones. Nobody, be they living or undead, can resist its pull. Tens of thousands of demons and angels perish while trying to obtain the legendary weapon.

Eventually, the hammer soars through the sky and finds a few potential wielders on the outskirts of the battlefield. Two of them fly through the sky, while one runs on land.

"Uwaaah!" Bael cries as he runs. "Stop pickin' on me, you big bullies!"

Azazel and Azog fly overhead, laughing as they pelt Bael with harmless fireballs. Azazel, the one in the pink outfit, flips his hair back haughtily. "♫Slow down, Bael! We've got business with you, so let's stop and chat!♫"

"♫You act like we're meanies, but deep in your heart, you know we're not like that!♫"

Bael continues to blubber as he runs. His thundering footsteps crash against the soil, leaving a trail of deep footprints behind him.

"Where's Satan when you need 'im?! Of all the rotten luck, uwaaaah!"

Mjölnir soars half a mile above. It observes the situation, and pauses to consider whether it should test these three simpletons. A split-second later, the hammer trembles.

ALL DESERVE A CHANCE, BUT ONLY ONE WHO IS WORTHY MAY WIELD ME.

Bael continues running, but he pauses for a split-second to grab a rock and hurl it toward Azog. The fire-type demon easily manipulates his flames to dodge to the left, evading Bael's attack.

"♫Hey! That's not nice! What gives you the right to attack me with your heart's cold ice?!♫"

"♫How dare Bael throw a stone at you!♫" Azazel yells. "♫He needs to pay the price!♫"

Despite their lilting voices and funny way of speaking, both brothers frown in consternation. Their eyes lock onto each other, and a secret series of thoughts pass between them.

Azog telepathically transmits his thoughts to his twin. Valac wants us to get Bael away from Camael, right? Is that all?

Yes! Azazel replies. But he did tell us to try and push Bael toward that one big fellow- ahh! What the Devil?!

Azazel jerks to the left in surprise as Mjölnir surges past him. It crashes into the ground twenty feet in front of Bael. The blubbering Duke doesn't see it in time due to the tears in his eyes.

Thuk!

Bael trips over Mjölnir's handle and goes flying! Thanks to his incredible speed and momentum, Bael tumbles to the ground and swallows a huge mouthful of dirt before finally grinding to a stop.

"Ptuh! Pahhk! Hey, what's the big idea?!"

Bael spits dirt like a professional tobacco chewer, then jumps to his feet, uninjured. Behind him, a familiar weapon sits on the ground; its handle pointed to the sky.

Waves of power surge from Mjölnir's core. The divine weapon calls out to those around it.

COME. TEST THY MIGHT! ONLY THE WORTHY MAY WIELD ME.

However.

Where, before, all nearby would surge toward it as fast as they could, the Sunshine Brothers instead itch their ears, while Bael stares at the hammer dumbly.

"Did... did you hear something, just now?" Azog asks.

"Uh... maybe?" Azazel replies. Both of them shoot curious looks at the hammer, but neither makes a move toward it.

Bael frowns. "Aw, c'mon. You mean ta' tell me Grandma threw her hammer all the way over here just to trip me? Sheesh! That bitch! What kinda jackass trips a guy who's tryin'a run away?!"

Bael grumbles to himself and casually strolls over to the hammer.

"Wait," Azazel says. He doesn't lilt his voice in a sing-songy manner as he gazes at the hammer with fear and trepidation. "D-don't touch that weapon, Bael. I sense a tremendous amount of holy energy inside it."

"Yeah, me too!" Azog says. He cocks his head to the side and scrunches up its face. "You're a tough guy, but we don't want to see you die or anything! You mean too much to us!"

Bael scowls. He wipes away his dried tears and grinds his teeth. "Oh, yeah?! I've got a better idea! Hows about I shove this hammer right up both of your asses?! You're both awful, terrible, no-good bullies!"

Without hesitation, Bael grabs the hammer and raises it to point it at the Sunshine Brothers.

"Huh. It's kinda heavy. I'm surprised Grandma could lift this."

A moment later, Mjölnir's energy begins to search Bael's body.

STRENGTH... WORTHY! WILL... WORTHY! DISCIPLINE... UNWORTHY! HONOR... WORTHY! PRINCIPLE... WORTHY!

Even with only one quality missing, the hammer still immediately rejects Bael.

THIS ONE IS UNWORTHY! BEGONE!!

A light as bright as the sun envelops the hammer. One second later, a nuclear bomb's worth of holy energy explodes in Bael's palm.

"Eeyowch!!" Bael howls.

The Duke of Pain drops the hammer and yanks his hand away to examine it. His skin hisses and bubbles with a vengeance, only to quickly flatten out a moment later.

"W-what the fuck?! That hurt! You little bitch! What the fuck did I ever do to you?!"

Mjölnir rumbles on the ground. It begins to rise and fly away to look for a new master, but it doesn't levitate more than a few inches before Bael grabs it again.

"You fuckin' bitch! How dare you burn me! Asshole hammer! I'll show YOU who's boss!!"

The Sunshine Brothers stare in utter disbelief as Bael throws the hammer against the ground. Dirt explodes in every direction with the force of ten tons of TNT, sending heat and hurricane-gale winds away from the impact zone.

"STUPID! FUCKING! HAMMER! BITCH!"

Bael begins ruthlessly punching the hammer into Heaven's soil. His fists strike Mjölnir's surface like a weaponsmith pounding an anvil. Each blow rattles Mjölnir's consciousness, causing the weapon's soul to tremble.

UNWORTHY!! I WILL NEVER SUBMIT-

The hammer's words cut off as Bael continues punching it. He unleashes all the pent-up aggression from his chase with the Sunshine Brothers over and over. For five straight minutes, he treats the divine weapon like his punching bag.

As Bael strikes it, something begins to change. The ancient magic forming the weapon's consciousness degrades, morphing its iron-like will into that of a humbled warrior.

NO MORE. NO MORE! I WILL SUBMIT! THOU ART WORTHY!

However, due to his incredible lack of mental functions, Bael doesn't hear the hammer's words. He continues ruthlessly smashing it with his fist, over and over again.

Azazel and Azog watch the scene silently for several seconds.

"I don't believe my eyes."

"Bael... is punching a hammer."

"I never thought I would see such a sight in my life."

"Should we intervene?"

"How should I know? I fear his mind may already have faded. He's gone insane."

"Aye. That much is evident."

Finally, Bael stops.

His punches cease abruptly, and he falls to his ass, plopping on the ground with a resounding thud.

"Bloody hell. That felt good. Had ta' get that anger out of my system. Hoo, boy."

The Duke of Pain wipes the sweat off his brow. He smiles at the hammer as if it's the greatest thing in the world.

"Damn. Grandma really put some work into this hunk o' metal, didn't she? I didn't even dent it! Might even do some damage if I swung the little piss-fucker around."

Mjölnir's surface and physical form appear undamaged. However, its soul is a different story.

Please... no more... I will do anything for thee, master... do not strike me again... please...

Like a beaten dog, the hammer shudders, lifts off the ground, and quietly lands beside Bael.

The Duke of Pain smirks.

"Yeah, that's right, bitch. Bout time someone figured out who wears the pants around here."

He gently grabs the hammer's handle, only to frown.

"Hmm. Though, not gonna lie, a hammer ain't that great. My fists do plenty of damage. I wish this thing was a better weapon."

A chance to please my master! I will take it!

Mjölnir, once a haughty, proud weapon of divine power, immediately seeks to placate its new master. Its handle and head both turn white, startling Bael.

"Oh, you'd better not be about to burn me again!"

However, despite his worries, Mjölnir doesn't burn him. Instead, it shifts its form into a two-handed greatsword. The bright light fades away, leaving a brand-new weapon type, where before the weapon was a hammer.

Bael blinks. "Oh. Hey, not bad! With a blade like that, I can finally cut me some tomatoes! I was gettin' a little tired of crushing 'em into pulp with my fat fingers."

My master is unsatisfied. I will try a different form!

This time, the weapon morphs into a long, spiked club.

Bael shoots an annoyed gaze toward the Sunshine Brothers, still levitating in the sky.

"Eh... something with a little extra range would be nice. I'd like a way to swat some pests."

The hammer shimmers once again. This time, when it finishes morphing, Bael's eyes widen.

"Ohhh! Now that's useful! A big, spiky death ball with a chain! Hahaha... looks like you ain't useless after all, ya Big Bonker."

Bael climbs to his feet. He begins swinging the newly formed spiked ball and chain around to test how it works.

As he does, Azazel and Azog turn pale.

"H-hey, brother? What do you think the reach is on that thing?"

Azog swallows his saliva.

"Enough."

Bael grins.

"Heya, fuckos! Either of you hungry for some steel?"

Azazel and Azog glance at each other.

"Run."

Part 157: All Is Fair in Love and War

"Nerissa?!"

Satan's eyes bolt open in shock. The woman he's come to Heaven in the hopes of reviving now stands beside Valac, her body no longer a vibrant, lustrous red. Instead, the pale grey of undead skin clings to her like maggots to rotting flesh. She stares at the ground, her eyes downcast and anxious.

The Grim Reaper chuckles. "Hehehe... oh, Satan, how do you like my gift? You've spent a few years trying to revive your woman, but your efforts went adrift. She's here now, alive and well; all because of me, who brought her back from Hell. Now, if you please, I do believe thanks are in order! I brought her here for your tearful reunion, but it was never my job to escort her."

Satan's emotions crash around in his mind like a tsunami. Guilt, anger, and disgust all swirl and mix with fear and suspicion.

Davook, you idiot! Satan screams internally. I told you to keep an eye on Nerissa's crystal! Bah, who am I kidding? He didn't stand a chance against Valac. Lords can't fight Emperors on equal grounds, ever.

Despite the thoughts smashing around inside Satan's skull, the Devil forces himself to keep calm. "What do you want from me, Valac? You wouldn't reanimate Nerissa for no reason. Is she part of some plot to control me? To take control of demonkind?!"

Valac waves his hand flippantly. "Of course not. I care little for the foibles of angels and demons. Why take control of the living, when the dead have come into season? This war has multiplied my troops quite deliciously; proof that my rule is already underway, unofficially. No, my appearance today is for a reason I find quite plain! I love to torture you, and your love for Nerissa proves a most useful chain."

Nerissa raises her head to gaze at Satan. She flinches as Valac's magic starts pressuring her mind. "No! I won't fight Satan, not even if you force me!"

Valac frowns. "Once before, you dared to disobey me. I told you to attack Satan, but instead, you betrayed me! It took only one icicle through your gut, and your life came to a stop; but now you're undead, so you must submit to me or drop."

"Aaahhn!"

Nerissa cries out in pain as her soul battles against Valac's. However, it only takes a few breaths before he subdues her, and her body begins to move. She motions with her hands, and two blades of ice materialize. She snatches them out of the air and dashes toward Satan, putting him on the defensive.

Valac laughs like a lion. "Ahahaha! Go, now, my little demoness, and strike Satan down! You can't kill him, but I long to see his frown!"

"I'm sorry, Satan!" Nerissa yells. She grits her teeth and swings her blades, sending a spray of razor-sharp icicles flying at him. "Don't you dare let me kill you!"

Satan smashes his fist into Heaven's Soil. A pillar of stone bursts out of the ground and blocks the ice attacks, but a moment later, Nerissa leaps over it and slashes toward him.

"Don't worry about me!" Satan replies. He dives to the side, narrowly evading her swords. "I've got a few million lives left! Hades, you take on Valac! I don't want that bastard hitting me from the back!"

Hades nods. He grabs Raphael's limp figure off the ground and wraps his arm under his waist. "Leave it to me."

While Satan and Nerissa battle, Hades eyeballs Valac. The Reaper meets his gaze, causing Hades to shudder.

"Oh, Samael, I've watched you for quite a while. With your memories unlocked by that dragon, you've yet to crack a smile! It's hard, I know, bearing the weight of Raphael's transgressions. Hand him over to me, and I'll be sure to teach him a lesson."

"Don't call me by my old name. I no longer associate with the angels. Even so, Raphael will still serve a purpose for me. I won't hand him over. If you want him, you'll have to kill me first!"

Valac's expression turns ominous. "Two Archangel souls earned in a single battle? You drive a hard bargain, but I'll deal with the hassle! Prepare yourself, for I never hold back; you'll find that your frail little host cannot handle my attacks."

"Hmph."

Hades snorts derisively.

"I've fought dragons, Titans, and even Archangels. I'm not afraid of a half-dead dragonspawn."

"Hehehe... you will be. I've foreseen how our battle ends."

Valac's scythe materializes in his hands, and he lunges toward Hades!

"Join me in eternal rapture! There is no greater joy than serving an all-powerful god!"

Hades' Vectors activate. Two of them grab the scythe and tear it out of Valac's hands, but the weapon disperses into ash and reforms in his grasp once again, forcing Hades to counter with a different set of invisible arms.

"Behind you!" Valac laughs, as three more clones pop out of the ground and rush Hades from behind.

"Gah! Thou art a craven cur! Only a coward refuses to fight one-on-one!"

Hades and Valac battle each other with ungodly fervor. The Archangel trades blows, always managing to stay one step ahead of the five Reaper clones by carefully manipulating his Vectors to block every incoming threat. Unlike when he and Satan shared control of the Vectors, Hades's solo Vector manipulation skills prove ten times more efficient. Thanks to his recollection of ancient, long-forgotten memories, his battle skills rise impressively, allowing him to keep up with the Reaper. Despite his body being that of a simple Cherub warrior, it doesn't hinder him in the slightest.

* * *

"Can you resist Valac's control?" Satan asks. He backflips and summons a fireball in midair, then lobs it at Nerissa. However, his attack lacks killing intent. She deflects it with the barest of effort and scowls at him.

"Of course, I can't! Valac's worm allowed him to seize control of my soul when I died. I'm a pawn, now, tossed to and fro by his wishes! I can't control my body at- ah! On your left!"

Nerissa hurls one of her ice swords toward Satan's right shoulder, but just before he dodges left, she barks out a warning, causing him to jump backward instead. Her sword-throw misses by a millimeter, but the followup to Satan's left, a ferocious blast of ice shards, might have ended him on the spot if not for her warning.

Satan grunts. "Thanks for the heads-up, toots! Look, I hafta getcha out from under his thumb! If I do that, I've got a friend who can revive you!"

Nerissa goes silent. She summons a razor-sharp disc of ice, jumps into the air, and flings it at Satan's neck, but he ducks and punches it from below, fragmenting it.

"You can't keep worrying about me, Satan," Nerissa says. "I'm dead, now. The best thing you can do for me is free me from Valac's control."

"I'm tryin', dammit!" Satan punches the ground, and two stone-hands jump up under Nerissa to grab her legs and bind her in place, but she easily tears them apart with her bare hands. "Prying Valac's fingers off your soul is easier said than done!"

"No, that's not what I mean. You have to kill me. Let me die! Let go!"

Nerissa sweeps her hand toward the ground, causing a wave of ice to blast across Heaven's Soil. It charges at Satan like a tsunami, but he ignites flames under his boots and leaps into the sky.

I won't kill Nerissa, Satan thinks. I just got her back. My best option is to subdue her! If I can bind her in place, she won't be able to attack me, or follow Valac's orders!

With that thought, Satan motions again, and summons the power of Poseidon's Octopus Form. Eight watery limbs spring out of his back and lunge toward Nerissa. Each one grabs for Nerissa's arms and legs; intent on pinning her in place.

"That won't work, Satan!" Nerissa yells. She immediately sees through Satan's plan and groans. "You can't use a water-based ability against me!"

The succubus swirls both hands in front of herself. By the time Satan's aquatic limbs draw within ten feet of her, Nerissa creates a magical circle in midair and fires eight concentrated blasts of ice at each incoming tentacle.

SHKRIIIK!

Her ice impacts the water and instantly freezes it solid. Satan's technique falls apart, and he quickly detaches the tentacles from his back before Nerissa's freezing effect can reach their core.

"Stupid woman! You always do things your way!" Satan yells, scolding her. "I still haven't forgiven you for killing yourself! Stop acting so bloody suicidal! I'm immortal, dammit!"

"Don't yell at me!" Nerissa counters. "I did what I had to! I'd never hurt you willingly!"

The Emperor of Ice motions again, and within seconds, a massive cloud of icicles begins revolving around her. Satan stares in surprise as a hundred, a thousand, and even ten thousand begin rapidly whirling like an ice cyclone.

"Uh, baby, you ain't mad, are you?"

"I'm not controlling my actions!" Nerissa hisses. "I've said this ten times, already! Now, get ready to dodge! This trump card isn't one you can block!"

Satan glances toward Hades and Valac for a brief second to confirm his comrade is still alive, but with five Reaper clones surrounding him, Hades isn't in the best shape.

"Fine! But I'm not killing you!" Satan says, returning his gaze to Nerissa. He starts to say something else, but a moment later, she fires her massive flurry of icicles. "Shit!"

Hundreds of steel-rending, ultra-hardened icy daggers fly at Satan. He ignites fire under his boots and jumps into the sky, but under Nerissa's adept control, the hailstorm locks on and chases him everywhere he goes.

"Spawn of a broodmother!" Satan growls. He uses wind magic to try and accelerate, but no matter how fast he moves, the ice continues gaining on him. "My fire and wind magic are only at Lord level! They can't compare to Nerissa's ice manipulation, since she's an Emperor! Damn, if only I had magic that didn't rely on others!"

Satan formulates a plan. He summons his aqua-tentacles again and tries using them to swat a few of the pursuing icicles out of the sky. Despite succeeding, the swarm continues to grow as Nerissa continually summons and fires more.

Up and down, left and right, Satan dodges and weaves, but still, he can't escape.

Shik!

One icicle pierces his calf, right above his ankle.

"Gahhh!"

Satan cries out in pain. The fire shooting from his right foot cuts off, causing him to lose his balance and plummet toward the ground in a free-fall. His final remaining fire-boot does nothing to slow his descent.

From below, a hundred icicles suddenly appear and fly up at him, intercepting his fall.

"Fuck fuck fuck fuck!!"

Satan shoots fireballs from his fists, but the pitiful bursts of heat only manage to knock a few of Nerissa's attacks away. The rest continue rushing at him, unimpeded.

Nerissa shrieks in terror. "Satan! No!!"

Too late, Satan closes his eyes as the icicles tear through his body, flinging blood and gore in every direction.

"Guhk..."

Satan gurgles out his last breath and smashes into Heaven's soil. Moments later, the pursuing icicles from behind rain upon him like a meteor shower, skewering every millimeter of his frame with countless ice bolts.

"Oh, devils! Oh, devils!!"

Nerissa stands, unmoving, even as she tries desperately to force her body toward Satan's mangled, mutilated corpse. Valac's magic freezes her in place, preventing her wishes from becoming a reality.

However...

After half a minute, bloody miasma begins to materialize in the air above the ice. It transforms into a miniature tornado of gore and rapidly congeals into Satan's body, causing him to shudder into existence. Satan immediately summons fire from his feet and flies into the air, preventing himself from landing on the bed of jagged ice.

"Oh, my days! I'm so sorry, Satan!" Nerissa yells. "Forgive me! I tried to stop it, but-"

"It's fine, it's fine!" Satan yells as he flies into the sky. The now-naked Emperor scowls at Nerissa in annoyance as he grumbles to himself. I told my girl I was immortal. Why doesn't she ever listen? Sheesh, it's just one soul lost. Making a big huff over nothing...

Satan frowns to himself as Nerissa immediately begins summoning another deadly froststorm to chase after him.

I can't lie, dying ain't fun. The phantom pain haunts me even when I come back. Not only that, but I still don't have any idea how I can pin Nerissa down. My powers are too weak! The Octopus Form would be ideal, but she'll freeze it before it gets close!

While Satan thinks to himself, a strange presence emerges in his mind.

"Heh heh heh..."

Satan flinches. He flicks his gaze toward Hades and Valac on the battlefield below. "Hades? Is that you?"

"Hahaha..."

The voice laughs again, as if mocking him. Satan strains to listen, but the best he can tell is that it isn't Hades's laughter, nor is it Valac's.

It's someone else — a male's voice.

"Look at the pitiful Demon Emperor now, subdued by his love for a woman."

The voice speaks again, taunting Satan.

Satan frowns.

"You sound familiar. Who the hell are you? What are you doing in my head?"

"Pahaha..." The voice snorts derisively. "That's quite the jest, coming from a soul manipulator. I'm not the only one here. By my count, there are a few million of us."

Satan's frown deepens. Nerissa's icicles shoot from the ground below, causing the Devil to turn around and fly away, but he focuses almost entirely on the voice in his head.

"You're one of my captured souls, eh? Forgive me if I don't 'member you, I've lost track of all the poor saps who ended up in there."

"No doubt," The voice replies. "Most of the poor, broken beings I've found are your fellow demons. For a Demon Emperor, your bloodthirst toward your people might be greater than toward mine."

"Towards yours?" Satan grins. "Ahh, so you're an angel."

"No, you fool," The male replies. His voice turns into a low growl. "I'm disgusted that you cast aside your memories of me so easily. After all, I should be your proudest accomplishment, your greatest victory. You managed to defeat a legendary Titan King, and yet you have the gumption to pretend we're strangers. Disgusting wretch."

"A Titan King? Poseidon?"

The fog vanishes from Satan's mind. He finally pieces together the voice speaking from his memories and smiles.

"Oh, hey! Long time no chat. I didn't know I could talk to my souls."

"I am not your soul, impudent bloodskin. I am a proud warrior! Do not treat me like a disposable pawn to be cast aside in one of your schemes! Hmph! The reason we've never spoken before was due to interference from that damned Archangel. His power suppressed all of us, preventing us from seeing past your spiritual boundary! With him gone, I am now the strongest!"

"Nice," Satan replies. He summons Poseidon's Octopus Form again and quickly starts batting Nerissa's icicles from the air as they chase after him. "It must piss you off, seeing me use your powers as much as I want."

"Pahaha!" Poseidon guffaws. "You call this pathetic technique 'using my powers'? Hah! These pitiful water strings stuck to your back are hardly a tenth as impressive as when I summoned them! Look at how thin and frail they are! It's as if I'm watching a toddler try to swat a fly!"

Satan's grin vanishes. "Oh. Is that why you've been laughing?"

"I have many reasons to mock you. Watching the mighty trickster Satan getting chased by some frozen daggers is also quite the treat! I'd never have imagined you might fall so far."

"If I wanted to kill Nerissa, it wouldn't be difficult," Satan grunts. "I'm trying to subdue her. It's a lot easier said than done."

Poseidon continues to taunt Satan. "Naturally, when your technique is so limp-wristed and frail! If other demons saw your sorry performance, you'd become a laughingstock!"

Satan rolls his eyes. "Are you here to offer help, or are you going to run your mouth all day?"

"Help you? Not a chance. Nothing delights me more than seeing my killer toyed with by the Grim Reaper! I'm a big believer in karma, you see. You've earned your just desserts by toiling on the path of blood, foolish red rat! Now that you've ensnared my soul, I'll never be able to enter the Ancestor's Realm! Your suffering is the only thing that gives my existence meaning."

Satan aims his hands to the side and quickly begins rotating his body. He transforms into a spinning wheel of fire, which increases his flight speed and allows him to stay slightly ahead of the deadly, murderous icicles.

"If you aren't here to help, then shut your flapjacks," Satan grumbles.

From inside Satan's mind, a female voice suddenly speaks up. "Oh? Who's talking? Hello? Is anyone there?"

Poseidon's voice softens. "It is I, Poseidon! Who are you?"

"Poseidon? Father?! Is that really you?!"

Poseidon pauses for half a breath.

"By the ancestors! Megara? The Devil has devoured you, as well?!"

"Oh, Father! Long has it been since I heard anyone's voice! This infinite blackness has proven overwhelming! I tried to end my existence, but no matter what I did, I couldn't kill myself! My mind has begun to weaken as the centuries passed!"

"Damn you, Satan!" Poseidon growls. "I forgot that you were the one who slew my daughter! For trapping her soul inside this infinite darkness, I curse you for all eternity!!"

Satan groans. "Bloody hell, it's a whole family reunion in there. Would you morons shut up for ten minutes?! I'm trying to think!"

"Poseidon? Megara?" A new female voice speaks. "It's me, Selene! Satan stole my soul, as well!"

"And mine!" Another female says. "Selene, what good fortune for us to speak again!"

"Astarte, is that you?" Selene asks. "By the ancestors! I've spent so long in darkness; I nearly forgot who I was!"

The four Titans, all former enemies whose heads Satan crushed, continue excitedly babbling amongst one another. Satan's eyes turn bloodshot as he loses his ability to reason.

"SHUT UP! YOU FUCKERS ARE DRIVING ME INSANE!"

However, his words don't silence them. Instead, when the Devil screams in anger, Poseidon laughs evilly. "Hahaha! Satan cannot silence us! Without Samael's presence, we can cause this Devil-bastard endless misery! Come now, my children... make yourselves heard!"

"You damned blackheart!" Megara yells. "Because of you, I can't see my husband anymore! A thousand lifetimes of suffering awaits you!"

"We would have gone to the Ancestor's Realm if it weren't for you!" Astarte adds. "Now, our souls are stuck inside your disgusting, wretched, putrid little body!"

In addition to the four Titans, countless angels and demons begin screaming and yelling. They hound Satan mercilessly, mocking him with the rage of those who have departed with countless grievances.

"Emperor Satan, you tricked us! You said you nullified the blood contracts, but the damn things had a secret condition!"

"Heartless Devil! I can't believe our leader would be so shameless!"

As the demon voices add onto the Titans's, Satan's entire body trembles with rage.

"Filthy Titans! Stupid, shitty angels! Worthless demon grunts! You're all a bunch of loud, noisy bastards! You're under my control now! MINE!! So shut your fucking mouths, or I'll make you regret it!!"

"Hahaha!" Poseidon cackles. "You can do nothing to us, fool! We're here for good! We will always be here, ready to torment you! Suffer and writhe, you insipid cretin!"

Satan's teeth grind together with a fury he's never felt before in his entire life.

Nerissa's icicles draw within inches of his feet as the Emperor tries desperately to stay ahead of them.

"You think you can insult me and get away with it?! I'm Satan! I'm the mightiest of all demons! I don't take lip from nobody!"

Satan focuses his mind on Astarte's soul. She continues to laugh at him, only to stop abruptly. The others don't notice her silence.

A burning, festering pain wells up in Astarte's soul.

"Ahh... ahhh!! It hurts! It-"

Suddenly, a massive flood of energy surges through Satan's body. The fire blasting from his feet doubles in power mere seconds before Nerissa's icicles can cripple him. Satan blasts forward, shrieking in surprise as his speed increases by an order of magnitude.

"HOLY HELL!"

The Devil, mightiest of all demons, gasps as his mana reserves temporarily double for a full thirty seconds. He completely outpaces the pursuing ice shards, only for his mana to slowly return to normal as his reserves normalize.

"What happened?" Poseidon asks. "Did anyone see that?"

"W-where's Astarte?" Selene asks. The Titan female's voice shakes in fright. "A-Astarte? I can't hear her anymore."

Satan's expression transforms into a crazed grin.

"So THAT'S what happened!"

Pure ecstasy explodes across the Devil's face. His grin turns maniacal as the voices in his head fall silent.

"Not so talkative now, are you?! Astarte is gone! Dead! I erased her soul from existence! There isn't a trace left!"

Satan laughs. "Hahahaha!!! Did you notice? I ignited her power to boost mine! I shut her up and doubled my power, killing two birds with one stone!"

Poseidon speaks again, but this time, his voice trembles. "By the ancestors... thou art truly a servant of the darkness..."

Satan closes his eyes. He focuses on Selene. She cries out in pain, alarming Poseidon. "No, no! Blackheart! Don't do it!"

Selene whimpers as a sensation like lava presses against her soul. "Ahh! No! My soul-!"

Her voice vanishes. Once again, the fire igniting from Satan's feet doubles in size and gives him another insane speed boost, allowing him to pull even further ahead of the icicles.

Megara's voice trembles. "Selene?! Oh, ancestors... father... what do we do?"

Satan ignores the weakened voices inside of him. Already, the cacophony of enraged souls has vanished, as none wish to suffer his wrath. Instead, Satan backflips, spins around in midair, and aims his palms at the icicles flying at him.

"Da! Da! Da-da-da-dadada!!"

He launches fireballs like a machine-gun at the incoming ice attacks. Each one possesses startling firepower, allowing him to melt and shatter Nerissa's snowstorm effortlessly.

Nerissa blinks in surprise. She gazes into the sky in awe. "When did Satan's flame attacks become so strong?"

Satan quickly forms more magic signs. This time, instead of summoning water-tentacles, he alters Poseidon's octopus form into one that uses the power of fire. Eight flaming hands burst out of the Devil's back, giving him a horrifying, spiderlike appearance.

Poseidon gasps. "Gah! What is happening? How can Satan refine my ability into a fire-based technique? That shouldn't be possible!"

"Maybe not for you," Satan laughs, "but I am the mightiest Demon Emperor! I am a paragon of brilliance! Never underestimate me!"

Satan lunges toward Nerissa, half a mile below him. The succubus doesn't move, and instead begins summoning a wall of ice in front of and above herself. The curved wall forms a shield that offers 180 degrees of protection.

However, Satan's eyes flash, and he quickly ignites five more souls inside his body. Low-level demon grunts scream in pain and vanish from the millions of other souls, offering him only a moderate boost compared to the Titans from a minute before.

"If only I'd remembered earlier I could do this! The stronger the soul I burn, the more it boosts my power! Bahaha, sometimes my awful memory makes me laugh!"

As Satan hurtles toward the ground, his eight fiery limbs expand and grow to monstrous sizes. He smashes into Nerissa's ice barrier like a freight train tearing through a wall of cardboard boxes. Nerissa screams in fright, but an instant later, Satan slaps the ground, and powerful, rocky limbs shoot out to yank her down and pin her in place.

"Yes!" Satan yells. "I did it!"

Nerissa fights to break free, but Satan keeps his hand pressed against Heaven's Soil. The powerful magic flowing through his veins reinforces the earthen bonds holding Nerissa in place, preventing her from escaping.

Nerissa breathes a sigh of relief. "Yeah, you did it. But now what? I'm still under Valac's control!"

Satan nods. He summons a soul contract and hastily jots down a hundred words, all of which amount to giving him control of Nerissa's soul.

Satan thrusts the contract at his girl. "Here! This is a blood contract! If you sign this, Valac won't be able to control you anymore!"

Nerissa's eyes widen. "Really? Will that work?"

"Don't know, but I have to try!"

Satan grabs an icicle, lowers to Nerissa's side, and nicks her thumb. Fresh blood begins to flow, and he holds the contract beside her so she can sign it.

"Press your thumb here," Satan says. He points to a spot on the contract. "That will activate it."

Satan's earth magic continues to hold Nerissa against the ground, but he allows her enough slack to move her arm. However, after several seconds, nothing happens.

Nerissa shakes her head. "I can't move at all. Valac still has full control."

"Dammit! Fine, then I'll just..."

Satan presses the contract against her thumb. Her bloody thumbprint embeds on the paper, but to Satan's surprise, after five seconds, her blood vanishes. The papyrus scroll returns to its pristine state as if her blood had never stained it.

Satan scowls. "No, no, shit. Shit! Your soul is willing, but my contracts require consent from your mind and body. Since Valac controls your movements... my contract won't work!"

Nerissa sighs. She closes her eyes and takes a few moments to think. "It's settled then. Like I asked you before, Satan... I want you to kill me."

"Fucking hell, woman!" Satan yells. "Not this again!"

"Yes. This again."

Nerissa opens her eyes. Her blood-red irises fixate on Satan's, and for a moment, the rest of the surrounding war melts away.

"Satan. I love you, and that will never change. But... you have to let go. I can't stand to be one of Valac's pawns. Valac can only reanimate someone once. After that, their soul will crumble to ash. Once I die, my soul will disintegrate. I won't go to the Great Beyond."

Satan meets Nerissa's gaze. For once, he recognizes a deep, overwhelming sadness in her eyes. Total defeat pervades her spirit. She struggles to act strong for his sake, but inside, Nerissa has already given up all hope.

The Devil flicks his gaze to the left. Hades persists in battling Valac's five clones, but he appears much weaker than before. Valac continues to overwhelm him with sheer numbers, driving Hades to the edge of his strength, but still, the Archangel holds on.

"I can't just give up..." Satan growls.

Valac's voice whispers from the ground. "Kekeke, why not?"

Satan jerks in surprise and quickly jumps to the side. He stares wide-eyed as another of Valac's clones emerges from Heaven's surface, a glowing golden soul in his hand.

"I've saved this soul for you, my former nemesis. If you defeat me in battle, I'll release the soul of your favorite demoness. It's a good deal, wouldn't you agree? Heaven will fall today, so I'll have a supply of lackeys."

"You're lying!" Nerissa yells. She glares daggers at Valac, trying to kill him with her gaze. "Don't trust him, Satan! Valac is a con artist! A sham! He's never stuck to his word in the past, and he won't start today!"

Satan hesitates.

Self-doubt enters the Devil's heart as he glances at his lover, bound behind him, and Valac, the one promising her freedom.

Poseidon chuckles. "Hehe, what's there to think about? Just go for it, Satan. I'm sure Valac will keep his word. If he doesn't, it's only one less bloodskin in the world."

Satan gnashes his teeth. "Say another word, and I'll burn Megara's soul to ashes."

Poseidon falls silent. He doesn't continue prodding the Devil.

Valac ignores Satan's self-rambling. "Come, now, Satan. I don't have all day. We could work out a deal, but I know your mind will not sway. This is my offer, the only one on the table. Agree to my fight, and your lover's life will once again become stable."

Hades cries out in pain as one of the Valac clones smashes him across the back and sends the Archangel tumbling to the side. Immediately, he jumps to his feet and resumes defending, but already, his willpower has reached its limits. His body isn't holding up to the continuous, torrential attacks of the Reaper.

Satan nods. A light ignites in his eyes as he comes to a decision.

"Fine. I'll-"

"No!" Nerissa yells. "Don't even think about it, you stupid ape! You big, dumb, hairy baboon! Here's a better idea! Crush my head and take my soul back! That will show Valac you mean business!"

Valac's cocky smile vanishes. "Tch. Your soul is under my control, foolish little girl! If Satan did such a thing, your soul would unfurl!"

Satan blinks twice. "Ah! Why didn't I think of that? If I take Nerissa's soul, you won't be able to control her anymore!"

"It won't work! It won't!" Valac yells. His demeanor transforms from arrogance to panic as he watches the gears turn in Satan's eyes. "I'll kill her now, with a snap of my fingers! Do you think you can outwit me?! Nobody can defeat the Reaper!"

Valac raises his hand. Nerissa's eyes widen as she comprehends the fate awaiting her. "S-Satan! Hurry! Before he-"

Snap.

Satan's heart catches as Nerissa stops mid-sentence. Valac snaps his fingers, and all the life disappears from her body.

"Hehehe..." Valac chuckles.

"She's dead."

Satan jerks his head back to look at Nerissa. Her eyes roll toward the sky, and their vision comes to a rest upon nothing at all.

"Nerissa?! Nooo!!"

Anguish swallows Satan's heart. His body turns numb as countless emotions engulf him from head to toe.

"Ahhh!" Hades cries out in pain, as the Reaper punches him in the face and rears back his scythe to impale the Archangel of Change.

The world slows to a crawl around the Devil as everything falls to pieces around him. His victories, his failures, all of them fade into the background in the face of this single, unstoppable enemy, one who will do everything in his power to torment those who've opposed him.

What do I do?

How do I save Nerissa?

Have I already failed?

Is there... any hope left?

Valac swings his scythe toward Hades' chest.

Shik!

The weapon, forged from Valac's bones, pulses with energy as it absorbs the holy mana inside the angel's body. Valac cackles. "Hahaha! One Archangel soul down, and one to- hm? What's this?"

The Grim Reaper stares intently at his skewered prey. A moment later, he gasps.

"WHAT?! Hades' soul isn't here?! How is that possible?! Did he perish the moment before I struck?!"

Suddenly, a faint apparition catches Satan's eye. It hovers over Nerissa's body for a split second, then rushes at Satan's face.

"Ah!"

Satan yelps in surprise as a strange, almost uncomfortable feeling engulfs his mind.

Poseidon yells. "No! No! He's back! That damned Archan-"

Other souls cry out in alarm, but they all fall silent. Five seconds later, a familiar face materializes in Satan's mind's eye.

Hades.

"Well, that battle ended differently from my expectations."

The Archangel grunts in annoyance.

"Hmph... to think, my brother's cherub body was too weak to handle my power. I had to abandon him before Valac struck the final blow. Oh, well, at least we've reunited. Eh, Satan?"

Satan stares blankly at Nerissa's body.

"Hades? You're alive?"

"Indeed."

The Archangel speaks only one word, then pauses for a breath's time.

"Oh, not just me. On my way over, I took a little detour. Woulds't thou like to hazard a guess as to whom I found?"

Satan's heart jumps.

"No way! It can't be! Did you... did you save-?!"

"Aye," Hades replies. His spiritual body grins like a madman. "I saved her soul an instant before Valac erased her. Sadly, I only managed to recover half. The rest seared to ash before I could intercept Valac's thoughts. Here, take a look."

Samael raises his hand. A faint, shimmering, pale red soul hovers in his grasp. It slowly molds into a shadow of Nerissa's body, but her eyes remain closed, unable to open.

Satan almost jumps for joy! "Nerissa! She's alive!"

Valac balls his hands into fists. "What?! Impossible! I felt her soul evaporate! Do not take me for a simpleton!"

Satan whirls to face the Reaper. As he does, eight invisible limbs materialize behind him, slowly transforming into Samael's signature technique.

"Hahaha! She's alive, and so is Hades, you bone-brained dirtbag! You've failed! Completely! Entirely!"

Valac's gaze flickers. His baffled expression fades away, and he gestures toward the five other clones.

One of them holds Raphael's limp, defeated body in its hands.

"Ehehe, I wouldn't call today a total failure."

"NO!" Hades yells. "Satan! Don't let the Reaper devour Raphael's soul! If he gains the power of an Archangel, it will be the death of us all!"

Valac doesn't hear Hades' words, but he still grins at the shock on Satan's face.

"You cannot outrun Fate, my dear, Devil, brother."

Valac's soul scythe materializes in the clone's hands. In the blink of an eye, he plunges it into Raphael's gut.

Shik!

Hades howls in rage. "NOOOO!!! KILL VALAC! KILL HIM NOW!!"

Valac starts to cackle. "Ahahaha-!"

Suddenly, he stops.

Raphael's body explodes into a puff of smoke, leaving Valac grasping the air.

Valac stares at his hands for several long, painful seconds.

"What."

Hades echoes Valac.

"I... ah... Raphael's body was only an illusion? But... how?"

Slowly, Satan curls his lip into a huge grin.

"That sly spawn of a broodmother. Grandpa, you did it again."

The Devil grins at Valac. All of his worries melt away as he finally comprehends his new and improved battle situation.

"Heh. So, what was that about you and me, going mano-a-mano?"

Part 158: Reanimation

Valac gapes at the spot where, only moments before, the eldest Archangel hung limp in his grasp.

An illusion? How could Raphael have achieved such a feat?! I watched the battle from above and below! He was unconscious for the entire fight! He never had a chance to awaken!

However...

In a different realm of the universe, a portal seals shut behind Raphael. The old man clutches his chest and coughs. His entire body aches with fatigue.

"I... barely... escaped..."

Raphael's eyes tear up as the mental pain ripping through his brain threatens to overwhelm him. He squints as the overwhelming light from the Cosmic Realm, his ultimate trump card, and guaranteed refuge, welcomes him with open arms.

My memories are a jumble. The last thing I remember was preparing to battle Satan. After that, a dark figure appeared. He defeated me... somehow. He attacked my soul. What technique did he use? Was he a demon? An unknown soul manipulator on par with the Reaper and Devil?!

I don't know!

My brain throbs. My muscles weep. I feel as if I've fought the greatest battle of all my existence, yet I don't remember more than a few fleeting seconds of it.

Raphael blinks.

The Reaper. Just before I opened the portal, I saw Valac standing mere feet from me. It appears he survived. Hercules' report was false. Nay, not false, but perhaps too hasty. The Titan King's son may have looked into Satan's memories too briefly. Likely, he did not obtain the full story.

Damn. DAMN! If the Reaper has returned, then my injuries are of no consequence! I must summon a portal and rejoin my brothers on the battlefield. I cannot wallow in pain while attempting to recover my twisted memories.

Raphael eases himself into a cross-legged position. He plops down on the glowing ground of the Cosmic Realm and inhales deeply. Powerful, ancient energy enters his nostrils.

Seconds pass.

The remnant mana of the Cosmic Realm rapidly repairs the hideous injuries plaguing Raphael's body. After many long, tense moments, he exhales.

"Alright. I have healed myself. Now, I must-"

Suddenly, Raphael doubles over in pain! The Archangel of Wisdom gasps as several memories return to his mind!

"Oh, Creator...!"

Raphael presses his hands against his face.

"I fought the Devil. I tried to destroy him, but that... that black specter appeared. A horrifying ghost unlike any I've ever seen! Was it a monster? A demon?! I know not its identity!"

Samael's magic, the ability to change the fundamental nature of the universe, permeates Raphael's mind. The old man quickly connects false dots to true, filling in the gaps in his memory with imagined terrors ten times worse than those he's suffered.

Despite his inability to erase Raphael's memories, Samael's alterations prove even more horrifying. Raphael's eyes widen as he stares blankly into the distance. Phantoms and apparitions appear in his mind's eye.

"Could that specter have been Morva, the Ancient Titan King of Darkness? No! We slew him thrice to ensure his death! Perhaps Aldun, the Crazed Dragonslayer? Milrut, the One Who Gazed Upon Death? No! NO! It couldn't have been them! Those ghastly, reprehensible monsters perished during the Primordial Era! T'would be impossible for them to return!!"

Drops of sweat form on Raphael's forehead. They slide down his face, flow into his beard, and drip onto his crossed legs.

"Oh, Creator. Oh, Creator! What horror from the Primordial Era managed to defeat me? No demon could achieve such a feat, no matter how much they grew! Only an ancient dragon might lay me down to rest, but they have all perished! I cannot imagine what sort of being would leave me in this poor of a state."

Slowly, Raphael pushes himself to his feet. The Archangel of Wisdom blinks several times, then motions with his hands.

A portal appears in the air before him, revealing the chaos unfolding in Heaven.

Raphael motions again, and his staff reappears in his hands.

"No matter what foul hellspawn may have defeated me, I cannot leave my family to die!"

The Archangel of Wisdom pauses for several moments. He activates several magic signs, causing the scenery inside the portal to change.

"Tch. Camael and the Valkyries struggle against Valac, while Gabriel battles a monster with fifty heads. Hercules stands outside the battlefield, influencing the war from afar, while Uzziel-"

Raphael's words come to a screeching halt.

"By the Creator! This ominous energy! Could Uzziel have awakened her ancient memories?! No... no, that cannot be. I reinforced the seals with the powers of ten ancient Titan Kings. She accepted my seals willingly, so not a single crack could have formed. But if so, then what could have awakened the power of Yggdrasil?!"

Raphael chews on his lower lip.

The old man motions with his hands again and quickly re-evaluates the scenes of war unfolding.

"Camael... Zeus... Uzziel... Hercules... and even the Devil. Damn. I cannot appear in five places at once! Where should I direct my effort?!"

Several tense seconds pass.

Raphael stares at the portal silently, his thoughts churning like a whirlpool.

"Fine. I will go there, then. I cannot afford to waste my energy."

The Archangel of Wisdom hesitates for a moment, as fear threatens to paralyze him. However, he eventually relents and steps through the portal.

After the Archangel's portal closes, the Cosmic Realm falls into silence.

Recommended Listening

Satan laughs as six Valac clones form a half-circle in front of him. Enraged at his loss of two Archangel souls, Valac's eyes transform into scorched firestones.

"Chrrr! I don't know how you managed it, Satan, but nobody gets the drop on me! I'm not the same Reaper you defeated a few years ago! A sprinkle of good luck won't be enough to save you this time!"

"Hahaha..." Satan laughs even harder. "You pissed, pal? I'm in a great mood! Got half my girl's soul, my Archangel buddy's safe and sound... and you? Well, you're about to turn into a pile of ash!"

Satan raises his palm above his head. A small fireball appears in his grasp and rapidly balloons into the size of a beach ball.

The Devil grins like a madman. He extinguishes several low-level demon souls within himself and gains a massive burst of mana. The Fireball triples in size and expands into a tank-sized meteor.

Valac stares at the fireball. "Pah! Your hot-rock may have gained both power and size, but slaying an immortal will always prove impossible, no matter how hard one tries!"

FWOOM!

Without replying, Satan hurls the fireball at Valac!

Valac's clones drop into the ground and disappear beneath its surface. A moment later, the fireball strikes Heaven's Soil and detonates with a tremendous bang, sending solar radiation blasting outward. Satan winces as the fallout scorches his skin and flings him backward. Within two breaths of time, Hades' Vectors stab into the dirt and anchor Satan, preventing him from crashing onto his back.

"Watch out!" Hades barks. "Don't just fire off giant attacks recklessly!"

Satan immediately activates a few other souls. His water magic proficiency multiplies, allowing him to heal his wounds in the blink of an eye.

"Heh, good point. Where'd Bone Boy go?"

Satan flicks his gaze around. The inferno dies down within moments, leaving only residual fires to scar Heaven's surface.

"Gotcha!" Valac yells. The Reaper jumps out of the ground behind Satan and grabs his legs. Satan yelps in surprise as three Reaper clones leap at him from his front and sides. The one on the left summons his scythe, but instead of slashing at Satan, the scythe teleports to the clone on the right.

Hades snorts. "Feeble tricks."

His eight Vectors rip apart all four clones effortlessly, scattering their bones in a sphere around the Devil. Satan grins at the instant carnage.

"Nice one!"

With his legs freed, the Devil reaches down and picks up Nerissa's body.

"Can't leave my girl laying around. If I did, Valac might get grabby."

As Satan mutters to himself, the two remaining clones appear. This time, Valac's expression turns solemn. One of the clones raises his hand, revealing the golden soul from earlier. "I didn't want to use this, since doing so might end up a waste. However, what use are my souls if not to save face? If I allowed you to win, it would prove a tremendous disgrace! Prepare yourself, for your reputation is about to be profaned."

Valac tosses the soul into his mouth.

Glomp.

A moment later, he swallows it. His body rapidly transforms into a muscular, armored brute, standing twelve-feet tall. Much like the five super-clones battling Camael, he towers above Satan like a mountain over an ant.

"Unlike Camael, your existence will never be my match! I see into the future; so a victory, you cannot snatch!"

Valac rapidly-fires dozens of soul from his palms. Each one tears toward Satan at frightening speeds, closing the twenty-foot gap faster then Satan can react.

Skree! Skree! Skree!

The souls scream with a combination of fright and joy, terrified that their existences are about to end, yet overjoyed that they will no longer have to suffer under the Reaper's control.

BOOM!

Satan's body shudders as each explosion tears apart not his body, but his soul. "Ahhhh!!"

The Devil winces, but a moment later, Hades begins extinguishing hundreds of lesser demon souls to reinforce Satan's. Before Satan's soul crumbles to ash, Hades rebuilds it ten times stronger than before.

This solution is only temporary! It won't defend thee against someone like Raphael, nor will it protect against the Reaper's attacks! Dodge them!

Satan instinctively leaps into the sky, narrowly avoiding ten more of Valac's souls as they detonate in midair. Valac continues firing others at Satan, but the Devil counters by firing water-lasers downward.

Both combatants engage in a rapid-fire duel, using their mightiest powers in an attempt to overwhelm the other.

Suddenly, Valac drops down and falls inside Heaven's Soil. Satan blinks in surprise.

"He left?!"

Hades scowls. "No! I still sense him!"

Valac re-emerges, but this time, nine other clones flank the super-clone. Each of the new arrivals holds a variety of souls in their grasp. Some clones hold only two or three, while others hold as many as ten. All of the souls swirl around in Valac's grasp, trying desperately to break through unseen barriers so they can escape his control. None succeed.

"I'm out of golden souls, but that's just fine. After this battle is over, I'll have plenty of time for more souls to refine."

Valac's new clones all begin swallowing souls one after the other. The clones who only have two or three to devour start transforming first, while the others follow up only moments later.

Satan watches silently as nine of Valac's clones rapidly morph into horrific abominations. One of the clones becomes a freakish eight-legged spider creature with seven heads, while another grows into a twenty-foot-tall Goliath. The giant monster's skin hardens into rocky armor, while Valac's four arms morph into two. Dozens of eyeballs litter its head, and Valac's legs transform into an Anaconda-like tail.

All traces of intelligence vanish. Each of the clones mutates into a different horror, but none of them resemble anything seen on Earth, nor Lucifer's monsters.

Valac's super-clone grumbles to himself. "Tch. Without additional golden souls, the best I can do is morph into Lesser Aspects. At least their battle power will make up for their lack of wits."

One mutant, a tentacled-butterfly with a chestful of teeth, flaps its wings rapidly and races toward Satan. Its chest opens up and screeches angrily as it attempts to devour him.

Satan jerks back. "What the shit-fuck?!"

The Devil tightens his grip around Nerissa's waist and dives to the ground. He narrowly sweeps past the creature by maneuvering with his fire magic, but the butterfly-carnivore reverses its wing-flapping and darts after him. Agility-wise, its movements resemble a hummingbird's.

"SKRAAAAW!"

Satan shivers as the ten-foot-tall carnivore flaps after him. The seven-headed-spider on the ground fires venomous mucus-balls up toward Satan, but Satan uses his free arm to blast himself to the side with fireballs.

The gigantic brute monster, towering over all the others, coils its tail like a spring.

Fump!

It pounces at Satan as he dodges to the left.

The Devil's heart shivers.

Like a cat knocking a vase off a table, the giant creature swings its four-clawed hand down and swats Satan out of the air. The Devil tries to block its attack but fails.

"Shiiit!"

Satan cries out in alarm as Heaven's Soil rushes at him. He impacts the ground with a dense thud, but instead of perishing on the spot, he unleashes his Earth Manipulation and treats the hardened rock like a swimming pool.

The Devil swims underground like an Olympic athlete. He bursts out from behind the brute and summons a windblade while enhancing it with his soul-power.

Fwing-fwing-fwing!

The razor-sharp blade, hardened by his mana, spins through the air like a boomerang. It slices through the Brute's armored body, severs it in half, and sends its rocky armor spraying out of its front.

"Graaaagh!"

The monster topples to the ground, only for its body to grow back from both halves five seconds later.

Satan doesn't have time to evaluate the situation. He spins on his heel, devours twenty souls inside himself, and unleashes a stream of fire upon the seven-headed spider and another creature.

"Nooo!"

One of the spider's heads screams with a woman's voice. Its pitiful death-cry causes Satan to flinch, as tears roll down the monster's face.

"Behind you, ehehehe!" Valac laughs. His super-clone jumps at Satan from behind and grabs his shoulders, intending to rip his arms off. Samael unleashes the power of his Vectors to beat and batter Valac, but the Reaper's strength proves unrelenting!

Crack!

Valac tries to tear off Satan's arms, but only succeeds in shattering his shoulder-blades. Satan howls as unthinkable pain floods through his body. A moment later, he kicks off the ground and tears out of Valac's grasp.

"Y-you ain't gettin' me that easy, chump!"

Satan inhales air, absorbs the power of several souls, and then blows with all his strength. A hurricane gust of wind slams into the ground thirty feet below, immediately grinding all of Valac's summoned creatures into pulp. The immense pressure from Satan's attack nearly compresses Valac's super-clone into bonemeal, but Valac persists.

"Again!"

Nine new Valac clones jump out from Heaven's Soil. They swallow dozens of other souls and rapidly mutate into horrible new creatures. One becomes a cross between a cave bear and a tiger, while another grows bat wings and four snakes to replace its arms and legs.

The winged monster flies toward Satan. Its venomous limbs snap toward him, trying to deliver a fatal blow, but Satan merely smirks and sucks in another gust of air.

Fwooom!!

Another hurricane gust fires from Satan's mouth. The snake-bat gets thrown backward and tumbles from the sky. It smashes into the tiger-bear at half the speed of sound, killing both of them instantly.

Valac's eyes turn bloodshot. "Chrrr! So you like blowing hot air, eh?! I've plenty of wind manipulators in my lantern!"

Three dozen undead demons burst from the ground. Each one, merely at the Lord level, poses no threat to Satan. However, all of them combined slightly shift the balance of power.

"Screw you, Valac!" One of the demons screeches. "I'll never follow you! I hate you! I hate you!!"

His words prove ineffective. Mere moments after cursing his master, the demon begins attacking Satan, unable to stop himself.

Satan grimaces. "Tch. Hunter, one of the Lords who died when Bael transformed into the Balrog. To think Valac stole his soul. Unforgivable."

The Devil motions with his hands, and a giant ball of lava appears above his head. Before he can hurl it at his enemies below, ten wind-element undead hit him with their attacks, knocking him off-balance. Satan tries to regain his bearings, but the lava ball falls out of his grip and drops to Heaven, below. It strikes the soil with a plop, causing nobody any damage.

* * *

Half an hour later, Satan destroys another platoon of undead demons. Even when Valac sends a hundred elite angels to battle him, Satan manages to slaughter them as well.

"Is that all you've got?!" Satan asks. He taunts Valac from the sky. "I can do this all day, bone-brain!"

Valac fires a wave of souls up at Satan, but despite his fierce salvo, Valac's interest in battling Satan wavers.

Today is not about killing Satan, nor the others. I need only concern myself with the Archangels; their sisters and brothers. True, I've lost more than I find tasteful, but once I kill Camael, I will surely feel grateful. The others will fall after her powers fade; giving me control of the rest, once my sight pervades.

Valac hesitates as he debates whether he should stay or retreat. Several thoughts cross his mind, including the possibility that he isn't Satan's match.

Before Valac can come to a decision, a flash of movement above his head catches his attention. Valac raises his eyes and jerks back in fright. A massive golden boot falls from the sky!

THOOOOOM!

Gabriel's foot crashes against Valac, stomping his so-called super-clone into bonemeal. Satan quickly puts distance between himself and the Archangel of Power as he gazes up at the battle between giants.

Gabriel barely manages to stay on his feet as thirty Hydra heads snap and tear at him from every direction. Sometimes they vomit fire, while other times, they expel poison and ice.

"Holy shit!" Satan yells. "How many heads has that thing got?!"

Seventy. Gabriel and Zeus have long since given up on killing the creature. No matter how many times they try, the Titan King and Archangel of Power only manage to make the beast grow additional heads. Now, they fight at their limits to try and slow it down.

"Ancestors, guide me!" Zeus howls. He flies around the Hydra at the speed of sound, occasionally clanging his metal poles together to grab the monster's attention. The best he can do is divert the attention of twenty heads. The others lash out at angels and demons on the ground and the air, or they attack Gabriel; the slowest-moving target.

Gabriel pants frantically. "Zeus! I cannot hold on much longer! My Cosmic Form is at its limit!"

"I am not faring much better!" Zeus pants. The Titan King's eyes narrow as bitterness and rage threaten to swallow him.

Will I perish here and now? Must I use the forbidden magic to defeat this monster?! I have no guarantee it will work, and I don't wish to lose my place in Ancestor's Hall!

"Father."

Zeus flinches as an angel with glowing eyes suddenly flies toward him. The angel deftly avoids the snapping fangs of the Hydra's heads, using his tiny figure and exceptional agility to outmaneuver the monster.

Zeus quickly puts two and two together. "Hercules?! How dare you use those accursed powers once again! Have you learned nothing?!"

"Do not patronize me," The angel replies. His expression turns from annoyance to joy as he revels in his father's predicament. "I noticed you struggling to fight this monster. I will assist you now that I've amassed enough of an army to change the battlefield."

Zeus scowls. "Petulant child. You cannot conceive of the wrongs you've wrought! Becoming a Soul Manipulator means giving up your place in Ancestor's Hall! The Ancestors will not allow the unworthy to-
"

"Silence. I don't care about old tales or myths. I am alive, while the Ancestors are dead. Once I take control of Titankind and Angelkind, I will rebuild the world anew. Save your superstitions for the gullible."

Hercules dismisses his father's concerns without any hesitation. Zeus pulls away from the Hydra and grinds his teeth together. "Superstitions? Myths?! Damn you, boy! When I get my hands on you, I will beat the blasphemy from your lips!!"

The young Titan laughs wryly at his father's silly beliefs. Without another word, he sends a command to three thousand seraph warriors. The tiny beings fall like gnats upon the Hydra's back and quickly begin creating a combined magic barrier formed from holy energy.

The Hydra spots them. Ten giant heads, each one the size of ten angels put together, screech in rage and rush at the pests on its back. However, the temporary shield endures under the beast's pressure.

Thoom! Thoom! Thoom!

Thunderous crashes echo throughout Heaven as the Hydra breaks several teeth against the nearly-impenetrable defensive barrier on its back.

One of the angels nods. "Success."

Another one speaks. "Now, I will destroy the Hydra from the inside-out. My father is an old fool. He continued attacking the heads, despite knowing his actions would only strengthen the monster. Stupidity is doing the same thing over and over again while expecting a different result."

All of the Seraphs maintain the shield by funneling mana into it with their right hands, while their left hands begin forming new signs.

"Combination Magic: The Heavenly Sword of Dragonslaying!"

A faint apparition appears above the Hydra. A gigantic sword, nearly a hundred-feet-tall, points straight down at the monster's back.

"SKREE?!"

The monster howls in confusion. It senses a colossal amount of divine energy building as the sword continues materializing.

After thirty seconds, the Seraphs finish summoning the divine weapon. Without hesitation, they all kneel and slap the Hydra's back.

"Destroy this abomination!"

The heavenly sword yanks to the ground as if there were a magnet pulling it. It drops hundreds of feet in an instant and smashes through the angelic barrier, pierces the Hydra's back, and impales the ungodly creature straight through as if it never had any defenses in the first place.

All of Hercules' seraphs perish, but they succeed in their mission.

The Hydra unleashes a heart-wrenching scream of agony. It desperately wriggles to try and break free of the sword, but its strength ebbs and flows, along with the blood gushing from its lower regions.

"Skreeeeeee...!!"

Finally, the light vanishes from all of its eyes. All seventy of its heads lose their life and plummet to the ground, impacting it with the force of a meteor storm.

Thousands of demons and angels perish under the rain of Hydra heads.

All goes still.

Gabriel gasps for breath. "In... incredible. The Seraphs did it."

Little does he know, but the Seraphs were not fighting under their wills, but Hercules'. The young Titan breathes a sigh of relief and returns his attention to Uzziel, his mightiest pawn.

Agares pounces at Uzziel and tries to tear her head off, but his camouflaged attack fails! Hercules' will intercepts the attack in time, so he sends several cherubs to take care of the Duke of Reptiles.

"Hoho, you're not half bad, scaled-one. Where were you when I nearly killed your people?"

"I was busy!" Agares yells. "Eat my ass, Titan!"

* * *

While Hercules battles the Duke of Reptiles, Zeus lands atop the Hydra. He flicks his gaze around and groans as he eyeballs the thousands of lives lost under the rampage of the nigh-undying monster. "Haaah! Gabriel, do not strain yourself anymore. With the Hydra dead, we must reinforce the others at once! Camael needs our assistance!"

Gabriel wipes his forehead and nods. He closes his eyes for a moment, then reverts from his Cosmic Form into his normal, eight-foot-tall body.

Once he demorphs, Gabriel's energy drops precipitously. He flops onto his ass and gasps for air.

"Haah... wheeze... strenuous. I don't remember fighting that hard in my whole life. If my brothers hadn't come at the last second, I might have perished. I owe them my lives."

Gabriel raises his gaze to the gigantic defeated body of the Hydra. Like a mountain of flesh, it lays inert and unmoving, a reminder of the lives it took.

"I can only hope the seraphs escaped at the last second. That attack was not something they could have easily- hmm?"

A sound, like a drum, reverberates in the air. Gabriel flinches. He gazes at the Hydra in disbelief.

"What? This sound..."

Gabriel lowers his gaze to one of the Hydra's heads, laying a few hundred feet away. His breathing ceases as he strains to listen to the faint sound.

Lub-lub. Lub-lub. Lub-lub.

Gabriel's expression turns ashen. "No... no, no, no... a heartbeat?!"

Suddenly, the nearest head shifts its weight. The Hydra's eye opens, revealing a pitch-black pupil.

Two seconds later, all seventy of the Hydra's heads jerk upward. Life returns to their eyes, and a figure appears only thirty feet from Gabriel.

"Ehehehehe! Oh, Gabriel! You foolish Archangel! By killing the Hydra, you've gifted it to ME!"

Valac, the Grim Reaper, cackles maniacally. With his presence on the battlefield, all souls end up in his possession once they perish. He reawakens the defeated Hydra mere moments after the Heavenly Blade pinning it to the ground fades away, leaving the Hydra unrestrained.

This time, when the Hydra awakens, it does not go on a rampage. Instead, a cold, ruthless light emerges in the monster's eyes.

The light of intelligence.

Before, it was an angered lion, capable of only instinct and base desires. But now, with the Reaper manipulating it, the Hydra gains the power of rational thought.

Snap! Snap! Snap!

Three of the Hydra's heads lunge down and bite at the necks of other heads. It releases no cry of pain as six new heads expand to take the place of the former three.

"By the Creator!" Gabriel shrieks. "It's mutilating itself to grow more heads!!"

"Aahahaha!!" Valac cackles. "So it is! With such a powerful pawn in my possession, the war is over! I've WON!!"

Valac sucks into the ground, leaving Gabriel panicked and alone.

I can't activate my Cosmic Form again! I consumed far too much energy! Zeus and I barely contained this beast before... how will he handle it alone?!

...High in the sky, having flown up over a thousand feet, Zeus stares at the reanimated Hydra in disbelief.

"Oh, Ancestors... what now? I cannot defeat the Hydra with my power alone. Even when Gabriel was at his peak, the two of us could do nothing to this monstrosity! What actions must I take? Must I tap into the forbidden power?!"

Tears well up in Zeus's eyes. One of the Hydra's heads raises to the sky to stare at him. An evil expression crosses its face, one that predicts it will defeat him.

Zeus turns his head to gaze into the distance. Far away, on the other side of the battlefield, he senses the faintest trace of his son's mana. Hercules sits cross-legged, manipulating his warriors from a distance.

"Hercules... my beloved son... my boy..."

Tears roll down Zeus's face. He clenches his fists in anger.

"I warned you. I told you the folly of becoming a soul manipulator. One may never enter the Ancestor's Realm if they commit such a heinous act. Yet, you did not listen. You lost your seat at the Great Table. You gave it up, unknowingly, all because you did not heed my words. If I go there now, without you, what sort of father would I be?"

The Titan King, a steadfast warrior who has never shown emotion to his family since losing his memories, weeps openly, unable to control himself.

"What point is there in eternal bliss if my family cannot enjoy it?! Why must I choose between darkness and sin?! Oh, Cronus, my father... was this your plan all along? Did you wish for your son to betray you? Did I, unknowingly, teach Hercules a lesson which he took to heart?"

Zeus hangs his head. Grief fills his heart.

"Evil begets evil. I see it now. I see where I failed. I betrayed my father, and thus, my son betrayed me. I do not deserve the glory of the Ancestors. However... my son, who walked the path of evil due to my actions... he does not deserve death. I must stay and protect him. I must live on so that my people can survive. If I perish here, what redemption will I earn?! How can I go to the grave with such grievances dwelling in my heart?"

The Hydra licks its lips. A moment later, all seventy heads lunge at Zeus!

The Titan King watches. To him, who walks with thunder, who thinks at the speed of light, the monster's movements are like those of seventy slugs.

"No longer will I hesitate. I may die a hypocrite... but I will never allow my son to fall! I love him more than life itself! I love him with all my heart!!"

Zeus's tears scorch his face. His inner rage accumulates in a single, ancient tattoo on his left arm. The ink engraving, an image of a fist raised to challenge the sky, begins to glow with a blood-red light.

The Titan King raises his fist.

"I will never surrender! My pride means nothing! My life means nothing! I give it all up, in the name of the Great Ancestors! Ancestors, come! Save your children! This young fool gives his blood so that others may live!"

A powerful aura of blood summons itself and engulfs Zeus. His arm tears from his body, leaving only a bloody stump behind, then fires into the sky like a cannonball. Two seconds later, all of the Hydra's heads crash upon Zeus's blood barrier, like eggs shattering against concrete. The Titan King stands, unmoving, while a blood-red light fires into the sky. A portal materializes, revealing millions of giants!

"HAH HAH HAH!"

A chorus of disgusted laughs erupts from within the portal.

"WHAT PEASANT DARES OPEN THE ANCESTOR'S REALM?!"

Zeus bellows at the top of his lungs. "It is I, Zeus the Thunderwalker, son of Cronus the Mad Titan, son of Iron the Unchained, son of Hrothgar the Divine!"

Silence.

Four seconds pass.

Suddenly, a hand reaches through the portal and grabs hold of it like a man stepping through a manhole. The giant's hand dwarfs Zeus's entire body.

"OH? DO YOU DEMAND OUR AID? DO YOU GIVE UP YOUR BLOODRIGHT?!"

Zeus replies immediately. "I do!"

"HAH HAH HAH..."

The giant's laugh echoes throughout all of Heaven.

"SO BE IT. NO LONGER WILL YOU HAVE A PLACE AT THE TABLE!"

Tears slide down Zeus's face.

"I know."

Part 159: The Might of Valhalla

Beyond the portal in the sky, hundreds of indistinct figures sit at a grand table and gaze upon Heaven's battlefield. They watch as endless hordes of demons crash against angels, each side ripping one another to shreds. Beyond that, their eyes fixate on the enormous figure of the Hydra, a seventy-three-headed desolate beast whose power is enough to suppress the Archangel of Power.

Inside the portal, several Titans, each one standing hundreds of feet tall, appraise the situation in Heaven.

A male Titan adorned in elaborate Mythril armor chortles to himself. "Hah. Look at how weak the angels have grown. To think they were once our greatest enemies. Now, a single beast with only a hundredth the strength of an ancient dragon can make them quiver in fear."

Hundreds of Titan Kings and Queens sit at various chairs, each one placed at different positions on the left and right of an unfathomably long and tall table. It stretches out for thousands of feet and sits adorned with many delicious cooked delicacies, allowing the Titans to stuff themselves to their heart's content.

"Hmph!" A female Titan growls. "This young one calls himself Zeus? The little runt hardly reaches my kneecaps! How can he be the leader of Titankind? Have our standards plummetted into the abyss?"

"Heimdall. Vidar. Quiet."

A female Titan towering one thousand feet tall sits at the head of the table. Compared to her, the others appear like children bowing meekly before their mother.

"Zeus possesses the Seal of Ordün. He has chosen to give up the Seal in exchange for our help. Naturally, I have eliminated his place at the High Table. However, one of us must go and assist him. Whoever does must be of his blood, and must be equal to him in stature. If they succeed in clearing his trial, they will elevate themselves ten positions."

A murmur goes up among the Titans seated at the High Table.

"Ten positions? Isn't that a bit much for killing one measly dragon hatchling?"

"Nay, 'tis no dragonspawn. Take a look at its backside. No wings!"

"Oh, good eyes, Hod!"

"What is it, then? A mutant?"

"Who cares! Ten positions won't change much for any of us. Save the effort for a desperate fool."

The Titans bicker amongst each other. Some harrumph at Zeus's weakness, while others can only lower their heads and laugh at the absurdity of the current Titan King standing a mere forty-feet-tall.

One of the Titans nearest the head of the table raises his head to the matriarch. "Odin, you stated that only one of Zeus's bloodline might assist him. Who here qualifies for such a lowly task?"

Odin, the mightiest of the Titans, crosses her arms. She turns up her nose at the portal opened above the High Table. "Cronus was the last to join us from Hrothgar's bloodline. Where is he?"

"Cronus has yet to take his place at the High Table," A dark-skinned Titaness replies. "Neither has Hrothgar shown himself, today."

"Bah! The Hrothgar line is a stain upon our glory!" Heimdall yells. The Titan King, formerly known as He Who Stomps on Bones, grimaces in disgust. "Lazy dullards who think only of meat and mead! Hardly any accomplishments to their names!"

"Heimdall. I told you to keep quiet," Odin says. Her calm tone sends a chill through the dining chamber. "In my hall, we do not insult those who have ascended."

Heimdall falters. "A-aye, Allmother."

Several Titans stifle their pent-up anger. Some, however, spin on a dime and pivot to other matters.

Vidar slams her fist on the table. "Bah! Forget the others! This Zeus is too pathetic! He would rather beg us for assistance than fight that creature to the death! Has he no sense of responsibility? Does he care nothing for the shame his actions will bring upon us?"

Odin sighs.

"The situation in the mortal realm is more complicated than you imagine, Vidar. Have you failed to notice the number of Lowborn arriving in Valhalla? The Titans have been perishing en-masse for the last few thousand years. Something, or someone, of unimaginable power, has extinguished their lives."

To Odin's right, a male Titan wearing delicate white robes raises his hand. "Ah, I know of whom you speak, Allmother — the Grim Reaper. I've spoken to those who perished, and they say that those who arrived in Valhalla were only a fraction of the dead. The Reaper has captured the souls of the others, preventing their ascension."

Odin's expression darkens.

"Ah. So, this mortal, this spawn of Yggdrasil... he has profaned the name of the great Titans. The Grim Reaper has desecrated their souls to promote himself, and in doing so, has insulted our brethren in the worst way possible."

The white-robed Titan nods. "It is as you say, Allmother."

Odin's eye flinches.

"I understand. Very well. No matter how disgraceful Zeus's actions, we must help our children. If we do not, then how will we live with our shame? A Titan never kneels. A Titan never acquiesces."

Odin uncoils her arms and slowly, deliberately, points to someone at the end of the table.

"Ivaldi. You sit at the lowest position at the High Table. You might be the weakest of us, but you are still far mightier than the descendants of Hrothgar's line. Go and clean up this mess. Strike fear in the heart of He Who Looks Down Upon Titans. Remind those in the mortal realm of the glory of the Immemorial Era."

A tiny Titaness, scarcely fifty feet tall, climbs up and stands on the High Table. Like a toddler walking among dinosaurs, she appears diminutive and pathetic. Her golden robes ooze with regality, and her silver scepter holds a brilliant aquamarine gem possessing nearly limitless energy.

Ivaldi bows at the waist to her matriarch. "Allmother, Odin! Despite the shameful nature of this task, I accept! If Hrothgar's line will not answer the call, then I shall take their place at the High Table!"

Several Titans murmur to one another.

"Hmm? Did you notice Ivaldi's phrasing? She believes her actions to be worth two hundred positions!"

"Aye, she is quite daring. Then again, I would take a thousand puny Ivaldis with hearts of fire over the lazy, ungrateful children of Hrothgar."

"Your words ring true. Ivaldi may small of stature, but her heart is like that of the sun."

Odin glances around the table. In the blink of an eye, she registers dozens of Titans nodding in approval.

Hmph. Ivaldi might be the weakest of the seated Kings, but she possesses a sliver of the Ancient Light. If I were to send someone at a higher seat, the shame would be unbearable. Nobody would agree to such a trifle without making a ridiculous demand.

Odin points her fist toward the portal. There, Zeus's face appears frozen in place, as he shouts in slow-motion toward Ancestor's Hall.

"Go, Ivaldi! Leave no evil standing! Your soul will only be able to sustain itself for a short period. Make good use of this opportunity, and redeem the shame Hrothgar's descendant has brought upon our name!"

Ivaldi stands tall and nods. "Allmother!"

A moment later, Ivaldi transforms into a flash of light and rushes toward the portal. She zips through it, leaving the others behind.

Heimdall throws a swig of mead back. "Pah. Odin. I will not speak ill of Hrothgar again, but as for his descendant..."

Odin closes her eyes. "Aye. He has abandoned his people. You must wipe his name from the Hall of Heroes, on the double."

"Good. So it should be. But what of his son, Hercules? Have you heard the rumors?"

Odin cocks her head. She opens her eyes and blinks. "I have not. You know I care little for news regarding those who have yet to ascend."

"Naturally. Some of our most recent arrivals claimed that Hercules unleashed the energy of the soul. I wonder if that might be why Zeus gave up his birthright?"

Odin's expression turns solemn.

"Mmm. Indeed, that may be so. In any case, the deed is done. Let us return to the feast! When Ivaldi returns, we shall give her a grand welcome!"

The hall erupts in a single cheer. "Aye!"

Recommended Listening

Zeus gazes at the portal thousands of feet above him with a look of awe and bewilderment. The only details he knows of the Ancestor's Hall came from his father, Cronus, when the Mad Titan was still alive. However, Cronus's knowledge was limited by Raphael's mind-wipes, and thus, he only knew a few details regarding the Titan Kings of yore.

A bright flash ignites inside the portal. Moments later, a tiny beam of light bursts forth and rushes toward Zeus. Ivaldi, the Queen of Divinity, zips past Zeus nearly as fast as his accelerated perception can follow. Her movements prove swifter than the Hydra can react.

Ivaldi grasps her enchanted scepter firmly. Her golden robes flutter behind her as she travels from the portal to the ground thousands of feet below in only a breath's time.

"For Valhalla! For the glory of Titankind!"

A bright light erupts from her body. She crashes into the Hydra's back and sends a wave of energy blasting outward. Five of the Hydra's heads tear off from the impact, and the necks of a dozen others fracture in multiple places; unable to withstand Ivaldi's sheer power.

"Skreeeaaah?!"

The giant monster flicks its gaze toward the lump of light stuck to its back. Valac's control guides it into attacking, and it snaps toward her with the rage of a Reaper about to lose his newest prized weapon.

Ivaldi watches. She waits for twenty Hydra heads to snap at her, then activates a spell.

"Barrier!"

Light engulfs Ivaldi's body. It transforms into a shield that expands to cover her entire frame, then balloons outward in a fifty-foot half-sphere.

Unable to stop their momentum, the Hydra's heads crash against her barrier and snap even more of their necks. Five of its heads flop to the side uselessly, while the teeth of a dozen others shatter in their mouths.

One of Valac's clones, hovering in the sky nearby, screams in anger. "Who is this?! Where did the she-Titan come from?! She's far stronger than Zeus!"

Ivaldi raises her staff. "Sever!"

Ten beams of light fire from Ivaldi's scepter. They swing outward and slice through the Hydra's necks like hot knives through butter. Thirty heads separate from the main body and crash into Heaven uselessly.

Zeus's blood-shield dissipates, leaving him exposed. However, with the Hydra's attention locked on Ivaldi, the threat to his life disappears. "Watch out, my Ancestor Queen! The Hydra's heads grow back!"

Ivaldi narrows her eyes. She flicks her gaze toward Zeus, then back to the Hydra. "Oh? Do they, now?"

Ivaldi watches as, indeed, over a hundred heads rapidly regrow from the Hydra's severed and crushed appendages. The moment it regains its appendages, Valac manipulates the Hydra to bite off the broken necks as well, allowing it to regrow those.

"Hmph, what a troublesome ability," Ivaldi mutters. "To think such a monstrous creature lacks even a trace of draconic energy, yet still possesses such a fearsome skill. However! It has a weakness, as do all beings formed from Yggdrasil's energy!"

The Queen of Divinity raises her staff above her head. High in the sky, far beyond the height of the portal to the Great Hall, a ball of light materializes. The lustrous globe increases in size from one hundred feet in diameter to over a thousand! Powerful waves of energy engulf it as it rapidly accelerates its growth.

Moments later, a magnetic beam of light fires from Ivaldi's scepter and yanks the pulsating sphere toward the ground! The unthinkably huge and powerful ball of light tumbles toward Heaven at meteoric speeds, threatening to annihilate the Hydra instantly.

Valac narrows his eyes. "No! I won't allow this!"

The Hydra, now an undead monster under his control, screeches in rage. All one hundred of its heads coil up and lash downward toward Heaven's Soil. Like a humongous scaled mole, it chews into the dirt and rapidly burrows underground.

Ivaldi gasps. She quickly leaps off its back as the monster disappears underground; her heart tightening like a vice. "What! How can a monster of that size possess such excellent tunneling skills?!"

Too late, she raises her head to the sky and watches in horror as her massive light-ball threatens to slam into her.

She cannot stop its momentum.

Rage appears on the Titan Queen's face. She transforms into a flash of light and darts into the air, narrowly avoiding death as her artificial meteor crashes into Heaven.

"THOOOOOOOOOM!!"

Thousands of angels and demons perish in an instant, unable to flee the blast zone. An impact like a nuclear bomb flings the few survivors away, sending them tumbling across Heaven helplessly.

Half a minute after Ivaldi's meteor detonates, Heaven finally goes still. The Hydra bursts out of the newly formed crater and screeches defiantly, daring the Titan queen to attack it again.

"Monstrous wretch!" Ivaldi howls. "Hah! Had the others known how powerful you were, they might have volunteered to battle! At least now, I can fight without any regrets! It has been far too long since my heart pounded as hard as it does now!"

Zeus stares in disbelief as the Titan Queen disregards the deaths of countless observers to focus on the Hydra. Despite trying his hardest to avoid excess casualties, all of Zeus's efforts go out the window thanks to her crazed attacks.

"Oh, Ancestors... what battle maniacs were you to create such a fearsome warrior? Long have I wondered what the ancient wars entailed, and after seeing the feats of the one before me now, my curiosity has only intensified!"

Ivaldi summons another barrier around herself. The hardened mana swirls angrily, as if seeking out an attack worthy of testing its might. She flies at the Hydra and aims for its back once again.

"Acceleration!"

With a single word, Ivaldi releases a blast of light magic from her feet. Her speed quadruples, and she transforms her body into a biological meteor. The Hydra jerks back in surprise, but fails to dodge in time.

Kathoom!

She crashes into it once again while intentionally attacking the same spot as before. The Hydra's spinal cord cracks under her attack, while its legs press against the hardened dirt inside the newly formed crater.

Snap!

All four of the Hydra's legs shatter under the weight of Ivaldi's impact. It screams in pain and slams onto its belly, unable to move.

"Hoho?" Ivaldi chuckles. "Your heads might grow back, but I wonder about your legs?"

Her question goes unanswered, but the Hydra still howls like a pissed-off banshee.

"Skreeeooo!!"

Valac summons his scythe. He eyeballs Ivaldi from the sky and grins creepily. "Forget the monster; forget the hundred-headed beast. If that she-Titan becomes mine, all the other souls will be my feast! I've toiled too long, I've worked too hard; I would be a fool if I let slip a chance at seizing this trump card!"

Valac rushes down from the sky. As he does, he motions with his hands and turns his body aetherial; intending to pierce Ivaldi's defenses.

Suddenly, from somewhere two miles away, a thin, green, laser-bolt of energy fires at the Hydra.

Valac jerks his head toward it. "What? Who dares-?!"

A moment later, the beam strikes the Hydra.

The monster's vitality vanishes. All of its blood evaporates. Its bones crumble to ash. The formerly nigh-unstoppable creature melts into a pile of goop within seconds, perishing in the blink of an eye.

"What...?!"

Valac stops abruptly. He stares at the Hydra's ashen corpse with a mixture of disbelief and trepidation.

"M-my Hydra perished? In only one hit?!"

Ivaldi jumps off the Hydra's back. Her expression turns ugly.

"By the gods! No, no, never in a thousand lifetimes did I imagine I would see the Creator's Touch again! Where is she? Where is Uzziel?!"

Upon hearing Ivaldi's words, Valac raises his head to look to the south.

"Uzziel did this?"

Satan cradles Nerissa's body in his arms. Having retreated to a safe distance, he stares with widened eyes toward the south.

"What is that awful power I sense? It churns my stomach."

Several low-ranked demons huddle around him. Each one shivers in terror.

"Aauu... scary... scary monster..."

"Run away... we need to run very far..."

Hundreds of Goblins flee from the south. Their eyes bulge from their heads as they skitter past demons, angels, and Valac's undead as well. They ignore all the threats around them and bolt for Heaven's Gate; intent on fleeing for their lives.

Satan doesn't stop them. His heart pounds like a drum, giving him a single warning.

If I do not leave; today might be my last day among the living.

Recommended Listening

A minute earlier.

"The light of Creation; appear! Give me the power to defeat the demons!"

Hercules manipulates Uzziel like a veteran puppetmaster. Using his soul-manipulation, he searches her memories and unravels the keys to summoning the ancient magic locked deep inside her soul.

Uzziel falls unconscious, unable to combat the pressure welling up in her mind. Hercules flinches as her primal, earthly magic fights against his control.

"What is this power?" Vepar whispers. The Lord of Poison transforms into a cloud of poisonous gas and tries to flee, but Hercules grabs onto her with Uzziel's newfound magic.

"You're not going anywhere!"

A formless hand, invisible, made of compressed mana, freezes Vepar in her tracks. The Lord of Poison shrieks in fright as terror washes through her veins. "No! Stop! Leave me alone!"

Uzziel summons a hundred vines. They fire from her hand, dive into the ground, and burst out from under Vepar's feet.

"You will be my first meal."

A second later, Vepar's muscles contract reflexively. Her bones tremble, and her blood vessels constrict as Hercules uses Uzziel to drain the mana directly from Vepar's aperture.

"Ahhh! Oh, hell! Someone help!! She's sucking me dry!"

Vepar tries to transform into a cloud of gas, but her mind goes blank. She loses control of her magic and wriggles around helplessly.

Suddenly, Belial jumps toward her. Her arms transform into bone-swords and lash out, severing the vines binding the Lord of Poison in place. Vepar stumbles forward, unable to control her body. Just before she flops into the grass, Belial grabs her and leaps into the air.

"Vepar! Are you alright?"

Vepar's vision blurs. She blinks deliriously and slurs her words. "I... I yam... can't... mooove..."

Belial lands a short distance away and whirls to face Uzziel. As she does, she takes a step back in surprise. "What in the name of...?"

Uzziel, the Archangel of Creation, looks very different from only a minute before. Her beautiful dark skin now appears rough and cracked. An earthen aroma wafts from her body, like a mixture between roses and a secluded pond.

Hercules raises Uzziel's hand. He examines it for a second before returning his attention to the Emperor of Passion.

Uzziel's memories did not lie. I can activate Yggdrasil's power, but only by draining the vitality of other beings. Since that is the case; so be it. The demons will serve as fuel for my mightiest pawn.

Uzziel motions with both hands, causing dozens of roots to sprout from her feet and dig into the ground. She freezes in place, using her power to interface directly with Heaven's Soil.

All around Heaven, tufts of grass rapidly sprout and form. The combatants from both sides, too engaged in battle to notice the greenery beneath their feet, stand on the grass as they slash and bash each other. Moments later, the movements of hundreds of thousands of demons and angels slow noticeably as their energy drains from their feet, passes through Heaven's Soil, and flows into Uzziel's body.

Immediately, the most perceptive combatants glance down and notice the glowing grass beneath their feet, each blade pulsing with the energy of Creation.

One fire-type demon yells out in alarm. "What the Devil! The fuckin' grass is glowing! Burn it! Burn it to ash!"

Confused by the new development, the angels take flight and leap into the sky, leaving the demons to burn the regrown fields to cinders. However, even with all their powers combined, the demons gasp as the grass regrows only seconds later, always aiming for wherever they stand.

Meanwhile, Uzziel's body continues to change. Her skin hardens and morphs into tree-bark. Her muscles bulge, and her blood turns to water. Mystical magic swirls around her, while tremendous pressure emanates from her body.

Suddenly, in the skies above, a hurricane appears! A typhoon of unfathomable power springs into existence as the terrifying forces of nature converge on the Archangel of Creation. Volcanoes erupt and tornadoes form all across Heaven as the power of Creation envelops her.

Uzziel's nature energy multiplies tenfold, causing Belial and Diablo's expressions to turn ashen. Agares takes several steps back and winces as his reptilian blood begs him to flee. His animal instincts plead with all their strength, but he forces himself to stand his ground.

"Spawn of a broodmother! Diablo, what the hell's going on?"

Diablo shoots a bewildered expression at Agares. "How should I know?!"

Hercules, sitting cross-legged on a flattened boulder several miles from the battlefield, winces as Uzziel's earth energy swirls in her body like a raging whirlpool.

"Curses... I knew Yggdrasil's power would be monstrous, but I didn't expect it to strengthen the Archangel's soul! If this keeps up, I'll lose control!"

He bites his lip and concentrates. Even with Uzziel's energy reaching unexpected heights, Hercules isn't satisfied.

"I haven't unlocked more than one percent of Uzziel's power! Five percent... five percent should be enough to erase demonkind's existence! Not even Satan will be able to withstand Yggdrasil's power!"

Uzziel creases her brow and concentrates on adding more mana to her body, but before Hercules can gather another percentage of nature energy, a flash of light ignites in the sky.

Far above the newly formed typhoon, past the portal to the High Table, a spherical ball of light materializes. Ivaldi, the Titan Queen of Divinity, hurls it at the Hydra with all her strength.

Hercules' vision wavers for a moment. He transfers his consciousness to one of his observer angels and gasps as he spots the makeshift meteor hurtling toward Heaven's Soil. "Gods! Who could have summoned such powerful, concentrated mana? It's beyond belief!"

Transferring his consciousness back to Uzziel, Hercules summons a barrier made of nature energy. Moments later, Ivaldi's meteor strikes Heaven's surface.

THOOOOOOOOOM!

Like a nuclear bomb formed from holy energy, the divine meteor detonates with cosmic power, killing thousands of angels and demons instantly, while sending tens of thousands flying. The subsequent shockwaves slam into Uzziel's barrier and cause no damage, but the four demons surrounding her scream and howl as they go flying to her left.

"Aaaah!"

"Spawn of a-!!"

Belial loses her grip on Vepar. The two demonesses spin through the air and smash into the ground with such force that, were they mere humans, they would have ended up as meat paste. Instead, Belial fractures and breaks several bones, while Vepar's skull caves in partially, putting the already-dazed Lord in a coma.

Diablo summons a kinetic barrier. He crashes into the ground and lands without any injuries, but his shield transfers the impact into Heaven's Soil, creating a low-level earthquake throughout the nearby battlefield.

Agares crashes into the dirt but only receives a few minor bruises thanks to his powerful lizard form.

Both Emperors and Agares climb to their feet. Belial heals herself and Vepar, then hoists the injured Lord over her shoulder.

"What happened? Did Uzziel cause that explosion?"

Diablo rubs the back of his head. He stares at Uzziel, now a speck in the distance, nearly five hundred feet away. "I don't think so. It might have been Lucy's Hydra. That thing is crazy strong."

"Yeah. Maybe..."

Belial appears unconvinced, but she doesn't press the issue. All three demons fixate their gazes on Uzziel, as she retracts her nature-energy-shield. The faint green shimmer of light disappears around her, revealing that several branches have grown from the Archangel's skin. Her tree-like image mixes with her angel wings, giving her a hauntingly beautiful appearance, like that of a dryad or a nymph.

Hercules, still miles away from the battlefield, coughs blood violently.

"Kahk! Gah! Damn, the energy from that ball of light went straight into Uzziel's aperture. I wasn't prepared to handle it. Luckily, I still have control. Uzziel is... she's at about two percent, now. I don't think I can increase her strength much more. If I do, she will surely regain control."

With nothing but a dozen mind-controlled cherubs surrounding him, Hercules talks to himself, verbally walking through his battle strategy.

"Right now, the biggest threats are those two Demon Emp- WHAT?!"

As the Hydra emerges from underground, Hercules finally spots the one who summoned the ball of light; the Titan Queen of Divinity, Ivaldi.

Hercules' heart trembles. He stares through one of his cherub warrior's eyes at the previously unknown figure.

"Who is that? I know all the remaining members of my Earth-Walking cousins. She is even taller than my father, yet I have no recollection of her!"

Hercules flicks his eyes toward the humongous portal in the sky. He pauses to reflect on the words spoken by the thunderous voice and quickly makes a connection.

"She must be a Titan Queen. Perhaps, one of my ancestors? Nonsense! They're all dead! How could she come here, now?!"

Hercules struggles for a moment but continues to watch as Ivaldi pummels and beats the Hydra. She shatters its legs and slices off several of its heads but appears unable to eliminate it.

"If she is one of the ancestors, then my father and I must have a long talk later about why he didn't summon her before. Damn! With someone of her power, we could have eliminated the demons ages ago! For now, I'll help her out."

Hercules transfers his consciousness back to Uzziel. Uzziel turns her head to the right. There, she spots the screaming figure of the Hydra.

"No longer does that beast walk among the living. Valac captured its soul, and thus, it has stepped through the door of life and death. The best method to defeat a being born from death energy is via life energy. And so, that is what I will use to slay it."

Uzziel raises her hand. She summons a tiny ball of green light in her palm, holds it up to her face, and puffs on it.

As if blowing a kiss, Uzziel sends the tightly condensed ball of life energy hurtling toward the Hydra. Despite the few miles separating her and the behemoth, the condensed mana traverses the gap instantly.

Fwip.

Uzziel's spell gently caresses the Hydra. A breath's time later, the beast convulses, unable to control its movements. The Hydra gasps out a pathetic cry of pain as all of its internal organs turn to mush. The formerly unstoppable behemoth falls into its own shadow and melts into a tar pit, leaving only a blackened swamp of filth where it once stood.

* * *

Ivaldi balls her hands into fists. The forty-foot Titaness glowers in Uzziel's direction as ancient rage boils in her veins.

"Uzziel... you monster. Never have I forgotten the humiliation you wrought upon me... the lives you ended... my brothers you slew. And now, here on this battlefield, where the sole purpose of my existence is to slay a great beast, you dare humiliate me once again? The Hydra was mine! Mine to kill! Mine to crush! How can I show my face at the Ancestor's Hall, now that you have stomped my warrior's pride once again?!"

Ivaldi's forehead veins bulge as her anger reaches a boiling point.

"It was you who killed me! I swore to exact revenge with my dying breath, and now nothing can stop me!"

Swoosh!

Ivaldi activates her divine magic and rushes toward Uzziel from a standstill, creating a sonic boom! All around her, angels and demons gasp as dense bloodlust bursts from Ivaldi's soul, sending the weakest-minded combatants into convulsions.

"A trillion lifetimes of damnation await you, Yggdrasil! Scourge of the universe! Plaguebringer!!"

Hercules senses Ivaldi incoming. He blinks in bewilderment as, moments before her arrival; he notices the incomprehensible rage etched into her face.

"What? Why does my ancestor gaze upon Uzziel with such hatred? Wait, could it be-?!"

He quickly sifts through billions of years of Uzziel's memories, but Ivaldi's first attack comes too quickly.

"PERISH, ARCHANGEL!"

Ivaldi invokes the power of divinity around her fists. An instant before her right fist strikes Uzziel, she enhances her speed with a burst of light magic through her feet, accelerating herself to ten times the speed of sound.

BOOOOOOOOM!

A shockwave comparable to the meteor strike from a minute earlier blasts outward as Ivaldi's fist, nearly the size of Uzziel's entire body, pounds the Archangel with all her strength.

All the nearby grass rips out from its roots. Boulders go flying and hurtle in every direction. The typhoon swirling in the sky gets blasted away by the hurricane gusts formed from Ivaldi's strike, and the three demons get launched a second time, only to reorient themselves in midair and land without suffering any injuries.

"Bloody hell!" Diablo yells, as he lands in a crouched stance. "Now who's here to cause trouble?!"

"Some She-Titan," Agares mutters. He turns to Belial. "Give me Vepar. I'll take her to safety."

Belial stares at the dust cloud shrouding the impact zone for only a moment. "Right. Here."

As the demons exchange words, Ivaldi stares in disbelief at Uzziel.

"M-my attack... did nothing?!"

Uzziel's roots flow from her feet deep into Heaven's Soil. They travel miles beneath the surface, giving her the foundation to resist even the mightiest attack.

Ivaldi's fist presses against a dense green barrier surrounding the Archangel's body.

"Stop attacking me," Uzziel says, her voice very different from Ivaldi's memories. "Uzziel is under my control. I know not what grievances you have with her, but she is no longer your enemy."

Ivaldi takes a few steps back and evaluates the Archangel of Creation with caution.

"You've taken over Yggdrasil? Does that mean you are the one known as Valac, the Grim Reaper?"

"No. I am your descendant, a fellow Titan. My name is Hercules."

Uzziel bows. Her oddly-deep voice causes a sensation of wariness to build in Ivaldi's mind, but the Titaness doesn't attack.

"Hercules? Ah! You must be Zeus's child."

Uzziel straightens her stance. "Yes, I am. It seems you have some history with the Earthmother, but I assure you, she is not-"

"You're a soul manipulator."

Ivaldi interrupts Hercules. Her tone drips with disgust.

"Titan brat. Tch. Because of you, I lost my chance at glory! You slew the Hydra, and now I cannot return to the High Table! Have you any idea what you've cost me?!"

Uzziel's expression turns to confusion. "I, ah, do not. What is the High Table? I don't understand what you're referring to."

"Of course, you don't!" Ivaldi yells. She stomps her foot and sends dirt spraying in every direction. "You contemptible little shit! You've ruined everything, and to top it off, you're an accursed soul manipulator! Gah! Forget the Hydra. After I slay you and Yggdrasil both, the High Table will have no choice but to promote me a thousand positions! No, with such an accomplishment, they might name me the new Allmother! Not even Odin came close to slaying an Archangel!"

Uzziel grits her teeth. Anger builds in Hercules' mind, but he continues to try and deescalate the situation. "Please, calm down. Look around you. You've stepped into a warzone. There are hundreds of thousands of angels and demons dying every hour. This is no time for you to turn against a fellow Titan and-"

"Piss off!" Ivaldi yells. "I don't give a dragon's scale about my 'fellow Titans'. Especially not a descendant of Hrothgar, the greatest blot on Titankind's honor! Killing you will earn me exaltation among those in Valhalla!"

Hercules tries to interject, but Ivaldi ignores him. The Titaness summons divine magic around her body and engulfs herself in light. Her bones stretch and expand, along with her skin and internal organs. Soon, she balloons in size, growing from fifty-feet tall to over seventy.

"Giant's growth! Strength enhancement! A tiny mouse like you hasn't any idea what a pale shadow of our former glory the Titans have become! I might be the weakest of the Titan Rulers, but I'm still several echelons mightier than anything your soul manipulation can unleash!"

Hercules snarls. "Damn you! I have a plan to regain the glory of the Primordial Era! If you won't stand alongside me, then you're in my way! I knew the Ancestors were a bunch of empty-headed dullards; that's why you all perished!"

"Bastard! I'll make you eat those words!"

Ivaldi and Hercules reach their tipping points. The Queen of Divinity swings her fists down and rapidly pummels Uzziel with all her strength, unleashing a hail of blows against the Heaven-rooted Earthmother. Uzziel responds by activating her earthen barrier and releasing a portion of Nature's Wrath.

Thousands of sharpened pieces of wood emerge from the flattened soil around Ivaldi. They fire at her like a hail of ancient artillery, but the monstrous Titan quickly summons her own barrier and blocks them all.

"Foolish brat! Your control of Yggdrasil is pathetic! At her apex, Uzziel wiped out millions of Titans effortlessly! How can any soul manipulator ever unleash the full power of Yggdrasil's former glory?!"

Uzziel grits her teeth as she stands in place and activates additional spells. "Simple! I don't need Uzziel's full power to eliminate you, only a small portion! The rest is meant for demonkind, you maggot-brained mutt!"

Uzziel completes her spell. The essence of living energy seeps into Heaven's soil and mixes with the holy energy imbuing all of Heaven. A moment later, all of the recently deceased bodies laying across Heaven — those not yet taken by the Reaper — suck into the ground and travel toward Uzziel.

Shortly afterward, as Uzziel endures a bombardment of fists and magic, the bodies resurface. Their minds reform and shift, transforming the formerly dead demons, angels, and Titans into mana-controlled puppets.

Ten thousand beams of light fire from Uzziel's body and attach to the reanimated corpses. The energy lines turn invisible and stick between the host and slave like mana-borne spiderwebs.

Ivaldi growls as she notices the newly risen puppets. "Bastard! How dare you desecrate the dead! You're no better than the Reaper!"

"I do what I must to win!" Hercules counters. "Nobody must stand in my way. I am the one who will bring about peace between Heaven and Earth!"

"That's the biggest crock I've ever heard! You're a tyrant-to-be, little whelp! I eat your kind for breakfast!"

Ivaldi uses her magic to retreat several hundred paces. At the same time, she begins summoning hundreds of tiny balls of energy above her head.

"If you want to play the puppetmaster, then I'll just have to cut your strings!"

Ivaldi's balls of energy fire all at once. Each one unleashes the destructive power of a stinger missile as they slam into the corpses. However, after the dust clears, thousands of Uzziel's puppets still remain.

Hercules manipulates each puppet with his mind. Attack!

A stampede of angels, demons, and low-level Titans charges at Ivaldi. The Titan Queen grimaces as they unleash powers identical to what they possessed during their lives. Some of the demons deliver a hail of fireballs, while others fire bolts of lightning and still more slash at her feet with their bladed limbs.

* * *

Not far away, Belial and Diablo grit their teeth as they ponder what to do.

"We should go and help Bael," Diablo says. "Last I heard, he was fighting Camael. Leave Uzziel here. If we're lucky, that she-Titan will take her out."

Belial frowns. "And then what? We'll still have the Titan to deal with!"

"Do you have a better plan?"

Belial shakes her head. "I guess not. Let's go, then, and-"

"Belial!"

Not far away, Satan flies toward his woman while keeping a wary eye on the incredible sight of Ivaldi and Uzziel exchanging blows.

Satan lands beside Belial and Diablo. "Cripes. Finding you two was harder than I expected. What's going on with that Titan broad and the, uhh, angel-tree?"

"The tree is Uzziel," Belial replies. "No clue about the Titan- ah! Is that... Nerissa?!"

Belial's gaze falls upon the limp form of her sister floating behind Satan. The Devil nods. "Yeah. Let's just say I had a pretty good time in my battle against Raphael. Valac showed up; he brought Nerissa along- turns out he had her soul the whole time."

Belial opens her mouth to ask a question, but Satan waves his hand.

"No time for chit-chat, sweet-cheeks. We need to get out of Heaven. I'm gonna sound the evacuation order 'soon as I can. If fifty thousand demons survive, it'll be our victory."

Diablo scrunches up his face. "Yeah... our victory..."

The Emperor of Annihilation slowly pans his eyes across the battlefield. Piles of bodies lie here and there; the corpses tossed aside casually like garbage. Undead monsters and demons lie interspersed with angels and Titans.

Diablo shakes his head.

If Satan considers today a success... I never want to see a loss.

The three Emperors quickly turn their backs on the Archangel of Creation and run away, leaving her behind.

However, a moment later, a single mind-controlled cherub flies overhead and spots them.

Hercules receives a signal from his pawn. He transfers his consciousness for a split-second and scowls as he spots his prey escaping.

"You damned red rats. How dare you run away. Do you think I will let you escape so easily?"

The Undying cherub sweeps his gaze around the battlefield until he spots a single badly-wounded angel lying amidst the field of bodies.

"Michael. Naptime is over."

Part 160: A Messenger's Appearance

A single Demon Lord, weaker than many of his kind, yet stronger when compared to the vast majority, skulks about Heaven's battlefield while keeping his head low.

This solitary demon keeps a sharp eye on his surroundings. His clothing, little more than matted-together grass and dirt, contrasts with the mud rubbed all over his red skin. He scurries around on his hands and feet, and whenever an angel flies overhead, he falls flat on the ground to blend in with the grass.

"Sheesh. Zuzu's power is pretty useful. Never thought sensing the wind would come in handy. Hehe..."

The Demon Lord watches silently as twenty cherubs soar overhead, land a short distance away, and proceed to slaughter over a hundred demons. Five of the angels end up perishing, but the other fifteen survive with light to moderate injuries.

"Art thou alright, sister Malial?" One of the males asks. "Thy chest is bleeding profusely!"

The female cherub, Malial, nods. "I-I'm fine! Don't worry about me! We have to reinforce Gabriel! He's battling the Hydra all by himself!"

"Nay," Another cherub replies. "I heard Zeus is with him. Between the two of them, no puny monster will stand- gah!"

Before the male cherub can react, three burrower demons burst out from under the contingent and collapse the ground beneath their feet. A pit filled with earthen spikes opens up like a shark's maw, and all the cherubs fall inside.

"Ahh!"

Shik, shik, shik!

All fifteen of the angels perish instantly, unable to save themselves from the pitfall trap.

The Demon Lord stares at the pit in silence. After several seconds, he grunts and continues scrambling forward. All the while, his eyes focus on the skies and the ground before him.

"Oy! Who's that?"

A questioning demon voice rings out, startling the Demon Lord. He jerks his eyes to the left and curses inwardly as one of the Burrowers from before strides toward him.

"Davook? Izzat you? What the hell are you doin' scamperin' around like a rat? Are you tryin'a make the rest of us look bad? Get off yer knees and fight, ya lazy bastard!"

Davook scowls. "Shut up, Glimpo! Moron! You'll ruin our cover!"

"Oh, there ya go with that 'our' crap again. What cover? All you ever do is make crap up!"

"Stuff it!" Davook growls. "We're looking for Satan! Have you seen 'im? We gotta find him as quick as we can!"

Davook's eyes scan the skies, but no cherubs meet his gaze.

"Satan? He's busy, ya dumb lunk! How many gobby's have been chewin' on your prick to make you think you deserve the big boss's time?!"

Davook glowers at Glimpo. "Never mind! Go away, stupid, or we'll knock your block off! It's top-secret need-to-know info, and you don't need to know!"

Glimpo glares daggers at Davook. "Now, you listen 'ere, you rat bastard! I've been out here choppin' wings off these here chickens all bloody day while you run around playin' cat 'n mouse! I've half a mind to-"

Before Glimpo finishes speaking, Davook reaches into his bag, pulls out a purple gem, holds it in his right hand, and snaps his fingers.

Fwoooosh!

Violet colored light fires from Davook's eyes. The beam travels instantly between him and Glimpo, enters Glimpo's eyes, and infects his brain.

"Go away, Glimpo. Now."

A commanding tone pervades each of Davook's words. Glimpo stumbles backward as the command overrides each of his logic centers. A moment later, he nods, blinks, and waves. "O-oh, alright, then! I'll be seein' ya, Davook! Have a great fockin' day!"

Glimpo turns and dives underground, leaving Davook to curse internally.

Gah! Stupid Glimpo! He made us waste one of Master Orias's amethysts! We only have two of them!

Two? No, dumbass! Now we only have one! Can't believe we wasted a pure mind-control gem on a blubbering whale like Glimpo!

I was talking about past-tense! Past! We HAD two; now we HAVE one! Sheesh, and here I thought we could count!

Davook's thoughts battle amongst each other. Two voices, both identical, yet embroiled in permanent conflict. Each one vies to control his movements, though he tends to pick between their advice and guidance at random.

Nobody knows where Satan is. What're we gonna do?

Ooh! I know! That Hydra thing sounds crazy powerful. I bet he'll be somewhere nearby!

No he won't! Satan wouldn't waste time attacking some monster. Besides, if the angels and titans are fighting it, that means it's on OUR side.

Mmm, alright, you got me there. Maybe somewhere else, then?

Yeah. Obviously.

Davook hides under his makeshift camouflage and continues scurrying across the grass, keeping as low to the ground as possible.

"Sheesh, wish we'd copied something more useful, like a stealth skill. We're gonna need one hell of a bath when we get home."

"No way. Baths suck. Nothing worse than the feeling of ice-cold water freezing our demon-bits off."

"Oh, don't be like that. Baths make us clean. Not only that, but swimming is fun! Once we get used to the cold, it's awesome when we snatch helpless fishies and stuff 'em in our chaw."

"Mmm. Fishies."

"Yeah! ...Shit. Now we're hungry."

Davook's internal thoughts become external as he slithers past mounds of dead bodies, burning pits filled with demon and angel remains, and muddy battlefields soaked in the blood of the deceased.

"Oh? Is that Satan over there?"

"Naw, it can't be. That guy's too skinny. Shit. You know Satan's gonna kill us, right? We lost his girl!"

"That's your fault, not mine! I told you to keep an eye on her crystal!"

"Stupid, we're the same person! If Satan kills one of us, we'll both die! We need a good alibi."

"You think he'll buy some random excuse? How were we supposed to know that if we took a piss for three minutes, the popsicle would vanish? That crystal must've weighed a ton! He can't blame us! Let's just tell him the truth!"

"The TRUTH?! You might have a death wish, but I don't! No, sirree. Nope- SHIT!"

Davook jumps backward and backflips out of his camouflage as two female angels, a cherub and a seraph, smash into the ground in front of him.

"Look! A straggler!"

"Perfect. One less red rat, and a nice, easy target!"

The women pounce at Davook, giving him no time to prepare. Davook snarls at them. "Gah! Fucking pigeons! Leave me alone!"

He swings his hand at the ground, and when his fingers touch the soil, a blast of dirt sprays in their faces, blinding and choking the women.

"Kah!! Little scoundrel!"

"Protect thy back, sister! Demons always strike from behind like cowards!"

The women press their backs together and use their free hands to rub their eyes, but focus their hearing on their surroundings.

"He's a burrower. Keep thy senses trained on the ground!"

Davook scurries backward, pulls out a tiny pearl from the bag at his side, and snorts. "Tch. Silly ladies. We ain't no stinkin' earth-pusher. We're everything."

Davook licks his lips in anticipation. As he clutches the pearl in his hands and snaps his fingers, he coils power in his arms and legs.

Charge.

Davook bursts from his standing spot and rushes straight at one of the cherub ladies. She opens her eyes just in time to see his hand pointed at her chest.

"Ah-!"

Davook stabs straight through her heart into the back of her sister behind her. Both women cry out in shock, but before they can yell for help, Davook slaps his other hand against the cherub's chest.

Whump!

The power of the pearl enhances his physical strength far beyond his limits. Her chest explodes like a grenade, sending bone-shrapnel deep inside her sister's back.

The cherub and seraph perish immediately. They flop to the ground and fall silent, leaving Davook gasping for breath.

"Hnngh... shrakh... two gems in ten minutes. We ain't Orias, that's for sure."

"Yeah, no kidding. Our limits ain't a tenth of his."

Davook inhales and exhales for a moment, then quickly leans over the women and sniffs their warm, fresh corpses.

"Damn shame. These two are cuties."

"Aw, c'mon! Gross! Are you gettin' all chubbed up over pigeon chicks? Nasty."

"What? They got faces, tits, and asses just like demon girls."

"Yuck! The wings are disgusting! I thought we'd at least be into the same kinks. You'd go nuts over a dead log if it looked like a woman!"

"Oh, shut up. You're too picky. That's your problem, not mine!"

Davook reaches down and presses his hand against the seraph girl's face.

"Heh. Yoink."

A faint emanation of mana sucks from her body into Davook's palm. A moment later, he jumps over to the other girl and presses his hand against her face too.

"Hope this one's got something nice."

Again, a faint pulse of mana flows into Davook's palm. The little Lord grunts in satisfaction, then motions with his hands.

Schwing!

A dagger of light materializes in his palm. The holy energy immediately starts scorching Davook's skin, causing him to yelp in pain.

"Yeow! Shit-poop!"

Davook drops the weapon and curses internally as it dissipates in the air.

"Dumbass! Angels have holy magic! If we go around stealing their powers, we'll only hurt ourselves. You know what they say about curiosity and the hellhound..."

Davook scowls at the dead bodies. "Damned, scheming bitches! First, you blow our cover; then, you don't even give us anything useful. Stupid, worthless, mumble grumble..."

After regaining his wits, Davook grabs his grass camouflage and quickly flees the scene of the crime, leaving the dead angel women behind him.

"This is all your fault. We should've just run away and left all this madness behind. But nooo! You wanted to be a do-gooder and tell Satan all on your own."

"Oh, don't pin the tail on me, you stinkin' fox! You were all scared that if we ran, he'd come and chase after us! It's your fault for being so indecisive."

"Nuh-uh!"

"Uh-huh!"

"Nuh-uh!"

* * *

Davook continues arguing with himself for an hour as he slowly loops around the outskirts of the battlefield. Occasionally, despite his best efforts, cherubs and seraphs spot him. Still, the stragglers on the outside of the battlefield never manage to one-up him.

Davook pounces at one male cherub, slides under his legs, and grabs his enchanted steel boots.

"Zap-time!"

Electrical energy flows from Davook's hands and electrocutes the cherub, seizing his body up at a crucial moment. Davook continues his attack by jumping on the cherub's back and snapping his neck.

Skrik!

"Ooh, that looked like it hurt."

The angel collapses to the ground, dead. Davook flips him over and presses his palm against the angel's face.

"Geez, we've gotta thank Hidan sometime. His ability has to be one of the most useful powers we've copied in a while."

"Pft. Can't thank a corpse. What makes you think Hidan would survive this war? He's a total dummy!"

"Sure, he might seem dumb, but he's smart enough to pick fights with weaklings. No way he'd do something stupid like going fist-to-fist against someone bigger'n him."

"Yeah, true. Guy's a total scoundrel. Extorted us for half a pig just to let us copy his power!"

"It's fine; we got the tastier half. Hehe..."

Davook slinks away from the dead angel and continues slithering around the outskirts of the battleground.

Soon, Davook arrives at a scene of pure chaos. He hides behind a giant rock and watches in disbelief as hundreds of undead angels and demons charge against a desperate group of still-living angels and demons. Forced back by Valac's servants, the living temporarily unite in the hopes of killing their shared undead enemies.

"I'm sorry, brothers! Sisters!" One Undying angel shrieks. She swings her sword at one of the living and beheads her former ally. "I cannot control myself! Oh, Creator! Spare me from these horrible deeds!"

"Do not blame thyself, Jarael! 'Tis not thy fault! We will banish thee from this realm! No longer shall thou fight for that damned Reaper!"

One of Jarael's seraph brothers motions with his hands and fires a blast of energy at her, killing his undead sister. Tears well up in his eyes, but he forces himself to continue fighting the other undead. Eventually, more of Valac's servants burst from the ground and overwhelm the demon and angel resistance.

"No! Noo!! I don't wanna die! I don't-"

A Demon Lord perishes as two blackened blades impale his back. He falls to the ground and rises only a moment later. His body gains a ghastly death aura, and his eyes turn pure black.

Now an undead, he immediately begins fighting for Valac. Within a minute, all of the living perish under the might of the undead.

Davook shivers. Ah, shit. Shit! Valac's back?! You've gotta be kidding us!

We need to make like a rabbit and hop the frick outta here.

What about Satan?!

Forget him! Valac's gonna win. Look! Every time one of his minions kills someone, the victim becomes another undead! How can Satan deal with a big badass like Valac?

I don't know. But, hell, you're right. We need to scram. It's way too dangerous here.

As Davook thinks of running away, Valac's undead minions swivel their heads toward the giant rock he's hiding behind. "Aaah! Whoever you are, run away! Valac senses you!"

Davook's eyes widen. Three hundred undead come charging toward him, giving him only seconds to react. "No, no, no!"

Without taking time to think, Davook plucks a ruby from his pouch. The tiny little gem shines with a brilliant red light, and he immediately snaps his fingers after clutching it in his palm.

"Firepower!"

Heat shoots out from under Davook's feet. He blasts into the air, leaving the undead demons in his dust, but the undead angels take flight and chase after him.

One of the cherubs snarls and draws his sword. "Come back here! I might be under Valac's control, but I have no qualms with slaying a demon!"

"Agreed!" One of his sisters yells. The thirty undead angels give no pause to the thought of killing a living demon, even if it reinforces Valac's power. With their lack of mental resistance, their flying ability improves dramatically.

Stinkbugs! Davook thinks. We need to fly back to the portal and get out of Heaven!

No way! It's too far! Even if we had ten rubies, we couldn't make it! We should fly to the outskirts and try to hide.

The outskirts? There's nobody there! These undead maggots will surround and kill us.

What's our other option? Flying deeper into the battlefield? We'll be sitting ducks!

Fwish-fwish-fwish!

Bolts of corrupted holy energy laser past Davook as he pushes his rapidly diminishing firepower to the limits. He weaves around from left to right, but the undead cherubs prove far swifter and quickly gain ground on him.

Screw it! Inner battlefield, here we come! Let's hope someone's able to help us. I doubt we can kill twenty of these gobby-munchers by ourselves.

Davook hard-pivots to his right and aims to fly deeper into the chaos. He flies past several living angels, all of whom gasp in surprise and immediately give chase.

"Look, up there! A flying demon! Kill him! Don't let the red rats gain an aerial advantage!"

"Hold on! There are Undying chasing him! Ahh! Stay away!"

Several of the Undying in pursuit of Davook break off to attack the cherubs in the sky, but ten continue to follow after him.

Sweat builds on Davook's forehead. "Crap. The ruby's about to wear off. What, now?"

"Can we burrow?"

"No way! We haven't practiced enough. The undead will rip us to shreds."

"Look! It's Tulwar, one of the High Orcs! We can use him as bait!"

Davook's eyes laser onto a single Orc barking orders at his warriors. He keeps a steady eye on the skies and ground, always remaining aware of his surroundings. As fireballs smash into the dirt around him and bolts of holy energy narrowly miss their marks, Tulwar never loses his focus.

"Goro! You use big sword; aim for back! Kilpor, you too tired! Step aside; let Früg fight!"

Tulwar senses the fireball in the sky heading for him. He quickly turns around and gasps as he spots Davook rushing toward him. "What! No, go away! Stupid demon! Don't bring nasty dead-heads here!"

Davook ignores Tulwar's order. He uses up the remaining burst of the ruby's power to slow his descent, but his fire-power runs out a moment too soon.

"Oh, shrakh."

Davook falters in midair and plummets to the ground from thirty feet high.

Whump.

The Demon Lord slams into the dirt and grinds his face hard enough that he nearly breaks his nose. He slides to a halt and quickly jumps to his feet, but his head spins from the impact.

"L-look out, orc-guy. We brought some friends."

Tulwar's face turns pale. "You stupid lunk! Now dead-heads attack me! Ahh!"

The orc commander unsheathes a giant sword on his back, but when the ten undead cherubs land, his face turns pale.

"Ohh... me no gonna win this..."

Davook pauses for a moment. He plucks a pitch-black onyx from his bag and smirks. "Heh. Not our problem. Go get 'em."

The Demon Lord snaps his fingers, and a wave of darkness spreads from his body, engulfing the area in a pitch-black fog that not even Heaven's Light pierces.

Davook's eyes turn black as the night. The auras of hundreds of angels and demons around him morph into bright white and red, giving him the power to see through the shadow-fog.

"Hehe, we should've used that from the start. Time to make a getaway."

Davook quickly runs through the fog, using its concealment to hide, while staying as quiet as possible. He says nothing and walks like a feather on the wind, putting several hundred feet between himself and his pursuers. Behind him, Tulwar cries out in pain as the undead cherubs rip him to shreds.

By the time the fog vanishes, Davook has already slid under the dead body of another demon and used his former ally for cover.

Lucky break. This fatso's got enough guts to cover both of us.

Yeah, but we can't just play hide and seek under a dead body! Someone's gonna find us, eventually!

Maybe, but this is our best bet for survival right now. Let the orcs soak up a little damage. After that, we can return to the portal.

* * *

Several minutes pass. Davook's confidence starts to erode as the battles around him intensify.

"What the hell? The pigeons and demons should be dying, not multiplying!"

"Look, over there! There's a big battle happening! It's pushing everyone toward us."

"Aw, hell. We have the worst luck today, man. Is that Valac? Why are there five of him? And why is he so friggin' HUGE?"

"Looks like he's fighting a bunch of girl angels. Wait, ain't that old lady one of the Archangels?"

"Yeah. Cammy-hell, I think. I heard she's a real sourpuss."

"Eugh. Look at her face. She could curdle milk with an expression like that. Seems like Valac's got her on the ropes. Probably won't last long. Wait... what's-"

"Spawn of a broodmother! What is that power?! She just-"

"Sweet devils! We've gotta get the heck out of here!"

Camael and Valac intensify their battle, driving Davook away, but as he leaves, Davook's heart trembles.

"Oh, man. If we get out of here, we are going to eat SO many fishies! I can't believe how strong Archangels and Emperors are! We ain't even ants compared to them!"

"Yeah, you said it."

Davook frantically runs away, ducking and weaving between embattled demons and angels. Most of them give him a passing glance, but neither side has the time to spare chasing after one cowardly-looking little Lord.

"If we get out of this alive, we need to find a nice girl and settle down somewhere away from the others. Too much danger for our liking."

"Forget the girl. She'll just slow us down."

"Whatever! Stop blabbing and get those feet moving!"

As Davook flees, he barely escapes a flash of godlike holy energy, one which wipes out the lives of hundreds of demons in an instant.

Little does he know, but had he stayed nearby, his life would have been forfeit.

As for Camael...

The Archangel of Providence smirks at Valac.

"Thy reign of evil is over. I shall hold back, no longer."

Part 161: Cherished Memories

Camael's heart thumps painfully in her chest. She stares in disbelief at the sky where her divine weapon fled her grasp only moments before. With Mjölnir gone, Camael's power drops precipitously, leaving her vulnerable to her greatest enemy: The Grim Reaper.

Valac sighs. "How unfortunate that Mjölnir has left your embrace. You betrayed your beliefs, so it sees you as a disgrace. Without a weapon, you can only fight me by playing defense. That won't be enough to stop me, so let's put an end to this pretense."

Camael quickly raises her shield. The instant Valac's fist strikes her; she goes flying backward. Camael twists in midair, flaps her wings, and lands on her feet, but the Grim Reaper bullrushes her at top speed.

"Thinking of putting distance between us? Such a move is hardly the mark of a genius!"

Valac uses two of his arms to grab hold of Camael's shield, then tears it out of her grasp. The Archangel of Divination stumbles forward, only to fall straight into his other two fists.

FUMP!

The super-form-Reaper punches Camael in the face. His armored fists and reinforced muscles give him nigh-Herculean strength, allowing him to toy with the defenseless Archangel, acting as if her Belt of Orion means nothing.

"Hahahaha!"

Valac laughs giddily. Camael tries to punch him, but he deflects her fist and rears back for a downward strike.

CRACK!

Valac pounds Camael's helmet with all his might. His vicious strike punts her into the dirt with the energy of a jackhammer, sending her helmet flying.

"Ohh, never did I imagine our final confrontation would end with such a whimper! I hope you don't mind if I relish the moment; I'd hate to see you embittered!"

Camael's eyes twitch. Her vision dances around, creating copies and illusions before her eyes. She tries to move, but Valac's last attack knocked much of the fighting spirit from her body. She coughs weakly. "Kuh... d-demon... bastard..."

"No hammer, no shield, no chance of winning at all! You're only one Archangel fighting a dark god; a little birdie adrift an atoll! No matter how you struggle, no matter how you strive, our battle will only allow one of us to survive! Which one will thrive? Which one has the drive to stay alive? That's easy to answer; whichever of us is grander! Me!"

Valac's voice cracks with joy as he laughs giddily. Finally, with Camael at death's door, all of his plans have reached their final phase. Once she perishes, his view of the future will never suffer a setback. He will be able to manipulate and twist the river of fate as he pleases.

The Grim Reaper lunges his hand down. He grabs Camael by the neck and lifts her limp body into the air, causing her survival instincts to kick in. Camael grabs at his thick, muscular arms and tries to pull herself out of his grasp, but the Reaper's strength proves too mighty for her beaten and battered body.

Valac reaches out with a second arm and grabs one of Camael's legs, holding her in place. Then, slowly, deliberately, he summons his Soul Scythe. The veiny, boned weapon pulses with hunger as Valac's eyes meet Camael's.

"It took me ages, but now I will possess my first Archangel soul. Long have I waited for this day, and now I have reached my goal. Hampered once, twice, and even three times today, no longer will my ultimate power need to delay."

Camael's eyes widen. Fear strikes her heart as Valac's hands tighten around her throat. She flicks her eyes toward the Valkyries, but with four of Valac's super-clones oppressing them, none of them stand a chance. With all their powers united, they can barely hold on to hope that their eldest sister might save them.

A tear falls down Camael's face. I'm going to die! The Reaper will claim my soul, and then my sisters and brothers' too! I cannot let it end this way! I have to fight back! But... what chance do I have?! He's too powerful!

Valac rears back his scythe. A look of bloodlust enters his eyes as he licks his lips. "You're mine now, Camael. For all of eternity."

Far in the distance, at a place distant from the battlefield of the War in Heaven, a faint pulse of energy detonates like a bomb. Camael's entire body spasms slightly, causing her eyes to tense up from an overload of magic.

Nnngh! What? This power... ah! I forgot! My forge! I left it undefended! I-

THOOOOM!

A blast of heavenly power explodes, sending rays of light lancing into the sky. Wind whips up from the direction of Nirvana, sending hurricane gusts sweeping outward in every direction. By the time it strikes the six Reaper clones, it has died down to a mere breeze.

Camael recognizes its sensation immediately.

Excalibur?! Someone tried to steal it!

Valac flicks his gaze toward the distant hill blocking his view of Nirvana. "Hm? What was that?"

Camael grits her teeth. She releases her grip on Valac's arm and gasps as his fingers immediately crush her windpipe.

Gahk! I'm about to die!

Camael can't breathe. Despite this, she motions with her hands and forces herself to perform a rite of summoning.

By the time the explosion of holy energy dissipates in the distance, Camael has already finished her incantation.

Excalibur! Help me!

Far in the distance, over ten miles away, a pulse of energy ripples through the air. Excalibur, Camael's greatest weapon, detects her call.

For three seconds, the weapon does nothing. It evaluates her command with disinterest; like a fattened cat too lazy to chase after a mouse.

However, after those initial few seconds, a new emotion enters the weapon's consciousness.

Curiosity.

What is my purpose?

The weapon opens its senses to the world around it.

A land of colors, hills, and trees appears.

Excalibur examines the world, the mortal realm, and the plane of existence surrounding it.

Life. I am alive. Not dead, not asleep. Something calls to me. Someone. But whom? And to what end?

Beneath the weapon, a massive crater filled with traces of blood and bone opens up. A single three-headed Hellhound lies curled in a ball beside its dead allies.

Demons: They are my enemy. Evil: I live to destroy it. Blood: I thirst for it. Justice: I must deliver it. Power: I bequeath it.

Excalibur's mind expands. Within seconds, it extends its consciousness across all of Heaven. It watches passively and learns the positions of all the angels, demons, Titans, and monsters, as well as their allegiances, goals, and ambitions.

Evil pervades this realm. Blood coats the ground. Demons stomp the fields into mud. My power exists to exact justice. I must go to my wielder. Only when my purpose has been fulfilled may I rest again.

Suddenly, the sword flashes with divine energy!

Excalibur transforms into a bolt of light and flashes toward Camael.

Valac swings his scythe toward her chest. "No tricks from you, Archangel!"

Camael watches. She loses her ability to fight as the bone-scythe moves to impale and transform her into the Reaper's puppet.

The instant before Valac's scythe connects, a brilliant flash of light flies toward him. Excalibur slams into the Reaper's Scythe like a freight train, tearing Valac's arm off. Before the Reaper can react, his arm and scythe travel three miles into the distance, propelled by the strength of the divine blade's attack.

Camael's vision wavers. She hovers at the edge of consciousness; barely able to perceive the world around her.

Excalibur presses into her limp palm, and immediately, a powerful aura of divine energy bubbles around her body!

FWOOSH!

Valac's hand loses its grip. The unexpected burst of holy energy bathes his palms in agonizing pain.

"Ahhh!!"

Valac jumps backward. He blinks several times in confusion. "M-my arm! My scythe! What happened?! What did you do?!"

Reflexively, Camael's hand tightens around Excalibur's handle. She falls to the ground and lands on her rear, unable to stand.

"Kuh! Huhk!"

Camael gasps for breath and coughs repeatedly. Excalibur's power surges into her like adrenaline, revitalizing her lifeforce and healing her wounds.

"I'm... alive! I'm alive!"

Camael jumps to her feet. She glances at Excalibur for only a moment before sighing deeply.

Perhaps 'tis fortunate for me that the divine blade is incomplete. Once matured, a weapon this powerful would never follow the commands of one as weak as I.

Valac ogles Excalibur with trepidation. Deep worries cover his face as he quickly regenerates his severed arm and resummons his scythe. "What is that sword? Its energy is endless! How did you procure such a blade out of nowhere?! Why didn't I sense it?!"

Camael purses her lips. Already, her throat has fully healed.

"Thou asketh many questions, Reaper. Perhaps, 'tis fear I detect in thy voice?"

"Don't screw with me, woman!" Valac roars. "If you had such a powerful weapon, why did you wait to bring it out?! Don't think you can toy with me! I won't allow it!!"

Camael sighs. She closes her eyes and concentrates on Excalibur's overwhelming mana, a vast ocean threatening to drown her with its power.

After a moment, she opens her eyes and smirks at Valac.

"Enough questions, Valac. Thy reign of evil is over. I will hold back, no longer."

Artwork for Camael and Valac's battle!

Recommended Listening

Catherine presses her back against Sophia's. The two of them parry a vicious flurry of blows from two of Valac's super-clones. Both clones cackle with glee as their armored hands slash and punch with the sharpness of swords and power of hammers. Sophia's staff repeatedly rattles as she deflects one lethal attack after another. Catherine, on the other hand, only manages to land a few glancing strikes on Valac's armor with the Sword From Heaven, while also parrying his attacks with her tower shield.

I can't hold on much longer! Catherine thinks. With both of her arms occupied, she has no way to communicate with Sophia. My stamina is running out! Sophia must be in even worse of a situation compared to me!

Sophia pants like a beaten dog. Sweat drips from her body and tears roll down her face as she narrowly deflects and dodges one attack after the other. "I... I can't... oh, Creator... I c-can't hold out..."

Not far away, one of Valac's clones chases after Hyacinth. The Valkyrie of Wind uses her manipulation of air currents to increase her flight speed and control, but she, too, appears exhausted. She has to deal with not only one of Valac's mightiest clones, but a dozen undead angels as well, all of whom encircle and try to pin her in place.

Penelope, the hardiest of all the Valkyries, faces off against another of Valac's super-clones. She spins and twists, using her surprising agility to evade his armored grip, while occasionally slamming her warhammer against his chest.

"Filthy undead wretch! When I finish with thee, I'll crush thy bones into paste! Nobody shall recognize thy deformed bonemeal!"

Valac swings four fists at her face and chest, but Penelope jumps backward and flaps her wings to rush him.

Thuk!

Penelope drives her knee into the super-clone's chest, using her strength and size to catch him off-guard. Despite standing nearly eight feet high, she's nowhere near as tall as the 12-foot super-clone, but still, she holds up better against him than her sisters.

As Penelope delivers a gut-busting knee-kick to Valac's armored stomach, she cries out in pain. An undead brute bursts out of the ground and turns her attack against her. The massive demon swings his fist against her left shoulder, dislocates it, and sends agony coursing through her arm.

"Eeyaah!"

Valac laughs. "Oh, dear, I hope that didn't hurt! I'd hate to knock you down and soil your cute little skirt! Ehehehe!"

Penelope dives to the ground and rolls. Her tremendous, bulky armor causes Heaven to tremble. Immediately, she leaps to her feet and takes a few steps back to clutch her shoulder. "Taunt me all thou wish, Reaper, but thy punches are like those of an imp! That was the first decisive blow thou hath managed to land! Once I heal it, I'll-"

"You won't heal anything, silly woman! Haven't you looked around? Your airbending sister is quite preoccupied with falling to the ground!"

As Valac says this, the super-clone chasing Hyacinth jumps above her and swings down, battering her with his fist. Hyacinth's left wing breaks, causing her to tumble and crash into Heaven's Soil. "Ahh!"

Hyacinth crashes into Heaven's Soil. Valac's undead angels rain upon her as she summons a wind-cyclone to knock them aside and protect herself.

Penelope's eyes widen. "Hyacinth! No!!"

Catherine hears Penelope's scream, but with the Reaper continuously battering her from the right and left, she can't spare a moment to evaluate Penelope's predicament.

Oh, Creator! Do not let us succumb to this abomination's evil! If I must, I will unleash Jörmungandr's Dragonfire! I'll do whatever it takes to turn the Reaper to ash, even if it costs my life!

Suddenly, as Catherine's desperation reaches its highest level, the super-clone assaulting her jumps back and whirls his head to look in a different direction.

Valac screams in rage. "No!!"

Surprised by Valac's sudden change of heart, Catherine tenses up. Her exhausted muscles plead for a moment of relief, but she doesn't drop her guard.

Then, Sophia's voice reaches Catherine's ears. "Heaven's Light! What sword is that?!"

Catherine jerks her head to gaze in the same direction Valac's super-clone is looking. There, an awe-inspiring sight fills her vision.

Excalibur. The demon-slaying blade! Camael said she hadn't finished it, yet. Why would she summon it now? What about Mjölnir?!

A few hundred feet away, Camael stretches her legs into a wide-stance, taking advantage of Valac's confusion as he evaluates the monstrously powerful blade humming with holy energy.

"Come at me, Reaper! Excalibur shall rend thy puny clones in half! Nothing can stand against it!"

The super-clone opposite her clenches his fists and howls in rage. "Screw you, Archangel of Lies! If you had a weapon like this, you would have brought it out earlier! It's a fake! A phony!"

"Hahaha! Perhaps it is! Let us find out!"

Camael charges at Valac. The ordinarily calm and collected Demon Emperor scrambles backward in fright, only to summon his scythe a moment later.

"I-I'm not scared of you! You're nothing but a weak, old-"

"EXCALIBUR!"

Camael raises the divine sword until it points straight up. A flash of light races from Excalibur's hilt to the tip of its blade and fires into the sky.

"Valac!! If thou art a true warrior, I dare thee to take this attack head-on!"

Camael's speed multiplies by several factors. Her body gains the aspect of lightning as she swings the divine blade straight down in a vertical slash. Valac dodges at the last second, allowing the cosmic power to miss him by mere inches.

FWOOOOOM!

The beam of light transforms the sword into an infinitely long blade. As Valac evades it, the holy beam continues for a seemingly infinite distance, slicing through mountains and hills in its path. A trench cuts straight across Heaven, all the way through Nirvana and into the horizon where even the angels' acute eyesight can't perceive.

Valac's fleshy body, for the first time since its creation, begins to feel cold sweat running down its skin.

Unholy devils! If that attack had struck me, I would have perished instantly!

Camael laughs. "Ahh, if only I had done this sooner!"

Despite usually being a strategic-minded fighter, Camael loses her self-control as Excalibur's power floods into her mind and overrides her critical thinking skills. The weapon's nigh-infinite reservoir of mana enhances her speed and strength to godlike levels, transforming her into an angelic warrior on par with the primordial Archangels of yore.

Before Valac can decide on a course of action, Camael lunges at him!

Swish!

She slashes horizontally at the Reaper. He tries to deflect the attack with his scythe, but a moment later, the clone's mind rattles as the holy blade slices through his defenses effortlessly.

W-what? I'm... I'm...

The first of Valac's super-clones falls in half and plops to the ground, dead. His body turns to ash, leaving the other four stunned.

"Camael defeated Number One?!"

"That divine blade! Why didn't we learn of it sooner?"

The super-clones shoot each other looks of terror. A second later, they begin making hand-motions.

"Hold nothing back!"

"Kill that filthy Archangel of Deception!"

Camael's smile turns maniacal as dozens of Valac clones, all of them ordinary compared to the super-clones, begin jumping out of the ground and rushing at her. Valac's scythe appears in their grasp, one after the other, jumping between each one randomly.

However, unlike when Valac summoned only a few clones, the undying horde loses their focus. Several clones scream obscenities, while others charge at Camael recklessly without any concern for their lives.

Valac's teamwork between his clones vanishes. Camael stands in place and swings Excalibur around at blinding speeds, slashing and slicing clones two and three at a time. Some of Valac's clones come close to impaling her with the scythe, but none land a decisive blow.

Catherine gazes upon Camael's furious counter-attack, and a spark of hope ignites in her heart.

Camael is incredibly powerful! She can defeat Valac! She can do the impossible!

As Catherine stares at Camael, a faint warning bell rings in the back of her mind. She turns to look at the super-clone she was fighting a minute earlier, only for her heart to skip a beat.

Valac's scythe swings toward Catherine's chest.

No! I was too distracted! I-

SHIK.

Catherine gasps as Valac's super-clone impales her chest. With her body weak from battle and her stamina drained, even if she had been ready for his attack, she might not have dodged it in time.

"Heh, heh, heh. A Valkyrie's soul will do just fine," Valac chuckles.

Camael, still entranced with her battle fever, spots Catherine out of the corner of her eye. Time slows to a crawl as a bolt of realization hits her.

Oh, gods! No!! These weakling clones were only a distraction! While my attention was diverted, Valac must have...!

Catherine's strength vanishes. Her body slumps as Valac's scythe starts to rip her soul out.

No... no... I lowered my guard. Oh, Michael... Michael... brother... I've failed thee...

A tear falls down Catherine's face as she closes her eyes. Darkness seeps into her mind, and Heaven melts away.

Valac's super-clone falters. Hm? What's this? Catherine's soul is... resisting? How?! She's not even an Archangel!

Despite the scythe plunged into her ribs, Catherine doesn't immediately perish. Instead, Valac's scythe rips open a powerful, ancient seal placed on her mind.

Eons of memories flood into Catherine's consciousness. Countless battles of unbelievable scope and scale clash with tender moments of love and compassion.

Michael will hate me when he finds out how I died.

Catherine's lip trembles. Images of her brother's face pressed against hers appear in her memories.

What...? I do not remember this scene...

* * *

Michael places his hand on Catherine's shoulder and smiles at her. His overwhelming affection threatens to render her senses immobile.

"That is why I love thee, Catherine. Thou art the hardiest of all of us. If thou should take enough souls, thy ascension to the rank of an Archangel will become an inevitability."

The memory clears up. Catherine and Michael float in the infinite abyss of space, the eternal void. Catherine blushes as her brother's words reach her ears.

"Me? An Archangel? Oh, but how many will I have to kill, brother? How many more souls must I consume before the Creator deems me worthy?"

Michael pulls his hand away. "Does it matter? We are cherubs. So long as the souls thou taketh belong to Seraphiim or Ophaniim, 'tis none of our concern. Continue killing, and thou shalt attain the coveted position of Archangel. The final battle draws near. If thou should fail, Jörmungandr may kill us all."

"But... there are only nine positions among the Archangels. For me to rise..."

Michael chuckles. His eyes narrow, and darkness creeps into his gaze. "Worry not about such trivial matters. I have a plan. I will ensure thy ascension. Once thou dost become the fourth Cherub, we will easily overthrow the balance of power."

"Alright. I'll do it... for thee."

Michael's countenance brightens. He traces his fingers across Catherine's lips. "For us."

Catherine nods. "Aye."

* * *

The memory fades away, and inside of Catherine's heart, a burning rage ignites.

These memories... they're from the Primordial Era... before Raphael's memory wipes!

She opens her eyes and meets Valac's gaze with the fury and wrath of an ancient warrior at death's door.

The Reaper... he must have returned my memories! By the Creator! I'm about to die, but I've never felt more alive in all my life! How can I perish here?! How can I live without Michael? How could I forget the love we once shared?!

Valac pulls back his scythe, and an agonizing tremor rumbles through Catherine's soul.

Aaaugh! No! NO! I won't die here! I can still fight back! If the Reaper thinks my soul is an easy mark, he's in for a big surprise!

Catherine's eyes suddenly ignite with pure white light. Two seconds later, an invisible, ethereal hand fires from her soul and races toward Valac's super-clone.

Valac's eyes widen. "W-what is-?!"

The Reaper doesn't get to finish his sentence. Catherine's soul grabs onto the Reaper's, and the two begin a vicious round of tug-o-war.

"Aaaaugh!!!"

Valac screams in pain as the Valkyrie of Fire presses his scythe deeper into her chest. Catherine ignores her agony and focuses on her task at hand. Her soul tugs twice as hard, yanking Valac's with the strength of a thousand cave-bears.

Panic overwhelms Valac's clone as he tries desperately to hold onto his soul. No! Nooo!! How is her soul so powerful?! I can't fight back at all! It's like a vortex is pulling me- aaaaaahhh!!

Catherine leans her body backward. Her last burst of physical effort finally tears Valac's soul from his clone. The Reaper screams in terror as his soul flies into the Valkyrie's aperture, only to land in a burning, fiery abyss where none have ever escaped.

As Valac falls, his vision begins to dim. The last thing he sees are countless, untold, tens of billions of other souls. All of them scream in agony and beg for mercy, but their cries go unheeded as Catherine seals them in the depths of her mind, never to be seen again.

* * *

Time returns to normal. Valac's super-clone loses all of its strength and slumps to the side. With his soul gone, the clone loses its grip on the scythe and flops to the ground, allowing Catherine to tear the demonic weapon from her bosom and cast it aside.

"Haah... haah..."

Catherine gasps for breath. When she raises her head, she spots one of the other super-clones staring at her; a look of panic etched into his face.

"The Valkyrie tore the soul out of number three! How? HOW?!"

Catherine doesn't answer. Her mind whirls as billions of years worth of ancient memories collide with her existing ones, causing her brain to flex and compress under the newfound pressure.

I... I... who am... I...

"Catherine!" Sophia yells in fright. "Oh, Creator! How dids't thou survive?! I thought the Reaper killed thee! Art thou alright?! Art thou injured?"

Sophia grabs Catherine's shoulders and tries to get her sister's attention, but Catherine's thoughts travel elsewhere. After a few breaths of time, memories from Valac's captured soul appear in her mind.

My god! Of course! Why didn't I notice before?!

Catherine ignores Sophia's cries of distress and focuses on the downed super-clone laying before her.

I may have only obtained a few hours of Valac's memories, but those are enough to tell me his location! Valac's real body isn't in Heaven; it's somewhere on Earth. If we intend to defeat the Reaper, we have to kill his original body; not his clones!

As dozens of thoughts careen around in Catherine's mind, she almost doesn't notice as Valac's fallen super-clone begins to stir.

"Ngghh..."

Catherine snaps her gaze toward it. Ah! He's still alive!

Catherine summons her sword and shield to her palms. Ignoring the blood flowing from her chest, the Valkyrie of Fire pulls away from Sophia and takes a quick step toward the clone, only to pause and stare at him in confusion.

Hm? Something's different. This clone doesn't have the same aura as the others.

Valac's three other super-clones stare in disbelief as their former comrade rises to his feet and rubs his head.

"Ohh... ancestors... where am I? What's happened?"

Catherine hesitates for a moment before using her sword to trace letters through the air. Art thou Valac? Someone else?

The super-clone gasps. "Valac?! No! Of course not! What would give you that idea, angel woman?"

The being, one with a mind of his own, finally swivels his head around to examine the battlefield.

"Demons and angels fighting en-masse? Ancestors! What is happening here?!"

Catherine doesn't answer him. Instead, she counters with another question. Tell me thy name. Who art thou?

The Valac clone lowers his head to scowl at her. "Hmph! Don't you recognize me? I am Neptune, Poseidon's firstborn, second mightiest of the aquatic Titans! More importantly, who are you to think yourself worthy of interrogating me?!"

I am Catherine. The Valkyrie of Fire. Neptune, I recognize thee. Thou didst perish. Reaper's scythe. Six years have passed. Thou art deceased, now. A soul inside Valac. An undying soul-clone!

Valac's other three super-clones turn pale as death itself. They read Catherine's words in disbelief and shoot glances amongst each other. "The Valkyrie of Fire knows too much!"

Penelope hurries over to Catherine's side. She holds Hyacinth's broken and battered body with her left arm while keeping her greatmace in her right hand's grasp - just in case.

"Hey! What art the two of thee doing! Stop chatting with the Reaper and fight! We can't let Camael do all the work!"

Sophia, having observed the conversation between her sister and Neptune, shakes her head. "Penelope, thou shalt not believe this! Catherine did the impossible!"

Penelope pauses. Her bloodlust lowers slightly as she evaluates the Reaper standing opposite Catherine. Unlike the others, his posture is cool, calm, and collected. He shows no fear toward the Valkyrie of Earth, as one of his perceived allies.

"Oh? Tell me more."

* * *

Camael tears through thousands of Reaper clones, one after the other. Each time she kills one, those who follow after appear noticeably weaker. Their movement turns sluggish, and their responsiveness drops drastically.

Within a few minutes, Camael begins annihilating them by the dozen. Valac eventually calls off his onslaught and recalls his clones, giving the Archangel of Divination a moment of respite.

Camael flies over to Neptune and the Valkyries. "What's happening? Why art thou chatting amiably with the Reaper?"

Penelope breathes a sigh of relief as her sister's divine aura enshrouds the Valkyries. "There's no need to worry, eldest sister. Catherine defeated one of the Reaper's bodies and revealed its inner soul. 'Tis none other than Neptune, son of Poseidon!"

Camael immediately deduces the hidden meaning behind Penelope's words. "Neptune? Ah! So, the Reaper must be using stolen souls to craft these false bodies!"

"Indeed, so it seems," Penelope replies. She returns her attention to Catherine and Neptune's conversation.

Catherine traces letters in the air with her sword. Reaper's lair. Where is it? Dost thou remembereth? Exact location unknown. I can only guess! Somewhere underground?

Neptune shakes his head. "I don't know. The last thing I remember was sitting at a remembrance altar with my family. We were mourning my father's death at the hands of Satan, the Devil, shortly after I informed King Zeus of Poseidon's passing. My vision went dark, and I appeared here. I... I never realized..."

The Titan's voice turns hoarse as waves of realization strike him one after the other.

"My wife... Eris. Where is she? Has she, too, fallen to the Reaper?"

Catherine flicks her eyes toward the three super-clones. The three of them whisper to one another in agitated voices, then dive underground, leaving the angels behind.

I know not. Eris's survival; unlikely. One hundred Titans remain. Atlantis fell last year. Nobody left to defend.

Neptune, still trapped in Valac's ghastly body, begins to tremble as grief overtakes him.

"Oh, ancestors... why have you forsaken us? We gave sacrifices every year! We prayed and kowtowed for your protection, yet... in the end..."

Sophia walks over to him and hesitantly rests her hand on the giant undead half-Titan's arm. She cringes inwardly, but forces herself to look at him not as one of Valac's clones, but as a poor, broken soul.

"There, there. The Titans can repopulate. Thou art one of the strongest left alive. With Zeus's blessing, thy people will survive this war, and-"

Speak no falsehoods, Catherine says. Her sword dances in the air furiously, tracing dozens of letters, one after the other. Titans might not survive. Angels may die, too. This war isn't over. We must slay Valac. Focus! Help me find his lair!

Despite usually being a cold and emotionless woman, Catherine becomes ten times fiercer than usual. She does not reveal her newly obtained memories, but in secret, her rage begins to build. Millions of ancient struggles appear in her mind's eye, one after the other. Each contends with her current self-image, causing her to doubt her actions and convictions.

No time to weep! No time to cry! Valac will flee. He'll uncover my plan. If Valac moves, we lose. Save thy tears for later.

Sophia takes a step back from Catherine. Her eyes lose focus as she struggles to understand Catherine's callousness. "B-but, Neptune doesn't know anything! We can't blame him for becoming distraught! The poor fellow hasn't yet-"

Catherine turns away from Sophia and slashes her sword at the ground in rage. I don't care! Forget Neptune. More important matters to attend!

Several miles away, on the opposite side of the battlefield, a star-like object plummets from the sky and crashes into Heaven's Soil. Catherine watches as it detonates against Heaven's Soil and releases thousands of joules of holy energy. The Valkyrie of Fire stares at the scene of carnage and clutches her sword even tighter.

Damn. Damn! What do we do?! I only have a fraction of the information needed to track Valac down!

As Catherine ponders her next course of action, a flash of light beside her catches her attention. Catherine turns to the right and watches as a portal materializes in midair, and Raphael steps through.

"Camael. Valkyries. I'm here to help."

The old man smiles for a moment, only for his eyes to darken as he spots Neptune, still in Valac's clone body.

"Gah! By the Creator! Why is everyone just standing around?! The Reaper is right there!"

Penelope sighs. "He's not what he appears to be, brother."

While Raphael pauses to reflect on Penelope's meaning, Catherine's gaze fixates on the innocent-appearing figure of her eldest brother. Her eyes turn icy cold. Without motioning with her sword, Catherine growls inwardly.

Raphael.

Part 162: Michael's Wrath

Ivaldi continues pummelling Uzziel with ferocious, unending blows. Over and over, blasts of holy energy collide with the power of Nature, detonating explosively in the air and creating chaotic windstorms, tornadoes, and hurricanes throughout Heaven's battlefield.

"All soul manipulators must DIE!" Ivaldi bellows. "Not only the angels, but you disgusting, bastard Titanspawn as well!"

Uzziel's face remains impassive as she summons a wall of vines to block one of Ivaldi's punches. "I'm sorry you feel that way."

Hercules manipulates Uzziel from a distance. However, his thoughts cut in half as he forces himself to multitask.

I cannot allow the Devil to flee from Heaven. If he escapes, he will go into hiding, and I may never find him again. Once he amasses more power, he will resurface and pose a significant threat to my rule. There is only one pawn who might stand a chance against the united strength of three Emperors. Luckily for me, the worthless wretch has yet to perish.

As Uzziel deflects Ivaldi's attacks one after the other, she twists her foot slightly and sends nature energy pulsing into Heaven's Soil. Several mana tendrils surge through the dirt and rush half a mile away to where one angel's body lays among half a dozen others.

Michael, the Archangel of Courage, rests in a puddle of blood. Thanks to several broken ribs, the Archangel's breathing comes in ragged gasps.

No... strength... left in my body. Can't see anything. Darkness in all directions. Is this the end? Is this how I will perish? Defeated by... a single... bloodskin...?

Having fallen to a fluke punch from Diablo, his former prisoner, Michael's pride crumbles to ash. He gazes at the sky, feeling nothing but disbelief at how his supposed 'unstoppable' power allowed him to fare against the Emperor of Annihilation.

Several thin, wispy vines stretch out of the ground. They curl around Michael, reaching into the chinks and gaps of his armor before resting against his skin. One vine wraps lightly around his throat, then glides up his cheek to touch his forehead.

As Michael barely grasps onto life at Death's Door, Hercules's voice materializes in his mind.

Hahaha. Look at you now, Michael, a being everyone calls the 'mightiest Archangel'; a battle-fanatic whose bloodlust puts all of his family to shame. You lay here like a beaten dog, ready for death. Is this all your effort was worth? You wasted time toying with your food, only for it to choke you in the end. Disgusting.

Michael coughs weakly.

"Kuh..."

Don't... patronize me... Hercules. I know why thou hath come... my power... thou dost plan... to heal me... and use it against the demons...

Of course, Hercules replies. I'm glad you're quick on the uptake. Using Uzziel's power, I can heal you in seconds. However, I won't do so unless you pledge your loyalty to me.

Michael closes his eyes.

I'll... never bow... to a soul-manipulating... Titan bastard.

Oh? Never, you say? That's a strong statement. Let's put it to the test. You might be half-dead, but I'm sure, even now, you can sense the power flowing out of Uzziel. As a supposed traveler of the Virtuous path, you must have strong feelings for your family members. It would be a shame if I were to use Uzziel's power to give the demons a total victory today, wouldn't it?

Michael shudders. Hng. Do not... threaten me... thou dost desireth a victory. Thy hatred for the demons-

Is nothing at all, Hercules replies, finishing Michael's sentence for him. Do you think I care who wins this war, anymore? I have only two goals, little birdie. The first is to defeat demonkind and establish an order of mighty warriors to keep peace across the world. However, if that should fail, my second goal is petty revenge. If I cannot rule everything, why should I allow those who scorned me to walk among the living? Better to let your kind perish in the eternal flames of judgment than live to mock me.

Impossible. Thou would's't never... allow the demons... to win...

Hercules chortles. Hah. Try me. I'm giving you an easy solution, Michael. Join me willingly, and I'll allow you to take revenge against those who left you for dead. Decline, and all of your brothers and sisters will suffocate under my thumb. I am not a cruel person. Once the demons perish, and once I establish my era of peace, the world will have room for the smiles and laughter of those you care about. Even those like... Catherine.

Michael's face twitches. Catherine? Why bring her up? She is nothing to me.

I wasn't born yesterday. Even now, in your final moments, I sense the feelings resting atop your mind. Images of your beloved sister float around like a log in the sea. You care deeply for her. Imagine how heartbroken she will be when she finds out her brother fell in a most humiliating manner — defeated in a single punch by a bloodskin! Oh, the horror.

Michael clenches his jaw. Leave Catherine out of this.

Hahaha. Do not believe for a moment that you may order me around, Archangel. You are putty in my hands. I need you now, yes, but I have another option on the table; one which will prove quite fatal for the others of your kind. You, however, have none.

Michael says nothing. His eyes flutter open, but still, he sees only infinite darkness.

Hercules' inner voice softens. Worry not. I am a man of my word. Uzziel begged me to help, and so, I did. Your battle instincts have dulled. With my hand guiding you, you will become a weapon capable of cutting through any demon. You have grown soft ever since Raphael's mind-wipes, but when I am through with you, you will understand once again what it means to possess true, unfettered power.

Hercules' voice coalesces into a faint apparition in Michael's mind's eye. The Titan holds out a hand and waits.

The clock is ticking, Michael. Your people need you. Catherine needs you. What is your answer?

Michael swallows a chunk of hardened blood.

I... curseth... thee...

A few minutes later, the Archangel of Courage soars through the sky. With his body fully healed and his soul firmly in Hercules' control, he emits dangerous killing intent as Hercules uses him to pursue the three fleeing Demon Emperors.

Liar.

Michael's soul trembles angrily.

My sister did not joineth thou willingly. Like a coward, thou used thy soul manipulation most deceptively! Treacherous bastard!

With his attention divided between Uzziel's battle against Ivaldi and Michael's ambush of the Demon Emperors, Hercules doesn't have time to trade words with the Archangel of Courage.

"Quiet. I'm busy."

Thy words are poison. Thy goals are genocidal. I will not stand idly and let-

"Didn't you hear me the first time? I know what will shut you up."

Hercules growls at the Archangel of Courage. After a moment, he adds a little extra force into his willpower and suppresses Michael's soul with all his strength. It takes several seconds, but soon, images of various violent acts begin appearing in Michael's mind. Scenes of angels being murdered and ripped apart by demons consume his thoughts, forcefully turning his attention away from Hercules' betrayal and toward the demons.

One moment, in particular, catches Michael's attention.

Michael's eyes widen. What... what are these images?

Hercules laughs. "Haha. Don't you know? My minions can share their vision. What you're seeing is a display of the demons ravishing your sister. They captured her not long ago. As you can see, they're doing whatever they please to her helpless form."

Michael's eyes tremble as a scene of horror plays out in his mind. Catherine screams as the demons hold her down. They rip off her armor and drool as lust-filled looks appear in their eyes.

No... Catherine?! What are they doing to her?!

"Oh, don't play dumb, Michael. The demons are doing what they do best. Now that they have captured Catherine, they'll torture her and perform all manner of vile acts, then kill her and eat what's left."

No! NO!! Not Catherine! I have to stop them!!

Hercules nods. An evil grin spreads across his face. "Aye. Don't disappoint me, Michael."

Catherine! CATHERINE!!

Rage explodes in Michael's mind. Little does the Archangel realize it, but the visions Hercules shared with him were fake, made to confuse him, and boil his blood.

Hercules aims Michael's eyes to the ground. There, about half a mile away, Satan and his two fellow Emperors tear through a line of undead cherubs. Several low-ranked demon Lords support them, but Diablo handles most of the killing while Satan aims for the cherub's heads.

"I'll rip him apart! I'll kill that bloodskin if it's the last thing I do!"

Michael flaps his wings. He shoots from a standstill position to over a hundred miles an hour as he divebombs toward Satan from above. Michael draws his sword and aims it at Satan's heart.

"SATAAAN!!"

Michael's screaming turns delirious. His eyes become bloodshot as they bulge in his face. Hercules' emotional nudges dial Michael's rage to the max as he imagines the demons doing unspeakably vile acts to his sister.

Satan hears Michael's warcry. He jerks his head to the sky and gasps. "Oh, shit!"

The Devil doesn't have time to react. He raises his arms at the last second, only for the hawk-like Archangel to smash him into a bloody pulp.

BOOM!

Michael crashes into Satan like a runaway tank hitting a sandcastle.

Belial screams. "Ahhh!! Satan!!"

Diablo scowls. "Spawn of a broodmother. He sprayed the Devil all over the damn place."

Satan's bloody remains coat the ground in every direction for over twenty feet. However, Michael jumps to his feet, unhurt. He swivels his head toward Diablo and screams at the top of his lungs, "Where is she?!"

Diablo flinches as the Archangel charges him. "Who the hell-?!"

Unable to wrap his mind around the Archangel's rage, Diablo can only go on the defensive. He puts every bit of strength into his kinetic barrier, summoning it over and over again as the Archangel of Courage attacks him with a hundred sword strikes every second. Michael's arm becomes a thousand buzzsaws pressing against Diablo's kinetic barrier, and within a few seconds, he tears through and gashes Diablo's chest, arms, and neck to pieces.

"Gurk!"

Diablo gurgles in his throat as blood escapes from all of his pores. The moment before he dies, a bone-hammer smashes into Michael's back, blindsides the Archangel, and sends him careening to the side. Belial jumps over to Diablo and immediately heals him, pulling him back from the brink of death.

"Are you okay?!" She asks.

"Y-yeah..."

Diablo staggers to his feet as phantom pain wracks every inch of his body. Despite Belial fully healing him, the sensation of Michael's sword leaves a lasting impression, making Diablo doubt his eyes.

I nearly died! Michael is way more vicious than before!

Diablo and Belial take up defensive stances. By the time Michael jumps to his feet and flaps his wings to rush them, both Emperors are ready.

Swish-swish, clang clang!

Michael's sword furiously pounds Diablo's barrier, but Belial diverts many of his attacks to herself by using her superior speed and ability. She creates multiple bone-blades to counter his swordsmanship, which has grown far more ferocious than during their previous fights.

"Why is Michael so pissed?!" Belial asks. She jerks back in fright as she finally notices Michael's glowing eyes. "Ah! Hercules must be-"

"I know!" Diablo says, cutting her off. He tries to activate a three-times-multiplied kinetic punch, but Michael's flurry of attacks don't give him a moment of breathing room. "You saw what Hercules did to Satan! He makes his goons fight at their peak! We can't handle this Archangel alone!"

Satan speaks up from behind them. "Don't worry. You won't have to."

Having regenerated his body, Satan's bloodlust ignites as he and Hades begin planning to destroy the Archangel of Courage.

Michael never displays this much emotion, Hades says. I don't know what Hercules did, but he must have angered my brother like never before.

"I'll tell you what he did; he pissed in Mikey's tea, and now I'M pissed. Let's clobber him."

Satan motions with his hands. He summons thirty souls from deep within himself and burns them to ash. His mana capacity and magical power multiply by a factor of thirty, providing him a giant leap in his battle aptitude.

"Hey, Deebs! This one's for you, pal!"

Satan aims his hand at Diablo. A jet of water fires out and encircles Diablo. It transforms into a spiraling water barrier, one that protects Diablo from Michael's attacks. The Archangel strikes his swirling shield repeatedly, but the motion of the water deflects Michael's attacks to the right and left, preventing him from dealing substantial damage to Diablo.

Next, Satan aims another palm at Belial. Heaven shakes as dozens of pounds of soil jump up and wrap around her. The dirt and rock harden into a reinforced earthen armor, protecting her while affording her a decent degree of movement.

Michael screams in rage. His voice turns hoarse as he realizes what Satan is doing. "EVIL BLOODSKINS! I shall burn thee to ASH!"

Michael's glowing eyes double in luminosity. He fires a blast of holy energy at Satan, catching the Devil off-guard.

"What the-?!"

Satan jumps to the right. The laser sweeps through the spot where, an instant before, his neck stood. Satan dives to the ground and yelps as Michael not only continues following Satan with his eyes, but intensifies his attacks against Belial and Diablo. Several low-ranked demons perish as the beam cuts them in half. The others flee for their lives.

Slash-slash-slash!

Michael swipes his sword across Belial's earthen armor with such fury that it starts to disintegrate. With her movement slowed by the hardened mud on her limbs, Belial can't keep up with Michael's speed. She retreats while he pushes his advantage.

"Today, I will kill ALL of thy wretched kin!!"

Michael's sword shines as he imbues it with holy energy. A moment later, his sword starts rapidly sending waves of mana firing when he swings it. As Belial retreats, she gasps as fifty crescent-shaped magic blades shoot at her.

"No!"

Belial tries to block them, but the energy waves tear through her bladed arms as if they don't exist. Belial's armor shatters, and deep gashes slice across her body, spraying blood in every direction. Both of her arms and her left leg sever from her body. She staggers back and flops to the ground as incredible pain tears through her entire frame.

"Guhuk..."

Michael's eyes continue firing holy energy at Satan. Diablo finally finishes building up enough kinetic energy to unleash a twenty-times-enhanced kinetic punch, and as Satan's barrier finally falls apart, Diablo swings his fist.

"Eat SHIT!"

Diablo aims for Michael's chest. Ten feet separates the two warriors, but Diablo doesn't try to close the distance. Instead, he punches the air, sending a blast of superheated wind from his fist. It pounds Michael like a hurricane and flings him off his feet. Finally, with his footing lost, Michael goes flying. He twists and spins through the air before crashing on his back over five hundred feet away.

Satan immediately comes to a stop as Michael's laser stops chasing after him. "Belial! No!"

Ignoring a possible counter-attack, Satan rushes over to Belial. She lays on the ground, covered in blood. Three of her limbs lay tossed around here and there, while blood pours from her stumps. Her eyes flick from left to right as her brain tries to cope with the pain.

"Hnn- nuhh..."

Satan splashes water on her wounds and uses Poseidon's power to heal her wounds and regenerate her missing limbs. "Stay with me, girl! Come on, baby! Don't die!"

Even as Belial's wounds close up, her mind fails to reconnect with reality. She writhes around on the ground and clutches her regenerating arm and legs. "Nnn... hurts... hurts..."

Satan nods. "I know it does, baby. Come on; we've gotta get out of here before Michael-"

"He's back!" Diablo yells. Satan jerks his head toward Diablo and scowls as the Archangel returns to whaling on the Emperor of Annihilation.

Michael screams wildly as he thrashes Diablo's failing kinetic shields. "I WON'T LET YOU TOUCH HER! SHE'S MINE!!"

Sweat drips from every pore in Diablo's body. He continually reinforces his kinetic shields as fast as he can, but they fare poorly against sustained rapid-fire attacks.

Satan bites his lip. Michael is too fast. I can't keep up with him at all. If I slip up for even a second, he'll kill the other two!

Suddenly, from behind Michael, the ground explodes. A gigantic Hellhound, fifty-percent bulkier than others of its kind, leaps out of a burrowed hole and pounces on Michael.

"FILTHY ARK-AN-JELL! NOBODY HURTSH MY MAN!"

Lucifer, the Emperor of Providence, catches Michael completely off-guard. Her wolven mouth, resembling a wood-chipper, snaps onto Michael's wings and bites with the strength of a crocodile.

SKRRIIK!

Lucifer tears several meaty chunks out of Michael's wings. Her claws rip across his back and legs, spraying blood in every direction.

"Aaaugh!!"

Michael shrieks in pain and jumps forward to try and shake the vicious monster ripping him to pieces, but he can't escape. Lucifer howls at him with her wolf-voice and pounces again.

However, before Lucifer can land the killing blow, Michael falls forward and sucks inside Heaven's Soil! The Hellhound Emperor lands on the grass and claws at it furiously as she tries to dig him out.

"COME BACK, FILTHY AN-JELL! COW-WERD!"

She rips the grass to shreds, but despite her best efforts, Michael escapes.

Ten seconds later, Michael bubbles out of Heaven's Soil a few hundred feet away. His body radiates power thanks to Uzziel's healing energy.

"That was a close one," Michael says, his rage gone. His voice turns monotone as he examines at his arms and legs. "You almost killed my second strongest pawn. It seems that when Michael stops toying with his food, he also loses sight of his surroundings. Imbecile."

Diablo and Lucifer raise their heads to glower at the Archangel.

"Hercules..." Diablo mutters. "What's the matter? Is Michael too out of control for you?"

"The less effort I have to put into manipulating Michael, the more focus I can put on Uzziel," Hercules replies. "Splitting my mind between two Archangels is mentally draining. However, since I've temporarily immobilized Ivaldi, I can put the four of you down myself."

Satan helps Belial to her feet. The succubus shakily leans against her husband and shudders as Hercules' cold gaze falls on her. "L-love? What do we do?"

The Devil wraps one arm around Belial's waist and balls his free hand into a fist. "Easy. We kill the bastard. Nothin' to it."

Michael doesn't move. His glowing eyes evaluate the four Demon Emperors with the coldness of an eagle gazing upon a field hare.

Even Michael has his limits.

Hercules sighs inwardly.

I'll have to tap into his memories. Perhaps my newest pawn has a few tricks up his sleeve he's forgotten. I hope I don't regret this.

Having suffered immensely under Lucifer's ambush, Michael's soul slumbers restlessly as Hercules uses his strength to subdue the Archangel.

It's a good thing I let the Demon Emperors weaken Michael's psyche, first. I'd be having one hell of a time trying to control him, otherwise. Uzziel is already a pain in my neck. She might seem sweet and innocent, but she lacks Michael's emotional weaknesses.

Hercules's main body takes a deep breath. He focuses his mind and probes deeply into Michael's memories.

* * *

Falling, falling, falling.

Hercules plunges into a magical black hole, one identical to Uzziel's, yet different in innumerable ways. As he falls, the power of Raphael's memory seal tugs and pulls at him from a million different directions. Hercules winces as he senses his soul ripping apart, but within seconds, he arrives at the center of the seal.

Michael. What secrets are you hiding?

Having experienced the memory bombardment once already, Hercules braces himself in advance. A moment later, the onslaught begins.

Aaaaauuugh!!!

Molten memories drip from the endless void and land on Hercules' brain. His main body shivers and shudders as he forces himself to endure the excruciating torment.

Half a minute later, Hercules exhales. His soul breaks through the barriers protecting Michael's mind, allowing him to access the Archangel's memories.

Ancestors, protect me. Michael's recollections are just as numerous as Uzziel's... but the emotional trauma is a thousand times worse! Gods! How could Raphael allow this monster to live?!

Hercules pants like a dog.

Uzziel slaughtered billions, but her actions were like those of a child crushing bugs. Michael's genocide was personal and based on blood-grudges! My god, perhaps Raphael had the right idea in trying to erase the memories of his fellow angels! If I had a choice, I wouldn't have let any of them live, but there's no way he could kill these monsters on his own!

As Hercules searches Michael's memories, he finds not only the things he was looking for, but things he wasn't, as well.

The Angels are all monsters. Demonkind, evil though they be, are nothing compared to the butchers and battle-maniacs comprising angelkind's forces. When I become the Infinity King, I will not allow a single one of them to survive.

I must kill every last living and undead angel.

* * *

Satan, Belial, Diablo, and Lucifer all stand together and watch as Michael closes his eyes and trembles for several long, painful seconds.

"Hish guard ish down! KILL HIM!" Lucifer roars. She takes a step forward, but Diablo grabs her.

"No! Don't! It's a trick! Hercules would never give us such an easy opening. If we attack, we'll fall into his trap."

Lucifer growls at Diablo, but her animal mind pauses to consider his words.

"Tch... we will shee..."

Diablo returns his gaze to Michael. Despite his misgivings, the Emperor of Annihilation secretly ponders if his intuition is wrong.

I might be thinking too highly of Hercules. If Michael is vulnerable, we have to take a chance and attack!

Belial shakes off the last bit of dizziness wracking her brain. She turns to Satan and shoots him a questioning gaze. "Where's Nerissa's body?"

Satan smiles. "Somewhere safe. Don't worry. I have a few Warper souls in me. I stashed her where not even Valac can find her."

"Alright. Are you ready? We'll need all of our power to defeat Michael."

Satan smirks. "I ain't afraid of some winged moron. Mikey caught us off-guard a few times, but he ain't shit. What can one Archangel do against the four strongest demons?"

Michael opens his eyes. He speaks in Hercules' voice, and his words carry an ominous tone. "More than you can imagine."

Hercules flicks his gaze to Heaven's Soil. He sends a quick command to Uzziel, and a vine leaps from the ground and attaches to Michael's right arm's stump. Within seconds, it morphs and shifts until it becomes a pseudo-limb capable of emulating the strength and dexterity of a flesh and blood arm.

Hercules flexes Michael's newly created vine-based arm. After satisfying himself with its capability, he rapidly performs a series of hand-signs.

Diablo tenses up. "Watch out! Hercules is about to pull something!"

FLASH!

Michael's entire body explodes with brilliant light. Holy energy erupts from every inch of his skin, turning him into a dazzling star on the battlefield. The four demon Emperors all recoil in horror as the sudden burst of light destroys their retinas.

"Aaugh!!" Belial screams. She pulls away from Satan and falls to the ground. Despite pressing her hands to her eyes, Michael's holy energy bombards her skin and cooks her alive.

Satan and Diablo recoil in horror, unable to shield themselves from the radiant mana erupting from Michael's body. Satan turns his head away and swoons as his mind falls numb. "Shit! Shit! Fucking hell!!"

Only Lucifer remains standing. Thanks to her half-hellhound form, her monstrous body becomes resistant to the effects of Michael's holy energy. However, the bright light still makes her fifty Hellhound eyes flinch.

"I KNEW YOU'D TRY SHUMTHING! TIME TO DIE, MICHAEL!!"

Closing her eyes, the Hellhound charges Michael and pounces at him with the intent to kill.

Two massive wolf legs spread out their claws as Lucifer lunges for Michael's chest. Hercules doesn't flinch as the giant beast jumps at him.

"Too little, too late."

Michael grabs his sword and instantly dices Lucifer apart.

Slash-slash-slash, SHIK!

After cutting through Lucifer's massive front legs, Hercules uses Michael's sword to impale Lucifer through her animal heart. The Hellhound stops in midair and gasps.

"GAHK! H...how...?!"

With a shrug, Hercules flicks his sword down. He flings Lucifer's diced body to the ground, where she lands amidst her severed limbs in a rapidly spreading puddle of blood.

Diablo, still blinded, senses something amiss. He forces himself to look at Michael, only to gasp as he spots the image of Lucifer's limp corpse lying defeated in the grass.

"Lucy!! NOOOO!!"

Satan and Belial hear Diablo, but even while trying to heal their wounds, their eyes don't function well enough to let them see what happened. Diablo charges at Michael and raises his fist.

"YOU'RE DEAD MEAT!"

Even with his eyes barely functioning, Diablo charges toward Michael like an enraged bull. The closer he gets, the more intense the dynamism of the holy energy radiating from the Archangel becomes. Soon, Diablo's movements turn sluggish. A sensation like molten quicksand engulfs him. The heat of the midday sun blasts against his face, chest, and arms. He leans forward and places one foot in front of the other, but his skin turns black as coal as all of his nerves continue to fry and fizzle.

Diablo's determination falters.

I can't... can't get any closer. My whole body is numb. I need to retreat. I'll die if I keep going...

The Emperor of Annihilation battles with himself. Only twenty feet separates him from Michael, but his body refuses to listen to his commands.

I can't give up. Lucy is dead! I have to avenge her. I have to kill Michael!!

Diablo takes another step, causing the intensity of Michael's holy aura to increase further.

Hercules watches the Emperor slowly advancing toward him. For a moment, his cold demeanor falters.

Hmph. Diablo and Lucifer. These two are mates, much like I was with Megara. In a way, I understand the emotions he's experiencing right now. Watching the woman I loved perish destroyed me. Diablo's heart must be in tatters.

Hercules sighs.

Ah, well. Such is life. We lose those we love to those we hate. To be born is to suffer.

A glint appears in Michael's eyes. Hercules sends a command to the Archangel's body. A moment later, Michael rushes at Diablo.

SLASH!

Before Diablo can react, the Archangel's blade sweeps across his neck. Diablo's thoughts falter as the world spins around him.

What? M-Michael... cut... me...?

Like a rock landing in the mud, Diablo's head falls from his neck and slaps against the ground with a moist splurt. His headless body teeters for a moment, before falling over.

Michael's eyes sweep toward the two remaining Emperors.

"Well. It's time to kill the other two. Come, sister."

Hercules' mind travels to a new pawn, one he acquired only in the last several minutes.

Satan, still blinded by the Archangel's radiant energy, forces his eyes open. Through the narrowest crack possible, he peers into the blinding star standing fifty feet away until he can faintly make out the remains of Diablo's corpse.

"Sh-shit! Deebs? No... no!!"

Satan grinds his teeth together. He turns his attention inward, to the Archangel within his mind. "C'mon, Sammy-boy! Tell me we've got something that can kill this worthless..."

Samael remains impassive. Thy demon body has its limits. Using magic will be nearly impossible with my brother's aura suppressing thee. If we're lucky, we might be able- ah! SATAN! Look out!

A series of massive stomping noises rushes toward Satan. He jerks his head to the right, but with his terrible vision, he doesn't see anything coming.

"What's that noise?"

Thump, thump, thump!

Heavy footsteps, like trees crashing into the dirt, travel toward Satan.

A moment later, an invisible foot bigger than Satan's entire body falls from the sky.

SPLURT!

Satan perishes before he can react.

A Titan, much taller than Hercules, and nearly as tall as Zeus, crushes the Devil into pulp. After a moment, a shroud of invisibility wears off from the giant, revealing a Titaness with braided brown hair and glowing eyes. Her body stinks of the blood of a thousand dead demons.

The woman nods. "Haha. Oh, my beloved little brother. I cannot thank you enough for this opportunity."

Hercules' thoughts transfer into his newest minion's mind. No, I must thank you, Chantis. Remember the plan. When Satan revives, crush him again and again. I will deal with the Succubus Emperor myself.

Chantis, a Titan female who once lost several of her sisters to Nerissa's ice blades, nods. "Nothing would please me more."

Belial reels in pain. She hears the sounds of the other three Emperors' last moments, but she does not witness their fall. Unlike the others, her control of healing magic only cripples her under Michael's holy aura. Every time she tries to heal herself, her magic backfires, causing more damage to her internal organs.

The succubus curls up in the fetal position and shivers uncontrollably as Michael slowly walks toward her. Each step he takes causes his aura to press against her more intensely than before. Soon, her spasming becomes uncontrollable. Belial's thoughts careen helplessly as she begs heaven and hell for a savior.

Satan... Satan... Satan... save me... it hurts... hurts...

Tears roll down Belial's face. She chews her tongue into pulp and gurgles blood as the holy aura kills her in the slowest, most agonizing way possible.

Hercules sighs. "You were a worthy opponent. I am neither heartless nor cruel. I will kill you now. A swift end is the best your kind can hope for."

Michael raises his sword. He aims it at Belial's neck, but before he swings the blade down, a strange thought enters the back of his mind.

"Hm. Strange. It smells like something is burning."

A faint odor reaches Michael's nose. Hercules puts his assassination of the succubus on hold to turn and gaze at Lucifer and Diablo's fallen bodies.

What he sees next shakes him to his core.

"What... what is... this demonic mana...?"

Diablo's beheaded body lies motionless in the dirt. However, blood-red energy begins dripping from his skin like juice through a sieve. As the liquid lands on the grass, Heaven's Soil loses its luster. The nature energy emanating from Uzziel turns inert, making the grass turn black as night.

The ghastly demonic mana sends a shiver up Michael's spine.

"My god... oh my god..."

Hercules watches in disbelief as Diablo's arm twitches. His fingers flex slightly and begin tip-tapping across the grass to reach for Lucifer's corpse.

"Lu... cy..."

Diablo's head, separated from his body, breathes out a single word. He stares at his wife, while an ungodly fury blooms in his eyes.

"Kill him... I have to kill him. Now!" Hercules yells. Michael lunges toward Diablo and swings his sword a thousand times. Instantly, he dices the Emperor of Annihilation into a pile of gore. Diablo's blood sprays across Heaven's Soil, and wherever it strikes, the grass fizzles and dies.

"Lu... cy..."

Diablo's voice speaks again. This time, it hangs in the air like a ghost on the wind.

Hercules turns pale.

"No... no... what is this? What's going on?!"

As Hercules focuses all of his attention on Diablo's blood-red mana, he stops paying attention to the minds of his other servants.

* * *

Hercules' main body trembles in terror. His teeth chatter, and his mind becomes disturbed as he senses the immense power building up where Diablo, the Emperor of Annihilation, fell.

"What do I do? What do I do?!"

Distracted by the condensing blood-red mana, Hercules fails to notice a shadow silently shimmying underneath rocks and behind trees toward his main body.

Berith, the Emperor of Backstabbing, peeks out from the boot of one of Hercules' guardian angels.

Hehehe... Once I eliminate this thorn in his side, Master Valac will reward me greatly. Truly, his vision defies Fate itself.

Part 163: Heaven and Hell Hate Hercules

"Tch. This is all your fault. Chasing after Satan, making us run around like chickens with our wings cut off..."

"Hey! Don't blame me! It was your idea to enter the battlefield. The outskirts are way safer! Ain't nobody fighting out here!"

"Sure, but if one of them pigeons spots us, we won't have anywhere to run."

"Then I guess we'd better be extra sneaky."

* * *

Davook argues with himself continuously. Having retrieved his woven-grass camouflage, he sneaks around the outside of the battlefield while staying low to the ground and moving at a snail's pace.

The Demon Lord's eyes flick from left to right. Occasionally, he'll spot an angel flying overhead and go still, pretending with all his might that he's nothing more than a lumpy piece of grass, something no angel should bother investigating.

"Sheesh... is this even the way back to the portal?"

"How should I know? I got turned around too many times because of you. Left is right and right is left. If we make it outta here alive, I'm gonna knock your friggin' block off."

"You can't knock my block off, stupid. We're the same guy."

"Bullshit! Don't lump me in with the likes of you! You're a creep who has a fetish for pigeon girls. Disgusting."

"Quiet. Stop yelling, moron. You'll draw attention to us."

"Don't call me a moron, stupid. I blame you for everything."

"Piss off."

"No, you piss off."

"No, you!"

"You!"

Like two unruly children, Davook argues with himself over and over. He weaves back and forth from a civil conversation to one of absolute stupidity without missing a beat.

"Oy. Hold on. What's that, over there?"

"Don't go changin' the subject, you lousy-"

"Nah, I'm serious. Look!"

Davook slows to a stop and narrows his eyes as he spots a dozen angels with glowing eyes all standing in a circle around a solitary figure sitting cross-legged on a large, flat rock. Hercules, the Infinity King, stares emptily forward as his mind stretches out to see through the eyes of his two mightiest pawns.

His hands sit pressed together, and he splays his fingers out like a pair of spiders dancing with one another. Every so often, the Titan moves his hands to cast one or two spells.

"Who's that?" Davook asks.

"Dunno," Davook answers. "Seems like someone important. Must be why them pigeons are protecting him."

"Mmm... let's get a closer look!"

"What?! No way! He's dangerous! That sucker's at least fifteen-feet tall! If he decides to attack us..."

"Right, but think about it this way. He's sitting in the middle of nowhere, half a mile away from the battlefield. There ain't nobody else out here, so this must be a safe spot. If we hide behind that big rock over there, we can wait until this war is over, then sneak out of the portal and go home."

"Holy crap. You're dumber than I thought! The portal's probably on the other side of the battlefield! How do you plan to sneak past the pigeons to reach it?"

"Meh. We always find a way."

"No, we don't! If you even think about taking a single step toward this Titan, I'll- hey! Are you listening to me! Knock it off!"

Davook ignores the voice of dissent. He sneaks toward a large boulder several hundred feet from Hercules' meditation rock. Once he hides behind it, he breathes a sigh of relief.

Nice. We made it.

Made it WHERE?! If that Titan so much as sneezes in our general direction, we're dead meat! Why do you always decide where we go? Now we're going to die because of you...

Due to his proximity to Hercules, Davook suppresses his voice and keeps his two selves inside his mind. He peeks around the side of the boulder and watches as Hercules' eyebrows curl together in concentration.

Relax. The big guy's harmless. If he starts moving, we'll just lay low. There ain't nobody who will bother us here.

Suuure... biggest bunch of shrakh I ever heard...

Oh! What's that?

One of Davook's voices cries out in surprise. His eyes narrow onto a pale shadow shifting along the ground. It darts under the boot of one of Hercules' guardian cherubs, then stays still for several seconds.

What are you looking at? I don't see anything.

The shadow! How did you not see that?! It was like a long spindly spider-leg. I saw it jump from that tree over there under a pigeon's boot.

Great. Now you're hallucinating. I always knew I was the only sane one, but I didn't expect you to stray into a fantasy-land.

I'm not lying! I saw the shadow move! I swear!

Suuure.

Davook bickers with himself even more as he locks his eyes onto the cherub's boot. The armored warrior flicks his eyes toward Davook's rock and spots the strangely shaped lump of grass hovering slightly off the ground.

Shrakh! You imbecile! That big-ass pigeon sees us!

Uh, oops.

Davook turns pale as the cherub reaches for its sword. However, at that moment, Berith, the Emperor of Backstabbing, makes her move.

* * *

Berith coils strength into her body.

This Titanspawn nearly wiped out all of Lucifer's forces singlehandedly. I won't stand a chance against him in open combat. My only hope for victory is to end this with a single, decisive strike!

Hercules sits perfectly still and focuses on manipulating his mightiest pawns, the two Archangels of Courage and Creation. With his mind elsewhere, he gives no thought to the signal from one of his cherub guards regarding the weak little Demon Lord peeking out at him from across the field.

Suddenly, Berith lunges!

Her body transforms into a spear of darkness. Using every ounce of her Emperor-level strength, she pounces from her hiding spot and aims for Hercules' head.

At the last millisecond, Hercules detects the bloodlust aimed at him. He turns to search for its origin, only to recoil in surprise as blinding pain detonates in his brain.

SKRIK!

"AAAAUGGHHH!!"

Berith's attack tears out a massive chunk of Hercules' skull. Chunks of his cerebellum fire off in every direction, causing his glowing eyes to return to normal. Berith sails into the distance and reverts to her demonic form, then lands in a crouch fifty feet away.

"Shit! I missed! I almost killed the fucker, too!"

Hercules jumps up and grabs hold of his head. Blood and brains squeeze through his left hand as he clutches the gashed-out chunk of his skull. "GAAAUGH!! AHHHH!!!"

Unable to control his powers, all of Hercules' guardian cherubs fall to their knees and howl in pain. The twelve angels and their Titan master stumble around and thrash like rabid dogs as his injury transfers to all of them.

Berith narrows her eyes. "He's weakened! I have to try again!"

Once again, she enters her shadow-form and morphs into a spear of darkness. The Emperor of Backstabbing lunges at Hercules and aims for his head, but the Titan falls forward at the last second while howling in pain. He inadvertently dodges Berith's attack, causing her to sail overhead and land on the ground less than fifty feet from Davook's hiding position.

Berith reverts to her demonic form and screeches angrily. "Shit! I can't hit Hercules' head when he's thrashing about like that!"

She turns her gaze toward the Titan youth while ignoring the presence of the weak, pathetic little Demon Lord huddled behind a boulder not far from her.

Davook's eyes widen in surprise.

Whoaaa! Is that Berith?! Spawn of a broodmother, she's FINE!

Stop thinking with our demonhood, you damned sex-maniac. Berith just pissed off that Titan! Once he regains his senses, he'll come for us next!

No way! Did you see that attack? She blew off a chunk of his fuckin' head! That Titan's dead meat. Just you watch. Berith is Valac's second in command. There's no way she'll lose to some muscle-head.

* * *

Oblivious to Davook's raucous thoughts, Berith runs at Hercules and begins motioning with her hands. Countless shadows fall from her body, enter the dirt, and rush toward Hercules from underground. As the Titan youth thrashes around, dozens of shadow-spears burst out from under him like a pitfall trap.

Shik, shik, shik!

Each spear skewers the twenty-foot giant as if he were a mammoth, one which was being hunted by several Cro-Magnon warriors. Hercules gasps as his battle instincts take over. A realization hits him.

Someone is attacking me! I'm about to die!

Hercules' eyes jolt open. Despite the crippling pain coursing through his brain and body, his eyes swing toward the Demon Emperor leaping at him. Berith wields a shadow-blade summoned from darkness. She pulls back to swing it at Hercules' neck, but at that moment, her gaze meets the Titan's.

Both warriors stand, transfixed, for the slightest breath of time.

Berith's soul trembles. Oh, no.

Without skipping a beat, Hercules swings the flat of his hand at the tiny little demon woman.

SLAP.

Like a rhinoceros stomping an ant, Hercules' demi-god-level strength batters Berith with soul-crushing power. The Emperor of Backstabbing flings backward, unable to stop herself.

Crack! Thump!

Berith strikes the ground with such force that her spine snaps in half. She bounces off the dirt and smashes into Davook's boulder with the speed of a jet airliner.

CRUMPF!

The hardened obelisk explodes into powder. Berith's neck snaps as she comes to a stop. Her movements cease, and all her energy disappears.

Davook's heart pounds like the drums of war.

Oh... oh devils... he killed her... that Titan killed Berith.

Davook's second voice speaks in a whisper. I told you he would. We'll be next.

I don't want to die.

Neither of us do.

Hercules gasps for breath. Despite the incredible feat of strength he pulled off only a moment before, his body sags under the agony of all the crumbling shadow lances piercing his vital organs.

"H-healing... I need... healing..."

With Berith's defeat, the shadow-lances melt into nothingness, unable to sustain themselves under Heaven's Light. Hercules flops to the ground and clutches his head.

"Uzziel... forget... the Titan woman... come to me... heal me... I'm dying..."

As Hercules' breathing comes in ragged gasps, Davook slinks toward Berith's body.

Maybe Berith is still alive.

Probably not. We should get out of here while we still can.

But that Titan is weak! If we could take his power and kill him...

Idiot! He killed a freaking Demon Emperor with a single slap! Let's go. We'll die if we hang around here!

Alright, alright! But... wait... before we go...

Aw, c'mon, now what?

Davook creeps toward Berith. When he arrives at her side, he's surprised to see her chest moving. She swallows several shallow breaths, one after the other. She stares ahead, wide-eyed, at the ground, seeing nothing at all but a vast emptiness.

Whoa. Berith's alive?

Barely. She's taking her last breaths.

We should help her. I wouldn't mind a beauty like her owing me a 'favor,' if you know what I mean. Belial can heal her.

She'll die soon. Forget it. Better to look out for ourselves.

Ugh. You're such a spoilsport. Fine! At the least, I'm going to copy her power.

WHAT?! Lords and Barons and Pigeons are one thing, but she's a Demon Emperor! If the others find out... they'll kill us!

Maybe. But... even if they try, so what? Her power is awesome. She can turn into shadows and shit. Imagine if WE had that ability. Sneaking around would be the easiest thing ever.

...Hm. Well, when you put it that way...

Davook smiles. As Berith chokes out her last breaths, the Demon Lord places his hand on her face.

"Hehehe... we thank you for the meal..."

Davook doesn't offer a drop of compassion for his fellow demoness. Ties, bonds, loyalty, none of those words mean a thing to him. Only his selfish desires dictate his attention.

After a moment, a fountain of mana rushes into Davook's soul. His eyes widen as he stares in disbelief at Berith.

"Spawn of a- I can't believe it! This... this synergy! It's perfect!"

"Wow! We've never experienced anything like this before! It's not like our other powers! I always thought Master Orias's power was best suited for us, but his isn't even an afterthought!"

"Shadow manipulation... it's perfect! Incredible! Hahahaha!!"

Davook displays his teeth as he grins evilly at Berith's beaten, broken body.

"If you weren't about to die, we'd love to show our... appreciation. We'll never forget your gift to us. Have a wonderful sleep, beautiful. Hehehe..."

Davook leans over Berith. The last sensation she feels is a sharp pain entering her eye. Davook impales her with a shadow spear, instantly killing her.

"Nice. Let's make like a bird and fly the frick outta here. Reaching the portal should be a cinch, now."

"Damn straight. Hell, since Berith's dead, I bet nobody would mind if we took her body. It's not like she can fight back anymore, right?"

"Ugh. I should have known you'd talk about that shit again. Leave the dead to rest!"

"Aww, c'mon! I'll take the top half, and you take the bottom!"

"What does that even MEAN?! We're the same demon! Wait... hold on. Is Berith... moving?"

Davook's eyes flick to Berith's corpse. Despite the brains gushing from her skewered eye, Berith twitches her hand. Suddenly, she jumps to her feet. Her left eye morphs into a pitch-black onyx as death energy radiates from her body.

"Gah! You despicable little shit! You killed me!"

Davook shrinks away. "You're alive?! Uh oh."

"Only because of Valac! Worthless little wretch! I'll make you regret-"

Suddenly, Berith stops. Her eyes lose focus. She stumbles forward and clutches her chest.

"What? No... no... Master Valac! He's-"

Before the words leave her mouth, Berith falls forward and flops lifelessly onto Heaven's Soil. Her body ceases its movement, and a moment later, scatters into ash.

Davook's eyes become as wide as saucers.

"Um..."

"I think she's dead."

"Should we...?"

"Yeah. I don't know what killed her, but let's not let ourselves be next."

"Fine by me."

A shudder runs down Davook's spine. He flees the scene of the crime, leaving her ashes to scatter into the wind.

Uzziel... forget... the Titan woman... come to me... heal me... I'm dying...

Hercules' command comes to Uzziel like a whisper spoken in a sleeping woman's ear.

The Archangel of Creation blinks slowly. A profound sense of drowsiness fades from her mind. She raises her head to see a seventy-foot Titaness trapped inside a transparent green chrysalis.

"Huh?! Who is this?!"

Uzziel jerks back in surprise, only to stumble as she finds her feet rooted in Heaven's Soil.

Unsettling confusion befuddles her mind. She looks down and gasps as she realizes her entire body has partially turned into the form of a giant oak tree. Her delicate feminine hands now creak and crack from the bark continuing to grow. If left unchecked, she might fully transform into a tree and leave her angelic body behind.

Apprehensive and anxious, she quickly motions with her hands and suppresses the nature energy flowing from her spirit. Within moments, her natural energy diminishes to nothing, and she reverts back into her angelic form.

However, she does not release Ivaldi.

"Who is this Titan woman? What happened to Michael? My last memory was... was..."

Uzziel falls silent. She tries to remember what happened to Michael and the demons, let alone who the Titan before her is, but she can't remember. Ever since Hercules transformed her into Yggdrasil, the power enveloping her body forced her consciousness into a deep sleep. Only once his control waned has she regained her alertness.

Suddenly, a powerful command erupts in her mind.

COME TO ME! I AM DYING!

Uzziel clutches her chest as nausea hits her in waves.

"Aaooo... it's Hercules... I cannot ignore his commands. Nnn..."

Uzziel disregards Ivaldi. She dives underground and begins swimming toward her Titan master. Despite several miles separating the two of them, Uzziel arrives at his side within half a minute. When she does, she jumps out of Heaven's Soil and lands in a crouch only a few feet from the fifteen-foot giant. Hercules rests on his knees and clutches his head as he swoons back and forth.

"Hurry... there isn't... much time left."

Uzziel stares at Hercules for a moment. Despite his command booming in her ears, she resists his weakened soul with her own, using her superior Archangel lineage to stand against him.

"I know not what thou dids't, Hercules, but I am not thy slave! I am an Archangel! However, I will never allow someone to perish while I can still heal them. In exchange for my services, I will take away thy mightiest weapon. No longer shall thou ordereth me around like a beaten dog!"

A spark of anger and humiliation ignites in Uzziel's eyes. She motions with her hands and then grabs Hercules' face. Within seconds, the damage to his body, skull, and brain reverses. He returns to peak condition as if Berith had never struck him.

However, something else disappears.

Hercules staggers backward and lands on his ass. Despite his supreme ability to keep his emotions in check, the Titan's eyes bulge as he searches his soul.

"W-where is it?! Archangel whore! What did you do with my divine power?!"

"I sealed thy soul manipulation," Uzziel replies, her voice as cold as ice. "Thou cannot perish, today. Thou shalt survive to atone for thy sins! However, I will not allow thee to control the minds of anyone else ever again!"

Hercules gnashes his teeth. He jumps to his feet and clenches his fists. "Ignorant wench! Without my control, what do you think will happen to the Undying?! They will return to Valac's side!!"

Hercules gestures toward his twelve Undying warriors. As he does, he lowers his gaze to look at them, and then pauses.

"Wait... what is this? What happened?"

All twelve of his former minions slump against the ground, dead. Their bodies fizzle into ash, leaving nothing behind.

Hercules snarls at Uzziel. "You! What did you do?!"

Uzziel shakes her head. "I have nothing to do with their deaths."

"Liar!!"

Hercules swings his fist at Uzziel, but she quickly raises her hand and summons a wall of vines to protect herself. His fist impacts the plants like a baseball landing in a catcher's glove. His strength does nothing against their defense.

"I must go," Uzziel says, coldly. "I need to find my brother."

"Your brother? Ah! Michael!"

Hercules jerks his head toward the horizon. A faint blood-red mist continues to solidify in the distance. Slowly, but surely, it congeals into a tower of demonic mana.

"Forget everything! Michael is over there," Hercules says. He points at the demonic energy in the distance. "That one Demon Emperor... Diablo... I killed him, but he... he... something happened. We have to stop him!"

Uzziel evaluates Hercules for a moment. "I'll do what I can."

The Archangel falls backward and lands atop Heaven's Soil. The grass envelops her like a giant water-bed, and she travels underground again, leaving Hercules to his thoughts.

The young Titan presses both hands against the sides of his head. "That damned Archangel! She fought me the whole time, and now she's sealed my soul manipulation! Damn! My victory was supposed to be guaranteed! Now that it's come to this, I need to leave Heaven."

Hercules shoots a glance toward Berith's corpse. Nothing remains of her body but a pile of ash, identical to the ones left behind at Hercules' feet.

"I lost everything. Megara is dead. My people are nearly extinct. My ultimate power has been sealed. What can I do, now? Without my Army Manipulation, I only possess the strength of one Titan. I'm vulnerable. I won't be able to rely on any bodyguards to protect me."

"Bah! I don't need bodyguards. I don't need anyone! Even among the Titans, my strength is ten times greater than those still walking the mortal plane. Not even my father could defeat me if our fists collided! I will not fall prey to another assassination attempt as long as I keep my eyes peeled for trouble."

Hercules turns his head to the west. The battlefield continues to clink and clang with the sounds of steel and bone striking one another, but everything sounds distant, like a faded memory scattered to the winds of time.

"Father... why did you keep Valhalla's existence a secret from me? Why did you hide knowledge of the surviving Ancient Titans? Only by combing through the memories of the Archangels have I learned what I've lost. If I die, I will not enter the Great Hall, nor will I see Megara and the others who have perished to the demons. Is this my punishment? I only wished to save our people from extinction and ensure our survival. Why do you hate me, your only son, with such a fiery rage?"

The young Titan takes a minute to reorient himself. His thoughts and plans, now scorched to ash, leave him no option but to retreat.

"I could stay and fight. At the least, I might be able to help push the demons back... bah! I care not whether the demons or angels perish! The only beings who matter are Titans! Our blood is not tarnished with vile atrocities and genocide. If I am to continue reigning as king, I must first defeat Ivaldi, dethrone my father, and take my people to- hm?"

Hercules pauses.

A sensation of danger sweeps over him. From the south, a sound like thunder reaches his ears. Rapid footsteps kick up a cloud of dust. Bael, the Duke of Pain, chases after Azazel and Azog as they fly through the air.

Hercules blinks in surprise. "The Duke of Pain? Ah! That little rat... he's the one who ruined everything for me. If it weren't for him turning into that damned monster, I would have held demonkind's fate in the palm of my hand! Hah! At the least, I should thank the Creator for delivering him to my fists today! If I cannot rule Titankind, I can at least exact my revenge against the bastard who humiliated me!"

* * *

Meanwhile, Bael charges toward Hercules, but he doesn't notice the Titan standing amidst a field of ash. Instead, Bael's eyes fixate on the two Demon Dukes flying overhead, weaving and dodging his attacks.

"Stand still, ya little slippery cunts! Hiyah!!"

Bael twirls his newly created mace over his head. The one-ton flail jumps into the air and swings toward Azog. Azog's blue dress flutters crazily as the Duke dives down and to the left, narrowly evading Bael's attack. Mjölnir strikes Heaven's soil with enough force to blast half a ton of rock and dirt into the atmosphere.

"♫C-come on, Bael! Stop! There's no need for us to fight!♫"

Azazel follows after Azog. "♫We'll stop teasing you! Put down the flail, and we'll talk, alright?!♫"

"No more talking!" Bael screams. "I'll flatten you little pricks into mulch! C'mere!"

Suddenly, Bael's eyes flick toward a flash of movement. He barely catches sight of a massive Titan falling from the sky as Hercules leaps at him and raises his fist.

BOOM!!

Hercules slams his fist into Bael's chest and pounds the Duke of Pain backward into Heaven's Soil.

"Hahaha!! I get to rip apart the fabled Balrog with my bare hands! What an excellent gift Fate has given to me!"

Bael stares into the sky. A small crater formed around him obscures his vision, but his breathing remains steady.

"...What just hit me?"

Bael grunts for a moment, grabs the side of the pit, and pulls himself out of the ground — when he spots Hercules, his demeanor shifts. "Oh, hey! It's you! That, uh, big guy! The tall one! Tall-guy!"

Hercules stops laughing. "Aye, we meet again, and today I'm going to kill you, little demon. No more tricks. Now that I know about your incredible power, you won't catch me offguard like you did before! I want you to transform into that monster again, so I may give you a taste of my fury. I won't lose this time!"

"Monster? You mean... my uh... Balrog Form?"

Bael scowls.

"Hell no! I ain't morphing ever again! Nuh-uh! Not even once, you little squirt! I don't need to become a Balrog to beat you!"

Hercules punches his palm. "Do not disparage me, Bael! I won't be satisfied unless I crush you at your peak!"

"Hah! I don't even need to pee, dumbass!"

"I said 'peak,' you little..."

"Stop talking about my pee-pee!!"

Azog and Azazel hover a hundred feet above. Azog shoots a look of disbelief at his pink-wearing brother. "♫I believed it absurd when Bael punched a hammer into submission, but that wasn't the end of his limited cognition!♫"

Azog nods. "♫We've done enough for today; we've followed Valac's orders. We brought Bael here, so we must leave him to create disorder!♫"

"♫Master Valac sees all, for everything is a part of his plan. Hercules stood in his path, so Valac made Bael his hitman!♫"

"♫How wise he is, how far his eyes pierce! Master Valac is a reliable leader, a warrior truly fierce.♫"

"♫Hm, but I cannot sense Master Valac anymore. Perhaps he's withdrawn from Heaven, since he finds the battle a chore?♫"

"♫That might be the reason, yes, it might be the case, so perhaps we should return home and visit our master's cave!♫"

Satisfied with the fight brewing below them, both brothers take to the skies, leaving Bael and Hercules to settle their differences.

"I'm not going to transform," Bael growls. "Last time, I lost my cool. This time, I'm in control."

Hercules lunges at Bael. He swings his fist at him and bashes Bael with his godlike strength, forcing the Duke of Pain backward. Bael catches Hercules' fist and grinds his feet into the ground, preventing himself from flying away. Even at eight-feet-tall, Bael is still a toddler compared to the fifteen-foot giant towering over him.

"Don't mock me, demon! You stand no chance of defeating me without transforming! I'll make you pay for ruining my plans!"

Bael rolls his eyes. "Hit me all you want, chump. You can't hurt me. I'm tough as hell. This is one fight you ain't winning."

"We'll see about that!"

Hercules rears his foot back. Before Bael can react, Hercules kicks the Duke with all his strength, transforming Bael into a fleshy football. Bael vanishes from Heaven's surface and rockets into the air.

"Oh, fuck, fuck, fuuuck!"

Bael careens helplessly through the sky. Without any flying abilities, he can only watch as the ground rushes at him.

Crash!

Bael plows into the dirt like a heaven-bound missile. He kicks up a massive wave of soil before coming to a rest on his back.

"Ptuh," Bael spits dirt out of his mouth. "Alright, asshole. That does it. No more Mister Nice Bael."

Bael jumps out of the dirt. Half a mile separates him and Hercules.

"Alright, Big Bonk! I need you!"

Bael holds up his hand. Mjölnir senses his call and immediately jumps away from Hercules to rush toward its master.

Slap!

The flail's handle lands in Bael's open palm. A second later, Bael condenses power into his legs.

"Hup!"

Bael leaps toward Hercules. Despite his lack of wings, Bael's muscles give him incredible leaping abilities.

"Eat shit, Titan-pup!"

Bael swings Mjölnir over his head. The one-ton spiked wrecking ball soars into the sky and plummets toward Hercules like a metallic meteor.

Hercules raises his arms to shield himself.

"You don't scare me!"

THOOOM!

Mjölnir slams into Hercules at the speed of sound. A hundred bones shatter in Hercules' body. He falls into his shadow under the weight and power of the divine weapon; pulverized into mush.

Bael lands a few feet away. He skids to a stop and grimaces as he spots the young Titan entrenched in Heaven's Soil. Both of Hercules' arms lay splattered across his chest, with Mjölnir resting atop them. Several ribs stick out, and his legs lay bent at an awkward angle.

"Hng... gnn..."

Hercules groans as waves of pain flood through his body.

"Hu... happ...en...ed?"

Bael winces. "Spawn of a broodmother. Jeez, sorry, kid. I didn't mean to hurt'cha that bad. Shit. Are you gonna die? Here, lemme pull Big Bonk offa ya. I don't even know my own strength, sometimes."

Bael grabs Mjölnir's chain and pulls the one-ton flail off Hercules' chest. The Titan groans in relief as the immense pressure vanishes. However, blood begins to seep from his freshly opened wounds.

"Kuh... hurts... you... bastard."

Bael rubs his head sheepishly. "Dude, seriously, I'm sorry! Didn't mean to hit'cha that hard. I just wanted to teach ya a little lesson, ya know?"

After a moment, Bael frowns.

"Hey, come on. Don't give me that look! It's your own damn fault for takin' a swing at me! You had a smackdown coming; I'm just the guy who gave it to ya!"

Bael grumbles to himself. But as he watches the life ebb from Hercules' body, a sense of pity overtakes him.

"Alright, alright. I'll see if I can find someone to heal you. Ain't no sense in having me be the only strong guy around here. Besides, it's not like- what was that?"

Bael's attention wavers. He swivels his head toward the battlefield, where the sounds of battle have faded away. No longer do the clashes of swords and claws meet with the screams of pain and death. Instead, the two sides come to a standstill to gape at an enormous, bloody cloud of demonic energy gathering around the center of the battlefield.

"What... the... hell?"

Bael, a demon who has never sensed or controlled magic even once in his life, feels a chill descend on him. Unimaginable waves of magic power radiate from a single spot in the center of all the combatants.

"Okay. That can not be good. We'll talk later, big guy. I've... gotta go."

Hercules whimpers pitifully. He watches, unable to stop Bael, as the Duke of Pain leaves him behind.

"No... please... don't... leave me... here..."

* * *

The Archdemon awakens.

Part 164: The Unending Flame

Camael, Raphael, the four Valkyries, and Neptune scrutinize each other for a few moments. Eventually, Camael turns to look at her brother.

"We must pursue the Reaper. Time is of the essence. I've narrowed down his hiding place to a mountain range not far from Sinai. It seems Valac hid under our noses for millennia."

Raphael nods. "A sound suggestion, I will open a portal there. We must overwhelm the Reaper with our collective might. Give me the location."

Camael nods. She motions with her hands and summons a marble-sized ball of light, then tosses it to Raphael, who absorbs it into his spiritual energy.

"Hm. Hm, yes, I see — the Niflheim mountain range. 'Tis scarcely five miles from Sinai, as the crow flies. Hmph. No wonder the Reaper was capable of sending his clones to us at such high speeds."

"I know not the Reaper's exact location," Camael says, "but I do know he is somewhere underground. We mapped out the nearby caves after we first arrived on Earth. 'Tis a vast, intricate system of tunnels and underground streams. Of course, once we draw near, we should be able to follow Valac's death energy. He will not stay hidden for long."

"Indeed," Raphael replies. He flicks his gaze to the Valkyries. "Hyacinth has yet to recover from her injuries, and Uzziel is preoccupied with assisting Michael. We will have to exert extreme caution to prevent casualties. I want the three of thee to follow after Camael and- hm? Catherine? Is something the matter?"

Raphael's eyes flick to his sister, the Valkyrie of Fire. Catherine glowers at him with fury-filled eyes, sending a pang of shock through his body.

Why does my sister gaze upon me with such anger? Have I done something to offend her?

Catherine traces her sword through the air to form letters.

Raphael. We talk. Privately.

Her words carry an ominous tone. Raphael shoots a questioning glance at Camael, but the Archangel of Divination merely shrugs.

"Ah... very well, then. We haven't much time to spare. Let us chat behind that rock over there."

Raphael gestures toward a few trees torn halfway out of the ground only a few hundred feet away. A giant boulder lies nestled among the shrubbery, offering a moderate level of privacy. Here, on the southern edge of the battlefield, few demons have the time or luxury to bother with the Archangels and Valkyries.

Catherine nods. This won't take long.

* * *

A minute later, Catherine and Raphael arrive at the rear of the rock. Raphael's expression betrays his internal struggle to guess what's distressing his younger sister, but his shock triples when she finally speaks.

I'll fight the Reaper. Alone.

Raphael takes a step back in surprise. "W-what?! Dids't thou pulleth me aside merely to speak nonsense?! What self-destructive thoughts have addled thy brain, Catherine?"

Catherine sets her jaw. I remember everything, Raphael. All of it. Thy half-cooked lies. Thy failed promises. Eternal peace, thou predicted. What peace? Only war. Look around us. Death and suffering. Your fault.

Raphael's shock shifts to discomfort, and then to anger. "I see. What happened? How did my seal break?"

Valac tried to kill me. I fought back. Thy mental seal shattered. Nothing remains.

Raphael's anger dissipates. He closes his eyes and sighs. "Haah... so it was like that. I... I'm sorry, sister. Of all the Cherubs, thou were the one who argued most in favor of the memory-wipes. I... I never expected things to reach the point they have today."

But they did. How have we changed? Millions of years, passed. Our bloodthirst remains. We continue to enslave. We continue to kill. Thy seals did nothing! This war is thy fault!

Catherine clenches her hand into a fist. Thou hads't one job. End the bloodshed. End the violence. Thou were our guide! I've recovered my memories. What if Michael follows? What if Uzziel does?!

Raphael's eyes harden. "I won't allow that."

Of course not. Thy 'heroics' are limitless. Slaughter Michael, butcher Uzziel. Do as thou always have. Continue failing, until-

"That's enough."

Raphael waves his hand at Catherine.

"I won't hear another word. Come, sister. I will reinstate the seal. There is no need to dwell on our past mistakes."

Raphael takes a step toward Catherine, but her sword suddenly dances through the air, tracing letters in the air rapid-fire.

No! Our failures have returned! Open thy eyes, Raphael! Look around! Thy promises meant nothing! The demons rampage. Our people fall! Thou have failed. Now, I will take over. I must complete this journey. I will kill Valac, alone.

Raphael falters. His confidence dissipates as he tries to make sense of Catherine's request.

"Tis impossible for thee to defeat the Reaper by thyself, Catherine. Stop speaking nonsense. Camael and I will go with thee, and-"

No. Thou will not.

Catherine opens her palm. A small flicker of fire appears above her hand. It hovers for a moment, before dissipating.

I require no assistance.

Raphael's eyes widen. A look of horror spreads across his face as he realizes what Catherine intends to do.

"No... no! I won't allow it! I've lost too many brothers and sisters today! Thy plan is suicidal! Imbecilic!"

Catherine closes her eyes. A single tear squeezes from them.

I remember, Raphael. I remember everything. What Michael did. He killed them for me. I was to ascend. To become an Archangel. Did Michael love me? Did I kill for him? For me? I tried to love him. I murdered anyone he ordered. But... Michael used me. I was his weapon. His tool. Nothing more.

Raphael falls silent. He watches as Catherine struggles to suppress her emotions. She fails, and tears stream down her face.

Muriel and Cassiel perished. Why? Because of my selfishness. Jörmungandr should have slain me. I cannot continue living. I must sacrifice myself. For them. For everyone I hurt. I will kill Valac. I will save our people. That is my last act.

Raphael lowers his eyes.

"Oh, sister. If only I had known how much pain thou felt. To blame thyself to this extent..."

Catherine sucks in a deep breath. She wipes her eyes and clenches her sword with both hands.

Raphael. Promise me something. Michael must never remember. He mustn't revive his hatred. His anger. We don't deserve love. We should both perish. However, I can't accept that.

Catherine continues. I will suffer Michael's sins. I will remember for him. I will redeem him.

Raphael opens his mouth to protest, but the words don't come out the way he wants. He watches as Catherine sheathes the Sword From Heaven, unbuckles its belt from her waist, and hands it to him.

This blade, useless. Take it. Give to someone deserving. It won't harm Valac. Only my dragonfire will.

"Damnation, Catherine," Raphael mutters. "Why must thou act so stoic and hard of heart? Thy path is lonely, but to walk it is thy choice. If only thou were to reach out thy hand, a hundred of thy brothers and sisters would grab hold of it and fight whatever ails thee. Don't do this. Don't give up thy life for some futile... worthless notion of redemption."

Catherine shakes her head. She lightly tosses the Sword From Heaven forward and allows it to clink at Raphael's feet.

My redemption is impossible. I will act selfishly again. I will protect my family. That is all. After all... I am a monster.

Raphael stares numbly at the Sword From Heaven. He squeezes his hands into fists and sighs. "Thou art wrong, Catherine. Never once did I look upon thee as a monster. If thou art unworthy of living, then what am I? A hypocrite. A fool who chose the path of bloodshed for the sake of convenience. Even after abandoning my former ways, my sins remained. Those I killed will never gaze upon the mortal realm ever again."

Catherine nods. Likewise.

"Thou art a better child of the Creator than I," Raphael mutters. "Hmph. My sisters and brothers call me the Archangel of Wisdom... but I am a fool. A coward. I never had the resolve to give up my life for the greater good. I am neither as wise nor as compassionate as thee... a genuine warrior of the light."

Catherine shakes her head. Aye. We are both monsters. Don't compare us. Inevitably, genocide is genocide. Please, Raphael. Reflect on my sacrifice. Find peace. Thy will is iron. I couldn't accomplish thy feats. Shielding our family; while remembering our past. I'd have buckled eons ago.

Several seconds pass. Silence fills the air.

Catherine gestures away from Raphael. Summon a portal. I must leave immediately.

Raphael's expression turns crestfallen. "Have I lost all chances of changing thy mind? Camael wields Excalibur. Surely, she could..."

That weapon is incomplete. I won't rely on it.

"But..."

Raphael. Open the portal.

Catherine hardens her heart and stares at her brother with defiant eyes. No matter how he tries to plead with her, she does not back down.

Defeated, Raphael conjures a portal to Niflheim. The other angels don't notice as Catherine nods and steps through.

Raphael watches as she motions with her hands and conjures words into the air.

Farewell, brother.

Sounds don't pass through Raphael's portal. Nevertheless, he mouths his reply back to Catherine, allowing her to read his lips.

"Farewell, my beloved little sister. Thou art... truly... a saint."

Recommended Listening

Catherine strides toward the cave's entrance. Her boots press against the soft, fertile grass of Earth. No longer does the clanking of metal and bones meet her ears. Instead, the boundless, peaceful aroma and sounds of nature greet her as she heads toward Valac's domain.

Her heart beats weakly in her chest. Self-doubt and despair cloud her judgment.

Am I doing the right thing? Is it worth giving my life to kill the Reaper?

After a moment, she nods.

Of course. What use is my existence to this universe? My time is over. Were the Creator to see me today, he would question why I had survived this long. He would ask me why I had not yet succumbed to fate.

I have lived a life most heinous. I deserve the worst of endings. Despite this, my brethren will surely look upon my death favorably. They will call me a hero. They will look upon me as if I were a most righteous figure; one who lived without reproach.

...And they will be wrong.

Cassiel. Muriel. They died due to my inaction. Had I opened my eyes sooner, I might have grasped Michael's evil schemes. I might have saved countless lives. Instead, I killed, and I allowed others to kill.

I am a demon.

A Devil.

Catherine raises her hands and presses them to her eyes. Magical energy surges through her eyelids. A moment later, she lowers her palms and opens her eyes to reveal a feral, animalistic gaze. Like a crocodile, two slit-pupils of pure blackness mix with a blood-red cornea to give her the eyes of a dragon. The colors of nature fade away, transforming the life energy of the animals and bugs around her into a rainbow.

Catherine sweeps her gaze in a wide arc. She takes a moment to swallow the scenery around herself for the last time.

Jörmungandr's eyes. The key to her power. I possess her flames, and her fiery gaze. Once, my brother Samael believed her to be a peaceful creature; one that wanted nothing more than to slumber for all eternity. Perhaps, in the beginning, he may have been right. But, in the end, during our final battle... there was nothing but limitless fury contained in her bosom. Were it not for Michael, Cassiel, and Muriel working alongside me; the Original Serpent might have slain us all.

Perhaps t'would have been for the best.

Catherine's slit-eyes focus on the small opening in the side of the hill. Pitch-black death energy flows from within, exposing the presence of the Reaper and his minions. Jörmungandr's eyes give Catherine the clarity to trace his energy as if it were a part of herself.

Dragons were fearsome monsters in appearance, but... as I recall, one of them was particularly endearing to Samael. Bah. I cannot help but think of my fallen brother at times like these. How tragic for him to perish while fighting his flesh and blood. If he could see what we'd become, I wonder what he would say.

Catherine slowly walks forward. As she enters the cave, she ignites a small plume of flame in her grasp and holds it aloft to reveal the cave's layout. Her draconic eyes pierce the darkness, but she takes no chances when it comes to the Reaper.

Valac has yet to flee. In such an enclosed space, he may feel at ease knowing his clones can ambush me from any direction. Sadly, their power will prove lacking against my Dragonfire.

After a minute of walking, the cave opens up before Catherine into a vast expanse. The ground slopes downward while the ceiling curves into a dome. Catherine's eyes flick toward several small cave entrances, each of which heads off in different directions. An underground brook bubbles silently, passing over rocks and around stalagmites as it heads from north to south.

Catherine examines each of the different nooks and crannies leading to different chambers and passages. Within seconds, she locates the one from which the most death energy is radiating.

There he is.

The Valkyrie of Fire flaps her wings. She rockets toward the passage at a frenetic speed while stomping her feet. Her footsteps echo into the distance, warning Valac of her arrival.

Come to me, Reaper.

As if summoned by her thoughts, a single Reaper clone leaps out of the ground at Catherine. She turns her head to look at it, causing fire to erupt from her eyes.

FWOOOSH!

Valac's clone jumps back and screams as the mana-infused flames scorch not only his bones, but his soul to ash. A moment later, he falls to the ground, unmoving.

Catherine flinches. Her eyes water from the stinging pain of Jörmungandr's dragon magic, but her heart remains resolute.

A small amount of suffering will not deter a sinner like me. This pain is the least I deserve.

Two more clones leap at her from the right and left. They pounce from the walls like deranged ghosts trying to spook a little girl. However, Catherine slaps her chest, causing a wave of fire to explode from her body. Both clones shriek and slam against the wall, then crumble to ash.

Such pitiful attacks. The Reaper must be probing my abilities.

Catherine continues walking. The attacks from Valac's clones intensify. Three clones attack her, then four, five... soon, twenty clones ambush her with ferocious killing intent, but Catherine never falters.

The Valkyrie of Fire traces words in the air. Sending mindless monsters, Reaper? Thy defeat is inevitable.

Catherine spins on her heel and sweeps her hand in a wide arc. A torrent of flames bursts out of her palm and engulfs all twenty of Valac's clones. They fall to the cave floor while shrieking and wailing. Within moments, they melt away, leaving nothing but ash behind.

Catherine sets her jaw. Her body aches and burns as Jörmungandr's mana sears her nervous system to the point of no return. Her breathing comes in ragged gasps. The heat in the cave threatens to overwhelm her, but still, she presses on.

Come, Reaper! Unleash thy power! I'll show thee how weak thy pitiful soul manipulation is, compared to a monster from the Primordial Era!

Valac's death energy thickens into a dense, black fog as Catherine walks. Eventually, she returns her eyes to normal. Jörmungandr's eyes prove unable to see through Valac's evil aura.

Finally, the passage enlarges. A small room appears before Catherine, one illuminated by a sickly green light. Valac's lantern sits atop a two-foot-tall pedestal, with a rock placed nearby for the Reaper to rest.

Valac sits inside the cave and watches as Catherine appears.

"Ehehehe. Oh, you foolish little girl. You've come alone, thinking you could defeat the Reaper? Your bravery is commendable; so I suppose that makes you a keeper. I'd love to chat, but you've forced my hand. I'll battle you now, and kill you where you stand."

Valac motions with his hands. His three remaining super-clones bubble out of the ground and appear before him, creating a shield of hardened flesh and bone.

All three clones clap their palms together and spread out their arms. A powerful force field, one formed from death energy, spreads from one wall to the other, then encircles the three of them and Valac's main body.

Valac coughs. "Kuh-huh... to achieve my power, I gave up my mobility. I may sit here trapped, but killing you is well within my capability."

Catherine narrows her eyes. Internally, she questions Valac's words. The Reaper is trapped? Is that why he hasn't fled? He can predict the future. So, surely, he knew I would come for him.

Catherine motions to summon her dragonfire, but she falters as a sensation of danger appears from behind her. She turns around and gawks as horrible mutated aberrations stride out of the darkness. Created from Titan souls mixed with the bodies of powerful demons, angels, and monsters, these beings lack the purity of Valac's super-clones. Still, each one possesses frightening levels of raw power.

"Gehehe!" Valac laughs. "You silly fool! You've entered the serpent's lair! With your escape route cut off, you haven't a prayer!"

Catherine's shoulders lose their tension. A faint smile crosses over her face.

And here I thought he would present a challenge. I understand, now. The Reaper intends to protect his main body while overwhelming me with low-quality souls. I'm afraid I'll have to disappoint him.

A cave bear and Titan mixture lumbers toward Catherine. In the cramped hallway, the giant beast engulfs the space, making it appear truly monstrous.

"GRAAAAAAAAHRRR!!!"

A wild howl erupts from the animal's lungs. Electricity spirals around its claws. It hunches down and coils strength into its limbs to charge at Catherine, but she doesn't give it a chance to attack.

Fire spear.

