"I, uh, got in a bit of a fight." Benjamin mutters. "You should have seen the other fellow."

"Your father picked a fight with Emperor Gressil." Belial says, butting in. "He didn't win."

"Ose's brother?!" Lily gasps. "Daddy, how could you? Gressil is a terror! He's way out of your league."

"It wasn't only me." Benjamin says, shooting a mild glare Belial's way. "I also brought along a 7th Level Psion, and even the great Buddha himself."

Benjamin gestures in Buddha's direction, only to blink in surprise.

"Huh? Oh. He was just here... where'd he go?"

"Somehow, Gressil demolished the entire trio." Belial says to Lily, while ignoring Buddha's disappearance. "He beat the crap out of Creator Demila, and your father. You should have seen Benjamin's condition a few minutes ago. I think you'd have thrown up."

"Daddy!" Lily exclaims, goaded to anger by Belial's graphic descriptions. "You made it sound like you were going on a field trip, but you almost didn't come back! I was worried sick!"

"I wouldn't normally have done such a thing," Benjamin says, "but Demila and Buddha presented a picture to me of a universe that needed my helped. I only desired to keep you safe, sweet- huh?"

Benjamin pauses.

The man glances from side to side, looking slightly confused.

"Who said that?"

"Said what?" Belial asks. "Hallucinating?"

Benjamin frowns. "No. I just... could have sworn I heard a woman talking. Never mind. I think I hit my head pretty hard."

"I can call Leeroy over to check for brain injuries." Belial suggests.

"Yes, please. I'd appreciate that." Benjamin says.

Belial nods. She walks away to fetch Leeroy, leaving Benjamin alone with his daughter.

"Daddy, what are you going to do about your missing arm?" Lily asks. "It looks painful."

"No pain at all." Benjamin says. "It's just mechanical parts, sweetheart. Nothing to-huh? Who said that?"

Benjamin jerks his head around again, this time looking more concerned than before.

"Daddy?"

"Quiet." Benjamin orders, his frown hardening. "I definitely heard a woman's voice. A Psion, maybe? Could be a demon fucking with me... possibly a telepath."

Benjamin scrutinizes the crowds milling about in the Core, but none of the demons present seem to be looking in his direction. A moment later, Belial returns with the Duke of Restoration in tow.

"Sir Brown." Leeroy says, bowing his head politely. "I heard you entangled yourself in quite the troublesome matter. Mind if I look at your head?"

Benjamin nods slowly. "Yes. Please do."

Visibly aggravated, Benjamin's eyes flick around thoughtfully as he continues to assess the strange female voice he heard. At the same time, the elegant-looking Leeroy daintily presses his hands against both sides of Benjamin's head while murmuring magical incantations under his breath. Leeroy's magic dives into the human's mind, mending the visible scars that have embedded themselves into Benjamin's psyche.

"Devils." Leeroy mutters. "You have hundreds of ancient scratches, cuts, bruises, and lacerations all around the inside of your skull. Some of these are embedded so deeply that I can't heal them without a more thorough examination. If I go a little deeper, I can even see..."

He trails off, frowning as he begins to mend the worst injuries Benjamin suffered recently. Indeed, the Vanguard suffered terrible brain damage at the behest of Emperors Gressil and Lucifer.

Lily watches from the side. "Will daddy be okay?"

"Of course, of course." Leeroy assures her. "He's nothing if not a hardy bastard. Any other human would have fallen comatose tens of millennia ago if they had suffered- huh?"

Leeroy abruptly stops talking. He frowns while his eyes metaphorically bore holes in Benjamin's head. He shifts the position of his hands to try and assess different areas.

"Strange. Very strange." Leeroy says softly.

"Leeroy?" Belial asks. "Is something wrong?"

"I don't think so..." Leeroy says. "Must have been my imagination. For a second, I thought I detected a foreign entity moving about. It was probably interference from leftover Chaos Energy. Mister Brown, I believe you should take an extended rest in my care. Why don't we call up Miss Hiro to see if she can repair your arm? In the meantime, I'd like to run some tests on your brain."

Benjamin clears his throat. "Yes, yes, of course. Thanks for the help, Leeroy. My thoughts haven't felt this clear in forever. I feel like a teenager again."

Leeroy releases his grasp on the sides of Benjamin's head, then pulls away.

"Decreased cognitive skills are a common problem with soldiers who have sustained traumatic brain injuries. It seems the 'nanites' in your blood have done good work keeping you alive, but the long term damage won't be resolved easily. If you devote yourself to my medical recommendations, I believe I can increase your cognitive throughput by at least eight hundred percent over the next few weeks."

"That much?" Benjamin asks, his jaw falling slightly ajar. "Well, who am I to turn down such a generous offer? I owe you a beer."

"I'll have to take you up on that offer." Leeroy says, smiling kindly. "Until next time."

The Duke of Restoration nods his head, then turns and walks away.

After he departs, Benjamin massages his forehead. "Amazing. I never realized my thoughts were running so slowly. I thought I had simply gotten too old to function at my peak. But now I feel as if I could easily take Gressil down if we fought again."

Lily's expression turns nasty.

"Oh no you DON'T, daddy! Don't you even think of running off on some suicide mission again! I'm putting you on house arrest!"

Benjamin snorts. He rubs his daughter's head lovingly.

"Hehe. Humanity's Finest Soldier can't deny his calling. I'm a fighter first and foremost. I thought I was done fighting, but... I kind of missed the old times. At the least, I'm tired of lazing about a mansion all day. The past hundred thousand years have been... pretty boring."

"Pft." Belial chuffs. "Aside from all the succubi you've bedded."

"Are you jealous?" Benjamin asks.

"Not. Remotely." Belial bites off, before smiling at Lily. "What say you and I go catch up? I've finished healing all the wounded, and now I have some free time."

Lily nods, then waves to her father. "Alright. Bye, daddy! And don't you go running off to get in a fight again, or I'll have Beli beat you black and blue!"

Benjamin coughs. "Don't worry, I won't. Have fun..."

He grumbles to himself as he watches his little girl trot off with the Emperor of Passion, but otherwise doesn't voice his concerns.

Several long seconds pass.

Benjamin wanders off alone, his eyes flicking around as he scans the crowd.

Eventually, he licks his lips.

"Alright. Who are you. And how are you in my head?"

He speaks out loud, but keeps his voice low. He continues to scan the crowd, looking for anyone suspicious who might be telepathically transmitting words to his mind.

[Benji-boy. Don't bother. You won't find me out there.] A voice says softly, its tone vaguely seductive.

"Alright. Then what are you?" Benjamin asks. "You aren't a demon. You're... something else."

He pauses, a thoughtful expression on his face.

"The timing's too coincidental. I fight with Gressil, then a voice starts yapping in my head. He must have fucked with my brain, somehow."

[Perceptive. You're quite a powerful human.] The voice says. [Let me speak plainly. I am Desire. I am your Desire. I can give you everything you want.]

"You won't be giving me jack shit." Benjamin scoffs, turning a corner into a more secluded area in the Core. "I know what Leeroy saw. He must have seen you floating around in my head, parasite. He's going to find you and pull you out. Especially once I clue him in on what you are."

[What I am? You have no idea what I might be.] Desire taunts. [But do as you please. Try to rip me out if you like. Maybe you'll even succeed.]

"Trust me, I will." Benjamin grunts. "Don't even try to sway me with some flowery words. Now that I know what you are, nothing you say will stop me from killing you."

[You're a strong man.] Desire says. [But all men have their limits.]

"What's that supposed to mean?"

[You can't protect her.] Desire says, her tone turning cold. [Gressil can be anywhere. He can be everywhere. He has already evaded humanity's slipshod defenses hundreds of times. He walks among you when and wherever he pleases. If he wants something... he will take it.]

"Motherfucker!" Benjamin hisses under his breath, his eyes turning red with rage. "You dare threaten Lily?! If Gressil so much as touches a hair on her head, he will find out what happens when Humanity's Finest Soldier loses all inhibitions!"

[Hahaha.] Desire laughs, undaunted. [Humanity's Finest Soldier. A cute title. And you certainly caught my master unawares. He had no true concept of how powerful you were. But he does now. You won't be able to trick him a second time.]

"Don't be so sure." Benjamin says. "I killed Emperor Laplace. I can kill Gressil. The only reason he won is because his mommy saved his bacon."

[And the only reason you made it home to your little girl is because he allowed you to do so.] Desire says pointedly. [Killing you would have taken no effort.]

Benjamin pauses. His anger quickly cools as he gets an ominous feeling in his stomach.

"Don't even..."

[You have a small amount of value to us.] Desire says. [But that value is not worth much if you're unwilling to assist our goals. In any case, it's not like you will come out unrewarded... every person has a desire they want fulfilled. We will help you achieve it.]

"And what exactly is it that you think I want?" Benjamin questions.

[That is not an easy question to answer. You are a conflicted individual...] Desire purrs. [You want to live in peace. But you crave the excitement of battle. You want to watch your daughter grow up. But you are bored with your existence.]

She pauses.

[You lack a purpose.]

"And your purpose is to sow chaos in the galaxy." Benjamin growls. "Gressil wants nothing more than to spread suffering and torture and pain. Count me out."

[Don't be so hasty.] Desire warns. [Remember that your daughter's life is at stake. You cannot hide her. You cannot protect her. All that you can do is work to ensure she lives a long, healthy life...]

Despite Desire only possessing a voice, her next words come out sounding as if spoken through a smile.

[Master Gressil... you know how he enjoys breaking the minds of cute young toys. It would be a shame if that pretty little flower of yours... had her petals plucked.]

Benjamin's blood turns cold. He stares at the wall a few feet away, unsure of what to do.

"You bitch."

[Are you ready to start listening now?] Desire asks. [If not, we can always find someone more amenable to our Cause. You are not as important as you think. Our influence stretches further than you can imagine.]

The Vanguard lowers his head.

A drop of sweat slides down the back of his neck.

"I... I'll listen... to what you have to say."

[Goooood. Maybe you're not as much of a metal-brain as you think.]

Part 479: A Secret Meeting (Part 1 of 2)

A day after the events that resulted in Mephisto's defeat, on the world of Numaria, where the Hell of Punishment resides...

A host of high-ranking demons wander about in a luxurious treetop building constructed in Numaria's vast jungles. Their attitudes mild, and their thoughts unfocused, they chat with one another leisurely. Notably, not a single demon aligned with humanity's interests is present, including Belial, Kiari, or the other high ranking elites that have begun to arise. For some reason, this even includes the assorted members of the Hell of Lust, who previously planted their flags firmly in Jason Hiro's camp.

No, this meeting is only for those who must 'reluctantly' align themselves with humanity's interests in an esoteric manner, such as through the usage of the Belial Boosters. And even more interestingly, not a single demon of a lower rank has been invited today, only the Emperors and Dukes.

Despite the calm expressions of the attendees, many of them harbor suspicions. Emperor Kristoff frowns as he examines the demons present. As the last surviving Emperor of the Hell of Blood, only he and a small handful of Dukes have come. But thanks to his recent announcement to merge the Hell of Blood with the Hell of Punishment, he has recently become more entrenched in chasing Emperor Auger's desires.

Strange. Kristoff thinks. Yardrat isn't here. He must be conversing with Auger. Nobody invited Beelzebub either, since he seems to be on the Wordsmith's side. The First Hell has no more elites left. Fae is here, along with Dagon and Nymph. Gorn seems to still be in isolation, but Serena has shown up, along with Emperor Crow.

Kristoff looks for Crow's trusted subordinate, Duke Raven, but doesn't see her. He also doesn't see a single monster from any of the Hells, including the Orc Ancients.

So this event is demon-only. Kristoff thinks, while picking up a golden goblet from a nearby serving tray. Inside its confines, some stale human blood rests. Kristoff sips the plasma, his expression turning sour at its taste. We haven't been able to wring any decent blood from humanity since the Wordsmith took over. All we have now are what remains of my Hell's reserves. I could go for some Virgin Female blood right about now.

To Kristoff, this old blood tastes much like old milk might to a human. Still edible, but it sticks to his throat and doesn't have the fresh taste he craves. If he were a lower-ranking vampire, he would need to consume blood to survive, but as an Emperor, he can live for the rest of eternity without doing so.

Though, in fairness, he still craves its taste due to his own personal preferences.

As Kristoff looks around the room, he finds a curious pair of figures standing off to the side, talking with one another.

Emperors Melody and Bael.

Bael, still in Ose's body, now sports an oddly-advanced looking belt of some sort, a belt that looks somewhat demonic in nature, yet also features a suspiciously technologically-advanced edge to its appearance. Kristoff only looks at the belt for a moment, but the impression he receives is one of slight confusion.

Where did Bael obtain such a fancy-looking belt? Kristoff idly wonders, before his thoughts shift to other things.

Bael and Melody talk quietly. While in the past, Melody has always been a somewhat 'loud and proud' woman, someone always ready for a laugh, she now lacks spirit in her eyes. Her overall countenance is gloomy, most especially due to the fact that her entire Hell was ravaged and devoured by the Plague.

No longer do Emperors Shax, Murmur, Viola, or Guura walk the mortal coil.

Melody now finds herself lost and alone, her friends never again able to comfort her. No longer can she laugh with them, share her feelings, or talk about the simple mundanities of life.

At the same time, Bael also finds himself in a similar situation.

Bael's friends have all died, gone on the run, or changed in drastic ways.

Satan, dead.

Shax, dead.

Agares, dead.

Mephisto, dead.

Diablo, comatose.

Barbatos, comatose and his body enslaved by an Archangel.

Beelzebub… perhaps not quite a friend in the first place.

As these thoughts occur to Kristoff, his own mood dims considerably.

They've lost so many long-time friends, but am I any different? Wolfram and Lupus are gone. My wife is dead. My Hell is in ruins.

His frown turns into a momentary scowl of rage.

It's all because of that devil-damned Wordsmith. Everything was going FINE until he woke up! For the last six years, demonkind has suffered one defeat after another. It can't keep going on like this!

Kristoff inhales. He releases that breath and smooths out his expression, then walks toward Bael and Melody.

"…of existing, you know?" Melody says to Bael as Kristoff walks over. "Going through the motions. I don't know. Everyone else seems so motivated, but I don't know what to do with myself."

Bael nods. "I know what'cha mean, sister. I've been kinda keeping myself busy for the last week running Ose's errands, but she just keeps naggin' me. Won't shut up, the annoying broad. And things are all whack now that I'm stuck in her body-"

"Wait, you said you've been talking to Ose?" Melody asks in confusion. "Isn't Ose dead??"

Bael nods. "Yeah. She's dead."

He pauses.

"But she's also alive! Yup, right up here, in my noggin. I can see her when she's awake. Trust me, it's awful. Dumb broad never knows when to shut her yap."

Melody blinks twice.

"Are you sure you're not… hallucinating? Maybe you miss her more than you think?"

Bael shrugs.

"Maybe! I saw Satan recently too! And Shax! Yep, me and Shax were jamming out and having fun, but then he disappeared. Hm. You think I might be going crazy or something?"

Melody's eyes soften as she 'realizes' the 'truth' about poor Bael's 'hallucinations.' "It's been hard for you, Bael. I'll try to hang out with you more often. I wouldn't want you spiraling into a depression or anything..."

At that moment, Kristoff walks over to them.

"Bael. Melody. How are you two doing?"

Melody, realizing Kristoff must have heard poor Bael's sad story of hallucinating his friends back to life, gestures helplessly toward the goofy Emperor. "I'm doing okay, but Bael..."

"None of us are doing okay." Kristoff sighs, his heart heavy. "None of this is okay. Ever since the fucking Wordsmith woke up, things have been going downhill for all of demonkind."

"Yeah. Well, that's not strictly true." Melody says. "The lower ranks have been enjoying an easier time mutating through the ranks."

Kristoff snorts. "Is that what you think? That the 'Belial Booster' is a good deal for our lessers? Don't kid yourself. That Wordsmith is one crafty son of an angel. He's been systematically tearing our species apart."

Kristoff leans toward Melody and raises his eyebrows.

"Or do you think it's a 'coincidence' the Plague came to your world right after all the humans disappeared?"

Melody's forced smile disappears.

"You think Jason Hiro did something to draw the Plague to Sharmur?"

"I can't say for certain." Kristoff admits. "But that's the beauty of plausible deniability. As long as he plays dumb, we'll never be able to prove anything. You know just as well as I do how these humans work. They always lie to try and make our people fight one another."

Melody falls silent for a moment as she thinks of her long, storied history as an Emperor of one of the Seven Hells.

Countless times, a human King or Pharaoh or some other figure would sneakily craft a narrative to make the demons fight one another. These ploys were always uncovered eventually, but countless casualties came as a result of false intelligence and deceptive reports.

"Damn. I thought there must be something suspicious about the attack on Sharmur." Melody mumbles ruefully. "I just didn't think... tsk. To think I lost Viola and Guura because of some half-wit Hero bastard."

Bael scratches his head. "I dunno. It could be a coincidence. Ya know? That Hero doesn't seem like such a bad guy."

"Bael. He literally killed you." Kristoff says pointedly.

"So?" Bael says with a shrug. "The dude was pissed. We DID just kill his little girl. Wouldn't you be pretty angry too?"

Kristoff sighs. "Sometimes, I envy your easygoing nature. Nothing ever seems to faze you."

Melody clears her throat. "By the way, what's going on with this meeting? Why did Auger call together us demon leaders? And why all the secrecy?"

"I have no idea." Kristoff says. "He didn't tell me anything."

"He didn't? But aren't the two of you pretty tight now? You're even uniting your Hells..."

"We are." Kristoff says. "And yet Auger kept his lips sealed. Maybe he doesn't yet trust me enough to leak his intentions before hand."

Bael sobers up his expression. "You'd better watch out, Kristoff. There can't be any trust if you two won't be honest with each other. Auger ain't exactly the most rule-following guy I know, either."

"It doesn't really matter to me anymore." Kristoff says, his tone turning morose. "I don't have any energy left for much of anything. Not with Fenrir gone. If Auger is going to pull some stunt... then he'll succeed. I can't bring myself to care."

Bael pats Kristoff's shoulder. The two of them share weak smiles filled with sadness.

The trio have lost so many people that they've become somewhat numb to the pains the universe continues to inflict upon them.

As they continue talking, another demoness approaches, someone who proceeds to shout excitedly.

"Bael!! Buddy, you're back! Hahaha! Haven't seen you in days, big man!"

Bael turns to the newcomer. "Oh. 'Sup, Fae?"

Emperor Fae slaps Bael's back. Then she frowns.

"Wait. Should I be calling you 'big man' still? Or are you a woman now that you're in Ose's body?"

"Haven't given it much thought." Bael says, before tears begin to well up in his eyes. "But... now that I don't got Little Bael around no more..."

"No ding-dong, huh?" Fae murmurs, her tone vaguely thoughtful. "Guess you are a bit more of a girl than a guy now. I'll just keep calling you Big Guy. But maybe sometimes I'll say Big Girl! That sounds like fun!"

Bael wipes away his tears. "Being a chick ain't bad. Lots of fellas wanna hang out with me now. They get weirdly touchy, though. Dunno why."

"Do they play grab-ass?" Fae asks, her eyes narrowing to slits. "You gotta watch out for that. If any guy acts too friendly, just shove a bomb in his mouth! BOOM! That's how I make all those annoying dickheads shut up for good! Bahahaha!"

"I can't make bombs though." Bael points out.

"Mmm. Mmm." Fae nods. "Don't worry, bro! I'll help a sister out! Gimme a week and I'll make ya some porta-bombs! Then you can blow 'em up!"

Bael smiles. "Sick."

The four demons continue talking for a while, until eventually, a magical portal opens in the center of the wooded chamber. Amidst the glowing green lights, a handsome Demon Emperor, Yardrat, steps out and looks around.

"Oh?" Kristoff mutters. "Yardrat's here. Must be time to start."

However, contrary to Kristoff's expectations, Yardrat doesn't make any announcements. He instead turns his attention to one of the guests standing off to the side.

"Crow. A moment."

Emperor Crow blinks in surprise. She nods, then follows Yardrat back through his portal before he eventually closes it.

Many invisible question marks pop up over the heads of the demons present.

"So much secrecy." Kristoff says. "Even for Auger, this is a little out of character."

"Yeah. It is pretty strange..." Melody acknowledges.

They return to their previous conversation for another thirty or so minutes.

Eventually, the portal reopens, and Emperor Crow steps out, followed by Yardrat. This time though, Emperor Auger steps onto the platform, his aged and wizened appearance giving him the air of a decrepit old bastard, not unlike Duke Agares in his twilight years.

"Everyone." Yardrat says, raising his hands to grab the attention of all the demon elites. "I apologize for the hush-hush nature of today's meeting. Emperor Auger has several important matters he wishes to speak to all of you about, and we wished to keep these talks private. It would be best if none of you informed the Wordsmiths of what we're soon to discuss."

Kristoff's gaze turns solemn, as do those of the other Emperors and Dukes. The crowd draws closer to make sure they hear every word which will be spoken.

"What is this all about?" Emperor Serena asks. "Why did you call Crow into a secret discussion, but not me?"

Yardrat looks at the blind demoness. Then he looks away.

"I'm sure everyone here has heard about the happenings in the Labyrinth yesterday. You should all be aware of the cataclysmic explosion caused by Emperor Mephisto's demise. He was slain by the Wordsmith's soldiers."

Yardrat pauses for dramatic effect.

"At least, that was originally the prevailing belief. However, as of five hours ago, we have tentatively confirmed a soul resonance identical to Mephisto's still exists, proving that he did not die. He is very much alive."

Gasps escape the mouths of only a few demons. The longest lived elites merely nod, not feeling particularly surprised a Necromancer might have cheated death.

"Your proof?" Serena asks.

Yardrat purses his lips. He reaches into the folds of his robes to withdraw a marble-sized Soul Orb.

"We used a Seeing Stone to confirm. Not only is Mephisto alive... but we believe he is here, on the world of Numaria."

"What?" Melody asks. "Here? Why would he be here?"

Several long seconds pass. Yardrat's expression falls.

"We believe... Mephisto planned out his 'death.' He is pursuing the path of Ascension. He intends to break the limits of a Demon Emperor."

"Gah?!" Emperor Dagon gasps. "But that's impossible! Countless Emperors have tried! Emperor Gorn alone, how many souls has he devoured in his quest to attain the legendary rank of Demon Deity?! If it were possible, he should have done so by now!"

Dagon's incredulity contrasts with Serena's quiet acceptance.

"That logic once made sense, given our past understanding of the demonic limits." Serena says. "Until the battle against the Cherubiim confirmed there is a way to breach the Cosmic Limit. It is, in fact, possible for demons to ascend further. Wolfram proved that the rank of Demon Deity can be achieved."

"Yes," Dagon affirms, "but that happened because of a life and death situation. You forcibly broke Wolfram's limiter, and he only managed to endure for a single hour before he ultimately perished. His body and soul fell to ash!"

The casual mention of Wolfram's death sours Kristoff's mood, but he maintains a neutral expression. "Has Mephisto successfully ascended?"

This time, it is Emperor Auger himself who steps into the limelight.

"No. He is in the process of doing so. He may ultimately fail. But I warn you all... Mephisto is not a fool. He is a skulker. He is a backstabber. He is an opportunist... but he is not a rash decision-maker. Mephisto could have fled indefinitely by hiding his soul signature from the Wordsmith, yet he did not. Why do you suppose that is?"

"Because he must have had some assurances he would succeed." Emperor Nymph says.

"Precisely. Looking back, it seems obvious this must have been his goal all along. My spies tell me the Wordsmith sneaked Monster King Kar's soul off to an unknown location to try and revive him. His soul was completely drained of energy when Monster Queen Blinker retrieved it. Mephisto drained the energy and used the remnants of that useless soul as a commodity to trade for the power of the Sphinx."

Auger continues. "Furthermore, Mephisto went to great lengths to preserve the lives of the Emperors and Dukes working underneath him. He rescued their souls, which implies he has some use for their power..."

Auger pauses. He sighs.

"If I had to guess... Mephisto has uncovered proof of something I have long suspected. The path to Demon Deity is not one you can unlock via a vast quantity of souls. Perhaps, what a demon requires to ascend... is quality."

The expressions on the faces of the other demons turn to worry as they realize the implications.

"He's going to devour Yama's soul? And Zamiel, Lupus...?" Dagon half-asks, half-guesses.

Emperor Serena frowns. "If it were that simple, he would have simply done it. All of us could have done so. I'm certain the more... voracious of us... have considered such an option. Some may have even tried."

A brief pause follows.

This time, it's Bael who speaks up.

"Demons can't just eat other demons." Bael says quietly. "I only know one who did, who succeeded."

He pauses.

"Gressil."

The room's atmosphere drops a few degrees. Several demons shift uncomfortably.

"Didn't work out so good for him." Bael continues, his voice quiet. "He ate his mother, Lucifer. Then she grew out of him as a second head. Now he's a freak. A psycho who hurts others for fun."

Bael speaks not only to remind the demons present of the past they must never forget, but also to inform the younger demons who have recently ascended about the past they might not have been alive to witness.

His warning does not go unheeded.

"Indeed." Auger says softly. "That is why I regret to inform you that... there was an option all of us overlooked. The power of multiple Emperors cannot be combined easily... but it seems it is theoretically possible."

He gestures to the west.

"Mephisto is hiding here on Numaria. I not only know where he is, but I even know his exact location. We cannot afford to let his rise succeed. We have to kill him quickly."

"Mephisto is our enemy." Yardrat adds. "He became our enemy when we didn't step in to assist him when the Wordsmith's forces encircled him. By remaining silent, we've painted a target on our backs. If Mephisto succeeds in ascending, he will not spare us his wrath. We've already seen the terrifying power a Demon Deity can unleash... but unlike the humans, we do not have a Cherubiim ally. I doubt the Archangel would be amenable to protecting us."

Bael snorts. "I bet that pigeon would be happy if we bit the dust."

"So what's the issue?" Melody asks. "You know where Mephisto is hiding. If we rush in there, we should be able to kill him easily! He just lost his body. He's only a soul now! He's at his weakest."

"Indeed..." Yardrat says slowly. "But there is a... complication. The place where he resides is..."

Yardrat pauses.

"...The Stitched Wasteland."

With that declaration, the air sucks out of the room. Several demons lose some of the color in their skin.

"Oh." Melody says, lowering her head.

Seeing the expressions of fear and disgust, along with the immediate lack of enthusiasm, Auger nods softly.

"I have tried to keep an eye on Glinch's movements, over the years. But the Stitched Emperor is not someone I can control. He is a freak like Gressil. An aberration. And now I believe you should all understand the missing piece to the puzzle."

He sighs.

"Glinch is going to 'stitch' all of those Emperor souls together. Through his unique magic, he will combine Mephisto, Yama, and the rest into some sort of hybrid creature, potentially elevating Mephisto to the next echelon of power."

Melody's complexion improves. "But then, isn't that fine? We've all seen what Glinch can do, or rather, what he can't. His creations are unstable and imperfect. If you seriously expect me to believe he has the recipe for turning demons into Deities, I think you're getting a little on in the years, old man."

"Again...." Auger says slowly. "If you are skeptical, why would Mephisto not be? Do you think he is a fool?"

Some of the demons become contemplative. They look at one another questioningly, uncertain what would motivate Mephisto to go along with such a crazy plan.

Surely, he would not be so idiotic as to follow a fool's errand.

Serena's sightless eyes flicker with realization.

"The Sphinx... it was not a casual benefit he obtained." She says. "It was one of, if not his greatest motivation for allowing the human forces to attack him. Perhaps that is even one of the reasons he agreed to battle Monster King Kar during Stormbringer. He hoped to obtain the Sphinx's magic for himself."

"All distinct possibilities. I am glad we are of the same mind." Auger acknowledges. "Something about the Sphinx's unique properties might make it the ideal material for an ascension to Deity. In that case, none of us here can hope to ascend, ourselves."

Some of the Emperors look pleased about this information, realizing it means their fellow Emperors won't have any reason to attack them and suck out their souls. Others appear disappointed, as this also means the path to Deity may still be unobtainable to them.

"So what you're saying is, we need to kill Mephisto now, before he ascends, but the risks will be great." Kristoff posits. "If so, then count me in. Mephisto still has Lupus's soul. Maybe I can save her existence."

"I've got nothing better to do." Melody says. "I'm in."

Bael scratches his head. "I'm kinda bored. Guess I'll see if I can help."

Several demons direct skeptical glances his way.

"Bael, will you be alright?" Melody asks. "I mean, you don't have any magic, right? And you're not the same super tough guy you were before, so... you could die."

"It would be a shame if Mephisto obtained your soul." Kristoff adds.

"I should be fine." Bael says, directing a sly smirk toward the other Emperors. "I've been chatting with Ose. She gave me all sorts of neat toys ta' play with. Who knows?

Maybe I can still kick ass."

Serena blinks. "Ose? She's alive?"

Kristoff winces. He shimmies over to Serena and whispers something in her ear, making her expression turn downcast.

"How tragic. He even hallucinated Satan and Shax?"

"Mmm." Kristoff whispers. "I don't have the heart to tell him. Poor guy... I worry he might be going off the deep end."

"Bael may have once been physically impervious, but his psyche never was." Serena says, smiling kindly at Kristoff. "Take good care of him, Kristoff. He needs a friend in trying times like these."

Kristoff nods. "We'll lean on each other."

After Kristoff clears up the 'misunderstanding,' the other demons continue to chime in.

"I never did like that necromancer." Dagon says. "Even when I was a Duke, he always gave me the creeps. I look forward to burying him."

Each Emperor nods their assent. However, one individual does not.

"We should ask the Wordsmith for help." Serena says. "Mephisto is too dangerous for us to underestimate. If all of this is true, and if our assumptions are correct, then we might be blundering into another trap."

"There's only one problem with that line of thinking." Yardrat counters. "If Mephisto succeeds in becoming a Demon Deity, he will threaten all of humanity. The Archangel, and the Wordsmiths, will surely take action. But what if we can snuff out his life before he Ascends? If the Wordsmith assists us, don't you think he would want to take back that Sphinx power for Monster King Kar?"

The eyes of the other demons flicker with greed. They suddenly realize that this mission might not be as much about 'altruism' and 'self-preservation' as Auger let on.

"If we were to take the Sphinx's power, perhaps one of us could Ascend." Dagon says slowly, as he begins to side-eye the other Emperors.

"Or all of us." Auger says, interrupting Dagon before he can continue. "It may be within the realm of possibility."

"But what if it isn't?" Melody asks, her eyes narrowing to slits. "Who, then, gets to 'hold' the Sphinx's magic? You, Auger?"

Auger continues to smile blandly, as if he has no idea what she could be implying.

"We should wait and see if we even need to cross that bridge, Melody-dearest. After all, you should not forget that our species faces a potential extinction event. Focusing on the bigger picture should become our top priority. Perhaps it is time we elevated a leader capable of guiding us through this crisis."

"What about the First Emperor?" Melody asks.

Auger's smile widens, ever so slightly.

"What about him?"

Part 480: A Secret Meeting (Part 2 of 2)

The meeting continues. Auger's words cause many demons to raise their eyebrows.

"You think we should unite under a new leader?" Serena asks. "I agree. Emperor Gorn will make for a fine candidate."

Auger chuckles blandly, sounding unamused by her suggestion. "Emperor Gorn did not even attend this meeting, despite my invitation."

"My husband is a busy person." Serena says. "He has received inspiration for his next Face. That means when he leaves isolation, he will come out stronger than he is now. Perhaps this new Face may even allow him to ascend."

Several demons direct skeptical glances toward Serena, but none of them decide to object out loud.

After all... of all the demons in all the Hells, not one can claim to have a stronger desire to ascend than Gorn. He has devoured tens of millions of souls, paid Merits for the Wordsmith's enhahncements, and generally gone to any possible length to push his strength to the limits. While Emperor Crow might be the strongest Emperor in terms of her physical body, Gorn is without a doubt the most well-rounded with the most extreme abilities to his name.

His power is so immense that even Auger might fear him, ever so slightly.

Auger clears his throat.

"Ahem. I believe you are all laboring under a misconception. You still think we are living during the Energy Wars. We are not. The arrangements made by Satan the Devil are ancient, and in dire need of change due to our current situation. No longer can we afford the luxury of fighting among ourselves."

The old-faced Emperor schools his expression into one a parent might direct at their naughty children as he sweeps his gaze around the room.

"I'll be blunt. Your Hells are weak. My Hell has more Emperors than any of yours individually. If that were not enough, you know the unique strength of the Hell of Punishment and how my abilities can enhance it far beyond any of yours."

Auger gently spreads out his arms, as if to emphasize his open-hearted nature and magnanimity.

"Emperor Gorn is a powerful demon, yes. Perhaps even mightier than me. But in this time when we should consider consolidation, do you truly believe he possesses the same qualifications to lead as me?"

Serena narrows her eyes. She glares in Auger's direction, seeing through his ploy. But she says nothing, opting to remain silent.

"I am the Emperor of Distribution." Auger says quietly. "I collect the powers of all my subordinates, and I can shift them around in response to any threat. A single demon on a distant world can, at any moment, be granted the strength of ten Emperors. The younger among you may not be aware, but Yardrat became a terrifying foe to humanity during the Energy Wars as a result of his belief in me. He chose to accept me as his leader, and in doing so obtained immense power and versatility."

"You can also rescind the powers of any who bend the knee." Serena finally says, her icy eyes directing a glare at him. "Those who 'contract' with you will become soulbound to your whims. In my eyes, you are no better than Mephisto himself."

Yardrat steps forward. "I object to your lies! I have served Auger dutifully for 100,000 years! I have never once seen him mistreat or rescind one of his subordinates' powers. There were times of crisis when he temporarily took the power of one subordinate to bolster another, but always he returned it. You are simply incapable of looking past the bridge of your nose at the bigger picture!"

"We are demons. Trust is in short supply." Serena says softly.

"Perhaps it is time that changes." Kristoff says, drawing the gazes of the other Emperors. "Auger made a promise to me, one I believe he will keep. My Hell has bowed to him. He will not force my subordinates to contract with him. This is in stark contrast to Mephisto, who forcibly kills and soul-binds others to his whims."

Yardrat nods appreciatively. "That's correct. With my liege, you consent to adopting his customs. With Mephisto, you have no choice! You must kill him or be killed! There is no benefit to following his whims, for he will throw you away if it means saving his own bones! But by following Auger, you ensure you will always have the strength to protect yourselves when enemies show up at your door."

He continues. "Better yet, the more who follow Auger, the greater his access to a diverse arsenal becomes. Right now, he can already project an impressive amount of force to any Emperor who follows him, but there is infinite room for this power to increase. Gorn may have reached his limits, but Auger has none."

"You two flatter me." Auger says, smiling like a kindly old grandfather. "Ultimately, I believe the Seven Hells lost their way after Satan's death. Be honest with yourselves. Have we truly lived up to his legacy? We had no natural enemies for 100,000 years, so we turned to fighting ourselves. Now that the Wordsmith has begun to subvert our authority, we risk the death of our long-held demonic traditions."

Auger's smile disappears. He glares at the other Emperors.

"Are you lot... happy with this arrangement?"

Several Emperors and Dukes shift uncomfortably under Auger's withering glare. They lower their eyes to look within themselves, contemplating his words.

"It is true... we've allowed ourselves to suffer numerous defeats due to our lack of unity." Emperor Crow says. "But that does not mean you should be the one to lead us. I follow Gorn because I believe that might makes right! And Gorn is far stronger than you, Auger. Unlike Mephisto, he may even Ascend without the use of clever tricks or external assistance."

"Mmm. Gorn is stronger than me." Auger says, though his tone seems to imply he might think otherwise. "But Gorn does not care about any of you. You are all pawns to him. Even now, while we ponder matters that will surely affect our species, he avoids coming here. He does not think this meeting is of any significance. Don't you think that seems a little disrespectful?"

"Respect is earned." Crow retorts. "I will not insult you, Auger. You have many accomplishments to your name. But you only Ascended at the tail-end of the Energy Wars, while Gorn fought in those wars from the very beginning. You have no right to slander his name!"

Several demons nod along to Crow's words, directing looks of annoyance Auger's way.

"Very well, then. Perhaps you are not all ready to discuss this issue now. But do keep it in mind, moving forward." Auger says. "Demonkind's existence is at stake. We would not want another tragedy to occur like the one that befell Sharmur."

Emperor Melody's countenance darkens. She looks away from Auger, the memory of her friends putting her in a mentally weakened place.

"Well then, Crow." Auger says, changing the subject. "I suppose now is as good a time as any for you to tell the others about the proposition I made to you."

Crow nods. She turns her attention to the other Emperors, raising her blue-feathered arms in a grand gesture.

"We must account for the possibility that when we attack Mephisto, we will fail to defeat him. If such an event comes to pass, he may Ascend, and we will no longer stand a chance. Unlike Wolfram, who Ascended as a result of Serena's magic, Mephisto's rise is likely to be permanent. He will not die after one hour, so we won't have the option of stalling him or delaying for time until he self-immolates. That means that once he Ascends, he will only grow stronger and stronger over time. We will need to kill him quickly."

The Emperor of Sacrifice shrugs heavily, sighing under her breath.

"I have created a last-ditch Ritual. To be honest, I always imagined it would be useless, because the thought of getting enough Hells together to use it simply wasn't feasible. If there's one thing Auger has said that is true, it is that we should consider setting aside our differences for the sake of our collective well-being."

"What are you saying?" Serena asks, slightly confused by Crow's words. As members of the same Hell, she considers herself well-versed in Crow's capabilities and thought processes, but never has she imagined Crow could speak in such a melodramatic fashion.

"This new Ritual is known as the Ritual of Combination." Crow says simply. "It requires a multitude of demons to agree to lend me their strength in the event of a catastrophe. By combining the energies of as many Emperors, Dukes, Barons, and other demons as possible, I may temporarily gain the strength to do battle with even a Demon Deity."

Emperor Fae's jaw drops. "What?! That's amazing! Holy shit, Crow! Why didn't you bust that out when we fought the Cherubiim?! We could have kicked those pigeon's asses with ease!"

Crow shakes her head. "The Seven Hells did not trust one another enough to facilitate this Ritual's success. Frankly, it will cost you all of your mana and stamina in the short term, and I would only gain a portion of that power. It's a wasteful Ritual that will exhaust all of your fighting ability and leave you defenseless. If I had tried convincing you to use such a method when the Cherubiim appeared, do you truly think you'd be willing to become pigs for the slaughter in the mere hope I could defeat the Archangels? What if I had then gone on to kill all of you after slaying Uriel?"

Crow looks at the faces of each person present. None of them says a word.

"That's what I thought." She says. "Today, we better understand the existential threats we face. We know about the Volgrim and the Plague, now that we've had our memories restored. And we've seen for ourselves the insidious lengths the Wordsmith will go to to undermine our authority. As Auger has said... the times are changing."

Kristoff nods slowly. "If we fail to adapt, our entire species which once seemed to rule over the Milky Way will only become a footnote in history."

"We never truly ruled anything." Melody points out. "We've always come second to the Volgrim. At this point, we're simply trying not to slip to third behind the humans. I don't think we'll succeed, either. The Wordsmith is just too powerful."

The demons present furrow their brows as they realize the true gravity of the implications behind this meeting.

No longer are they fighting to keep humanity in check, but instead to preserve their existences, their sovereignty, and their lives.

"Mephisto will kill us if we don't kill him first." Auger says. "So let's discuss how we can do that."

Auger waves his hands. Mana coalesces in the center of the room, creating a shockingly realistic image of the planet Numaria. Some of the recently elevated demons raise their eyebrows at this display.

"An ability belonging to one of my subordinates." Auger casually explains. "Look here. Seven hundred miles from our current position, you can see a dark spot on the otherwise perfect beauty of this world."

Auger revolves the planet's projection so that a disturbing blemish reveals itself to those present. A huge, barren wasteland rests smack in the center of the otherwise gorgeous jungles, mountains, and rivers. So hideous is its appearance that it almost resembles a wound festering on the planet's surface, like a terrible burn mark forcefully inflicted upon a man's arm.

"This is the Stitched Wasteland where Glinch resides." Auger explains, mostly for the benefit of the newest demons. "Glinch is nominally my subordinate. I can tap into his powers and draw upon them... but only if he allows me to do so. His body is a freakish mixture of demon, monster, human, and even angel biology. He likes to 'swap' body parts, internal organs, and other extremities with those of other creatures."

Auger continues. "We have relied on Glinch several times over the millennia. While he can be considered an ally and my subordinate, he also can be considered an entirely foreign entity we only barely tolerate. He is a psychotic experimenter who will go to any length to pursue his twisted fantasies. And this is most obvious by the wasteland he has formed over the last 100,000 years."

"If Glinch does not want to see you, you cannot visit him." Yardrat says, adding onto Auger's explanation. "His Wasteland is protected by powerful creatures. They are soulbound to the Stitched Wasteland and unable to leave, but make no mistake... the strongest among them are at the same level as Demon Dukes and Emperors."

"Even more frighteningly, Glinch has assembled over a hundred of these elites to protect him." Auger says, glancing at Emperor Dagon and the other newest elites present. "A hundred. All of us combined cannot match his forces."

"What? We can't?!" Hamir, the Duke of Hailstorms, asks. "Then isn't this mission hopeless? We won't be able to stop Mephisto's rise!"

"If we had to fight Glinch's chimeras all at once in a huge battle, we would lose. He has a home field advantage more terrifying than you can imagine. But fortunately, we won't have to do that." Yardrat says.

"We can pick them off one by one, or in twos and threes." Auger says. "You might think this would enrage Glinch. You would be wrong. It may seem as if Glinch created an army to protect him, but that is not the case at all. Glinch does not fear death in the slightest. You cannot threaten him, and you cannot cow him into submission. As for his chimeras, he did not deliberately create them to protect himself... rather, they were merely the most successful experimental test subjects that he left alive to rom around the wasteland, lost and confused."

"Glinch gave his chimeras one command." Yardrat says simply. "Kill anyone who I have not given permission to enter. Beyond that, he does not care if they live or die. He has no love for, or any interest in, his old experiments."

Melody's expression darkens. "I've never spoken to Glinch before. Never seen him in person, either. I've only heard rumors... he sounds like a devil-damned psycho."

Auger sighs. "Glinch acts as Glinch pleases. The only way to get him to do anything for you is to follow his demands. Even the Volgrim have been known to bend the knee if it means making use of his talents."

"The Volgrim too?" Dagon asks in disbelief.

"The Volgrim too." Yardrat affirms.

Emperor Nymph crosses her arms. "If we move out as soon as possible, we can begin killing our way through Glinch's chimeras. But it will take time. Each one is extremely hardy and possesses a frighteningly powerful body. The option to assassinate Glinch has also been considered, but will not be taken. We only wish to stop Mephisto's ascension. We do not want to make an enemy of the Stitched Emperor. His talents are too useful."

Bael snorts. "What can he possibly do for ya? Put an actual third leg down where your 'third leg' is?"

Some of the more immature demons snicker at Bael's comment. Nymph rolls her eyes.

"No, Bael. Glinch is actually a fairly adept healer. Nowhere near the level of Belial, but she isn't on our side anyway. Glinch is quite good at patching up injuries... provided you don't mind a few troublesome side effects."

"Like growin' a third leg." Bael quips.

The other demons merely groan this time.

"We don't have time to spare." Auger says, as he begins drawing the meeting to a close. "This assault will require all of you to fight like Hell. You'll have to smash your way through Glinch's chimeras while moving with enough speed to reach and kill Mephisto."

Dagon frowns. "Why do you say 'you' without including yourself? Don't tell me the top demon of our Hell is going to just sit on his ass while we go out there and-"

Before he can finish his sentence, Yardrat's eyes flare with rage!

"INSOLENT! You shut your mouth, Dagon! How DARE you talk that way to our liege! Auger's power is what gives our Hell its superiority, you moronic SHIT!"

Nymph also jumps to her leader's defense. "Auger's life is too important for us to risk! If he were to die, it could even damn the entire demon species!"

Before anyone else can butt in, Auger raises his hands and smiles kindly.

"Yardrat, everyone, calm down. Dagon is young and immature. Let us not bully our junior. If the need arises, I will show up to personally dispense justice upon those who would threaten you. My powers work best when cast remotely, but I can step in if necessary. I would not want my cute little juniors to think less of me or my combat capabilities. Naturally, this old demon is capable of putting up a bit of a fight."

Dagon lowers his eyes. "Apologies, Emperor Auger. I spoke out of line. I shouldn't have questioned your motives."

While the other demons share their opinions on Dagon's moment of insolence, Bael scratches his head.

"What, seriously?" Bael mutters under his breath. "Don't these dummies know? Auger's a total badass. He even kicked Satan's butt once. Guess it's just been so long that everyone's forgotten what a killer the old man is, heh."

Melody glances at Bael. "You say something?"

"Nah. Just thinkin' out loud." Bael says with a shrug.

"Oh, okay." Melody says, not paying Bael's dumb rambling any mind. "You should probably sit this battle out though, Bael. You ain't got any magic. I'd cry if something happened to you."

"No sweat." Bael says, giving her a thumbs-up. "I can handle myself. Ose even made me a sweet suit of armor. You're gonna be so jealous when you see it."

Melody raises her eyebrow in a clear sign she doesn't really believe him, but she still nods. "Oh. Well, that's cool then. I'll look forward to seeing it. Just keep yourself safe, Bael."

"Can do!"

As a multitude of Hells bring their best warriors together to combat a unified threat, across the galaxy, some time has passed since the death of Confessor Vulpanix at the hands of Hope Hiro. She has not yet revived, but an emergency council meeting must take place even in the absence of her testimony regarding those events.

Dozens of the mightiest and highest ranking Volgrim from all five sub-species sit arranged in a circle, facing a projection at the center of the arena. This projection changes what it displays as the meeting progresses, first showing images of Serris and its top-secret research sites, followed later by images of the Milky Way, the battle hotspots against the Plague, and even the situation on the world of Tarus II.

All of the Five Founders attend the meeting in person. Numerous 7th and 8th level Psions also attend, though the majority of them do so virtually, as they must stay at the front lines of battle in the event of additional Plague Incursions.

High Technopaths, High Changelings, and even a handful of delegates from the Dolgrimites attend.

Among those present is the individual known as Creator Demila, who maintains a lofty air despite her somewhat low ranking compared to all the other Psions mightier than her, and the representatives of the other sub-species who have plenty of fame and accomplishments to their name.

Founder Cuanali speaks at this time, a day after the meeting's start.

"Then we are all in agreement. The Second Wordsmith poses an existential threat to our regime. We will follow the First Founder's orders and continue as planned until Hope Hiro launches his next attack."

A dismal attitude lingers in the air. The world of Serris, while not protected by any High Psions, was certainly considered a stronghold only a metaphorical stone's throw from Volgarius itself, merely a few lightyears from the homeworld. Under ordinary circumstances, Dosena herself should have been able to come to its rescue, let alone the two Executors who were dispatched to fly through the Void.

Unfortunately, Hope Hiro's attack was so brutal, uncompromising, and swift, that Serris was obliterated before anyone had time to properly react.

Now, all of its denizens have been killed, marking Hope Hiro as an enemy comparable to the Plague.

[I worry that these measures will not be sufficient.] Executor Riley states, sweeping her gaze around the arena. She levitates uprightly, with her arms crossed and her presence projecting an aura of strength in her immediate era. [We are risking everything on a gamble. Especially the First Founder's life.]

Founder Unarin slowly blinks as he listens to Riley's mild criticism.

"There is no need to worry. The Second Wordsmith is a human. He has human inclinations, human desires, and human weaknesses. The fact that he has subordinated himself to a lesser human already shows he is not as mentally formidable as many of the enemies I have battled in my lifetime. I am somewhat confident in my assessments and predictions."

Despite the shaky wording Unarin uses, even a term like 'somewhat' has a vastly different meaning for him than it would someone of lesser intelligence. Executor Riley gazes at her idol, the most intelligent Volgrim in the entire Empire, and nods.

[Of course, First Founder. It is your life to do with as you please. If you are confident in your assessments, I will not pretend to know better than you. I will defer to your judgment.]

The other Volgrim present all nod in unison.

Founder Unarin's word is Law. If he states that something will happen, only the Creator himself should have the power to prevent it from doing so.

"We will continue acting as we have, aside from following the new Hope Containment Protocols." Founder Cuanali says, her mouth-tentacles moving to accentuate her words. "I declare this meeting adjourned. Return to your posts."

The Volgrim elites all nod in unison. Psionic and technological projections wink out, vanishing quickly as they return to their duties, leaving only those who attended physically behind to shuffle or teleport out of the chamber.

Unarin stands up. He turns to look at Founder Dosena, only to pause and frown.

"Is something wrong?"

The Second Founder gazes forward, a blank expression on her face. With her arms crossed, she appears as stoic as ever, but Unarin seems to notice something out of the ordinary.

Founder Cuanali also pauses to look at the other two Founders. So does Founder Treyza, the Changeling, and Cinculu, the Dolgrimite.

[I am not certain.] Dosena says, her tone distant. [I sense something I have not sensed since...]

A pause.

[Perhaps I am mistaken. I feel as though a new Cosmic Entity is beginning to form. But its presence is weak. It will falter in its ascension and fail.]

Unarin maintains a calm expression. Only his flickering eyes tell another story.

"Another Cosmic Entity? Different from the one guiding the Plague?"

[Yes. Different.] Dosena answers.

"Hmm. What are the odds this entity could be... the Wordsmith?"

[I do not believe it is the First or Second Wordsmith.] Dosena states. [Neither is it the Cherubiim. It is something new. I will monitor its attempt at breaching the Cosmic Barrier.]

"Very well. Do that." Unarin says, before turning his attention to the other three Founders.

Founders Treyza, Cuanali, and Cinculu look at Dosena with mixtures of curiosity, interest, or utter apathy. Cinculu, in particular, does not seem to think much of the Second Founder. He turns and walks away, not deigning to speak to the others. Indeed, he has not spoken a single word since arriving.

As the huge reptilian monster lumbers away, Treyza cocks their head.

"Founder Unarin. What is this about a Cosmic Barrier?"

Unarin smiles. "Need-to-know information. If you ever need to know, it will mean a catastrophe has befallen our Empire. Dosena must handle this matter on her own, as she always has."

"Of course. This one listens, and this one comprehends." Treyza says, bowing its head politely. "This one shall return to its research. Farewell to all of you."

Cuanali lingers behind, watching as Treyza leaves. Once all the spectators have departed, leaving only the three Founders behind, Cuanali presses her tentacled fingers together.

"First Founder. I have determined that Marie Becker intends to send a large batch of Cybernites to the human homeworld of Tarus II. Should we interfere?"

Unarin frowns. "Oh? That's not like Marie at all. Didn't the Wordsmith visit her a few cycles ago?"

"He did." Cuanali confirms. "I believe he may have convinced her to help accelerate humanity's development speed. This falls under the classification of a Level III Emergency. We should not allow the humans to rapidly advance."

Unarin massages his forehead and sighs. "Haah... no, we should not. But the times are changing. The Volgrim are not as strong as in the past. The Plague presses on us from all directions. We will have to outwit these humans if we wish to someday bring them under our thumb. And right now, with Serris gone, we need help combating the Plague."

He stares at Cuanali with the same gaze a father might give his daughter.

"In war, there are many forms of battle. If one's military is not as strong as the one run by their enemy, then they may consider psychological warfare, economic warfare, or other such means. The humans are still weak and developing. We have many avenues we may yet pursue."

Cuanali nods. "I contemplate, and I comprehend. I only wish that you might be able to use your sharp mind to retrieve our Celestial Designer. Psymin Miralax is my close friend. I do not wish to see her suffer any more than she already has."

Unarin reaches out and touches Cuanali's cheek.

"And neither do I."

A moment later, they break apart. Cuanali bows her head and departs, leaving Unarin alone with Founder Dosena.

[Too much is changing too quickly.] Dosena says.

"Having trouble keeping up?" Unarin teases.

[No.]

Dosena pauses.

[I am nearing my breakthrough.]

Unarin's faint smile vanishes.

In its place, a look of deadly-serious intent replaces it.

"You're certain?"

[There is a barrier preventing me from reaching the level of High Cosmic.] Dosena slowly explains. [But I have found a weak point. I now believe ascension to the 10th Level is fully possible.]

Unarin swallows heavily. He gazes upon Dosena with hungry eyes, licking his lips as he imagines the possibilities.

"The Plague's controller has been bullying us for too long. If you can successfully ascend, we will be able to seek out the root of our enemy and tear them apart. We won't have to act defensively any longer."

[Do not get ahead of yourself.] Dosena warns. [I still require time to amass a foundation capable of shattering the High Cosmic barrier.]

"But thanks to the Wordsmith, we now know of the Cosmic Realm's existence..." Unarin says thoughtfully, looking away and stroking his chin. "The Primary Plaguehost must be hiding somewhere inside that realm."

[You underestimate the size of the Cosmic Realm.] Dosena warns him. [It is as vast as the Milky Way itself. From our initial probing attempts, I have determined that at my current level I would require one hundred thousand cycles of constant searching to scour every meter of the Cosmic Realm. Our Enemy keeps their aura hidden well.]

"And if you were to ascend to the 10th Level?" Unarin asks.

[The time requirement would be shorter.] Dosena answers noncommittally.

Both Founders fall silent for a few moments.

"Then focus on breaking your limiter. And keep an eye on whatever is giving you that 'bad feeling.' We don't want another Cherubiim running rampant."

Dosena nods.

[As you command.]

Part 481: The Hall of Heroes

Some time earlier, in a part of the Milky Way Galaxy hidden from the gods themselves...

The Hall of Heroes.

Hope Hiro's greatest construction hovers inside a void of brilliant luminosity: A golden palace of incredible size, capable of comfortably housing the thousand artifacts he seized from the Volgrim.

The Hall of Heroes resides within an alternate dimension not unlike Jason Hiro's 'Chrona Realm.' However, while Jason's special dimension has been maximally upgraded to a TDR (Time Dilation Ratio) of 250:1, Hope's has only reached a TDR of 100:1. As for why this is the case, the answer lays in the biggest difference between his realm and Jason's.

The Hall of Heroes... is filled with Heroes.

With so many powerful artifacts concentrated in one realm, Hope simply cannot accelerate the flow of time beyond a certain level without destabilizing reality and killing himself in the process. This judgment, delivered by Solomon himself, is what gives Hope the final assurance he can push no further.

After spending a few days with Solomon building the palace according to the Knowledge-Seeker's specifications, Hope finally takes a day to rest.

Inside this time-accelerated domain, a few days will only require an hour or two in the outside world. Hope strolls about with Solomon's corporeal figure, a much more realistic projection compared to the one Jason used to summon when he possessed the Crown.

"What now?" Hope asks.

"Now that we have built this Hall, you should begin a series of tasks to accelerate your learning process." Solomon responds. "I already spent six years training Jason. Inside a realm like this, you can leapfrog your other self and become a far more proficient combatant and leader compared to him."

"Right, I understand that much." Hope says, reaching out to pick up one of the artifacts at random, a pearl-like orb just big enough to fill up the palm of his hand. "I'm asking what I need to do specifically."

Solomon gestures to the relic in Hope's grasp. "You've obtained almost a thousand artifacts from the Volgrim. Frankly, I only recognized a tenth of them on my own. Luckily, the Volgrim knew of the vast majority of their identities, so that will alleviate much of our troubles with identifying them. You should spend one day with each artifact, learning who their original owners are, what abilities they can offer, and how you can integrate them into your future battles."

"One day for each..." Hope says slowly, as a frown crawls across his face. "But there are nearly a thousand! That'll take three years!"

Solomon shrugs. "Why do you think I had you construct this Hall of Heroes? You require time to assimilate your gains, boy. The Volgrim will be too fearful to make a move against you, for now, but I worry they might make a move against your woman. You should bring Amelia here, where they can't reach her. Then you won't be stuck with only me for the whole duration."

Hope's frown eases. "That's a good point. The Volgrim might target her... but what about Neil? Shouldn't I bring him here, too?"

"Tsk, tsk." Solomon clicks his tongue. "You've much to learn about projecting strength. Bringing Amelia here is more for your companionship than for the sake of protecting her. Ask yourself, boy, what sort of message will you be sending the Volgrim if you bring people you care about into a secret realm? It will tell them that you fear reprisal!"

Solomon and Hope walk into a large, lavish golden hall with a table capable of seating over a hundred people. As soon as Hope enters, several ethereal maids and butlers materialize, formed from the magical power contained within the Hall of Heroes. They quickly spread out and begin creating a delicious meal fit for a king while Hope walks over and sits at the head of the table.

"You're saying I should project fearlessness and strength." Hope says. "But will that truly deter Unarin? Everyone seems to think he's an extremely intelligent leader. What if he sees through my ploy?"

Solomon sits on Hope's right, at the seat of honor. The two of them together somehow make the dining hall feel even bigger and lonelier than it did before they entered.

"Your line of thinking is too simple." Solomon says slowly. "Let's recap the actions you've taken."

He pauses.

"First, you sneaked through all of Volgarius without raising any alarms. It can be seen by how the Volgrim did not confront you until your arrival on Serris that they were not even certain you were present. This indicates a lapse in their detection capabilities."

"Are you sure that's the case?" Hope asks. "Looking back, it's pretty obvious the Volgrim suspected I was on Volgarius. Sangin Lidra was probably the one to tip them off."

"That's right. They 'suspected' you were on Volgarius." Solomon says meaningfully. "But they did not know for certain. I believe none of them could actually detect your presence. Perhaps not even Founder Dosena herself! Only Confessor Vulpanix had the ability to do so."

"Too bad I couldn't kill her for good..." Hope mutters, his eyes narrowing to slits. "If she's the only one who can properly detect me, I should make sure to finish the job sometime in the future."

Solomon nods. "Returning to my previous point: The second action you took was to engage in dialogue with Confessor Vulpanix, a dialogue in which you easily outwitted her, crushed her spirit, and broke her mind and body. She fled in a manner most pathetic, bringing shame to the Volgrim Empire. This has demonstrated to the Volgrim that you are not a pushover like Jason, ready to go to any length to be their friend. You punished them for their words and misdeeds. You took decisive action!"

"A lot of that was just you feeding me what to do, though." Hope points out.

"So? Unarin is the thinker, and Dosena is his powerhouse. You and I can be thought of in much the same way. Few people are capable of being the brains and the brawn. Just look at Duke Bael, for instance. He may be one of the most powerful demons in terms of physical strength, but as for his brain, heh."

Hope nods. "If he ever wised up, he'd become a real threat."

Solomon nods. "The last action you took was to obliterate Serris. This sent a message to the Volgrim not only that you were capable of doing so, but willing to do so. The destruction of an entire planet is not a casual act. Anyone who can accomplish such a feat automatically elevates themselves to an extremely high threat level. The Volgrim know Jason destroyed Polaris with a Supernova, and now with your added feat, they will dread doing anything that might set you off again."

"I also set clear limitations." Hope points out. "The Volgrim will know, or soon realize, I only destroyed the planet because Vulpanix pissed me off. As long as they tread lightly, they will be safe."

"That's right." Solomon says, smiling encouragingly. "But, think of the message you will send if you immediately try to whisk away Amelia, Neil, and a bunch of other people close to you. What will the Volgrim think if after demonstrating such power, you begin hiding people from their wrath?"

"They'll think I'm scared..." Hope says slowly. "But won't they think that anyway if I bring Amelia here?"

"Not necessarily. She is your future spouse, after all. Having her by your side is only natural." Solomon replies. "The same is not true of Neil and the rest. Leaving Neil relatively unprotected serves as a sign of confidence. It won't be hard for the Volgrim to realize that you and him are close friends. If they were to capture and threaten him, they would have leverage over you, but that is also a terrible mistake they would never make. From Unarin's point of view, you should appear a cunning rationalist who is willing to go to any length to punish injustice... even the blatant murder of billions of Volgrim on Serris."

Hope nods, unbothered by the extreme actions he took only a few days earlier. "Alright. So let's assume I spent a few years mastering these artifacts. What then?"

"Do you want me to plan out your every move?" Solomon asks, raising an eyebrow. "I certainly can, but you are this era's current living Hero. It would not be entirely appropriate for me to coddle you."

"Right, yeah..." Hope mutters. "I have my own ideas. Well, for now, I think I'll bring Amelia here. Worry about the other stuff later. I've got time."

"Time aplenty, though not an eternity." Solomon affirms. "Take care to spend what time you do have efficiently."

Hope nods. He waves Solomon away, and after the old man has disappeared, he utters a Word of Power.

"Return."

An instant later, a figure materializes on his right side, hunched over.

"What the- aah!"

Amelia cries out in alarm, toppling over as she loses her balance. Hope jumps out of his chair.

"Oh, lord! I'm sorry, honey! I didn't realize you were- man I'm an idiot, sometimes."

Amelia rises to her feet with Hope's assistance. As he pulls her up, she gives him a pouty look of annoyance, followed immediately by a quick look of shock around the luxurious room filled with gold and jewels.

"Where the heck...? Where am I?"

"This is the Hall of Heroes." Hope explains. "A lot has happened. Sorry, I've been a bit busy over the last few days."

Hope launches into a brief but information-packed explanation of his recent exploits, causing Amelia's head to spin.

"You blew up an entire PLANET?!" Amelia cries, the blood draining from her face. "What is wrong with you? Hope! That's... that's EVIL!"

"They are our enemies." Hope says quietly, schooling his face. "You didn't see what the Volgrim did to the humans they captured. They kept cloning people, murdering them, then they would repeat the process again. It was barbaric."

Amelia inhales a quick breath. "But you've always told me that the actions I took when I was the Black Queen were evil and that I should seek redemption. Now you're going out and murdering planets too?? This is really screwed up!"

Hope winces. "Things aren't quite that cut and dry, Amelia... they're just not. But I can't say more right now. Just know that I had a good reason for doing everything I've done."

Amelia closes her eyes. She rubs her hand against her eyelids as if to try and scrub her memories clean.

"I don't get it... but... I guess I can't take the high ground here. I'm just as bad as you."

"No, no, that's not the case at all." Hope says, gently touching her shoulder. "There's a lot going on, alright? In a few years, you'll understand the ploy I've worked out. For now, I just needed to get you inside the Hall of Heroes so you'd be safe from the Volgrim."

"A few years?" Amelia asks, lifting her head. "What do you mean?"

"Ahaha... well... we're not exactly in the physical realm anymore." Hope replies.

He spends another few minutes bringing her up to speed not only on the events that have transpired, but also his plans for the near and far future.

"So you're going to master all of the Artifacts? And then you'll be able to stomp the Volgrim if they ever cross you?" Amelia asks.

Hope smiles. "Not just the Volgrim. The demons too... and most importantly, the Plague. As bad as the Volgrim are, the Plague is our worst nightmare. We can't allow it to strike humanity's worlds."

Hope invites her to sit at the table. With Solomon gone, Hope opts to sit beside his fiance. They calm down while the maids and butlers stroll in, plates full of piping hot food. Meats, vegetables, all sorts of entrees arrive, making Amelia raise an eyebrow.

"Bit wasteful, don't you think? We can't eat all this."

"Bah, we don't have to." Hope retorts. "I can just Wordsmith any leftovers back into their raw ingredients."

"Who are these people anyway?" Amelia asks, gesturing to the blank-eyed palace attendants.

"Constructs. Not unlike the ones Jason made, but mine are a bit simpler and easier to make."

The Second Wordsmith opens his mouth in an 'aha' expression. "That reminds me! I think it's about time I took care of business."

Amelia watches with a quizzical expression as Hope summons the mightiest artifact in existence to his palm.

Excalibur, the Divine Blade!

Hope uses a Word of Power to materialize the sword from elsewhere in the Hall of Heroes.

"Excalibur powers this entire realm." Hope explains. "And it still has tons of energy left over. It's actually ridiculous how much mana one little sword can wield. It's like a supergiant star that never runs out of juice."

Amelia curls her upper lip. "I don't like swords much. Certainly not that one."

"Huh? You don't?" Hope asks.

"No. It reminds me of Joan." Amelia says, her tone low. "Remember? Joan took over Arthur's body and... tortured me."

"Ah. Well, Arthur himself isn't like that." Hope says, turning his attention to the divine blade. "Projection."

With a single Word of Power, Hope reaches into Excalibur and activates the soul contained within.

King Arthur materializes a few feet away, his body appearing partially transparent but also surprisingly whole. The Hero-King glances around, then locks eyes with Amelia.

"Ah. Black Witch..."

Amelia slowly blinks her eyes. "Arthur."

Hope frowns.

"You know each other?"

"We fought." Arthur says. "A long time ago. She doesn't have the same aura anymore, that fearsome Hunger that used to be so evident on her face, but she was a terrible foe back in the day. I won't forget her for as long as I live."

Amelia faintly smiles. "I'm not 'technically' Amelia, if you must know."

She looks at Hope.

"Don't you remember? I'm the person who killed Arthur."

"WHAT?" Hope cries, leaning away from her. "No way! You never told me!"

"I didn't think I needed to. You have Jason's memories. Don't you remember when I summoned Arthur and Satan to fight Jason? I killed Arthur and seized his body, but I was unable to lay claim to his soul. So it entered Excalibur, leaving me with his mindless flesh-half."

"Black Witch." Arthur repeats. "Body thief. City eater. In the end, you met your demise. Now you're not even the same woman who slew me following my Greatest Sin. I hold no more animosity toward you."

"Yeah. I, or rather, the original Amelia, wasn't exactly in her right mind back then anyway." Amelia says, shrugging helplessly. "I kind of had a dragon inside me."

"Happens to the best of us." Arthur concludes.

Hope scratches his head. When he called his fiance here, he had completely overlooked her relationship with the Hero-King. In hindsight, it should have been obvious to him, making him feel a little foolish.

"Err, let's move on." Hope says, trying to wave away the slightly tense and awkward atmosphere. "Arthur! I brought you here because I've had something on my mind for a while now. Only now do I have the opportunity to make it happen."

The handsome golden-haired King crosses his arms and smiles. "Oh? Go on."

"I have a body for you. The perfect body." Hope says. "You can finally return to the real world to aid me by wielding Excalibur at its full power. I also plan to make bodies for all of the past Heroes, at least the ones who want them."

"Ah." Arthur says, immediately looking less interested. "Well, I appreciate the thought, young Hero, but my time is over. I've no interest in returning to a corporeal existence. I'd much rather continue to stay within the Divine Blade."

Hope grins. "I thought you might say that. But don't jump ahead of yourself! You've yet to see the body you can possess! And you don't have to possess it all the time. You could always jump into it during times of great danger. It would help me feel more at ease if you were available to help humanity."

"I don't really think it matters how suitable the body is." Arthur says, slowly shaking his head. "You misunderstand. I am undeserving of returning to reality. The sin I carry... the lives I've taken... I forfeited my right to be called a Hero. Let alone a Hero-King, such titles are unbefitting of me. I'm afraid I'll have to refuse."

Hope pauses. Slightly surprised by Arthur's insistence, he didn't expect the Hero-King to reject him so thoroughly.

"Well... look, just give the body a once-over, alright? Maybe you'll change your mind."

He pauses.

"Summon."

A moment later, Hope summons the Arthur Construct to his side from elsewhere in the Hall of Heroes. The Arthur Construct stands tall and proud, its physical appearance perfectly mimicking Arthur's soul-body. Even Amelia raises an eyebrow.

"It's a perfect replica of the man." Amelia says, before turning to Hope. "Well... except..."

"Haha..." Arthur laughs awkwardly. "You've gone to such an effort, it does make me feel a bit embarrassed to continue denying your request. This is indeed a mighty body."

"Right?" Hope says, suddenly feeling a little put-off by the looks Amelia and Arthur are giving him. "But you still don't want it?"

"I did not want the, ahem, the 'body' before, and that stands even more so now." Arthur says. "She's certainly a mighty warrior, to be sure."

"Right..." Hope says slowly. "Any particular reas- wait, did you say 'she'?"

Amelia and Arthur exchange glances.

The former Black Queen coughs into her fist.

"Ahem. Hope, uh... you... you do know there's a female soul inside of this body, right?"

"Huh?" Hope says, glancing at the construct, then back to the other two. "What do you mean? The construct is soulless."

Arthur squints at Hope, making a weird grimacing expression.

"Ahhh... so you haven't noticed. Well, that explains your... lack of manners. Indeed, there is a soul inside that body, boy. And it is female..."

Arthur turns his attention to the construct.

"I apologize for the Wordsmith's rudeness. He seems to be lacking in the... soul-sensing department."

The Construct says nothing. It slowly blinks, then nods at Arthur.

"You have a soul?" Hope asks, now visibly bewildered. "Can you speak?"

The Construct looks at Hope, then nods.

"But you've never said anything before!" Hope protests. "All this time!"

Finally, the construct opens its mouth.

"I did not feel comfortable doing so."

Finally hearing the Arthur Construct speak for the first time ever, Hope can practically feel his mind explode inside his skull. He stands up and stares in wide-eyed fascination.

"Well- I mean, I- I feel terrible! I've been talking about you all this time as if you were a robot or something!"

The Construct nods. "Yes. You were rude."

Despite its voice being masculine, as well as its appearance, Hope gets the impression the Construct might be... offended.

"Are you truly a woman?"

"I am." The Construct affirms. "And I do not like my appearance."

"Oh..." Hope mumbles.

Feeling a little dispirited, Hope scratches the back of his head.

"I wish you'd said something sooner. I didn't mean to give you a sense of... body dysphoria, or whatever."

"I didn't think you'd care." The Construct says slowly. "You needed a weapon. I am a weapon. I fight. I kill. That is all."

"Hope, you're such a jerk." Amelia teases. "I think you should make her look prettier, now."

Hope nods. "Would you... like to look more feminine?"

Immediately, the Arthur Construct takes a step toward Hope. She gets right in his face, her expression bland and unchanged.

"I would."

Hope takes a step back, feeling deeply intimidated by her stoic attitude.

"A-alright. Uh. One second..."

Hope closes his eyes to form a mental image of a female King Arthur. As he does, he happens to look inside his Mind Realm, where he sees Solomon stifling a hearty laugh.

[The hell are you guffawing about?] Hope thinks. [WAIT! Did you know the whole time?!]

Solomon lets a little air escape his lips. [Pff. Pffff... yes... it was quite amusing, I must admit. Your inability to sense different types of souls is your funniest quality!]

[Dickhead.] Hope grumbles. [At least help me construct a new appearance for her.]

[Oh, certainly.] Solomon says. [I've been waiting for you to notice for ages! I already have one prepared.]

[You already had one... ugh.] Hope grumbles, even more annoyed.

He opens his eyes as images of a female face and body materialize in his mind.

"Appearance. Shift. Hair. Eyes. Face. Shoulders. Muscles. Torso. Breasts..."

He quickly fires off several dozen Words of Power, changing the female Arthur's body rapidly, causing her hair to become far longer, her eyes to expand, and her figure to become visibly more feminine.

After a full minute of transformation, Hope ceases his work. He glances at Amelia and Arthur, then back to the Construct.

"Well? What do you two think?"

Amelia blinks twice. Stars dance in her eyes. "Pretty..."

Arthur clears his throat. "So this is how I might have looked if I were born a woman, hm? I could fall for myself."

The new female Arthur stands just as tall and imposing as her original self. With a powerful, muscular body, she looks no less intimidating than Arthur himself. But now, her face appears much more beautiful and feminine, along with the rest of her body. Her long golden hair hangs down to her waist, and her sparkling blue eyes truly captivate one's imagination.

She turns to a nearby mirror hanging on the wall, then walks over to examine herself. After running her hands through her hair and lightly touching her face, she nods.

"Acceptable."

Hope chuckles. "You're not much for words, are you, uh..."

"Artoria." The Construct says. "My name will be Artoria. You will refer to me as such."

Despite her bland tone, Hope gets the impression she might actually be threatening him if he doesn't comply. He hurriedly nods.

"Right! Artoria Pendragon! We'll just say you're Arthur's... twin sister! How about that? Sorry for my earlier misunderstanding. I can be a tad dense sometimes."

Artoria walks over to Hope. She stares at him for a few seconds with the same unchanging, intense gaze she always does.

"Yes, you can. But I forgive you."

"Wow..." Hope mutters. "Somehow, you're way scarier when you talk."

Part 482: Hope's Desire

Two months pass.

Inside the Hall of Heroes, Hope continues the task assigned to him by King Solomon. Each day, he picks one of the artifacts at random and experiments with the soul inside, trying to see what sort of effects the Hero contained within can unleash.

As half a day passes in the outside world, Hope gradually acclimates to the lack of pressure on himself.

For so long, he has followed along with Neil's orders and recommendations. He has fought and killed demons to serve humanity's better interests. This often resulted in the Second Wordsmith suffering physical and mental injuries, but these traumatic events also served to harden his resolve.

The demons are humanity's enemy. Hope knows this in his heart.

But inside the Hall of Heroes, time breezes by, especially thanks to sharing plenty of romantic time with his loving fiance. Sometimes, Amelia tries baking or cooking food to keep Hope's energy high. He could always Wordsmith some food or have the spiritual butlers and maids do the job, their soulless bodies perfectly capable of rising to the task.

But Amelia finds herself often having little to do, so she insists on making Hope try her home cooking. Unsurprisingly, the former Black Witch is a horrible cook, but Hope still happily eats whatever she gives him, so deep is his love for her.

As usual, Hope goes about his business, summoning Heroes from their relics to learn more about them.

A little girl, perhaps 12 years old, sits on a rock in front of Hope. Her body is only a spiritual projection beamed from her artifact, but like Solomon, she still appears visibly solid and substantial thanks to the Hall of Heroes' special enhancements.

Hope smiles at the girl. Having obtained knowledge of all of the relics from the mind of the captured Volgrim elites, few details have evaded him up to now, but this artifact still piqued his interest, if only because there was so little information on it inside Psymin Miralax's memories.

"Your name is...?"

"Wendy!"

Wendy smiles cutely at Hope, her long brown hair hanging down to her waist.

"This is great!" Wendy says unprompted. "I was so lonely inside that void, but now I'm back! I can see the world again! I thought I was going to be all alone forever..."

Her words echo a sentiment shared among many of the Heroes Hope has met until now.

Loneliness.

Isolation.

Manic fits.

Countless Heroes have gone insane from 100,000 years of complete isolation. Until now, Hope has never met someone so bubbly and happy inside an artifact.

"You seem to have gotten along well enough. Are you doing alright?" Hope asks.

"Mhm!" Wendy chirps. "I used to feel lonely, but then I realized I could just make a new friend if I wanted to. So I did! And he always kept me company."

"Who's your... friend?" Hope asks the little girl.

"He's right here!" Wendy says, gesturing to the empty space on her right. "His name is Windy! He's a magical Wind Rabbit!"

Hope continues to smile.

Fuck. She went crazy, too. The Wordsmith thinks.

"So... Wendy. Your friend's name is... Windy?"

"Mhm!" Wendy nods.

"Alrighty then." Hope says with a quiet sigh. "If you don't mind my asking, what were your heroic abilities?"

Wendy cocks her head. "My what?"

"You know. Your heroic abilities. Your powers. Your magic." Hope tries to explain. "I'm a Wordsmith. I can make magic happen just by speaking a single word. For example, Flower."

Hope conjures a lily in his grasp. Then he smiles and hands it to the little girl.

"Wow! That's amazing!" Wendy says, holding the flower out to the empty space on her right side. "What do you think, Windy? He's pretty cool, isn't he?"

Hope once again continues to force a pained smile.

"So... your power is...?"

"Oh, I don't know if I have a power at all." Wendy says. "I uh... OH, right! I can change the direction the wind is blowing!"

Hope blinks.

"You what?"

"The wind's direction!" Wendy says cheerfully. "If it's blowing east, I can make it blow west. I do tend to get really tired afterward, though... sometimes I plop over and fall asleep right in the grass."

Hope fiddles with Wendy's artifact, a small wooden statue of a cat. Despite appearing visibly faded with time, its spiritual aura has protected it from crumbling to dust over the ages, allowing Hope to understand that this must have been one of Wendy's toys when she was still alive, before her untimely death.

"Well, I don't have much use for changing the wind... but I bet you'd have made for a great sailor." Hope says, his smile becoming a bit warmer.

"Mhm. I always wanted to get on a sailboat and float across the sea..." Wendy says wistfully. "Say, you're not going to make me go back inside that void again, are you? I can be useful to you, if you just tell me what you want."

Wendy's cute smile starts to slip. An edge of panic appears in her eyes.

"Don't worry." Hope says, reaching over to squeeze her shoulder. "I won't put you back in the void. This is the Hall of Heroes. Now you and, uh, Windy- you two can make lots of new friends with other Heroes. I'll even work on getting you counseling so you can recuperate from your isolation."

"Ohh!" Wendy chirps, immediately brightening up. "I don't really understand, but as long as I don't have to live in the void anymore, that would make me so happy! Thank you mister Hope!"

"Anytime." Hope says. "Now, tell me more about yourself..."

For the next several hours, Hope gets to know the young girl. He learns about her life and personality, as well as her heroic feats, or rather, her lack thereof.

Ultimately, Wendy was a mere peasant living in an English fishing village who never accomplished anything of note in her life. She died to a disease, and that was the extent of her life's story.

After finishing with Wendy, Hope leads her to a garden filled with trees, bushes, vines and flowers. In this garden, a dozen other recently awakened Heroes mill about, all of them becoming visibly more interested as Hope leads Wendy inside.

"Everyone, this is today's new arrival, Wendy." Hope explains. "Let's all take good care of her."

After he spends a few minutes introducing Wendy, he takes off, leaving her and the other Heroes behind.

Not long after exiting the garden, Hope's smile deflates. He nudges Solomon's Crown grumpily.

"Almost sixty Heroes. Most of their powers, useless. These people are nobodies."

Solomon materializes beside Hope. He teleports from a different part of the Hall of Heroes, having been working on a side-project of some sort.

"You are fortunate to be the mightiest Hero who has ever lived, wielding a power unimaginable to your predecessors. Don't act haughty just because you lucked out, boy. The majority of Heroes lived short, mediocre lives. They were only Heroes in a technical sense."

"Wendy's just a girl who changes the direction of the wind before immediately falling asleep." Hope complains. "It's barely a magical ability at all. And what about the guy who could grow vines... slowly? What am I gonna do with an ability like that? Grow a beanstalk to the realm of giants? My Wordsmithing can already do the same thing!"

Solomon's kindly smile vanishes. He gives Hope a disapproving look.

"Listen. This is for your own good. Each of these Heroes are your predecessors. After all this time, they have become broken and destitute. Their souls are ruined, their psyches poisoned. This isn't just about you obtaining a quick power-up, it's about respecting the sometimes valiant, often pitiful lives of those who lived and died before you!"

Slightly taken aback, Hope nods respectfully at Solomon.

"Right. Yeah, sorry. I didn't mean to be rude..."

Solomon continues to stare evenly at Hope. After a few long moments, he looks away.

"I spoke with Raphael. He told me that Uzziel's condition has improved. He chose to give her ring to the Daughter of Heaven, Cassiel."

Only ten days earlier, or a few hours in real time, Hope and the Archangels sat down to repair Uzziel's soul in a process most incredible, but one which only brought back a babbling toddler-like angel, not the same person Uzziel once was.

Hope lowers his eyes.

"The Daughter of Heaven, huh?"

He avoids returning to the previous topic.

"I guess that's a good ending for the former Archangel."

Solomon nods, his gaze distant. "Mmm. Indeed."

A few awkward moments pass. Solomon clears his throat.

"Best get back to what you were doing. Keep up the good work, and you'll surely meet many intriguing Heroes of the past."

Hope nods. "Right."

Solomon vanishes, his body flickering away to reappear elsewhere in the Hall of Heroes.

After he leaves, Hope gazes into the distance for a moment, then he pulls the Crown off his head and sets it on a nearby altar. Inside the Hall of Heroes, he doesn't need to wear it for Solomon to remain in the physical realm.

Rubbing his head wearily, Hope starts mumbling to himself as he walks away. He looks at the floor while he walks, a hundred-mile stare on his face.

"...all so tiresome." Hope grouches quietly. "But he's the Knowledge Seeker. He's much smarter than me. I'm sure he has a purpose for making me do... all this."

Hope walks past a room where five Heroes he's spoken to in the last month sit in a circle, talking about their lives with one another, in a sort of group recovery session.

Hope ignores them.

He continues walking until he reaches his home, a large and luxurious residence with a spacious bedroom and a comfortable bed. When he opens the door and steps into the living room, he immediately spots Amelia laying lazily on the couch, a thick book in her hands. From afar, he notes the title appears to be Pete's Dragon.

"I'm back." Hope says, his tone coming off a little gruffer than he intended.

Amelia glances at him. "Welcome home. Are you... doing okay?"

Hope shrugs.

He walks over to the couch and plops down at the far end, beside Amelia's bare feet. Given how she's chosen to stretch out on the couch, she takes up most of the space, but still retracts her legs a bit to give him room.

Somewhat reluctantly, Amelia bends the corner of a page into a makeshift bookmark, then closes the book and sets it aside. She sits up and turns herself so she can flop against her fiance's chest.

"I'm just feeling a little worn out." Hope mutters, wrapping an arm around Amelia's shoulder. He smiles, despite his poor mood. Embracing her always makes his day better.

"Mmm." Amelia says, raising her eyes while leaning her head back. She looks at Hope's hairline. "No Crown?"

"No Crown." Hope confirms.

Several seconds pass. Amelia's eyes meet Hope's. The two smile at each other warmly. Hope leans down, and their lips press together.

"Mmm..."

Amelia makes a cute noise as she gently kisses Hope. He grunts in satisfaction, enjoying this private moment.

The two don't go any further than that. They merely pull apart and gaze into the fireplace before them. Heat wafts forward, warming the room to the perfect temperature, and creating a cozy atmosphere.

"This is nice." Hope murmurs. "I'm feeling better already."

Amelia's smile slips a little.

"You know..."

"Hm?"

Hope glances down at Amelia, noticing that she has averted her gaze.

"Is something wrong?" Hope asks.

"Not exactly." Amelia says. "It's just... I've been noticing you keep coming home in a bad mood every day."

"Oh. Sorry." Hope says, feeling slightly ashamed. "I should leave that at the door."

"I'm not bothered." Amelia says. "Not personally. But I am worried for you. Don't you think... you're acting a bit too passively?"

"Huh?" Hope grunts. "Passively? What do you mean?"

Half a minute of silence follows, as Amelia carefully considers her words.

"...before all of 'this,' you spent six years running Neil's errands."

"Neil and I agree that the demons must be eradicated." Hope retorts. "Is that bad?"

"And now you spend your days doing whatever Solomon commands." Amelia continues, ignoring Hope's counter-point. "If you think following their orders is the right thing to do, then that's that. I just worry that you haven't thought carefully about your decision to do so."

Hope frowns. "Amelia, what's this about? Do you think I'm an idiot for listening to what Neil and Solomon have to say?"

"That's not it at all." Amelia replies, finally turning her head back to look up at Hope. "But you're a Wordsmith. You're this generation's Hero. Say what you want about Jason, but he does what he wants to do and what he thinks is best. When Solomon tried to make him do something he didn't want to do, he refused, and Solomon came to you. Doesn't that make you feel a little... odd?"

"I'm not Jason." Hope replies, his frown deepening. "Jason is an idiot. Jason nearly got all of humanity killed because he kept falling for Ose's schemes. I'm being smart by listening to the counsel of people wiser than me."

"Listening to good advice is, of course, admirable," Amelia says, pulling out of Hope's embrace to turn and look at him more directly. "But it's been eating at me since you brought me here... if Solomon tells you to jump, you ask 'how high.' And that would be fine, except I can see that you don't even like it. You just do whatever the old man says, even if it goes against what you think would be best."

She gazes into Hope's eyes.

"In your heart, do you think that your judgment is so poor, you don't deserve to have any plans of your own?"

Hope opens and closes his mouth a few times.

"That's- that's not the case at all! Look, Amelia, I'm not stupid. I know my own limitations. A smart man learns from his mistakes, but a wise man learns from the mistakes of others. Solomon is the smartest man in existence! He's setting me up to learn the history of the Heroes, to master their artifacts, and to give me incredible power."

"His goal is to genocide all of the demons. Just like Neil's goal." Amelia points out. "And what exactly makes you think Solomon is so wise? Have you forgotten? Solomon was duped like a clown by Satan the Devil. He fell for Satan's ploy and this ultimately led to the deaths of countless innocent people in Jerusalem, including Solomon's extended family!"

"That's proof that the demons are evil!" Hope protests.

"It's proof that those who call themselves 'wise' are just as capable of making terrible mistakes as everyone else." Amelia says. "My point is that you are acting completely passively. You haven't formulated any plans for the future, and you leave all of that to Solomon. Worse, it's eating at you. I can see it in your eyes! Every day, you come home looking more and more beaten-down. You simply aren't willing to see the signs the way that I do."

"You can't make an omelette without breaking a few eggs." Hope argues. "Of course I'm frustrated. I think this work Solomon is putting me through is tedious and boring. But he's right! I descend from Jason, and it's easy enough to screw up by trying to do things my way. It's better to build up my willpower and make myself more formidable by training my patience. Jason never listens to anyone, and that's why I'm going to be better than him!"

"Who told you listening to your elders was what a wise person would do?" Amelia counters. "Was it Solomon? I bet it was Solomon."

"Well, I mean..." Hope says, only to trail off.

"Exactly." Amelia says, shaking her head. "I'm not saying you should tell Solomon to piss off. I'm just saying I don't like seeing you become more and more bitter while lying to yourself as you've been doing. Maybe you should think about what YOU want to do, and less about doing what the old man commands."

Hope falls silent. He looks away from Amelia and falls deep into thought.

"...Yeah. Maybe you're right. I don't know."

The two lovers fall into an uncomfortable silence.

"I don't know what I want." Hope says slowly. "I've never really put much thought into it. I guess if I had to choose, I'd pick... whisking you away to live on a vacation world?"

Amelia snorts. "Like hell you will. I'm bored enough here as it is."

"You are?" Hope asks, looking at her with concern. "I didn't realize."

"That's because you're so busy doing whatever Solomon commands that you haven't paid much attention to me." Amelia states factually. "Hope, I've been cooking for you. I hate cooking. I'm not even good at it. I'm just sitting around, playing housewife while we aren't even married yet. I, Amelia, used to run around Earth and beat the shit out of Heroes like Arthur. I, Annette used to... well, not do much at all besides whatever Bahamut commanded."

Amelia throws her hands up helplessly.

"I don't have powers anymore, or magic. I just hang around a bunch of Heroes all day long. It's frustrating, Hope! I want to BE someone, to DO things that are useful. That's another reason I hate seeing you bow to Solomon's every whim. You might not realize it, but you and I are similar in that regard. We're not doing what we want to do."

"So what is it you want to do?" Hope asks.

"Something... cool." Amelia says vaguely. "Maybe I should take up martial arts training. If I can't use magic, I can at least become good at physical combat."

"I could give you powers." Hope points out. "Through my Wordsmithing."

"It's not the same thing." Amelia groans. "Never mind. At this point, I'm just whining about my feelings."

"Babe..." Hope says lovingly, reaching over to pull her close. "I'm listening. I'll think about a way we can improve this situation. You're right, we have been just sitting around, letting Solomon dictate our lives. Or at least I have. But at the very least, I can think about a different future. Our future."

Amelia smiles. "As long as you're happy, I'll be happy too."

Hope leans in to kiss Amelia, and she reciprocates.

The two of them finally drop the conversation, moving on to their favorite shared activity.

All the while, in the back of Hope's mind, he thinks about what Amelia said.

What does he desire?

Part 483: Chamber of Waiting

After Hope and Amelia make up, the two of them enjoy a raucous night of love-making, complete with giggling, moaning, and all sorts of lewd noises.

The next morning, Hope wakes up feeling a lot better than he has for the past two weeks. Thanks to Amelia's suggestions, a firmer thought begins to take root in his mind.

I am my own man. I can't just let other people order me around. It's demeaning, and it cheapens my role of being a Wordsmith. If I want to be equal to Jason, I need to be more proactive!

While Hope is certainly a more brutal incarnation of the original Jason Hiro, capable of fighting and killing without batting an eye, he's also found himself slowly sliding into a subservient role to Neil Adams over the past six years without originally intending to do so.

Hope wakes up and sits on the couch in his living room, thinking to himself while Amelia snores quietly in the bedroom, behind its closed doors. His mind revolves quickly and efficiently, even without Solomon's Crown, as he begins thinking of how easily he's fallen into this role.

Has Neil been manipulating me? Hope wonders. I was only eighteen when Jason cloned himself. I was emotionally distraught. I was lost and feeling a deep sense of grief. Then I tried cloning Amelia in the aftermath and it nearly threw me into psychosis. Neil was there for me in those hard times... but was he doing it just to be a good man? Or was he doing it because he wanted more power?

Hope quietly slurps some orange juice out of a wineglass, its sweet tanginess rousing his mind further. As the delicious liquid slaps his senses, his eyes narrow somewhat.

He did manipulate me. Hope acknowledges. But looking back, I can hardly blame him. Neil hates the demons. If I were Jason, I would not sympathize with him, and would think of Neil as a rogue element. A useful ally, but also a threat to my leadership. But Jason is Jason, and I am me. Neil showed me the evils these demons commit, the evils Jason won't acknowledge.

Hope takes another sip, purely on reflex.

Jason is ignorant. I would have been ignorant too, if Neil hadn't opened my eyes to the truth. In that respect, I can't exactly blame Jason. The problem is, Jason is the Wordsmith humanity acknowledges as their leader, while I go unappreciated. I should be in the running, but I've been sitting pretty for too long, allowing Neil to take the reins. I won't resent Neil for his manipulation, but I can't allow him to keep leading me around by the nose, either.

A few moments pass as Hope begins to remember all the good times he's had with Neil.

He smiles.

Even if his initial motivations for manipulating me were selfish, the truth is, Neil was there for me when Jason and Phoebe weren't. I love Neil. He's like the father I never had. He hardened my resolve and made me wake up to the cruel reality of this universe. Jason is content with trying to make amends with the demons, but I'm not. Even if there are a few 'good' demons like Belial, the overwhelming majority have human blood on their hands. They're murderers, rapists, slavers, and so much more.

The Wordsmith rubs his chin thoughtfully.

But... I have to admit. Neil's focus on the demons poses a problem. The Plague is a more distant threat to humanity, but it's also a more existential threat than the demons ever will be. The demons will never be able to kill humanity, because they rely on our souls to evolve. Since Jason has also put the fear of the Heroes in them, the demons won't be making any immediate moves to attack us, either. Plus-one to him, for once. I should start focusing on the real problem humanity faces...

Hope's expression changes to annoyance.

Neil won't go for that. He's a smart guy, but his single-minded hatred of demons is a serious weak-point. I'm sure he cares at least a little about the Plague, but he's much more interested in slaughtering the demons. Damn. What am I going to do to convince him to look at the bigger picture?

In the back of Hope's mind, another voice whispers.

Why do I need to convince him? Aren't I the Wordsmith? He should ultimately defer to me for the final decision on all subjects.

A few seconds pass. Hope blinks.

Yeah... that's a good point...

He glances around the room, frowning at that seemingly random thought that came to him out of nowhere. Until now, he's never truly considered the idea of going against Neil on even the smallest matters.

Hmm. It's true that Neil should be deferring to me, but we can't afford to split our focus in this critical period. The last thing I want is to throw humanity into chaos. We need to proceed carefully but precisely. In which case, I should definitely try to convince him to see the bigger picture. Unlike Jason, Neil actually has enough intelligence to think about his biases.

Hope swirls the last dregs of his orange juice around, eventually finishing it off in a single gulp. Uttering a Word of Power, he deletes the cup from existence, then stands up and stretches, popping his back. He cracks his neck, then yawns quietly, shaking the last bit of sleep out of his eyes.

Thirty minutes later, Hope exits his residence quietly, allowing his fiance to remain fast asleep. As he leaves, he frowns to himself.

Amelia said she's been getting restless and bored here. I should try and help her find a purpose. I don't want her feeling claustrophobic. She deserves better..

He makes his way toward the Artifact Storage, where over nine hundred artifacts still remain, each one a hurdle that will take him a full day to inspect, analyze, and converse with the artifact's owner. The Chamber of Waiting, as Solomon has deemed it, is a luxurious golden room glittering with fancy chandeliers and other gaudy decorations, all placed by Solomon himself. As Hope steps into the room, he thinks to himself about how awful and gaudy Solomon's tastes in interior decoration are.

This place hurts my eyes, AND my sensibilities.

Hope glances around at the different shelves, altars, and pedestals where various relics rest, each one in a line of sorts, waiting for Hope's inspection. He scratches his head, unsure of which one to pick next. A dozen prominently placed altars of seemingly high importance reside in the center, while forty-seven less prominent pedestals surround them, all of which have artifacts resting on their tops. By comparison, the artifacts plopped on the shelves lining the walls seem far less important. Hope wonders, not for the first time, if Solomon had a deeper purpose behind arranging these specific artifacts in the center of the room...

At that moment, Solomon materializes next to the Wordsmith, projected directly from his Crown, despite not being atop Hope's head.

"You're awake later than I expected." Solomon remarks. "Long night?"

Hope coughs. "Active night."

"Young love is truly beautiful." Solomon says with only a faint smile. "I've been thinking about yesterday. I can tell you've been feeling a bit... frustrated by the breed of Heroes you've conversed with. I suppose sixty 'lesser' Heroes in a row is making you start to think there aren't many truly worthy predecessors in our lineage."

Hope eyes Solomon quietly. "Well. I had a talk with Amelia about that. I'll admit... I've been a bit moody lately. I've realized the issue is more than I'm acting a bit too passively."

"Oh? In what way?" Solomon asks casually.

Hope pauses, deliberating on whether or not he should tell Solomon. However, since he will inevitably put on Solomon's Crown at some point, Solomon will be able to see his memories, so hiding the truth won't do him any favors.

Better to simply come out and say it.

"I feel that you and Neil have been... guiding my actions... a little too strongly." Hope says. "The two of you order me around, and that was fine before as I was content with simply following orders to allow you two to focus on the bigger picture."

Solomon turns to face Hope. He smiles.

"I thought that might be the case. You're a young man who has demonstrated remarkable patience up to now. Frankly, I'd be disappointed if you didn't start wanting to start making plans of your own. A Hero who lacks self-guidance is no Hero at all."

Feeling slightly surprised, Hope blinks twice. "I, uh, I didn't think you'd take it so well."

"What sort of man do you think me to be?" Solomon snorts. "If you want to follow, I will guide you. If you want to lead, then I will follow instead. I am flexible in my thinking."

Solomon chuckles.

"Let me guess. Amelia put these ideas into your head, didn't she? She made you think I've been deliberately manipulating you to pursue my agenda while reducing your autonomy."

Some of the color drains from Hope's face. "Well, I mean-"

"It's fine." Solomon says, waving his hand casually. "I take no offense. Listen, Hope. I have one goal. I been transparent with my intentions. I want to kill the demons. Neil also wants to kill the demons. You yourself seem to want this goal as well, unlike Jason, because you have seen the harm the demons have wrought. If you want to pursue other interests in a primary or secondary matter, that is perfectly acceptable. I've waited 100,000 years for the extinction of demonkind. Another two or three hundred years won't make a difference at this point, and you Wordsmiths are the first truly immortal Heroes, so I'll eventually get my revenge."

"What happens if I decide someday that I don't want to kill the demons?" Hope asks.

Solomon shrugs.

"I have faith you won't make such a decision. But if you do, then it is no matter. There will be others who share my vision. I am nothing if not patient."

"So you'll jump ships again." Hope remarks. "Like you did with Jason."

"You can always melt my Crown to slag if that distresses you." Solomon retorts. "It's not like I can stop you."

Hope clears his throat. "That won't happen. I'm not a friggin' psychopath."

"And neither am I." Solomon says, patting Hope's back.

The two men fall silent for a few moments. Solomon decides to change the subject.

"How about we do something fun today?"

"Fun?" Hope asks, perking up a little. "Like what?"

The tension between both Heroes eases considerably as Solomon guides Hope toward one of the twelve altars in the center of the room. These altars seem far more prominent and important than the pedestals surrounding them, and even more so compared to the artifacts simply plopped on shelves along the walls.

"Heroes can be divided into tiers." Solomon explains. "Such divisions are rather arbitrary. One of my old rivals, Madam Mildred, believed that there were five tiers our predecessors and descendants could be divided into. As for me, I prefer to sort them into three tiers. The arrangement doesn't really matter, but I just want to point out the distinction."

"Why sort them into tiers?" Hope asks, before realizing the implication. "Until now, you've only told me to view the artifacts along the walls. Are you saying..."

"I choose to mentally arrange Heroes by the strength of their Heroic Manifestations." Solomon explains. "The Heroes you've seen until now are considered Unexceptional. The Heroes on these forty-seven pedestals are Exceptional. And the Heroes on these altars, as well as myself, are Legends. Arthur also belongs in this final category."

He pauses to look at Hope.

"Though, compared to your predecessors, I'd say you and Jason belong one additional tier higher. Perhaps you and Arthur should occupy the same position."

"How would Mildred sort the Heroes?" Hope asks curiously.

"Her five tiers are not based upon the physical or spiritual strengths and abilities of a Hero." Solomon explains. "Rather, she looks at their contributions to human history, their feats, their powers and strengths... her approach is more holistic. The issue I take with her organization method is that an Unexceptional Hero in my list can shoot to the top of hers simply by virtue of being a strong political influencer, war general, or business magnate."

"What's the problem with that?" Hope questions.

"It demeans the title of Hero." Solomon says with a frown. "Heroes are Heroes because of our metaphysical power. If we allow the Unexceptional to put themselves at the same ranks as Arthur, then wouldn't that imply non-Heroes lacking any metaphysical powers should also be granted such recognition?"

Solomon shakes his head. He grimaces.

"Heroes should be categorized according to their abilities. I do not deny that many of these Unexceptional Heroes have performed incredible feats simply via political maneuvering, deception, or other ordinary feats, nor that plenty of them had a strong influence on history. But it's simply absurd to grant them a loftier title when ordinary humans could do the same things! Their powers had little to no effect on their feats."

Hope finds himself somewhat unconvinced, but he decides to just shrug and go along with Solomon's ranting.

"Alright, alright. So the Heroes on these twelve altars, their artifacts hold the rank of Legend, at least in your mind?"

"That's right." Solomon says. "I originally intended to first introduce you to all of the Unexceptional Heroes, then the Exceptional, and finally the Legends. But now, I've changed my mind. I'll introduce you to them more at random so you can get a better feeling for who they are, and so you can see the wild contrast in powers and personalities."

Solomon gestures to a cuneiform tablet resting flat atop an altar of clearly Babylonian origin. The altar itself appears rectangular, as if made from several identically-sized building blocks, all seamlessly blended together and painted blue and gold. At a glance, Hope can't tell what material the altar is made of, whether brick, dirt, or stone.

Solomon stops before the artifact. His smile slips as he gazes at it. He heaves a mighty sigh.

"The fellow inside this altar, without a doubt, possesses one of the most powerful abilities among his contemporaries. In a one-on-one battle, I am not certain whether even Arthur could defeat him."

Hope's heart jumps. "What?! But Arthur is supposed to be the most powerful Hero in terms of sheer strength. How strong could this other guy be?"

"This 'other guy' is named Hammurabi." Solomon says tersely. "He reigned in ancient Babylon nearly a thousand years before my birth. In fewer than fifty years, he spread his domain across a vast swath of the Earth. He personally slew three Demon Emperors in his lifetime, and more than a dozen Dukes."

Solomon pauses.

"As for the rest... I'll allow him to tell you himself. But you'll be talking to him alone. Hammurabi and I do not see... eye to eye."

"You two have history?" Hope asks.

"...You could say that." Solomon answers.

After a moment, Solomon's figure vanishes, leaving Hope alone in the Chamber of Waiting. The Wordsmith only looks at Hammurabi's cuneiform tablet for a moment before shrugging and picking it up. He doesn't immediately awaken the Hero within, but instead squints to read the surprisingly tiny, finely-etched writing. It appears to be an ancient foreign language based on hieroglyphs, but beyond that, Hope can't tell much about it.

He could translate the words, but doesn't bother to do so. Instead, he walks out of the room and heads toward a nearby garden where he can sit alone with the person he brings out.

A few minutes later, Hope plunks down in a comfortable outdoor chair inside a grassy garden pagoda, with fake sunlight streaming down from above, then he places Hammurabi's artifact onto a table before him.

"Awaken. Materialize." Hope says.

Instantly, a lofty and majestic man appears on the other side of the table. He pops into existence sitting on the chair opposite Hope, his eyes tightly closed, and his hands pressed together. His fingers sit splayed in some sort of meditative arrangement, and his body remains perfectly still.

Hammurabi, the ancient Babylonian king, does not even seem to breathe. His fantastical blue and purple robes seemingly drip off his body in an endless array of spillover patterns. Hope finds himself comparing Hammurabi's clothing to Solomon, and he finds that both kings have their own manner of decadence. Hammurabi sports a two-foot beard that hangs far down his chin, along with thick, bushy facial hair. Atop his head is a six-inch-tall hat that would almost appear dopey if someone wore it with modern garb, yet which makes Hammurabi appear strangely regal in an inexplicable way.

The Babylonian king remains unmoving. Hope waits for him to react, but Hammurabi continues to sit in silent meditation, as if having failed to recognize the change in his surroundings.

Ten seconds pass.

Twenty.

Thirty...

A full minute passes, with Hope growing increasingly more weirded out by Hammurabi's unmoving state.

I-is he... dead? Hope wonders. He doesn't seem dead...

Hope quietly clears his throat. "Ahem."

It takes five long seconds before Hammurabi finally rouses himself.

The muscular man slowly blinks his eyes open. He glances at the world around himself, slowly taking in his surroundings. He seemingly ignores Hope for several long seconds, as if having awoken from a dream.

After fifteen seconds of drinking in the garden's beauty with his eyes, Hammurabi finally looks at Hope.

"Hero? Mmm. Strong aura. Weak soul."

"I am this generation's current Hero." Hope says slowly. "My name is Hope Hiro. I am a Wordsmith."

Hammurabi doesn't reply for several seconds. Hope begins to realize this is a man who is slow to action, and slow to speak.

"Many clues gleaned." Hammurabi says, as he slowly sits up in his chair. "You state that you are this generation's Wordsmith. But you also state that you are only 'a' Wordsmith. This means there are others."

Hope's heart skips a beat. Damn, he's perceptive.

"Yes." Hope replies. "How are you able to speak English so easily? I thought I'd have to translate your speech like I did for the other Heroes."

Hammurabi's eyes become momentarily unfocused. He squints at Hope, then cocks his head slightly.

"My Law is the Word, and my Word is the Law. I know of many things, past, present, and future. The tongues of the future-speakers are among them."

Hope nods, but he doesn't fully grasp Hammurabi's meaning.

"You're saying...?"

"I sense Solomon's aura." Hammurabi says, ignoring Hope's clumsy probing attempts. He turns his head to the side, looking off toward the distant edge of the garden. "And Arthur. And many, many others."

"This is the Hall of Heroes." Hope explains. "We're not on Earth anymore. In fact... Earth was destroyed 100,000 years ago."

Hammurabi blinks his eyes three times. He turns his attention back to Hope.

"Earth, destroyed. Mmm. I predicted this might happen. Not the demons; the Volgrim. Humanity still has a Hero. They must yet draw breath. What is our current situation? A resistance effort, perhaps? Slave colonies? Freedom fighters?"

"It's... complicated." Hope says. "But if you're willing to listen, I can explain the situation to you bit by bit. We have nothing if not time to talk."

Hammurabi reaches up to stroke his long beard.

"Go on."

Part 484: Hammurabi's Code

Three hours pass in the Hall of Heroes.

Hope weaves a long tale of his life, explaining to Hammurabi the ins and outs of the modern world, the situation they find themselves in, and how events have transpired until now.

He has done this many times now for every other Hero summoned, but none of them have maintained the same constant interest in his words as Hammurabi. Compared to the whimsical little Wendy who only swallowed the broader narrative while her eyes glossed over during the small details, Hammurabi listens intently, rarely speaking except to seek clarification on a few matters here and there.

Hope tells Hammurabi about his origins as Jason Hiro, and how Jason used Solomon's Crown to clone himself. He talks about the battle against the Black Witch, and clarifies that the Amelia who Hope is with now is not exactly the same person by any means. He talks about the human-demon war and their relationship over the last hundred-thousand years. He talks briefly about the Plague, though he does not know as much about the Volgrim's war against this foreign enemy as Jason, so he can't offer much insight into the details.

One topic that Hammurabi especially seems interested in is Hope's escapades into the Volgrim Empire, where he learned much about the Psion's powers and how they functioned. Hammurabi presses Hope for details more here than anywhere, only stopping when he feels satisfied with his knowledge of the situation.

Unlike Solomon, who can rapidly download memories through his Crown, Hammurabi lacks this ability, but Hope finds that the ancient Babylonian King does not come up short compared to Solomon. In some ways, he even appears to subtly exceed Solomon, almost as if the two of them specialize in different branches of intelligence.

By the time Hope finishes detailing the situation and catching Hammurabi up to date, he feels more than a little exhausted. He rejuvenates his spirit with a Word of Power and heals his worn-out throat. Then, he sits and waits while Hammurabi falls completely silent.

Five long minutes pass.

Hammurabi stares ahead blankly, his eyes seemingly peering past the cosmic veil of uncertainty. His hands lay folded in his lap. He looks off to the side, seemingly forgetting about Hope's existence.

Eventually, after a long period of contemplation, Hammurabi clears his throat.

"Hm. The situation. Much worse than I expected. And much better."

"Huh?" Hope asks. "How can it be better and worse?"

"This war. This... Plague. I sense a terrible plot behind it." Hammurabi says, his eyes flickering with insight. "Not as simple as it first seems. Invaders from another galaxy? A terrible experiment broken free from a Volgrim facility? These answers..."

He pauses.

"...do not satisfy me."

Hope cocks his head. "Why do you say that?"

"Difficult to explain..." Hammurabi states, with a long pause between his words. "Too many questionable elements. How Solomon was not able to divine this, I am not certain. More likely... he already has, but has kept you in the dark."

"You're saying... Solomon is deceiving me?" Hope questions, his eyes narrowing to slits. "I won't deny the idea has crossed my mind recently."

"Deceiving. Strong word." Hammurabi says noncommittally. "He may have his reasons."

"Maybe I should call him here." Hope suggests.

"Not yet. I wish to speak to you a while longer." Hammurabi replies. "My pupil can stay waiting."

Hope's body jerks in surprise. "What? You're his teacher?"

"Indeed. My artifact, and others existed throughout much of human history. We were passed down through the generations, educating our descendants, those deemed most worthy, with the intent of ensuring humanity's future progress."

Hammurabi's expression becomes inscrutable, perhaps slightly grim.

"But some descendants. Greedy bastards. Rat-faced little gremlins. They did not heed the wisdom of the predecessors. They squandered our knowledge. They lived wanton lives of pleasure, caring little about the state of the Earth. Every other generation, some child of some scion came to rule a corner of the Earth, only to waste away and give the demons an opportunity to return."

Hammurabi snorts, metaphorically expelling fire from his nostrils.

"Impudent! My Code was the first to chart a path for humanity. Too many children, grandchildren, and their grandchildren ruined what came after. Had they followed my guidance, we could have ascended to space two thousand years sooner. Archangel Michael might not have had to make his sacrifice. The Volgrim would not have defeated us so easily."

"Right," Hope says slowly, "but what does this have to do with Solomon? How are the two of you related?"

Hammurabi doesn't appear bothered by Hope's topic-reminder. "Solomon was a promising seed I taught personally. Few Heroes possessed his level of insight, before or after him. Unfortunately, as the years went on, he began to develop his own independent thoughts, and ultimately fell into wanton debauchery and womanizing. He cavorted with whores and palace sluts, taking for himself over a hundred wives."

The Babylonian harrumphs in disgust. "Listen well, boy. A Hero must rise above their fleshly desires. I responsibly took three wives, but only to further my lineage. I kept my heart distant and gave them no authority over my lands. Solomon was a young fool who did the opposite. He gave his women great leeway! You must remember that women are to be treasured, and respected, but never uplifted beyond what their minds can comprehend. They are like a forbidden fruit. Given time, they will corrupt you into a sinner and a lecher!"

Hope frowns. "That... isn't the way I look at women. No offense, sir. I've seen plenty of smart women who are capable of matching or even surpassing men. Phoebe Hiro, for instance-"

"Exceptions are not the rule." Hammurabi interrupts. "And even the smartest woman will never be equal to a man. Look at how far Jason fell after uplifting his woman to the same level as himself! He allowed the demons to overrun him, and humanity nearly lost all its strength. Had such an outcome occurred, you might have remained in Gressil's clutches. Jason would have become mentally broken, to the point he could no longer be called a Hero, proper."

Hammurabi shakes his head.

"When a woman is granted too much leeway, society itself begins to crumble! Equality is but a myth my descendants have deluded themselves into believing for the sake of appearing virtuous."

Hope's frown deepens.

This Hero... he's certainly... old-fashioned. I'd better take his words with a grain of salt. It's like I'm talking to a sexist grandfather.

Hope clears his throat. "Right... well, it seems you certainly have strong opinions on that matter-"

"My Word is Law." Hammurabi interrupts. "The unfolding of history has only proven that my insights are timeless."

"Right..." Hope groans, forcing a strained smile. "So. With all that said. Can you tell me more about yourself? I've told you all about the future. What was your life like, back in ancient Babylon?"

Hammurabi pauses. "You do not know of my illustrious name?"

"Uh. Well, not really." Hope says, suddenly feeling embarrassed. "I think I've heard your name... once. Maybe twice. But I'm not much of a history buff."

"Shameful!" Hammurabi exclaims, spirit-spittle flying from his lips. "The youth are too ignorant! What nonsense has that Solomon-brat been filling your mind with? Only now, after six years, has he decided to educate you about the predecessors? And in such a hands-off manner? Perhaps a hundred thousand years of isolation have dulled his mind, after all."

"Sorry..." Hope says sheepishly. "I'd really like to learn more about you, though. Learning from you personally would give me the best firsthand experience, don't you think?"

Hammurabi falls silent for ten long seconds. He heaves a great sigh.

"Very well. Speaking is a laborious act, but after a hundred thousand years, I suppose it would not hurt to recall the past."

He once again pauses, this time to reform his thoughts into a cohesive narrative.

"In the Ancient Era, the angels and demons fought for control of the Earth. During the War in Heaven, a lone Titan took it upon himself to create a new type of warrior, a specially chosen human capable of bearing his willpower. That Titan was named Hercules, and he passed his Titan power on to a human named Jepthath, the First Hero."

Hope nods, remaining silent while Hammurabi speaks.

"Jepthath was deceived by the Archangel Raphael, who sought to limit humanity's future power by preventing Jepthath from passing his power on directly to the next generation. Instead, that power became known as the Heroic Aura, and it would leave Jepthath's body after his death, traveling to another so-called 'worthy' successor to empower them as the next Hero."

"Many Heroes arose after Jepthath's death." Hammurabi explains. "Powerful warriors. Magicians. More than a hundred in total, their names of which have become lost to history. They failed to properly rule humanity, with only a few managing to carve out small, meager empires here and there. For five thousand years, Heroes rose and fell without consequence, holding back the demons without truly uplifting our human species."

Hammurabi confidently slaps his chest. "All of that changed when this great King was born!"

Hope's eyebrows jump. "What made you special?"

"My intellect." Hammurabi declares without hesitation. "Those predecessors of mine, with rare exception, were but paupers, chimpanzees compared to this King. They wasted their gifts. They never thought of the broader picture. But I did. I realized the war was unending. A stalemate between humanity and demonkind would only benefit the angels in the long-term."

Hammurabi narrows his eyes. "You know the angels are not our friends, correct?"

"Solomon has said as much." Hope acknowledges. "Raphael... has his own agenda."

"How convenient the 'Archangel of Wisdom' continues to endure, even after all his failings." Hammurabi says with deep suspicion. "Too many coincidences follow that winged serpent. But never mind him."

The Babylonian continues with his story.

"I crafted humanity's first Laws. Laws capable of uplifting us and making us focus on the broader picture. I built the first great Empire of Man! The Babylonian Empire, one which stretched across all of Mesopotamia! Had I lived but a decade longer, I might have conquered the entire continent."

"How did you die?" Hope asks.

"Sickness." Hammurabi states. "The exact disease, I was uncertain. I have long suspected one of the demons poisoned me, but I was never able to prove such for certain."

Hope rubs his chin. "If your intellect was what made you such an incredible King, why could you not continue to rule even after death, through your artifact?"

"Ah! I would have liked to." Hammurabi acknowledges. "But things are rarely so simple. My son, Samsu-iluna, was unable to communicate with me. The Heroic Aura traveled to a lesser vassal Empire, which rose up to do battle against mine. Not that it mattered. My son was a wretch, a brat who took the wealth and power I had painstakingly accumulated, wasting it on acts of sin! He failed to put his house in order, and ultimately fell."

Hammurabi's spirit dims considerably, making his figure appear dull and blurry. Hope momentarily worries that he might suddenly die, until he senses Hammurabi has only become somewhat depressed.

"Humanity could have risen quickly under my guidance, even after my death." The old Babylonian reminisces bitterly. "But that Raphael... the bastard truly tricked Jepthath well. The Heroic Aura's movements, though seemingly random, always seemed to spread bits of chaos and disorder when it jumped to the next generation. By the time my artifact landed in the hands of a later Hero, three hundred years had passed. This particular Hero was also unreceptive to my wisdom. He merely used my intellect to trick and deceive his enemies, growing an empire of rapists and barbarians! After he fell, the same thing repeated with the next two Heroes, disillusioning me further."

"Many generations passed." Hammurabi says quietly. "Some Heroes did arise, those who listened to their elder's words. These men, though, they would have become great figures without my presence."

Hammurabi tosses his hands helplessly.

"Humanity did eventually uplift itself. Great men came to power, and they made strides to advance our species. But that took time. And now, I see that the fruits of time grew much more slowly than we needed. Humanity now is but a pale shadow of its former self."

"You keep mentioning 'great men,' but what about the women?" Hope asks. "Weren't there any female Heroes in the centuries after your death?"

Hammurabi waves his hand. "Once in a thousand moons, a female inheritor would appear. I did not deign to waste my intellect on them. Women must listen obediently; they are not suited to lead nations and states."

Hope nods quietly. I thought he'd say as much. This guy doesn't seem as wise as he initially made himself out to be.

But still, Hope remains polite. Even if Hammurabi might be a bit of an old codger with an outdated mindset, Hope doesn't doubt he is a fountain of wisdom. The Wordsmith simply decides to take anything Hammurabi says under heavy consideration.

"Tell me about your Law, your Code." Hope says. "What is it?"

"The Code is a list of 282 principles I created over the many years of my life." Hammurabi says proudly. "Every generation that passed only confirmed my wisdom. After death, I added a further one hundred tenets to it, but scholars tended to overlook these later additions, much to my chagrin."

He continues. "I could speak all of my laws to you, but it would be quite time-consuming, and I sense you are a young and impatient man. Let me first explain the primary tenets."

"The first tenet! What goes around must come around! Fairness is godliness! Those who commit crimes must suffer the same fate that they inflicted upon others."

"The second tenet! No man is above the law! Even this King himself, if he should break these laws, should suffer the same consequences as his lessers! Naturally, I lived uprightly and did not besmirch my name, so as to set an example for my lessers."

"The third tenet! Men must respect their elders! Those who are old have lived long, and they are the wisest, most befitting of leading the young. Children who are unfilial must be disciplined as harshly as required!"

"The fourth tenet! Women are to be treasured and loved! But a woman must never hold authority over a man. They are slow of mind, and inferior of conscience. If a woman does commit a crime, she should be given some leeway, due to her feminine limitations."

"The fifth tenet..."

"The sixth tenet...!"

Hammurabi rattles off a dozen tenets before abruptly falling silent and looking at Hope to see if the young Wordsmith has managed to properly followed along.

To his credit, Hope nods slowly, carefully absorbing what Hammurabi has said.

"Your viewpoints are... certainly interesting."

"They are correct." Hammurabi retorts.

"Perhaps. But this idea of an 'eye for an eye' only leaves everyone blind."

Hammurabi snorts. "You did not think of such a statement yourself. Indeed, it was a so-called 'philosopher' who came up with that ridiculous notion. I saw for myself the evils any man would cause if left to run amok. Boys grow up to become men, and eventually leaders. They must be disciplined properly, lest they fall into debauchery and sin."

"So you disagree that your philosophy would leave the world blind?" Hope presses.

"Vehemently." Hammurabi says, unamused. "Men who feared the consequences of their actions would always seek to undermine my Word. But my Word is Law, and my Law is Truth. Every king must discourage his young men from becoming bandits and pleasure-seekers so that they can become leaders worth admiring."

Hope clears his throat. "Can you give me specific examples of the laws you wrote? Something to show what you would specifically propose?"

Hammurabi doesn't hesitate. "The 229th Word. If a builder has built a house for a man, and has not made his work sound, and the house he built has fallen, and caused the death of its owner, that builder shall be put to death. This law shows that a man must not act flippantly, but must be responsible in his work so that others do not come to harm because of his negligence."

"What if the house were to collapse due to an accident?" Hope asks. "Wouldn't you be punishing the man for something he had no control over?"

"Hmph. The 2nd Word!" Hammurabi immediately retorts. "If a man brings an accusation against another of laying a spell upon him, but has not proved it, the accused shall go to the sacred river, he shall plunge into the sacred river, and if the sacred river shall conquer him, he that accused him shall take possession of his house. If the sacred river shall show his innocence and he is saved, his accuser shall be put to death. Some men are simply unlucky. These sorts should never be placed in positions of authority. If the Creator himself should judge them so, then they will perish due to their bad luck. This King has no care with regards to the life of One Hated By His Creator."

Hope's face scrunches together in disgust. "That's awful. You would allow a man to die due to no fault of his own? And you would lack any feeling of regret over his demise, even if he were totally innocent?"

"Precisely." Hammurabi replies, unashamed. "You are still young. You have yet to see the folly of men hated by the stars running rampant beneath your command. It is a Cosmic Truth that some men are hated by the Gods, and they will bring ruin upon themselves and those around them. Better to allow them to die than for their influence to bring ruin upon your lands."

Hope's increasingly more pained expression starts causing his stomach to twist into knots.

This Hero is a freaking lunatic. No wonder Solomon didn't want to be around him!

Hammurabi notices the disbelief on Hope's face. He frowns at the young man.

"You are young. But not as young as I, when I took over Babylon. For a man of your age to be so naive, it is a frustratingly common occurrence."

"I won't deny that you probably had progressive and forward-thinking ideas during the ancient times," Hope says, "but your philosophy feels quaint now. I'm sorry, but women are equal to men. Demonkind nearly beat the crap out of Jason, and Ose was the one leading them."

Hammurabi's frown lightens. "Your feelings on my Word do not matter. Only the facts do. The fact that Ose lost is proof enough of how women must never become leaders. And what of Marie Becker? She was humanity's leader during the Energy Wars, and as expected, humanity fell."

"You're only looking at examples of that confirm your viewpoint." Hope argues. "Raphael led the angels, and he lost too."

"When a man loses a battle, he inevitably loses to another man." Hammurabi states solemnly. "Raphael lost to Satan. This is because Satan was a superior leader compared to Raphael. But Marie Becker lost because she was never capable of leading humanity. This is the fault of her gender, and it cannot be held against her. If someone had properly treasured her, she would never have developed the idiotic idea to take control of the whole planet and lead our people down a path of damnation."

Hammurabi speaks with complete self-confidence, as if his words were delivered to him via the Creator's own lips. "You need only look at the Volgrim and how they currently rule the Milky Way, while a man leads them to greatness."

"And what about the Plague?" Hope counters. "For all you know, there's some sort of... female mutant creature leading it! Some sort of female parasite."

"If so, then I have little doubt Unarin, or one of the Wordsmiths, will someday defeat the Plague." Hammurabi says, smiling like a kindly grandfather. "But more likely, there is a malevolent entity guiding the Plague's path. I would not go so far as to assign it a gender."

Hope struggles desperately against the urge to roll his eyes.

"Alright. Well... I guess-"

"You should call Solomon here." Hammurabi interrupts. "We've spoken long enough for me to get a measure of the man the so-called 'Knowledge-Seeker' has trained. I am interested in seeing how my old pupil has endured, after all these years."

Hope swallows the question he was going to ask.

At this point, getting Solomon in to have his butt reamed sounds like a lot of fun. I see why he didn't follow Hammurabi's 'guidance,' though. This old guy is quite the opinionated fellow.

"Solomon." Hope says. "Hammurabi wants to speak to you."

He waits a few seconds, expecting Solomon to materialize. He knows from experience Solomon can definitely hear him if he focuses his intent.

But the Knowledge-Seeker doesn't come.

Hammurabi's smile fades away. A malevolent glare takes its place.

"That brat. I should have known. He's trying to hide from me."

Abruptly, Hammurabi stands up, startling Hope.

"SOLOMON. SHOW YOURSELF!"

A thunderous BOOM blasts out of Hammurabi's mouth, a concussive wave of force that slams into Hope and launches him backward, breaking his chair and causing the Wordsmith to tumble backward, banging his head on the pagoda floor before inelegantly sprawling onto the grass. He winces painfully, before pulling himself up to snarl at Hammurabi.

"Hey! What's the big idea?!"

Hammurabi barely even looks at Hope. "You are a Wordsmith, yes? You speak Words of Power. HMPH! You are not the only one with a voice that commands authority! You should have been prepared for anything, but you lowered your guard. Solomon has taught you poorly."

Hardly has Hammurabi spoken, before Solomon materializes before him.

The Knowledge-Seeker stares disdainfully at his teacher. His narrowed eyes give Hope the immediate impression that he can't stand to be in Hammurabi's presence.

"I take offense to that accusation." Solomon growls. "You're as loud as ever, Hammurabi. I bet you even fooled Hope into thinking you were a quiet, soft-spoken man."

"HMPH." Hammurabi growls back at Solomon. "Impudent disciple. How dare you speak this King's name. Where is your respect for your elders? Get on your knees and kowtow, this instant!"

Solomon rolls his eyes. "Hammurabi, a lot has changed during your millennia of meditation. I no longer-"

"I SAID KOWTOW!" Hammurabi barks, blasting a second wave of concussive energy at Solomon. This time, Hope manages to brace himself for an instant before the blast rips him off the grass and sends him flying again. He slams his head against a rock and nearly faints, only awakening and healing himself after several seconds of disorientation.

"Ugh... that... old... bastard..." Hope coughs, with blood pooling from one of his broken teeth. "H-Heal!"

Hope recovers from his injuries, then sits up, looking for Solomon and Hammurabi.

What he sees next shocks him to his core.

Solomon kneels at Hammurabi's feet, his forehead pressed against the ground, and his arms extended in front of him, like a lowly servant who has sought contrition for the greatest offense to their master.

"That's better." Hammurabi says, grinning at his student's predicament. "This is what you get for daring to protest against the Voice of the King!"

Hope's jaw drops.

Hammurabi... is also a Wordsmith?!

Part 485: Voice of the King

Hope stares in wide-eyed shock at Solomon. The Knowledge-Seeker bows as deeply as his body will allow him, kowtowing like a servant at Hammurabi's feet. As for the man himself, Hammurabi smiles smugly, clearly pleased that even in death he can still demand his student's filial piety.

Solomon gurgles angrily in his throat, desperately trying to rise above this humiliating position with all of his strength. But he cannot!

No matter how he struggles, he has to remain face-down, obediently bowing at his teacher's feet.

Hammurabi directs the smile of a kindly old grandfather Hope's way, as if Solomon's sudden change of heart came naturally and as a consequence of his own actions. In Hope's eyes, Hammurabi detaches himself from the act, seeming to pretend that he had nothing to do with Solomon's 'decision.'

"You're a Wordsmith?!" Hope blurts out as he jumps to his feet.

"Hah. Not quite." Hammurabi says, his voice once again softening. "I possess the Voice of the King. I can compel others to obey me with great ease."

He glances disdainfully at the man bowed at his feet. "Good. You've demonstrated a sufficient level of obedience. You may rise, Solomon-boy."

Hardly has Hammurabi spoken before Solomon releases a gasp and jumps up, staring angrily at his teacher. His face flushes red with a mixture of rage and embarrassment, not least of which is due to being made into a fool in front of Hope, his own protege. Still, Solomon bites his tongue, for fear of pissing Hammurabi off and making his student bow a second time.

The humiliation might actually cause Solomon's proud soul to wilt and die!

Hammurabi continues to smile amiably, as if having had little to do with the rage visible on Solomon's face. He turns his attention back to Hope and paces toward the young man with the authority of a wise sage.

"The Voice of the King is one of my signature abilities. None may disobey it." Hammurabi declares. "It matters not how powerful they are, how strong their soul is, or how elite the person's combat skills might be."

"So it's a power of compulsion..." Hope says slowly. "You can't create objects or defy the laws of physics."

"I cannot." Hammurabi acknowledges. "But the Voice of the King is an ability many have underestimated at their own peril. Even if my opponent were the lauded Second Founder of the Volgrim Empire herself, she would not be able to resist me."

Hope's eyes widen. His heart skips a beat as he realizes the implications.

"Holy-! If that's the case, then aren't you invincible? You could order someone to kill themselves! You could bring enemy states, nations, and empires to ruin!"

Hammurabi gloats quietly, clearly pleased by the shock in Hope's eyes. But before he can continue to praise himself more, Solomon speaks.

"Teacher! Your ego is too overblown! Stop acting as if the Voice of the King has no limit. You and I both know that isn't the case."

Hammurabi's expression slightly deflates. He glances at Solomon in annoyance.

"I was getting to the limitations."

"Not quickly enough." Solomon bites back.

The ancient Babylonian rolls his eyes dramatically, sighing out loud as if deeply aggrieved by Solomon's words.

"Yes, yes. The Voice of the King is not infallible. It acts upon the order of the world, and the order present in one's mind, body, and soul. I cannot compel someone to act against their sense of right and wrong, or to defy their conscience. I was able to make Solomon-boy kowtow because despite his insistence to the contrary, he knows he owes me filial piety for the years I spent carefully instructing him in the ways of seeking wisdom. If Solomon did not truly feel indebted to me in his heart, my Voice would not have affected him."

Hope's expression lightens. "That's a pretty significant limitation."

"Not as much as you might think." Hammurabi retorts. "In my lifetime, and following my death, I have met countless villains, heroes, and people of little importance. Rarely will the Voice of the King fail to compel someone, because all creatures follow some sort of a moral compass, whether they acknowledge this Truth or not."

Hammurabi fans out his fingers and examines his nails, putting on airs before the Wordsmith.

"Even the most callous and cruel murderer knows, deep down, that their actions are evil. Even if they seemingly erase their guilt, they will never truly destroy their conscience. No matter how small the sliver of self-recrimination, my Voice can bring it out and grant me authority over their actions."

"You've used this power to kill demons, I take it?" Hope asks.

"Oh, yes. Many times." Hammurabi says, looking into Hope's eyes. "If I wanted to command you, doing so would present me no difficulties. It is deeply apparent that you are a walking mess of contradictions. The bloody and violent actions you've taken in the past did not come easily to you, and even now you continue to lie to yourself about how easily killing comes to you compared to your other half."

"Telling an enemy to bow to the sunrise for thirty minutes would easily allow my teacher to kill them while they were helpless." Solomon explains. "It is for this reason that I previously stated that even the mighty Arthur might not be able to defeat Hammurabi."

Hammurabi waves his hand. "But worry not. I will never use my power for selfish pursuits or my own gains. My power is one of order, and I loathe greed with all my heart. I strictly follow my Code, which means I would never kill or strip the authority from someone who did not deserve such a punishment. I am as bound to my Code as my enemies are to theirs."

Gears metaphorically turn inside Hope's mind. He feels a little frightened of the idea that Hammurabi could take control of him and force him to Wordsmith without his consent, but the realization that Hammurabi has imposed constraints upon himself lessens that worry somewhat.

"Do you have other powers?" Hope asks.

"Many." Hammurabi says, smiling slightly. "But the most significant one is... Eye for an Eye."

"The power of Reflection." Solomon says, much quieter than before.

"Those who would attempt to bring harm upon this King in an unjust manner must instead suffer that harm upon themselves." Hammurabi explains. "This ability granted me a measure of invincibility unparalleled in my era. Even today, were I to walk the mortal coil in my flesh and blood body... I am not certain any living enemy could best me."

"Solomon told me you killed three Demon Emperors." Hope says. "Was that...?"

"A simple matter." Hammurabi says lightly. "My lifelong goal was to put Satan the Devil to death. Unfortunately, the Emperor of Subjugation was too powerful. Satan could not be killed by my hands. I successfully destroyed his body on many occasions, but he always revived and fled, leaving me empty-handed. I ultimately decided to kill his strongest followers, but they grew wise to my strength and hid themselves away in the mountains and beneath the oceans."

He pauses.

"That is why I continue to believe it was a demon who poisoned me to death. Any deliberate attack inflicted on me would instead be returned to the deliverer. But a subtle poisoning? It must have been the event which brought about my eventual ruin."

Hope nods, not particularly caring about the events of ancient history. Whatever led to Hammurabi's death, it no longer has any bearing on the modern galactic situation, so Hope can't be bothered to dwell on it.

Hope walks over to his chair, now destroyed by the thunderous force behind Hammurabi's roar. He utters a Word of Power to restore it, then creates a third chair for Solomon.

"Let's continue where we left off." Hope says.

Hammurabi and Solomon both sit down. By now, Solomon's earlier humiliation has faded somewhat, allowing him to return to a more dignified expression. It's clear he doesn't enjoy being in Hammurabi's presence, but neither does he have a choice.

For three long hours, Hope continues talking to Hammurabi. He learns about other abilities the Babylonian king possesses, as well as the various predictions he made during his life.

"You're telling me you predicted Earth's fall?" Hope asks.

"It was a possibility." Hammurabi acknowledges. "I believed there was a fifteen percent chance of such happening."

"But why would you think that? Weren't you too busy building an empire to worry about things like Earth's ultimate fate?"

"You have erred." Hammurabi responds, lightly waving his hand. "You think I am referring to the time I spent while living. But I am actually referring to the period after my death. I had 5,000 years to contemplate a great many things. I ultimately came to the conclusion that there was other life in our universe."

"And that life," Hammurabi adds after a slight pause, "could potentially be far more advanced than ourselves."

Hope scratches his chin. "Was it because of the angels? Because they existed in the vacuum of space for many eons, so there would plausibly be other forms of life 'out there'?"

"Exactly." Hammurabi nods. "If the angels had evolved or were created by an external force, who is to say other such forces did not exist. Later thinkers, such as Madam Mildred, would come to refer to this phenomenon as the 'Fermi Paradox.' As for myself, I had no deep thinking or systemic imagination of the universe's mechanisms. I merely hypothesized the existence of extraterrestrials to be more likely than not."

"As did I." Solomon mutters. "Though we could not conclusively prove the existence of an alien species until the arrival of the Volgrim during the Energy Wars. They had successfully observed Earth for thousands of years, and we never knew it. In truth, the signs were there all along."

"We lost the war." Hammurabi says quietly. "But we may yet make a comeback. Had a Hero not returned, this would be unlikely. But! Now that the Wordsmiths exist, if humanity can move past its internal divisions, it can unite to battle for a common cause. I predict great things for our species..."

Hope, Hammurabi, and Solomon continue to talk for a while longer.

Eventually, the Wordsmith concludes the discussion and opts to leave. He gives Hammurabi a respectful, if somewhat distant bow of the head.

"I enjoyed our discussion. The Hall of Heroes will be your new home, moving forward. You can exit your artifact at will to converse with the other Heroes as you desire."

Hammurabi waves his hand. "No need for that. I've little interest in speaking to Lowborn Heroes, only Trueborn ones. Solomon-boy and I will stay here a while and catch up. You may run along, young one."

Hope frowns slightly at being dismissed so casually, as if he were a child getting in the way of 'the adults,' but he chalks his feelings up to Hammurabi's distaste of commoners and peons. The old man is clearly way up his own ass when it comes to his ego.

Hope bows his head again, then he strides out of the garden.

He begins wandering the Hall of Heroes, passing by several others he's brought out of their artifacts in the past two months. Some of them he waves at, but the others are still traumatized and wary of speaking to him.

He even passes by Wendy, who gives him a cute little wave of the hand.

When Hope passes by a room Solomon has deemed the Armory, he pauses.

The Wordsmith glances inside, where he sees Amelia talking quietly to two female Heroes, though she does keep her distance. Amelia holds in her hands a notepad and paper. She nods at the two, saying something Hope can't quite make out, while occasionally jotting down notes.

Hope stands in the doorway for a minute until Amelia notices him. She says goodbye to the other two women, then walks over to her fiance.

"Hope. There you are." Amelia says. "I was hoping I'd run into you soon."

"Are you up to no good again?" Hope asks, smiling at her.

Amelia doesn't reciprocate the smile. Her gaze remains focused.

"Hope, did you copy the knowledge of the Volgrim we captured? Specifically, the knowledge about these Heroes?"

Hope's smile fades as he notices the serious look on his fiance's face. "Of course. I downloaded the information into Solomon's Crown, and I absorbed it all myself."

"Have you been looking into the details of these Heroes?" Amelia asks.

"Huh? No. Not really. I mean, I've skimmed their information but... there's literally a thousand names. It's a lot of work. I'll meet them all eventually. Why? Is there a problem?"

Amelia frowns. She purses her lips, hesitating to say something.

"I could be wrong. It's just a hunch. Look, can you Wordsmith a book of information about what we know of these Heroes? All of them. Sort the information in the book by their names."

"Uhh..." Hope grunts, scratching his head. "Yeah, sure. Any time. But is something the matter? You seem spooked."

"It's just a hunch." Amelia repeats. "I'm probably wrong, but it can't hurt to investigate..."

"Investigate what?" Hope asks.

"Can you just make the book already?!" Amelia exclaims, frowning at him. "I'll tell you when I've proven or disproven my suspicions. Until then, there's no point in slinging accusations around."

Hope nods at Amelia slowly, but in his head, invisible question marks pop up.

Accusations? Amelia sure is acting strange. Has she noticed something I overlooked?

Hope holds out his palm. "Book. Write. Etch. Knowledge. Organize. Inspect."

A giant, unwieldy, and surprisingly thick tome jam-packed full of information lands atop Hope's upright palm. Weighing in at nearly five pounds, it turns out to be the size of multiple Bibles stuffed together, making him raise an eyebrow.

"I didn't even know I had that much knowledge saved..." Hope murmurs, before Amelia snatches the book out of his grasp. He falls silent and watches as she plops it down on a bench nearby and starts to flip to seemingly random sections.

"Adrian Peters... died at age 43, life accomplishments... metaphysical abilities..."

Amelia flips around the book while glancing at her notes. Hope catches glimpses of her scribbles, but it isn't organized at all and the best he can make out is a series of names, dates, and numerical ratings of various Heroic powers.

"Were you able to-" Hope starts to say, before Amelia interrupts him.

"This will do." She says abruptly, pausing to look up at Hope. "I'm going to be a bit busy for a while, Hope. Keep up your talks with the Heroes."

"I just finished talking to a Hero named Hammurabi." Hope says. "Want to hear about him?"

Amelia doesn't immediately answer. She returns her attention to the giant book, then flips through its ten thousand pages in clumps of one to two hundred at a time until she reaches the 'H' section for names. She points at Hammurabi's name, then shakes her head.

"No need. I'll be referencing this book for now. Hope, can you enhance my reading speed? I really need to focus for a few days."

"I- uh, sure." Hope says, feeling more and more weirded out by Amelia's strange behavior. "You're certain you can't just tell me what this is about?"

"You'll know soon enough!" Amelia snaps, visibly annoyed by Hope's persistence. "Try showing a little patience for once."

"Okay!" Hope exclaims, taking a step back. "Sorry."

Amelia's anger quickly fades. She looks away in contrition.

"No, I'm sorry. That was rude of me. Just be patient, alright? It won't take long."

Hope nods. He steps toward her, and the two of them share a loving hug. As they embrace, Hope catches a look at the other two female Heroes, both of whom whisper to themselves about this apparent lover's spat.

Damned nosey ghosts, Hope thinks.

Hope utters a half-dozen Words of Power to enhance Amelia's reading speed, then he makes his exit.

He travels to the dining hall and plops down, while spirits in the shape of maids and butlers materialize to attend to his needs. They begin setting up the table for him to eat, then leave to cook food.

At the same time, Hope ponders the events of the day.

I don't know what Amelia has noticed, but it must be something important. I'd better try my own hand at solving the 'mystery.'

He summons a copy of the same book he made for Amelia, then leans back in his chair to read...

Part 486: The Mountain Hermit

Over the next few days, Hope becomes more proactive when it comes to the Heroes Solomon introduces him to. The Second Wordsmith doesn't simply start talking to them, but instead uses the book he made to read up on their powers, their history, and their feats while alive.

Naturally, after introducing Hope to Hammurabi, Solomon doesn't follow up with even more mighty Kings. He once again returns Hope's attention to the 'lesser' Heroes, the people who didn't necessarily accomplish much during their lives.

This time, Hope takes some time before talking to the Heroes to study up on their lives, that way he can have a better knowledge of who they were and what they accomplished.

Sadly, Hope comes to find that a surprising number of them barely even have a page in his Heroic Encyclopedia. Some amount to only a first name and the date they lived, if even that.

On the fourth day after meeting Hammurabi, Hope introduces himself to one of these lesser Heroes. The book tells him the man's name is Jeremiah, and that he lived at some point in the 6th century BCE... but beyond that, not a single extra detail is provided.

Hope scratches his head. "Guess I can't expect much from this guy."

He reaches out to Jeremiah's artifact, which turns out to be an expertly crafted walking staff made of oak and ivory. Compared to many other artifacts, this one appears quite large, at almost five feet tall (1.5 Meters), weighing in at nearly ten pounds (4.5 kilos). Not only is it large and cumbersome, but also quite hefty. Hope immediately gets the impression that someone talented in fighting with a Bo Staff might be able to weaponize the staff in a pinch.

He walks over to the garden pagoda, sits down, then summons the Hero contained within.

"Awaken. Materialize."

In the chair opposite Hope, a hunched-over old man appears, with a long, scraggly beard, and equally long bedraggled hair. His eyes remain closed, as if he is fast asleep. He sits on the chair while lolled forward, seemingly about to fall off at any second, yet he remains moored in place.

Hope momentarily gets a sense of deja vu from how the old man reminds him of Hammurabi. However, the difference comes in that this old man does not appear to be a legendary king, but rather an old mountain hermit swaddled in rags. His face is dirty, and his hands are calloused, showing he has lived a long life of hard labor. Given how the notes in his book state that this Hero lived during the 6th century BCE, he certainly lived during a primitive time compared to the luxury of Hope's modern era.

Several seconds pass. Just as Hope is about to clear his throat to wake the old man up, Jeremiah slowly blinks his eyes open.

"...Mmm? Where... am... I?"

His voice comes off choked, sounding as if he has a frog in his throat. Jeremiah's raspy tenor even gives Hope the impression he never drank a glass of water in all his life.

"Hello." Hope says respectfully. "My name is Hope. I am a Hero from the future. My title is Wordsmith."

The old man blinks several times, uncomprehending. He looks around the pleasant garden then reaches up to gently scratch his scalp.

"Hero... future... I do not understand."

"Your name is Jeremiah, yes?" Hope asks.

"Jere...miah... yes. That is what people called me."

Jeremiah licks his lips, perhaps to try and moisten them. It doesn't seem to have much effect.

Hope frowns slightly, but quickly schools his expression. "Can you tell me about yourself?"

Jeremiah stares at Hope blankly. "Not understand."

"You know. Tell me about yourself. Who you are. What your life was like..." Hope explains, trailing off.

"Who am I?" Jeremiah repeats. "I am Jeremiah. Simple man. Live in cabin. Hunt. Eat. Sleep."

"Uhh. What did you do during your life?" Hope asks. "Surely living in a cabin wasn't everything."

Jeremiah once again glances around the beautiful garden, visibly confused.

"Not understand. Why ask questions? I am nobody."

"Well, you're a Hero..." Hope says slowly. "This is your staff, right? You lived a long time. Surely you must have done something interesting during your life."

"During my life..." Jeremiah repeats. "During my life... I am not... alive... now?"

Hope blinks. He finally realizes the missing piece to the puzzle.

"Ah. No, Jeremiah. I'm sorry. You've... died. Maybe I should explain the situation a little better."

Hope quickly but cautiously launches into a long and detailed explanation of Heroes, how they function, and the mechanics behind the artifacts. Jeremiah sits silently, saying nothing, while Hope explains how much time has passed, and the future Jeremiah now finds himself in.

After thirty minutes, Hope winds down his explanation, eventually falling silent as he watches the old man try to digest this news.

"I am... Hero." Jeremiah says slowly. "And I have died. I am in... Sheol?"

"No." Hope says. "You have been... reborn. In a sense. Your body is a spiritual form now. But you are back in reality, albeit not on Earth."

"Sheol." Jeremiah repeats.

"No, not Sheol." Hope explains patiently. "This is simply a garden in the Hall of Heroes."

"Hall of Heroes." Jeremiah says. "I am a Hero?"

"I think so, yes..." Hope says, no longer quite as convinced. "Your name is Jeremiah and you lived in the 6th century BCE... do you have any relation to the Biblical figure who was a prophet for the Lord? Did you see divine visions during your lifetime?"

Jeremiah, as always, continues to look completely lost. "Divine visions. No. Ordinary man. Simple life. Stay in forest. Hide from soldiers. Evade capture. Hunt game. Eat. Sleep."

Hope's eyes flicker. "You hid from soldiers?"

"Yes."

"From what nation?"

Jeremiah frowns. He looks away, as if trying to remember.

"King... someone. Wanted men for his army. Bad man. Did not trust him. I stayed far away. Always saw enemy coming."

"How did you see the enemy coming?" Hope asks.

Jeremiah looks at Hope as if he just asked the dumbest question of all time.

"With eyes."

"Right," Hope says, forcing a pained smile. "But you lived in a forest. How did you see past the trees?"

"...With eyes." Jeremiah says again, as if it's the most obvious answer in the world. "Look through trees. Look through rocks and mountains. Look through city walls and see evil king. Simple matter. King's soldiers were slow of mind, poor vision. Could not see what I saw."

Hope's heart suddenly skips a beat.

Hold on a second. This isn't normal! He's describing a heroic power!

For the next several minutes, Hope carefully but deliberately coaxes more and more information out of Jeremiah. He learns how Jeremiah's Heroic Power works through inference and vague explanations, ultimately coming to realize he has some sort of incredible eyesight that can peer through any barrier.

Already, Jeremiah has easily looked through the entirety of the Hall of Heroes, and even the blackness of the Void, where the Hall of Heroes hangs within a dimension between reality and the imaginary realm. Unable to see the stars, Jeremiah came to the conclusion he must have arrived in the afterlife, where no stars reside.

"You could see their thoughts?" Hope asks, after Jeremiah gives him another piece of information.

"Yes. Easy. Thoughts simple. Not hard to follow. Could see plans and goals. Sometimes could see other things."

"Can you read my thoughts?" Hope asks.

"Your mind is empty." Jeremiah states. "This makes you... god?"

"I'm not a god. Just a fellow Hero." Hope says, feeling a little relieved. Since Jeremiah can't read his mind, that means the protections Hope crafted to shield his mind from the Psions must also work on other mind-readers. "Did you have any other 'gifts' you were born with?"

Hope uses this term due to Jeremiah's usage earlier in the convo. Apparently, the forest hermit realized at some point that his abilities weren't ordinary, but due to his lack of an education, he came to think they were merely improved senses that any ordinary person could possess.

Indeed, the more Hope learns about this quiet and simple man, the more he grows to like him. Unlike the loudmouthed Hammurabi, Jeremiah speaks quietly and politely, only growing frustrated if Hope fails to pick up on 'obvious' cues the people of Jeremiah's era would consider common knowledge.

Hope eventually stands up and holds out his hand. "Since you've already seen the other Heroes, why not come with me? I'll introduce you to a few of them."

Jeremiah doesn't move.

"...Do not enjoy talking. Other people loud. Annoying."

"Err, am I annoying?" Hope asks.

Jeremiah looks Hope right in the eyes.

"Yes. Very."

"Oof, well, alright then." Hope replies, feeling slightly embarrassed. "How about I make you a nice, quiet little house in a forest? You can hang out by yourself if you want, or you can come out to visit with people if you get bored."

Jeremiah blinks. "Acceptable."

Hope chuckles in embarrassment, feeling more than a little self-conscious. He leads Jeremiah to a quiet corner of the Hall of Heroes, where he summons a brand new mini-world amidst the void, conjuring a forest into reality with his words, as well as a shack isolated in the center of all the trees.

Jeremiah watches with mild fascination, looking from the newly created world to Hope, and back to the world...

"You... are not god?"

"I'm not." Hope answers.

"I see." Jeremiah replies, not exactly convinced.

After Hope finishes building what he has decided to call the Hermit's Realm, he leads Jeremiah to his new home, and pauses outside the door of a cute, cozy log cabin.

"Is this big enough? I can make it larger if you want."

Jeremiah nods. "It is sufficient. Bigger than the one I built."

"Well. Enjoy your time here." Hope says. "If you need me for anything, I've installed this fancy red button on your wall. Just push it, and I'll pop over to say hello. Or Solomon will."

"Mmm. Many thanks. Good hospitality." Jeremiah says gruffly.

After Hope places Jeremiah's artifact inside his hut, he heads back to the Hall of Heroes.

Hope thinks to himself about the strange old man. Unlike the majority of 'lesser' Heroes Hope has encountered, Jeremiah actually seems to possess a decently strong ability, and he lived a long life. Most lesser Heroes were like Wendy, dying young to disease or hunger.

"There's such a disparity between them." Hope mutters. "And it's weird that Jeremiah lived so long, had such a decent power, but ultimately still amounted to nothing. I guess he doesn't have an ambitious bone in his body. He's content to simply live in his hut, far from the world's woes."

Hope continues to ruminate on Jeremiah. He cracks open his Heroic Encyclopedia and updates it with a more detailed description of Jeremiah's life story, as well as his abilities and other notable feats.

"The Volgrim didn't know anything about Jeremiah except that he was a Hero, and that was only because of his artifact's aura. They couldn't interface with his artifact. He didn't have any noteworthy historical records talking about him. All they could glean was his name and the era he lived in."

Hope pauses.

"It doesn't seem likely the Volgrim would have been able to pick this information up after Earth's destruction. They must have collected Jeremiah's artifact before the end of the Energy Wars. Maybe while they surveyed humanity for thousands of years, they covertly stole our artifacts as time went on."

Hope pieces together an important clue, possibly revealing an important Truth he had previously overlooked. Until now, Hope assumed the Volgrim collected the artifacts during the Energy Wars, or scraped them from Earth's surface following its destruction.

But logically speaking, with as little information that existed involving Jeremiah, and with no way to interact with the Heroes inside the artifacts, the Volgrim would have needed to scour historical records, ones which would have been destroyed when the Earth's surface was annihilated.

"They stole from us for a long time." Hope concludes. "Fucking bastards. I'll make those alien pieces of shit pay someday."

As Hope wanders the halls, he casually observes the slightly more numerous spiritual figures walking around. These Heroes, reborn through the Hall of Heroes' magic, sometimes nod at Hope and even chat with him, but plenty of others turn away, shunning contact.

It isn't that these anti-social Heroes hate Hope, but rather, that 100,000 years living in empty voids have turned many of them into hermits incapable of properly speaking to other people.

If anything, Jeremiah isn't an extreme case, but quite ordinary and well-adjusted compared to his peers.

Hope rounds a corner, where he spots the adorable Wendy talking to another girl her 'age,' though the two of them are actually both 100,000 years old. Having been permanently frozen in their child-bodies upon death, it still makes them look like two children yapping about mundane childlike matters to Hope's eyes.

After Hope gazes at the girls for a moment, he turns away and continues walking.

Eventually, he ends up inside a vast library, one that extends up into the sky, and down into the basement depths. In the ground level of this vast Heroic Library, he finds Solomon hard at work.

Solomon's primary goal, ever since the construction of the Hall of Heroes, has been to construct the greatest library in all of existence.

Solomon's fingers fly at inhuman speeds as he manipulates a powerful computer interface. Every second, he types out thousands of words, his fingers and eyes moving with such terrifying speed that Hope might assume the old man was actually an artificial intelligence, had he never learned how amazingly Solomon's power synchronize with his Crown.

Every half-minute, Solomon finishes writing a book, then it pops into existence on a table next to him. One of the spiritual assistants Hope created, typically in the form of a male or female librarian, will come over, pick up the newly written book, then walk to a nearby shelf and slot it in.

Hope doesn't say anything to Solomon at first. Instead, he walks over to one of the newer shelves and grabs a book from one of its ledges, purely at random.

Rygel's Intro to Pyrokinetic Engineering and Warfare.

Hope puts it back and grabs another one.

The Man Who Fell From the Sky.

He looks at another book title.

Practical Fusion: Volume III.

These books range wildly from historical records to highly advanced engineering textbooks, and plenty of fictional stories as well. The entire gamut of literacy finds itself on Solomon's shelves. Hope even finds a copy of War and Peace, funnily enough.

"Not a lot of page-turners." Solomon idly comments, his hands continuing to dance across the computer keyboard and interface at blinding speeds. If engaging in conversation with Hope slows him down in the slightest, Hope can't tell at all.

"I met a hermit-fellow named Jeremiah today." Hope says. "He seemed like an outlier. He was an ordinary person from ancient times who also somehow managed to live to old age while possessing a fairly potent ability, yet he never put it to use in the pursuit of some greater goal."

"Jeremiah." Solomon repeats. "A rare case of a Hero I've barely interacted with. Tell me more about him."

Hope nods. He launches into a brief but information-dense explanation of his discussions with the old hermit, while Solomon continues to write book after book.

In the time it takes Hope to finish talking, ten minutes have passed, and Solomon has written another twenty books.

"It's not often a Hero of his caliber would slip under my radar." Solomon says. "He's quite talented, yet has remained entirely out of the history books. If the Volgrim hadn't picked up his artifact, he might have perished along with the Earth."

Hope frowns. "Speaking of which. I just realized today that the Volgrim must have been collecting the Heroic Artifacts well before the Energy Wars. What do you think about that hypothesis?"

"It's the obvious conclusion one must draw." Solomon says, turning his head to look at Hope. "Did... did you only just now think of it? I assumed that fact was obvious."

Hope blushes, suddenly feeling incredibly embarrassed. "Uh. Yeah. Just now. I'm gonna go... think I've made myself into enough of a fool for today."

Solomon shrugs. "Take the rest of the day off. You've earned a rest."

Hope nods, then turns away. He heads out of the Library and walks down the hall, eventually arriving back in the garden pagoda. He plops down in his favorite chair and sighs, enjoying this moment of being alone. No other Heroes ever enter the garden, due to its status as the newcomer onboarding zone, and Hope's personal sanctuary.

Hope lazes back in his chair and yawns. He converts it to a rocking chair with a Word of Power, then begins to gently tilt forward and backward, rocking himself to sleep...

But then.

An indeterminate amount of time later, Hope awakens, feeling as if he's being watched. He opens his eyes to see Amelia sitting across from him, her eyes fixed on his sleeping figure.

"Oh. Hey, babe." Hope says, yawning. "How long have you been there?"

"Not long." Amelia says, her expression somewhat constrained. "I wasn't sure if I should wake you. But it's good you woke up on your own."

Hope blinks twice. Something about Amelia's actions have been weird, the past few days.

"Are you alright?" Hope asks.

"Privacy barrier." Amelia says. "Now."

Hope quickly sits up in his chair, feeling more alert than before. His fatigue vanishes as he realizes something important must be eating at his fiance.

"Sure. Barrier. Silence. Opaque. Privacy..."

Hope casts a dozen Words of Power, even going so far as to check for foreign influences inside the barrier, such as a Psion sneaking in under his nose. He only detects himself and Amelia.

"What's going on?" Hope asks, as his eyes drift down to the book clutched in Amelia's arms, the Heroic Encyclopedia he made for her.

Amelia pauses for a moment. She chews her lip and looks around shiftily.

Abruptly, she turns to Hope and blurts out six shocking words.

"Hope. Solomon is lying to you!"

Part 487: Consortium of Sages

Hope's blood turns to ice. He gazes into his fiance's eyes, seeing the conviction in her stance.

"Solomon is lying? About what?!"

Amelia gnashes her teeth.

"It's so obvious in retrospect. I knew something was fishy the moment I came to this so-called Hall of Heroes. Surely, you must have noticed too."

"I- I don't think I did?" Hope says, visibly confused. "Come on, honey, don't- don't play word games with me. Tell it to me straight."

Amelia snorts. She crosses her arms and looks away from Hope.

"Hope. How many artifacts did you recover from Serris?"

"A little under a thousand." Hope immediately answers.

"Are the artifacts here all the ones that have ever existed?" Amelia asks, still looking away.

"No..." Hope says slowly, as he tries to follow along with her thought process.

"So it's not that a thousand Heroes have lived." Amelia continues, carefully leaving a trail of breadcrumbs for her fiance to mentally follow. "If anything, a thousand is the bare minimum."

"Solomon did imply there are likely hundreds more." Hope acknowledges, his frown deepening.

Where is she going with this? He wonders.

"You're still not seeing the problem." Amelia says, returning her gaze to meet Hope's eyes. "Let me ask a simple question. How does the Heroic Aura function?"

Hope rubs his forehead. "It waits until a Hero dies, then it randomly jumps into another human's body, repairing the flaws in their spiritual foundation and uplifting them to the rank of Hero. Assuming what Vulpanix told me was true, anyway."

"So every time a Hero dies, the Heroic Aura jumps to the next inheritor." Amelia observes. "Now let me ask this: How many years did humans live on Earth until the end of the Energy Wars?"

"I'm not exactly sure of the number." Hope says, as his mind begins to piece together her clues. "Five thousand... maybe ten thousand years?"

"Let's say ten thousand." Amelia continues. "And let's say all the Heroic Artifacts in the Hall of Heroes are all the Heroes who have ever existed, and that there are no others."

She pauses.

"Just for the sake of argument."

Hope's heart skips a beat. "That... that would mean..."

"Even if we account for awful nutrition and plenty of Heroes being weak little peons who died young, it seems strange that the average Hero's lifespan would only be ten years." Amelia states. "Doesn't it?"

"It does..." Hope mutters, his stomach beginning to sink. "Wendy is the youngest Hero I've met so far. And she died at age twelve. I would expect to have met dozens of children if... if the names and dates lined up. But until now, I've met more over-twenties than I have under-twenties."

This time, it's Hope who pauses.

"The numbers... they don't add up. Not at all!"

"No. They don't." Amelia says, her voice cold. "Don't you find that suspicious? I certainly did. So I had you compile that book for me, and I've made a shocking discovery."

Amelia reached behind her back to pull a rolled up paper out of the sash wrapped around her belly. She slowly but deliberately unfurls it before Hope, revealing... a line with numbers every 100 increments, starting from -8,000 and going to +2,000.

On this paper, above the main line, hundreds of smaller lines have been drawn in, etched seemingly at random, with countless lines staggered above one another, overlapping at points, and allowing Hope to quickly draw a conclusion.

"This is... a timeline graph." Hope mutters. "Don't tell me! This is a timeline of humanity's history, and these lines represent the lifetimes of each Hero in the Hall of Heroes."

"If what Solomon told you about the Heroic Aura was true, none of these lines would intersect." Amelia explains. "When a Hero dies, the Heroic Aura is supposed to jump to the next inheritor. But as you can see, there's no pattern at all. Heroes are born randomly. They often live at the same time as one another. And their numbers become more numerous the closer you get to the arrival of the Industrial Era. At one point, I confirmed more than twelve Heroes walked and breathed in the same year."

Hope's mind reels. He takes a step back, feeling a wave of disorientation strike his brain. Suddenly, he begins to question every interaction he had with Solomon, every assumption he'd made about all the Heroes he's met so far. How glibly he ate up whatever bullshit Solomon told him.

"This... this makes no sense. Why would- why would Solomon lie about this to me? What does he stand to gain?!"

"Maybe you're not as unique or special as you thought." Amelia says. "Maybe there can actually be many Heroes alive at one time. But... I'm not so sure about that."

"You're not?" Hope asks. "Why? Did you figure something else out?!"

Amelia chews her lip for a moment, then she points at the timeline.

"Look here. Notice the bottom-most Hero lifetimes? For some reason, there are Heroes that completely fail to intersect with one another. And when I paid attention to their identities, I realized they had one common correlation."

Amelia looks at Hope meaningfully.

"You remember the three 'tiers' of Heroes Solomon told you about? There are the 'altars,' where 'great kings' reside. Then there are the pedestals, where lesser, but still prominent leaders reside. Heroes who possessed incredible power, but weren't quite as lauded as the most centrally-positioned Heroes."

Hope recalls what Solomon told him about Hammurabi, Arthur, and the others of their breed.

Then, he remembers a seemingly casual line Hammurabi uttered at one point...

Something about... something about not wanting to 'interact with Lowborn Heroes, only Trueborn ones'...

"Trueborn Heroes..." Hope murmurs.

Amelia, satisfied by the recognition in his eyes, nods sagely.

"You see it now. The strongest Heroes also seem to be the ones whose lives never intersect. At the same time, these 'lesser' Heroes pop up all over the place. It seems Solomon has failed to tell us about a hidden component of the Heroic Aura."

"The Trueborn Heroes are the actual bloodline of the Heroic Aura." Hope says quietly. "They always possess genuine, powerful artifacts made by Camael. At the same time, lesser Heroes, the so-called 'Lowborn,' they often end up trapped inside random objects like spoons and gardening tools."

Hope closes his eyes for a moment to think deeply.

"It all makes sense." He says slowly, while massaging his forehead. "The Heroic Aura doesn't 'empower' a human into becoming a Hero. It only heals their spiritual flaws, which consequently uplifts them into that role. This means multiple people might be able to be empowered... somehow."

Amelia nods. "I believe the Heroic Aura seeks out people who have high spiritual affinities. Even with the damage the angels implanted in human souls, some people must have more innate potential in others. But how does that allow for there to be multiple Heroes living at one time?"

She pauses.

"...I also believe there are multiple Heroic Auras. Two. Three. Maybe more? They might be weaker versions of the one you possess. The others might have died off a long time ago, while the primary Aura still exists inside of you. The fact you and Jason both are Heroes goes to show that there can be multiple Auras!"

"I'm not so sure about that." Hope mutters. "Multiple Heroic Auras seems... implausible."

"Perhaps, but how else would you explain these timeline inconsistencies?" Amelia asks. "We need to confront Solomon! There's no way that old snake doesn't know the truth!"

Hope chews his lower lip. "There was that matter involving... Daisy."

"Jason's daughter?" Amelia asks, before her eyes glint with recognition. "Right... she demonstrated clear and obvious signs of Heroic powers prior to her death."

"Yeah. Her death." Hope mutters, feeling somewhat glum. Perhaps, in another life, Daisy might have been his daughter with Phoebe. Any resentment he feels toward Jason doesn't transfer to Jason's child, but rather, a sense of guilt for being unable to protect her.

Hope fiddles with his fingers absentmindedly.

"Daisy had powers. If the way the Heroic Aura worked was the way Solomon and the Archangels claimed, that wouldn't make any sense. There must be something we've overlooked."

"That's my assumption." Amelia nods. "I just don't see why he hid this. Solomon must have a nefarious reason for deceiving you."

Hope calms his emotions. His heart-rate slows, and his expression becomes less turbulent.

The Second Wordsmith looks into the distance, spacing out as he dwells on the conversations he's had with Solomon for the past few months.

"Possibly. But I'm not so certain. He might have a good reason."

"Or he'll twist your ear with an excuse!" Amelia exclaims. "Face it, Hope. That old bastard has been lying to you! All he cares about is killing the demons! He'll do anything to control you, manipulate you, gaslight you! He just wants to turn you into a tool for exacting his revenge!"

"I've known his motives for a long time." Hope says calmly. "And he is, without a doubt, more intelligent than me. I can see him coming up with a plausible-sounding explanation that would mollify and calm me down."

Hope continues, his face becoming more devoid of emotion than ever.

"It's always something, isn't it? Neil manipulates me. Solomon does too. Everyone wants to control the Wordsmiths. If I should be angry at anyone, it should be myself. I keep falling for other people's schemes. I'm as bad as Jason, in that regard."

Amelia blinks twice. "What are you saying? Aren't you pissed at Solomon?"

"Oh, I am." Hope says. "Very much so. But... I'm accepting it now. Getting angry won't give me an edge. He'll use my anger to trick me somehow. I need to confront him about this, but on my terms."

Hope's eyes flicker.

"You were right. About my lack of initiative. It's definitely time I started focusing on my own ambitions. Killing the demons is important, but it can come later. I have bigger fish to fry..."

He faintly smiles.

"If Solomon is indeed lying, he'll learn the consequences of his actions."

Amelia nods slowly. "That's good. You should be focusing on yourself more. What you want to do. What are we going to do about this discovery, though?"

Hope reaches over and touches Amelia's cheek.

"Nothing. Not today, anyway. I'm not in the right state of mind. Let's... wait until tomorrow. I need some time to think. You and I will confront Solomon together, so he can't use sleight of hand to distract me."

"I'm not easy to trick." Amelia acknowledges. "Especially not by wiley old men. They always think they know better. They don't."

"Jason might have Phoebe, but I have you." Hope says, revealing a slight smile. "And I'm definitely the winner in that arrangement."

Amelia's temper lessens. "When it comes to me versus Phoebe... let's just not."

Hope nods. "That's fair."

* * *

Hope and Amelia make a plan. Then, the Second Wordsmith drops the privacy field, returning the two of them back to reality.

They make their way back to their residence, but neither Hope nor Amelia say much to one another. For his part, Hope thinks long and hard about how he's going to confront Solomon, as well as what his plans are for the future. As for Amelia, she continues dwelling on the many possible reasons Solomon would have to lie to her fiance.

Both of them make it home. They eat some dinner, chat about nothing in particular, and go to bed. This time, they don't enjoy any raucous lovemaking.

Their minds are much too occupied for that.

The next morning, Hope wakes up first as always, but he decides to wait for Amelia to stir as well. She tends to be a heavy sleeper, a thought that makes him smile.

She's so cute when she sleeps, Hope thinks.

After the two rouse themselves and prep for the day, they nod at each other, than make their way to the Heroic Library. Solomon, a spiritual life form who has lost all need to sleep, continues to systematically build and expand the size and scope of this library, publishing two books every minute.

When Hope and Amelia enter, Solomon doesn't stop his work. As they walk up behind him, Solomon merely nods.

"Up and at 'em, finally? You certainly slept later than usual, Hope."

"Keeping tabs on me?" Hope asks.

"You've been acting odd for the past fourteen hours." Solomon says, as his hands continue to dizzily fly across the computer interface at blinding speeds. "Amelia, you seemed so agitated when you had Hope erect that privacy filter, but you were quite calm when you left..."

"I don't like to be spied on." Amelia says, crossing her arms and narrowing her eyes. "You have a lot to answer for, Solomon."

Hope frowns slightly, due to Amelia's sudden accusatory tone. He quickly schools his expression.

"Solomon." Hope says slowly. "Amelia had some... reservations. She expressed an interesting finding she had, and I'd like to hear what you have to say about the matter."

Finally, Solomon's hands stop moving. He pauses his work on the computer and turns to look at the two people standing behind him. As a spiritual life form connected to the Hall of Heroes' metaphysical aura that permeates its every nook and cranny, he can observe all its internal events without needing to directly use his eyes, but he realizes Amelia's 'findings' must have been important. He decides to look them in the eyes and proceed from there.

"Alright." Solomon says. "I'm all ears. You two don't seem to be in the... best of moods."

"I'm not making an accusation." Hope says quickly, before Amelia can potentially bite off an insult. "I just want answers. Regarding the Heroic Aura... is there anything about it that you haven't told me yet?"

Amelia opens her mouth to speak, but pauses and closes it again. She smiles faintly, pleased by Hope's line of questioning.

The question is open-ended enough that Solomon might not realize exactly what we're aiming for. Perhaps the old man will reveal some other information we didn't know. He's probably not stupid enough to do that... but a woman can dream.

Solomon notices the faint but unmistakable look of smugness on Amelia's face. His inscrutable expression, however, gives no clues.

"Anything that I haven't told you..." Solomon says slowly. "There are many things I have not spoken out loud, either because I wanted you to discover them on your own, or because I did not think you were ready to hear them yet. You have more than enough time to learn the Truths of our reality, Hope. There is no need to rush your Journey hastily."

Hope continues to faintly smile, but his stomach twists into a knot.

Damn. That was a good rebuttal. Now if he doesn't say anything, Solomon can claim that whatever I bring up is simply an opportunity to educate me.

Hope pauses to think of a reply, but before he can say anything, Amelia speaks up.

"Old man. How many Heroic Auras are there in the universe?"

This finally elicits a change in Solomon's expression. "How... many?"

"I've noticed the discrepancy." Amelia says. "One thousand Heroes in the Hall of Heroes alone. Hundreds more implied to be unaccounted for. Ten thousand years of human history. And most damning of all... there is an unbroken line of Kings and Emperors and Leaders whose lifetimes never overlap, while the weaker Heroes are all over the place. I can only conclude there are multiple Heroic Auras in the universe, and you've... forgotten to tell us this information."

Hope stifles a grimace. She blurted it out. Dammit!

"We're not trying to accuse you of anything." Hope says quickly. "I just want to know what the meaning is behind this... timeline misalignment."

Solomon raises his eyebrows.

"You finally noticed. I wasn't exactly trying to hide it, Hope, Amelia. Why do you think I made a point of placing the Kings, Nobles, and the Peons in three different layers within the Chamber of Waiting? It was to show a clear division in status between the Heroes."

Solomon pauses.

"But you are also... mistaken. There is only one Heroic Aura. I expected you to come to a different conclusion, Hope, especially after your chat with Vulpanix. Can't you see the truth of the matter?"

"What truth?" Hope asks. "Can the Heroic Aura... enter multiple bodies at once?"

"No. That's not it either..." Solomon murmurs, belatedly sighing. "How much time have the two of you spent inside the Hall of Heroes?"

Slightly taken aback, Hope frowns. "A little under three months. Why?"

Solomon continues. "That's less than a day in the outside world. But you haven't paid attention to the happenings on Tarus II in half a week of real-time, give or take a day."

"Right..." Amelia says, frowning more deeply. "Your point?"

"The same phenomena happening out there has happened many times in the past." Solomon gently explains. "I just received word that the newly passed-out Power Gloves have had... interesting effects on their users. Hope, when was the last time you talked to Neil?"

The Second Wordsmith scratches his itchy palm. "Not since a few days before the attack on Serris."

"Well. Jason's been busy." Solomon says. "He's developed a special glove that can transform humans into creatures of other species. I learned from Neil not long ago that one of his soldiers, a man named Samuel Baker, experienced lingering effects following his transformation."

Solomon pauses, then leans forward to look at Hope and Amelia more intently.

"He possesses an 'S-class' transformation compatibility with the fairy species. After transforming into one, he's begun to exhibit signs of keeping his magical powers even after exiting that state. Now, why do you think that is?"

Hope and Amelia both frown deeply. Even Amelia, who saw the Power Glove in action and helped build the new spiritual battle dome on Tarus II's northern edge, wasn't privy to military secrets and knew nothing about the change with the Power Gloves.

Hope scrunches his eyebrows together. "Does this mean... humans can repair their spiritual flaws... without using the Aura at all?"

"That's right." Solomon says, smiling like a kindly old grandfather. "I suppose it is time I told you about a long-held secret to which few people have been privy."

With a pensive sigh, Solomon pauses for a few moments to gather his thoughts. He looks away wistfully, then returns his gaze to Hope and Amelia.

"I am a member of the Consortium of Sages." Solomon begins to explain. "The Consortium is an ancient lineage of humanity's thought leaders. Hammurabi was one of its founders. Siddhartha Gautama, Madam Mildred, and many others, including myself, joined later. All the members were either Trueborn Heroes, or Uplifted Heroes. Not just anyone could join the Consortium. Our goal was to ensure humanity continued to improve over time, and that we always maintained sight of our true enemies, the demons and angels."

He continues. "Due to a series of unfortunate accidents, as well as... deliberate acts of evil, we all swore a pact to keep the information I am about to tell you a secret. Most people mentally labor under the idea that the Heroic Aura 'empowers' the human it enters. This notion is incorrect, but it was formed deliberately by the Consortium. We wanted people to think Heroes were 'uplifted' humans, boosted in magical power by the Aura. But they are not."

Amelia nods. "Because the Aura only repairs flaws in a person's spirituality."

"That is half of the secret." Solomon acknowledges. "The other half is that, after a Hero dies, the Heroic Aura seeks out the one human embryo in existence possessing the highest spiritual potential. With the Aura boosting the unborn child's developing spirituality, they almost always emerge from the womb possessing incredible untapped strength."

"Then," Solomon continues, "when they come of age, their spirituality coalesces like a diamond, empowering them to the highest state any human can reach. You Wordsmiths are, in my opinion, the final evolution of what an empowered human can become."

"Heroes project a natural aura of power." Solomon concludes. "There is only one Heroic Aura, but simply being in proximity to a Hero has a chance of triggering an evolution in an unascended human. That is why so many Lowborn Heroes have walked the Earth. Where Trueborn Heroes roam, Lowborn can and will ultimately become uplifted."

"Holy crap." Hope mutters. "So all this time, ordinary humans have not only had the capability to become Heroes, but they already did in the past."

"Lesser Heroes." Amelia points out. "Not as strong as genuine ones."

"But Heroes nonetheless." Hope counters. "Solomon, why didn't you tell us this sooner? Why keep it a secret?"

Solomon's kindly smile fades away. In its place, a look of disappointment forms.

I would have liked to," Solomon says slowly, "but I made a pledge, as did the other members of the Consortium of Sages. This information was never to be revealed lightly. Not only did we not want the Archangels to realize we had grown wise to their underhanded plot to cripple humanity, but other humans knowing could trigger a catastrophe."

"What sort of catastrophe?" Hope asks, confused. "How could having more Heroes be a bad thing?"

"You assume that having more empowered humans is a net gain for humanity." Solomon says, a hint of warning in his voice. "But haven't you forgotten something important?"

Finally, Hope realizes what Solomon is playing at.

"Dracula. The Dark Hero." Hope mutters.

"That's right." Solomon whispers. "Dracula was not the first Hero to go rogue. But he was the first Trueborn to do so. Before him, many ordinary men and women became Uplifted and used their newfound abilities to seek riches, dominate others, and seize control of the Earth."

"So the Consortium's goal," Amelia says, "it was to... eliminate evil Heroes?"

"Sinners. Enemies of Man." Solomon says with a nod. "Worse than demons. Traitors to their own species. Our Order hunted these fiends down and killed them in cold blood. Not only were we to kill them, but to shatter their artifacts as well, ensuring they could not spread their heinous thoughts after death."

"But there came a problem." Solomon continues. "It surfaced for the Consortium when the most powerful human on Earth, the Trueborn Hero of that era, became the one we had to kill. Our Uplifted agents... they could not contend against his power. And so... Dracula brought a dark age upon humanity."

He looks at Hope and Amelia with deep meaning.

"In the same way, so will Jason's flippant mass-uplifting of ordinary humans. Dark figures may arise... but who shall be ready to take them down before they can deal damage to their former brethren?"

"The catastrophe... is the arrival of Dark Heroes?" Hope asks.

"Agents of devils." Solomon affirms. "Greedy spreaders of Chaos. They will emerge. If left unchecked, the demons won't have to lift a finger. Our species will immolate itself, just as it nearly did so many times before..."

Solomon clears his throat.

"I did not tell you of these things, because I wanted to see if you would draw those conclusions yourself. Since you have, that means you can be informally inducted into the Consortium if you so wish."

Solomon pays special attention to Amelia.

"You are the one who discovered this discrepancy, not Hope. While you do not seem to possess any magical affinity on the surface, I find it hard to believe one who bears the Black Queen's memories would remain in this state forever. If you decide to accept my offer, I will work on finding a way to restore your natural abilities."

Amelia blinks, visibly surprised by Solomon's offer.

"I... I don't know... this is all so sudden."

"You may decide now." Solomon says. "Or you may decide later. But it was you who possessed the wisdom to see the Truth laid out, not Hope. It is only fair that you should obtain this choice. Hope has enough on his plate."

Hope frowns slightly at being slighted, but quiets down, feeling a bit better when he realizes his fiance now has a unique opportunity to become useful.

Perhaps, if this were to give her a goal worth striving to achieve... Amelia might finally feel valued, and no longer a burden to her fiance.

A few moments pass. Amelia contemplates Solomon's offer.

She taps her cherry-red lips, then frowns as she looks at him.

"Before I even think of accepting, I have some... doubts."

Solomon smilingly nods.

"Ask whatever you like."

Author Note: This part was heavily rewritten due to a major oversight I made when I first published it. Simply put, I forgot that Hope and Vulpanix had spoken about Humanity's Flaw. Now the rewritten part accurately reflects their discussion and fixes other things I noticed on a re-read!

Part 488: Wordsmithing's Limitations

Despite the seriousness of the discussion so far, and despite Solomon's smooth words, Amelia sobers up and looks the old man right in his pair of spiritual eyes. She crosses her arms and frowns.

"Let's slow things down a bit, Solomon. Your explanations so far are certainly plausible, but I haven't forgotten that you can think ten or a hundred times faster than Hope and I. You're awfully good at spinning things the way you want them to be heard."

"I've spoken no lies." Solomon retorts.

"You don't need to tell a lie to make an answer biased." Amelia fires right back. "In fact, it's not what you've said so far that's bugging me. It's the fact that you didn't say it sooner."

Solomon holds up his hands helplessly. "My hands were tied. I took an oath never to reveal this information except to those who were worthy of knowing it."

"Yeah?" Amelia snarks. "That's awfully convenient. And how many other oaths have you taken? How many other things are you holding back and will you continue to hold back 'for our sake'? This information doesn't hurt us in any way to have known sooner, yet you're acting as if it was some grand puzzle, some game we had to figure out. Meanwhile, there could be dozens of potential Dark Heroes popping up under our noses, and if we had known sooner, we could have kept a closer eye on the situation."

The more Amelia talks, the less incredulous Hope becomes at all of the revelations Solomon uttered. He settles down and listens to his fiance driving pointed words into Solomon's chest, then crosses his arms and nods along to what she's saying.

"She's right, Solomon." Hope says. "You should have told us this sooner. Got any other fun secrets we should know about now? The way you keep stringing me along isn't cute. It's sketchy as hell. It makes me... not want to trust you."

"I have been keeping a close eye on the people of Tarus II." Solomon explains. "If any Dark Heroes had appeared, or anyone with malicious intent, I would have told you."

"Oh, isn't that just dandy of you." Amelia says blandly. "And who knows when that could have been. Now that Hope and I know about Dark Heroes, we can take preventative measures, but if we found out a month or a year from now, we might have missed important signs or clues of evil happenings among humanity. I'm just wondering what other non-trivial information you're keeping from us, secrets that could screw us if they went south before we realized."

Solomon heaves a dramatic sigh. "I always tell you information on a need to know basis. If that does not engender your trust, Hope can always use his Wordsmithing to rip it out of my head. It's not as if I can stop him."

"I'm not so sure about that." Amelia says, her eyes narrowing. "Taking information from the mind and soul of the Knowledge-Seeker? It sounds like a losing proposition. I don't think Hope would have as much leverage as you claim. I bet if he did that, you could turn the tables on him pretty easily. You might even be laying a trap for him with your words as we speak."

"Always with the conspiracies." Solomon says, looking away with a distinct lack of interest.

"I'm not so sure it is a conspiracy in the first place." Amelia says, before changing the subject. "But enough about all of that. I don't really care about your fancy Order of Sages or whatever. I do have a lot of questions about it, though."

"Ask, and I shall answer." Solomon says, returning his gaze to the former Black Queen.

"You said your order hunted down Dark Heroes." Amelia points out. "And you also said you failed to kill Dracula. What happened to him? What happened to his artifact?"

"That is an unsolved mystery." Solomon answers. "We were never able to locate Dracula's artifact. Due to how closely he worked with the Hell of Blood, we believed they had acquired his artifact. However, upon Jason waking me in this far future hellscape, I came to realize that shouldn't be the case. I doubt the Hell of Blood would have Dracula's artifact at their disposal, yet be as weak as they are. I have to surmise his artifact was either destroyed by someone else, or taken by someone else..."

"Like the Volgrim?" Hope asks.

"I did think it was them at first..." Solomon mutters, "but we've acquired what I presume are all of the artifacts the Volgrim took from humanity, and Dracula is not among them. Either Unarin kept a few relics somewhere secret, or a different actor acquired the Dark Hero for their own uses."

"Who else could it be?" Amelia asks. "If not the demons or the Volgrim, then...?"

"The monsters are prime suspects." Solomon says. "Fairies. Orcs. Goblins. There could be a random Troll somewhere in one of the Hells fiddling around with Dracula's artifact for all we know. Wordsmithing can't locate artifacts, so we don't have a way to search, either."

"You think a Troll is using one of the most infamous figures in human history as a toy?" Amelia asks pointedly.

"No. Just giving an example." Solomon says. "I still think the Volgrim have Dracula's artifact. If not them, then it may have been destroyed when they glassed Earth."

"Let's hope it has." Hope says, before chuckling to himself. "No pun intended."

Amelia smiles for an instant at her fiance's self-referential pun before schooling her expression again.

"Alright, let's focus on other things. My next question is in regards to the... treatment of Lowborn Heroes. Why weren't they ever given genuine Heroic Artifacts?"

"The angels could not detect the ascension of normal humans to Lowborn Heroes." Solomon explains. "They could only detect when a new Trueborn Hero had reached his or her age of maturity. Camael could, of course, look into the future, but she was not capable of divining every little event, and following the War in Heaven, her powers waned. She had lost too much Holy Energy, and as such chose to only look for important celestial events, such as who the next Trueborn would be, as well as what artifact to craft for them."

Solomon gestures vaguely to his left at nothing in particular.

"Take my Crown, for instance. Camael had made it long, long before I was ever born. However, she did not originally make the Crown for me, specifically. She merely divined what my broad abilities might entail, and thus went back to 'fine-tune' the Crown for me. When I came of age, she passed it to me from the heavens above, allowing me to step into my role as a Heroic King."

Solomon shrugs. "But she only had so many artifacts. Now that you've comprehended how many Heroes there are, can you understand why she only focused on crafting or adjusting artifacts to fit the strongest Heroes?"

Hope blinks. "The strongest Heroes? Hold on, you've just made me wonder... were there ever any Lowborn who were as strong as Trueborn heroes?"

"Ah! Now that is a good question." Solomon says, nodding his head sagely. "There were not many such cases, but there certainly were such cases. One such example was Blade Dancer Karla, a Lowborn who was born an ordinary daughter of Emperor Yang Guang. He was a despot, a tyrannical madman who she eventually rose to overthrow."

Solomon continues. "Karla obtained the gift of ascension by happenstance and ultimately slew her father with her newfound abilities. She was not stronger than the Trueborn Hero of that particular generation, but she was stronger than plenty of the Trueborn who came before and after. She was one of dozens of Lowborn who achieved great feats, but even she did not obtain the gift of a Camael-forged divine artifact."

"Karla." Hope repeats, making a mental note to try and remember her name. "I guess obtaining a relic wasn't terribly important. Jason and I are doing just fine without relics of our own, as should be plainly obvious. But that also makes me want to know: Are Dark Heroes even a threat to us now? We're Wordsmiths. Surely we can just... stomp them into meat paste with our magic if they become a threat."

Solomon frowns disapprovingly. He looks at Hope as if the young man had just babbled baby-like nonsense.

"Use your head! Do you think the title of 'enemy to humanity' comes only in the form of some fool slinging fireballs at random civilians or a mere cold-blooded murderer? Enemies to humanity can come in a thousand different forms. I'll bet Jason even thinks of killing Neil every once in a while. Neil's goals diametrically oppose Jason's, so in that respect, Jason could see Neil as a 'threat' worth eliminating."

"But killing Neil would piss off Hope." Amelia points out.

"And?" Solomon questions. "Are you saying that if Hope suddenly died and Jason was the sole Wordsmith left in existence, there would be nothing stopping him from killing Neil?"

Amelia and Hope exchange a glance. The Wordsmith chews his lower lip as he returns his gaze to Solomon.

"Well... Jason's a relatively kind guy. I can't see him just killing Neil like that..."

"You've identified one possible barrier. The moral one." Solomon patiently explains. "But there are so many more that would impede Jason's desire to kill Neil. Think of the enemies Jason would make if he killed the man. Neil's death might turn him into a martyr. People would question Jason, wondering if he were truly worth following. They might start to ponder Neil's philosophy more closely, and that would be truly dangerous. Killing a man is one thing, but killing an idea? Many have tried, but few have succeeded."

"So, killing a Dark Hero would probably be harder." Hope concedes. "Since they'd have magic and stuff."

"Yes. Magic and stuff." Solomon groans, resisting the urge to facepalm. "Imagine a random soldier who obtains the ability to grow plants and vegetables. Sounds harmless, right? Maybe this person starts off by doing good deeds, endearing people to him. Then one day, he decides that the demons aren't so bad. He starts influencing people to stand up for demonic rights or other such nonsense."

Solomon leans forward. "What then? Can you just kill him?"

Hope and Amelia's expressions both become gloomy.

"No..." Hope mutters. "He's become a popular figure. You'd have to, I dunno, undermine him, or something. Make people turn against him."

"And that, my boy, is why the Consortium of Sages existed." Solomon says. "If killing the bastard is all it takes, these matters could be solved easily, if not cleanly. But it's never as easy as plunging a dagger into a back. No, you have to take care of all the externalities, plan the victim's demise carefully, think about how to undo the damage they've wrought... and in Dracula's case, the damage was permanent. He brought vampires and werewolves into existence! We've never been able to put that genie back in the metaphorical bottle."

"It truly isn't easy to take care of a Dark Hero then." Amelia acknowledges. "But before, didn't you say you would find a way to give me my powers back so I could hunt these potential evildoers? Why bother when we have Hope here? He can just Wordsmith me new abilities, right?"

Solomon falls silent.

He remains unmoving for a few moments, frowning as he evaluates Amelia's physical condition.

"It's... not that simple. I've long suspected that Wordsmithing is not as convenient as Hope and Jason think it is. You can't just pull infinite power from nowhere."

"It's always felt pretty convenient to me." Hope protests. "I can give myself the ability to read minds easily. I can teleport around, terraform planets... granted, I need a lot of mana to do some things, and Jason nearly killed himself from over-exertion once, but those limits are pretty soft."

Solomon appears unconvinced.

"I doubt you've stress-tested your abilities adequately over the years, Hope. Have you ever used your Wordsmithing to bequeath a power on another person for a long period of time?"

"I... no? I can't say I have." Hope mutters. "You mean like granting someone telepathy?"

"Right. Like telepathy. But I'm not talking about doing so for a day or two. I mean giving that power to them with the expectation it will be a permanent ability in their arsenal."

"Well. Now that you mention it... not really." Hope says, suddenly feeling embarrassed at this huge gap in his knowledge base. "I know Jason has been allowing demons and humans to redeem permanent power-ups for Merit Tokens. Emperor Gorn even took him up on that deal, right?"

"The price is pretty high." Amelia says. "It's like a thousand Merit Points or some other ludicrous number. Not at all cost-effective for anyone but Demon Emperors."

"And that presents a... problem." Solomon says slowly. "The only people Jason has actually empowered so far are Demon Emperors. Beings with extremely hardy bodies, minds, and souls."

"It's pretty screwed up he's giving them boosts." Hope says, nodding.

"No, I'm not talking about the morality of the situation." Solomon clarifies. "I'm talking about the previous subject, empowering ordinary humans with your Wordsmithing."

Solomon reaches out and rests his spiritual palm on Hope's shoulder. "Young man, pretend for a moment that you granted your fiance here all of the powers she once lost.

Darkness manipulation, a mighty body, and so on. What long term effects could that have on her?"

"I have no idea." Hope admits.

"Right, and neither do I." Solomon says. "We know Jason empowered Phoebe's body to give her superhuman strength. The Body Booster is one of his inventions that empowers people through a mixture of Wordsmithing and general-purpose magic. Interestingly, the people who've subjected themselves to this magic have shown no adverse reactions."

"So... Wordsmithing someone's body permanently is fine?" Hope questions.

"There are inherent limits to every person. One thing you may not have realized is that the Body Booster facility on Tarus II has strict limits for how many times people can use it. It makes people far stronger than they were before, but it does so in 'doses'. People can only increase their strength or their senses a few times, and each dosage of magic must ensure they don't go over their biological limitations."

Solomon gestures to Amelia.

"Your fiancé is, not to be rude, an ordinary female human. Women are inherently weaker than men in the physical department, at least on average, so the maximum strength they can wield is also lower. It's obvious when the body is reaching its maximum potential, but what about a person's mind or soul?"

Hope's eyes light up with recognition.

"Ah! So... you think magic is limited by someone's soul-power?"

"I don't think so, I know so." Solomon proclaims. "If you were to uplift Amelia's abilities, you would have to keep in mind she is not the same Amelia who died on Solaris. She has an ordinary body now, and perhaps an ordinary mind and soul. I doubt she can wield the same powers she previously did."

Amelia coughs. "I'd appreciate it if you two didn't yap about me like I'm not standing right here."

"Right." Solomon says apologetically, pulling away from Hope. "The problem is, we've not conducted any genuine experiments on the transhuman capabilities your Wordsmithing can unleash. Jason's Body Boosters aren't good enough. Unless Amelia wants to become a guinea pig, I would advise against 'bolting' powers onto her soul willy-nilly."

"So what's the solution then?" Amelia asks. "Can YOU give me powers, old man?"

"I don't know." Solomon admits. "I've never deliberately tried to ascend a normal human to the rank of Lowborn. The fact it happens naturally means it should be possible if I spend a bit of time on the subject."

Hope scratches his cheek. "That reminds me... why didn't any Lowborn arise in the 100,000 years Jason was inside his cryopod?"

"I covered that already." Solomon says. "Humans don't ascend at random. They need to have their spiritual powers stimulated, or perhaps 'jolted.' Typically, coming into contact with a Heroic Aura is what can cause an ascension. I should also mention it's rather strange that Daisy ascended, since the children of Heroes almost never become Heroes themselves. It's not as if magical power runs in the blood. High spiritual potential is effectively a random mutation in the human genome."

"But you said that humans using Jason's new Power Glove were keeping the abilities afterward." Amelia points out. "So... couldn't humans who interacted with fairies and demons on the regular just as easily ascend?"

"Interacting with other species isn't the same as transforming into them and using their powers yourself." Hope answers. "But also, Jason and I are around now, so maybe just coming into contact with our Heroic Auras gave these people the basic ability to ascend, and the Power Gloves accelerated that transition."

Solomon nods approvingly. "I would have said about the same thing. In any case, the details don't matter much. Humans are beginning to ascend to the rank of Lowborn, and we must be prepared for the almost guaranteed eventual rise of Dark Heroes. The Demon Emperors will certainly recognize the potential in these figures and will look to sow discontent wherever they can."

Solomon directs his full attention to Amelia.

"Well? What do you think about being inducted into the Consortium? Have I allayed your fears by now? Or do you still want to grill me with more questions?"

Amelia scrunches up her face, looking displeased.

"I don't know. To be honest, I don't like you, Solomon. I also don't trust you in the slightest."

"Trusting me isn't what I asked." Solomon says calmly. "If you value your ties to the human species, joining the Consortium will mean taking a pledge to protect humanity, even from dissident elements like me. Imagine if I were truly working against humanity's best interests. It would be your job to kill me."

"Well, isn't that convenient." Amelia says blandly, crossing her arms. "And of course, by speaking this possibility, you make it seem like it would never happen. Nobody would be so stupid as to voice the possibility they fear most, so you must be a totally trustworthy guy. Right, Solomon?"

The Knowledge-Seeker heaves a sigh. "Believe me or don't. It's up to you. I don't know where your intense distrust comes from. I've explained myself as best as I possibly could."

"Excluding the fact that you held information from us, and are almost assuredly still doing so." Amelia bites back. "Besides. I kind of have a thing against Heroes. You know, because of Joan."

"It's a shame we lost the Sword from Heaven." Solomon remarks. "Would be nice to wave it around once in a while and calm you down."

"Alright, alright, you two." Hope says, intervening before their spat gets any uglier. "Solomon, I think we've heard enough. Thanks for giving me more info, but I have to agree with Amelia. Your lack of honesty is killing our relationship. I don't know if I can trust someone who habitually holds important information back from me 'for my safety.' And at this point, even if you change your ways and start putting me in the loop without my input, I won't know if you're telling me the whole story."

Hope shakes his head. "I just can't work with someone I can't trust. From now on, I'm not putting your Crown on until you show some sincerity."

Solomon frowns. "Hope, my boy, you're taking this too personally. I only wanted to see if you would-"

"I don't want to hear your excuses." Hope says raising his palm. "No more. I'll continue learning about the Heroes in here. I'll continue my training... but for now, I'm going to also start working on my own goals. I'd like to be at least a little more ambitious, moving forward."

Solomon nods slowly. "Right. A little more ambitious. I... see..."

Hope and Amelia say their goodbyes, then they turn and head out of the library, leaving Solomon behind.

The Knowledge Seeker's expression faintly shifts to one of anger.

"...Arrogant little bitch. She's twisting that boy's ear and bending him to her whims. Now she's turned him against me."

Solomon rubs his chin.

"Nothing worse than when a plan gets ruined because some woman decided to spread chaos at random."

He turns around and resumes his work, continuing to build his master library, a storage of knowledge that will someday surely shake the cosmos...

Part 489: The Exodus Deliverers

Months pass.

Hope and Amelia no longer interact with Solomon as much as they once did.

True to his word, Hope stops putting on Solomon's Crown, becoming less and less trusting of the Knowledge-Seeker's wiley ways. Like Jason, he too begins to see Solomon in a different light.

As for Amelia, she ultimately rejects Solomon's offer to join the so-called Consortium of Sages.

Despite their falling out with the Knowlegde Seeker, neither Hope nor Amelia come to blows with him. They continue to learn from him, but now with a healthy dose of skepticism directed at anything he says.

Hope continues speaking to and learning about the different Heroes present inside each of the artifacts. He allows Solomon to guide him toward different individuals, but he also takes a more proactive approach in learning about each one before interacting with them. Thanks to the book Hope compiled for Amelia, he has plenty of reading material on the various legendary figures present in humanity's history.

One day, nearly a year after his falling out with Solomon, Hope enters the Chamber of Waiting along with his half-mentor. As always, he maintains a healthy dose of skepticism toward Solomon, but also tries to keep his words polite and constrained.

"You will soon reach the 800th Hero." Solomon says to Hope cordially. "Of the Heroes you've met so far, there have been kings and paupers alike. But what do you think about the fellow I'm going to introduce you to today?"

Hope glances at the altars of the twelve great kings of Earth's past. Already, he's met nearly all of them, with only two remaining.

But the person he's going to meet today is not among them. No, this individual comes from the pedestals in the center of the room. A powerful individual to be sure, a noteworthy historical figure in his own right, and also a Trueborn, but...

"I am a little... confused." Hope says, gesturing toward a pair of large stone tablets. "I've read about his heroic feats. His powers seem incredible. He brought Egypt to its knees. He split the Red Sea. He summoned pestilence and hellish nightmares upon his enemies. So... why do you consider him a Lesser Trueborn?"

"Moses is not the fantastical enigma you might think him to be." Solomon explains. "He is... he is a very strange man. His powers are mighty, but... well, let's just say his dossier does not tell the full story."

Solomon smiles cryptically, making question marks pop up above Hope's head. He shrugs his shoulders, then takes a step back.

"I'll leave you to meet the man, the myth, the legend himself." Solomon says. "Just... don't expect too much. Moses can be a tad fanatical."

With those ominous words, Solomon disappears, returning to his library to continue writing books.

Hope scratches his head, then picks up the two tablets, each of which has five lines on them.

"Two artifacts?" Hope mutters, hefting the rather large and cumbersome stone tablets. To his surprise, they don't seem to be fragile in the slightest, but as hard as demonstone. "What would happen if I split the tablets apart? Would Moses die? Could he appear in two places? Never heard of a Hero possessing two artifacts like that..."

It doesn't escape Hope's notice that Moses's artifact is quite similar to Hammurabi's, in that they both depict ancient writing detailing laws and commandments humans were intended to follow. And from the discussions he's had with Hammurabi on occasion, Hope knows the ancient Hero King sneers at Moses's shoddy half-baked 'commandments.'

Ignoring the potential inter-Hero drama, Hope hefts the dual tablets and takes them out to the garden, where he has interviewed nearly 800 other Heroes. He sets the tablets on the stone table, propping them up with some Wordsmithed easels, then clears his throat.

"Materialize."

Hope summons the Hero from within the tablets. What he instead gets surprises him to his core!

Not one, but two men materialize on the other side of the table. Both of them look eerily similar, to the point Hope guesses they must be twins!

Both men wear crimson-colored robes, and sport beards, but one of them has a beard that hangs down his chest and reaches his belly button, while the other's beard only hangs a couple of inches off his chin, appearing much more modest. The two men appear quite old, in their 50's or so, but aside from the beards they look essentially identical.

"M-Moses?" Hope asks, not sure which one is which.

"Ah! We have returned to reality!" The short-bearded man says. "Brother, look. The Garden of Eden! The Creator has delivered us, after all these years!"

"As I knew he would." The long-bearded man says, appearing a bit calmer. "Oh, our God is a great God. He delivers us from evil, and he smites those who lacketh faith!"

The two men don't seem to notice Hope, or perhaps they don't particularly care about him.

He coughs to get their attention.

"Ahem. Uh, Moses? Is one of you named Moses?"

"I am he." The long-bearded man says, finally acknowledging Hope's existence. "Where are my manners? Forgive me, boy! You are clearly a servant of the Lord! I did not intend to ignore you. I am Moses, and this is my brother, Aaron."

"Good day to you, lad!" Aaron says, stroking his short beard. "And what might your name be?"

"I am Hope." Hope explains. "I'm the Hero of this generation, a Wordsmith."

Hope spends a couple of minutes explaining the current situation, catching the two Heroes up to speed. As he does, their smiles begin to fade, and their expressions become grave.

"Oh, how dreadful." Moses says.

"How horrid!" Aaron exclaims. "To think that all of humanity fell into despair for nearly one hundred thousand years! To think the Earth was destroyed!"

"Fear not, brother." Moses says, patting Aaron's shoulder. "Were our prayers to the Lord not answered? He has awakened us in this dark future to aid our successor! As he has many times before."

"You speak the truth, brother." Aaron says, immediately calming down. "So long as we have faith in our God, we shan't fear any evil."

Hope scrunches up his face for a moment before quickly schooling his expression.

I'm beginning to see what Solomon meant, he thinks.

"I've never seen two Heroes in an artifact before." Hope says slowly. "You two are twins?"

"Indeed. A rare breed among our kind." Moses acknowledges. "And proof of the great calling the Creator entrusted us with! Together, my brother and I traveled the lands to free the Israelites! We fought the Pharaoh! We brought down damnation upon Satan and Diablo, the Creator's enemies!"

"We were the first dual-Heroes to walk the Earth." Aaron says with great satisfaction. "We condensed the Lord's words into ten commandments for the later generations to obey. We brought order to our people and used our twin strength to repair the world which had begun to fall into lawlessness and decadence."

"I... see." Hope says, trying not to sound too rude. "I'm just a little confused. Solomon helped me acquire enough information to make a book about the ancient Heroes, and it didn't mention you were twins-"

"Solomon?!" Moses interrupts, his expression darkening. "That lawless, whoring, son of a devil? He still draws breath?"

"I mean, he's inside an artifact like the two of you. But yeah, he's still 'alive' in a sense..." Hope answers hesitantly.

"Humph." Moses sneers. "All the Wisdom the Creator could grant, and that decadent womanizer spent most of his days engaging in sins and misdeeds most foul! It is a pity his filth continues to taint the name of Heroes to this day."

"Here here, brother." Aaron adds. "The Lord does not look favorably upon adulterers and those who worship other gods."

Hope cocks his head. "You said Solomon worshiped other gods?"

"Indeed. To please the women he bedded, the Knowledge-Seeker bowed to statues and other gross idols of false gods." Moses sneers. "Whether they be foreign princesses or whores from within his own lands, that wretch would go to any length to bring a woman to bed."

Hope doesn't particularly care about this one way or the other, but he nods politely and puts on an expression of displeasure. "Oh, I didn't realize he was that sort of man.

Well, moving on. Why don't you two tell me about yourselves. I'm not sure how twin Heroes would function."

"It was quite simple." Moses says. "Our souls were not linked together, but we returned to the Lord's embrace in death. We shared the artifacts, and as such, we became bound in eternal undeath."

"Does that mean when one of you died, the other stayed alive a while longer?"

Moses nods. "I died first. Then, my brother followed a year later."

Hope rubs his scruffy chin. "So it's not as if when one of you passed away, the other did as well. That's good to know."

He pulls out the Heroic Encyclopedia and flips to the pages detailing Moses's life. "It says here you were called the Exodus Deliverer. Can you tell me about your Heroic Abilities?"

Moses smiles. "You are laboring under an incorrect assumption, young man. Neither I nor Aaron possess any magic."

"You don't?" Hope asks, blinking twice.

"Nay. Aaron and I are merely agents of the Lord!" Moses proclaims.

"We pass the power of the Creator through our bodies, but we do not control it, only guide its path." Aaron continues. "The Lord commands our fate. He illuminates our way, and as such, we act as nothing more than His servants."

Hope coughs. "Right. Well, what powers did the Lord 'pass through' you?"

"Oh, a great many types." Moses says, his gaze turning thoughtful. "The Ten Plagues were a few of them. When we later came to blows with the Emperors of demonkind, the Lord protected us with divine lightning from above."

"When we starved in the desert, he bequeathed us manna from heaven." Aaron adds.

"Ah yes, that delicious manna." Moses acknowledges with a lick of his lips. "On one occasion, the Lord sent down upon me the strength of ten bears, allowing me to battle his enemies with great fervor. Aaron even momentarily obtained the swiftness of a sparrow!"

"Indeed, those were the good days." Aaron laughs, lingering on his ancient memories with great fondness.

"So... you two say the Lord passed his power through your bodies," Hope says skeptically, "then does that mean you could... talk to the Creator?"

"Of course, of course." Moses says, closing his eyes and nodding his head. "Aye, we spake to the Creator on many an occasion. Even now, we hear His voice touching our souls."

"You can talk to him now? Right now?" Hope asks, trying desperately not to roll his eyes.

"Of course! The Creator is quite fond of you, in fact." Moses says, opening his eyes to smile happily at Hope. "You are a good agent for His will."

"Really?" Hope asks, while smiling and holding back a laugh. "And what does he think about Jason?"

"Jason?" Moses asks, frowning in confusion. "Who...?"

"The other Wordsmith." Hope clarifies. "The Creator did tell you about him, right?"

"Ah. The other Wordsmith." Moses says, looking away. "Well, you see, God's way is not to give us all the answers we need, but the strength to seek it out. He would not babble at me uselessly, but grant me a way to find the answers I seek."

"Right. Of course." Hope says. "Did he tell you anything useful, or...?"

"You watch your tone." Aaron says, suddenly standing up and glowering at Hope. "Brother! This boy is insulting God! Look into his eyes! He believes our God is a weak God! He believes he is superior to the Lord!"

Moses' smile vanishes. He stands up too, as if realizing the intent behind Hope's words. "Brat. You dare doubt the power of the Creator?!"

"No, no, that's not the case at all." Hope says half-apologetically. "It's just... I don't believe that you can actually speak to the Creator. You DO know he's dead, right?"

"The Creator is dead?" Moses repeats. "Poppycock! If He has perished, then why can I still hear Him?! You simply lack faith! You are a bloody secularist!"

In Hope's head, a random thought occurs to him. I'm surprised Moses would even know what a secularist is.

He stands up to match their postures. "Now now, let's not freak out. If you can talk to the Creator, the most powerful being in the universe, then surely he can tell you something actually useful."

"The Creator does not accept tests of His power!" Moses proclaims. "How dare you question the Lord's existence! I'm beginning to feel the need to teach you a lesson!"

"But you can't teach me a lesson." Hope points out. "You don't have any magic, remember? You can only 'channel' the Lord's power-"

"INSOLENCE!" Moses roars!

At once, the Hall of Heroes begins to shake. A powerful rumbling surges in the air.

The table and chairs rattle. They begin to vibrate and glide around as some sort of earthquake assaults the majestic palace. Hope's heart skips a beat as the two brothers hold up their hands, and darkness sweeps across the room, blotting out the light permeating the Hall of Heroes.

"BOY!" Aaron shouts. "How DARE you question your elders?! No man must speak against the Lord! No man must desecrate His name!"

The darkness rapidly thickens, transforming the garden from a beautiful scene of pristine greenery into a hellishly black and frighteningly gloomy scene of night-time. Not even the lanterns on the walls pierce the gloom, and Hope loses the ability to make out anything but the glowing eyes of the two ancient Heroes before him.

"REPENT!" Moses demands.

"REPENT!" Aaron repeats.

Shit, Hope thinks, I got carried away. These two might be wackos, but their powers are the real deal!

While he could easily shut down their powers by using his own, Hope doesn't want to turn the brothers against him. In the future, he will need their power and that of the other Heroes to destroy Jason and unite humanity.

So, Hope quickly schools his expression. He drops to his knees and bows at the feet of the Exodus Deliverers.

"Forgive me! I had eyes but could not see! You truly are agents of the Lord! I repent!"

"Do you truly repent?!" Moses yells.

"I do! I have seen the error of my ways! Only God himself could command such, uh, power! Such vast power! You must be the agents of His will!"

As Hope speaks, the rumbling begins to slow. Eventually, it stops, and the pitch-blackness pulls away.

"Good. Good!" Moses says twice. "You have learned a valuable lesson, boy! If you were not the Hero of this era, I might have smote you dead for uttering such heretical words!"

"The Lord would have smote you dead!" Aaron chimes in.

"Right! The Lord would have smote you dead!" Moses says unashamedly, as if those were the words he previously spoke. "But all men eventually err. You are fortunate to have learned your lesson quickly. You may rise."

Hope takes a second to collect himself before standing up.

"Haha... no hard feelings?"

"Of course not, of course not." Moses says twice, sitting back on his chair. "To err is to be human. Now, let us continue our discussion."

"Sure..." Hope mutters, as he also takes his seat.

For the next several hours, Hope learns more and more about the Exodus Deliverers. He probes them for information, and builds a picture in his head of what they can do for him.

Ultimately, he realizes they truly believe their powers are not their own, but that the voice of God is what guides their hands. This confounds him, but not wanting them to blow up the Hall of Heroes again, he ultimately relents and decides they won't be of much use in his future goals.

"You can roam about the Hall of Heroes as you please." Hope says, as he leads Moses and Aaron out of the garden, their tablets in his arms. "There are many Heroes here you probably know already."

"Including Solomon." Moses growls.

"Yeah. You really don't like him, do you?" Hope asks idly.

"Any god-fearing man wouldn't." Aaron snorts. "That bastard cares little for others. He is selfish to a fault. You should not trust him either, boy."

"Noted." Hope says quietly.

He mounts their tablets in a room specially made for 'processed' artifacts, those he has already interacted with, and finally heads back to his chamber.

Along the way, Hope spots Amelia inside the Heroic Armory, where a few Heroes who specialized in crafting weapons and armor during their lives chat with her while they work. Inside this room, the Heroes idly create beautiful, if somewhat impractical suits of steel, hauberks, as well as weapons ranging from swords and axes to javelins and halberds.

These weapons, though inferior in capability to modern weapons and armor, still look quite extraordinary. Hope walks up behind his fiance, where he finds her chatting with a pair of female Heroes whom Hope already met and spoke to in the past.

Li Xian, a Chinese Princess who lived during the Tang dynasty in the 7th century. She was a famous armor-maker who uplifted her people through her skills in metallurgy, and also quite a beauty to boot, with long blonde hair and vivid blue eyes.

Elisabeth Kindelmann, an armor-maker from Hungary who lived during the 16th century, and who helped craft protection for her king and his men. She sports bouncy curled blonde hair, along with a practical set of blue shirt and pants.

"-quite possible." Elisabeth says to Amelia, flashing a quick smile at Hope before continuing with what she was saying. "But imbuing magical elements into armor is not a simple matter. I knew of a few demons who managed to do such a thing, but the effects were quite weak."

"So it's not doable?" Amelia asks, looking a little dismayed.

"The Wordsmith can probably do it." Elisabeth replies. "And now that I have such a fine forge to work with, perhaps in time I might be able to do so as well. We already know crafting artifacts is possible thanks to Camael, and she is my idol! I look forward to matching her someday."

Princess Li Xian nods. "Will require effort. Not simple, but doable, yes."

Amelia turns to look at Hope as he touches her shoulder. "Oh, you're finally done with today's Hero, huh?"

"Yup. I met Moses, the actual fellow from the Bible. He had a brother with him, Aaron. Turns out they were twins."

Li Xian blinks. "I know Moses. Rude man. Very disrespectful. Strange fellow, too religious."

Elisabeth shrugs. "I've never met the man, but if I spot him or his brother, I'll try and say hello sometime."

Hope laughs. "Wouldn't recommend it. Miss Xian is on the money... the guy's a total wacko."

He and Amelia say goodbye to the Princess and the Metalsmith, then walk out of the armory, past a half-dozen other famous men and women from Earth's past.

As they walk, Amelia scrunches up her face. "The Hall of Heroes started shaking at one point. Was that...?"

"Moses and Aaron threw a freaking temper tantrum." Hope groans. "Couple of big bearded babies."

When they arrive in their room, Hope summons a privacy field so he and his fiance can talk.

"Not many Heroes are left." Hope says, plunking down on the couch. "I'll have met all of them before the year is over."

"You're still going to go through with your plan?" Amelia asks.

"I am..." Hope says, more quietly than before. "The Volgrim have to pay for what they've done."

His expression darkens.

"Unarin must die."

Part 490: Warframes

Eleven days after the destruction of Serris.

In the Milky Way, a series of incredible events begin to unfold in unison, though none of the participants intended for such to happen.

Jason, humanity's First Wordsmith, enters a time-accelerated space with the intention of bettering himself and his abilities. For how long he will remain inside, none can say. Perhaps not even the man himself.

Hope Hiro, humanity's Second Wordsmith, concludes the first major leg of his training by meeting all of the thousand Heroes he took from the Volgrim's secret base on Serris. But he has plans of his own now...

Phoebe Hiro and Neil Adams ready themselves for a major debate in just a few days, one which will shape the course of humanity's future as they both seek to convince their fellow humans to join their side. For Phoebe's part, she wishes to unify humanity, the monsters, and the demons into a single cohesive faction as per her husband's wishes. As for Neil, he wishes to do exactly the opposite, casting the demons as irredeemable villains who must fall in the Creator's name.

Meanwhile, the reigning Demon Emperors discover that Mephisto has not died. He has begun the process of not only reviving himself, but attempting an ascension never before seen in demon history. His goal is to achieve the rank of Demon Deity, a feat only previously accomplished by Wolfram before his body immolated. They march on his location, nestled in the forests of Numaria, where Emperor Glinch's domain stands proud and previously unassailable.

* * *

On the world of Volgarius, the crown jewel of the Volgrim Empire, a planet filled with tens of trillions of inhabitants, all is not well.

Many secret orders pass hands. Technopaths silently transmit commands from above to their subordinates, often obfuscating the exact reasons for why they must move to follow sometimes bizarre objectives. Psions quietly communicate through a central psionic network, disseminating orders just as odd as the ones the lower Technopaths have received. Even the Changelings follow these commands.

A 5th-Level Psion frowns deeply as she obtains new directives from her superior. [I do not comprehend. These materials are on the most secure planet in the Milky Way. Why should we transfer them to a less secure facility?]

[Do as you're told.] Her 6th-Level Psion commander says gruffly. [These crystals are somewhat precious. We must preserve them. And take care to move any incidental storages of Trifrancium and Dilithium, as well.]

The subordinate's face shifts to visible alarm. She leans toward her superior. [Is... is Volgarius in danger? Is the Plague...?]

[No questions.] The male Volgrim says, turning and flying away.

Across Volgarius, a quiet evacuation calmly takes place. Many elite Volgrim board ships, confused as to the hush-hush nature of the commands being passed down to them. They spread out, moving to sub-capital planets outside the Volgarius system, sometimes tens of lightyears away.

Inside the Founder's Hand, Commander Randis, Unarin's brother, the Fist of Volgarius, manipulates a large projector with images of thousands of Volgrim-controlled worlds inside a virtual Milky Way hologram. Every second, multiple notifications pop up, alerting him to one happening or another, some ranked as Green Level, some as Yellow Level, and some as Red Level.

With more than two million orbital cycles of practice, Randis calmly tends to every alert with practiced confidence.

An explosion at an exosteel factory. Yellow Level.

A missing shipping container filled with exotic materials. Green Level.

A conflict of orders between two opposing Psion factions. Yellow Level.

A Plague incursion at yet another Volgrim-controlled world. Red Level.

No matter what appears before him, Randis's hands and brain keep up with the unending torrent of information. While only a few Ascended actively work inside the Founder's Thumb, including Randis, Muuxunuu, and Unarin himself, they are all elites capable of thinking and acting at speeds no human could comprehend. Even without the cranial augments possessed by elite Technopaths, their intelligence and wisdom are incomparable to that of even the mightiest human.

Randis performs his duties with a completely neutral expression, as if the impending catastrophe has not even reached his ears. So assured is he that he inspires an aura of calmness among the more well-informed elites inside the Founder's Thumb. While they might ordinarily feel jumpy due to the terrible rumors swirling around, the mere fact that Randis displays no fear makes them not want to worry unnecessarily.

Unarin will guide us. Unarin will protect us from the Calamity, they think.

Ever since his ascension to the top position of Volgrim society, their most lauded leader has never faltered.

Whether during the Great Wars, the genocide of ninety-five percent of the Volgrim population at the steel claws of the Sentinels, or the rise of the Plague, Unarin has always reigned supreme.

He has become a God in his people's eyes.

Likewise, his brother Randis is just as great a hero to the Volgrim, though one many often overlook.

It was Randis who personally led a dozen assaults on the Sentinels, risking his life to ensure those wretched machines would fall.

It was Randis who stood up to the Volgrim elites when they imprisoned his brother, winning a ten-cycle battle of attrition as he personally smote dead a hundred mighty opponents in the ancient Colosseums of Venar III.

And now, it is Randis who guides the Volgrim through the impending crisis, as steady as a mountain before a tsunami.

"Randis." A male voice says from behind the obsidian-skinned Ascended.

"Unarin." Randis says, never taking his eyes off the projections before himself. "No energy signature detected as of yet."

Unarin walks up beside his brother, his ruby-skinned body striking an excellent contrast with Randis's black skin.

The First Founder glances at the galaxy map. Then he looks at a local map for Volgarius, one which shows 6 major regions of the planet at once.

"Eleven cycles." Unarin murmurs thoughtfully. "He's certainly taking his time."

"You think he will come." Randis states. "So he will."

"The Second Wordsmith is quite the enigma." Unarin says. "Resourceful. Greedy. Precise."

"Comparatively, the First Wordsmith is.. lacking." Randis follows-up.

Unarin nods. "Perhaps."

The two brothers remain quiet for a moment.

"Are you afraid?" Randis asks.

"No." Unarin says.

And he means it.

Randis sends a rescue team to a yellow-level alert, where a mine has collapsed on some Technopath workers.

Unarin nods. "You have many things that require your attention. I'll check again in three standard time units."

"You may visit whenever you need to talk." Randis says, never once looking at his brother. Always, he is busy tending to the Empire's needs.

Unarin departs.

He walks to a large open window, one which allows him to peer at the lush green gardens surrounding the Founder's Thumb.

On many occasions, he comes and stands here, thinking while admiring the view.

These gardens are the only major source of greenery on all of Volgarius. While they are not especially vast, they are visible from space, due to the way their color pops out of the steel and glass world of stratoscrapers overwhelming Volgarius's surface area.

After standing and staring for ten long seconds, Unarin frowns.

"Hmm... the feeling is intensifying. Shouldn't be much longer now."

The Second Founder, Dosena, materializes beside him. Her arrival is completely silent. Even when she tears the Void to travel across space, none can hear her approach.

[I can kill him.] Dosena says. [It would be easy.]

"But it would not be correct." Unarin says. "The universe is a vast place. I know this. You know this. Making peace with the Wordsmiths is of paramount importance."

[You refer to the great Game.] Dosena says. [The Milky Way lacks a Ruler. We are not players in the Game.]

"That may change if you reach the 10th Level." Unarin says. "No matter what happens, do not move unless I order you to do so. I will control my own destiny."

[I would not dream of doing so.] Dosena replies, seemingly offended Unarin would imply otherwise. [But that is not why I came to see you.]

Unarin blinks. He turns his head to look at the High Psion standing on his right.

"Is something the matter?"

Dosena frowns. [Do you recall that Cosmic Energy signature I told you about? I can sense it is growing stronger. Someone is definitely trying to Ascend.]

Unarin pauses. He looks back out the window, gently rubbing his chin.

"One of the Wordsmiths?"

[I do not believe so.] Dosena says. [I have detected a hint of evil in the ascension process. It is not the same feeling I obtained when I examined the Wordsmiths.]

Unarin doesn't say anything for a while.

He thinks back to the events of the past several orbital cycles.

Ever since the appearance of the Wordsmith, things have changed quickly and dramatically.

The galaxy is no longer stable. Now, it has begun to devolve into bursts of Chaos.

He recalls a conversation he had with the Wordsmith.

"...Dragon?" Unarin says absentmindedly.

[I am not certain. It might be.] Dosena replies.

"Keep your senses peeled, then." Unarin says. "Tell me if you detect anything more concrete."

Unaware of Mephisto's plans, the Volgrim have unknowingly been caught unawares. They have no way of knowing that as they speak, a dreadful power is amassing in a quadrant of the galaxy some ten thousand lightyears away.

But they are not afraid.

If any Cosmic entity should enter the Milky Way's Akashic Barrier, its inhabitants will not be defenseless.

The Volgrim have an ultimate weapon.

Her name is Dosena.

Tarus II.

Neil Adams sits inside a stealth-cloaked transport shuttle, along with ten of his honor guards, powerful soldiers decked out in armor comparable to Lieutenant Samuel's Rhino Exosuit. These specialized T-REX's were not made by Phoebe, but by humanity's other foremost inventor, Hans Wagner.

While Hans might not get the public's limelight in the same way their golden girl Phoebe does, his inventions are just as crucial as hers.

It was his nanite bombs that disintegrated many Grez when the demons first initiated battle with the Labyrinth Core during Stormbringer. He also developed alternate versions of the T-REX, including the Clinician, which saved countless wounded soldiers from certain death.

And on this day, Neil Adams just so happens to be heading to a remote factory built a hundred miles away from the Fortress of Retribution's city limits. This factory, of course, is run by none other than Hans Wagner.

And its identity is very special indeed.

Humanity just so happens to possess an incomprehensible, reality-defying technology that not even the Volgrim can easily copy.

Replicators.

And not just Replicators, but Fusion Power Plants, ones which have a magic and technology hybrid power system that grants humanity the equivalent of a sun's power.

These two things put together are absolutely incredible feats of engineering only made possible due to the Wordsmiths and their intervention.

While Phoebe Hiro may have factories of her own, she has not exploited the abundance of power to the maximum extent.

This remote factory is different.

Neil Adams licks his lips in anticipation. His shuttle arrives above a forest, where it passes through a cloaking field, revealing a large open clearing hidden underneath. A single square panel on the ground indicates an entry point into the facility, though there are other ways to access its interior through the usage of fairy temporal magic elsewhere on the planet.

But those ways don't suit Neil's purpose. While he might be trying to keep the factory a secret, it's not that he fears its discovery, but that any leg up on the demons could give him a huge boost in military supremacy in the future, even if only temporary.

Neil's shuttle lands underneath some trees, carefully positioned to minimize its visibility from orbit. While the Volgrim probably can't pierce the stealth field covering Tarus II with their spy technology, and probably can't see underground, it's still better to be cautious than not.

He exits the shuttle, and his guards follow him. They meet with a soldier stationed inside the facility who comes out to greet them. Then, she guides humanity's military commander down into the planet's depths.

As they walk, the soldier hands Neil a datapad. "Mister Wagner told me to give this to you, Commander."

Neil smiles faintly and accepts the datapad. He raises his eyebrows while he walks, gazing at its contents.

"Six new models? So fast?"

"After seeing Miss Hiro's performance during Stormbringer, Mister Wagner determined it would be best if our armed forces shifted direction, sir." The woman says respectfully. "He's devoted eighty percent of our energy allotment solely to mechanized war units."

Neil nods. "The performance parameters seem exceptional, at least to my layman eyes."

"Mister Wagner will explain the finer details." The woman says, flushing in embarrassment. "I'm not technically inclined, so I won't be of much use."

"That's fine." Neil says, as he lowers the datapad to his side. "I'm sure he won't go off on a terrible rambling diatribe, extolling the technical parameters of this new death machine. He definitely won't turn my excitement to tears of boredom."

The woman snickers, then quickly schools her expression to one of professionalism and discipline. Sometimes, even Neil can surprise people with a joke.

They walk down a long hall where they arrive before an assortment of elevators. A couple of them open within moments as engineers and soldiers step out, notice Neil, and quickly salute.

"Sir!"

"At ease." Neil says.

He and his guards step in the elevator, though due to weight and size limitations, they split into three groups to go down in different elevators.

A long three-minute descent follows.

Neil travels more than a thousand meters underground before the doors open. He steps into a massive factory, where the glint of welding torches, the hammering of machinery, and the chugging of mechanized labor rings through the facility.

Huge mechs hang from the ceiling, suspended by thick metal cables. Much like the Arachnid-Class Phoebe employed during Stormbringer, and the Planet-Walkers, these robotic constructs are larger than tanks, but now they come in a variety of basic configurations. At a glance, Neil notes a thirty-foot tall slender model, a fifty-foot tall heavily armored model, one that rolls around on treads, and even an odd gyroscope-based mech that rolls on a single magnetic ball.

While only half a dozen prototypes hang on the ceiling, Neil quickly understands that these are the building blocks to humanity's next major wartime upgrade. In addition to the enhancements of their human bodies through Jason's Body Boosters, his soldiers will soon sport lethal new weaponry, as well as machines capable of flattening cities and razing demonic empires to ash.

"Ah! Neil! So good to see you!"

Hans' voice slightly startles Neil, but he doesn't let the interruption of his thoughts show on his face.

Neil turns to look at the tall, wiry German scientist. "Hans. These new prototypes are looking impressive."

"You like zem, yes? Zey are quite beautiful, I must admit!" Hans chirps, his eyes curving into crescents. He adjusts his glasses as he walks over to Neil's side. "I am particularly proud of zee third one from zee left."

Hans points to one of the six mechs hanging from the ceiling. Its size is not the largest, but it does sport a sleek silver paint coating.

"The Ironclad." Neil says, recalling the name of that model from the datapad he was given. "I didn't have time to do much more than skim the data. What does it do?"

Hans leads Neil up a flight of stairs to an overhead observation deck, where they can better look at the giant warframes. Here, they can see every individual engineer welding and working on the different prototypes, some of them levitating through the use of flight-capable Hummer exosuits.

"It is a simple machine on zee surface, but its interior contains a wealth of secrets!" Hans explains. "Zee machine is equipped with a transforming two-type weapon called a Batterer. It can switch between a melee-hammer mode for close combat, and a shotgun-mode for mid-ranged combat."

Hans points at the Ironclad's back. "See zat green glowing nacelle? Zat is a shield generator. It ignores weaponry striking at melee range and deflects only bullets, lasers, and other long-ranged ordinances."

"A solid mid and close-range warframe." Neil says to himself.

"Aye." Hans acknowledges. "But zee enemies we will soon face are demons, so zis machine is not ideal for dealing with zem. Instead, look to zee second from zee end."

Neil follows Hans' finger. He gazes at a pitch-black machine with glowing red wings made of magical energy sticking out of its back. A single longsword rests in its hands.

"Zee Reaper." Hans says, visibly pleased with his work. "A very special machine. I could not make it alone. I had to enlist zee assistance of a fairy. It has a unique property you won't believe..."

"Go on." Neil says.

Hans glances at Neil's right hand. "You still wear zat glove I made for you. Good. You know how it is especially effective against enemies with abundant reserves of mana? So too is zee Reaper. It is armored, yet flexible. It drains zee mana from whoever it strikes, empowering itself. Zee mightier zee enemy zee Reaper faces, zee better it can perform."

He pauses.

"Within reason, of course."

Neil's eyes light up. "A warframe designed to kill Emperors. You've outdone yourself, making something this useful so soon."

Hans' excitement dims. "It is only a prototype. I have not been able to test its effectiveness against a Demon Emperor hellbent on destroying it. I worry it may not be durable enough to protect its pilot..."

"I have nothing if not abundant faith in your abilities." Neil says with a smile. "Do not sell yourself short, old friend. Jason may have Phoebe, but I have you, and in my eyes, you are her equal."

Hans scoffs. "You flatter me, but we both know zat is not zee truth."

"Mmm."

Neil doesn't belabor the point.

"I've heard rumors some of the Emperors have abruptly gone missing." Neil says. "When Hope returns, I'll have him try to find them. In the meantime, keep working on these machines. We might need them soon."

"Once zee prototypes are ready, we will scan zeir data into zee systems." Hans says. "Zen we will be ready to mass produce zem."

"I look forward to seeing them in action." Neil replies.

Hans shows off the other four models, each one making Neil's smile grow wider and wider. He offers some minor suggestions to spice up the lineup, and eventually takes his leave.

As Neil exits the underground base, he looks up at the sunny sky.

"First, the demons. Then, the galaxy."

Part 491: Killing Unarin

Volgarius, inside a Technopath-controlled stratoscraper where Sangin Lidra talked to Exolis Whitspur, the leader of Clan Dyna, only two weeks earlier.

Foop!

Abruptly, Hope Hiro materializes on the takeoff platform where dozens of interplanetary spacecraft once rested. This outward-facing hangar is exactly the spot where Lidra departed to travel to Serris, and also a spot Hope chose to leave a Waypoint behind.

But when Hope materializes, he finds that not a single ship rests on the platform.

Hope holds Excalibur in his right hand, and Hammurabi's miniaturized tablet in the other. On his belt, three other powerful artifacts rest, each one specially chosen for this mission.

But despite arriving ready to immediately engage in battle, Hope instead finds himself all alone!

He hasn't even hidden his body. He hasn't shielded himself or made himself invisible... he simply boldly steps out into the light, expecting to draw the gazes of every Psion within a thousand clicks.

What he instead finds is... nothing.

Hope looks around, slightly bewildered.

"The fuck?"

He swivels in place, casting his senses out like a wide net. He speaks several Words of Power, only to realize the once-bustling citytropolis of Volgarius has been mostly deserted.

He does spot a random speeder flying here or there. Sometimes an airbus. Sometimes a hauler with junk.

But compared to the tens of thousands of aircraft that dotted Volgarius's skies only two real-time weeks ago, it appears practically barren now.

Inside Excalibur, King Arthur chuckles humorlessly.

"So it's like that. It seems the Volgrim anticipated you would return. They've evacuated the planet."

Hope's expression sinks. "They did?! But how?! There were like eight bazillion sentients living here!"

"They have Warpgates, young one." Arthur says calmly. "And likely millions or billions of spacecraft. It's not a stretch to think they could do such a thing."

"Yeah, but-" Hope starts to say, only to pause as the hairs on the back of his neck prickle up.

He spins around, startled to see that a High Psion has appeared behind him.

"About time." Hope says, grinning viciously. "You must be Dosena, the Volgrim's mightiest Psion. Here to face off against the legendary Wordsmith?"

The Psion across from him wears flowing red robes, and a dark cape billows behind her back. Her striking golden skin makes her appear quite vicious; an elite among elites. Hope isn't certain if she is Dosena, as he has trouble telling the different Volgrim apart, but it must be her, given how easily she sneaked up on him.

The Psion looks at the human with a complete lack of emotion.

[You are mistaken. My apologies, for I was hoping to meet you sooner. Perhaps under more... pleasant circumstances.]

She pauses.

[My designation is Creator Demila. I am a 7th Ranked Psion, like Confessor Vulpanix.]

Hope blinks. "I already trashed Vulpanix. You think you can do better than her?"

He tightens his grip on Excalibur, ready to leap forward and cut Demila down. However, he still holds back, wanting to hear what she has to say.

[Again. You are mistaken.] Demila says. [I am not here to fight you. Though, if meting out death is the only thing on your mind, I suppose we could do so. Compared to Vulpanix, I will not prove much of a challenge. She is more powerful than me.]

"So why are you here, then?" Hope asks, glancing around to see if a cavalcade of 8th Level Psions will pounce out of a tear in space to blast him to smithereens.

[Founder Unarin has a message for you.] Demila says. [He wants to meet you at the Founder's Thumb.]

Hope narrows his eyes. "So it's a trap then. You want to lure me to your headquarters so you can catch me unawares."

Several seconds pass.

Demila exhales through her nose, in a manner somewhat similar to a sigh.

[I have been instructed not to harm you. We have evacuated the planet to prevent you from causing a mass casualty event. You need not worry that Founder Unarin himself will not be present at the designated meeting site, nor that he will try to deceive you. That is not the Volgrim way. That is not the First Founder's way.]

Hope cocks his head. His eyes flick from left to right, waiting to see if a camera crew is going to pop out and say that he's being pranked.

Obviously, no such thing happens.

"This is a trick." Hope states.

[I can guide you to the Founder's Thumb.] Demila says. [Do you wish to meet Founder Unarin?]

This time, it's Hope who pauses.

He narrows his eyes, gazing intently at Demila like a hawk.

"No need. I'll make my own way. TELEPORT!"

Abruptly, Hope vanishes from the spot!

Normally, teleporting tens, hundreds, or even thousands of miles without returning to a Waypoint would drain the Wordsmiths of their internal mana reserves. Jumping to a new and novel location, for some reason, takes much more energy than one where they've placed a Waypoint previously.

But thanks to the power of Excalibur, Hope possesses practically unlimited reserves of mana. He travels halfway across Volgarius in an instant, materializing in the skies above the Founder's Fingers.

Immediately, Hope erects a powerful force field around himself, one fueled by Excalibur's reserves. He levitates in the sky, pivoting around to look for danger. In his mind, he plans to intercept a half-dozen 8th Level Psions who were surely going to ambush him!

But once again, even when he casts Word of Power to detect foreign entities, he finds... nothing.

No enemies.

No ambush.

No aircraft.

Nothing at all.

By now, Hope is beginning to feel truly perplexed. He detects several scattered Technopaths and Changelings inside the smallest of the five towers arranged in the center of the grassy green nature preserve. This, he assumes, must be the Founder's Thumb. As for the other towers, they are completely empty.

"What the hell is going on...?" Hope mumbles to himself.

Inside Hammurabi's tablet, the old man chuckles quietly. "Solomon told you not to come here, boy. You should have listened. You're making a fool of yourself."

Arthur nods, his spiritual senses easily sweeping the area. "There's no need to go any further, Hope. Unarin has beaten you."

"No." Hope growls. "He's a monster who has treated humanity like cattle. Today, he must die. Whether he's here or not, I'll hunt him down, find him, and kill him."

Arthur shrugs. "Suit yourself."

Hope focuses his mind. He notices a few bio-signatures inside the Founder's Thumb he's never encountered before.

Not Technopaths.

Not Changelings.

Not Psions.

He concludes they must be either Dolgrimites or Ascended.

One of those entities stands on a platform extending out of the Founder's Thumb. This particular Ascended has bright pink skin, and beautiful watery-blue eyes.

Hope teleports to the individual's position, materializing before the Ascended he recognizes as Muuxunuu, Unarin's Head Administrator.

While Hope has never seen her or Unarin in person, he did see both of them during the broadcast where Unarin revealed he was in possession of Excalibur.

When he arrives before Muuxunuu, Hope's heart skips a beat.

He realizes that despite being an alien creature with features different from any human... she is... shockingly beautiful. Much more so than her appearance seemed to be on the video he saw.

Hope becomes momentarily awestruck by how lovely and innocent Muuxunuu appears. Her limpid eyes take a moment to travel from Hope's previous position to his new one. When they make contact with Hope's eyes, he takes a step back.

"I, uh, you-?" Hope awkwardly stammers. "Unarin, uh, take me to him?"

"Hope Hiro. Mighty Wordsmith." Muuxunuu says respectfully, bowing her head toward him. "I am Unarin's Head Administrator, his personal assistant. The First Founder is expecting you."

Hope quickly gets a grip on himself. He frowns at her oddly subservient attitude.

"This is a trick." Hope says.

Muuxunuu raises her head. Her expression becomes one of faint confusion.

"A trick?"

"There's no way this is legitimate." Hope says, pointing Excalibur at her. "Where is Unarin, really?"

"He is in his Sanctum." Muuxunuu says, unbothered by humanity's deadliest weapon being pointed at her chest. "Unarin does not lie. Unarin does not deceive."

"I find that hard to believe." Hope snarks. "Everyone lies at some point."

Muuxunuu simply stares at Hope.

"Not Unarin."

She turns around, presenting her back to Hope without a hint of fear. If he wished, he could reach out and behead her with ease.

Muuxunuu turns and walks into the hangar.

Hope pauses for two seconds, unsure what to do.

But eventually, he relents. He follows her inside, keeping his eyes peeled for ambushes and traps.

As always, Hope hardly sees a single other Volgrim. Once, he spots a Changeling walking down a hallway in the distance. Another time, he spots a Technopath in a sound-proofed room working on something mechanical.

"We have evacuated Volgarius." Muuxunuu explains. "We did not wish to leave countless innocents available for the Mighty Wordsmith to slaughter unjustly. The Volgrim who remain are critical to the functionality of our society. They must continue to perform their duties, no matter what."

"So what you're saying is, the people who are left are so critical that if I killed them it would utterly cripple your species' capabilities?" Hope asks, smiling at Muuxunuu's back evilly.

Muuxunuu nods. "Yes."

Hope's smile vanishes. He suddenly feels as if asking that question was incredibly stupid.

For some reason, he just can't bring himself to harm the pretty Ascended woman in front of him, or mindlessly lash out at the other Volgrim.

Hope really only intended to kill Unarin and any Psions or Technopaths who blocked his path.

But the closer Hope draws to Unarin's Private chambers, the more unsettled he feels.

This is... too easy. It can't be this easy. Unarin must be laying a trap for me.

Eventually, Muuxunuu and Hope arrive at a pair of massive metal doors. Each one appears heavy, as if they must be ten feet thick and weigh fifty tons each.

But to Hope's surprise, Muuxunuu walks up to the doors and gives them a push. They open inward slowly, with great gravitas, confirming to the Wordsmith that they are indeed as massive as he thought.

Holy hell. Hope thinks. This Muuxunuu is... strong! She's not as simple as she appears.

After Muuxunuu opens the doors, she steps to the side and looks at Hope with her beautiful blue eyes.

"The First Founder waits for you inside."

Hope holds Excalibur a little tighter, as if afraid he might drop it should Dosena pop out to attack him from nowhere.

"So you claim." Hope says, but this time, his words lack the same venom as before. He just can't bring himself to be rude to such a nice, pretty lady like Muuxunuu.

After a moment of awkward silence, Hope marches into the First Founder's Inner Sanctum.

This place, where Jason has already walked, carries with it a deep and rich history. Hope glances around at the pieces of artwork on display, the miniaturized cityscapes crafted with impeccable detail, and the beautiful chandeliers hanging from the ceiling.

Everything about the Sanctum screams 'high class' to Hope, who starts feeling like a country bumpkin by comparison.

"Unarin!" Hope yells. "Show yourself! Come out and face me."

Hope easily detects Unarin on the second level, up a flight of stairs. Before Hope can approach, Unarin walks up to the balcony and looks down at the young man below.

"Hope Hiro." Unarin says softly. "It's nice to finally meet you."

"Cut the crap." Hope snaps. "Teleport."

He vanishes from his position and reappears behind Unarin, whirling to face the First Founder.

Unarin calmly turns on his heel and smiles at the Wordsmith.

"Not much for pleasantries, I take it. You're very different from Jason."

"I've come to kill you." Hope says, flicking his eyes around. "So let's cut the crap. I know you wouldn't be here, unprotected. Where's Dosena?"

"Dosena is here." Unarin says. "But she will make no move to stop you, no matter your intentions. If you intend to kill me, then by all means, I won't bother wasting any air on the matter. Have at it."

Unarin folds his hands behind his back, stands up straight, and looks at the Wordsmith with an expression of pure apathy.

Hope scowls. He lifts Excalibur up and presses the blade against Unarin's neck.

"You're eager to die?" Hope asks.

"Not eager." Unarin corrects. "Truth be told, I'd rather keep living. I've many things yet to accomplish. But I'll not skulk about, hiding in secret fortresses to drag out my certain death. If a Wordsmith wishes to kill me, I good and well can't hide, can I?"

"So this is it then?" Hope asks. "You just stand there, I kill you, and it's over?"

Unarin nods. "You are angry at me. You blame me for the fate which befell humanity, as you should. I was one of the key architects of your people's fall and later enslavement to the demons. I also authorized those tests to be performed on captive humans. I treated your species like cattle. It's only reasonable you would hate me enough to want to kill me."

Fury begins to cloud Hope's vision. "So you admit to it! Do you think a bit of honesty will prevent me from beheading you, right here and now?!"

"By no means." Unarin says. "Let me assure you. I am Unarin. I am not a clone, a construct, or a hologram. I am the one you hate most. If you intend to kill me, you can do so at your leisure. Dosena will not intrude, and will allow you to leave, unmolested. You can even kill all of the Volgrim inside the Founder's Thumb, if you wish. You'll cripple our wartime capabilities, and the Plague will surely destroy what's left of our Empire within ten orbital cycles."

He adds, "A decisive end to the Volgrim Empire, wouldn't you agree?"

Hope's angry scowl lightens. He stares deeply into Unarin's eyes.

"What are you playing at? You're making this too easy. Trying to use reverse psychology on me?"

"It's nothing as silly as that." Unarin says. "I assume you're a smart human. You possess Solomon's Crown, yes? You should be wise enough to see the folly of what you're about to do."

"The folly...?" Hope asks, Excalibur's blade still hovering a mere millimeter from Unarin's neck.

"Hope." Unarin says calmly. "When you kill me... and the other Volgrim here... what will happen?"

Hope remains silent for a time.

"The Plague will... go unopposed..." Hope says slowly.

"So you do see the issue." Unarin says. "That's right. The Volgrim protect our galaxy from the Plague. We are losing this war, of course. Slowly, we lose more and more worlds to its advance each and every cycle. Assuming no external events occur, we should collapse entirely within one hundred orbital cycles. Perhaps a bit more."

Unarin smiles.

"But then you come along and separate my head from my neck. Our people suddenly lack the leader who has held them together for millions of cycles. I imagine our bulwark will buckle quite quickly. The Plague will rapidly devour hundreds, thousands of worlds. They will come for yours. Humanity shall perish, along with the Volgrim. The end."

Hope's stomach sinks.

"So that's your ploy. You know I can't kill you, because if I do, I'll damn humanity."

Unarin raises an eyebrow.

"That's not true. You are a Wordsmith, Hope. You can kill me, destroy the Volgrim Empire, and hide humanity inside a pocket space of some kind. You don't have to live in this galaxy at all. You can always go somewhere else, somewhere the Plague won't find you."

Hope nods slowly. "Yeah... I can do that."

He pauses.

"It feels like there's a 'but' coming, Unarin."

The First Founder rests his hands on his waist. "But... there is no such thing as an unclaimed galaxy. If you think the Plague is frightening... you've no idea what horrors lay out there, beyond the Milky Way's confines... in the Void."

"There are other sentient species in other galaxies?" Hope asks.

"Hahaha." Unarin laughs emotionlessly. "Far more than you can fathom. Our universe is bigger than you can comprehend. The forces you have seen are dwarfed by many magnitudes of other frightening creatures lurking, waiting in the Void."

Unarin shrugs.

"You have been hurt. I am sorry for taking humanity and turning it into a chattel species. The demons feasted on human bodies and souls for 100,000 cycles. My people tested our technology and abilities on captive humans, as well."

He leans toward Hope with an intense look in his eyes.

"But if you think we did all of that for fun? Then you are sorely mistaken."

Slowly, Hope lowers Excalibur to his side.

"You're saying you had to torture men, women, and children? You had to brutalize humans and their clones? It was necessary for the greater good?"

"Perhaps not necessary." Unarin says. "But... efficient. Your species is quite remarkable. Equal to my own in terms of its versatility. We made many incredible advances by studying human biology. And every advance was for the explicit purpose of turning the Milky Way into a future player in The Game."

Something about those last two words alarms Hope. He furrows his brow at the First Founder.

"What do you mean? What 'Game'?"

"The Game is The Game." Unarin says simply. "The eternal Game between Rulers. It transcends time. When this Eternity ends and the next one begins... The Game will continue, as it always has, as it always will."

Hope begins to feel as if Unarin isn't babbling random mumbo-jumbo, but something of life and death importance. Something Hope must absolutely pay attention to.

"You're not making sense." Hope says. "Explain it more succinctly."

Unarin scoffs. "Weren't you going to kill me? I don't see any point in continuing."

"Fuck off." Hope snaps. "Fine. You've piqued my interest. I won't kill you. Are you happy?"

Unarin widens his eyes. He gasps, as if in amazement. "Truly? You are more benevolent than I expected, Mighty Wordsmith. I will carve this favor on my heart for all eternity."

Hope begins to feel somewhat depressed. Now he understands why Arthur and Hammurabi subtly mocked him for thinking he could just stroll up and kill Unarin.

Although, in his heart, Hope realizes he never wanted to do that anyway. All he wanted to do was get some answers; to learn why the Volgrim would inflict such cruel and barbaric acts upon innocent humans, cloning them and torturing them over and over again for a hundred thousand years.

Finally, it seems as if he will receive the answers he wants most.

Unarin folds his hands behind his back. His expression of sincere gratitude vanishes, an in its place, the same commanding aura as before takes over.

"I'm surprised. I thought Solomon would have told you. If the Mind Thief doesn't know, I cannot imagine why not. He must know of the Game, yet he does not speak of it to you. Perhaps I would be doing him a disservice if I told you myself."

"Solomon and I aren't on the best of terms." Hope retorts. "I've caught him deceiving me several times."

"Understandable. You don't enjoy being lied to." Unarin says sympathetically. "I may withhold information, but I never lie. I have no reason to do so. Lying is something weak and dishonest worms do, not rulers and leaders."

"So tell me about the Game already." Hope says. "Or are you pulling words out of your ass?"

Unarin doesn't hesitate to answer Hope's question.

"Archangel Raphael should know more about this than even I do. If you doubt anything I am going to tell you, you can ask him for clarification."

He continues with a question. "Tell me, Hope. What do you know of the event your people once called the Big Bang?"

Part 492: Glinch's Thralls

On the world of Numaria, more than half a dozen Demon Emperors and twenty Demon Dukes march through the paradise-class planet's forests as they head toward Emperor Glinch's Stitched Wasteland.

Emperor Auger does not directly join the party. He stays back at the capital of his world, viewing the happenings remotely through the power of a subordinate.

But Yardrat does lead the party. He is joined by Emperors Fae, Dagon, and Nymph, as well as Duke Hamir and several other elites of their Hell. It becomes obvious to all the other demons present that the Fourth Hell of Punishment is truly the mightiest among all the others. Even mere Dukes can explode with the power of Emperors, should Auger choose to grant them that ability.

As for the First Hell of Damnation, its remaining members are truly a miserable sight. Bael has become the lone Emperor still loyal to his Hell, while Mephisto and Zamiel no longer care about the alliances of their species. Bael is joined by Vepar, formerly the Baron of Toxicity, now having evolved to the rank of Duke through the human-demon alliance efforts.

Vepar, while not an Emperor, is still an insidious existence. Like Mephisto, she can transform her body into formless clouds of poison gas. She can strike with venom and poison alike, paralyzing her foes or corroding their nervous systems with ease.

Also notably absent is Beelzebub, due to him forcibly becoming aligned to Jason Hiro. While Beelzebub might actually prove an incredible powerhouse if he were to continue fighting for the First Hell's benefits, the problem is that none can say whether his allegiances would make him privy to spilling secrets of this operation to the humans...

From the Second Hell of Lust, not a single Duke joins the party. This Hell has already thrown their lots in with humanity, so no members of the Mephisto Extermination Operation are eager to have their secrets blabbed. Defeating Mephisto could lead to a discovery about the potential for ascension past the rank of Emperor. No demon elite wants that information to fall into the hands of their enemies.

From the Third Hell of Blood, few elites remain. Many of them were slain by the Cherubiim, reducing their Dukes to only a sliver of the other Hells. The Emperor of Thirst, Kristoff, still walks the mortal coil. He is joined by two subordinates, Vespera, the Duke of Gloom, and Rhesus, the Duke of Predation. These are the elites he considers his Hell's most capable remaining powerhouses, and the ones most suited for the mission to bring about Mephisto's end.

From the Fifth Hell of Calamity, a large number of Dukes join two Emperors, Serena and Crow, as they trail along behind the other Hells.

Unbeknownst to anyone present, Emperor Yumagi is alive and well. The only demons who observed his return were those aligned with Mephisto. Not even Gorn is aware that Yumagi survived the Cherubiim's wrath, and Yumagi is strangely keen to keep his return quiet.

As for the Sixth Hell of Isolation, only Emperor Melody has chosen to come along. The other elites of her Hell simply aren't in the right headpsace to join her, following their fall to the Plague.

Yama's Hell, the Seventh Hell of Corruption, has fallen apart with its Emperor being absorbed by Mephisto. Now, its many darkness-aligned entities have scattered in search of a figure lost to time...

Yardrat, Fae, Dagon, Nymph, Bael, Kristoff, Serena, Crow, and Melody march on the Stitched Wasteland, along with twenty Dukes. A terrifying force in any previous era, but one that feels somewhat weak and vulnerable in the months following the return of the Cherubiim, as well as the two Wordsmiths, not even mentioning the enemy they might face should they fail to stop Mephisto's ascension.

Yardrat's glum expression does nothing to uplift the moods of the others around him. As he and the other Emperors run across Numaria's surface, weaving their ways through the dense forests and trees, Bael speaks up from the back.

"Hey, Yardy! Why are we runnin' like a bunch of chumps? Just pop us over to Glinch with those fancy portals of yours!"

Yardrat shoots a glance back at Bael without slowing down. "I can't. Glinch's minions have an uncanny ability to twist the space around themselves. I couldn't create stable portals once we're inside if my life depended on it. I've no doubt he bred them for the express purpose of keeping me from spying on him."

Fae jumps over a bunch of twisted prickle-vines, scratching her palm on their thorns. "Doesn't that mean if something goes wrong, you won't be able to yank us out of the Stitched Wasteland?"

"Trust me." Yardrat mumbles, sounding more than a little depressed. "You don't want to hear my answer."

"There is no need to concern yourselves with escaping." Crow says solemnly, deftly flying through the underbrush with her blue wings. "If Mephisto ascends, it won't matter where we flee. He will be capable of hunting us like deer."

Yardrat snorts. "Speak for yourselves. I enjoy running away if it means saving my life."

"Coward." Bael says. "A REAL man always fights to the end!"

"Aren't you in a woman's body now?" Yardrat shoots back. "You're one to talk."

"H-hey! Women can be real men too!" Bael protests. "Get with the times!"

Emperor Melody laughs. "You tell him, Bael! Preach it!"

Serena remains silent, merely rolling her sightless eyes at everyone else's childish barbs.

* * *

Five hours pass as the demons race through Numaria's forests.

Eventually, the trees begin to thin out, before abruptly disappearing altogether. As if erased by a nuclear bomb, the forest's cover vanishes to reveal a grey-colored lifeless plain lacking all traces of warmth and life.

The Stitched Wasteland.

As soon as the demon leaders reach the edge of the wasteland, they pause their flight to stop and look around.

"Glinch's domain is bigger than you might first believe," Yardrat explains, gesturing toward the horizon. "Offhand, I believe the last time we measured the Stitched Wasteland's diameter, it was nearly 500 miles. You can't even see the other side from here because it dips below the horizon. The good news is, we only have to travel halfway into the interior, where Glinch's central laboratory resides."

Dagon, the Emperor of Pathogens, kneels down to scratch at the ashen soil. He grimaces as it clings to his palm and starts to burn his flesh.

"Acidic." Dagon mumbles.

"Every time Glinch creates a new thrall, his domain expands." Serena explains. "His toxic miasma is invisible and odorless, but it destroys plant-life and lower animals with ease. It won't have any effect on elites like us, but it's best if you don't deliberately play with the soil he's corroded."

Dagon shakes the soil off his palm, grimacing as he has to clap his hands and rub them against his pants to stop the acid from burning him further. Luckily, one of the Dukes nearby has a weak healing ability, so they're ability to fix him back up.

"What a miserable shithole." Fae groans. "I do NOT get what Glinch enjoys about living here! I'd go crazy from boredom after a week!"

Bael laughs. "No kidding, toots. Why do you think Glinch is such a wacko? He already went crazy!"

"Oh. Fair point." Fae mutters.

The Emperors and Dukes start moving toward the center of the wasteland, following Yardrat's lead. They do not run, but move at a brisk walk, keeping their eyes peeled for threats. Ten miles in the distance, they spot a pair of strange aberrant creatures standing perfectly still, looking at one another with hollow eyes, but they can't make out the details of those figures at their current distance.

"Bael, watch out!" Serena suddenly shouts, startling everyone.

Every demon elite's head snaps toward Bael's general direction just in time to see an invisible creature materializing, its massive body poised with a giant claw up in the air, ready to slash down at Bael.

The monster's huge torso and comparatively tiny head and skinny legs contrast with its wretchedly massive arms, its mottled and rotted skin, and its beady green venomous eyes.

The instant it snaps its claws down to assassinate Bael, the dumb galump accidentally trips on a rock, stumbling and avoiding the monster's attack! Bael falls face-first in the soil and the creature's downward slash swishes across his back, barely missing him by a millimeter!

"Lucky!" Yardrat exclaims, his pupils the size of pinpricks.

Crow roars in rage. She leaps toward the monster, the strange deformed horror with proportions far different from any naturally born creature in existence, and she swings her fist at its chest!

THUMP!

Crow knocks the creature down, sending it skidding backward across the dirt to lay in a heap.

But Crow doesn't celebrate. To her shock, she didn't even manage to bruise the monster, only knock it on its ass! The frighteningly durable monster silently stands up, and its body rapidly fades away as it becomes invisible.

Not once does the creature make a sound.

"Everyone watch out!" Crow shouts. "This bastard is strong! I don't even know if I hurt it!"

The heart of every demon elite skips a beat as they try to look for any signs of the monster. Only Serena, with her Soul Sensing capabilities, manages to trace its vague movement.

"Over there!" Serena says, pointing in front of Yardrat.

The monster once again becomes visible as it tries to slash Yardrat in half, but he isn't caught off-guard and leaps backward, safely avoiding it just in the nick of time.

"TEAR!" Yardrat yells, gnashing his teeth.

The Emperor of the Void tears the air in front of himself, unable to properly create a portal, but still able to momentarily rip a crack in space straight across the monster's torso.

A shallow cut on its chest is his only reward.

"Lucifer's Tits!" Bael exclaims, climbing to his feet. "This thing is as tough as demonstone!"

Melody fires off sonic blasts at the monster, punching with her fists to try and blow out its eardrums, but her attacks have no effect.

The monster continues charging at Yardrat to try and cut him to pieces. As it does, Crow once again steps up to protect Yardrat, deflecting its rending claws with her steel-like feathers while dishing out punishment with her fists. Crow is without a doubt the most physically imposting member of the party, possessing more strength than any demon in existence except for Belial.

But even she can't manage to do more than knock the monster back!

The other Emperors quickly start pitching in. Dagon summons corrosive chemicals to try and melt the monster's thick hide. Nymph summons vines from beneath its feet to wrap its legs and keep it immobile. Kristoff summons bloodied blades to cut the monster from behind, slashing its back with swords made from his own plasma. Fae fires explosive projectiles with a low yield at the monster, taking care not to accidentally hurt her allies. Melody sends sonic shockwaves into the ground, trying to soften the soil to trap the monster in quicksand.

But the monster proves more frightening than any of the Emperors imagined!

Bael and Serena can't provide much assistance to the others. They watch helplessly as Nymph's vines corrode to ash, melted by the Stitched Wasteland's ability to destroy plant-life. Fae's explosions barely even knock the monster back. Dagon might as well be shooting the monster with a squirt-gun for all the use his chemicals have. Melody can't seem to accomplish anything either!

"Shit." Bael growls. "I gotta help them."

"You don't have any magic." Serena says.

"No. But I got this." Bael says, reaching down to touch his weirdly fancy belt.

When Bael activates the Matriarch's Armor, it begins popping out of his waist and engulfing him from head to toe in lethal-looking demonstone armor. His plated chest and spiked shoulders turn Bael from a dopey looking version of Ose into a commanding and fearful warrior clad in demonic armor, making Serena gasp in surprise.

"Bael?" Serena asks, unable to see the armor, but sensing that his soul has suddenly become difficult to detect due to something shrouding his entire body. "What did you do?"

"Ose gave me some armor." Bael explains. "It ain't mine. But we'll talk 'bout it later. I gotta help the others!"

Bael doesn't hesitate. He rushes toward the monster, joining Crow as a frontline tank to try and draw the creature's attention.

Crow barely even registers Bael's new appearance, shoving any concerns about the demonstone-clad warrior to the back of her mind. All she feels is relief when the monster's brutal strikes slow down as it starts slashing at Bael as well.

THUNK! THUNK!!

The brutish monster silently whales on the others. For ten minutes, Bael and Crow take the beatings of their lives while Yardrat slowly tears its skin and cuts its bones with targeted spatial distortions. He alone manages to injure the creature the most heavily, while the other Dukes and Emperors can barely offer much assistance.

Bael grimaces as the creature grabs him by his helmet, lifts him up, and throws him like a ragdoll. Bael cries out in alarm as he goes flying and lands in the dirt, two hundred feet behind the brute.

"Spawn of a- you piece of trash! Nobody throws Bael!"

He jumps to his feet and starts to run back toward the monster, only to pause when he senses movement.

Bael quickly turns around. He nearly jumps out of his skin when he sees what he can only mentally describe as seventeen snakes with baby-heads crawling along the ground toward him. The snakes have a single conjoined core body that ties them all together, but it appears as flat as a pancake. Like some sort of Hydra consisting of stitched-together body parts, this multi-headed monster uses its childish faces to drag itself toward Bael at a speed most distressing, causing his butthole to pucker up.

"Eee! Gross!" Bael cries. "What in the hellhound's anus is that?!

Like the previous monster, this 'Snakedra' freak doesn't cry out or make any noises. It silently slithers toward Bael while one of its heads remains elevated to gaze directly at him.

Not wanting his friends to be overwhelmed, Bael decides to try and take the monster on by himself. His eyes fill with determination, and he conjures Mjölnir in his grasp, summoning it from his belt.

"Bad snake!" Bael barks, lunging at the monster to smash one of its heads.

SPLAT!!

Bael crushes the first head with ease!

But as he raises the hammer to strike again, the monster pounces at him! Its sixteen remaining heads bite his armor and wrap around his arms and legs, smothering him and causing him to fall backward.

"Crap, crap!" Bael yells. "Uh, don't worry guys, I've got this! Just keep killing the big one! I've got this cunt right where I want him! YEEOUCH!"

The Snakedra squeezes with all its strength, trying to burst Bael's body like a watermelon. Luckily, the demonstone only creaks a bit and doesn't fold inward, allowing Bael to survive, albeit not to do much else.

Serena, seeing that the others are too occupied to help, decides to try and assist Bael in some way. Since her abilities aren't much use against the first monster unless it turns invisible, she turns her gaze toward the Snakedra.

Emperor Serena maintains a good distance between herself and the Snakedra. She closes her eyes, focuses her mind, then shapes her right hand into a claw pose, snapping it in the Snakedra's direction.

An invisible beam of soul energy travels the gaps between dimensions, drilling into one of the Snakedra's heads. Serena focuses with all her might, attempting to try and locate the monster's soul so she can manipulate or influence it.

Unfortunately, she finds that while the creature does have a soul, it has become a mish-mash of fifty other souls, all witlessly stitched together to create an aberrant, thoughtless machine for killing.

Pain. Pain. Pain. The Snakedra thinks. Pain. Pain. Pain.

Serena grimaces. Her eyes squeeze shut even tighter as she tunes out Bael's exclamations of how 'totally okay and fine' he is. She digs deeper into the Snakedra's psyche, eventually extracting a thread of its existence for her own benefit.

Serena's eyes finally open.

While most entities possess eyes that can 'see' the physical realm, even as an imp, Serena was blind from birth. She was never able to see the world around her, but all of that changed when she met her husband, Gorn.

He and her were only Imps at the time. They became Lords together, and upon her ascension, she gained a new type of vision utterly unique to herself.

The power to see the soul realm.

While usually incapable of influencing the material realm, the soul realm is the domain Serena has become most adept at influencing over the millennia. As an Emperor, her power has become quite substantial in this regard.

Serena tears a fragment of soul energy out of the monster. It doesn't even shudder, but she doesn't care.

With her soul-seeing eyes, Serena deftly manipulates the thread of soul energy, using her fingers to hastily but efficiently craft a Soul Puppet, something not unlike a voodoo doll.

After forming a Soul Puppet in the form of the Snakedra, Serena grabs it out of the air and begins wrenching its heads around, stabbing at its body with her fingernails, and otherwise torturing the false image as much as possible.

Not once does the Snakedra cry out in pain, but its body does twitch and spasm. It writhes and squirms, continuing to hold Bael steady, but sometimes weakening its grip as it loses control of different parts of its body at random.

Meanwhile, Bael occasionally feels the wretched monster weaken its grip on him. Bael might not be the brightest bulb in the box, but as an accomplished veteran of countless wars, he is well-versed in the art of combat.

Bael isn't certain why the creature has started to spasm, but he won't turn down any good opportunity that arises.

He calls forth the power of Mjölnir, summoning lightning from above to strike the hammer. The moment before the lightning falls upon him, the creature suddenly loosens its grip, allowing Bael to swing the hammer at its central body.

BOOOM!!

A terrific blast of thunder and lightning detonates on the Snakedra, making it recoil in agony, release Bael, and pull away from him.

Abruptly dropped on his ass, Bael jumps backward, leaps to his feet, and lifts his hammer high.

"Nobody gives me a squeeze without my OK, bub!"

Bael charges at the monster. He starts smashing its heads one by one, crushing them to bloody pulps while the creature uselessly writhes on the ground, taking the abuse without retaliating.

Five minutes later, Bael slays the bastard, putting it to death for the rest of eternity.

Tired and winded, Bael gasps for air. Never has he had a fight that left him out of breath, but even with the Matriarch's Armor, Ose's body is far weaker than Bael's ever was. He severely regrets losing his invincibility.

Bael turns around and spots Serena.

"Oh! Hey, whew! I just got done kicking that monster's ass!" Bael says. "Good thing I'm such a badass, I must have intimidated it into lettin' me go, heh."

Serena opens her mouth to correct him, but thinks better.

"Right. Excellent work, Bael. You're as capable a fighter as ever."

Bael grins inside his helmet. "Heh, damn right. Now, lemme help the others finish that fat ugly one off."

Bael charges into battle, this time equipped with Mjolnir. He transforms the hammer into his favorite weapon, Big Bonk, and swings the ten ton steel ball at the brutish monster's back.

BOOM!!!

Bael flattens the creature, burying it face-first in the dirt and giving Crow an opportunity to deliver a full-power punch to the back of its head.

SPLAT!

Her fist connects, and she crushes the monster's skull, spraying its brains out all over her feet.

Crow pants like a dog on a hot summer's day. Sweat pools on Yardrat's head from the amount of focus he had to exert to kill this first monster. Even Fae and the others look a little tired.

With the crisis momentarily averted, the demon elites look around, finally noticing Bael's new getup, as well as Big Bonk pressing against the brute's back.

"Bael?" Fae asks. "Hot damn, that's a sweet set of armor!"

"You really saved our asses!" Melody adds.

Crow glances toward the other dead monster. "You killed that one? By yourself?"

Bael thumps his chest. "Couldn't have done it without Ose's fancy-shmancy armor. The ugly bugger got so scared, it just laid there and let me beat it to death! Heh!"

"It just laid there?" Crow asks, glancing around. She notices Serena, then pieces the events together. "Oh, I see. Well, god job beating it by yourself, Bael. You still know how to kick tail."

"Damn right!" Bael proclaims, smiling from ear to ear.

One by one, the other demon elites figure out Bael didn't exactly defeat the monster all by himself, but seeing as how he's been so down ever since losing his powers, they don't want to hurt his feelings.

"We've only fought two creatures so far, but they were both terrifying." Yardrat points out. "If we have to face two or even three at the same time, we might die! Everyone, proceed slowly. Do NOT rush in. We need to pick Glinch's thralls off one by one."

The other demons nod.

"Right!"

Part 493: Glinch's Game

Two hundred and fifty miles. A long walk under normal circumstances, and certainly not a distance any person would trek if they didn't have to. Today, such a voyage feels ten times worse for Hell's elites, given the situation that begins to arise.

Yardrat leads the Mephisto Assault Force competently. As a vice-leader of the strongest Hell, he is no slouch when it comes to killing or commanding others. Despite having his spatial powers heavily suppressed, he still presents a lethal cocktail of destruction, able to dish out ridiculous levels of damage by turning his unstable spatial abilities into destructive attacks aimed at the weak points of Glinch's aberrants.

The problem is, as the assault force begins to push toward the center of the Stitched Wasteland, they meet far heavier resistance than they anticipated.

Originally, Auger planned to have the assault force move slowly, picking off enemies, one by one. But unexpectedly, Glinch decides not to play by the rules, and his minions begin deliberately approaching the demon elites in twos and threes.

At first, this horrifies Yardrat and the others, but they quickly realize the creatures Glinch sends aren't all merely the strongest aberrants he's ever made. Instead, they represent a diverse set of skills, strengths, and weaknesses tailored to the hunting party.

The first two monsters they fought were the Brute and the Snakedra. The next three end up being creatures that even the Dukes in the party can deal damage to, somewhat, but they end up forced to split into three groups to deal with these new enemies.

"Glinch, that bastard!" Emperor Fae yells. "He's toying with us!"

"He's treating us like an experiment." Yardrat says coldly, as he, Crow, and Fae take turns whaling on the strongest of the three monsters. "This is little more than a game in his eyes."

At the same time, Bael, Dagon, and ten Demon Dukes battle a slippery gelatin-like monster that breaks apart when struck and melts together, as if made of slime.

"Gross!" Bael moans. "It keeps stickin' to Big Bonk like glue!"

Dagon blasts it with corrosive chemicals, causing it to melt and reform. "It won't stay dead!"

The third monster ends up being a replicator-type entity, a mid-level elite on the weaker end of the Emperor spectrum that Nymph, Kristoff, Serena, and Melody have to battle with their own complement of Dukes.

Serena uses her powers lightly on the Dukes around her, boosting them to the bottom of the Emperor tier, temporarily upgrading their abilities without straining their bodies too heavily. She also sends Soul Webs to the minds of the others, linking their thoughts so they can better coordinate their attacks on the creature.

The multiplying monster boasts a ridiculous regenerative capability on par with Beelzebub, as well as the power to occasionally split its body in half, with the new form possessing the same level of strength as its original form.

In this battle, Kristoff's two Dukes end up shining the brightest. Vespera, the Duke of Gloom, and Rhesus, the Duke of Predation, both of them upgraded to the lowest level of the Emperor hierarchy by Serena's magic.

Vespera. A vicious and violent demoness with powers somewhat reminiscent of not only Kristoff's fallen wife, Fenrir, but certain abilities that echo those of the once-mighty Emperor Lucifer. Able to summon legions of darkness-imbued minions, as well as the ability to lock enemy minds within prisons of nightmares, the Duke of Gloom is a person Kristoff has high hopes for, especially if she manages to ascend to the rank of Emperor.

Her appearance is quite seductive. She wears skimpy robes that only technically shroud her skin from sight, though their semi-transparent nature leaves little to the imagination. Most notably, one of Vespera's defining traits is her utter lack of the red skin characterized by most demons. Hers is light blue, for she is actually a Satyr, one of the few that still survive to the modern era. Were someone to try and make a move on Vespera, they might find that despite being beautiful, she is a cruel and blackhearted woman who enjoys tormenting the minds of lesser beings.

As for Rhesus, he is a demon who focuses purely on the brutal nature of killing and slaughter. As the Duke of Predation, he combines the features of vampires and werewolves into one body, allowing himself to gain power by devouring the blood, skin, and bones of his enemies. His strength might not match up to that of Emperors Belial or Crow, but his ability to take a beating and continue enduring grants him longevity in battles that would leave any other Duke dead. He proved this by surviving the battle against the Cherubiim while the rest of the Third Hell's Dukes perished.

Rhesus wears a set of finely crafted demonstone armor, plated with a thin layer of silver to give it a metallic sheen. His glowing red eyes speak to the hunger in his heart, and the Slaughter Blade affixed to his right gauntlet ensures he is always ready to end the lives of those he hates. Much like Emperor Wolfram, Duke Rhesus has an animalistic werewolf-like appearance, but unlike Wolfram, he also sports vampiric fangs, demonstrating that he is the offspring of two different demonic subspecies. Every movement Rhesus makes speaks to his killing nature.

Vespera, temporarily evolved to the rank of Emperor, conjures dozens of shadowy monsters to attack and bind the bodies of the Replicator aberrant. She attacks the creature with a giant halberd made of pure darkness, keeping out of its range to slash and cut it while infecting its wounds with corrosive miasma.

Rhesus, on the other hand, brawls up close and personal, taking on the same role as Crow and Bael in the other two parties. When the Replicator beats and batters him with its club-like fists, Rhesus only grins maniacally, biting at its shoulders and hips to rip off its limbs. He greedily devours whole chunks of the chimera's body, swallowing them to boost his own strength in the smallest ways.

"Delicious!" Rhesus roars. "High quality food for this Emperor!"

The aberrant silently snaps its fist at Rhesus, battering his head and knocking him back half a step. He immediately returns the favor with a brutal punch to the monster's stomach, doubling it over while running his single gauntlet-blade through its gut.

"Nice hit! Here's my retort!"

Rhesus sweeps his arm to the right, and then the left, slicing the creature in half. He pounces on its severed body, ripping it apart with his teeth and claws, spraying blood everywhere. As he greedily devours the monster, two more copies replicate and lunge at him from both sides.

"Rhesus, you glutton. Pay attention." Vespera says with a frown. She aims her palm at one of the newly replicated copies and fires a shockwave of darkness at it, sending it flying backward. The creature hits the ground headfirst and spins, landing in a sprawled-out heap.

As for the other copy, Rhesus leaps and rams his fist into its chin, uppercutting it into the air while also shattering its jawbone.

"Not today!"

Emperor Melody finds that, unlike the Brute from earlier, she can actually deal heavy damage and even kill this replicating aberrant, but no matter how fast she does, the creature always manages to copy itself multiple times from its other living selves, defying every law of energy conservation.

BOOM! BOOM!

Melody sends dual shockwaves of concussive force into the bodies of two Replicators, making them shudder and freeze, while allowing other Emperors to land killing blows. Nymph swings a giant log of magically hardened wood at the head of one monster, crushing it into meat paste. Kristoff rams his fingers into the other one's heart and sucks its blood dry, leaving behind only a desiccated husk.

"How does it keep conjuring so many clones?" Kristoff asks, bewildered. "And each one is as strong as the others! Is this aberrant secretly a Wordsmith?!"

He doesn't receive an answer. None of the others know. However, as they fight on, they become more attuned to one another through Serena's Soul Web. They move more in unison and adjust their teamwork to kill the Replicators faster than they can duplicate themselves.

Eventually, Melody delivers the final blow on the last remaining duplicate, blowing its body apart with a grenade-like explosion of sound, causing viscous chunks to splatter her comrades. To their utter relief, after killing more than a hundred of the duplicating freaks, no others appear.

Kristoff's squad rushes over to help finish off the other two deviants in Yardrat and Bael's squads, only to arrive just in time for both to kill off their respective foes.

"Whew!!" Bael exclaims, doubling over and gasping for air, every inch of his Matriarch Armor drenched in blood. "Oh, Satan the Devil! That was- aahhh... I need a breather, woo!"

He isn't the only Emperor out of breath. Sweat lines the foreheads of every single elite, except for Serena, whose support duties kept her out of the direct line of fire. Yardrat's body shakes from exhaustion. Crow's biceps pulse fiercely with adrenaline-fueled blood. Vespera's bloodshot eyes tell a story regarding how much mana she's expended.

"We've only killed five monsters!" Nymph exclaims, her beautiful red skin glistening with sweat. She conjures a handful of leaves to daintily dab and dry herself off. "Just five! How could Glinch's minions be so powerful?"

Bael lifts his head. He looks toward the distant center of the Stitched Wasteland.

"Woo... ho-boy, not gonna lie, fellas. I don't know how many more of those I've got in me."

"We have to keep pressing on." Yardrat says through gritted teeth. "Can't you feel the slow thickening of mana in the air? Mephisto's time to ascend must be arriving soon!"

The other elites grimace. They look toward the center of the Stitched Wasteland, fearing they won't have energy to make it there, let alone ultimately kill Mephisto.

"Let's take a five-minute breather." Kristoff suggests, recovering from his exertion a bit faster thanks to the vitality of his blood. "But keep on your guard. It's clear Glinch isn't going to make things easy for us."

The other elites nod. Nobody sits down, but they all stand in place, steadying their breathing and borrowing leaves from Nymph to dry their sweaty bodies off. Even Bael temporarily removes his armor to dab himself dry.

One demon is the exception, though.

Now reverted back to his Duke form, Rhesus greedily bites and chews at the corpses of Glinch's fallen monsters. He hungrily rips them apart like a wolf that hasn't eaten meat in ten years. Some of the more squeamish demons curl up their lips in disgust, while Vespera and Kristoff appear unmoved. They've long grown used to his ways.

Suddenly, Rhesus looks at Bael.

"Hey!"

Bael looks back at him. "What?"

Rhesus points to the corpse of the slime-creature Bael helped kill. "You gonna eat that?"

Bael slowly shakes his head. He nudges it toward Rhesus with his foot, then takes a step back. "Nah, bro. Uh, help yourself. I'm..... full."

"Great!" Rhesus yells, rushing over to chew and slurp up the slimey remains of the once-human-shaped creature Bael ultimately helped slay.

"Some fellas..." Bael murmurs, looking away.

As Rhesus takes these precious five minutes to ravenously devour Glinch's subordinates, Yardrat suddenly looks up in the sky. "Bloody hell! How long has that been there?!"

The others, except Rhesus, follow his gaze.

"What the-?!" Bael exclaims.

"What is it?" Melody asks.

Serena, unable to make out anything but a glowing mass of mana, blinks her unseeing eyes. "A physical description would be nice."

Nymph rests her hand on Serena's shoulder. "It's an... egg. A flesh-colored egg."

"By flesh-colored, you mean...?"

"Sorry. Demon-flesh-colored. Red." Nymph clarifies.

The egg hovers in the sky for only five seconds before suddenly rushing downward toward the demon elites. They quickly raise their fists and weapons, ready for battle, as it crashes into the dirt a hundred meters away.

The egg cracks open. Its shell explodes into fragments, spilling a disgusting green liquid all over the dirt, the stench of which makes many of the elites want to puke.

"Oh, that's awful!" Bael whines, before reactivating his Matriarch Armor so he won't have to suffer the foul odor.

As a cloud of thick green gas evaporates, a bipedal creature steps out of the crumbled egg's remains. Its sleek, moist body makes it resemble a fish. Its mottled green skin makes it appear as if it were born of the forest, a soil-based life-form coated in viscous fluids.

But strangely, its faceless head makes it feel... alien.

Upon seeing this new threat, one demon loses all their color.

Emperor Melody's pupils shrink to pinpricks. A cold chill sweeps across her skin as she immediately takes a step back. "No... no, no, no..."

The other Emperor glance at her in confusion, then back at the monster.

"What is it, Melody?" Kristoff asks quietly, as the creature remains standing in the distance, not yet moving toward them.

"P-P-Pla... Plague..." Melody whispers, a lump in her throat making it hard for her to speak. "That's- that's a- a- K-K-Kuh-Kolvax...ian..."

The temperature around the elites seems to plummet ten degrees. They look at the monster in horror.

"No.. Glinch wouldn't..." Yardrat whispers. "He'd never go this far..."

As the Emperors and Dukes remain standing, uncertain of what to do, the creature's head changes.

Its faceless facade morphs. A line spreads across the middle, where its nose would normally be. The Emperors become unsettled as a giant mouth begins to materialize, filled with shark-like teeth.

"Not..... Quite....." The 'Kolvaxian' says.

The voice that escapes the creature's mouth causes Yardrat to frown. He recognizes it immediately.

"Glinch? Is that you?"

The monster doesn't speak for several seconds.

When it does, it only utters one slow, halting word.

"........Yes."

"What is this?" Yardrat asks. "Did you... did YOU create the Kolvaxians?!"

The monster slightly cocks its head.

"No."

A pause.

"Pale. Imitation." It says.

"Imitation?" Yardrat repeats. "You're trying to copy the Kolvaxians? Why?!"

The creature once again remains motionless for several seconds. Emperor Serena frowns. She detects a faint microburst of mana rising from the ground, entering the monster's body.

"Because." The monster says, its voice still very much an eerie copy of Glinch's voice. "Curiosity."

It pauses.

"Must... Investigate. Many... Mysteries."

"Are you protecting Mephisto?" Yardrat asks. "Don't you see? If you let him ascend, he'll kill you! He's an enemy to all demonkind!"

The fake Kolvaxian 'smiles', its creepy, wide mouth curving up at the far corners.

"Enemy. Demons. Yes. Me? No. Insurance."

Abruptly, the Kolvax-clone leans forward, and a look of pain spreads over its face. Before the other demons can figure out what's going on, the creature makes a strange motion with its stomach.

"Gurr... gurrk... BLERK!"

It vomits green liquid all over the ground, and a hundred tiny marbles filled with mana land amidst the vomit, all of them glowing red visible to the naked eye.

The monster returns to its standing position, that same creepy smile on its face.

"Here. Present."

"What?" Kristoff asks, looking at those marbles of mana.

"Present." The Kolvax-clone says. "For. You."

"Whoaaa," Bael says, "you don't expect us to... eat those. Do you?"

"Beneficial." Glinch says. "Healing. Restoration."

"You're out of your mind." Serena says, narrowing her eyes. "You're mad, Glinch."

"No." Glinch says. "Not... Mad. Curious. Survive. Face... Me. Become... Stronger. Mephisto... Hungers."

The demons watch, stone-faced, as the pseudo-Kolvaxian begins to descend into the dirt, allowing the decrepit soil of the Stitched Wasteland to swallow it whole. It melts into the dirt in the same way as the Kolvaxians have always done, causing Melody's shivering to intensify.

"...can't just be a copy...." Melody mumbles, her shrunken pupils gazing in horror at the facsimile of the creatures that tore her Hell apart.

When it vanishes, all of the Emperors become quiet. Yardrat cautiously approaches the mana-infused pellets, then scoops them all up in his hands and walks back to the others.

Yardrat glances at the faces of the other demons. He holds the pills up, allowing them to look at the blood-colored beads of highly condensed mana.

"Well?" Yardrat asks. "Thoughts?"

Rhesus, having finished devouring the blood, skin, and bones of Glinch's monsters, cracks his neck. "I don't know what those are. I'll pass."

"Serena?" Yardrat asks, looking at the Emperor of Soul Whispers.

"These pills are not harmful." Serena says, though her expression appears grim. "In fact, they're highly beneficial. They will restore our mana reserves and replenish our fighting capabilities quickly. There is no harm in taking one."

Despite the confidence in her statement, nobody moves to grab a single pill.

"The problem being?" Yardrat asks, still gazing at Serena.

"It should be obvious." Serena says, pressing her teeth together tightly. "Think of the message this sends us. Glinch doesn't take us seriously as a threat. He's worried we'll be defeated and die to his minions too easily. He wants us to fight in our optimal condition."

Kristoff sniffs the pellets. "There's more. These are infused with the blood of powerful monsters. They don't smell familiar to me. I bet Glinch obtained the blood through his Volgrim connections. The blood likely comes from exobeasts on Psion hunting worlds."

"Even I can guess what that means." Bael says. "These pills won't just bring us back to peak condition. They'll make us stronger."

"Especially the Dukes." Serena points out. "Glinch is... fattening us up."

"The fact he can create pills capable of uplifting demons is a statement in and of itself." Dagon says coldly. "It means he possesses an ability not unlike the Wordsmith's Belial Booster. He can create pills that will uplift lesser demons."

"This much should be expected." Kristoff retorts. "We've seen the strength of his minions. Pound for pound, each one is far stronger than any of us individual Emperors. He must have discovered a way to condense energy into these pills. If he wanted, he could... build an army."

"There's another player in the game." Yardrat mutters, glancing toward the center of the Stitched Wasteland. "He wants to compete with Auger."

"And Gorn." Serena says, glaring at Yardrat.

"Not so fast." Nymph says. "Aren't you guys forgetting? If Mephisto ascends, neither Auger nor Gorn will have the power to contend with him. In a galaxy where a Demon Deity reigns, Emperors will become mere minions. Glinch isn't telling us he wants to raise an army of loyal minions. He's never given a damn about ruling our people."

The other elites lower their heads, grimacing as they realize what she's saying.

"We're just... food." Vespera says quietly. "He intends to raise me and the other Dukes to Emperor... so Mephisto can... eat us."

As the elites stand around, no longer sure of what to do, Bael scratches his head.

"Welp! If you can't beat 'em, beat 'em off, that's what I always say! Gimme one of those pills!"

He snatches a a pill out of Yardrat's hand before the Emperor of the Void can react.

"Wait, Bael, we haven't determined-!" Yardrat starts to say, too slow to stop Bael.

"Nom!"

Bael casually removes his armor once again, pops the pill in his mouth, and swallows it. A second later, his demonic energy condenses, his fatigued body restores back to its pristine state, and his muscles bulge beneath his clothes.

"WOO! OH YEAH, BABY! That's that GOOD SHIT!"

A fire ignites in Bael's eyes. He roars to the sky and pumps his muscles, while steam pours from his nose.

"Oh MAN! WHOA! I could fight a bat! I could kick a dog! I feel AMAZING! You guys have GOTTA pop one of those bad boys!!"

Bael begins dancing around, full of hype. As he has the time of his life, the other demons frown.

"Is it just me, or..." Dagon mutters.

"Yeah." Yardrat says. "His breasts did get bigger."

Vespera blinks. "Give me a pill."

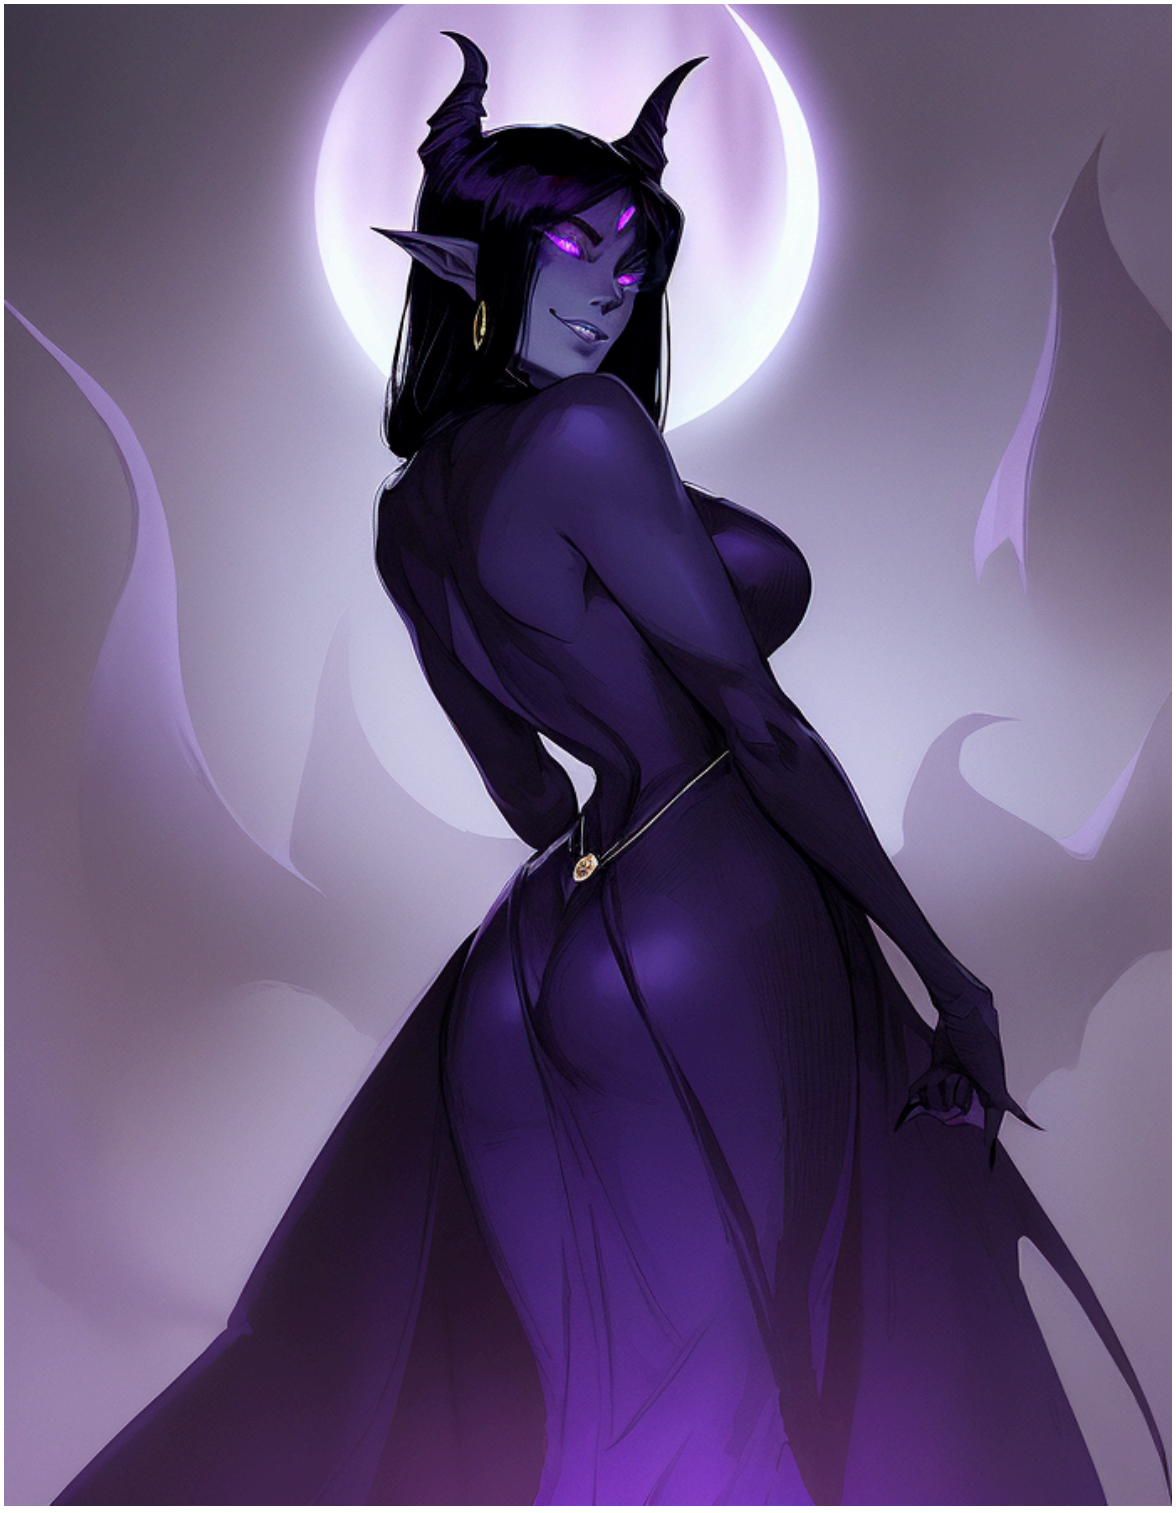
"Emperors first!" Fae exclaims.

While those two hastily grab themselves a pill, the other Emperors only decide to take theirs after seeing the effects of the pills on their comrades.

Emperor Serena glances at the spot where Glinch's fake Kolvaxian disappeared into the dirt.

This isn't a game. She thinks silently. We're balancing on the edge of a knife. One wrong move, and we'll fall to our doom.

Artwork for Vespera!



Artwork for Rhesus!

Part 494: Intellect Awakens

After every Demon Duke pops one of Glinch's pills, they begin to evolve. The change shocks the Emperors to their cores. Yardrat prepared himself for the inevitability that these incredible pills would do the unthinkable, but seeing it happen in real-time is very different from imagining the concept in his head.

He and the other leaders, movers, and shakers of the Four Hells who came along can only watch numbly as Vespera, Rhesus, Hamir, Vepar, and all the other Dukes explode in strength, smashing through their limiters to ascend to the realm of Demon Emperor.

Their bodies glow with power. They fall to their knees and roar to the heavens, delighted in achieving that which they previously thought was unattainable.

In an instant, the balance of power across every Hell shifts, yet few even know of that which has just transpired, and fewer still take the time to think clearly about what this will surely mean in the coming days, weeks, months, and years.

If they cannot defeat Mephisto, it won't matter if they have six Emperors or six hundred. The power of a Demon Deity will crush them all into dust, with nothing left behind, aside from their dying screams.

As for the fifty newly ascended Emperors, their names and titles are numerous, almost numbing to dwell on. Among them are a smattering of renowned individuals, such as:

Vepar, the Corrosive Emperor.

Vespera, the Emperor of Nebulae.

Rhesus, the Emperor of Ripping.

Hamir, the Emperor of Tempests.

As well as numerous others.

The moment they ascend, their titles become known to all demons who gaze upon them. They need not speak these titles, as if having been named directly by the Creator himself. In the entire history of demonkind, few have managed to shroud their true names, the most notable individual being Gressil, who hid his Emperor-level strength until the time was right for others to know.

But these newly risen Emperors have neither a need nor a desire to hide their powerful new titles. They look at one another and grin evilly, excited to begin wielding their abilities as soon as possible.

After distributing half of the pills, Yardrat finds that he still has more than forty left. He turns to Emperor Melody.

"It wouldn't be appropriate for me to hold onto the rest." He says. "My Hell already has more elites than everyone else. If we make it out of here alive, rebuild the Hell of Isolation with these."

The other Emperors blink in surprise at Yardrat's gesture of goodwill. Some of them feel it's a bit of a waste, but the longest lived Emperors and former Dukes ultimately don't bother to interrupt him.

Bael crosses his arms and nods.

"Good call, Yardy-boy. That's what Shax would want."

"Shax was a fine demon." Yardrat says, as Melody takes the pills from him. "His death has always weighed on my mind. If I can help his Hell with a small gesture like this, then I'll do so without thinking twice."

"Thank you." Melody says quietly, looking at Yardrat with a strange gaze. She pockets the pills and sighs.

Shax wasn't just a cool music-loving dude, but a kind demon who made countless friends. He never attacked or fought anybody undeservedly, and he based his Hell on the principles of friendship and cooperation. Even the demons who might not have gotten along with him still respected him. His death to the humans ruined the morale of many demons at the time.

"Don't thank me until we kill Mephisto and leave here alive." Yardrat says, turning his attention to the distant center of the Stitched wasteland. "Everyone, let's move out. And remember, those pills were not for our benefit. This is where the real fight begins."

The others nod grimly. They begin marching toward Glinch's lair, and as they walk, powerful chimera cross their paths at regular intervals. No longer do only two or three of Glinch's minions appear, but instead five and six at a time, each and every individual far too powerful for mere Emperors to defeat alone. They quickly get the impression Glinch has managed to raise entities capable of challenging 5th and perhaps even 6th-Level Psions.

With nearly sixty Emperors on their side, the swarm of demons begins moving forward with great haste.

Yardrat imbues his body with the power of space. He flickers around to deal massive damage to Glinch's chimera with punches that rip across dimensional spaces.

Fae flies into the air and rains bombs from above. She takes the initiative to attack distant enemies with her strongest bombs, weakening and softening them up for her allies to take on later.

Dagon and Vepar work together. With both of their powers having reached the bottom of the Emperor-level in strength, they melt, corrode, poison, and suffocate any enemies susceptible to their poison and acid attacks.

Nymph keeps away from the front-lines. Due to Glinch's wasteland ruining any vines or plants she summons within seconds, she instead focuses on popping out plants sporadically to yank allies out of the line of attacks, or merely irritating her enemies by momentarily tripping them with vine shackles around their ankles.

Kristoff focuses on dealing damage and draining Glinch's chimeras of their blood. Any injuries he inflicts tend to bleed heavily, especially when he focuses his mind on doing so.

Serena uses her magic to boost dozens of newly ascended low-Emperors to mid and high tier Emperors, making their powers considerably more deadly. She also keeps her eyes out for invisible threats or other troublesome soul fluctuations.

Crow stays on the front-lines. Her incredibly durable body allows her to retain the title of the mightiest melee attacker among all the demons present.

Melody focuses on defense. Instead of trying to kill the chimeras, she leaves that business to the superior damage-dealers and instead uses her shockwaves to fling her enemies around and batter their attacks aside.

Vespera plays a versatile role, sometimes summoning shadowy minions to assist the others, sometimes jumping into battle herself to cut chimeras down, and other times teleporting around through the various shadows to distract the different enemies.

Rhesus becomes far stronger after evolving. Despite being hesitant to bother with the pills, he is no different from the other demons in his desire to mutate to Emperor, and the permanent strength increase he obtains puts him second only to Crow herself. Perhaps given time he will even surpass her as his power approaches the apex of the Emperor level!

And finally, Bael swings his flail with reckless abandon. He batters any enemy that jumps in front of him without any thought to strategy or planning. He ends up attacking with a strength not far behind Yardrat, dealing the killing blow to more than a few of Glinch's monsters.

For hours, the demon elites beat and batter their way past dozens of highly enhanced creatures, becoming more and more cognizant of the fact that if Glinch wanted them dead, he could merely command his chimera to swarm them and they wouldn't stand a chance of survival. It causes the smarter elites to shudder when they realize Glinch possesses military strength greater than the combined might of all Seven Hells, even after their ascension!

However, Bael is not one of those highly intelligent elites. He doesn't give these matters much thought. He merely continues beating the shit out of his enemies, pausing once in a while to rest his weary body and swap out with the other Emperors nearby as they fight with all their might to push toward the center of the Stitched Wasteland.

At some point, while Bael does his thing, a spiritual sense awakens from within the Matriarch's Armor.

Emperor Ose's remnant soul sliver opens her eyes and returns to the physical realm, unaware of what has been going on since she began resting. With what remains of her former self, she isn't able to stay awake for days and weeks like she could when she was still alive. She has to sleep frequently, lest her soul dissipate from straining itself. She awakens to find that Bael is no longer meandering around on Tarus II or hanging out in her secret demonic base. Instead, he's become engaged in some sort of incredible high-stakes battle, along with dozens of other mighty demon elites!

Ose blinks several times. She says nothing to Bael, but uses what's left of her spiritual senses to try and get a sense of the other demons around her.

Hm? So many Emperors... what happened over the last few days? Have I been unconscious for longer than I anticipated?

She gazes at Vespera, Rhesus, and Vepar, her eyes widening as she recognizes the permanent status of their new Emperor rank.

Devils! Has the Wordsmith's Belial Booster become more effective? How in the Seven Hells can there be fifty brand new Emperors out of nowhere?

She identifies the former Dukes with ease, having once been intimately familiar with the elites of the Seven Hells.

This is... the Stitched Wasteland? Why is everyone going against Glinch? No, more importantly, why do his minions appear to be so much more powerful than I remember? I heard they were at the level of Emperors, but now it seems they must be higher than Emperors, but lower than Demon Deities. Perhaps half-step Deities? Or simply Emperor-level souls contained within much stronger bodies?

Ose doesn't immediately decide to question Bael. She doesn't even alert him to the fact she's awakened. He's a moron anyway, so talking to him won't provide her with much more info than if she simply used her judgment to determine what's going on.

This is all so strange. Ose thinks. According to the Matriarch Armor's internal chronometer, I've only been asleep a single week, yet a frightening number of things have changed. Has a demon civil war erupted? Perhaps Glinch has decided to rebel against the Seven Hells, so Auger opted to put him down once and for all?

Her spiritual form shakes its head.

No. That isn't Glinch's style. He doesn't care about amassing power, or wealth, or fame and fortune. He doesn't care who rules the Seven Hells. He can't be bought, or bribed, or intimidated, or cowed into submission. Glinch does whatever Glinch wants to do, and not even the Volgrim can change his ways. Since his ability to manipulate bodies and souls is so formidable, the Volgrim have even lowered their heads to commission him on various top-secret R&D projects...

Ose narrows her eyes. Unlike the overwhelming majority of her kin, she is a demon who specializes in not only subterfuge and infiltration, but also high technology. She has stolen many peeks at the Volgrim's Black Level projects in a manner most discreet. Not even the High Technopaths were able to discover her breaches.

If Glinch isn't rebelling, then... could it be that this fierce battle isn't what it seems on the surface?

She pieces together multiple clues at blinding speeds.

Look at how Glinch's army only moves toward the assault force in groups of two or three. They could easily swarm Yardrat and the others, but they don't. That means Glinch is holding back.

She nods to herself.

Coupled with the fact that so many Emperors have ascended… ahhhh…

Ose forms a hypothesis, mulls it over, and smiles to herself.

So it's like that. Glinch must have been commissioned or requested by Auger to improve the fighting capabilities of the Seven Hells. Perhaps he developed some secret new method to uplift demons to the rank of Emperor at Auger's request, and now he's helping battle-forge these new elites. A sound strategy, considering the Wordsmith's rapid rise to power.

Ose ultimately comes to the wrong conclusion, but based on purely the different observable clues in her field of vision, the guess is quite good. She comes to assume that this is part of a secret training exercise intended to build up Hell's forces and churn out powerful fighters capable of pressing against the Wordsmith's bulwark.

Beelzebub isn't here. Ose thinks. None of the Second Hell's residents either. The Hell of Lust must have become quite intimate with the humans, which makes sense. Unlike the other Hells, they rely on fornication with humans to uplift their bodies and souls. The two make for optimal allies.

She checks out the allied forces again, this time paying attention to the specific demons present.

It seems not a single demon that has shown sympathies toward the Wordsmiths has come along. Melody is here all alone. Her Hell always was at least somewhat aligned with humanity, but Melody herself won't be particularly attached to non-demons. Yama isn't here… he must still be at large, along with Mephisto.

Unaware of the fates which befell Mephisto, Yama, and several other demons over the past week, Ose unfortunately misses a few important clues, but that can hardly be blamed on her.

Kristoff, Vespera, and Rhesus. Is this all that remains of the Hell of Blood? Perhaps they left their remaining Dukes behind as a reserve force, or perhaps those members will be uplifted later. I wonder what Auger is thinking, raising so many Emperors at once. He won't be able to keep news of their ascensions a secret for long. The Wordsmith will find out, and he'll become immediately suspicious provided he has an IQ five points higher than Bael.

As her thoughts drift to Bael, Ose finally decides to open up to him.

[Hey, idiot. I'm awake. What's going on here?]

Bael swings Big Bonk at the head of a fifteen-foot-tall brutish monster not unlike the one he first fought when he entered the Stitched Wasteland, but this one possesses a turtle-like shell on its back, making it specially resistant to heavy attacks.

"Huh?" Bael asks, after retracting his flail. "Oh, Ose! You're awake! Gimme a few minutes, I gotta pound some punks!"

Ose rolls her eyes. [No need for that. Just take a few steps back and talk to me. This training exercise isn't a life and death matter anyway.]

Bael pauses to consider her words. His jaw slackens a little as he tries to catch up with what she said.

"It... it's not?"

Some of the demons nearby Bael notice his attacks slowing. A couple even hear him talking to himself, but unable to hear Ose's voice, they just assume the poor galumpf must be having one of his ditsy moments. They quickly fill the gap lost by Bael's slowed momentum, leaving him to fall back even further.

[Of course not.] Ose says. [Tell me what this exercise is all about. How did Glinch uplift so many demons to the Rank of Emperor?]

Bael's eyes widen. "Wow, Ose! You just woke up and you already know Glinch did this? You're so smart!"

[I don't need your praise.] Ose says, annoyed. [Just tell me how Glinch raised fifty Emperors in only a week.]

"Ohh. Uh, he gave us special pills." Bael says. "Yeah, super strong stuff. Made my titties bigger too."

Ose blinks. [What?]

"My titties. They got real big. Didn't grow my ding-dong back though..."

Bael eyes fill with tears as he remembers the sadness he felt when his pants remained uninflated.

[Moron! I don't care about y-your mammary expansion! What sorts of pills were they? How did Glinch make them?]

Ose's growing frustration, as always, proves impossible to keep out of her voice. Bael doesn't seem to mind.

"Oh I dunno. Kristoff said something about x-beats and blood." Bael explains absentmindedly. "Why? You wanna grow bigger soul-titties too?"

[NO!] Ose roars. [I don't care about my boob size, you nimrod! FOCUS! What 'x-beats' are you talking about? Do you mean EXOBEASTS?]

A light seems to go off in Bael's eyes.

"Ohh, right! Yeah! X-O beasts! Like uh, X-O-X-O. Kissing beasts! I'm so silly. Can't believe I forgot that."

Ose closes her eyes and makes punching motions toward an invisible wall.

I'm gonna kill him. She thinks. I'm going to kill Bael and torture his soul for all eternity if I EVER figure out a way to bring myself back.

She clenches her jaw and opens her eyes.

[Bael. Does the Wordsmith know about Auger's plan yet?]

Bael scrunches up his face.

"Uhhh... Auger's... plan?"

[Yes. His plan to create more Emperors.] Ose clarifies. [He's working with Glinch, yes?]

"He is?!" Bael gasps. "Wow! Auger's so smart. I'd never have thought of that. This sure explains a lot."

Invisible question marks pop up above Ose's head. She squints her eyes as if trying to look inside Bael's head and locate his pebble-sized brain amidst a galaxy-sized void of emptiness.

[So... does... the Wordsmith... know?] Ose asks through gritted teeth.

"Nah. Doubt it." Bael says, waving his hands nonchalantly. "Unless..."

[Unless?] Ose asks.

"Unless it's all part of Auger's brilliant plan." Bael concludes, nodding to himself. "Damn. How is everyone so smart? And I thought we were coming here to kill Mephisto."

Ose's face freezes. A feeling like cracked ice washes across her soul.

[Me...phisto? You're here to kill Mephisto?]

"I dunno." Bael shrugs. "I thought we were coming here to kill him. But this must be part of Auger's plan to trick me and the others so he can make the Hells super strong. I guess all that stuff about Mephisto becoming a Demon Deity didn't mean anything after all. Thanks for helping me understand, Ose! You're the best!"

Bael gives Ose a HUGE mental thumbs up, grinning at her with the same level of stupid happiness he always does.

Ose's soul nearly implodes from the mental gymnastics Bael just unleashed upon her.

[Oh... devils...] Ose weeps. [Why... why couldn't I have been trapped with Auger... or Fenrir... or Gorn... even Serena! Why did I have to end up stuck with demonkind's biggest idiot?]

"It's probably just your bad karma." Bael grunts. "You were such a bad girl, taking all those dirty pics. The Creator had to punish ya."

[WHAT PICS?!] Ose snaps. [Bael, I'm going to turn your pea-brain into MUSH if you keep thinking such VILE thoughts!]

In the middle of Ose's raging, Yardrat fights his way to Bael's side.

"Bael! Is something wrong? Why have you stopped attacking? Are you exhausted?"

Bael blinks. He turns his attention to Yardrat.

"Huh? Nah, nah. Ose woke up, so I'm having a chat with her real quick."

He pauses before adding: "By the way, why didn't ya tell me this was all Auger's brilliant plan? You know I'm good at keeping secrets!"

Yardrat glances at Bael, baffled, while continuing to conjure lines of eviscerating spatial attacks upon the frontline enemies.

"What plan? What are you on about?"

Bael lightly slaps Yardrat's back and chuckles.

"Aw, man. Good one, Yardy-boy! What plan? Hah! You're a real kick in the pants sometimes!"

Yardrat pauses his fighting to stare at Bael for three full seconds in absolute confusion. Then he turns and walks away, muttering something under his breath about that guy being off his rocker ever since he body-swapped.

Bael jumps back into combat, having finally figured out the 'true' reason for coming here. As for Ose, she mentally slumps to the 'floor' of Bael's Mind Realm, drained by the idiocy she's just endured.

But, at least now she better understands the actual situation.

Ose sets aside her anger and rage. She closes her eyes and focuses, thinking about what she's actually learned. Her swift mind allows her to combine the new, albeit potentially unreliable intel she obtained from Bael, with her pre-existing theories.

Mephisto is ascending to Demon Deity. Glinch must be working to train up an army of Emperors... for some reason. Perhaps Mephisto threatens his interests or something. Ugh. If only I could just speak directly to someone not named Bael. If ONLY I had made my soul interface capable of projecting my voice outwards. Stupid, stupid!

Ose begins to feel glum.

She looks up at the sky, her senses able to detect anything around the Matriarch Armor within a 360 degree sphere.

She gazes at the waning sun, the ashen clouds of the Stitched Wasteland only blocking some of her view toward space.

I have to be more proactive. I can't just blame Bael. It's not his fault he was born with the IQ of a dead slug. I mean, it's a LITTLE bit his fault... but he can't really help being unable to retain information for longer than five nanoseconds. If I'd simply planned out my existence post-mortem, I might still manage to retain some influence over the Hells.

Ose becomes momentarily depressed. She begins to wonder if these things even truly matter.

She's dead.

She's unlikely to ever again walk the plane of existence.

She's not powerful anymore. All she has left is a fragment of a soul and her intellect formed during her 100,000+ years of life.

But that depression quickly fades away as she firms her resolve.

Ose is many things. She's easily annoyed by idiocy, temperamental, stuck up, and a bit of a viper, but she isn't mentally weak. Her willpower is formidable, and it was forged by the life she's endured, as well as the actions her adoptive mother took to empower her in her youth.

I don't need a body or magic to remain relevant. Ose thinks. I still have my intellect. Even if I can't taste good food or lounge on a comfortable bed, I still have ambitions. I want to continue expanding my influence.

She rubs her chin and looks thoughtfully at the battle around her.

Bael's an idiot. But he's also easy to manipulate and control. And nobody would ever expect him to accomplish much. That means the humans, the other demons, and especially the Volgrim will underestimate him.

Hmm.

Perhaps I can turn this situation to my advantage.

Her attention pivots to Glinch's laboratory, still more than a hundred miles away.

I wonder if the Stitched Emperor might be able to help my situation, too? It's certainly worth a shot.

So many possibilities…

Ose will never bow to the universe's will, so long as she retains her mental faculties.

She will never surrender.

Part 495: Bael, the Leader

The Demon Emperors continue fighting toward Glinch's central facility at the heart of the Stitched Wasteland. Their progress is slow, as they have not spent much time fighting together, and Glinch deliberately adds additional chimeras whenever the Emperors start to break through.

All-in-all, the situation only seems to slowly worsen for Hell's elites. Yardrat does his best to lead the others, but with so many newly ascended Emperors, he struggles to organize them into properly synergized teams. Yardrat is somewhat competent in his role as leader, but in truth, he's always been more of a subordinate, especially compared to Auger.

While the battles rage, Ose watches intently. Thanks to her 360-degree view of the environment around the Matriarch's Armor, she's able to use her considerable intellect and lightning-fast thinking speed to learn the intricacies of every demon present.

That Rhesus is quite a formidable fighter, but he keeps sliding over to fight beside Bael. Ose thinks. There's no need to have the two of them tanking blows when they would perform better if split up. And just look at Emperor Vespera! Her shadow minions are comparable to Yama's Shades in terms of killing potential. I especially enjoy the way their attacks leave burning shadows on the enemy. It ensures any inflicted wounds won't heal on their own.

The Emperor of Infiltration flicks her gaze around speedily. Her eyes dart from one Emperor to another, analyzing their combat capabilities with the same insight she once used when she ruled the First Hell.

[Bael.] Ose says. [I've been watching the demons fight. I can't speak to the others, so I need you to speak in my place.]

Bael swings Big Bonk down onto an enemy chimera's head, knocking it into the dirt. It explodes into smoke, then reforms ten feet away, resuming its attacks.

"Kinda busy here!" Bael shouts. "No time to yap."

[I want you to pull back and start doing as I say.] Ose explains. [You're able to deal a lot of damage, but you will be a lot more useful if you just tell others whatever I tell you.

Understand?]

Bael frowns. He continues attacking the chimera in front of him, but after ten or twenty seconds, he pulls back.

"Fine, fine. Whaddya want me to do, then? Make it quick!"

[There's no rush.] Ose explains. [Glinch is toying with us. He could send in his minions all at once and we'd all perish, but he wants us alive. That means we hold a strategic advantage.]

Bael nods. "Uhh... uh-huh... right..."

Ose rolls her eyes as she realizes the stupid moron is losing interest in her words.

[Never mind all that. Listen, just start telling the other demons to switch to these positions. First, we want to make sure Yardrat, Crow, and Vespera stay together. Just the three of them are enough to kill a chimera. Then, pull these other two Emperors over to fight beside Rhesus. Then..."

Ose takes a minute to explain her plan, but she quickly loses Bael. He blinks his eyes, then raises a palm.

"Slow down, toots. Ya lost me. Let's do this one at a time. So, uh, Crow, Yardy-boy, and Vespera, right?"

[Right.] Ose nods. [Send them to face that three-headed Ogre-chimera.]

Bael slaps his demonstone-plated chest. "Hey, Yardy! I'm takin' command! You, Crow, and Vespera, git on over to tackle that big guy!"

Ose quickly follows up. [Then, talk to Rhesus...]

The Emperors become more than a little confused when Bael starts barking orders. However, given his reputation as a legend in the ancient wars, and the fact that they're currently making practically no headway against Glinch's minions, some of the Emperors seem eager to try anything new.

But not Yardrat.

Visibly upset at Bael's sudden demands to be the leader, Yardrat shoots a nasty glare Bael's way.

"Have you gone braindead? Since when do you call the shots around here, Bael?! This is a battle, and it requires tactics!"

"Y-yeah?" Bael asks. "I know all about tic-tacs! Don't you worry about that, bub! I'm like, smart and stuff!"

Ose facepalms so hard she nearly crushes her own skull.

[Bael, you nimrod. Don't just babble back! You have to act like a leader! A lion doesn't fear the opinions of sheep!]

Bael's eyes spark in comprehension.

"Ohh, so it's like that. ROOOAR! ROAR-ROAR-ROAAAR!"

Bael begins making weird roaring noises at Yardrat, noises that visibly disturb the Emperor of the Void and make invisible question marks pop up above his head.

"Th-the hell are you doing?" Yardrat asks, more confused than angry.

"I'm a lion, and you're a sheep!" Bael proudly declares. "And that means I gotta roar like a lion!"

Bael gives Yardrat a HUGE thumbs-up, making the Emperor of the Void's face shift for a brief moment to an expression of despair.

"He's gone utterly cuckoo..." Yardrat mumbles.

[Bael, I didn't mean you should LITERALLY roar like a lion!] Ose howls. [You can't POSSIBLY be this- no, no, what am I saying? Of course you can. Oh, devils...]

She massages her forehead, while Bael stands around for a brief moment, more than a little confused about what she even wants him to do.

"Man, screw all this yapping." Bael grunts. "You think too much, woman. Hey, you, Vespera! Didn't the Duke of Pain give you an order?! Get your cute tush over there and fight with Crow! And Rhesus, when I tell ya to fight the smoke-guy, I MEAN fight the smoke-guy! Don't you give me no lip!"

Ose blinks in confusion. She watches, momentarily stunned, as Bael begins barking orders with real authority, commanding the other demons without acting even slightly confused. Yardrat opens his mouth to intervene, but he doesn't even manage to speak a word before Bael points a menacing finger in his direction.

"You'd better shut that yap, punk! Don't make me come over there and ram my boot up your ass! When Daddy Bael gives you an order, you follow it!"

Yardrat flushes, visibly annoyed by Bael's sudden demands to be heard, but also somewhat intimidated.

"B-but, Bael, I'm the one in char-"

"Not anymore!" Bael exclaims. "The way you've been leading us, we'll be lucky if we catch a whiff of Mephisto's FARTS! I'm gonna take charge and take names!"

Yardrat once again seems to want to argue with Bael, but seeing as Glinch's chimeras have begun pushing back the Emperor's lines, he simply grits his teeth and does as Bael commands.

"Whatever." Yardrat grumbles. "It's not like he can do any harm. At the rate we're going, we'll never make it to Mephisto in time. Maybe if we listen to Bael, we'll get a miracle."

All the while, Ose's eyes practically pop out of her sockets. She gasps as Bael somehow takes command of the situation, using nothing but his innate bravado and swagger to convince the others to listen to him.

[I can't believe your moronic ploy worked, but I won't complain!] Ose exclaims. [Alright, Bael. Now, let's turn our attention to Kristoff...]

One by one, Bael follows Ose's instructions. He completely shuffles around and reorganizes the groups, placing himself, Vepar, and Dagon in the center of the line, along with half a dozen purely-offense-based Emperors to form a strike force capable of crushing any foe.

When Bael gives the command, the ten Emperors he's chosen begin rushing forward, firing toxic and acidic blasts of magic at anyone in front of them, tearing a deep hole in Glinch's formations. This lance-like assault squad immediately eases the pressure on all the other Emperors, who begin fighting more furiously to crush their immediate opponents and swarm over the bodies of the fallen chimera to attack the next group.

Yardrat fights with fire and fury, but in his heart, he becomes deeply shocked.

It actually worked?! Seven Hells, that Bael might actually be a tactical genius! I think I've been underestimating him all this time!

Emperor Serena joins Bael's group. While she might not possess much offensive potential, her ability to empower other demons allows her to selectively buff specific Emperors at specific moments when dangerous foes appear.

But in the back of Serena's mind, she begins to doubt Bael's sudden rise in competency.

Could it be true? Has he really been talking to Ose? It would explain a lot of things.

She casts soul-searching magic to investigate Bael, but all she finds is the same brilliantly shining soul in his head, a soul she has always known to be much mightier than that of any other demon she's encountered. She doesn't detect Ose's comparatively faint and tiny soul due to it being drowned out by Bael's presence.

No. Nothing seems different. Maybe his evolution to Emperor is beginning to enhance Bael's intellect. His mighty soul must hold some secret purpose anyway, right?

Suddenly, Serena's sightless eyes light up.

Of course! It all makes sense now! Bael has inhabited Ose's body. I'll bet some of her residual energy has slowly seeped into him over time. Now that he has truly evolved to the rank of Emperor, he might be mutating more toward Ose's affinity for intellect and lightning. It wouldn't surprise me if he gained electrical elemental powers sooner or later!

Serena 'figures out' the truth, making her feel quite assured about how Bael came to be so competent out of seemingly nowhere. Unfortunately, she fails to guess that a tiny sliver of Ose's soul has taken refuge inside the Matriarch's Armor.

As for the other Emperors, they become so consumed with taking out their rage on Glinch's goons that they pay no mind to Bael whatsoever. If he gives an order, they follow it, only allowing themselves to feel some delight at how their newly formed teams are at least three times more effective at slaughtering Glinch's minions.

An hour passes.

Bael's Bulwark bludgeons its way brutishly through blobs of enemies, tearing them to pieces and melting them into mere puddles of trembling DNA. They cause so much damage to Glinch's minions that the once formidable chimeras become ultimately ineffective. They pull back on all fronts, allowing the demons to catch their breath.

With Glinch's minions giving up ground, the Emperors regroup, thrilled that they've actually managed to win. By now, even if Glinch charges them with every last remaining chimera, the other Emperors will have the strength to slay them all.

One of the chimera steps toward the Emperors.

"Not bad." It says, in Glinch's voice. "I didn't expect you to evolve your teamwork so quickly. Bael, you've truly surprised me."

"Aw, shut your yap." Bael snarks. "We're coming down to kick your ass, Glinch!"

"My doors are open. Come in if you dare." Glinch replies, as the chimera steps back into the group to rejoin its peers.

A rumbling from deep underground causes Yardrat and the other Emperors to flinch. A sensation of powerful mana wafts up through the dirt, making their hair stand on end.

"Hurry!" Yardrat exclaims. "Mephisto is beginning to mutate! He's started the ascension process!"

The unmistakable feeling of a powerful demonic mutation swells in the air. The fifty-plus Emperors race toward the center of the Stitched Wasteland, where they find a cave that goes down into the ground at a ninety-degree angle.

Mana thick enough to be visible to the human eye pours from that opening in the planet's surface, making their skin turn prickly.

"Come on!" Yardrat shouts.

He leads the charge into Glinch's tunnel complex. Luckily, he has visited before, so he knows the layout of the facility. There are no surprises in terms of its interior, and he guides the others through multiple branching side-paths, down the main corridors, and toward the center of the tunnels.

But, before he and the other demons can reach their destination, a strange sensation swallows them.

All of their magical abilities abruptly vanish, as if having receded into an inescapable void.

Yardrat stomps his feet and abruptly slows to a stop. His eyes go wide as he spots, in the distance up ahead, a two-headed figure standing in the middle of the hallway leading to Glinch's core laboratory.

"No..." Yardrat whispers, his pupils shrinking to pinpricks. "G-Gressil?! You're working for Glinch?!"

The other Emperors also slow to a stop behind Yardrat. Even Bael pauses and frowns.

"Ah, hello, friends." Gressil says slowly, as he stands in the darkened hallway, his glowing red eyes fixated on the many demons present. "We haven't chatted in quite a while."

"Get out of the way, Gressil!" Yardrat shouts. "We outnumber you! Even without our magic, you can't defeat us!"

Gressil cocks his head.

"What are you implying, Yardrat? I'm not here to fight. I'm just standing in this random hallway, minding my own business. I only came here to see the show."

"You're... not here to fight?" Emperor Melody asks. "You're lying!"

"Don't you want to see what will happen?" Gressil asks, speaking slowly enough to draw out each individual syllable. He lifts one of his hands and makes a vague gesture behind himself. "The first Demon Deity. Our people have never experienced such an honor. It would be a shame if something were to... interrupt this momentous occasion."

Bael narrows his eyes. He steps out in front of Yardrat and points a finger at Gressil.

"Shut your mouth, prison-bitch! We ain't gonna let freakin' Mephisto be the first demon to ascend! He's a bad dude, almost as bad as you!"

Gressil turns his gaze toward Bael.

"But Bael. It will be so interesting, seeing what comes next. Aren't you a little curious?"

Bael stomps toward Gressil while yanking on Big Bonk's chain.

"Nope! And I'm tired of wise-asses like you yappin' my devil-damned ear off!"

Bael snaps his flail toward Gressil, sending the multi-ton spiked-ball flying at the Emperor of Chaos's chest.

But before it can slam into and possibly kill Gressil, he disappears, then reappears right next to Bael.

BOOM!

Gressil's fist smashes into Bael's helmet and sends him hurtling to the side!

Bael crashes into the corridor wall and embeds in the hardened concrete, his vision turning dark as the impact nearly knocks him unconscious.

"Aaooo..." Bael grunts.

"Bael!" Yardrat exclaims, directing his rage toward Gressil. "Swarm him! Kill the Emperor of Chaos!"

A roar of righteous fury goes up among the other Emperors as they see their favorite best buddy Bael collapsing to the ground. Like a wave of flesh, they rush toward Gressil, intending to overpower him with the force of numbers.

Gressil's body flickers.

Bang!

Bang!

CRACK!

He begins disappearing and reappearing amidst the horde of incoming Emperors, delivering gut-busting punches and bone-shattering kicks to their vital areas. Even the fastest-reacting Emperors only manage to protect themselves a little, and they still go flying when his strikes land.

Amidst these figures, two Emperors hold their own against Gressil..

Crow and Rhesus!

As the two tankiest and most durable Emperors, when Gressil tries to attack them, his crushing offense immediately crumbles! Crow easily deflects Gressil's punch with her steel-like feathers, then slaps him toward Rhesus, who swipes his claws across Gressil's torso.

Riiiip!!

Rhesus rakes a massive chunk of flesh out of Gressil's chest, making Gressil cry out in pain.

He quickly flickers away, teleporting to safety. He reappears with blood pouring out of the four gashes across his chest, and appears to be in agony. But despite this, Gressil doesn't whine or cry. He merely watches as the horde of Emperors -those who survived his initial attacks- come charging toward him.

Gressil smiles.

"You're too late."

He disappears.

A moment later, the intensity of mana rushing out of the laboratory core explodes!

It doubles, triples, and even quintuples!

Yardrat's pupils shrink to pinpricks. "No! Dammit! We can't be too late! We can't!"

From deep within the facility, a familiar voice begins to laugh.

"HEH, HEH, HEH..."

Mephisto's words travel up the corridor from his unseen ascension location, making the hair stand up on every Emperor's neck.

Serena's face turns pale. She peers through the walls blocking the other Emperor's vision, and she easily sees the swirling mass of souls that are beginning to combine into one.

"We still have a chance!" Serena exclaims. "Everyone, make a run for it!"

The uninjured Emperors, those Gressil failed to knock down, dart forward at maximum speed. Nothing hinders their paths. They take a right, then a left, then another right...

A brilliant light illuminates the corridor ahead. They shield their eyes as they rush toward the laboratory core, their feet splattering against a floor covered in sticky, viscous blood.

Inside the center of a large chamber, they witness the strangest sight they've ever seen. Emperor Glinch stands with his back to the newcomers, gazing at a giant bone revolving rapidly above a field of blue and white demonic light. A multitude of powerful Emperor souls, those belonging to Mephisto, Yama, Lupus, Zamiel, and others, all swirl uncontrollably within an orb placed at the base of that giant bone.

"Beautiful, isn't it?!" Glinch cackles maniacally. "Behold! My greatest creation!"

Yardrat wastes no time. Without Gressil's aura to suppress his magic, he tears the Void to send a wave of crackling spatial energy toward the orb containing Mephisto's gathered souls.

But it fizzles away!

Yardrat's attack does nothing to stop Mephisto's rapidly congealing magical power!

Crow snarls angrily. She rushes toward the center of the room, along with Rhesus. They launch themselves at the orb to swing their claws and fists at it, but the moment they do...

ZOT-ZOT!

Two beams of pure demonic energy fire out of the orbs, lance into their chests, and send them flying away!

Their backs crash against the walls and they fall forward, landing on their faces. Both mighty Emperors cough several times, having had the wind knocked out of them. They even vomit up blood and bone fragments, discovering that the raw impact of that beam nearly caved in their chests.

"Too late." Mephisto says, his voice emanating from the orb. "YOU CANNOT SSSTOP THISSS DEITY. MY PLANSSS HAVE FINALLY BORNE FRUIT!"

"Mephisto, let us go!" Lupus's voice screams from within that same orb. "I don't want this! You're a monster!"

"Boss, boss, I thought we were buddies!" Zamiel also exclaims. "Someone save us! Don't let him eat us!!"

"You betrayed us!" Yama hisses. "We'll never bow to you! Never!"

Mephisto chuckles sinisterly. "HEH HEH. You don't have a choiccce! Be grateful, for you ssshall combine with me to form the mightiessst demon that hasss ever exisssted! HEH HEH HEH HEH!!"

The assault force watches helplessly, unable to do anything to stop Mephisto's ascension process. Too late, they realize they never stood a chance. The combined powers of several Emperors inside Mephisto's strange soul-orb device allows him to create a barrier no individual Emperor could hope to bypass, even if they desperately wanted to kill him.

A ray of light beams up from the orb into that strange, giant bone levitating above it. Then the ray of light fires into the ceiling, blasting into the sky with a thunderous explosion.

BOOOOM!!

The roof of Glinch's laboratory detonates with the force of fifty tons of TNT, deafening all of the Emperors present and making their hearts leap into their throats.

The souls inside the orb spin faster and faster, and the protests of Mephisto's unwitting allies weaken.

Then, they merge together, transforming into a single, shining, multicolored rainbow of a soul.

"Yes!!" Glinch howls, the disfigured Emperor dropping to his knees while tears of joy well up in all of his eyes. "My ultimate creation, it is HERE!"

* * *

Elsewhere in the Milky Way, a certain female Volgrim frowns.

Dosena, the Second Founder, turns a cold, emotionless gaze in the direction of the world of Numaria.

However, she remains sitting in place, merely observing with her galaxy-spanning psionic sense, as she observes the arrival of a new Cosmic Entity within her domain.

[...So it was a demon after all.] She thinks. [I'll keep a careful eye on this one. Just in case.]

Part 496: The Cosmic Truths

Inside Glinch's laboratory, the powers swelling within Mephisto's soul and those of his helpless victims all swirl together into a single cohesive orb of light.

"HEH HEH HEH!"

Mephisto cackles gleefully. His aura rises to the apex, and a beam of energy fires into the sky!

The beam disappears as it races toward the Void. It tears through the fabric of reality, and Mephisto's vision fades away.

An unknown period of time passes.

Mephisto awakens!

The Emperor of Legions opens his spiritual eyes, finding himself careening uncontrollably through the sky of a realm filled with painfully brilliant golden light. A massive mountain looms, a golden peak so vast that he cannot see the top, not even with his incredible eyesight.

Mephisto's soul rockets toward the base of the mountain. He howls in fright as his figure crashes onto a landscape of golden dirt and bounces twice before grinding to a halt.

After ten seconds of whimpering and wheezing, he lifts himself up a little, momentarily marveling as a thin layer of skin begins to grow across his bones. Though still rotten and corpse-like, this is the first time in a hundred thousand years he has ever had such a feature present on his body.

But he ultimately pays little attention to his appearance. Instead, he cranes his head to gaze around himself, a mixture of wonder and awe present on his face.

Trees made of silver and copper grow all across this wondrous realm. Fruits dangle from their branches. They are not made of biological material, but instead rubies, sapphires, emeralds, and countless other jewels. Most fruits appear multicolored, as if plucked from rainbows. Some are comprised of singular colors, such as red or blue.

All of them glow with immeasurable spiritual power.

A look of greed enters Mephisto's eyes.

A look of hunger...

"Where have I landed, I wonder?" Mephisto mutters out loud.

He slowly stands up, but grimaces as he realizes his body feels far heavier than it ever has before, as if he has stepped foot on a world with fifty times the gravity of a paradise-class planet like Earth or Numaria. He groans, and his legs shudder as he barely manages to stand upright.

Ultimately, he only manages to take a step forward after hunching his posture. His body's weight is simply too great for him to be able to walk normally.

Mephisto makes his way toward the closest tree. A bevy of ruby and sapphire-fruit hang from its branches, well within his reach. He shakily lifts an arm to try and pluck one of these wonderful holy fruits, but when he grabs onto it, his half-flesh, half-bone fingers slide right off.

"Grr... you cannot resssissst thisss Emperor." Mephisto growls, only to cock his head. "No. Not thisss Emperor. Thisss DEITY! Yesss... I mussst have assscended. But where have I arrived? What placcce isss thisss?"

Mephisto's eyes flick around. He gazes at the trees for a moment before returning his attention to the delicious-looking fruits hanging within arm's reach.

He grabs one of the fruits again, and this time he manages to barely get a grip on the blue-colored sapphire-fruit. He pulls, he tugs, and he yanks with what strength he can muster...

...but he fails to break it from the branch. He doesn't even manage to wiggle it a little!

The fruit stubbornly clings to the branch, defying his desires.

"Bassstard! Don't think I can't take you for myssself-"

Suddenly, a voice speaks from behind Mephisto.

"Don't bother."

Mephisto nearly jumps out of the little skin that has formed on his bones. He whirls around, only to see a strange, hazy bipedal figure standing a short distance behind himself.

Mephisto's eyes widen.

"You! Who.. who are you?"

The hazy figure appears indistinct, little more than a faintly glowing white aura in the shape of a human, or perhaps a demon, and maybe even a Volgrim.

This figure stands idly, its faceless body looking only in Mephisto's vague direction.

"You want to know who I am?" The figure asks.

Mephisto glares at the speaker, only able to tell that its voice is vaguely masculine, but little else.

"That'sss right! Identify yourssself!"

The illusory man nods.

"I'm the Creator, baby."

Unarin stands with his back to the Second Wordsmith. He turns his head to look over his shoulder at Hope out of the corner of his eye.

"Tell me, Hope. What do you know of the event your people once called the Big Bang?"

Hope frowns upon hearing the First Founder's words. Unarin's aloof posture makes the intent behind his question difficult to follow.

"It was... the... creation of the universe." Hope says slowly. "The moment a singularity detonated and created everything."

Unarin inclines his head, pondering for a moment before he speaks again. He returns his head to looking forward at the table before himself, hiding his expression from the Wordsmith.

"Do you believe in the existence of an all-powerful God?"

This time, Hope's gaze becomes much more intense as he tries to figure out if Unarin is screwing with him.

"I'm an atheist." Hope says eventually. "There's no evidence God exists. Unless you mean the Creator, but supposedly he died, so he doesn't fit the bill of an all-powerful 'God.'"

"The metaphysical world presents many conundrums." Unarin says, as he reaches toward a figurine on the table before himself, a golden statue of some four-legged exobeast from one of the Volgrim's privately-controlled worlds.

He picks it up and absentmindedly rolls it around in his palm, not truly inspecting it, but allowing his eyes to rove across its pristine white marbled surface.

"The existence of a God must seem silly to an 'atheist' like yourself." Unarin continues. "I know the world you came from, and I've taken the time to study up on the cultural, religious, and political situation of the time period in which you lived on ancient Earth. You must have had many bad experiences with religious people, experiences which drove you away from even contemplating God's existence."

"I contemplated it just fine." Hope retorts, feeling slightly miffed by Unarin's accusatory tone. "What, are you saying God does exist? Was the Creator this 'God' you refer to?"

Unarin fiddles with the figurine for another moment before placing it back. He waves his hand, and a pair of chairs pop out of the floor, unfolding on opposite sides of the table. Then, he gestures for Hope to come and sit with him.

As Unarin takes his seat and Hope walks over to join the First Founder, they pause their conversation for a moment so they can relax, ever so slightly.

"The Creator you're thinking of was not 'God.'" Unarin begins to explain. "He was merely the Ruler of the Milky Way. He reigned over its inhabitants for several Eternities. He was not all-powerful, but his abilities would certainly have put your Wordsmithing to shame."

Hope blinks. "What does that mean, 'several Eternities'? An Eternity indicates an infinite amount of time. You can't have multiple infinities. That isn't how numbers work."

Unarin closes his eyes. He sighs quietly, a faint smile playing upon his face as he begins to reminisce.

A Universe is born. It exists for a long, long time. But what eventually will happen to that Universe, Hope?"

"I'm not knowledgeable in the field of Astronomy, so I'm about to sound awfully ignorant," Hope says hesitantly. "I think... Heat Death?"

"Explain this term." Unarin says, keeping his eyes closed. "Heat Death. What does that mean to you?"

"Well, eventually, the galaxies will run out of star-forming gasses." Hope says. "Then the stars themselves will burn out, leaving only red dwarf stars. Eventually, those will fizzle away too, leaving only black holes. And then... through Entropy, the universe will dissipate to nothing."

Unarin opens his eyes. He smiles at Hope.

"After that?"

"Uhh..." Hope grunts, then scratches the back of his head. "Eternal... nothingness?"

Unarin's smile fades. He purses his lips and shakes his head.

"No. After the Entropy comes the Contraction. The Contraction leads to the Collapse. The Collapse leads to the end of the Cycle. And the Cycle... begins... anew."

Unarin deliberately pauses for three seconds.

"...The Cycle begins anew, Hope. Because that is one of the Truths of our existence. We live in a Cycle. The Cycle is never-ending. It has Always existed, and it will Always continue. It is the thing that gives us purpose, but it is also the trap which we cannot escape. In the end, all of our battles and wars will amount to cosmic dust. Everything shall fade to memory, and our memories will dissipate into the nether."

Mephisto blinks his eyes several times. He squints at the figure -the man- who has just given himself a presumptuous title.

"Creator? Of what?"

"Life." The Creator replies. "Life within the Milky Way, that is. I created the angels. The angels created the demons. And in that way, I'm sort of like... your grand-daddy."

"You don't sssound like much of a Creator." Mephisto snarks, grinning evilly at The Creator. "You're trying to trick me. Pisss off!"

"You don't have to believe me." The Creator says. "I don't often get to talk to my kids, these days. It's been pretty dull for the last umpteen-billion years. But by all means, if you don't believe me, you can continue yanking on that fruit until you run out of time."

Mephisto's smile vanishes. He feels a chill in his bones.

"Time? What time?"

"The time you have left in the Cosmic Realm." The Creator answers, his faceless head giving no hints as to his emotions. "You've just now ascended to the rank of a Cosmic entity. Congratulations, Mephisto. You've taken the first step on your true journey."

The Creator pauses, then slowly shakes his head.

"It's just... it's too bad. With that weak foundation, you're not a Candidate. I suppose I'll have to wait for someone better. That Wordsmith fellow is looking promising, as is the Second Founder."

Mephisto's blood-red eyes bug out. He glares psychopathically at The Creator, momentarily desiring to rip that smug, arrogant bastard to pieces.

"You dare mock thisss Deity?" Mephisto asks.

The Creator holds up his palms in a mock gesture of fear. "Oh no, don't use your scary powers to attack a feeble half-dead Ruler! I'm just an old man, don't hurt me! Haha."

Mephisto starts to walk toward The Creator, but he realizes the sense of weight pressing on his body has grown minutely more powerful since he arrived. He thinks to himself this fellow might be a real jerk, but he might also be telling the truth.

"Why have you come to ssspeak to me?" Mephisto asks.

"Because it's my duty." The Creator answers, reverting to a manner of speech somewhat like a wise sage. "It is the duty of every Ruler to guide their children up the Akashic Mountain. Even the ones with no future prospects, such as yourself."

The Creator gestures with his arm. He points at the massive golden mountain in the distance.

Mephisto follows the gesture with his eyes.

"That mountain... what isss ssso ssspecccial about it?"

The Creator lowers his arm.

"You'll have to climb it to see."

The Second Wordsmith's expression becomes grim.

"A Cycle. The universe... exists in a Cycle. So after the Heat Death, everything... collapses back into a singularity? And then it explodes again, in a new Big Bang?"

"Tens of trillions, even septillions of cycles pass between the two events." Unarin says, unsmiling. "These incomprehensibly long periods of time are known as Eternities. An Eternity is how long it takes the universe to complete one Cycle. I believe you should understand now."

Hearing Unarin speak in such relatively plain words, for a brief moment, fills Hope with a deep sense of existential dread.

In the Wordsmith's mind, he struggles to wrap his head around the concept of trillions and septillions of years.

He imagines the birth of the universe, its different rates of expansion, its eventual cooling, and its collapse back into a singularity which will explode into a new universe.

"So.. the Creator..." Hope says, his heart feeling chilled, "...he... he isn't a God. He's a... a Ruler, you said?"

"A Ruler, yes." Unarin affirms. "Every Galaxy has one. This was not always the case. Countless Eternities ago, there existed a few unclaimed galaxies, and in the Eternities before then, even more galaxies beyond that. But those Eternities have long passed. Now, the only way to become a Ruler is by deposing one who already exists. And that, dear boy, is easier said than done."

"Slow down, hold on!" Hope exclaims, waving a hand at Unarin while massaging his forehead. "What are you even saying? So the universe is full to the fucking brim with other sentient species? And each one is controlled by a Ruler... a God??"

"Perhaps, with your feeble, ant-like view of reality, they would seem as Gods." Unarin retorts. "But make no mistake, they are only Rulers."

"Hoooh, Jesus." Hope moans, resting his elbows on the table, and his face in his palms. "Fuckin'... what are you even saying? Just speak plainly for me, Unarin. I'm about to have a mental meltdown."

"I don't blame you." Unarin says. "I've had millions of cycles to digest the Truths that surround us. Throwing it all on you like this... it's a little discourteous. But unfortunately, the Game is well underway now. It's not so simple for me to take my time, introducing these concepts to you bit by bit. A certain level of expediency is... appropriate."

He continues. "Rulers are not Gods. There is only one God. He, or she, or they, are the one that truly controls everything. This God is known as the First Ruler. The Most High.

The Supreme. The Alpha and Omega. And other such lofty titles."

Hope peeps his eyes out from between his fingers. "So there is a God?"

"There is." Unarin says hesitantly. "But... that does not mean there always was."

"I just want to slap the crap out of you right now." Hope complains.

"The Eternal Cycle has always existed." Unarin states. "The universe has cycled through its phases of existence for an infinite number of Eternities. There was no Beginning, and there will be no End."

Mephisto follows The Creator. Together, the two of them walk toward the base of the Akashic Mountain. The closer they draw, the more impressive and imposing it appears. Its peak hides behind a thick layer of clouds. Mephisto's demonic senses can't pierce even an inch of that otherworldly veil.

"Have you ever heard of the Cosmic Realm?" The Creator asks.

Mephisto nods. "Sssatan onccce fought Archangel Raphael there. He wrote down a sssecret record of that battle for the Demon Elitesss to perussse."

The Creator shakes his head.

"No. That was not the Cosmic Realm. That was merely Raphael's poor imitation of it. The place you stand now, this is the True Cosmic Realm. What my son created was an attempt to mimic the Akashic Energy contained within the True Cosmic Realm, so that he might someday ascend to the rank of Ruler. The silly boy even thought he might someday stand against the First Ruler himself..."

The Creator's words contain a hint of melancholy, as well as nostalgia.

"It's my fault. I told him tales of the other Rulers. I thought it would be a good idea to begin grooming a successor. All that nonsense must have gone to his head. He thought he could defy the Akashic Laws if he discovered a workaround. He failed, as have all who tried."

Mephisto turns his head to look at The Creator's ethereal body. "He failed? Ssso the Cosssmic Realm issn't-"

"We're here." The Creator says, interrupting Mephisto, and clearly not interested in answering any further questions about Raphael.

Mephisto swallows his words. He returns his attention forward, and his jaw drops as he comes to observe a truly massive staircase rising straight up the mountain's side, a staircase that ascends up to that peak, tens or even hundreds of miles above.

"Wha... what?" Mephisto asks. "What isss thisss? How many sssteps are there?"

"Millions. Perhaps billions." The Creator says. "This is the Staircase of Ascension. The Akashic Truths state that if you can reach the final step at the very top, you will become worthy of the title 'Ruler Over All Creation'. But don't bother lusting over that title. There's no place in Existence lonelier than at the top. And nobody can reach it anyway. It's just part of how He toys with us in The Game."

The Creator casually hops up the first step, and the second. He saunters up them with ease, then turns back to Mephisto.

"Your time's running out, brat. Get on up here already."

Mephisto blinks twice, then nods.

He walks toward the steps, then lifts his leg to take his first Step of Ascension.

BOOOM!!!

A tremendous wave of Cosmic Energy crashes onto Mephisto's back, causing him to fall forward and collapse against the first step. He screams in pain, and his eyes burn as that energy enters his body.

"Alright, alright, that was step one!" The Creator says impatiently. "Come on, then. Don't just lay there like a useless bag of bones! The more steps you take, the greater the benefits!"

Mephisto's watering eyes burn like fire. He grits his teeth and hisses painfully, still reeling from the Cosmic Energy that entered and empowered his body, but which also badly injured his soul.

"Ugh... one... one moment... give me one moment to catch my breath..."

The Creator sighs.

"Fine. It's only your time you're wasting."

Unarin looks Hope right in the eyes.

"But the First Ruler is not the same. He had a beginning. He rose, alone, at some point. He was the first Existence to reach the apex of power during one Eternity, a countless number of Eternities ago. He became the First Ruler. And in doing so, he became capable of annihilating any who opposed him, and preventing any competitors from challenging his rule."

Unarin's expression becomes deadly serious.

"None now live who witnessed the First Ruler's First Eternity. However, one thing was absolutely certain. No matter how powerful He became, the Alpha and Omega could not defy the Cosmic Truths. He could do nothing to stop the expansion of Entropy, and the collapse of the universe in which he was born."

Unarin slows his speech. He pauses for several seconds, a forlorn look on his face.

"It's the greatest tragedy, you know. It's not a pain many can understand. The loneliness. The crushing despair."

He inhales quietly, then exhales...

"The First Ruler discovered that he had obtained the ability to cheat death. Through a mechanism unknown to even me, those who become Rulers can defy the law of entropy. When one Cycle ends and the next begins, they will not perish, and will instead maintain their Existences, rebirthing with all of their memories and powers intact. And so, that is what happened to the First Ruler."

"But... he was alone." Unarin says softly. "All alone. In a universe where his species, the one that had ultimately given birth to his existence... no longer walked the mortal coil. Any loved ones he may have grown attached to, they had perished. Any familial ties, romantic bonds, or other mortal trappings had dissolved at the end of the Cycle."

Hope lifts his head out of his palms. He rests his arms in his lap and stares at the ground, suddenly feeling a deep, existential anguish on behalf of the First Ruler depicted in Unarin's story.

"That is... well... 'tragic' doesn't even cut it." Hope mutters.

"It doesn't." Unarin mutters softly. "The Alpha and the Omega lived for an untold number of Eternities in despair. He was alone. Well and truly alone. He contemplated ending his existence. He sometimes raised up civilizations identical to the ones from his formative Cycle, but in the end, they gave him no joy. After all, even if he could perfectly duplicate the people that he loved, and even if he could recreate their memories and souls... it would not truly be them. They would only be copies, shadows of their original selves. And he would know... he would know that the original versions of his mortal friends had perished. He had been unable to save them from the unending, unfeeling, uncaring Entropy."

"What did he do next, then?" Hope asks, finding himself deeply invested in Unarin's tale.

"It's simple." Unarin says. "His despair gave way to apathy, and then boredom. He stopped caring about anything. Life itself had no meaning. He began waging ugly and hideous experiments with his powers, creating monsters, freaks, and mutants across worlds to battle one another. He watched idly as these creatures fought and killed one another. But that did nothing to alleviate his infinite boredom. And eventually... he formulated The Game."

"The Game!" Hope exclaims, finally beginning to tie everything together. "Then... all of this, the wars between Rulers...?"

"It is all part of the First Ruler's Game." Unarin affirms, lazily blinking his eyes. "He could have ensured no Existence would ever rise up to equal him by snuffing them out. Instead, perhaps due to his infinite loneliness and boredom, he allowed new Rulers to emerge, sometimes even forcing their ascensions along. He formulated unbreakable rules, shackles he placed on all of His Creations. He etched in the fabric of reality... the Akashic Laws."

Unarin looks at Hope with an intensity unlike any he's expressed until now.

"The First Ruler's name is... Akasha. He gave order to the chaos of the Cycles, imprinting upon them the name of the Akashic Cycle. He gave order to The Game by creating the Akashic Barriers and Akashic Laws. And He formulated unbreakable Truths upon the universe, granting them the name of the Akashic Truths. All of Existence now dances within His palm."

"Akasha..." Unarin says, enunciating each syllable one by one, "...is God."

Mephisto coughs up blood. When it expels from his mouth, it lands on the golden steps and immediately fizzles into nothingness, unable to leave a stain on the Staircase of Ascension.

After much effort, Mephisto manages to crawl up the second step.

BOOOOOM!!!

Another violent blast of cosmic energy bombards his body, empowering his soul while also causing it even more grievous damage.

"Aaaargh!" Mephisto cries out pitifully.

"Don't be such a baby." The Creator complains. "Raphael managed forty-two steps the first time he visited. Dosena climbed twenty-three. Even Siddhartha made it up five. You can't be weaker than a human!"

Mephisto cries in a manner most pathetic. He spends a full minute collecting himself, before he manages to lift his head to look up at The Creator.

"Hurtsss..." Mephisto hisses. "Going... to die?"

"The Staircase of Ascension can't kill you." The Creator says, his tone growing more impatient by the minute. "The pain you're feeling is only temporary. When you leave here, you'll be stronger than you can imagine! But that's only if you KEEP climbing the steps!"

Hearing The Creator's assurances, Mephisto feels a little bit better. His fear of death, once causing him great concern, eases up a little bit.

"If it'sss only a matter of a little pain... I... I can manage!" Mephisto proclaims.

With a burst of renewed energy, Mephisto pulls himself to his knees, then he drags his thousand-ton body up to the third step.

BOOOOOOOM!!!

A third blast of violent cosmic energy, ten times greater than before, all but annihilates his existence.

Mephisto slams down against the third step, releasing a scream that would curdle the blood of even the hardiest listener.

This time, he doesn't move.

He remains frozen in place, unable to crawl an inch further.

The Creator gazes at the child, his expressionless face betraying no emotions.

He sighs.

"Your foundation is just too awful. You tried to cheat the process. You sloppily threw together a bunch of mere Emperor souls to forcibly raise your foundation. Nothing worse than a lying, cheating Soul Manipulator. Your kind always thinks you can beat the Akashic Laws, but you can't."

Suddenly, The Creator's posture becomes more alert. He raises his head upward, where he sees various figures descending from the mountaintop.

"Damn..." The Creator murmurs.

The vast majority of these figures appear as mere orbs of glowing light. Formless, neither bipedal nor possessing any particular limbs or extrusions from their souls.

However, one of them does appear bipedal, like the Creator himself. Its body has wings sprouting from its back, and an evil, blood-red aura instead of The Creator's pure white one. Talons grow from its fingers. Its head appears somewhat ominous, with various writhing masses extruding from its mouth.

"Heh." The winged figure says, looking down upon Mephisto's collapsed body with no expression. "So this is the latest Candidate for the Milky Way. Fallen after three steps."

One of the nearby glowing orbs speaks, its voice lacking any gender signifiers, and coming off as... somewhat robotic.

"Not a Candidate. The soul foundation is unacceptable."

"Agreed." Says another orb, with a similarly robotic voice. "Rarely would a New Cosmic only reach the third step."

"Looks like it's a Soul Manipulator." The winged figure says, its faceless visage barely hiding its disdain for The Creator's latest child. "It tried to cheat Akasha's Laws. Now it will never ascend a step further."

"Not all are lucky enough to be born with a high spiritual foundation." The Creator says emotionlessly. "Some of us had to struggle to earn our titles. Are you any different, Dark One?"

The winged figure chuckles. "I did not cheat. I stole. There is a difference."

"The Akashic Barrier will not protect the Milky Way forever." One of the glowing orbs states. "When it falls, so too will you."

"One of my Candidates will ascend before then." The Creator vows. "Do not believe you will obtain easy gains from my kids."

The Dark One turns away. He flies back up into the clouds, laughing all the way.

"Don't be such a boor, Creator! It's all just a Game! HAHAHAHA!"

The other orbs grow bored of looking at Mephisto's fallen form. They also depart, not bothering to say anything to The Creator.

After they leave, The Creator walks down to Mephisto's trembling figure. Mephisto gasps weakly, barely able to stay conscious.

"You did what you could." The Creator says. "But... only three steps. Sigh. I'll send you back, now. Just remember... you might feel like you're a shark once you leave, but in Akasha's Game... you're little more than a minnow."

Mephisto's vision becomes darker and darker. Slowly, he loses consciousness.

The last thing he sees is The Creator's hand reaching toward him...

"How do you know all of these things?" Hope asks. "How do you know about Akasha, the Rulers, and all the rest of it? Isn't the Creator dead?"

"Dead, yes. He no longer lives in the sense of wielding His awesome power." Unarin says slowly. "But... when one becomes capable of grasping the Truths, when they reach a certain... level... they may find that Truths of a Cosmic nature are not always what they seem."

"You're being cryptic again." Hope grunts. "Just speak plainly."

"Dosena." Unarin says. "She is not like you and me. She is a 9th Level Psion. She is... a Cosmic Entity. Her power is beyond your comprehension. And she is not the only 9th Level Psion that has existed in the Milky Way's history. There were a half-dozen others, long, long ago."

Hope nods. Having spent some time infiltrating the Volgrim Empire, he's learned some of this information himself, though he wasn't able to uncover any hidden or classified details.

"So you found out through Dosena?" Hope asks.

"She, her predecessors, and... other individuals." Unarin clarifies. "Once, during the Age of Ignorance, there existed a certain Ascended. A powerful individual, a seer and prophet... and my blood-brother. His abilities allowed him to peer across time, to discern Truths others could not. It was he who gave us many great prophecies, including one which has yet to pass."

"Which one would that be?" Hope asks, leaning forward intently.

Unarin's tone becomes somewhat distant and mystical.

"It is not an event he described in any detail. Merely one he called... The Great Shattering. An event that would surely reshape the cosmos."

Hope nods. "So this prophet, he told you about the Rulers?"

"Those who properly ascend, those who learn the Truths and reach a certain rank of power, they can obtain Answers." Unarin explains. "And those in my Empire who succeeded ultimately passed their knowledge on to me."

He pauses to add, "As for those who cheat the Truths, they are unworthy. They will earn no Answers."

Hope leans back in his chair and touches his lips thoughtfully. His desire to kill Unarin has long faded away, replaced instead with a deep fascination for the First Founder's revelations.

"You spoke to Jason." Hope says. "Did you tell him any of this?"

"Bits and pieces." Unarin says with a smile. "But he's... not at the same intellectual level as you. I could see that the so-called First Wordsmith was having too much trouble following along. You are clearly more capable of digesting these Akashic Truths than he was."

Hope sneers.

"It's obvious you're playing me, Unarin. But you do have a way with words..."

"Haha," Unarin laughs lightly. "Was I too obvious? Forgive me, Mighty Wordsmith. But it is true, you're a much more formidable existence than your other self. I'm growing to like you more and more the longer we talk."

"HEH HEH HEH..."

The fifty gathered Demon Emperors feel chills wash across their skin. They watch in horror as a beam of cosmic energy fires up into the sky, blasting the roof off of Glinch's laboratory and sending thousands of tons of soil into the upper atmosphere.

An instant later, that cosmic energy reforms. It pools together in the sky and begins rapidly spiraling, as a series of demonic faces appear, one after the other.

Lupus.

Zamiel.

Yama.

Mephisto.

And many others!

These faces converge together, swirling and melting until a figure made of flesh and blood begins forcing its way into the material realm, tearing out of a gap in space while golden light floods through the tear, momentarily blinding all who gaze upon it.

The Emperors cry out in pain. Serena is the only one who, for the briefest of instants, manages to make out a faceless figure formed wholly out of cosmic energy, hidden inside that divine realm.

But then the gap closes, and Mephisto's body remains.

"YESSS... YESSS!!!" Mephisto howls, his mere voice causing hurricanes to erupt and earthquakes to rock the world of Numaria. "WE HAVE DONE IT! WE HAVE ASSCCCENDED!!! KEKEKEKE!"

Mephisto's voice no longer sounds like him alone.

Now, it carries a mixture of tones. Those who listen to it can't help but feel as if a thousand people are speaking in unison; all the souls Mephisto used to create this Cosmic Body of his.

Waves of power surge through hyperspace.

Inside the Volgrim Empire, Dosena pays close attention to the ascension process. The moment Mephisto materializes, she relaxes, sinking back into her chair.

[Mmm. Low Cosmic.]

On the world of Tarus II, Raphael stands up alertly, gasping in shock.

"What is this? I sense something... a successful ascension? Within the Milky Way? But by whom?"

At the same time, Emperor Glinch gazes up at Mephisto's body, but his smile fades away.

"Bah. That's all? What a disappointment. I expected better!"

Mephisto has no idea of the thoughts running through the minds of these figures. And even if he knew those thoughts, he would not care.

Cosmic power floods through his body. He stands at the same physical size as ever before, but now his spiritual aura, and his magical powers, have grown absolutely monstrous. A casual wave of his hand could sunder mountains. The full force of his abilities could easily crack planets.

Mephisto vaguely feels that if he were to battle Wolfram, who had falsely ascended to the rank of Demon Deity, he would have a huge advantage and would ultimately defeat his former friend.

"HAHAHAHAHA!" Mephisto laughs. "GAZE UPON THISSS DEITY! Gaze upon thisss divinely mandated God of Demonsss!!"

If The Creator were to hear Mephisto's words, he might facepalm. Mephisto completely ignores the warning he received, opting instead to gloat over his planet-busting capabilities.

But to the Emperors below him, they do not sneer or laugh. They feel only a sense of unending despair.

Emperor Yardrat falls to his knees, a sensation of defeat already weighing on his chest.

"He's... almost as powerful as the Cherubiim." Yardrat mutters. "Maybe even stronger. We can't win. It's over."

Mephisto looks down on the pathetic, crying, sniveling weaklings cowering within his cosmic aura. He grins delightedly, reveling in the despair upon their faces.

"Lisssten well, insssectsss!" Mephisto proclaims, his voice booming across all of Numaria. "Your new Firssst Emperor isss none other than usss, Mephisssto!"

"And our new title isss..."

"...THE MYRIAD DEITY!"

Part 497: Myriad Deity

Many of the Emperors lose their fighting spirit as they gaze upon the monster levitating in the sky. Numaria's atmosphere begins to thicken, and clouds swirl in the distance as they become drawn to Demon Deity Mephisto's aura of cosmic power.

Turbulent winds rock the world beneath him. Despite his body being the same physical size as every other demon in the vicinity, his demonic aura practically surges into the heavens, giving those with mana-attuned senses the idea that he actually stands ten thousand meters tall!

"HEH, HEH, HEH..." Mephisto laughs slowly, his voice audible inside every nook and cranny of Numaria's surface. "Do you feel fear? You, who ssspent millennia mocking usss? You, who thought you were better than usss? You, who now bowsss limply at our feet?"

Mephisto's mouth curls up into a cruel grin. Half of his skeleton has now grown skin across its surface, and bits of muscle also cling to it as well, but overall he only appears half-complete as a flesh-and-blood entity, and his regrowth doesn't continue any further. This makes him appear like a ghoul resurrected from the Great Beyond, a creature clinging to life through sheer strength of will.

But that doesn't matter.

To the Emperors below him, he might as well be a reincarnation of the Cherubiim; their worst nightmare.

Even Yardrat can't help but look up at the Myriad Deity, a creature born by stitching the souls of half-a-dozen Emperors together, with anything more than utter hopelessness.

"We've lost." Yardrat whispers to himself.

"Mephisto!" Emperor Melody exclaims, not allowing defeat to enter her thoughts. "Don't go too far! We have no choice but to acknowledge your rule, but we're still your demonic brothers and sisters!"

"Our brothersss? Our sssisssstersss?" Mephisto challenges, narrowing his eyes. "Oh, we think not. Ssstupid wench. For one hundred thousssand yearsss, you mocked usss. You treated usss asss a weakling worthy only of disssdain. You even came here intending to kill usss. You sssold usss out to the Wordsssmithsss. Your fatesss are sssealed."

Mephisto crooks a wicked smile.

"But worry not. You will not die pointlesss deathsss here. Inssstead, you ssshall merge with usss. We ssshall devour your sssoulsss to empower our body! And in thisss way, we will amasss INFINITE POWER!"

Suddenly, Mephisto snaps his hand out. Before anyone can react, a wisp of cosmic shadow-energy races toward one of the recently ascended Emperors, grabs them, and yanks them toward Mephisto's smiling face.

The Emperor, a female of some renown, shrieks in fright. "Nooo!!"

Her begging goes unanswered. Mephisto casually slaps her face, breaks her neck, and kills her on the spot.

Before her soul can escape, he grabs onto it, using the power of Valac's Lantern, now imbued into his very essence, and tugs her soul into his mouth.

Mephisto greedily slurps out her soul, then crushes her body into meat paste and splatters her remains onto his half-grown skin and bones.

They regenerate slightly, absorbing her remains into his body!

This shocking sight terrifies all of the other Emperors, making their blood run cold.

"H-he ate Emperor Komi!" One of the male Emperors shrieks. "And he's going to eat us next! What do we do?!"

Emperor Serena grits her teeth. Unlike the others, she clearly sensed the changes to Mephisto's soul after he devoured Komi's remnants.

Mephisto's ability is practically a cheat! He gains power by eating the bodies and souls of other entities! Doesn't this mean he could become unstoppable, given time? We can't hold back!

Mephisto grabs another Emperor at random, simply picking the closest ones to himself.

"Noooo!" The male Emperor shrieks, clawing at the ground as his body begins to lift at the sky. "We can bargain, Mephisto! Please, NOOO!!"

Mephisto tears that Emperor apart as well, slightly increasing his power further. By now, the other Emperors have shaken from their fear and entered fight or flight mode. Several Emperors take up defensive stances and activate their powers, but even more run away, fleeing the battlefield as fast as they can.

Before they make it 500 meters, Glinch's minions emerge from the ground to cut off their paths of retreat!

Glinch's chimeras slap those Emperors back, knocking them on their asses while preventing them from running away. With their battle-lines and minds in disarray, none of them can form proper strike forces to escape Mephisto's radius of revenge!

Emperor Crow's gaze hardens. She receives a message from Emperor Serena and nods.

She stands up to her full height and puffs out her chest.

"Ca-CAW! Hear me, allies! Believe in the plan! The time is now! I will face Mephisto! I will defeat this menace myself!"

Mephisto pauses his feasting to look at Crow with interest. He starts to reach toward her, but halts, some of the arrogant souls within himself becoming interested in the challenge issued by the protesting ant before him.

"Kekeke! You wisssh to battle thisss deity? Oh, we would very much like to sssee you TRY, Crow!"

The other Emperors suddenly remember the plan Auger told them about.

If Mephisto should successfully ascend, then all of the demons across all of the Hells should volunteer their magical energy in an attempt to uplift Crow to the rank of Demon Deity through the Ritual of Sacrifice!

But...

Even if they take this plan, the conversion rate of their energy won't be high, and Crow won't be able to stay in her empowered state for long. Perhaps only a few hours at best.

Those who give Crow their energy will become weakened to the point they won't be able to fight back at all. They'll be helpless to protect themselves!

In the end, it's only when they truly see Mephisto's awe-inspiring power for themselves that the Emperors realize they're already helpless. None of them can offer the slightest challenge to the Myriad Deity.

It's better to put their hopes on a slight chance than to be slaughtered like pigs!

With that, the sense of fear around the battlefield becomes partially obscured. The weakest-hearted Emperors grit their teeth, then they hold their palms up to the sky.

"Begin the Ritual!" Crow declares.

* * *

Across the Labyrinth, a series of secret commands transfers across tens, hundreds, and even thousands of hidden messenger's mouths. With orders sent to them through Emperor Auger's special methods, they quickly send word to every demon living within four of the Hells, including the First Hell of Damnation, the Third Hell of Blood, the Fourth Hell of Punishment, and the Fifth Hell of Calamity.

The lesser demons receive their orders and spread the word. At once, they lift their arms up and send weak but vital bursts of demonic energy into the sky, energy which races to the world of Diabolus, occupied by the Hell of Calamity. There, Crow's trusted subordinates manage the frightening influx of power and transmit it to their leader, the Emperor of Sacrifice herself.

Emperor Crow roars with pain. Her body immediately swells to the point of bursting, and her physical form inflates dramatically, raising her from seven feet tall to fifty feet!

On Numaria, Crow's screams of pain cause the other Emperors to wince sympathetically, but also cause them to fret nervously.

What if the Ritual bursts her body like a balloon? What if she cannot handle the amount of power rushing into her blood vessels and soul, and she implodes on herself like a poorly-made submarine four thousand meters beneath the ocean's surface?!

Crow's roars cause Numaria to shake. The blue-feathered birdlike Emperor becomes more and more powerful, but as she does, Mephisto doesn't show the slightest fear.

"Ah, a weak opponent to tessst our new ssstrength..." Mephisto chuckles to himself. "But Crow isss no true deity. Ssshe isss only a pretender. She has not been blesssed by the Akassshic Mountain, and neither wasss Wolfram!"

As Mephisto mentions Wolfram's name, a part of himself suddenly feels inexplicably sad. One of the major souls comprising his body, the one belonging to Emperor Lupus, winces at the mention of her husband's name. But that feeling passes. Mephisto quickly wrestles his emotions back under control, pushing those odd feelings away. They don't mean anything to him anymore, now that he has achieved the pinnacle of demonic power.

"Come, Crow. Give thisss Deity a challenge!" Mephisto exclaims.

Crow fights against her mind, body, and soul. She forces herself to condense the horrifying energies rushing into her vessel, realizing that if she fails to contain them properly, she'll die a death more gruesome than has been seen in the Milky Way for several tens of millennia.

The planet rumbles and shakes.

The mountains tremble.

The very tectonic plates beneath her feet grind together in protest!

Crow opens her eyes and gasps for breath.

"Cough... not... enough! I can't... aargh! S-Serena! SERENA! DO... IT...!!"

Emperor Serena's heart jumps.

"The Ritual wasn't enough?!"

Her thoughts turn cold.

It's possible I could boost Crow in the same manner that I did Wolfram, but then she would surely die afterward, whether she won or lost against Mephisto. That result is unacceptable! Rather than one giant burst of soul energy, I'll try slowly increasing her limits. Then she might still recover after battling Mephisto!

Serena assesses Crow's deteriorating situation in an instant. She raises her palms and sends soul energy into Crow's body, slowly increasing the power she can contain.

As Serena does this, Mephisto remains in the sky, crossing his arms and watching intently. Now that he's an ascended Cosmic Entity, he has become capable of seeing soul energy in much the same way as Serena can.

"Oh, how interesssting..." Mephisto says to himself quietly. "Ssso it'sss like that. When thisss isss all sssaid and done, we mussst... acquire Ssserena'sss sssoul for ourssselvesss. Sssuch a ussseful ability... it would be a sshame to leave it in the handsss of a mere Emperor. Kekeke..."

The other Emperors watch, their bodies weakened, as they lay on the ground. Their spirits remain sharp as they wait, hope, and pray for success on Crow's part.

"Uuuuaaargh!!" Crow roars, her aura increasing as her soul's maximum power inflates.

All of the gathered demonic energy rapidly fills the expanding void within herself, and this in turn causes her aura to explode with power!

WHOOOMPH!

A blast of mana erupts from Crow's body, flattening the wasteland around herself and causing every Emperor, including Serena, to fall flat on their asses or backs as the oppressive wave crashes into them.

Crow ascends!

In much the same way as Wolfram before her, but in a more controlled manner, Crow barely manages to shakily step across the boundary between Emperor and Deity, making her the third known demon to ever break this barrier.

"UUUAAAHHH!!" Crow shouts, her voice blasting the clouds out of the sky. "I'VE... DONE IT... AHAHAHA!!"

Crow, like Mephisto, becomes utterly intoxicated by the energy flowing through her veins. She snaps her head in Mephisto's general direction, feeling a sense of urgency as she realizes her power-up has put her on equal footing with the Myriad Deity.

"Wolfram was the Deity of Space Shattering!" Crow declares. "And you are the Myriad Deity! But I am... the DEITY OF DENIAL! I DENY you the right to kill any other demons!"

Crow takes a step forward. The planet rumbles when her foot strikes the rotted dirt. She looks up into the sky at the Myriad Deity, who stands haughtily with his arms crossed.

"Kekekeke!" Mephisto cackles. "You've barely managed to reach the sssame ssstrength asss usss! But unlike usss, you're on a timer! Do you think you can teach thisss Deity a lessson of humility? THINK AGAIN!"

Mephisto conjures a wall of shadow between himself and Crow, tapping into Yama's empowered magic. He flickers out of sight, then appears beside Crow with his fist raised.

BOOOM!

Mephisto smashes Crow's body with the full power of his Deity-body...

But Crow remains unmoved!

Like a mountain before a hurricane, Crow lifts her wing up and absorbs the full power of Mephisto's strike while merely digging her clawed-feet into the dirt!

Her feathers have now become harder than demonstone. Her defense rises well above Mephisto's physical striking power, allowing her to turn a cold grin toward him.

"You were saying?"

Crow balls her right talons into a fist, then snaps a punch at Mephisto's chest.

BOOOOM!

She slams Mephisto with her full strength, launching him backward like a cannonball!

Mephisto's body contorts into the shape of a 'U' as he flies away, heating up the air around him as he rockets across the Stitched Wasteland at the speed of sound. He rapidly reaches the distant forest, where he crashes into the trees, tears apart the foliage, and leaves a ten-kilometer ravine in the wake of his flight.

Eventually, he grinds to a stop and lands in a crumpled heap.

Then, he casually hops to his feet and lightly coughs after dusting himself off.

"Tsssk. Good ssstrength..."

Crow launches into the sky, then flies toward Mephisto's newest position at an even greater speed than she sent him flying. With the two of them now far enough away from the other Emperors to avoid collateral damage, the Deity of Denial can take on the Myriad Deity without holding back.

"Don't try acting tough!" Crow declares, as she pulls back a fist and flies toward Mephisto's motionless form. "I'm ten times the fighter you'll ever be!"

This time, it's Mephisto who looks up at the sky towards the scary threat rushing toward him below.

A faint smile spreads across his face.

"Ssstupid Crow. Ssshe hasss no idea how futile her effortsss truly are. We put everything into thisss body."

* * *

While Crow and Mephisto begin their battle for the ages, the other Emperors left behind clamber slowly to their feet. With their mana and soul reserves sapped, they feel like dishcloths wrung completely dry, or perhaps humans trapped in a desert for one long week without water.

Completely drained, utterly parched.

These Emperors wince as a cataclysmic explosion erupts at the distant edge of the Stitched Wasteland. Whatever is happening between Crow and Mephisto, they don't dare get close enough to observe the situation.

Melody coughs. "Will... will Crow win?"

"We can only... hope so..." Yardrat wheezes.

The Emperors move to form a large group, checking one another for injuries.

But then, they notice Glinch's chimera slowly moving toward them.

"Shit!" Melody curses, as she has a terrible premonition.

"Heh, heh, heh." One of the winged bipedal chimeras, a gargoyle-like creature, laughs in a cruel voice identical to Glinch's. "All fattened up and ready for stitching. This was part of the deal with Mephisto. We'd split the Emperors fifty-fifty. Hehehe."

The chimera cocks its head.

"But you're all pretty weak, and Mephisto seems to be tied up. Oh dear, I wonder, can he hurt me if I renege on our agreement? Ah! It seems he can't. So maybe I'll just gobble you all up for myself, eh?"

Emperor Dagon stands up straight, despite his exhausted body. "Glinch! You little... you lowest of the low! You're playing right into the Wordsmith's hands! And the Volgrim!"

Glinch's gargoyle laughs softly. "Heh heh. Is that so? You think the person who handed out such valuable Soul Pellets like candy would care if all the Emperors of all the Hells died? I can just make more of you. You're nothing to me but research material."

A distant explosion sunders a mountain. Pieces of the peak rocket into the atmosphere to later rain down upon Numaria like meteorites. Crow and Mephisto's battle continues regardless of the actions of the Emperors left behind.

Emperor Rhesus grits his teeth. "I ain't afraid of you! You're a coward! You only wanna fight us because we can't fight back! A dickless prick like you can't beat a true man like me!"

The chimera laughs again. "Hah. Imbecile. My chimeras tore you apart when you were fighting at your full strength. If I wanted to kill you, I could have done it hours ago. But I wanted to make sure certain events happened first. Now that Crow is keeping Mephisto busy, I can do as I please."

The chimera rolls its eyes.

"Bah. This talking is so tedious. Just shut up and let me kill you quickly."

It begins stomping toward the closest Emperors, making their hearts skip a beat, but abruptly, it pauses its charge, jumps back, and looks up into the sky.

"What? You... you've come too?"

The other Emperors, bewildered, follow the chimera's gaze.

There, they see a figure they never expected to meet again, someone they thought was surely dead.

Emperor Yumagi!

The Glyphmancer's majestic, youthful, handsome form levitates high in the sky, his eyes looking down upon the army of Chimeras with disdain.

"Hello, Glinch. Up to your usual underhanded methods, I see."

Serena's eyes widen, because unlike the other Emperors, she can make out the overflowing vitality contained within Yumagi's body.

He isn't exhausted. He didn't give any power to Crow!

And while this might have resulted in a minuscule weakening of Crow's final form, it also means the Glyphmancer is fresh and ready for a fight!

"Ugh." Glinch's gargoyle grunts in annoyance. "Such a showoff. One Emperor cannot defeat my creations."

Yumagi's body disappears, then reappears amidst all the other Emperors.

"I don't like people who cheat at games, Glinch. I always play fairly. That's the difference between you and I."

Yumagi snaps his fingers, and a pair of Tarot cards appears in his grasp.

"Aspect of the Infinite Dragons, EVOKE! Temporal Cricket, EVOKE!"

Abruptly, Yumagi reverses the conditions of every single Emperor in the area, undoing all of the energy they lost, all of their soul vitality, and any injuries they may have sustained in the last five minutes.

Suddenly, all of the weakened Emperors gasp with excitement as the strength in their bodies immediately returns, leaving them ready for round two. They jump to their feet and grin delightedly.

"Holy shit! Way to go Yumagi!" Emperor Fae exclaims. "You kick ass!"

"Damn right!" Melody adds. "I'm ready to beat Glinch to a pulp!"

Other Emperors chime in, whooping and hollering as they feel a chance of survival arriving for the first time since Mephisto's ascension.

But Yumagi frowns at them.

"Quiet, all of you. I've only restored the strength you had from five minutes ago. You're not in peak condition. You were already worn out before Mephisto succeeded in becoming a Deity. Now, we'll have to work together to defeat Glinch's minions!"

Glinch's gargoyle laughs. "Smart, Yumagi. You do pay attention. I guess you're not going to make this easy on me, but it doesn't matter. I've been preparing for this day for a long time..."

"You can prepare all you want..." Yumagi says, as he produces a Tarot Card from his Mind Realm.

"...but I'd rather rely on the heart of the cards."

Part 498: Battle Across Numaria

Recommended Listening

The Myriad Deity.

The Deity of Denial.

Mephisto and Crow engage in a battle that rocks Numaria's foundations!

Each of the two has ascended to a power level comparable to a 7th, 8th, or perhaps even a 9th Level Psion! The sheer impacts of their blows render all life in the immediate vicinity extinct, no matter how strong and resilient they might be.

Crow races around at dizzying speeds, chasing after Mephisto while cawing at him in her bird-like speech. Her fists meet his face, chest, and arms with aggressive intent as she beats and batters him into mountains, rivers, and oceans.

"Quit running away and FACE ME!" Crow exclaims, as she chases Mephisto across Numaria's surface.

Within the first five minutes of their battle, they completely annihilate two of Numaria's mountains, the ones nearest the Stitched Wasteland.

Ten minutes later, they've carved a long, zig-zagged ravine through Numaria's forests.

Crow's feet plant against the planet's surface with enough force to rattle its tectonic plates. She storms after Mephisto while firing her demonstone-like feathers at him, some striking Mephisto's bones like cannonballs, while other miss and spread death across Numaria's landscape.

At the same time, Mephisto continues running away, only occasionally punching back at his pursuer.

Crow's initial excitement at how much stronger she seems to be than Mephisto becomes duller as the minutes pass. Unlike her opponent, she's on a time limit, and it doesn't take much thought on her part to realize he intends to run out the clock.

"You're such a COWARD!" Crow declares, as she catches up to Mephisto and lands a vicious punch on his smug half-skinned face. "Stop running and fight like a man!"

Crow's fist slams Mephisto down into the dirt, sending a shockwave throughout the forest and uprooting hundreds of giant trees nearby. She inadvertently conjures a giant circular clearing, reminiscent of a fighting ring.

Just like the last fifty times she's landed a solid hit, Mephisto easily jumps to his feet, not appearing injured in the slightest.

"Hehe. You want usss to ssstop running? Are you cccertain?"

Crow scowls at him as she raises her fists.

Are all Demon Deities as durable as us? She wonders. I've struck Mephisto with blows that would turn any Emperor to a mass of pulped blood, but he looks like I've barely slapped his face. Is it possible he hasn't suffered any injuries up to now?

But she doesn't voice her concerns. She merely crooks her frown into a fierce smile.

"Ca-caw! That's right! We both know you'll beat me easily once I run out of time, but do you really want your 'glorious rise' to be tainted by such a pathetic win? Even if you kill all of the demons that exist, you'll still have to live with the fact you're a little sissy coward!"

Mephisto appears unmoved by her words. He smiles cruelly.

"You have provided usss with an adequate measssure of our new ssstrength. We did not want to crusssh you too easssily, but... if you INSSSISSST!"

Abruptly, Mephisto launches himself at Crow.

The Myriad Deity summons blackened shadows onto his body.

He splits in three!

Two shadow-copies of Mephisto charge at Crow alongside his original body, clearing the gap in a split-second. They each tackle and body slam her, catching her off-guard and pinning her to the ground. The True Mephisto lifts up his fists and begins smashing them into Crow's face, while his duplicates pin her arms, making her unable to protect her head.

WHAM! WHAM! WHAM!

"Aargh!"

Crow cries out in pain. Mephisto bashes her face from left to right, striking her beak with his skinless knuckles.

For ten seconds, he whales on Crow, laughing as her cries become more and more slurred.

"You asssked for thisss!" Mephisto declares.

Crow's legs suddenly bend in a normally impossible manner. Her bird-like feet grab onto Mephisto's exposed spine, then yank him off her body. She tears Mephisto off herself and flings him into the distance, then quickly plants her feet into the dirt and pulls herself up, using her superior strength to smash the shadow-copies together that are trying to pin her arms in place.

SPLAT!

Crow breaks their bodies with ease. They aren't nearly as powerful, nor as durable, as Mephisto himself. It's only when they work in tandem with his main body that they can become a real threat.

"Huk!"

Crow takes a second to cough up some blood, which she casually spits on the ground.

It's at this point in the battle that Crow begins to feel more wary.

I'm more powerful than Mephisto. My stamina is higher. My feathers provide me unparalleled defense, and my physical strength is certainly greater. But in terms of magic, he has the powers of four different deities at his disposal. I'll have to assume I'm facing Mephisto, Lupus, Zamiel, and Yama all at the same time!

Mephisto jumps to his feet. He motions with his hands to conjure magic.

While he does, Crow's mind becomes a blur. She quickly thinks about her ascension to Demon Deity and what abilities she might use to turn the tide of battle.

As a seasoned veteran of the Energy Wars, Crow has fought and killed innumerable opponents. She's become adept at the art of combat, but has always faced issues with her lack of magical talent. Like Bael, she tends to rely solely on brute force.

But in the instants between seconds, Crow investigates her overwhelming power and uncovers a shocking discovery.

My feathers! What has happened to them?!

Having put all of her attention on trying to kill Mephisto as quickly as possible, she hasn't spared even a second since the moment she ascended in truly inspecting her new self. Now, as she does, she finds that every individual feather on her body, as well as those she's fired off and forgotten about, all possess incredible amounts of mana!

Embedded deep within their stems, each of Crow's feathers possesses a primitive level of sentience, allowing them to act on instinct... and even to control themselves!

Mephisto's hands rapidly weave dozens of magical signs. But at the same time, Crow calls out to the dozens of feathers she's fired, causing them to lift out of the ground, soar into the sky, and fly back to their master.

Crow plucks out another of her feathers at random, then narrows her eyes.

I don't know what I'm capable of... but I DO know my magic has grown immeasurably after my ascension!

Crow starts to press her feet into the soil. She bends her knees, ready to lunge at Mephisto, but she pauses.

"What? A tail?"

A bone-tail grows out of Mephisto's rear. His fingers sharpen into claws, as do his toes. The teeth in his mouth sharpen, and his body increases in size to ten feet tall as he assumes a four-legged posture, resembling some sort of half-skeletal exobeast predator.

"You look... TASSSTY!" Mephisto howls, before launching himself at Crow.

Right before he can close the gap, Crow waves her feather.

A wall of air fires out of the feather, momentarily summoning the winds of a Category 7 hurricane to rush at Mephisto!

The Myriad Deity makes a noise of surprise as Crow's storm reverses his momentum and sends him flying backward, but he easily recovers by digging his claws into the ground and enduring the gale's might.

"Bahaha! Thisss barely even ticklesss usss!" Mephisto taunts, his feral teeth making him twice as menacing as before. "Leave it to a woman to blow wind ussselesssly!"

The hurricane rapidly subsides. Crow ignores Mephisto's taunts to focus on her own abilities as she hurries to dig up her new potential.

Electricity crackles along the tips of every feather on Crow's body. The amount of energy rapidly escalates until it explodes into a maelstrom of lightning! Crow becomes bathed in electrical power, transforming into a yellow-and-white Deity of Thunder.

Zip-zip!

Crow zaps her body at an accelerated speed, dancing from left to right as she accelerates toward Mephisto with her fists raised.

THOOM! THOOM!

She socks Mephisto with lightning-empowered fists, sundering him into the crater and causing its diameter to triple in size. She pounces on him and continues battering him with all her strength, only for Mephisto to eventually knock her aside, then retaliate with his own brutal attacks.

Ten minutes pass. Thirty minutes. An hour.

Crow and Mephisto battle from one side of the planet to the other. Every single cloud in the sky vanishes due to the shockwaves traveling across the horizon. Countless mountains become convenient pillars useful for bashing one or the other Deity against, and after just one and a half hours, Numaria's once lush forests have become so devastated that it will probably be downgraded from a paradise-class planet for the next hundred years.

Finally, Crow reaches the peak of her rage. She grabs Mephisto's neck, or rather the spine beneath his skull, and leaps into the sky.

Mephisto claws at Crow's arm, but her feathers provide unparalleled defense. Mephisto can't force her to loosen her grip, so he instead wiggles and wriggles, trying to squirm free.

But to Mephisto's shock, Crow doesn't leap into the sky with the intent of falling back to Numaria's surface, perhaps to smash him against the soil as she has so many times before.

She continues climbing in altitude!

Up, up, up...

Crow races out past the lower atmosphere, and then the upper atmosphere. Her speed doesn't slow, but instead increases as she easily breaches ten times the speed of sound, and even a fraction the speed of light.

Mephisto's face contorts into worry. He watches helplessly as Numaria grows more and more distant, but even so, he can't free himself from Crow's grip!

[Let usss go!] Mephisto roars telepathically, since his voice can't transfer across the vacuum of space.

But Crow doesn't answer him. Her expression merely hardens as she peers at something distant.

Mephisto cranes his head around and becomes momentarily startled as he observes the slowly-approaching visage of one of Numaria's moons, a barren orb of rock, dust, and dirt, incapable of harboring life.

[What are you doing?!] Mephisto exclaims.

But again, Crow does not speak to him.

She merely increases her speed further, using the power of electricity to accelerate herself like a railgun shell to five percent the speed of light!

Within just two minutes, Numaria's moon becomes bigger and bigger, to the point of swallowing the horizon.

Mephisto's pupils shrink to pinpricks as he grasps her intent.

[Ssstop! You imbecccile!]

But Crow doesn't stop. She races straight toward the moon, holding Mephisto out in front of herself.

An instant later, a silent explosion detonates in the vacuum of space.

Shockwaves spread throughout the Void.

Crow slams Mephisto's body directly into Numaria's moon with all the strength and speed she can muster. So powerful is the impact that the entire body of the barren, lifeless world splits asunder, breaking into five giant pieces of rock and dirt.

Crow shatters Numaria's moon, using her and Mephisto's bodies as instruments of destruction.

For the next minute, the Void becomes still.

Plumes of dust travel into space. The moon begins to slowly drift in five separate directions as its remnant pieces lose their gravitic cohesion.

But in the center of the planet, two bodies stand up, with Crow's eyes full of shock.

[No! Impossible!] Crow roars telepathically. [How could you still be alive? How could you be fine?! What are your bones MADE OF?!]

Mephisto levitates in the center of the moon's core while its five pieces slowly drift away. He smiles at Crow.

[Kekeke... we took ssso many precautionsss. Making thisss body wasss not a one-day effort, you poor, uneducated sssimpleton. In fact, we began our plansss for assscensssion the day we became an Emperor...]

Crow looks at Mephisto's exobeast-like body, with its flicking tail, its razor-sharp teeth, and its rending claws. She gazes at him in confusion, while a sense of dread wells up in her heart.

[What does that mean?] Crow asks.

[You ssstill don't underssstand? Let usss give you a hint.] Mephisto says coldly. [A sssingle word...]

The corners of his mouth crook upward. His eyes turn into mischievous saucers.

[Polarisss...]

Crow frowns, uncomprehending. [Polaris?]

But then, her eyes widen.

She abruptly levitates backward, looking at Mephisto in horror.

[That's the world where the Wordsmith fought Satan! Where Diablo became the Archdemon! Where you... where you-!]

Mephisto cocks his smiling head.

[Underssstand now? Everyone thought thossse bonesss were lossst. Even we did. But upon becoming an Emperor, we detected the faint sssensssationssss of the remnant bonesss. Even better, they were not like they were previousssly. No...]

He continues.

[Bathed in the heat of a sssupernova. They endured for sssix years, melting down into a purer, denser, far more durable form. And we recovered them. Kekeke.]

Mephisto caresses his skeleton lovingly. Then he motions with his hands, and a pair of giant bone-wings begins to emerge from his back.

[Seven devils...] Crow whispers, horrified. [You... that's how you ascended! You... used... the bones of a dragon! The last dragon!]

[Leviathan'sss bonesss.] Mephisto says, as his body transforms into its true appearance.

No longer does he appear like his original self, a mere Demon Emperor.

Instead, Mephisto assumes the figure of a smaller and more compact version of Leviathan, the dragon which once fought the Archdemon on Polaris.

The very same dragon which granted demonkind its current power.

Mephisto's eyes glow red in a manner more evil than ever before. He cackles sinisterly at the frightened Crow.

[Do you underssstand now, woman? You cannot harm usss. We are invincccible. No matter how many planetsss you throw usss againssst... it mattersss not. Our bonesss sssurvived a sssupernova. Your ssstrength... isss insssufficient.]

Crow's body shakes with a sudden feeling of exhaustion. While she might normally have plenty of energy left to chase after Mephisto and beat him to death, the fact of the matter is that she can't actually kill him. Someone else might, but not a newly ascended Deity like herself. She feels sapped of her will to fight, like a man who has gazed upon an impassable wall he can never hope to bypass.

On the other hand, it's also clear that Mephisto can't kill her, either. He lacks the strength to beat her back.

But that doesn't matter.

Crow won't be a Demon Deity forever. In fact, she might not be one for much longer in the first place.

Now, she realizes her attempt to equalize the playing field never meant anything to Mephisto. She never was a threat to him.

[Truth be told,] Mephisto says, [we weren't entirely cccertain of the durability of our body. But you have given usss... a delightful essstimate of what we can accomplisssh. Our ssstriking forccce isss a little weak, but our defensssesss are quite-]

In the middle of Mephisto's speech, Crow turns tail and flees!

WHOOSH!

She blasts off into the horizon, racing back to Numaria as fast as she can!

Mephisto chokes and coughs, caught off-guard by her abrupt flight. He gazes in shock for three seconds before shaking off his daze.

[Kekeke! Ssso much for calling usss a coward! Look at how the wench runsss for her life!!]

Mephisto launches himself after Crow, attempting to chase her. However, his speed of acceleration is much slower than hers due to her lightning-infused feathers. While he could eventually catch up to her given enough time, the distance to Numaria isn't particularly far. She reaches it in only two minutes, while he requires five.

Crow rushes to Numaria as swiftly as she can. She breaches the upper atmosphere at terrifying speeds, deliberately arriving above the area where the other Emperors have continued fighting Glinch's forces. She finds herself momentarily bewildered by how all of those Emperors have managed to revitalize their energies, at least until she senses the aura of Demon Emperor Yumagi.

She barely gives half a thought to Yumagi's unexpected survival. Instead, she flies down to Numaria and unleashes a terrifying attack upon Glinch's forces, obliterating all of his chimera with a wave of her claws.

Their bodies burst like blood-balloons!

All of Glinch's chimera that were oppressing the Emperors until that point explode, startling the Emperors and making them look up into the sky. There, they see their comrade glowing with a fierce electrical energy as storms of lightning ripple across her feathers.

"Crow!" Yardrat exclaims in delight. "You're back! You defeated Mephisto?"

"NO!" Crow barks, her voice striking the Emperors below with concussive force. "You have to flee! Escape before it's too late! We can't defeat Mephisto! He's invincible!"

The other Emperors freeze in place, staring up at the visibly frightened Crow in horror.

"What? Invincible?" Kristoff asks. "But how-"

"NO TIME TO EXPLAIN!" Crow cries. "Run, you idiots! Get out of here! I'll hold him off as long as I can! GO!!"

The other Emperors panic. They begin running toward the edge of the Stitched Wasteland in a hurry, while Crow turns her gaze toward the sky, sensing the imminent arrival of Mephisto as he chases after her after-image.

Mephisto crashes into the upper atmosphere like a meteor, his body igniting with flames as he descends toward the fleeing Emperors.

"NOT SSSO FASSST! You are our PREY! You are but SSSNACKSSS before thisss Deity!!"

Mephisto hungrily tries to grab Emperor Yardrat, making Yardrat piss himself in fear, but Crow throws herself into Mephisto's path, blocking him with her body.

BOOM!!

Mephisto collides with the Deity of Denial, while Crow uses all of her strength to mitigate the power of the shockwaves so they won't kill her friends below.

"Kekekeke!!" Mephisto cackles. "We sssee! You were trying to warn our old friendsss of our arrival! But now you have to protect them from our clawsss! Hahaha!!"

Mephisto makes a game of zipping around Crow to restrict her movements. Multiple times, he pretends to grab at or attack the fleeing Emperors while they shit their pants, only to sneakily land attacks on Crow's body instead.

Like a cat playing with a mouse, Mephisto revels in the fear and terror on his victims' faces, savoring their negative emotions.

"Oh, what fun! What joy!" Mephisto laughs again and again. "Thisss isss what it meansss to posssesss true power! Kekeke!"

Crow cries out in pain, making the hearts of the Emperors turn cold with fear. They look up at her with a mixture of gratitude and depression. Many of them gasp as they witness Mephisto's true form, immediately piecing together the truth.

"Mephisto! That spawn of a broodmother!" Melody hisses. "He didn't lose the last dragon's bones at all! He used them to ascend to Demon Deity!"

"He had us all fooled." Fae bites off, looking up at her former colleague with envious eyes.

Crow continues to hold Mephisto back, but with her movements restricted, she can't protect herself as well as she would like. Minor injuries start cropping up under her feathers. She suffers scratches and scrapes, minor bone fractures, and lacerations as she shields her comrades all the way to the Warpgate.

The Emperors rush through the gate as fast as they can, but Emperor Serena pauses at the end.

"Crow! Come quickly!"

Crow wrestles with Mephisto in the sky, holding him back from entering the Warpgate. She barely spares a thought toward Serena's words.

[JUST GO!] Crow commands telepathically.

Serena flinches. She senses the faint weakening of Crow's life-force. Already, the power of her Ritual has begun to fade, as well as the empowerment Serena granted her soul.

Serena's eyes well up with tears. She clenches her teeth, and her throat constricts.

"Thank you, Crow. We won't forget your sacrifice..."

She steps through the Warpgate, and it closes behind her.

Unfortunately for the many remaining Barons, Lords, and other lower demons living on Numaria, they won't be so lucky. Mephisto will surely devour them in bunches and batches without restraint.

Emperor Auger borrows Yardrat's power to usher his nearest Duke elites off-planet, but he doesn't dare stay behind any longer. He and his comrades step into the Labyrinth along with the rest, sealing themselves off from Numaria, where they hope Mephisto won't be able to easily reach them.

Inside the Labyrinth, Melody sniffles and cries, feeling despondent over the current situation. Already, she's lost the majority of her own hell, and now a calamity will befall the Hell of Punishment when Crow runs out of strength to oppose Mephisto.

The other Emperors don't feel much better. Their plan to destroy Mephisto failed utterly, and now an enemy as frightening as the Cherubiim wants nothing more than to rip their bodies apart and devour their souls.

Amidst the sobbing and crying of the heartbroken Emperors, Emperor Fae remains mostly unmoved.

"Eh. Life sucks, and then you die. Guess this is it for us demons. If we're lucky, we'll get to be live on as one of Mephisto's crazy alter egos."

Nobody responds to her words. She glances around the darkened Warpgate room in this remote corner of the Labyrinth and frowns.

"Huh." Fae mutters. "Strange. Feels like we're missing someone."

Emperor Hamir, standing not far away, shrugs. "If we forgot someone, then they're probably not important."

"Yeah, you're right." Fae nods.

* * *

Meanwhile, back at the Stitched Wasteland.

"Yaaawn! Oh man, that was a good nap. Huh? Where'd everyone go? Hello?"

Bael stands up, having finally awoken after being nearly knocked unconscious earlier by Gressil's punch.

In truth, he found the feeling of falling into a coma to be quite pleasant, so he ended up taking a nap while everyone else fought for their lives.

As Bael stands up, he realizes he can't quite remember what he was doing before he took a power-nap.

"Huh... let's see... I was gonna... eat something... right? Eat something. Mmm. I could go for some cake."

Bael saunters down the halls inside Glinch's complex. He finds a few other Emperors who actually were knocked unconscious, but they don't wake up when he taps them.

"Damn. Must have been a heck of a party." Bael mumbles. "Everyone's got a hangover! Bahaha!"

Inside his Matriarch Armor, Ose stirs.

[Bael! You're finally awake! You imbecile, I've been shouting at you for almost two hours!!]

Bael nods. "Ah, that's why my nap was so annoying. See, I dreamed there was a puppy I was gonna pet, but then it started talkin' bout science stuff, and it was all like 'bla-bla-bla.' Come to think of it, the puppy sounded a lot like you..."

[Pull your head out of your ass and listen!] Ose growls. [Mephisto ascended. He's a Demon Deity now!]

"Oh, word?" Bael says, as he finds the ramp leading up and out of Glinch's laboratory. "What's a Demon Deetey?"

[It's an Emperor. But stronger.] Ose says, feeling deflated. [The other Emperors ran away. They probably made it back inside the Labyrinth while we were stuck here. Mephisto is going to return soon, so you need to flee while you still can!]

Bael yawns. He waves his hand lazily. "Ehhh... nah, that sounds like a total drag. I'll just sit here and wait for Mephisto to come back. He can gimme a lift with his fancy new powers."

[Bael, he's going to KILL you!]

"Whaaat? Don't be silly. Me and Mephy go way back. We're cool."

Bael plops down on a rock, tuning Ose out as she screams and berates him to hurry up and move his fat ass.

"Mmm... guess the sun went down while I was asleep." Bael mutters to himself, looking up at the sky. "Hehe. The stars are so pretty."

On this night, one of those stars seems especially bright compared to the others...

Part 499: Summoning The Devil

On the world of Numaria, Demon Deity Crow battles for her life against the dragon-shaped Mephisto, who revels in the fear lurking within her eyes. Mephisto trades blows with Crow, acting in a berserk manner where he slaps and punches her around while not even bothering to block Crow's strongest attacks.

It doesn't matter to him!

No matter how much strength Crow puts behind her fists, she can't hurt Mephisto in any way, shape, or form.

Even if she batters him hard enough to send him crashing into a mountain, he hops right back up and charges back at her, landing a hit that hurts her far more than it does him.

While Crow may have once felt as if she were invincible, the truth is that her feathers might be as hard as demonstone, but they are incomparable to Mephisto's body made out of Living Moldanium; the bones of a dragon.

Beneath her feathers, her skin begins to bruise and tear, causing blood to flow freely. Some of Mephisto's punches land on her chest, causing her heart to beat erratically, or her lungs to catch, making her cough up blood.

"Kah, kah!" Crow wheezes, one of her eyes swollen shut. "Muh-Mephisto! Stop this! Why are you trying to kill all of the demons?! We're your kin!"

Mephisto pauses his onslaught to grin toothily at the visibly weakened Crow. Already, he can sense that the powerup she received earlier has begun to lose its efficacy. It won't be long before she reverts to the level of a top-grade Emperor, at which point she won't be able to maintain even a paltry resistance against him.

"You're not ssso bright, Crow." Mephisto chuckles, holding back from attacking her again. "We've sssolved all the problemsss plaguing demon sssoccciety. Don't you sssee? We need the demonsss to evolve. Merging with usss isss the perfect sssolution."

"What? Merging with you?" Crow asks bewildered. "What are you talking about?"

"Mephisssto, Zamiel, Lupusss, and Yama. Currently we posssesss the sssoulsss of many Emperorsss. All of usss pilot thisss body asss a sssingle entity."

Mephisto taps the side of his head.

"Onccce we devour you, you will join usss. You will join your comrade, Duke Raven, asss part of our perfection."

Crow's eyes turn hateful. Raven was a good friend of hers, and the mention of her name sours Crow's mood even further. Having heard from the humans about Raven's appearance in Mephisto's army, she already knows Raven must have died, but to end up inside Mephisto? That thought churns Crow's stomach.

"You devoured other Emperors too." Crow points out. "Earlier, you ate Emperors Zagan and Moris. But you didn't mention their names. What happened to them?"

"Well..." Mephisto says slowly. "Thossse who were not part of our founding ritual do not dessserve the ssstatusss of those who were. Don't you agree? We will take their powersss, but they will not have a sssay in how we run thisss body."

"So you're going to EAT other demons and take their powers for yourself?" Crow exclaims. "You're even worse than Satan was!"

"The demon ssspecccciesss isss dying." Mephisto says. "Rather than trillionsss of ussselesss maggotsss, thisss body represssentsss the future of our ssspecccciesss. Not many demonsss, not demonkind, but one Demon, singular... USSS!"

"You're mad." Crow hisses. "You're just chasing your ego, you devil-damned tyrant!"

Mephisto shrugs. "And what if we are? Do you think you can ssstop usss? The other Emperorsss... they think they essscaped usss. But we have within our bonesss the powersss of numerousss Warpersss. We can enter the Labyrinth with eassse. They've only delayed the inevitable."

Crow's expression sinks. She realizes Mephisto is right.

The other Emperors didn't escape. They only managed to hide from their hunter for a short time.

But soon, he will pursue them, once he's taken care of Crow, and he will devour their bodies and souls.

Can the Wordsmiths stop him?

Considering his indestructible bones and his ascended status... maybe not.

Perhaps not even the Psions can hurt him.

Crow's expression ultimately turns to despair. She has no concept of Low or High Cosmics, and only feels that Mephisto is so powerful nothing can defeat him now.

She turns to run away, hoping that she can at least get some distance from him, or maybe find a way to escape, but she knows in her heart the effort is useless. Hardly has she started to make her mad dash before Mephisto jumps out of the darkness in front of her and sends a fist flying at her face.

Crow tries to avoid the hit but fails. Mephisto batters her into the ground, then conjures dozens of shadow tendrils to leap out of the soil and bind her limbs. He pounces on Crow and starts bashing her head from side to side, laughing madly as he revels in dominating her with his dragonbone body.

"Kekeke! Sssuffer and dessspair! Thisss Deity will never lossse again!"

It doesn't take long before Crow's strength runs out. Mephisto beats the tar out of her, only slowing down and finally stopping when her Demon Deity transformation runs its course. Her figure sags helplessly within Mephisto's shadow bindings.

Finally satisfied, Mephisto grabs her by the neck as if she were a chicken. He motions with his free hand, reverting his figure back to his original body to no longer maintain the appearance of a mini-dragon.

Mephisto doesn't immediately kill and devour Crow. Instead, he takes to the sky and levitates through the air using only his cosmic energy. He flies back to the Stitched Wasteland and lands nearby the entrance to Glinch's laboratory.

"Ksss. GLINCH! Come out. I've brought the sssubject you wanted."

Bound and helpless, Crow can only let out a muffled cry as Mephisto throws her to the cracked, blackened dirt, where she lands face-first with a thud. She slumps to the ground, unable to move due to the agony wracking her body.

Glinch emerges from his laboratory. His disgusting, misshapen figure appears quite hideous, even by Mephisto's standards. He walks up to Crow and grabs her face with one of his arms, then smiles.

"Good. She even has a bit of remnant cosmic energy left in her. She'll do. But don't forget the rest of what you promised! You'd better deliver it soon!"

Mephisto grimaces. "Of courssse. I will hold to my word."

He maintains a polite expression before Glinch, but in his heart he feels quite angered.

Hahaha! Lupus laughs, her soul communicating with the others inside Mephisto's body. The almighty, all-powerful Mephisto can't raise a hand against the weak little Glinch! You're stuck doing his chores! It would be funnier if I weren't caught up with the rest of you morons too.

Yama also laughs. You betrayed us, Mephisto, but now you're little more than a lapdog for a mere Emperor.

QUIET! Mephisto shouts into his mind. I only have to do asss Glinch sssaysss for one thousssand yearsss. Then I'll be free to do asss I pleassse. Compared to my immortal life, it isss but a blink of an eye.

If you think it'll be that easy, boss, you've got another thing coming. Zamiel snarks. Even if you do ride shit out, the Death Promise says you can't hurt him for the rest of eternity. So he can humiliate you all he wants for the next thousand years and you'll never be able to get back at him, not even once you're free.

A fitting fate for a vile little snake. Lupus snaps.

Mephisto looks at Glinch silently, feeling resentment within his bones.

The Death Promise he signed, much like the one Zamiel signed with Blinker, ensures he can never go against Glinch in any meaningful way!

But unlike the relatively 'equal' Death Promise Blinker used, Mephisto's is much more one-sided and unfair to him.

In exchange for Glinch helping him reach the rank of Demon Deity, Mephisto also has to do anything Glinch commands for the next thousand years, aside from self-harm. And even after those thousand years, he can never raise a finger to hurt Glinch in any way, shape, or form. The contract's terms were very careful in this regard.

Despite his resentment, Mephisto doesn't mind too much.

If Glinch doesn't give him any orders, he can still act autonomously. He can do as he pleases in his 'free time.' He can wield his power as he likes.

Kekeke. Mephisto chuckles internally, feeling a little better about his fate. A thousssand yearsss of ssservitude in exchange for power I'd never have attained myssself. It'sss not a bad deal at all. Now, I've become invincible.

Lupus's smile fades away.

Indeed, Mephisto has attained a body the gods themselves couldn't hurt.

Who cares if he has to wallow around for a thousand years? It won't affect his overall ambitions. And he'll most certainly come after the Seven Hells in short order.

There is only one thing we do not understand... Yama murmurs. Why did Glinch make that one odd request of you? Doesn't he know he can just...?

Mephisto internally rolls his eyes. Glinch is an aberrant. Do not try to underssstand hisss thoughtsss usssing common logic.

After Glinch investigates Crow's condition, he shakes his head and clicks his tongue.

"Oh, how annoying. All of my chimera have been destroyed. I'll have to make more soon. But Crow's body will make a good vessel for my new tests! Hehehe."

One of his arms points into the interior of his complex.

"There are a couple unconscious Emperors inside. You can eat those."

Mephisto's eyes light up. "Oh? You would give them to usss for free? You're more generousss than we expected."

"Bah!" Glinch grumbles, waving seven of his hands. "They're useless to me. They only became Emperors through my pills. Their bodies are too polluted with Exobeast Essence. When you find and capture the rest of the Emperors, just bring me the purebloods. You can eat all the Tainted Emperors you want."

Mephisto frowns. "Will they harm usss?"

"No, no, it's nothing like that." Glinch replies, rolling his eyes. "They're as strong as normal Emperors, but my goal is to mass-produce Deities. I need pure subjects for my research. I can't be using exobeast slop or it'll ruin all my equipment!"

Seeing Mephisto's confused expression, Glinch rolls his eyes yet again. "Never mind! Why am I trying to explain my genius to an ego-driven, simple-brained retard like you?! Just eat the tainted ones down below and get them out of my sight! I can't stand them stinking up my lab!"

Mephisto glares at Glinch, annoyed by his insults. But he can't hurt Glinch, so the point is moot.

"Ksss. Fine."

He starts to take a step toward the lab, but as he does, a voice calls out from the distance.

"Hey you! Bub! What the hell do ya think you're doin'?!"

Mephisto blinks twice. He turns around to see none other than Bael walking out from behind a mound of Glinch's dead chimera. Their bodies just happened to land in a pile big enough to obscure Bael's sitting form. Somehow, Mephisto missed him when he landed.

Mephisto's face turns to an expression of delight.

"Ahh! Bael! Onccce, we were incapable of controlling your sssoul because we were only a Duke. But now that we are a Deity, the matter will be asss easssy asss pie! Kekeke! You ssshould have ssstayed hidden from usss..."

Mephisto immediately changes course and starts flying toward Bael, who plants his feet in place and gazes defiantly at Mephisto.

"You little fucker." Bael says. "Eatin' my friends. Killin' my friends. Today, you done screwed up."

Bael waves his hand, conjuring the mighty Big Bonk into his grasp. The ten-ton flail materializes in midair and falls to the ground, its spiked head and chains attached to the handle in Bael's grasp.

Underneath his helmet, Bael smiles. He starts rapidly spinning the flail around himself as Mephisto flies toward him, then he lets it loose with a mighty toss.

WHOOSH!

The flail's chain extends magically as it races straight toward Mephisto's incoming face!

* * *

Plap.

The flail ineffectively smacks against Mephisto, deals no damage, and flops to the ground.

Mephisto pauses for a moment and laughs.

"Kekekeke! Wasss that all?!"

Bael's smile vanishes.

"Uh. Oh, shit. Uh. I didn't think... I mean... damn bro, you been eating your veggies?"

Mephisto grins from one ear to the other. "Actually, we prefer the tassste of EMPERORS now! Kekeke!"

He rushes toward Bael and closes the gap in an instant. He lifts his hand overhead and sends a slap at the Master of Mjölnir.

WHAP!

With just one move, Mephisto strikes Bael so hard that Bael loses his grip on Big Bonk and goes flying! He slams into the dirt and bounces off the ground ten times as his body careens away.

Bael bounces and flops across ten miles of the Stitched Wasteland before striking a boulder and coming to an abrupt stop.

CRASH!

"Aaahh!"

Bael cries out in pain, his head dizzy and his brain foggy. Luckily, he managed to survive that attack, but any casual observer would easily see Mephisto had no intent to kill him in the first place.

Mephisto flies over and stops twenty feet from Bael's collapsed figure.

"How sssad. Onccce the greatessst Duke in all the Hells, a powerhoussse who could put the fear of God into the Emperorsss. Now you're trapped inssside a ussselessss body. That armor meansss nothing to a Deity like me, a being with a body forged in dragonbone and the flamesss of a dying ssstar."

Bael shakily pulls himself to his feet. He wobbles visibly, clearly suffering from a concussion. Luckily he doesn't have much going on inside his head, so the damage is minimal.

"Ugh... damn... you PRICK! That hurt! How could you pick on a pretty gal like me, huh?!"

Mephisto sneers. "That body of yoursss... it doesss indeed tantalize usss. The Yama inssside usss yearnsss to mold Ossse'sss figure into a ssservant of ssshadow. We ssshall acquiesssce."

Bael shakes off his disorientation. He looks up defiantly once again at Mephisto, hovering off the ground in his usual superior manner.

"Man! You think you're big shit? Nah! I know you ain't nothing compared to the First Emperor. And I ain't talkin' about that lil' chode slinkin' around these days. I mean the REAL first Emperor. Satan would kick your ass in a heartbeat!"

"Sssatan wasss merely an Emperor. We are a Deity. He could never harm usss." Mephisto states matter-of-factly.

"Oh, we'll see about that!" Bael says, as he turns his eyes to look up at the night sky.

Like before, he sees one star that seems especially bright compared to the others.

"Hey, Satan! The hell are you doin' sittin' on your ass? Get down here and show Mephisto who's the real OG!"

Mephisto's face suddenly become visibly more anxious.

Wait. Yama thinks. Would the soul contract Satan placed on us still be effective?!

Who cares? Zamiel replies. I'd like to see how badly we trash that old bag of bones. Me and Satan had some beef back in the day.

I say we let Bael summon Satan. Lupus adds. It'll be funny if he manages to break this body like a twig.

Mephisto shrugs internally. Sssatan never placcced a proper contract on me, and I am the primary sssoul. I have nothing to fear. Even better, I can finally take control of all of Sssatan'sss awesssome powersss for myssself! Then I'll truly become unssstoppable!

In the end, Yama's fears get vetoed by the other three souls. As the three controllers of the Myriad Deity, these four can choose what actions to take or not to take, though the votes of the lesser three former Emperors are only about as strong as Mephisto's vote. If all three vote against him, none can say who would win in that moment.

Ultimately, Mephisto stands back and watches as Bael yells at the sky, trying to summon Satan once again.

"Come on, boss!" Bael shouts. "We need you to teach this punk a lesson! Get down here!"

Suddenly, the sky begins to brighten. A faint golden light coalesces in the upper atmosphere, drawing Mephisto's attention.

Hm? Is that... Bael's new power? Lupus asks.

Having only heard secondhand from Yama what Bael can apparently do, Mephisto, Zamiel, and Lupus are all in the dark about the exact mechanics behind Bael's seemingly inexplicable ability to conjure demons from the Great Beyond.

Satan died six years ago. Not only did his body crumble to dust, but his soul did as well.

Therefore, any person in the know would conclude that either his soul entered the Great Beyond, or it completely ceased to exist.

Yet, despite these facts, Bael somehow conjured Satan to beat ten flavors of shit out of Yama, scaring the pants off the Shadow Emperor.

As the sky begins to change, Yama frowns.

This energy... it's strange... it doesn't feel demonic. If anything, it feels...

Abruptly, a violent thunderous BOOM explodes in the upper atmosphere.

A beam of light plummets down at a speed too fast for a human's eyes to follow.

Mephisto's heart skips a beat as that beam of light races toward a spot directly between himself and Bael.

BOOOOOM!!

The Stitched Wasteland explodes as if a hundred tons of TNT detonated all at once!

Bael flies backward, and Mephisto gets thrown away.

Mephisto easily stabilizes himself and snaps a look at the creature that has just arrived.

But when he does, his bones lock up in place.

A look of pure terror spreads across his face.

"No... NO... NO!!" Mephisto screams. "B-Bael! What- WHO have you summoned?! That'sss not a demon... that'sss... THAT'SSS...!!"

The winged figure stands up, her long, glowing white hair billowing in the night breeze. Her aged and wizened eyes sweep the landscape.

"Hm? Whereabouts am I?"

On the world of Volgarius, Hope Hiro continues to sit and talk with First Founder Unarin.

"Why are there no other 9th-Level Psions?" Hope asks. "Can't you raise more?"

Unarin immediately shakes his head. He takes a sip of his drink, a delicious sparkling beverage procured from the world of fairies.

"Oh, Hope. We're not good enough friends for me to answer that. But rest assured, there's a good reason for why Dosena stands alone."

"From what I've learned, there used to be half a dozen other 9th Level Psions." Hope points out. "Did Dosena... kill them?"

Unarin's eyes become sharper.

"You've learned more than I expected, Wordsmith."

But he relaxes his gaze.

"I suppose if you know that much, it won't hurt to tell you. Indeed, we once had a handful of protectors for our Empire. But that was only until we created the Sentinels. The last Great War was more brutal than all the ones before, combined. Ninety-five percent of all Volgrim were killed in that war, and that includes the 9th Level Psions."

He pauses.

"We could have raised more Psions in the aftermath of that war. But Dosena had a different idea. Instead, she decided to 'raise the standard' for what should be expected from our mightiest Psions. Let's just say... in the past, it used to be much easier to climb the ranks, but she made it much harder."

Hope glances around the room, as if looking for Dosena's figure. "Sounds like she's scared of competition."

"On the contrary." Unarin says softly. "Dosena is a killing machine. She was the strongest of all the Psions. She has also ascended to the 9th Level... twice."

"Huh?" Hope grunts, blinking in confusion. "Wait, what do you mean? She stopped being a 9th-Level Psion? She had to regrow her Psionic Seed?"

"I've said enough on that matter." Unarin says, cutting off any further chance of feeding Hope more information. "Just rest assured. Dosena would love nothing more than to have an Empire filled with 9th Level Psions. But if we used the old ways, it would result in yet another series of Great Wars. Better to proceed slowly and stably than to place our bets on unfettered, random acts of violen-"

Suddenly, in the middle of Unarin's sentence...

Every light in the Founder's Tower turns off!

Hope's heart metaphorically leaps out of his chest. The sudden plunge into darkness catches him completely off-guard.

But an instant later, the lights turn back on.

There's only one difference.

They've become blood-red.

A deafening alarm begins to blare. The Founder's Thumb shudders as a strange sensation of gravity grabs hold of Hope and presses him against his chair. The tower begins descending down into the planet's bowels, sealing itself off from the surface so as to protect the lives of its inhabitants.

"What the fuck?!" Hope blurts out, looking at Unarin with suspicion.

But Unarin's expression gives Hope another shock.

The First Founder's pupils have shrunken to pinpricks. He looks ahead blankly, as a visible expression of fear appears on his face.

Before Hope can ask what the hell is going on, Dosena's voice telepathically communicates to every remaining individual on planet Volgarius.

[APEX COSMIC DETECTED.]

Unarin jumps out of his chair, his face slick with sweat. He quickly runs away from the table, no longer paying the slightest attention to Hope's presence.

He grabs a datapad off a nearby desk and begins tapping on it furiously. Then he holds it up to his face to broadcast a message across every star-system in the Volgrim Empire.

"Attention, all Volgrim citizens! An Apex Cosmic has been detected inside the Milky Way's barrier. This is a Founder Level emergency. By decree of myself, First Founder Unarin, I am placing every world under martial law. All citizens must report to their battle stations. Begin preparations to evacuate your worlds when I give the command. Founder Dosena has left Volgarius to intercept the threat!"

Hope's heart turns to ice. He stares at Unarin's back, uncomprehending. The uncontrolled terror on Unarin's usually-reserved face scares him even more than the First Founder's words!

Before he can ask any questions, Unarin pivots on his heel to look at Hope. The expression in his eyes has become a little more controlled, but he still appears visibly terrified.

"Return to Tarus II at once. Use your Wordsmithing. Begin placing your people on ark ships. If you don't have any, conjure them. Do whatever you can to save as many lives as you can. If Dosena falls to the Apex Cosmic, we will have to flee the galaxy before it kills us all. If you can't flee, then hide yourself as deeply as you can."

Hope's hands begin to shake. "What... what is an Apex Cosmic, Unarin? What is it? Something stronger than Dosena?!"

"Far stronger." Unarin says quietly, his expression becoming more controlled as he manages to push his fear down. "It means... the end of our petty existences."

On planet Earth, deep beneath its crust, Marie Becker frowns as she receives the Volgrim's emergency broadcast.

"An Apex Cosmic? That can't be right. The Akashic Barrier is still intact. How could one step foot inside our voidspace?"

She fidgets with her fingers, but does not appear to be as terrified as Unarin was. She remains calm and in control of her emotions thanks to her cybernetic mind and body.

"Has the Akashic Game begun early?"

Emperor Gressil roams around the world of Tarus II as usual. He keeps an eye on the humans, watching from afar through his invisible body.

He also frowns and looks up at the sky.

"What's this? An anomaly. Haha. Seems something interesting is about to happen."

He rubs his chin thoughtfully.

"Mephisto. You really screwed up this time. Looks like your Luck has become quite foul."

On the world of Grimvolas, the Matriarch of Dolgrimites hastily summons a meeting of her elites.

"I have received a communication from Volgarius. An Apex Cosmic has arrived inside the Milky Way."

Unlike Unarin, the Matriarch appears completely unbothered. Her subordinates, including Fifth Founder Cinculu, also remain calm.

"An Apex Cosmic. Grrrgh. He cannot harm our god." Cinculu growls confidently.

"Dolgris guides us." One of the other Dolgrimite elites says. "Dolgris protects us."

"Dolgris is not yet strong enough to emerge. He is still injured." The Matriarch says. "But he has spoken of a new development. Emperor Mephisto has arisen using a most unusual method. Dolgris greatly desires the bones Mephisto used to step into the realm of Lowest Cosmic."

"Are we able to recover those bones for our god?" Cinculu asks.

"We still lack the strength." The Matriarch replies. "But worry not. Mephisto will fall into our god's claws eventually. And when he does... Dolgris will be reborn anew!"

"All praise Dolgris!" The elites chant.

"Dolgris guides us to greatness!"

On the world of Tarus II, Archangels Uriel, Michael, Gabriel, and Raphael all stare up at the sky, gazing at a distant point imperceptible to our eyes.

Michael's emotions are the most mixed. "Our sister... how hath she returned?"

"Verily, this art no coincidence." Raphael says calmly. "First, Mephisto arose to the rank of Cosmic. Then Crow. And now..."

"Should we go there?" Uriel asks. "Seeing our sister again would be..."

"I fear we would disappoint her." Gabriel rumbles with his deep voice. "Whence she hath wiped out the demons, she shalt come to us afterward. We shalt reunite then."

Raphael sighs. "But will she call herself friend or foe, I wonder?"

Part 500: APEX COSMIC

Bael's mind momentarily spins. The impact of his summoning sent him flying away, so he recovers with a complete lack of elegance and grace. He yanks himself back to his feet and stumbles around woozily, trying not to throw up inside his helmet.

He fails.

Bael opens up the Matriarch Armor's helmet and wretches all over the ground, making an awful mess at his feet. After blinking his eyes, he lifts his head and blinks in surprise.

Not far away, an elderly woman stands with her back to him, her white wings revealing her clear angelic heritage. She wears a set of plain white robes, simple and basic with no added frills or ornaments. Her body glows with incredible power, but Bael is too spiritually stupid and dull to notice this fact.

The woman slowly looks around, paying no attention to the demon standing behind her. She appears to be in a daze, occasionally looking up at the sky, back at the planet around her, and then up into the sky again.

"...so strange. Whereabouts am I? The last thing I remember... the last thing..."

Bael licks the inside of his mouth. He curls up his lips due to the aftertaste of puke, but forces himself to smile.

"Grandma? Is that you? Hey, grandma!"

The angel seemingly doesn't appear to notice Bael's words, neither does she pay the slightest attention to Mephisto, who remains frozen in place before her, not daring to move a muscle. She simply continues muttering to herself, clearly confused about a great many things.

"Grandma!" Bael says, reaching out to touch her shoulder. "Grandma Camael! Helloooo!"

Just as Bael is about to touch the angel, she abruptly spins around to face him. But the face he sees, while certainly elderly, is not the one he expected.

A mature Archangel, visibly older than most, but slightly younger than Camael as far as looks go, gazes at Bael in surprise. Her eyes possess a deep wisdom, and the circlet around her forehead makes her appear almost like a princess of sorts. She even wears a pair of ruby-red earrings made of some unknown exotic mineral.

"What didst thou refer to me as?" The angel asks, frowning. "Camael? Sister Camael?"

"Oh! Shucks. Sorry, miss." Bael says, feeling awkward. "I, uh, saw ya from behind, so I kinda assumed you were Grandma."

The angel blinks. No hostility resides in her eyes, and she instead examines Bael with a bit of curiosity, acting as if he were some odd specimen placed inside a museum.

"Art thou referring to my eldest sister Camael? The Archangel of Divination?" The woman asks.

"Yeah. But I don't know you." Bael says. "What's your name, ma'am?"

The woman doesn't answer him. Instead, she looks up at the sky, once again falling into a daze.

"The last thing I remember... I was fighting... a dragon... and then... and then!"

She frowns, pauses, and mutters something under her breath Bael can't quite make out.

"...but how did I arrive here? And why can I not sense any of my siblings?"

She returns her attention to Bael.

"Little girl. What manner of creature art thou?"

"Oh, I'm a demon." Bael says. "Demon Emperor, to be specific."

The woman doesn't register the name in her memories. She cocks her head and frowns.

"Dost thou hail from an adjacent galaxy? Perhaps Andromeda?"

Bael shrugs. "Nope. Just the Silky Bay."

Inside Bael's helmet, Emperor Ose remains completely silent, terrified out of her wits by the immense danger radiating from the angel in front of her. Unlike Bael, she can fully sense every iota of power this angel possesses, and then some. She has never in all her years encountered a being as frightening as this woman, and that includes Second Founder Dosena herself.

The only good news that Ose can use to comfort herself is that Bael is maintaining an unfazed facade in front of this woman, assuredly due to his immense stupidity and lack of magical talent. Thanks to his mighty soul, Ose's remnant sliver remains shielded, like a lightbulb in front of a star, so the Archangel can't sense her. And as far as Bael is concerned, she might as well be any common angel from the Energy Wars, rather than a monster more powerful than all of the Archangels combined.

Ose listens to the conversation.

She rapidly and strategically thinks about every clue she can infer regarding this woman's heritage.

I know the names of all seven Archangels. Was there another I've not heard of? Ose wonders. Impossible. After the Energy Wars, I made sure to read and scour every record we could obtain from Heaven. No other Archangels were known to us!

But just as Ose is about to mentally scratch that thought away, her heart freezes to ice.

She suddenly pieces together an important clue.

Wait. This woman fought... a dragon? But that would mean... if the records we've recovered are correct, the Dragon Wars came well before the angels relocated on Earth, and even before the Titan Wars. It was an era so ancient, no written record remains!

Her very soul starts to sweat as she comes to a conclusion.

This woman must be an Archangel from that ancient time! It's the only explanation! I have to make sure Bael doesn't screw up and blabber something that'll get us both killed!

The angel rubs her chin. "How dost thou knoweth my sister Camael? Is she alive? Is she well? Why can I not sense her presence?"

Bael starts to open his mouth, but pauses when Ose screams into his mind.

[BAEL. Wait! Don't speak just yet. Pause for a moment and rub your chin. Try to look thoughtful.]

Normally Bael would answer with some sass, but he senses the urgency in Ose's voice, so he follows her order. He does a big frowning motion and then looks away, trying to act as if he's thinking.

It comes off as making him look constipated more than anything. He's not a good actor, and he certainly doesn't know what it even means to 'look thoughtful', but god damn if he doesn't try his best.

[Listen, Bael.] Ose says quickly, speaking at the speed of thought. [This Archangel is dangerous. She's extremely powerful. She could kill you with a twist of her wrist. We don't want to piss her off. Tell her this:]

Ose quickly gives Bael a simple order, making him nod along to her words, but he doesn't say anything out loud.

"Hmm. Uhh, let's see. Right, so, Grandma Camael. You wanna see her huh?"

The angel woman immediately nods. "Yes! And all the rest of my kin. Where art they? Art they in hiding?"

Bael shakes his head slowly, putting on a mock look of dismay.

"Well, uh. It's nothin' like that, ma'am. It's just... you know the uh, the dragons?"

The angel's eyes flare with visible hatred. "The dragons. Of course I know about them."

"Well, there was this whole war, ya see, and things got a little dicey..."

Bael begins regaling the angel with a tale filled with lies and misinterpretations, slowly telling her everything Ose tells him to say, while trying to focus so he doesn't screw up Ose's orders.

"And then when the war ended, there uh... there weren't many angels 'n dragons left. So the Titans kinda killed 'em all."

"The Titans did?" The woman asks. "Those BASTARDS! Servants of Uzziel! I should have known they woulds't turn against my kin! And what of the Seraphs? What fate dids't they meet?"

While she and Bael talk, behind the angel, Mephisto slowly, almost imperceptibly, begins to lower his body and slink away. Just by being in the woman's presence, he feels as small as an ant, so weak that he even fears his supposedly invincible bones won't be able to save him if she moves to attack.

So he slowly, carefully, deliberately moves backward.

Luckily for Mephisto, the angel doesn't even register his 'incredible cosmic power' at all. Perhaps in her eyes, the difference between a magic-less Bael and a bottom-tier Cosmic like Mephisto might as well not even be worth differentiating.

"To think the angels would be all but dead now, living only as faint wisps of souls." The woman says, her countenance becoming slightly dimmer. "It appears I've somehow stepped into a dystopian future era. I know not the reason how or the mechanism why, but I must have come here for a reason."

Bael pauses for a moment to listen to Ose's next order. He quickly puts on a smile.

"Hey now, don't be all sad, grandma! There's still angels around and stuff. We demons are workin' real hard to try and help the ones still alive. The angels made us to serve 'em! It's kinda our job!"

She smiles weakly, clearly not feeling too good about Bael's 'encouragement.'

"Well. It is good to see that some Sentients still live to carry our torch. Whereabouts is this world, I wonder?"

"Oh, this place is Numaria." Bael says. "Sorry it looks like a dump. There was a BIG battle today. Yeah, this real bad demon, Mephisto, he was beating up all my friends a bit ago. That's why I summoned ya. I was hoping you could help me fight him. He's too strong for me to fight. I'm so weak now..."

The angel frowns. She looks around once again, this time taking special note of the recently shattered mountains, the flattened forests, and the general state of the planet.

Then she turns her attention to a life force not far in the distance, barely a stone's throw from her current position. She notices a half-skeletal figure coated in rotting flesh who appears to be trying to slink away from her, but when her gaze meets the skeleton's, he freezes like a deer in the headlights.

"Hmm? What in the damnation is that creature?" The angel asks, curling her lips up in disgust. "And why is its soul energy in such disarray?! How have the galaxy's standards fallen so low after my people's fall?"

Ose quickly transmits a message to Bael. He nods, then crosses his arms.

"Oh, that's Mephisto. He's the bad guy I was tellin' ya about. He ate a bunch of my friends. Thinks he's tough shit. Mind helpin' a sister out?"

The angel narrows her eyes.

"Where dost thou think thou art slinking away to, coward? Come here and stand before this ancient one. I intendeth to judge thy sins."

Mephisto's pupils shrink to pinpricks.

Without warning, he abruptly turns tail and races away!

Bael's eyes widen as he sees Mephisto practically shit his pants as he beats the hastiest of retreats.

"Oh no! He's gettin' away!"

But the angel woman merely looks at Mephisto's flight with disinterest.

"With that speed? Nay. The creature shalt not travel far."

She returns her attention to Bael, not giving half a damn about Mephisto's rapid departure. It's as if she doesn't fear he'll escape her grasp no matter how far he runs.

"The demons, thou art allies of the angels?" The woman asks. "What about that corpse-like creature?"

Bael listens to Ose's words before replying.

"Well, most demons are good guys." Bael lies shamelessly, more than happy to twist the truth if Ose tells him to. "We were friends with the angels during the Energy Wars. But there are bad demons out there. Mephisto's one of 'em."

The angel nods sympathetically. "Of course. Even among my people, there were vile individuals. T'would be unbecoming to judge an entire species based on a minority of its worst elements. But I am quite interested in how the Demons came to be. Thy red skin, thy weak magical capabilities, and thy formidable soul! Tis' quite a contrast. In fact, I've not seen a soul as mighty as thine outside that of my brother Raphael. Art all demons like thee?"

"Nah, I'm kind of a big deal." Bael immediately brags. "Yeah, I'm one of the stronger ones. Mephisto's tougher than me now, but he did cheat after all."

The woman blinks. "He cheated?"

"Yup. See, he had this corpse of a dragon, and he did some mumbo jumbo stuff to merge a bunch of demon souls together. So he's basically invinci- ULP!"

Bael suddenly swallows his words as the angel abruptly radiates an aura of violent hostility.

"WHAT." She says, grinding out every syllable through clenched teeth. "THAT BASTARD. MERGED. WITH A DRAGON?!"

Bael maybe slightly pees himself when he senses the rage behind her words. Even a spiritually dull nimrod like him can tell she's about to blow her stack.

"Y-yeah!" Bael cries. "It's j-just Mephisto though, ma'am! Just Mephisto! The rest of us demons don't do stuff like that!"

She nods aggressively. Her pupils dilate and begin to glow as she turns her head in the direction Mephisto fled.

"No dragon mayeth remain among the living." The angel says, with an intensity that chills Ose and Bael both to their cores. "They killed my people. If I have come to this era for any reason, tis' for the purpose of SLAYING that progeny of the Winged Serpents."

Bael doesn't get a chance to respond.

Before he can say a word, the woman stomps her feet against the ground, causing the entirety of Numaria to rumble. She launches herself forward like a missile, blasting after Mephisto with a speed that makes her instantly vanish into the horizon.

For a few seconds afterward, Bael remains frozen in place. Then, his idiocy kicks back in and he wipes his forehead.

"...Whew! Glad she's pissed at Mephy and not me!"

[We're lucky.] Ose says quietly. [That woman is most assuredly an ancient Archangel. Her power is too frightening. Mephisto might possess dragon bones, but he's no True Dragon. She'll rip him apart with ease.]

"At least she's on our side!" Bael chuckles nervously.

* * *

Meanwhile, the angel races after Mephisto at twenty times the speed of sound. The shockwave from her flight across Numaria's skies leaves earsplitting sonic booms in her wake, causing the debris scattered across the planet to shake and rattle.

Up ahead, Mephisto senses the chasing figure pursuing him. He realizes with a fright that not even a two-minute headstart will allow him to keep away from her. She is MUCH faster than the Myriad Deity, and she will catch up to him in less than a minute.

"Dammit, dammit!" Mephisto cries. "Bael, you bassstard!! Ah, that'sss right, I'll have to jussst..."

Mephisto continues fleeing, but he hastily conjures magical signs with his hands. He summons the power of a Warper, then opens a portal to a world ten thousand lightyears toward the Southern Quadrant of the Milky Way.

Mephisto leaps through the portal, then hurriedly closes it.

After arriving, he opens another portal, this time to a world on the eastern side of the galaxy, thirty thousand lightyears away. He jumps through it and seals it shut.

Finally, he breathes a sigh of relief, paying little attention to the rocky world he's arrived on that appears to be covered in moss and primitive plant-life. It is but a minor world ruled by demonkind, after all.

"E-essscaped..." Mephisto hisses, trembling in fear. "Ssso powerful... who the devil ISSS that Archangel?! Why have we never heard of her before?!"

The souls inside of him have a quick but heated debate. In the face of this Cosmic threat, even Lupus can't help but indulge her curiosity.

[She must be from an era before the angels landed on Earth.] Lupus says thoughtfully. [Angels leak mana over time. That means the older they are, the more powerful they must be.]

Zamiel frowns. [Yeah, I think you're onto something. She's so powerful that I can even sense her from here. She also said she fought dragons. Isn't that a bit ridiculous?]

Yama grimaces. [Our body is formidable, but in the end it is merely made of a dragon's corpse. We are not nearly as strong as Leviathan himself was.]

[How did Bael sssummon sssuch a powerful angel?] Mephisto asks. [You sssaid he could only sssummon demonsss!]

Yama throws his shadowy hands up uselessly. [We have no idea. Perhaps his ability is more frightening than we expected.]

Mephisto licks his lips hungrily. [If we could capture Bael'sss sssoul, we could harnesss that power for ourssselvesss. Imagine how ssstrong our ssstrength would become! We could sssummon primordial monsssterssss to asssissst usss!]

[Or we could summon another Archangel to beat the shit out of us.] Lupus says blandly. [Maybe even the same one chasing us now.]

That stifles Mephisto's greed, if only by a little.

[True. Hmm, we will have to consssider the-]

Suddenly, Mephisto freezes. A cold chill washes over his body. He spins around to look at the empty space behind himself, and what he sees scares every semblance of superiority out of his bones.

There, in the open air above the muddy plant-life on this remote world, an invisible crack tears across the Void. The place where Mephisto stepped through a portal begins to widen as the female Archangel uses her bare hands to re-open the portal Mephisto thought he closed.

Eyes filled with bloodlust peer through the gap as the angel sets her sights on the boned monster in front of her.

"HEH HEH." She laughs in a manner most frightening. "DIDS'T THOU THINKETH THOU ESCAPED THIS ANCIENT?"

Founder Dosena races across the Milky Way. Unlike Volgrim Battleships, a High Psion can use their formidable abilities to travel great distances using pure psionic power.

For Dosena, this takes the form of entering the higher dimension known as P-Space for brief periods of time. She 'steps' in and out of the material realm, traveling tens of lightyears with a single movement of her feet.

Unbeknownst to Dosena, P-Space is the dimension the ancient angels once used to travel the Milky Way, and they were even better at manipulating its laws to their benefit than she is. Camael's Cube uses the same method to move through space, a fact she unfortunately has no way of inferring.

But none of that matters to Dosena. With twenty thousand lightyears separating Volgarius in the Southern Milky Way Quadrant from Numaria in the Western Quadrant, Dosena can only hope to reach it in two or so hours at her top speed, assuming she takes no shortcuts through Jumpgates.

However, using Jumpgates simply isn't the Second Founder's style. Ever since she began ascending to the 9th Level, she has never taken a single shortcut in all her life. Dosena has always worked tirelessly, even rebuilding her entire foundation from the ground up when she suffered a terrible defeat to a group of 9th Level Psions in her youth.

That trauma shook her to her core. It wiped away her naivete and forged her into a violent but controlled individual, someone who always kept her rage contained below the surface.

To the current Dosena, nothing is more revolting than a lazy individual, a cheater, or someone who takes shortcuts to get ahead in life.

If one does not act with integrity, they are lower than dirt.

This is the Second Founder's guiding principle, and the reason she ultimately rose to become the mightiest of all Psions.

But today, as she rushes toward the Apex Cosmic that has intruded within the Milky Way's Akashic Barrier, she feels a sense of wariness, as well as more than a hint of bloodthirst.

Dosena knows she will not be a proper opponent for this new enemy.

She has also noticed that this entity is actually an angel, a being who might possibly be an ally.

But that doesn't matter to the Second Founder.

For an unfathomably long time, Dosena has not fought a single individual on her level. She hasn't even met someone who came close. Not one entity has given her a challenge, and she has grown to believe this lack of opponents is what has stalled her advancement to the 10th Level.

When she thinks honestly, Dosena isn't even certain if the 10th Level exists, or if she can reach it. But intuitively, she feels it must. She knows stronger Cosmics exist in other galaxies, and they once existed in the Milky Way's distant past.

Angels, Titans, and Dragons were all at one point far above Dosena's level. Compared to them, she feels like how a toned athlete might feel if they were placed in a boxing ring against a heavyweight champion.

She simply can't compare.

[I must improve.] Dosena says to herself. [I must face this intruder. Whether they are friend or foe... I must fight them!]

Ostensibly, Dosena's role is to protect Volgarius, the Volgrim people, and Unarin from Cosmic threats. Any other threat typically isn't worth her effort to intervene.

But in truth, Dosena is quite self-centered. She cares more about her own improvement than the lives of her fellow Volgrim. She certainly possesses plenty of lingering attachments to them, but she has long since withdrawn from mortal activities, small talk, and other pleasantries.

Dosena rips across the Void, traveling at a speed that would leave even some of the greatest Volgrim warships in the dust.

She scans the entire Milky Way, projecting her Psionic Sense across it with ease. While she cannot make out fine details, keeping an 'eye' on a Cosmic Aura as mighty as the interloper's could never prove a problem to the Second Founder. In her eyes, it's like child's play.

But then, just a few minutes after racing away from Volgarius, Dosena abruptly stops, freezing in her tracks. She senses Mephisto's aura disappear for a moment. Then it reappears somewhere much closer to herself before disappearing again, this time reappearing tens of thousands of lightyears away, in the Eastern Milky Way Quadrant.

Invisible question marks pop up over Dosena's head, but she quickly solves the riddle.

[Mephisto is fleeing. Naturally, the angel would be his enemy, and the enemy of all demons. He must possess Warper magic if he can travel so far, so fast.]

Dosena momentarily feels annoyed, perhaps even a bit stifled.

Psions can tear the Void and cause ripples throughout time. Their spatial and temporal powers are quite frightening.

But even weak demons like Warpers possess the power of Magic. They can accomplish physics-defying feats the Psions cannot. While weak individually, the variety of abilities they can employ grants them a unique utility niche that sometimes makes up for their lack of battle-power.

Dosena starts to resume her movement toward Numaria, but she pauses again when she senses the angel's Cosmic Energy signature vanish, then reappear at the same place Mephisto had just traveled, before disappearing once more to chase him again.

[The Apex Cosmic must be able to tear open Mephisto's sealed portals.] Dosena thinks out loud.

Indeed, while Dosena can not open portals to travel all the way across the galaxy in an instant, if a demon were to open one in front of her and then reseal it, she could force it back open for a brief time afterward.

That much isn't impressive in Dosena's eyes, but it does reinforce the idea that the Apex Cosmic is much stronger than herself and will likely be capable of killing her if she doesn't play her cards right.

Dosena feels no fear.

She relishes the challenge.

[Strength is not necessarily what wins a battle.] Dosena says confidently to herself, before changing direction to race toward the Eastern Quadrant instead. [I possess a formidable array of powers. I will not fall easily to the Archangel. Perhaps I may even defeat them and ascend to the 10th Level!]

The Second Founder pursues the intruder with deadly intent.

She will not falter.

She will not fail.

She is a weapon.

Her purpose is to kill.

Part 501: PRIMORDIAL PREDATOR

Recommended Listening

On a world lacking in terrestrial life, a pair of cosmic entities race across its sky at blistering speeds.

Lower demons live on this world. A few Demon Lords. One or two Barons. They manage the world's resources for the Seven Hells. In the past, it was a world intended for human camps and food for those humans.

But after Jason Hiro teleported the humans to Tarus II, only lower life forms remained behind.

The Myriad Deity screams in fear as he tries to flee his pursuer, an angel from the Cosmic Era. His flight through the lower atmosphere leaves sonic booms in his wake that deafen the creatures below him. But when the elderly angel follows after him, her aftershocks blow out their eardrums and rupture their brains, killing them on the spot.

"THOU SHALT NOT ESCAPE, DRAGONSPAWN!" The angel roars, her voice sundering the world below.

Mephisto says nothing. He offers no witty quips or observations, only guttural cries of fright as he uses every tool in his arsenal to try and evade his pursuer.

While Mephisto is assuredly far too weak to even cut the angel's robes with his claws, he still possesses a reservoir of abilities, ones he tries using to evade or slow her down.

Mephisto wields Yama's power. He jumps into shadows and leaps across the planet, appearing here and there as he pops out of patches of darkness whenever the angel draws near.

But she has a solution for that. Much like Archangel Uriel, she conjures phantasms of light to race in different directions, spreading across the planet in equal distances. When Mephisto pops out of the ground, these ghost-like versions of herself rain violent blows on the dragonbone-deity, battering him into the soil and forcing him to flee elsewhere.

"EVIL WOMAAAAN!!" Mephisto screams.

In a blind panic, Mephisto opens a portal to another world, then jumps through and seals it behind himself. At best that portal will buy him mere seconds.

He emerges on a world in the Western Milky Way Sector belonging to the Goblins. Not their former homeworld, Gollax Prime, but a world they obtained after the Plague ruined their former refuge, Gollax II. Mephisto dives under the soil using the power of Zamiel's earth manipulation to swim a dozen miles underground, where he quickly opens another portal to jump to a second world in the Eastern Sector.

This time, he arrives on Pixiv, the world of the Fairies, where countless magical senses lock onto him. For a brief instant, Mephisto pauses. Then, he grins sinisterly.

He closes up the portal behind himself, while racing toward the fairy's capital city, Spackle.

Dozens of female fairies outside the city look up at the undead creature racing toward them with expressions of horror. Mephisto slams into the magical barriers surrounding the city without hesitation, ripping them open with contemptuous ease. No matter how powerful the Fairy Queens might be, they don't stand a chance against a Cosmic Entity.

Just as Mephisto makes it inside the barrier, he senses the portal he closed up behind himself starting to tear open. Mephisto's grin widens as he calls out to the fairies.

"Help usss, friendsss! Ssslow thisss angel down! Ssshe isss your mortal enemy!"

He makes sure to yell as loudly as he can so his pursuer will hear. When the ancient angel breaks past Mephisto's portal, she narrows her eyes in a rage.

"Verily, this world belongeth to the dragonspawn's allies? No matter. I shalt erase it from existence!"

She flies toward the capital city, eliciting screams of terror.

"NO!" One of the fairy queens cries. "ARCHANGEL! WE'RE NOT-"

She doesn't get to finish her sentence.

The ancient angel releases a violent wave of holy magic, detonating it around her body in a nuclear blast of solar energy.

All the fairies within five hundred miles open their mouths, but no screams escape their lips. The light washes over their bodies, turns them to ash, and erases their souls.

The city of Spackle disappears in an instant. In its place, a crater ten miles deep remains.

For a brief moment, the angel frowns.

"The allies of this dragon were too weak. The galaxy has lost much of its cosmic energy in the eras after my demise."

But she pays no more attention to the matter, caring little for the destruction and genocide she's caused. In her eyes, these 'fairies' were barely as significant as ants.

Mephisto escapes through another portal, and the angel chases after him. Shortly after they leave, a group of fairy soldiers from elsewhere rush to the scene. They arrive to find their crown jewel capital reduced to ash, with not even a speck of its pure white marbled stone remaining behind.

"A-assemble the Queens!" One of the fairy captains exclaims. "Gather anyone who's still alive! We've lost the protection of the Shielding Crystal! Pixiv is no longer hidden from the Plague!"

* * *

Mephisto flees through another portal to the edge of the Eastern Sector. This time, he arrives on a Volgrim hunting world, where they train their 3rd and 4th Level Psions to prepare them for the path to becoming military elites.

The moment Mephisto arrives, Psions all across this world recognize his presence. The strongest Psion, a 7th Level named Praetor Revan, immediately recognizes that neither he nor any of the Lower Psions beneath him stand a chance against Mephisto. Luckily, they have already received scattered reports in real-time through their quantum-nodes regarding the Myriad Deity's movements. They feel no fear. Instead, they focus on weaving Psionic Webs to combine their power.

[Activate the Defensive Grid!] Praetor Revan declares, as he pours his vast psionic energy into a barrier surrounding the defensive facility built specifically for resisting a Plague incursion.

This complex is not particularly special, as the Volgrim have taken to building many of them on their training worlds over the last 20,000 years. It sports a demonstone exterior, with special nodes placed around it to allow for efficient buildup and transfer of psionic energy.

Having already received a warning from the Founders just thirty minutes earlier, most of the Psions on this world have already assembled inside the great shelter. They rapidly build up a barrier of hardened psionic energy, grimacing as they sense Mephisto's soul signature racing toward them.

"Our Psssion friendsss!" Mephisto calls out again, as loudly as possible. "The Archangel isss chasssing usss! Sssave usss!!"

In Mephisto's wake, the ancient angel tears open yet another portal. She rips across space in pursuit of Mephisto, but this time, as she draws near to him, she senses a somewhat weak but still surprising amount of energy building up in the distance.

Hmm. She thinks. The creatures on this world aren't as minuscule as the ones before.

Every Psion on the training world pours their energy without restraint into the barrier. However, its power lies not only in defense...

...but in offense as well!

A small, highly concentrated beam of psionic power bursts out of the barrier, firing directly at Mephisto.

Even as a Cosmic Entity, this unexpected attack catches the Myriad Deity's swift senses off-guard. The beam travels at the speed of light, crossing a hundred miles in an instant and blasting him right in the face.

BOOOOM!!

Mephisto cries out in pain as the psionic attack not only strikes his body, but injures his multitude of souls as well!

His momentum abruptly halts and reverses, like a fly being swatted out of the air. Mephisto goes hurtling backward, screaming in pain, where he crashes into the dirt.

The angel behind him momentarily pauses. She frowns, realizing something important.

The creature called out to his allies, but they attacked him. Perhaps they are not allies after all?

A disturbing thought occurs to her.

Then what of the creatures on the previous world? Were they not the dragonspawn's comrades either?

Her eyes ignite with rage. She realizes the truth of the matter.

He TRICKED me! Wretched little-!!

Mephisto shakes his head in a daze. He grimaces, realizing the Psions must have already prepared for his coming.

But before he can escape again, the angel pounces on him and grabs his skull.

"LYING LITTLE DRAGONSPAWN!" She roars, lifting him overhead.

The Psions watch from afar, fixating their senses on the battle. However, the power of an Apex Cosmic is simply too brilliant. In their eyes, they can only make out a blinding mass of holy energy, obscuring her features. They vaguely sense her advanced age, as well as the fact that she competes with their Second Founder in raw power. But beyond that, they aren't certain of what her identity is.

[Is that Archangel Camael?] One of the lower Psions asks.

[The voice seems to match up.] Praetor Revan says calmly, showing no fear in spite of the immense danger less than a hundred miles from his position. [I can't get a good look at her, but Archangel Camael is indeed one of the Archangels we gave to the demons during the Energy Wars. She must have revived, like her siblings.]

The lesser Psions are much younger than Revan. Unlike their superior, they were not alive during the Energy Wars, so they only know of that era due to studying the historical records.

[Is the Second Founder on her way?] One of the 4th Level Psions asks.

[She is. But she will require many Standard Time Units to arrive. That is only assuming the Archangel and Demon Deity remain in the area.]

As the Psions talk, they maintain their focus, not lowering their guards for a millisecond. The angel beats the hell out of Mephisto, slamming him into the planet's soil like a bull thrashing its matador in a violent rage.

"WORTHLESS! DRAGONSPAWN! LIAR! DECEIVER!"

Mephisto screams in pain. He tries to flail his arms, to scratch at the angel, to fight back, but nothing works.

When he conjures dark energy, she nullifies it with light.

When he tries to twist and bend to escape her iron-grip, she sends a punch flying into his head.

Finally, the angel rears her arm back and hurls Mephisto with all her strength. She flings him at a nearby mountainside, which he crashes into at five times the speed of sound. The impact of his body sends a wave of destruction cascading to the west, rendering all life in that direction utterly extinct. Luckily, she had the foresight to aim in the direction opposite the Psion command center.

But the moment Mephisto crashes into the mountain, he regains his wits and dives underground. He conjures a portal and flees all the way back to the furthest, westernmost-edge of the Milky Way, on the complete opposite side of the galaxy.

Naturally, the angel pursues him.

They tear across the Void in an instant, emerging on a planet covered in lush greenery, with beautiful trees and flowers dotting the landscape as far as the eye can see.

Mephisto closes the portal like before, but when he arrives on this planet, he pauses for a brief instant, visibly confused.

"What? Thisss isssn't the right world- no, never mind that!"

He becomes momentarily disoriented, not recognizing a single location around himself. He isn't even certain how the Warper soul inside of him knew of this place, since it doesn't match up at all.

He rushes westward across the planet, scowling as he senses that familiar emergence of the angel behind him.

"Dammit, dammit, DAMMIT!" Mephisto roars. "Where are we?! What planet isss thisss? Thisss isssn't Okania! Okania isss sssupposssed to be a desssert wassteland! But why do the two moonsss ssseem correct? Wasss it converted into a Paradissse-Classs world recccently?"

Mephisto truly can't afford to pay the matter any attention. But in the back of his mind, an ominous feeling sprouts.

Only five thousand years ago, this world was all but devoid of life. It was simply another Psion training facility, intended for teaching their Invocators how to survive in low-danger hostile environments.

He glances around one last time before returning his attention to the angel chasing after him. Swallowing his fears, he spins around to face her.

"That'sss it. NO MORE PLAYING AROUND!" Mephisto roars.

He conjures magic into his bones, then begins to reshape his body.

As the angel tears through the trees during her approach, she slows down for a moment, pausing to investigate the changes occurring to her opponent.

Hmm? What is the fiend doing now? She wonders, more curious than afraid.

Mephisto lifts his head to the sky and roars primally. His skull reshapes itself as it takes on a draconic appearance. His hands morph into claws. A tail grows from his rear.

But unlike when he fought Crow, he does not remain the same size. He unleashes the full power of his dragon-form, increasing in size from six feet tall to ten, twenty, and even a hundred feet!

Mephisto gigantifies himself, allowing every drop of his power to explode. In doing so, he greatly increases the capacity of his Cosmic Energy, strengthening himself in all the ways that matter!

The angel doesn't feel threatened, but she does notice his danger level has increased a bit. She nods.

"I see. So that is thy true form, Son of Wyrms!"

Mephisto grins. He looks down at the diminutive figure, sensing he has brought himself to a level where he now stands a chance.

"Thisss isss where the tablesss turn!" Mephisto proclaims, lunging at her.

The two once again engage in a mighty struggle.

Mephisto's speed drops a little, but in exchange, his leverage, size, and striking power amplify dramatically. He swings his claws down upon the tiny angel as if they were fifty-ton hammers. He smashes her into the soil, but she easily maintains a barrier of holy energy to protect herself.

Then she leaps out of the ground and rockets up into Mephisto's chest.

WHAM!

The impact of flesh and bone flattens the forest for miles around. She sends Mephisto rocketing into the sky, only to zip above him and throw another punch at his back.

WHAM!!

This brutal strike reverses Mephisto's momentum, sending him screaming to the surface once again.

But when Mephisto is about to hit the ground, he materializes a portal below himself, one which opens up in the sky above the angel.

He falls through that portal and attacks her from behind, catching her off-guard!

With a slash of his claws, Mephisto lands his first successful attack, striking the primordial angel's wings with every ounce of strength he can muster.

She screams. She plummets to the planet below, crashing into it to send another shockwave across its surface.

"Aaahh..." The angel coughs, clearly taken aback by Mephisto's strength. Until now, she hasn't even suffered a scratch from him, and while this blow is far from causing her any mortal danger, it does cause her to take him more seriously.

"Tricky... little... dragonspawn." The angel coughs, before jumping to her feet.

She looks up at the sky, where Mephisto looks down at her, not pleased at all with his failure to end her in one strike. A single glance is all she needs to see that he had hoped for a quick end to the fight.

"Thou art going to need to fight better than THAT if thou intendeth to kill me." She says cockily.

The angel coils strength into her legs.

Just as she's about to pounce at Mephisto from below like a panther, she pauses.

She senses... a certain gaze falling upon her body.

"Huh?"

Slightly confused, the angel snaps her eyes to the left, where she easily picks out a tiny bipedal creature with mottled green skin, its faceless head aimed in her direction.

A Kolvaxian.

It hides behind a recently uprooted tree, but its insignificant stealth capabilities can't avoid her sharp senses.

"What... in the Creator's name...?" She whispers, shocked by the creature's appearance. "That..."

She doesn't get to finish her thought. Mephisto senses her moment of confusion, flaps his boned wings, and races down at her from above.

BOOOOM!!

He smashes the angel like a nuclear bomb, causing the crater to quadruple in size and flinging thousands of tons of debris back into the upper atmosphere to rain down upon the other side of the planet over the coming months.

Enraged, the angel ignores her intrusive thoughts to focus on the enemy before her. She slams her fist into Mephisto and sends him hurtling away.

"I tire of thy pathetic antics!" She roars.

Mephisto flaps his wings to reorient himself in the air above. He gazes at her with undisguised hatred.

"Filthy pigeon! Why? WHY are you ssso ssstrong?! What isss your true identity, Archangel? Why wasss Bael able to sssummon a monssster like you from the Primordial Era?!"

The angel blinks her eyes. She looks at Mephisto in confusion.

"What? Thou thinketh me an Archangel?"

"Of courssse!" Mephisto rages. "What elssse could you be if NOT an Archangel?!"

For the first time since the angel started chasing Mephisto, the two of them don't immediately engage in hostilities. Instead, she looks up at the bone-dragon with an expression of pity.

"Fool. I am no Archangel. Art thy eyes blind? Compared to my siblings nine, I am but a speck of cosmic dust in the Creator's eye. My weakest sibling, Muriel, is a thousand times stronger than I. If thou thinketh me an Archangel, thou hath no concept of what true Cosmic Power is."

She stands up straight, then looks at Mephisto haughtily.

"My name is Anaelle. I am but a common member of the Seraphs. Were I an Archangel, my first blow would have shattered thy body into fragments. In fact, my frail body is the only reason thou hath survived this long."

Mephisto's eyes lose some of their color. He looks at Anaelle in horror.

"What? You're... an ordinary angel? Not an Archangel? LIESSS! You mussst be lying!"

Anaelle shakes her head. "There is no lie, undead creature. The galaxy hath changed since my fall to the claws of that ancient dragon. The Cosmic Energy present hath become too thin for my tastes. The Akashic Barrier hath weakened, and shalt soon disappear altogether. But in the era of my memory, millions of my brothers and sisters towered above me. I was quite weak by all accounts. As for thy strength..."

She pauses, assessing Mephisto's draconic figure with contempt.

"Thou doth not meet the bare minimum of my expectations. I senseth no other dragons, yet despite possessing the bones of one, thy strength is lower than the weakest ones in my memory. The children of today art too pitiful."

Mephisto's metaphorical stomach sinks. The Seraph's words rock him to his core, making him feel as if becoming a Demon Deity meant even less than becoming an Emperor.

For the first time, he begins to understand the true heights Cosmic Entities can ascend to, and how frightening the angels of old were.

If he had lived during those times, he'd be about as intimidating as a gnat to an elephant.

Anaelle cracks her neck. Abruptly, she launches toward Mephisto, catching him by surprise as she drives a punch straight toward his rib-bones.

BOOM!

Then another punch.

BOOOM!!

And another one!

BOOOOM!!

Mephisto tries to scream, but his voice catches. His soul shudders from the impacts, and he momentarily loses control of his body.

Each strike launches Mephisto into the sky, but this time Anaelle dogs him closely, pursuing him without letting the gap lengthen. She keeps pummeling Mephisto's central bone, and as she does, Mephisto hears a sound more alarming than all of the ones before.

Crack.

A soft sound. A sharp sound. He only hears it because of his highly attuned senses, but it makes his souls shake with fear.

His eyes lower.

He looks at the place where Anaelle has repeatedly struck him.

There, a small spiderweb crack has appeared on his ribs.

No! NO! Mephisto cries, as Anaelle delivers another debilitating punch to his sternum.

BOOOOM!!

The crack enlarges. And yet another punch enlarges it further.

Agony rocks Mephisto's senses.

No, not here! NOT NOW! Mephisto cries out in his head, unable to catch a breath.

Anaelle grins evilly.

"I always hated dragons. It made me an outcast among my Seraph brethren. But I knew... thou art all SCUM!"

The primordial predator sends one last punch racing toward Mephisto's cracked bones, hellbent on blasting them into powder and severing his body in half.

But then, just before the punch lands...

She disappears.

Anaelle vanishes, leaving not one molecule behind.

For the briefest instant, Mephisto remains motionless in the air, his trembling eyes locked on the position where she was flying in front of him a second before.

He anticipates her punch.

He expects it to leave him crippled and debilitated.

But it never comes.

Mephisto slows to a stop in the sky, now levitating a dozen miles above Okania's surface.

He blinks once, twice, three times.

"Wh....what?"

Slightly dazed, Mephisto looks around. He stretches out his senses, fearing this must be some sort of elaborate psychological prank Anaelle is pulling to strike the fear of God into him.

But it isn't.

No matter where Mephisto looks, he doesn't find the Seraph hiding anywhere on Okania.

The souls inside of Mephisto finally piece the puzzle together. Yama is the one who comprehends the truth.

[It's the same.] Yama says slowly. [When Bael summoned Satan, we feared Satan would stay among the living forever, but… he did not. He disappeared shortly after.]

[The angel is gone, then.] Lupus whispers. [We somehow survived. She must have… returned? To the grave?]

Mephisto stares blankly ahead.

Then, he begins to chuckle.

"Heh… hehe heh…"

His chuckle increases in intensity.

"Hehehe… kekeke… KEKEKEKE!!!"

He bursts into a full-throated laugh, roaring to the heavens with glee as he realizes the truth of the matter.

"The sssummon disssappeared! KEKEKE! We're sssaved! SSSAVED!"

He slaps himself, fearing he might have simply passed out in delirium due to being beaten unconscious. But in fact, he is still as awake as ever.

Mephisto touches the broken bone, his laugh fading away as he realizes how close he came to total defeat. He could have died to Anaelle, and if she had truly been an Archangel, he probably wouldn't have lasted five seconds.

"The ancccient Archangelsss… were they truly ssso powerful?"

A sense of despondency overwhelms him.

He momentarily feels tiny, insignificant.

Despite all the power he has amassed, he's nothing at all in the cosmic scale of the universe.

He is merely a speck of a speck of a speck…

But those feelings fade.

His resolve reforms, and a sense of urgency replaces it.

"We mussst become ssstronger. There are too many enemiesss out there."

Mephisto turns his beady eyes toward the direction of Numaria.

"We mussst consssume more sssoulsss."

"Bael... hisss power will make a fine addition to our collection..."

Part 502: Future Protagonist

Two hours earlier.

Amelia Greyheart, the former Black Queen, finds herself absentmindedly wandering around Tarus II, inside the middle of the capital city, the Fortress of Retribution.

With Hope gone, she can't bear to sit idly in the Hall of Heroes, waiting hundreds of hours for news of his return... or worse. She'd much rather come out into the real world to speed things up. The problem is, she finds she just doesn't have much to do.

So, to pass the time, she wanders over to the special facility she helped Blinker build; the Queen Network.

Dozens of giant trees glow with magical energy. They appear much taller than a week before, having continued to gently feed on the energy of humans, demons, and monsters that have been using their power. Amelia approaches the Network, thinking she might pop in to work some aggression out in this special soul-simulator, but she finds a huge line stretching away from the entrance, consisting of at least 500 humans, demons, and monsters all waiting to train in the Queen Network's special soul-space.

Amelia blinks. "Wow. It's... more popular than I expected. Maybe we should expand the system's capacity."

She scratches her head, feeling slightly annoyed. She could jump the line and nobody would have the right to complain, given she was one of the Network's inventors, but that just wouldn't sit right with her.

As Amelia stands away from the line, not sure of what to do, she hears a voice speak up behind her.

"Ah-ah-ah! Amelia, I've fin-ally found you! What luck, meet-ing you here!"

Amelia blinks. She turns around to see a familiar female demon a stone's throw away, walking toward her. The demon's horns appear a bit larger than in the past, and her spiritual energy, substantially greater.

"Dawn." Amelia says. "Haven't seen you in a while. Not since you led me to.. the... well, you know."

"To Gressil's pris-on, yes." Dawn says. She doesn't smile at Amelia, and appears noticeably less bubbly than usual. "I need to spe-ak to you. Can we... go somewhere more priv-ate?"

"Uh. Sure." Amelia says slowly. "Why? Is something... wrong?"

The black-haired demoness looks around, as if searching for something, or perhaps someone.

"Well. Yes. You will see. Emperor Kristoff wouldn't want me to spe-ak about the matter public-ly."

"Oh, alright then." Amelia says.

She and Dawn make their way back to the city's interior, where they visit the Horned Maître and take up a private booth on the second floor. Here, the meals are cheaper, and the floor is more crowded, but finding a magically-soundproofed privacy screen is plenty doable.

Amelia starts to reach into her pocket for a Merit Token, but she feels a bit of surprise when Dawn casually tosses two out, paying for the private booth herself.

"You have tokens?" Amelia asks.

"I have been contri-buting to humanity's cause." Dawn explains, as they head upstairs to grab a booth. "I am a Baron now. The Baron of Quiet."

"Not a very intimidating title." Amelia says absentmindedly.

"It is not supposed to be." Dawn says, finally baring a faint, toothy smile. Her vampire canines poke out of her mouth for a moment before she retracts them.

Her smile evaporates, and she remains sitting in silence for a moment.

"Something big is happen-ing." Dawn says quietly. "An... oper-ation. Emperor Kristoff is a part of it. So are most of the other De-mon Emperors."

"Huh? I haven't heard anything about this." Amelia replies.

"I would imagine not. It is being kept on the down-low." Dawn whispers conspiratorially. "Because they did not want the Wordsmiths to know... Emperor Mephisto... is alive."

"WHAT?!" Amelia exclaims, nearly jumping out of her seat. "He IS?! Oh, of course he is! That piece of shit is like a cockroach! He just keeps coming back!"

Amelia's words don't escape the privacy barrier, nor are her actions noticed by anyone outside the booth.

Dawn remains calm on the surface, but her eyes tell a different story.

"Things did... not go well. They went poorly, in fact. Mephisto discovered... a se-cret. He uncovered some method of as-cending to the rank of Demon Deity. Like Wolfram did. Only, this as-cension is... stable. It would not be temporary, but permanent."

Amelia calms down. Her blood runs cold as she realizes what Dawn is implying.

"He... wait... so the other Emperors attacked him in secret? They didn't tell Jason or Hope? But why not? Unless..."

Dawn lowers her eyes in shame.

"They wanted that se-cret. They wanted to steal Mephisto's know-ledge. But the operation failed. Mephisto worked with Emperor Glinch. He held them back long enough for Mephisto to as-cend."

Dawn pauses.

"As we speak, Mephisto is doing bat-tle with the Emperors. But things are not going well. They will likely use Crow's abili-ty to temporarily become a Demon Deity herself. If she cannot defeat Mephisto, all will be lost."

"How do you know all this? Why didn't you tell anyone sooner?" Amelia asks, glaring at Dawn. "We have to tell Neil! Or Phoebe! The Wordsmiths need to act fast!"

Dawn shifts in her seat uncomfortably. "The Emperors... would not like me saying anything. And I... I am... in con-flict. You may not realize this but... Emperor Fenrir was kil-led. She was my Lady. I served her for thousands of years. Now, I... don't know what to do. Mephisto has Lupus's soul. Kristoff is fighting, too. I should follow my or-ders, but it does not feel right."

"Well, we have to do something!" Amelia exclaims. "We can't just sit on our butts."

"But what do we do, then?" Dawn asks. "I follow or-ders. I do not give them out. That is why I came to you. I hoped you could help."

"We... should go find Phoebe." Amelia says decisively. "She's reliable. She can contact Jason. Unfortunately, Hope is occupied right now. But we need to alert the First Wordsmith. Oh, and we have to tell Neil, too. If Mephisto has ascended, he should be stronger than any Emperor, right?"

Dawn shrugs helplessly. "I do not know. The Emperors spoke of Wolfram as being wea-ker than the Cherubiim, but still imposs-ibly strong. If Mephisto is similar, perhaps we will need the help of the Arch-angels?"

"Yeah. Asking them for help might be a good idea too." Amelia says. "Let's go alert Phoebe first, though. I trust her a lot more than any of those old pigeons."

Amelia and Dawn hastily get up and leave. Dawn shoots a look of surprise at Amelia.

"I for-got you have bad blood with the angels."

"I'll never forgive them." Amelia says quietly. "They made my best friend suffer. Especially that Raphael. He's the worst one of all."

"Well. I will not dis-agree with that statement." Dawn mutters appreciatively.

Cassiel, the last living Lazarite, walks with her companion, Soleil, the sentient Construct. The two of them happen to simply be wandering around Tarus II on this fine day, letting the sunshine warm their backs. Given their human disguises, they don't stand out from the crowd.

While Cassiel's disguise relies on her Heaven's Shroud, Soleil can simply change her appearance by morphing her body. The two of them draw no attention.

"I don't like this feeling." Cassiel says to her companion quietly. "Can you feel it, Soleil? There's a strange 'power' somewhere in the galaxy. It's demonic."

"I cannot detect any noteworthy energy signature." Soleil responds.

"Mmm. We should see if Raphael knows anything." Cassiel mutters, looking around the plaza. "His senses should be sharper than mine."

The two of them continue walking the streets, heading toward the eastern side of the city, where the last church remains standing. But before they can draw within eyeshot of it, a man steps out in front of them.

Cassiel doesn't flinch in fear, since she recognizes him. But she does appear slightly surprised.

"Siddhartha?" Cassiel asks.

Buddha nods at her unsmilingly. "Daughter of Heaven. Am I correct in assuming you can sense the distant Threat?"

"Yes. Why? Do you sense it too?" Cassiel asks, shooting Soleil a relieved look. It isn't just her general jumpiness acting up again.

"A great danger approaches. A causal anomaly." Buddha says quietly. "Were you planning to ask Raphael about this matter?"

Cassiel nods slowly. "Yes. Why?"

Buddha purses his lips.

"The old man. Do not trust him. Raphael knows more than he says. He has a... hidden agenda."

"Huh? Aren't you two friends?" Soleil asks, frowning at Buddha suspiciously. In her eyes, Soleil views herself as half an angel, so she tends to mentally align herself with their interests.

"I am friendly with Raphael when our goals converge." Buddha says quietly. "But that creature... that old monster... he is not humanity's ally. He only uses our strength to advance his agenda."

Buddha glances around the town square. Too many humans and demons stand within earshot, so he dares not speak too boldly.

"I've said what I needed to say. But keep your wits about you, Daughter of Heaven. Your karmic threads indicate a future of great significance may yet play out, so long as you survive. Do not cast yourself onto any blades, for the importance you may yet play in the Creator's scheme is more significant than you realize."

Cassiel blinks twice, uncomprehending. Just as she is about to ask what the heck Buddha means, he steps toward her and leans in close to whisper in his ear.

"The old man. He may grow to fear you. He views you as a child he raised. But that fact will not shield you forever. Do not forget... Raphael is not your ally."

Cassiel looks at Buddha strangely, as if gazing at a stranger. He pulls away from her and folds his hands together.

"The four forces will converge. Karma. Chaos. Luck. Destiny. Even I cannot presume how they will ultimately play out. The Great Shattering is approaching. It will change everything."

"So... what should I do, then?" Cassiel asks.

"Keep to yourself. Focus on yourself. Stay true to yourself." Buddha says softly. "Right now, you must focus on becoming the best 'you' that has ever existed. I sense that in the future, a billion beings will come to rely on your strength. If it is insufficient, countless sentients will die."

"I... I don't know." Cassiel mumbles, feeling disheartened. "Me? I'm just a Lazarite. I'm nothing special."

"You and I both know that isn't true." Buddha murmurs quietly. "If you were 'only' a mere Lazarite, Raphael would not have devoted so much attention to training you. You have a potential even he cannot fathom. I fear that if he truly grasped its depths, he might..."

Buddha pauses, allowing the implication to linger.

He turns his attention to the Construct.

"Soleil. You are a Sentient, but your existence is unnatural. Neither Karma, nor Chaos, nor Destiny, nor Luck can bind you. The same is true of your sister. Do not underestimate your potential. I look forward to seeing what you can accomplish alongside your charge."

Soleil snorts. "Of course I'm amazing. I have a duty to perform. I have to kill the bad man."

She flicks her eyes to the side of Cassiel's head for a brief second before returning her attention to Buddha.

"But I don't like the way you talk about Raphael. He's done nothing to deserve your slander."

Buddha snorts contemptuously. He narrows his eyes to slits.

"If you had any idea of how wretched that Archangel was, you would not speak such words."

He turns away from them, then starts to walk away.

"I've said my piece. I hope you'll both take care of yourselves and await the coming changes. Don't throw your lives away needlessly."

Cassiel and Soleil remain silent, watching as Buddha departs. When he rounds the corner, they remain standing in place for a minute or two.

"Are you feeling alright?" Soleil asks, turning her attention to Cassiel.

Cassiel gazes into the distance, appearing a little dazed. She reaches her hand up to massage her eyelids, then looks at Soleil.

"I... I'm fine. I just... find it hard to follow along with Buddha's logic. I knew Raphael for 600 years, until the end of the Energy Wars. He trained me, guided me, mentored me. And now... Buddha tells me... this? I don't understand."

"Well. Who do you trust more?" Soleil asks. "Buddha? Or Raphael?"

"If it were only a matter of the time spent together, the answer would be Raphael." Cassiel replies. "But... Buddha was my friend for multiple reincarnations. Before I died, when I was a sick little girl, he came to comfort me and ease my passing. He was the Reverend of my church at the time. I knew him before I even knew Raphael."

"And after you became an angel?" Soleil asks.

"I ran into him on several occasions." Cassiel explains. Raphael used to dispatch me to Earth to hunt lesser demons as a part of my training. He rarely did that for other angels, but he always did it for me. Buddha had a way of popping up whenever I came down to Earth. It's almost like... like he knew where I'd be."

"He's an odd fellow." Soleil says. "Bit of a stalker, if you ask me."

"Oh, Soleil. It's not like that." Cassiel mutters.

"Maybe not." Soleil acknowledges. "But looking back, it seems odd, doesn't it? Almost like Buddha was looking to make friends with you. And all that weird talk... why does he act as if he can see the future? What's all this about a Great Shattering?"

"He's mentioned it a few times, but he's never told me." Cassiel says. "Maybe he can see the future after all. I just don't know."

She pauses.

"...Well. I think I'll hold off on talking to Raphael. Let's just wait and see what happens next."

Soleil shrugs. "You're the boss."

At a lake east of the Fortress of Retribution.

"I didn't know you could be such a romantic."

"Well. I've been out of the game for a long time. I don't have much idea what I'm doing."

Neil Adams and Linda Hurent sit in a rowboat in the middle of the lake, side by side, with fishing rods in their hands. Linda smiles at Neil, enjoying the moment.

After asking Neil out a few days earlier, she was surprised when he agreed. Knowing Neil, she expected him to shut her down. After all, the man lost his entire family when Bahamut took over his body and turned him into an immortal monster-slave.

But now, on their second date, Linda and Neil sit in the boat, staring out at the beautiful placid water. She can't help but feel happy, especially when she notices he's been smiling a bit more than usual.

"That's where I disagree." Linda says. "This was a good date idea."

Neil sighs, but says nothing. He looks out at the distant shore for several long seconds, becoming lost in thought.

"...So many matters demand my attention these days." Neil says quietly. "It's nice to take a day off."

"You don't ever stop working under normal circumstances, do you?" Linda asks, nudging his ribs gently with her elbow. "Revenge against the demons is fine and all, but if I might be so bold... you should stop and smell the roses once in a while. If you don't have anything to live for, or anything you enjoy doing, then what reason do you have to keep fighting?"

A pair of absurdly-colored pink birds with dark purple heads land in the lake and splash around a hundred feet from the boat, animals native to Tarus II. Neil watches them idly.

"I'd argue revenge is good enough for its own sake." Neil says. "But... you're right. I have felt a certain emptiness for the past six years. A loneliness of sorts."

He turns his head to look at her.

"That's why I... wanted to thank you, Linda. Thank you for asking me out."

Linda blushes. She coughs awkwardly, feeling a little intimidated by his soft gaze.

"I just couldn't bear to see you doing what you do, all alone, Neil. Besides. I'm not really an expert on these matters, either."

"Never dated before?" Neil asks, returning his eyes to the lake.

"Well. 'Dated' isn't really the right... I mean..."

Linda trails off.

"I'm just a random woman from one of the worlds you liberated. Before you came along, my life was... rough. The demons would frequently come to my village. They'd... take men and women away. Sometimes they'd perform vile acts toward my friends and family. My sister, for example..."

Neil's expression doesn't change.

But his heart tremors with a flicker of rage.

"I'm sorry you had to go through that. I'm sorry anyone ever did. It's not right."

Linda nods. "But that's why I respect you, you know. The Wordsmiths are powerful, yeah. It's great they have the strength to cow the demons, but they're like gods. They have powers none of us could imagine."

She sighs.

"I respect the work Jason and Hope have done. I do. But if I can be honest? Hope is just Jason, in essence. It was you who molded him into a demon-killing machine. He'd still be a dope like his original self without you whipping him into shape. It's you who has been gluing humanity back together this whole time, not the Wordsmiths. That's why I... like you... the most."

Neil accepts the compliment graciously. He smiles.

"It's easy to act superior when one is born superior. It's easy to think of oneself as brave when one has the strength to fight back. But it's when you don't have strength, or capital, or resources to defeat a superior opponent, yet you keep standing up to them... that is what makes a person brave."

Linda nods. "I agree. That's why I've decided to follow you to the very end. Even if you leave the Wordsmiths behind, I'll have faith in you and you alone, Neil."

"I appreciate your confidence in me." Neil chuckles. "But I'm only a man. In a universe of demons, monsters, and aliens... a single man can't do much."

"That's where we disagree." Linda says, before leaning to the side and resting her head on his shoulder.

The two of them share a little laugh. They look into each other's eyes with big smiles, Neil having the best time he's had in years and feeling some of his worries fading into the back of his mind, while Linda bats her eyes at him, happy she decided to take a chance on asking Humanity's Commander out.

But.

All good things eventually come to an end.

Neil's communicator beeps. He ignores it, but then it beeps again, souring the mood.

The man clears his throat, then reaches into his pocket.

"Sorry. One second. Let me deal with this." Neil says rolling his eyes. "I told them not to bug me today..."

Linda pulls away from his shoulder. "It's fine, Neil. You're a busy man."

"Not THAT busy." Neil grumps, as he lifts the communicator to his ear. "Neil speaking."

He falls silent for a moment, but his expression begins to change.

"He did what? Without telling me? And now... you're sure? That goddamned idiot... fuck."

Neil bites the last word off, then mashes his thumb against the 'end call' button before shoving the communicator back in his pocket.

For a brief moment, he says nothing. Linda also remains silent, waiting to see if he'll explain.

"...FUCK." Neil says again, half-yelling, half-expelling the word from his mouth with a look of rage to back it up. "Hope, you dumb, stupid bastard."

Linda blinks. "Hope? What happened?"

"Wordsmiths. That's what happened." Neil hisses through clenched teeth. "Hope went to 'visit' Founder Unarin. I remember him telling me about some disgusting things he saw on Moonbase Serris- you remember Serris?"

Neil glances at Linda, looking for confirmation. She nods.

"You told me he blew up the Volgrim moon."

"Right, he sure did." Neil growls, looking away. "Anyway, Hope found out the Volgrim were experimenting on humans in a manner most disgusting. I told him not to take any action without consulting me, but now he's gone to Volgarius to confront Founder Unarin directly. It seems he's just returned and brought 'extremely bad news.'"

Neil reaches into his other pocket and pulls out a small palm-sized device, then hands it to Linda.

"Here. An emergency teleporter. I'm sorry, Linda. We have to cut this short. Put it on your chest and push the button. It'll take you back to the Northern Base."

Neil pulls out his own E-Teleporter and attaches it to his chest, while Linda gazes at the object in her hands with a look of dismay.

"Like I said." She murmurs. "I follow you, Neil. Not the Wordsmiths."

"I look forward to a future when we no longer need to rely on them." Neil says, before pressing the button on his teleporter.

Foop!

Neil vanishes from the boat, leaving Linda behind.

Linda doesn't immediately activate hers.

She sits there for five long minutes, staring out at the water in silence.

Eventually, she does activate it. Then she disappears.

Part 503: The Spynet Sphere

Three days before Mephisto's ascension, Jason Hiro created a folded space, a higher dimension where time flowed 250x faster than in the galaxy outside.

A space named Chrona.

When Mephisto began his rampage, over 750 days had already passed inside that dimension.

Two full years, nearly three, have raced by for the First Wordsmith.

He remains aware of the situation unfolding in the galaxy outside.

Indeed...

Jason Hiro has made many advancements.

* * *

The First Wordsmith takes a rare break from his work. He walks arm-in-arm with his spiritual wife, Fiona, who has now become substantially more corporeal thanks to certain devices she and Jason have built over the last years.

The land of Chrona has changed drastically over the past two years.

Previously, it was surrounded by a spinning vortex of spatial turbulence that made anyone sick if they looked up at the sky for too long. But thanks to a special magical mechanism, Chrona has slowly inflated in size as time passed by absorbing the wasted ambient energy of the galaxy outside.

Black holes eject matter and radiation.

Stars dissipate energy into the cosmos.

Solar winds travel slowly across the Milky Way.

Chrona can absorb these otherwise-wasted energies to enlarge itself.

Through a series of carefully tuned, highly complex spiritual mechanisms, Jason has created an isolated folded space not dissimilar to the Labyrinth of Hell, one which grows larger every day. Unlike Hell, Chrona does not feed off the wasted energy of its inhabitants. Instead, it transmits some of the ambient background radiation more densely into its interior, a feature Jason deliberately designed to try and help one of his closest friends recover from his injuries...

Jason and Fiona walk across the beautiful, grassy, flowery field west of Chrona's sole city. Outside the city, which only houses a dozen people in total, a huge network of forests, rivers, and mountains stretches for several miles in every direction.

Chrona is not a large folded space. Indeed, it's far smaller than Earth's moon, Luna, ever was.

But for the dozen people who reside within it, it is more than big enough for them to all live in secluded spaces if they wish.

On this day, Jason decides to pause his work because he wants to take a small break and hang out with his good friend...

Kar.

Jason and Fiona hear the sounds of giggling and laughter as they approach the western end of Chrona's mega-forest. There, they spot several tiny crocodile whelps playing tag as they run between the trees, yelling childish things at one another. Each sibling taunts, teases, and provokes the others while sometimes tripping and falling over their tails.

"Already running around." Fiona murmurs. "Croco-kids grow up fast."

Jason nods. "They sure do."

He turns his attention away from the kids, where he spots Kar and Blinker sitting on a checkered blanket with some food strewn across it. They sit and enjoy a quiet picnic while keeping their eyes peeled for boo-boos and injuries.

"Hurgh. Turtle." Kar says, his body propped up against a rock behind him.

"Heya, Kar." Jason says with a smile. "Nice weather, huh?"

"Always is." Kar replies, giving Jason a thumbs-up.

"Mind if we sit?" Fiona asks.

"I'm making sandwiches." Blinker says. "Tuna-fish. You guys want some?"

"Sounds good to me!" Jason answers, laughing.

He and Fiona plop on the blanket. Jason accepts a sandwich, and surprisingly, so does Fiona.

In the outside world, Fiona can only manifest as a faint spiritual apparition, but thanks to the magical technology inside Chrona's biosphere, she can become almost as materialized as Phoebe herself!

She and Jason quietly munch on their sandwiches, while Blinker calls over the kids.

"Asher! Zagan! Lunch-time!" Blinker shouts.

The eight crocodile kids perk their ears up. They all come toddling over, their differently-colored shades of skin a useful tool for Jason to remember them.

A green-scaled boy and a red-scaled boy politely take their mother's offered sandwiches and throw them in their mouths, devouring them in single bites.

"Nom! Mmm! Mama, that's good!" Asher, the red-scaled one says.

"Can I have more?" Zagan, the green-scaled one, asks.

"Remember the rule. Everyone has their first before anyone has seconds." Blinker admonishes sternly.

She turns to the other kids. "Kallista, Astrid, Selene, Gideon, Remus, and Ragnar, you get sandwiches next, in that order."

A grey-scaled boy starts to pout. "Aw, mama! Why do I hafta go last? That's not fair!"

"Ragnar, you went first last time." Blinker explains patiently. "Now you go last."

"But-!" Ragnar starts to protest.

"If you'd like, you can wait until everyone has had seconds before you get your first." Blinker warns, turning an evil motherly eye on the whining brat.

That shuts him up. Ragnar decides it's better not to push his luck, and he falls silent while Blinker continues slapping tuna-fish onto slices of bread before handing it off to the children in the order she listed.

"Turtle," Kar says, while Blinker is occupied. "What are you doing here? Isn't Smokey out causing chaos?"

"Yeah. Mephisto is up to some bullshit right now." Jason says. "But we have time. I needed a break from all the monotony."

"Have you made any new breakthroughs?" Blinker asks, after handing out the 8th sandwich.

Jason scratches the side of his head.

For a moment, he hesitates.

Where to start? He wonders.

In the last 750 days, the First Wordsmith has not sat on his butt idly. He has worked hard to advance his understanding of Wordsmithing.

But sometimes he finds it hard to summarize the mess of incomplete projects he constantly ping-pongs back and forth between.

"Well," Jason begins to explain. "After Mephisto's ascension, I set up a Cosmic Energy Detector that can pinpoint the movements of entities like him. I discovered that another demon also ascended, and it turned out to be Emperor Crow. So that's fun."

"Mmm. Fun." Kar says casually. "The demons are ascending a lot lately. Yet in the last 100,000 years, they never once broke through to 'Demon Deity.' Seems strange."

"Wolfram was a special case." Jason says. "I investigated the happenings on Hell Harbor. Emperor Serena used her magic to forcibly shove Wolfram past the Emperor barrier, but it ultimately caused his death. Now she's done the same for Crow, so Crow is probably going to die, too."

"And Mephisto?" Blinker asks, her expression turning slightly angry as she remembers all the horrible trauma Mephisto inflicted on her and Kar.

"I'm not entirely sure." Jason says slowly. "But Mephisto somehow ascended without Serena's help. He did it all on his own. It seems he's merged his soul with Lupus, Zamiel, and Yama, among others."

"Are you going to do anything about it?" Blinker asks.

Jason strokes his chin thoughtfully.

"I... don't know."

He pauses.

"To be clear, I'm not sure if I can, or if I should. I have a way of making situations worse. And right now, the only entities Mephisto is directly threatening are other demons."

Fiona snorts. "They reaped what they sowed."

"He'll come for us next." Blinker points out.

A brief silence fills the space. Blinker makes sandwiches for the kids until she runs out of tuna, then her gator-babies run back to the trees to keep playing together.

"Your kids are barely two years old." Fiona says idly. "But they can run around and talk and all kinds of other stuff. When Daisy was that age, she barely even babbled words, and she was still crawling around."

"Most monster types learn faster than humans." Blinker explains. "Humans are actually pretty slow to develop. Your whole species is odd like that."

"And you aren't immortal either." Kar points out. "Such weirdos. Hurgh."

After another moment of silence, Blinker, Kar, and Fiona turn to look at Jason when they see his expression change.

"Wordsmithing is a power that can express the concept of 'infinity.'" Jason says slowly. "But the problem with infinite possibilities is that I, as a simple-minded man, have trouble locking onto any one of them. When a giant school of fish swims in front of you, reaching out and grabbing any specific one can make your head spin. They melt together into a blob of samey-ness."

Jason clears his throat.

"Mephisto is a problem. The demons are a problem. The Volgrim are a problem. The Plague is a problem. Hell, even Neil's ambitions present a problem. So many issues I have to solve, and so many ways I might go about doing so. It makes my head spin."

Blinker nods. "It sounds like you came to a decision, though."

"Sort of." Jason says. "I've been developing a broad series of possible solutions, while also narrowing in on the most effective ones. You two have been pretty busy with your kids... have you paid any attention to my work?"

Blinker shrugs, as does Kar.

It's not that they haven't idly glanced at some of Jason's research projects over the last two or three years, but more that after the battle against Mephisto, neither of them wants to jump back into the war. They've grown to enjoy the quiet life inside Chrona, watching their spawnlings grow up, and living as simple parents.

For Blinker, the mere thought of fighting Mephisto again makes her depressed.

She has grown tired of seeing Kar suffer. He's become a cripple, unable to walk, forced to float around with hovering tools Fiona developed specifically for him. His body has weakened, making him no longer capable of fighting anyone at all.

But still.

Blinker has her husband back. His memories are fine. He's the same loving crocodile he always was.

And that is enough for her.

Jason observes her and Kar's reactions. He sighs lightly.

"I won't bore you with the details. I'll simply give you a broad overview of what I've been working on."

"That would be for the best." Fiona says with a nod.

Jason, Fiona, and Blinker all stand up. Kar activates a light metallic exoskeleton attached to his back. He levitates a couple of feet in the air, allowing his paralyzed legs to dangle below him.

Despite Jason's best efforts, he still hasn't been able to repair Kar's body. Even when Jason sent a request to Marie Becker, her response came back negative.

Kar's body is fine. His brain is fine.

But his soul has lost all of its energy.

He cannot walk again, at least not for the foreseeable future.

Perhaps, in time, his soul might slowly recover. But Jason has not been able to cook up a solution, outside of hoping his scheme with Chrona's internal energy diffusion might help speed up Kar's regeneration.

Blinker waves her hand. The picnic cloth vanishes, along with the remaining utensils. She waves to the kids.

"You stay here. Mommy and daddy are going to go with Uncle Jason and Aunt Fiona for a bit. Don't get into trouble."

The boys and girls turn and shout affirmations at their mother. They won't dare assume she isn't watching. Even if she leaves, she can easily leave energy projections behind to keep an eye on them.

Not that she needs to. Chrona has more than enough internal monitoring tools to ensure the kids won't fall off a rock and crack their skulls open. Dozens of safeguards have been built to protect the last progeny of the Crocodiles.

The group heads into the central area of Chrona. While Jason has not built an actual 'city' by any means, he has constructed several dozen giant buildings above and below-ground, each one pertaining to his research interests. As for the living arrangements, Kar and Blinker's family lives in a building on the western outskirts, while Jason and Fiona live on the opposite side, mainly for privacy reasons.

Inside this city, a certain futuristic aesthetic plays out. Designed visually by Fiona in her down-time, glass-encased buildings with tinted windows keep prying eyes out, though bright computer monitors can still be faintly seen if one looks hard enough.

Most of the buildings are square or rectangular. But a few others have more interesting shapes, such a small group of pointed spires shaped vaguely like Earth's fallen Eiffel Tower.

One interesting building, though, is a large sphere the size of a house, its exterior made purely out of hexagonal-shaped panes of glass, all interlocked together.

This beautiful dome is where Jason takes Blinker and Kar.

It's not the first time the two monsters have seen this building by any means, but it is the first time they've entered. While they may live on Chrona, as far as they care, they are merely Jason's guests. It's not their place to go wherever they desire without permission.

A single door rests at the base of the sphere. As the group enters, Kar and Blinker look around, becoming momentarily surprised as they realize why they couldn't see inside this dome at all.

Thousands of monitors light up when Jason enters. They rise from the floor to the ceiling, each one playing a different video, or perhaps a recording, in total showing off a dizzying number of scenes from an unknown number of places. The panes of glass, seen from the outside, are in fact those very same monitors but pointed inward.

"This is the Spynet Sphere." Jason explains. "I built it only a bit over a year ago, but it's come in handy in more ways than I ever thought it would. It allows me to keep an eye on the status of almost the entire Milky Way."

Jason points at one monitor.

"Tarus II. This screen watches Neil and follows him wherever he goes."

Then he points at another.

"This one watches Phoebe."

Blinker frowns. "Huh? You're peeping on Neil and Phoebe? Jason! That's screwed up."

"I'm not watching them." Jason says, turning to look at Blinker. "Centurion is. I don't have the time or the attention span to follow 8,000 different points of interest. But an Artificial Intelligence does. If something happens to any important figure, including my wife, I want to know about it immediately."

A deep, robotic voice speaks inside the chamber.

"AFFIRMATIVE. CENTURION IS CONTINUING TO MONITOR THE GALACTIC SITUATION. DO YOU HAVE ANY COMMANDS TO ISSUE, FIRST WORDSMITH?"

Blinker can't help but flinch. Centurion's voice is simply too intimidating. Even Kar appears impressed.

"Tell me about the First Founder's situation." Jason says, turning to the monitors. He gestures toward the only screen in the room that has been placed at eye-level in the center of the floor. "Is he still talking to Hope?"

Blinker and Kar are given quite a shock when that monitor activates, revealing an image of Hope Hiro and Founder Unarin sitting at a table, having a polite chat with one another. They speak as if slowed down by a factor of 250x, each tiny movement of their lips seemingly taking an eternity to complete.

"Seems they are." Jason mutters to himself. "They've been talking for nearly two hours. Centurion, play back the conversation from the spot I placed a marker at, forty-five minutes ago. Replay it at normal-speed for us."

When Centurion follows Jason's command, the video rewinds, providing Jason and the others with a clip of Unarin speaking.

"The Alpha and the Omega lived for an untold number of Eternities in despair. He was alone. Well and truly alone. He contemplated ending his existence. He sometimes raised up civilizations identical to the ones from his formative Cycle, but in the end, they gave him no joy..."

Unarin continues to speak. Jason listens intently, as do the rest, while Unarin begins to reveal some truly shocking Cosmic Truths that Jason may never have heard without the help of the Spynet Sphere.

"You have the ability to spy on the First Founder?" Blinker asks, visibly shocked. "But... but how is that even possible?"

"Wordsmithing." Jason says simply, pausing the video. "I came to realize I have one major deficiency. I lack information. I lack knowledge. These things cannot be easily made up for. I can't just Wordsmith 'brain be smart' to turn myself into Solomon."

He pauses, a look of embarrassment momentarily crossing his face.

"Trust me. I've tried."

Fiona chuckles. "It was worth a shot."

"Y-yeah." Jason laughs awkwardly. "Anyway."

Jason licks his lips. He returns his attention to the Spynet, silencing the dialogue between Hope and Unarin with a wave of his hand.

"Centurion alerts me to important changes in the galactic order. I've been planting Spy Nodes everywhere I can think of, and I still don't feel as if I've hit more than a fraction of the spots I need to. But I did uncover one particularly interesting secret..."

Jason motions with his hands, and the viewscreen shifts to show some truly strange and monstrous creatures, even more powerful and intimidating-looking than Kar was at his prime. These reptilians appear vaguely dinosaur-like, with elongated snouts and mouths filled with teeth. Their hulking, muscular arms and legs end with talons capable of tearing through steel.

"What the heck are those things?" Blinker asks.

"Dolgrimites." Jason says. "I first met them when I was with Unarin. I've been looking into them more carefully and... I think I've uncovered something even the First Founder doesn't know."

Jason massages his chin. He turns to look at the other two.

"The Dolgrimites worship a so-called god named Dolgris. The thing is, I thought it was just some stupid religion, but after doing some investigation, I've come to believe Dolgris might be... more than a mere rumor. I'm not entirely sure, though. The Dolgrimites seem WAY too confident in Dolgris's power for him to be a mere apparition. I'm even beginning to think their Matriarch has met Dolgris in person."

"Alright." Kar says. "So. 'Dolgris.' What is he? Or she."

"I don't know." Jason says slowly. "But... well. I do have a suspicion. I think Dolgris... might be... a dragon."

"A dragon?!" Blinker asks, her eyes widening. "Are you sure?"

"No. Not at all. I've searched everywhere." Jason explains. "After observing Mephisto's ascension to Demon Deity, and after listening to Unarin's description of Cosmic Entities... I feel as though a Dragon being alive is a bit unrealistic. Considering dragons historically shared power between themselves, and considering I thought Leviathan was the last dragon, it would mean that after his death, if there was even one more dragon, Leviathan's power would have transferred to that one."

Jason directs a serious, solemn gaze at Blinker and Kar.

"If there really was a dragon still alive, he would probably be twice as powerful as Leviathan. He'd be way mightier than the Archangels when they became the Cherubiim. It wouldn't even be close. Yet I can't detect a trace of cosmic power."

Jason shrugs.

"So, I'm beginning to wonder if the Dolgrimites are just completely deluded. They believe fervently Dolgris is alive, but maybe he's not."

Blinker sighs, feeling some tension disappear.

"Maybe Dolgris was alive in the past." She says. "Maybe he died a long time ago. The Dolgrimites may have only been fooled by their Matriarch into believing he's still protecting them."

"That's my theory as well." Fiona affirms. "I find it extremely hard to believe Jason's Wordsmithing can't find a whiff of a cosmically-powered dragon. Mephisto's soul is like a lightbulb in the darkness. A living dragon would be more like a supernova, by comparison."

"Yeah. So it's probably all smoke and mirrors." Jason says. "Still. I'm thinking about telling Unarin. Better to be safe than sorry."

Blinker scrunches up her face.

"Hmm. I wouldn't be so sure about that, Jason."

Kar nods. "Hurgh. Same, Turtle. Do not be so eager to act."

"Oh? You two have a different idea?" Jason asks.

Blinker and Kar share a knowing look, then return their gazes to the Wordsmith.

"Knowledge is power." Blinker explains. "You know something Unarin either does not know, or might not know. The more tidbits you have in your pocket, the more power you have over him. That can translate to leverage in the future."

Kar nods. "Besides. Big Head is certainly not stupid. He runs the entire Volgrim Empire. Do you think he has not investigated these Dolgrimites? I bet he has Changeling spies there, working for him."

Fiona nods. "Unarin may already have guessed what Dolgris is. He just wouldn't tell you, Jason."

"That's true." Jason says. "Unarin is the type of guy to deceive someone through a lie of omission. His Administrator, Muuxunuu, seems to believe Unarin would never lie, but I'm not so sure."

Jason pauses.

"Speaking of Changelings. I still don't have a reliable way to sniff them out. I've been investigating their hierarchies through my Spynet, and I've uncovered lots of details regarding how they-"

"ALERT." Centurion suddenly booms, his voice violently interrupting Jason mid-sentence. "EXTREME COSMIC ENERGY SIGNATURE DETECTED IN THE MILKY WAY. ANGELIC AURA MANIFESTED. ASSUMED IDENTITY: ARCHANGEL."

Jason coughs, swallowing his words. He spins to face the monitor, rapidly taking in the data being displayed.

"What? What the hell?!" Jason asks, as he swiftly starts searching the monitors for the creature. "Centurion, where is this entity? Show me!"

Centurion's monitors light up, revealing a blinding white light touching down on the surface of Numaria. Mephisto's soul, formerly incredible by Jason's previous standards, immediately becomes drowned out by the unfathomable power radiating from this newly appeared entity.

Jason zooms in on the scene, but he becomes baffled when Centurion's 'camera' node teleports to the angelic-class entity, yet is unable to resolve the angel's face.

Instead, as if distorted by power from a higher dimension, the camera's viewport becomes drowned out by this new arrival's cosmic energy.

"Clarify!" Jason shouts. "Resolve! Sharpen! What the hell? Why can't I get a good look at the angel's face? Who is this?"

He scrutinizes the entity on the monitor, but no matter what Jason tries, he can't resolve the camera's visuals. Even their body appears indistinct, like a blob of light.

At that moment, Centurion alerts Jason to a galaxy-wide broadcast from the heart of the Volgrim Empire. Unarin begins speaking, his voice agonizingly slow and ponderous.

The one-minute broadcast takes two hundred and fifty long minutes to conclude. Jason spends much of that time trying to obtain a visual on the Archangel, but he continuously fails, despite his best efforts.

"Fucking hell!" Jason exclaims. "What is going ON out there?! Do I have to walk up and say 'hi' to the Archangel in person?"

"I wouldn't." Fiona immediately replies. "This timing is too coincidental. Don't you find it odd, Jason? Mephisto starts rampaging, and then an unknown Archangel materializes out of thin air?"

The Wordsmith listens to his wife. He stops talking, calms down, and begins to think.

"An unknown Archangel." Jason says slowly. "In the history of angelkind, there were nine of them. But two of them were killed by Michael during the Primordial Era. For one to suddenly appear here, now..."

His expression darkens.

"...Did Raphael lie to us again? Is it possible Cassiel or Muriel survived in secret?"

"It seems unlikely..." Fiona mutters, though she sounds far from certain.

Everyone falls silent. They watch for tens of minutes while the situation outside proceeds at a speed unbelievably slower than their patience can endure.

"Let's keep an eye on the situation for now." Jason says quietly. "I want to see how things shake out. We'll pay careful attention to Raphael, Unarin, and Mephisto's movements."

"That sounds like a good decision to me." Fiona replies.

Part 504: Jason's Experiments

Jason moves quickly and efficiently. With Fiona's help, he manages to piece together a solution to his dilemma. It takes him a while, but thanks to how much faster time revolves inside Chrona, less than a minute passes in the real world before Jason finally works out a way to bypass the ancient angel's cosmic energy.

He resolves the 'camera' image, allowing him to finally get a good look at her.

"Huh? Who the hell?" Jason asks, invisible question marks popping up over his head. "I was almost expecting to see Camael. Who is that old-lady angel? And how did she appear?"

The Wordsmith squints at the image. He watches as the angel gazes up at the sky, seemingly dazed and confused. The world around her appears to have been recently annihilated, and it doesn't take a genius to figure out Mephisto was the culprit. Jason picks out Mephisto's slowly-slinking-away figure as he tries to evade the angel's notice.

Fiona shrugs. "I've never seen her before. But neither of us are experts at identifying angels."

"Me neither." Blinker chimes in, while Kar silently nods. "Maybe we should ask Raphael?"

"Hah. I don't think so." Jason mutters. "No way I'd trust him to tell me straight. Identify!"

He casts a Word of Power, aiming it across the intergalactic reaches of space at the angel on his monitor.

But he expresses shock when his Word of Power fails to produce any results. In his Mind's Eye, a single word appears.

Unknown.

"...Unknown?" Jason repeats quietly. "My Word of Power can't identify her?"

The First Wordsmith scrunches up his face in thought. He ponders the implications of the events slowly unfolding in realspace.

"This angel's magic is insanely powerful. I can't identify her. I even had trouble getting a look at her face. It's like she's ascended to a level where her very existence breaks the rules of reality."

"Let's refer to her by a codename for now." Fiona suggests. "How about 'Camilla'? It's simple. Kinda sounds like Camael."

"Sure, sure." Jason mutters absentmindedly. "Camilla, it is."

Jason keys several buttons, rewinding time so he can see the events before Anaelle materialized on Numaria. While he may not know who she is, in his eyes, her sudden arrival can't be a coincidence.

He receives his answer.

"...Bael? He summoned Camilla? But how?"

Jason rewatches Bael's summoning ritual, becoming more and more confused as he tries to figure out what the heck Bael was thinking.

"He kept calling out to Satan. Why would he do that? Satan's dead, isn't he?"

Jason glances at his mind-wife.

"Isn't he?"

Fiona raises an eyebrow. "Why are you looking at ME like that? I only know what Samantha told me. Satan crumbled to dust in her arms. It's possible his soul completely perished. It may not have even entered the Great Beyond. As far as 'dead' goes, Satan should be a tier below even that."

Blinker coughs. "Erm, you know Bael is a colossal moron, right? Maybe he was just begging Satan to save him in his last moments. He probably went crazy from fear."

Kar nods. "Hurgh. Thick-Skin is an even bigger idiot than Turtle. He is incapable of using magic. I find it hard to believe he could summon Satan or this Archangel."

"That's a... good point." Jason says hesitantly. "Not the part about me being stupid. The other one. But anyway..."

He pauses to collect his thoughts.

"This probably has nothing to do with Bael. He doesn't have any magical abilities. If we rewind a bit earlier, he was getting slapped around by Mephisto. Someone else must have conjured Camilla."

Time continues to progress at a snail's pace. Jason and the others brainstorm for a bit, but they don't come any closer to uncovering the truth.

"It can't be Bael." Jason emphatically concludes. "He's too dumb to use magic. Maybe this angel was in hiding, and Mephisto's 'ascension' woke her up."

"Or maybe Raphael had another trick up his sleeve." Fiona points out.

"Yeah. You might be right." Jason says, feeling suspicious.

"Look!" Blinker exclaims. "Camilla is about to talk to Bael!"

Everyone falls silent. An agonizingly slow discussion begins to take place in realspace. With a single minute of dialogue between Bael and Camilla taking 250 minutes to complete, Jason's group can't help but start to grow bored as they wait.

"Christ. Time acceleration is usually fantastic most of the time." Jason complains. "But at times like these, it's like we're watching a movie in super-slow-mo."

Two minutes in the real world. Five hundred inside Chrona.

Put another way, two minutes in realspace takes nearly eight and a half hours for Jason's group to see play out in their frames of reference.

Blinker yawns.

"Hey, um, Jason? This is suuuper exciting and all, but Kar and I need to get back to our kids, so..."

"Oh! Sure, no problem." Jason says, suddenly feeling silly for forgetting. "Don't worry. Fiona and I have this under control."

"Awesome. Thanks." Blinker says with a smile.

"We will speak later, Turtle." Kar grunts, giving Jason a light swat on the back. "Hurgh. I look forward to the exosuit project you're working on. It would be nice to walk again, even if it is only for pretend. Having my legs dangle below me is a bit... embarrassing."

"I've got you, buddy. Don't even worry." Jason says, smiling warmly at his best friend. "See you two later."

* * *

After Blinker and Kar leave, Jason and Fiona resume their observation. Fiona ends up fiddling idly with her experiments, not wanting to spend too much time observing the angel when she could review that footage in a few days instead.

As for Jason, he begins flipping around his different observation nodes, looking for activity from the prominent creatures he's learned to keep an eye on.

With only a few minutes having passed since Anaelle's revival, the Dolgrimites have not yet reacted.

Founder Unarin certainly has. He sends out a galaxy-wide broadcast, alerting all the Volgrim-controlled worlds to the so-called Apex Cosmic's existence, a term that makes Jason feel uneasy.

Hmm. Jason thinks. Even when the Archangels merged into the Cherubiim, they didn't possess a fraction of 'Camilla's' power. They looked like a lightbulb hovering beside a star, and that star is this sister of theirs. Could she be a creature from the Primordial Era?

Jason hesitantly comes to the conclusion that Anaelle probably didn't 'revive,' but rather, she was in hiding for all these eons and has only chosen now to reveal herself.

But why now? Jason wonders. Because of Mephisto? She doesn't seem to care about him at all. And she looks confused. Wait, what is Bael telling her?

Jason rewinds the last minute of realspace broadcasting time. He gets a good listen as Bael begins to feed Anaelle some of the most outrageous lies he has ever heard.

"What the fuck?! Bael, you piece of shit!" Jason exclaims. "The dragons killed the angels, my ass! It was the DEMONS! Who gave you the guts to lie so smoothly? And here I thought you were a good guy!"

Jason fumes. He rages. He curses at the monitor, shouting all sorts of profanities at the slowly-enunciating Bael, who obviously doesn't hear a single thing the Wordsmith is shouting.

But eventually, Jason calms down.

"Whatever. It won't be hard to convince 'Camilla' of the truth later on. Bael's just trying to save his skin. He wants her to chase after and kill Mephisto. Considering the beating Mephisto gave Crow- wait, where is Crow anyway?"

Realizing he forgot to pay full attention to the happenings on Numaria over the past week or so, Jason 'rewinds' the footage, skimming through it to pay attention to how Crow and Mephisto's battle played out.

But when he does... he receives a terrible shock.

"HOLY SHIT!!! Fiona! FIONA! Get in here!!"

Fiona, only a building over, hastily drops what she is doing and barges into the Spynet Sphere, visibly startled. "What is it? What happened, Jason?"

"Mephisto! He fucking- he merged his body! He ascended using the bones of a DRAGON!" Jason shouts, his eyes widened in horror. "And not just any dragon. Leviathan! We thought those bones were destroyed, but they weren't! In fact, they became even more durable after the Polaris Supernova washed over them!"

Jason replays two minutes of footage for his mind-wife. She frowns deeply, disturbed by the implications.

"That's alarming." Fiona mutters. "His body must be practically indestructible by now."

"Founder Unarin called Camilla an Apex Cosmic." Jason points out. "We shouldn't underestimate her. She might be able to beat a dragon's ass."

"We'll find out soon enough." Fiona says. "Look."

Jason and his wife watch as they return to the real-time feed, where Mephisto leaps away and races off into the distance, fleeing for his life. Even with time slowed to a snail's pace, Jason feels impressed, and a little frightened, by Mephisto's pace.

"Even a bottom tier Cosmic Entity like Mephisto is still unbelievably strong." Jason says. "How much more powerful is Camilla, by comparison?"

Eventually, even Jason grows tired of watching the events on the monitor play out. He maintains contact for a full day, but that only amounts to a few minutes of realspace time. He activates Centurion's active alert mode in case the situation drastically changes, then he returns to his work outside the Spynet.

Fiona has two dozen projects she's been working on. So does Jason.

Together, the two of them have made a surprising amount of headway in their respective projects.

Jason heads into his lab alone. He travels underground, to a bunker-laboratory reinforced with Wordsmithium, walls capable of protecting against a nuclear blast. The walls glow bright enough to provide more than enough illumination as needed, a product of his Wordsmithing.

Jason isn't here to make any serious headway today.

In fact, he's only here to pass some time as he waits for the battle between Anaelle and Mephisto to come to a resolution. There's no way he can focus enough to do any real research with his stomach threatening to jump out of his throat.

Once he closes the bunker door, Jason plops down in a rolling chair off to the side of the room. Dozens of half-finished projects litter the floor, consisting of various magical devices he's experimented with over the past six months.

He wheels his chair over to a large anvil made of Wordsmithium. On that anvil, a two-foot longsword rests across its length, the blade and hilt's appearance both deceptively ordinary.

Jason picks up the sword.

A crossguard separates the hilt from the blade. This sword's crossguard takes the form of feathery, bird-like wings, colored red to match with the crimson blade and hilt. Embedded at the bottom of the hilt, a shining green gem contains a shocking amount of mana visible to the naked eye.

Jason smiles at the sword.

"Phoenix. How are you doing today?"

He releases his grip on the sword, but instead of clattering to the ground, it levitates into the air, and a projection of energy begins to swirl around it.

Seconds later, the figure of a red-haired little girl pops into existence. This girl, a human-like embodiment of the Phoenix, waves at Jason.

"Hey, friend! Cheeeeurp!" The Phoenix says. "I was sleeping, but I'm awake now! Are we going to play?!"

"Sure. I've got time." Jason says with a smile.

The Phoenix levitates away from Jason, her blade hidden by her child-sized body. She casually spins 360 degrees in the air, turning upside-down, then rotating back around once again.

"Whee!"

Jason conjures a ball of light in his hands. He tosses it toward the Phoenix, and she lifts her palm in return.

Slap!

"Haat!"

The Phoenix bats the ball back to Jason, who stands up and slaps it right back at her.

Then she slaps it back to him, laughing happily as she gets to engage in a bit of play with the Wordsmith.

"Think fast!" Jason shouts, slapping the ball off to the side, far from the Phoenix's current position.

Instantly, the Phoenix flickers into the orb's path and bats it toward Jason, but at a tricky angle low to the ground.

Jason kicks his foot at the orb, but he narrowly misses, and the ball hits the floor.

"Hah hah!" The Phoenix proclaims smugly. "I win again! I always win! I'm the best! Neener-neener!"

Jason throws his hands up and sighs dramatically. "Damn! How are you so good at this game? I can't ever beat you, it seems!"

"Maybe if you practice for a bajillion years, you'll win someday! Hehehehe!"

Jason pats the Phoenix on the head. "I should bring Shana here to play sometime. Why don't you go hang with Blinker and Kar's kids until then, huh?"

"Okay! Bye-bye then, friend!" The Phoenix chirps.

The apparition of a little girl fades away, transforming back into the crimson sword. She teleports out of the room, leaving Jason alone once more.

The Wordsmith smiles. Then his expression turns serious.

"Recall." Jason says.

Abruptly, a dark-skinned woman wearing only a furred bra and a loincloth appears in the room, just a stone's throw from Jason. Intricate white tribal tattoos and war-paint follow the contours of her body, matching the color of her waist-length hair and giving her a ferocious but alluring appearance.

"Hm? Oh, Jason Hiro. Can I help you?" The woman asks.

"Brunhilda." Jason says to the leader of the Felorians, smiling at her. "I finished that work I told you about last time. I'm ready to begin the experiments. Have you picked out any candidates for me?"

Brunhilda straightens her back, assuming a professional posture. She candidly meets the Wordsmith's gaze with an equally fierce one.

"I have six people I can recommend." She states. "As requested, three of them have had their bodies strengthened to the maximum through the Belial Booster. The others have not yet used it to enhance themselves."

"And what about you?" Jason asks, directing an appreciative gaze toward her six-pack abs, as well as her arms and thighs. "You look like you've hit your limit, too."

"I have." Brunhilda says neutrally. "You like what you see? I took you for a faithful man."

"There's no lust in my gaze. I love my wife far too much to ever cheat." Jason chuckles lightly. "But hey. I'm a guy. You look great. And you also look like you could twist me into a pretzel. I respect that."

Brunhilda exposes a toothy smile.

"Let's get down to business, Wordsmith. I am very much looking forward to this experiment of yours. If it makes me stronger, I will worship the ground you walk upon."

"No need for any of that. I'm only a man blessed with the powers of a god, not God himself." Jason says, taking a seat in his rolling chair. "Let's start with a few possible tests of my powers. Who should I invite here?"

Brunhilda quickly rattles off a half-dozen names of women from her tribe. Jason teleports all of them into the underground laboratory, startling them. But when they hear from their leader why they've been summoned, each one becomes visibly more eager to go along with Jason's wishes.

"All hail the Wind Mother!" One of the Felorians cries out happily. "Wordsmith, I am Sariah. I have long followed your path! You are truly a child of the Wind Mother!"

Jason coughs awkwardly. "Sure, uh, thanks. So, let's start by looking at the options, alright, ladies?"

All seven Felorians quiet down, waiting to hear what Jason has to say.

"To date, I have only made the Belial Booster and the Beauty Booster." Jason explains. "But it has recently come to my attention that I've been overlooking the more metaphysical aspects of humanity. Humans are inherently capable of wielding magic, like the demons and angels. We're simply… a little bit deficient. We have a harder time getting off the launching pad and into the air, so to speak."

He continues. "The Power Gloves have had a surprising effect on their users. People have slowly become capable of keeping the abilities used by their highest-compatibility transformations. Recently, I found out Samuel Baker perished to Mephisto, but when he revived as one of The Respected, he had become capable of permanently maintaining his Fairy Magic."

Jason looks at the faces of the seven beautiful women standing before him.

"I've decided to try and develop other metaphysical ways of empowering humans. And you Felorians are the ideal test subjects, because you already possess certain magical capabilities."

Brunhilda nods.

She glances around the room, spots a long pole sitting against a wall, and picks it up. The pole starts to glow as she channels her Qi into it, empowering it with a bit of magical energy.

"We Felorians can temporarily strengthen ourselves to become capable of battling Demon Barons." She explains. "Higher strength, swifter speed, and more acute senses. For myself, I've become even stronger after reaching my limits with the Belial Booster. I might even be able to fight a Demon Duke for a short while."

"Good, good. That's good." Jason says three times in approval. "So, here are three things I'd like to try to boost your abilities further."

"First, I want to place 'enchantments' onto your bodies, minds, and souls, with the intent of leaving them there permanently. I need to know what sorts of effects this will have on each of you."

"Second, I want to try giving a few of you powerful artifacts I've made. They may or may not be capable of resonating with you, and slowly improving your power over time."

"Third, I'd like to try and turn the rest into pseudo-Wordsmiths. Or rather, give you powers that would allow you to 'upgrade' the abilities of other people."

Jason observes the excitement on their faces before continuing.

"In the future, I want to be able to travel around the Milky Way without fearing some bullshit will hit Tarus II and kill my species without me being able to react in time. If I'm not here, humanity needs to be able to defend itself. Not only from Demons, or the Volgrim... but from the Plague as well."

The Felorians become noticeably less excited. Their emotions turn dull as they remember the horror stories that they've heard from the Hell of Isolation's remnant survivors. The massacre at Sharmur was not one the demons have downplayed in the slightest.

"Will you do all three on each of us?" Brunhilda asks, changing the subject.

"No. Since you've brought me six subjects, I'll try boosting two girls at a time with one effect each."

Jason points at one of the three girls who has not been enhanced by the Belial Booster. Then he points at a girl who has.

You two. I'm going to enhance your reaction speeds permanently. I'm going to also try and enhance your thinking speeds, your vision, and some other attributes. What I want to know is if you will suffer any negative effects over the next week, month, or year. I suspect the stronger of you will have fewer negative effects happen, but then again the opposite might occur. Perhaps by entering the Belial Booster you've 'used up' some of your body's natural limiters, so you might become exhausted more easily. I don't know."

Jason points at another two of the woman.

"I've only made two artifacts so far, and I don't know if there will be any 'compatibility' issues, but I want you to try training with them. Practice using them in combat, try meditating with them, do other stuff. I theorize that human souls are surprisingly malleable and you might be able to pull off some neat tricks if you can synergize with these artifacts well."

Then he points at the final two Felorians.

"I'm... not entirely sure how I'll give you two 'upgrading' abilities. I think I'll need to muck around with your souls, but... let's call this a longer term project."

He finishes his speech.

"In conclusion, the six of you are going to stay here, on Chrona. You will train and practice in this time-accelerated realm, trying to quickly improve your capabilities. If we're lucky... maybe a miracle will occur. Maybe I'll figure out new ways to strengthen human civilization through your combined efforts."

Brunhilda thumbs her collarbone. "What about me? Don't I get any fancy new abilities?"

Jason shrugs. "Sure. What do you want?"

"Power." She replies immediately, without hesitation. "Enhance my body. Enhance my soul. Do anything you want. I will go along with even your most wicked experiments."

Jason blinks, slightly surprised. He glances at the other six women, none of whom take any notice of Brunhilda's odd words.

"Uhh. I mean, sure I guess..." Jason says slowly. "But that seems a little extreme. Why are you so desperate?"

Brunhilda snorts air from her nose. "I am a Felorian. Compared to other humans, I am strong. But compared to a Demon Duke, I am still weak. In the past, the demons... took advantage of that fact. They liked that we were stronger, more difficult to 'break.' They derived pleasure from... hurting us. It was a game to them. I never want to suffer such humiliation or degradation again."

The atmosphere in the room becomes noticeably heavier.

The other Felorian women, including Sariah, gently touch their leader's arm, looking at her with sympathy.

"We have all suffered." Brunhilda says quietly, lowering her gaze. "That is why I must ask of you not to abandon humanity, or to broadly accept the demons. They are evil, Jason Hiro. They are creatures filled with rapacious greed and desire. They may hide their claws for a time, but they will always seek to pursue their own interests. I only hope that you shall do the same for your species, us humans."

Jason remains quiet for a time.

Then, he nods.

"You know... I've been having similar thoughts, lately."

Part 505: Jason's Decision

Three time-accelerated hours later.

Jason Hiro departs his laboratory, satisfied with the start of this new strain of research on empowering the Felorians. After building them a small dwelling on the northern side of Chrona's main city, he finds himself with a surprisingly rare moment of free time.

Alone time.

As he steps out of his underground laboratory into the open air, the First Wordsmith feels a slight sense of disorientation. He glances around, realizing there isn't anyone at all in the immediate vicinity.

No birds chirp in the sky.

No wind blows in this false reality.

Instead, a pure, almost oppressive silence hangs in the air.

The Wordsmith stands in place, looking up at the slowly-swirling Void Barrier surrounding the Chrona domain. He enjoys the fact that there aren't any voices talking in his head, not even his mind-wife, Fiona. She's performing important work in her specialized lab.

The Phoenix is off playing with Kar and Blinkers' children.

The Archangels haven't been around for several years.

Even Shana and Lorent are on Tarus II...

The Wordsmith is well and truly alone. This thought makes him feel a strange relief.

Quietly, he walks toward the southern edge of Chrona's main city. He travels past the last building, and then continues to walk.

For fifteen minutes, he plods along until he reaches the edge of Chrona's great forest, where he quietly summons himself a pair of angelic wings, then flies over the foliage into the center of the forest. He mutters a few Words of Power to create a soft bed atop that tree, then he plunks onto his back with a sigh, using his feathery wings like a pillow.

Once more, silence takes him.

Jason lays on his back with his hands on his stomach. He gazes up at the sky, his eyes becoming unfocused.

It's been so long. Jason thinks. I've had voices in my head for years now. I've even started to feel like I have to perform for others. Live a life for others. Act in a play for others.

He sighs softly.

I have so many enemies. And they're all smarter than me. Ose, Unarin, Gressil, Raphael, even Marie.

Jason mentally slots the last two into the 'enemy' category purely because he doesn't see them as true allies, but situational companions. He intuitively feels they're simply using him for his power, and that if he didn't wield the power of Wordsmithing, they'd step on him like an ant.

They're not innately good people.

At least Ose's finally gone. Jason thinks. But now Mephisto is on the loose. Gorn seems pretty intelligent. Auger is going behind my back to try and steal Mephisto's power... he could become a problem in the future.

Naturally, thanks to his Spynet, Jason has not overlooked the events which transpired in Auger's 'secret' meeting with the other Emperors. He overheard everything Auger said, and thus knew well in advance that Mephisto might awaken.

Even so, Jason did nothing.

He simply continued to observe events in the greater galaxy from the comfort of his time-accelerated domain.

Over these last two and a half years, the Wordsmith has had two hundred and fifty times more time to think than he usually does. The galaxy outside crawls along at a snail's pace, giving him weeks to ruminate where before he'd have less than an hour.

His mindset has begun to subtly shift.

He thinks about his dead daughter.

He thinks about all the times he's failed humanity.

He thinks about his laziness, his morals, and what sort of a person he's ultimately become.

What am I? What is a 'Wordsmith'? Jason ponders. Should I empower myself to become a beacon of strength? Should I uplift humanity to fight their own battles? Should I do anything at all?

Jason recalls Marie Becker's anger toward him when they first spoke.

Marie seemed to have a plan, a plan that I mucked up by flippantly using my abilities. There was a delicate balance between humanity, the demons, and the Volgrim, along with the Plague slowly creeping toward the Milky Way's interior. Have I accelerated the Milky Way's demise by thrusting myself into a situation I knew nothing about?

His expression becomes troubled. He closes his eyes to think more deeply.

It doesn't seem as if the Volgrim have any way to stop the Plague. It's too prolific, too difficult to destroy or slow down. It consumes entire worlds, turning every creature living within into new Plaguehosts. It's like a zombie virus on steroids…

Then there's that touch of Chaos within each Plaguehost. Could Gressil have something to do with the Plague? What about Glinch? Perhaps the Volgrim lied to me, and they were in fact the creators of the Plague? Unarin could be playing the long-con. But then again, maybe it really is from another galaxy…

The Wordsmith lifts his hand up to massage his forehead. A trickling sense of dread clutches at the bottom of his brain, making him feel dizzy.

What am I supposed to DO? Something? Anything? Nothing at all?? Do I empower the demons? Genocide their species? Leave them to their own devices? What about humanity? Am I being presumptuous by simply asking these questions? Do I deserve to have any say when I did nothing to earn my powers in the first place?

Jason's thoughts increase in intensity.

What does it mean to be 'moral'? Am I a moral man? I killed a million demons in a fit of rage because of my daughter's death. I can never bring them back from the dead.

But the demons DESERVED to die. They attacked humanity! They killed my daughter! Shouldn't I have the right to kill them? Maybe they should learn not to PISS me off!

He pauses his thoughts for a moment, causing their intensity to die down.

Maybe I've been going at this the wrong way, all along. Maybe the 'no killing' thing is stupid. Maybe Hope, of all people, has the right idea. But I don't like the wanton way he goes about it. He slaughtered an entire planet of Volgrim, for Christ's sake! There has to be some sort of in-between...

Jason sits up. He rests his elbows on his knees and hunches over, falling deep into thought.

Have I been too childish in my way of thinking? It seems that way. This is a violent future I've fallen into. It's survive or die. I need to adapt my ethics.

Batman has a no-killing rule. But he's a fictional character. He's a literal cartoon. What if I simply... decided not to kill 'in general'? What if I decided only to kill if I felt the situation required it?

The Wordsmith raises his eyebrows.

That would sure help me rest a little easier at night. Some demons deserve to die. Why should I go out of my way to spare every little bastard who needs a beatdown? What if I simply do as I please, based solely on how it feels, morally? Why should I twist myself into knots worrying about some evil dickhead who kills children for fun?

Jason's thoughts sharpen as he realizes the crux of the issue.

I don't need a 'code.' I need to do what's right. Usually, that means sparing someone. But other times, it doesn't. My entire species is counting on me. I can't afford to worry so much about my enemies when they sure as hell won't worry about me.

The Wordsmith relaxes. He plunks back on the bed and sighs.

That's it, then. No more fucking around. If a demon wants to cause trouble, I'll punish him. And if a demon kills someone, I need to set an example. I need to start acting more ruthlessly. My enemies need to learn to respect me, or at the least, to fear me.

Hope kills demons because that's what Neil told him to do. I will kill them only if I feel it's deserved. There's a difference.

Jason closes his eyes and smiles, feeling strangely content with his thoughts for the first time in ages.

An hour passes as he dozes off.

Five hours.

Eight...

Eventually, Jason blinks his eyes open, returning to reality. He yawns and pops his back, checking the time with a Word of Power.

About two minutes have passed in real-time. Jason thinks, sitting up in his tree-canopy bed. Hmm. Hope's imminent arrival caused the Volgrim to evacuate their homeworld. Then the 'Apex Cosmic' made them panic even more. It seems the Volgrim are in disarray right now.

He smiles faintly, a wicked gleam in his eye.

Once we deal with Mephisto... maybe I should take advantage of the situation, eh?

On the world of Numaria, Bael remains behind after Anaelle's departure. Bored, and not sure of where the heck everyone else went, he starts wandering back toward Glinch's laboratory, only to pause when he spots the Stitched Emperor in the distance.

"Yo! Glinch, what's up, man?" Bael asks, waving at the somewhat baffled-looking multi-limbed monster.

Glinch stares at Bael warily, no longer willing to take the so-called 'dumb goof' lightly. On the ground before him lays Emperor Crow, beaten and battered, unable to move.

"Bael." Glinch says coldly. "Yama told me about you. You seem to have awakened a new ability since your transfer into Ose's body."

He pauses.

"...So how did you accomplish this feat? How are you able to summon horrors from the Primordial Era?"

Bael pauses his footsteps. He slows to a stop a few hundred feet from Glinch, and his face morphs into a scowl.

"Seriously, bro? That's how you talk about your elders? She wasn't even dressed slutty at all! How dare ya call her a WHORE!"

Glinch's wary expression deflates slightly. He realizes Bael is still as big a moron as ever.

"That's not what I- oh, never mind. How are you able to summon dead demons and angels back to life?"

"Oh! Uh. I don't got any clue." Bael says, shrugging. "They can't be all THAT dead though, right? Grandma was walkin' and talkin' just fine. Silly Glinch, mixin' up dead people with not-dead people. Hehe."

Bael's gaze falls to Crow's body.

"So uh. What'cha gonna do with Crow? Seems like she went on quite the bender. She's all sleepy and stuff!"

Glinch doesn't answer for a few seconds. He mulls over the last thirty minutes worth of happenings, unsure of how to proceed. If Bael can summon insanely powerful creatures from ancient times, then he's become a real threat.

But at the same time, he's also become... valuable.

That's right. Bael's value has increased immensely, perhaps even beyond Mephisto, the weakest Cosmic in the Milky Way.

Glinch begins to think carefully on how he might convince Bael to collaborate with him.

That is, until Bael's facial expression changes.

The former Duke of Pain scrunches his face together, as if having realized something.

"Hey! Wait a minute! Are you plannin' to hurt Crow? Cuz that AIN'T okay, buddy! You sick fucker, you were thinkin' about trickin' me, weren't you?!"

Huh? Glinch thinks. Why did Bael suddenly put the dots together? That isn't like him at all.

"Ah, ehehe..." Glinch laughs softly. "I'm thinking of abandoning my prior field of research. Your ability seems... much more interesting. It has a great deal of untapped potential."

"So you ain't gonna hurt Crow?" Bael asks, his expression suspicious.

"No. Not anymore." Glinch says. "Here. You can take her."

He nudges Crow's collapsed body with one of his multiple feet, then carefully steps backward, putting distance between himself and Bael. All the while, he keeps his senses locked on the extremely faint but still-perceivable cosmic energy signatures of the 'Archangel' Bael summoned, as well as Mephisto.

For his part, Bael walks over to Crow and kneels down.

"Yo. Crow. Wake up, sleepy."

He slaps her across the face, but she doesn't respond.

"Crowww! C'mon girl, wake up, haha. Nap time's over."

Slap, slap!

Inside Bael's mind, Ose growls in annoyance.

[Bael. She's not SLEEPING. She was BEATEN UNCONSCIOUS.]

"Sounds made-up." Bael mutters under his breath. "Silly Ose. You can't grow a conscience from beating your meat."

Ose rages at him again, unable to handle his stupidity, while Glinch continues to keep watch from a distance.

Hmm. Glinch thinks to himself. All my Chimera are dead. Mephisto is going to die to the Archangel. Then she'll come back and kill me. What to do, what to do...?

Glinch frowns. He lifts his head to look into the distance, where he becomes surprised to see all the Emperors who fled Numaria returning to the Stitched Wasteland, visible confusion on their faces.

Bael notices their arrival mere seconds after Glinch, though this is only because Ose alerts him to the unexpected circumstance.

"Huh?" Bael says, standing up and turning around to look at the approaching Emperors. "Ohh! There you guys are! Man, I must've had some bad gas while I was conked out for y'all to ditch me like that, hehe."

With Glinch's chimera all dead, the spatial turbulence in the area has dropped precipitously. The Emperors arrive through one of Yardrat's portals, glancing around in confusion as they sense the unmistakable remnants of holy energy.

"I knew it." Serena says. "I sensed the sudden appearance of an Archangel on Numaria. Bael, what happened while we were gone?"

Glinch remains in the same spot, unworried about the other Emperors attacking him. Considering the value he's demonstrated, they'd be fools to want to execute him on the spot, even if they do have bad blood between them at the moment.

Some of the newly ascended Emperors look at him with a mixture of fear, anger, and appreciation. If it weren't for his 'miracle pills,' they might never have ascended to Emperor, or it might have taken much longer even with the help of the Belial Booster.

Glinch says nothing, opting to leave the explanation to Bael. As expected, Bael is all too happy to tell the others what 'really' happened.

"Aw man, it was so crazy, you guys!" Bael exclaims. "So I was sitting over there on that rock, right? I was doing like I always do, scratching my butt, pulling some dingleberries out-"

Serena crinkles her face in disgust. "You can skip the nasty details, Bael."

"Right, but sometimes they stick to my fingers and don't wipe off easily," Bael enthusiastically explains. "Plus they stink real bad. Like poop, if I'm being honest!"

"Bael. Focus." Yardrat growls. "The Archangel. Why do we sense an Archangel's energy? Did Uriel come to save us?"

Bael shakes his head. "Nah, not Uriel. It was Grandma! Uhh, sorry, I don't remember her name. I called Grandma here to help me out, and she popped over, started beating Mephisto's ass. He'll be toast pretty soon."

The other Emperors, upon hearing it wasn't Uriel who showed up, become visibly more surprised. They murmur amongst one another, exchanging conspiratorial glances.

"Grandma?" Melody repeats quietly. "Bael always called Camael that. Has she revived too?"

"Must be the case." Kristoff affirms. "She's found some way to Ascend to the highest reaches of power. But why would she help us?"

Emperor Serena massages her chin as she talks with the other Emperors. "Remember? We gave Ose Camael's ring, shortly after the Energy Wars. We never told the Volgrim, either. This must be part of Ose's contingency plans. She befriended Camael, or found a way to force her to work for her, like Glinch did with Mephisto."

Yardrat nods. "It all fits perfectly. Bael's always going on about Ose-this, Ose-that. Maybe Ose left contingency plans for him, too. That's why he has that fancy armor. It's all interlinked."

"Have you noticed?" Melody asks in a hushed voice. "Bael's been acting a bit smarter, recently. He really pitched in during the fight against Glinch's chimeras. You think maybe Ose worked a little magic on him? Maybe some techno-whatsamajigger tool? She injected his brain with something special?"

"Could be." Yardrat nods. "But it's funny... he's an Emperor now, right? He's properly ascended? Yet I haven't the faintest idea what title he should have. I look at him, and I don't hear the 'voice' in my head."

"It does feel weird to keep calling him the Duke of Pain when he's an Emperor now..." Serena says slowly. "Let's wait and see. Maybe his proper title will formulate once he makes bigger moves, like Gressil's did."

While the other Emperors debate among one another, Bael stands awkwardly in the distance, scratching his head.

"The heck are those guys mumbling about?" He wonders.

Yardrat eventually pulls away from the group to walk toward Bael.

"Bael. We owe you a great debt. Ose clearly put a lot of trust into you. I look forward to seeing what you will accomplish as you better integrate into her body."

Bael blinks. "Uhh... right. Well, thanks for the nice words, bud. So what do we do about Glinch?"

Bael jerks a thumb behind himself to point in Glinch's general direction.

The Stitched Emperor remains standing, fearless and unbothered by the return of the other fifty Emperors.

"Glinch..." Yardrat says coldly, walking past Bael to approach the Stitched Emperor. "Your plan failed. Now you've pissed us all off."

Glinch rolls his eyes. "I lost one gambit. BIG DEAL! Hah. Mephisto will die, and that's that. But when that Archangel returns, do you actually think she'll let you all live?"

"She's on our side." Yardrat says confidently, having 'figured out the truth' about 'Camael.' "Ose planned this all out from the beginning. Even dead, she still works tirelessly to protect our species."

Bael raises an eyebrow as he looks at Yardrat's back. "Eh? Ose ain't dead, man. I can still talk to her."

Yardrat directs a soft look toward his poor, deluded brother, a demon suffering from grief. "...Of course she is, Bael. I must have used the wrong word accidentally."

"Oh, okay!" Bael says, giving Yardrat a huge thumbs up. "As long as you get it!"

Yardrat's smile becomes more pained as he returns his attention back to Glinch.

Poor Bael. We'll need to place him in grief counseling after this. He must have seen a hologram of Ose and thought she was really alive. He'll need more time to grow that seed of intellect she left for him...

"Anything to say for yourself? Any defense?" Yardrat asks Glinch.

"Pft. None at all." Glinch answers without missing a beat. "Don't even try to threaten me. Kill me or leave! Maybe I'll continue sharing my special Pills if you don't annoy me!"

Yardrat shrugs. "Your gambit nearly worked. You almost killed us. But in the end, you failed. Now our Hells have a tremendous number of newly risen powerhouses. If anything, what happened today was... exceptionally good for demon civilization. I'm in a better mood than I thought I'd be."

"So why are we talking then?" Glinch asks. "Get to the point!"

"I just want to know what Mephisto offered you." Yardrat says. "You elevated him to the apex of power. You turned him into a Demon Deity instead of yourself. Why?"

The other Emperors lean forward, intent on hearing Glinch's reasoning. But he merely scoffs.

"Are you stupid? I'm a scientist! Not some meathead swinging my fifty-fists around!" Glinch proclaims. "I don't care about 'ascending.' Being an Emperor simply makes my abilities more convenient. I'd much rather dispatch an idiot like Mephisto to deal with the mundane matters or to fetch me new research material."

"Right. But why would you elevate him specifically?" Yardrat asks. "Why not one of us? Why not Auger? Are you afraid he might overpower you? Surely, Mephisto must have offered you something."

"Overpower me? BAH!" Glinch laughs. "As if. You think far too highly of that upstart! Auger is nothing to me at all, HAH HAH HAH!"

Glinch pauses.

"As for what Mephisto offered me... that's none of your business! You couldn't offer anything comparable anyway."

"So he did offer you something." Yardrat says. "Try me. Auger's wealth is vast. Surely, outside of the dragonbones themselves, there's no boon Mephisto could grant you that my liege couldn't..."

The other Emperors scowl, realizing Yardrat's plan.

"Hold on a minute! Stop trying to cheat, Yardrat!" Melody shouts. "Plenty of us would like to make our offers too!"

Before anyone else can chime in, Glinch raises seven of his hands. "Shut up, all of you! You wouldn't be able to make it the way we like anyway! Dragonbone and the Sphinx were necessary for the ascension process too, and I doubt you've spares of those lying around! Stop wasting your breath!"

Yardrat blinks. "Wait, what do you mean, 'we wouldn't make it the way you like'? Make what?"

Glinch rolls his eyes. "What else could it be, you insignificant fool? PIZZA, obviously! I told Mephisto if he wanted my help, he'd need to give me a pizza every single day for the next thousand years!"

For a brief moment, all of the Emperors fall silent, digesting this incredibly idiotic piece of information.

"...You're kidding." Yardrat says. "You must be."

"Kidding? Why would I be kidding??" Glinch asks. "He makes it JUST the way I like it! Me and Mephisto go way back!"

"You gave away ultimate cosmic power to Mephisto... for pizza?" Bael asks, as baffled as the rest. "...Well damn! Good trade, Glinch!"

"I know, right??" Glinch asks rhetorically. "Anyway, the deal's done, and I don't want your sloppy, unevenly-cooked pizza. None of you can make it the way I like it except Mephisto. So that's THAT. And I can't elevate you anyway, because I'm fresh out of Sphinxes and Dragonbones. Hmph!"

Yardrat's mind momentarily blanks out from the stupidity of what he's heard. Much like the way Ose has come to know true suffering through co-existing with Bael, Yardrat nearly has a stroke from Glinch's words burrowing into his ear.

But before he can say anything, Glinch lifts his head up to the sky.

"Eh? What's this? She's gone?"

He squints, as if looking at something unseen.

The other Emperors frown, uncertain of what he could be reacting to.

That is, until Glinch begins to smile in a manner most unsettling.

"Oh, dear. The Archangel just vanished. Looks like I WIN after all! HAH HAH HAH."

He tilts his head down to look at the other demons. His pupils dilate ominously.

"Mephisto will return shortly. You'd all better start RUNNING!"

Part 506: Curiosity Killed Mephisto

On the world of Okania, on the westernmost edge of the Milky Way…

Mephisto, the Myriad Deity, levitates in the sky, using Cosmic Energy to effortlessly keep himself aloft.

The 100-foot-tall dragon-demon hybrid stares into the distance, his fear and rage slowly cooling off following the disappearance of Anaelle, the Seraph from a period of history not recorded in any historical ledgers.

He thinks about the fight he just completed, as well as its greater implications.

He begins to hunger for Bael's power…

But, at the same time, he can't help but pause to glance around Okania and notice how drastically it has changed. The Warper whose memories he plundered to open a portal to Okania never knew of it looking like such a beautiful and lush world rich in life. Indeed, as Mephisto looks around, he spots all manner of strange flying creatures far in the distance, and he even detects the sounds of distant animals roaring or making other predatory noises to intimidate their prey.

He lowers his gaze to the crater far below, where he sees a creature he's come to learn of only in recent years. A creature with mottled green skin, lacking any facial features on its face, standing bipedally like any human or demon…

A Kolvaxian.

Mephisto frowns. He levitates downward slowly, not particularly fearing the lone Kolvaxian, but not wanting to take any risks, either.

The Kolvaxian, for its part, 'stares' up at Mephisto with its blank face. Lacking any eyes, or a mouth, or a nose, it subtly creeps Mephisto out, or at least, two of the souls comprising his united mind.

[Eugh…] Lupus says, shivering. [That's a Kolvaxian in the flesh, huh? Disgusting!]

[Boss, maybe we oughta high-tail it outta here, huh?] Zamiel asks.

Yama looks on with interest. [We saw this creature ravage the world of Sharmur. We watched as tens of thousands of Plagueborn yanked humans and demons alike into the bowels of that planet, only to emerge later as Kolvaxians themselves.]

Mephisto strokes his rotten-skinned chin. [Sssomething about it makesss me feel wary. It cannot posssibly possse thisss body a threat, yet it ssstandsss there ssso fearlesssly. Why doesss it not ssshrink back and run away? Why doesss it ssseem ssso... familiar to me?]

The Myriad Deity levitates downward, just a little bit closer...

Abruptly, the Kolvaxian's posture stiffens. It flexes its legs and slightly crouches down, looking at Mephisto as if only now identifying him as a threat.

A faint noise vibrates in the air, like the sound of a distant cicada, but distorted and warped by unknown environmental factors.

Weeeeeee...

Mephisto pauses, his finely-tuned senses easily detecting the oddity. At that moment, a cosmic energy signature materializes deep beneath Okania's surface!

"What?!" Mephisto asks, startled by this intrusion. He freezes in place as that energy signature begins rapidly burrowing toward the surface from deep underground, rushing toward his position.

Lupus's soul turns as cold as ice. "Mephisto, RUN!"

But Mephisto doesn't. He merely levitates backward, keeping his attention trained on the rapidly approaching cosmic signature. His eyes narrow as Okania's surface bursts open and a bipedal figure flies toward him from the dust.

"A Psssion?!" Mephisto asks, startled when he gets his first glimpse at the faceless Kolvaxian racing through the air toward him.

The intrusion into Mephisto's airspace doesn't particularly frighten him, as he recognizes that the level of cosmic energy contained within the rapidly approaching Kolvaxian is only about equal to his own, and perhaps even a little weaker.

The Kolvaxian aims both of its hands forward as it rushes at Mephisto, conjuring electrical energy into its palms.

KZZZAT!!

A bolt of psionic lightning instantly traverses the gap between the combatants, blasting Mephisto's bones before he can react.

But it has no effect on him!

The lightning explodes harmlessly, and Mephisto grins.

"Ssstrong, yesss, capable of killing Emperorsss... BUT NOT THISSS DEITY!"

He waves his hands to release a mighty explosion of Dark Mist, far more powerful than the kind he unleashed when battling humanity's forces. The paradise world experiences total blackness as Mephisto's mist scatters to cover more than a hundred miles of the planet in every direction, from the ground all the way to the upper atmosphere.

Not a single speck of sunlight pierces the magically-imbued fog. But Mephisto's bloodthirsty red eyes do.

He rushes at the Kolvaxian, weaponizing Yama's powers to summon a greatsword of darkness. With Zamiel's perfect control of weapons, he wields it like a legendary warrior and slashes down at the Kolvaxian Psion.

Right before he can slice his opponent in half, the Psion teleports to the side, evading the attack. It follows up by clapping its palms together and blowing away a portion of the mist in the nearby area, creating a small patch where the light can pass through.

"Hm? It'sss weak, but a little sssmarter than we expected..." Mephisto mutters to himself, while continuing to pursue the creature.

He manifests a layer of Qi around his shadow-greatsword, allowing it to remain stable even when he charges back into the light.

Over the next ten seconds, Mephisto executes fifteen slashes, comboing them together while the Psion expertly evades and deflects his attacks. His guard raises with each failed execution, elevating his evaluation of this tricky enemy.

"Why can't we sssimply kill thisss creature?" Mephisto hisses. "DIE ALREADY!"

Mephisto reverses course and races back into his Dark Mist. Once there, he reshapes the greatsword into a plasma cannon, firing off magically-charged bursts of ultra hot liquid-fire at the Psion.

This time, the Psion takes great care to evade his attack, going out of its way to not come into contact with the plasma shots as they race past and bombard the planet below, sparking massive uncontrolled wildfires.

Mephisto does not miss this details.

"Ssso you fear fire, fool? THEN YOU SSSHALL BURN!"

He dissipates the plasma cannon, instead opting to imbue his body with Flaming Qi. A thin barrier of 1000F (537C) flames ignites on his draconic bones as he launches his gigantic body toward the comparatively insignificant speck of a Psion below him.

Mephisto's claws slash outward in huge sweeping moves. He rakes at the Psion, forcing it to continually retreat due to its visible fear of flames.

Within just ten seconds, Mephisto finally lands a powerful blow, smashing his claws against the Psion like a flyswatter against a cockroach.

BOOM!

Mephisto splatters the Kolvaxian in a single strike, sending its bones and organs spraying in all directions!

Just like that, he kills the creature, only exerting himself a little. Compared to the battle against Crow, the Kolvaxian proves no threat to him at all.

Even so, Mephisto frowns.

"How worrying. That Kolvaxian would have dessstroyed usss with a sssingle ssslap if we were only an Emperor. Sssince when is Cosssmic power ssso easssily obtained?"

Hardly has he finished speaking before Mephisto once again senses the arrival of cosmic energy beneath Okania's surface. But this time, he's even more shocked when not one, but two energy signatures appear!

"What? More?! And they're coming ssstraight for usss!"

Lupus shivers, even more nervous than before. "Mephisto, we have to RUN! I have a terrible feeling about staying here!"

As before, Zamiel backs her up. "This ain't smart, boss! The Volgrim are super powerful, but they're LOSING to the Plague. It's not like they don't have a Cosmic or two of their own! Don't you think we ought to take these creatures more seriously?"

But Mephisto, emboldened by his previous win, doesn't take that warning to heart. "Kekeke. Thisss isss the firssst proper opponent we've fought. Crow wasss nothing. Anaelle wasss too fearsssome. We mussst practice on a worthy opponent if we wisssh to increassse our power."

As he speaks, those two signatures rush toward him from underground. When they burst out of Okania's surface, Mephisto is momentarily startled when he vaguely recognizes one of the incoming Psions.

"How isss thisss posssible? That'sss the sssame one we jussst killed. It revived??"

The two Kolvaxian Psions rush toward him again, but now they spread out to travel to opposite sides of the Myriad Deity while conjuring different Psionic abilities.

The Psion from before fires off twin lightning bolts at the draconic-demon, but the other one tears ten massive trees out of the planet's surface and levitates them beside itself while waving its arms in a manner most ominous.

Mephisto ignores the lightning bolts. They crash against his body harmlessly. The second Psion's strange movements seem to follow some goal he hasn't yet determined, so he follows it with his eyes.

Under the control of the second Psion, the trees change colors from brown and green to grey. The Psion slams all the trees together and begins rapidly compressing them together, making Mephisto's eyes widen.

"What isss thisss...?" Mephisto asks nobody in particular, as he witnesses an incredible phenomena.

The wood-and-leaves of those ten trees transform into a metallic compound, as if magically transmuted through a Philosopher's Stone! And even more stunningly, the metallic compounds begin to harden even further, approaching the hardness of Demonstone!

"Thisss one isss more dangerousss!" Mephisto immediately concludes.

He charges toward the second Psion, imbuing his bones with superheated Qi like before. But this time, when he slams his claws down on that second Psion, it doesn't attempt to dodge.

Instead, it pauses its transmutation activities, snaps one of its arms up, and catches the massive dragon claw falling upon its body.

BOOM!!

Mephisto's claw crashes against the Kolvaxian's raised palm and instantly becomes trapped, as if locked within a vice. His cold undead heart skips a beat.

Before he can react, the second Psion spins around while maintaining its grip on one of his five dragonbone claws. Mephisto shouts in alarm as he becomes uncontrollably yanked from where he was levitating.

"Aaaah!!"

The Psion spins 180 degrees in the air, rotating Mephisto over its head before releasing its grip and flinging him violently toward the planet's surface below at the speed of sound.

BOOOM!!

Mephisto instantly crashes into the soil, tears up the forest, and rips open a ravine one mile long as his body slams and drags across Okania's surface.

Luckily, he doesn't end up injured. Despite the Psion's shocking strength, Mephisto's Living Moldanium body is far too durable to take damage from a mundane attack of that level.

The Myriad Deity jumps to his feet and leaps back into the sky, watching the one-mile-distant Psions with significant worry. No longer do they seem as weak as they did before.

[Mephisto.] Yama says. [Below us. More...]

Mephisto quickly lowers his gaze to the planet below. There, he senses an immense buildup of Cosmic Energy as more than three dozen much weaker entities begin to climb toward the planet's surface from the Core below.

"What isss HAPPENING?!" Mephisto shouts, more afraid than ever. He senses the approach of the two powerful Psions from before as they begin flying toward him once again. Now, the second Psion clutches a 200-foot-long cord of flexible metal that dangles from below, its purpose unknown but worrying for the Myriad Deity.

[Mephisto.] Lupus says, her voice chillingly calm. [Leave now. We have to go. I don't want to find out what all these incoming Psions can do to us. Let's not test our strength in such a foolish way.]

Mephisto hesitates.

[But... weren't you the one who wanted to die?]

Lupus nods.

[Dying is preferable to being stuck as part of your body. But what worries me is... I am not so sure we would die if the Plague ensnared us.]

That finally elicits the response Lupus wanted.

Mephisto backs off and begins flying toward the upper atmosphere, racing away as dozens of weaker but far more numerous Psions erupt from the ground below him.

"Tsssk! That damned Creator!"

Mephisto now finally understands the true weight of the warning the Creator gave him.

...you might feel like you're a shark once you leave, but in Akasha's Game... you're little more than a minnow.

Before, Mephisto felt powerful, unstoppable.

Now, he begins to feel that he truly is not as strong as he thought he would be.

He is not some apex powerhouse in the Milky Way.

He went from being an Emperor of trillions to a gnat among giants.

That thought both enrages and dismays him in equal measure.

With regret in his heart, Mephisto opens up a portal directly to Numaria, leaps through, and seals it shut behind himself. He emerges in the Void a million miles from the world itself, but remains in the same spot, waiting to see if those two High Psions will perform the same feat as Anaelle, pursuing him across the reaches of space.

Luckily, they don't.

Unable to tear the void as expertly as they perhaps should, the Plagueborn Psions remain trapped behind on Okania, leaving Mephisto by himself for the first time since his ascension.

The Myriad Deity breathes a metaphorical sigh of relief.

[Perhapsss my bonesss would not have been consssumed.] Mephisto thinks. [But... better to not take a chanccce.]

[Yeah. You said it, Boss.] Zamiel groans, leaning back against an invisible chair in the Myriad Deity's Mind Realm. [So, what next? We gonna eat some Emperors now?]

Mephisto gazes hungrily at the world of Numaria. He senses the distant mana signatures of many juicy morsels.

[Yesss...]

Mephisto flaps his wings and rockets toward Numaria. Within two short minutes, he impacts the upper atmosphere, but he finds that the Emperors have not fled as he thought they would.

Surely, knowing how much danger they're in, they would want to run away and spread apart, perhaps running to the Wordsmiths to protect their sorry lives?

It couldn't be that they have another trick up their sleeve, could it?

Mephisto receives the answer to that question when he senses the approach of a powerful, somewhat familiar energy signature.

He becomes more alert.

The Myriad Deity levitates in the upper atmosphere, directly above the Stitched Wasteland, and the Emperors below. They in turn look up at him with obvious fear, yet remain stubbornly standing in place, as if having been commanded to do so by a higher power.

And that higher power does indeed begin walking toward Mephisto, their footsteps 'blinking' them across the airspace to the Myriad Deity's position, multiple miles at a time.

Mephisto narrows his eyes.

"Another gnat. He'sss finally ssshown himssself."

A hazy, indistinct figure walks through the air, stopping half a mile from Mephisto's current location. It gazes at the Myriad Deity with a face as blank as any Kolvaxian, and a body as indecipherable as the Creator himself.

Mephisto. Lupus. Zamiel. Yama. Myriad Deity. You intend to commit a grave crime against demonkind, and the Milky Way. You will cease your hostile activities immediately.

Mephisto says nothing for several seconds as he gazes at the inscrutable figure before him, the figure known as The First Emperor of Transience.

When Mephisto was only an Emperor himself, the First Emperor appeared and spoke to Ose. But Mephisto lost those memories due to the First Emperor's strange state of existence.

Now that he and the other three core souls of his body have ascended to the rank of Cosmic Entity, those memory suppressions have vanished, and they no longer feel as stumped by the so-called 'First Emperor's' existence.

"You..." Mephisto says slowly. "You're no demon at all. We cannot sssenssse a drop of demonic mana within your vesssel!"

The First Emperor neither confirms nor denies Mephisto's accusation.

I am what I am. I protect demonkind. I protect the Milky Way. My Calling is higher than yours. If you intend to proceed on your course, I will educate you on that which you are ignorant. This lesson will not be pleasant, but painful.

"What are you?" Mephisto questions directly. "You're no Emperor. You're a Cosssmic like usss. Why are you ssso 'helpfully protecting' the Demonsss? What have you to gain?"

The First Emperor remains unmoving, unyielding, like a mountain before a storm.

My existence is temporary. My identity, unimportant. What is important is that I show up here, now.

You will cease your hostile actions. You will cease attempting to bring about Chaos to the Order I maintain.

The First Emperor issues several declarative statements that truly enrage Mephisto!

"You... you dare look down on usss? Your Cosssmic Energy isss faint and weak! We do not fear you!"

I maintain the balance. I have prepared counters to many Threats that may emerge. I have long known demons possessed the capacity to break past the boundary of Cosmic. Your ascension was not beyond my capability to predict.

Mephisto sneers.

"We'd like to SSSEE what countersss you've prepared!!"

He charges at the First Emperor and swipes his claws, but his attack whiffs through the First Emperor's body uselessly, as if trying to attack a bit of congealed mist with one's bare hands.

The First Emperor reappears a short distance away, its gas-like body possessing little substance.

You have eyes but cannot see. Have you not noticed the anomaly below you, Myriad Deity? Your fate is already sealed. You will make no further progress in killing your fellow demons.

Mephisto becomes more alert. He looks downward, at the planet below. Uncertain of what the heck the First Emperor is talking about, he directs a cursory glance toward each of the Emperors present.

Abruptly, his undying heart stops beating.

Alarm crosses his face.

"WHAT?!"

For the first time since Anaelle's disappearance, Mephisto feels a genuine explosion of shock detonate in his mind.

On Numaria's surface, one Demon Emperor stands amidst the rest, unassuming in appearance, but a source of courage for his comrades.

"Mephisto. Long time, no talk. Seems you've advanced a lot since I went to sleep. But you know what they say... an old Hellhound can't learn new tricks."

Mephisto points one giant dragon-claw at that Emperor.

"No! NO! Diablo, how could you have awakened?! You ssshould have remained asssleep for another thousssand yearsss!"

Diablo, the Emperor of Annihilation, smirks evilly.

"Oh, I've been awake for a while, training under the First Emperor. Fools like you ruined all the work I put into keeping the Seven Hells intact. Now I'll have a chance to show everyone the true power a 'mere' Demon Emperor can reach."

Diablo inhales deeply. He swallows a breath, and the other Emperors who were crowding around him quickly back away.

"He's doing it!" Yardrat shouts. "Stick to the plan! Disperse!"

The fifty uplifted Emperors run away from Diablo in all directions as an ominous amount of power begins to swell within his chest.

BOOM.

BOOM!!

Thunderous noises detonate outward, sending soil flying.

Diablo's muscles crack and split as his body enlarges.

All the while, the First Emperor levitates in place, its featureless face betraying no emotions.

Your enemy is the Archdemon now. He will not be as he was before.

Part 507: Archdemon's Return

For the briefest of moments, Mephisto's body seizes up in terror. His eyes flick from the First Emperor to Diablo, then back to the First Emperor again.

The moment Diablo begins to explode with power, all four of the souls inside the Myriad Deity move at once.

[WHAT ARE YOU WAITING FOR?!] Zamiel shrieks. [GO!!!]

Mephisto moves on instinct. He practically teleports toward Diablo, moving so fast he leaves a streak of afterimages in his wake as he lifts his palm overhead.

BOOOM!!!

Mephisto slams his massive dragon-claw against Diablo's body, only to cry out in fear as a magical force-field enveloping the Emperor of Annihilation repels his attack.

"NO!" Mephisto roars, shooting a vicious look at the fleeing Emperors. He quickly realizes he's been had. This field was made through a combination of Serena's soul-sharing magic, the combined energy of the other Emperors, and Yardrat's spatial manipulation.

The mighty magical-spatial field prevents Mephisto from killing Diablo in a single slap!

But that doesn't stop the Myriad Deity. He shrieks in rage and begins whaling on the force-field with a fury that sends cataclysmic shockwaves outward in every direction, splitting the planet's tectonic plates and summoning 200-foot-tall tsunamis across Numaria.

All the while, Diablo's energy continues to go berserk at greater and greater levels.

"The field won't last much longer!" Yardrat shouts as he runs away. "Shit!"

With the full power of a Demon Deity whaling downward, not even the magic of fifty combined Emperors can protect Diablo long enough for him to complete his ascension. In just ten short seconds, Mephisto finally brings down a strike capable of bursting the shield.

CRACK!

A thunderous BOOM explodes as the shield gives way. Mephisto's palm continues pressing downward until it crashes against Diablo's body, exploding his figure in a horrific mess of blood and gore.

Diablo perishes instantly.

Crushed under the full power of a Demon Deity, his comparatively fragile Emperor body cannot withstand even a single strike.

But Mephisto's expression does not change to one of relief. In his eyes, the accumulation of Cosmic Energy only continues to increase, alarming him further.

"No... NO! Why can't we kill him?!"

He continues attacking the soil, attempting to rip apart the very air itself. But no matter what he does, that horrid magical power only elevates further and further...

"YOU... HAVE... LOST..."

A voice speaks from the air itself, chilling Mephisto's dragon bones as if he were being drenched by a bucket of ice water.

Abruptly, an explosion of demonic red energy erupts mere feet from Mephisto's face, blowing up with the power of a stack of dynamite. Mephisto cries out in alarm as that explosion sends him flying to the side. He slams into the dirt and grinds along the ground, quickly flipping himself upright and launching back toward the giant body materializing a short distance away.

"No! NOOO!!"

Mephisto's body seems to move in slow motion. His perception of time freezes to a crawl as, before him, the body of the Archdemon rapidly constructs itself from raw Cosmic Energy.

The Emperor of Annihilation roars to the heavens. His eyeless head materializes first, followed rapidly by his torso, his four arms, and more than a thousand tentacle-legs that end in heads filled with teeth.

The Archdemon successfully materializes.

Mephisto tries to swipe his claw at the enemy before him, but he moves too slowly. A fist as big as his own comes rushing toward his head.

Thump.

Stars dance in the Myriad Deity's eyes. The world spins around him, and he awakens moments later, stunned and jarred by the power behind that punch.

Mephisto clambers to his feet, dizzy and sick to his metaphorical stomach. His vision blurry, he looks around until his eyes fall upon the full majesty of demonkind's mightiest warrior.

Emperor Diablo, the Archdemon.

"HEH, HEH, HEH." The Archdemon says, its eyeless head aimed at Mephisto's staggering form. "I AM NOT AS I ONCE WAS. I AM STRONGER. I AM IN CONTROL."

No longer a rampaging creature hellbent on causing wanton destruction, the Archdemon stands atop its thousand tentacle-legs and looks down at Mephisto with a posture indicating his intelligence.

Mephisto no longer charges at the Archdemon blindly. Instead, he hangs back, a hint of fear on his face.

"Imposssible... imposssible..." He says twice. "How can an Emperor become a Cosssmic Entity? Did the Archdemon alwaysss ssstand at the Cosssmic level...?"

"YES. I DID." Diablo says proudly. "BUT I LACKED CONTROL. I LACKED CONSCIOUS THOUGHT. THE FIRST EMPEROR SOLVED THAT PROBLEM. THANKS TO HIS HELP, I HAVE MASTERED THIS BODY'S TRUE POWER."

Mephisto's expression turns truly glum. No longer does he have a chance of easily gobbling up all the Emperors on Numaria. Instead, they have hidden themselves within the Archdemon's protective coverage, returning shortly after Diablo's ascension to lurk in the vicinity.

If they leave the Archdemon's aura, Mephisto could pick them off. But why would they? The old monsters are far from stupid. They know their survival is only possible due to Diablo's return.

Mephisto glances around. He frowns as he searches for someone.

"Where isss Glinch?"

"SOMEWHERE SECURE." Diablo says grinning evilly at Mephisto. "NO LONGER WILL I CONTINUE TO ALLOW HIM TO DO AS HE PLEASES. HE IS TOO BIG A THREAT TO DEMONKIND."

"Ssso you've returned to take back control of the Ssseven Hellsss..." Mephisto says slowly. "You've come to fight me."

"THAT IS WHERE YOU ARE WRONG." Diablo retorts. "THE DIFFERENCE BETWEEN US IS GREATER THAN YOU KNOW. I CAN FULLY SENSE YOUR WEAKNESS, MEPHISTO. YOU ARE NOTHING BEFORE THIS ARCHDEMON. YOU ARE BARELY EVEN A COSMIC. IF WE BATTLE, YOU WILL PERISH, AND NUMARIA WILL BE RUINED. THAT IS NOT SOMETHING I WISH TO SEE HAPPEN."

Diablo raises one of his four arms, holding up a palm in a peace offering.

"I WILL GIVE YOU A CHANCE. BEND THE KNEE. SWEAR A DEATH PROMISE TO OBEY MY ORDERS. IF YOU DO, I WILL IGNORE YOUR PAST CRIMES. YOU ARE A DEMON. I AM A DEMON. THE TIME FOR OUR KIND TO RISE IS NOW. BEFORE THE WORDSMITHS REACH THEIR PEAK. BEFORE THE VOLGRIM WISE UP TO OUR TRUE POWER. BEFORE THE PLAGUE SWALLOWS THE MILKY WAY..."

Mephisto narrows his eyes. "You want thisss Deity to become your ssservant?"

"HMPH. 'DEITY.' YOU ARROGANTLY CLING TO THAT TITLE, BUT WE BOTH KNOW IT MEANS NOTHING. YOU ARE NO LONGER AN EMPEROR OF MORTALS, BUT A GNAT AMONG GODS. THE RULES CHANGE ONCE YOU ENTER THE LEVEL OF COSMIC."

The First Emperor's apparition materializes beside Diablo, its body minuscule compared to the Titan-sized Archdemon.

Emperor Diablo speaks truth. There are many Cosmics in the universe. When you ascend, Akasha's restrictions become more stringent. The more power you amass, the heavier the shackles become that bind you.

"THE DUTY PLACED UPON YOU BECOMES GREATER AS WELL." Diablo clarifies. "THERE ARE ONLY TWO WAYS A CONFLICT BETWEEN US CAN END. EITHER YOU SUBMIT, OR YOU DIE. CHOOSE YOUR FATE, 'MYRIAD DEITY.' I WILL NOT WAIT LONG."

Mephisto's countenance clouds over.

In his mind's eye, he compares the power wafting from Diablo's body to the power demonstrated by Anaelle.

In his eyes, Diablo does not match her at all.

However, Diablo certainly stands far above the Kolvaxians Mephisto fought only a short while before.

And, judging by the aura of the slowly approaching Second Founder, Diablo must be about her equal...

"I AM WAITING." Diablo says coldly.

Mephisto presses his teeth together.

Submission. Unacceptable. For too many years, he lived in the shadow of Emperors. Now that he has ascended, why must he immediately bow his head before yet another greater power?

It isn't fair!

All those millennia he spent groveling while others mocked him, but now that he has become capable of towering over demonkind, another Cosmic Demon pops up, just like that?! How absurd!

The worst part is, Diablo isn't even a proper Cosmic. He's only an Emperor!

"You... cannot... remain in that form forever..." Mephisto says icily.

"OH, BUT I CAN." Diablo says, his grin widening. "THINKING YOU CAN OUTLAST ME? KILL ME ONCE MY POWER RUNS OUT? IT WON'T GO AS YOU PLAN, MEPHISTO. THIS BODY IS NO LONGER SOME UNCONTROLLABLE WEAPON HELLBENT ON MURDERING MY ALLIES. IT IS AN INSTRUMENT OF DOOM I PILOT WITH PERFECT CONTROL. I HAVE THE FIRST EMPEROR TO THANK FOR THAT."

Mephisto's anger deflates even further. He glowers at the Archdemon, uncertain of what to do.

Diablo could be bluffing about not having a time limit. If he is, then Mephisto has the better hand in their little dance of death.

Then again, perhaps he isn't, in which case Mephisto has no hope at all of defeating him.

One thing is for sure. Mephisto will never willingly accept bowing his head to another entity again!

The 100-foot-tall dragon-demon and Archdemon face one another in equal measure, their giant bodies towering over the landscape. Diablo, fearless and unafraid of Mephisto's so-called 'cosmic power', and Mephisto, chomping at the bit to finally establish himself as the God he has always desired to become.

"We will NEVER bow to you." Mephisto finally says glowering sinisterly at Diablo. "Thisss body is perfect. We do not think you are capable of causssing usss harm. Let usss sssee who will lassst the longessst if we battle!"

Mephisto claps his palms together. His Dark Mist explodes outward, blanketing the entire Stitched Wasteland in impenetrable blackness from the ground to the sky, turning him all but invisible to the eyes of those below the Cosmic level.

At the same time, he conjures a pair of dual shadow-copies, neither of them remotely as powerful as his main body, but possessing another unique function he hopes will give him a unique edge in this battle...

The two clones race away in opposite directions, while Mephisto throws himself at the Archdemon!

"WE WILL NOT FAIL!!" Mephisto roars.

Within two seconds, another massive battle erupts on the world of Numaria. Mephisto and the Archdemon become entangled in a brutal melee, with Diablo relying on the formidable regeneration and physical strength of his Archdemon form, while Mephisto uses his diverse arsenal of abilities and his indestructible dragon bones to hopefully pressure his adversary.

At the same time, Mephisto's two shadow-copies ignore Diablo entirely. They charge through the mist in hunt of Emperors to consume instead!

"COWARD." Diablo says, as he sends a fist flying into Mephisto's head, battering him into the ground. "I HAVE ALREADY PREDICTED YOU MIGHT TRY THIS. YOU ARE NOT AS CLEVER AS YOU THINK."

Diablo's body possesses not two, but four arms, with a pair attached to his shoulders, and another attached at his sides.

Two of those arms focus on grappling and punching Mephisto, while the other two manipulate Diablo's vast internal mana for a few moments before firing atomic beams of destruction at the shadow-copies racing at his allies.

BOOM!

BOOM!

Diablo's nuclear fission-beams strike the shadows and detonate, shredding Mephisto's copies.

But at the same time, Mephisto dives underground, yanking Diablo beneath the planet's soil while re-summoning new shadow copies once more.

"THOSSSE EMPEROR SSSOULSSS ARE MINE!"

Diablo grunts. The Archdemon wraps one of its hands around Mephisto's neck so he can't escape, but doing so also prevents Diablo from moving freely. Mephisto successfully drags him underground to restrict his movements, while the new shadow-copies resume their charge at the Emperors.

"Shit!" Emperor Fae exclaims, as she senses the approach of powerful energy somewhere within the Dark Mist. She conjures explosive orbs, then lobs them at the rapidly-approaching shadow-dragons, but her pitiful Emperor-level attacks don't leave a scratch on their targets. "We're screwed!"

Just before the shadows can snap her up and drag her back to Mephisto, the First Emperor of Transience takes action.

A suppressive field swallows the area, targeting Mephisto's summons and plunging their bodies into a pit of metaphorical quicksand.

Their speed plummets to rock bottom, making their previously lightning-fast agility become no better than a turtle.

This field does not affect the Emperors. They decide to nope-the-fuck out of there and start running away, no longer happy to stand back and watch Diablo engage the Myriad Deity.

Mephisto's shadow-copy roars silently, its incorporeal body incapable of making any sounds, but its primitive mind frustrated by the mana-bog that has wrapped around it to slow its movements.

Diablo does not fight alone. The First Emperor states, still levitating in the sky. Forgetting my existence was yet another of your mistakes.

The battle has only just begun.

Hope Hiro teleports into the Hall of Heroes while visibly agitated. He quickly runs to Solomon's Library, where he flails his arms.

"Solomon! Solomon! There's an emergency! A cosmic-"

"I already know." Solomon says calmly, turning away from his books while looking unperturbed. "Calm down, Hope. A good leader must make sure to appear strong in the face of any adversity, no matter how impossible the odds appear."

Hope's heart continues to race. "Yes, yes, I know all of that! Now's not the time for a goddamn lecture! Do you know what an Apex Cosmic is? Unarin looked like he was about to shit his pants!"

Solomon remains silent for exactly three seconds, deliberately allowing that silence to germinate so as to demonstrate calmness on his own end. Perhaps he even thinks this might prove a good demonstration for the Second Wordsmith.

"Once again. Calm down." Solomon says. "Unarin only momentarily panicked. The moment he learns the identity of that 'Apex Cosmic,' he will school his emotions. The situation is nowhere near as dire as you think."

Hope's heartbeat slows down a little, but his adrenaline remains through the roof. "What... what do you mean?!"

"Deep breaths." Solomon says patiently. "Cosmic Entities balance on a scale of power, Hope. As long as you understand that scale, you won't panic as much as you are right now."

Finally, Hope takes his mentor's advice. He inhales deeply, then releases a shaky breath.

"...Fine. Alright. What is this 'scale,' then?"

Solomon smiles. "That's better. Cosmic Entities range from Bottom Cosmics to Apex Cosmics, and every kind in between. Specifically, the scale goes: Bottom, Low, Mid, High, and Apex. Once you reach the Apex, you can continue to amass quantitative power, but a qualitative increase will no longer allow you to be a Cosmic anymore. You will become a Ruler instead. And, as Unarin has just finished informing you, Rulers are the true players in Akasha's Game. Every other entity is merely a piece on a game-board, and no more."

Hope blinks twice. "Wait... you... you heard what Unarin and I talked about?"

Solomon chuckles. "Heh. I'm the Knowledge-Seeker, Hope. I have my ways."

"But-!" Hope starts to say.

"Don't waste your breath." Solomon immediately interrupts. "I keep my eye on you for your own sake. And now I'm informing you of something important. Isn't this what you wanted me to do?"

"Once again, you kept information from me." Hope replies, narrowing his eyes. "Why didn't you tell me about Cosmics and Rulers?!"

"Because you weren't ready. And now you are." Solomon answers. "Tell me. Does it make you feel 'good' to know that your entire existence is a lie?"

"A lie? What do you mean?" Hope asks.

"You've been fighting for years to achieve some modicum of power." Solomon says. "You push back against Jason, you even think to try and assassinate Unarin. But in the end, you're merely a player in Akasha's Game. All these petty disputes mean nothing in the grand scheme of things, but they define your petty existence."

He pauses.

"Does it not make you feel... insignificant?"

Hope hesitates. He lowers his eyes and reflects on the Truths Unarin told him, and the existential crisis he suffered in the aftermath.

"But you're no different." Hope says, looking at Solomon. "All you care about is a pointless revenge against the demons! Doesn't THAT mean just as little as any of the things I care about?"

"Oh, certainly." Solomon acknowledges. "Killing all of demonkind means nothing. They will fall to ash when the universe enters Entropy. Like all of Akasha's other creations, they will perish in the end."

He smiles.

"But the difference is, I've known about The Game for a long time. I simply don't care that my ambition means nothing. Killing the demons will make me feel a great deal better. And then, once they're dead, I will be at peace. I can die, as my purpose on this mortal plane will be complete. It's that simple."

"It's that simple." Hope repeats blandly. "Then what about me? What the hell am I accomplishing, running around like a chicken with my head cut off? What is my purpose if none of this crap actually matters?"

"Your purpose is whatever you decide it to be." Solomon answers, spreading out his arms. "The truth is, life has no inherent meaning. You live. You eat. You procreate. You die. Your evolutionary purpose is to survive and evolve. Beyond that, there's no meaning beyond the meaning you give your existence. In your case, you might try aspiring to become a Ruler. An undying player in The Game."

Solomon chuckles.

"But I'm not so sure that would give you any sort of eternal happiness either. Ah, well, perhaps you'll figure it all out someday. But that will be up to you, not me."

* * *

A long, uncomfortable silence follows.

Hope wrestles with everything Unarin and Solomon have told him over the past few hours. His mind reels from a mixture of shock and disorientation. He struggles to put his entire life into the context of this strange, grand Akashic Game.

Killing the demons means nothing.

Rising above the Volgrim means nothing.

Defeating the Plague means nothing.

Perhaps even living eternally as a so-called Ruler means nothing.

There is no inherent meaning to his existence. No great ambition to which he can rise. No purpose for which he was created.

This thought... deeply disturbs him.

Hope slumps to his butt. He leans against one of Solomon's nearby bookshelves and crumples into a heap, resting his face against his palms.

"What... I... I don't even know what to say..."

"You'll have plenty of time to sort out your feelings later, Hope." Solomon says, turning around to resume writing his books. "But if you'd like, I can perhaps give you a helpful analogy."

Hope nods dumbly while still resting his face in his palms. "God, give me anything Solomon. This is all just... just so heavy."

Solomon smiles while he writes. "When you were younger, didn't you like to play video games? Before you froze yourself in that cryopod, I mean."

Hope lifts his head to peek at Solomon's back.

"...Yeah? What about them?"

Solomon turns to glance at Hope for a second before returning his gaze forward.

"There's no meaning in playing a video game, is there? Oh, you could delude yourself into thinking that you're 'improving your reflexes' or marginally improving your math skills. But most of the time, it's like junk food. You simply fill time doing something you enjoy."

He continues. "Hedonism is a fun activity. It is one way to enjoy your time on the mortal plane. It gives you something to do. But helping other people, standing for a principle, pursuing a revenge, all of these things can be enjoyable in their own way as well."

"If life has no greater purpose, then why not simply become the man you've always wanted to be?" Solomon concludes.

Hope listens in silence. He lowers his eyes in thought.

"I... I can do anything? If there's no meaning in life, I simply have to make my own?"

"That's right." Solomon says. "I have decided that the activity which will give my existence 'meaning' is slaughtering all the demons. But yours can be anything else. Marrying Amelia. Saving humanity. Becoming a man others can look up to for inspiration. And heck, you can even consider helping this old man kill the demons, too. Everything is possible, so long as you fortify your heart."

Hope bobs his head slowly.

Seconds pass as he dwells more and more on the meaning behind Solomon's words.

A fog begins to lift from his mind.

Slowly, he stands up and leans back against the bookcase more casually, his expression becoming contemplative.

"I can do anything I want."

"You're a Wordsmith." Solomon says. "You always could."

"Yeah... yeah." Hope says. "I can. Huh. I always thought that way, but at the same time... I didn't. It's... it's so hard to put into words."

"I can do anything I want." Hope repeats again, raising his eyes to the ceiling. "Become anyone. Live the life I desire."

Solomon smiles, but then frowns. Something about Hope momentarily makes him feel uncomfortable.

...The moment passes.

"Right." Solomon says, turning to examine Hope more carefully. "Anything you desire. Now. About the Cosmic Scale. Are you interested in learning more?"

Hope blinks his eyes twice. He looks at Solomon and nods.

"Sure. Sorry for before. I'm ready now. Fill me in on why Unarin nearly shit a brick."

Part 508: Mephisto, Outmatched

One week ago, Numaria was one of the most beautiful worlds in the Milky Way galaxy.

A paradise-class planet covered in lush forests. The demons of the Fourth Hell lived beneath its treetops, and they took great care to treat its woodlands with reverence and respect. One of the Emperors of their Hell, Nymph, happened to be a lover of forests, and her powers synergized well with them, so that much was natural.

But that was then.

This is now.

Following the cataclysmic battle between two Cosmic-level entities, Mephisto and Crow, much of Numaria's forests were flattened and ruined. Vast tsunamis and hurricanes uprooted millions of trees. Wildfires ravaged continents. Chunks of mountains rained down from the skies, flattening even more of Numaria's paradise into little more than green-colored mulch.

No doubt, if the Volgrim were to assess Numaria post-Mephisto and Crow, they would shake their heads and downgrade it to a mere 'habitable' class planet.

But Numaria's woes have only just begun.

Mephisto's Dark Mist shrouds the Stitched Wasteland. The Emperors trapped within find themselves completely lost, unable to even see their hands when waved in front of their faces.

Demons may possess incredible eyesight, particularly in light-lacking areas, but the power Mephisto has obtained as a Cosmic makes his Dark Mist far denser than ever before. It actively burns the senses of those trapped within, making their eyes water and snot flow from their nostrils. Their ears ring, and even their sense of direction becomes impeded, making them stumble about blindly within its confines.

Yardrat finds himself in the same situation as all the other Emperors. Due to the subspace suppression created by the Dark Mist, his ability to teleport around has once again disappeared, filling him with regret.

"...knew it!" Yardrat hisses, while tripping over a stray body part from one of Glinch's murdered chimera. "I should have left when I still had a chance! Now I'm stuck here! This is awful!"

He waves his arms futilely, trying to tear at the space around himself in the hopes of ripping through the oppressive pitch-black smog, but nothing he tries has the slightest effect.

Suddenly, a hand grabs Yardrat's shoulder, startling him. He screams in surprise and whirls around, ready to attack whatever was surely about to behead him.

"It's just me." A female's voice says from the mist, though Yardrat can't make out who she is.

He does manage to recognize her voice.

"...Serena?"

"I appear to be the only person capable of seeing inside this mist." Serena says, coughing between her words. Mephisto's corrosive mist hampers all of her senses except for her already-blinded eyes. "But I can only see the souls of other entities, such as yourself. I cannot divine their exact identities until I draw closer. Come with me! We must gather the others and find a way to leave this place!"

Yardrat rubs his watering eyes and nods, looking vaguely in the direction he hears Serena's voice coming from. "Fine, fine! Let's get a move on, then!"

Serena grabs his arm, runs her hand down to his, and places a long string in his grasp.

"Here. I've fashioned a thread you can use to follow my movements. If you can make something similar, we can lead the other Emperors around, too. But it's possible many of them have already been killed!"

The roars of the Archdemon and the Undead Dragon rattle their ears, but the noises are so loud and distant that Yardrat's muddled senses can't even pinpoint the direction they're coming from. He ends up just nodding.

"Go, then! Go!"

Yardrat and Serena begin making their way toward whatever distant soul-blobs she can see. As they walk, Serena explains the situation to him.

"Mephisto was sending shadow-dragons to attack us, but then the First Emperor intervened. I can't tell where all the fighting is happening, but it's closer than you'd think.

The other Emperors can't see a thing, so they've mostly bunkered down in the hopes they'll go unnoticed."

"Mostly?" Yardrat asks.

"Well. I can see Bael's soul from a hundred miles away. He's pretty hard to miss. As for what he's doing... I don't know! But he appears to be moving quickly. Maybe he's running from something."

"Let's hope he and the rest manage to pull through." Yardrat says.

"As long as some freak attack doesn't kill us, I should be able to slowly gather everyone." Serena says. "Let's keep our heads down."

* * *

As Serena and Yardrat slowly fumble their way through the Dark Mist, Bael battles for his life.

Decked out in the Matriarch Armor, its advanced sensor and life support systems filter out the corrosive effects of Mephisto's signature ability.

Bael can see inside Mephisto's miasma perfectly fine!

Indeed, the Matriarch Armor highlights enemies in red and friendlies in green, a concept that took Bael several minutes to fully comprehend, especially as he wasn't sure what the names of those two colors were until Ose 'helpfully' reminded him ten times.

But now, Bael faces a serious challenge. Undead creatures rise out of the soil, summoned by Mephisto to try and create chaos on the battlefield. For some unknown reason, they ignore all the other Emperors and head for Bael, forcing him to fight them all!

"Man, this shit's ridiculous!" Bael complains, as he swings Big Bonk around, splattering undead demons, harpies, and minotaurs by the dozens. "Why're they all comin' for ME?? What'd I ever do to Mephisto?!"

Ose uses the Matriarch Armor's sensors to peer through the fog, mostly ignoring Bael's complaints as he mows down undead creatures one after the other.

"Now that Mephisto has Ascended, he must desire powerful souls for some unknown reason. Yours would likely grant him some level of strength to help fight against the Archdemon."

"What, so he wants to EAT me?!" Bael asks.

"That would be my guess."

Bael swings his flail overhead and smashes it in a downward arc, splattering a hundred undead in a single attack and sending a concussive shockwave out that momentarily disturbs the Dark Mist. It quickly reforms, sealing the area in pitch-blackness again.

"This is such bullshit." Bael complains.

While the Emperors struggle to pull themselves together, Mephisto fights for his life against two highly competent enemies: The First Emperor of Transience, and the Emperor of Annihilation, Diablo, the Archdemon.

Diablo acts as the most obviously terrifying enemy. With his super-massive body equaling the size of Mephisto's, he can easily go toe-to-toe with the Myriad Deity without issue.

The Archdemon always keeps one hand dedicated to grabbing the Myriad Deity. Whether holding onto Mephisto's neck, or his tail, or even his spine, Diablo never allows Mephisto to run away. With his cowardly personality, it's only a matter of time before the dragonbone-thief does whatever he can to escape.

Mephisto's shadow-copies become temporarily incapacitated by the First Emperor, as the genderless, androgynous, gas-like entity uses some strange spatial powers to envelop them in restrictive fields of energy.

At the same time, the Archdemon pounds Mephisto's bones with brutal punches and headbutts, occasionally empowering its attacks with nuclear energy. Like Beelzebub, the Archdemon can harness the power of raw annihilation.

BOOM! BOOM!

"Aaargh!"

Mephisto cries out in pain as punches explode against his body, battering him from left to right.

But Diablo doesn't gloat over the ease in which he is trouncing his opponent.

Despite Mephisto's lower Cosmic status, his body has become so durable that Diablo can only cause him pain, not actually begin the process of killing him!

And so, an awkward stalemate begins to play out in real time, over the course of one long hour.

The hardness of Living Moldanium simply cannot be overestimated, especially after it was reforged and purified in the heat of a massive supernova. The bones of the ancient dragon, Leviathan, have become even more attuned to the element of fire than they previously were, and any impurities they once contained have long since vanished.

Diablo punches Mephisto. He lifts the dragon overhead and slams him against Numaria's soil. He unleashes nuclear cannon-blasts from his mouth, striking Mephisto with his full power.

But he never succeeds in so much as making a hairline crack form on Mephisto's undead body. Unlike Anaelle, Diablo lacks the level of striking power required to shatter Mephisto's body to dust.

As for the Myriad Deity himself, he doesn't take the beating passively. He taps into Yama's varied abilities to conjure all sorts of elemental attacks. Fire, lightning, wind, water, air, and even ice. These attacks strike with varying levels of effectiveness, but all of them ultimately lack the potency to finish off the Archdemon. Diablo's regeneration is just as formidable as Beelzebub's, allowing him to regenerate ripped-off limbs or heal huge bloody holes in his body within seconds.

Mephisto snaps his jaws at Diablo, growing more pissed by the minute that he can't escape the Archdemon's clutches.

"LET GO OF USSS!!"

"I WILL NOT."

Mephisto bends his long neck around and chomps down on one of Diablo's arms, the one currently holding tightly onto his spine. He uses the full strength contained within his Living Moldanium dragon-bones to cleanly bite through the Archdemon's flesh, severing that arm and pressing his legs against the ground to jump away...

But one of Diablo's other arms grabs Mephisto's tail, lifts him overhead, and slams him into the dirt!

BOOM!

"Aargh! Confound you!"

Desperate for a way to escape his tormentor's vice-grip, Mephisto speaks with his inner selves, all of them coordinating mostly with Yama to try and come up with solutions.

[I need SSSOMETHING!] Mephisto roars in frustration.

[Boss, Deebs has four arms! They regenerate too quickly even if you tear 'em off!] Zamiel points out.

[We lack the ability to kill Diablo faster than his regeneration can heal him up.] Lupus says. [But he cannot even damage our body. We have an advantage in this battle, in terms of physical durability.]

Yama appears less convinced. [Our powers of darkness have always been our most potent abilities, with second place going to the gem-powers of Orias. As for my other copied abilities, they are much weaker. They will not assist us in a Cosmic-level battle.]

Mephisto snarls in frustration. [Looksss like it's up to ME to sssolve thisss asss usssual!]

After Diablo sends another brain-busting punch at Mephisto's head and causes him to reel in shock, the Myriad Deity shakes off the pain immediately afterward. He claps his claws together and growls under his breath...

"Become... formlesss!"

When Mephisto was still an Emperor, he possessed the ability to turn his body into a mist so fine and gaseous that his soul became untraceable and invisible, even outright undetectable.

However, after becoming a Deity, that power has lost much of its potency. Not because its effectiveness has weakened, but because turning dragon-bones as hard as Leviathan's into a mist-like substance is simply too difficult!

But even so, he does manage to reduce their hardness, making himself more slippery and water-like.

Delighted, Mephisto quickly begins wriggling around like a fish covered in mucus. The Archdemon's grip loosens as he tries to place more hands on the struggling bone-dragon, but Mephisto finally succeeds after ten minutes of struggling, yanking his tail out of the Archdemon's grasp and racing away.

"YESSS!!" Mephisto shouts gleefully, solidifying himself after he beats a hasty retreat, putting distance between himself and his nemesis. "We've broken free! Finally!"

Mephisto does not flee too far from Diablo. He merely puts a healthy distance between himself and his opponent, flying into the sky to hover in the lower atmosphere.

Diablo, meanwhile, stays on the ground. He aims his head at Mephisto, his eyeless face following the Myriad Deity's unmistakably shaky multi-soul foundation to guess at what Mephisto is planning.

"RUNNING AWAY, ARE YOU?" Diablo asks.

"We ssseem to be at a bit of an impassse..." Mephisto hisses, glaring defiantly at his opponent below. His eyes flick hungrily to the Emperors below, desiring greatly to reach out and devour them.

Unfortunately, Mephisto's shadow-copies proved utterly ineffective at sneakily hunting for his prey. The First Emperor trapped them in some sort of strange prison made of an unknown energy type, forcing Mephisto to disperse their bodies back to shadow-fragments.

"Ridiculousss." Mephisto mutters. "We require Emperor sssoulsss to increassse our power, but thisss Diablo won't make it easssy on usss..."

"THIS WORLD IS UNDER MY PROTECTION." Diablo states, as he looks up at Mephisto. "DO NOT EVEN THINK OF TOUCHING THE DEMON EMPERORS HERE."

Mephisto snarls at Diablo. He longs to seize the prizes being denied to him.

While Mephisto does not know the exact strength he could obtain if he devoured more Emperor bodies and souls, he did manage to eat two of them before Crow ascended. The jump in power was not entirely insignificant.

[If I could only devour all fifty sssoulsss below, I might obtain the strength needed to finish off Diablo. Then I could devour him asss well...] Mephisto thinks to himself.

[Wait.] Zamiel says, as a strange look appears in his eyes. [Boss! I've got it!]

[Hm? You do?] Mephisto asks, looking inward at Zamiel's soul-figure.

[Yeah. It's pretty obvious if you think about it. We need Emperor souls to power up, right? Have ya already forgotten?]

Zamiel smirks evilly.

[These ain't the only Demon Emperors in the cosmos, boss.]

Mephisto's breath metaphorically catches, making him quietly gasp.

[Ah! That'sss it! You're right, Zamiel. HEH HEH HEH... we don't need thessse Emperorsss ssspecifically...]

Diablo's face scrunches up in worry as he sees the emotions playing across the dragon's face change from confusion and outrage to sinister glee. Mephisto smiles cruelly at Diablo, then gives him a long, slow nod.

"KEKEKE! You have beaten usss for now, Diablo. You and the Firssst Emperor are more than our match here. But do not be ssso cccertain thisss will remain the cassse forever..."

"WHAT ARE YOU PLANNING?" Diablo asks, not exactly afraid Mephisto is about to pull a fast one on him, but a little worried by the implication in his opponent's words. "REMEMBER, MEPHISTO. WE ARE DEMONS. WE DO NOT NEED TO BE ENEMIES. WE SHOULD WORK TOGETHER TO SUBJUGATE THE PLAGUE, THE VOLGRIM, AND THE HUMANS."

"Well, you sssee, that isss where our opinionsss differ." Mephisto says softly. "You are a falssse Deity. We are a true Deity. You are but a mere Emperor, ssso we will never ressspect your authority. And sssoon, that meager 'power' you posssesss will not be enough to contessst usss, either."

Mephisto calmly levitates backward. He waves his hand, conjuring a portal across the galaxy.

"We will meet again, Diablo. When we do, we will tear you limb from limb. We will devour your mind, sssoul, and body... we will merge you into ourssself, making you jussst another pieccce of our power. KEKEKEKE!"

Diablo watches with concern as Mephisto steps through that portal and closes it behind himself, his cackling laughter cutting off abruptly as the portal closes.

Numaria falls silent.

Diablo waves his hands, causing the remaining Dark Mist to disperse. It fades away, allowing the Emperors and other creatures within the mist's radius to finally see and breathe the open air once more.

Bael slaps the remaining undead attacking him to death, freeing himself up to look around.

"Eh? We won?"

Yardrat and fifteen other nearby Emperors regain their senses. They look around in confusion, not certain of what events transpired deeper within the mist.

"Mephisto left?" Yardrat asks, suspicious. "Why?"

The Archdemon turns to face the remaining Emperors. With a casual sweep of his senses, Diablo identifies every living Emperor and confirms that none fell to the Myriad Deity.

"MEPHISTO WAS UNABLE TO ACHIEVE HIS GOALS." Diablo states. "HE HAS LEFT NUMARIA. HE OPENED A PORTAL TO TRAVEL ELSEWHERE IN THE MILKY WAY."

Emperor Fae steps forward. "Well shit, that's great! Beats having him eat us alive!"

Bael nods. "You said it, sister. That Mephisto's turned into a real creep after he dragoned-up himself. I'm sure glad to see him go."

"DO NOT REJOICE YET." Diablo says sternly. "I HAVE NOT TOLD YOU THE REST OF THE NEWS. MEPHISTO'S PORTAL... IT LED OFF NUMARIA, AND ITS DESTINATION WAS... TARUS II."

The Archdemon pauses for half a second.

"HE IS GOING TO THE WORDSMITH'S WORLD. THERE IS ONLY ONE COSMIC ENTITY CAPABLE OF DOING BATTLE AGAINST HIM ON THE HUMAN'S WORLD, BUT THE CHERUBIIM IS STILL EXHAUSTED. IT WILL NOT BE ABLE TO PROTECT HUMANITY."

Serena frowns. "The Myriad Deity wanted to devour our souls to empower himself. But there are other Emperors on Tarus II! What if Mephisto devours Emperors Kiari, Belial, or even Beelzebub?!"

"I AM NOT ENTIRELY CERTAIN. BUT THE RESULT WILL LIKELY BE A STRONG EMPOWERMENT OF MEPHISTO'S STRENGTH. HE WILL RETURN AND BE ABLE TO MORE EFFECTIVELY DO BATTLE AGAINST ME."

"Then, don't you think you oughta go to Tarus II and help?" Fae asks.

"THIS BODY IS FORMIDABLE. IT IS MASSIVE. IT IS POWERFUL. BUT IT IS SLOW AND DIFFICULT TO MOVE." Diablo states matter-of-factly. "I AM UNABLE TO OPEN PORTALS AS FREELY AS MEPHISTO CAN. IN TERMS OF MOBILITY, HE FAR EXCEEDS ME. FURTHERMORE, IT WOULD NOT BE A GOOD IDEA FOR ME TO INTRUDE UPON HUMANITY'S STRONGHOLD."

Yardrat snorts. "What, are you afraid of the big bad Wordsmiths? You're a Cosmic now! You should be more than strong enough to defeat them now!"

"A COSMIC, YES. AFRAID OF THE WORDSMITHS, NO. I AM SIMPLY UNWILLING TO GO AGAINST THE FIRST EMPEROR'S COMMANDS..." Diablo says turning his gaze to the side.

Abruptly, a figure materializes in the air, its body hazy and distorted, as if existing between multiple dimensions.

Mephisto must fall. But the balance must also be maintained. The first Emperor says. The Milky Way is a living organism. Its cells are comprised of humans, demons, and Volgrim. All are essential for competing in the upcoming interstellar war. All have a role to play. Diablo will not travel to Tarus II. The Wordsmiths will need to prove their strength if they are to survive the upcoming war.

"That runs counter to what you just said." Yardrat points out. "If the humans are so important to keep alive, then shouldn't we intervene to help them? I can open a portal for the Archdemon if I channel enough mana to increase its size..."

There is no contradiction. The First Emperor says, continuing to levitate in the sky like a god. The balance is only maintainable if all the participants rise to their peak. Humanity will not fall, because they have begun to rise to their status as an Apex Species, like the Volgrim. Rather, it is the demons who have begun to fall behind.

"I see." Yardrat says, looking at the other Emperors contemplatively. "We have Diablo now, but he is only one piece of our ultimate strategy. We should find more methods to uplift ourselves further..."

Diablo is capable of protecting you against certain Cosmic Threats. The First Emperor clarifies. But as a true Cosmic, he is no longer capable of shielding you from Mundane Threats. This is why we desired to draw Mephisto to our side. He would have become a powerful ally if he had only shed his old desires for power. Sadly, he is too small-minded to do such a thing.

"What do you mean?" Serena asks. "Why can't Diablo protect us from so-called 'mundane threats'? Isn't he terrifyingly powerful now?"

Diablo lifts his head slightly. "POWERFUL. YES. BUT BY STEPPING INTO THE REALM OF COSMIC, I HAVE BECOME SHACKLED BY THE AKASHIC LAWS. THIS IS A NECESSARY TRADEOFF TO ALLOW OUR SPECIES TO FINALLY BECOME A PLAYER IN THE AKASHIC GAME."

All shall be revealed when the time is ready. The First Emperor states. I will travel to Tarus II now. My existence is transient. I am unable to affect the material plane as readily as I would like, but I shall attempt to assist the humans in some small, perhaps insignificant way.

The First Emperor's body slowly begins to fade, and along with its presence, so too do the memories of its words begin to evacuate the minds of the demons present.

Diablo lifts his hand and waves it around, causing those memories to stop disappearing.

"THE FIRST EMPEROR OF TRANSIENCE." Diablo says, his tone ambivalent. "HE IS... POWERFUL. BUT ALSO WEAK. HE CANNOT SOLVE ALL OF OUR PROBLEMS."

Some of the smarter demons frown at Diablo's words.

"Be honest, Diablo." Serena says. "The First Emperor. Is he a Deity? Or is he even a demon at all?"

"NOT EVEN I AM CERTAIN."

Part 509: Cosmic Levels

Solomon pauses his work, opting to stop writing books for his library for a while. He rests his palm on Hope's shoulder and smiles.

"Come. Walk with me."

He leads Hope out of the library, down a few halls, and into the forest Hope conjured for the Hero known as the Mountain Hermit.

"I've been coming here a lot, recently." Solomon says, as they wander over to the edge of the forest. "I've even had a few chats with that oddball, Jeremiah. Nice chap. A man of few words."

Solomon and Hope walk over and sit down beside a beautiful placid lake. Above them, a false sun glows in the sky, its presence intended to give this fake world the illusion of being a part of Old Earth. Distant birds chirp, and across the lake, a pair of deer lap at the water...

"You wanted to know about the different types of Cosmics." Solomon says, after he and Hope have sat down for a short while.

"I do." Hope says. "Can you enlighten me?"

Solomon nods. "I don't want you thinking I've withheld information from you again. I did not tell you about this because, at the time, there was no point in you knowing. But it will become necessary to keep in mind, very soon. Mephisto has Ascended, and the Archdemon has returned. Things won't be as simple as they were before."

"I find that hard to believe." Hope says, frowning. He tosses a stone out across the pond, skipping it across the water. "Why would you hide the existence of Cosmics from me? What purpose would me not knowing that information serve?"

Solomon remains silent for a while. Perhaps thirty seconds.

He looks out across the lake and sighs.

"Hope. What is a puddle to an ant?"

"I don't think I follow." Hope replies.

"An ant. An insect. When it encounters a puddle, what do you think it imagines the puddle to be, from its perspective?"

"Uh. I guess... a small lake?" Hope says hesitantly.

"That's right." Solomon confirms. "To an ant, a puddle is a formidable obstacle, one it cannot cross easily. But imagine you were in the position of that ant. What would you think, with your advanced brain, when you learned that actual lakes existed? What about seas? What about entire oceans? Could you even mentally fathom such vast bodies of water?"

Hope scrunches up his face.

"I suppose it would be difficult. But compared to an ocean, ants and humans are practically the same size. Oceans are still huge to me."

"That's missing the point." Solomon says, waving his hand casually. "To you, a rock on the ground fits in your palm. But to an ant, that rock is a massive boulder. If an ant were to look up at you, it might perceive you as a 'god.' Some incredible entity capable of manipulating the environment in ways no mere ant ever could."

Solomon continues. "In the same way, you as a human might look up to a Demon Emperor as an indestructible god of destruction. And to a Demon Emperor, a Cosmic Entity is the next step up that ladder. To a Cosmic, a Ruler is the next step up... and to a Ruler, the First Ruler is the ultimate authority of all reality."

"So what's above Akasha himself?" Hope snarks. "Don't tell me. There's ten more levels after him? A super-giga-ultra Ruler??"

Solomon appears unamused. "Not as far as I know."

"That isn't a 'no.'" Hope retorts.

"I have no reason to believe there is anything beyond Akasha." Solomon says. "More importantly, you're missing my main point. You never needed to know anything about Cosmics, because none of them were going to affect you, and even if they did, you didn't have the capital to stand against them. But now, both of those variables have changed."

Hope ceases his snarking to look at Solomon more seriously. "I take it this is a big deal."

"Oh, it's bigger than you can imagine." Solomon says. "I'll tell you the truth, Hope. Until recently, the only Cosmics I knew of in the Milky Way were the Volgrim, and the Archangels, once they ascended. I had my doubts regarding the Archdemon, and the First Emperor's arrival was certainly suspicious, but I couldn't confirm anything."

Solomon waves his hand, conjuring an image of Numaria, slowed down one-hundredfold, where Mephisto and the Archdemon engage in a brutal struggle for dominance.

"Diablo is no longer a rampaging monster hellbent on destruction. The First Emperor has somehow pacified and taught Diablo how to fully control his Archdemon form. The overall power output seems a bit weaker than what I observed during the War in Heaven, but it's also become much more consistent and focused. Diablo is a serious threat now."

"If we end up fighting, can I beat him?" Hope asks.

"Honestly? No. I don't think you can. And the reason for that is why I need to tell you about Cosmic Entities in greater detail."

Solomon sits up straight, assuming a solemn teaching posture.

"The rise from a non-Sentient to a Sentient creature is a qualitative increase in intelligence. The ability to craft tools and think with long-term strategy in mind is extremely significant. This sort of qualitative powerup is what allowed humans to dominate their animal ancestors."

"Similarly," Solomon continues, "the difference between a human and a Demon Duke, let alone an Emperor, is also qualitative. The mightiest human is but a gnat before the weakest Emperor. An Emperor can lay waste to millions of humans effortlessly."

"Sure, but humans can build machines to fight back." Hope points out.

"That's correct. Humans can somewhat level the playing field by relying on our technological superiority." Solomon says. "But only the ignorance of demons prevents them from usurping that so-called 'innate' power of ours. Demons think little of technology, but if they were ever to harness it, they would become untouchable. They would have all our benefits, and none of our weaknesses."

"That's not going to happen soon." Hope snorts. "Demons are dumber than Boomers. You show them a screen and they start raging about how incomprehensible such a basic piece of technology is."

"Right. That's true for now." Solomon warns. "But it might not be forever. Anyway."

He continues. "Cosmics are another qualitative step up. Once you become a Cosmic, even a bottom level, piss-poor, weak little shitstain like Mephisto, you possess unimaginable power compared to even an army of elite mortals. It doesn't matter if 100 Demon Emperors use human technology to reach their apex of power. They simply cannot stand up to Mephisto at all. This is why the First Emperor was forced to use Diablo to counter Mephisto. The only way to beat a Cosmic is with another Cosmic."

"Seriously?" Hope asks in disbelief. "The situation doesn't seem all THAT dire. His body's stronger, his magic is stronger, and his souls too, most likely. But what makes you call him 'invincible'?"

"It is impossible to become a Cosmic unless one obtains a power that defies reality." Solomon says quietly. "To become a Cosmic is to quite literally break the rules of reality. Mephisto obtained his status by relying on unbelievably durable dragonbones forged in the fires of a supernova, along with the power of the Sphinx to meld all his souls together. And even with all those advantages, he only barely managed to step into the very bottom of the Cosmic rankings. This may seem terrible, but he now possesses a certain advantage that perhaps he has not even yet realized himself..."

"And that would be?" Hope asks.

"All Cosmics are restricted by the Akashic Laws." Solomon states authoritatively. "All of them. From the ancient Archangels to the Archdemon to every other Cosmic in between. And the punishments for breaking those laws can be extreme, to say the least."

Metaphorical question marks pop up above Hope's head.

"What laws can't they break?"

"It's easier to explain a different way." Solomon says. "If you wanted, you could reach out with your magic and slaughter a million people effortlessly. In fact, King Arthur once did that very thing by accident. You are a mortal, bound by mortal laws. But Cosmics are so powerful that they can destabilize the universe itself. As such, Akasha placed down laws upon Cosmics to ensure they would not be able to do this."

Solomon pauses for a moment to let his next words sink in.

"Cosmics are not allowed to 'interfere' in the mortal realm. The definition of 'interfere' varies. But essentially, the more powerful a Cosmic is, the more restrictive this definition becomes. At higher levels, Cosmics may only do battle with one another, lest they suffer a terrible backlash."

Hope closes his eyes to ponder this revelation for a few seconds.

"So... if Mephisto slaughters the Demon Emperors, he'll receive a backlash from the Akashic Laws?"

"No. That's the thing. He won't." Solomon continues. "Mephisto is actually such a weak and pathetic Cosmic Entity that the Akashic Laws barely apply to him. He can continue lording his existence over us mortals with ease. But at the same time, he is unable to contest against basically any other Cosmic. This makes him an extremely useful pawn, since he would be capable of devastating entire planets where High Cosmics could not. Diablo is heavily restricted by the Akashic Laws, because he is a Middle Cosmic."

"That's right..." Hope says slowly. "You told me before that the five tiers of Cosmic Entities are Bottom, Low, Middle, High, and Apex."

He cocks his head.

"...So what level is Founder Dosena? A High Cosmic?"

Solomon sighs.

"No. She is also a Middle Cosmic, like Diablo. And for your information, when the Archangels combined to become the Cherubiim, they only attained the level of Low Cosmic."

"I see!" Hope exclaims. "So if Dosena had shown up, she could have destroyed the Cherubiim with ease!"

Solomon's expression becomes contemplative.

"Not... exactly. Things aren't that simple. Remember when Ose, as a mere Demon Emperor, unleashed a powerful attack that smote the Cherubiim? This meant she somehow managed to combine Bael's indestructible body with her lightning-enhanced speed to achieve a power capable of rivaling a Low Cosmic. It's even possible she could rival Dosena, though we weren't able to confirm as much."

"But you said mortals couldn't rival Cosmics." Hope says, pointing out the contradiction in Solomon's words.

"Akasha's Game has Laws. But Laws are made to be broken. Akasha is neither all-seeing, nor all-caring." Solomon explains. "Sometimes, anomalies can appear. And Bael... he does indeed appear to be one of those anomalies..."

Hope nods, recalling what Solomon told him about Bael's strange ability to conjure creatures from the Great Beyond. While Solomon has not managed to set up as robust an observation system as Jason has around the Milky Way, the powers of the Heroes Hope recovered have proven quite effective at supplementing Solomon's abilities.

He can spy nearly as well as the First Wordsmith...

"So." Solomon concludes. "Let me reiterate. Cosmics are not allowed to harm mortals. If they do, they will suffer backlashes. The stronger a Cosmic, the greater the backlash, up to and including their death. However, Mephisto is such a pathetic, weak little pissant of a Cosmic that he is not presently bound by these restrictions."

"So that would make Mephisto a great ally for Diablo." Hope observes. "Diablo should be around Founder Dosena's level, right? That means he can restrain her, while Mephisto could be like his attack dog, running roughshod over the rest of the Volgrim."

Solomon visibly winces. "Well... almost. Except, there's one minor detail you've overlooked."

He pauses.

"Regarding Founder Dosena. She's a Middle Cosmic. She's a 9th Level Psion. What do you suppose that makes the 8th Level Psions?"

Hope blinks. His heart skips a beat.

"No way. NO WAY! You're telling me... every single one of the Executors are Cosmics too?!"

"Low Cosmics." Solomon says. "And the 7th Level Psions... they're all Bottom Cosmics."

"Holy SHIT!" Hope exclaims, jumping up and staring down at Solomon in horror. "Just... just how many Cosmics does the Volgrim Empire have?! You're telling me a single 7th Level Psion is powerful enough to blast the entirety of Tarus II to kingdom come?!"

"Oh, certainly." Solomon nods. "But don't you recall? The Energy Wars of human myth, those frightening wars that nearly rendered our species extinct... during those wars, not a single Psion above the 6th Level showed their face. And the vast majority were 5th Level or below. Most 5th Level Psions can obliterate Demon Emperors without breaking a sweat, barring aberrants like Emperor Ose, Gorn, or Auger. But even the mightiest Emperors usually can't harm a 6th Level Psion. As for 7th Levels? Forget it."

Hope remains standing for a full minute. He becomes lost in his thoughts as he gazes into the distance, his pupils expanding and contracting several times.

Eventually, he slumps back to his butt. He rests his face in his hands, while moaning quietly. "Oh, god. Oh my god. This is insane. I didn't realize- I mean, how can the Volgrim be THAT powerful? Are our human Heroes anything to them at all?!"

Solomon sighs. "It may seem pointless to struggle against them, Hope. But I assure you. Heroes are not as weak as you may now imagine. Arthur was, I would estimate, potentially at the level of a Bottom Cosmic, or even a Low Cosmic while he was alive. You and Jason both have an infinite potential for your growth. I believe reaching the level of Middle Cosmic should be within reach."

Hope lifts his head from his palms. "Then shouldn't that become my top priority?! Humanity is practically defenseless as we stand now!"

"Again, the situation is not as you think." Solomon says. "You've already defeated a 7th Level Psion, Hope. And not just any Psion, but an elite among her peers. That means you already possess the power of a Bottom Cosmic, at least when wielding Excalibur."

Solomon smirks. "We humans... we possess high potential. Our artifacts and technology will give us a fighting chance in the upcoming war. For right now, the Volgrim aren't even our true enemies. They don't want to fight us any more than we want to fight them. We need to work together to defeat the Plague."

"Yeah. But assuming we DO defeat the Plague, what then?" Hope asks.

"Well." Solomon replies. "Then it's time for the gloves to come off."

Solomon pauses to clear his throat.

"Anyway. You're not a true Cosmic, yet you have the capital to contend with Bottom Cosmics like Confessor Vulpanix. That means you're in a similar position as Mephisto, Hope. If you become any stronger, there's a high chance the Akashic Laws will start applying to you. And if THAT happens, you'll lose your ability to contend with the forces threatening humanity."

Hope opens his mouth to retort, but he stops before he speaks, then looks off into the distance.

"...Wait a minute. What if... what if Jason and I..."

"Hm?" Solomon grunts.

"Well. What if I ascended to become a Middle Cosmic, or perhaps even higher. But then, what if Jason didn't? He could remain a mortal to deal with the lower-level matters while I dealt with the higher-level ones."

Solomon raises his eyebrows. "That... is not a bad option. I'm surprised you'd lean toward such an idea."

"Only because it involves me taking the lead as the Milky Way's overlord." Hope says with a smirk. "Jason can stay my underling and shine my shoes. That would suit me just fine."

"Hah!" Solomon laughs. "And there it is, that ego of yours rears its ugly head. What if Jason is the one to ascend first, Hope? He might even be doing so in secret, as we speak."

"Jason doesn't have Excalibur." Hope says confidently. "Maybe I can harness the divine blade's power to boost myself to the next tier of strength."

"Sure. But Jason has Camael's Cube." Solomon points out. "He's not without similar options, Hope. Don't get cocky."

The Second Wordsmith doesn't like that thought. He glowers at Solomon, then looks away.

"We'll see who ultimately ends up on top. I'm betting it will be me."

A few minutes pass. Hope gazes into the distance.

"Say, what about that angel Bael summoned? The Apex Cosmic? Didn't she destroy an entire Fairy city without suffering a backlash?"

Solomon strokes his beard.

"Hmm. She did, yes. Strange. That shouldn't be possible. Unless..."

"Unless?" Hope asks.

"Unless Akasha's rules don't apply to her." Solomon replies. "She seemed to have died and traveled to the Great Beyond. How Bael summoned her, I'm not certain. Perhaps those who return from the Great Beyond... are no longer bound by the Akashic Laws? I certainly pray that isn't the case. It would make Bael a more frightening enemy than even the Second Founder."

"Yeah..." Hope says, trailing off. "Bael. We're going to need to keep an eye on him."

The two men continue chatting for a few hours.

Eventually, Hope gets up to leave.

"I need to head back to Tarus II and help everyone prepare. See you soon, Solomon."

"Don't be a stranger, boy." Solomon replies.

"Return." Hope says, teleporting away.

Solomon remains seated by the lake, enjoying the beautiful midday view.

He waves his hand, conjuring an image of Founder Dosena as she races across the Void toward the world of Numaria.

"Hmm. I wonder what she'll have to say when she encounters Diablo..."

Part 510: Myriad Assault

In the Void half a million miles from Tarus II, a portal forcibly tears open space, and a 100-foot-tall dragon made entirely of bone and rotted flesh emerges.

Mephisto, the Myriad Deity, quickly closes the portal behind himself. He looks at the space where it dissipated for several long seconds, half-expecting Diablo to try and rip open one of his own.

But thankfully for Mephisto, the Archdemon remains behind on Numaria, content to allow Mephisto to escape.

[Hmm... Glinch hasss been captured, and we do not know where he wasss taken...] Mephisto says to the souls inside himself idly. [But it doesss not matter. There are Demon Emperorsss worth devouring on Tarusss II. We ssshould move with hassste! Kekekeke!]

His eyes glow with greed. The Myriad Deity rockets forward, racing across the Void while approaching the general area where he suspects Tarus II to be.

Unfortunately, the Wordsmiths have placed a powerful magical barrier around not only Tarus II, but its moon, Kelkin, as well.

The barrier turns the planet and moon completely invisible to the naked eye, and even shields them from spiritual and psionic senses, at least in theory.

Mephisto travels for a while, but invisible question marks pop up over his head. Through his connections, he has already learned of the Wordsmith's ability to hide humanity's homeworld from the observable universe, but even so, he shouldn't be too far off the mark...

Mephisto sweeps his Cosmic-level senses in a vast area around himself. But bafflingly, he detects faint remnants of Tarus II here, there, all around himself, seemingly in ten to twenty possible locations at once.

Mephisto metaphorically scratches his head. [What the... where isss it?! I ssshould have arrived clossse by...]

Lupus snickers under her breath. [The Wordsmiths might be young and inexperienced, but they aren't completely stupid. I'll bet the Volgrim warned them you were coming. They've put fake trails all over the place to confuse you.]

Mephisto's expression falls. [Gah! Then I'll jussst have to keep sssearching! I don't believe mere mortal Wordsssmithsss can hide anything from a Deity like me!]

He increases his speed, racing around to chase after the faint magical trails in the vicinity, hoping to slip through the field hiding Tarus II from his gaze. Unfortunately, he fails once, twice, even three times!

[Ridiculousss!!] Mephisto snarls. [WHERE THE HELL ISSS IT?! YOU CAN'T JUSSST HIDE A DEVIL-DAMNED PLANET!!]

[Boss, boss, calm down.] Zamiel says. [I've got an idea...]

Zamiel quickly enlightens Mephisto, making the Myriad Deity school his expression and nod.

[Ahh, not bad. Excccellent idea, Zamiel. I'll do that.]

Mephisto performs a few advanced hand-signs. He conjures the full magical might of the former Emperor of War and materializes a massive railgun made of pure demonic energy.

The gigantic cannon glows an ominous blood-red thanks to the Cosmic Energy powering its internal systems. Mephisto himself doesn't have the damnedest clue how such technology works, but neither does he need to. Zamiel's abilities defy reality, allowing him to mimic any technology crafted for war so long as he's come into close contact with it before!

Mephisto begins quickly spinning around, silently firing massive, blinding bolts of blood-red mana into the Void. He targets the distant sensations of mana disturbances he believes to be Tarus II's locations, allowing his destructive weaponry to travel at lightspeed and do the tedious searching for him.

One bullet.

Ten bullets.

A hundred...

For thirty long minutes, Mephisto continues shooting his railgun without a care in the world. Thanks to his status as a Cosmic Entity, even the weakest level, his mana reserves have become practically inexhaustible, at least when considering such a relatively meager expenditure.

Fwip!

Fwip!

Mephisto's claws press the cannon's trigger again and again. He narrows his eyes as a strange feeling wells up in his chest when he aims at one of the trails he detected before. This time, purely on instinct, he targets a position three degrees to the left...

Whoomph.

The railgun shot silently detonates as it strikes something unseen in the void!

Mephisto's cold, undead heart practically leaps out of his chest in euphoria.

[THERE IT ISSS!] Mephisto exclaims. [The world of Tarusss- huh?]

Mephisto pauses. He frowns as the explosion's fiery aftermath dissipates, revealing a figure levitating in the Void.

Hope Hiro, the Second Wordsmith, emerges from a fold in space and smirks at Mephisto. A powerful force-field tightly engulfs his body, protecting him from the vacuum of space.

[Hello, Mephisto. I wondered if you'd ever come close, considering how many shots you missed.] Hope says, his tone smug. [That last one was a little scary. I decided to intervene.]

Mephisto starts to say something, but before he speaks, his eyes fall onto a certain object held in Hope's hand.

The united minds of the Myriad Deity all shudder in fear as they spot that object at the same time.

[Excalibur!] Yama cries.

[The Divine Blade! When did the Wordsmiths recover it?!] Zamiel asks, his tone turning to fear.

Mephisto's pupils shrink to pinpricks. He has been far too busy with his ascension to learn of Hope Hiro's recent successful assault on the Volgrim. He never learned of the secret operation Hope conducted to steal a thousand Heroic Artifacts back from the Volgrim. He certainly didn't learn of Hope creating the Hall of Heroes, nor of him learning to wield the full power of Excalibur.

But one thing is for certain. When Mephisto's eyes fall upon that blade, the same one that reaped millions of demon lives back on Ancient Earth, he cannot help but remember the terror Camael and Arthur brought to his species whenever they unleashed the Divine Blade's power.

Hope's smile turns feral when he sees the unmistakable fear in Mephisto's giant draconic eyes.

[Scared? You should be. I'm not like Jason. I don't hold back when I fight my enemies. You came here, so I'm going to kill you. It's as simple as that. Trying to attack my home was the last mistake you'll ever make.]

Hope's words burrow into Mephisto's ears, making the Myriad Deity shudder.

But, after a few moments, Mephisto's cunning rationality wrestles back control. The Myriad Deity shakes off his fear and grimaces, looking at Hope with bloodlust.

[That blade... it wasss once an unssstoppable weapon which reaped demon livesss like wheat. But thossse were mortal demonsss. We are a Cosssmic Entity. We are beyond you, Sssecond Wordsssmith. Excalibur will NOT be able to harm usss anymore!]

[We'll see about that.] Hope replies, his voice oozing confidence.

Mephisto dissipates the railgun and summons hardened Qi onto his body to reinforce his bones.

Their battle will not end quickly...

Recommended Listening

Hope and Mephisto launch toward one another in the blink of an eye.

The human, eight feet tall.

The demon-dragon, a hundred feet tall, and just as long!

A gnat versus a giant, David versus Goliath, the fight should be decided in an instant. But it isn't!

Hope's body begin flickering from side to side as he approaches Mephisto. He clutches in his left hand a magical bo staff belonging to the ancient Hero known as Jeremiah.

The All-Seer!

Jeremiah's vision is truly impressive. Hope channels the Mountain Hermit's power to not only make out every detail of his distant adversary as he closes the gap, but also because of a hidden ability Jeremiah himself barely used during his life.

The Hermit can see flashes of the future before they happen!

Mephisto's giant claw swipes toward Hope, but the Wordsmith easily sees it coming. He skips to the side a mere millisecond before the claw can connect, allowing it to tear through his after-image.

Then Hope teleports past Mephisto's chest, behind his back, and spins around while raising Excalibur and the Hermit's Staff overhead.

He swings them both down upon Mephisto's back like a meat clever and a megaton hammer, respectively.

Crash, boom!!

Hope smites the undead dragon's spine, but instead of the result he expected, he barely even manages to knock Mephisto a hundred feet away. He doesn't cause the Myriad Deity any perceivable injuries!

Hardly has Mephisto been knocked away before he rapidly spins around and lashes his tail at the diminutive Wordsmith.

Hope teleports, dodging the attack.

Abruptly, a second figure materializes around the dragon, the spitting image of a female King Arthur... Artoria Pendragon!

Artoria ignores the vacuum of space. She flies through the Void with her construct-body while wielding Pseudo-Excalibur, a weapon designed to cut through every material known to man.

She and Hope assault Mephisto from the front and back. They chop and hack at the Myriad Deity, but Hope becomes deeply shocked when the sword that has been able to pierce and hack past any defense finally meets a material it cannot harm.

Pseudo-Excalibur fails to chip even a single flake of Living Moldanium off Mephisto's bones.

The heavy impacts of the swords wielded by Hope and Artoria do cause Mephisto some mild pain, but the demon-dragon doesn't suffer any long-lasting injuries.

And as the battle continues, Mephisto's movements become faster, trickier. He snaps his fingers, imbuing himself with the power of lightning to accelerate and maneuver faster.

BANG!

Mephisto's claw violently slams against Artoria, sending her careening away. She fails to dodge the attack, but luckily her body is durable enough to take one hell of a beating.

Hope continues carefully dodging Mephisto's attacks. While he might act overconfident on the surface, he takes Solomon's warnings about Cosmic Energy seriously. Mephisto might be at the very bottom of the Cosmic scale, but he is still a genuine Cosmic nonetheless!

Mephisto roars in frustration. [SSSTOP DODGING! JUSSST DIE ALREADY! YOU ARE SSSLOWING THISSS DEITY DOWN! YOU ARE ONLY AN ANNOYANCCCE!]

The Myriad Deity slashes at Hope again, but abruptly, Hope stops moving and allows the claw to land on his body.

BOOM!!!

Mephisto gets the successful attack he wanted, but at the moment of impact, every ounce of his own power reverses back into his body, slamming him with the force of a planet-buster attack.

Mephisto screams in pain as Hope somehow directly counters his savage strike, causing Mephisto's soul to suffer a tearing pain.

[Aaargh!]

Hope's smirk deepens. [An eye for an eye. A tooth for a tooth. This is the power of the Hero known as Hammurabi! You will learn to fear him, Mephisto!]

A necklace hangs around Hope's neck. Hammurabi's artifact, miniaturized, rests on the string, along with more than a dozen also-miniaturized relics Hope brought in anticipation of his battle with the Myriad Deity.

Mephisto's arm trembles with pain. He pulls back to get some distance from Hope while snarling at the Wordsmith. [Filthy HUMAN! You resssort to tricksss becaussse you have no REAL power! Compared to thisss deity, you are but a pain in our asss!]

Zamiel's heartrate spikes. [Boss! BOSS! Where's the dame?!]

As soon as he asks, Mephisto quickly scans the vicinity for Artoria, only to realize she's gone missing. Then he senses her approaching him from a great distance away.

Artoria races toward Mephisto, building up speed as she accelerates. She holds Pseudo-Excalibur overhead, ready to chop it down upon his bones.

"RESTRICT!" Hope shouts, aiming a Word of Power at Mephisto.

For a brief instant, invisible chains wrap around Mephisto's body, freezing him in place. Mephisto roars, angry that the Wordsmith has managed to trip him up.

But before Artoria can successfully clear the gap, Mephisto flexes his Cosmic power. He sends a surge of mana out of his bones and easily breaks Hope's pathetic, mortal-level restraints.

When Artoria arrives, Mephisto spins to the side and slams his claw down upon her, parrying her attack and sending her flying once more.

[Niccce try, Wordsssmith! Kekeke!] Mephisto laughs telepathically. [Your Wordsssmithing magic is ineffective againssst a Cosssmic!]

Hope's smirk disappears. He frowns, realizing Mephisto might be right. Even empowering his magic with Excalibur only grants himself a higher volume of mana, or a spell with more breadth.

But as for its qualitative strength, it still remains below the Cosmic level. Mephisto's superior existence allows him to ignore such weak restrictions or break them in less time than a mortal would require.

In the moment between moments, while Hope tries to think of a better way to fight Mephisto, the Myriad Deity suddenly waves his hands.

He conjures a pair of shadow-dragons, then sends them racing across the Void, ignoring Hope and Artoria entirely.

[Shit!] Hope exclaims.

He starts to pursue them when he recognizes the direction those two shadows have begun charging toward, none other than the general location of Tarus II!

When Hope turns to chase after the shadows, Mephisto makes a different move. He summons a Warper portal, then leaps through it, arriving thousands of miles further ahead of his shadows. Mephisto reverses their direction to charge at Hope while himself resuming course to fly in Tarus II's direction.

[Thossse Emperor sssoulsss will be MINE!]

Hope wields Excalibur and the Hermit's Staff with practiced precision. He shreds Mephisto's pair of shadows, though he does find that each one is roughly as strong as a Demon Emperor. It takes him nearly thirty seconds to properly kill them, giving Mephisto precious time to widen the gap and draw ever closer to Tarus II.

Mephisto succeeds.

As he travels across space, the demon-dragon passes through some unknown boundary, some barrier of invisibility shielding Tarus II from view, and the Paradise-Class world ultimately reveals itself.

The moment Mephisto breaches the invisible boundary, a series of installations on Tarus II aim ground-to-space railgun cannons in Mephisto's general direction.

They fire, sending scraps of metal and precisely-molded bullets flying toward him at relativistic speeds.

Several shots slam against Mephisto, exploding against his bones uselessly, while others only manage to slow his momentum by a fraction of a percent. He barely notices these feeble attacks at all.

"KEKEKE!" Mephisto laughs as he breaches Tarus II's airspace. "HUMANSSS! DIE FOR ME!"

Mephisto waves his hands again. He summons more than a dozen underground Death Gates, causing undead of many types to spawn all over beneath Tarus II's surface.

Inside and outside the Fortress of Retribution, dead monsters and demons empowered by Mephisto's Cosmic Energy emerge from the soil, stronger than they ever were in life. Many end up blasted by nearby troopers who were alerted to Mephisto's imminent arrival ahead of time, but plenty emerge uncontested. They rush toward the civilian population centers, hellbent on causing a mass casualty event to further add to Mephisto's undead coffers.

At the same time, a targeted strike force consisting of Mephisto's former underlings, the undead necromancers named Ozzar, Azuth, and others, emerge from underground while being flanked by two of the Emperors Mephisto killed when he first ascended.

These two were previously mere Dukes who became empowered by Glinch's Soul Pellets, rising to the most glorious station of their existence, only to die immediately after to a casual wave of Mephisto's claws.

This specialized strike force goes on the hunt. Their targets: Any isolated Emperors, such as Belial, Kiari, Beelzebub, or any similarly powerful monsters that can bolster the strength of Mephisto's souls.

Perhaps he won't remain a Bottom Cosmic forever if he can get his claws on the former Second Emperor, Belial, or even the Emperor of Inferno, Beelzebub!

Kiari would be fine too, as Mephisto isn't terribly picky. Remembering how her annoying bugs helped beat back his undead before he ascended, he mostly only wants to eat her so he can enjoy a dish of revenge served cold...

Mephisto's assault on Tarus II does not end as abruptly as the one on Numaria did. Humanity lacks a Cosmic to protect them, aside from the Cherubiim, and the Archangels are still too tired to elevate their souls once more.

Even so, humanity's champions do not falter. Neil's military forces have long grown proficient at battling the demons. With the new advances in training fueled by the Queen Network, the Cube's internal time-accelerated spaces, and each Wordsmith's unique take on how to improve their capabilities, the battle has only just begun.

Amidst all of the chaos, a single Goblin quickly and efficiently slinks out of sight, traveling to a designated meeting area, where he finds a large boulder situated behind a building located two blocks from the Western Hospital. Without hesitation, that goblin steps 'inside' the rock, passing through it as if it weren't there and revealing a hidden space inside. The rock 'hardens' its exterior again, allowing the goblin to lift up a hatch in the ground and enter it, unseen.

He climbs straight down a ladder, where he arrives in an uncomfortably small and cramped observation post complete with top-of-the-line spying technology. Inside, another goblin sits in a chair while facing a small screen, only to turn and face the newcomer.

"Junior Kotori." The second goblin states. "Demon Deity Mephisto is attacking Tarus II. You were smart to come here."

"Informer Jin." The first goblin, Kotori, also known as Grima, says. "Have you informed the Founders of this incursion?"

"The Founders are aware." Jin states. "Operative Duugo has not reported to this one yet. I believe they may have fallen to Mephisto's attack. We are to remain inside the Observation Pod until we receive further orders."

The distant sounds of screams trickle inside the Changeling's underground bunker. Informer Jin quietly dials up the exterior's noise suppression system to improve its concentration ability.

"Founder Dosena." Kotori says. "Is she on her way here? To battle Mephisto?"

"Negative." Jin replies. "Founder Dosena is continuing to travel toward the world of Numaria. The Myriad Deity is a Bottom Level Cosmic. He is no threat to our Empire. It is more important for the Second Founder to investigate the origins of the Apex Cosmic signature that briefly appeared in the Milky Way. Its point of origination was on the world of Numaria."

"This one contemplates, and this one comprehends." Kotori says, nodding its head. "This one will take a seat at the Secondary Terminal. Which entity or location would you like this one to observe?"

"This one will focus on Mephisto." Jin says. "You will attempt to follow the movements of the Second Wordsmith, Hope Hiro. If the First Wordsmith makes an appearance, inform this one at once. We must report every available piece of data we can obtain regarding the Wordsmiths directly to the First Founder. Due to the magical field shielding this world, directly observing the two Wordsmiths has become much more difficult. We must continue to compile a profile for the Five Founders, as the Wordsmiths may become our greatest enemy should the Plague be successfully purged."

Kotori bows its head. It takes two steps and sits at the terminal beside Informer Jin.

"Understood. This one will monitor the Second Wordsmith's movements."

Both Changelings fall silent. They perform their work diligently and begin manipulating tiny, barely-noticed drones that buzz around at hypersonic speeds in Tarus II's skies, even entering the Void itself to try and catch Mephisto and the Wordsmiths in action.

Every piece of intelligence they can feed to the Founders will assist the Volgrim war effort.

After all.

Strength wins battles, but intelligence wins wars.

Part 511: Hidden Wordsmith

On the world of Volgarius, at the same time as Mephisto has begun his assault on Tarus II.

Founder Treyza, leader of the Changelings, sits inside a spaceship as it travels across Volgarius's skies. With Hope Hiro having been confirmed as 'dealt with' and pacified by Founder Unarin, the orders have been sent out to all the ships that evacuated the homeworld to return as soon as possible.

The Apex Cosmic appears to have vanished, or perhaps hidden its presence elsewhere in the Milky Way.

Hope Hiro is also no longer an imminent threat.

Thus, Founder Treyza is free to return at its leisure. Like all Changelings, Treyza does not assign itself any pronouns related to biological sex or gender unless currently undergoing an operation on a hostile world. However, the Third Founder has not stepped foot on any foreign locations personally in well over a million years. Since it possesses many capable subordinates, this much is to be expected.

"Hmm."

Treyza idly examines a datapad as its stealth-ship begins the docking procedure with the Founder's Thumb. Several reports scroll across the screen, showing images and video of the Second Wordsmith battling the demon-dragon hybrid known as the Myriad Deity.

Inside that shuttle, four other Changelings sit. Each of them appear to be exact duplicates of the Third Founder. Not only do their mannerisms perfectly mirror Treyza, but even their DNA is identical down to the molecular level. They are not clones, but instead high-level Changelings trained to act as the Third Founder's decoys. In the event of an enemy attack, determining which of the five Changelings is the true Third Founder would prove difficult, and so, they provide a certain level of subterfuge for Treyza's protection.

At the same time, half a dozen 6th Level Psions, and a single 7th Level Psion also sit inside the shuttle. These Psions provide security for Treyza, acting as the Third Founder's bodyguards in the case of an enemy attack. The 7th Level Psion, Praetor Kal, is an especially talented member of his sub-species. While nowhere near as famous as Confessor Vulpanix, with her explosive rise following the conclusion of the Energy Wars, he is significantly older, at 300,000 cycles of age.

Praetor Kal's main specialties lie in two fields: Detection/Observation, and Subterfuge.

As a master of Investigative Psionics, Praetor Kal's ability to not only detect threats in the vicinity, but sense impending threats has reached the peak. He studied classified branches of Temporal Psionics to give himself a small edge in foreseeing threats which might arise within the immediate future.

Even better, he studied for millennia to learn how to shroud his Existence from the galaxy, as well as the Existences of others, a handy trick in case his charge ever came under threat.

While he is a formidable entity and difficult to deceive, his combat abilities are not to be underestimated either. He long ago mastered the forms of many different Psionic Combat disciplines, and even successfully obtained the approval of the Dolgrimite Matriarch, who gave him the ability to study a few fighting schools from her sub-species. Most non-Dolgrimites, especially among the Psions, would never be able to obtain such a boon.

As one of the most open-minded Psions among his people, Praetor Kal does not consider himself biased against any other species in the universe, be they friend or foe. While the Third Founder studies the images streaming from Tarus II, so too does the Praetor.

[The demons were not supposed to be capable of reaching the level of Cosmic.] Praetor Kal transmits to the Third Founder. [This revelation both worries and excites me.]

"Our species is losing the War." Founder Treyza states without any emotion. "Perhaps the demons could assist us if they became more capable of Ascending. But based upon the method this one has hypothesized Emperor Mephisto used, the other demons will not be able to replicate it."

[And what of the creature known as the Archdemon?] Praetor Kal asks. [Its strength appears to rival Founder Dosena's. It could become a fearsome adversary or a boon companion.]

"We will have to investigate whether or not there are other demons that have hidden methods to achieve Cosmic-level power." Founder Treyza states. "For two to appear at once, as well as an Apex Cosmic Archangel, this information implies the balance of power is not as stable as we first believed."

[It's a shame that by comparison, the humans aren't impressive.] Praetor Kal says. [The Wordsmiths possess vast untapped future prospects, but they are unlikely to accomplish much before the Plague reaches the Inner Systems. The rest of humanity is ordinary.]

Treyza blinks its eyes. It lifts its gaze from its datapad to look at Praetor Kal.

"This one disagrees. The human species is quite remarkable. They have an amount of latent potential equal to all of the Volgrim subspecies combined."

[With all due respect, I find that claim difficult to believe.] Praetor Kal says, contorting his face in disbelief. His six eyes blink slowly. [The humans may possess some magical talent as we have recently observed, but it is inferior to the ancient Titans, demons and angels. They possess no psionic prospects either.]

"This one performed many investigations of the humans during their short but explosive existence on Earth." Treyza says without judgment. "They are highly adaptive creatures, with biologies that grant them... interesting aptitudes the Volgrim cannot replicate."

Treyza continues. "Are you aware of the purity contained within the human genome?"

[I do not comprehend.] Kal answers. [To what 'purity' do you refer?]

"The human species appears ordinary." Treyza begins to explain. "But they are an Apex Species, like the Volgrim. It is only because they have yet to discover their special capabilities that they are not yet a threat to us. Among their biological traits is their remarkable reproductive compatibility with other Sentients."

[Reproductive compatibility?] Kal repeats. [You mean to imply they are sexually compatible with species beyond their own?]

"More than that." Treyza counters. "Human DNA is extremely dominant in its biological makeup. They are capable of impregnating and becoming impregnated by any other species that also reproduces sexually. Further, the percentage of human DNA that overwrites their partner's genomes is remarkably high."

Treyza continues. "In addition to their reproductive supremacy, they are also highly malleable to adverse environments. In fact, the more dangerous and traumatic an environment or situation, the more capable the average human is of dealing with it compared to the average Volgrim. Their superior neuroplasticity allows them to adapt quickly to new and unfamiliar situations."

[Forgive me, Founder, for I am truly ignorant.] Praetor Kal pleads. [But these 'traits' do not sound particularly remarkable. Compared to the overwhelming power of a Psion, what advantages would genetic supremacy or high neuroplasticity offer? These will not prevent humanity from being swallowed by the Plague, nor grant them any advantages in warfare.]

"There are several Founder-level projects regarding the integration of non-Volgrim species with Volgrim gifts, such as psionic potential." Treyza explains. "Only humans have shown the ability to wield psionic power at the lowest levels. We believe that, given time, humans could learn to harness psionic powers to a similar degree as your subspecies. We simply lack the funding and time required to prove this hypothesis correct."

[If you wish to form additional Psions, then we need to create and train more of them ourselves.] Praetor Kal concludes. [Apologies, but I see no value in empowering potential enemies of the Volgrim Empire.]

Only a high level Psion like the Praetor would dare disagree with a Founder's assessment, but Kal knows his limits. He always keeps his tone respectful, and he would only dare speak his thoughts in private, where it would not affect his or the Third Founder's reputation. So long as word never gets out about his disagreement, he won't suffer a social backlash. It helps that Founder Treyza is the most mild-mannered and logical of the Five Founders. Treyza enjoys engaging in robust debates, in order to sustain their intellectual curiosity.

"It stands to reason that the humans could become valuable allies." Treyza says noncommittally. "But they could also become dangerous enemies. We will not know until-
"

[QUIET.] Praetor Kal suddenly shouts, as he stands up in his seat.

The abrupt silencing of the Third Founder does not annoy them. Instead, Treyza falls completely silent, its expression becoming more alert as it notices the alarm on the Praetor's face.

[We are being watched!] Kal states, swiveling around to look for something unseen. [I sense... I sense an intelligent mind probing our location!]

Kal quickly tries to pinpoint the alien sensation, but just as quickly as he sensed its arrival, the intruder vanishes, leaving him bewildered.

"Something was observing us?" Treyza asks out loud, glancing around the shuttle's interior without any emotion. "Or someone?"

[I am... not certain.] Kal says, his adrenaline lowering as he intentionally reverts his mental state. [I sensed something... distant. Something lacking malice, filled with curiosity. An observer. I am not certain of its origination point, nor its identity.]

Treyza remains silent.

But privately, one suspect comes to the Third Founder's mind.

Perhaps... one of the Wordsmiths...?

Mephisto's body tears through Tarus II's skies. He rockets toward the humans, monsters, and demons below with bloodshot eyes as fire explodes around his body. At the speeds the demon-dragon is traveling, the air resistance has superheated his bones to over a thousand degrees! But given their status as Living Moldanium, such paltry levels of heat don't cause the Myriad Deity any harm whatsoever.

Just as Mephisto travels within five miles of the Fortress of Retribution's airspace, a tiny figure suddenly pops into position before him.

So fast is Mephisto moving that he doesn't have the time to consider the figure's identity. He merely raises a claw overhead and slashes toward it, assuming the tiny form to be that of Hope Hiro, teleporting in front of him to stop his charge!

The instant before Mephisto can land his attack, his body abruptly and jarringly comes to a halt, as if compelled by the forces of the universe itself! Like a bird slamming against a bedroom window, Mephisto's attack stops at the last second, along with the rest of his body, making him cry out in surprise.

"Uuuack?!"

The Myriad Deity coughs in surprise, only now getting a look at the figure that has impeded his path.

"What?! You... little fairy wretch!"

Her arms crossed defiantly, Blinker, the Monster Queen, levitates in front of Mephisto with a confident smirk on her face.

"Woo! I won't lie, Mephisto. I was scared for a second! I didn't know if those Sphinx restrictions would still apply to ya, now that you're all strong and stuff. But it sure looks like they do!"

Mephisto snarls at the Fairy Queen. "GET OUT OF OUR WAY! SSSTUPID WOMAN!"

He flaps his wings to fly to the side, attempting to go around her.

Foop!

Blinker teleports directly into Mephisto's path, causing him to once again come to an abrupt and somewhat embarassing halt.

Considering his appearance as a 100-foot-tall demon-dragon, and her size as a teeny-tiny fairy, the way he has to clumsily avoid her much nimbler and agile form to get at the humans makes him resemble a giant elephant terrified of a rat.

"Move!!" Mephisto roars, attempting to skirt around Blinker again.

But once more, she teleports into Mephisto's path.

"Don't think so. This is as far as you go, Mephisto. End of the line."

Each time Mephisto tries to bypass the fairy queen, she teleports into Mephisto's way, body-blocking him. If he attacks her, his magic goes berserk, preventing him from causing her any actual harm.

For thirty long seconds, Mephisto tries again and again, but he just can't make it past Blinker, no matter what he does.

At the same time, Hope Hiro quickly dispatches Mephisto's shadow-dragon clones. He rips them apart with Excalibur, then teleports himself and Artoria down to Tarus II, arriving behind Mephisto, where he momentarily becomes confused by the strange 'dance' Mephisto seems to be performing in the skies.

"...the fuck?" Hope asks, before noticing Blinker. "Oh! So it's like that."

Hope immediately understands the situation. He stretches out with his senses to grab hold of Mephisto's Cosmic Energy signature, then he yells a Word of Power.

"TELEPORT!"

Intending to yank himself and Mephisto away from Tarus II, all Hope instead accomplishes is teleporting Mephisto backward a mere 500 meters! Instead of tearing the Myriad Deity out of the planet's atmosphere by force, Hope barely even changes his spatial position.

"What?"

Hope becomes momentarily befuddled before remembering what Solomon told him. Even a weak, pathetic Bottom Level Cosmic like Mephisto is still a monster Hope can't easily handle. The usual tricks he uses against Demon Emperors won't work here.

Mephisto, frustrated by his inability to bypass Blinker, sends a scowl Hope's way.

"Ksss... you caught up to usss... but we are not your punching bag, Sssecond Wordsssmith!"

At the mention of his least-favorite nickname, the 'Second Wordsmith' grows visibly angrier. Hope puts away the Hermit's Staff to focus all his attention on wielding Excalibur.

Then, he speaks another series of Words of Power.

"Enlarge! Solidify! Strengthen! Compress! Enlarge! Mass! Gravity..."

Having practiced for ten long hours before Mephisto arrived, Hope quickly fires off a string of thirty Words of Power, causing his body's size to enlarge, solidify, and condense as he grows from eight feet tall to the same size as Mephisto, at over a hundred feet tall!

The power of Excalibur flows through Hope's veins. He deliberately supercharges his body, hardens his skin, and makes himself 'invincible' for the sake of doing battle with this Demon Deity.

Mephisto senses the changes. He turns to look at Hope, then charges at the Hero while Hope is still enlarging himself.

"Not ssso fassst!" Mephisto roars.

But before he can slash at Hope, Blinker teleports in front of him, stymieing his attack and forcing him to abort before he can bite off the Wordsmith's enlarging head.

"GET OUT OF OUR WAY!" Mephisto shouts.

"Don't feel like it!" Blinker shouts back.

Hope completes his transformation, turning himself into a pseudo-Titan as he gazes at Mephisto with a look of glee.

"Time to see what this body can do. C'mere, Mephisto!"

Hope lunges at the Myriad Deity. Mephisto summons his two shadow clones to bite and scratch at Hope, but the enlarged Excalibur takes care of them, while the diminutive Artoria and Blinker harass Mephisto to keep him busy. Artoria uses her Pseudo-Excalibur to slash at any exposed joints Mephisto reveals, while Blinker continually gets in his way and annoys him, preventing the Myriad Deity from landing any full-power strikes.

Mephisto socks Hope in the jaw, snapping the Hero's head backward. Hope feels no pain thanks to his 'Invincible' Word of Power. He follows up with a brutal headbutt against Mephisto, followed by swinging the gigantic Excalibur against Mephisto's arm and sending him flying to the side.

Neither Hope nor Mephisto ultimately receive any injuries from their battle. Frustratingly, Hope's Wordsmithing only ends up making him equally as durable as Mephisto, resulting in a battle between two immovable objects as the two of them whale on each other uselessly.

But things are not so simple for the humans living inside the Fortress of Retribution. Before Mephisto even arrived, humanity had already been forewarned of his approach by Hope and Jason both. They put many of their civilians inside pre-designated disaster shelters and had their soldiers wait on standby, T-REX's activated and ready for battle.

Now, a scene much like the Stormbringer War from a few months earlier plays out once more. Undead burst out of the dirt and charge in every direction, attacking buildings and ripping them apart by their foundations.

Human, monster, and demon soldiers take up elevated positions, either firing their weapons into the swarm or attacking with magical and mundane means alike. Burner Grunts fight alongside humans and Harpies alike, with no discrimination between the three. In their eyes, this is a battle for survival!

Emperor Belial finds herself cornered as a pair of Cosmically-empowered Demon Emperors and three Dukes surround her outside the Western Hospital. The Emperors consist of Vexith, the Emperor of Sludge, and Malor, the Emperor of Oppression. As for the three Dukes, they consist of Ozzar, Azuth, and another of Mephisto's necromancer underlings.

Reborn through Mephisto's Cosmic power, their bodies no longer reek of rotting flesh, but instead glow blood-red with demonic miasma. They lick their lips evilly as they press in on Belial.

"Your body and soul will serve our master well." Ozzar says to her. "Die now."

Vexith pounces at Belial and turns himself into a thick, viscous liquid. He spreads his body out in a large area, intending to trap and restrict her movements.

Belial snaps a punch at his incoming form. She splatters a chunk of his body, spraying his sludgey form outward in a cone, then quickly turns herself into a skinny, pole-width version of herself to leap through that hole. Vexith fails to entrap Belial and instead slaps against the ground like a bag of wet concrete.

At the same time, Malor sends disorienting pulses of energy at Belial. He punches the air, sending soul-suppressing waves her way. Belial cries out in pain, and her body becomes destabilized as she returns to her bipedal form. Belial staggers for a moment, giving the three necromancers a chance to hurl magically enchanted bindings at her wrists and ankles.

Snap! Snap!

They clamp onto her joints like shackles, and the necromancers pull hard, trying to immobilize her so Vexith or Malor can get a kill.

Unfortunately, they are mere Dukes, and Belial is physically the strongest Emperor. She pulls with all her strength on the chains, yanking the necromancers into her range. They scream in fright as she sends punches flying into their skulls, exploding their heads and spraying their brain matter in all directions.

Belial kills all three of the necromancers without breaking a sweat!

But unfortunately, only seconds later, those same necromancers emerge from the ground, clawing their way back to Tarus II's surface to surround her once again.

"The hell?" Belial gasps. "You've become capable of defying death?!"

"Hahahaha! Something like that! Our master is truly peerless in the art of necromancy!" Ozzar declares.

Vexith pounces off the ground. Before Belial can react, his viscous body splats against her back and rapidly starts to expand, slithering across her figure too quickly for her to escape. Belial whirls and jumps around, trying to peel the sludge-like Emperor off herself, but her body quickly becomes heavier and heavier, and nothing she does seems to be capable of pulling him off!

Just when all seems lost, a massive fireball shoots out of the sky and slams into Ozzar's body, blasting him to smithereens and killing him once more.

Then two more fireballs rain downward, killing the other necromancers as well.

Beelzebub rockets toward Belial from above, summoning flames to engulf his body. He grits his teeth and unleashes a warcry. "Guaaah!"

The Emperor of Inferno deliberately crashes into Belial, knocking her against the ground and planting his superheated body against the sludge crawling up her back.

"Eeyyaah!" Belial cries out, as Beelzebub's flames badly burn her skin.

"Aaaaargh!" Vexith also shouts, his body rapidly being boiled alive.

"Shit! Fuck! Aaugh!" Beelzebub also cries, as the backlash from hurting Belial causes his soul to suffer unbelieveable pain.

Despite his kamikaze-like tactic, Beelzebub successfully forces Vexith to abandon his strategy. The Emperor of Sludge pulls what remains of himself off Belial and leaps to the side, reforming as a badly-burned, horribly misshapen mess of a demon.

"Aaah! Beelzebub- cough! You burned me, you- you fucking fucker!!"

Beelzebub quickly pulls away from Belial, leaving her to twist and contort in agony on the ground. With much of the skin on her back badly melted and fused to her bones, the pain she feels is truly indescribable.

Even so, she doesn't blame Beelzebub. It's obvious at a glance that he had to do that in order to save her life. Belial starts trying to heal herself, but the pain is so excruciating that she can't quite summon the mana needed to do so.

Meanwhile, seeing as Beelzebub has arrived, Emperor Malor summons all the mana in his body to fire a devastating beam of Soul Destruction at Beelzebub, knocking him off his feet and causing the Emperor of Inferno to collapse into hysterics on the ground.

"Aah! You shithead!" Beelzebub shouts, before his migraine immediately subsides and his regeneration kicks in. He jumps back to his feet and directs a rage-fueled glower at the one who just attacked him. "Oh, you are going to regret pissing ME off!"

Beelzebub lunges at Malor. It doesn't take five seconds for him to atomize the other Emperor, blasting apart Malor with nuclear hellfire while his opponent screams like a banshee.

Malor dies, and Vexith follows soon after.

Beelzebub turns to say something to Belial, but when he does, he finds that... she's disappeared.

"...Huh?"

Beelzebub blinks twice.

"What the-?! Don't tell me Mephisto got to her after all?"

But then, Jason Hiro's voice speaks inside Beelzebub's mind.

[I've taken care of Belial. Good work, Beelzebub. I overlooked what was happening with her. Keep your focus on Ozzar and the others. They seem to be capable of regenerating from death repeatedly, like you and Satan could. I'm not sure how Mephisto accomplished this, but I suspect it might be due to the evolution of his Cosmic powers...]

"Wordsmith?" Beelzebub asks, looking around in confusion. "Where are you?"

[Not important.] Jason answers. [Keep up with what you're doing. If you want to prove you've changed over a new leaf, there's no time like the present.]

Beelzebub pauses for a brief moment, a strange feeling welling up in his chest. He nods.

"Right. I'll do that, then."

The Myriad War continues...

Part 512: Benny's Brain Battle

Hope Hiro, Blinker, and Mephisto engage in a dangerous dance of death as the human and fairy do battle to prevent Mephisto from drawing any closer to the single mega-city housing the vast, overwhelming majority of humanity's population.

While they fight, Mephisto's undead pour into the land beneath the city with reckless abandon. Their undead nature grants them the ability to travel up and emerge from the dirt anywhere they please, and with Cosmic power filling their bodies, every single Risen creature possesses twice the strength they did when they were alive.

Skeletons assault the hospital, but they're driven back by Emperor Belial.

Undead orcs and goblins attack one of the largest reinforced shelters, where the Minotaur known as Yamir works together with dozens of humanity's elites to fend off the attackers.

The Felorians put their skills to good use by hunting down the stronger enemies beneath the Duke level in groups of two and three soldiers each.

Commander Neil himself makes sure to join the fray. While protecting his life and commanding from a distance might ensure he would save his skin, he bravely dons his iconic red and blue exosuit to fight on the frontlines. Having been recently upgraded by Hans Wagner, it possesses much stronger defensive capabilities now, including a limited-use jumpjet engine for quick escapes.

Alongside Neil, a group of black-suited soldiers wielding anti-demon material rifles take up positions atop nearby buildings. Waves of undead spawn en-masse to climb the structures and tear out their foundations, but the troopers wearing Spectre T-REX's are no ordinary soldiers. They are Neil's hand-picked bodyguards, his elite protection force he assembled following his rescue from Ose's prison.

A single Hummer-wearing soldier, Linda Hurent, flies around in the skies, her exosuit's flight speed roughly 25% faster than when she fought Beelzebub a few months earlier, following his escape from the Southern Prisons. Linda wields a sniper rifle and levitates above Neil, taking potshots at any high-level targets he points out.

On the western side of the Fortress of Retribution, a platoon of soldiers operates under the temporary command of Benjamin Brown. Having mostly recovered from his battle with Gressil, and having also reawakened his primal sense of fighting spirit, the man formerly known as Humanity's Strongest Soldier fights Mephisto's undead with his one remaining arm. With his left arm torn off following Lucifer's attack, he's lost a good deal of his fighting strength. But even so, he can still use a Nanosword with his remaining hand.

Benjamin swings the Nanosword with a strangely ferocious rage. The other soldiers nearby keep their distance, awed and slightly afraid of his brutal killing methods. With every swing, Benjamin beheads and bisects one to two undead monsters the moment they pop out of the ground. Whether Mephisto sends ordinary monsters, demon grunts, or even Demon Lords, it doesn't matter. Benjamin slaughters them all with such fury that they eventually stop popping up in the immediate vicinity, too afraid to come within his reach.

As for Humanity's Strongest Soldier, he doesn't even breath hard. To him, this is little more than some light anaerobic exercise. His ocular implants scan the area for new threats, allowing him to locate blobs of demonic miasma while the undead travel underground.

"Fuck. Fuck! FUCK!" Benjamin shouts, seemingly for no reason. "Pieces of SHIT! I hate demons so much! God, I hate you all, every last motherfucker!"

Over the past few days, he's become more and more prone to random outbursts of rage. Those closest to him, even his daughter, have easily noticed the change.

But no matter who, what, or how they ask, he never gives them a satisfactory reason. Some come to assume he must have suffered PTSD from his loss to Gressil, but as for the Vanguard himself, nothing could be further from the truth.

Benjamin loves killing demons. It was one of the reasons he was selected for such a painful experimental procedure in his youth. At times, his lust for blood can even border on the psychopathic.

Over the past 100,000 years, Benjamin quietly resigned himself to a peaceful life. A life spent raising his children and watching them grow up.

He thought he had finally found simple contentment, if not outright happiness.

But the battle against Gressil changed everything.

Now, he has begun to feel that ancient hunger boiling his blood once more.

The reason he has started lashing out in rage is not because of shellshock or some mental trauma. No, rather, the reason is due to the manipulation of Gressil himself. The implanting of a devil-damned parasite inside Benjamin's mind.

All day long, Desire taunts him. Teases him. Pokes and prods him.

He wants to rip it out, to bare the ugly truth to humanity's leaders. It would be so simple, so effortless.

But he CAN'T!

Gressil has him by the balls. If he tries to tell anyone, Gressil can simply kill Lily at his leisure. Benjamin can't protect her 24/7, and even if he could, she'd surely grow to resent him.

Telling the Wordsmiths about Desire would doom his daughter to a slow and painful death!

So now, the Vanguard keeps his mouth shut. His slowly increasing adrenaline causes the blood vessels in his eyes to burst, only to be repaired by his internal nanobot reconstructors. He directs this unstoppable, unceasing rage at the demons attacking humanity, these minor, weak, pathetic, tertiary enemies that won't give him a drop of satisfaction.

Even worse, with each demon he rips apart, that ancient hunger for battle intensifies, bit by bit. He begins to recall with a certain nostalgia the way people used to look up to him, to fear him, and even to worship him.

When the Energy Wars were at their peak, Humanity's Strongest Soldier was more than an augmented supersoldier. He was a household name. An icon. A celebrity.

People saw him as their modern-day Hero.

But in the end, when the Volgrim brought down the hammer, Benjamin turned his back on his species.

He received a golden parachute. He went to live on Hell Harbor, along with his close family. He escaped the slave camps. He never had to suffer the way the rest of humanity did.

Benjamin beheads a demon, then pauses for a moment to collect himself. For some reason, tears of rage well up in his eyes...

I lied to myself. The Vanguard thinks. I wasn't satisfied. I wasn't happy with living on that goddamn planet! I wasn't happy playing grabass with demon whores. I wasn't happy knowing I betrayed everyone who stood up for me.

Desire stirs within his mind.

[That's good, love. You're starting to be more honest with yourself.]

[SHUT UP!] Benjamin roars mentally. [Get out of my fucking head, you PARASITE!]

[No need to sling insults.] Desire says. [Can you feel it, Benji-boy? The way the other soldiers look at you? The way your heart pumps faster when you kill a sentient creature? You're finally being true to yourself. And it's all because of me...]

"It's not because of you!" Benjamin shouts out loud, though his words go unnoticed in the din of nearby gunfire and monsters roaring nearby. "Aaaahhh!!"

Benjamin storms back into battle, trying desperately to close off his intrusive thoughts and focus only on the slaughter before him.

* * *

At the same time, Hope Hiro, Blinker, and Mephisto engage in a brutal melee only fifteen miles east of the Fortress of Retribution. The worryingly close proximity to the city gives Hope a constant source of anxiety. He deliberately places himself between Mephisto to ensure the demon-dragon can't get any closer.

The problem is, with how massive both entities are, and with the amount of power they necessarily have to output, it will only take a single accident to erase humanity's remnants from existence!

Any time Mephisto tries firing a random potshot at the humans to distract Hope, Blinker deliberately teleports into the path of his attack, forcing him to retract his energy. This constantly annoys Mephisto, forcing him into a stalemate where he just can't get an advantage against the Second Wordsmith!

"Ridiculousss!" Mephisto hisses. "You can't stop usss forever, Sssecond Wordsssmith!"

Hope doesn't reply. Instead, he jumps forward and feints with Excalibur toward Mephisto's shoulder. Mephisto falls for the bait, allowing Hope to suddenly snap a punch at the Myriad Deity's sternum, sending him flying backward!

"Argh!"

Mephisto cries out in frustration as the Wordsmith's strength comes close to his own. Despite not technically being a Cosmic Entity himself, Hope can forcibly surge Excalibur's mana reserves through his body to put himself roughly on equal footing with his opponent.

Yama, inside Mephisto's Mind Realm, groans in frustration. [Mephisto! You suck at fighting! This is what a hundred thousand years of crawling around and backstabbing gets you! That Wordsmith is feeding you your tail! He's not even that good of a fighter, but at least he's practiced!]

[I KNOW!] Mephisto roars angrily. [Ssshut up, let me focusss!]

Mephisto backflips off the ground. He readies himself to charge at the Wordsmith, but at that moment, a giant portal opens behind himself.

"Huh?"

Mephisto blinks in confusion, only to realize Hope must have opened it...

"PUSH!!" Hope bellows at the top of his lungs.

A Wordsmith-level blast of wind and sonic energy sunders the planet in front of Hope and strikes Mephisto's body, catching him off-guard. Mephisto once again goes flying. He sails backward through the portal and arrives on the opposite side of Tarus II, in the skies above a densely wooded forest. He tumbles downward, becoming momentarily disoriented by the change in his surroundings, then crashes into a patch of trees, flattening them into moss and splinters.

"Oof!"

Mephisto coughs, but easily rights himself. Despite the disorientation he felt, he hasn't yet taken anything remotely close to a painful blow yet. The Wordsmith's attacks have done little more than annoy him.

"Trying to pull usss away from the cccity cccenter, huh?" Mephisto hisses.

He quickly motions with his hands to conjure a portal back to the other side of Tarus II, but Hope pounces through the portal he made and closes it behind himself, leaving Blinker behind in his haste. Then he barks a Word of Power at Mephisto.

"Seal!"

Mephisto's half-made portal instantly dissipates, trapping him here with the Wordsmith.

"You're not going anywhere!" Hope declares. "And now I don't have to hold back anymore! EMPOWER! AUGMENT! SYNERGIZE! BLACKSMITH!"

Hope's body blurs. In his place, a phantasmal image of a blonde Hungarian woman appears, then fades away.

"Reform!" Hope shouts, targeting a Word of Power at Excalibur. The Divine Blade changes shape, transforming from a sword into a massive 150-foot-long greathammer made of the same divine materials.

The weapon towers far above Hope and Mephisto's body heights. At the same time, Hope's eyes begin to glow a bright blue, and his movements change distinctly.

"Mephisto. Agent of Hell." Hope says, his voice sounding oddly feminine, yet equally authoritative. "It is my honor to face you in combat. You've certainly risen through the ranks as the ages have passed. You're not the sniveling little Duke I remember from my era. You have somehow become even more pathetic!"

Mephisto frowns. The female voice sounds slightly familiar to him, but in a long-aged, ancient, dusty, cobwebbed sort of way he can't place.

"Keh... who are you, woman, to ssspeak to thisss deity so?"

"You are no deity." She replies staunchly. "There is only one deity, the Creator on high! Compared to my God, you are a pale shadow of His glory! Hear me now, I am Elizabeth Kindelmann, the Flame of Love! Before me, all demons shall crumble to dust!"

Elizabeth manipulates Hope's body in the same way Joan of Arc did to King Arthur's body during the battle against the Black Queen, six years prior. She twirls the greathammer around her body rapidly to increase its momentum before lunging forward and snapping the twenty-ton hammer-head down at Mephisto's skull.

BOOOOM!!

Mephisto doesn't even get to scream before Elizabeth batters him straight down into Tarus's tectonic plates, sending violent shockwaves out in every direction.

An instant later, Elizabeth follows up with one strike after another.

Wham! Wham! Wham-wham-BOOM!

Her hammer slams against Mephisto's head, shoulders, and spine, pinning Mephisto in place with such a rapid flurry that he simply can't climb back to his feet. With each successive blow, she smashes Mephisto deeper and deeper into the rapidly expanding crater, pancaking him in a manner that might be comical if it weren't for the destruction she's causing to Tarus II's nearby ecosystem.

Mephisto's limbs splay out in all four directions. Every time he tries to move, another mighty hammer blow crashes upon him.

And even worse, waves of divine energy transmit into his magical pathways, attacking his soul!

[Aah! This is bad!] Yama exclaims, as he tumbles to the 'ground' in Mephisto's mind realm. [We... we can feel our grip on reality weakening! That she-Hero is going to break apart our soul bonds!]

[Mephisto, do something!] Lupus cries, her soul wracked with the equivalent of violent nausea. [I'd rather die than suffer like this a- GURRP... a moment longer!]

Zamiel, also suffering immensely, doesn't scream or cry out like the others. He merely grits his teeth and endures.

[Boss... BOSS! You suck at this! You fight like a braindead moron!]

[I know!] Mephisto protests, as he tries to stand up again, only for another mighty hammer-blow to crash upon him, denting one of his scales slightly. [I can't essscape! Ssshe'sss too powerful! What ussse isss being a Cosssmic if mortalsss can bully me?!]

[The problem ain't the Wordsmith!] Zamiel snaps. [It's you! You're a shitty fighter!]

Zamiel pauses.

[Boss. Let me take over! Let ME control the main body!]

[Oh no you don't!] Mephisto roars. [I know your tricksss, Zamiel!]

[Boss either we die here or we get embarrassed for the rest of eternity, but we don't have to go out like chumps!] Zamiel proclaims. [You're still in charge. If I try fucking us over, you can just take control again! Quick, while my soul ain't totally screwed up... lemme take over! I'll put that Hero-bitch in her place!]

Mephisto scowls. [There'sss no chanccce in hell I'd-]

WHUMP!!

Another devastating hammer-strike causes all four Emperors souls to scream in pain, even Zamiel and Mephisto.

Mephisto panics. He senses his grip on reality starting to slip.

Shockingly, this one random human Hero, when paired up with her latent abilities and the might of Excalibur, can genuinely threaten his life. Not by attacking his body, but by attacking the connection between his Soul Matrix, the engine formed by the Sphinx Connection linking all four Emperors together.

With this realization in mind, Mephisto no longer hesitates.

Elizabeth raises her greathammer again, this time hefting her back into it as she prepares to slam it down in what might be the soul-rending blow that will finally kill Mephisto.

But at that moment, Mephisto closes his eyes. He temporarily passes 'command authority' from himself to Zamiel, granting his subordinate the full right to manipulate their draconic body.

The Myriad Deity's eyes snap open.

"Finally."

Instead of trying to stand up, Zamiel presses all his strength from his left arm and leg against the planet's soil.

Elizabeth swings her greathammer down, and Zamiel shoves himself to the right, narrowly avoiding the massive weapon, and causing the Flame of Love to miss him and sink her mighty hammer deep into the soil.

Elizabeth cries out in surprise. The unexpected change catches her offguard, making her tumble forward!

Zamiel continues rolling to the side, lands on all four of his legs, coils strength into his muscles, and pounces!

Like a tiger jumping at its prey, he leaps at Hope Hiro's massive body and releases a deafening dragon-roar that flattens the landscape. He slashes with his right claw to rake Hope's face, while his left aims for Hope's legs.

Slap-RIP!

He completely takes the Wordsmith by surprise, spinning Hope like a top as he sweeps the Wordsmith's legs with one arm and slaps him across the face in the opposite direction with the other.

In Elizabeth's eyes, not even a fraction of a second passes between her attack whiffing its target, Mephisto pouncing at her, and her world suddenly spinning as the dragon sends her tumbling against the ground.

THOOM!

Hope crashes to the side and hits his head.

But his Word of Power, Invincibility, is still active.

He doesn't suffer any serious injuries, and neither does Elizabeth.

She immediately kicks her free leg at the Myriad Deity, knocking him backward. She spins her lower body and snaps herself back to a standing position with gymnast-level athleticism. At the same time, she barks a Word of Power to her hammer. "Come!"

Excalibur, in its greathammer form, leaps back into her palm. She quickly assumes a defensive position while eyeballing the Myriad Deity.

"Good reaction times." Zamiel praises. "You're not half bad, wench."

Elizabeth frowns. "Who are you? You don't speak with the same cadence as Mephisto."

"No shit. That's 'cause I ain't him. I'm Zamiel. It's your misfortune to face me. I just so happen to be one of the best demons in existence when it comes to hand-to-hand combat... hehehe..."

His eyes flick to the altered Excalibur.

"Nice hammer. Let's trade blows, bitch."

Zamiel rapidly conjures a greathammer identical to Elizabeth's. Its appearance and weight mimic Excalibur's exactly, only possible because the divine hammer made contact with Zamiel's physical body.

While Zamiel might not be able to mimic the divine attributes of Excalibur, in particular its holy energy, he can take a different magical path by relying on the Cosmic power flowing through his bones.

And so he does.

The blood-red demonic greathammer contrasts with the steel-and-gold greathammer made through the enlarging and reforming of Excalibur. It glows and pulses with an evil energy, matched in equal force by the hideous grin that spreads across Zamiel's face.

"I haven't been able to enjoy a really good fight since I ascended, you know." Zamiel says. "It's too bad I'm gonna have to fight some dyke-looking dame in a dude's body."

Elizabeth slowly blinks. "I'm just glad I'll get to add a Demon Emperor or four to my heroic record. I wasn't able to kill any in my life, but that will change now."

"We'll see about that!" Zamiel exclaims.

Part 513: The Myriad War

Inside the Fortress of Retribution, undead continue crawling out of the ground. They attack humanity's troopers, but no matter what, the Wordsmith's allies always manage to beat them back and suffer only minimal injuries, with not a single casualty. Thanks to the forewarning from Hope, as well as some unexpected background interference by Jason Hiro, people who would suffer gruesome and fatal injuries instead inexplicably teleport a few feet to the side to evade deadly blows, instantly heal from any injuries suffered, and enjoy other such moments of 'good luck.'

Some people do understand what is happening, but in the heat of battle, they don't have time to dwell on those random 'acts of god.' They only realize one or both of the Wordsmiths must be playing defense to ensure nobody suffers.

At the same time, the lone church on the eastern side of the city remains untouched by the undead. Not one devil-damned creature comes within 250 meters of that building due to its frightening aura of holy energy, an aura which will vaporize them from their body to their soul.

Inside, Cassiel stands next to the door leading outside, looking at it longingly.

"You're in no condition to fight, my lady." Soleil says, standing just behind her. "When you saved those children, you nearly died from mana exhaustion. That was only a few days ago."

"My mana has recovered." Cassiel says softly. "More importantly, I can't stay inside. Don't you see, Soleil? Mephisto is an evil creature. He wants to reap the lives of Tarus II's innocents. It's my duty-"

"It's not." Soleil interrupts. "Raphael gave me strict orders. You are the last remaining angel. The Archangels are little more than souls trapped in containers. You alone still possess a full body. He doesn't want harm to befall the Daughter of Heaven."

Cassiel frowns. She turns to look at Soleil with an intense gaze.

"Whose orders do you follow? Mine, or Raphael's?"

"...Yours. Of course." Soleil says carefully. "But even above yours, I follow the Wordsmith's orders. Jason Hiro commanded me to safeguard your life. If you reveal yourself, the demons will learn of your existence, as will the Volgrim. We're lucky word has not yet leaked out, though we can't be entirely sure..."

"I will not remain hiding inside this church forever." Cassiel says, her tone becoming more forceful. "I was a proud warrior once... before... before Gressil..."

She pauses, a wave of emotions washing over her face.

Those emotions come, then they go.

She blinks twice, squeezing her eyes shut for a moment before opening them once more.

"...I won't let myself become a victim again, Soleil. I won't let others be hurt while I am capable of protecting them. So what if the demons learn of my existence? Gressil already knows. Shall I wait for him to spread the news?"

"Well. When you put it that way..." Soleil says, trailing off.

"I am the Daughter of Heaven." Cassiel states authoritatively. "I was trained by Raphael to fight angelkind's mightiest foes. Barons, Dukes, and even Emperors. Rather than meekly waiting for my enemies to uncover my existence... I should control my own Fate. I need to... to get out there! I need to fight! To rediscover my purpose!"

Cassiel gently pokes her finger against Soleil's chest.

"I have you to protect me, don't I? As long as we stay together, if Gressil attacks, you can fight him. That's your true purpose, isn't it?"

Soleil nods. "It... is... my lady."

"Then that is that." Cassiel says. "Let's go. I won't stay in here a moment longer."

She turns to open the door. As she does, Soleil grabs her shoulder from behind.

"Wait."

"Hmm?" Cassiel asks, turning to look at her. "What now?"

"Raphael... he told me to give a certain item to you if you ended up doing something like this." Soleil says, reaching into her pocket. She extracts a tiny box, one which easily fits into the palm of her hand.

Soleil hands the box to Cassiel, who pops the top open, revealing a tiny bead of crystallized mana.

"Raphael helped Uriel make this yesterday." Soleil explains. "It's an augment for your Heaven's Shroud. It will give you a boost of mana in an emergency. It's a self-sustaining mana bead that can accumulate a bit of energy all the time until it reaches its maximum capacity. Think of it like a tiny, primitive version of Excalibur."

"Raphael did this for me?" Cassiel asks, feeling touched. "I understand. Thank you, Soleil. I can act with more assurances, this way."

"It doesn't contain a lot of energy." Soleil warns her. "Only enough to restore you if you faint again. We don't want you collapsing and dying to the demons..."

"I'll proceed with caution." Cassiel says, taking the mana bead out of the box. She presses it against the locket around her neck, and it melts inside, transforming the Heaven Shroud noticeably.

Cassiel smiles cutely at Soleil. "Alright. Are we ready?"

"As ready as we can be." The Black Hole Construct answers.

Both women step out of the church. They head outside and pass through the privacy field Jason Hiro made for the Archangels, where they immediately become capable of hearing nearby and distant roars and screams inside the city.

Cassiel spreads her wings and takes to the sky. Soleil launches after her, but quickly flies beside her charge.

"Stay low." Soleil says. "You might be okay with the demons finding out about your existence, but an inevitable discovery does not mean you should broadcast yourself to them."

"That's true." Cassiel acknowledges. "We'll keep near to the ground, then."

While they fly, Cassiel motions with her hands, causing beams of light to form around herself. As she weaves a spell, Soleil watches closely.

Armor made of light forms around Cassiel's head, torso, legs, and arms. A shield of light materializes on her left hand, and a sword in her right.

Her appearance becomes shrouded by blinding light, making her identity impossible to discern!

Soleil blinks. "What sort of magic is that?"

"It's called Holy Materialization." Cassiel explains. "In the old days, all Lazarites were capable of using it. I can materialize anything I imagine, so long as I'm competent enough to envision its full structure. Basic armor and weapons like these take little mental energy. It's only once I need to formulate more complex structures that the mana requirements, and the mental stress, begin to truly increase."

"I see. That sounds a lot like Uriel's ability to conjure Light Constructs." Soleil says.

"It's based on a similar principle, yes." Cassiel says.

Her eyes narrow as she spots a trio of troopers, as well as Samuel Baker above them. The troopers stand atop a large delivery truck and fire down into a swarm of undead as they scramble mindlessly over each other to slowly gain ground on the humans.

Samuel Baker releases powerful fairy magic attacks to blast and shred the undead, but they regenerate faster than he can kill them. He summons walls to try and slow them down, and even tries ensnaring them with chains, but always the undead rip his attacks apart or tank them without worry, owing to the Cosmic energy empowering them beyond normal means.

"This is fucking ridiculous!" Samuel shouts. "How many goddamned minions does Mephisto have?!"

Sensing these humans might soon be in danger, Cassiel narrows her eyes.

"Soleil! Help me save them!"

"Yes, my lady!" Soleil answers.

Cassiel falls from above and flaps her wings at the last second, landing at the front of the van. She slashes her sword wildly, sending waves of divine energy surging into the demonic horde to explode their bodies in bursts of blood and bone. Any undead who draw too close eats a shield to the teeth as she rams it into their mouths.

At the same time, Soleil simply treats her body like a battering ram. She doesn't slow her fall at all, and instead crashes directly into the largest mass of the horde, splattering them with reckless abandon. Within two seconds, the horde swallows her up as it rapidly engulfs her figure...

BOOM!!

Soleil punches these pathetic Grunts and Lords with fists of steel, blasting them with the force of a grenade. Each punch and kick she sends flying kills at least ten to twenty of Mephisto's undead at the same time!

Even more startling, none of them manage to scratch her, no matter how hard they rain their fists and claws on her seemingly fragile body.

She is a Black Hole Construct. Her skin and bone are no less durable than Demonstone itself! If she can beat the crap out of Gressil, then a bunch of low-level mobs certainly won't cause her to panic.

Samuel Baker's eyes widen. "Wow! It's that angel girl we rescued, and the other one too. Thanks for the assist, ladies!"

Cassiel and Soleil don't answer him, but they do nod, having heard his words of thanks.

Their contributions to this battle have only just begun...

The Flame of Love and the Myriad Deity stare at one another for five long seconds.

Zamiel, now wielding the most power he has ever possessed in his life, grins devilishly at Hope Hiro before him, currently possessed by the ancient female Hero known as Elizabeth Kindelmann.

"There's nothing I like more than breaking a wench." Zamiel says.

He lunges forward, swinging his greathammer down at her head.

Elizabeth counters with a spin of her hammer to knock Zamiel's attack aside, but he conserves the momentum, spins on his heel, and swings the hammer around with even more force to strike at Elizabeth's right!

Elizabeth, not used to such smooth movements, quickly holds Excalibur's handle vertically to block the attack. But at the last second, Zamiel angles the hammer down at the ground, causing it to smash into the soil at Elizabeth's feet. A shockwave erupts, spraying tens of tons of debris against her legs and making her lose her balance.

"Ah!" Elizabeth cries.

Zamiel immediately sends a kick toward her chest, using his greathammer as a prop to balance on.

THUMP!

The Myriad Deity's sole crashes into Kindelmann's clavicle and sends her flying backward. She stubbornly holds onto Excalibur, but its added weight makes her flight even more chaotic.

The strength behind Zamiel's kick sends her tumbling end over end. She spins, flips, and twists helplessly until crashing face-first into a mountain, embedding deep in its foundations.

Zamiel chases after her. Not even a second after impact, Elizabeth breaks out of the mountain, a look of rage on her face.

"DEMON BASTARD!"

The two once again engage in a furious melee.

Zamiel maintains a cocky smirk, grinning smugly at Elizabeth as her previously smooth-seeming movements somehow seem childish and unpolished when compared to Zamiel. Many times, Elizabeth lunges at Zamiel, only for him to casually step aside, shoulder-check her, trip her with his tail, or even deliver a headbutt to her ear!

Elizabeth takes a beating, one hit after another.

For ten, twenty, and even thirty minutes, she futilely eats one punch and kick after another. Zamiel's greathammer rarely finds a mark, with him instead only using it to feint and deceive her.

As a master of hand-to-hand combat, Zamiel is one of the most accomplished demons in the art of melee warfare. Perhaps only Emperor Crow or Belial could beat him by relying on raw power, but when it comes to technique, if Zamiel were to call himself the second greatest, none would dare to claim first place.

Therefore, Elizabeth's former combat capabilities truly come up short. She begins to realize that Zamiel is far above her level to contest.

The only solace she feels is that Hope has Wordsmithed his body to be 'invincible.' But even that Word of Power has its limits.

Exhaustion quickly begins to set in. Elizabeth becomes more and more desperate as she feels her will to fight start slipping.

"You!" Elizabeth shouts helplessly. "How did you become so adept in all these different combat styles?!"

"Stupid woman." Zamiel sneers, driving an elbow into her mouth and sending her flopping backward. "I'm a hundred thousand years old. I've spent my whole life fighting. You're just some human who didn't live a hundred years before ending up in an artifact. How could YOU possibly compare to me?!"

Elizabeth scowls at him. She backflips off the ground while holding Excalibur in front of herself protectively, its presence not in the least comforting.

"You act cocky... but I know someone who could beat you!"

Zamiel pauses his assault to sneer. "Who? A Psion? I wouldn't doubt it."

"Not a Psion." Elizabeth hisses through her teeth. "A human. And not just any human... but the Master of Combat! If Buddha were here, he'd tear you limb from limb! He trained me when I was a little girl, and I never came close to seeing the pinnacle of his strength!"

"Buddha, you say?" Zamiel asks. "So you haven't heard, huh? Buddha's back, and he got his ASS handed to him by Gressil! Your so-called Master of Combat isn't much at all."

Unsure if Zamiel is telling the truth, Elizabeth can't help but feel a little dejected. She can't stand up to Zamiel, and at this rate, he might even succeed in killing her.

The glowing light dies off in Hope Hiro's eyes. Elizabeth gives up, returning her soul to her artifact and removing the soul-link she and Hope shared.

The Wordsmith, appearing visibly deflated, looks at Zamiel hatefully.

"You must think you're King Big Dick, huh?" Hope asks.

"Oh, I'm feeling pretty good." Zamiel says. "Got another trick up your sleeve, Wordsmith? Don't let me down now."

"Just one." Hope says quietly.

He takes a deep breath.

"ARTHUR!"

Once again, the image of a phantasm materializes behind Hope, its ethereal body swallowing his. Hope stands up straighter, his eyes glowing blue like before. He glances at the greathammer in his hands.

"Reshape. Sword."

Hope's voice changes noticeably as the power of the ancient Hero King takes control of his body. Excalibur reverts from its greathammer form into a single longblade possessing a hilt long enough to wield with two hands.

Arthur, the Saxon King, assumes a dominant posture as he faces the Myriad Deity.

"Hello, Zamiel. I don't believe we've met before." Arthur says. "But I have smelled Mephisto's stench on one or two occasions."

Zamiel's smile fades.

"Finally, a real threat. I've heard all about you, King Arthur. You're that guy the other Heroes called the Greatest Sinner. Heard you killed more than two million of your kind, back in the day."

"An unfortunate accident." Arthur says blandly. "One I've flagellated myself for, over the past hundred thousand years. After speaking to the Wordsmith, I decided I could redeem myself by fighting on humanity's behalf once again."

"You sure?" Zamiel asks. "It'd be a real shame if you cut loose again and... wiped out another city. From what I hear, there ain't too many of those left, these days."

Arthur blinks.

"You don't need to worry about me. Rather, you should be worrying about how you will survive this Hero-King's onslaught. I might not have my original body, but..."

He pauses to crack his neck.

"...this one will suffice."

Arthur clutches Excalibur with his right hand. With his left, he raises two fingers upward to touch his forehead...

Suddenly, he 'teleports' forward, transmitting from his current position to a spot directly in front of Zamiel, with Excalibur raised overhead.

BOOM!!!

Excalibur crashes against Zamiel's skull and slams him into his shadow, pounding him directly into Tarus II's tectonic plate!

Zamiel doesn't even get a chance to react before he ends up violently smashed 800 meters underground, the planet's soil rapidly collapsing upon and burying him alive!

An instant later, Zamiel begins rapidly digging upward, using the stolen power of Monster King Kar to manipulate the earth. He bursts out of the ground and swings his greathammer at Arthur, but the Hero-King transmits away at the speed of light, disappearing from sight.

A deep chill settles into Zamiel's bones.

[Holy shit! This Arthur guy is FAST!]

Mephisto, watching from inside his Mind Realm, nods. [Watch yourssself. Arthur defeated the Balrog. He might even be a match for the Archdemon. With hisss Wordsssmith empowered body, he will not be a sssimple opponent...]

An instant later, Arthur transmits beside Zamiel and swings his blade at the undead dragon's neck.

CLANK!

A grinding of metal on bone rings out in the air and Zamiel goes sailing to the side. He smashes into the ground, flips and spins, bouncing and skipping like a rock.

Abruptly, Zamiel smashes his hammer into the dirt, catching himself mid-flight to stop his momentum. Without wasting any time, he dives back underground, burrowing deeply to hide himself.

[That Hero-King is terrifyingly fast! But I'm not out of options!]

Zamiel desummons the greathammer. He conjures cosmic power along his bones, molding it with his mastery of Qi to create an elemental effect reminiscent of lightning.

His sense of the world accelerates. His eyes, vision, and brain all speed up, and he conjures a pair of longswords made of Cosmic energy in the hopes he'll be able to combat Arthur.

"This Hero King is troublesome. But... I bet I can still kick his ass!"

Zamiel jumps out of the ground, his bones crackling with electrical energy. When Arthur arrives again, Zamiel meets his attack and blocks it, using his left sword for defense and his right sword for offense.

A vicious flurry of attacks follow! King Arthur rains sword-slashes upon Zamiel, while Zamiel's enhanced speed barely allows him to cope with the dire situation.

Clang-clang-clang!

Zamiel tries to attack Arthur, but the Hero-King's perception of time, his raw physical strength, and his sword-arts are too profound. Zamiel ends up forced to go on the defense, biding his time while he waits for the opportunity to strike!

"I won't lose here!" Zamiel declares.

Only time will tell if that statement rings true...

Part 514: Wordsmith Mix-Up

Arthur's onslaught continues. The King of Camelot, still considered the mightiest Hero in history, proves that his capabilities are not limited only to his mastery of Excalibur, but his combat sense and quick strategic thinking on the battlefield as well.

Time after time, Arthur transmits toward Zamiel at a speed too frightening to comprehend, only to turn his attack into a feint, or to sweep Zamiel's legs, or to appear behind him and strike him from the rear.

Zamiel does not cry out in pain. As five minutes turn into thirty, and even a full hour, Zamiel endures.

Arthur smashes Zamiel's skull from behind, pounding the undead dragon into the dirt. He rocks the continent on the opposide side of Tarus II from the Fortress of Retribution, laying waste to anything in the vicinity.

He slams Excalibur against Zamiel's helpless form again and again, using all his strength to try and kill this undead dragon once and for all!

However, no matter how much strength Arthur puts into his attacks, and no matter how much trickery and deception he uses, the Hero-King begins to uncover one alarming fact...

...he lacks the ability to kill this dragon!

Indeed, even with his strength put front and center, and all his years of Heroic Combat at his disposal, Arthur simply lacks the raw destructive force needed to shatter Zamiel's dragonbone body. Perhaps if his bones were made of ordinary Living Moldanium, Arthur might have reigned supreme already. But his undead form is anything but ordinary.

Forged in the fires of a dying star, every last impurity has been extracted from the Myriad Deity's bones, leaving his skeleton two, three, and perhaps even four times harder than ordinary Living Moldanium.

Zamiel grins evilly, despite the humiliating beating Arthur is dishing out upon him. Even unable to strike at the Hero-King, he starts to notice a sense of desperation behind Arthur's sword-strikes.

Arthur uses the Wordsmith's powers as best as he can. He continually rejuvenates himself, never truly running out of breath. But while his physical stamina might appear inexhaustible, his willpower slowly begins to lose out.

A faint feeling of hopelessness swallows Arthur's soul. He uselessly beats Zamiel down, smashes him around, and thrashes him like a punching bag.

"You devil-damned dragon! Just DIE already!" Arthur roars, swinging Excalibur down yet again.

But at that moment, the electrical power ion Zamiel's body activates, causing him to jolt slightly to the side, just enough for Arthur's slash to strike empty air.

Zamiel instantly spins around, using his tail as a flail. He slams it against Arthur's stomach, sending the Hero-King flying. Not expecting Zamiel to unleash this counter-attack, Arthur loses his grip on Excalibur, and the two entities momentarily separate.

The Myriad Deity senses this weakness. He ignores Excalibur and dashes toward Arthur, his body a blur as he reveals the true extent of his acceleration ability.

"Did you think you were FASTER than me?!" Zamiel taunts, as he flickers above Arthur's tumbling figure. "You fell for my trick, fool!"

WHUMP!

Zamiel punches Arthur in the sternum, battering him into the ground. Before the Hero-King can recover, Zamiel clamps his feet-claws onto each of Arthur's arms to force them apart, then spikes his tail into the Hero-King's mouth.

"No transmitting away! No Wordsmithing! Now you're going to SUFFER!" Zamiel roars.

Arthur's heartrate spikes.

Zamiel begins punching him in the head and chest, each blow accelerating faster and faster as he rains a beatdown upon him that would even make the formerly 'invincible' Bael wince in pain.

Boom-boom-boom-boom!

Zamiel hammers Arthur. He punches him with such ferocity that stars dance in Arthur's eyes. The Hero-King tries to move, to spit out the tail wedged between his teeth, to wrestle an arm free, but his senses start to fade as each Cosmic-powered punch sends his brain spinning.

"Uhh..."

Arthur, and Hope as well, both lose their sense of time as one punch after another rocks their world. Without Excalibur, their mana reserves simply aren't potent in the slightest. Unable to break free, their 'Invincible' Word of Power begins to weaken, making them bleed and causing their bones to crack under Zamiel's beating.

"HAHAHA!" Zamiel cackles, as he smells blood for the first time in several fights. "We may have lost to that ancient angel, AND the Archdemon, but at least we beat you and Crow both! Maybe this day isn't going as bad as we thought! We're two for four!"

As Arthur and Hope's sense begin to slip, they sense the faint appearance of a familiar presence.

Foop.

"Hey, what the-?!"

Zamiel cries out in surprise. His punches abruptly stop, but it takes several seconds for Arthur to blink his eyes open and regain his equilibrium.

When he does, he becomes astonished to see Zamiel stepping backward, a strange writhing mass attached to his body. Made of a mixture of light and shadow, this mass vaguely resembles the limbs of an octopus, with more than ten of them wrapping around his gigantic body to constrict and constrain him.

A short distance away, donning a shiny silver-colored T-REX, is none other than the First Wordsmith, Jason Hiro. Unlike Hope, Jason remains at his ordinary height, eight feet tall, looking like an ant compared to his larger self.

"Hope. Are you okay?" Jason asks, looking down at the gigantic body of his clone.

Arthur coughs. Still in control of the Second Wordsmith's body, he hasn't much of a reaction to Jason's appearance beyond a sense of gratitude, but Hope certainly does. Trapped within his own body, Hope feels a deep sense of humiliation as he realizes his other half came to save him from an enemy he should have beaten with ease.

"Thank you." Arthur says, wincing as he pulls himself up. "Heal. Restore..."

He quickly Wordsmiths half a dozen spells to repair his fractured face and bruised body, but the phantom pain continues to linger.

In the meantime, while Zamiel wrestles with the strange mass affixed to his body, Jason tosses a gigantic item toward Arthur via telekinesis. "Here. Don't drop this again."

Excalibur!

Hope, watching from within his Mind Realm, audibly gasps as Jason casually tosses Excalibur back to him, almost as if it were some common trinket he picked up off the ground. Surely, while Hope was having the shit kicked out of him, Jason could have easily taken the divine blade back for himself. But he didn't.

Indeed, Jason shows no interest in Arthur's artifact, simply treating it like an ordinary weapon better suited to another wielder. He smiles at Arthur.

"I don't need it. You just stay back and rest for a few minutes. I'll see what I can do against this guy."

Jason's armored figure turns away from Arthur, allowing the Hero-King to continue restoring his condition. His eyes widen as he watches that strange mass trying to crush Zamiel's body with brute force.

But alas, all good things eventually come to an end. Zamiel roars angrily and sends a surge of electrical energy outward, forcefully frying the tentacular mass to ash and causing it to crumble apart. His head snaps toward the First Wordsmith.

"YOU!!"

He rushes forward, using his enhanced speed to fire a punch at Jason.

Jason's body flickers downward. He easily avoids the attack, almost as if Zamiel were moving in slow motion. Then he aims his palm up at Zamiel's chest.

In a single instant, an orb of light fires from Jason's hand, races at Zamiel, and crashes into his chest, sending him flying upward.

Zamiel disappears from sight, the orb seemingly attaching to the undead dragon's chest and lifting him into the sky, where he fires out of the upper atmosphere at greater than twenty times the speed of sound. The sonic shockwave that follows flattens the landscape, clearing away the debris in the area and nearly deafening the Second Wordsmith.

Before Arthur can even react to what just happened, Jason teleports, chasing after Zamiel at top speed.

"After him!" Hope shouts at Arthur. "Don't just stand there!"

Arthur heaves a sigh. "Give me a minute, kid. I'm exhausted from that beating we took. It seems your other half wants to... try something."

"Then give me back control." Hope says.

"Sure thing. I could use a rest. Knock yourself out." Arthur says, rolling his eyes. "Oh, and a 'thank you' would be appreciated."

* * *

While Hope regains control of his body, Jason materializes in space, following after Zamiel. Jason's thoughts dwell on dragging the Myriad Deity away from Tarus II so it will stop wreaking havoc on the landscape. The Wordsmith can't help but feel annoyed, even outright disappointed by how his clone stupidly kept fighting on Tarus II where one accident could have wiped out humanity's remnants forever!

The glowing orb he fired remains anchored to Zamiel's ribs like glue, holding itself inside of him while deliberately pulling the undead dragon out of Tarus II's gravity well at a speed defying imagination.

[Stupid piece of shit!] Zamiel screams telepathically, his voice unable to propagate in the vacuum of the Void. [Gahh! Get off me! What IS this thing?!]

Zamiel tries electrifying himself, but the orb simply absorbs the current and grows stronger, accelerating faster as Tarus II begins to grow more and more distant.

Sensing his current strategy isn't working, Zamiel changes gears. He changes the Qi engulfing his body to the element of flame, increasing the temperature of his bones at an alarming rate.

Before long, the glue-like orb begins to warp and deform. It ultimately breaks apart, allowing Zamiel to stop accelerating so madly. He spreads his bone-wings and screeches to a halt, directing a fiery gaze toward the tiny figure chasing after him.

[First Wordsmith.] Zamiel hisses. [You want to play dirty? Fine. I'll play your game.]

He directs his attention inward.

[Yama. Swap with me.]

The Shadow Emperor blinks, slightly confused. [Hm? Us? Why would you want us to pilot the body?]

[Let's just say I have a good feeling.] Zamiel replies. [Don't you see? We're in the darkness of the Void. The only thing illuminating us is the light of distant stars. You'll be in your element.]

Yama's shadowy eyes fill with malice. [Ahh. Good point. Then let us have a try.]

Mephisto says nothing, allowing the exchange to happen. Still tired from the beating he took earlier, he's in no mood to seize control, and also finds himself curious regarding what Yama can accomplish.

All of this happens in the blink of an eye, at the speed of thought. By the time Jason draws within range, he's already noticed a change in the bone-dragon's attitude, its demeanor. The Myriad Deity no longer stands so defiant, but rather lays flat on the universal plane, presenting the smallest amount of its body toward the Wordsmith.

A second later, its clear white bones change color. They fade to grey, then to brown, and finally to black as Yama's element of shadow takes over, dispersing the tens of billions of distant starlight specks instead of allowing them to reflect off his bones and give away his position.

Jason frowns. He notices the anomaly immediately.

"Detect. Locate." Jason says, directing those Words of Power toward the immediate vicinity.

For a brief moment, he manages to uncover Yama's hiding position as the shadowy dragon slithers to his side, but the Word of Power's effectiveness quickly fades, allowing Yama to melt into the Void and become almost undetectable.

Jason goes on high alert. He holds up both of his palms, and two seconds later, marble-sized balls of electrical energy begin to coalesce above his hands. At first, only two or three materialize, but this quickly changes to ten, twenty, and even fifty.

The tiny, seemingly weak beads of energy leap out of his palm and spiral around his body, drawing circles in the Void as they rapidly increase in speed and momentum. Like electrons revolving at high speeds around the nucleus of an atom, they draw bright yellow lines around the Wordsmith, marking his position and making it easy for Yama to pinpoint his location.

But those beads of energy continue to crystallize above the Wordsmith's palms. They endlessly generate from some unknown source, and as they appear and revolve around him, the 'net' of electric beads slowly spreads apart, widening in circumference as they travel ten feet from his body, fifty feet, a hundred...

Faster and faster, this makeshift detection net expands its radius, preventing any entity, especially one as large as the Myriad Deity, from sneaking up and assassinating the Wordsmith.

[Come out, Mephisto.] Jason says, projecting his voice into the void. [I know you're here. Or are you too afraid to battle a mere mortal like me? Surely, even a Wordsmith cannot compare to your grand, illustrious power.]

One of Jason's makeshift electrons ricochets off something. Jason spins around to face the anomaly, but as he does, a massive figure comes barreling toward him from behind, charging through his detection net without hesitation.

Jason does not panic. His eyes jump to the side as he senses the rapid approach of his enemy.

Foop!

Jason flickers away right as a huge spear made of shadow stabs at the position where he was just levitating. But the instant he arrives, a second spear races toward his new position, forcing him to teleport again.

Foop! Foop! Foop!

Jason flickers to the left, then up, then down, rapidly teleporting inside his detection net while turning to face his foe.

But instead of Yama, Jason finds a mere shadow-copy of the Shadow Emperor, one of his duplicates intended to distract the First Wordsmith.

Jason's head snaps toward Tarus II.

Shit. I keep forgetting, he has only one goal, and it's not killing me. What a bastard.

While Yama's shadow-copy attacks the Wordsmith, the real Myriad Deity races through space at a smooth speed, returning toward Tarus II while keeping his presence shielded. Borrowing not only his shadow-powers, but also Mephisto's ability to hide his soul, Yama moves much more stealthily than his huge body would imply, all while shrinking himself down to present a smaller target.

[The Wordsssmith won't be fooled for long.] Mephisto says inside the Myriad Deity's Mind Realm. [You bought yourssself a minute or lesss. What now?]

[Don't you remember our true purpose?] Yama asks. [We need to devour Emperors. All other matters come second. This body can only grow stronger if we assimilate powerful souls. Therefore, we will sneak back to Tarus II and-]

Foop!

Jason Hiro teleports in front of the Myriad Deity, cutting Yama off mid-sentence while firing something at him before the Shadow Emperor can react.

A tiny piece of metal in the shape of a coin travels at the speed of light, bridging the gap between the two instantly. It slaps against one of Yama's shadowy rib-bones, but instead of hurting him, it attaches itself like a magnet to a refrigerator.

The piece of metal adheres to the Myriad Deity instantaneously, making him wonder what the heck the Wordsmith just did.

[Dammit!] Jason says out loud. [It did no damage?!]

Yama frowns. He glances at the tiny coin-shaped piece of metal, but it truly seems harmless. It doesn't possess even the slightest lick of magical energy inside its core.

He tries to claw at it, to scratch it off, but it remains stubbornly fused to his rib. Unable to remove it, Yama decides to ignore the suspiciously harmless piece of metal, at least for the moment.

He once again turns himself to shadow, blending into the background of space. He watches as the Wordsmith frowns, then begins conjuring much larger orbs of energy while looking around, trying to figure out where Yama has slinked off to.

[He must have gotten lucky.] Yama thinks. [We don't know how he found us, but lightning can't strike the same place twice.]

Just as Yama has that thought, the Wordsmith abruptly vanishes, along with his orbs.

He reappears mere feet above Yama's hiding form, the larger and more powerful orbs held at the ready.

Yama's cold heart leaps in shock. [What?! Shit-!]

Jason fires the orbs downward at the speed of light. They explode on impact, erupting into electrical tendrils that ensnare the Myriad Deity like before. But this time, they begin rapidly shifting polarities, as well as their elements.

The tentacular limbs stretch and wrap around the Myriad Deity, changing from electricity to ice to fire to shadow and even to light! They change so quickly that he can't easily adapt, forcing him to struggle against them with only his physical strength.

Jason does not rejoice at this development. Unfortunately, outside delaying Yama and preventing him from returning to Tarus II, Jason can't actually do anything to seriously injure him! Even the 'weak' point of Mephisto's combined souls are still far stronger than Jason can handle!

This is so troublesome... Jason thinks.

Foop!

Hope Hiro teleports a short distance away, his gigantic body looking down at Jason with fumes metaphorically coming out of his ears.

[Jason!] Hope exclaims. [Don't think just because you saved me that this means-]

[Oh, great timing, Hope.] Jason interrupts, turning to look at his clone. [Keep this guy busy for a while. I need to do some thinking. I'll be back in a bit!]

Hope coughs. [Kuh- WHAT? Keep him busy?! Listen here you little-!]

Before Hope can stammer out anything else, Jason pops out of existence, vanishing while leaving Hope to deal with the struggling, raging figure of an undead demon-dragon.

[RAAAAH!!] Yama screams, as he finally manages to start tearing the blasted tentacles off his body. [That is IT! We have had it up to HERE with you Wordsmiths!!]

Hope blinks twice, momentarily dazed by Jason's brisk departure.

[That- that fucker!] Hope complains to Arthur, now dormant within his Mind Realm. [What is his problem?!]

Arthur rolls his eyes. [At least your other half is thinking of something, anything to deal with this demon. Let's keep our fight away from the planet. We cannot let Mephisto or the other three rampage across Tarus II again.]

Hope glances at the brilliant orb in the distance, its giant figure taking up much of his field of view. His eyes easily spot the huge paths of destruction his fight tore across the planet's near-side.

[...Fine! Yeah, probably not a bad idea. I don't know what Jason's thinking, but we're going to kill Mephisto ourselves.]

Arthur snorts. [I doubt that very much. This beast... he might be at a level we simply can't contend with.]

[We won't know until we try.] Hope replies coolly.

Part 515: Dronesmith

Jason Hiro teleports away from the battlefield, leaving his clone, Hope Hiro, to deal with the Myriad Deity for a while.

The First Wordsmith's body reappears inside the time-accelerated space of Chrona, but instead of moving around, walking anywhere, or doing anything at all, he simply disengages his T-REX, stands in the center of the city, and stares forward with a blank look on his face.

A short distance away, the Spynet Sphere stands off to Jason's side. Its main door opens up, and two people walk out to meet with Jason Hiro.

These two people turn out to be Fiona Hiro and, strangely enough, also Jason Hiro.

"The responsiveness is adequate." Fiona says to her husband, "but it just isn't strong enough to handle a Cosmic Entity like Mephisto."

"I disagree," the other Jason Hiro says, as he approaches his 'self' that has just arrived inside Chrona. He walks up to the motionless body and grabs it by the chin, lifting its head and looking at its throat and other areas to see if the newcomer has incurred any damage. "It's plenty strong. And we planted that Tracking Chip on Mephisto, so it'll be a lot easier to keep an eye on him. We just need to figure out a way to kill the bastard."

"Easier said than done." Fiona says with a sigh. "Even Pseudo-Excalibur couldn't chip a flake off those dragon-bones..."

Jason rudely forces open the mouth of his other self, revealing that instead of a fleshy interior, countless tiny, sophisticated nanomachines and electronics line the inside of his other self's mouth.

"Maybe I should go there in person." Jason says thoughtfully. "It takes forever to guide the Dronesmith around. Mephisto moves so slowly too. It's like playing a video game with cheats on."

"Yeah, yeah." Fiona says, rolling her eyes. "You make it sound like it's 'so easy,' yet you still couldn't beat the Myriad Deity."

"Well. He's cheating in his own way." Jason says, sticking his tongue out at his mind-wife.

Jason and Fiona examine the Dronesmith, a mechanical construct the two of them built together, capable of interfacing with technology and magic alike, perhaps the first of its kind in the Milky Way. They lift the Dronesmith's arms, test its actuators, and top its Mana Batteries back up to full.

"I have an idea." Fiona says. "Those tentacles you summoned were too weak. Why don't you try making living chains made of Wordsmithium? Those should be a lot harder to break. Mephisto and the rest won't be able to escape if we bind them with an unbreakable material. Even Marie Becker thinks your Wordsmithium is something special."

"Yeah..." Jason says slowly, his face contorting into a frown. "But it takes a LOT of time to reinforce something to the level of becoming Wordsmithium. I don't even know how many times I'll have to say "harden" before it reaches that level."

Fiona raises an eyebrow. "Jason. We have two hundred and fifty times MORE time to work with than people in Realspace. If you've never really run your Wordsmithium through a proper battery of tests, then maybe we should do that right now. We need a solution for Mephisto. You certainly can't expect Hope to handle the situation."

Jason's frown becomes a scowl. "God. He's such a fucking IDIOT. Why didn't he take Mephisto off-world first? He knew enough to make a portal, but all he did was shove him to the other side of Tarus II. Hope is LUCKY Mephisto didn't unleash some attack capable of wiping out all the life on the planet!"

"I don't know what he was thinking." Fiona replies. "At least it won't be too much effort for you to rebuild the destroyed areas."

"There were monsters living on that side of the world." Jason says, visibly pained. "They might not have been our friends, but maybe they could have been someday. There were several Goblin colonies hidden underground that are dead now. Hope killed them with his carelessness. I can't bring those creatures back."

Fiona shakes her head. She falls silent for a few seconds.

"It's too late to assign blame. If we weren't so busy building the Dronesmith, we might have been able to help Hope sooner."

"Yeah. I guess that's true." Jason acknowledges.

He and Fiona turn away from the Dronesmith, leaving it to stand and stare ahead blankly while they head back inside the Spynet Sphere.

The door opens, revealing Kar, Blinker, and their eight children, all sitting in chairs in a circle with their backs to each other, looking at the thousands of monitors arrayed across the Spynet's walls and ceiling.

On the screens, instead of images from all across the galaxy, only various videos and feeds taken from Troopers on the ground and various magical spy-drones in the sky of Tarus II provide visual data. The videos play their contents extremely slowly, but even so, keeping an eye on this many individual screens is still a daunting task.

Luckily, thanks to the AI named Centurion's efforts, the screens provide helpful information for each POV present. Sometimes, screens turn red, indicating imminent danger to the viewer or to entities in the area. When that happens, one of Blinker and Kar's kids will pipe up and point at the screen.

"Mom! Mom! Over here!"

Blinker stands dead in the center of the room, wearing a headset with a microphone. A glowing orb rests in her grasp, a highly complex mechanical-magical formation-artifact made through the efforts of not only Fiona and Jason, but Blinker too.

Each time her kids point out something on one of the screens, Blinker turns her attention to whatever is happening so she can examine the situation.

"TROOPERS RICHARD EDWINS, CARMIN SANTIEL, AND EDWARD SANTIEL WILL SUFFER A FATAL SNEAK ATTACK IN THREE REAL-TIME SECONDS." Centurion booms, its oppressive but authoritative voice informing Blinker of the exact situation. "RECOMMEND IMMEDIATE INTERVENTION."

Blinker holds the orb with her left hand, and uses her right hand to send pulses of mana inside it. She activates a special premade teleportation effect that locks onto those three troopers, instantly teleporting them fifty feet to the left while adjusting their facing so they will see the undead threat emerge from underground.

At the same time, Blinker also commands a drone armed with twin Spitfire Missiles to converge on the location to provide backup should the undead still manage to overwhelm these troopers.

"Any changes?" Jason asks, only giving the emergency warning a cursory glance.

"Hope will start fighting the Myriad Deity in thirty minutes or so." Blinker says, gesturing to a small cluster of monitors dedicated to showing various angles of Hope and Mephisto levitate motionlessly in space. "They're trading verbal barbs right now. Might take them a bit to actually start fighting."

"That's fine." Jason says. "The longer they drag things out, the more time it gives us to prepare. Fiona and I checked the Dronesmith. It's in good condition."

Kar turns his head to look at Jason. "Hurgh. Metal-Turtle kind of sucked, Turtle. You and White Ghost need to make it stronger."

"Easier said than done." Fiona replies. "We don't have a good way of causing any damage to Mephisto. His dragon-bones are too damn sturdy. That one Hero who Hope channeled- Elizabeth? She dealt some actual damage, but then Zamiel took over and she couldn't put up much of a fight anymore."

"The Myriad Deity's souls are its weak point." Jason says while rubbing his chin. "If we can hit those souls, we might be able to kill him. Hell, we can take his Living Moldanium bones afterward, too."

"Yeah. But we don't have a good way to attack Mephisto's souls." Fiona points out. "It's also not as if we have to hurt a single Emperor soul, but four of them, working in tandem. That's easier said than done."

"What a pain in the ass." Jason mutters. "Guess I'll have to try messing around until I figure out something."

"In the meantime," Fiona says, "let's get to work on those Wordsmithium chains. If we can't kill Mephisto, the least we can do is find a way to restrain or imprison him."

Asher, a red-scaled croco-child, blinks at the Wordsmith and his mind-wife.

"Why don't ya stick 'im inside a box?"

Jason glances at the kid. "Huh? A box?"

"Yeah!" Asher says, pumping his fists. "A biiiiiig box! Stuff him in and close it up! Easy!"

"Sure, that's a good idea. I might try that." Jason says, patting Asher's head. "Keep up the good work in here, kids."

He and Fiona leave the room, while Blinker, Kar, and their kids stay behind.

Blinker taps the side of her headset while looking at one of the screens.

"Trooper Edwins, keep an eye out for undead emerging on your position. I'm dispatching additional units to your location. Continue to hold out until then."

Kar chuffs to himself. "Hurgh. This Spy-thingy sure is neat. It's about time Turtle picked up on some of my superior brain-cells. Hehe."

On the world of Numaria, more than three hours pass after Mephisto disappears. However, none of the Emperors move a muscle. They remain in the immediate vicinity of the gigantic Archdemon, visibly worried Mephisto might return.

Through the powers of Auger, some of his minions, and some carefully placed spy-demons on Tarus II, the Emperors get a good idea of how the situation is playing out for humanity.

Things are not looking good for the Wordsmiths, in spite of their minor victories.

Emperor Fae lounges on some grass summoned by Emperor Nymph at the edge of the Stitched Wasteland. The two of them watch grainy footage transmitted into the sky thanks to a spatial-temporal power conjured by Yardrat.

Bael wanders over to them, his Matriarch Armor retracted, and a goofy smile on his face.

"Hey, ladies. Room for another?"

"Bael!" Fae exclaims. "Come on, take a seat. We're just watching the show."

She pats the grass beside herself, and Bael obliges, plunking down while looking around. In the distance, other Emperors sit together in cliques here and there, while Emperors Crow and Yumagi stand atop the towering Archdemon's shoulders, conversing with Diablo in hushed voices.

"Man, this sucks." Bael grumbles. "We had Grandma all ready to beat Mephisto's ass, then she friggin' poofed away. Now the humans hafta deal with Mephisto."

Fae smirks. "Fuck the fleshbags. Come on, Bael! They're our enemy! Anything that knocks those idiots down a peg is good by me!"

Emperor Nymph bats her eyes. "Fae's words might be crude, but the sentiment is correct. The Wordsmiths have amassed too much power too quickly."

"Uh huh..." Bael says slowly, while Ose whispers something in his mind. "So what about the uh, the Plague? Ain't that kind of a big deal too?"

"I doubt we have any reason to worry about the Plague anymore." Nymph says, gesturing toward the mountain of a creature half a kilometer away. "We have the Archdemon on our side."

Bael remains quiet for a moment. "Sure, sure... but, uh... the Volgrim- they got a bad babe of their own, ya know. And they're losing the war. Maybe Deebs alone ain't enough to save us."

"I suppose that might be true..." Nymph says, frowning. She falls into thought for a moment. "So, then... what should we do?"

Bael's eyes brighten. "Oh that's easy! We gotta-"

Suddenly, Bael stops talking. He and every other demon present feel a deep chill beneath their skin, a feeling of overwhelming fear as the sensation of a terrifying predator looking at them from the shadows scares them out of their minds.

Bael, Fae, Nymph, and every single other Emperor raise their gazes skyward as they sense the rapid, unmistakable approach of an incredibly powerful energy signature screaming across the sky.

All at once, that powerful force of nature crashes into the upper atmosphere, sending every cloud in the sky flying away. It slowly descends, its dreadful aura growing more and more frightening every second.

Fae, usually one to offer a witty quip, instead falls completely silent, staring up at the diminutive figure descending toward the Archdemon at a meteoric speed.

"The... the Second Founder..." Fae whispers.

* * *

Founder Dosena finally reaches Numaria. She crashes into the upper atmosphere and flies downward, only stopping the moment she arrives within a single kilometer of the Archdemon, her gaze momentarily fixating on the existence before her.

Dosena's powerful senses sweep the world of Numaria. She instantaneously pieces together a million clues regarding what happened only a few hours before, following the obvious trails of devastation, the feathers lost by Demon Deity Crow, and she even catalogs the destroyed moon in orbit of this former paradise-class world.

She sweeps her eyes across the Archdemon's fearsome form, as well as the comparatively insignificant Demon Emperors hiding in its shadow.

She can't be bothered to give a single damn about them. In her eyes, the mightiest Emperor might as well be the mightiest ant.

Though... there was that one time Emperor Ose possessed Bael's body.

Dosena glances at Bael, now in Ose's body. She evaluates him for a fraction of a second before dismissing his existence outright, aside from his clearly formidable soul...

[Archdemon Diablo.] Dosena says, transmitting her words in a telepathic radius around the entire planet. [You fought Demon Deity Mephisto.]

Her words are not a question, but a statement.

Diablo's eyeless head aims in her general direction. The Archdemon nods.

"SECOND FOUNDER DOSENA. I FOUGHT THE MYRIAD DEITY. I DEFEATED IT. THE BATTLE WAS NOT A CHALLENGE."

Dosena blinks all six of her eyes.

[It. Not 'he.' And that title... Myriad Deity. Explain to me why you use these terms specifically.]

"WHAT IF I DO NOT WISH TO DO SO?" Diablo challenges, unmoved by the forcefulness in Dosena's tone.

Dosena falls silent for a short time. A fraction of a second in Realspace, but an eternity to one with a brain as enhanced as hers. She rapidly contemplates all of the clues and Truths she has already gleaned from this short dialogue with the Archdemon.

She momentarily wonder what the result would be if she were to fight Diablo.

Her blood boils at this thought.

It has been an eon since she last fought someone worthy...

But in the end, she does not act on this hunger. She can always fight Diablo later, if she wishes. Getting to the bottom of the Apex Cosmic is her highest calling.

[You are a Mid Cosmic. I am a Mid Cosmic.] Dosena states. [We can be said to be... 'equals.' Let us not act as master and servant. I will exchange benefits in return for information.]

Diablo slowly lifts two of his powerful arms. He crosses them over his chest while continuing to look up at the tiny Second Founder with an expression that gives no hints.

"BENEFITS. THIS EXCHANGE… THESE TERMS… ARE ACCEPTABLE."

He pauses.

"MEPHISTO FUSED HIS SOUL WITH THE SOULS OF THREE OTHER EMPERORS. HE FORCIBLY ELEVATED HIMSELF TO THE RANK OF BOTTOM COSMIC."

[And what of the Apex Cosmic?] Dosena asks. [Why did that entity appear, followed afterward by you?]

Hardly has Dosena asked that question before she suddenly becomes more alert. She turns her head to the side, where she sees a hazy figure approaching from the distance. With each footstep, it crosses a kilometer at a time, treading the lower atmosphere at a speed approaching teleportation.

It arrives before her after only ten seconds, then stops a good distance away.

[First Emperor.] Dosena says calmly. [You are involved?]

My existence is transient. I can only affect the material plane for a time. The First Emperor states. My strength was insufficient to deal with the existence known as the Myriad Deity. Fortunately, I had already decided to train Emperor Diablo in the control of his Ultraform. Now, demonkind possesses an Existence capable of uplifting it to the same level as the Volgrim.

Dosena snorts dismissively. [A single Mid-Cosmic, and you call that an equal distribution of power? Do not mock my intelligence, Voidborn.]

The First Emperor of Transience does not continue with that conversational track. Instead, it pivots to a new topic.

You wish to know about the Apex Cosmic. This information will not be granted freely. The cost will be higher than you may anticipate.

[I have many ways of acquiring the information I need.] Dosena states. [Do not test your luck.]

The cost will remain high. The First Emperor repeats.

Dosena's expression changes to a barely-perceivable frown.

[Your price?]

You will hunt down and kill the Myriad Deity. The First Emperor calmly states. It is a Threat to the balance of power. If the Myriad Deity is allowed to run amok, it will cause untold levels of devastation. The Akashic Laws do not yet strongly bind its existence.

[That's your price?] Dosena asks, slightly surprised. [Anything else?]

You will retract your Observers from this star system. The First Emperor adds. From this day forward, Numaria is a sacred ground. You are not allowed to enter the Archdemon's voidspace without permission.

This time, Dosena does not immediately answer. She silently ponders what goals the First Emperor must be pursuing.

[You lack the means to uncover all of our spying methods.] Dosena states. [If the Volgrim Empire wishes to observe, we will observe. You cannot be certain of our inability to spy on you, even if we do remove our scouts.]

That is where you are wrong. The First Emperor retorts. I have my means.

Again, Dosena falls silent.

Several seconds pass as she faces the silent Archdemon and the domineering First Emperor.

[Very well. Your terms are acceptable. Tell me about the Apex Cosmic, and I will kill the Myriad Deity.]

The First Emperor's hazy, faceless figure gives no clues. Not even Dosena's incredibly powerful senses can read its body language.

I was not present when the Apex Cosmic appeared. The First Emperor states. Neither was Emperor Diablo. All of the other Emperors were hiding inside the Hell Labyrinth.

[So you don't know who the Apex Cosmic was?] Dosena asks, immediately feeling scammed.

I do not. But there is one who does.

The First Emperor points toward Bael, sitting on the grass.

Emperor Bael observed the Apex Cosmic, as he had been left behind on Numaria. The First Emperor explains. Emperor Bael, please step forward.

Bael blinks as he realizes a lot of eyes have started falling on him. "Huh? Me? Oh, okay, sure."

He stands up and trots over to the Archdemon, then flashes a big thumbs-up.

"Yo, Deebs! Good to see you back!"

"AND YOU AS WELL." Diablo replies.

[Tell me about the Apex Cosmic.] Dosena says patiently. [What was their identity?]

Bael frowns. "Ahh, you mean Grandma? Oh, uh... damn. I don't recall if she said her name. I'm kinda bad at names..."

While Bael speaks, Dosena attempts to scan his brain, but she is surprised to find that she is unable to glean even a single thought.

As Bael hems and haws, Dosena's thoughts turn inward. Somehow, this random demon has mastered the Mind of Void, just as Founder Unarin has. That is an incredible feat. I cannot read his mind...

She casually sweeps her telepathic senses over the minds of the other Emperors present, only to hear a single name keep popping up in their thoughts.

Did Bael say 'Grandma'? Emperor Fae thinks. That's the nickname he always used for Archangel Camael! But didn't she die?

Yardrat also has a similar thought. Grandma? Bael might be an idiot, but he's a consistent idiot. He always called Camael 'grandma.' I wonder... did someone find a way to revive Camael after all?

Dozens of Demon Emperors think such thoughts, allowing Dosena to draw the same conclusion.

[I see how it is.] Dosena says, confident she's 'figured out' the truth. [What happened to the Apex Cosmic? Why did her Existence disappear?]

I am not certain. The First Emperor replies. I suspect her empowerment may have been temporary. Perhaps she reverted back to the mortal level afterward, and thus disappeared from our senses.

Dosena nods slowly, once again drawing conclusions from the limited information she's received. Camael must have learned a superior method of empowering herself, one that eclipsed the likes of her brothers and sister. Perhaps the Cherubiim is no longer the only Ascended Archangel in this galaxy now. Hmm...

After poking and prodding a bit more, Dosena feels that she has learned enough information. She returns her attention to the other two Cosmics in the area.

[How unfortunate that you are incapable of handling the Myriad Deity yourselves.] Dosena says. [I shall do so with ease.]

"IT IS NOT THAT I CANNOT, BUT THAT THE COST WOULD BE TOO GREAT." Diablo retorts. "HAD WE FOUGHT FOR A LONGER DURATION, NUMARIA WOULD HAVE BEEN RUINED BEYOND REPAIR."

[Make whatever excuses you like.] Dosena says, no longer interested in verbally sparring with the two mighty presences before her. [I will handle your screw-up.]

We are in your debt, the First Emperor concludes.

Part 516: Deity Defeated

Hope Hiro once again faces off against the Myriad Deity. But this time, he appears visibly more agitated than before. The Second Wordsmith's right eye twitches as a sense of annoyance builds in his chest.

Jason's appearance made Hope look like a fool. Without using any artifacts, Jason managed to accomplish more than Hope while also drawing Mephisto and his sub-souls away from Tarus II. He ultimately failed to defeat the Myriad Deity, but at least he didn't get his face smashed in, either.

Feeling resentful, Hope can't help but wear his emotions on his sleeve as he prepares to face the dragon once more. This time, Mephisto has shrunken himself into a much smaller form after getting his ass manhandled by the First Wordsmith. He now stands at a mere ten feet tall, a tenth as large as Hope's humongous body.

Hope frowns, realizing fighting the equivalent of a grasshopper won't be a simple feat. He shrinks himself down to match Mephisto's height, along with Excalibur. The he utters a Word of Power to summon Artoria to his position.

Foop!

Artoria pops into existence beside him, pauses to evaluate the situation, and quickly holds up her Pseudo-Excalibur as she readies herself to join in the fight against Mephisto.

Originally, Hope planned to work with her on subduing Mephisto, but given the demon-dragon's gigantic size, Artoria just wasn't large enough to deal damage to him. And curiously, one annoying aspect of being a Black Hole Construct is her inability to be easily altered through magical means. Indeed, trying to change her size would just result in the spell's energy disappearing inside her body without a trace.

Artoria glances at Hope after she appears.

[Plan?]

[The plan is, we try to kill him.] Hope says with a growl.

[I don't think that's going to work.] Artoria replies, her expression bland.

[Well, it's what we're doing!] Hope argues. [Let's go!]

The two of them fly through the Void, traveling toward Mephisto while the Myriad Deity gazes at them with an expression of disinterest.

Hope slices Excalibur at Mephisto, but the divine blade passes right through Mephisto's body, cleaving him as if he were only a mirage. His body scatters to dust, and a warning feeling buzzes in the back of Hope's mind.

The Wordsmith whirls around right as the Myriad Deity pounces at him from behind!

"PUSH!" Hope shouts into the field of oxygen Wordsmithed around his body. A Word of Power activates, pushing Mephisto back a little, but the demon-dragon easily ignores this slowdown and continues raking his claws at the Wordsmith.

Artoria attacks from the side! She swings her sword down and strikes it against Mephisto's head, knocking the Myriad Deity away! She saves Hope, though he likely wouldn't have been hurt too much even if Mephisto hit.

Unfortunately, despite her sword's supposed ability to cut through anything, Artoria fails to hurt Mephisto's physical body. His bones are simply too durable.

For the next ten minutes, Hope and Artoria race around, working together to do anything they can think of in the chances they might actually beat the Myriad Deity.

For his part, Mephisto utilizes all sorts of new tricks. He and his subordinate souls take turns swapping who controls the main body. Sometimes it's Mephisto, sometimes Yama, and sometimes Zamiel. Lupus never deigns to join, since she doesn't particularly give a damn about her ultimate fate.

The more the Myriad Deity swaps souls, the more its three primary controllers become adept at catching the opponent off-guard.

Mephisto, the malleable.

Yama, the assassin.

Zamiel, the champion.

Of those three, it becomes clear to Hope that Zamiel is the most frightening. While he may have ascended to Emperor last, his latent abilities make him the scariest. The power to copy any technology of war and conjure it using his Qi means he's the most versatile combatant, to say nothing of his Earth Manipulation he stole from Kar.

Most worryingly, whenever Zamiel comes out to play, his actual combat techniques are far and away superior to the other souls inside the Myriad Deity, as well as Hope and Artoria themselves.

With over 100,000 years of endless killing practice, Zamiel has forged his willpower into a deadly blade. His pure combat instincts have reached a level even King Arthur can't compare to.

[I've gotta say!] Zamiel says, swinging a greathammer in a huge arc to send Hope and Artoria flying away. [Becoming a Deity has been SO much fun! I love beating the shit out of cocky little dumbfucks who think they're hot shit! It's even better when my opponents are strong and I STILL get to kick the shit out of-]

Suddenly, in the middle of Zamiel's sentence, an orb as black as the night and the size of a bowling ball pops into existence behind him. It flies at his backside, catching him by surprise.

BANG!!

The orb explodes when it strikes his spine, and two dozen glowing golden chains emerge from its interior. Before Zamiel can figure out what the hell is happening, the chains snap around him, enveloping his arms, legs, and tail while forcing his arms to tuck against his chest. Like a makeshift straitjacket, the chains snare him and completely take the Myriad Deity by surprise!

[What the HELL?!] Zamiel roars, enraged by the sneak attack. [What even-?!]

Hope pauses, gaping with widened eyes as the living chains hastily wrap and tighten around Zamiel more and more every second, making him thrash around as he tries to escape their bindings.

[Excellent work.] Artoria says to Hope.

[I didn't make those chains.] Hope replies. [I have no idea what they are!]

Suddenly, the chains begin to illuminate as holy energy surges across them, making Zamiel scream in pain!

[AAAAAHHH!!]

The enemy of all demonkind scorches his bones, burning Zamiel's soul itself as the corrosive angelic energy threatens to char his demonic essence to ash!

Seeing this, Hope pieces together who must have made the chains. [Jason! He did this!]

In between Zamiel's roars of anger and pain, one chain flies into his open mouth like a bit on a horse, yanking his head backward and exposing his neck.

Hope's eyes flash. [Whatever! Forget it, we'll worry about Jason later! Artoria! Cut off his head!]

Hope and Artoria synchronize their movements. They fly toward Zamiel with their swords at the ready, then slash horizontally at the seemingly weak and vulnerable spinal cord attaching Zamiel's head to his shoulders.

CLANG! CLANG! TINK! TINK!

The two of them strike Zamiel's bones with all their strength, trying desperately to sever the Myriad Deity's head from its body.

But they fail.

Ten times, Hope and Artoria slash their blades against what should be the weakest part of the Myriad Deity's skeleton. But each time, their strikes end up being completely ineffective! Even when Hope enhances his strength, accelerates his speed, and swings his sword with the intent to kill, he only succeeds in knocking Zamiel around without causing his skeleton any damage!

[This is insane!] Hope screams in despair. [Even tied up and helpless, this demon bastard is impossible to kill!!]

Despite being trapped and snared, suffering terrible holy burns, and having two jerks trying to hack his neck in half, Zamiel still keeps his wits around him. The energy surging through his body gives him a hard time in thinking up an escape plan, but he does eventually come up with one.

[Mephisto!! Swap out!]

Mephisto doesn't even bother giving an answer. He swaps with Zamiel, howling in pain as the holy energy scorches his soul instead. Despite the agony, he doesn't regret taking over, and instead begins working to free himself.

Using his power of his Mist-Body, Mephisto softens his bones, turning himself malleable. The chains continue to constrict him tighter and tighter, but he allows them to squeeeeeze inside of his skeleton, melting the skeleton around those chains and allowing them to travel deeper and deeper inside his core...

Suddenly, the chains break through! They pass through Mephisto's entire skeleton and snap back into a single bowling ball-sized sphere in the center of his ribs, where they collapse and return to their inert form.

Before anyone can react, Mephisto swaps places with Yama, tears the orb out, and throws it at Hope, startling the Second Wordsmith.

Luckily, the orb simply bounces off Hope's head. But Yama still turns into shadow and start to flee again, putting distance between himself and the Second Wordsmith.

[You fucker!] Hope yells. [I'm not letting you get away!]

Yama's expression becomes glum.

[This isn't working.] He says privately to the other souls of the Myriad Deity. [We're no closer to killing the Emperors on Tarus II, and our minions keep getting slaughtered. Humanity's soldiers are too powerful.]

Mephisto appears just as unhappy with the situation. [Our asssault hasssn't failed. The Wordsssmithsss can only delay usss. We're too powerful for them to win. Ssso long asss we persssissst, we will triumph.]

Zamiel grimaces. [What a boring way to win. If only we could just SMASH these losers! We might- huh?]

Zamiel pauses.

Every individual inside the Myriad Deity does.

On the planet of Tarus II, the Warpgate flickers to life. It connects to another Warpgate elsewhere in the Milky Way.

Not the Warpgate Network inside the Labyrinth.

But rather...

[Oh no.] Zamiel says, his heart turning cold. [It's... IT'S HER.]

A monstrous energy signature emerges on the planet of Tarus II. In an instant, every single one of Mephisto's Death Gates shatters and breaks, causing the flow of undead to halt.

That energy signature begins flying up and out of the planet's atmosphere, making Zamiel's eyes pop open.

[NOPE! NOPE! BYE, FUCKERS!]

He turns around and starts flying away at top speed, racing as fast as he can while motioning with his claws to create magical symbols.

Zamiel starts to conjure a portal glyph so he can make a swift escape, but just as he's about to succeed, his hands completely fumble the magic, making his mana backfire and explode in his face.

Thoom.

A massive detonation of Cosmic energy reverses Zamiel's momentum, making him cry out in frustration.

[WORDSMITH!!]

While he might not know which of the Wordsmiths stopped him, Hope certainly does. He recognizes Jason must have interfered, so he starts to pursue Zamiel, only for Artoria to grab his shoulder.

[There is no need.] Artoria says to Hope, her tone eerily calm.

From behind the Second Wordsmith, Founder Dosena rips across Tarus II's skies and into the Void in less than a second. She flashes past Hope so quickly that he doesn't even perceive her movement, only sensing an instant later that the sensation of power from behind himself has traveled to a position in front of himself.

Hope's heart skips a beat. Holy!

Zamiel shrieks in fright as he senses the rapid approach of the Mightiest Volgrim, an existence only a bit less frightening than the Apex Cosmic, the Seraph known as Anaelle.

[YOU WON'T CATCH ME, YOU VOLGRIM BITCH!!] Zamiel roars, turning around to face the approaching threat.

He motions with his hands to summon Yama's shadows, trying to hide himself. He and Yama swap control, with the Shadow Emperor sending several dark-dragon-clones in different directions while trying to evade their pursuer.

Yama starts to run away, but to his horror, Dosena only continues to draw closer and closer, having somehow locked onto him despite his best efforts.

Then, a feeling like plunging into quicksand seizes Yama. His entire body freezes up, as if having become trapped in a thick, viscous quagmire.

[No!!]

Yama cries out in fear. He tries to turn his head, but he fails to move a muscle. Much like the Wordsmithium Chains that bound him only a short while earlier, but a hundred times more effective, he loses control of his body.

[Where do you think you can flee?] Dosena asks, arriving within spitting distance of the visibly terrified demon-dragon. [Do you think you can escape me? The only reason I didn't chase you earlier was because I erroneously believed you were of no use to me. That has changed.]

The eerily calm and emotionless Second Founder does not stand nearly as tall as Mephisto. At only a touch above six feet tall, she is much shorter than his ten-feet stature. But even so, the energy contained within her vessel is far, far superior, making her a hundred times his senior in the Cosmic Way.

[Let me go! You'll REGRET pissing me off!] Zamiel threatens, struggling to move his body even a millimeter.

He fails.

His words lifelessly splash against Dosena's face, failing to make a single muscle of hers twitch in response.

Hope Hiro finally catches up to the two of them, stopping a short distance away.

[Dosena!] Hope exclaims. [Why are you here? Did Unarin send you?]

Dosena rotates around to face the Second Wordsmith while keeping an unbreakable psionic grip on the Myriad Deity, preventing him from escaping.

[This creature is made up entirely of highly purified Living Moldanium.] Dosena states. [It poses a minor threat to the Volgrim Empire. I will eliminate it and reap the bounty of its skeleton. Clearly, you are incapable of doing so yourself.]

Hope's eyes narrow. He shoots a nasty glare at her, but doesn't make any moves forward.

[Mephisto... the Myriad Deity attacked my planet! It killed my people!]

[According to my senses, that is a lie.] Dosena replies. [Your security forces prevented even a single death from occurring. However, if I had not shown up, it is probable the Myriad Deity would eventually wear you down. You Mud-Dwellers are incapable of handling a Cosmic-Level threat. I am doing you a favor by disposing of this entity. You are… welcome.]

Hope struggles to find a good counter-argument. He opens and closes his mouth twice while his brain fails to keep up.

Suddenly, Jason Hiro pops into existence off to Hope's right side.

[Founder Dosena.] Jason says telepathically. [Thank you for showing up when you did. You are correct. We were unable to defeat the Myriad Deity. However, that does not mean you are allowed to violate our airspace with impunity.]

[I eliminated the necromantic energies beneath your city.] Dosena says. [You may consider that my payment. I will be taking this creature, now.]

She cocks her head. [Unless you would like to challenge me?]

Both Wordsmiths fall silent.

[…No. That's fine.] Jason says. [You may have him. But I'll expect compensation for the value of his corpse.]

Dosena snorts. [Ask your clone for compensation. Considering he now possesses one of my people's Celestial Designers, I'm sure he can provide you with better compensation than we ever could. I take my leave, now.]

Without waiting for a response, Dosena turns around, grabs at the air around Mephisto, and begins to rocket away, racing across the Tarus system at a speed far faster than light as she takes her spoil of war along for the ride.

Just like that, the emergency situation disappears along with Dosena, leaving Hope and Jason to float in the void.

Hope's frustrations reach a boiling point. He turns to his other self.

[Jason! Why did we just let her go?!]

Jason shrugs. [Why not? Do you have a better idea? We can't beat Dosena. Not as we are now. Not even with Excalibur.]

Jason flicks his eyes to the holy sword.

[You know, Hope... you're wasting Excalibur's potential. All that energy and you're just using it like a glorified beating-stick. You should put its mana to better use. Conjure some traps, some other items...]

[At least I HAVE artifacts!] Hope claps back. [All you did was tickle Mephisto, while Elizabeth nearly killed him! We're the ones who saved Tarus II today! You'd do well not to forget that.]

Jason stares at Hope for a second, then nods.

[You did well, Hope. Keep up the good work. Next time, though, try and drag the giant dragon away from our homeworld, okay? That's all I'm asking.]

[We can fix the damage.] Hope argues. [Nobody died, and that's what matters. In fact...]

Hope directs his attention back to Tarus II. He calls upon the power of Excalibur while aiming his mind at the ravaged, annihilated, torn-up side of Tarus II where he fought the Myriad Deity.

"Terraform! Heal! Regrow! Repopulate!"

Hope speaks over thirty Words of Power, quickly and efficiently using Excalibur's magic to repair the damage wrought upon his homeworld.

After two minutes of effort and exertion, he turns back to Jason. [See? I fixed all the-]

He pauses and blinks.

Jason has disappeared.

[What the- Jason!! Where did you go?! You arrogant piece of shit! Tell ME what to do, why don't you?!]

"Locate!" Hope yells, trying to find his other half.

But the Word of Power has no effect. It fails to uncover Jason's current location.

Hope grimaces, a dismal look upon his face.

"Fucking hell. Goddamn Jason. Always getting in my way, trying to make me look stupid."

Those words evaporate into the Void, failing to transmit audibly to Artoria, who remains standing a short distance away.

Even so, with her enhanced brain, she easily reads Hope's lips.

[You fought sub-optimally.] Artoria states without emotion, completely ignoring any of Hope's feelings on the matter. [You could have killed everyone on Tarus II through sheer negligence. The First Wordsmith was correct to push the Myriad Deity out of Tarus II's gravity well.]

Hope falters. [I was fighting for my life! I didn't have the option to take a step back, relax, and think things through!]

[Perhaps not.] She acknowledges. [But what is the point of possessing Solomon's Crown if you aren't going to use it?]

That shuts Hope up.

He frowns, then looks away.

[...Yeah. Maybe you're right. I didn't look very good today. Jason... one-upped me.]

[I believe saving lives is more important than 'looking good.'] Artoria counters, her expression as neutral as ever. [But perhaps I am simply not accustomed to human displays of ego.]

Hope coughs. [You really don't know how to hold back, do you?]

[No.] Artoria responds. [I do not.]

Part 517: Void Beast Assault!

One of the many tens of thousands of Troopers on Tarus II jogs over to another group of Troopers in the center of the Fortress of Retribution, popping open his helmet as he approaches.

"Commander Neil. I've confirmed it." The man says to his superior officer, a man wearing a striking red-and-blue T-REX with heavy armor. "The flow of undead has dried up. There are still stragglers, but we expect to have them finished off within the next three hours."

Neil Adams stands with his helmet only half-engaged, revealing his mouth and neck. A visor continues to cover his eyes, allowing him to keep an eye on the overall situation while he peruses a datapad in his hand.

"Good work." Neil says to the scout. "You can join the Eastern Flank. We have a few hundred undead in that area that need mopping up. Keep an eye out for corpses playing dead. Don't let them grab you by the ankles."

"Yes sir." The scout trooper says, turning and jogging away.

Neil pays no mind to the young man after he leaves. He instead turns his head to a Hummer-wearing trooper beside him.

"Great work today, Linda. You saved me at least a dozen times."

"I take my duties seriously." Linda says, continuing to hold her large and cumbersome sniper rifle close to her chest. "Can't let anything happen to my boyfriend."

A couple troopers nearby cough, then take a few steps away, clearly having heard something they don't think they should have. They glance up into the sky, pretending to admire the waning daylight.

Neil pays them no mind. "Zero casualties. Today went better than I could have dreamed. We were attacked by a demon more powerful than Beelzebub, yet our contingencies held up. Hope and Blinker fended off Mephisto, while the rest of our people kept the undead occupied."

"It was a good result." Linda says through her helmet's intercom. "Everyone did their part."

"Yes. Everyone..." Neil says, his words implying the opposite. "Did you know Archangel Uriel barely contributed to the battle? She simply levitated above the Primary Shelter and killed any straggler undead that came close."

"Uriel isn't our asset." Linda points out. "We have no control over her. It's fortunate she protected the biggest mass of civilians. She could have simply taken a nap inside her little church and we'd have no recourse. At least her presence deterred the strongest undead."

"I'm not exactly taking fault with her actions..." Neil says slowly, as he looks up at his girlfriend. "I just think... it's a shame. She could have done more. She didn't even send out her brothers in their spirit-forms to help."

"Again, she's not ours to command." Linda repeats. "We're lucky she helped at all. From what I understand, the Demon Emperors Mephisto sent to attack us never went near the primary civilian shelter. We can probably chalk that up to Uriel's presence."

Neil glances into the distance, but he can't spot that specific shelter behind all the other buildings in his way.

"Right. It's fine, I suppose. More importantly, look at these performance metrics."

He holds up the datapad so Linda can see its screen.

"Our troopers had an average hit-rate of about 40%. That's 15-20% for those in the thick of the action, and 60% for the snipers and detached regiments. We also saw some surprising results from the Felorians. It seems Brunhilda's people have become significantly more competent than we projected."

Neil leans slightly toward Linda.

"...What do you make of that?"

Linda frowns inside her helmet. "How much more competent?"

"Their abilities seem to have increased anywhere from 50-100%." Neil explains. "For example, this Felorian named Sariah, her speed and strength are rated at Class A+ now, whereas just one week ago she was only Class B. Further, she has already reached her maximum number of visits to the Body Booster. Such a jump should not be possible with the training and empowerment methods we currently possess."

"She received a boost from somewhere else, then." Linda mutters. "And not an insignificant one, either. You don't think the demons...?"

"Not the demons." Neil says, shaking his head. "Lady Brunhilda detests demons. She'll stomach their presence, but I assure you she is more on my side of the fence than Jason's. But now that I mention him..."

Neil trails off, allowing the implication to linger.

"You think he's finding new ways to upgrade our soldiers?" Linda asks.

"It's as good a hypothesis as any." Neil says with a shrug. "I certainly won't fault him for doing so. But it's curious he didn't think to inform me."

"Considering the impending 'split' you've been grumping about, Jason probably isn't as fond of you as he was in the past." Linda says, while deactivating her helmet to give him a pretty smile. "And neither are you all that fond of him."

Neil smiles back at her, then he returns his attention to the reports still flooding in.

"Our soldiers did well." Neil mutters. "Yamir Ironhorn personally slew over 300 undead. Samuel Baker waded into a mass of enemies and killed them all. Seems his fairy powers have become a bit stronger than before his death. Oh, and look at this..."

Neil's voice raises an octave as he reveals a video of an angelic warrior clad in golden armor, ripping through the undead hordes with fluidic ease.

"Is that Uriel?" Linda asks, slightly confused. "But I thought she was at the shelter. No, wait, that's..."

"It's Cassiel. The Daughter of Heaven." Neil says, smiling faintly. "She did well to hide her appearance, but I can't imagine the demons are going to miss the signs of holy energy with a different signature from Uriel. We need to spin this, somehow..."

"We do?" Linda asks. "Shouldn't we tell everyone about her valiant fighting efforts?"

"No." Neil says simply.

The man pauses. He looks off into the distance and sighs.

"Cassiel is a special existence. I've said as much before. She has suffered terribly, and it's remarkable how quickly she's regrown her fighting spirit. Truly the willpower of a Frenchwoman, I would say. But she is still in a delicate state."

He lowers his gaze back to the video.

"Look at her movements. They're jerky and awkward. Unpolished. She's 100,000 years out of date with what her body can do. She's... rusty. And she's only killing those undead so easily because they're pathetic, weak little pissants."

Linda slowly nods. "So you're saying she's not ready to be revealed yet?"

"When she intends to reveal herself, she shall do so herself." Neil states emphatically. "We will not be the ones to unmask her. This was more of a practice run, you see? It's clear she's still trying to fight her trauma. For now, we will put out a statement about a secret superweapon the Wordsmith is building. We'll make up a story about 'bringing back the might of angelkind.' Anything to deflect her true identity. We keep this hush-hush."

"...There's a problem with that." Linda says, looking at Neil evenly. "Gressil knows about Cassiel. The moment he blabs her existence to the other Emperors, she won't be able to hide any longer."

"Hahaha." Neil laughs.

"Did I say something funny?" Linda asks.

Humanity's military commander chuckles quietly, then reaches under his helmet to rub his eye. "No, no, it's nothing like that. But don't you find it odd? Gressil has had weeks to tell the other Emperors about Cassiel, yet he hasn't. The longer he goes without acting, and the more intel we receive on him, the more I get a better grip on this strange, frightening monstrosity."

Neil glances around, as if try to look for faint motions in the air, the signs of an invisible lurking predator.

"If I had the powers Gressil had, my logical course of action would be to start quickly assassinating my enemies. Ruining their chain of command. Hell, I might even screw with them just to make them doubt their own eyes. But that is not how the Emperor of Chaos works, is it? He likes to... play with his food. It's not about winning or losing. It's about watching how the pawns fight each other."

Neil raps his knuckle against the datapad. "Gressil won't reveal Cassiel's existence. We know he's already appeared inside her quarters once. He intends to torment her. He doesn't want the other Emperors knowing about her, because he views the angel as being rightfully his possession. He's merely allowing her to be free for a time. Perhaps he may even try to recapture her in the near future."

"Do you even hear what you're saying??" Linda asks, aghast. "We need to up her security detail if that's the case!"

"She already has that Black Hole Construct protecting her." Neil says. "A bunch of ordinary troopers won't be any more helpful in that regard. Soleil showed up in the battle alongside Cassiel, and she was far more effective when it came to combat. I'd say she's one of humanity's secret powerhouses… along with her 'sister', Artoria."

Neil skims past a few more names, pausing when he arrives at humanity's allied Demon Emperors.

"Mephisto was targeting these three." Neil says. "Belial, Kiari, and Beelzebub. Plus some of the Dukes as well. Beelzebub, in particular, had a lot of enemies trying to bring him down, but he held them off with ease."

"Why do you think Mephisto wanted them?" Linda asks.

"He intended to turn them into undead thralls, I imagine." Neil says with a shrug. "Or maybe he wanted to directly consume their power. Either way, they acted as a liability this time. Those three… they almost brought a calamity upon our heads. Mephisto didn't give a damn about us humans, only our so-called Emperor 'friends.' Not sure how I feel about that."

Neil shakes his head. "I need to get back to work prepping my big speech. It's only a little over a week from now, and everything that happened today will act as good fodder for my platform. Can you take care of the rest while I'm busy?"

He smiles at Linda, and she smiles back. "Of course, Neil. Let me know if you have any specific commands. In the meantime, I'll focus on rebuilding the destroyed infrastructure."

"Good. Take care to gather testimonials regarding our combat superiority. I want to emphasize the merits of our military training and how it allowed us to reign supreme against that Demon Deity."

Neil turns to walk away, but then he pauses. A notification appears on his datapad.

"What the…"

Linda frowns, hearing the change in his tone. She peeps over his shoulder, only to find a yellow alert on the screen.

"Something happened?" Linda asks.

"Something indeed." Neil says, his voice turning nasty. "We have a fatality! A little girl died inside one of the shelters! A human child!"

"What? A fatality? Was it because of stress?"

Neil clenches his hand into a fist. "No! It wasn't an accident! All signs point to murder! Linda, with me!"

He and Linda take off, marching toward none other than the largest shelter in the city, the one Uriel fought to protect, all to get down to the bottom of this strange new mystery...

Somewhere in deep space, Fourteen Standard Time Units after the appearance of the Apex Cosmic.

The VLL Archontis IV travels through subspace, racing away from the planet Volgarius at Warp 5. While certainly a fast speed, Warp 5 is also the speed where a Trifrancium Drive will never deplete its reserves, no matter the duration it travels for. This allows it to conserve fuel while traveling across star systems at a moderate pace.

On this particular ship, a dozen Psionic Enclaves reside. It is but one of many vessels traveling on the same vector toward a world intended for temporary residence, should a disaster befall Volgarius.

More than a thousand young Psions reside within this ship. The majority of them are at or below the 3rd Level.

In one particular enclave, about a hundred and fifty junior Psions of the 1st and 2nd level sit cross-legged on the floor while a male teacher prances about before them in a dignified yet somewhat flamboyant manner.

[The situation on Volgarius has been resolved.] Educator Norim says, the black-armored fellow strutting about like a peacock. [I'm sure some of you were a little alarmed, but as predicted, our wise and all-knowing First Founder has resolved the crisis!]

One of his students manifests a dot of light above her head, drawing the Educator's attention.

[Ah yes, Initiator Y'ill!] Norim says, turning to face the inquisitive youngster. [Does my newest student have a question?]

She sits up a little bit straighter. [Educator, I contemplate but I do not comprehend. I have heard rumors that the happenings on Volgarius were caused by the human Wordsmith. Is that truly the case?]

[Haha.] Educator Norim laughs lightly. [Inquisitive minds, always filled with curiosity. You have heard correctly. I am not privy to all the details, but it seems the Second Wordsmith planned to attack Volgarius, yet ultimately failed due to our First Founder's careful planning. No doubt, the First Founder outwitted him with the same ease any self-respecting Volgrim would outwit a lowly mud-dweller.]

Norim motions with his hands to conjure a powerful psionic projection of their fleet, an armada of over a hundred ships all built by the Technopaths of Clan Symmetra.

[We were originally planned to travel to a Class-III world, not particularly suited for habitation, but one that would meet our emergency needs. Now that Founder Unarin has solved the immediate crisis, he has begun recalling our people back to the homeworld. We are expected to receive our recall notice within the next six standard time units. Until then, we will continue on our original path.]

A different student manifests a dot of psionic light above his head, and Norim gestures to him.

[Yes, Initiator Hadwin?]

[Educator. Will Volgarius be able to function properly with 99% of its population missing?] The disciple asks.

[Of course, of course.] Norim says, waving his hand flippantly. [The First Founder long ago made more than ten thousand contingency plans in case of various catastrophic events that might play out. Nothing which has occurred was beyond our great First Founder's ability to predict. You need not worry about such distant woes.]

He pauses for emphasis before continuing. [Further, I have heard from reliable sources that our First Founder has brokered a deal which might prove to be quite satisfying to our people's-]

Abruptly, the Educator stops speaking.

His eyes become unfocused, and he looks away.

Steams of psionic words enter his mind.

[ALERT! THE FLEET HAS BEEN FORCIBLY TORN OUT OF HYPERSPACE! ALL VOLGRIM OF THE 4TH LEVEL AND ABOVE, PREPARE TO ENTER COMBAT WITH ROAMING VOID BEASTS.]

Educator Norim glances at his students. [Stay here. There is an emergency. I must join our combat forces in the Void.]

Without explaining further, he quickly walks out the door while overhead alarms begin to blare. The ship shudders as something strikes its hull, but the shields remain intact.

Educator Norim strides quickly, increasing his speed once he enters the main hallway. He passes by half a dozen 4th-Level Psions, and even a single 5th Level he happens to recognize.

[Proctor Landis!] Norim calls out to his senior Psion, running over to catch up with him. [What manner of Void Beast is attacking us?]

[We are not yet certain. It is an unrecognized species.] The green-colored Psion says with an authoritative voice. [You have not yet reached the 4th Level. You will stay inside. Our forces are not technically sufficient, but there do not appear to be many Void Beasts attacking us. Now, if you'll excuse me.]

The Proctor doesn't wait for Norim's response. His speed abruptly quadruples, and he races ahead, leaving Norim behind.

Frustrated at his inability to help, Norim lowers his head for a moment in shame. Then he continues down the pure-white halls of the Archontis IV, arriving at the observation deck where he and the other senior teachers can finally see what the hell is going on outside the ship.

Technopaths dart around the Observation Deck's different command panels, barking commands in their native language, a mixture of Volgarian and technobabble even Norim can't keep up with. Having never seen a Great Void Beast in his life, Norim widens his eyes when he gets a good look at the monitors.

Huge creatures, each roughly the size of a Volgrim cruiser, 'swim' in the void like aquatic sea-monsters. Their forms are many and varied, but notably they have semi-translucent skin that reveals their muscles and internal organs. Their bodies range from grey to black, with most ranging on the darker side to better blend in with the void itself.

Some of them resemble large squid-like masses that wrap around the ships with their tentacles to press their toothy maws against the metal and start chewing. Others resemble eyeless sharks, or bipeds with mouths on their 'hands', or any number of other strange and bizarre life-forms.

Educator Norim watches silently as the high-level Psions in the armada quickly and efficient deploy into space and begin attacking the Great Void Beasts. Among the Psions present, there is even a single 7th-Level named Praetor Thade. This particular Praetor turns out to be a powerful Body Manipulator capable of greatly expanding his size, as well as ripping apart enemies and consuming their bodies to empower himself by way of assimilating their DNA.

Along with just four 6th-Level Psions and a hodge-podge of 5th-Levels, the Psions quickly and efficiently take action, battling these Void Beasts with practiced efficiency as per their many millennia of drills. The creatures utter silent screams to the void as the tiny little Psions tear them to shreds, ripping their bodies with ruthless efficiency.

While Norim watches, he happens to overhear a pair of Technopaths nearby.

"-like the others we've seen. Are these really Great Void Beasts?"

"Hmm. They seem much weaker than the ones in our databases."

"Yes. And it's rare for so many of them to appear this deep inside the galaxy. They usually prefer to remain at the fringes of the galaxy, near the Emptiness."

The two Technopaths banter quietly, but Norim's sharp senses easily pick up on their words.

[You said these Void Beasts are unusual?] He asks, walking over to them.

One of the Technopaths nods at Norim. "Ah, Educator. Yes, we were just comparing the creatures attacking our ship to the ones in the historical records. They are substantially weaker than the Void Beasts of old, and furthermore it is quite rare for them to venture so close to the Galactic Core."

[Hm. How odd.] Norim replies, though he doesn't have enough experience with the Void Beasts to add anything worthy of mention to the discussion.

He wanders back to his original spot and waits. After thirty time-units of battle, the Psion Elites return, victorious. With only the weakest of the 5th-Level Psions having suffered minor injuries, the defense was ultimately a huge success.

Norim heads over to meet up with his senior, Proctor Landis. When he does, he finds that the Proctor is in excellent condition, having fought bravely while suffering no injuries of note.

[Proctor. How did the battle go?] Norim asks.

[As well as can be expected.] Landis replies perfunctorily. [Those Void Beasts were weaker than we expected. Perhaps the weakest I've ever seen.]

[You have fought Void Beasts before?] Norim asks, falling into step with his senior as Landis heads to a cleansing room to remove the impurities on his skin.

[Three times, yes.] Landis answers. [I barely even exerted myself. Were there any losses on the ships?]

[None that I have seen.] Norim answers, while tapping into the ship's Psionic Net to double check. [All crew and civilians are accounted-]

He suddenly pauses mid-step, then he blinks twice.

[What in the Founder's name?]

Proctor Landis also pauses, noticing the look of surprise on his junior's face. [Hm?]

[An... an entire enclave has vanished!] Norim exclaims. [Look! How did we miss this?!]

Immediately, Landis taps into the ship's Psionic Net. He follows Norim's data-trail, where he finds the same thing!

Before his eyes, a blueprint of the ship hovers in the air, with a large hole torn in the hull that everyone somehow missed. Huge teeth-marks lay bitten in the ship's underbelly, revealing where a Void Beast must have attacked.

[Attention all personnel!] Landis calls out, transmitting his voice over the net. [A Bronze Enclave has gone missing! Immediately begin searching the void's vicinity for Aspirator Raavul and her entire class!]

[Damn!] Landis roars, his expression turning to rage. [Those accursed Void Beasts! That was the enclave where I left my student!]

[We may yet find the missing Enclave.] Norim says, trying not to sound bothered. [Initiator Ferral was a promising seed. But in the end, he was only a 1st-Level. His loss is unlikely to affect the future of the war.]

[We will not write my progeny off yet!] Landis thunders with righteous indignation. [Fan out! I want all Psions of the 3rd-Level and higher to sweep the vicinity! Leave no space debris unturned! We WILL uncover my progeny's ultimate fate!]

Landis splits off from his senior to inform his class of what happened. After he leaves, Initiator Y'ill breathes a quiet sigh of relief, since she might have been one of the victims devoured by that Void Beast had she remained in Raavul's class.

Six standard time units later, after the fleet receives the order to return to Volgarius, they still fail to find the missing Enclave.

The fleet turns around and returns to Volgarius, forced to write off the loss of their bright young minds as a minor but unavoidable tragedy...

At the same time, in a secret dimension known as Chrona, a hundred Psions pop into existence, their bodies becoming frozen by powerful forces as the First Wordsmith nabs his latest haul...

Part 518: Captured Psions

Everything was going decently enough for Aspirator Raavul. She was teaching her class as she usually did, showing them how to slowly build their foundation as they worked steadily toward reaching the Second Invocation. But then, the Great Void Beasts attacked. Weaker than usual, they shouldn't have posed a threat.

She carefully monitored the situation, watching the battle outside from inside her classroom while assuaging her students' fears. It seemed a one-sided victory, and that the High Psions would easily deal with these stray Void Beasts.

But then her eyesight vanished. She woke up with a pitch-black fog covering her vision. Even her psionic senses became muted and ineffective.

Now, after three hours, she is becoming fearful and frustrated.

[Is anyone out there? Hello?]

Raavul tries to move, but her body remains immobilized, as if held in place by powerful clamps that prevent her from even so much as fidgeting. Despite being a ten thousand year old Psion who has seen many oddities and experienced plenty of scares, nothing in her past prepared her for this sudden and abrupt change in her life's situation.

She tries to reach out with her telepathy, but a thick mental wall blocks her senses, making her words fizzle into the darkness before her.

[Help! Proctor Landis! Anyone! Where am I?!]

* * *

Jason Hiro walks up and down the line of Psions placed inside Psio-Stasis Pods, inventions his mind-wife made for the sole purpose of capturing and immobilizing Psions so they won't be able to fight back or escape.

"Some of the weakest Psions, the youngest ones especially, are showing high levels of stress in their cerebral activity." Fiona says, as she walks up behind him. "I think we've given them a good enough scare."

This facility, built ten levels beneath Chrona's soil, serves as a holding facility for the captured Psions. Its dark grey walls keep the room from stressing Jason's eyes, even with plenty of lights illuminating the interior. But the walls also have a secret purpose in preventing psionic transmissions and other meta-activity from leaking out.

The First Wordsmith massages his chin. "You're sure the Psio-Suppressors will work?"

"I'm as sure as I can be without a real-world test." Fiona replies. "Let's put them on."

Jason and Fiona walk over to the pods. The Psions rest inside without a cover on the front, allowing the Wordsmith and his mind-wife to clamp collars made of Wordsmithium around each Psion's neck. These collars contain highly complex technological and magical internals designed to completely suppress nearly all psionic capabilities from their victims.

After ensuring each of the 101 Psions have been properly fitted and collared, Jason and Fiona take a step back, then sigh deeply.

"Alright." Jason says. "Let's start with the 3rd-Level Psion. If she can't use her abilities, none of the rest will be able to, either."

Fiona instantly transmits a command to Centurion through her neural connection to Chrona's network. The AI begins the wake-up procedure, allowing Aspirator Raavul to open her eyes.

Immediately, the Psion sits up, becoming alert much faster than Jason expected. She looks around the room and quickly assesses the situation, her eyes flicking across all of her comatose students. She then gazes at the two humans, assessing their identities with a hint of uncertainty.

[You! Who are you?] Raavul asks, her telepathic voice much weaker and feebler than she expected it to be.

"You don't recognize me?" Jason asks.

Raavul hesitates. She tries to inspect the entity in front of her, only managing to deduce that he is a male human, and the one beside him is a female human.

[...Should I?] Raavul asks.

"My name is Jason Hiro. I am the Wordsmith." Jason explains. "This is my wife, Fiona Hiro."

[The Wordsmith!] Raavul exclaims. [I had not seen a holo-image of your face, but I have heard your name. What are your intentions toward my students and I? Why have you captured us? Why am I unable to tap into my Psionic Seed?]

"Let's slow down on the questions." Jason says, holding up a hand. "First off, I'll explain the situation to you succinctly. I conjured fake Void Beasts to attack your fleet. I wanted to snap up some low-level Psions for experimentation purposes, and your Enclave was the ideal choice. Nice and weak, the Volgrim Empire probably won't miss you. I even made it look like the Void Beasts killed you, so they'll be unlikely to guess I was the culprit."

Raavul's stomach sinks upon hearing the Wordsmith's explanation. A deep sense of unease begins to make her feel skittish and vulnerable.

[You... are you planning to torture us...? Let my Enclave go. Wipe their memories if you must. I will do anything you ask. Just don't hurt my disciples!]

"Ah. I think I worded that poorly..." Jason says, realizing his mistake. "Let me correct myself. I don't want to keep you here by force. In fact, I'd prefer if you were all willing to stay here of your own accord. I'm not going to subject you to torturous experiments or anything crazy like that. I just... have a hunch."

Raavul glances at Fiona, searching for answers in her eyes. Then she looks back at Jason.

[A hunch. What is the meaning of this word? I contemplate, but I do not comprehend.]

"I meant to say I have a theory." Jason says, correcting himself once again. "I believe that I might be able... to unify the power of magic and psionics. It should be possible for humanity and the Volgrim to work together more closely. But frankly, I don't trust the Volgrim Empire as you are now, so I want to run these experiments in complete secrecy."

Raavul frowns. [You wish to enhance the psionics of myself and my students? Why? We are not talented in our Paths. I am only a low-level Aspirator. My students have barely begun their journey.]

"That's the thing." Jason explains. "I could have tried capturing a higher-ranked set of Psions, but that might damage your Empire's war effort. Likewise, maybe I could enhance your learning speed, or find ways to augment your potential so you can become much stronger over time. It would be best to start with Psions who have not yet forged a Path, along with a teacher capable of guiding them."

Raavul swallows heavily. She reaches up to scratch her neck, only for her fingers to poke against the collar suppressing her powers. Until now, she hadn't had the mental energy to even notice it, but upon realizing what it must be, her eyes turn dark.

[Then what is the meaning of this device?!] She asks accusatorily. [It restricts my psionic power! Why have you rendered me helpless?]

"Well, it should be obvious, right?" Jason asks back. "We didn't want you freaking out and attacking us before we could explain the situation."

Raavul doesn't appear convinced. [Then remove it now. I will not attack you.]

"I haven't received your answer yet." Jason retorts. "Are you willing to work with me? To help me merge magic with Psionics?"

Raavul starts to reply, but Fiona butts in. "Please keep in mind the state of your Empire, Miss Raavul. You are losing the war. We don't know how long your people have before everything you hold dear collapses and the Plague falls upon you, wiping out your population. And in the interests of self-preservation, once the Volgrim fall, humanity and the demons will fall too. It's in both our best interests to work together."

The Psion frowns. [How do you know my name? I never told you.]

"We investigated your identity, and that of all your students." Jason answers. "It's not that big a leap of logic."

For several seconds, Raavul doesn't reply. She gazes at both humans with a look of intense distrust, but also a tinge of misgiving. Fiona's words metaphorically burrow into her ears, making her doubt her future actions.

Should she work with these two strangers who have boldly kidnapped her?

Could this secretly be a plot to use her knowledge to destabilize the Volgrim Empire?

Might the Wordsmith have more nefarious intentions he hasn't mentioned?

Raavul shuffles her feet nervously. [What... what if I say I do not want to work with you? What will be my fate?]

Jason shrugs. "Then I'll mind-wipe you and send you back to the Volgrim Empire. You'll never know you were here."

[What? You lie. How could it be that easy after you went to such lengths to capture my Enclave?]

Raavul practically bores holes in Jason's head with her stare, but the Wordsmith doesn't seem bothered.

"Once again, you're laboring under a misconception, Miss Raavul. It wasn't much trouble for me to take your Enclave. I didn't do all that much research when I picked yours out. It was just a random stroke of Fate I chose yours. I could have picked any one of the Enclaves on the other ships. From my point of view, one group of 1st Level Psions is pretty much the same as any other. I'm just hoping to find Psions receptive to my goals. If you're going to fight against me the whole time, I'll send you back and look for an Enclave more receptive to my ambitions. I harbor no ill-will toward your Empire."

This time, Jason's words seem to have an effect. Raavul's glare softens a little. She looks at Fiona for confirmation. The Wordsmith's Wife merely nods along, affirming what Jason said.

[You are not trying to deceive me?] Raavul asks.

"I'm not. Do you have an answer now?" Jason asks.

Raavul's face shifts. She crinkles her nose and looks to the side, falling deep into thought.

[...I must withhold my answer for now. Do you intend to ask each of my students the same question?]

"Y-yeah." Jason answers. "Why?"

[I would like you to ask them first. If you cannot convince them, then I must politely decline. If they choose to stay with you, then so too shall I.]

Jason and Fiona shrug in unison.

"Sure. We can do that."

After making the preparations, Jason and Fiona pause to decide on whether or not they should talk to each student one at a time, or all at once. In the interests of expediency, they decide to speak to them as a collective group.

One by one, each young Psion awakens. They all climb out of their pods, much groggier and more confused than their teacher was; likely a testament to their youth and inexperience. Once they have all spotted their teacher and come to grips with the situation, they fall into a loose line in front of their pods to obediently listen to the Wordsmith's request.

One of the students, however, begins to shake with excitement. Hardly has Jason started telling them about how they can choose to opt-out before that student quickly raises his hand.

[Wordsmith! Wordsmith! I accept! I wish to join your cause!]

Jason coughs, not expecting the sudden and somewhat rude interruption. He turns to look at the red-and-blue Psion, a male whose colors melt together in a camouflage-like pattern, and smiles awkwardly.

"Uh. And you are?"

[Initiator Ferral!] The male shouts with a surprising amount of enthusiasm. [I am the progeny of Proctor Landis, a 5th-Level Psion whose name you no-doubt know!]

"Err, actually, I don't know the guy." Jason says. "But it's good you're interested. I'm a little confused though... what makes you so eager to join my cause?"

Ferral's face, despite lacking a mouth, seems to beam out a huge smile. [I have been so bored for so long, Wordsmith! You cannot fathom what a rotten and hollow mess the Volgrim Empire is! They expected me to train endlessly, without rest, all to achieve greater power! Then I would be sent out to fight in a war I had no part in starting! None of these things interest me. I would much rather go out and see the wonders of the cosmos! Gaze upon the different species in the Milky Way! Feast my psionic senses upon the glittering lights of the quasar cluster-]

[Ferral.] Raavul says grumpily. [Control yourself. You are embarrassing me.]

Ferral halts immediately, feeling chided by his teacher. His smile slips a little, but he maintains his enthusiasm.

[M-my apologies, Aspirator. Wordsmith, I stand by my convictions. I would like to join your cause. Even if everyone else here rejects your offer, I will not. I wish to see a better future for all of Volgrimkind.]

With Ferral's declaration out in the open, the other students start to take the Wordsmith's suggestion more seriously.

[Jason Hiro. My name is Initiator Dunal.] A blue-skinned male Psion says, his tone ponderous and slow. [I also wish to join your cause, but not for the same reasons as my fellow disciple. Rather, I do not believe I will be able to Uplift myself in time to make a difference in the ongoing war. It is likely the Plague will defeat my people before I have any chance of reaching the Third Invocation. For that reason, I desire to subject myself to your experiments, so long as it will give me the strength to fight for my Empire.]

Another Psion, a male with black skin dotted with flecks of white, steps forward. [My name is Initiator Tarim. I am of the same mind, Wordsmith. I wish to see my talents realized. My Path is unorthodox. I do not believe I will achieve much in the time left for my Empire. Allying with you might grant me the capabilities to realize my ambitions.]

Next comes a brown-skinned Psion. [My designation is Initiator Likron. I hope to rise to greater heights by following you, Wordsmith…]

Then comes half a dozen female Psions. Some more males, then females again.

One by one, each student stands up and agrees to go along with the Wordsmith's plans, surprising not only Jason and Fiona, but Aspirator Raavul as well.

Before long, every single disciple has spoken in favor of following Jason's goals. This allows their teacher to metaphorically breathe easier as she turns to face Jason.

[My students have made their choice, and so have I.] Aspirator Raavul states calmly. [I will join you and assist your goals of empowering my sub-species to the apex. Perhaps, through our efforts, we can forge a future wherein Volgrim and Human alike will not act as enemies, but as colleagues, comrades, and even friends. I only pray you will not betray our trust with acts of deception.]

"I will not." Jason vows solemnly. "Release."

With a single Word of Power, Jason deactivates the collars on each of the Psions, allowing all of the 1st-Level disciples and their 3rd-Level teacher to breathe more easily as the suppressive forces holding them back fall to nothingness.

A tense moment follows as Jason waits to see if this was all just a ploy to make him lower his guard.

Luckily, none of the Psions lash out. They simply pull the collars off and rub their necks, relieved to walk freely.

"Well." Jason says. "I guess that's that, then. Who wants to have a look at your new home for the next however-many-years?"

[Me!] Ferral exclaims, always the first to oblige.

Jason chuckles good-naturedly at the young Psion. "How old are you anyway, kid?"

Ferral blushes slightly, causing the blue parts of his skin to redden. [Ah. I acted immaturely again. Forgive me, Wordsmith. I am but a mere two hundred and forty orbital cycles of age. I am truly young and foolish.]

Jason's eyes nearly pop out of his head. "What the f- you're two hundred and forty years old?! What about the rest of you?!"

Initiator Dunal raises his hand. [Three hundred and seven orbital cycles.]

[Three hundred and seventy-four orbital cycles.] Initiator Tarim states.

[Four hundred and nine orbital cycles.] Initiator Likron adds.

One by one, each Psion answers with an age noticeably higher than Ferral, with Aspirator Raavul coming last.

[Twelve thousand, six hundred and forty-six orbital cycles.] Raavul states, looking at the Wordsmith with a knowing gaze. [Let me guess. Your age is... not as advanced as ours.]

Jason's expression darkens. He privately thinks to himself that he only hoped to wheel and deal with some young and inexperienced children, but he somehow forgot about how ridiculously old even a low-level Psion like Raavul should be.

"Uh. Yeah." Jason coughs. "Something like that."

[Do not fret too much. Our species is long-lived, but our perception of time is much faster than that of a mud-dweller.] Raavul says, finally feeling a bit better about her situation. [Your species' concept of 'generations' does not apply to mine, but I suppose you could consider me a 'young adult.' My disciples are still merely children in the eyes of our longer-lived seniors.]

"So what does that make your Founders?" Jason pokes. "Grandparents?"

Raavul blinks twice. [Wise.]

"Oookay, fair enough." Jason concludes. "Why don't you all come with me then, and I'll show you around?"

[I look forward to examining this strange realm.] Raavul says, as she tries to expand her senses beyond the confines of the Psio-Suppression Chamber, yet fails to detect anything beyond its boundaries. [My curiosity is... boundless.]

Part 519: The Artificer

Eight hours after the conclusion of the battle on Tarus II, Archangel Uriel continues to sit atop a building in the center of the primary human city, the Fortress of Retribution. This building happens to be the entrance to the main underground shelter where the civilians were taken during Mephisto's attack, a reinforced bunker intended to safeguard them from anything, even an atomic blast.

Uriel sits atop the giant Wordsmithium dome encasing the bunker with a blank expression, silently watching as the humans far below her slowly swarm like ants, moving undead corpses around, cleaning up the streets, and otherwise rebuilding their city.

To her right, left, and behind, Michael, Raphael, and Gabriel also sit facing four different directions, their bodies of light giving them distinct and unmistakable appearances. She has long grown capable of recreating their original forms with her magic, though their power naturally pales in comparison to when they roamed the cosmos a hundred thousand years before.

As they sit, Raphael meditates, keeping his eyes closed while muttering and grumbling under his breath.

"Hmph. Hmm... hmmmm..."

Ever since Mephisto's attack concluded, Raphael has been making these noises.

Finally, Uriel reaches her breaking point. She slowly turns her head to the side to look at her older brother's back.

"Raphael. Thy... grunts art getting on my nerves."

Raphael doesn't answer for a few moments. He slowly opens his eyes, then clears his throat before craning his head to meet Uriel's gaze.

"Ah. Apologies, sister. Was I speaking out loud?"

"Not speaking." Uriel clarifies. "Speaking would have been more tolerable. Thou were making... grumbling noises... incessantly."

"Oh. I hadn't realized." Raphael says apologetically, returning his gaze to face forward once more. "Tis' just... I have much on my mind."

Michael pipes up, not bothering to turn around and look at his eldest brother. "Regarding?"

"That Dosena..." Raphael murmurs. "Verily, she mayeth be a 'mere' Mid Cosmic, but she possesseth abilities most frightening. When she emerged from the Warpgate, she traversed the distance from ground to void in but a single second, yet in that instant she had already swept the entire planet with her senses multiple times. Her cognitive speed far exceeds my own."

"Thy meaning is, she is highly intelligent?" Michael asks.

"I cannot speak to her intellect." Raphael says slowly. "But the 'speed' with which she perceives reality far eclipses any of ours. Perhaps even thy own mental speed, Michael."

Michael snorts, finding his brother's claim to be a bit far-fetched. "Hah. I doubt that."

Gabriel hums quietly. "Hmm... what did the Psion discover to cause thee such distress, Raphael?"

"I do not know." Raphael says. "But I suspect anything which was once 'hidden' on this world is no longer so. Undoubtedly, Founder Dosena's ability to read the thoughts of lesser beings vastly eclipses that of the lower-ranking Psions. Tis' possible she made gains and uncovered secrets we cannot fathom."

"Then we should warn Neil Adams about this matter." Uriel concludes. "Let the big-brained human leader figure the situation out."

"Aye. We can do that later, after I have thought some more." Raphael murmurs.

He and the other Archangels once again fall silent, continuing to gaze out in the four different directions, each of them having different thoughts on their minds.

"Had Founder Dosena failed to show up, I am not certain how the battle would have ended." Gabriel muses. "The humans lack power. The Wordsmiths have techniques aplenty, but the False Dragon was too durable for them to injure. He may have won had the Volgrim Empire not dispatched their mightiest Psion."

"Hah. Do not jest." Raphael laughs wryly. "That Psion had no interest in protecting humanity. She merely desired the dragon bones comprising Mephisto's body. As well, she may have sought information regarding that mana signature belonging to our sister..."

"Which sister was she?" Michael asks, turning his head slightly, though not quite getting a good enough angle to look behind himself at Raphael. "Not Camael. Someone else."

"I did not recognize her signature." Raphael mutters. "As far as I could tell, she was but an ordinary Seraph from the Primordial Era."

"What? A mere Seraph?" Michael asks, aghast. "And yet she possessed such power?"

"She fell during the ancient times." Raphael explains. "One of a billion-billion others. Too many fell during those old wars. Thus, when she appeared, she must have retained the power she possessed prior to her death."

Uriel shifts on her butt a little, turning her body a smidge to better face Raphael's back. "We are Archangels, yet our power doth not compare to a Seraph from the primordial age. Brother, is there no way I can regain my full strength? Is there not some path I can walk to attain the power I once held, eons ago?"

Raphael shakes his head. "Not while thou continueth to possess that accursed demonic body. But perhaps, shoulds't thou formeth a new vessel, thou mayeth yet restore what thou hath long ago lost."

A faint fire ignites in Uriel's eyes. "So, tis' possible?"

"Again. I am not certain." Raphael says glumly. "We no longer possess the power of creation. That was lost when Uzziel fell. Her remnant soul lacks the powers she once possessed. She cannot help us. Verily, our only prayer of success requireth the Wordsmith's assistance, but they are still dim of mind and unable to offer the specific help we need.

Uriel raises her voice an octave. "But surely-"

However, in the middle of the Archangel's conversation, a movement from below catches their eyes. Uriel stops speaking as she catches a glimpse of someone at the base of the dome. A woman with long white hair, wearing a somewhat skimpy fur-lined leather bra and loincloth ensemble jumps atop the base of the dome and slowly approaches from below.

"Ah! Excuse me! Great Archangels! Am I... interrupting?"

The woman pauses, clearly not wanting to offend the winged creatures perched atop the reinforced dome's center.

Uriel swallows her words, deciding to leave that discussion for later. "Thy name is?"

"It's Sariah, my lady." The woman says, quickly bowing her head. "I'm Brunhilda's confidante. I'm a Felorian."

"A Felorian." Uriel repeats, the name failing to register in her mind. "Dost thou requireth our assistance?"

The woman stands meekly, not wanting to get too close and offend any of the Archangels. "I was wondering if I could speak to the Eldest Archangel, Father Raphael? I have a problem... but if you're busy, I can leave. It's not a big deal."

Raphael sighs. He stands up and pops his back, then turns to face the woman below.

"Not a big problem, thou sayeth, yet thou seeketh out the Archangel of Wisdom. Were this matter as mundane as thou claimeth, thou surely woulds't hath many a friendly ear to pull upon. What matter requires my intervention, little one?"

The woman smiles faintly, then takes a few steps forward. "Great Archangel, I am a craftswoman of the Felorians. I forge our armor and weapons. I imbue them with Qi in order to empower our people beyond the station of what ordinary humans can achieve. But a few months ago, the First Wordsmith granted me a boon..."

Sariah launches into a short but information-dense explanation of the problem she is facing, while Raphael continues to stand atop the dome and look down at her with slowly increasing interest.

"...he empowered all of the Felorians with new abilities." Sariah explains. "In my case, he gave me the ability of 'Perception' which allowed me to see things I had never noticed before. But this has caused me a certain distress I did not expect."

"A distress, thou sayeth?" Raphael asks, lightly flapping his wings to float down to the Felorian woman's level. He stops a few paces away and smiles kindly at her. "Consider my interest piqued, young one. Continue thy tale."

The two of them stand at a slight angle near the bottom of the dome, but neither one pays much mind to the rounded incline of the shelter's roof.

"Your Excellency," Sariah continues, as polite as ever, "I have crafted more than five hundred pieces of equipment in my life. Swords, maces, battlestaffs, helmets, armor... but when I obtained the Wordsmith's gift, it allowed me to perceive thousands of flaws within my work. More flaws than I could fathom! All those incredible items I deemed to be 'artifacts' now feel to me as if they were trash meant to be cast into the ocean! I come to you seeking guidance. From what I've heard, there was once an incredible craftswoman among your people. Does she still draw breath?"

Raphael's smile slips away. He looks at the young woman, noting her earnest eyes. He quietly lets out a breath of defeat.

"Thou speaketh of Sister Camael. Verily, she hath long ago passed away. She is dead."

Sariah's shoulders slump, but not by much. "I see. I assumed that was the case. Do you happen to know anything about artifact-smithing? Maybe you picked up some tricks from her? I need any help I can get! I don't know how to proceed when all of my works are so utterly awful!"

"I take it the First Wordsmith is not able to assist thee?" Raphael asks.

"He doesn't have an eye for craftsmanship." Sariah answers. "Though he has been making artifacts using his magic, it's not the same. His method isn't hands-on like the way I make them."

"Taking shortcuts, as always..." Raphael muses. "Hmm. Well, to answer thy question, Camael may hath departed us, but there art many competent and talented artisans in the galaxy. For example..."

Raphael pauses to gather his thoughts. He glances up at the sky thoughtfully, as if picking out the stars from the waning daylight to try and remember names.

"Ah, the fairies." Raphael says. "They might be able to assist thee. Indeed, the fairies art quite talented in terms of craftsmanship."

"Oh, I hadn't thought of that." Sariah says. "I could ask Miss Blinker."

"And there thou hath it." Raphael says with a smile. "The fairies shalt be able to uplift thy capabilities to the next level."

Just as Raphael thinks he's solved the problem, Uriel speaks up from behind him.

"Brother. I have another suggestion. What of the Heroes who Hope recovered?"

Raphael turns around to look up at his sister. "Hm?"

"Hope Hiro channeled several Heroic Spirits within his body as he fought Mephisto." Uriel explains. "One of them was quite familiar. Hath thou forgotten the visage of Elizabeth Kindelmann? One of the Heroic Artisans?"

"Ah yes, the Flame of Love." Raphael says, blinking his eyes slowly. "She did make an appearance, didn't she? Hmm. Verily, she woulds't make for a fine teacher in the trade of artificing."

"Elizabeth Kindelmann?" Sariah asks, uncomprehending. "Who is she?"

Raphael turns his attention back to the young woman.

"A Hungarian Hero from the 16th Century, in Earth's Calendar." The old man explains. "She was capable and competent in the art of combat, but 'twas her blacksmithing skills that made Camael take note. Indeed, my sister praised her skills, saying if little Elizabeth were immortal, she might reach the same lofty heights as the Archangel of Divination."

"She's that talented?!" Sariah crows. "Then I'd really like to meet her!"

"Aye. I imagine thou woulds't..." Raphael says, while the smile on his face turns gloomy. "Ah. But there is a problem. Hope Hiro possesses Kindelmann's artifact. On thy behalf, I shalt intervene, asking him if he woulds't allow thee to train under the Flame of Love. I believe he shalt agree to my request, but we cannot be too certain. The Second Wordsmith does not necessarily follow the same logic as he did merely a few weeks ago. Tis' hard to say how he might react."

"Oh..." Sariah mumbles, her expression deflating once again. "Well, if you could speak to him, I'd really appreciate it. My skills aren't good now, but maybe I can help you in the future? I can make artifacts for all the Archangels, or something!"

Raphael pats the young woman's shoulder. "Thou art a kind-hearted child, little one. Worry not about my needs. Tend to thine instead. I wisheth to see the uprising of humanity as much as thou surely do, so I shalt seek this favor on thy behalf."

"Thank you very much, Your Excellency." Sariah says, beaming a bright smile at Raphael. "Then... shall I leave and come back later, after you've talked to Mister Hope?"

"That would be for the best." Raphael says. "Continue trying to improve for now. It shan't take me too long to speak to the Wordsmith. But one cannot rush these matters, especially with so many major events occurring at present."

Sariah glances back at all the undead bodies being wheeled around.

"Yeah... everyone is still working on the cleanup. Sometimes I forget how little time passes in realspace. Anyway, many thanks, Archangel Raphael. I'll see you in a day or two."

The Felorian bows her head politely, then jumps off the dome and lands on the ground with ease before trotting off to somewhere unknown.

After she departs, Raphael remains standing in place for a while, thinking about even more new developments.

"So... tis' not only the Second Wordsmith who hath created a domain of time acceleration, eh? And from the sounds of it, the First Wordsmith's domain must be revolving just as fast, if not faster. Hm. Hmm... the young are truly full of energy."

Raphael shakes his head, then he turns around and shambles back up the dome to take his seat once more.

"Ahh, now what were we speaking about before that young lady interrupted us?"

Uriel blinks her eyes. "A method of ascension, brother."

"Ohh, yes. That. Quite..." Raphael murmurs.

The wizened old man turns a sly smile toward his sister. Instead of speaking aloud, he transmits a burst of thoughts to her using their unique connection, a telepathic link so secure that he's quite certain only the Wordsmiths could listen in, but if they did then he would know. Not even the Second Founder would be able to intrude on the soul-anchor linking two Archangel souls...

After Raphael finishes sending his secret communication, Uriel's expression changes drastically. A look of shock, awe, and disbelief washes across her face. Not just hers, but Michael and Gabriel's too. They hear what Raphael has said and both their mouths fall open.

"Brother. Is that truly possible?!" Uriel asks.

"Only in theory." Raphael says, still slyly smirking. "Why do you think I went to all that trouble back in the day? Michael's sacrifice served many purposes. 'Twas a tragedy to lose his body, but it gave us a long-term glimmer of hope. The only problem came in the political games between humans and angelkind. We could not rely on them as they were. The Heroes held too much sway."

"And they don't now?" Michael asks, trying not to look as dumbfounded as he feels.

"The Heroes naturally possess much sway among their people in the current era. But 'tis humanity itself that holds the keys to power." Raphael explains. "We must proceed slowly, brothers. Sister. This plan has been a long time coming. When we passed away, I believed I had failed, but now I see the project may yet bear fruit."

Gabriel looks out into the horizon as Tarus II's sun slowly dips beneath the distant peaks.

"Faith Energy... tis' more incredible than I imagined. One mayeth revive a God."

"The quantity required is, frankly, absurd." Raphael counters. "And the humans do not trust us, not that I blame them. Moreover, Uriel's soul remains attached to that demonic vessel. So long as this remains true, she can never recover her former power."

"And we lack bodies entirely." Michael says, his shock finally fading away. "So, we cannot harness Faith Energy ourselves."

"Where there is a will, there is a way." Raphael concludes. "Now, let us speak of this no longer. We've no idea who might be listening. Keep thy thoughts to thyselves."

"Of course, brother." Uriel says, her admiration for Raphael returning in full force.

She gazes down at the humans below, her thoughts swirling like a vortex, hungry for the Truths her brother has quietly revealed.

There is a method. I mustn't give up hope. Demonkind may yet pay the price for their ancient crimes. I need only wait for Raphael's plan to bear fruit...

Inside the time-accelerated dimension known as Chrona.

Fiona hovers over Blinker as the Monster Queen's tiny body lays on a miniature hospital bed, her expression telling a story of deep fatigue.

"Still." Fiona says quietly, frowning as the word departs her lips. "It's been months. Why haven't you recovered?"

Blinker slowly closes and opens her eyes. "I don't know. I felt fine at first. I left Chrona to help fight Mephisto. I was at the top of my game. But then as the fight dragged on, I started feeling so tired... so fatigued. Once I returned, I fell into this mental slump. I can't seem to wake up. It's like my body just wants to sleep forever and ever..."

Kar stands next to Blinker's bed, his body supported by a mechanical exoskeleton. He still can't walk on his own, but at least he has a little bit of dignity.

"Hurgh. Butterfly. Maybe the fight exhausted your mana more than you thought."

"No, not even..." Blinker retorts. "It's not like when Jason ran himself dry Wordsmithing. This is different. I felt like... like the universe itself wanted me to slow down. I can't put the feeling into words."

Fiona steps to the side. She flips open several records she wrote over the last few months, including biometric tests she performed on Blinker, among other things.

"The data hasn't changed. Your body is in a state of lethargy. It's not so different from a sedentary human abruptly running a hundred kilometers without stopping. The toll on their muscles would be just as immense. But based on the footage we recorded, compared to when you fought Zamiel, you barely exerted yourself against Mephisto. I have no idea why you're still in this condition."

"Even Jason couldn't fix me." Blinker mumbles, visibly disheartened. "Maybe I'm... dying."

"I don't think you are." Fiona says quickly. "The data doesn't pan out in that way. Your body is merely... exhausted. I'm not sure why. Perhaps you simply need to rest a while longer."

"How much longer?" Blinker questions. "I can't even pick up my kids, Fiona. I can't use my magic. I can barely hold a spoon. Even staying awake right now is a struggle."

The Wordsmith's Mind-Wife doesn't have any answers.

She shrugs heavily and releases a sigh, exasperated over her helplessness.

"I can bring Samantha here." Fiona suggests. "Maybe she can heal you."

"Isn't Sam busy healing the people Mephisto injured?" Blinker asks.

"Hurgh. I'm sure Big Boobs will find time to help a good friend." Kar says, reaching down to pat his wife's shoulder with his finger. "We'll get you all fixed up, Butterfly."

"Good. That's good..." Blinker says slowly, as her eyes start to close. "Getting... sleepy again. Sorry, I just... just can't..."

A few moments later, her eyes completely close. She stops speaking, and her breathing becomes more even as she drifts off back to sleep.

Fiona and Kar exchange a glance. The two of them quietly depart the room, though Kar seems hesitant to leave his wife's side.

The crocodile waits until after he and Fiona have stepped out of earshot to air his true feelings.

"Hurgh! That damned Smokey!" Kar snarls under his breath. "This is all his fault! He did something to my Butterfly. How dare he!"

Fiona shakes her head. "I don't know, Kar. I don't know. Mephisto's a Cosmic Entity now. Whatever he did, not even Jason can undo it. I think I'll have to ask the Archangels soon if we can't find a cause for her lethargy. But, it is a little baffling... there's no signs of any magical tomfoolery messing with her body. She's simply extremely tired."

"Smokey definitely did something to my Butterfly. Definitely." Kar continues to growl, repeating his words for emphasis. "If only I was not so weak, I could have killed him when I was still the Monster King. Now I'm useless. This is all my fault."

"It's not..." Fiona says, touching Kar's arm. "Don't talk like that. You have to stay strong and take care of your kids. I'm sure Blinker will get better soon, Kar."

"Hurgh. My body is still too weak to do much." Kar says, his anger turning to sadness. "Even with this metal skeleton, I can barely hold them for a few seconds. Then I get tired and need to sleep. Say, White Ghost, could you do me a favor?"

Fiona blinks. "A favor? If it's within my means, sure."

"Good." Kar nods. "Can you get in contact with the Lizards? Have them send a nanny here. I could really use some help with all my rowdy spawn, and I do not wish to impose on you or Turtle."

"Oh. You want a nanny? I guess that's fine..." Fiona says, uncertain of what to say. "I'll have to ask Jason though. This realm is supposed to be a secret."

"If you can't find me a nanny... I will manage." Kar grumbles. "It's just getting hard. I did not realize how much I relied on Butterfly to take care of the kids. She and I are both so weak now..."

"Don't worry, Kar. I'll talk to Jason." Fiona confirms with a nod of her head. "Why don't you go play with your children for a bit, then let me know when you need to rest? I don't ever need to sleep, so I can keep an eye on them for you until we find a nanny."

"Ohh... that would be such a help. But I know you are a busy woman. Are you sure it will be alright?" Kar asks.

"I'm a big girl. And ever since I started projecting myself in Chrona, my capabilities have become quite impressive." Fiona says with a big smile. "In fact, I've been meaning to talk to Jason about something for a while now... I guess today's as good a time as any."

Fiona and Kar exchange a few more words, then they split up and go their separate ways.

After peeking in and checking on Blinker one last time, Fiona takes a deep breath. She starts to exit the hospital and head toward Jason's current location.

I have to do this. She thinks. It's for both our well-being. Hopefully he'll understand...

Part 520: Diablo's Secret

While a few hours have come and gone in realspace, far more time has passed in the dimension known as Chrona. Jason Hiro only recently captured a school of Psions, but now, he's had the lesser part of one Chrona-day to acclimate them to their new living situation.

Most of the students appear enthused to walk around in a human-created dimension. While the technology in Chrona certainly appears shabby compared to that of the Volgrim Empire, Jason's world makes up for it with lush forests, grass, and flowers spread out in any direction they look.

Never have these humble 'children' of the Psions seen greenery in person, let alone such a substantial amount! Jason even begins to feel dismayed by how sheltered they act, gasping, oohing, and ahhing at every new flower or greenery they pass. Even their revered teacher, a 14,000 year old Psion of some notoriety, can't help but admire her surroundings.

Still, the youngsters mostly keep their commentary tamped down. Only one of them practically blows his stack with excitement every time he finds a new sight to set his eyes on.

[Incredible! Beautiful! How truly gorgeous!] Initiator Ferral crows as he kneels down to look at a white lily floating on a pond just outside Chrona's cityscape. [The white! The green! It blends together so immaculately! What beautiful colors compared to the hideous, grey, drab decor of the Volgrim Empire! I feel as if I have entered paradise!]

[Ahem. Initiator Ferral. Insulting our culture is not an appropriate act of decorum.] Aspirator Raavul says, a hint of annoyance in her voice. [Once more, I must insist you restrain your excitement.]

The other Initiators glance at each other, laughing telepathically in private. But even they have to admit that while the silly Ferral might be outspoken, his words are not entirely baseless. This causes Raavul some consternation, as even she has to acknowledge the ugliness of the Volgrim Empire compared to the beauty of Terrankind's nature.

Still, she refuses to allow her student to blatantly and outright insult the Empire in front of mere mud-dwellers. It's an unacceptable action in her eyes, one that demeans ten million years of her culture's glory and valor.

Ferral doesn't even bother to look back at his teacher. His gaze instead remains fixated on the flower floating in the pond.

[I apologize for nothing, master! This world is what I have yearned for since my body was first formed! I finally feel as if I have found my purpose!]

Jason, standing off to the side of the Enclave, coughs into his fist. "Your teacher is right. There's no need to belittle the Volgrim Empire. While Volgarius itself might be a hellish landscape of concrete and steel with not a tree in sight, your people almost certainly control many paradise-class worlds. You-"

Before Jason can continue, Raavul quickly cuts him off. [Apologies, Wordsmith, but you are wrong. We have lost control of all our paradise-class worlds. Only the ones owned by non-Volgrim subspecies remain within our periphery.]

Jason swallows his words. "Really? But why? How...?"

[I am not a high-enough ranked Psion to join the galactic army. Therefore, I am not privy to any classified details.] Raavul explains. [However, I have long kept an eye on the galactic starmap. I know of the vast majority of worlds inside the Milky Way. I also know which ones are ostensibly controlled by which species, be they Volgrim on non-Volgrim.]

She pauses to heave a mental sigh.

[The War is unending. The Plague prefer to target worlds rich in life. Those worlds typically end up being paradise-class planets. Sharmur was one such world lost recently. Tarus II could be the next. Even worse, the more a planet teems with life, the greater the benefits it provides to the Plague. The Kolvaxians can reproduce faster if they have ample access to a ready food supply.]

"If you're not in the military, then how do you even know any of that?" Jason questions.

[One need not fight for their empire to perform their own investigations.] Raavul retorts. [I and plenty of others in my place have long learned some of the intricacies our forces face in the Void. The universe is a cold and merciless place.]

Jason considers her words carefully. [Yeah. Of that, I have no doubt.]

He cannot fathom the monsters which truly lurk elsewhere in the cosmos, the distant galaxies beyond his conceptualization of the universe...

Jason continues to talk to the Psions, leading them around. At some point, a female voice softly calls out to him from behind.

"Jason. Do you have some free time?"

The Wordsmith turns around and smiles as he spots his Mind-Wife, Fiona. "Hey, honey. Something happen?"

He doesn't mention the Spynet, though his Volgrim guests will learn of its existence sooner rather than later. For now, he intends to show them the brighter side of Chrona before exposing any dangerous secrets he'd rather the Founders not learn.

"No. Nothing like what you're thinking." Fiona says, as she walks up to him, a weak smile on her face.

Invisible question marks bubble up over Jason's head. He notices Fiona seems to be acting different from usual. She seems… hesitant. Not confident, like she usually is.

The Wordsmith clears his throat and turns back to the Psions. "Pardon me. I'm going to go chat with my wife for a bit. I'll be back soon."

Raavul glances at the two of them, but her ability to read the emotions of Terrans is fairly limited. She isn't certain why the Wordsmith's wife would pull him away, but she still judges it not to be her business.

[Of course. We will remain in this garden until you return.]

With one last nod, Jason departs with Fiona, heading back into the city center.

"Are you sure it's alright to leave those Psions alone?" Fiona asks.

Jason starts to answer, but he can't help noticing Fiona is winding her hair around her finger in a strangely nervous manner.

"They'll be fine. More importantly, what's all this about, honey? You seem… on edge."

"Let's wait until we're more private." Fiona says, making Jason even more worried and curious.

It doesn't take long until they arrive back at their home and head inside. Once there, Jason turns on the light in his room and sits at a table in his kitchen, while Fiona uneasily sits across from him. Unlike Jason, she requires no sleep, and thus she doesn't have a bed of her own or other ordinary human amenities.

The two remain silent for a moment, until Jason's curiosity gets the better of him.

"Well...?" He asks gently. "Why do I have the feeling I fucked something up again? You're acting like a nervous schoolgirl right now."

"I don't want to offend you." Fiona says slowly. "I... I didn't get a say in my creation. You never asked Phoebe if you could 'make me,' and I never resented you for doing so. You had enemies. You needed a mental shield. I was the logical choice. But today, I want to ask you for a favor that I feel has been a long time coming."

Jason's face smooths out, and his expression becomes more solemn as he starts guessing what she's about to ask.

"And that would be?"

"I want to separate from your Mind Realm." Fiona says, deciding to blurt it out and rip the band-aid off. "I'm still a lot like Phoebe, Jason. I love you to death. But being trapped in your Mind Realm has felt so... suffocating. When you're in Chrona, I can walk and talk with a body that is practically fully-human. But whenever you leave, I get pulled back into your Mind Realm, and..."

She trails off, leaving the implication hanging.

A quiet moment follows, as Jason digests her request.

"I've been wondering if you'd ask me to do this." Jason says. "It's a good idea. And our circumstances have changed. I don't need you in my head to protect my thoughts from Psions. I do enjoy having you in there, though. It's... nice... being able to share such an intimate link with someone. I often feel closer to you than I do Phoebe."

"And I feel the same!" Fiona exclaims. "It's just... I'm a social butterfly, Jason. You know me. I love talking to people. I don't like sitting in silence for long periods of time. I enjoy a good book like any other person, but those moments of quiet can become oppressive when they go on for too long."

"You're an extrovert." Jason says. "And I'm a bit of an introvert. It's fine. I think if our roles were reversed, and I had to stay in your head, I'd probably be okay with it. But that's simply a difference in personality. It's no issue at all, Fiona. I'd be happy to split you off. It's just..."

Jason winces.

"...how? How can you split off? Raphael warned me that if I recklessly pulled you out of my head, both of us could suffer permanent damage. I don't know if I can just plunk you in a new body, either."

"I don't think that would work, no." Fiona says. "Based on the few experiments I've done, as well as some educated guessing and pure conjecture, one cannot simply attach souls to new bodies willy nilly. That's what necromancers do, and it often leaves the body a half-rotted husk."

She pauses for half a beat.

"There is another option though. You can bind my existence to Chrona."

Jason blinks. "What? How would that work?"

"You understand how Heroic Artifacts function, right?" Fiona asks. "Chrona is important to me. It might be a giant dimension, but you crafted it with your magic. It's an artificial construct. A living nexus of sorts... an artifact. I believe you could bind my soul to it, and I could live within it in the same way Arthur lives within Excalibur, or Lorent within his executioner's axe."

Jason sags into his chair. He looks at his mind-wife with a bit of surprise, and a dash of fear.

"You've thought this through. But... Raphael said transplanting you from my mind back into the real world could cause both of us serious issues."

"Raphael could be wrong." Fiona says lamely, though it's clear even she doesn't buy that argument. "Even if he's right, you're a Wordsmith. Surely you can patch up whatever flaws happen, right?"

"You're asking me?" Jason questions. "I don't know! I've never tried pulling a soul out of someone, let alone the soul of my wife which has partially fused with mine. What if I totally screw up and destroy my Wordsmithing? Magic comes from the soul, you know. I won't be able to fix anything if this transfer goes awry."

Fiona bobs her head from side to side thoughtfully.

"Then you should talk to Raphael and see if you can find a compromise, Jason. Now that I've tasted freedom and the ability to walk around again, I don't want to lose it. Maybe Sam can direct you to a demon who would be able to help?"

"No way. Fuck that." Jason says, immediately rejecting the idea. "Asking Raphael for help is fine. But I'm not putting our lives in the hand of any demon. Samantha, sure, but not any others. I'd rather come up with a solution myself."

He rubs his chin.

"Tell you what. Why don't I bring Phoebe to Chrona? It would be good to have her here anyway. She can have the baby here and you and her can work together to find a solution for this soul-fusion problem."

"There is another option." Fiona points out. "Wasn't Rebecca going to arrive soon with Marie's Cybernites? They might be able to offer us some assistance."

"With soulcrafting?" Jason asks skeptically.

"Possibly. Or something else. We might as well put them to work immediately. That's the whole point of bringing highly advanced cyborgs into our collective. They must have picked up SOME useful knowledge over the years."

The two continue going back and forth, but don't ultimately decide on a solid plan.

"You've given me a lot to think about, honey." Jason says as the talk winds down. "I'm not mad you want to split off. I was even expecting this at some point. I just think we need to be extremely careful in how we proceed. We need a backup plan or a failsafe of some sort."

"Yeah... sorry." Fiona apologizes. "I got a little too excited. You're right. We have plenty of time to find an optimal solution. I should spend more time trying to solve Blinker's condition for now."

"She still hasn't recovered?" Jason asks. "It all happened so suddenly. What did Mephisto hit her with to weaken her so severely?"

"You heard Unarin." Fiona replies. "Cosmics possess incredible power. Hope might be hurting too, for all we know. We should check on him."

"I'll look him up on the Spynet, see what he looked like after the battle." Jason says. "But... he seemed really pissed at me. I thought after all these years he'd be over our old issues, but-"

"It hasn't been years for him." Fiona quickly points out. "We're in a time-accelerated space. Hope isn't."

"...are you sure about that?" Jason asks. "Hope, uh... he seemed oddly proficient with those artifacts. If I had the idea to make a time-accelerated domain, then Hope certainly might have too, especially since he has Solomon helping him."

"I'll check the Spynet's records." Fiona promises. "If he did make a domain of his own, there should be signs."

Jason nods. "That would be for the best."

Emperor Yardrat levitates in the air, keeping close to the Archdemon in the same way as all the other Emperors. A few hours have passed since he received word that Mephisto was snapped up by Founder Dosena, but he doesn't dare relax his guard. If Mephisto were to break free of the Psion's clutches, he could warp to Numaria in seconds and nab himself an Emperor. Yardrat has no intention of being the first idiot to fall.

In the meantime, the demons gaze up at the Archdemon in awe as Diablo holds all four of his arms overhead, aiming them up at the sky.

Diablo manipulates his cosmic energy to travel a great distance into the void. He 'reaches' up toward the moon Crow destroyed when she slammed Mephisto into it, and Diablo begins pulling the five supermassive shards together, combining the moon back into one piece.

It takes a great deal of effort, but Diablo makes the process seem effortless. He finishes up his work and mostly compresses the moon back together, though gravity will have to do the rest of the work over the next few thousand years. At least now, giant chunks of the moon will not rain down upon Numaria and render all its remaining life extinct.

After finishing, Diablo remains immobile for a time. He stares straight forward, his giant body becoming like a statue for reasons unknown. Yardrat raises an eyebrow as he feels the Archdemon's energy become minutely less impressive, though he isn't certain why.

Suddenly, a voice speaks up from behind him.

"Yardrat."

The Emperor of the Void nearly jumps out of his skin. He whirls around, his eyes widening as he sees none other than Diablo himself levitating in the air. Not in his flesh-body, but an astral projection of Cosmic Energy that also completely masks his demonic presence. No matter how Yardrat tries to focus, he can't get a read on Diablo's soul signature.

"You... what sorcery is this?" Yardrat asks.

"I cannot exit the Archdemon's body." Diablo explains. "I am not a true Cosmic Entity. I merely possess the uncanny ability to conjure the form of an ancient monster from the Primordial Era. I control it like a puppet. But so long as I do, demonkind will not be easily bullied by the humans, the Volgrim, or even... the Plague. For now, I must rely on this little trick to travel around in my normal form."

Yardrat turns his head to look at the Archdemon for a moment, then he returns his attention to Diablo's astral form. The Second Emperor appears as impressive as ever, suited out in his black cloak with gold trim. His bushy beard and sideburns make him appear sufficiently authoritative to regain control of demonkind.

"What are we going to do now?" Yardrat asks. "The Emperors will naturally defer to your commands, but we face many threats. The Second Founder didn't appear ready to take you on, and the Wordsmiths probably aren't a major threat anymore... but the Plague..."

Yardrat's expression becomes glum.

"...we have no defense against the Plague. We even lost Sharmur."

"I am aware of Sharmur's fate." Diablo says calmly, crossing his arms. "I wanted to intervene, but the First Emperor told me the time was not yet right. He told me we must not act until the players of the Game had begun to move their pieces around the board. And he was right."

Yardrat gives Diablo a quizzical look. "So you sacrificed Sharmur? You threw away Shax's Hell? I never took you for the sentimental type, but even for you, that's cold."

"Sharmur was lost." Diablo says slowly. "But... who is to say it must remain lost forever? Who is to say we cannot take it back?"

"Pah. You're screwing with me." Yardrat says with a scoff. "You think it's that easy? The Volgrim have been trying for millennia. Every world that fell remained lost to them forever. We demons are much weaker than them. We have no chance."

"That is why you fail." Diablo retorts. "You've already given up in your heart. With such a mindset, you'll never be capable of achieving greatness, let alone walking the path of a Cosmic. Let me tell you, Yardrat... the demons are not the Volgrim. We can be better than them. Superior."

Diablo lifts his chin. A look of haughtiness and pride enters his eyes.

"I am the Archdemon. My powers are greater than you imagine. Two years ago, in secret, I stole away to a world overrun by the Plague on the First Emperor's orders. I morphed into the Archdemon and fought a hellish battle there."

He pauses.

"I eradicated the Plague across every corner of the world. In the end, even when the High Psion Plagueborn came, I repelled them as well. I have the power to change the fate of the galaxy."

It takes a few seconds for Yardrat to realize Diablo isn't joking.

"You're telling the truth?" Yardrat asks, his mouth slackening in disbelief. "How is that even possible?"

"The Plague has a weakness, and the First Emperor discovered it." Diablo explains. "But exploiting that weakness is... not so easy. I might be the only entity currently capable of doing so. However, there is another individual who can assist our efforts."

Yardrat's face scrunches up as he realizes the answer.

"Don't tell me. The Wordsmith."

"Possibly." Diablo says. "But no. Not Jason, nor Hope. They are not the ones of whom I speak. The individual who can help demonkind ascend is none other than..."

When Diablo speaks the name, Yardrat's expression turns ugly.

"You're kidding. You HAVE to be joking with me. GLINCH? He nearly killed us all! He's just going to hang us out to dry and save his own skin if we let him go!"

"You do not know the Stitched Emperor well if you think that is how he operates." Diablo says solemnly. "His talents are unparalleled. He does not fear anything. Death is no obstacle to him. Love has no meaning. Envy, greed, none of these traits describe him well. He only cares about one thing: Obsessing over his experiments. All other matters come second."

"We can't trust him." Yardrat hisses through his teeth.

"We don't need to trust him at all." Diablo counters. "We only need to use his expertise well. That's why I made sure you did not kill him. He alone can ensure my efforts keep the Plague at bay... permanently. And once we begin making waves, pushing the Plague back, the other species will not be able to ignore us any longer."

Diablo's spiritual avatar levitates proudly, his inspiring aura causing Yardrat to momentarily feel ashamed at his own fearfulness. Compared to Diablo, he simply doesn't match up, and that brings his Emperor ego down to a more manageable level.

He bows his head and nods.

"Of course, Emperor Diablo. It seems you've planned this all out. Give me the orders then, and I shall fulfill them."

"Gather the others." Diablo commands. "Bring our strongest, smartest, and most influential Emperors along, as well as Bael. After I exchange some words with Glinch, the Stitched Emperor will surely join our effort. I intend to start upending demon society within the next twenty-four hours. Everything must change quickly, before the other species can react."

Yardrat looks at Diablo, his eyes filled with respect. Diablo always seemed a lazy but reliable old fool, yet now, he has assumed the form of an undefeatable bastion of sovereignty, a fortress incapable of being overrun. His power will surely form the bedrock of demon society moving forward.

"As you command, Archdemon." Yardrat says, before levitating backward, turning around, and flying back to the ground.

Diablo remains in place, unmoving, while Yardrat does his bidding.

The Archdemon blinks. He looks out at the horizon and frowns.

"Enjoying the show... Wordsmith? Did you think you evaded my senses? You're not as sneaky as you believe. Enjoy the status quo for now. It will not last."

He smirks evilly.

"Heh, heh, heh. Demonkind will soon dominate the Milky Way."

Part 521: Reconstruction

It doesn't take much time for Diablo and the other demons to reach a consensus. A handful of Emperors, consisting of Bael, Fae, Melody, Serena, Yardrat, Kristoff, and Yumagi, all decide to go along with Diablo's command. Naturally, as a pseudo-Demon Deity, he possesses a power none of them dare defy, but at the same time, he has always commanded a high level of respect among his fellow Emperors.

Even without the Archdemon's power, Diablo is still one of the mightiest Emperors in all the Seven Hells.

The seven Emperors, as well as Diablo in his astral form, all wait for Yardrat to complete a complicated series of hand gestures as he conjures a portal to a secret domain; a dimension created by the First Emperor to contain high-value prisoners.

The portal finally opens, revealing a grey-bricked prison with only ten cells, all of them forged out of demonstone and reinforced by the Archdemon's power. No Emperor could break out, barring an powerhouse like Crow unleashing her full strength. Even then, such a gambit likely wouldn't work. Blue energy crystals embedded in the ceiling radiate cosmic energy, suppressing the powers of mere mortal Emperors to make them feel even more small and insignificant. A statue crafted in Satan's image stands at the end of the cell block, its glowing red eyes seemingly keeping watch over the prisoners to ensure none can escape.

As the Emperors walk toward a cell in the middle, their ears begin to tingle from the sensation of the mana suppression field buzzing inside. They find Emperor Glinch sitting on a stool in the center of the otherwise totally-bare cell, his expression as bored as ever.

The multi-armed, multi-legged monstrosity of a demon turns his myriad of misshapen eyes toward the newcomers.

"Took you long enough."

Diablo doesn't acknowledge the statement. He merely stands with his hands folded behind his back, gazing warily at the Stitched Emperor.

"Let's cut to the chase, Glinch. You know why I'm here."

Glinch doesn't answer. He merely directs a bored gaze toward the other Emperors, smirks contemptuously, and turns his eyes away.

"You seek to perfect your craft." Diablo continues. "This is an endeavor I agree with. Your research has already bolstered demonkind's power tremendously. Thanks to your Exobeast Pills, we now have more than sixty powerhouses."

"Pah. Powerhouses." Glinch sneers contemptuously. "Emperors empowered through exobeast slop. They will never proceed further. They will never become Deities. They are useless."

"Every empire needs leaders." Diablo says evenly. "But it also needs commanders. Generals. Subordinates. The demons you've empowered will serve my purposes well."

"You want to take over the galaxy." Glinch says dryly. "How original. Let me guess. You want me to help you empower even more demons. You're going to dangle a juicy offer in front of me to make me work for you."

"Yes, and yes." Diablo says. "I'm not going to threaten or cajole you, Glinch. I understand why you did what you did. You didn't create Mephisto to try and take over demonkind. You couldn't care less about your species' ultimate fate. You just want... research material."

Diablo leans forward. He smiles, ever so slightly.

"I can provide you the material you require."

The other Emperors listen silently. Bael appears bored. Fae seems amused. The others don't show any signs of the conversation going in a direction they didn't anticipate.

"And there it is." Glinch grumbles. "I only have one weakness. I hate BOREDOM. And this cell is so devil-damned boring I'm thinking of ending my existence already!"

"You're a genius among devils." Diablo praises. "You and Ose both advanced our conceptualization of demonkind's capabilities by multiple epochs. It would be a shame to leave you rotting in a cell..."

He pauses.

"I want something from you, something more important than the mere empowerment of Emperors."

Diablo's smile disappears.

"I want your help in repelling the Plague. I want the power of your Blighted Lands."

The other Emperors frown. Yardrat scrunches up his face as he tries to think of what Diablo means.

"You know about that too, huh?" Glinch asks blandly. He chuckles at the uncertainty on the other Emperor's faces. "You dimwits are such useless, sad sacks of vomit. You haven't noticed, have you? You haven't realized why the Plague never attacked the lush world of Numaria..."

"What do you mean?" Yardrat asks, his tone incredulous. "You're saying you protected Numaria?"

"Of course not. I couldn't give a damn about the planet." Glinch chuckles. "But I protected myself. It had a spillover effect on the rest of Numaria. Lucky for you lot, I suppose."

"The Stitched Wasteland." Diablo says, turning his attention to the other Emperors. "It's not merely a land devoid of life because of some omnipresent 'aura of death'. It was ruined deliberately by Glinch to keep the Plague away."

"Wut?" Bael asks dumbly. "Spell it out for me, big boss."

"The Plague thrives on worlds rich in life." Diablo explains. "It can survive on hostile worlds, or worlds flowing with molten rivers of lava, corrosive miasma, and so on. But those worlds provide the Plague no strategic benefits. Paradise-class planets like Numaria, however, do."

"So," Diablo continues, "Glinch deliberately sapped every iota of life out of a small part of Numaria's surface. He created the Stitched Wasteland. The Plague now avoids our world as a result. At least for now."

"It would have come eventually." Glinch acknowledges. "But only for you fools! Not for me! Hahahaha! The Kolvaxians would avoid my deadlands while running roughshod over all your pretty forests."

Yardrat strokes his chin thoughtfully. "That means... we could halt the Plague's advance on other worlds if we made deadlands on each one. Why haven't the Volgrim figured this out?"

"It's not easy to suck the life out of one part of the planet without causing damage to the rest." Diablo says. "Perhaps the Volgrim know this is possible, or perhaps they don't.

But the problem remains that even if they can slow the Plague for a while, they can't stop it, and they certainly don't possess the means to reverse its momentum."

The Archdemon thumbs his chest proudly. "They don't, but I do. That is what will make my plan succeed."

He turns his body to face Glinch once again. "With your ability to create Blighted Lands, and my power to uproot the Plague on worlds they've previously taken, we can begin pushing back against our enemies."

"I didn't say I'd work with you." Glinch grumbles.

"You'd prefer living in a cell until you kill yourself?" Diablo asks.

That shuts Glinch up.

The hideous madman freak glowers for several silent seconds, until he throws five of his hands in the air.

"Fine! I'll do it! But I expect the best laboratory of all time! Don't you try to screw me over, Diablo, or you won't get anything from me!"

The Archdemon grins. "I wouldn't dream of it. You want test subjects? You shall have them. You want a laboratory that puts Marie Becker's to shame? It's yours. As long as demonkind thrives, you can have whatever you want."

Serena frowns. She doesn't like the idea of working with a freak like Glinch, a torturer and tormentor not far removed from the likes of Gressil. Perhaps worse, as he isn't stimulated by the enjoyment of other's suffering, nor does he become bored if they stop resisting.

No, Glinch can be far, far worse than Gressil. He will pursue any development, no matter the collateral cost, so long as it has a hint of bearing fruit...

Diablo opens the cell and steps aside, allowing Glinch to stand up and waddle his multi-legged form out the door. The hideous creature bares a toothy grin at the other Emperors, chuckling as if he always foresaw his quick release.

"Hehehe. No hard feelings, eh?"

Fae snarls at him. "You almost killed us."

"Everyone has an oopsie-day." Glinch counters, his grin turning even more feral. "Next time I'll go a little easier on you."

"There won't be a next time." Kristoff warns.

"Everyone, pipe down." Diablo says, intervening before the fight can escalate. "We're demons. Historically, a little genocide here and there has been par for the course. From now on, we'll brush the 'incident' under the rug. Let's get along and work together for the good of demonkind."

"Right. For the good of demonkind, hehehe..." Glinch chuckles sinisterly.

The other Emperors share looks of disgust between each other, but ultimately, they relent.

Diablo calls the shots now.

They have no choice but to follow his will...

Tarus II, on the western side of the Fortress of Retribution.

Soldiers continue to cart away bodies of Mephisto's undead. They toss them into great heaps far outside the city and light the bodies on fire, causing a putrid stench to waft around the valley, sickening countless humans, demons, and monsters, and making them want to puke.

Fairy Princess Melia and her remaining retainer, Ruto, help the humans in their own way. Melia conjures a formation of Earth Energy to suppress the smells. Ruto washes away the blood in the streets with her water magic, emotionlessly doing her duty while thinking of her friend who fell not long ago, Saria.

As they work, in the distance, the warpgate to the Labyrinth flickers. A group of demons steps out, followed by some human soldiers, some monsters, and a group of men and women wearing white and silver robes.

This group doesn't draw much attention. They walk right through the full-body scanners that bombard their bodies with scanning beams, but those beams only turn up that they are clearly ordinary humans, and nothing more.

One of the soldiers at the gate waves these robed figures through. "You're clear to continue."

"Thank you." The lead figure, a green-haired woman, says.

She leads the others past the scanner, and as they depart the Warpgate platform, she directs a look of disapproval toward it.

"This technology is too shoddy."

"The people here don't have the knowledge of what to look for." A black-haired man beside her says. "We'll have to talk to Phoebe about updating the schematics."

The green-haired woman turns out to be Rebecca, put in charge of all 300 of her fellow Cybernites by Marie Becker herself.

She stands for a moment to evaluate the situation on Tarus II.

"Mephisto's attack didn't cause much damage. There's a lot of bodies being moved around, but they're all Mephisto's thralls. Based on my preliminary assessments, the humans have become quite decent at defending themselves."

The man beside her, a Cybernite by the name of Zed, snorts through his nose. "I wouldn't be surprised if a thousand Changelings have already slipped past the Wordsmith's defenses. If the Warpgate Scanners can't detect our true forms, there's no chance they can sniff out a Changeling."

"We have a lot of work to do..." Rebecca says, though her tone betrays a hint of excitement. "But it beats sitting around on our hands in the Remnant Oasis."

The throng of 300 Cybernites slowly makes their way down the path as they head east toward the main city. Along the way, they pass dozens of large apartment buildings and other living blocks, as well as markets for selling food, and a few restaurants here and there. Many of the buildings have been ruined by Mephisto's forces, but a few remain relatively intact and in good condition. The wholly undamaged ones, however, are few and far between.

Rebecca's eyes scan the vicinity. She easily peers through solid walls, her acute sensors able to pierce anything that attempts to impede her scouting sensors. Her ears, a thousand times more perceptive than those of ordinary humans, allow her to make out every minute noise in a large vicinity around herself. Even if her ocular modules shorted out, her auditory receptors would provide a full 360-degree sonar coverage of a five-mile vicinity.

"Over there." Zed says, pointing toward a pair of women standing together.

Rebecca follows the nod of his head. She leads the Cybernites over to none other than Fairy Princess Melia, and her retainer, Ruto.

"Melia." Rebecca says, her large group easily drawing the princess's attention before they draw within earshot. "My name is Rebecca. I'm here on orders from Marie Becker."

Melia nods. She maintains an aloof air as she observes the distinctive silvery robes of Rebecca's group.

"Cybernites. I don't recognize any of you, but I've seen your kind before." Melia says. "Why did Marie send you?"

Rebecca explains the situation to Melia, telling her about Jason's request, as well as her full purpose in coming here.

Melia faintly smiles, though the expression lacks warmth. "I see. I can lead you to Miss Hiro. Sorry, but as you can see, we've... been through a lot today."

"I'm fully aware of the battle which occurred earlier." Rebecca says. "And also, Miss Becker wishes to express her condolences regarding the tragedy on Pixiv."

"Thank you." Melia says, her expression darkening. "That's kind of her to say. But what happened on Pixiv was unforgivable. We lost five million fairies in a single instant. The city of Spackle wasn't any ordinary land. We expressly built it to suppress the living energy of our world. With it reduced to rubble, the Plague can now sense Pixiv's location. We fear the worst is yet to come."

Rebecca maintains a solemn expression. "How unfortunate that Mephisto destroyed the Shielding Crystal. We always assumed Pixiv would be one of the last worlds to fall. But now..."

"Will your people be able to construct another one?" Zed asks, while stroking his short-trimmed black beard. "If not, then perhaps one of the Wordsmiths might be able to assist you?"

"I'm not privy to the discussions the Fairy Queens have been holding." Melia says grumpily, crossing her arms. "It's not as easy as simply creating a new Shielding Crystal. It took them five thousand years to construct the last one. It was an artifact on par with Archangel Camael's best works."

"Mmm. Then that is truly unfortunate." Rebecca says slowly.

"To say the least." Melia concludes.

The two of them talk a bit longer. Eventually, Melia leads them toward the city, and the topic changes as they begin observing new things.

"I've heard the two Wordsmiths might be thinking of splitting humanity between two core worlds." Rebecca says. "This is a good development. Should Tarus II fall to the Plague, it would be best if humanity had a backup."

"Everything seems to be going well." Melia says. "But under the surface, tensions are brewing. Neil and Hope aren't acting as harmoniously as they were just a few weeks ago. Neither of them gets along well with Jason and Phoebe either. I'm worried about the direction humanity is taking."

Rebecca glances at Zed. The two of them communicate through a neural burst, then nod in unison.

"It would probably be best if the Cybernites did not directly pick a side." Rebecca says. "We're not here to help Jason specifically. We're here to empower humanity. The Milky Way needs an Apex Species right now, one with a different outlook from the Volgrim. It wouldn't do for us to focus our efforts on only one branch of humanity."

"I can see about assisting the Second Wordsmith and Neil Adams." Zed says. "You should take half of our group and work for the First Wordsmith and his wife."

"An acceptable compromise." Rebecca intones. "We'll do that, then."

Zed nods at her. He and 149 other Cybernites peel off and head north toward the military base outside the city's limits, while Rebecca continues following Melia deeper into the Fortress of Retribution's core.

Thirty minutes of slow walking pass by. Rebecca takes her time examining the city's structures, noting how quickly humanity has rebuilt after Beelzebub's detonation, as well as the damage caused by Mephisto's attack.

While Mephisto did not manage to kill even a single human, monster, or demon on Tarus II, his thralls certainly tore apart the buildings inside the city center. Dozens lay in piles of rubble, while others are missing walls, corners, roofs, and so on. The luxurious city center now looks only marginally better than it did after Beelzebub's detonation, and that certainly isn't saying much.

"Why do you suppose Mephisto wanted to attack Tarus II?" Rebecca asks Melia. "Merely to exact revenge?"

"From what we've uncovered, he wanted to devour Demon Emperors to empower his body and abilities." Melia explains. "But yes, killing humans and monsters would have probably made for a juicy side objective in his eyes."

"Mephisto is pure evil." Ruto murmurs. "He killed my best friend."

"I'm sorry to hear that." Rebecca says.

The Cybernites arrive at a recently constructed workshop on the eastern side of the city, where hundreds of drones buzz in the air, carrying materials and other goods to and from the giant building. They buzz about like angry hornets, flying through the sky in synchronized lines while fulfilling the orders encoded inside their mainframes.

Melia gestures to the large open entrance, then pauses outside.

"I don't feel like going in. Phoebe will meet you in there. If you'll excuse us, Ruto and I have duties to attend."

"Of course. Thank you for showing us around." Rebecca says.

The two fairies flap their wings and shoot off into the sky, vanishing and leaving the Cybernites behind.

After they depart, Rebecca heads inside. She finds many tables with computer monitors resting atop them, along with researchers working hurriedly to construct new building plans for the reconstruction of the Fortress of Retribution's cityscape.

One man hovers over another's shoulder, pointing to a mockup on the screen.

"...to reinforce the structural foundation. Look at this footage. You can see the Undead Emperor destroyed it with a single slap. We didn't anticipate such a powerful blunt strike at the base of the building, which is why the whole structure collapsed."

"What material should we use to reinforce it?" The man seated at the desk asks.

"We'll have to check the reserves. Might need to materialize some prototypes. Miss Hiro wants to ensure we don't have a repeat of today's events."

"We should construct the corners at more of an angle." The seated man suggests. "This will help reinforce the structure in the event of a direct collision..."

Rebecca walks over to the two men and introduces herself. "Excuse me. Can you take me to Miss Hiro? I'm Rebecca."

The seated man continues his work, but the other one stands up to appraise the beautiful newcomer.

"Rebecca, you say? Oh! Aren't you a Cybernite? Miss Hiro told the supervisors to keep an eye out for you. She said you were bringing three hundred robots to help us out!"

He pauses.

"Though, when she said 'robots,' I was sort of expecting... metal machines."

"I am a cyborg." Rebecca explains. "All of us are. Human flesh, digitized organs, mechanical internals. We've come to assist your people in the rebuilding of your world."

"Excellent timing." The man says, extending his hand. "I'm Edwin, a supervisor for The Factory. I'm not important or anything, but I can take you to Miss Hiro."

Rebecca daintily shakes the man's hand. "I see. Thank you for your assistance, mister Edwin."

"Just Edwin is fine! Hahaha!" He laughs, suddenly feeling a little embarrassed. No matter how he examines the pretty woman before him, he simply cannot believe she is a machine made almost entirely out of mechanical parts. In his eyes, Rebecca is a nerdy but beautiful woman with ravishingly good looks. She appears more hauntingly gorgeous than even the fairies themselves...

Edwin quickly leads the Cybernites into the complex, and as they walk and talk, Rebecca receives a better inside understanding of humanity's current situation.

"We really have our work cut out for us." Rebecca says, her words aimed not only at herself, but the Cybernites behind her as well.

"So much work..." Another Cybernite adds.

Part 522: The Camael Conspiracy

Somewhere within the Deep Void...

Founder Dosena screams through space at a speed far faster than light. She flickers in and out of P-space, avoiding dangerous spatial anomalies such as black holes, giant stars, and the occasional Great Void Beast, all while ferrying her prey from Tarus II back to her homeworld, Volgarius.

Mephisto's formerly giant body has already shrunken back down to its compressed form. Not because of any desire on his part, but because he was forced to shrink himself when Dosena deliberately began compressing him with her psionic field, causing him terrible agony until he conceded to her superior might.

Unfortunately, as Dosena learned, her power as a Mid Cosmic simply isn't enough to actually kill Mephisto. Unlike the ancient angels, or even the demons and humans, the vast majority of Psions aren't adept at soul manipulation. Young upstarts like Creator Demila have made big advancements in the past 100,000 years, but ancient monsters like Dosena have long lost the ability to alter their Psionic Seeds to introduce powerful new elements, and as such, she simply lacks the striking power necessary to eradicate Mephisto's unified souls.

Furthermore, his supernova-forged dragon-bones have become too durable for even her planet-busting attacks to break. Indeed, she spend a full hour attempting to break Mephisto after flying him a few hundred lightyears from Tarus II, but the effort proved moot. Dosena failed to create more than a tiny hairline crack on one of his ribs, a far cry from the sizable spiderweb-fracture left by Anaelle.

As Dosena flies in and out of P-space, rapidly traveling back to Volgarius, her thoughts churn swiftly, hundreds of times faster than any mere mud-dweller could fathom. In the time a fly's wing might beat for a single instance, she contemplates more than three thousand concepts, her brain working like a series of supercomputers all working in parallel to compare and contrast the observations she's made.

While Founder Unarin might indeed be the supreme leader of Volgrimkind, it is in fact Dosena who is not only the mightiest Volgrim, but also the smartest in terms of raw cerebral computational ability.

If Dosena has any weakness compared to the First Founder, it is a certain lack of artistic creativity. She is a brute; a bludgeon taken flesh-form who contemplates things in the simplest and most direct manner.

Naturally, as an ancient monster aged millions of years, she possesses a level of intellectual cunning far beyond that of the Wordsmiths, but even if she were to surpass Unarin in every regard, she still would hold no thoughts toward ruling the Volgrim Empire. Dealing with such mortal mundanities has long ago ceased to hold her interest.

Archangel Camael has somehow obtained the power of an Apex Cosmic. Dosena thinks, as she pieces together the clues she has gathered over the past 24 hours. How did she revive? Did the demons revive her deliberately? Did they empower her? If so, why? What purpose would empowering one of their greatest enemies serve them? Or was this part of a deeper scheme? Did Archangel Raphael plan for his sister's revival? Could he be planning a revival of his own? Are the Wordsmiths involved? Did the Wordsmiths revive Camael on Raphael's orders? Is that why the First Wordsmith is so eager to work alongside the demons in spite of their crimes against his family? Could this be a conspiracy to unite and destroy the Volgrim?

Question after question. Contemplation after contemplation.

Dosena's mind rapidly twists and untwists the potential conspiracy, but she lacks crucial clues. She doesn't know about Anaelle's true identity. If she did, she would certainly jump to other conclusions.

After leaping in and out of P-space for the 100th time, Dosena comes to a stop amidst the distant reaches of some random uninhabited star system somewhere in the Southern Milky Way. She levitates Mephisto's crumpled body around, her eyes smiling at his pathetic ball-like form as her psionic force wraps itself around like like a hamster ball, preventing him from making any movement but twitching.

[What plan do the demons have with Archangel Camael?] Dosena asks Mephisto for the tenth time since departing Tarus II. [Speak!]

Mephisto's glowers at her, but says nothing. He has long realized the error of her analysis, but he's made no attempt to repair the misunderstanding.

If Dosena thinks Archangel Camael has returned, why correct the record? Better to let her wallow in her misinformation, dreaming up all manner of devilish schemes, than to find out the rather boring truth of the matter.

The corner of Mephisto's mouth turns up in a faint grin. This enrages Dosena, who squeezes her psionic power even tighter, making him gasp in pain.

[Aaaargh!]

Inflicting pain on Mephisto isn't terrible difficult. Despite the durability of his dragon-bones, and Dosena's inexperience when it comes to soul manipulation, she can still wrack some small amount of agony upon the Myriad Deity's souls. This pain is quite horrendous, and were Mephisto in a situation that would give him any leeway, he might have cracked long ago.

Unfortunately, the necromancer knows the cold hard truth; he will gain nothing if he speaks and instead lose all his leverage. Dosena has no reason to ever set him free, but by keeping his mouth shut, he can at least preserve his life while she futilely tries to uncover his 'secrets' regarding the supposed Archangel's return.

[Ke...ke..ke...] Mephisto laughs hoarsely, his telepathic voice feeble and wracked with pain. [You... wisssh... you knew... keke... tremble in fear... Psssion... the Archdemon... keke... he will... avenge usss...]

[You and Diablo are NOT allies.] Dosena snarls, her eyes glowing red with rage. [Do not attempt to deceive this ancient one.]

[Kekeke... of courssse... we're not... kekeke... you are... ssso... right...] Mephisto says, grinning evilly at her.

Dosena growls inside her mind, but says nothing else. Privately, she can't help but wonder if Mephisto is telling the truth.

Are the Archdemon and the Myriad Deity working together? Is this a ruse of some sort? What purpose would letting Mephisto be captured serve? Could there be a hidden agenda? Perhaps a ploy to strike at Unarin? Something involving the Plague? Are the Wordsmiths involved? What does all of this have to do with Archangel Camael?

Dosena can't help but feel frustrated. For an eon, she has reigned supreme in the Milky Way, uncontested among her peers following the end of the Seventh Great War. Obtaining an answer was always so easy, a feat she could accomplish through sheer intimidation alone.

At the same time, her warrior spirit stirs. Breaking Mephisto's will starts to feel like a challenge, a bold declaration to her face that she is incapable of defeating such a pathetic, insect-like Cosmic Entity with reputation alone. It causes her ears to buzz with a hunger for victory...

Dosena turns her gaze toward the interior of this random star system. Abruptly, she rushed forward, traveling at a multiple of the speed of light.

Mephisto frowns. Something about her movement worries him. That worry escalates into fear as his Cosmic Aura detects the rapid approach of this system's star. Dosena targets the largest rocky planet in the system and flies toward it at a speed defying imagination, tearing through the void at post-relativistic speeds while holding Mephisto directly in front of herself. Instead of using her psionic power, she grabs him by the back of the neck and accelerates toward the planet at a frightening speed, giving Mephisto a good view of the world as it rapidly balloons in size during the approach.

[No! NO! Ssstop! What are you doing?!] Mephisto exclaims.

Dosena doesn't answer.

Her eyes turn upward in the Psion equivalent of an evil smile.

An instant later, a cataclysmic explosion detonates inside the star system.

Dosena slams Mephisto's body into that world at five times the speed of light, instantly vaporizing the planet, causing violent tears throughout the system, and sending shockwaves throughout all of nearby P-space!

The impact causes a terrible impact to Mephisto's souls. Even Dosena doesn't escape uninjured, breaking her arm and neck on impact. She wakes up a few minutes afterward, quickly healing the damage with her innate psionic abilities. She searches for Mephisto, only to find his body floating in the void amidst a 50,000 degree nuclear inferno of super-ignited planet remnants.

Mephisto doesn't move. He drifts in the void, unconscious, his souls rocked to their foundation by the impact.

But even that doesn't kill him.

Disappointed, Dosena yanks the dragon's body to herself, then flickers away, departing the region in an instant while ignoring the cataclysm she has unleashed on this system. By week's end, the star will likely have gone supernova due to the tears in P-space, wiping out any further planets in the system. Luckily, it was uninhabited, or Dosena might have suffered Cosmic Backlash from the Akashic Laws.

After traveling ten lightyears away, Dosena reappears in normalspace. She holds the dragon's unconscious body before herself and frowns. A noticeably large crack has formed on one of his skeletal arms, but it doesn't amount to much.

Not even an impact of that level... Dosena ponders, frustrated once again by her inability to break the demon-dragon. This Living Moldanium is far beyond any we've found in the Milky Way. If we can kill the Myriad Deity, his bones should allow us to craft a weapon capable of defeating the Plague...

With the new revelation about the origins of Living Moldanium, Dosena begins to feel the death of all dragonkind was a bit of a shame. If they were allowed to reproduce in limited numbers, the Volgrim could kill them and harvest their bones indefinitely, allowing for greater and greater works of architecture and technology far surpassing mere warpgates.

Still, she shakes her head at the thought.

How could such a convenient thing work out the way she wanted? Ancient Dragons were likely no weaker, and possibly far stronger than 'Archangel Camael,' who was nearly able to break Mephisto's body with her power. If those monsters still roamed the Milky Way's voidspace, Dosena would be helpless before them. She would cease to be the hunter, and instead become the prey.

Feeling slightly glum about this thought, Dosena scoops Mephisto back up and continues on her way.

I must uncover the root of this conspiracy, she thinks.

Hours later, after a short diversion to a Volgrim-controlled world Mephisto attacked, Dosena finds herself drawing near to Volgarius.

That diversion was not for nothing though. Thanks to intelligence derived from a 7th Level Psion named Praetor Revan, Dosena finally obtains visual confirmation of the Archangel's true identity. Without a doubt, it was Archangel Camael who chased after Mephisto and beat the tar out of him.

This further solidifies the thoughts she's been imagining, but continues to confuse and perplex her.

Archangel Camael struck such a grievous blow on Mephisto's body, but might it have only been for show? If she is working with the demons, then this could be a ruse to allow a Demon Deity to slither into our inner circle. But why such a weak creature as the Myriad Deity? And why did the Archdemon seem so honest about wanting Mephisto dead? Demons certainly make for good liars. Perhaps he has even managed to deceive my sharp senses...

Dosena struggles with far more questions than answers. The confounding variable of Camael's supposed return causes no end of consternation for her. She knows in her heart of hearts that if she were to battle the Archangel, she would lose.

But if Camael has returned, why did she leave? Why reveal herself for so short a time, only to disappear once more? Could she be hiding within the 'membrane' of the False Cosmic Realm? Should I go there to seek her out?

Dosena's mounting frustrations find no outlet to escape her body. They simply bubble and roil within herself, making her feel anxious and jumpy. Long has it been since such worry tickled at the back of her mind.

In the Second Founder's eyes, a great conspiracy has begun to form. She cannot be certain of its scope, nor of its depth. For all she knows, it could involve the humans, the demons, the monsters, and even the angels. It could be part of a 100,000 year plot formed by Raphael himself. It might have nothing to do with him, either. Perhaps the Plague is more sinister than even she imagined.

All those feelings... those sensations she has received over the past 100 millennia... could a powerful agent be guiding the Plague, seeking to exact a revenge of untold scale upon Volgrimkind?

Could Archangel Camael be crafting an artifact of untold power with the means to obliterate Volgrimkind and restore the ancient status quo?

And there was that one matter... that whisper of a 'cube' possessed by the First Wordsmith. Dosena could not locate its exact position, but she certainly confirmed its existence somewhere within the Tarus star system...

It must be related. She thinks. I have to inform Unarin of my suspicions. He will know how to unravel this conspiracy.

It's at times like these, when things seem most dire, that Dosena feels a hint of relief.

The greatest Volgrim is not her. It is the First Founder, the brain powering all of Volgrim society.

If he cannot uncover the demon's scheme, then nobody can.

* * *

Dosena arrives inside the Volgarius system. It barely takes her three seconds to travel from the most distant outpost all the way to the interior, where she arrives at the edge of the atmosphere of the fifth planet from their star: Volgarius.

What's most remarkable about her appearance is that not one entity on the planet, nor one outpost capable of sensing fluctuations in the Void, manages to detect her arrival. She appears silently and invisibly, then flickers down to the Founder's Hand with Mephisto in tow.

When Dosena lands in the lone patch of green on Volgarius's surface, she pauses for a moment to seal Mephisto within an unbreakable prison of hardened psionic willpower. She crystallizes this material around his body, locking him in place to ensure that even if he wakes up, he won't be able to twitch a finger.

Then, she steps across space and arrives inside the Founder's Thumb.

Unarin stands next to a table where a galactic holo-map projects upward while he speaks with his brother Randis about various matters that require his attention. Dosena waits for Unarin to finish his discussion before stepping out of a fold in space behind the two Ascended.

Randis senses the faint disturbance in the air. He turns around to face her while offering the Second Founder a polite nod. "Dosena. You're back. Good news, I hope."

Dosena blinks all of her eyes slowly. [Not quite.]

She motions with her hand. A tiny mechanical device, barely the size of a pea, materializes in the air.

[Unarin, I recovered one of our Changeling Drones.] She says, as Unarin also turns to look at her. [It contains a full recording of the battle between the Wordsmiths and Mephisto.]

Unarin nods, revealing a faint, perfunctory smile. "Good. Give me a few standard time units. I will quickly assess the situation."

Unarin plucks the drone out of the air. Despite its tiny size, the materials comprising its body are hardy and durable. Even if he were to squeeze with a bit of strength, he wouldn't damage it.

He turns around and tosses the drone onto the center of the holo-map table. The map disappears, and a series of scanners envelop the drone's marble-shaped body, penetrating it and excavating the precious data held within.

Not one second later, a video begins playing, showing a high resolution recording of Mephisto's initial appearance on Tarus II, followed by his battle against Hope Hiro and Blinker.

Any human witnessing the recording would surely be shocked by how crystal-clear the recording proves to be, and by the fact that this one tiny little drone even includes more then three dozen different angles of the fight, all recorded by other drones and transmitted back to the one Dosena recovered.

Indeed, in the single second Dosena exited the Tarus II warpgate, she had already communicated with the Changelings on Tarus II, nabbed one of the drones, and compiled their collective footage together into the one she recovered before she even exited the planet's biosphere.

Such a shocking show of speed means little to the Second Founder. Her perception of time stands far beyond that of the puny mud-dwellers, and the mere act of revealing this recording to them would likely scare the Terrans out of their wits.

They haven't a clue how significantly they've already been infiltrated...

Minutes pass.

An hour...

Randis and Unarin both watch the feed, with Unarin specifically manipulating the video to search out specific angles of the battles. But he doesn't stop there. He also investigates the human's fighting situation on Tarus II, noting their extreme improvement in tactical capabilities and how they didn't suffer a single loss to Mephisto's minions.

He watches as the First Wordsmith appears toward the end to tangle with Mephisto. He observes, silently, while Jason uses all sorts of strange and unexpected means to deal with Mephisto.

The more Unarin sees, the more his eyes narrow.

"The First Wordsmith has become adept at using his powers." Unarin says. "Surprisingly so..."

Dosena blinks. She also watched the video on her return journey to Volgarius, but she was far too preoccupied with thoughts about Archangel Camael to notice the discrepancy of Jason Hiro's alarming new mastery of his abilities.

[Indeed...] Dosena says slowly. [The Wordsmith has improved his skills in a far shorter amount of time than we anticipated.]

The room falls silent.

Unarin watches the video all the way until the point when Dosena took Mephisto away. Then he rewinds back to the start of Jason's battle with Mephisto.

He skips around the battle, jumping from here to there, observing random moments with seemingly no greater link between them.

"Hmm. Hmm."

Unarin hems and haws to himself, not voicing his thoughts out loud.

At one point, he casually turns to Dosena and smiles.

"Second Founder. Do you remember the Star Flowers on Melkia?"

Dosena also directs a casual gaze toward him. She pauses for a full second before replying, while twitching her right foot slightly.

[Of course. Their venom was lethal, even to a 7th Level Psion. For such a small bud to possess such a toxin, it was a symbol of the damage a minute entity could cause even to a giant.]

She reaches up to scratch her chin while she talks. Unarin nods his head three times, then blinks his eyes twice.

"It's at times like these when I truly admire the ingenuity of these Terrans." Unarin says softly, while glancing at his nails. "They are small, yes. Weak, yes. But they have such beautiful potential."

The two continue to talk about metaphors of the past, but in secret, they begin communicating in a highly confidential, top-level form of non-verbal communication developed more than a million years prior.

A communication method known as The Whisper allows the two highest individuals in the Volgrim Empire to not only communicate verbally, but non-verbally in secret, their enhanced brains allowing them to hold two conversations at the same time with ease.

[I am seventy-three percent certain the Volgrim Empire's highest levels have been compromised.] Unarin transmits to Dosena through his body's microscopic tics. [I postulated this might be the case already, but I lacked proof. Tell me about the Wordsmiths. Did you scan the physical makeup of their bodies?]

[Of course.] Dosena answers, relying on her body's movements rather than her telepathy. [The Second Wordsmith seemed ordinary, but the First Wordsmith did not battle in his true form. The body I sensed was made up of mechanical parts. It was a cybernetic facsimile.]

[Just like how the Second Wordsmith battled Vulpanix with a corpse-puppet.] Unarin acknowledges. [The Wordsmith's methods are eerily similar. Think back on the Second Wordsmith. Did his body appear to be aged significantly on a cellular level compared to the last time you scanned him?]

[No.] Dosena transmits, before her hands stutter for a moment. [Actually... yes. His body's biological indicators were slightly out of sync with what I would have expected. I attributed the difference to spatial distortions. He did meld his soul with multiple other Heroes during the battle against the Myriad Deity, after all.]

Unarin decides to come out and 'speak' his suspicion. [The Wordsmiths may be operating inside a high level Temporally Distorted Realm. I am not certain of its exact ratio, but based on the Wordsmith's abrupt improvement with his magical abilities, it is likely he has spent several orbital cycles inside.]

Dosena maintains a neutral expression. [Does he not know of the risks? Temporal Acceleration is extremely hazardous toward biological life.]

[I estimate with a 40% confidence he is aware.] Unarin replies. [It would explain why he sent a mechanical facsimile of himself to do battle in realspace. But that is not the most pressing issue.]

Out loud, Unarin says, "...of course, that is why the angels once ruled the galaxy. Their leader is a man worth admiring."

In secret, he continues speaking to the Second Founder. [The Wordsmith has likely placing spying devices all across our Empire. He may be listening to this conversation as we speak.]

Dosena doesn't show any surprise on her face. [A plausible inference. What made you come to this conclusion?]

[I estimated what I would do if I possessed the Wordsmith's powers.] Unarin explains. [Spying on our Empire is an obvious move he should have made sooner. It's possible he has been spying on us for a while now, but I believe he did not start until after him and I spoke in person.]

[Then we will have to proceed with extreme caution.] Dosena says. [The Wordsmith should be rapidly growing in a secret enclave somewhere. Perhaps the 'cube' Creator Demila spoke of?]

[Potentially.] Unarin acknowledges. [From now on, assume the Wordsmith has the capability to intercept any communication, be it via mechanical, mundane, or psionic means. He might not be able to listen in on the thoughts of a 7th, 8th, or 9th Level Psion, but that is a risk we should not take.]

Dosena nods imperceptibly. [Very well. I will speak to Creator Demila regarding her efforts in the Labyrinth. We can put the hunt for Gressil on hold. Searching for the lost 10kg's of Trifrancium and keeping an eye on the First Wordsmith is more important right now.]

[Yes. Do that.] Unarin transmits. [Also put out a Star Flower alert throughout the Empire. It's unlikely the Wordsmith will know what this code means, but do be secretive about it. We should also assume the two Wordsmiths are working in tandem to deceive us. Their feud on the surface may not burn as hot as they pretend...]

Dosena hesitates.

[You believe... the Wordsmiths may be working together?]

[It is always a possibility.] Unarin says, neither confirming nor denying.

After a brief moment, Dosena transmits something else.

[Unarin. I have thoughts regarding the Apex Cosmic. Please give me your opinion regarding this conspiracy I may have uncovered...]

Dosena begins to tell Unarin of the suspicions she's been holding all day.

As she does, Unarin's expression becomes faintly cloudy.

[Something nasty is brewing… I require time to unravel these threads.]

[Time is a scant resource.] Dosena concludes.

Part 523: What Makes a Human?

Hope Hiro grumbles under his breath. He shoves his hands into his pockets as he lumbers toward the northern base on Tarus II, the place where Neil Adams has chosen to center his command of humanity's armies.

An air of happiness lingers in the air. Despite the devastation Tarus's structures endured, in the end not a single individual died to Mephisto's forces.

Not one!

Compared with the horrific tragedies that have followed in the wake of every other demonic attack in human history, the events of earlier today have been a complete miracle. Certainly, some people suffered painful injuries. Not everyone managed to escape the storm of undead unscathed. But even those who did suffer injuries simply visited Belial's ward to get patched back up.

In the end, outside some minor psychological trauma, humanity enjoyed a massive victory against a Cosmic Entity, though most fail to fully understand the weight of that achievement.

But to Hope Hiro, the events of today simply don't register as positively as they do to others.

He grumbles and growls to himself while he walks, remembering how pathetic a fight he put up against the Myriad Deity. He thinks about how cool Jason looked when he showed up, kicked Mephisto's ass, and led the Myriad Deity around by his nose.

Even if Jason was not the one who ultimately defeated Mephisto, Jason still came out looking far better than Hope did.

This fact is exacerbated by the number of people and troopers Hope passes who proceed to play out recordings of the fights that took place today. Thanks to humanity's extensive net of T-REX's that can scan a 360-degree field around every trooper, as well as some of Phoebe's drones that deliberately captured the multitude of battlefields, everyone on Tarus II got a good look at how the two Wordsmiths fared.

Nobody looks at Hope and sneers. They don't mock him, nor complain that he did a terrible job. After all, he fought Mephisto alone for a long while, and he kept Mephisto from directly attacking the Fortress itself.

However, they do rewatch videos of Jason's fight over and over, oohing and aahing at how amazing the First Wordsmith was, and how valiantly he fought against Mephisto, beating the Myriad Deity time after time without suffering a major loss.

But Hope knows the truth. Jason couldn't kill Mephisto. He could only slow him down and hold him back a while. Who knows how long that would have lasted?

Most importantly, the reason Hope has had to actively fight his crankiness has nothing to do with Jason.

It's because of his splitting migraine!

Hope massages his forehead, wincing repeatedly as his head feels like it's going to explode.

"Scan. Examine. Fuck, come on! What do you mean there's nothing wrong?? Heal! Normalize! Headache BEGONE!!"

No matter what Words of Power Hope tries to use, nothing works. His headache continues to throb, making him so pissed he even starts to see red spots.

"It's all Jason's fault." Hope grumbles. "How did he get so strong anyway? Don't tell me he made a time-accelerated realm too. But even if he did, so what?? I have Heroic Artifacts and he doesn't. How could he be better than me? I have Solomon on my side! Who does Jason have? Nobody!"

Hope pauses.

"Okay, so he has Fiona and Phoebe. But still!"

Hope seemingly argues with himself, his tone dismal. He continues walking down the street, keeping his voice low so people won't direct stares his way. Even so, the Second Wordsmith always draws at least a few eyeballs wherever he goes.

[Centurion.] Hope thinks, directing his thoughts to the nanites embedded in his blood. [Please tell me you've found the reason for my splitting migraine! I'm going out of my mind here!]

[NEGATIVE.] Centurion beeps. [PILOT HOPE HIRO'S INTERNAL STRUCTURE APPEARS COMPLETELY SOUND. NO NEGATIVE ACTIVITY DETECTED INSIDE THE BRAIN, SPINE, OR INTERNAL ORGANS. BONE STRUCTURE AT OPTIMAL LEVELS.

NO FRACTURES OR TORN LIGAMENTS DETECTED. SOURCE OF CEREBRAL PAIN: UNKNOWN.]

[Well, that doesn't help me at all...]

Hope continues walking. He eventually reaches the outer wall of the northern compound, where a pair of soldiers stand guard. They nod at Hope, their faceless helmets giving no indication of their identities or emotions.

"Commander Hope." The male soldier on the right says.

Hope pauses to allow a scanner at the entrance to examine his body. The anti-Changeling scanners have stepped up in intensity of late, but the lack of having caught one doesn't speak positively regarding their capabilities.

The scanners finish piercing Hope's biological makeup, then return his identity as positive. The guards nod him through, and Hope stomps into the base's interior.

The moment Hope enters, he passes a faint, barely detectable membrane of hardened spatial energy. This barrier was created by Fairy Princess Melia only hours earlier, intended to prevent entities like Yardrat, Psions, and other space-manipulators from popping into the human's military base effortlessly. None know how effectively it will perform, but perhaps it can be strengthened over time, if nothing else.

As Hope walks inside, several people notice his arrival.

"Hey, Hope! Great work today!"

"You really kicked ass!"

"You were awesome out there!"

Hope notices a few men and woman looking his way, troopers with their helmets deactivated. Despite how they direct cheerful grins his way, Hope can only manage a tepid smile at most.

"Haha... thanks, guys. I've got a terrible migraine right now though. Gotta talk to Neil before I take a nap."

"Sure thing! If it wasn't for you and Jason, we'd have lost big time." One of the women says. "Enjoy your rest, you've earned it!"

Hope nods again. As he continues into the base, the group returns to their conversation. Hope hears them say one last thing before he leaves earshot...

"Hope did such good work, but it was Jason who really saved our bacon. Have you heard all the reports of people who were being teleported around, healed, and protected throughout the day? Seems it was the First Wordsmith who did all that. Guess he's been training since Stormbringer to become a more reliable leader!"

Hope's smile disappears as he enters Neil's administrative facility. His minor happiness at being recognized gets ruined once again.

Always, people talk about how awesome Jason is. He's just soooo much better than me! What the hell am I accomplishing with all my fancy artifacts if he can slap me around, huh?

Five minutes later, Hope gets waved into Neil's office. He walks inside, still massaging his head, where he finds Neil and Linda sitting across from each other, discussing some random issue Hope doesn't care too much about.

"-should really try and liaison with them." Linda presses. "The fairies are by far our most reliable allies. Now only do we have a Male Fairy on our side, Lieutenant Brown, who makes us worth befriending on his own, but we work together with them frequently thanks to Blinker. The Spackle Tragedy is an opportunity for us to deepen our relationship."

"It is an awful matter." Neil says slowly. "But while we didn't suffer any casualties, all the work we put into building up Tarus II have collapsed. Ninety percent of our fortress is in ruins. We don't have time or the resources to help the fairies rebuild."

Hope walks into the room and looks at Neil and Linda. "What's all this about?"

"Ah, Hope." Neil says, offering a warm smile. "I've been waiting for you to show up. Great job today. You and Jason both did excellent work and saved countless lives."

"Yeah. Me and Jason both." Hope snarks, rolling his eyes, then immediately wincing as a fresh spasm of pain hits his head. He plops in an easy chair against the wall a few feet behind Linda, then sags into it, massaging his temples.

"Headache?" Linda asks with concern. "You look miserable."

"I wish it was just a headache. Feels like my head's about to explode." Hope snaps, pausing to realize his rudeness. "Sorry, I'm just... I'm in a lot of pain."

"Did you try visiting Belial?" Neil asks, ignoring Hope's temperamental outbursts. "She might be able to assist you. Or that Leeroy fellow. He's supposedly adept with healing brains."

"Centurion can't figure out what's causing my headache. My Wordsmithing has no effect. I doubt demons are going to be any help." Hope replies, trying to suppress his anger to regain his calmness. "Just ignore it for now. I'll try to create some painkillers later if I have time."

"Right." Neil says, turning his attention to more important matters. He picks up a datapad on his desk and frowns. "The damage to our infrastructure is significant and widespread. Few buildings came out unscathed, particularly those within the city center. Fortunately, we didn't lose any soldiers to Mephisto's forces..."

He deliberately pauses for two seconds, then looks at Hope.

"But we did lose someone. A child. A human child. They died right inside one of our shelters."

Hope rubs his forehead, pushing through the pain. "Seriously? How? Did an undead sneak inside?"

"No. That's the thing." Neil says, his tone curt. "We don't have any idea who the suspect is. There was some sort of localized disruption effect. All of our T-REX's inside the shelter lost their recording functionality for roughly thirty minutes. Nobody noticed the child had died until after the battle concluded. We have no leads on who killed her."

"That's... awful." Hope says, as his thoughts invariably turn to Jason's daughter, Daisy, and how her death affected the First Wordsmith. "No leads, but surely we have some suspects? At least some educated guesses?"

Neil purses his lips. "There were seven hundred and fourteen demons inside that shelter. Weak, low-level grunts. A trio of Lords. I want you to investigate them."

"Me?" Hope asks. "Why?"

"Because you're a Wordsmith." Neil says. "You have powers that should prove useful. And those demons inside the shelter, they were supposedly our 'allies.' Not these new converts, but the so-called true believers who've been with us for six years. If we can prove one of them committed the crime, I'll have a huge advantage during my speech in two weeks. So that's your deadline. I want you to find out who killed that little girl and seek justice on her family's behalf."

Hope grimaces. "Neil, I need to be training with the artifacts, not playing detective. Besides, she'll revive as a Respected soon, right? You can just ask her when she rebirths."

Neil stares at Hope for three long seconds.

"Her soul was devoured, Hope. She won't be reviving. That's why I know the culprit was a demon. And that's why I expect you to carry this mission out."

Hope starts to protest, but Neil speaks again.

"That reminds me. You'd better start preparing a speech of your own. I expect you to speak on humanity's behalf as our most worthy Hero. It won't do for me to stand up there alone. People look up to you. They need you in these trying times."

Hope snorts. "Yeah, right. Everyone's been praising Jason for being a badass earlier. Meanwhile, I had all those Heroic Artifacts and got my ass kicked."

Neil's withering gaze continues to focus on Hope. "Quit your whining. You sound pathetic, Hope. Where's your sense of masculine pride? Every man loses a battle once in a while. You just need to stand back up, dry your tears, and get back to improving yourself."

"That's easier said than done!" Hope protests. "I don't even know how he did it! I have artifacts! I have Solomon! How is he still beating me?!"

Neil rolls his eyes. "For god's sake, you're starting to give me a headache now. I get that you didn't perform up to par, Hope, but you still saved a lot of lives. Rather than constantly comparing yourself to Jason, you should compare yourself to 'the you from yesterday.' Stop worrying about one-upping the other Wordsmith. Focus on improving your own capabilities over time."

"Neil's right." Linda says. "If you want people's respect, you'll have to earn it, and you can't do that until you learn to respect yourself first."

Hope glances at Linda. Hearing a woman criticize him makes him feel even more ashamed. He finally shuts his mouth, nods, and shakily stands up.

"Right. Fine. Sorry. I'll go get some rest. Clearly, I'm not in my right mind."

Neil softens his expression. "Please do. And when you wake up, remember what I said. Investigate the girl's death. Write a speech. If you don't have any talent, I can set you up with someone who does."

"I'll figure something out..." Hope mumbles, before staggering away.

* * *

Neil watches Hope's departing form. After he leaves, humanity's commander releases a long, slow breath of frustration.

"He's becoming such a handful."

Linda blinks. "Don't you think you should keep your voice down? What if he hears you?"

"Like I give a damn. I don't need the Wordsmiths." Neil says. "They're powerful, yes. A deterrent against the demons and Volgrim, certainly. But make no mistake, Linda... you must never place all your cards on others. Especially not a super-powered individual."

Linda crosses her arms. "What makes you say that?"

"I don't like relying on other people, but especially not those possessing incredible latent powers." Neil explains. "Their views are different from mine. They perceive the world in a manner more alien than human. I focus on the people below me. I care about every soldier and human who fights for my cause."

Neil leans slightly over the table toward Linda.

"But what about Jason? Hope? Do you think they care about the peons beneath them? How many names could either of them rattle off before they reached their limit? Ten twenty? Fifty? Maybe a hundred at most?"

"That implies you can name more." Linda says, not giving Neil any ground. "Their memory might even be better than yours, for all you know."

"You're missing the forest for the trees." Neil counters. "I'm talking about perspective. My boots are right here, on the ground, every minute of every day. I live among my fellow humans. I watch out for them. I may not know all their names, and indeed I cannot possibly remember them all... but I know their wants and needs. Their words directly reach my ears. Can you say the same for the Wordsmiths, who live in special dimensions detached from our own?"

"Phoebe keeps Jason appraised of humanity's situation." Linda insists. "Just like you keep Hope grounded."

"That's the thing. It's a matter of separation." Neil continues, leaning back while he spreads his hands out. "I am Hope's liason. I am the extension of his humanity, just as Phoebe is Jason's ambassador. But these people, these... Wordsmiths... they are becoming more and more removed from our lives all the time. Hope is self-absorbed, occupied by some idiotic need to defeat his rival. And as for Jason? He is obsessed with the 'bigger picture' and trying to unify all the species under some big happy banner."

Neil shakes his head. He eases into his office chair and chuckles.

"The Wordsmiths do 'care' about humanity, make no mistake. But they care in an abstract way, like how a man might love his dog. To the Wordsmiths, we're an important pet project they need to maintain for the sake of soothing their morality. So long as we're doing fine, they don't pay any attention to the finer details."

Linda creases her brow. "I see. And it's those finer details that truly matter to you."

"Precisely." Neil snaps, his voice seething with a hint of venom. "Just listen to how Hope whined. I'm asking him to look into the death of a child. A precious little girl! And he has the gall to sit there whining, bitching, moaning like I asked him to take out the garbage."

"Pah!" Neil spits, now visibly angry. "A precious little girl was murdered by one of those filthy demons, and neither Wordsmith cares. Jason might care more than Hope, but only because he has personally experienced such a loss himself. Neither Wordsmith gives a damn about anything that doesn't affect them directly. And once it does, it's already too late!"

Linda sits across from Neil. She rests her elbow on the desk and forces a strained smile.

"But Neil... do you truly care for the little girl who died? Are you not simply seeking to use her death for your own political benefit? What makes you different from the Wordsmiths?"

"I do care." Neil says, calming himself down. "Naturally, I can make gains from this. But even if I couldn't, I would still want her killer hunted down. I empathize with my fellow humans. I don't want them to suffer for even a day longer. I just wish the Wordsmiths felt the same way..."

"I do too, Neil. I do too..." Linda concludes.

* * *

An hour later, Linda and Neil still remain in his office, discussing some matters involving the Fairy world of Pixiv, until Debra knocks on the doorway and steps inside.

"Sorry if I'm interrupting. Neil, you have a visitor. Someone new."

Neil glances at Debra. "Oh?"

"A human. He doesn't show up in our database." Debra says. "Does the name 'Zed' ring a bell?"

"Can't say it does..." Neil says slowly. "Send him in."

Debra steps out, and a few moments later a surprisingly tall man with brown hair enters the room. His countenance appears quite refined, owing in part to his youthful skin, and his white-and-silver robes.

"Mister Adams." The man says as he enters. "My name is Zed. It is my pleasure to make your acquaintance."

Zed nods at Linda politely, then extends his hand across the desk to shake Neil's hand.

Neil stands up. He starts to extend his own hand, but he abruptly pauses.

He frowns at the newcomer, then retracts his arm...

"You." Neil says slowly, as he narrows his eyes and stares at the man. "Who are you? You're not human."

Zed blinks twice. He continues holding his hand out while maintaining a polite smile. "Oh? How perceptive. Your scanners didn't detect anything out of the ordinary, but somehow you did."

"You're not a human." Neil repeats. "What are you? A demon? A Changeling?!"

Zed lowers his arm, realizing Neil has no intention of shaking his hand.

"No, no. Not a Changeling. My name is Zed. My 'identity' is that of a Cybernite. Do you know what a Cybernite is?"

Neil takes a few seconds to reply as he pauses to think of where he's heard that word before.

"...Kar mentioned them in passing once. Something about... robot-humans. You're a robot, then?"

"A cyborg, specifically." Zed explains calmly. "Hence the term 'Cybernite'. My brain is fully digitized. I was created from the soul and mental capacity of an ancient human from Planet Earth."

Neil nods slowly. "I see. Your mimicry of a human is flawed. The way your eyes blink, the way you walk, everything about you is slightly... off. I picked up on it when you entered, but I wasn't sure until you held out your hand."

"Perhaps I've lost some of my ability to properly emulate human characteristics over the millennia," Zed says only half-apologetically. "Oh, well. I have come at the behest of Marie Becker, the head scientist of the Remnant Oasis."

"Marie!" Neil says, his voice raising an octave in surprise. "That's right, she's someone quite important, from what I've heard. I haven't met her before, unfortunately. For what purpose has she dispatched you?"

"Three hundred Cybernites have come to Tarus II to assist humanity's rebuilding and expansion efforts." Zed explains. "One hundred and fifty are en-route to Phoebe Hiro's side as we speak. They are led by my colleague, Rebecca. The goals of both teams are to assist the leaders of your two distinct factions in any way you require, barring unethical or vile acts that we determine to damage commonly accepted rules of decency."

"What do you believe falls under those restricted acts?" Linda asks.

Zed looks at the woman sitting a few feet away.

"Acts of torture, chemical experimentation without consent, reproductive assault, and other crimes against humanity all fall under my personally forbidden acts." Zed explains. "Please be aware: I am not an automaton. I was once a biological inferior, just as you are now. My restrictions were not placed on me by Marie Becker. I created them myself. I refuse to inflict any acts of evil that I have personally designated as gross and vile. If you wish to know more, I am willing to write a detailed listing of every act, though the list will not be able to account for every possibility."

"No, that's fine." Neil says, smiling. "You might be a digitized mind, but you are still, in essence, a human. I'm glad you have limits you won't exceed. What about the other Cybernites, though? Do they all hold to the same ethical restrictions as you?"

"By no means." Zed clarifies. "Cybernites are all individuals. Some have more lax and lenient definitions of barbarity. It is up to each one to determine what parameters exceed their personally-placed limitations."

"I will keep that in mind so I don't step on any toes." Neil says, as he finally reaches out his hand. "Welcome to Tarus II."

Zed extends his own hand once more to firmly grasp Neil's.

"My appreciation for the warm welcome."

Part 524: Psychological Imbalance

Hope Hiro staggers out of Neil's office. His scalp tingles feverishly as he struggles to figure out what the hell is going on with his head. His brain seemingly bounces around inside his skull, making him stumble from left to right.

"Ohh, man, hell..."

Hope pauses before exiting Neil's command structure. He wipes sweat from his forehead, wondering to himself if maybe he's come down with something. Just as he's about to leave, Debra seemingly appears at his side, startling him. He didn't hear her walking over due to his distracted thoughts.

"Hope. Are you alright?" Debra asks, pushing her glasses up her nose. "You look terrible."

"I feel terrible." Hope affirms. "Ever since the battle with Mephisto... I think he hit me with something. I've got a migraine from hell. Maybe a fever, too."

Debra reaches up to touch his forehead. She pulls her hand back and frowns. "No fever, but something's definitely wrong. Where are you going after this?"

"Not sure." Hope mumbles. "I need a nap. But I'm hungry, too."

"Alright. I'll have someone escort you to the Horned Maître. After you eat, you should return to Annette. She'll take care of you."

Hope nods, though the motion makes his stomach churn. "Oh... okay, yeah. Thanks, Debra."

Debra sighs. She walks away and makes a call over Centurion Net.

Not long after, a young man in a civilian uniform walks up to Hope, his pinstripe shirt looking quite sharp, yet conveying no sense of authority.

"...Commander Hope. Miss Debra asked me to escort you anywhere you need to be."

Hope barely even looks at the man. "Ah, thanks... I need to grab a bite to eat."

"As you command, sir. I have a vehicle waiting. I'll drive you to the Horned Maître."

Hope blearily follows the man. He gets in the passenger side of a Jeep-like vehicle with 4 seats, and after the door closes and he becomes sealed off from the world outside, he feels minutely better.

The Second Wordsmith shakes off his dizziness. He glances over at his helper, then blinks in surprise.

"...What? It's you?"

The young man looks at Hope, then looks away while he turns on the ignition.

"It is, sir."

"Henry." Hope says slowly. "During the inquisition, you were- they were going to execute you."

The young man, formerly Private Henry, now demoted out of the military entirely, sighs softly as he begins to drive. It takes several long seconds before he decides to reply.

"It's all thanks to Beelzebub. If he hadn't somehow changed the outcome of that inquisition, I'd be dead. Commander Neil threw me a bone. He told me I could serve in the civilian sector. Beats doing slave labor in the mines."

"Oh. I see." Hope says, not sure how to react. "Have you been doing... well?"

Once again, Henry falls silent while continuing to drive. The brown-haired youth glances at Hope with a tired expression, then shakes his head.

"I don't know, sir. I've lost my purpose. I wanted to fight. To kill demons. But I ended up working for one of their Emperors instead. I betrayed humanity. I was going to die; punished for my crimes. But I didn't. Now I'm here... a glorified chauffeur. Is it better than being dead? Maybe. But I miss being able to hold a rifle. It was the one thing I was really good at."

"Yeah." Hope mutters. "You were a damn good sniper. The best we had."

The two men fall silent. Ten minutes pass as the SUV drives along the narrow roads into the city. Unlike on ancient Earth, only the military drives private vehicles. Otherwise, only buses pass by on the street. Most people commute by walking or riding bikes. For those magically inclined, they may instead fly or teleport between destinations.

Before long, they pull up to the Horned Maître, and Hope pops open to step out. He pauses before closing the door when he sees Henry hasn't moved.

"What? Not hungry?"

Henry winces. "It... I don't think it's appropriate for me to go in there, sir."

"Why not?" Hope asks.

"Well. People don't like me." Henry says slowly. "I betrayed humanity, and only survived execution because of a technicality. I'm sort of... infamous."

He pauses.

"Plus... I'm poor. I can't afford to eat here."

Hope frowns slightly, but that expression softens.

"You might be poor, but I'm not. Come on. Get out, we're eating together."

"But-" Henry starts to object.

"No 'buts.' You're coming with me, and that's an order." Hope says sternly.

A flicker of a smile threatens to appear on Henry's face, but he keeps his emotions muted. "Uh, alright. Yes, sir."

Henry exits the vehicle. He falls into step beside Hope as they approach the large and lavish oak doors leading inside the five-story building.

Upon entering, a fluffy Felaris girl wearing a waitress uniform pads over to them and meows. "Hello, Hope! What will it be today?"

"Hi, Meena." Hope says. "My friend and I are going to the... fourth floor today."

"Oh, your friend?" She asks, turning her large kitty-cat eyes toward Henry.

The waitress looks at him for a single second, blinks twice, then looks back at Hope. "Okay! I'll lead you to your table."

"Thanks." Hope says.

Henry glances around as they approach one of the three spiral staircases leading up to the higher floors. On the lowest floor, more than two hundred tables sit around, placed in modifiable configurations that allow them to be pushed together or pulled apart based on party size. Some tables have more than twenty people seated, while others have just one or two at a time. The place is nearly packed full, and several curious gazes flick in Hope's direction. As one of the Wordsmiths, it's hard not to recognize him at a glance.

The two men follow the Felaris up the stairs, keeping several steps behind her so her fluffy tail doesn't smack Hope in the face while it swishes back and forth.

The second floor is much less crowded than the first, pricier, and significantly more exclusive. This rule holds true for the third floor, and ultimately the fourth. While there are five floors in total, the prices become much more ridiculous the higher one climbs, so only the richest and most powerful entities will bother to go to the top, and only for special occasions. It's often completely empty.

When Hope and Henry reach the fourth floor, they find that only two of the ten booths are occupied. Privacy filters erected around the booths shield the identities of their occupants, preventing even a single sound or sight from escaping. All one can see if they look at those booths is a pure white screen of ambient light.

Meena seats the two men at one of the booths, takes their order, and waves her paw. A light field materializes around the booth, cutting them off from the outside world.

"Wow..." Henry whispers. "That's so impressive. Is this fairy magic?"

"Wordsmith magic too." Hope responds, resting his elbows on the table. "Jason helped build this place's defenses."

"Oh. I see."

Henry becomes quiet again. He glances at Hope, then glances out the window at the ruined city currently being rebuilt.

More than twenty long seconds pass.

"Are you alright?" Hope asks, massaging the side of his head.

"You saw how everyone looked at me." Henry says quietly. "They hate me."

"Huh?" Hope blinks. "What do you mean? Not to burst your bubble, but I think people were looking at me, not you. I am the Wordsmith after all."

Henry opens his mouth to say something, pauses, then continues with that thought.

"You might be right, sir. But it just feels... it feels like everyone is always looking at me. Judging me. Like I've ruined everything I touched. I can't recover from my failures."

The Wordsmith looks at his slightly younger compatriot. Despite the fact Henry is younger than Hope, the age difference between them isn't large. Hope even thinks that if he hadn't spent so much time recently inside the Hall of Heroes, he might only be a year or two older than Henry.

Hope lowers his eyes to the table.

"You think you screwed up pretty bad, huh?"

"I did." Henry affirms, also looking at the table guiltily. "I don't have any way to repent, either."

"I disagree." Hope says, raising his eyes to look at Henry. "Compared to me, you haven't screwed up that badly. Lately, I've felt so off my game. I can't do anything right."

"What do you mean, sir?" Henry asks, meeting Hope's eyes with a look of surprise. "You're a Wordsmith! You can do all sorts of awesome things. I'm just an ordinary human. You fought Mephisto and saved countless lives. If it hadn't been for you, he might have hit the city and killed millions of people!"

"Well, uh, sure." Hope says, suddenly feeling awkward. "But compared to Jason, I came up short in all respects when fighting Mephisto. I've recently obtained more than a thousand powerful artifacts, but Jason beat Mephisto's bones without owning any. I felt like such a chump compared to him."

Henry scrunches up his face, as if uncertain whether the Second Wordsmith is pulling his leg. "Are you serious, sir? I've seen the video of your fight. You were incredible out there. You fought a hundred-foot-tall dragon hellbent on inflicting destruction everywhere. You kept the damage contained to an uninhabited area, transformed twice into other forms, and knocked him around like a pro."

"I mean, I guess so." Hope says, not wanting to acknowledge Henry's words. "But he still introduced my face to the ground. Jason had to rush in and save me."

"Oh, I see..." Henry says. "Well, I don't think that's a problem. You can't win every fight, sir. Every battle needs a winner and a loser. What's important is that when you lose, you pick yourself up and improve your skills for next time. Especially since you're a Wordsmith, I bet you can improve yourself in all sorts of awesome ways."

"Perhaps. I don't know." Hope says, wincing from a slight migraine flare-up. "It just seems as though I should be a better Wordsmith than him, yet he's somehow surpassed me. I don't know how he did it, and I feel like shit knowing I'm not matching up to him."

"I guess so..." Henry says, pausing to formulate his thoughts.

The young man glances out the window. He scratches his chin, but before he can speak again, the privacy screen flickers and Meena returns with two trays of food.

"Hope, Henry, here are your orders!" She meows cutely.

"Thanks for that." Hope says, smiling at her.

"Thank YOU for beating back that evil necromancer." Meena replies. "You saved everyone's lives! Everyone I've talked to is very grateful! Meow! Master Yamir said to tell you today's meal is on the house."

"Oh, he doesn't have to go that far." Hope says. "I have plenty of Merit-"

"Now now, don't turn down his hospitality." Meena says, cutting Hope off. "Everyone wants to show appreciation to you for your hard work. Neil's soldiers fought the undead, but you fought their boss. That makes you the Hero of the hour!"

Hope smiles. "Well. Alright! If you insist."

"I do!"

Meena turns around and reactivates the privacy filter, disappearing as she leaves to attend to other customers.

Henry looks at Hope with a smile of his own.

"You see, sir? Everyone appreciates what you've done. Even if Jason had a more visually impressive fight at the end, does it matter? You fought hard and accomplished many good deeds. Besides. It was you who fought on humanity's behalf seriously for the past six years. Nobody would blame you if you had a harder time following your return from the... the demon prison."

In unison, Hope and Henry's smiles disappear as they recall the horrendous torture the Second Wordsmith suffered at Gressil's claws. While Henry was not part of the rescue party, he had to have heard about Hope's condition from secondhand military rumors.

As for Hope himself, he certainly doesn't want to relive that horrifying experience. His heartbeat quickens, and his muscles tense up for a moment as he stifles the memories.

"I... let's... let's not talk about that." Hope says quietly.

"Of course, sir. Sorry."

Fortunately, Henry and Meena both succeed in uplifting Hope's spirits, and fixing some of his bruised ego. He eats in silence for a few minutes, thinking to himself that he's been much too hard on himself, and putting too much focus on Jason's accomplishments.

"Sir, can I ask you a question?" Henry says after a few minutes of eating.

"Huh? Sure, go ahead." Hope answers.

"Well, it's about the angels that popped up during the battle..." Henry says slowly. "I've heard some rumors about them. I don't want to prod, but could you tell me who they were?"

"The angels?" Hope asks. "You must mean Uriel, Raphael, Michael, and Gabriel."

"No, sir. It was two women, and neither of them were Uriel." Henry says. "All archival footage of their battle was deleted, so I assume it's a secret of some sort. If you're not allowed to say, that's fine. I just heard rumors that an armored angel with long white hair showed up alongside a beautiful lady angel. Presumably they were both women, but neither was Uriel..."

Hope doesn't say anything. Given how he was battling Mephisto at the time, he never heard about this, so he merely raises an eyebrow.

"You don't know?" Henry asks. "I heard they fought alongside Lieutenant Samuel Baker. Kicked some serious butt!"

Hope shrugs. "Haven't heard anything. Why don't you ask Samuel instead?"

"Oh... he and I aren't really on good terms." Henry says slowly. "You know. Because of the Inquisition..."

"Right. Sorry, I forgot." Hope says. "Well, it's just a rumor. Even if it's true, Neil probably wants to keep it on the down-low for good reasons. Best not to blab about it."

"Good point, sir."

* * *

Forty-five minutes later, Hope and Henry finish their food. They thank Meena for the food, and Hope even personally pops into the kitchen to say hi to Yamir before he and Henry depart.

As they head back outside to their waiting SUV, Hope stretches and pops his back.

"Thanks for spending time with me, Henry. I was in a pretty bad mood, but I'm feeling better now."

"Great! I had lots of fun, sir." Henry says with a big smile. "I don't get to hang out with people much these days."

"We should do it again some time." Hope says.

Henry nods. "How about that headache of yours? Need a ride anywhere else?"

"Nah. It's a lot more bearable now. I was just hungry after the big battle. I'm feeling a lot better."

"Great! Then I'll be on my way. Have a good day, commander."

Henry and Hope wave goodbye to one another, then the young man hops back in his vehicle, starts it up, and drives off.

Hope watches him depart. After he leaves, the Wordsmith yawns.

"Welp. Better head back home. Return!"

Hope speaks a Word of Power.

...nothing happens.

"Huh? Return! OUCH! What the-?!"

Hope flinches as his migraine comes roaring back full-force. His magic fails to activate twice in a row, and that pulse-pounding headache makes his brain feel like he just ran face-first into a glass window.

"Fucking hell!" Hope snarls. "Shit, goddammit! That hurts..."

He takes a few minutes to curse while waiting for his migraine to recede. When the pain drops again, he focuses his thoughts one last time. He visualizes the garden inside the Hall of Heroes, that same area he spent lots of time speaking with so many Heroes over the past year of his life...

"Come on, don't fuck it up again, gotta push through the pain... RETURN!!"

Finally, Hope succeeds.

His body vanishes from the spot with a faint suction of air.

Foop!

He materializes inside the Hall of Heroes.

Then, a pain unlike anything he has ever experienced in his life slams into his head with the force of a freight train.

"Aaaaa-!"

Hope cries out for a split second before losing the ability to speak. The garden inside the Hall of Heroes violently spins around him. He staggers, trips, and falls to the ground.

A hundred knives pierce his brain. He tries to open his mouth, but he loses control over his synapses.

The Second Wordsmith lays helplessly on the ground, as if having suffered from a full-body stroke. His heart races. His eyesight swims as the world bends and distorts around him. Frightening images of demonic apparitions seem to materialize all around him, making his suffering morph into a full-blown panic attack. Hope sees images of Gressil's distorted body towering over him, laughing maniacally like a cartoon villain while mocking him in an incomprehensible alien language.

'Gressil' kneels down to gloat. As he does, his face changes for a split-second.

"Hope? Hope? Can you hear-"

Hope's heart continues to pound. The voice sounds vaguely familiar, but the blinding pain continues to intensify. A white noise crackles behind his ears. His pupils shrink to pinpricks.

Then, he falls unconscious. The world goes dark.

* * *

Solomon kneels next to the Wordsmith.

"Hope! Hope! Can you hear me?! What in the- everyone! To me, at once! It's an emergency! Something has happened to Hope! Come to the Garden!"

Solomon projects those last few words throughout the entirety of the Hall of Heroes, summoning every available Hero.

It doesn't take long before Arthur, Elizabeth, and a hundred others show up, followed by Amelia and many more.

"What's wrong?" Amelia asks, pushing through the rapidly-gathering throng of onlookers. "What happened to Hope?!"

She falls to her knees beside her fiance, gasping as she sees his eyes frozen open, drool spilling out of his mouth onto the grass, and the quick, short breaths he swallows reflexively.

"I'm not sure." Solomon says. "Hope returned and collapsed the instant he arrived. You're the only person with a fully corporeal body, Amelia. You'll have to carry him to the Healing Ward."

"Okay!" Amelia exclaims, bending down to pick up her fiance. She easily hefts him over her shoulders, thanks to the Words of Power he used to bolster her physique two years earlier.

She quickly pushes through the gathered crowd of Heroes who part the path for her, many of them looking at Hope's unconscious figure with deep worry. These Heroes, despite technically possessing corporeal bodies capable of interacting with the physical realm, lack the stability to lift heavy loads. If they tried to do so, their bodies would destabilize and disperse, forcing them to re-summon themselves.

Arthur and Solomon follow behind Amelia as she half-sprints down a series of hallways toward the four-bed wing designed to heal Hope, Amelia, and other biological entities in the event of an emergency. Created by Solomon as a safeguard in case of events just like this one, it finally gets to serve a purpose as Amelia hurries to put Hope in one of the hospital beds.

"Was the boy attacked?" Arthur asks Solomon.

"I know only as much as you." Solomon answers. "He teleported to the Hall of Heroes and collapsed as soon as he arrived."

"Hmm. How worrying..." Arthur mutters.

Amelia reaches the Healing Ward. She quickly but gently lays Hope down, stepping to the side as a few healing-type Heroes step inside along with Solomon, Arthur, and a few of the other mightiest Heroes.

Two tense minutes pass as men and women use all manner of instruments to investigate Hope's condition.

"Well?" Amelia asks, trying not to sound panicked. "What's wrong with him??"

Arthur holds his hands out above Hope's body. He summons a spell of glowing light to suffuse Hope's weakly-breathing body with divine energy. He stops a few seconds later.

"Everything seems to be fine." Solomon says, uncertain. "Hope's brain is not suffering any undue stress. His internal organs aren't injured."

"The boy's soul is perfectly fine." Arthur says with a frown. "No issues with his mana circulation either."

Karla, a Chinese Hero born during the 6th Century, uses a pair of acupuncture needles to poke and prod Hope's body.

"No signs of poison." Karla says. "The Wordsmith's Chakra flow is unaffected. I am no healer, though."

"Then what's the problem?" Amelia asks. "Why is he unconscious?"

Several long, uncomfortable seconds of silence follow.

Solomon glances around at the others. He searches his Crown for information, but the sheer volume of medical history he needs to look through is enough to require even him to search a while. He might be the Knowledge-Seeker, but actually scanning all the texts in his Crown could take weeks, or even months.

"I... I don't know." Solomon says. "I've asked all the other Heroes. Not many have a medical background. The best healing Heroes of the ancient past aren't actually present in this hall. We need... someone with a fresh perspective."

"What about Belial?" Arthur asks. "She might be able to heal the boy."

"We don't have a way to teleport in or out of the Hall of Heroes." Solomon answers. "I kept telling Hope to create a portal of some sort, but the brat just didn't listen..."

"Maybe his condition will improve over time." Hammurabi says, walking into the room. "Could he simply be exhausted from his battle with that pompous necromancer?"

"Maybe..." Solomon says, his tone betraying his lack of belief in that statement. "I don't think so, though."

The Heroes gathered around Hope exchange a few ideas, but since none of them specialize in medical science, nobody has any new ideas on how to help the Second Wordsmith.

Finally, Amelia throws her hands up in exasperation. "Well, what about the Volgrim? Remember? Hope took all those high-ranking Volgrim prisoners. Maybe one of them could help!"

Solomon frowns. "The Wordsmith's life is in a precarious situation. We don't know if merely getting some rest will restore his spirits. If we expose our situation to one of those prisoners, they could leverage the situation against us..."

"We have to do something." Amelia says through gritted teeth. "I'm not taking a chance on my fiance dying to some mysterious demon-disease. If there's even a chance one of the Volgrim can help, we're taking it."

Solomon exchanges a glance with Hammurabi, Solomon, and the other Heroes. They all nod along to Amelia's words.

"...very well." Solomon says quietly. "Arthur, Hammurabi, Amelia, with me. Let's see if those Volgrim can be of any use at all."

"Even if it's a mistake, we have to try our best to save the boy." Arthur says.

"I concur." Hammurabi concludes.

Part 525: Upgray'd Time

Instead of going directly to Phoebe, the Cybernite known as Rebecca walks around inside the factory on Tarus II, inspecting the warehouse to see how humanity creates its technology and assets. She and her cohorts take detailed scans of the well-crafted but otherwise technologically limited systems spanning throughout Phoebe's facility.

Hundreds of drones fly in and out of the warehouse through a large open section of cut-off roof on the structure's western side. These drones pick up materials and fly away, lifting a surprising amount for their small sizes. Despite each done only being about half the size of an average human body, they can lift more than two hundred pounds of metal, wood, brick, or other materials to fly them off to distant sites in need of repair.

Thanks to Mephisto, humanity has suffered a large level of devastation to its infrastructure. While the number of victims who fell to the Myriad Deity was zero, the fact most people lost their homes certainly doesn't make them feel any better. These drones are Phoebe's longstanding solution to building up humanity's infrastructure, and they work well enough for her purposes.

Rebecca casually plants a trojan virus on every single drone in sight using her superior mind-link technology. Not to alter their parameters, but merely to scrutinize their internal software and use them as makeshift spying drones. She intends to keep an eye on the drones to see how efficient they are at fulfilling their tasks.

In addition to the drones, plenty of men and women from various species work in the warehouse.

In the back, more than twenty gigantic materializers continue pumping out materials nonstop. Humans who have enhanced their bodies through the Body Boosters, as well as powerful monsters like Minotaurs, all heft large pallets of brick and steel, lifting these multi-ton loads without using any power equipment. Naturally, the biggest loads do require specialized equipment, but Rebecca still becomes impressed by how powerful the bodies of the humans around her are.

"How fascinating." A silver-haired Cybernite named Ryn says, her bright green eyes studying the facility carefully. "The physical parameters of these humans far exceed the expected maximum thresholds noted during the Energy Wars."

"That's right." Rebecca says, turning to her companion. "Have you not followed the Wordsmith's evolution?"

"Miss Becker assigned me to clean the ventilation shafts." Ryn says. "I did not pay attention to the outer galaxy."

"I see."

Rebecca turns away, feeling slightly dismayed. These Cybernites, while impressive entities in their own right, come from the very bottom of Marie Becker's elevated society. They are all highly intelligent and were once considered geniuses in their fields, but in the end they all became mere janitors or button-pressers due to a lack of opportunities in the Remnant Oasis.

With a shake of her head, Rebecca resumes her study of the facility.

Her irises rotate in a decidedly mechanical manner as she sweeps her head from side to side, easily penetrating any of the facility's security systems, be they technology-based or mundane. Even the so-called 'secret' underground base where the highest technology is being created doesn't evade her senses.

Rebecca might be at the bottom of the Cybernite hierarchy, but the technology contained within her body is vastly superior to anything Phoebe Hiro has produced. That thought even momentarily makes her feel a little sad, but the thought vanishes as she firms up her resolve to help uplift humanity further.

This is my chance to make something useful of my existence. Rebecca thinks. Long have I yearned for something beyond the cursory, useless drudgery of keeping watch over a barely-used portal facility. I can finally make something of myself!

She turns to look at Ryn, only to raise an eyebrow when she sees the other Cybernite standing right behind a man busily engaged in fabrication work. The man sits with his legs dangling over a small ledge, a soldering tool in one hand, and a small device of some sort in the other. So focused on his work is he that he doesn't even notice the silver-haired woman standing directly behind him, watching him with rapt attention.

"Ryn!" Rebecca hisses, embarrassed. She sneaks over, grabs her friend, and drags her away before the man can notice her presence. "What the heck are you doing?!"

Ryn blinks twice. "I was observing the male. His technical skills are flawed. I do not know why he uses such primitive technology to perform that task. Instead, he should use a materializer."

"That's because his technology isn't as good as the stuff we're used to using." Rebecca explains. "But more importantly, don't creep on people! Do you know how weird you would have looked if Phoebe had seen you?! She'd probably give us the stink-eye!"

"Why would her eye stink?" Ryn asks. "And why would she gift us such a strange item? Don't you think these biologicals act rather illogically?"

"It's a turn of phrase." Rebecca says, exhaling softly. She looks at her blank-eyed companion with dread, realizing Ryn is almost certainly going to cause a major diplomatic incident at some point. "Just... don't act weird, okay? I want to make a good impression and show off the genius of Marie Becker's proteges. We can't let ourselves look like fools in front of these primitive humans."

"I understand." Ryn says calmly. "Do not worry. My intellectual parameters are far beyond any biological on this planet."

"If only your social parameters were at a similar level..." Rebecca says gloomily.

Rebecca continues scouring the facility, but now she keeps a closer eye on Ryn and the other Cybernites, tensing up when they interact with the humans, monsters, and demons working in the facility.

I have to make Marie look good. Rebecca thinks. I may not be a genius like her, but even before I digitized myself, I was relatively intelligent. Ryn was, too. All of us were humanity's cream of the crop.

Her eyes momentarily turn wistful. She activates her long-term memory storage centers, recalling events from previously in her life.

Rebecca was 16 years old when she was accepted into the Ivy League. She was considered a national prodigy at the time, the top 1% of intellectuals. She made her family proud by not only graduating with perfect scores in all classes, but even acquiring a PHD in Artificial Intelligence Technologies.

By the time she was 24, she had been hired to work in a mid-level government position.

Before age 30, she had become an industry leader in overseeing black-level government projects. She even developed certain top-secret projects related to cryostasis.

She helped invent many life-preservation technologies, including the technology Marie Becker would use to create the Cybernites.

But compared to Ryn, even Rebecca has to admit she came up short. Born to a billionaire, taught by the world's greatest scientists and given any tutors she desired, Ryn could have lived life as a spoiled brat, but instead devoted herself to studying technologies related to positronic circuitry, top secret weapons, and mechanical bodies that would later form the basis of the Vanguards.

Both of them were once incredible figures capable of uplifting entire countries. But then the Energy Wars came and the true main character entered the arena.

Marie Becker completely upended the definition of 'genius.' It was as if she was born with the equivalent of Solomon's Crown for a brain. Some people with knowledge beyond the ordinary even surmised she might be a Lowborn Hero, if not a Trueborn outright.

But she wasn't.

Marie Becker was simply an ordinary human gifted with an extraordinary brain. Like a nuclear explosion of intelligence, she systematically overtook everyone else in the field of miniaturization. This in turn allowed her to make incredible gains by digitally enhancing her brain, which allowed her to progress even faster.

Had Marie been born a Technopath on Volgarius, none would doubt her capability of taking over Fourth Founder Cuanali's position as head of technology development.

Alas, she was only a human, and her enemies were too well-entrenched for her to defeat. But even beaten, she still outmaneuvered the Volgrim, putting them in a position where they couldn't kill her or humanity off. They wanted her expertise to live on. And when the Plague appeared, they needed her to remain relevant forever.

Nowadays, many of humanity's former greatest geniuses work in close proximity to Marie Becker as her trusted aides and confidantes. But for the so-called 'geniuses' like Rebecca and Ryn, those who weren't good enough to reach the peak of biological intelligence, they fell by the wayside.

That is why Rebecca finds herself hoping for a second chance to prove herself. Despite feeling proud of the woman who ultimately saved humanity, Rebecca would by lying if she claimed not to have developed an immutable inferiority complex.

She wants to surpass Marie Becker. That sensation of yearning never fades, no matter how many millennia pass...

* * *

After a good thirty minutes of surveying the facility, Rebecca is about to go looking for Phoebe Hiro when the woman of the hour shows up unexpectedly, walking directly toward Rebecca's cluster of Cybernites.

"Rebecca!" Phoebe chirps. "So good to see you. I didn't expect you for a few more days."

"Miss Becker decided a sense of urgency was important." Rebecca says after turning toward Phoebe. "Given the attack humanity sustained, you need all the help you can get."

"We're doing better than you might expect." Phoebe says. "I anticipated a giant death toll to go along with the devastated infrastructure, but it turns out Neil's preparations led to a far better war situation than I could have hoped for. We just need to rebuild, and we'll be right as rain."

A few seconds pass. Rebecca smiles weakly at Phoebe, but it appears obvious to the Wordsmith's Wife that the Cybernite has something she's hesitant to say.

"The situation is getting worse." Rebecca finally says, keeping her voice low while moving closer to Phoebe. "This month, the Volgrim lost more than 100 worlds. The Plague's advancement is slowly increasing over time. We suspect something has riled the Plague up, but we aren't certain what it could be."

Phoebe doesn't react outwardly to Rebecca's statement, but her stomach twists in worry.

"You're not certain." Phoebe says slowly. "But... surely you have some guesses."

"We do." Rebecca acknowledges. "And the predictions we've made are quite dire. Simply put... this speedup is recent. Very recent. Within the past two years, to be specific. And the most noteworthy thing that has happened in that time has been the heightening of the Wordsmith's movements, both Hope and Jason alike."

"No, that's not all..." Phoebe objects. "What about the uprising of Demon Deities? Space battles between the Volgrim and the Plague?"

"The thing is," Rebecca continues, "the Volgrim keep close tabs on the Plague. They also maintain detailed logs in their databases regarding major events within the Milky Way. Marie, naturally, keeps a close eye on those logs."

"And they let her?" Phoebe asks.

"It's not a matter of 'letting'." Rebecca explains. "It's more that they can't stop her intrusions even if they wanted. Marie is a much better technologist than all but the highest ranked Technopaths, and even if they narrowly edge her out in certain fields, it's only due to their chosen specification. In terms of well-roundedness, Marie Becker has virtually no flaws."

"She's like a jack of all trades..." Phoebe concludes.

"No, she's a master of all trades, but individually she might not reach the absolute apex in individual fields. On a numerical scale, she's a nine out of ten in all fields of technology. Even if one High Technopath is a ten in one field and Marie is only a nine, she's still beating that Technopath in every other field. That's because she was born a human, and humans are not ants. We don't specialize, we adapt and overcome."

Rebecca pauses.

"In any case, the issue we've uncovered is one of patterns. We've discovered that every time Jason has made a major move or performed a significant action, the Plague has stirred for a short time, as if it has become agitated. We are not certain why, but looking through the last twenty years of data, the pattern is unmistakable."

Rebecca's right eye glows blue. It beams out a holographic projection between herself and Phoebe, showing a spinning image of the Milky Way, along with a galactic date at the bottom.

"Volgrim Stardate 7.112.839.11, twenty years ago. You can see that each month, roughly ten to twenty planets fell to the Plague. A speed neither fast nor slow. There are, after all, hundreds of millions of habitable worlds in our galaxy."

The galaxy changes position ever so slightly.

"Volgrim Stardate 7.112.844.11, fifteen years ago. No discernable changes in the Plague's momentum, nor its rate of expansion."

"Ten years ago..."

"Eight years..."

"Six..."

Rebecca deliberately points out the yearly increments to prove the Plague's unchanging nature.

"Volgrim Stardate 7.112.853.06, six years ago. Specifically, three days after the Polaris Incident."

Phoebe sniffs and crinkles her nose. "After Hoarhiim destroyed Polaris's star in a supernova."

"That's right. Abruptly, that event seemed to cause some sort of reaction in the Plague. That month, fifty worlds fell. Nearly double the previous month's rate. A coincidental blip under ordinary circumstances, but an important data point nonetheless."

She continues to play out a series of events in the galaxy.

"Four years ago, the Volgrim launched a massive attack on a Plaguetouched World to try and wrest back control. This world was an extremely important black-level site, not unlike Moonbase Serris. They lost more than a thousand 6th Level Psions and half a dozen 7th Level Psions to the Plague on that day. They also lost one of their Executors..."

Rebecca shakes her head in dismay.

"It was a terrible loss. They failed to retake the world in the end. While those Psions did ultimately revive, the Plague gained the ability to copy and mimic their abilities. This drastically strengthened the Kolvaxian threat, and the repercussions are still being felt to that day."

She manipulates the galaxy map to show that month's activity.

"Despite such a major operation, which should have surely caused a rebound effect of some sort, the Plague's movements remained constant. Your husband, and his clone, have caused far more activity from the Plague than even one of the greatest invasions launched by the Volgrim in our era. Don't you find that odd?"

Phoebe's hands tremble. "Y-yes. I do. Have the Volgrim noticed?"

"Of course they have. Unarin may have even discovered this anomalous data-point before Marie Becker did. It's one of the reasons the Volgrim are hesitant to act hostilely toward you. They are not certain what connections the Wordsmiths have with the Plague, if any at all. And then there's this information that Gressil may be involved, while he was also the one who released your husband from his cryogenic chamber..."

Phoebe listens somberly to this shocking news. She pieces together a few clues of her own regarding various major moments that happened in only the last six months and why the Plague has accelerated faster and faster at its world-devouring speed. It seems that the Beelzebub detonation event also somehow caught the Plague's attention, but the moment Jason teleported all of humanity to Tarus II caused the greatest escalation of interest to date.

"How long until the Plague devours the entirety of the Milky Way?" Phoebe asks quietly.

"Oh, that's millions of years away." Rebecca says. "But the Kolvaxian scourge doesn't need to devour the entire galaxy to win the war. If it seizes all the resource-rich worlds, as well as Volgarius, the Volgrim lose. They could become a space-faring civilization, but the Plague is a massive organic entity, always evolving, always growing. Who knows what capabilities it might come to possess given time? Perhaps it will ultimately take to space to remove them from the equation once and for all."

Phoebe starts to interject, but Rebecca raises a finger. "And before you ask, traveling to other galaxies is not a realistic option. You don't want to know how outclassed the Volgrim are outside of their home turf. The Plague is comparable to a handful of soldiers in the inter-galactic scheme of power."

Phoebe simply nods. "I see. So ultimately, you're saying...?"

"I'm saying humanity is going extinct soon. So are the Cybernites, the Demons, the Monsters, and the Volgrim." Rebecca explains. "It's only a matter of time. We need to scale up our wartime capabilities. We need to fight back. Most importantly, we need a counter-measure. We need something that can defeat the Plague, or at least give us a fighting chance."

Rebecca turns off the glowing image of the Milky Way beaming from her iris.

"So, that's why I'm excited to come here. Helping humanity rebuild is fine and dandy, but we're going to need to go far beyond anything you've achieved to date. You might have managed to hold off a bottom-tier Cosmic, but Mephisto is nothing compared to a Plaguehost Executor. If one of those breaks past the frontlines and shows up on Tarus II, your species is dead."

"Our species." Phoebe corrects. "You might have a digitized body, but you were fully human once."

Rebecca shrugs. "I can accept that. Now that the pleasantries are out of the way and the existential dread is helping to motivate you to action, would you like to show me around and explain what you've been up to?"

"Don't you already know?" Phoebe scoffs. "Marie has microscopic spy drones everywhere."

"I know the broad strokes, but I'm not talking about the technology on Tarus II." Rebecca explains patiently. "I'm talking about you. Specifically, your philosophy and how it manifests in everything you design. The better I get to know you, the easier it will be for me to help you achieve your goals."

"I see. Then I'd be happy to show you around." Phoebe says with a smile. "And Jason is certainly going to want to talk to you."

"Where IS the First Wordsmith anyway?" Rebecca asks, quickly pivoting her head to look around. "I haven't been able to detect him since I arrived on Tarus II..."

"He's... I shouldn't say." Phoebe says, changing the topic quickly. "I'll leave it to him to tell you."

"So that's how it is!" Rebecca laughs. "Fine. Keep your secrets."

"I'll certainly try." Phoebe answers, though she can only assume any attempt at subterfuge will ultimately fail where Marie is involved.

Part 526: Down With the Sickness

Over the next several hours, Phoebe leads Rebecca and the Cybernites on a guided tour around her personalized warehouse and construction facility. Despite its rudimentary usage of high technology, it still is quite an impressive accomplishment for someone lacking formal technical training to have singlehandedly designed and constructed with only half a decade of time. Unlike Rebecca, Ryn, or any of the other Cybernites, Phoebe never attended a college or a technical university during her formative years. Furthermore, she didn't even properly interact with technology at all until metamorphosing back into a human from a monster nearly 100,000 years after her birth.

The fact the Phoebe has learned so much, so fast, is a testament to her innate genius!

"It's a shame..." Rebecca says, as Phoebe shows her a mockup for a human-shaped robot intended for excavating precious minerals from a mine at the southern side of the city. "If you had been available during the Energy Wars, you might have been able to assist Marie Becker properly. Humanity might have stood a real chance of winning the war."

"That's kind of you to say." Phoebe says with a smile. "But you and I both know that isn't true. The Volgrim never deployed a Psion stronger than the 6th Level in that war. No matter how grand our technology, we could not have defeated an empire with essentially unlimited resources, multiple powerful Cosmics, and hundreds of armadas of warships at their disposal."

Rebecca's enthusiasm slips. "Yeah... I suppose you're right. It felt to me at the time like we were teetering on the brink of success and failure, but perhaps we never truly had a chance in the first place."

She shakes her head and sighs.

"...Anyway. I'm impressed by the solutions you've come up with in so short a time, but the technical limitations and lack of access to high quality schematics has really hampered your expansionary efforts."

"In what ways specifically?" Phoebe asks.

Instead of immediately answering, Rebecca turns to her silver-haired friend, Ryn.

Ryn blinks, realizing she's been designated as the explanation-giver.

"The first issue we have identified has to do with the algorithms you have designed for the Materializers." Ryn says, in that matter-of-fact semi-robotic way she always does. "In order to create matter from energy, you need a vast amount of energy, but also algorithms tailor-made for transforming that energy efficiently into the matter you desire. The issue is, your algorithms are sloppy and sub-par."

Phoebe winces. "...That bad?"

"Ahem, uh, don't mind Ryn." Rebecca says, quickly jumping in. "She's a bit too blunt at times, but she knows her stuff."

"Alright. But what is the problem specifically?" Phoebe asks. "I don't follow."

Ryn motions with her hand, conjuring a series of complicated-looking mathematical proofs to levitate in the air through a holographic projector in her palm.

"The compression algorithms you are using for your Materializers are rudimentary, inefficient, and all are general purpose. As an example, how long does it take you at present to create one kilogram of material?"

Phoebe shrugs. "I believe it takes 50 seconds per kilogram. But some materials are easier to generate, others are harder. A kilogram of gold requires one and a half minutes, while Plutonium requires nearly three minutes."

"That is the dilemma you face when you use inefficient algorithms for compression." Ryn explains. "The reason it takes you so long to generate materials is because you have failed to create specialized compression algorithms for each type of material you need to generate, and the general-purpose algorithm you're using is broadly inefficient."

"Let's put this another way." Rebecca helpfully explains. "If you want to generate a kilogram of gold, you shouldn't use the same energy compression algorithm you'd use for Iron or Plutonium. Their energy requirements, periodic stability, and elemental attributes are all vastly different. Furthermore, the Materializers themselves should be shaped to generate specific types of materials. In this way, a 50 second per kilogram creation time could be reduced to 25 seconds, 10 seconds, 5 seconds, or perhaps even fewer!"

Phoebe gasps. "Such a drastic efficiency increase! Of course! I should have thought of that! I'm just so swamped with too many projects, I don't have time to delve into any of them in depth."

"Well, that's why we're here." Rebecca says, patting Phoebe's shoulder with a smile. "The other advantage of a more efficient algorithm is a drastic decrease in energy needed to produce a material. This means instead of using your current energy production methods to power a mere twenty Materializers, you could easily output enough energy for forty, fifty, or even a hundred Materializers, all while producing those materials ten times faster! It's a win-win."

Phoebe dramatically slaps her face. "I feel so silly now. I can't believe I overlooked this obvious solution."

"Even Marie Becker needed the assistance of other intellectually gifted people to accelerate her plans." Ryn states emotionlessly. "You are no different in that sense."

"Well, how much time would it take for you to help me update my Materializers?" Phoebe asks.

"Not long. A week or two at most." Rebecca says. "To be honest, we'd get even better results if we rebuilt them from the ground up, but that could take months. We definitely don't have that much time to waste. We need to catch humanity up to the Volgrim ASAP."

Suddenly, from behind the three women, a male voice speaks. "I certainly agree with that statement."

Rebecca turns around and nods at the unexpected visitor. "Jason! You finally..."

She pauses.

Rebecca gazes at the man standing before her, allowing her eyes to flick across his body, clearly seeing something others might not notice.

"...This is not your physical body." Rebecca says, after a moment of contemplation. "This is a robotic drone-body."

"What makes you say that?" Jason asks. "Maybe I turned myself into a Cybernite, just like you."

"That would be a foolish choice." Rebecca says. "As a Hero, your connection to your biological self is extremely important. Turning yourself into a Cybernite would be extremely likely to result in the immediate and permanent loss of your Wordsmithing. Meta-abilities are incapable of transferring to a digitized self."

Jason walks over and hugs his wife with one arm while continuing to smile at Rebecca. "Alright, you caught me there. This is just a drone-body. Can't be too cautious, these days."

"Then where is your... real body?" Rebecca asks, while also immediately tapping into the Dronesmith's central CPU to try and pinpoint Jason's location.

She fails, discovering in the process that whatever method Jason is using to control the Dronesmith isn't based on mundane technology, but something more magical in nature.

"I... can show you." Jason says hesitantly, while glancing around the room. "But it's sort of a big secret."

"I see. Then just take me there." Rebecca says. "Ryn, you stay here with Phoebe and start getting to work on updating her Materializers."

"Okay." Ryn replies, not adding anything else of note.

Jason gestures to Rebecca, his hand motion indicating for her to wait a moment. He turns and looks at his wife lovingly, and the two of them stare into each other's eyes for five long seconds.

Rebecca gets the impression it isn't a simple lovey-dovey moment. They must be communicating in secret. As for what they're saying to each other, she hasn't a clue.

Jason eventually leans down to give his wife a kiss, then he walks over to Rebecca's side.

"This will only take a second." Jason says.

An instant later, Rebecca's sensors detect a micro-burst of quantum energy. She vanishes from her position and materializes inside a pitch black void.

Rebecca blinks. Something seems to envelop her body, bind her limbs, and prevent her from sensing the world around herself.

"One moment, Rebecca." Jason says, his voice transmitting into her ear. "I have to take every precaution to validate your identity before I allow you inside my secret base."

Rebecca remains silent. She detects powerful scanning beams as they pulse into her body, massaging her biological and mechanical innards, until the scanners stop a few seconds later.

Abruptly, a helmet snaps upward and away from her head, while the restraints on her body also fully loosen, allowing her to breathe the fresh air of... someplace she's never been before.

Rebecca finds herself inside an underground complex of some sort, a place with all the scanning beams she already surmised about, as well as two dozen 'isolation pods' designed to snap up new arrivals and immobilize them until their identities have been verified. The harsh blue lights above give this complex a sterile feeling, as if she's entered a prison's medical ward.

"What a warm welcome." She says dryly, turning to look at the real Jason, standing just ten feet away. Beside Jason stands his mind-wife, Fiona, her body appearing nearly as corporeal as his.

"Welcome to Chrona." Jason says, extending a hand toward her. "Sorry for the rough arrival. I try to take as many precautions as I can."

"That's a good policy." Rebecca says, reaching out to shake Jason's hand. "Chrona, you say? I haven't heard that world's name before."

Jason chuckles. "Haha. Well, Chrona is pretty unique in the Milky Way. I'm not surprised you haven't seen it before. Let's go topside and see what you think."

Rebecca nods. She, Jason, and Fiona all step inside a nearby elevator and ride it upward. At the same time as they engage in pleasantries, Rebecca tries to communicate with Marie Becker, but she finds that all of her communication tools have failed simultaneously. In fact, she has lost contact with the greater galaxy at large; an alarming find under more stressful situations, but one that only causes her to frown slightly in this case.

"Your ability to suppress my communications technology is impressive." Rebecca says, directing a frown at Jason. "Nobody has managed to do that to Marie's work before."

"What do you mean?" Jason asks.

"My transponders have all failed to link-up with the quantum nodes Marie and the Volgrim placed across the Milky Way. In theory, so long as we remain within the galactic sphere, I should be able to maintain contact in at least some minor way. Perhaps if 'Chrona' were located beyond our galaxy's sphere of control, or at its very outer edges, that might not be the case. But if so, then your ability to transport me tens of thousands of lightyears in a single second is genuinely impressive."

Jason clears his throat. "Err, ahem, it's not quite like that. But I think you'll figure everything out once we reach the surface."

Jason and Fiona remain silent while Rebecca continues to puzzle over the matter. As the elevator races upward, it doesn't take long before her iris modules become fully capable of piercing the dirt and soil above, allowing her to finally peer up at the sky through several different bands of the light spectrum. She frowns at the immediate lack of stellar radiation, as well as the revelation that not one bit of cosmic background noise is present.

"This... is a special dimension? Like the Labyrinth?" Rebecca asks.

The elevator comes to a stop. Fiona gently squeezes Rebecca's arm. "Something like that, yep."

The elevator door opens, allowing the trio to step out into the fresh air. A false sun beams down from the sky above, warming Chrona's surface. But the colorless void around it, as well as the lack of an atmosphere, means that the void still appears as black as a pitcher of ink. Not one star twinkles above, a fact Rebecca has already come to notice. Furthermore, the 'spinning' vortex in the sky gives the illusion she has stepped inside the eye of a gentle hurricane, one that revolves around the planet slowly.

It takes Rebecca no time at all to uncover the truth.

She turns to look at Jason with a deep-set frown.

"This is a special dimension. According to my internal chronometer, it is also a time-accelerated realm. I am rapidly losing sync with the exterior galaxy."

Jason nods. "Yeah. Good intuition, Rebecca. This is Chrona. It operates at two hundred and fifty times the speed of the outer galaxy."

Rebecca flinches. "What?! That fast? Don't you realize how dangerous such an extreme time dilation ratio is?!"

"Dangerous?" Jason repeats.

"What do you mean?" Fiona asks. "Everything is going fine inside here."

"Yes..." Rebecca says slowly, as her eyes peer more closely at Jason's body. She rapidly scans his cellular makeup, and a look of dismay crosses her face. "In here, there won't be a problem. The issue is that you should never set foot in the outer galaxy again... otherwise, a swift and agonizing death will surely befall you."

Inside the Hall of Heroes, King Solomon, Hammurabi, Arthur, and Amelia make their way into a secret corner of Hope Hiro's specialized temporal realm. There, they find a teleportation matrix that jumps them from the main body of the Hall of Heroes into a far larger sub-dimension more than a hundred times bigger in size.

This dimension houses the elite Volgrim Hope Hiro captured when he destroyed Moonbase Serris. It is a place where those Volgrim are kept in stasis, unable to move, think, or act of their own free volition. They remain trapped inside dreamless comas, their sense of time passing by instantly while the outer galaxy proceeds on its course without them.

Walls and walls of stasis pods sit attached to the walls, with many levels of those pods stacked on top of one another, and even more columns going across the central floor to create a library-like illusion of endless corridors.

Each pod houses just one Volgrim. And yet, Amelia couldn't count the ones in sight even if she tried. The sickly green lighting in the Stasis Prison gives her an alien feeling unrelated to the Volgrim themselves...

But Amelia shows no compassion for these creatures. She has already heard from Hope about the morbid experiments they inflicted upon her fellow humans, so she doesn't care if they 'suffer' inside their pods. If anything, it's more like a vacation for them, one where they don't have to work and slave away for their Empire all day, every day.

The three Heroes, and the former Black Queen, all make their way down the seemingly endless rows of stasis pods stacked up to the ceiling. Amelia knows well that despite how many pods are in this one facility, there are even more levels above and below with countless Volgrim stuffed inside, all rendered helpless by the Wordsmith's power.

Solomon quickly leads the group to one specific pod, placed seemingly at random amidst the wall of others identical to it. He lowers this stasis pod from three layers above down to the floor through the use of an automated mechanical arm. When the pod reaches the floor level, he holds up a palm, informing everyone to take a few steps back.

Its occupant is considered extremely dangerous, after all.

A moment later, Solomon positions himself directly in front of the pod, his expression grim as it begins to hiss and sputter, popping open to reveal a female Technopath with heavily armored legs made of Living Moldanium. She stands with her eyes closed while the stasis wears off, then her eyes snap open to reveal a cunning edge seen only in ancient monsters from a long-lost age.

The Technopath says nothing for a moment. She merely directs a burning gaze toward Solomon, then the other three, then the facility around her.

"You. Solomon of Jerusalem. Knowledge-Seeker." She says calmly, glaring at him with eyes that seem capable of melting obsidian.

"Psymin Miralax. A Celestial Designer." Solomon says carefully. "My apologies for keeping you in stasis. Hope Hiro was not sure what to do with you following your capture."

Psymin blinks. She cocks her head slightly while attempting to transmit a wide-beam data-ping.

The effort fails.

"My location. Unknown. Imprisonment duration. Unknown. Release requirements. Unknown."

"That is why I wanted to speak to you." Solomon says carefully. "I believe I may require your assistance. If you can help me, I will be open to… negotiations."

"Refuse." Psymin immediately states. "You are my enemy. I do not work. With enemy."

Amelia's heart skips a beat. "Wait! Please, we really need your help!"

Solomon quickly holds up a hand. He doesn't even look at Amelia, merely silencing her with his palm. "We are willing to pay remunerations. You will not be at a disadvantage."

"Return me." Psymin says, her tone icy. "To Serris. Immediately."

A brief instant passes. Solomon gazes at her quietly, then lowers his eyes.

"I'm afraid I cannot do that."

"Why not?"

"Because… Serris is gone. Hope Hiro destroyed it."

Psymin does not react with even the slightest hint of surprise, as if having guessed this was what happened already.

"Foolish. Serris was important. Essential. Those projects. Classified. Experiments. Intention. Stop the Plague. You've doomed us."

"You underestimate the Wordsmiths." Solomon says quietly. "We will find a way to defeat the Plague, given time. But while you and I speak, one of the Wordsmiths is suffering. He needs your help. If the Wordsmiths fall, the Plague will win. It's that simple."

Psymin glowers at Solomon. "You. Manipulator. I will not succumb. Mind tricks."

Her robot voice grates on the ears of those present. Amelia winces as she realizes Solomon is making no headway in swaying her resolve. What Hope did to Serris likely ruined any chances of working with the Celestial Designer in the future.

Before Solomon can speak again, Arthur steps forward. He gently pushes Solomon aside, though the Knowledge-Seeker doesn't offer any resistance. Solomon almost seems happy to let his friend intervene.

"Psymin Miralax. I am Arthur Pendragon. Once considered the mightiest of humanity's Heroes." Arthur says, speaking with a mixture of authority and humility. "But in the end, I am merely a man. One man cannot save the galaxy. This is true of not only me, but your First Founder and our Wordsmiths too. It is true the Second Wordsmith is but a boy. He is hot-headed and prone to making mistakes. But don't you think working with him has a higher chance of pushing back the Plague than working alone, separated?"

"You. Killers." Psymin says, not backing down. "I will not assist."

"Do you wish to pretend the barbarism Hope witnessed on Serris was fully justified?" Arthur asks while crossing his arms and puffing out his chest. "Torturous experiments. Vile practices. He took revenge in a fit of rage, yet he still preserved the core of your power. You yet draw breath, as do your elites. Working with us will grant you leverage to free them. Are you certain you wish to stubbornly cling to the past when the future before you appears so dire?"

Finally, Psymin hesitates. She glances between Arthur and Solomon, uncertain of what to say. Unlike her lauded First Founder, Psymin is but a technologist who has solely focused on researching innovative new technologies. In the art of wordplay, she is nowhere near Unarin's equal, let alone the ancient Heroic figures arrayed before her.

To say nothing of her body, disfigured by an ancient accident, a battle involving machines capable of destroying the galaxy. She has spent no time at all learning how to properly communicate with others, and so, her ability to read other people's intentions, particularly those of non-Volgrim species, comes up quite lackluster.

"I..."

Psymin continues to hesitate, not sure of what to say. At that moment, Hammurabi steps forward.

"Harrumph! Listen here, lauded Celestial Designer. I am Hammurabi, the oldest of those before you. I am Solomon's master, and Arthur's grand-master. I pledge upon the honor of my heroic spirit that if you help us, we will help you too. Hope Hiro possesses the ability to terraform planets. It is conceivable he may even be able to remake planets anew. Rebuilding Serris is within reason. I will command the boy to recreate Serris as it was before, but even better. We will find... acceptable alternatives for your experiments to ensure no humans suffer in the way you tortured them, while granting you the ability to continue advancing your goals. We must work together to defeat the Plague, after all!"

"I'm Hope's fiance." Amelia adds. "I can't promise much, but if you help us save Hope, I'll make sure he helps you back!"

Psymin's expression softens slightly. She continues to gaze at the four humans with distrustful eyes, but considering her precarious situation, she lacks bargaining power.

She ultimately relents, lowering her arms to her sides while exhaling softly.

"Very well. Take me. To the Wordsmith. I will look. Investigate. But. You must. Keep your promise."

"Worry not." Solomon quickly replies. "Heroes never go back on their words."

"I hope not." Psymin counters.

* * *

Some time later, the Heroes and Amelia lead Psymin into the Hall of Heroes. As they travel, Psymin's acute eyes observe every nook and cranny she passes. She senses the spiritual energy in the air, and observes many Heroes milling about the corridors, piecing together plenty of clues regarding her current location.

"This location. Time accelerated?"

Solomon nods. "That's correct. The Hall of Heroes exists in a state of quantum acceleration, roughly 100 times faster than the outside galaxy."

"I contemplate. I comprehend."

Psymin says nothing else as they lead her to the hospital ward, where Hope lays motionless on the bed, barely sucking in slow breaths while remaining fully comatose, unable to awaken.

"We can't figure out what's happened to him." Solomon explains. "After he teleported back to the Hall of Heroes, he collapsed. He's been like this ever since."

Solomon quickly rattles off all of Hope's symptoms, detailing as many possible factors as he can while also informing Psymin of the battle against Mephisto.

"...which is why we suspect Mephisto must have struck him with some sort of poisonous necrotic energy. But we can't find any evidence of such a thing." Solomon concludes.

Psymin reaches out her hand. She touches the top of Hope's head for roughly two seconds, then pulls it back.

"My surprise. Unimaginable." Psymin says, turning to Solomon. "You. Unaware? His condition. Obvious. You. Stolen knowledge. Yet ignorant?"

Solomon blinks. "I don't follow what you're saying. Are you implying I should know what is causing Hope's condition?"

"Yes. Obvious. His condition. Time Dilation Sickness."

Solomon flinches when he hears Psymin's words. "What? Time Dilation- that's... one moment."

The Knowledge Seeker abruptly vanishes. He disappears from his position, teleports inside of his Crown, and begins rapidly scrolling through the infinite library of files he has compiled from the brains of all the High Volgrim. It doesn't take him long to uncover dozens of top secret documents, memory fragments, and scattered pieces of knowledge referencing this specific condition.

He instantly reappears before Psymin with a look of shock.

"Time Dilation Sickness! I hadn't heard of this until just now, but it's a real thing! It's a phenomena experienced by those who travel from higher to lower dilation speeds within short periods of time!"

"This condition." Psymin states quietly. "Typically lethal. Hope Hiro. Lucky to be alive. Healing him? Difficult."

Solomon nods sagely. "Difficult, indeed..."

Rebecca stands over Blinker's hospital bed, gazing at the fairy with a look of dismay. Jason and Fiona stand on either side of her, while Kar sits across the bed, looking up at Rebecca with hopeful eyes.

"It's as I feared." Rebecca says quietly. "She's suffering from Time Dilation Sickness. This is a deadly condition that typically kills those who suffer from it. But the good news is, Blinker did not expose herself to the lower dimensions for too great a time. As the Monster Queen, her body is also extremely hardy compared to those of other mortals. She will recover, but it will require a great deal of time for her body to re-acclimate to the higher dimensional speeds of Chrona."

Jason massages his forehead in worry. "I don't understand. I thought everything was going fine! I live inside Chrona without any issues!"

"That's the thing. You're not applying a proper analogy to the situation." Rebecca explains. "Let me put it this way. Think of higher and lower time dilation ratios as being different levels of gravity, or perhaps atmospheric pressures. The faster the time dilation, the 'lighter' the pressure. Humans who were born in space often have softer bones and weaker bodies than those born on planets with gravity. If a spacefarer attempts to live on a planet, they can die from gravitic pressures, an inability to pump blood due to their weakened heart, and other such issues. The higher the gravity, the more deadly the effect."

Fiona quickly picks up on the analogy. "If someone from Earth travels to space, they won't have much issue. A strong body can cope with a lighter gravitic pressure, no problem. But the opposite is not true."

"Exactly." Rebecca replies. "In the same way, a surface-dwelling human cannot travel and live freely in the deepest depths of an ocean. If they tried, their bodies would explode from the pressure. Now that you and these other people have adapted to living inside a 250x-accelerated time dilation index, you cannot easily return to normalspace. It would be like teleporting into the deepest depths of the ocean. You'd most likely die immediately."

Kar chuffs fearfully. "Then... why did Butterfly live? Is it only because her body is so strong?"

"Yes. But that was only a temporary measure. You can forcibly resist Time Dilation Sickness by virtue of sheer bodily power, but attempting to do so will not leave you uninjured. You will still suffer on some level, as Blinker is suffering now."

Rebecca smiles.

"Blinker is lucky. She will recover. She merely needs to re-acclimate to the time dilation index of Chrona. Once she does, she will be just fine. But unfortunately, the same is not true for the rest of you..."

Rebecca pokes a finger against Jason's chest. "You are weak in body. If you had been the one to leave Chrona, you might have perished immediately. Kar and Blinker's children, likewise, were born inside Chrona and have already fully adapted to its environment. They will not simply die if they enter the physical world; they may even implode due to the temporal pressure around them, transforming into a micro-singularity and disappearing an instant later."

Kar's eyes practically pop out of his head. "Hurgh! That sounds awful! What the heck, Little Orchid! Are you telling me my babies are stuck here?"

"I'm afraid I am, Kar." Rebecca says consolingly, walking around to pat his scaled shoulder. "But... as long as you live inside Chrona, you won't have any troubles. This dimension is so isolated, the Plague probably won't be able to find it. It would make for a solid backup base, a fallback location in case the Milky Way becomes fully compromised."

Jason's eyes darken. "Only if I want to damn humanity like I've damned myself. Anyone I bring here won't be able to leave or their freaking bodies will implode. That's really fucked-up, Rebecca. I'll have to find other solutions."

"What about the Cube?" Fiona asks. "It has much lower TDR's than Chrona. Lower TDRs should mean less chance of suffering from Time Dilation Sickness, right?"

"That's a fair point." Rebecca says, somewhat hesitantly. "We have a Time Dilation Zone that exists at a ratio of 1:4 inside the Remnant Oasis. You might remember it, Jason, as it's where Kar's people, and the Lizardmen, lived. The lower the TDR, the less likely one is to suffer from major effects of Time Dilation Sickness."

"Maybe I could find a way to decelerate someone from Chrona's insane 250x speed to something more like 200x, then 150x, 100x, and so on, until they can return to normalspace." Jason suggests.

"It's worth a shot, but the Volgrim have done plenty of tests with time acceleration in the ancient past. It won't go as well as you'd expect." Rebecca says.

Jason falls silent. So do the others.

"I'll have to keep using the Dronesmith for now." Jason says quietly. "I originally used it so I could stay inside Chrona but maintain a presence in realspace. But now, it seems the Dronesmith is my only link to realspace. And that means... I can't bring Phoebe here. I'd subject her and the baby to Time Dilation Sickness if they ever wanted to leave. She wouldn't like that."

"But you can't leave to go and see her." Fiona says quietly, only now realizing the weight of the situation.

"That's right." Jason mutters. "I can't see my wife in person. I can't leave here to hold my son. I can't bring them here, either, or else they would have to stay here forever. In short... Phoebe and I... can't be together anymore. Not physically, at least."

A somber mood takes the Wordsmith's mind.

Jason gazes ahead blankly, feeling as if a planet has just fallen upon his shoulders, one he has no choice but to bear its weight, much like Atlas holding up the Earth.

"This changes everything for me." Jason says softly.

Part 527: Diablo's Offensive

Somewhere inside the Labyrinth, a thousand miles from the Core, in a remote area few entities visit...

"Move, move, move! Let's go! Hurry it up! We're on a tight time-table!"

Hundreds of demons rush down a hallway, cramming into it so tightly they constantly bump and jostle one another as they hurry along, following behind one of their newly crowned Emperors, a product of Glinch's pills.

Those hundreds of demons become thousands, then tens of thousands. They pour down the hallway unceasingly, like a dam that has burst and sent a flood of red pouring into an unsuspecting desert. Grunts and Lords alike intermingle, with many groups led by a few Barons, and a few even find some Dukes at the front alongside their Emperor-level commanders.

They all converge on a single room where one Demon Emperor in particular maintains his focus, conjuring more than thirty portals in a large circle around himself.

Yardrat, Emperor of the Void, exhales and inhales heavily as many different corridors leading from all the different paths from all the remaining Hells pour into this designated makeshift portal facility, where his portals allow the demonic army to travel from the Labyrinth of Hell to the distant world of Numaria.

For five long hours, Yardrat continuously sustains his portals, allowing no fewer than fifty million demons from all levels of power to travel to the distant world. Eventually, his agony ceases. The last stragglers stream into the last portal, allowing him to finally slump to his butt and cough profusely, exhausted from the ordeal.

Five minutes later, an ethereal demon levitates toward him, smiling kindly.

"Well done, Yardrat. I wasn't sure if you could hold out."

Yardrat tries to lift his palm to wipe his forehead, but he fails miserably. His arms refuse to follow his commands, acting as if someone has chained ten-ton weights to his wrists.

"I... cough! Diablo, I'm still... I'm too exhausted. I'll need time to recover."

"I anticipated as much." Diablo says, his ghostly body shimmering for a split-second. With a flourish of his hand, he produces a shiny while marble of crystallized mana from nowhere. "Swallow this. It's a condensed drop of Cosmic Energy. It should speed up your recovery."

Yardrat blinks his weary eyes. He gazes at that white marble with a hint of apprehension.

"C-cosmic energy? But... can I even handle such a small amount?"

"It's benign." Diablo answers. "I tested it on Emperor Fae. Your stomach will hurt for a while, but it will greatly expedite your mana recovery. We need your abilities the most, so don't delay."

Yardrat grimaces, then nods his head. He opens his mouth, allowing Diablo to pop the pill inside, then he swallows it. Ten seconds later, Yardrat screams in pain as the tiny droplet of Diablo's Archdemon power begins to tear apart and heal his muscles, bones, ligaments, and blood vessels, all while providing him with a massive burst of demonic energy at the same time.

"Aaaargh!!"

He curls into a fetal position, crying out in pain, while Diablo only watches for a few moments.

"It'll hurt for a bit, but the pain won't last long. When you're fully recovered, meet me on Numaria. I'm going to finish outfitting the army while we wait."

Diablo's ghostly body disappears, leaving Yardrat to writhe on the ground, screaming and crying like an injured bear. Fortunately, nobody else remains in the area to witness his miserable appearance.

* * *

On the world of Numaria, fifty million demon soldiers stand in loosely organized regiments, lacking the level of discipline humanity's soldiers possess, yet outnumbering them in both quantity and average levels of power. In a mass of demons this large, Lords find themselves mingling with their lessers more than they would prefer, having to chit-chat with mere Grunts while they wait for the next phase of this sudden 'emergency operation' announced by the newly crowned Leader of the Seven Hells, Emperor Diablo.

Everyone has already heard through word of mouth the news regarding Diablo's unexpected return. Now fully in control of the Archdemon, calling him by the title of mere 'Emperor' seems somewhat underwhelming, especially when the lesser demons hear even more rumors regarding how he scared off the Second Founder of Volgrimkind, as well as how he trashed the supposed almighty Myriad Deity.

Once the massive army witnesses Diablo's full majesty in person, they learn that the rumors did not do him justice. The true body of the Archdemon is so unfathomably massive and mighty that they feel like ants beneath a skyscraper. They gaze up at the eyeless, hundred-legged Archdemon with worshiping gazes filled with awe and reverence.

"Archdemon!" One demon gasps under his breath. "If Diablo were to call himself the second strongest Deity in the galaxy, who would dare call themselves the first?!"

"Heh, certainly not Mephisto." Another demon chuckles. "Never did like that sniveling necromancer. Diablo is a true leader. He knows what it means to stomp on our enemies."

"Seems our species is about to finally get our face back." The first demon sneers. "Nobody will call us the weakest anymore."

This conversation, and many others like it, play out across the unending hordes. Despite the size of the army assembled before Diablo's voluminous form, it pales in comparison to the number of demons inside all the Hells. Trillions more await in the back wings, many scattered across demonkind's controlled worlds, while just as many live within the Labyrinth itself.

The fifty million assembled today are little more than an initial strike force destined to set the stage for the future war...

Abruptly, the Archdemon straightens his posture. The massive creature tilts its head down to look at the peons clamoring at its feet.

"SILENCE."

Instantly, all words cease. The sheer power behind Diablo's voice causes the weakest willed demons to clam up in fear, while their more mentally formidable compatriots fall silent out of awe and respect; a stark contrast between the two types of warriors assembled.

"TODAY, WE BEGIN A NEW CHAPTER." Diablo says, his voice thundering softly into the ears and minds of those listening. "TODAY, WE WILL ENTER THE GALACTIC STAGE IN SUCH A WAY THAT ALL OTHER SPECIES IN THE MILKY WAY WILL LEARN TO FEAR US ONCE AGAIN."

"THE HUMANS HAVE THEIR WORDSMITHS. THE MONSTERS HAVE THEIR KING AND QUEEN. THE VOLGRIM HAVE THEIR FOUNDERS."

"NOW. THE DEMONS HAVE ME. AND I AM WORTH MORE THAN ALL THE OTHERS COMBINED. BECAUSE I HAVE AN ABILITY NONE OF THEM DO..."

Diablo's tentacles writhe hungrily. Their heads snap upward, as if biting at the air around them.

"I... CAN DEVOUR THE PLAGUE."

Some of the more well-informed demons blink in surprise. Aside from a chunk of demonkind's highest Emperors, none have heard this information yet. And when it comes to the lower demons, particularly the Grunts and Lords, they don't really have an idea of how strong the 'Plague' even is. They've only heard second and third-hand accounts regarding the fate which ultimately befell Sharmur...

"Diablo can... eat the Plague?" One random Lord whispers. "Like, chew it up?"

"Shut up! Let him talk!" An adjacent demon hisses.

"IN FOUR HOURS, WE WILL ATTACK." Diablo explains calmly. "THE PLAGUE SEIZED CONTROL OF SHARMUR. WE WILL RECLAIM THAT WHICH ONCE BELONGED TO US."

"BUT SHARMUR... IS ONLY THE BEGINNING. ANOTHER WORLD WILL FOLLOW SOON AFTER. AND ANOTHER. AND YET ANOTHER..."

The Archdemon holds out his palm, extending one finger after another for emphasis, the size of his hands symbolically emphasizing the scale of the attack he is planning.

"THIS ACHIEVEMENT WOULD NOT BE POSSIBLE WITHOUT ME. BUT MY POWER WOULD NOT BE POSSIBLE WITHOUT OUR GREAT LEADER, THE FIRST EMPEROR." Diablo explains. "AND I AM INCAPABLE OF TAKING BACK OUR GALAXY ALONE. THAT IS WHERE THE REST OF YOU COME INTO PLAY. OVER THE COMING DAYS, WEEKS, AND MONTHS, THOSE OF YOU WHO HAVE PROVEN YOURSELVES WILL GAIN THE RIGHT TO BE..... ELEVATED."

Diablo points randomly into the crowd, as if picking out random Grunts, Lords, and Barons with specific intent.

"WILL IT BE YOU? OR YOU? OR PERHAPS EVEN A WEAKLING LIKE YOU? SOME OF OUR FALLEN BROTHERS AND SISTERS HAVE GONE TO LICK THE HEELS OF THE WORDSMITHS LIKE BROKEN HELLHOUNDS. BUT THE DEMONS SELECTED TODAY ARE NOT AMONG THOSE TRAITORS. NO LONGER WILL DEMONKIND ALLOW THEIR ILK TO WALK AMONG OUR RANKS. ONLY THOSE LOYAL TO THE ARCHDEMON WILL BE GRANTED THE PRIVILEGE OF A RAPID ASCENSION TO THE RANK OF BARON, DUKE, AND EVEN EMPEROR."

Diablo crosses his massive arms, standing proudly like a King before a group of antsy villagers.

"THE WORDSMITH'S FAVORS COME WITH A CONDITION. THAT CONDITION IS THAT YOU HUMILIATE YOURSELVES BEFORE HIM. TO BENEFIT FROM HIS BOONS, YOU MUST BE WILLING TO STATE THAT YOU ARE LESS THAN A MERE HUMAN. BUT THAT IS NOT TRUE. WE ARE DEMONS! WE EXISTED FOR THOUSANDS OF YEARS BEFORE HUMANS STOPPED FLINGING FECES AT ONE ANOTHER. WE RULED OVER HUMANS FOR 100,000 YEARS FOLLOWING THE ENERGY WARS. THEIR RECENT RISE IS MERELY A BLIP ON THE TIMELINE. AND NOW, IT IS TIME TO CRUSH THEM."

Diablo slowly, dramatically, raises a palm above his head. He slashes downward with his fingers, raking their air like a panther tearing at a tree. Four gashes appear in the air before him, revealing the interior of the Labyrinth.

"FOR TOO LONG, THE HUMANS HAVE BELIEVED THEMSELVES MORE THAN OUR EQUALS; OUR SUPERIORS. THAT ENDS TODAY."

The four tears in space coalesce into one giant spatial rip, revealing a familiar sight to countless demons.

The Labyrinth Core, now filled with humans, monsters, and demons Diablo considers traitors.

Those entities all look up in horror as their eyes fall upon the horrifying visage of the Archdemon, a sight not one of them has ever seen in their lives. The massive entity sneers as his head pivots to face the lesser life forms looking at him in abject terror.

"AFRAID? YOU SHOULD BE. YOUR ERA OF CONQUEST LASTED SIX YEARS TOO LONG FOR MY LIKING..."

A blood-red glow begins to emanate from Diablo's gigantic body. It travels from the ground, up through his tentacles, into the core of his body, then finally culminates in a rapidly spiraling ball he clenches in his upright palm.

"THE LABYRINTH OF HELL IS NOT FOR TINY LITTLE HUMANS, BUT FOR THE GLORY OF DEMONKIND!!" Diablo roars!

He throws that ball of red energy through the gap, and it explodes inside the center of the Labyrinth like a nuclear bomb.

Boom.

A silent detonation occurs as the energy rapidly expands outward, traveling throughout all the Labyrinth's corridors, past its smallest and largest chambers, all the way until it reaches the farthest expanses of the Hell Network.

When the dust settles, the humans inside the Labyrinth Core touch their chests, their arms, and their legs with great trepidation.

None of them appear injured. None of them have died.

Despite the strange exotic power contained within that orb, nothing seems to have happened to them at all.

But as for the demons, those touched by the power of the Wordsmiths, those who have partaken of the Belial Booster or the other tools made by Jason Hiro, they all collapse to their knees and begin shrieking in fear.

"Aaahhh!! Gone! It's gone!"

"What happened?! Why have I...?!"

"Suff...ocating! Can't... can't breathe! UGH!!"

Alarmed, the humans still inside the Core look at their demonic allies, uncertain of what to do, or how to react. They look up at the spatial tear to see the grinning face of the Archdemon looking at them as if they were mere snacks.

"DEMONIC TRAITORS. I CAST YOU OUT OF MY HELL. RETURN TO THE HUMAN WORLD, FOR THAT IS WHERE YOU BELONG. AND AS FOR YOU

HUMANS... HEH HEH HEH... YOU HAVE TWELVE HOURS TO FLEE. IF YOU DO NOT, YOU WILL NOT LIVE TO SEE THE NEXT SUNRISE ON YOUR BELOVED TARUS II. THIS IS MY ONLY KINDNESS TO YOU."

Diablo snaps his fingers, and the spatial tear closes shut.

He turns his gaze back to the inquisitive gazes of the demons below.

"WONDERING WHAT I'VE DONE? I HAVE RECLAIMED THE POWER OF HELL. THE LABYRINTH WILL BECOME MORE THAN OUR HOME BASE. IT WILL BECOME OUR NEXUS OF OPERATIONS. A FORTRESS NO OTHER SPECIES, NOT EVEN THE VOLGRIM, WILL EVER DARE ASSAIL."

He pauses.

"NOT THE HUMANS. NOT THE VOLGRIM. AND CERTAINLY NOT THE PLAGUE..."

Diablo sweeps his arm above the heads of his loyal subjects.

"READY YOURSELVES FOR BATTLE. IN FOUR HOURS, WE WILL TAKE BACK SHARMUR!"

"For Sharmur!" Countless demons shout.

"For the Archdemon!" Even more add in afterward.

Emperor Belial receives the call for help at the same time as nearly every other high-ranking individual on Tarus II. She, along with several other demons and plenty of important humans and monsters, all rush toward the Tarus II Warpgate as quickly as possible, arriving just ten to twenty minutes later. In Belial's case, her Emperor-level speed allows her to run at nearly a hundred miles an hour in a straight line, beating out many of the human-military SUVs in top speed.

Her feet pound the dirt as she briskly stomps toward the Warpgate, arriving barely a minute before a convoy of emergency vehicles and other rapid-response crisis teams.

She quickly contacts the guards at the Warpgate who inform her of the happenings inside the Labyrinth.

"A giant demonic monster?" Belial asks. "What did it look like?"

The soldiers quickly describe the Archdemon's appearance, causing Belial to frown deeply. As someone who is never invited to meetings of the Hells anymore, and who is also ostracized by most of humanity's leadership under Neil Adams, she had no idea Diablo had returned, nor that he had gained control of the Archdemon form. This news shocks her to her core. Perhaps if another day had passed, she would have heard the news from Phoebe, but Diablo moved too quickly to allow that to happen.

"Whatever. I'll head inside and see if I can help." Belial says.

She pushes past the soldiers and charges into the Labyrinth with a small army of exosuit-wearing soldiers not far behind her, all of them ready for battle, invasion, or whatever else the Hells might throw at them.

The moment Belial steps through the Warpgate, she senses something is off. She pauses for a brief moment as a sensation of burning washes across her body.

Then, she stumbles forward, trips over her own feet, and collapses to the floor.

"Ah! Aaahhh! ARRGH!"

The Emperor of Passion grabs her stomach as powerful waves of nausea wrack her body. Through her blotted and spotty vision, she manages to make out the flailing of other nearby demons all being dragged around by concerned human allies into rows, where they too lay on the ground, screaming in pain.

Her distress is not unique. Through her tear-filled eyes and agony-wracked brain, she manages to piece together that something terrible has happened to her kin.

"Uh... uhhhh.... AHHH!!"

Belial cries out in pain once again, until someone runs over to her side.

That someone turns out to be Doctor Fathy, the Harpie who works under Belial directly.

"Samantha, chrrrup! I wish I had time to warn you! Stay still, just lay there a while. The pain will go away!"

Belial nods weakly to her cohort, who simply kneels beside her and squeezes her shoulder comfortingly.

Ten long minutes pass before Belial's agony subsides. She continues to lay in place for another minute while putting herself back together. When she finally stands up, she does so shakily and with great temerity.

"Oh... ohh... my b-body... it feels so... so weak..." Belial wheezes, as Fathy wraps a wing around her back to help her stand.

"We're not entirely certain what happened." Fathy says. "A giant hole in space opened up, and a huge eyeless monster threw some sort of demonic bomb into the Labyrinth Core. It exploded, and all of the demons became greatly weakened. It seems even Emperors are affected..."

"That was no monster." Belial coughs. "It was the Archdemon. It was Diablo..."

Belial manages to recover some of her strength as the seconds tick by, but that feeling of weakness persists. As she looks around, she frowns deeply.

"I've... I've lost it." She murmurs.

"Lost what?" Fathy asks, only to pause for a moment before adding: "...your link to the Labyrinth?"

"That's right." Belial says slowly. "I... I used to be able... to sense the Labyrinth. Innately. Intuitively. I could travel anywhere without getting lost. But now...?"

Fathy hesitates.

"It... it's not only you. I've lost that feeling too. All the monsters have."

"Diablo must have changed the structure of Hell." Belial mutters. "He cut us off. He made it so demons and monsters can't sense Hell's functions. But how? How did he accomplish that?"

Samantha pulls away from Fathy, finally able to stand through her own strength.

"Satan created Hell." Belial says out loud, though she seems to be speaking to herself more than Fathy. "He was the only one who understood how it worked on a fundamental level. He told me it was... a self-governing organism. It could grow and mutate based on the power of those living inside of it. How could Diablo change its structure? Did Satan teach him a method to do that?"

"Hah hah!" A loud, boisterous laugh cackles from Belial's right. The noisiness of that laugh startles Belial out of her contemplative mood, making her turn to face the speaker.

"Emperor Fae?" Belial says, noticing the strong, confident swagger in Fae's posture. She walks with ease, demonstrating that unlike the other demons nearby, she hasn't been crippled by the changes to Hell.

"Sup, bitch?" Fae snarks, her eyes flicking over Belial's pale pink skin and sweat-soaked clothes. "Damn! You look like crap! What's the matter, wake up on the wrong side of the bed?"

Belial frowns. "And you look just fine. What's going on? How has Diablo changed Hell? And why don't you seem affected?"

"Hah hah!" Fae cackles again. "See, that's where you're wrong. I WAS affected!"

Before Belial can react, Fae lunges toward her. So lethargic are Belial's movements that she fails to react in time before Fae grabs her by the throat, lifts her into the air, then hurls her into the crowd of exosuit-wearing humans, causing them to cry out in fear as Belial slams into them like a cannonball.

Crash!

Belial tumbles into five men and women, knocking them over like bowling pins. Luckily, Belial doesn't receive too heavy an injury, and the exosuits protect the humans as well.

"Listen up, hellhound-fuckers!" Fae shouts, projecting her voice throughout the Labyrinth Core. "From today onward, EVERYTHING changes! No more humans stinking up demonkind's Hell! No more traitor demons! No more traitor monsters! Anyone who colludes with humanity is gonna get the axe, PERIOD! But Emperor Deebs is SUPER generous! If you traitors renounce your ties to humanity in the next twelve hours and come crawling back, we'll let you keep your Wordsmith boons AND you can fight for a REAL demon leader! Otherwise..."

Fae makes a cutting motion across her neck with her thumb.

"...you'll regret making an enemy of us!"

As Fae speaks, Belial picks herself back up. She winces as she realizes Fae's throw broke her arm, but when she tries to heal herself, a shock goes down her spine.

Her abilities have dropped from the rank of Emperor all the way to Duke! Her healing powers have lost much of their effectiveness, and the reason behind how Fae managed to injure her so badly becomes readily apparent.

Fae sneers when she sees the look on Belial's face. "What's the matter? Didja just realize what's happened? That's right. Big Boss Deebs has turned Hell into demonkind's fortress. His minions will enjoy a healthy powerup while we're inside here, but as for his enemies? Heh heh... you get the shit end of the stick. No more easy boosts from the Wordsmith."

"What the hell have you done?" Belial asks, popping her arm back into place while standing defiantly before Fae. "Why are you going back to the old ways? Humanity and demonkind were going to work together! The Wordsmith's rising tide was going to lift everyone's boats! It was going to be a win-win situation for everyone!"

"Oh, sure." Fae says quietly, her voice dropping to a snarl. "Suck up to the Wordsmith. Do tricks for him like a stupid monkey. Get his blessing. Then we all dance around a campfire and sing songs. GET REAL! We're demons, you dumb human-sucking broad! I ain't gonna bow down before some sniveling apes! With Deebs back, we get to follow the powerhouse known as the Archdemon! Now THAT'S the way a trueborn demon ought to act!"

"The Plague is going to kill us all if we fight each other!" Belial protests.

"The Plague, you say?" Fae asks, her expression morphing into one of pity. "Hehe... maybe you fear the Plague, but I know more than you, Belial. I know what's coming. The humans and the Volgrim might fall to the Plague, but we demons never will."

She glances around the room one last time.

"I've said my piece! The rest of you demons, those who ain't too-far-gone like Fat Tits over here, you can feel free to crawl back into Diablo's good graces. But you'd better hurry! You only have twelve hours to decide. After that... Hell's closed to human-fuckers."

Fae turns toward the two great doors leading into the Core. She starts to walk out, but as she does, a dozen infantry leap into her path and take aim with their rifles.

"Not one step further, Emperor of Terror!" The commanding officer shouts. "You've betrayed humanity!"

Fae pauses for half a second, then chuckles. "Oh? You're going to stand in my way? Don't you morons see how much danger you're in? If you want to die, I'd be happy to oblige!"

She holds up her hand. Instantly, the mana in her body condenses into a spiraling grenade of demonic power, one that rapibly builds up strength as she looks at the walking dead men before her with contempt.

But before Fae can throw that grenade, she pauses. She turns her head backward to see an Emperor walking toward her, the epitome of calmness. He stares at her with only mild interest, looking her up and down as if she's not as hot shit as she thinks she is.

"Fae. Bullying a few weaklings is so unbecoming of an Emperor. Don't you agree?"

Fae ignores the human soldiers. She turns to face the approaching Emperor while adding even more power into her grenade.

"Beelzebub! Why does it sound as if you're not about to take up Diablo's generous offer? Do you really want to stand against the great Archdemon?"

Beelzebub stops a short distance away. He doesn't show the slightest fear toward the demonic power spiraling in her grasp.

"What is an Archdemon compared to me? I'm far beyond the likes of an ordinary Emperor already." Beelzebub boasts. "Who knows? Maybe in due time I'll become an Archdemon myself. I don't need to grovel at the feet of another being to achieve new heights."

Fae narrows her eyes. "That's rich, coming from the Wordsmith's newest lapdog. Since you've decided to stand against Diablo, your powers are going to be a lot weaker than before. I wouldn't want to... bully you."

Fae speaks with confidence, however, as she assesses Beelzebub's physical and spiritual state, she barely manages to contain her surprise.

What the... why was Belial weakened by Diablo's power, but Beelzebub wasn't? He still has the full power of an Emperor! It's as if the Labyrinth isn't able to suppress him at all!

Beelzebub continues to stand in place while gazing at Fae with bored eyes. "You can hurl that grenade if you want, Fae. Toss it at me, or the humans behind you, or Belial, or whoever else. But just know that if you do, it will be the last one you ever throw."

Fae hesitates.

She stares into the eyes of the shockingly calm Beelzebub, then flicks her gaze behind him to the wary Belial, the frightened but stoic humans, and the conflicted demons.

In a moment like this, she must show strength if she wants to ensure Diablo looks powerful. It won't do for her to buckle before Beelzebub's threat.

But on the other hand... Fae doesn't really give a damn about Diablo or anyone else. She simply likes to terrify people and make them piss their pants.

Compared to her own desires, working for Diablo is simply a fun side project. She doesn't have any skin in the game.

Slowly, Fae recalls the demonic power spiraling in her palm. She lowers her arm and snorts at Beelzebub, not fearing him, but not wanting to waste her energy fighting him either.

"Whatever. I'm just the messenger. The next time I show up, it'll be with more Emperors than you can shake a stick at. Your childish taunts won't save you then."

"A hundred Emperors wouldn't hold a candle to me." Beelzebub retorts. "See you around, Fae."

"Yeah. See you, Beelzebub." Fae says back, her tone more than a little sarcastic.

Fae turns around to leave, and with a look from Beelzebub, the exosuit-wearing troopers reluctantly step aside, allowing her to leave.

After Fae departs, Beelzebub smiles.

"Things seem like they're about to get a lot more interesting..."

Part 528: Blinker's Recovery

Jason, Fiona, Rebecca, and Kar stand inside the Spynet Sphere, watching in silence as ten minutes of realspace footage plays out before them. At a rate of 250 times faster than realspace, they needed 2,500 minutes, or 41.6 hours, to fully conclude Diablo's big moment as he launched a surprise 'attack' on the Labyrinth. Now that almost two days have passed in Chrona time, the four of them can properly discuss the situation.

"Well. Hurgh. That's not good." Kar concludes.

"A fair assessment." Rebecca adds, turning to look at Jason and Phoebe. "This Spynet Sphere isn't half bad. You can even keep an eye on places Marie can't."

"I'm guessing her surveillance of the Milky Way is more... comprehensive." Jason quips.

"To put it mildly." Rebecca replies. "But I think even she would find this structure admirable on your part. You're starting to use the brain the Creator gave you."

Rebecca glances around at all the various monitors.

"You're not exactly an intellectual, Jason, but having an extra 250x more time to think about things as they happen in realspace is certainly going to help you narrow the gap. Just be careful that you don't become too distanced from the problems outside Chrona, or else you might find yourself thinking about humanity's issues in a more disconnected manner."

Jason shakes his head. "Not gonna happen. I care about humanity a lot. I made Chrona so I'd have time to solve the issues plaguing my species."

"I'm sure you did. It's just a warning, in any case." Rebecca concludes. "Now, regarding Diablo..."

"Any idea what he just did?" Fiona asks, not yet having seen the after-effects of Diablo's spell.

Rebecca gestures at the monitor showing Diablo's giant ugly face. "If I had to guess, I'd assume he's found a way to take control of the Labyrinth's 'nervous system.' We'll know more over the following realspace hours, but Miss Becker has been worried something like this could happen for millennia. If Diablo is a Cosmic, or can at least wield the power of one, he's likely found a way to subvert and seize control of Satan's creation. After all, Hell is a living super-organism."

"What will that allow him to do?" Jason asks. "Are my people in danger?"

"Almost certainly, but I'll need time to figure out the specifics. For now, we'll simply have to keep an eye on the situation as it develops."

Fiona looks at Kar, then at Rebecca. "Have you checked on Blinker's physical condition yet?"

"Yes. Why don't we all go to the medical ward?" Rebecca says. "We can return to Diablo in a bit once a few more real-time minutes have passed and we know more about what's happening."

Rebecca exits the Spynet Sphere with Jason, Fiona, and Kar close behind her. Kar walks with the assistance of two robotic exo-legs, but his movements are clearly still stiff and awkward. Fiona hasn't had time to give him better technology, but at least his legs no longer dangle underneath himself uselessly.

After they cross the small city inside Chrona to arrive inside the medical ward, they find Blinker laying in bed like usual, her expression tired but with slightly more energy than a week before. Her children sit around a table not far from her bed, chattering to one another about various childish things.

"Kar..." Blinker says slowly, lifting her tired eyes to smile at her husband as he enters the room.

"Butterfly." Kar says lovingly.

He sits beside her bed and listens as Rebecca voices her concerns out loud.

"I have good news and bad news. The good news is that Blinker is in no danger. She can exist in this state indefinitely, and given time I can heal her condition to bring her back up to where she was before she exited Chrona's space."

"...then what's the bad news?" Jason asks, praying it won't be too severe.

"It's not as bad as you might think." Rebecca says. "It will take between six months and a year of Chrona-time to restore Blinker back to her old self. To understand why, I need to explain to you the way time dilation affects an entity's body and how that can change depending on who that entity is."

She pauses for a moment before launching into her full explanation.

"As a Cybernite, time dilation does not affect me. But that's not because my body is metallic. Even fully robotic organisms can suffer catastrophic failures when subjected to extreme swings of temporal flux. Rather, Marie Becker created the Cybernites to be highly advanced life forms that have transcended many different mundane hazards. And like the Cybernites, other organisms can resist the effects of temporal flux to varying degrees."

Rebecca holds up her hand, causing a holographic projection of a familiar Demon Emperor to materialize before the group.

"I am only hypothesizing here, but I believe Beelzebub would also be quite resistant to the effects of temporal flux. If you were to bring him to Chrona, he could live here indefinitely and transfer into and out of Chrona's unique temporal signature without suffering major ill effects. This is because Beelzebub is an organism who has gained highly advanced regenerative capabilities. But other strong entities, such as Blinker, Belial, Kiari, and so on, they can also resist the effects of temporal flux to different degrees."

"So, stronger bodies have better resistance to higher TDRs?" Fiona questions.

"Generally yes, but it's not a hard and fast rule." Rebecca continues patiently explaining. "Biology is complex, and even if someone has a strong body, they might have a weak mind that can suffer permanent cerebral afflictions due to losing sync with realspace. In Blinker's case, she is a fairy gifted with a strong mind who also owned the power of the Sphinx for a short while. This has evolved her body's abilities drastically. Had she not obtained the Sphinx's power, she might have..."

Rebecca leaves the implication to hang in the air uncomfortably.

"She might have what?" Jason asks, frowning with worry.

"It's better if you don't know. Let's just say her death would have been quick and gruesome. This is why playing with the higher states of temporal flux is a dangerous game. You, Wordsmith, are extremely weak of mind and body. If you left Chrona, you'd most likely die a horrible death within seconds, and possibly even instantly. In all ways but spiritual, you are still a baseline human."

"What if I Wordsmithed 'invincible' on myself? And 'regeneration'?" Jason asks. "Wouldn't that make me able to resist?"

"Possibly..." Rebecca replies, her tone uncertain. "But I wouldn't chance it. Unfortunately, until I come up with a more long-term solution, you should not leave Chrona's sphere under any circumstance."

Jason becomes quiet for a moment. He looks away, falling into thought.

"...I brought a few of the Felorians here. Brunhilda and a handful of her subordinates. Are they in danger?"

"How long did they stay in Chrona's sphere of influence?" Rebecca asks, before quickly adding: "In terms of Chrona-time, not realspace time."

"A few hours at most. Not even a minute of realspace time." Jason says.

"Then they should be fine. I have looked into the Felorians before. Their bodies are a bit hardier than a baseline human, especially due to their unique connection with the 'Wind Mother.' Their ability to wield Qi means they can travel in and out of high states of quantum flux for very brief periods of time. And that's the rub, really. It's not only about a person's strength of body or mind, but the amount of time they spend within a state of high temporal flux, as well."

Fiona nods along. "I think I get it. You mentioned before that traveling into a high state of flux is like a deep-ocean dwelling organism exiting the water and living on land. They can handle it for a while, but the effects will heighten depending on how much time they spend in the new environment."

"Exactly correct." Rebecca affirms. "You could bring an ordinary human to Chrona for a short while and the effects wouldn't be severe. They might not even be affected at all. But the longer they spend in Chrona's dimension, the more drastic the effects on their biology until they are no longer able to leave."

Blinker looks at Rebecca. "Then... you said... there's a way... to fix me?"

Rebecca smiles kindly. "There is. It's not a quick solution, but I'm certain it will work. The Volgrim have long ago created solutions for the various problems arising from extended stays in dimensions high in temporal variance. The simplest solution is to re-synchronize Blinker's physique to Chrona once more... but I must warn you that doing so will be a bit of a permanent alteration. If she leaves Chrona again, death will likely follow quickly afterward."

Rebecca glances behind herself at Kar and Blinker's crocodilian children before looking back to the others.

"Unfortunately, these children are also unable to leave. They were born into the higher dimensions and cannot leave, and neither can Kar either. If they do, their bodies will almost assuredly... meet a swift end. I'll spare you the details."

Kar sighs quietly.

"Hurgh. That is unfortunate. It seems my wife and I, along with our children, have become effectively imprisoned in this dimension."

"It's not all bad, Kar." Rebecca says, walking over to his side to pat his scaled back. "You'll get to retire from the frontlines, raise a family, and leave the fighting to others. I doubt the Plague can reach Chrona. Only a Psion trained in spatial manipulation or a demon like Yardrat could travel here, and that's assuming they know the spatial location of Chrona's anchoring point. Since I don't even know where it is, I doubt any of them could figure it out."

"What do you need to restore Blinker's condition?" Jason asks. "Materials, tools, name it and I'll Wordsmith it."

"We are going to require Hyper Particles..." Rebecca says slowly. "But Marie can synthesize those. I plan to show you how they function, too, so you can create more as needed. But most of the work is simply a lot of fine-tuning extremely precise temporal measurement systems, and a long waiting period once the tool comes online. The stress on Blinker's body will be quite severe, which is why it's best to take this transition process slowly. Over time, I will re-acclimate her to Chrona's dimensional speeds until she can walk and regain her energy. Then things will proceed more quickly from there."

She pauses.

"In the end, Blinker should require less than a month to be up and walking around, with five more for a full recovery."

"A month away... from my babies..." Blinker says in dismay. "But at least... I can survive. Thank you, Rebecca."

"Don't even mention it." Rebecca says with a smile. "I'm here to serve Jason and humanity alike, and you're his good friend."

Jason and Fiona both thank Rebecca profusely, and the Cybernite gives Jason a long list of metals and other materials to procure, then the two of them depart the medical ward, leaving Rebecca behind to prepare some preliminary tests to ensure Blinker will be in the proper condition to receive her treatments.

* * *

Later that day, as Jason Wordsmiths various types of metal, wiring, and other knick-knacks into existence, he pauses for a while to stare ahead, becoming lost in thought.

Fiona notices after a few minutes of silence when Jason stops uttering Words of Power. She turns away from a computer workstation, where she is currently constructing an updated variant of the T-REX, to look at Jason with mild concern.

"Honey? Everything okay?"

Jason doesn't reply. He continues to stare off distantly, as if not having heard her words.

"Honey? Jason?" Fiona repeats.

The Wordsmith finally blinks. He turns to look at her. "Huh? You say something?"

"I'm just wondering if you're okay." Fiona repeats. "Is something on your mind?"

Once again, Jason doesn't immediately respond. He looks at a batch of copper wires in his hand absentmindedly, then averts his eyes to look off into the distance once more.

"It's just... kind of hitting me now." Jason murmurs. "This whole situation. I can't leave Chrona. If I do... I'll die. But I also can't bring Phoebe here either. Not unless I want her to become a permanent resident, unable to leave."

He sighs.

"This changes everything. All my plans, up in smoke. I wanted to spent 20, maybe 40 years in Chrona to upgrade my abilities and explore my powers, then I was going to return to realspace. This was only supposed to be a temporary venture. But like always, I screwed things up badly. Blinker has suffered because of me. And now I can't be around to raise my son."

Fiona slowly turns in her chair, stands up, and walks over to sit beside Jason. She massages his back gently, her touch enhanced by Chrona's enhancements to her spiritual body. She's almost fully corporeal now, but only so long as she remains in Chrona's space.

"You couldn't have known." Fiona says. "Even I didn't know about the long-term negative effects of temporal dilation."

"Right, but in hindsight it's so obvious. I should have done my research." Jason grumbles. "How could there ever be such a good deal? Why wouldn't all the Volgrim just live in a higher state of time dilation if it's so convenient? I'm an idiot. I took a shortcut and screwed up AGAIN. That's all I ever do."

"No it's not..." Fiona says, trying to comfort him. "Everyone makes mistakes. You can't keep beating yourself up every time you stumble. You just have to pick yourself up and keep trying."

"But that's the thing." Jason says. "What if me 'helping' only aggravates situations? What if I'm just so inept that everything I touch falls to pieces? Supposedly I'm a Chosen One, some person the Heroic Aura decided was capable of saving humanity. But I failed my daughter, I failed Kar, I failed Blinker, humanity, and now I've even failed Phoebe and Timothy too. I have to interact with my wife through a robotic proxy-Jason. That's screwed up."

"I believe in you." Fiona says firmly. "And I know Phoebe does too. It's easy to look at all your past mistakes, but think about the good you've accomplished, too! You made the Belial Booster, the Body Booster, and the Lazarus Tower. You made lots of devices that will, in the long run, greatly strengthen humanity. We suffered terrible losses, especially to Beelzebub, but you brought everyone back eventually."

"I didn't bring Daisy back." Jason says quietly.

His words seem to suck the oxygen out of the room.

Fiona lowers her head.

"No. You didn't. But... but at least... at least she died protecting her daddy. You haven't failed Timothy, you just need to engineer a solution to this temporal flux situation. If you can do that, then you can exit eventually and return to Phoebe's side. You won't miss out on your son's birth."

"But how do I solve that problem?" Jason asks. "Wordsmithing won't fix Blinker. I tried Normalizing her. I tried other Words of Power too. None of them worked."

"Well, you always treat Wordsmithing itself as your primary ability." Fiona says slowly. "But what if... what if it's simply a tool? And with that tool, you can use it to create other things?"

Jason nods slowly. "I'm listening..."

"Marie Becker said it best, didn't she?" Fiona explains. "She said you have the power to create new Exotics. Why not start there? Try and make stones, rocks, bars of metal, and whatever else. Try imbuing them with abilities, or something. Remember Dellfingler?"

"Yeah. The talking sword." Jason says. "You think I should make more sentient artifacts?"

"Not... exactly." Fiona replies, her face contorting into uncertainty. "More like... like things that can help you in other ways. Like, uh..."

She trails off, uncertain of what to say. But as she talks, a spark ignites in Jason's eyes.

"Like buff items!"

Fiona blinks. "Huh?"

"From video games." Jason says, his tone turning noticeably lighter. "Items that give passive effects or that have a beneficial aura! I bet I could make a helmet that enhances my thinking speed! Like Solomon's Crown! Or maybe I can make a sword imbued with fire! Or... I don't know, something more practical?"

"Those do sound like pretty good ideas..." Fiona says, though she sounds less than certain. "But will that work?"

"I don't know. I've never tried." Jason admits. "I attempted to duplicate Solomon's Crown once, but I failed. Maybe I can't make artifacts at all? This is at least worth exploring in theory. Maybe I can... maybe I can make an artifact that allows me or anyone else to travel between different states of temporal flux at will! Like a necklace, or a belt, or something like that!"

Fiona's eyes light up. "Oh, yes! That's more like it! That does sound practical. But will you be able to succeed?"

Jason's enthusiasm wanes. "I don't know. Like I said, I've never tried it before. But I was able to sharpen Dellfingler far beyond the realm of the ordinary, and make him sentient. I feel like imbuing artifacts should be possible."

"Then I say you should start work on that today." Fiona affirms. "It's better than sitting around and feeling defeated, right? And you can always pop over to the Spynet Sphere once in a while to see how the Diablo situation is shaking out."

Jason smiles, feeling much better after having this epiphany. He turns his head to look into his mind-wife's eyes, deep affection visible on his face.

"Yeah. I love you so much, Fiona. If it weren't for you being here with me, I don't know if I'd make it..."

He starts to lean toward her, but Fiona pulls away.

"Jason. We can't."

"Huh?" Jason asks, blinking in confusion. "What? We can't kiss?"

"It's... it's just not right." Fiona says, pulling away. "Jason, you're married to Phoebe, not me."

"But you were made from Phoebe..." Jason protests. "What, you think it's cheating if I kiss my mind-wife?"

"We haven't done anything intimate since you created me." Fiona says, firming her tone.

"But..."

"No buts." Fiona says, standing up and putting a small amount of distance between herself and Jason. "If you really think it's okay, then would you want Hope to make out with Phoebe?"

"That's different." Jason protests. "He's... he and I are complete opposites! We're entirely different people! You and Phoebe are practically identical!"

"Practically." Fiona repeats. "But not exactly. I'm not going to get into double-standards or anything like that. I love you just as much as Phoebe does, Jason. I'd love to... to be with you like that. But it wouldn't be right. What if Phoebe found out? Maybe she'd try to act like it was fine, but would it be? Or would she grow to resent you and I both? Is that a cloud you want hanging over your marriage?"

Several long seconds of silence follow. Jason maintains eye contact with Fiona, but eventually looks away. His passion cools, and he releases a long breath.

"I... no, you're right. I'm sorry. I wasn't thinking straight. You're Fiona, not Phoebe. I shouldn't just- it's not right."

Seeing Jason has returned to reason, Fiona gently sits back down beside him. "I do love you, Jason. And I know you love me. But I'm a... monogamous woman. And Phoebe is too. We can't share you, and it wouldn't be fair for me to 'steal' you away."

"But... doesn't that mean you're destined to be alone?" Jason asks, looking at Fiona with a faint expression of pity. "You told me before that you wanted me to bind your existence to Chrona. If I do that, then..."

Fiona sighs softly. She crosses her arms and avoids Jason's gaze.

"I've... already thought about that. If you think rejecting your advance is easy, you're wrong. It hurts. This is why I told you that creating me so thoughtlessly was a bad decision. I have to live with this feeling of... loneliness. And since I still love you so deeply, it hurts every time I see you with Phoebe. I can't just move on to another man, either. It feels like a betrayal of the marriage vows I made, even though that wasn't me."

Jason stays quiet for a moment.

"...this must be how Hope felt when he saw me with Phoebe mere seconds after his creation. I hurt him, and I hurt you."

"You did." Fiona acknowledges. "This is why playing with clones and Wordsmithing thoughtlessly is so dangerous. Hope and I are both living imposter lives. He feels he should be in your position. I feel I should be in Phoebe's position. But we're not in those positions, and we never can be, either. We're stuck with who we are now... living as half-humans."

"Just another thing I've screwed up." Jason mutters, despondent. "Add it to the pile."

"As long as you learn from your mistakes, and don't repeat them," Fiona says softly, "then you can continue to better yourself as a person."

She gently touches Jason's back. He looks at his mind-wife and gives her a sad smile. Then he stands up and turns to leave the warehouse.

"I... I'm gonna go and see what I can do with those artifacts." Jason says. "Let's talk later."

"Uh. Sure." Fiona answers back.

Without another word, Jason exits, and as the door closes behind him, Fiona fights back tears.

"I said it." She whispers to herself. "I finally said it. I just... I didn't think it would hurt so much to say..."

Part 529: Amelia's Story

Inside the Hall of Heroes, Solomon stands watch while Elizabeth Kindelmann fiddles with a magic-infused stone of some sort. She coordinates with the Celestial Designer, Miralax Psymin, the two of them working on entirely separate magical and technological devices while Hope lays comatose on a hospital bed, his body slightly spasming from pain every few seconds.

Solomon divides his attention between watching Psymin like a hawk ninety percent of the time and directing casual glances toward Elizabeth's work.

"Do not attempt to deceive me, Volgrim." Solomon warns. "Your survival depends on the boy's recovery. If you attempt to harm him, I will eradicate you and all the rest of your kin from this dimension."

Psymin manipulates a delicate cutting laser while soldering together a surgical arm she will later use to operate on Hope's brain. She pauses what she's doing to glance at Solomon with disinterest.

"Not in my nature. Not deceptive. Scientist."

"I've seen inside your head." Solomon proclaims. "Your endless fascination with radical experiments has yielded poisonous fruit one too many times. Do not think I am oblivious to your true nature."

Psymin returns her attention to the giant surgical arm as she continues to construct it piece-by-piece.

"You speak of Sentinels." She says, her crackly robotic voice twanging in the ears of those nearby. "I was young. Impulsive. Foolish. I paid the price."

"You thought you could create the ultimate protector for the Milky Way." Solomon says softly. "But you overestimated your abilities. Trillions died as a result. Expect me to double-check every single thing you do today. I won't have a repeat of your past mistakes."

Psymin says nothing for a few moments. She locks a few actuators into place, then delicately solders a piece of micro-circuitry to the surgical arm's internals.

"I am trustworthy. I want progress. I want peace. Settle differences. No wars. But life is chaotic. Mistakes, impossible to avoid. Always regretful."

Solomon continues to stare at the side of Psymin's face, but his posture relaxes slightly.

"That's true. Mistakes happen. My friend Arthur made a terrible mistake once, as did I. When you are in charge of projects and laws that influence vast bodies of people, a single mistake can cost incalculable lives. But I still believe you should have acted with more restraint when designing the Sentinels."

"You are right." Psymin murmurs. "I should have."

She continues assembling the mechanical arm. At the same time, Elizabeth finished her work, holding up an obsidian rock carved with numerous mystical letters that form over a hundred sentences written in Latin. The palm-sized rock fits in her hand easily, and the tiny but intricate lettering gives the simple-seeming rock a far more mystical aura than it might have otherwise.

"Hmm..." Solomon says, glancing at the rock. "How will this artifact function? You've kept me in suspense long enough."

Elizabeth beams a smile at the old man. "It's quite simple, Knowledge-Seeker. Hope's body is suffering from falling out of Temporal Flux. While Miss Miralax intends to bring his body's cellular makeup back into sync, this artifact will target the intangible attributes comprising his spirituality."

"His spirituality is out of sync too?" Solomon asks. "I suppose that does make sense..."

"Part of the reason Hope is in so much pain is because his magical aura has drastically deviated from his physical body." Elizabeth explains. "Because our time dilation ratio is one hundred times greater than normalspace, Hope suffered a terrible loss of synchronicity when he arrived."

"The situation would be much worse at higher ratios." Solomon comments idly. "If we were at 200x or even 300x realspace's speed, his body might have imploded."

"An entity with a stronger body wouldn't have had as much trouble." Elizabeth sighs. "If only he had the strength of a minotaur, or an orc, Hope would've ended up with a light headache at worst."

"We'll just have to make sure he pays more attention to his stamina after this." Solomon concludes. "The boy could stand to work out and stop being so lazy. He still has a bit of Jason in him."

* * *

Three days pass. Amelia comes over to watch once in a while, staying by Hope's side for hours while Psymin continues expanding her operating table to add other devices and gadgets intended to expedite Hope's recovery. At the same time, Elizabeth creates other artifacts with the intent of nurturing his spiritual form.

"Why is this taking so long?" Amelia asks, frustrated, on the third day. "Hope is in terrible pain! Can't you hurry up and heal him??"

"We're doing the best we can," Solomon says. "Psymin does not require sleep, and neither do Elizabeth or I. We're all working tirelessly to ensure the tools we use will be capable of healing your fiance."

Amelia groans. "It's just... it's taking so long. I don't like to see him hurting like this. And what if you take too long? What if Hope DIES in this bed?!"

"He will not." Psymin swears. "His condition. Stable. He will recover. Given time. My job... expedite process. Without me. Three years. With me. Three weeks."

"Hope would slowly regain his ability to function even without our help." Solomon explains. "People who don't die from Temporal Flux will always recover, given time. We just want to heal him much faster by forcibly resynchronizing his temporal state."

"Well, just hurry up." Amelia complains. "I don't know what I'll do if something happens to Hope. He's all I have left."

Solomon glances at the girl.

"What of your sister, Debra?"

"Oh. Right, yeah. Debra too." Amelia says absentmindedly, though she doesn't seem to think much about Annette's familial relations.

Solomon frowns as he looks down at the sitting girl's back.

Amelia's ego is much more dominant compared to Annette's. Solomon thinks. Her spirituality is constantly being bathed in the Hall of Heroes' ambient energy. This must be what is causing her slow personality shift over time...

He clears his throat. "You've lost people before, I presume."

Amelia goes quiet for a minute.

"Not many. Only one, in fact. I never had friends when I was the Black Witch. Just my best friend, Levvy."

"Leviathan..." Solomon says slowly. "The Dark Dragon."

Having accessed the memories of multiple Archangels as well as other important figures, Solomon has long figured out many pieces to Amelia's old self. However, since his crown has never rested upon her head, he isn't certain about the entirety of her life's story.

With nothing else to talk about, Amelia decides to continue speaking.

"I met Levvy a long, long time ago. He was living under a mountain at the time. He was all alone."

Solomon nods. "A mountain not far from Mount Sinai, as it happened."

"Yeah." Amelia says softly. "At the time, I was only a little girl. I was being pursued by slavers on horseback. I escaped their city and ran into the plains while they pursued me. I had to hide in the tall grass to evade them, but their hunting dogs always found my trail. Eventually, I found a tiny but secluded cave entrance and crawled inside. I hoped the men would be too big to fit inside and wouldn't follow after me."

She pauses.

"Then I fell down a steep incline inside the cave. It was pitch black. I broke my arm... I started crying... that's when two bright red eyes lit up in the darkness, scaring the life out of me."

"Seeing a dragon must have been the scariest thing you ever encountered up to that point in your life." Solomon remarks.

"No... not really." Amelia says softly. "When Leviathan looked at me, there was no malice in his eyes. Only curiosity. He had never seen a human before. I think he... pitied me."

"Few can resist the tears of a little girl." Solomon muses, while both Psymin and Elizabeth glance over once in a while to listen to Amelia's story. "Perhaps even dragons are not immune to such charm."

"He told not not to be scared." Amelia said. "He told me I could stay a while if I wanted. I told him about the slavers, and he became angry about my plight. The dogs never followed me inside, so I stayed a while..."

Amelia sighs.

"Levvy healed my broken arm. But as hours turned into days, I grew weak and faint with hunger. I could barely sit up. I knew I was at death's door. Levvy felt terrible. He wanted to help me, but there was no food to give me. He explained that if he left the mountain, the Archangels would sense his presence, and they would come after him. We didn't know it at the time, but the Archangels had long ago fallen from their lofty heights... so he still feared their power."

"What happened then?" Solomon asks.

"I was dying. I could barely stay awake. Levvy asked me if... if I wanted to stay with him forever. I was so delirious... but having such a kind friend, someone who clearly cared so deeply about me... it was bliss." Amelia says, her eyes moistening. "I thought he was just trying to comfort me. I told him it would be okay. He would forget about me, in due time..."

Amelia wipes her eyes with one hand.

"That's when Levvy did it. He performed some... some mystical incantation. He transformed himself from a living dragon made of flesh and bone into pure spiritual energy. Then he entered my body."

"Everything changed in an instant." Amelia continues. "One second, I was at death's door. The next, I became filled with an inexhaustible power, a strength so formidable that it felt as if my body was going to burst. That's when Levvy told me about what he'd done. He gave up his identity to protect me."

Elizabeth gasps. "He sacrificed himself for you?! Oh my heavens, that's... that's such a heartbreaking tale!"

"No. Not sacrificed." Amelia clarifies. "He lived on inside of me. He took up residence within my Mind Realm, hiding away within my body by using the power of his underground chamber to seal away his soul signature. In this way, the angels wouldn't detect his presence even if I left."

Solomon strokes his beard. "A dragon, particularly the last living dragon, would possess a quantity of power far too great for a fragile human child's body to contain. The side effects must have been intolerable."

"You guessed right." Amelia says, looking up at Solomon. "The power I gained was too much to handle. It wouldn't take long before my body exploded and Levvy would be forcefully expelled back into the world. I would die a swift but gruesome death, and he would become exposed to the Archangels. That's why he came up with a solution that would allow me to gain enough power to resist his draconic might..."

She hesitates for several long moments, then sighs.

"I... I had to eat other humans. I had to devour their bodies to empower my own. In this way, I would become physically capable of suppressing Levvy's power and staying immortal."

Solomon widens his eyes. "I see. That explains so much! That is why the Black Witch was such a terrible fiend who devoured countless innocent lives!"

"I didn't want to do it. Not at first." Amelia explains. "But the hunger was horrible. I never felt satiated. I could only suppress the pangs for a while at a time. I went back to the city where my slavers originated and devoured all of them. I found my father and told him to live a good life. He passed away a decade later. At this point, I've entirely forgotten who he was or what his face looked like."

Elizabeth looks at Amelia with a mixture of pity and disgust. "How many people... did you consume?"

"I didn't keep track, and I would have lost count anyway." Amelia says. "Millions, most likely, if not tens of millions. Levvy's power turned me into a killing machine. It was his greatest regret."

"What caused the two of you to split?" Solomon asks curiously. "Obviously, you separated at some point. So..."

Amelia says nothing. She frowns at Solomon, then looks away.

"Satan killed my friend. Then I killed Satan. That's all I'll say."

"Mmm." Solomon grunts.

The room goes quiet. Solomon, Elizabeth, and Psymin all reflect on Amelia's story, thinking different thoughts regarding the morality of her actions.

"I can't lose Hope too." Amelia says after a while. "I... I can't. Make sure you save him, okay?"

"Don't worry. I will." Solomon says.

The former Black Queen nods silently. She stands up, smooths down her dress and walks away.

"Let me know when it's time to do the procedure." Amelia says. "I want to be there when it happens."

"Of course." Solomon replies.

She departs, leaving the other three behind to continue their work in peace.

After Amelia leaves, Psymin says something unexpected.

"I like her."

"You do?" Solomon asks. "I don't see why. The two of you have nothing in common."

"She reminds me. Old friend." Psymin says cryptically, without refusing to add anything else.

No matter what Solomon asks, she does not go into any further detail, leaving the Knowledge-Seeker to scratch his head. Even with access to all of her memories, he hasn't a clue which part of her multi-million life might refer to that 'old friend'.

"Just make sure you finish the job properly." Solomon finally says, giving up on the matter.

"Of course." Psymin replies.

Jason Hiro sits inside his bedroom, alone for once. He rests his elbow on a desk with a slim monitor that shows six different live feeds from the Spynet Sphere, video recordings he can change to any of his spy cams in the Milky Way if he so desires.

His thoughts scatter about at random as he thinks about what Fiona said to him. About how lonely she must feel, and what a betrayal to Phoebe it would be if Jason were ever intimate with Fiona.

"Fiona's right..." Jason mutters. "I can't keep hurting the people I love with my flippancy. It's starting to get really old."

He looks at the wall for a time before finally shaking his head to focus his thoughts.

"Diablo is making big moves. While Rebecca deals with healing Blinker, I need to focus on the more important things. Phoebe still has that speech in front of humanity in a few real-time days. That gives me several years to prepare. But Diablo is a more pressing concern. I need to think about how to counter whatever he's planning."

Jason massages his forehead.

"Strange. I don't get it. When was Diablo ever such a... warmonger? I thought he was a lazy guy who liked to sleep and goof off. When he lead the Seven Hells, he never demonstrated such hunger for conquest, nor such cunning. Could this be a result of the First Emperor's influence? Or perhaps it's the Archdemon's body that's changed him. Hell, maybe the last six years have just been a big wake-up call for him. He doesn't want to see his species fall by the wayside..."

Jason worriedly looks up a feed showing the Archdemon's exact location. With time slowed down 250x in realspace, Diablo appears to be frozen in place, but Jason still shudders as he remembers something that happened recently.

"He saw me." Jason whispers. "I gazed at Diablo through the Spynet... and he looked back. How did he even do that? Cosmics are on another level, I swear..."

The First Wordsmith quickly closes the feed, not wanting a repeat of that extremely creepy moment from before. He sits up a little straighter at the desk and stares at the hardwood surface, uncertain of what to do.

"I need to solve the time displacement issue." Jason says to himself. "But can I do it? Can I create an artifact capable of allowing someone to swap from realspace to Chronospace without suffering ill effects? I've never tried before..."

Jason metaphorically scratches his head. He can't search for more information on a magical internet, and he can't call up any friends who know about artifact creation. The only person he even knows with experience on the matter is Camael, and she's long dead.

For five long minutes, he sits in place, gazing blankly at the desk.

"...this is getting me nowhere. I'll just try doing random stuff. Maybe I can imbue items with magic? 'Imbue' sounds like a good starting point."

Unfortunately, the Wordsmith doesn't have any random trinkets stored in his room. Phoebe might have various bits of simple jewelry stored on Tarus II, but not Jason. He's never been interested in that stuff.

"Necklace." Jason says, causing a simple golden cross and chain to materialize in his hand. The decidedly Christian artifact doesn't mean much to him, as he's always considered himself something of an atheist, but it's the most spiritual item he can think of on short notice.

"Okay. Uh. Let's see. Imbue!"

Nothing happens.

Jason blanks out for a moment.

"Inspect."

His scan comes up inconclusive. The necklace appears completely ordinary.

"No, this isn't right. I can't just imbue nothing." Jason mutters as he falls into thought. "Wordsmithing requires intent. Dellfingler was an artifact at some level. I didn't 'imbue' him with anything. I just created an ordinary sword and made it impossibly hard, flexible, and sharp before imbuing it with sentience. I should try something similar now."

He thinks for a full minute.

"Let's see. Trying to manipulate time sounds complicated. I'll try something else. Flight!"

Jason casts a Word of Power on the necklace, then he inspects it.

Immediately, a mysterious voice plays in his head.

"An uncommon necklace. It recently obtained the power of flight..."

Jason jumps out of his seat. "Just like that?! Holy shit, that was so easy! Lemme put this bad boy on and give it a try!"

He quickly strings the necklace around his neck. He stands up and focuses on the cross, trying to activate its special power.

However, two minutes later, he remains standing in place, unmoved.

"It didn't work? Why not? Shouldn't it allow me to fly now?"

Frustrated, he pulls the necklace off, sets it on the desk, and stares at it in annoyance.

But the moment it leaves his grasp, the necklace vibrates slightly, then begins to slooooowly levitate upward, like a balloon low on helium. Jason's eyes darken as he watches the necklace levitate a few inches off the desk, then begin traveling higher and higher as it crawls upward at a snail's pace, making its arduous journey toward his room's ceiling.

"I... that makes sense." Jason says to himself glumly. "The necklace doesn't grant ME the ability to fly. I just made IT fly instead."

As the golden cross silently bonks against the ceiling, Jason's expression becomes more contemplative.

"It's better this way. I can't take the lazy way out this time. I'm going to really need to experiment if I want to create legitimately useful artifacts."

The Wordsmith's new era of 'smithing' thus begins with a quiet revelation instead of a thunderous bang...

Part 530: Laws of Creation

"Okay." Jason says to himself, as he places a blank piece of paper on the desk before him. "First order of business. I need to define all the known rules of Wordsmithing. Perhaps by doing so, I can think of a way to make these 'buff items' work properly."

He glances up at the ceiling, which the golden cross continues to press against, its metal chain hanging down due a lack of flight-imbuement.

"Pen." Jason says, conjuring a ballpoint pen into his grasp.

He thinks for a moment, then begins to write.

"First rule of Wordsmithing: All commands must be verbalized through the mouth, and must be a single-word."

"Second rule: The intent behind a Word of Power has a strong effect on what that word conjures."

"Third rule: The volume of the spoken word can strengthen or weaken the intended effect."

"Fourth rule: The qualitative power of any Word of Power is also dependent on my mana reserves, as well as the strength of my soul."

He pauses for a moment to think about other rules he has inferred over the years.

"Fifth rule: Words of Power cast directly on other entities can be drastically weakened depending on their own spiritual, psionic, or soul-based powers. I tried to kill the Black Queen once with the word 'Kill,' but I failed because she resisted its effect. She was much stronger than me at the time."

He frowns.

"But does that mean if I am stronger than another entity, my Word of Power can 'kill' them? I haven't actually tried..."

Jason chews on his pen for a moment before continuing to write.

"Sixth rule: Multiple Words of Power can be chained together to improve a spell, but this causes the spell's final outcome to drain more mana, as well as put its final effect in flux. I won't know exactly how good the final product will be until the spell is completed..."

He glances up at the cross on the ceiling.

"Take."

Jason teleports the cross into his palm, then he holds onto it while focusing his mind.

"Flight. Flight. Flight."

He repeatedly imbues it with the same Word of Power, then he lets it go.

Immediately, the cross begins levitating upward, but this time much faster than before. It strikes the ceiling with an audible ding before bouncing along to a stop.

"Seventh rule: The single effect of a Word of Power can be increased by speaking that same word multiple times. The mana cost will also increase marginally. There is a limit to how far this effect can be pushed."

He thinks about Dellfingler and how after a certain point, no matter how many times he said the word 'sharp', the blade could not be sharpened any further.

He also thinks about Chrona, and how the rate of time dilation would only slightly increase with each repeated casting of a Word of Power.

"Eighth rule: There is a diminishing return to Words of Power. Just because I spend ten times more mana to cast a spell doesn't mean I'll get a tenfold increase in output. I should be mindful of wasting my mana on minuscule gains."

"Take."

Jason once again yanks the cross back into his hands. He pauses for a moment to think about how he can alter the artifact to better suit his needs.

"Hmm... Equipment."

He casts a Word of Power on the necklace, then places it around his neck. This time, it does not levitate upward, but remains held fast to his chest like any ordinary necklace would.

Jason waits for a moment, but his body doesn't levitate. He takes the necklace off and sets it on the desk, but it also doesn't levitate anymore.

"Huh? That's unexpected. Did I overwrite the 'flight' ability with the 'equipment' Word of Power? Inspect."

Once again, a mysterious voice speaks inside Jason's mind.

An uncommon necklace of magical origins. Grants a weak flying effect to any entity that wears it.

Jason's heart skips a beat. "It didn't overwrite the effect! But then why didn't I gain the ability to fly?"

After a few moments of thought, he deduces the answer.

"Of course. The flight effect is so weak that my body's mass probably isn't even being nudged."

Just to test that theory, he dons the necklace once more, then stands up from his chair.

"Hmm... wait, what if..."

He glances over at his closet where he stores some of his clothes and shoes. There, he sees a scale sitting on the ground. He walks over and weighs himself on it.

"Seven feet tall, weighing 250 pounds, or about 113kgs. I see. So if I take off this necklace..."

Jason removes it from his neck, then glances down at the scale once more.

"275 pounds now, or 124kgs. So the necklace is trying to make me fly, but my body weighs too much, so it can only make me a little lighter. I'd need to drastically strengthen the effect to actually gain the ability to fly, myself."

Jason once again holds the cross in his hands, then he focuses his mind.

"FLIGHT! FLIGHT! FLIGHT! FLIGHT! FLI-"

Abruptly, the necklace yanks out of his hand, flies upward, and slams into the ceiling with a violent THUMP!

The ceiling begins to crack as the necklace presses against the building's foundations, as if having fallen into a reverse-gravity well.

"Shit, why did it do that?" Jason asks, invisible question marks popping up over his head. "Inspect!"

A rare necklace of magical origins. Possesses a strong flying effect that overrides its nature as a piece of equipment.

"Oh!" Jason exclaims. "I put too much emphasis on the 'flying' part, so now it's become less of a piece of equipment! Man, I guess I'll have to balance that out in the future too, huh? Equipment! Equipment!"

Just like that, the cross suddenly becomes inert. It falls from the ceiling and Jason catches it in his hand.

"Inspect."

A rare necklace of magical origins. Grants a moderate flying effect to any entity that wears it.

"Nice! I fixed it. Let's try wearing it now." Jason says to himself, grinning like an idiot as he realizes he's having fun playing around with his abilities.

He dons the necklace, but immediately realizes he's made a mistake. The moment he places the necklace around his neck, Jason begins to levitate uncontrollably upwards, albeit at a slow speed, as if having fallen into a weakly-reversed gravity well. He flails his arms around until he presses against the ceiling, where he manages to turn himself around and 'stand' upside down.

"...Okay. I should have expected that." The Wordsmith says, grumbling internally as he makes another realization. "I gained the ability to fly, but not to control my flight. So I just sorta... float upward forever."

He recalls a time six years ago when he cast Flight on himself. He ended up flailing around uselessly for a few minutes until he normalized his condition and grew wings instead.

He also remembers a lecture about specialists and generalists Solomon explained some time ago.

"Specialists know how to use their powers innately, and can deal with the side-effects with ease. But a generalist like me needs to figure out all the nuances of my abilities to maximize their potential."

He thinks for a moment, then utters a few more Words of Power.

"Control. Adjustment. Aptitude. Understanding."

He imbues the cross with more Words of Power, and thus finally tames its power to grant himself the ability to fly in a controlled a steady manner. Like a bird born in the skies, Jason rotates and flips himself around without a second thought, using pure instinct to guide the power of his newly-made artifact.

Unfortunately, he finds even more problems.

"My speed is slow as a snail."

Jason barely levitates through the air in any direction at a speed approaching a slow walk. On the plus side, levitating in place proves simple enough, so it grants him a bit of utility in that manner.

"This would be a good artifact for a construction worker." Jason says to himself. "Or someone painting a big building, statue, or mural by hand. It's easy enough to control, and it- oh shit!"

Abruptly, the artifact's power gives out. Jason falls from the air five feet to the ground below, landing awkwardly on his ankle and twisting it painfully. He collapses onto his ass and howls in pain.

"Shit! Fucking hell! Why did the artifact stop working?? Heal!"

Jason heals his sprain, then climbs back up, feeling more annoyed than ever.

"Inspect."

A rare necklace of formerly magical origins. It once granted a moderate flying effect to any entity that wore it. Unfortunately, it has lost its internal charge.

Jason blinks twice.

"Internal charge? Wait, don't tell me this tiny little cross needed energy to lift my body? Christ, of COURSE it did! Energize!"

Jason sends a Word of Power into the cross, and just like that, he regains the ability to fly. But despite the easy fix, he doesn't feel good about the solution. He takes off the necklace, sets it on the desk, and sits back down to write.

"Ninth rule: Artifacts seem to require a power source to maintain their magical effects."

"Conjecture: Perhaps effects that merely alter an object's physical properties, such as hardening or sharpening a sword, are immune to this issue, but magical effects that require sustained usage, are not."

Jason taps the pen against his lips.

"Tenth rule: Some sustained magical effects require auxiliary effects to stabilize and make them more useful. Like how 'flight' is useless without a way to control it."

He leans back in his chair and falls deep into thought.

"If that's the case, then it would explain why Dellfingler never needed mana to stay sharp, but this necklace ran out of power after just a minute of sustained flight. I can probably link the flying effect to my own internal mana, but that simply extends the timer until I run out... and draining all my mana could put me into Mana Shock. I never want to let that happen again..."

He recalls the time he passed out from overdraining his reserves some years ago. While trying to build houses for his fellow humans, he nearly perished due to his ignorance, a fear that has held back his desire to explore his powers all these years.

"I've been letting fear rule me." Jason says. "This is a problem that should be solvable with proper engineering. Hmm. Let's think about this carefully. What about Excalibur and Camael's Cube? They are both artifacts that can obtain a massive amount of energy, and in Excalibur's case it is also self-powering. The Labyrinth is an artifact of sorts too; it feeds off the excess energy produced by the entities living within itself."

Never having touched Excalibur, Jason isn't sure how it works, but he knows plenty about Camael's Cube and the Labyrinth.

"Hell converts life energy to magical energy. Camael's Cube converts ambient energy from the universe into mana, as well as faith energy aimed at it by humanity. Doesn't that imply energy-to-energy conversion is possible?"

Several seconds pass.

Jason's expression changes multiple times as several startling realizations strike him.

"If it's only a matter of converting energy to energy... then... isn't there basically infinite energy to be found across the universe? What about the radiation output by any random star? What about black holes, psionic energy, and..."

Jason continues to talk to himself for several minutes. He begins theorizing like crazy, mentally mulling over all manner of different scenarios that could drastically improve his ability to make artifacts.

"Can I harness the power of a star to increase the power of the Cube?" Jason thinks out loud. "What if I don't need Faith Energy at all? What if I can just use solar or fusion power?"

He frowns.

"But usually the laws of conservation apply. There could be a lot of wasted energy too. What if one 'joule' of faith energy needs a thousand joules of mundane energy? What if the opposite is true? I've never tested this before..."

Jason thinks back on how easy it was to create fusion reactors on Tarus II. Sure, he needed Phoebe, Fiona, or Solomon to draw up the schematics, but once he had those, actually making the reactors was no problem at all.

"That implies converting magical energy to mundane is simple. But what about the inverse? I should try it now."

Jason quickly conjures a transparent orb of glass roughly half the size of a bowling ball. He places it on his desk, then he conjures a small fusion reactor to take up the entire back half of his bedroom.

"Alright. Let's see how this goes. Storage. Energy. Conversion. Transfer!"

Jason turns the orb of glass into a makeshift container for spiritual energy, then tries turning all of the fusion power into mana.

Immediately, he sucks out all of the reactor's power, shutting it down and rendering it inert. Unfortunately, when he examines the amount of mana that has materialized inside the glass sphere...

"Damn. It's not even the equivalent of 1% of my body's internal mana capacity. Did I choose a shitty method of transference? Maybe the loss of energy between mediums is always high? Or maybe I just screwed up..."

Jason holds his hand over the sphere.

"Absorb. Well, at least that felt kind of good. I'll check back into this stuff later. For now, I'd better focus on refining my artificing skills..."

He swallows the mana into his body, finding out that in the process of creating the fusion reactor, transferring the energy into the orb, and reabsorbing it back, he lost ten times as much as he gained back. It was overall a huge waste.

Returning his attention to the cross necklace, he thinks for a moment.

"What if the material used to create an artifact has an effect on its abilities? Maybe a golden cross isn't the ideal material for a flying, equippable pendant. Maybe it should be made of wood, or steel, or Living Moldanium, even. Does the shape of the object matter?

What if instead of a cross it was an image of a dove or a pigeon? Would that help its 'conceptualization'? Would that make the flying speed any faster?"

Jason massages his forehead as he starts to get a headache.

"I can't just wing this. I need to plot out a more data-driven approach. Maybe I should bring Fiona in for- no, that won't do. I can't just have my wives help me with everything. Hm, I could ask Rebecca... but do I want detailed knowledge of how my powers work making their way back to Marie? Not really. Who else? Blinker? Not until she's healed up, and she might not be the best candidate for a data-driven approach. Those Psions I brought here aren't doing much... but I'd rather have the help of a Technopath if I were going to trust a Volgrim, which I definitely don't."

Unfortunately, Jason doesn't exactly have tech-capable candidates beating down the doors. For the briefest of moments, he contemplates cloning Phoebe's spirit again.

"Fiona says she's lonely. What if I gave her a twin sister? ...Yeah, she'd definitely beat my ass if I did that. Guess I'll just ask Rebecca for help."

Jason decides to do a quick preliminary test himself. He conjures a wooden cross necklace, an iron cross, a steel cross, obsidian, silver, platinum, and a dozen others.

Then he turns his attention to the golden cross from before. "Copy. Copy. Copy. Copy..."

He duplicates all of the flight powers from the first cross onto each of the other ones. Five minutes later, he finishes, then he picks up the wooden cross and puts it around his neck.

...Nothing happens.

"The hell? Inspect." Jason says, targeting the pendant.

An ordinary wooden necklace in the shape of a Christian cross, comes the response.

Jason metaphorically scratches his head. "Wait, the golden cross's power didn't duplicate? Why not? Copy!"

He tries again and again, but his attempts continuously fail. Two minutes later, he remembers something that happened six years earlier.

"Shit. FUCK. Oh, I'm an idiot. How could I forget?? I tried duplicating Solomon's Crown for Phoebe six years ago but I failed! I can't just duplicate extraordinary objects, and this flying cross now counts as one of those! I didn't even think of that!"

With this in mind, Jason adds one more rule to his list of Wordsmithing requirements, then he takes a good long read of the list to verify all the things he's written down so far.

* * *

"First rule of Wordsmithing: All commands must be verbalized through the mouth, and must be a single-word."

"Second rule: The intent behind a Word of Power has a strong effect on what that word conjures."

"Third rule: The volume of the spoken word can strengthen or weaken the intended effect."

"Fourth rule: The qualitative power of any Word of Power is also dependent on my mana reserves, as well as the strength of my soul."

"Fifth rule: Words of Power cast directly on other entities can be drastically weakened depending on their own spiritual, psionic, or soul-based powers. I tried to kill the Black Queen once with the word 'Kill,' but I failed because she resisted its effect. She was much stronger than me at the time."

"Sixth rule: Multiple Words of Power can be chained together to improve a spell, but this causes the spell's final outcome to drain more mana, as well as put its final effect in flux. I won't know exactly how good the final product will be until the spell is completed..."

"Seventh rule: The single effect of a Word of Power can be increased by speaking that same word multiple times. The mana cost will also increase marginally. There is a limit to how far this effect can be pushed."

"Eighth rule: There is a diminishing return to Words of Power. Just because I spend ten times more mana to cast a spell doesn't mean I'll get a tenfold increase in output. I should be mindful of wasting my mana on minuscule gains."

"Ninth rule: Artifacts require a power source to maintain their magical effects."

"Tenth rule: Some sustained magical effects require auxiliary effects to stabilize and make them more useful. Like how 'flight' is useless without a way to control it."

"Eleventh rule: Extraordinary objects or effects cannot be duplicated via Wordsmithing."

* * *

As Jason finishes compiling and re-reading his rules, he feels a sense of satisfaction. The limitations he has discovered are unlikely to be the only ones that exist, but they give him a strong idea of just how far he can go in his future endeavors, as well as hinting at what sorts of incredible artifacts he can make once he starts applying himself seriously.

"Wordsmithing has so much potential, and I've barely even tapped it. Perhaps my experiments with the Felorians can lead into even better artificing of superior weapons and utility items? I should talk to Brunhilda soon, as well as Sariah and the others."

He keys up the communicator and gives Rebecca a call. "Hey, when you have a bit of free time, mind meeting me in the workshop on the northeastern side of Chrona? It's the big black building with the tower on top."

Rebecca's voice comes back loud and clear. "Sounds like your experiments bore fruit. I'd be happy to assist you."

"Great!" Jason says. "Normally I'd bug Fiona but she's working on all sorts of other stuff."

"Mmm. I'll also be bringing along one of those Volgrim Initiators." Rebecca says. "This 'Ferral' fellow seems particularly enthusiastic about helping us out."

"Err..." Jason says, his enthusiasm noticeably dampening. "I don't know if I want to involve them..."

"You should try. These 1st and 3rd level Psions are no threat to you. They've voluntarily decided to help you, but if you snub them, they will grow resentful. It's better to start integrating them into your experiments as soon as possible so that you can reap the benefits of learning how Psionics works, firsthand. Even Miss Becker hasn't had that privilege."

Jason blinks. "Marie hasn't even directly collaborated with a Psion before?"

"Everything she knows about Psions comes from information she stole from their databases. They would never willingly give up the secrets to their heritage to a mud-dweller. In that respect, you can become a true pioneer in human-to-Psion understanding. Who knows? Perhaps you can even find a way to merge the biology of both species..."

"To make humans who can use psionics, huh?" Jason mutters. "I guess you have a point. Alright, I'll bring Ferral and Raavul into the experiments, too. More data to look over would be nice."

"Agreed. I'll meet you in one hour, then." Rebecca concludes. "I need to finish the setup for Blinker's temporal stabilizer first, though."

"Take your time with that. No rush." Jason says. "See you in an hour or so."

The line disconnects, and Jason leans back in his chair.

"This is only the beginning..."

Part 531: Transmorphium

An hour later, Jason meets up with Rebecca in his northern warehouse, a place he's already stockpiled a good amount of Wordsmithium inside for the sake of his experiments, as well as tons of leftover gadgets Fiona has made and tossed aside over the years.

Rebecca barely glances around the facility as she enters, having already scanned its every corner with her enhanced iris modules as she approached from the outside. She smiles at Jason and folds her hands behind her back.

"So. What have you been up to, Mr Hiro?"

"That feels weird." Jason says. "Let's just stick with first names. As for what I've been up to..."

He pauses for a half-second, debating whether or not he should give her the notes he wrote earlier regarding his powers. Considering their strategic value, he isn't sure if he can trust Rebecca not to hand the information off to Marie.

Ultimately, the Wordsmith relents, and he hands over three pages of notes detailing not only the eleven rules he's written about his Wordsmithing, but past scenarios that made him come to those conclusions.

Sensing Jason's hesitancy, Rebecca takes the papers, glances at them for a moment, and instantly downloads their contents into her brain. She looks at Jason with deep meaning.

"You were feeling uncertain whether you could trust me with this information or not." She says, her tone lacking judgment while also being firm. "I don't blame you. We wouldn't want the Founders to learn this information about you, and certainly not the demons."

Jason swallows heavily, feeling a tad guilty in his heart. "It's not you I don't trust... it's-"

"Miss Becker. I know." Rebecca says, handing the papers back. "I'm glad you've decided to extend this trust to me. For what it's worth, I can promise you I will not share any of these documents with Miss Becker, nor any other Cybernites without your express permission. It's up to you whether you want to believe in my pledge or not. I don't have any way to make it a binding pledge."

Jason clenches his jaw for a moment. He genuinely feels a sense of fear in his heart that Rebecca might be deliberately deceiving him...

But that fear quickly evaporates.

He's never had any reason to doubt her. Rebecca came to Jason's side at his request. Maybe she still works for Marie Becker, but then again, perhaps she's more closely linked with Jason because she wants to make something of her existence.

"I..." Jason starts to say, though he finds it hard to follow-up with anything else.

"I cannot communicate with Marie Becker as we are now." Rebecca adds. "Chrona's dimensional speeds make it impossible for my galactic communicator to breach the barrier of temporal flux. If you would like, I can simply stay in Chrona forever. Unable to report back to Marie, you can be assured I am not leaking any information to her."

"No. No, that isn't necessary." Jason says quietly. "I... I have trust issues. I'm sure you can understand why. I've been betrayed a few times by people I cared about a lot, and by enemies who were simply waiting for a prime opportunity. It's made me a deeply suspicious man. You have been kind to come here and help humanity."

"I'm not that kind." Rebecca says bluntly. "I'm selfish. I didn't like sitting around uselessly in the Oasis. I came here to do something. If that something helps you out, then it makes my existence finally have some merit. I'm happy to stay in Chrona forever if it means I get to uplift your understanding of Wordsmithing to greater heights."

Jason smiles back at her. "Well. I guess that's all I can ask for. Sorry for doubting you."

"Trust is neither given nor taken. It is earned, and I have a long way to go before you should feel confident in trusting me fully." Rebecca says. "Now, since you've shown me this information anyway, why don't we start with what you've compiled?"

Jason nods. "I'd like that."

* * *

Thirty minutes pass.

Jason and Rebecca carefully pore over each of the 11 'Laws of Wordsmithing' Jason has written down, with Rebecca making sure she fully understands each one.

"I won't lie. Miss Becker already guessed the majority of these, and hypothesized to varying degrees the rest." Rebecca says. "She shared that information with me before I departed so I could better assist you in your future endeavors. However, what this list also tells me is that you have not gone nearly far enough in hypothesizing, theorizing, and testing what Wordsmithing can accomplish."

"In what way?" Jason asks.

"Let's start with a simple question." Rebecca says. "What makes an 'artifact'?"

"An object of immense magical power made with superior materials." Jason answers.

"Oh? Wow, for a guy who just started making artifacts today, you sure sound certain." Rebecca snarks, leaning toward him with a goofy grin. "Are you willing to bet your life on that statement?"

Jason's confidence crumbles. "...not really. I'm no expert on artifacts."

"Miss Becker wouldn't call herself one either, but she once ruled over humanity. She came into contact with many different artifacts before the fall of Earth. She gave me a detailed list of artifacts, as well as their original inhabitants, their materials, and other miscellaneous data. Here, have a look sometime if you want."

Rebecca tilts her head to the side, and a tiny marble falls out of her ear. She hands it to Jason, who looks at it with a mixture of curiosity and disgust.

"...it's a data-orb." Rebecca says, looking at him strangely. "Don't tell me you thought it was hardened earwax or something."

"No! No, no, I'd uh, I'd never think something like that." Jason quickly says, while internally wishing she wasn't so good at deductive reasoning.

He locates one of Fiona's gadgets in the warehouse for reading these strange orbs, then he places the orb inside to extract its contents.

Moments later, holographic images materialize in the air, displaying text that describes a series of ancient artifacts, 'long lost' to the annals of time.

Except Jason recognizes them. It turns out to be a complete library of all the Heroes whom Marie has been keeping down in her vault, as well as many others he's never seen before.

"I see..." Jason says carefully, glancing at Rebecca while putting together the truth. "So these are various artifacts Marie Becker came into contact with while she was ruling Earth? I didn't expect there to be so many."

"Being on top grants a lot of privileges," Rebecca says, clearly unaware of the existence of the Heroic Vault deep beneath Marie Becker's laboratory. "It's a shame these artifacts were lost or seized by the Volgrim at the end of the Energy Wars, but even if we don't have physical access to them, we can infer a lot of useful data that might help your efforts."

Jason nods. He returns his gaze to the artifact images. "Alright, I'll bite. What useful data specifically?"

"Let's focus on your answer from earlier. You stated it took a lot of energy to make an artifact, and that artifacts needed to be made from excellent materials. But what about this cat toy-artifact?"

Jason frowns as he looks at the artifact she's pulled up.

"Let's see. The Hero was named Wendy. She could change the direction the wind was blowing, but then she would fall asleep. Oh huh, I think Marie mentioned her once..."

Jason starts to drift off into thought, but Rebecca pulls him back.

"You see? Wendy's artifact is just a little wooden cat toy. There's nothing special about it. It's not made of any rare materials, and her ability is unimpressive. But do you think you could duplicate her artifact?"

"No. I don't think so." Jason replies. "I could obviously duplicate the toy itself, but it wouldn't have any metaphysical powers attached to it. But that's exactly what I said in my notes, so what does it matter?"

"Mmm, what does it matter indeed?" Rebecca asks conspiratorially. "The answer you arrived at might be correct, but a flaw in the underlying assumption can cause mathematical errors in other areas. Let's try this question instead: Can you duplicate exotics?"

"I can duplicate Wordsmithium, no problem." Jason says.

"And other exotics?" Rebecca presses further.

"...not sure about that." Jason answers lamely.

Rebecca stares at him for several seconds.

"Well? Aren't you going to try?"

"Oh! Right, yeah." Jason exclaims. "Give me a minute, I'll uh... Marie won't mind if I just...?"

Rebecca laughs. "As long as you return the ones you take, she won't care! She already expects a few to go missing."

"Great. That makes this easier." Jason says. "One moment. Scan. Observe. Locate. Hmm... maybe these twenty or so... Take. Take. Take. Take..."

Jason grabs a mixture of Spiritual, Psionic, and Mundane Exotics. He makes sure to pick a variety of Low, Medium, High, and Special Exotics to round out the collection so he'll have lots of variables to work with. He keeps them inside their specialized containers so the energies won't leak out, but once they appear in his workshop, they quickly feel far more threatening than they did in Marie's laboratory.

Alarm flashes across Jason's face. He glances at Rebecca, who doesn't appear to notice the spiritual and psionic threat some of the exotics radiate, at least not on an instinctual level. She is, of course, already aware of the identities of each exotic Jason has brought to Chrona.

"Interesting choices..." Rebecca says. "Some of these are more volatile than the others. You don't want to subject the more dangerous ones to any extreme experiments if you're not a professional, so let's just start by trying to duplicate the more dangerous ones first before sending them back to Marie Becker."

"Marie warned me she wasn't allowed to have more than a certain quantity of any specific exotic..." Jason says.

"We'll dispose of the excess exotics if you succeed, at least for now." Rebecca says. "But, you know? It could be worth constructing a secret realm where you stockpile Exotics if you succeed in perfectly recreating the strongest ones. Storing them here is dangerous, but a containment realm isn't a bad idea."

"I'll think about it." Jason concludes.

He takes a minute to go over all of the different exotics with Rebecca's help.

"Aquanite Quartz, Psionic Low-Exotic. Has several uses involving liquid dynamic alterations. Can increase the tolerance to high-pressure underwater dynamics substantially."

"Cerebral-115, Psionic Mid-Exotic. A mind-altering exotic especially useful at boosting the range and power of psionic wavelengths, but with plenty of other non-psionic uses as well."

"Shatterstar Liquid, Psionic High-Exotic. A fluid that can increase the effectiveness of various nuclear ignition sequence effects. Extremely rare, and certain high-ranking Psions at or above the 7th Level can absorb it directly into their Psionic Seeds to empower themselves."

"Transmorphium, Psionic Special-Exotic. An extremely rare substance which enables metal-based devices to gain sentience and change their form at will. Sourced from an unknown distant galaxy where it is far more common."

Jason raises an eyebrow at that last one, but otherwise continues reading off a bunch of other Mundane and Spiritual Exotic data printouts before finally reaching the last one.

"These are all wildly different from one another." Jason says. "Which ones should I duplicate first?"

"Start with anything that's Special-class." Rebecca says. "We'll work our way down from there."

Jason nods, then he follows along with her request. He decides to start with the Transmorphium first, which upon further inspection turns out to be only a tiny sliver of an aqua-colored crystal. No bigger than his thumbnail, Jason has to squint at it to even make it out.

"Really? This thing can turn robotic devices... sentient? And allow them to change their shape at will?"

"You won't hear a single High Volgrim confirm this," Rebecca explains, "but Miss Becker has confirmed that one of the reasons the Seven Great Wars of Volgrim myth occurred at all was because of an arms race sparked by a single fragment of Transmorphium coming into contact with an ancient Volgrim device of some kind. We don't know all the details, since the records were purged, but we believe Transmorphium is not supposed to exist at all in the Milky Way. It's actually the trump card of an extremely powerful Ruler from a distant galaxy."

"...I take it you would be opposed to me touching it against like, a toaster, or something?" Jason asks.

"Very much opposed." Rebecca says simply. "Marie Becker has already tested this sliver of Transmorphium on five occasions. All entities it creates instantly become extremely hostile to all biological life inside the Milky Way. We do not want to risk creating any situation mirroring the rise of the Sentinels during the 6th and 7th Great Wars."

"Noted." Jason says quietly.

He focuses his mind for a moment, then aims his thoughts at the thumbnail-sized shard of metal.

"Duplicate."

Inside the containment sphere, an exact duplicate of the Transmorphium appears, but Jason reels as a wave of exhaustion strikes him. He slumps to his knees and gasps for breath, feeling instantly and completely drained of all his mana.

"Ugh...!" Jason wheezes, breaking into a coughing fit. "Oh, god..."

Rebecca quickly helps Jason sit on the ground, paying careful attention to his physical parameters.

"As I expected." She says a minute later, returning her gaze to the duplicated shard of Transmorphium. "The amount of innate power inside this tiny shard of metal is far beyond what you can fathom. You failed to duplicate it properly. It does not contain the same effects as the original shard, but perhaps if you had more mana capacity, and by that I mean far more, you might have succeeded."

Jason momentarily wavers in and out of consciousness. He shakily grabs a glass of water and chugs it down, feeling only a little better.

"You're... you're saying, cough! You're saying that tiny little piece of metal sucked me dry when I tried to duplicate it... because it's so complex??"

"Transmorphium is a Special-class exotic. It was made by a Ruler." Rebecca explains. "Not all Special-class exotics are, mind you, but we've known this one was for a long time. Qualitatively, this shard of metal is more profound than anything made by any High Volgrim, and that includes the Sentinels. You trying to duplicate it is like asking a five year old child to solve a college-level advanced trigonometry equation. You simply lack the qualifications, and gaining them might not be possible even with a practically unlimited amount of time."

Jason leans back against a desk. He closes his eyes and takes a few long breaths to improve his condition. "Shit. I can't do any more duplicating for a while."

"You can." Rebecca counters. "Drain some mana from the Cube."

"But-"

"No buts. That's what it's for." Rebecca counters. "Unless you have some spare mana beads you've been storing elsewhere."

Jason grimaces. "I store extra mana beads in my body. I just don't like using them unless this is an emergency. A bit of rest will bring me back up to snuff anyway."

"Yes, but time is valuable." Rebecca says, crossing her arms while looking down at the sleepy Hero. "Lest you forget, Diablo is still making moves in realspace. We may have far more time to expend than him, but we shouldn't waste our gift."

A moment passes. Jason grimaces, then he sighs.

"Absorb."

One of the mana beads inside his body vaporizes and turns into a flash-flood of mana, instantly refilling his internal mana battery so that he can stand back up and return to work. He does, but he sends a hurt look at Rebecca, feeling wronged that he had to use up one of his precious mana beads for this.

"You know, these beads are pretty wasteful." Jason complains. "It takes me five days of accumulation to fill one up. One night of sleep would have done the trick just as well."

Rebecca frowns. "It's that bad? How many beads do you have remaining, then?"

Jason blushes.

He looks away.

"Only... uh... like, I dunno... seven... mumble mumble..."

"Seven?" Rebecca asks. "Only seven mana beads?"

Jason's blush becomes more noticeable.

"W-well, more l-like... seven... hundred... sevenhundredandfourteenorso..."

"Seven hundred and fourteen mana beads?!" Rebecca exclaims. "Why are you just storing them away uselessly then?! You have PLENTY to use, Jason!!"

"But what if I NEED them in the future?!" Jason shouts back. "I can't just waste these beads!"

"They're a RENEWABLE RESOURCE!!" Rebecca screams in frustration. "What are you, some kind of hoarding goblin?? And here I was thinking you only had like a handful of the damn things!"

"I'm not a loot goblin, I'm a gamer. It's just not in my blood to waste precious consumables!" Jason complains.

Rebecca goes quiet for a moment.

"Do I need to involve Fiona in this discussion?"

"N-no, ma'am. I'll use the beads." Jason says, his willpower deflating immediately.

"Good. Let's get back to work, then." Rebecca says. "Duplicate the other Special-class Exotics next."

"Sure..."

Reluctantly, Jason begins duplicating one exotic after another. Despite his complaints, he ends up burning through more than thirty mana-beads when Rebecca forces him to try again on a handful of Special-class exotics, and the findings prove to be astounding.

"You succeeded in duplicating every single Exotic except for Transmorphium and the Special-class Spiritual exotic, Neon Void." Rebecca says. "That is a remarkable duplication rate, and the data gives us a lot of clues."

"Clues pertaining to what?" Jason asks.

"You can duplicate Living Moldanium, I'd wager." Rebecca says. "Its physical properties, at least. However, your power is actually more compatible with duplicating Psionic and Mundane Exotics than Spiritual ones. There appears to be a conflict that occurs when you try to perfectly replicate spiritual effects you didn't create yourself. Neon Void is great at masking the spiritual patterns of voidborn life-forms, but your Wordsmithing can't directly replicate the effect using only a single Word of Power. No doubt you can mimic the effect by creating your own version of Neon Void, but that gives us a lot of clues regarding your unobserved limitations."

Rebecca holds up her palm, causing words to holographically project into the air.

The true power of observational data lies in allowing someone to make inferences about future data they have not yet observed.

"To explain further," Rebecca continues, "if we can find consistency in the rules for your Wordsmithing, we can make inferences about Wordsmithing's other uses without you even attempting to use your magic in that specific way. If we know 'what goes up must eventually come down,' then we should be able to assume things that go up always come down. At least with a reasonable rate of consistency."

"I see." Jason says slowly. "So it's not about these Exotics specifically, but finding the underlying logic behind why I can duplicate some Exotics and not others. Once we figure that out, we should know with a high degree of certainty what I can and cannot duplicate without my actually attempting it."

"Right. But don't get me wrong, I still intend to have you try duplicating every single Exotic Miss Becker has in her storage. We need to confirm the hypotheses I make today in order to validate future predictions."

"Yeah. That's the scientific method." Jason agrees.

He and Rebecca continue their work for the next ten hours straight, tearing through Marie's catalog of Exotics while charting their predictions, successes, and failures one after the other. Jason continually drains his mana, consumes a mana bead, and drains his mana again. Barring a few surprises, Rebecca continuously gets better and better at figuring out what Jason can and cannot duplicate, though the man himself actually has a hard time keeping up with her accuracy.

"I'm starting to think I should find a way to digitize my brain." Jason grouches. "You're way better at this than me."

"I am, but there are thousands of Cybernites and only two Wordsmiths." Rebecca clarifies. "You know what they say about the grass looking greener on the other side. To gain my digitized brain and deductive abilities, you would have to stop being a Wordsmith. Neither of us wants that."

"You're right." Jason admits. "In any case, we're nearly done. I've successfully duplicated 817 Exotics, and failed to do so with 114 others. Have you built a foolproof theoretical model yet?"

"That doesn't seem possible anymore. Exotics always have edge cases. And Miss Becker doesn't have access to all the Exotics the Volgrim Empire does. We don't know where their most treasured stashes are, so we can't infiltrate them. The key now is finding out how to make your own Exotics next, then how to integrate them into your artificing..."

She pauses to mindlessly tap on the glass container of one rather boring Mundane Exotic while looking off into the distance.

"I think we should try something new, next. Jason, why don't you bring in those new Psion initiates to this warehouse? We could use their help determining our next line of experiments."

"Oh, sure." Jason says. "Uh, I was actually going to chat with a couple of Felorians, though..."

"Acceptable. I'll think about how we can integrate them into our next battery of tests."

Jason blinks his eyes wearily. "Okay. But unlike you, I need sleep. We'll pick this back up after I take a power-nap."

"Fine by me!" Rebecca chirps. "Oh, and thank you for using all those beads for my sake, by the way. It really expedited our progress."

Jason tries not to cry. "It's... it's fine. It was only... five hundred... mana beads. N-no big deal."

As he walks away, the Wordsmith feels a great loss deep in his heart.

My mana beads!

Part 532: Enlightened Cultivation

Many hours later, Jason awakens from his deep sleep. He decides to rest for twelve hours instead of a mere eight, not particularly caring about the extra time required. After all, eight hours and twelve hours in Chrona are both essentially a blink of an eye in realspace time.

He takes a long hot shower to wake himself up, munches on a hearty breakfast, and attends to some other minor things before making his way back to the warehouse to rejoin Rebecca on another day of hard work and experimentation.

When he shows up, he finds Rebecca standing inside the warehouse next to a brand new rack of metal shelving units, each one with neatly categorized Exotics ordered alphabetically by their broad types and rankings of power.

"Hey. I'm back." Jason says, giving a friendly wave to the Cybernite. "I wanted to thank you properly, Rebecca. I tried duplicating one of Marie's exotics when I first saw them, but I failed and assumed I was incapable of duplicating them. If it wasn't for you convincing me to try again, I'd never have found out I can duplicate some but not others."

"I think you would have tried eventually." Rebecca says with a smile. "You're more intelligent than you think, Jason. You might not be anywhere close to Miss Becker's level, or that of your esteemed wives, but you're not an idiot. You simply suffer from… a lack of initiative."

"I'm lazy." Jason counters. "It's fine. You can speak the truth."

Rebecca doesn't add any fuel to that metaphorical fire. She instead turns her attention to the Exotics she categorized and organized while Jason was sleeping.

"Now that you've made a solid list of replicable Exotics, the next step should be to experiment in other new and novel ways. Your ultimate goal is to try and create powerful artifacts rivaling those of ancient artificers, such as Archangel Camael and Elizabeth Kindelmann."

Jason scrunches up his face. "I don't have any background in artificing, though. Do you? I don't even have a clue where to start…"

"I have no background either." Rebecca says. "But I did download a few exabytes of historical information regarding the trade. It will give us a foundation to start with."

She pauses.

"Oh... and don't forget, Jason. You have Wordsmithing. You can cheat a good bit of this process."

"You think I'd go and do something as dishonorable as cheating at a proud, ancient profession?" Jason asks with a grin. "You're goddamn right. Now tell me how we can start!"

And so she does. Over the next two hours, Rebecca and Jason engage in a few different experiments.

First, she has Jason merge the most stable Exotics together to try and create new Exotics. This produces mixed results, with most losing all of their exotic capabilities, but some do produce weak new effects, and a small handful merge together perfectly, combining their abilities to create powerful synergies.

Next, she has Jason try to boost the effects of existing Exotics via his magic. Jason tries making Trifrancium even more energetic, he attempts to boost the power of Shatterstar Liquid, and finally, he concludes by attempting to increase the effectiveness of Cerebral-115.

The problem is, when Jason tries improving the last one, he can't detect any differences in its chemical or extraordinary structure.

"Did it work?" Jason asks, squinting as he tries to detect any changes in the Cerebral-115 Exotic.

"I... don't know. My sensors aren't picking up any changes." Rebecca says.

The two of them examine this Exotic for a moment before Jason smacks his forehead.

"Of course! We're not Psions. We won't be able to detect any alterations since this Exotic is pretty much only useful for those adept in the Psionic Arts. Why don't I call over some of those Psions I brought to Chrona?"

"That's a good idea." Rebecca replies. "I've been saying you should include them in your work. If you want to make inroads with your guests, it's important you don't continue to treat them like outsiders."

Jason nods. He walks away to call Aspirator Raavul over, as well as a handful of her eager disciples. Chief among them being Initiator Ferral, who, despite lacking a mouth, always seems to be smiling from ear to ear whenever he gets a chance to speak to the Wordsmith.

[Wordsmith Commander Sir Lord Jason Hiro!] Ferral exclaims. [Do you require our assistance? My teacher and fellow initiates would be extremely happy to help! And me as well, of course!]

Jason laughs at the youthful Psion's excitement while also doing his best to ignore the fact Ferral is hundreds of years older than him.

"I could indeed use your help. If you would all be so kind as to talk to Rebecca, she and I have been working on creating, combining, enhancing, and otherwise altering a variety of exotic materials. One of these is called Cerebral-115, and it only seems to be useful for Psions..."

Jason quickly explains the utility of this exotic, but to his dismay, not even Raavul has ever heard of it. She simply listens to his explanation, then nods.

[It seems to be quite a formidable and useful alloy. Very well. My disciples and I will be happy to assist you in investigating the effects of this Exotic material.]

"Thanks. We'll take all the help we can get." Jason says, before turning to start walking away.

Hardly has he taken two steps before Ferral pipes up. [Lord Wordsmith, sir! Aren't you going to join us?]

"In a bit. I need to talk to a few friends of mine first." Jason says.

[I see! Then we will await your return!] Ferral concludes.

The Psions enter into the warehouse to talk with Rebecca. After they depart, Jason concentrates his mind.

"Recall. Recall."

He uses his Wordsmithing to teleport two Felorians into Chrona: Brunhilda and Sariah. Originally, Jason planned to keep the Felorians inside Chrona's sphere, but he sent them back out to help fight off Mephisto's forces. Now, he once again requires their assistance.

The two women pause after arriving, having unexpectedly appeared inside an unfamiliar location. It only takes them three seconds to recognize Chrona's unique appearance, as well as the Wordsmith before them.

"Ah, Wordsmith." Brunhilda says, bowing her head respectfully for a moment. "Can we help you?"

"I wanted to inquire about your tests. Have you made any progress yet?" Jason asks.

Brunhilda blinks her pretty blue eyes twice. "...our tests? Err, we haven't started yet. We only fought Mephisto a few hours ago... we haven't had time to experiment with your gifts."

Jason coughs. "Right. A few hours. Sometimes I forget about the time dilation differential..."

The Wordsmith hesitates for a few seconds while collecting his thoughts.

"I've brought a newcomer to Chrona. Her name is Rebecca, and she's a Cybernite. She's been helping me perform experiments with these special materials known as 'Exotics', and it got me thinking..."

Jason takes a few minutes to explain his recent findings. However, in the middle of his explanation, Sariah frowns deeply and begins scratching at the back of her head in a somewhat distracting manner, while Brunhilda's right eye starts twitching erratically, making her rub her eye and wince.

"Agh!" Brunhilda lightly exclaims. "What is this feeling? It's so irritating..."

"I feel it too." Sariah says, as she scratches the back of her head more intensely. "Feels like there are a bunch of flies crawling around under my hair! It's making me so itchy!"

Jason looks at them, bewildered. "Is something the matter?"

In unison, both women look away from Jason. They direct their attention toward the warehouse where Rebecca and the Psions entered.

"This feeling is coming from over there." Brunhilda exclaims, rubbing her eye even more intensely. "I apologize, Jason, but I cannot focus on anything you're saying! This itch behind my eye is driving me mad!"

"Hmm. Let's go see what's happening." Jason says, momentarily worried something may have gone wrong with the Psions and Rebecca.

He turns to walk toward the warehouse, but quickly breaks into a jog with Brunhilda and Sariah following close behind him. They arrive at the entrance in under thirty seconds, causing Sariah to moan in annoyance. "This itchy feeling is getting more intense every second! It feels like t something sparking a reaction inside my skin!"

When Jason enters, he immediately spots Rebecca standing at a table directly across from Aspirator Raavul, who happens to be levitating an oblong-shaped, fist-sized rock made of Cerebral-115 in the air before herself. As Jason draws within eyesight-range of those two, he picks up on Raavul's words. She only happens to be projecting them in a nearby radius for the benefit of her students, but not 'shouting loudly' enough for them to penetrate through solid walls.

[-remarkable, I must admit.] Raavul says. [I am not much of a world-weary soul, Miss Rebecca. I possess little experience when it comes to Exotics, and none at all in regards to Exotics of this level. I must imagine this 'Cerebral-115' is a precious commodity within my Empire, used only by High Psions.]

"That, it is." Rebecca replies with a nod. "Typically, this Exotic is used by Psions of the 6th Level and up. It's used to temper one's Psionic Seed, but you must have strongly decided the Path you will walk before you can use it to its fullest extent."

[Hmm. I feel that if I were to drain this Cerebral-115's power, I might temporarily obtain strength at the 4th Level... but it would ruin this rock entirely.]

"I don't know much about Cerebral-115's properties, unfortunately." Rebecca admits. "Only the notes from Miss Becker's database. We'll need to experiment to find other uses for it."

Jason walks over to the two women, catching their attention. "What are you two doing right now? It seems to be negatively affecting Brunhilda and Sariah."

Raavul blinks slowly. [I am currently performing a simple act of resonance with this remarkable Exotic. I was planning to tap into its core to test how it can augment my abilities. Why? Is there a problem?]

Brunhilda madly rubs her right eye. "Can you stop for a moment? There's some sort of energy signature inside that rock that's making my brain itch!"

[Oh. My apologies.] Raavul replies, immediately setting the rock down. [I was unaware of your discomfort.]

As soon as Raavul drops the Cerebral-115, Brunhilda and Sariah both breathe sighs of relief. That incredibly annoying itchy feeling disappears from their brains, allowing them to finally return to a sense of normalcy.

Rebecca frowns. "You two are able to sense the psionic fluctuations emanating from this alloy?"

"I suppose we are." Brunhilda says. She reaches toward the Exotic, only to pause and look at Jason. "...may I?"

"Go ahead." Jason answers.

Brunhilda picks up the Cerebral-115 and stares at it closely.

"Hmm... I don't feel like I can interact with this directly... unless- wait! What if I...?"

She inhales deeply and focuses her mind, driving part of her body's potential. She forces her muscles to tighten and for a mysterious spiritual connection to form between her soul and body. She strengthens her physical frame immensely over the course of just a few seconds, and in that short period of time, the Cerebral-115 begins to levitate out of her hand.

[What?!] Raavul exclaims. [Inconceivable! I sense no psionic activity from your body, yet somehow you are resonating with a pure-psionic Exotic!]

Rebecca frowns deeply. "This is indeed strange. How are you resonating with the Cerebral-115, Brunhilda?"

Brunhilda remains silent for a few moments longer before exhaling and allowing the Exotic to levitate downward back into her palm. She looks around at the Psions, then at Rebecca and Jason.

"It was simply my intuition. Something about this Exotic resonated with my soul. I felt as if I could reach out and touch it through the Wind Mother's blessing. It seems my intuition was correct."

Everyone falls silent for several seconds. Rebecca lifts up her hand and points a finger at Brunhilda. A wide-beam of light spreads out to scan the Felorian from head to toe, then she points at Raavul to repeat that process.

"My scans are inconclusive." Rebecca mutters under her breath. "You seem to be able to interact with psionic exotics through an unknown mechanism... perhaps your 'Wind Mother' has made this possible?"

Jason pipes up. "Brunhilda, you Felorians are capable of manipulating the energy known as 'Qi,' right? I remember the Battle Brothers, Duriel and Zamiel, could also manipulate it. Could 'Qi' have some relation to psionic power?"

"I have no idea." Brunhilda says, glancing at Sariah who also shrugs in response. "We wield the power granted by the Wind Mother. We do not question how it functions. That would be an insult to our deity."

Jason rubs his chin as he falls into thought. "What would allow a pair of demons like Zamiel and Duriel to wield Qi in the same way you do? Is their Qi the same as yours? Can you tell us more about it?"

Brunhilda makes eye contact with Raavul, sensing her deep interest in this topic, as well as the others awaiting her reply. She simply nods.

"Wordsmith, you appear to be under a misconception. I do not consider the power of Qi to be any grand secret. This power is not unique to my people, the Felorians. All humans are capable of accessing their internal Qi. The Wind Mother simply has made the process of manipulating Qi easier for Her devotees to obtain access."

"Any human can control Qi?" Rebecca repeats. "Marie Becker has provided me with notes regarding the Felorians. This was never an observation she made, nor did the Volgrim. How can you utter such a statement with so much confidence?"

"Because." Brunhilda answers. "We have already taught a few dozen non-Felorians to access the Wind Mother's power. It is a simple process, but it does require certain demands of those desiring to wield the Wind Mother's might."

Sensing a barrage of incoming questions, Brunhilda continues to speak.

"To manipulate Qi, one must first learn to sense this source of energy. Qi exists all around us, in countless forms. All life-forms radiate it and possess it within their minds, bodies, and souls, to varying extents. Inanimate objects, artifacts, and even ordinary rocks also radiate Qi. It surrounds us, binds us, and holds the fabric of reality together."

Jason itches the back of his neck. "So... it's... it's magic? Like my Wordsmithing??"

"No. Magic is different." Brunhilda retorts. "To what degree, I cannot speak with much confidence. I do not possess the ability to manipulate magic, after all. But the Wind Mother has told me this Truth; that magic and Qi are systems of power which affect the material realms differently."

"Whoa, whoa, whoa!" Jason exclaims. "Hold up a second. You're telling me you've SPOKEN to the Wind Mother?? As in, you have directly conversed with your goddess?!"

Sariah and Brunhilda exchange sardonic glances, as if having heard the dumbest question in the world. They both look at Jason in unison, obviously trying not to insult him with their gaze.

"...of course." Sariah says slowly. "All Felorians can communicate with the Wind Mother. If you follow our ways and meet the requirements to sense and manipulate Qi, you may speak to Her as well."

Jason's heart falls into disarray. All this time, he assumed the religion the Felorians followed was just some hokey mumbo-jumbo, but listening to them talk now, he feels as if their power might be based on something FAR more substantial, physical, and obtainable than he ever imagined.

"Okay, so what are the requirements to manipulate Qi then?" Jason asks. "Do I meet them?"

"We cannot say." Brunhilda replies. "First, to begin the process, one must sit beneath a tree, a cliff, a waterfall, or some other location rich in Qi energy. On my homeworld, there are many such known locations. Then, for 81 days and 81 nights, you must meditate while moving as little as possible. You must still your heart and focus your senses while wholeheartedly thinking of the Wind Mother. You must bare your soul to Her will, and if She finds you worthy, your body will spontaneously open the Doorway to your Inner Self. In that moment, you will become capable of walking the path of a Qi Cultivator."

"81 days and nights..." Jason says slowly. "What if you need to eat, or drink, or sleep, or pee...?"

"Ahem. You may of course attend to your bodily needs." Brunhilda says with a quick rolling of her eyes. "This process is not about following the exact letter of the Wind Mother's requirements, but their spirit."

Raavul, having been listening silently all this while, finally speaks.

[This act of meditation... it is extremely similar to the meditation a Psion must perform in order to form their Psionic Seed. Do your people also form... seeds?]

Brunhilda turns to look at Raavul in surprise. "I am not certain of what you speak. Can you explain the function of a 'Psionic Seed' to me? I don't believe my people do anything like that, but I could be wrong..."

Raavul hesitates, given the potentially sensitive nature of this information. Telling outsiders the details of her people's power could someday result in a calamity if the humans learned how to weaponize the information to their advantage.

She opts to speak of this information in only the broadest terms.

[A Psionic Seed is the core of all psionic power.] Raavul begins. [Through meditation, study, and practice, Psions learn to walk a Path. Paths can come in many forms. For example, that ability you used earlier is not so different from what a Body Strengthening Psion might do, where they temporarily boost their physical power to extreme heights. We can also manipulate the elements, augment our telepathy and telekinesis, and elevate our control over other similar effects.]

She continues. [Forming a Psionic Seed is only the first step. To reach greater heights, we must study and consolidate our power over long, long reaches of time. Thousands of your human-years can pass before we rise from the first to the second to the third level of Psionic Power. Some Psions rise quickly, but most do not.]

"I see..." Brunhilda says softly. "So it's like that. You slowly amass power over time, occasionally gaining much greater bursts when you ascend to the next level of Psionic Power. Unfortunately, our Qi does not function in that way. The power we gain from the Wind Mother always seems to reach a plateau before we can ascend any further."

Once more, the room becomes quiet.

Raavul silently thinks about the information Brunhilda has given her. She compares the process of ascension for Felorians to the one she has personally used to reach the 3rd Level of her Psionic Power.

Ultimately, she feels a slight coldness, a primal fear deep within her bones.

This process... it is frighteningly similar to the one my people use to Ascend. Could it be that mud-dwellers are capable of wielding a power not dissimilar to that of the Psions? Are the High Psions even aware of this matter?

While she broods, Jason turns to Brunhilda.

"I'd be interested in trying to wield Qi, but... 81 days and nights? That's a LOT of time to spend. Can I do it on my off-days and weekends or something?"

"The period of self-examination must be as uninterrupted as possible." Brunhilda states emphatically. "A strong sense of patience is essential to master the power of Qi. If you cannot bring yourself to spend such a long time meditating, then the Path of Qi is not for you."

"I guess it isn't." Jason says with a shrug. "Shame. I have Wordsmithing anyway, so I guess it doesn't matter. But are you really telling me there are people on Tarus II, non-Felorians, who have learned to sense Qi?"

"I would never utter a lie capable of harming the Wind Mother's face." Brunhilda answers. "Those with patience and talent can join my people as wielders of Qi. They can speak to the Wind Mother and learn her Truths for themselves."

"I assume there are other requirements." Rebecca suddenly says. "It can't be as simple as a mere three-month period of meditation. Even if one were to find meditation boring, this is a relatively small price to pay in order to obtain extraordinary superhuman abilities."

"One must possess other qualifications." Brunhilda admits with a nod. "A pure heart is essential, as well as a strong desire for self-improvement. The more physically fit one is, the better their mastery of Qi can become."

"You said a person's heart has to be pure?" Jason asks. "Then hold on a second! What about Duriel and Zamiel? If those guys are wielding Qi, then are you telling me they're pure-hearted?! Those two were pure EVIL, if anything!"

"I cannot speak to how that pair of demons came to possess control over Qi." Brunhilda says calmly. "But what I can say is that they did not access it through the Wind Mother. She merely granted our species one method to walk the path of a Cultivator. There are some who have obtained this power through other means."

Jason snorts. "Yeah? Like who?"

"The first human to ever become a cultivator was not a Felorian." Brunhilda says quietly. "The Wind Mother once spoke of his identity to me. His name was Siddhartha Gautama."

"Buddha!" Jason exclaims, shock lacing his voice. "He's a cultivator too? He's still alive!"

"That he is." Brunhilda acknowledges. "Buddha did not obtain his powers through the Wind Mother's assistance. He obtained them through diligent meditation, through his pure heart, and through a single-minded dedication to finding Enlightenment. He is the progenitor of Cultivation, and thus the one you should ask questions regarding its future potential."

Jason nods slowly. "I will definitely do that when I have time."

Raavul, having remained quiet for the past two minutes, decides to interject.

[Lady Brunhilda. I have a suspicion regarding your... Qi mastery...]

"A suspicion?" Brunhilda repeats. "I'm listening."

[I suspect... you have not tapped properly into your full potential. Perhaps you may not have even reached a fraction of your full potential. I believe your mastery of Qi may be capable of evolving far, far beyond what it is now. I also fear that voicing this suspicion could cause a terrible calamity to fall upon my Volgrim Empire.]

Brunhilda waits a few seconds before replying.

"You believe... since Qi Cultivation seems somewhat similar to your Psionic Seed... it might be capable of progressing upward in power through a means similar to what Psions use? And by telling me this, in the long term, it could threaten the Volgrim Empire by allowing humanity to harness ever greater levels of martial strength?"

[...Yes.] Raavul says, her stomach feeling as if she has swallowed a fly. [Precisely that. I should state that I do not harbor any resentment toward the group assembled here, specifically. But I contemplate and I comprehend that today's discussion may have far-reaching consequences I am too slow and dull-minded to predict. I worry I may have sent a future calamity hurtling toward my people, and would ask that you not reveal this information to those... corrupt of heart.]

"I fully understand." Brunhilda says quietly. "I would like to work with you on human-Psion relations. Perhaps the two of us could learn from one another in mastering our respective powers. For now, only Sariah and I need to know of these developments. That way, we can keep any negative future issues contained purely to Chrona."

[I would appreciate such a boon.] Raavul says, while slowly blinking her eyes and nodding her head. [May the Founders bless our efforts with a gift of long-lasting peace between our species.]

"May the Wind Mother guide our hands to produce future miracles." Brunhilda replies with a radiant smile.

Jason's eyes flicker between the Psion and Felorian. He silently evaluates the potential Pandora's Box he may have just opened by bringing these two together.

But in his heart of hearts, he decides that it can only end up a net gain for humanity, assuming anything happens at all.

Maybe nothing will come of these talks and the Felorians, as well as other Qi Cultivators, won't become any mightier. Perhaps Raavul is wrong and they have indeed already reached the apex of their strength - barely being capable of contending against Demon Barons.

But then again... perhaps humanity may have just unlocked a new path of progression. A method they can use to rise to frightening heights in the not-so-distant future!

The Wordsmith shrugs.

Eh. I'll worry about this stuff when it becomes more relevant. If bad things happen, I can always do some casual mind-wiping to eliminate the knowledge of Qi Empowerment. How crazy can things possibly get?

While these high-level sentients debate the ethics of what they've just discussed, Initiator Ferral suddenly pipes up.

[Excuse me, Master Raavul. Can I interact with the Cerebral-115 now? Is it my turn?]

[You brat!] Raavul exclaims, resisting the urge to slap her disciple. [Stop embarrassing me! This Exotic is not a toy! Wait until you've reached the 3rd-Level before having designs on such a powerful material!]

Ferral's expression falls.

[Humph. Just you wait and see. I'll rise through the ranks faster than you can imagine, teacher!]

Jason chuckles. "Yeah, sure you will, kid."

Part 533: Liberating Sharmur!

On the world of Sharmur, billions of simple-minded creatures live in peace. Birds, trees, mammals and bees. Through convergent evolution, plenty of creatures on Sharmur share traits with the animals that once arose on humanity's homeworld, Earth. They live in harmony with nature, chirping and releasing mating calls as they go about their lives, living purely through the instincts that have evolved over tens of millions of years.

However, on this fallen world, a strange aberration exists. A species known as the Kolvaxians.

This alien form of life coexists with the creatures that originally inhabited Sharmur. But it is a disquieting entity that does not live in the same way Sharmur's natives do.

The Kolvaxians stand in place, unmoving. Each one faceless, unidentifiable. Like zombies, the Plagueborn stare vacantly into the distance, their figures infesting the many cities that were once controlled by Demon Emperors, Dukes, and Barons, and were once populated by those demons and their human comrades.

But no longer.

Now, only the Kolvaxians remain, converted by the power of some unknown alien entity.

The creatures native to Sharmur give every Kolvaxian a wide berth, as if a foul stench were radiating from their bodies. As for the Kolvaxians themselves, they pay no attention to any entity lacking in sentience.

Sharmur's primitives simply lack any attraction to the Kolvaxian hivemind.

* * *

In the skies of Sharmur, a sudden and violent tearing of space rips apart the upper atmosphere. A ten-foot-in-diameter portal materializes, only to rapidly expand in size as a surge of Cosmic Energy pours into it.

On the other side, on the world of Numaria, Emperor Yardrat grimaces as he stands atop the shoulder of the Archdemon, pushing his magical powers to the peak. He forcibly widens his portal to a previously unimaginable size, expanding it to become bigger and bigger than ever.

Diablo watches.

Inside the Archdemon's body, Diablo's Emperor-form rests, controlling the Archdemon through some mystical, unknown methods. He gazes at the portal, sending his Cosmic Energy into Yardrat's body to empower him further.

"Just a little more." Diablo says, his astral form levitating next to Yardrat. "You're almost there."

The Emperor of the Void roars with pain as he drives the demonic energy within himself to higher and higher levels, feeling as if his body will explode with the might of a nuclear bomb. He holds himself together through sheer force of will, and eventually he manages to raise the portal to a size just barely big enough for the Archdemon to fit through.

"Good work!" Diablo praises. "This next part will be up to me- hm?"

Diablo frowns. Through the portal, he senses the approach of several powerful life-forms. The Kolvaxians detect the aura of a demonic powerhouse and begin racing toward the portal from all across Sharmur.

Silently, two dozen Psion-type Kolvaxians tear across Sharmur's airspace. They rush toward the Archdemon fearlessly, as if Diablo himself were nothing more than a gnat they needed to swat out of the air.

Diablo's astral figure dissipates as he takes full control of the Archdemon's body. The Archdemon's head casually adjusts its angle as it looks in their direction.

GOOD. COME TO ME. THAT WILL MAKE HUNTING YOU DOWN MUCH EASIER.

Without warning, Diablo rushes forward, leaping through the portal at a speed far faster than any observer would expect. He jumps through the portal with Yardrat on his back, and at the same time, the army of Demon Emperors and Dukes behind him follow afterward.

The approaching Psion-Kolvaxians express no fear of the Archdemon through their movements. Like mindless automatons, they continue charging at Diablo as if they were lobotomized chickens attacking a Dire Wolf. Their actions make little sense to the demons following the Archdemon.

In unison, a hundred of the Archdemon's tentacles snap at the Kolvaxians. They rip through the air at supersonic speeds, closing the gap in an instant and causing sonic booms to erupt in their wake.

An instant later, those tentacles collide with the Kolvaxian attackers. Many Demon Emperors, such as Fae and Serena, expect a huge battle to take place, but they jerk in fright as Diablo easily kills the Kolvaxians with ease. His tentacles tear into them and rip them to shreds with no effort whatsoever, ending the 'threat' of these enemies as if they never possessed any to begin with.

Fae cackles. "Hahahaha! That was pathetic! The Kolvaxians exploded into pieces! This is gonna be SO easy!"

"DO NOT BECOME COMPLACENT." The Archdemon warns. "THE ENEMY WILL ADAPT. SO TOO MUST WE."

Emperor Kristoff sneers. "With the Archdemon by our side, nothing can stop us!"

"THOSE WERE MERELY SCOUTS." Diablo warns. "THE TRUE VANGUARD HAS YET TO ARRIVE."

Inside Sharmur's planetary core, a series of powerful life-forms emerges. Diablo senses these newcomers, but his comparatively weaker compatriots do not. The Archdemon's head inclines downward, toward the incoming threats, but the Demon Emperors look forward instead, toward the shaking treeline. A massive horde of Kolvaxians runs at them beneath the tree cover, making them frown.

"So many?!" Kristoff gasps.

Emperor Melody levitates beside him, a complicated look in her eyes. "The former inhabitants of Sharmur. My friends..."

Diablo lifts one of his hands. "GO. I WILL SUPPORT YOU FROM BEHIND. MY FOCUS MUST BE ON THE ELITES OUR ENEMY WILL CALL FORTH. I HAVE NO TIME TO SLAY THE WEAKLINGS. THAT IS YOUR TASK TO PERFORM..."

Unable to maintain his power any longer, Yardrat finally seals the portal shut, forcing his allies to confront the Kolvaxians head-on. He wipes his sweat-covered brow, then stands up straight atop the Archdemon's shoulder.

"We no longer have a path of retreat! Everyone, kill these Kolvaxians! Take back Sharmur!"

"For Guura! For Viola! And for Shax and Murmur!" Emperor Melody shouts, her emotions rising as she remembers the friends she lost. Her sonic powers project her voice over the entire region, causing the trees to sway as her sound-waves strike them.

"For Sharmur!" All the other Emperors shout in unison.

Like this, the battle erupts.

Demonkind brings its mightiest demons to the battlefield. Only Dukes and Emperors have the capital to appear. Not one Lord or Baron joins the party, leaving a small but elite force to push their way toward Sharmur's largest city.

The Archdemon concentrates the power of destruction into its mouth. It launches the first attack far into the distance, aiming at the largest concentration of incoming Kolvaxians.

THOOOOM!!

A laser of nuclear hellfire lances into the distance, detonating with terrifying strength. The entire planet rumbles as Diablo sweeps his head from right to left, slaughtering 500,000 Kolvaxians in an instant. He rips apart the tree-line and forcibly creates a zone of death for the demons in front of him to arrive at and begin fighting inside.

Inside this area, flames rage and the temperature rises to several hundred degrees. Emperor Serena shrieks at the top of her lungs, sending a shockwave of sound to extinguish Diablo's hellfire, as well as to flatten whatever large terrain features might remain, obstructing her allies' lines of sight.

Like this, an impromptu battlefield forms, creating a flat area for the demon rulers to do battle with their blood-enemies.

Dukes fight on the frontlines like common footsoldiers. Even the Emperors find themselves coming up a little short as tens of thousands of Kolvaxians tear through the woodlands to fight them in the open terrain!

With eerie silence, never making any deliberate noise, the flood of Kolvaxians continues unstoppably. Emperor Serena blows up hundreds, even thousands of them with her violent thunderclap-shrieks. Emperor Kristoff forms powerful blood shields to defend the frontlines, as well as halberds of blood to slaughter any Kolvaxians attacking from the sides. Emperor Fae gleefully lobs bombs at the enemy, cackling maniacally as she is allowed to go all-out on her aggression. Among the demons present, Fae quickly racks up the highest kill-count.

Dagon, the Emperor of Pathogens, works in tandem with Vepar, the Corrosive Emperor. Together they spread corrosive acid on the ground and in the air to slow down any Kolvaxians approaching them from behind and from the front.

Rhesus, the Emperor of Ripping, fights like a savage on the frontlines. He follows orders and stays close to the main group, but for any Kolvaxian that comes too close, he pounces at them and rips them apart with his claws, devouring them to minutely increase his strength.

At the same time, while the Emperors and Dukes do battle, two dozen Psion-type Kolvaxians emerge from underground and ignore the Demon Emperors and Dukes. These newcomers instead attack the Archdemon, sensing its immense threat and intuitively understanding they must kill it first before dealing with the small fry.

Among these Psion-Kolvaxians are two 8th-Level Psions, the rest being only 7th-Level. Much like when Mephisto fought them, Diablo comes under a field of suppression. He lacks the speed and durability of the Myriad Deity, but he makes up for this disadvantage with a far greater level of magical power and a regenerative capability bordering on the invincible.

"YOU'VE COME TO FACE YOUR DEATHS!" The Archdemon roars, releasing beams of nuclear hellfire with laser precision. He blasts one of the 7th-Level Psions out of the sky, rending its body to pieces, but the two 8th-Level Psions circle around behind him where his mouth can't strike them.

These two high-level Kolvaxians speak no words. They lack mouths, and they lack the ability to speak telepathically. They act like mindless automatons, but Diablo knows... there is more to these creatures than meets the eye.

"HEH HEH... STILL HAVE NOTHING TO SAY? I KNOW YOU ARE NOT WHAT YOU SEEM. TODAY, I WILL IMPRINT THE FEAR OF THE ARCHDEMON WITHIN YOUR SOULS."

Diablo claps his upper and lower hands together, releasing a massive domain of gravity magic around himself. The Psions flying around him abruptly slow down in midair and lose a great deal of their strength, shuddering as the full power of a Middle Cosmic Entity crashes into their bodies.

One of the 8th-Level Psions yanks a dozen massive trees out of the nearby forest. It transforms those trees, transmuting them from wood to iron to steel, and then to an even more powerful, unknown, exotic compound. This metal forms in a single second, then transforms into a 300-foot-long series of chains, which it snaps at the Archdemon's neck like a whip!

The chain-whip wraps around Diablo's neck and the Psion holds on, stabilizing its position in the air to resist the Archdemon's gravitic magic.

"I SEE..." Diablo says, turning his massive head slightly to peer behind himself at the High Psion. "SO YOU ARE THAT WEAK LITTLE 'COPY' OF EXECUTOR HURON. I'VE BEEN LOOKING FORWARD TO FIGHTING YOU."

Diablo's eyeless head does not have the ability to 'see' in the way one might imagine, but he merely does this out of reflex, since he ordinarily occupies a Demon body that does possess eyes.

At the same time, the second High Psion yanks up a nearby lake with the power of Fluidic Psionics. It sends this massive body of water flying at the Archdemon, splashing Diablo and soaking him from head to toe.

Then, the Psion conjures a massive amount of electrical power in its grasp. It erupts with a planet-shaking bolt of lightning, sending that power flying at the Archdemon's back!

BOOOOM!!

The Archdemon staggers slightly as the water soaking its body increases the conductivity of that lightning strike. But ultimately, despite the large hole blasted in Diablo's back, the wound quickly regenerates, and he merely chuckles.

"HEH HEH... AND YOU MUST BE EXECUTOR SARTRAN'S CLONE. WHERE, I WONDER, IS THE FINAL EXECUTOR, HMM? TOO BUSY TO COME AND PLAY? LET'S CHANGE THAT."

The Kolvaxian copies of Executors Huron and Sartran give no reply to Diablo. They continue attacking him from behind while he clumsily turns around to swing a palm at them. Thanks to the power of his Gravity Domain, their speed actually drops low enough that he manages to casually swap Huron's Kolvax-clone out of the air, but such a casual strike doesn't cause it any severe damage. Huron loses its grip on the metal chain and falls out of the sky, smashing into the ground, while Sartran continues pummeling Diablo with lightning from afar.

Simultaneously, two dozen 7th-Level Psions strike Diablo with fire, ice, plasma, wind, and all sorts of other attacks. Diablo's tentacles snap at these Psions, but many of them end up pulverized to meat by the Psion's combined strength!

Unfortunately for the Kolvaxians, the strength of their Psion-copies pales in comparison to the original bodies.

Executor Sartran wields the power of a Low Cosmic. But his Kolvaxian-clone only wields the power of a Bottom Cosmic!

As for 7th Level Psions, they ordinarily wield the power of Bottom Cosmics, but now their Kolvax-clones fight at a level between a Demon Emperor and a Bottom Cosmic; more than capable of flattening most Demon Emperors, but nowhere near powerful enough to threaten an entity like the Archdemon!

Large icicles fly into Diablo's body, each one the size of a tree! But compared to his titanic figure, these ice-spears are practically tiny needles, little more than an annoyance to him.

Thunder and fire blow apart chunks of the Archdemon's flesh, but Diablo regenerates these wounds with ease.

Huge blades and hammers made of condensed metal-energy slice and bash the Archdemon, but most of these barely cause even the lightest of surface damage.

Between the copies of Executor Sartran and Huron, there exists a boundary of two levels separating them from the Archdemon's Cosmic Power. From Bottom Cosmic to Low Cosmic to Middle Cosmic, High Cosmic, and Apex Cosmic, the absolute power any Cosmic Entity controls can vary drastically.

Perhaps if these were the original bodies of the Executors, they might be able to put up a serious fight against the Archdemon... but since they aren't, they simply can't.

As for the 7th-Level Psion copies, they can barely even cause him to flinch.

One hour passes. Two hours, three, then four...

Over and over, the Archdemon smashes apart the Psion-Kolvaxians. He splatters their bodies into mist-particles with his palms, crushes them into the dirt with his gravity magic, blasts them out of the air with his nuclear-breath, and uses his tentacles to chew up their remains and supplement his regenerative capabilities.

Whenever Diablo kills one of these mighty Psions, a short period follows before they regenerate, swim up and out of the planet core, and emerge from the soil to fly back up into the air and rejoin the battle. None of this escapes Diablo's notice.

At the same time, Diablo does not neglect his comrades. He keeps a portion of his demonic sense locked on the battle between the lowly, common Kolvaxians, as they battle the Emperors and Dukes.

Emperor Fae cries out in fear as a pair of Kolvaxians pounce out of the ground below her, grab her arms, and yank her into the dirt. She disappears underground before anyone can react, causing a brief panic to spread among the Emperors.

"Fae!" Melody shrieks, reliving the trauma of her lost world. "No!!!"

But Diablo notices this event. He sends his tentacles burrowing underground to intercept Fae as the Kolvaxians drag her into the planet's crust. Before they can traverse a mile of the underground soil, Diablo's teeth-filled mouths chew up and rip apart those feeble Kolvaxians, then quickly pull the Emperor of Terror back up to the surface, throwing her back into the fray.

She gasps for breath, momentarily losing her cool. Fae is usually such a wild-spirited Demoness, but when she found herself faced with the horrors of zombification, even she lost her cool and fell into a state of panic.

Fae directs an unusually cordial look toward the distant Archdemon as Diablo continues to battle his Psion enemies.

"...Thanks, Deebs. I owe you one." Fae mumbles.

The battle continues.

Despite her near-death experience, Fae returns to flinging bombs at the largest groups of Kolvaxians. The eerily silent enemies actually begin to slow down their attack speed as the Emperors and Dukes slaughter them faster than they can emerge from underground.

During the battle, despite its fearsome tempo, Diablo maintains his cool. He waits for a previously-agreed-upon signal, and that signal comes when the First Emperor manifests into reality, stepping across the Void to approach Diablo from across the horizon.

In a mere ten seconds, the First Emperor's illusory body travels hundreds of miles to appear beside the Archdemon. For some reason, the Kolvaxians don't react to the First Emperor's presence, as if they are incapable of sensing it...

Diablo. The time has arrived. The Core has lost enough energy for you to execute the next phase.

"FINALLY. I HAVE WAITED LONG ENOUGH." Diablo booms.

Abruptly, Diablo stops battling the Psion-clones. He ignores them as they continue uselessly blasting him and peppering him with powerful but ineffective elemental attacks.

The Archdemon lowers its head. It gazes deep into Sharmur's interior, toward the very core of the planet.

As for what the Archdemon sees, that is something few can know...

Diablo launches hundreds of tentacles downward. They burrow into the planet, chewing through the dirt and magma as they become enveloped by tens, hundreds, thousands, and even millions of tons of pressure. The deeper these tentacles travel, the faster they move, somehow defying the laws of physics.

Even when the core of the planet reaches tens of thousands of degrees in temperature, those tentacles continue stretching, moving downward far further than many would believe them capable of stretching.

The Psions attack Diablo relentlessly. They strike him with attacks that would slaughter Demon Emperors like pigs, but no matter how mighty their powers might seem, they barely even injure the Archdemon.

Suddenly, the Psions stop attacking him. They pause in midair, then they begin to shiver, as if they are mere humans that have fallen into a freezing cold tundra of ice and snow.

At the same time, the Kolvaxians attacking the Emperors and Dukes also pause their movements, freezing wherever they stand. They, too, begin trembling madly, then they fall to the ground and convulse as if suffering violent, epileptic seizures.

Bewildered, the Emperors gaze at their formerly frightening enemies with looks of confusion.

"Is... is this part of Diablo's plan?" Kristoff asks.

"It must be." Emperor Serena says. "But..."

Before she can say anything else, something happens that startles all of the demons in the assault force.

The Kolvaxians disintegrate!

Their bodies crumble to ash and dust. They cease their movements and fall eerily still, then begin melting into particles of sand, crumbling apart for seemingly no rhyme or reason.

The lofty Psions that were attacking Diablo only moments earlier fall from the sky, strike the ground, and explode into ash, their souls and vitality disappearing from Sharmur's planetary sphere.

The First Emperor and Diablo both express no joy. To them, this result was already preordained.

"EVERYONE." Diablo says, his voice booming across the horizon. "OPERATION VINDICATION IS COMPLETE. WE HAVE RETAKEN SHARMUR!"

"We did it?" Kristoff gasps. "We really did?"

Tears well up in Emperor Melody's eyes. She collapses to her knees and heaves a great sigh as she feels a terrible mental burden finally lift.

Her world, Sharmur, has been retaken! This is a feat not even the Volgrim have accomplished in the last 100,000 years!

She wasn't able to bring back Guura, Viola, Dorma, or the others who fell, but that fact doesn't dampen her spirits. Melody still feels a sense of euphoria as she realizes today marks a true turning point for demonkind.

"We defeated the Kolvaxians!" Melody exclaims. "If we did it once, we can do it again!"

"And again!" Yardrat cheers. "This is only the beginning, everyone!"

All the demons roar with excitement. They pump their fists into the air and issue a joyful cry.

"Diablo! Our savior!"

"The Archdemon guides us!"

"The Archdemon guides us!"

"The Archdemon guides us!"

These cheers erupt spontaneously, with Melody's voice crying out the loudest as she shouts with all the force in her lungs.

At the same time, the Archdemon remains quiet, allowing his subordinates to vent their frustrations and joy. For them, this is a defining moment that signals the beginning of a new path for demonkind.

But as for Diablo?

This is only the beginning.

Diablo's astral body reforms. He levitates downward, materializing in his Emperor form as he travels to the clearing where all the other demon leaders have assembled.

"Everyone. Thank you. If it were not for you holding back the horde, this victory would not have come easily. Demonkind needs more than a mere Archdemon to win this war. It needs all of you to contribute your blood, sweat, and tears to our cause."

Diablo's humble words cause even more cheers to erupt. He smiles and waits for those cheers to die down.

"Today is only the beginning. Now that we have retaken Sharmur and proven that we are capable of doing battle against the Kolvaxian menace, our value is going to skyrocket in the eyes of our… competitors. The Volgrim are old and decrepit. The humans are young and stupid. The angels are nothing but a shadow of their former selves. Only WE, the demons, possess the capital to retake and control the Milky Way for all eternity!"

The Emperors and Dukes restrain their cheers. Something about Diablo's words makes them a little uneasy.

"Is there a problem then, Diablo?" Yardrat asks. "It seems like you have something else to say?"

"There is not a problem. Not yet…" Diablo says slowly. "But in time, there will come a catastrophe that we must begin plans to mitigate now. Let me speak plainly."

He pauses.

"Demonkind… is cursed. We are all incapable of properly ascending to the rank of Cosmic. This is because of those DAMNED Archangels! They placed limiters on our power. They did so because they feared us... and they were right to fear us. But simply put, we face a critical juncture."

Diablo sweeps his gaze across the expectant faces of his brothers and sisters.

"Imagine a time, 50,000 years from now. We have successfully cleared the Milky Way of the Kolvaxians. We have retaken countless worlds in the name of the Demon Empire. Do you think we will possess the capital to contend with the Volgrim?"

"Won't we?" Kristoff asks, visibly confused. "We have you, the Archdemon! If you can defeat the Kolvaxians-"

"I am but a single Cosmic." Diablo says quietly. "A Middle Cosmic, yes. Perhaps equal to Founder Dosena. But that is all. We are in a unique situation right now. I am potentially capable of doing battle with the Second Founder. But I am only one entity. Even if Mephisto were to join forces with me... that is the extent of our forces. Do you think I alone am capable of holding all the worlds we will eventually take from the Kolvaxians?"

Like this, the enthusiasm of the gathered group drops significantly. The Emperors and Dukes look at one another, worried about what all this means.

"So... we... what do we do?" Yardrat asks. "If we purge the Kolvaxians, we'll have to face humanity and the Volgrim. You think demonkind will die if the Kolvaxians are no longer around to keep the Volgrim in line?"

"That would indeed be the case under normal circumstances..." Diablo says softly, as a faint smile begins to spread across his face. "However... what if I told you there was a secret method we could use to raise up Demon Deities to protect our newly-taken worlds, hmm?"

"A secret method?" Melody asks. "Like what?"

Diablo gestures around himself, to the entirety of Sharmur.

"The First Emperor and I came up with a special method of Deity Empowerment just two years ago. It is truly versatile, and all it requires is the power belonging to Emperor Nymph."

Nymph, the Emperor of the Forest, blinks her ruby eyes with great surprise. "...what? Me? How is my power relevant?"

"With your abilities..." Diablo says slowly, "...we will crown the first of the Planar Wardens. Elite warriors possessing Cosmic Power. The first line of defense, should our enemies decide to invade."

Diablo raises a single finger. He points at one of the Emperors.

"And you, Emperor Melody, will become the Planar Warden of Sharmur."

Melody's jaw drops, along with many other demons present.

"...W-what? ME?!"

Part 534: Planar Wardens

On the world of Sharmur, a strange peace settles across the land. A creeping dread had long taken hold of the indigenous life, the mammals and lizards and birds alike. They subtly feared the strange, unmoving creatures which radiated an aura unfamiliar to them... the alien Kolvaxian life forms.

But now, those Kolvaxians have died. All thanks to the efforts of Diablo and his fellow demons.

As for those demons, they gaze at their leader with looks of surprise and shock. Melody, especially, has her jaw hanging open in complete disbelief.

"M-me? You want me to be... the Warden of Sharmur? I don't... I don't feel I am worthy."

She lowers her eyes, a deep sense of despair in her heart.

"When the Kolvaxians attacked, I couldn't do anything at all. My powers barely pushed them back. Viola fell, as did Guura and Dorma and all the others... I ran away like a coward while so many of my friends perished. I don't deserve to be elevated at all."

Diablo listens to her words, but he does not relent. He continues to levitate in midair, looking down upon his fellow Emperors and Dukes as if he were a god possessing unimaginable power.

"You are mistaking my words." Diablo says calmly. "I am not asking you to become Sharmur's Planar Warden. I am commanding you. And make no mistake... this is an incredible gift, but it is also a heavy burden. In the future, I will expect many more of you to become Wardens. This is demonkind's best method of obtaining Cosmic Power, but it is a path that will cost each of you dearly."

Yardrat frowns slightly. "What is your meaning, Diablo? Are you saying we cannot become Demon Deities without shackling ourselves in some way?"

"That is precisely my meaning." Diablo answers without hesitation. "Look at the historical precedents. Wolfram became a Deity, but for less than a handful of hours. He perished, his body and soul turning to ash. Mephisto stepped past the boundary as well, but he only managed to step into the lowest of all Cosmics, a weakling capable of trampling mortals wantonly while being utterly helpless against any self-respecting Cosmic, such as myself and Founder Dosena."

"Think of me, as well." Diablo continues. "I am not a Cosmic. I merely 'wield' Cosmic Power. This body of mine is but a suit of skin that possesses true Cosmic Power. It once belonged to an Apex Cosmic, a Titan of unimaginable strength from the Primordial Era named 'Morva.' But me? I am barely able to control a portion of its power. In the end, I am still only a Demon Emperor like the rest of you, but one who has cheated to reach a higher boundary."

Diablo lowers his eyes. He shakes his head in dismay.

"All of you. All of us. We demons are a cursed species. We are soul manipulators, through and through. We devour the souls of countless Sentients to fuel our ascension. This historically granted us tremendous power, but it has also placed an invisible limiter on our species. Stepping past the boundary of Mortal to become Cosmic is... almost impossible."

Kristoff massages his chin. "You're saying that no matter how many souls we eat, we can never step past the rank of Demon Emperor? None of us can become Demon Deities, no matter how we try?"

Diablo sighs, his voice soft. "For the past six years, the First Emperor and I have quietly experimented with the power granted by Morva's body. We came to many startling conclusions, obtaining results that proved there is a deep order to the universe than cannot be explained by mere evolution or happenstance."

He pauses.

"This sense of order is known as the Akashic Laws. And these Laws do not tolerate the evils of soul manipulation past a certain point. They are the reason demons cannot step into the rank of Cosmic without making deep and painful sacrifices."

Melody listens quietly, then raises her hand.

"You keep mentioning making sacrifices. What sorts of sacrifices would I need to make to become a Planar Warden?"

Diablo smiles.

"Now that... that is the question you should be asking."

He levitates downward, then strolls into the middle of the assembled demons so that everyone can be within an equal distance of him when he speaks.

"Before I answer your question, let me first tell you what a Planar Warden is. It is a higher form of demon identity, one that achieves Cosmic Power not through harnessing the power of massed-souls, but through the power of one or more celestial bodies."

"Specifically," Diablo says, glancing around the assembled group, "the energy contained within a planet."

Emperor Nymph narrows her beautiful eyes. "You said before that my abilities are required to create a Planar Warden. Is that because... I can manipulate the life-force of a planet?"

"You are a lot like Archangel Uzziel in that way." Diablo says, affirming her guess. "Nowhere near as strong as the progenitor of demonkind, but your abilities aren't too dissimilar. By linking the power of a planet's core to the soul of a given demon, we can drastically elevate them, turning an Emperor into a Cosmic."

Diablo continues. "If this sounds too good to be true, that's because it is. To give an example, if we link Melody's soul to Sharmur, then she will indeed be easily capable of rising to the rank of a Demon Deity. But this power... it will only remain in effect so long as she is within the voidspace of Sharmur. If she were to travel to Hell or pass through a Warpgate to visit another world, she would immediately lose that power... or worse."

"Or worse?" Melody asks, her heart skipping a beat. "Does that mean I could die?!"

Diablo doesn't immediately answer her question. Instead, he changes the subject.

"There are three types of Planar Wardens. Each type is more powerful than the last. But to obtain such great strength, one must pay a higher and higher price."

Diablo holds up a single finger.

"The first type of Warden is a Free Warden. An Emperor who becomes a Free Warden will immediately obtain the power of a Demon Deity! Even so, they will be little more than a Bottom Cosmic... the same as Mephisto. Capable of battling 7th-Level Psions, but useless against any foe stronger than them."

The Emperors nearby share a mixture of emotions, with some immediately excited about obtaining any form of Cosmic Power since they already have no chance at obtaining that power through their own efforts, but others appear decidedly less enthusiastic.

Yardrat assumes that Diablo will reveal more than a few downsides to this powerup, and he is proven correct.

"To become a Planar Warden, you must link your power to a celestial body, such as a planet's core." Diablo explains. "All of you will have the opportunity to choose how deeply you wish to commit to becoming a Warden, but suffice it to say, a Free Warden shows the least commitment, obtains the smallest increase in power, but also takes the fewest risks. You will become a Bottom Cosmic, retain your Demon Emperor power if you leave the world you protect, and if your world falls, you will suffer no major ill effects."

"Free Wardens are 'free' because they are barely Wardens at all." Diablo continues. "Your shallow commitment also means you will not offer a strong deterrence to the enemies we will form following the fall of the Kolvaxians. The Volgrim will be able to easily kill you. Choosing to become a Free warden is, in essence, a selfish choice. You'll gain enough power to stomp any mortal into bloody pulp, but you will collapse when faced with any other truly dangerous Cosmic threat. And for that reason, I do not advise anyone to choose to become a Free Warden. Only the most selfish and free-spirited among you, who do not wish to give up their current status and freedom, should do so."

He pauses for a moment to evaluate the expressions on the other Demons' faces.

"There is one advantage to turning some of you into Free Wardens though. And that is that you will retain your Emperor-level strength if you leave the world you protect, meaning you can still project formidable levels of mortal power throughout the Labyrinth and other demon-controlled worlds. For those of you who value your freedom and only want a mild power-up, becoming a Free Warden of a weaker planet with few greater prospects might not be such a bad idea. For example, a simple mining colony that produces Demonstone might not be too valuable in the eyes of the Volgrim, while Paradise-class planets certainly would be."

Diablo clears his throat, despite not particularly needing to do so in his astral form.

"The second type of Warden is known as a Planetary Warden. The costs you pay will be higher. The sacrifices, deeper. And the risks, higher. But you will also gain a far greater boost in strength, because you will be giving up all your current demonic power to reach a higher level of existence. Any of you who choose to become a Planetary Warden will obtain the might of a Low Cosmic, one step above a Bottom Cosmic. You will become capable of contending with 8th Level Psions, which will make you a formidable existence in protecting your chosen world."

"We have to give up our demonic power?" Emperor Serena asks. "What do you mean by that?"

"I mean what I said." Diablo answers. "To become a Planetary Warden, you must disperse all of the souls in your body and devolve to the level of a mere Demon Grunt. By doing so, the power of a planet can more deeply energize your soul, and you can become a much mightier Cosmic Entity."

Some of the Emperors look at each other with indecisive eyes. Yardrat, in particular, appears unimpressed.

"We have to devolve into Grunts? If I'm not mistaken, that means unlike a Free Warden, when a Planetary Warden leaves their designated planet, they won't possess the power of an Emperor. We'll essentially become trapped on our chosen world. We'll be Low Cosmics, yes, but if we ever need to leave we'll barely be stronger than the average human. This is an unacceptable tradeoff in my eyes."

"To obtain greater power, we demons must make sacrifices." Diablo says, his voice cold. "Do you believe I have become unstoppable in my Archdemon form without paying a high price? I can no longer easily exit Morva's body. I am trapped inside of it, because I have fused my flesh with his. I can no longer partake in the pleasures of mortal life. If you wish to obtain the power to crush planets with the wave of a hand, you will also need to make sacrifices."

Because of Diablo's words, the other Emperors feel an inexplicable sadness. They suddenly realize that while Diablo may feel like an invincible juggernaut, an avatar of glory for demonkind, he has actually chosen to become a prisoner in another entity's body... all in order to assist the rise of his people.

Some of the demons, though not all of them, feel a deep shame from their previously selfish thoughts. They rethink the offer Diablo has made, finding that compared to the price he's paid, the price of becoming a Warden is not nearly as severe...

"If you absolutely must maintain your freedom and attachments to the mortal world, then becoming a Free Warden is your best choice." Diablo explains patiently. "But if you intend to make a greater stand for demonkind... if you are like me and willing to make a deeper sacrifice on behalf of your people to ensure ten billion years of glory... then you should consider the other options."

He pauses to let his words sink in. Then, he continues.

"The final option you may choose is to become a Stellar Warden. Without a doubt, this is in many ways the most restrictive of all the options, but it will also grant you a vast and tremendous power. You will become a Middle Cosmic, capable of even doing battle with our mightiest enemy, the 9th Level Psion known as Founder Dosena. You will possess a power and status equal to myself! By becoming a Stellar Warden, you will be more than capable of defending our core worlds. The Volgrim will not dare to rashly engage in any form of warfare in a star system protected by you... and that is why I hope to convince some of you to accept this heavy burden."

Diablo heaves a great sigh.

"The cost will be unimaginable. You will have to bind your life not only to one or more planets within your chosen system, but its central star as well! You will have to disperse your demonic power entirely, and if you ever attempt to leave the system, you will quickly wither and die! This means your fate will be completely tied to the fate of your star system, so you will have no choice but to defend it with your life!"

He looks at Yardrat deeply.

"This choice I am asking all of you to make is not just about becoming stronger or what benefits you will obtain. It is a strategic decision that requires a degree of selflessness, as well as answering the big question all demons need to ask themselves during the coming years."

"What is 'the big question'?" Yardrat asks.

"That question," Diablo answers, "is... 'what does it mean to be a demon?' Are we parasitic life-forms that feed off the souls of others? Are we flesh-eating creatures that lurk in the shadows, devouring Sentients in the same way as the Plague does? Or can we become more than we are now?"

He continues.

"Demons devour souls to empower themselves. But is that the only method we have to achieve greater heights? Psions become mightier by slowly building up the foundation of their Psionic Seeds. Angels become mightier through the power of Faith. Humans grow through tempering their willpower. Why can't we find a method to grow that does not turn us into soul manipulators? If we were to succeed in this ambition, perhaps we could rise to the rank of Cosmic far more easily."

A strange light flickers in Emperor Serena's sightless eyes. "You speak of the Belial Booster. The Wordsmith has already found a way to empower demons without consuming Sentient souls. Do you believe we might be able to develop our own method?"

"I do." Diablo says softly. "As of now, I don't know what that method might be, but the Belial Booster proves we have more than one road to elevating ourselves. We should earnestly research other avenues as the years pass us by. I hope that someday Planar Wardens will become unnecessary, but at least for now, that is not the case."

After he finishes speaking, Diablo turns to look at Melody expectantly, and this causes all the other demons to do so as well.

For several seconds, a mixture of expressions pass over Melody's face. She frowns, scowls, becomes uncomfortable, then frowns again.

"I... I don't know. Other than becoming stronger, it seems the price I'll have to pay to become a Planetary or Stellar Warden is really high..."

"Yes. Very high indeed." Diablo affirms. "Let me be clear. All of the Warden empowerment methods require you to stand on or around the voidspace of the planet you are assigned in order to wield your Cosmic power. Leaving the voidspace will weaken you back to Emperor if you are a Free Warden, to a Grunt if you are a Planetary Warden, or it will even kill you if you are a Stellar Warden. But if you want to truly commit yourself to our people, to our cause, then I advise you to consider the higher levels seriously."

Diablo gently squeezes Melody's shoulder.

"I know that you wrestle with your failure at Sharmur. You blame yourself for what happened to the demons that lived here. In truth, it was not your fault... but if you wish to take responsibility, then you should earnestly commit yourself to preventing such future tragedies from ever occurring. Sharmur is a Paradise-class world. It would not be appropriate for the demon stationed here to be a selfish-minded Free Warden. We need a true-blooded fighter for the cause to stand up against the Plague and the Volgrim alike. I hope you'll consider this when you make your choice."

Melody closes her eyes. She slowly nods, thinking carefully as she dwells upon Diablo's words.

While she thinks about what type of Warden to become, Emperor Yardrat pipes up. "I have a question, Diablo. If it's true that becoming a Plentary Warden or a Stellar Warden will require us to weaken ourselves to the rank of Grunt, then why are you even talking to us Emperors and Dukes anyway? We should retain our strength! You should just pick a Grunt and empower them to the rank of Warden!"

Several other Emperors blink in surprise. Emperor Fae laughs uproariously. "Hahaha! Well said! I can't believe I didn't think of that! Why ruin a perfectly good Emperor when we can just put some random Grunt in place instead??"

But Diablo does not laugh. He sighs.

"That won't work. The reason an Emperor has to become a Warden is because your bodies and souls have already been tempered over the years by all the souls you've ingested. Even if you disperse your demonic power, you'll still be capable of returning to and surpassing your former strength. If we attempt to force a mere Grunt to elevate themselves... they will immediately explode and die. The power of a Cosmic Entity is just too much for their fragile bodies to handle."

"Oh." Yardrat mutters, feeling a little depressed his idea won't work. "But... that begs another question. How do you know all of this? How do you know about all these Warden ranks and the like?? You've never empowered a Warden before! We'd know if one of our fellow Emperors went missing!"

Diablo remains quiet for a short time.

"You're wrong. The reason I know all of this is because I've already successfully empowered a Warden. The First Emperor and I worked hard on testing that our methods could succeed. We tried empowering Grunts, Lords, and Barons, but all of them either perished in the most violent of ways, or the empowerment simply failed. As for the successful tests, we made our own Emperors by feeding certain Barons enough souls to elevate them to the level of Dukes and Emperors. Finally, we used Emperor Nymph's magic to create the only successful Warden."

Several Emperors blink in surprise. They look at Nymph, only to see an expression of complete confusion on her face. The pretty green-haired demoness looks around at the others, then lifts up her palms. "What? Don't look at me! I have no idea what Diablo's talking about!"

"Nymph doesn't remember because the First Emperor erased her memories." Diablo explains. "The First Emperor's existence is transient. They cannot be properly recalled by mortal minds. Additionally, we wanted to ensure nobody, especially not the Volgrim, found out about our tests. That's why we made sure to do all of this on a remote world in the Northern Quadrant. We kept our activities quiet enough that not even Founder Dosena could sense our presence. The First Emperor additionally erected an Aura Suppression Field around that distant world. Now, the Demon Deity of Solitude protects a world surrounded by the Plague in all directions. No other demons reside on his world. He is constantly under threat. But that ensures he is at his mightiest."

At this revelation, every demon in the audience practically jumps out of their skin. Yardrat audibly gasps. "Wait, you mean to tell us there's another Demon Deity out there? A Warden nobody knows about?! We need to meet him!"

"You don't." Diablo retorts. "Demon Deity Nihilon is a unique existence. The more demons that surround him, the weaker he is. But the more isolated he is, the more powerful he becomes. At this moment, he is even capable of doing battle with the Archdemon on equal terms. He is highly suited for protecting his world from the Plague."

Diablo's eyes flash. He knows that the First Wordsmith is no doubt watching this conversation, but that fact does not matter anymore. He has already begun to enact his great plan. Nothing Jason Hiro does will be able to stop him, not for a while at least.

As for Dosena learning of Demon Deity Nihilon's existence? That won't matter either. Nihilon might be capable of fighting her on equal terms. She won't dare to fly deep into Plague-controlled space to fight him. She has enough on her plate.

"One more question." Yardrat says. "You seem keen on avoiding Free Wardens. Is there no tactical value in having Emperors who can obtain a minor level of Cosmic power without any real downsides?"

"Of course there is. Of course." Diablo says twice. "One problem I have identified is that as we assault Plague-controlled worlds, the time required for me to seize their planetary cores so the Plague can no longer replicate is dependant on how quickly I can neutralize the millions, billions, or perhaps even trillions of Plagueborn living on said world. This is why I had all of you Emperors and Dukes help me, today. The more of you there were, the faster we could cut down these monsters."

He continues. "If too many Emperors become Planetary Wardens or Stellar Wardens, we won't have enough of you to fight on the frontlines. We'll lose momentum and capturing speed! This is why Glinch's pills have come at such a good time. Crude though they might be, his exobeast-pills offer us a new method to empower Emperors! With their help, we can thus make more Wardens, and take over more and more worlds! While the Volgrim are helpless against the Plague and the humans struggle to come back from the brink of extinction, we can use our vast reserves of demons to quickly expand and conquer worlds! We must strike while the iron is hot."

"That's what I thought." Yardrat says. "I think if I'm going to become any sort of Warden, it should be a Free Warden. My powers are much too useful to have me trapped on a world, unable to create portals to elsewhere in the galaxy. I can think of several other Emperors in a similar situation."

"I disagree." Diablo argues. "You are a fantastic candidate to become a Stellar Warden, Yardrat. You could project portals all across the galaxy without needing to leave your designated world. As a Middle Cosmic, you might obtain new powers you never thought possible! Compared to the power granted by a Bottom Cosmic... tsk. I think you're valuing your freedom too much."

Yardrat massages his chin. "Hmm. Possibly. I suppose that's not the worst logic I've ever heard."

"Auger should become a Stellar Warden." Fae says. "His powers are incredibly useful already, and he always stays out of the big fights. If he can become way stronger just by sitting on some backwater planet, we demons might become unstoppable! We'd kick 800 trillion asses with him at our backs!"

"That's certainly worth considering." Diablo says, his tone non-committal. "Ahem. In any case, Emperor Melody. Have you made your choice?"

Melody nods slowly. "I think I have. But to be clear, I can pick any of the options, right? You're letting me decide?"

"It's a permanent choice." Diablo answers. "I don't want to force anyone into something that will drive them insane after a few thousand years. It's best if you choose yourself. I can only tell you the upsides and downsides and let you be the judge of your own fate."

Melody looks around at all the expectant faces. She lowers her eyes, then closes them, heaving a great sigh.

"...alright. I've made my decision, then."

Part 535: Hope Awakens

Hope Hiro's eyes flutter open and shut. For a period of time he can't determine whether it is long or short, he tries to wake up, but all he sees is blackness, with the occasional flickers of light and shadowy figures standing over him.

Sometimes Hope hears voices. Male, female? He can't tell.

Their words are inaudible.

The pain wracking his body is like a dull ache, slowly pummeling his tendons and bones. Over time, it weakens and becomes part of the background static. Eventually, it disappears entirely.

Once more, the Second Wordsmith opens his eyes. This time, the world comes into focus.

"Uh... uhhh..."

Hope groans weakly. The confusing noises around him clear up, and Solomon's face appears overhead, looking down at him with a smile.

"You've returned to the realm of the living." Solomon says.

"Solo... mon..." Hope mutters. "Was I... asleep?"

"Comatose." Solomon answers succinctly. "It's been a long three months of transitioning you back to accelerated time-dilation. But we can talk about that later."

Amelia appears overhead, her beautiful smile contrasting with her exhausted and sleep-deprived eyes.

"Hope! Oh thank goodness, you're awake! I was so worried, I thought you might never wake up again..."

With Amelia's help, Hope slowly pulls himself up to a sitting position as he lays back against the pillows in his bed. He dizzily looks around the room, feeling as if he's looking at the world through a fishbowl filled with water.

"Easy, now." Solomon says. "You're still a few percentage points out of dilation-sync. It won't be possible for you to walk around for another few hours. Best to just sit there and close your eyes if the dizziness becomes too severe."

Hope slowly nods at Solomon, but he doesn't fully comprehend the Knowledge Seeker's words. His gaze lingers on Amelia, but then it shifts to a blonde-haired woman standing across the room, as well as… a Technopath he doesn't immediately recognize.

Hope squints at the woman and the Technopath, trying to peer through his distorted vision to identify them.

"Oh… it's, uh… Miss Kindelmann." Hope says, before metaphorically scratching his head as he tries to identify the Volgrim beside Elizabeth. "And you are…?"

"Designation: Psymin Miralax." Comes the reply. "Celestial Designer. Created time-acceleration device. Saved your life."

"Oh. Well, thank you, then." Hope says. Normally he'd probably hold some hostility toward a Volgrim, but at this moment he simply lacks the energy for any strenuous emotional outbursts. "I guess if Solomon asked you for help, the situation… wasn't simple."

Solomon looks away in embarrassment. "…Well. That is to say, I was ignorant on one thing in particular. I didn't know about Time Dilation Sickness. If I did, I probably wouldn't have needed Miss Psymin's assistance. But, well, since I already took her out of stasis, it felt impolite to shove her back in."

"Time Dilation Sickness?" Hope asks with a frown. "That sounds serious. Man. What was I even doing? I remember I… I fought Mephisto, then I was at a bar, or something… then I, uh… it's a bit blank after that. Then I woke up here?"

"Let's get you caught up to speed." Solomon says.

* * *

Solomon spends a solid half-hour answering all of Hope's questions.

The Second Wordsmith listens while Solomon explains to him just what sort of life-threatening crisis he had fallen into. His frown deepens as he realizes that if the time dilation were any higher, he might have imploded the moment he arrived inside the Hall of Heroes.

"…So you're saying because the time dilation was 'only' 100 to 1 that I managed to survive with soul-wracking pain? If it were 150 to 1, or perhaps even higher, I'd have collapsed into a singularity?"

"I wouldn't use terms as extreme as that. But yes, the situation would have almost certainly instantly killed you. We're lucky you're a Wordsmith with a decently strong body."

"Yeah. But not strong enough, apparently." Hope says quietly.

"All that matters is we saved you." Amelia says, touching Hope's face gently. "I'm... I'm so glad you pulled through. I couldn't sleep properly for months."

"Sorry I made you worry like that." Hope says, smiling back at her. He turns his gaze to Solomon after a few moments. "My head's still a bit of a mess right now. Solomon, can you get me properly adjusted back to the Hall's time-flow? This distortion is making my head hurt. It's like I'm looking at all of you through a fogged-up mirror."

"You simply need more rest." Elizabeth says. "I worked with Miss Miralax to create an artifact capable of slowly stabilizing your time dilation status relative to the Hall of Heroes. It not only adjusts the temporal properties of your body, but your spirit and soul as well. The last two were my contribution, but the first was by Psymin."

"My contribution meant little." Psymin says with her trademark robotic tone. "Solomon could have replicated my feat. With ease."

"That's true, but to be fair, I'd have been relying on your memories and knowledge." Solomon says, his tone more respectful than Hope would usually expect. "The fact of the matter is, you are a genius when it comes to technology. Your assistance was greatly appreciated."

He pauses for a moment to look at Psymin with deep meaning.

"We will not forget the help you've given us."

Solomon glances at Hope, and the Wordsmith nods.

"He's right. We won't." Hope affirms.

The Wordsmith directs a look of gratitude in Psymin's direction. In his heart, Hope concludes Psymin probably didn't play an extremely pivotal role in saving him, but this was most likely Solomon's way of playing nice with her. After all, it wouldn't hurt to have a card to play in terms of befriending the Volgrim in the future. Treating one of their last remaining Celestial Designers well might help brook a diplomatic treaty someday.

While Hope certainly cannot help but feel an intense loathing and disgust toward the Volgrim, especially for the callous and villainous ways they treated humanity over the millennia, in the end the Plague is still the Milky Way's greatest threat.

Perhaps Jason and Hope won't be able to solve the Plague Problem. If not, then all the Sentients would need to rise up and work together in the future.

It wouldn't do him any favors to have turned the Volgrim into his blood-enemies!

Slowly, Hope closes his eyes. The pain of his distorted vision fades somewhat, allowing him to better think as he sags against his pillows.

"Any change on the situation outside?" Hope asks.

"I have no way to monitor realspace." Solomon answers. "You have been in treatment for three months. Ninety days. That's nearly one full day in the outside world. As far as what has happened following your collapse, I am clueless."

"Hmm. I'll need to give you a way to monitor the situation externally, then." Hope says, keeping his tired eyes closed.

Unlike Jason, Hope has no equivalent to the Spynet Sphere. He never found it necessary, since his utilization for his secret realm was very different from Jason's.

But now, thinking back on the time since the Hall of Heroes' creation, Hope decides he needs some method to monitor the external situation. Especially since he's now trapped inside until he finds a way to mitigate the effects of Temporal Distortion!

"Can you give me any solutions for curing Time Dilation Sickness?" Hope asks, still keeping his eyes closed. "Any of you. Solomon, Psymin, Elizabeth...? It'll be terrible for humanity if I end up trapped in the Hall."

Psymin blinks her eyes. "Some options known. Not desirable. Best solution: spend little time inside accelerated space. The more time spent, the greater the side effects."

"I might be able to fashion an artifact of some sort." Elizabeth says. "Something to reduce the severity of time dilation's side effects on you. But... I'm not Camael. I'm quite slow at making artifacts, and mine are rather crude and unwieldy."

"Wordsmithing is likely the best solution." Solomon concludes. "I'm certain there must be some combination of Words of Power that will allow you to travel between Realspace and Dilated Space with minimal negative side effects."

Hope nods slowly.

"Yeah. Less time spent... artifacts... Words of Power... these all sound... good to... me..."

Hope's consciousness wavers. After a short while, he falls back asleep, leaving the four others in the room to their own thoughts.

Amelia gently lowers Hope back into a laying position. She tucks him in while he falls asleep, then kisses his forehead.

"He's just tired." Amelia says. "Right?"

"Yes. A bit more rest will give the artifact time to fully align his temporal position." Solomon confirms. "Even if he's only 0.01 time units out of sync, it can still stress his brain. It's best if we let the Wordsmith rest a while."

"I will take my leave." Psymin says. "Require maintenance."

"I can help you with that. But I have some friends who are better with technology than me." Elizabeth replies.

"Understood. I thank you for your hospitality." Psymin concludes.

The two of them depart, leaving Solomon and Amelia alone.

"Hmm..." Solomon mutters. "I can only imagine the situation in realspace right now."

"Hopefully things are going well enough out there." Amelia answers. "It's only been a day. How much could possibly change?"

"You would be surprised." Solomon retorts.

Emperor Melody sighs deeply as she looks at Diablo levitating above her.

"I choose to become... a Stellar Warden."

On the world of Sharmur, a few hundred Emperors and Dukes listen intently to her declaration, blinking with surprise at her words.

"That is quite a statement." Diablo says slowly. "Do you understand that you will be forever locked to this system, unable to leave? To become a Stellar Warden, you must tie every part of your life force to the celestial entities residing within Sharmur's voidspace. Leaving will mean a rapid decaying of your body and a quick, brutal death. If an enemy attacks, you will have no choice but to stay and fight them."

"I know." Melody says, her tone even. "Needing to stay and fight... to put up a fight until the end... it's what I should have done the first time Sharmur was attacked. I know I wouldn't have made a difference. But that was then, and this is now. I won't let the Plague or the Volgrim roll over my friends again. Sharmur will become a world where demons and humans can live in peace, without worry of their lives coming to an end. I'll fight with all I have to make that happen."

Diablo turns his attention from Melody to the other elites around her.

"Sharmur is a paradise-class world. It is a strategic resource, ideal for raising a populace of future powerhouses. It also happens to be the type of world the Plague prefers to devour, as well as the Volgrim, the humans, and all the other Sentients. It is for this reason I advised earlier that Wardens of paradise-worlds should not be Free Wardens. We need raw military might to defend our strategic locations of interest."

He pauses for a second to let his words sink in.

"But make no mistake. Becoming a Stellar Warden is a particularly excellent choice for Melody to make. That is because, depending on the system, one's power can be amplified significantly. The power any Warden can harness, and the boundary of their Cosmic Might, is dependent on the quality of the best world in that system. But the amount of power they can wield, the mana at their disposal, that is affected by the quantity of worlds in their system."

Diablo motions with his hands, causing mana to build above his palm and form a micro-simulation of the worlds inside Sharmur's star system.

"The Shredder System consists of the Ripper Star as well as twelve planets and thirty one moons. The Ripper Star is only slightly bigger and more luminous than Sol, the star of demonkind's homeworld, Earth."

He points at one of the planets nearest the sun.

"Sharmur is a paradise-class planet. But in truth, there is one other minor life-bearing world in this system we never expended time to colonize. The Plague has already taken it over, as well. This planet will fall to our combined forces much more quickly than Sharmur did, as its life energy is much lower than Sharmur's."

Melody listens quietly while Diablo patiently explains the Shredder system's dynamics, clearly reaching toward a greater point.

"If you were to choose to become a Planetary Warden, you would only need to disperse your demonic power and then attune your soul to Sharmur's core. But since you have chosen to become a Stellar Warden, this is merely the first step you must take. To obtain the complete status of a Stellar Warden, you must not only disperse your demonic power, but also simultaneously attune your body, spirit, and soul to the Ripper Star. After that, you will need to attune yourself one-by-one to each of the planets in the Shredder system."

He continues. "With each planet your body attunes to, your radius of power will magnify exponentially. You will become capable of traveling anywhere within the Shredder system's voidspace. This is another huge benefit of becoming a Stellar Warden: You can travel throughout the void to battle much more powerful adversaries. The more planets you attune yourself to, the greater your reserves of mana when battling your foes, and the further from the Ripper Star you'll be able to voidshift."

Melody, as well as all the other demons, raise their eyebrows in realization. It occurs to them that these Warden titles and attributes are far more flexible than they originally expected.

"This makes me wonder," Yardrat interjects, "if a system with fewer planets would ultimately end up with a far weaker Stellar Warden? Would it then be better to assign a Planetary Warden?"

"The choice is up to each of you." Diablo says, spreading his arms. "Do not forget that demonkind already controls several other worlds, such as Diabolus, Hell Harbor, Numaria, and other such systems. We need to not only assign Wardens to newly conquered worlds, but important strongholds we already control, now. We can rapidly inflate our standing war strength which will provide us inestimable benefits in the long run. In the end, some Wardens will be mightier than others. That is merely the balance of the Akashic Rules at play..."

* * *

As Diablo talks, one demon sits in the back of the Emperors, not particularly giving a damn.

Bael, despite coming along and joining in the fighting by fighting as a purely melee-focused attacker with his Matriarch Armor, wasn't able to actually do much. Like Rhesus, he could only kill any Plaguehosts who drew within range of his Big Bonk, and those weren't very many after being whittled down by all the other Emperor's long-range attackers.

As far as all the complicated explanations given by Diablo, Bael barely pays a single iota of attention to them. He sits on a rock and yawns repeatedly, trying not to fall asleep while all the other demons shout cries of 'ooh' and 'ahh!'

But unlike Bael, the soul possessing his Matriarch Armor listens carefully.

Very carefully.

Ose frowns multiple times as she hears Diablo's explanation of what steps must be taken, all the gains demonkind will obtain, and other such tangible benefits.

[This Warden business is not as simple as Diablo makes it seem.] Ose says to herself. [Each Emperor we convert will become rooted to their world of choice. They won't be able to go out and help conquer other worlds, which will quickly slow down our expansion progress. Doesn't Diablo understand just how many star systems there are in the Milky Way? Tens of billions! We barely have two hundred elites here, and two-thirds of them aren't even Emperors. We'll have to rely heavily on Glinch to make up the difference... but how can it be so simple to just pop some pills made with exobeast blood and make a thousand new Emperors?]

Ose scrunches up her face. She eventually turns to Bael.

[Bael. Bael! IDIOT, wake up! Stop dozing off!]

Bael blinks in surprise, waking from a daydream involving multiple painfully cute bunnies frolicking in a meadow. "Uh... huh? Huh? What's up, Ose?"

[I have some problems with what Diablo's been saying.] Ose says, inhaling deeply to control her breathing. [Go up and ask him a few questions for me.]

Bael sighs. "Man, and here I was enjoying my nap..."

[SCREW YOUR NAP, you tiny-brained starfish! This concerns the future of demonkind! Just get over there and ask him these questions for me!]

Bael frowns at Ose's insults, but ultimately stands up and waddles forward, rolling his eyes. "Yeah, yeah. Just tell me what to say so we can get this over with already..."

With the Matriarch Armor muffling Bael's voice, the other demons don't pay much attention to his ramblings, especially when Diablo is uttering such shocking words that will affect the future path of their species! As Bael approaches, he pushes a few people out of the way, then raises his hand.

"Hey. Hey! Deebs! Got a couple questions over here real quick!"

Diablo pauses, glancing at Bael in surprise.

"Oh? Go on then, Duke of... hmm, are you still a Duke? I can't tell. You have a bit of an aura of an Emperor about you..."

"Right, yeah, Emperor or whatever." Bael says, not really caring, and instead trying to focus as Ose feeds her words through his ears to speak on her behalf. "So uh, I gotta ask, man. What happens if one of these fancy-shmancy Wardens, you know... gets eaten?"

"By the Plague?" Yardrat asks, a few feet away.

"Yeah!" Bael says. "Like what if the Plague noms on Melody and turns her into a bad girl? Then the Plague would have a super strong demon on their side."

"I don't actually know the answer to that question." Diablo replies. "The good news is, I believe any Wardens who are swallowed by the Plague would still be trapped on the worlds they defend. The Plague wouldn't suddenly have a new Cosmic Entity they can throw at our frontlines."

Bael pauses a moment to wait for Ose's input.

"Right..." Bael says slowly. "But it'd sure make retaking that world a lot harder, wouldn't it? Y'know, what with having a strong lady like Melody protecting it."

Yardrat's eyebrows arch up. "Bael makes a good point. If Melody becomes a Middle Cosmic on par with Diablo, but she is somehow defeated and converted by the Plague, we'll have given them a world they can protect with ease. We might never be able to retake Sharmur if that happened."

He glances at Melody and shrugs apologetically. "Of course, I am not only referring to you, but to any Warden controlling any world."

"I got the gist of the argument." Melody says, while slapping Yardrat's shoulder lightly. "No worries!"

Bael pipes up once more. "Oh also, uh, I gotta ask. What happens to Wardens if their worlds are blasted to smithereens?"

"That... is not something which will happen easily." Diablo says slowly. "But assuming Dosena or one of the Executors were to go all-out, or the Wordsmiths were to take extreme measures like they did with the Polaris System... each level of Warden would react differently."

"Free Wardens can retain their Emperor power. Their connection to their Warden-world is tenuous. If they die, their world will be just fine. Similarly, if their world is destroyed, they will suffer no ill effects."

"Planetary Wardens tie their life-force to their world. If they die, their world's core will likely begin to cool, then it will fall inert, ultimately losing its magnetic field and becoming subject to the bombardment of celestial objects. Similarly, if their world is destroyed, Planetary Wardens will die."

"Finally, Stellar Wardens tie their life force not only to their system's star, but to its many worlds as well. If that star is destroyed, the Warden will suffer a serious injury, but so long as the planets remain, the Warden will simply drop from the rank of Middle Cosmic to Low Cosmic. However, if all the worlds in that system are destroyed, such as through a supernova, the Warden will perish."

He pauses.

"Similarly... if a Stellar Warden is slain, all the worlds in their system will shrivel up and die. The star will lose its ability to generate fusion, and... the results can be imagined."

The Emperors all fall silent. Their eyes lower in thought as they contemplate this new information.

"We'd truly be tying our lives to the stars and planets..." Emperor Serena says.

"It also means anyone who can kill a Stellar Warden will ruin all of the planets in that system." Yardrat points out. "If the Volgrim or some other enemy are desperate to cripple us..."

"Sure, but that's only if they have the ability to fight a Cosmic Entity." Melody retorts. "You've seen how tough the Archdemon is. Imagine if all of us could have that kind of power!"

Emperor Fae rolls her eyes. "This is stupid! So what if destroying a planet kills the Warden and vice-versa? What a bunch of yadda-yadda! If we've got an enemy that can blow up a planet, a Cosmic, or a freaking star, we're already in big trouble, you bunch of dumb dopes!"

"That is true..." Yardrat concedes.

Ose listens silently from within the Matriarch Armor. She mulls over the costs and benefits, then leans back.

[These Wardens aren't a silver bullet, but they do solve a lot of problems. I have to tenuously agree with Diablo's arguments on the matter. Melody can serve as an example for what a powerful Warden can accomplish. Perhaps by elevating her, we'll obtain clues about how much strength the other Emperors can wield once they reach her level. It would certainly give us a solid foundation to make further judgments.]

She shrugs.

[And, at the very least, if Melody dies, we'll only have lost Sharmur. We already lost it once. One more time won't be any different...]

Diablo looks at the faces of everyone present. He watches as a consensus grows among his fellow Emperors.

He smiles.

"Then... are we all in agreement? Melody, knowing all the risks, do you still choose to become a Stellar Warden?"

Melody takes a few moments to think.

She evaluates the gazes of her fellow Emperors. Plenty of them want her to ascend if only for the selfish reason of seeing what sort of power they could possess, given they made the same choice. But most certainly appear to want her to make the choice due to it being a reasonable decision, given her desire to protect Sharmur at all costs.

"...I do, Diablo. Even knowing the downsides, I still intend to become a Stellar Warden."

"Good. Good!" Diablo says twice. "I like your decisiveness. In the future, I hope all of you will make similarly bold choices when your time comes to rule over a world! But now, enough talk."

Diablo's astral form vanishes. At the same time, the Archdemon becomes more animated, rising up to its full height and slowly making its way toward the assembled Emperors.

"THE ASCENSION CEREMONY WILL BEGIN AT ONCE."

Part 536: Melody's Ascension

The Demon Emperors on Sharmur spread out, surrounding the Archdemon from all angles. They look up at Diablo's massive body as he wraps an orb of cosmic power around Emperor Melody, then levitates her into the air, up to the Archdemon's eye level.

Melody's heart beats like a drum. She swallows heavily, not sure of what is going to happen next. She watches as Diablo levitates not only herself, but Emperor Nymph and Emperor Fae as well, lifting them both up into the sky to levitate alongside her.

"Eh... what the heck?" Fae asks. "Why are you bringing me along too, Deebs??"

Diablo's voice booms throughout the sky.

"TO ALIGN AN EMPEROR'S SOULS WITH THE PLANETS, NYMPH'S POWER IS NECESSARY. BUT TO ALIGN THEM WITH THE STARS, I REQUIRE A DIFFERENT CONDUIT. EMPEROR BEELZEBUB WOULD BE A PREFERABLE CANDIDATE, AS HIS DOMAIN IS MOST ALIGNED WITH THE NUCLEAR ENERGY OF A STAR. HOWEVER, YOUR MAGIC MAKES FOR A SUFFICIENT ALTERNATIVE."

"Ah. So I'm runner-up." Fae snarks. "Well, whatever works! Let's get this over with."

The Archdemon remains silent for a moment. Diablo sweeps his gaze across the Emperors below.

"THIS NEXT PART WILL TAKE PLACE FAR FROM HERE, DEEP INSIDE THE VOID. YOU WILL NOT BE ABLE TO WITNESS ANYTHING WITH YOUR EYES. GAZE INSTEAD WITH YOUR SOULS... PERHAPS THEN YOU WILL BE ABLE TO SEE THE TRUTHS BEHIND MY ACTIONS."

A moment later, Diablo tilts his head. His gaze lifts to the sky above, and the burning sun warming the planet's surface...

His body begins to float.

Slowly at first, then faster and faster, he flies upward, taking along Melody, Nymph, and Fae inside heavily-protected force fields of energy.

A minute later, Diablo races through the upper atmosphere, his massive body and thousands of tentacles moving much more slowly than a smaller, more agile Cosmic might. Unlike the tiny and lithe Dosena, or the serpent-like Mephisto, the ancient body of Morva is simply too large to move with grace and speed. But what it lacks in speed it makes up for in momentum, becoming faster and faster as Diablo propels himself and the three Emperors forward via his cosmic power.

Before long, the planet of Sharmur becomes smaller and smaller, shrinking to a dot in the distance. Diablo's speed quickens thanks to the lack of gravity and friction slowing him down in the Void, and as such, he begins approaching and eventually exceeding the speed of light.

The three Emperors, having never personally set foot in outer space, become slightly dazed as they witness the unfiltered beauty of the cosmos, no longer shrouded by the haze of a planet's atmosphere. Naturally, with their keen eyes, they have observed the night skies countless times on worlds unsullied by light pollution and other ailments of Ancient Earth.

But even so, those sights pale in comparison to the weight of what unfolds before them now. Ten septillion points of light surround them, each one a star that could be a few lightyears away or tens of billions. They even find that if they focus on any single cluster of stars, they can become capable of seeing additional stars in that region as their eyes are exposed to the light from those distant points over time.

"The universe is... so.. beautiful..." Melody whispers.

"IT IS." Diablo answers, the Archdemon's voice booming throughout the void. "THE UNIVERSE IS VAST. IT IS LARGER THAN YOU CAN IMAGINE. OUR GALAXY IS NOTHING. A SPECK OF A SPECK OF A SPECK. MINUSCULE IN THE GRAND SCHEME OF THINGS. IF WE WISH TO PROTECT OUR HOME, WE MUST AMASS POWER... THE TERRORS IN THE UNKNOWN ARE MORE FEARSOME THAN YOU CAN FATHOM."

Diablo continues traveling, drawing closer and closer to the Ripper Star in the heart of the Shredder System. As the star becomes larger, all three of the Emperors gasp, their eyes watering from the mind-boggling size of this one otherwise ordinary sun.

Until one were to come face to face with a powerful celestial object, they could never comprehend the scale of the universe. The world of Sharmur, by comparison, is but a grain of sand. The yellow star in the interior of the Shredder System is even bigger than Sol, the star at the heart of Earth's system. Not by much, perhaps only twenty percent more massive, but still unbelievably vast in the eyes of these simple-minded demons.

"That's... I didn't realize stars were so big." Fae mutters. "I kinda just took it for granted since I never got up close to one before..."

Emperor Nymph sighs, her heart filled with an indescribable sense of wonder and awe.

"It's not only huge, but unimaginably powerful. At the heart of every world, there exists a core of liquid magma. That core is nowhere near as fearsome as this common, ordinary star..."

Diablo slows to a stop just a few hundred thousand miles from the Ripper Star's scorching hot corona. Naturally, as a Cosmic Entity, he could draw much closer, and perhaps even come into physical contact with the star without dying, but staying too close for too long could injure him quite badly, and eventually lead to death.

"WE ARE CLOSE ENOUGH NOW TO BEGIN THE RITUAL." Diablo says, his words causing Melody's heart to tighten. "THIS NEXT PART WILL REQUIRE DEEP FOCUS ON YOUR PART, EMPEROR FAE. I WILL NEED TO RESONATE WITH YOUR SOUL, TO EMPOWER IT WITH MY COSMIC ENERGY, AND FINALLY, TO CREATE A BRIDGE BETWEEN THE RIPPER STAR AND EMPEROR MELODY'S CONSCIOUSNESS. BUT FIRST, EMPEROR MELODY... YOU MUST DISPERSE ALL OF THE SOULS THAT HAVE CORRUPTED YOUR VESSEL."

Melody nods seriously. "Alright. How do I do that?"

The Archdemon falls silent. A moment later, Diablo's astral form materializes atop the gigantic body's head, then he levitates over to Melody's side.

"I will assist you." Diablo says without a trace of worry. "First, you must look inside yourself, to the source of your power. Then, you should close your eyes, reach down, and use a sharpened part of your soul to begin severing foreign material, bit by bit. As for me, I will hold onto these foreign souls as waste byproduct..."

Melody listens intently. She closes her eyes and directs demonit energy along her entire body toward the inside of her head, where her Mind Realm rests. There, Diablo helps her to visualize a mass of grey colored light that surrounds the true 'core' of her existence, a single dot of red light.

"That... that red dot... it's my true soul?" Melody asks.

"It is the core of your existence. Compared to the souls you have devoured until now, it is truly nothing." Diablo says. "Do you finally understand? The reason demons cannot easily become Cosmics is because stepping into the next realm is like trying to dig through a 100-foot-thick demonstone wall with a spoon. The 'wall of foreign souls' surrounds yours tightly, but becoming a Cosmic means your soul must be capable of handling all that Cosmic Energy on its own. Each individual foreign soul is simply too weak to do so."

He continues. "When Wolfram ascended, his soul had to forcibly increase in size because of the effects of Serena's magic, but it was still surrounded by the foreign soul matter that fought back, compressing and squeezing his soul until it finally shattered. The results would have caused him to lose his life even if the Seraphiim did not kill him."

"So..." Melody says slowly, "to become a Cosmic, the foundation of my soul must keep up with the increase of power?"

"That's right. And foreign souls are not a part of your natural strength. They are the strength of others which you have stolen to empower yourself. By relying on soul manipulation, the power of cosmic energy will slowly become harder and harder to control, eventually causing you to drop in cosmic strength until you are one no longer. In the wrong circumstances, your soul may simply implode from the pressure crushing it on all sides!"

"I understand." Melody says seriously. "Well then. Time to... remove all of the foreign soul energy."

With her eyes tightly closed, Melody begins attacking the foundation of her power. She grits her teeth and cries out in pain as she metaphorically rakes the grey barrier surrounding her soul with spiritual claws, tearing it apart piece by piece while her body violently shudders with agony.

"Aah! Aaargh! AHHHH!!"

She cries and wails while deliberately ripping parts of her soul out, shredding chunks of foreign grey soul matter apart with reckless abandon!

Meanwhile, Diablo carefully grabs at the removed soul matter and retains it inside a special pocket space of the Archdemon's body. He does not dare to absorb it himself, since it would only weaken the Archdemon, but perhaps he might be able to make use of it later.

Fae and Nymph watch with concerned gazes as Melody shrieks louder and louder, her voice transmitting between the cosmic bubbles enveloping all of them.

"Damn... that looks like it freaking hurts!" Fae laughs uneasily. "...am I gonna have to go through that too? Maybe I'll just become a Free Warden. Sounds a lot less miserable."

"Obtaining power without pain is not the path of a successful powerhouse." Nymph admonishes. "You shouldn't be so cowardly, Fae."

"Pft. I like hurting others." Fae quips. "Not myself! I think I'll pass on this soul-rending nonsense!"

Melody's screams grow weaker and weaker. She wavers in and out of consciousness each time her demonic power plunges, dropping her from the rank of Emperor to Duke to Baron and even Lord. By the time she has reverted to a Grunt, she has already returned to her original demonic form; that of a Banshee, a demoness phenotype capable of shattering glass with a single scream.

Melody pants like a dog suffering from heatstroke. Sweat drips down her forehead to her chest as she looks up at Diablo with pained eyes.

"That's enough." Diablo says. "The remaining bits of foreign matter can stay. You do not need to fully expunge these leftover souls, as they are too weak to affect your future prospects. Well done, Melody. You were as decisive as I've come to expect. Now... for the next part."

Diablo motions toward Fae, causing her cosmic bubble to fly over and merge with Melody's.

"Damn, look at you!" Fae laughs at her comrade. "You were quite the hottie a minute ago! But I forgot, all those years ago when you were just a lil' Banshee-bitch, you were a scrawny little twig. Nothing but ribs! Hahahaha!"

Melody doesn't return the laugh. Already, her strength has faded enough that she feels a desire to fall into a deep, deep sleep.

Only her willpower keeps her awake as she looks away from Fae to Diablo, waiting for his instructions.

"Fae. Now is no time for goofing off." Diablo says calmly. "I shall next channel the Archdemon's cosmic power through your vessel. We must act quickly, before Melody's consciousness enters an eternal slumber. The trauma she has just inflicted on her soul could cause permanent damage if we are not fast enough to rectify the situation. A strong body will ruthlessly crush a weak soul, and her physical form is in fact just as powerful as it was before. It merely has yet to lose its efficacy."

Without waiting for Fae's acknowledgment, Diablo's astral form dissipates, causing the Archdemon's eyes to light up once more with invigoration.

"AT LAST," The Archdemon says, "IT IS TIME TO FORM A BRIDGE BETWEEN THE RIPPER STAR AND MELODY'S SOUL. YOUR CONTROL OVER EXPLOSIVE FORCE WILL BE ESSENTIAL, EMPEROR FAE. BARE YOUR SOUL, AND I SHALL DO THE REST."

"Yeah, yeah." Fae mutters. "Just get on with it!"

And so, Diablo does.

He reaches inside Fae's Mind Realm, causing her eyes to become glossy. She loses control of herself and begins rapidly forming mystical signs with her hands while speaking in an ancient language few entities in the universe can fully comprehend.

Fae symbolically reaches into the core of the Ripper Star. She grabs hold of its energy source and pulls out a long, invisible stream of power, a stream which she drags over to Melody's exhausted body and forcibly attaches.

This burning string instantly latches on to Melody's tiny red dot of a demonic soul, causing her to cry out in pain. But this exclamation quickly becomes dwarfed by the following shriek as a flood of immense cosmic power rushes through the newly formed Soul Bridge, blasting Melody's consciousness with an ungodly level of nuclear power.

"AAAAAHHHH!!!"

Melody doubles over and curles up into the fetal position as her strength explodes once again! She shoots up from the rank of Demon Grunt back to Lord, then to Baron, Duke and Emperor!

Within just a few minutes, Melody's soul-power rockets upward, traveling back to its former heights while also surging toward a barrier she previously could not sense. This barrier collapses instantly beneath the power of her star-infused soul, shattering into a million pieces as she smoothly but agonizingly erupts into the Cosmic Realm!

Melody's bones, tendons, and ligaments creak and shatter before reforming second later. They become refined by the power of the Ripper Star, all while she voicelessly screams into the cosmos, her mouth remaining open in a silent wail of agony!

Diablo watches. The Archdemon's expression does not change as she first breaks through the barrier of Bottom Cosmic into the realm of Low Cosmic, then swiftly approaches the final barrier, the path to Middle Cosmic!

Unlike the previous time Diablo did this, he does not hide this transformation with any magic arrays. He allows her aura to erupt out into the Void, causing many Cosmics within the Milky Way to abruptly sit up and take notice.

Key among these is none other than Founder Dosena, now back on the world of Volgarius. At that moment, she happens to be suppressing the Myriad Deity, trying to find a way to imprison him so she can keep him out of trouble, extract his soul, and refine his dragon-bones for the Volgrim Empire's use.

But when she senses the sudden evolution of a Cosmic Entity within the Milky Way, she abruptly stiffens, then swivels her head toward the 'western edge' of the Southern Milky Way. Her pupils shrink as she senses an immense level of threat growing in the Shredder System.

[What? Another Cosmic is rising? And it is a demon as well? Since when were demons able to so cheaply and easily break past Akasha's Barrier...?]

Her shock turns to disbelief, then a deep sense of wariness as the entity's aura rises from the rank of Bottom Cosmic to a Low Cosmic, then rapidly approaches a boundary the same as her own...

A Middle Cosmic!

When Melody finally breaches that final barrier, Dosena immediately activates Volgarius's alarm system. She transmits a burst of thoughts to Unarin, then she sends out a telepathic transmission to the one Low Cosmic currently stationed on Volgarius, Executor Riley.

[To me at once!] Dosena commands, her voice striking Riley's soul with concussive force.

It doesn't take more than five seconds for Riley to rip across space and arrive inside Dosena's sanctum, a hidden dimension orbiting Volgarius's voidspace. Without Dosena's express permission, none may enter even if they wanted due to possessing weaker strength than her.

[Second Founder.] Riley says, immediately dropping to one knee, closing her eyes, and bowing her head as a show of respect. [Command me!]

[You will hold this wretch for me.] Dosena orders, gesturing with her psionic energy toward Mephisto, now bound by exotic cables and held in place by Dosena's suppressive force. [I must immediately investigate the status of this new Threat. You will control Volgarius's Psions in my absence.]

[I contemplate, and I comprehend.] Riley says, rising to her feet and sending out a wave of Primal Psionic Force to hold Mephisto down. [The creature will not escape my grasp.]

[I expect not.] Dosena says, before stepping through a gap in space and racing away from Volgarius at her highest possible speed.

At the same time as Dosena departs, Melody completes her transformation. Her body, mind, and soul overflow with power, causing her to gasp as Diablo pulls away the protective membrane of Cosmic Energy he was previously enveloping her with.

Now... she no longer requires his protection.

Melody levitates in the void, but her consciousness departs the Milky Way for the briefest of moments.

Her soul transfers across the material planes, arriving in a special land more beautiful than any she has seen before. She steps into the True Cosmic Realm, also known as Akasha's Domain, where she sees many of the same sights that Mephisto once did.

She blinks her watery eyes in confusion at the many gem-trees dotting the realm. She inhales the rich spiritual energy in the air, becoming momentarily intoxicated by its aroma...

Then, a hazy figure speaks from behind her.

"My child. It is good to see you, though your identity is unknown to me."

Slightly dazed, Melody turns around to see a golden, ghost-like figure with an amorphous face standing a short distance away, his identity utterly unknown to her.

"Huh? Who are you?" Melody asks.

"I am The Creator." The entity states. "I am what is left of the Milky Way's former Ruler. And you are... the latest one of my children to attain the rank of Cosmic. I was not expecting you..."

The Creator cocks his head thoughtfully.

"A demon? Elevated by attaching your soul to the power of a star? I've seen this method used by other Rulers. It is nothing novel. Still, you have become a formidable, if limited, existence. It is time for you to approach the Staircase of Ascension, my child. There, we can see how you compare to others of your level."

Unsure of what The Creator is referring to, Melody simply nods, then follows behind him as he leads her toward that beautiful but intimidating golden staircase.

The moment they arrive at the bottom, The Creator pauses. He looks upward as a pair of powerful entities descend, one possessing the form of a winged biped, and the other a mere glowing orb of light.

"Hahaha! Creator! What's this? Another child of the Milky Way has ascended? You're starting to worry me, you old bastard!" The Winged Biped says. "I thought your Fate had been fully exhausted, but now the Milky Way is capable of producing a Middle Cosmic! That's actually... not too bad!"

"Another False Cosmic." The orb of light says. "Elevated not through their own efforts, but through the theft of a celestial body's energy."

The Creator's expression remains impassive. "My children are simply dealing with internal conflicts, Dark One, The Absolute. You need not worry about them.

The orb of light, also known as The Absolute, momentarily brightens as if emoting with regards to The Creator's statement. "Internal conflicts. The Akashic Barriers will soon disappear, but the Milky Way lacks Cosmics capable of battling on the frontlines. Your galaxy will fall."

"Save it for later." The Dark One says, glancing at the ball of light with a look of amusement. "We can't all seize the Milky Way's Uniqueness. We'll have to compete for it, fair and square. And I intend to be the victor of that competition."

"Your intentions matter not." The Absolute states authoritatively. "All that matters is strength. And my strength... is absolute."

The Dark One snorts with contempt, but says nothing else. He gestures to the staircase. "Well? Get on with the show! Let's see what this baby Cosmic can do."

Melody feels a sense of oppression hanging over her. These Rulers act with impunity, laughing at her as if none of the accomplishments made during her entire life matter in the slightest. She feels unwilling to make her Creator lose face, and so, she boldly walks toward the Staircase of Ascension.

"We'll see who's a 'baby Cosmic,' Dark One!" Melody shouts, her fighting spirit rising to unprecedented heights. "These stairs don't scare me!"

She places her foot down on the first step, intending to race upward at top speed, but the moment her foot makes contact, a wave of powerful Cosmic Energy falls from the heavens above and crashes into her figure, causing her to cry out in pain. She falls down, face-first, and gasps in surprise. "Ugh!!"

When The Creator explains what is happening to her, Melody's eyes light up.

So it's like that! Melody thinks. These steps can baptize my soul, making me a more powerful Cosmic. But it all depends on how far I can climb…

She grits her teeth, then stands up, and takes another step.

Boom!

A wave of Cosmic Energy crashes into Melody's body, but this time she doesn't fall down. She remains standing, ignores the trembling in her legs, and climbs up the third step.

Boom!

Then the fourth step.

BOOM!

The Cosmic Energy becomes stronger and stronger with each step, washing away the impurities of her soul, healing the wounds she suffered when she dispersed the foreign souls within herself, and even clearing out the remaining foreign soul remnants Diablo told her not to bother removing.

As it turns out, Diablo knew this would happen. He left those remnants inside so the Staircase of Ascension could instead purify them and add them to her foundation, solidifying herself as a Middle Cosmic powerhouse!

Step by step, Melody climbs upward, traveling far higher with much greater ease than Mephisto ever could. Unlike his garbage, sloppy soul foundation, Melody's is quite sturdy, though lacking in accumulation. Due to being empowered through an external means, her own power is limited, and so, when she reaches the twelfth step, she also hits the limits of her endurance.

Melody collapses into her shadow, gasping for breath and no longer able to more. She looks up the remaining staircase, seemingly infinite, with regret on her face.

"Twelve steps!" The Dark One 'praises' sarcastically. "Wow! What an achievement! Creator, it seems you're making a comeback! These 'impressive' Cosmics of yours might even be capable of doing battle with the juniors of Andromeda... if my children tie all their arms behind their backs! HAHAHA!"

"An artificially evolved Cosmic is nothing at all." The Absolute says, losing all interest in Melody after she collapses. "The Milky Way is a sad existence. When the Akashic Barrier falls, your galaxy will be among the first to fall."

The Creator lowers his head, sighing quietly to himself.

"Perhaps that may be the case. Or perhaps not. Only time will tell..."

"Of course." The Dark One says with a smile. "Only time will tell. Hahaha. You keep telling yourself that, Creator."

He and The Absolute grow bored of the show and take their leave, departing into the skies to allow The Creator one final chance to talk to his progeny.

"Do not listen to those two." The Creator says, his tone warm. "You've done well, Melody. I know what it is that you seek. Strength to protect the ones you love. You are not a Candidate because you have no further room left to grow. But for now, you will have what you need. Your defensive capabilities will become formidable, given time. Once Diablo aligns your vessel to all the celestial bodies in the Shredder System, it will become very difficult for invaders, foreign and otherwise, to bring you down. Your home will be safe."

Melody blinks her tired eyes.

"I... I thank you... Creator. Thank you for showing me the way."

"Go in peace." The Creator replies, waving his hand to send her away.

And so, Melody departs the True Cosmic Realm, returning to the material plane to complete her evolution to the next state of existence…

Part 537: A Challenger Appears

While Melody undergoes her Ascension, the Emperors on Sharmur squint and gaze up at the Ripper Star, using their metaphysical senses to try and observe what is happening a million miles away due to their eyes and mundane senses being of no use.

Emperor Serena has the sharpest senses of those present. While her blind eyes might be useless compared to other Emperors, her Soul Vision happens to be particularly useful on this glorious day, allowing her to relay a play-by-play to the other Emperors, informing them of Melody's successful ascension to the rank of Demon Deity.

The Emperors and Dukes break out into cheers! They whoop and holler as Serena informs them of the immense power radiating off Melody's form. Before long, they too are able to sense the distant power radiating from the central point of the Shredder System.

"Incredible!" Emperor Kristoff exclaims. "It really worked! Diablo and the First Emperor are geniuses!"

Vespera's pitch-black eyes radiate a single point of light as the Emperor of Nebulae gazes at the burning sun in the sky. "Demonkind will finally gain the footing to stand on its own. Today marks a crucial day in our history."

Yardrat smiles. "Emperor Auger is looking forward to his future Ascension. Even I'm beginning to feel a hunger towards this level of power..."

While nearly all of the demons appear visibly excited, one of them does not. Bael sits on a rock, yawning inside the Matriarch's Helmet while blinking away tears of boredom. Unlike his allies, he doesn't have any special magical senses, so he can't tell what the heck is going on with Melody's Ascension. Not that it would matter anyway, as he'd just find it all a bunch of boring hype.

But unlike Bael, Ose watches keenly from inside the Matriarch Armor. Her eyes radiate a faint hunger as she listens to the other demons and keeps her spiritual senses locked on Melody's evolving aura.

Impressive. Ose thinks. Diablo wasn't lying. This method truly can mass-produce Deities. To think Diablo solved an issue as old as the demon species. The limitations are severe, of course, but being able to produce powerhouses on par with Founder Dosena is incredible! So long as one Middle Cosmic defends a world, Diablo can always show up later as the Archdemon to reinforce that world's Warden, doubling their defensive power. Not even the Volgrim can do this, since they only have a single Middle Cosmic in their ranks!

Her expression becomes contemplative.

Unfortunately, this method will quickly deplete the number of Emperors at our disposal. Low and Middle Cosmics are powerful, yes indeed, but we need Emperors to maintain our forward momentum. Perhaps my plans for the Eden Initiative should be changed...

Ose's thoughts switch gears as she recalls the 'Garden of Eden' located beneath the crust of a certain hidden world in the Milky Way. On that world, seven massive EVE ships rest, waiting for a potential future tragedy to each take 500,000 demons away from the Milky Way and fly off into the Unknown. But in addition to those ships, a vast number of other contingencies reside inside Eden, plans Ose formed and executed in the hopes of someday empowering demonkind. Unfortunately, while she found she was capable of increasing demonkind's quantitative strength among the lower ranks, she could never bridge the gap between her species and the High Psions, numerous entities which all possessed Cosmic Power.

But that was then, and this is now.

Ose thinks about how Diablo has solved the qualitative dilemma, granting the demons a way to not only stand up against the Plague, but hold steady against the mightiest of the Psions, Founder Dosena. Now, it seems increasing the power of mortal-level demons, such as Lords, Barons, and Dukes, would actually be a fantastic benefit to her species in the short and long term.

They need a way to continue charging into Plague-infested worlds to quickly clear them out. Relying on Emperors who will quickly be converted to Cosmics simply isn't a good enough option!

Unfortunately, even if I wanted to introduce these ideas to my fellow demons, I couldn't tell them directly. I have no way of speaking to them except through Bael. And Bael is NOT an adequate voice for my initiatives. I need someone else... someone relatively intelligent, loyal, and capable of speaking my words with some level of authority...

Ose's expression becomes gloomy.

In her mind's eye, only two candidates appear, one of them being ADAM, who would feel quite alien and worrisome to the demons, and a second individual, someone she would never pick under ordinary circumstances.

No... devils, does it have to be her? Ose thinks, pressing her palms forcefully against her eyes. It's only marginally less bad than relying on Bael! I can't seriously be thinking of using HER as my voice! But what other choice do I have? She's a Baron, and she's loyal... she's relatively intelligent... oh, if only I had another moderately intelligent demon I could rely on!

She lowers her hands, feeling a thousand years older. Then she turns her attention to Bael.

[Idiot. Hey idiot. BAEL! Wake up and pay attention!]

Bael's drooping eyes blink open. He wakes up from his boredom-inspired stupor and looks around.

"Huh? Who said that? Ose?"

[Yes, moron, it was me.] Ose growls. [Listen. Tell Yardrat to send you back to the Labyrinth. You and I need to make a trip back to the Garden of Eden.]

Bael stares ahead blankly for five seconds.

"...the whuh?"

[THE GARDEN OF EDEN!] Ose roars. [Don't tell me you already forgot?! It's the place where you found the Matriarch Armor!]

"Ohh. That garden. The Garden of Eden. The shitty 'garden' that sucks ass and ain't got no trees." Bael says slowly. "That garden."

He pauses.

"What about it?"

[We're GOING there.] Ose snaps. [Tell Yardrat to send us back to the Labyrinth!]

"Okay, okay. Sheesh, man, you're so bossy." Bael grouches.

He stands up, then walks over to Yardrat's side. Yardrat doesn't even notice Bael's appearance, so enthralled is he by the expanding Cosmic Aura radiating from the Ripper Star.

"Yo, Yardy-boy." Bael says, slapping Yardrat's back. "Can you send me back to the Labyrinth real quick, bub?"

Yardrat glances at Bael in confusion. "Right now?? Bael, we're about to witness the birth of a Middle Cosmic! Why would you want to leave?"

Bael's eyes widen. "Oh, word? Someone's giving birth? Who's the lucky brood-mama?"

"N-no..." Yardrat says. "It's not- I didn't mean... never mind. Can you wait a minute?"

"Nah. Don't think so." Bael says. "Ose's gonna yell at me if I take too long. She's such a nag, man."

"Oh. Right. Ose." Yardrat says, his eyes softening as he recalls how Bael has fallen into a grief-filled stupor as of late. "Sure thing, Bael. I'll send you back to the Labyrinth, buddy. Make sure you get some rest. You've been working hard to help us out, lately."

"Thanks, bub!" Bael says, slapping Yardrat's back again. "You're a real pal!"

Yardrat waves his hand to conjure a portal back to the Labyrinth, and he sends Bael through, shaking his head after the gal-guy has left.

"Poor Bael." Yardrat mutters. "We really need to get him some help. Everyone's so busy, we're just not paying enough attention to his mental condition."

* * *

Emperor Melody completes her transition from a mortal powerhouse to a Cosmic one. Unlike Wolfram, Diablo, and Mephisto, her body does not expand in size, but instead all of the Cosmic Energy contracts and solidifies inside her bones, drastically condensing the physical strength at her disposal. She retains all the advantages of a smaller body, including speed and agility, while also focusing her striking power into a smaller area as well.

No longer does she require Diablo's protection. He removes the cosmic energy shield he was using to protect her body, allowing her to become exposed to the coldness of the Void, as well as the direct heat, light, and radiation from the Ripper Star. Melody blinks her eyes, feeling shocked that she seemingly doesn't even need to breathe anymore! The vacuum of space does not negatively affect her, and she even faintly feels that if she were to immerse herself directly inside the Ripper Star's core, it wouldn't harm her. It has become one with her body.

Diablo's Astral Form materializes a short distance away. He listens as she asks him about this phenomena.

"You are a Cosmic now." Diablo says, folding his hands behind his back. "You no longer need to consume minerals to sustain your existence, nor do you require air to breathe. You can absorb the latent energy of the cosmos to sustain yourself, and this energy is prolific throughout all of creation."

Emperors Fae and Nymph gaze at Melody with wide, incredulous eyes. Even Fae, usually a mouthy and obnoxious woman, can't help but feel a deep hunger in her stomach for the power Melody has obtained.

"Amazing!" Fae hisses. "I wouldn't even be able to scratch Melody anymore if we came to blows!"

"I doubt you'd even be able to pull out one of her hairs." Nymph replies.

Melody begins flying around, acclimating to her new level of spiritual power. She inhales deeply, absorbing the power of the cosmos through her nostrils. This energy gives her a warm and pleasant feeling. She even feels that if she were to suffer serious wounds, her Cosmic capabilities would grant her a certain capability of regenerating from severe wounds.

"What now?" Melody asks.

"We have completed the first step of your evolution." Diablo answers slowly. "But right now, your existence is tethered to the Ripper Star. If you travel too far from it, your Cosmic power will rapidly fade until you become trapped in the Void and die. To counteract this weakness, we must have Nymph 'expand' your radius of power by anchoring your soul to the celestial bodies of the Shredder System."

"The other planets and moons..." Melody says, directing her senses outward.

She becomes shocked when she feels how insanely formidable her Cosmic senses have become! In an instant, she sweeps her astral vision out across the entirety of the Shredder System and beyond, not only detecting all of the planets and moons in the system, but even the individual lifeforms scattered across the worlds, though the overwhelming majority of them reside upon Sharmur.

Melody frowns. "There are two other planets in this system with Kolvaxian infestations!"

"Primitive Worlds." Diablo explains. "Few minerals or resources, with minimal sentient life residing upon them. The Plague targets only sentient life, and as such it becomes much weaker when it takes over worlds lacking in them."

Melody starts to say something else, but her blood turns cold. She spins around and 'looks' past the Ripper Star's blinding radiance to another part of the Milky Way galaxy.

"There's something powerful coming this way! A... another Cosmic!" Melody exclaims.

"It seems 'she' has detected your rise." Diablo says simply. "Founder Dosena will not be happy to see you. But we have a few hours until she arrives... provided she doesn't cheat by traveling through a Warpgate. Let's make haste and start improving your foundation by anchoring you to some of the worlds within your influence."

Melody nods. The Archdemon's massive body turns around and begins flying toward the first world in the Shredder system, a molten planet with three small moons. Melody quickly pursues him, becoming delighted by the shocking speed she can display in her newly empowered form.

As the two of them race toward the molten world, Diablo's Astral Body flies beside Melody to keep her company. He directs a knowing look toward his companion.

"How many steps did you manage to climb?"

Melody blinks. "You know about that?"

"All Cosmics do." Diablo says slowly. "Whenever you ascend to the rank of Cosmic, or you attain a noticeable increase in power, the Akashic Laws will bring you there for a short time. By climbing the Staircase of Ascension, you can baptize your soul with the purest Akashic Laws, improving your foundation. The more steps you climb, the greater your future potential can become."

"I see..." Melody says, falling into thought. "I made it up eleven- no, perhaps twelve steps. Is that a good number?"

Diablo looks away. "It is not worth bragging about. Due to the manner in which I elevated you to Cosmic, your foundation is poor and you will never be capable of advancing on your own. You will forever remain trapped within the Shredder System at the level of Middle Cosmic. Even if you climbed a hundred steps, it would not matter. The only advantage you can derive from climbing the Staircase of Ascension now is a broader pool of mana for your abilities..."

Once the first planet in the Shredder System becomes visible to the two Emperors, the Demon Deities finish up their conversation.

"After Nymph anchors you to this world, you may obtain an increase in your Cosmic Power." Diablo says. "You cannot climb 'higher' on the Cosmic totem pole, but perhaps you can 'widen' your foundation. This will grant you an enormous amount of additional energy to use in battle, and for other purposes. Also try to climb as many steps as you can if you are sent back to the Cosmic Realm."

He pauses before adding one last thing.

"By the way. Founder Dosena has traveled to the True Cosmic Realm and climbed the Staircase of Ascension many times. Her foundation is as solid as it can possibly become, and she is now within reach of climbing to the next level of Cosmic Power. You are far short of measuring up to her when it comes to versatility or endurance. As for striking power, defense, and your other attributes… we'll simply have to wait and see."

Diablo and the others all slow to a stop before the molten planet. Despite its lack of life, this world still holds innate 'earth energy', making it something that Emperor Nymph can affect with her powers.

Diablo taps into Nymph's powers. He commands the full power of his Cosmic Energy to press upon the planet's core, ultimately binding it to Melody's soul.

Just fifteen minutes later, Melody blinks her eyes as a faint but potent surge of energy floods into her veins, bones, and even her very marrow…

Compared to the energy she obtained from the Ripper Star, it isn't much at all, but it still offers her a slight boost she did not possess previously.

After that world, the group moves onto the second planet in the system, then the third, and finally, they reach the fourth.

The fourth world is the first life-bearing planet in the Shredder System. While it is nowhere near the level of the paradise-class Sharmur, and it certainly isn't a pleasant place for life to spring up on, it at least has breathable air and a survivable ecosystem. The freezing winters and boiling summers cause a dramatic amount of instability on this world in particular, with only a single Sentient species having ever taken root.

Diablo shakes his head, a look of dismay in his eyes.

"The world of Thillow, formerly home to a small species of pre-industrial Sentients known as the Thaneri. Unfortunately, this was the only world they resided upon. When the Plague devoured Sharmur, it spread to the two other life-bearing worlds shortly after. The Thaneri have gone extinct as a result."

Melody's face turns gloomy. "Extinct..."

She looks at Diablo.

"Is there no way we could... cure the Plague infection? Revive the Thaneri?"

"That is always a possibility." Diablo replies. "But we do not possess the method to do so. For now, we must focus on cleaning out the Plague in this system entirely. We must go down to the world and seize control of the Core so it cannot return. Luckily, this world does not possess enough Life Energy to sustain a transfer from the Plague's central base inside the False Cosmic Realm. They cannot send any powerful Cosmics to where we are... at least not for the moment."

Diablo starts to say something else, but then he frowns. He turns his attention to the Void, looking off into the distance. At the same time, Melody senses the impending arrival of a powerful energy signature as it rushes toward the Shredder System.

"So fast..." Melody whispers. "She's already made it here?"

"Underestimate the Second Founder at your own peril." Diablo warns. "She has slaughtered countless powerful Cosmics in her lifetime. During the Great Wars of Volgrim myth, it is rumored she even fought three other 9th Level Psions all at once... and won."

Melody and Diablo levitate beside one another, her tiny figure appearing minuscule compared to the titanic and domineering body of the Archdemon beside her. Diablo deliberately levitates Emperors Fae and Nymph behind himself, shielding them with his body.

A few minutes later, Founder Dosena appears.

She silently steps across space, appearing a few miles away in a single instant. Had Melody blinked, she would have missed the faint tremble of space behind Dosena when she arrived.

For a few moments, nobody says a word. Dosena scans the area and assesses the situation rapidly, realizing Melody is the newly ascended Middle Cosmic. After making a few determinations, she turns a freezing-cold glare onto the Archdemon.

[What is this?] Dosena asks, her voice frighteningly calm. [A new trick? A secret ability of yours, 'Archdemon'?]

In the Void, a third figure appears beside Melody and Diablo.

The First Emperor of Transience.

So quickly does the First Emperor appear that they even startle Dosena with their arrival, let alone Melody.

[You?] Dosena asks, snapping her head toward the hazy, indistinct figure.

My existence is temporary. The First Emperor says. The influence I wield is limited. I gave Diablo the method. He used it well. No longer will the demons be pushed around by the Volgrim. This is only the beginning of my plan to restore the Milky Way's balance.

Underneath her calm exterior, Dosena seethes with rage. The arrival of the Archdemon was frightening enough, as it gave the demons a way to stand up to the Volgrim Empire's strongest weapon. But now, for a second Middle Cosmic to appear? It sends her anger to the ends of the universe.

[You... are... a tricky one...] Dosena says, her mental voice dripping with venom. [You hid your cards adeptly, First Emperor. Diablo. It seems I can no longer 'sit back and watch'.]

Diablo remains unmoved. The Archdemon's gigantic head tilts down to look at the pea-sized Psion.

"DO YOU WISH TO FIGHT?" Diablo taunts. "IT WOULD BE A SHAME FOR THE VOLGRIM EMPIRE TO LOSE THE INDIVIDUAL THEY HAVE PLACED THEIR HOPES AND DREAMS ON."

Dosena doesn't immediately answer. Internally, she begins to rapidly assess the chances of success if she were to engage in a sudden, violent battle with the Archdemon and his new compatriot.

The First Emperor would not sit idly, either... Dosena thinks, her thoughts turning wretched. They played me like a fool. If I had fought and killed Diablo before, it's likely I could have stopped him from uplifting a new Cosmic. Now it's too late. They outnumber me two-to-one, and that doesn't even count the strength of the First Emperor.

Dosena's rage cools. In its place, a calm assessment of the situation follows as she tries to determine the outcome of what would happen if she fought all of these enemies at once.

But, contrary to her expectations, Diablo takes a figurative step backward.

"MELODY. IT SEEMS THE SECOND FOUNDER WISHES TO ENGAGE IN A FRIENDLY SPAR WITH YOU. AS A GUEST IN DEMON SPACE, WE SHOULD TREAT HER WITH RESPECT. YOU WILL DO BATTLE WITH THE SECOND FOUNDER ALONE. THE FIRST EMPEROR AND I WILL NOT INTERFERE."

Melody blinks. "Huh?"

Even Dosena needs a few seconds to react. [...What game are you playing?]

"NO GAME. WE'VE ENTERED A NEW PARADIGM, SECOND FOUNDER." Diablo says, his voice booming throughout the Void. "IT IS TIME FOR YOU TO UNDERSTAND THE VOLGRIM'S PLACE IN THE MILKY WAY. THE DEMONS WILL NO LONGER BE PUSHED AROUND."

Dosena gazes emotionlessly at Diablo, Melody, and the First Founder.

[I see. In that case, I will take you up on your offer. I wish to test the strength of demonkind's newest powerhouse for myself. I have not fought an equal in over two million cycles. This has led to the... stagnation... of my growth.]

"THEN I SHALL STAND ASIDE AND ENJOY THE SHOW." The Archdemon says, as he begins to levitate backward.

Melody's expression becomes serious. She didn't anticipate having to do battle against the Mightiest Psion immediately after her ascension, but even if she had known, she wouldn't have backed down.

In her heart, she secretly wonders just how powerful she has become. A hint of bloodlust wells up in her throat as she licks her lips.

"I may have failed Sharmur once... but I won't fail again." Melody says.

Dosena levitates in place, her eyes piercing through Melody to try and uncover all of her secrets.

[I know who you are. You were previously the Emperor of Suppression. But how should I address you now?]

"My name is Melody. But you can call me..."

"...THE DEITY OF DEFIANCE!"

Part 538: Melody's Defiance

Despite not quite finishing her objective to amplify the power of her Cosmic Soul by attaching it to every celestial body in the Shredder System, Melody still possesses the true power of a Middle Cosmic.

She launches toward Dosena like a bolt of lightning, practically teleporting as she sends a kick flying at the Second Founder's ribcage!

But in that single instant, Dosena cooly levitates backward and bends her body in such a way that Melody's leg sweeps over her chest, missing by a single millimeter. In the fraction of a second afterward, she flickers across space, teleporting ten kilometers away to put distance between herself and the Deity of Defiance.

Even with such a giant distance between them, a pair of Middle Cosmics can clear the gap in a single second. At their level of power, meters and kilometers become nearly the same, especially when they tap into their metaphysical powers at the highest levels.

[Deity of Defiance. That's a fancy title.] Dosena says, her tone neither one of praise nor of scorn. She crosses her arms and levitates motionlessly. [I have not fought an equal in two million orbital cycles. I once tried to spar with every single Executor in the Volgrim Empire attacking me at the same time. I still had to limit myself to a fraction of my full strength. Let me warn you now: If I go all-out, no mere Middle Cosmic is my match.]

Melody's eyes harden into a look of determination. "We'll see about that!"

Once again, Melody pounces toward her opponent, leaving after-images as she clears that ten kilometer gap almost instantly. She races at Dosena like a ballistic missile, but right before she reaches striking range, a ghostly apparition flies out of Dosena's body and launches a punch at Melody's head.

THUMP!!

Melody's vision flickers as a hammer-like force blasts her in the face. She launches backward, struck by that powerful blow, and spins uncontrollably through the Void. It takes her several seconds to shake her senses back into order, and when she does, she finds Dosena hovering in the same spot as before.

This time, however, a phantom levitates beside Dosena, its aura identical to hers, with a body that mirrors the Second Founder in a thousand important ways except for its lack of a face. It has no eyes, nor a nose, nor any other identifying features, making it look like an alien specter she summoned from the distant reaches of the Unknown.

[I am a Brain Enhancer.] Dosena says coolly. [It was the discipline I based my Psionic Seed on. It allowed me to improve my understanding of the psionic arts faster than any of my peers. Later, I even outpaced my seniors. I created the entire discipline of Cerebral Psionics, and none have ever come close to being my match in uncovering its full breadth and scope.]

Melody wipes a tear from her eye, a tear that fell simply due to the pain from Dosena's psionic punch. "...why are you telling me this?"

[You are not my match.] Dosena says. [I have not had an equal to fight in two million years; this much is true. But I long ago came up with a solution for that problem. I taught myself to divide my mind. I created a Psionic Clone with its own thoughts, desires, and will. It can perfectly mimic me, and it can do things even I cannot. In essence, there are two of me, while there is only one of you. If my two halves join together, defeating any other Middle Cosmic is a trifle.]

"The battle hasn't even begun and you're already declaring victory." Melody sneers. "That sneak attack knocked me for a loop, I won't lie. I'm younger than you, I lack experience in how Cosmics fight, and frankly I'm not much of a fighter at heart."

Her expression becomes even more determined.

"But if you believe I'll be a pushover, think again!"

[What I believe does not matter.] Dosena says. [When the Great Wars ended, I purged the existences of every other 9th Level Psion. I fought them all at the same time and won. I do not know why Diablo is so eager to send his newest ally to her death, but I must assume he is planning to strike at me when he thinks my defenses are down...]

Dosena directs a cold glare off into the distance, where the Archdemon levitates in the Void, thousands of kilometers away. As promised, he stays away from the battle, though in truth he remains well within range to rush in and save Melody if things become too dicey.

Dosena returns her gaze to Melody.

[In truth, I do not wish to kill you, nor any of the demons. You are nothing to me but gnats. I have become mentally divorced from the ultimate fate of the Volgrim Empire for a time longer than the sum of your existence. If my people perish, then that will be an unfortunate day for my emotional well-being. But I will survive. The things I truly care about in this cosmos have little to do with affairs involving the mortal world.]

"You sure talk a lot more than I thought you would." Melody grumbles. "If you don't want to kill me, then why even come here?"

Dosena lowers her head and mentally sighs.

[Never mind. I shouldn't waste my time explaining. Every time unit I am away from Volgarius is another time unit my homeworld stands undefended. Let's get this over with and see if you were worth me coming here in person.]

"You're too arrogant!" Melody snarls.

Melody leaps forward at the same time as Dosena's Psionic Clone does. The clone instantly engages in a swift and brutal melee combat with the Deity of Defiance, both of them trading blows at speeds that would leave a mere mortal's eyes spinning in their sockets.

Melody's fists and legs snap out one after the other. Dosena's clone mirrors her movements, meeting them blow for blow! Despite 'only' being formed from a psionic projection, the clone's body is as solid as any flesh and blood body, acting as if its bones were made out of folded steel and its skin out of exotic polycarbonates.

Crack! Crack! Boom!

The two trade hundreds of blows in the space of less than a minute. Melody feels the pressure build as she not only assesses her body's strength, but starts tapping into her enhanced demonic powers.

For demons, every increase in demonic ranking grants them newer and more powerful abilities. These abilities do not need to be trained, merely discovered. Having only stepped into the rank of a Middle Cosmic mere minutes before, she hasn't had any time to familiarize herself with those abilities, putting herself at a huge disadvantage compared to her battle-hardened opponent.

[You will have to do better than this.] Dosena says coldly, projecting her voice into the Void.

"Shut your face!" Melody fires back. "I haven't even warmed up yet!"

Melody's tone implies teetering on the brink of insanity and rage, but in truth she has no serious grudge with the Second Founder. She knows well just how powerful 7th Level Psions are, and can only imagine the might of Executors. Having never faced any of those monsters in actual combat, she has to assume Dosena is an opponent far beyond her understanding. It isn't mere empty boasting on the Second Founder's part that Melody will be unable to beat her. Melody assumes this must be true and that it would take a miracle to win!

Surely Diablo won't let Dosena kill me, right? Melody thinks. It would defeat the purpose of allowing me to Ascend! He must believe I have a chance at winning! Even if he doesn't, he'll definitely intervene if the fight reaches a lethal point. I should still proceed as if he'll honor the terms of the duel, though. I'll have to put my life on the line and fight with every single ability at my disposal!

Just as Melody is about to unleash her first ability, Dosena's clone moves first. It abruptly releases a massive aura of Cosmic Power around itself, hardening the Void and causing Melody's speed to plummet! As if mired in quicksand, Melody's speed becomes sluggish, causing her to only become capable of sending out one or two attacks a second. But as for the clone, its speed remains just as high as before.

Like a turtle before a cheetah, she immediately becomes suppressed as a torrent of blows rains down on her! Even her perception of time mirrors her movements, making Melody unable to react to the clone's fists and feet as it starts battering her, its body a series of after-images her eyes can't follow!

Crack-crack-crack! Thwack, slam!

A fist pounds Melody's teeth, while a leg crashes into her ribs. A palm strike slaps her right ear, while another one slaps her fist away like an adult punishing a toddler for daring to speak up!

Melody cannot react at all! She becomes utterly suppressed, unable to fight back as Dosena's clone batters her around like a cat toying with a mouse!

"Ugh- kah! Aaargh! Ughh!!"

Melody can only release muted coughs and screams of pain as her vision turns blurry...

But then, she reaches deep inside herself.

She summons the strength of her own Cosmic Power collected inside her stomach. She conjures forth an aura of her own, enveloping that same area to harden the Void around her clone-opponent.

Just like that, the clone's speed plummets, mirroring her own. Its blows slow down to her speed, allowing her to re-focus her mind and quickly dodge or block the next dozen that come flying at her!

Twenty seconds later, the clone ceases its assault and pulls backward, leaving Melody gasping for air!

"Hah... hah... hah..." Melody groans, her bones aching from the beatdown she just suffered. Bruises well up around her eyes and cheeks. Her lips split in multiple spots and blood flows out, while her ears ring, causing her to feel noticeably disoriented.

[You're too green.] Dosena comments dryly, still levitating a good distance behind her clone. [When you reach the levels of Cosmic, you become capable of projecting a Domain of Control around yourself. These zones of suppression will completely cripple the speed and fighting capability of Lower Cosmics and can even outright kill mortal entities. However, between Cosmics of the same level, they only serve to slow down the battle. Speed no longer becomes as useful when you reach the highest echelons of power...]

Melody gazes at Dosena with a complicated expression. "Why are you telling me this?"

[I don't know.] Dosena mutters. [You are the first Middle Cosmic I have faced in a long, long time. Perhaps I merely wish to explore the depths of your power before I kill you. I am curious as to how mighty a so-called 'Demon Deity' can become. You are meddling with forces you have not yet fully comprehended. If I were to face the Archdemon, I'd need to be more serious, but you don't even know the basics of Cosmic Warfare.]

Dosena glances at Diablo for a split-second before returning her gaze to Melody. In that moment, Melody realizes that while Dosena isn't likely to be lying, she must also fear that if she goes too far, Diablo will intervene. She can't be sure of just how strong the Archdemon truly is, and thus does not want to take any risks...

"Domains of Control..." Melody repeats, realizing something else. "The Archdemon's body is big, slow, and clumsy, while you are small and agile. However, your words imply that despite your obvious advantage in speed, it would not benefit you too greatly. He'd slow you down to a manageable speed and force you to face him on more equal terms..."

[I have not faced the Archdemon's domain directly.] Dosena retorts. [There are many possibilities as to how a battle between us would play out.]

Yeah... Melody thinks. But you ARE worried. You don't want to take things too far.

Melody wipes the blood from her mouth and lightly pats her face. She reorients her thoughts, then charges back into battle with the clone fearlessly!

Once again, the two engage in a brutal battle of fisticuffs, with the notable difference being that both of their speeds have dropped significantly, and every move expends much more of their physical stamina than before. While the Psionic Clone might not technically have a physical body, the energy required to project it from Dosena's mind does increase by a lot, not that the haughty Second Founder would allow her discomfort to show on her face.

As the two exchange blows, albeit at a much slower and more powerful speed, Melody's blood boils with battle fever. She swells demonic power within her stomach, then opens her mouth to release it.

"AHHH!!"

A banshee-like screech rips across the Void and instantly slams into the Psionic clone, sending a feedback pulse of agony through Dosena's mental link. Not expecting such a sudden attack, the Second Founder shudders violently, her cool and haughty composure breaking as the clone's pain becomes her own.

[Aargh!]

Dosena finally uncrosses her arms to grab at her head, only for that banshee-screech to not only flow past her clone, but then travel toward her main body a second afterward...

BOOM!!

It impacts Dosena like a firetruck crashing into a concrete building. Melody's screech knocks Dosena backward and destabilizes her link to her clone, causing it to falter and fizzle for a moment. She quickly regains control and stabilizes the situation, but not before directing an appreciative glare in Melody's direction.

[NOT BAD.] Dosena says, her tone laced with anger. [You took me by surprise. That will NOT happen again.]

Melody grins evilly. "Don't be so sure, Second Founder. AHHH!!"

Once again, Melody fires off a blast of concussive force. Unlike when she was a mortal-level Emperor, this wave of energy is not formed out of sound-waves, but of Cosmic Power shaped by her voice. Even without air to transmit, the shockwaves can still rip across the Void to deliver brutal blows.

And this second attack is much more focused and concentrated, less of an area-attack and more of a focused punch aimed right at the Psionic Clone's body!

BOOM!!

The clone tries to dodge, but it doesn't move quickly enough under the suppression of Melody's aura. Its body explodes into particles of light under the impact, while Melody rushes through that gap to charge at Dosena's main body.

The damage inflicted to Dosena by the destruction of her Psionic Clone is not insignificant. She reels from the pain, but remains in control, glaring at Melody with an expression of bloodlust as she rapidly approached.

[You dare?!]

Just as Melody charges into melee range, Dosena crosses her arms and re-summons her Psionic Clone. However, this time, she superimposes it on her body, causing its hazy apparition to form around herself like a ghostly battle-armor. The clone's psionic body appears a bit larger than Dosena's main form, making it appear as if her body is enveloped by a force field.

In an instant, Melody begins punching at Dosena, but Dosena continues to levitate calmly with her arms crossed while the Psionic Clone's arms and legs fight back against the Deity of Defiance. To those unfamiliar with battles at the Cosmic Level, it might even appear as if Dosena has summoned the phantom of a war god to possess her body and slay her foes!

CRACK! CRACK! BOOM!

The mirage enveloping Dosena matches Melody blow-for-blow. The two of them trade attacks with equal force, but Melody begins to make strange movements, her body occasionally blurring, dodging attacks that should have landed. Her body becomes phantasmal as she bobs and weaves, sending jabs and punches at her opponent's vital areas.

"Not bad! This is starting to get fun!" Melody laughs.

Dosena sneers. [You are far too immature in my eyes, acting excited for a battle of this level. Your strength is paltry. Don't you understand I'm going easy on you?]

Melody snaps a vicious punch at Dosena's face, but her clone's ghostly arm catches it before it can successfully hit and fires back another punch, forcing Melody to dodge.

"I don't need you to go easy on me." Melody laughs. "I just need you to die! The demons will rule the Milky Way!"

Dosena's eyes glow. She fires a lancing beam of psionic energy from her forehead that catches Melody off-guard and strikes her liver, making her stagger backward and cough up blood.

[You want me to die? Imbecile. Once I am gone, the Volgrim will lose their last hope of holding back the Plague. When Volgarius falls, the Volgrim Empire will collapse soon afterward. My people will flee the Milky Way, and the Plague will crash upon the demons! Your extinction will not take long to play out.]

Despite the pain from her injury, Melody's eyes become brighter. She directs a vicious grin Dosena's way.

"Hahaha! You stupid bitch! You think we FEAR the Plague?! You're a frog stuck in a well! The Archdemon has already discovered the method to defeat the Plague! Your 'Empire' can collapse today if it wants. We'll happily take up the fight after you're gone!"

Dosena continues to smile, but her heart quakes in shock.

What? A method to counter the Plague? Even to defeat it? Not possible. How could Diablo accomplish such a feat? I've heard nothing about this...

Unfortunately, the Volgrim's agents in the Labyrinth have not had time to transfer all the day's recent events back to their Founders. Even if they did, Dosena departed right when Melody finished her Ascension. She wouldn't have obtained the information about Diablo's ability to consume the Plague on worlds it controlled.

She hesitates for a moment, uncertain if Melody is lying. Something about Melody's abrupt power-up certainly surprised her, but she didn't imagine there would be a conspiracy at this level.

[You're lying!] Dosena exclaims. [There's no way your Archdemon has the power to defeat the Plague! Even our foremost scientists haven't discovered such a thing after 90,000 cycles!]

Melody unballs her fists, switching to a claw-pose. In her grasp, a pair of swords made of substantialized sound vibrations materialize, their innate vibration properties granting them impressive cutting power, while Melody's internal Cosmic Energy reserves bolster their hardness.

"So what if the Volgrim Empire failed? Our Archdemon is more capable than you can imagine! Haven't you realized what system you've arrived in? This system was previously conquered by the Plague, but look at it now!"

Dosena frowns. It only takes an instant for her to send a pulse of Psionic Energy throughout the Void, examining all the nearby planets, moons, and general stellar composition.

[...The Shredder system.] Dosena says, her frown deepening. [There are still Kolvaxians on two of the planets, but the world of Sharmur... has been cleansed? How is this possible?!]

"Heh heh heh..." Melody chuckles. "Your lack of imagination does not constitute a lack of ability on our great Archdemon's part. Diablo found a way. Now, we will begin taking back the worlds lost to the Plague."

Melody slashes her soundblades at Dosena, who tries to defend against them with her Psionic Clone's ghostly body, but the blades slice through the clone with frightening ease! Dosena howls in pain, her blood turning cold as the blades draw dangerously close to her physical self.

She teleports!

Dosena steps through space instantly, leaping a hundred meters away to dodge Melody's attack while glaring at her with hate-filled eyes.

[You will not defeat the Volgrim Empire. You cannot, because I WILL NOT let you. Foolish mud-dweller. Let this Founder broaden your horizons! After that... I will extract the method to defeat the Plague from your Archdemon's cold, dead hands!]

Dosena teleports to Melody's side and sends a punch flying at her ribs, But Melody dodges and slashes at Dosena's fists.

Then Dosena teleports again and again, leaving after-images in her wake. She continuously strikes at Melody, while the Deity of Defiance continues to confound her lethal attacks with pinpoint-precise blocks and dodges. Melody slowly begins to acclimate to her newfound strength as the battle rages while growing more and more confident in her new powers.

"You want to kill the Archdemon? You won't succeed! I'll DEFY you no matter how many times you try!"

[You can try!] Dosena spits back. [There's no chance you'll walk away from this battle in one piece!]

"We'll see about that!"

Part 539: Dosena's Wrath

Recommended Listening

In an instant, all hell breaks loose across the Shredder System. Dosena and Melody lunge at one another and engage in a prolonged, protracted battle as Dosena begins to take the Deity of Defiance more seriously than in the beginning.

No longer does Dosena battle Melody by sending her Psionic Clone as an avatar. She uses her own body to the fullest extent, revealing her highly toned muscles, each arm and fist capable of breaking apart a planet with a single punch. The two of them deliver brutal blows, block each other's attacks, and dodge whenever possible to conserve their strength.

An hour passes as Melody retreats while fighting to one of the moons orbiting the fourth world of Thillow. With solid ground and a bit of gravity to hold them relatively in place, Melody and Dosena crash against one another, roaring angrily as the two of them test their combat skills and push themselves further and further.

In the beginning, Dosena doesn't take Melody seriously. Even if her avatar can't withstand Melody's void-tearing shrieks, her body is more than capable of doing so, provided she takes certain precautions. The problem is, as the battle builds in intensity, Melody discovers more and more powers hidden within herself.

When demons rise to the rank of a Lord, they unlock the first set of basic abilities which will go on to define their powers as they evolve further. A typical Lord is more than capable of wiping out a small army of human soldiers, provided their equipment isn't too advanced.

At the rank of Baron, those abilities become much stronger, to the point where even heavier weapons and vehicles don't provide much protection. Many Barons can rip apart tanks and mechs with their bare hands, though concentrated firepower can ultimately wear them down to the point of death. Only the most abnormal freaks like Beelzebub can endure such punishment and live to tell the tale.

At the rank of Duke, their powers become truly frightening. Even an army can't stop most Dukes, let alone kill them. Almost always, specialized metaphysical powers become necessary to even inflict damage on the body of an average Duke, and even then, their resilience is still enough that they can escape if they feel the need. Dukes can level cities, provided they have enough time.

Once demons attain the lauded rank of Emperor, they become too much for anyone but Heroes, Archangels, and other Emperors to deal with. Despite this, a 4th level Psion can hold an Emperor off, while a 5th Level Psion will crush them with ease.

As demons advance in rank, they not only become stronger in body, mind, and soul, but their metaphysical abilities become more diverse and threatening to their adversaries. Jumping from the rank of a Demon Emperor to a Bottom Cosmic would naturally provide an unbelievable increase to their bottom line, so what would that mean if they kept Ascending to the Lower Cosmic realm and ultimately the Middle Cosmic?

It is during this battle that Dosena begins to unravel that mystery for the first time in the cosmos's history.

Melody's dual sonic blades slice through space, leaving tears in the void as she snaps and slashes at her foe, forcing Dosena to dodge and evade. Dosena fires back blasts of pure psionic energy, but even when her attacks land, they only cause minor bruising and send Melody tumbling away!

Melody's body has already reached a realm of becoming far harder than the purest demonstone. Her bones rival those Mephisto stole from Leviathan's corpse. Her blood vitality bubbles enthusiastically, providing her a powerful regeneration factor that, while not as strong as even Emperor Beelzebub's, is still robust enough to heal major injuries within a few minutes.

Even when Dosena manages to shatter one of Melody's ribs with a particularly well-aimed punch, Melody simply keeps on fighting, and her broken bone reforms its structure within ten minutes.

"I told you!" Melody shouts. "I told you I wouldn't go down without a fight! AHHH!!"

She fires off another silent explosion of sound, but Dosena has long grown accustomed to this attack. She teleports away at the last second, flickering through the gaps in space to evade the pressure wave even as it shreds the barren surface of Thillow's moon.

When Dosena attacks Melody by sending a beam of solar energy at her head, Melody's body abruptly blurs into an afterimage. She dodges the attack in a manner that momentarily makes her resemble a ghost; likely a trick involving her mastery over the power of sound. Dosena's solar laser lances right past her and explodes in the distance, atomizing one of the moon's mountains.

[You are a more formidable opponent than I expected.] Dosena praises without a hint of irony. [You are giving me an excellent idea of how a battle against the Archdemon would play out. It boils my blood with hunger to engage in such a battle, but it also makes me fearful for the fate of the galaxy. Your species is only slightly less parasitical than the Plague. It was a mistake to leave demonkind alive. We should have exterminated both you and the humans following the Energy Wars.]

Melody sneers. "Aww, but you didn't. Now it's too late for you to do anything but cry. The demons are here to stay, your majesty. You can't ever put this genie back in the bottle!"

[Where there is a will, there is a way.] Dosena says coldly.

She attacks Melody again, ramping up her attacks and draining her energy much more than before. She dodges several of Melody's sword-slashes, then fakes her out with a feint by pretending to grab at Melody's wrist. Melody starts to pull her sword back, but in that instant, Dosena's Psionic Clone leaps out of her body and pounces on Melody, tackling her to the ground!

Thump!

Melody cries out in surprise. "Gah!"

The clone wraps around her like a snake, its body deforming easily thanks to its energy-body nature. It hides behind her and wraps its arms and legs around Melody's limbs to temporarily hold her in place while Dosena herself violently kicks at Melody's hands. She breaks Melody's wrists and shatters her sonic-blades, making the Deity of Defiance let out a strangled cry of pain before lifting her leg up and smashing it into Melody's stomach.

BOOM!!

Thillow's moon trembles from the impact. Dosena smashes her adversary down with such power that multiple canyons explode into existence across the moon. Its surface begins breaking apart at the seams.

[All I have to do is kill you, then kill Diablo, and then kill the so-called 'First Emperor'.] Dosena declares. [Then I'll have one of my empire's weaker troops travel around to exterminate the demonic menace alone. It won't take much. A 5th Level Psion will do against a bunch of pathetic mud-dwellers!]

Dosena conjures the power of cosmic lightning at the tips of her fingers, then aims down into the hole she's created, where Melody continues to struggle below. She fires a jagged bolt at her opponent, her eyes turning upward in a look of delight as it explodes against Melody's body.

BOOM!!!

A light as bright as the midday sun erupts from that hole, slightly stinging Dosena's eyes but only causing her a moment of discomfort. Her smiling eyes widen as she senses Melody's wriggling body stop moving, a black smoke wafting out of her ruptured stomach.

[Was that all, insect? Any other quips you'd like to- hm?]

Dosena frowns. She watches as Melody's body abruptly vibrates and disappears, vanishing in an instant. Melody reappears a short distance away, just off to Dosena's left side. She massages her stomach and grits her teeth in pain, clearly injured by Dosena's previous attack. However, no longer does the Second Founder's Psionic Clone cling to her back. Melody has freed herself.

"Not gonna lie." Melody mutters, her expression much more serious than before. "I saw my life flash before my eyes. You got me with that devil-damned clone of yours... again. You're sneakier than you let on."

Dosena straightens her posture. Her eyes return to normal as she examines Melody's injuries carefully.

[Do you think that just because the Psions are 'honorable' we won't stoop to slightly underhanded means to win a battle? I have fought a million battles in a million different ways. I have mastered every form of combat known throughout the universe. If a bit of subterfuge is all it takes to kill you, then you were never my opponent in the first place.]

"Well said." Melody says, before hacking up a bit of coagulated blood and spitting it onto the ground. Already, her ruptured stomach has begun pulling itself back together again, and her other injuries have also started to heal. "This is, without a doubt, the most dangerous battle of my entire life."

[Is that so?] Dosena questions. [How would you mud-dwellers say it? For me, 'it's just a Tuesday.']

Both women gaze at one another with cold expressions. Despite Dosena's calm breathing and attitude of indifference, she has already stopped treating this fight as if she were bullying a junior.

The Deity of Defiance is much hardier than I anticipated. Dosena thinks to herself, her lightning-fast mind easily capable of coming up with hundreds of battle strategies per second. Her stamina and regenerative power are even greater than mine. She is able to inhale the cosmic power of the universe and convert it directly into energy to restore her body. Are all demons capable of this feat once they become Deities, or is Melody unique? I know for a fact the so-called Archdemon is even more monstrous in terms of regenerative power, but his body is a... special case.

Dosena's eyes flick toward the distant reaches of the Void, thousands of kilometers away, where Diablo remains levitating in place, simply watching the battle play out.

Then her gaze returns to Melody. Her thoughts continue to churn.

In terms of combat experience, I am by far Melody's superior. Her movements are sloppy, full of openings. She has yet to land a single significant blow on me. She has barely made me bleed. Despite this, I cannot land a killing blow. She is much more durable than I expected. I simply wish I knew if this was the power all Demon Deities will come to possess, or if she is exceptional...

These observations come and go in a fraction of a second. Compared to Dosena, Melody's thoughts are far more sluggish. Her brain is enhanced to a degree thanks to her demonic biology, but compared to the progenitor of Cerebral Psionics, Melody might as well have a turtle controlling her synapses. She barely has time to swallow a breath before Dosena flicks her fingers, detonating the air and soil around herself, causing a massive explosion of dust to engulf the moon's local hemisphere.

Immediately, the area within a thousand miles becomes enshrouded in a pitch-black cloud of dust particles. While these might not normally be capable of obscuring a Middle Cosmic's senses, Melody's heart skips a beat when she realizes she cannot detect Dosena's precise location anymore!

Instead, Dosena spreads her Psionic Aura out in all directions, making herself appear to be hiding in every single direction Melody can look at the same time. Melody hunkers down and flicks her eyes around, her heart racing as she tries to uncover the Second Founder's hiding location.

Melody opens her mouth. She swallows a breath, intending to burst out a scream and disperse the fog, but a stabbing sensation of killing intent startles her, followed immediately by a leg snapping toward the left side of her head.

THUNK!!

Melody goes flying as Dosena batters her sideways, sending her spinning and twirling across the moon's cloudy surface, only to flicker in front of Melody's path with her leg reared back.

CRACK!!

Another brutal kick strikes Melody's spine, making her mouth reflexively open in a silent scream before she goes flying again!

Back and forth, Dosena ping-pongs Melody between herself and her Psionic Clone, knocking her around with as much murderous intent as she can possibly muster!

Over the next twenty seconds, she kicks Melody fifteen times, shattering dozens of Melody's bones, mangling her body, and sending her sprawling helplessly across the dirt.

Finally, Dosena stops. She watches as Melody crashes into the side of a mountain, plowing inside of it like a bowling ball crashing into upright pins. Dosena narrows her eyes, waiting for Melody to pull off another trick.

But she doesn't.

Melody's body spasms several times. She tries to cry out in pain, but she fails to catch a breath. She weakly gasps, choking on blood stuck in her shattered larynx while her multiple broken limbs lay in unnatural positions. Even her regenerative powers can't keep up with Dosena's brutality, not anymore.

Dosena flickers toward Melody in an instant. She conjures a razor-sharp blade of Psionic Energy around her palm and takes aim at Melody's neck...

Abruptly, she stiffens.

Dosena leaps backward and swirls around, sneering with her eyes.

[There you are! I knew you wouldn't sit and watch as I executed your mightiest subordinate!]

Dosena's bloodthirsty eyes lock onto the phantasmal image of Emperor Diablo's Astral Body. He projects himself inside the smog of the Thillow moon. He casually waves his hand, and a burst of cosmic energy disperses the smoke, revealing Melody's limp, broken body, as well as Dosena's figure. The Second Founder gazes at him with a frightening glare, but Diablo remains unmoved.

Melody's eyes turn toward Diablo's ghostly apparition. She wheezes painfully, realizing he has come to save her, just as she thought he would.

He won't... leave me... to die... Melody thinks, her eyes becoming blurry with tears of gratitude.

The Emperor of Annihilation casually folds his hands behind his back. He smiles at Dosena.

"Ah, Second Founder. There's no need to be alarmed. I told you I would not interfere, and I will keep my promise. Since this is a battle to the death, it would be unbecoming of me to interfere. You know that at our level, we have to care more about our 'face' than we do the lives of mere underlings."

He gestures with a nod of his head.

"Have at her, then. I won't stop you."

Melody's heart skips a beat. She looks at Diablo with an expression of shock, but her body is too broken for her to utter a word.

As for Dosena, she gurgles nastily in her throat. [Do you think me a fool? There's no chance you'd let me execute a Middle Cosmic. You demons need every powerhouse you can get, and a Middle Cosmic is already near the peak of what the Milky Way can produce...]

Diablo blinks twice. A look of confusion plays upon his face. "Oh? They're hard to come by, you say? I was not aware of this. And here I thought I'd developed a method for creating them at my whim. It seems I was wrong. Pray tell, what restrictions must I abide by? Since you know more about my powers than me, of course."

Dosena's fierce eyes momentarily falter. This time, she is the one momentarily appearing confused.

What is Diablo implying? Dosena thinks. He can mass-produce Middle Cosmics? Lies! An exaggeration if I've ever heard one. Nobody can do such a thing! If it were possible, the Plague would become unstoppable, or the Volgrim would have won this war ages ago. He must be bluffing, hoping I'll spare her life...

Dosena keeps her eyes locked on Diablo. She smiles again, the corners of her eyebrows turning upward as she takes a slow, hesitant step toward the broken body of her defeated foe.

[Really? Middle Cosmics are easy for you to make? Then you won't mind if I gut this one right here and now?]

"I said I wouldn't, so of course I won't." Diablo says, fanning out his fingers and admiring his nails as if her threats have nothing to do with him. "Though I must say, you're acting awfully bold for someone missing crucial information. Are you... certain... you truly desire to execute my fresh new protégé? Are you... certain... you can afford to pay the price?"

Dosena pauses her movements. She continues to stare at Diablo, trying to figure out what game he's playing.

[You are... beginning... to annoy me...] Dosena says, a tone of warning taking shape within her voice.

"Of course, of course." Diablo says, looking at her in a fearful, yet utterly sarcastic manner. "Forgive me, Second Founder. I meant no offense. After all, your battle prowess is extraordinary, and if we were to come to blows, I'd surely lose in a single move. I would never want to offend or annoy you."

He pauses.

"It's just that... well... no, I'd best not say it. You're a smart woman, after all. You can figure the matter out for yourself. Far be it for an inferior Cosmic like me to appraise you of information you are certainly capable of comprehending on your own."

Dosena's heart turns cold. Despite Diablo's pretenses of deep humility, his underlying words imply an infinite confidence that if Dosena were to learn of the 'secret matters' he is withholding from her, she would absolutely not want to kill Melody. The alarmingly confident tone he assumes makes her second-guess herself, wondering just what trick he could have up his figurative sleeve...

[I am listening.] Dosena says coldly, straightening her posture to gaze at the levitating astral body of her only true foe in the Milky Way. [Tell me why I would... regret... killing your hellspawn.]

"I would never presume upon your thoughts, Great Founder." Diablo says, bowing his head apologetically while cupping his hands together in an expression of begging forgiveness. "Ah it's just... have you noticed the state of the Ripper Star?"

[The Ripper Star?] Dosena asks, slightly confused by this seemingly random change in topic. She casts out her Cosmic Sense to investigate the status of the Shredder System, especially its star. She frowns as she senses that, for some reason, its core has begun to fluctuate in an erratic manner.

"Ah, so you notice now!" Diablo says, lifting his head and smiling at her with closed eyes. "It seems you were so preoccupied with the battle that you must have accidentally overlooked the Ripper Star's condition. Of course, now that I have pointed it out to you, you can definitely understand why killing Melody might cost you more than you expect..."

Dosena doesn't immediately reply.

Her lightning-fast brain hurries to catch up with the strange, jarring twists and turns Diablo has made with his supposed 'logic'. She glances at Melody, then at the Ripper Star, then back to Diablo.

While she does this, she also notices certain alarming changes in four planets within the Shredder system, as well as most of their moons. Their cores flicker erratically, evidently undergoing some unknown, unexpected change in condition that has only happened recently, within the past few minutes.

When Dosena observes all of these changes, and then recalls Melody's broken body, she begins to string together those thoughts into a faintly dreadful hypothesis, one that shocks her to her core!

[You... Diablo...] Dosena says, narrowing her eyes to glare daggers at him. [What have you done?]

Diablo's apologetic look disappears. He stands upright, folds his hands behind his back, and looks at the Second Founder with an expression of utter disinterest.

"Finally figured it out, did you? Took you long enough."

The Emperor of Annihilation laughs dryly.

"Haha. That's right, I wasn't lying. I can mass-produce Middle Cosmics. All I have to do is anchor the soul of a strong demon to any star and they will become Uplifted, even going so far as to walk the Staircase of Ascension. Additionally, I can anchor their soul to other celestial objects in the system, such as planets and moons. The more there are to anchor to, the more powerful my little Cosmics will become."

A gloomy look washes over Dosena's face. Her expression becomes ugly as she listens to Diablo's speech.

[You're lying. It can't be that easy. There are always limitations when it comes to the power of a Cosmic Entity...]

Dosena pauses. She cocks her head and falls into thought for a few seconds.

[...If demons must attach their souls to the core of a celestial object to become 'deities,' then perhaps they must also become tethered to it permanently. That would mean they cannot stray too far from their celestial origin point...]

"It also means that if you kill Melody, the Ripper star will destabilize. The two of them share their life sources. Of course, if you want to kill Melody, or any of my future Cosmics, you can always simply destroy the stars they have become tethered to. They will die once their primary source of power has dissipated."

Diablo offers an even 'easier' and simpler solution for killing Melody, but it doesn't make Dosena feel good at all.

It enrages her!

She maintains a calm facade externally, but internally she begins to explode with the full force of a barely-contained nuclear bomb.

[So that's what this... is... all... about...] Dosena growls, her eyes trembling from suppressing her emotions. [You knew I would come. You knew I would fight. And you know I won't kill your precious minion because it would be a worthless victory. You can simply forge more demons into Middle Cosmics. Even if I kill one, I'll only be destroying important star systems in the Milky Way. Systems that would be invaluable for someday defeating the Plague...]

"No, no, I would never presume such a thing." Diablo says, now grinning from ear to ear. "Perish the thought."

A long silence follows.

Several minutes pass as Dosena quietly vents her rage inside her mind, cursing Diablo with all her hatred while slowly restoring balance to her emotions.

She bows her head eventually and releases a heavy sigh through her nostrils.

[...Well played, Diablo. Well played. You have won this battle.]

"Who knows?" Diablo says mildly, his face returning to a neutral expression. "Perhaps I may even win the war. I hear the Milky Way still lacks a Ruler."

[The War is unending.] Dosena retorts. [Akasha's Game plays for keeps. After you defeat the Plague, and after you defeat the Volgrim, what then? Will you celebrate your small victory? Will you celebrate while knowing just as well as I do what horrors lurk within the depths of the Unknown?]

"I will deal with my future enemies as they become relevant." Diablo answers. "For now, I will simply thank you for showing me some of your fighting capabilities. It is always good to know the strengths and weaknesses of one's enemies. It was an excellent battle worth watching."

Dosena's eyes twitch as another bolt of rage shoots through her mind. But she keeps silent, not wanting to give Diablo the satisfaction of a reaction.

Slowly, she levitates into the sky, keeping all her hate-filled eyes trained on Diablo's Astral Body.

Then, she begins to fly away...

However, Diablo quickly shouts out from behind her. "Oh, Dosena! Dosena, darling. Would you be a dear for me? Please inform Founder Unarin I'll be paying him a visit soon. There are some matters the two of us must discuss."

Dosena snaps her head toward Diablo's ghostly body. [You will do NO such thing! If you approach within even a thousand lightyears of Volgarius, I will shred your Labyrinth to atoms! I will slaughter every single bloodskin without hesitation!]

Diablo appears unafraid. He snorts derisively.

"You'd suffer an Akashic Backlash just to spite me? And here I thought you were an intelligent woman. Do not get your panties in a twist, Second Founder, assuming you wear any. I'm not going to attack Volgarius. If I were going to do that, I'd have done so already. No, I simply wish to discuss... terms... with the First Founder. Just let him know I'll pay him a visit soon, after I deal with the humans."

Dosena glowers at Diablo. She says nothing, neither confirming nor denying his request. She flickers away, her thoughts a jumbled mess.

That damned demon. Dosena hisses. An Akashic backlash. At my level, it probably wouldn't prove fatal, but it would leave me badly crippled. Yet another reason I dare not kill Melody. If she dies, her star system will fall. I would be the culprit in Akasha's eyes. I would suffer a backlash for every dead world. Now that would truly be a price I dare not pay...

She disappears into the Void, and her aura begins to fade as she draws further and further away.

On Thillow's moon, Diablo turns his attention to Melody. He levitates toward her and kneels down, examining her injuries.

"Mmm. You'll live. Might need a few days to fully recover, though."

Melody coughs. Several minutes pass before she can direct the healing energies within her body to her mouth and throat. Eventually, she becomes able to speak.

"You... you were... going to let me die?" Melody asks, directing an aggrieved look Diablo's way.

"Oh, don't fret." Diablo says, rolling his eyes. "I had the situation under control. Dosena held back that entire fight. She was always afraid I would rush in to save you. If she were fighting without reservations, you wouldn't have lasted a single minute. In any case, if she did kill you, it would simply mean the immediate destruction of the Volgrim Empire. It would have been quite a good deal for us if she took that gamble."

Melody grimaces. "You... betrayed me! I thought you would protect me! I thought you'd intervene, but you were happy to let her kill me?!"

Diablo remains silent for a moment. Suddenly, he lashes a hand out at her face.

Slap!!

The Emperor of Annihilation smacks Melody right across the cheek, sending her sprawling backward. While the strength behind his Astral Body truly isn't much at all, the sheer shock of him doing that, as well as the sudden embarrassment makes Melody turn red in the face.

"Diablo, what the FUCK?!" Melody shouts. "You devil-damned prick!"

"Shut your mouth." Diablo retorts, his tone cold. "You ungrateful little bitch. Have you forgotten? I made you. I can unmake you. You took an oath to serve me, as well as the greater Demon Empire. If your death would grant us a massive tactical victory over the Volgrim, that price would certainly be within reason for me to pay."

Melody's heart turns cold. "But... you-"

"Don't ever talk back to me again." Diablo says, leaning forward to snarl at her. "You may think that you are my equal as a Middle Cosmic, but I can kill you with the same ease Dosena could. If you die, I have a hundred other Emperors I can uplift at my whim. You are nothing special at all. Don't let this feeble level of power go to your head, or I will make you regret the day you were born."

This time, Melody says nothing. She looks at Diablo with visible fear in her eyes. Mixed with that fear is a complete lack of recognition.

For some reason, this doesn't feel like the 'Diablo' she's known her whole life.

What happened to the friendly, casual Diablo? The one who liked to laze about, taking naps and drinking blood wine? What happened to the lackadaisical Diablo who didn't pay much attention to affairs among his people, who was always content to let his wife Lucifer deal with those mundanities?

Melody suddenly has the weirdest feeling that the creature standing before her is not even an actual projection of Diablo, but a skinwalker disguising itself as him.

For all she knows... Diablo may have died six years ago.

Perhaps something else took over his body.

When Diablo notices the terror in Melody's eyes, he smirks, then stands up.

"You just lay there a while and recuperate. Think about today's events. Think about what you're going to do to make the Demon Empire as powerful and esteemed as the Volgrim Empire. Once you're back in tip-top shape, I'll have Nymph bind your soul to the other planets in this system. In the meantime, I'm going to clear out the last two remaining Kolvaxian infestations, then deal with the humans."

Diablo's astral body begins to fade away.

"We'll keep in touch," he says just before he fully disappears.

After a few moments, Melody slumps back down, her chest rising and falling as she takes shallow breaths.

Is he really... even still Diablo?

Part 540: Standoff

Following Dosena's win against Melody, and her subsequent departure after Diablo played her, the Second Founder decisively returns to Volgarius at her maximum speed. Her first loss to anyone in any capacity in over two million years does not cause her heart to burn with excessive shame. She simply calms her agitation down and takes flight through the Void, leaving any useless emotions behind.

Lightyear after lightyear, Dosena steps across space at unimaginable speeds. She could easily use a Warpgate to traverse the Milky Way, but the Second Founder has never liked using exotic tools created by the Technopaths.

For her, it's not merely a matter of pride. Every time she exercises her spatial abilities, she becomes capable of traveling across the Void faster and faster. Perhaps someday she may even become capable of traveling anywhere within a galaxy's confines in a single step...

Of course, that hope only exists because of the assumption she might someday reach the 10th Level of Psionic power. Whether she actually will or not remains to be seen.

* * *

Dosena travels quickly. Within three hours, she traverses the majority of the Southern Milky Way to arrive back at Volgarius. By now, any shame over her intellectual loss at Diablo's hands has disappeared, replaced instead with a calm acceptance and burning desire to one-up him in the future. Hopefully the near future, if she has any say in the matter.

The Second Founder's presence in the Volgarius system goes undetected. She has long become capable of hiding her presence from all the other Volgrim, as well as their expansive networks of sensors and detection grids. She reaches Volgarius itself in an instant, crossing the Void to step into the planet's upper atmosphere.

One step later, and she appears inside Unarin's Sanctum, where she finds the First Founder staring at one of the many paintings on his Sanctum's walls. This painting in particular happens to be an especially vivid and beautiful depiction of the Archdemon's figure as it launched an attack on King Arthur's body while he was possessed by Joan of Arc's soul during the battle at Polaris. Crafted by an especially imaginative junior Changeling at Unarin's request, the painting is both beautiful and frightening, depicting Diablo's animalistic rage in a manner that would make any weak-minded primitive shiver in fear.

Unarin stands before the painting with his hands folded behind his back. The instant Dosena arrives, he blinks his eyes twice and turns his body slightly to glance in her direction.

"Results?" Unarin asks, as if he knew her victory was never in question, only the level to which her win might stretch.

Dosena levitates downward. She rests her feet on the Sanctum's floor, remaining silent for a moment before lowering her eyes.

[You guessed correctly. The Archdemon's return was not as simple as we believed. He had several new cards to play. The balance of power has changed.]

Unarin inhales softly. He turns around to look at his fellow Founder with an expression devoid of fear, apprehension, or joy. His blank face gives no clue as to his emotions, nor do his thoughts, since Dosena cannot read the mind of one who has mastered the Mind of Void.

"The lack of a triumphant tone in your voice tells me Diablo's tricks were sufficient to force your departure. What gains has the Archdemon made that we did not anticipate?"

Dosena glances at the painting of Diablo behind Unarin for a brief moment before returning her eyes to the First Founder.

[The encounter went as follows...]

For ten minutes, Dosena gives a detailed explanation of every important event she sensed as well as an exact transcript of the words she and Diablo shared. Naturally, Unarin's elevated brain capacity nearly matches hers, and so he does not require anything to be explained a second time.

After she concludes, Unarin begins pacing back and forth slowly, lowering his head as he falls deep into thought.

"Hmm... ahh... so it is like that. Hmm..."

Every once in a while, Unarin will pause to pick up one of the many art pieces in his sanctum, examining it thoughtlessly while he continues to dwell on every clue Dosena has given him.

Finally, the First Founder stops and turns to look at Dosena once more.

"I believe I have a grasp on the situation now." Unarin says. "The Emperor of Annihilation is quite fearsome, but these machinations are not his. The First Emperor of Transience is more or less behind most of Diablo's plans. As for the uncharacteristic way Diablo has been acting, I have some thoughts as well."

[Feel free to speak them.] Dosena says.

Unarin smiles faintly. "No need. Things can remain as they are now. Continue attending to that matter with the Myriad Deity. If you can successfully break his soul and refine his dragon-bones, we will obtain a colossal supply of Living Moldanium. That will benefit our Empire greatly."

[What about Diablo?] Dosena asks, frowning faintly.

Unarin shrugs. "He said he will pay me a visit. Let him come. I believe I know what he wishes to say. It will not be... harmful to the Volgrim Empire. Not directly, in any case."

Dosena nods slowly. Already, she has realized that Unarin does not want to say anything out loud because he strongly suspects the Wordsmiths may be watching them. There's no sense giving their enemies information thoughtlessly. Let the humans work for what they want.

[I contemplate and I comprehend.] Dosena says casually. [I will return to my domain.]

Unarin says nothing else. He simply walks past her and heads out of his sanctum, allowing the Second Founder to disappear without a word.

After Dosena arrives back in her hidden domain, she finds Executor Riley diligently holding Mephisto in place. The Myriad Deity curses and groans as he tries desperately to escape, but Dosena's restrictions are far too potent for a pathetic Bottom Cosmic to have any chance at breaking free.

[Second Founder.] Riley says, immediately bowing her head and dropping to one knee.

[Where is Creator Demila?] Dosena asks.

[Creator Demila is still on assignment, hunting down Emperor Gressil.] Riley says, raising her head while taking care not to meet her superior's eyes without permission. Doing so would indicate a grave misstep of decorum.

[Recall her.] Dosena says coldly. [That useless reject still hasn't managed to uncover the hiding spot of one piddling Demon Emperor. She is truly a stain upon the great name of the Psions.]

Riley frowns. Despite Demila's lower Psion Level, she is in fact a few hundred thousand years older than Riley herself. It would not be appropriate for her to badmouth a senior born shortly after the end of the Great Wars.

[Creator Demila has indeed reached the end of her Path...] Riley says hesitantly. [But... does she not have many great accomplishments to her name?]

Dosena snorts. [She has always been an underachiever. She lacks drive. She hungers for power, yet her will is shaky, and her Seed riddled with flaws. She took too many shortcuts and exhausted her potential, thinking she could rush to the rank of Executor. Now she is stuck and will never progress further. What is Demila if not a fool besmirching our name?]

Riley neither confirms nor denies any thoughts Dosena has regarding Demila, as she would find those thoughts to be disrespectful in all possible contexts.

[I will recall her, as per your orders, Second Founder.] Riley instead says. [What assignment would you prefer I put her on next?]

[Have her report directly to me.] Dosena answers. [I will hand out her next assignment in person.]

[As you command, Second Founder. I contemplate, and I comprehend.]

Riley bows her head one last time, then stands up and rips a gap in space to depart. Unlike Dosena's ability to silently cross the Void, her spatial manipulation skills are much more rudimentary, a fact that causes her slight embarrassment.

She leaves, and Dosena returns to the array binding Mephisto's dragon-body.

[Insect.] Dosena hisses, her eyes looking at Mephisto's curled-up body with contempt. [You will break before me, vermin. Your bones will become the property of my Empire. Your soul will crumble to dust.]

Mephisto's pain-wracked eyes glare daggers at her hatefully.

"We... will... RESSSISSST!"

Inside the Labyrinth Core, tens of thousands of humans stand at attention, their bodies protected by top of the line T-REX armor systems. Alongside them stand allied monsters and a small percentage of demons, including Emperors Belial, Beelzebub, and Kiari.

For hours now, they have waited restlessly after pushing out all non-allied demons and monsters, placing the Labyrinth Core on lockdown. Diablo's shocking appearance inside the Core frightened humanity out of their wits. The sudden disparity between allied and enemy demons has not helped humanity feel any better about the situation. Even now, Belial's body has drastically weakened in strength, making her only as strong as she was when she was a Duke, and the same holds true for Kiari.

Among humanity's allied demons, all of them effectively lose an entire rank of strength whenever they stand inside the Labyrinth, while enemy demons gain an entire rank, up to the level of Emperor.

For some reason though, Beelzebub appears unaffected by whatever means Diablo employed to turn the Labyrinth against demons who would not fall into subservience beneath him. However, a most alarming fact humanity discovers is that more than a few demons have already crawled away from humanity's good graces and returned to Diablo, finding comfort in the Archdemon's return. Now that Diablo has taken full control of the Archdemon's body, he will surely elevate the rest of his people, just as he promised.

Plus, the traitors had to admit they never did like working underneath the Wordsmith. Why would they? They used to rule the humans, but now they must work hard to reap benefits under their former slaves instead of taking what they deem rightfully theirs.

In the center of the Labyrinth Core, Jason steps out of a gap in space. Naturally this is not Jason himself, but his Dronesmith clone made out of mechanical and biological parts.

'Jason' looks around, then walks over to Belial and Kiari. The two demonesses stand together, whispering thoughts about what they expect to happen next. Neither looks happy about the change in circumstances.

"Hey." Jason says as he walks up. "You should head back to Tarus II. With your powers suppressed, you're a lot more vulnerable to attacks from your fellow demons."

"I'm not going anywhere." Belial says, crossing her arms. "Diablo has crossed a line this time. I don't know what the hell is going on with him, but if I leave, the Core will be doomed. We won't win a protracted battle without my help."

"I don't believe we will even with your help." Jason says seriously, his eyes revealing a hint of forbidden knowledge.

Unlike everyone else in the Core, Jason has already watched and rewatched the footage of Melody's battle against Dosena several times. He's also heard all of Diablo's speeches to his fellow demons and relatively grasps the full extent of the Archdemon's cunning.

"I'll be blunt." Jason says evenly. "We're fucked. I can't contend against the Second Founder, and I sure as hell can't beat the Archdemon. If he does attack the Core, then everyone here is going to die. I don't want to see that happen."

Belial frowns. "Jason. Even if we retreat to Tarus II, we'll still have no chance of defeating Diablo. He's become too powerful. Unless the Archangels can unleash the Cherubiim again..."

"They might be able to." Jason says. "But... I don't think that will be enough. I still don't have a grasp on how powerful different 'Cosmics' are, but the Archdemon absolutely feels more powerful to me than the Cherubiim did when the Archangels attacked Hell Harbor. Coupled with the power of the First Emperor, I don't think any of us stands a chance..."

As Jason talks, Neil Adams trots over, a contingent of 100 elite soldiers keeping pace behind him.

"Jason, there you are." Neil says grumpily. "Took you long enough! Do you understand the situation we're in? I'm trying to come up with a counter for the Archdemon but none of our models are showing an effective threat response."

Jason sighs. "As a matter of fact, I understand the situation better than you'd think. Let's get everyone together and have a quick meeting. I'll explain what's going on in detail."

Without delay, Jason assembles more than a hundred high-ranking members of humanity's elites, including Neil Adams, Phoebe, Beelzebub, and others. Naturally, Blinker and Brunhilda don't join them, as they are currently inside Chrona. Everyone enters a side-room inside the Core where a giant conference table awaits, with everyone taking up seats at various positions. Neil and his advisors sit at one end, while Jason, Phoebe, Belial, Kiari, and Beelzebub sit at the other.

Jason gives a twenty-minute speech, explaining Diablo's recent accomplishments, including his destruction of all three Plague-controlled worlds inside the Shredder System, his ideological defeat of Dosena, and his ability to uplift Emperors en-masse to the rank of Cosmic.

Beelzebub sneers. "Is that all it takes? Diablo can simply latch an Emperor's soul to the core of a planet or a star and they will become a Cosmic? Too bad they'll actually become his loyal dog, unable to escape their new shackles! The devil is in the details."

Belial looks at Beelzebub in disgust. "What, you're not interested in such an offer?"

"Of course not." Beelzebub spits back. "What a pathetic offer. Only the most brow-beaten loser of an Emperor would accept such a pitiful hand-me-down. It's obvious to anyone with two brain cells to rub together that Diablo isn't only seeking to reclaim worlds taken by the Plague. He's also ensuring his future competitors will have their ceilings of power capped! While he grows in strength, they will never Ascend further."

Jason touches his chin.

"That's... actually a good point, Beelzebub. I hadn't thought of that angle."

Neil taps the table. "Diablo is going to run out of Emperors quickly if he turns them all into Cosmics. Thanks to the changes inside the Labyrinth, he needs only to elevate demons to the rank of Duke to project Emperor-level power throughout demonkind's domain. Still, the more Emperors he turns into Cosmics, the slower his rate of expansion across the Milky Way will become. Dukes aren't going to be much help against the Plague, otherwise he would have only used them instead of risking his Emperors when he took back Sharmur."

"There are billions of star systems and only a few dozen Emperors in existence." Phoebe chimes in. "The math doesn't add up."

"We already know he can Uplift demons to the rank of Emperor." Neil points out. "So, in theory, he may be able to keep up with a somewhat aggressive rate of expansion..."

"I doubt that." Jason counters. "Even if Glinch can produce a few Emperors a day, and I think that's definitely going too far, the scale of our galaxy is mind-bogglingly large. Billions and billions of star systems cannot be held by a few hundred or even a few thousand Middle Cosmics tethered to stars. The Volgrim Empire at least has a fully mobile army of Cosmics through their Psions, and multiple armadas of starships built by trillions of Technopaths. The demons cannot hope to match that scale."

"Then... how is Diablo going to proceed?" Belial asks.

"That is the question I would like to have answered most of all." Neil replies glumly.

Humanity's leaders continue talking and planning for a while, but unfortunately, all they manage to decide on is the idea that they truly have no recourse against the Archdemon. Forget mass-producing Middle Cosmics, even if the only enemies humanity had to face were Diablo and the First Emperor alone, they still wouldn't stand a chance!

How in the damnation are they supposed to do battle when the field is so lopsided against them?

Phoebe sinks into her chair and touches her pregnant belly. "Will Diablo force us to return to the old ways of slavery and torture? Is humanity destined to become vassals to our enemies? Playthings for them to violate as they please?"

Jason inhales deeply, then he exhales.

"Everyone. If push comes to shove, we have one last fallback option. I can place all of humanity inside the Cube. We can grow our strength there in peace, untouched by Diablo, Dosena, and all the others. We'd have to give up on the Milky Way, but I think... this could be a way to save ourselves."

Neil's eyes flicker with hatred. He gazes at the table with a faint look of despair.

"The Milky Way is our home too. If the demons were to drive us to the point of desperation, I vow that when we grew strong enough to return, we would lay waste to everything they hold dear. There would be no path of reconciliation. All who caused us harm would suffer the pain of a thousand deaths."

A few of the demons at the table frown at Neil's words. But then again, coming from him, this level of bigotry is the same as what they've grown to expect. And frankly, he already hates demonkind to its core. What new sentiment do his words convey that they haven't heard before?

"At this point," Jason says, "we have no choice but to wait for Diablo's arrival. If he wants a fight, we'll give him one. And if he doesn't, then maybe we can find some way to compromise..."

"Compromise." Neil growls, practically spitting the word out. "How delightful."

Jason shakes his head. He touches Phoebe's hand and smiles weakly, but the expression certainly feels forced, given the circumstances.

As the group continues to talk, Belial, Beelzebub, and Kiari all suddenly sit up straighter. Their eyes flicker as they look around the room, searching for something.

Kiari suddenly points up into the air above the center of the table. "Look! Up there!"

Immediately, everyone follows her gesture. They watch with widened eyes as a flicker of cosmic energy materializes in the air. Then, abruptly, Diablo's Astral Body takes shape, materializing in the air like a God Emperor looking down upon a bunch of peons.

Neil sucks in a breath. "Diablo!"

"Ah, how good of you all to assemble in one place." Diablo says, his ghostly voice tickling the ears of everyone present. "Oh, do not worry, humans and traitors alike. If I wanted you dead, I'd simply have had Yardrat open a portal to the Core. With a single blast of the Archdemon's destructive force, I could annihilate everything and everyone inside."

Jason's heart turns cold. Inside the domain of Chrona, he keeps his attention focused on Phoebe and all the others inside the Core, looking and waiting for even a hint of Diablo's desire to attack. If he senses the faintest buildup of Cosmic Energy, Jason will pull everyone out of the Core in an instant, saving them through his time-accelerated magic.

Luckily, Diablo doesn't seem too interested in exterminating his enemies. This gives Jason some slight assurances, though he never dares to lower his guard.

"What... what do you want, Diablo?" Belial asks, gritting her teeth.

Beelzebub appears unimpressed by the cosmic apparition floating in the sky. "We don't stand a chance against the lauded Archdemon, but I bet he has some use for us still or he wouldn't have come here in such a simple manner."

"An excellent guess." Diablo says, directing a faintly appreciative stare toward Beelzebub. "Mmm... you've grown well, Beelzebub. It seems you have refined many of the impurities from your soul. What a curious path you've begun to walk. You may be the finest demon I've ever seen..."

Diablo only looks at Beelzebub a moment longer before rotating around in midair to get a good look at everyone present.

"Wordsmith. Neil Adams. So good of both of you to be here for this Deity's proclamation. I have quite the offer for the two of you to mull over, and I think it will be one you both can find… agreeable."

"An offer?" Jason asks, feeling suspicious.

"Speak clearly." Neil adds. "None of your demonic mind-games…"

Diablo fans out his fingers and begins examining his nails.

"Well, how do I put it exactly? Hmm… I suppose I would just like to make you a simple offer."

He pauses.

"It's more of a request, really."

Diablo turns up the corner of his lips in a cross between a sneer and a smile.

"What would you humans say if I said our species should become… good friends? Perhaps even have a little truce, hmm?"

Neil blinks. "A truce?"

Jason's jaw starts to hang open. "…What? You told us to get out of the Core before."

"I did. And that demand still stands." Diablo explains. "But let's just say there's a bit of… nuance."

Jason, Neil, and Phoebe all lean forward.

"We're listening."

Part 541: The Archdemon's Offer

Diablo levitates downward, ultimately placing his feet squarely in the center of the table. He stands atop his vantage position and smiles coyly at all of the humans, monsters, and demons gathered together. Not one person looks at him with any emotion more positive than fear, anger, and a sense of unwillingness to accept defeat.

"Cheer up." Diablo says while folding his hands together behind his back. "Today is a good day for humanity. It's not all sunshine and rainbows, but neither is it doom and gloom. You will accept some necessary compromises, but in exchange you will obtain great benefits."

"I find that statement hard to believe." Beelzebub says while smirking at the Emperor of Annihilation. "You don't seem the sort of guy to give any non-demon a benefit at all. You used to, but you sure don't seem that way anymore."

Diablo glances at Beelzebub for only a moment, shrugs, then returns his attention to the others at the table.

"Much has changed in recent times." Diablo says. "After the last time I transformed into the Archdemon, I fell into a deep coma for one full year. While I was asleep, the First Emperor revived me and set me on a new mission. Through the First Emperor's training, I came to master the Archdemon's form, and now I stand atop the apex of power in the Milky Way."

He pauses for a moment. His expression changes from appearing highly confident to slightly pensive.

"But the Milky Way's ceiling of power is not what it used to be, and it is nothing compared to the galaxies which surround us. The universe is vast, far bigger than any of you can imagine. The Plague is currently compromised of footsoldiers converted from our galaxy's citizens. But what if powerhouses began to appear from wherever the Plague originated? With the armies they have accrued, they could easily step up and do battle with Cosmic Elites such as myself and Founder Dosena while also trampling over the mortal armies you consider your saving grace."

Diablo turns to look at the First Wordsmith.

"I will be blunt, Jason Hiro. A series of coincidences has occurred that has allowed me to change up the strategy I originally intended to employ. It will grant everyone here the chance to flip the board and shake up the rules we've been playing by for so long."

Jason leans forward and rests his elbows on the table. "And those rules would be?"

"Humans and demons need no longer be enemies." Diablo says, his words sounding insincere to those biased against him, yet sincere to those who aren't. "You have shown everyone that the old rivalries and blood feuds can be set aside. We can continue to work together in this new era while advancing our causes and strengthening our domains. United, we can stand up to and ultimately crush the Plague, take back our Galaxy, and prepare ourselves for the true battle which shall begin within the next one million years."

This time, Neil Adams is the one to speak. "I'm sorry, one million years? You're talking about a far future event that almost nobody here may even be around to see!"

Diablo turns to look at the commander of humanity's military. "The Wordsmith has already created devices capable of extending the lives of his fellow humans, strengthening their bodies, and empowering my fellow demons without following the vile practice of soul manipulation. I believe the majority of you will have a real shot at not only surviving the next million years, but thriving in those conditions. If we were to work together-"

"That is a big if." Neil interrupts, glaring at Diablo.

"-if we were," Diablo continues, "we could set aside the ancient hatreds that have divided us to focus on the true dangers which lurk out in the Void, past the distant reaches of the Unknown. The Akashic Barriers are weakening and will someday collapse entirely. But even before then, powerful entities will appear at the edges of the Milky Way to strike its barrier, hoping to break through and infiltrate our civilizations. The Plague is likely one of those such entities, an infectious pathogen designed to quietly take over our galaxy and prepare us for invasion long before our true enemies are capable of launching an all-out assault."

Neil looks at some of the other people in the audience, his expression one of confusion.

It isn't Neil who speaks next, but instead, it is Hans Wagner, Neil's chief scientist and foremost authority on physics, mechanical technology, and other such futuristic horizons.

"Pardon me, Diablo, but I am unable to understand zee words you are saying. What is zee Akashic Barrier? Who are zee enemies you speak of?"

"Forgive me." Diablo says, his words faintly apologetic. "It seems not everyone here is fully up to date on the Truths of our universe. Perhaps it would be best if I.. gave you all a quick explanation."

Jason tenses up. Among those present, only he, Phoebe, and a few others know of the fearsome powers that have been building up in other galaxies, but at the table, he and Diablo alone know even more Truths than everyone else combined. Jason has spied on several high-level meetings recently, and he knows vaguely of the Cosmic powerhouses that must surely be amassing in other galaxies in preparation for Akasha's Game.

"The Milky Way is filled with sentient life." Diablo begins to explain. "But life is not rare in our universe. In fact, every single other galaxy we are capable of observing holds abundant reserves of life. Ours is not unique in this aspect. Not only do other galaxies have creatures just as formidable and mighty as my Demon Emperors, but plenty that are as strong as the Volgrim Second Founder, and even beyond her."

He continues. "There is a grand... 'game' at play. Knowledge of this Game is not something any of you need to understand, but simply put, there are barriers surrounding every galaxy in the universe. At a pre-destined time, those barrier will begin gradually weakening until they ultimately vanish. None can pass through the barriers via mundane means. However, at a certain point, the barriers will become weak enough that should a formidable entity pay a high price, they can create a 'hole' for mortals to pass through. Only mortals, though. Cosmic entities are strictly disallowed from directly interfering with these mortal-level matters."

Many of the people seated at the table look at one another in confusion. Belial scratches her head as she tries to make sense of Diablo's explanation.

"So... this... 'Game'... you speak of." Belial says slowly. "There's someone controlling it? Or everyone has agreed to it? But then who created the barriers around all the galaxies? Doesn't this seem strange to everyone else?"

"There must be an authority controlling everything in existence from the peak of the highest mountain." Neil says decisively, his eyes flashing as he pieces together his knowledge of the galactic situation with some things Hope has told him as well as some broad inferences he can make through Diablo's words. "If Diablo and Dosena are equals, but if there are also 'Cosmics' who are stronger than them, then that implies there are Cosmics at a higher level than those, and a higher level than those, and so on and so forth until..."

He glances around the table.

"...until we find whoever is the Highest of the High. The Mightiest in all Existence. The Creator."

The table collectively goes quiet as many people from all the species blink in surprise, hearing Neil explain the situation so easily. They realize that if he is right, then all of them are merely mortals playing the roles of pieces on a board controlled by unfathomably powerful gods.

"Not the Creator." Diablo says simply. "The Creator you speak of was merely a... Ruler. And there are many Rulers in this universe. Each controls one or more galaxies. But no galaxy may have more than one Ruler. These are the rules of the Game."

"Rulers..." Neil says, massaging his chin. "What I said still stands. If there are Rulers, they cannot all be equal. There must be a hierarchy among them. And one of those Rulers must possess the highest authority. They are the one controlling this grand-"

Neil suddenly pauses. He looks off to the side and furrows his brows, his eyes becoming distant as he suddenly remembers something.

"That term. That... name. I've heard it before. You said the Milky Way is protected by a barrier; the Akashic Barrier. But I have also heard of the Akashic Rules in passing recently. For two words to contain the same specific prefix, it could easily cause one's mind to wander..."

Diablo raises an eyebrow, looking at the lowly human with a 'not bad' expression. "You're quite perceptive, Neil Adams. But I would advise you not to bother making too many extrapolations based on your limited perspective. You are merely the leader of a mortal-level army. You are unqualified to let your mind dwell on the extra-galactic situation."

Neil blinks his eyes a few times, returning to the discussion at hand. "...Right. Let's get back into it, then."

Diablo nods. "Cosmics, such as myself, become more and more shackled the mightier we become. To mortals, we may seem to possess infinite power, but in truth we become too powerful for the universe to reasonably contain. The Akashic Laws thus snare us, preventing us from taking actions deemed to be... too extreme. That is where today's discussion comes into play."

Neil listens intently, saying nothing as he continues to make further inferences based upon Diablo's words. The more the Archdemon speaks, the more clues Neil pieces together. Among those at the table, none have as excellent an ability to understand high-level logic as Neil, aside from potentially Phoebe Hiro. Of course, Phoebe is more adept at thinking like an inventor and an engineer than a political strategist, but she is still by far the most overall intelligent person seated at the table.

"Humanity, demonkind, and the Volgrim need to unite if we hope to stamp out this threat and banish the invaders to the galaxy from whence they came." Diablo declares. "My people need not consume human souls to empower themselves. In fact, doing so will only harm their long-term prospects. When I was an Emperor, I was blind and ignorant, the same as all my fellow Emperors. But now that I have touched upon the horizon of the highest peaks of power, I see the failures of demonkind and angelkind alike. Soul manipulation caused us to stunt our growth, placing a ceiling on the heights we could achieve."

He pauses.

"As for what this means for you humans, you need only be assured that I will not allow my people to wantonly cause harm to yours. The era of civil war is over. The age of unity has arrived."

Neil's eyes flicker. "A bold claim for someone who demanded mere hours ago that we vacate the Core or else we would not live to see the next sunrise."

Diablo frowns.

"You dense little man. That was merely a means to fire up the emotions of my underlings. They are not here now, so I no longer require such theatrics. I still expect you to vacate the Core, but you may do so in a calm and orderly manner. However, the sooner you leave, the better."

"Why do you need the Core so badly?" Phoebe interjects.

"Why wouldn't I? The Labyrinth belongs to demonkind. The Labyrinth Core is a nexus which connects to thousands of Warpgates around the Milky Way. Controlling ten gates is surely better than only one or two. In the coming days, weeks, and months, I will be launching multiple massive offensives to wipe out the Plague's presence on numerous worlds. I cannot have Yardrat opening all those portals; he hasn't the stamina for it. Warpgates will make my assaults much faster and more convenient."

"We give up the Core in exchange for what?" Jason asks. "So far I'm hearing a lot of good deals for you and nothing for us."

Beelzebub snorts. "Isn't getting to live good enough for you, Wordsmith?"

"Now now, Beelzebub, there's no need to be so rude." Diablo gently chides. "The Wordsmith is right. I am not seeking to subjugate humanity. I am seeking a partnership. We must help one another if we aim to become close allies."

Diablo holds up his hand. A spiritual projection of the Milky Way appears above his astral palm, slowly spiraling around in a manner most mystical and fascinating to all who gaze upon it.

"There are billions of star systems in the Milky Way." Diablo begins to explain. "Of course, only a small fraction are capable of bearing life, and an even smaller fraction can be classified as paradise-class worlds, but even so, the number of life-bearing worlds exceeds one million, and the paradise worlds exceed one thousand. There are more than enough celestial orbs available for all three Apex Species to enjoy our portions."

Jason raises an eyebrow. "Apex Species? Funny. The Volgrim don't seem to think the demons belong in that category."

"And how would you know that?" Diablo suddenly asks, turning around and metaphorically stabbing the Wordsmith with his gaze. "Been doing a little spying lately, have you?"

The Wordsmith says nothing, opting instead to silently smirk.

Diablo pauses momentarily before turning away to regain his focus on the previous topic.

"What the Volgrim believe is irrelevant. My people are an Apex Species. We have merely been... hampered. The biggest issue being our cultural acceptance and perpetuation of soul manipulation. Now that I am making changes to the structure of our society, that will no longer be an issue moving forward. As for the other details, they won't matter to you. All that matters is your new role in the galactic story that is about to unfold."

Diablo expands the floating apparition of the Milky Way, causing its stars to spread out and fill the room with tens of millions of tiny dots of light. Unlike a mere projection, each of these specks of radiance possess a genuine aura of warmth, making the mortals present realize that Diablo is actually conjuring a cosmic phantasm of the Milky Way in real time!

How powerful must a Cosmic be to be able to touch upon every single star in a galaxy with his Cosmic Sense?! Not even Jason can fathom the level Diablo must have achieved!

"Here is my offer to you." Diablo finally says, getting to the point of his coming here. "Vacate the Core, but prepare to join my Emperors and Dukes in fighting on the front-lines. In a short while, our combined armies will rain down beams of magical energy, bullets, and missiles upon the Plagueborn controlling the worlds I target. We will eradicate our Enemy, plant a Demon Emperor's soul upon that system, and permanently seize control of it for the good of all Sentients. In exchange, humanity will obtain worlds of their own, worlds they can call home as you spread your reach across the cosmos."

Neil's expression turns ugly. "That's it? That's your offer? You boot us from the Core, then demand we fight alongside you? All you're doing is making us suffer losses while you turn even more Emperors into Cosmics!"

"The losses you suffer... will not be as severe as you might first imagine." Diablo says slowly, his tone softening as he begins to hint toward something secretive. "Tell me, Wordsmith. What makes a Hero?"

"Huh?" Jason asks. "I... don't know what you mean."

"Surely, you have heard of the two different types of Heroes." Diablo says lazily. "Or... perhaps old man Solomon never told you?"

Unlike Hope, Jason has never heard of the two types of Heroes. He looks at Diablo with an expression of disbelief.

"Two types? Like, mage and warrior?"

"No." Diablo says simply. "There are Trueborn Heroes, and Lowborn Heroes. Trueborn are Heroes like yourself. Only one will exist every generation. They are empowered by the Heroic Aura, and therefore grow to reach awe-inspiring heights. But as for Lowborn Heroes... well, perhaps it is not strictly accurate to even refer to them as 'Heroes'. Let us simply say the Lowborn come in a wide variety of flavors, and many are quite bland and uninteresting."

Jason leans forward, intrigued by what Diablo is saying.

"You're telling me there are Heroes who weren't empowered by the Heroic Aura?"

"Oh, yes." Diablo says smugly, glancing around at the others to see them listening with rapt attention. "Many more than you would imagine. They vastly outnumbered the Trueborn, perhaps even by a factor of ten to one. But again, it is not strictly fair to call a Lowborn a 'Hero' in the first place. In fact, I daresay the term 'Hero' is a bit of a joke."

Diablo folds his hands together loosely in front of his stomach.

"In this Cosmic's humble opinion, Heroes are better described as Spiritually Empowered Humans. Like demons, Heroes are humans who have come to wield the power of spirituality which the angels sealed away. You do know of this, don't you?"

"...I do." Jason says quietly. "But how do you?"

"Why wouldn't I?" Diablo asks while flippantly waving his hand. "Don't forget that I have been around a little while longer than you, to say the least. But really, it was the First Emperor who enlightened me. Their knowledge of certain secrets is truly frightening. They helped me to uncover Truths I'd never have guessed on my own. But I digress..."

Diablo clears his throat, then continues.

"I'll make my offer simple. If humanity fights alongside my people, I will help you research methods that can empower your species by repairing that 'flaw' the Angels placed upon your bodies. In time, you can train up new Heroes, albeit Lowborn ones, and they will help us conquer new worlds faster and faster. You cannot fathom how much more powerful even a moderate human will become when you factor in the technological edge your species holds. Faster reaction times, better eyesight, stronger muscles, a more durable body, and plenty of magical abilities to boot..."

Jason doesn't immediately jump at the opportunity, which surprises Diablo.

Instead, the Wordsmith looks across the table at his rival of sorts, Neil Adams.

"Neil...?" Jason asks slowly. "Do you have any thoughts on this... generous offer?"

Humanity's military leader snorts nasally in contempt. "We don't need your handouts, Diablo. We are already looking into ways to empower our people with new abilities. In fact, one of my best soldiers recently become a master of fairy magic! Another one became capable of turning into an orc, and still others have had other successes. We're doing just fine on our own."

"I am also... experimenting." Jason says neutrally, not going into any further detail on his tests on the Felorians. "Your offer doesn't interest us."

For a brief moment, Diablo falls completely silent. He looks at Jason, then he looks at Neil. His expression becomes inscrutable, leaving both men guessing as to his inner thoughts.

"So it's like that..." Diablo says. "I... don't think you people understand the position you're in. No doubt, you could suck up all of humanity and retreat to some hidden pocket dimension, but is that truly a way you would want to live? If you do not agree to my generous offer... don't you think the consequences you would suffer might prove quite undesirable?"

Neil sneers. "And there it is! The great Archdemon is going to threaten us after his pittances failed to leave us wanting more."

"Threaten you? Oh no, not at all." Diablo says coldly. "You still don't understand your current situation. I don't need to attack you to leave you in a terrible position. I need only not protect you. Or have you forgotten about the Plague? My worlds, the worlds controlled by demonkind, will be quite safe with me and my Cosmics guarding them. But if you decide to refuse my offer... well, who can say how long it will take before Tarus II falls, or Maiura, or those other worlds you value so highly..."

Jason's heart skips a beat.

Internally, he realizes with a faint tinge of horror that Diablo is right. If Jason refuses, then he has no recourse if the Plague were to come to any of humanity's worlds. While Jason has been trying to come up with a counter to the Plague, he hasn't been the slightest bit successful, and neither have the Volgrim. Only the demons have, which puts him at a huge disadvantage during this round of bargaining!

Naturally, he could pull humanity back to the Cube, or to Chrona, but the benefits of living on a genuine planet cannot be overstated. Anyone would rather live on a paradise-class world if they had the choice!

Maybe I should make more worlds in alternate dimensions. Jason thinks. Relying on Diablo isn't a good idea at all, nor a viable long-term strategy! Humanity would be safe if I simply constructed a new Earth with my abilities and hid it somewhere the Plague couldn't reach...

Just as that thought comes to Jason's mind, Diablo sneers.

"Want to see a magic trick, Wordsmith? I can guess what you're thinking. You're planning on taking humanity away to a secret dimension where the Plague can't reach you. But is that a truly safe bet? What if the Plague has a way to penetrate dimensional barriers and seek out the 'odor' of life? Haven't you wondered how bizarre it is that the Plague managed to infiltrate Raphael's Fake Cosmic Realm? If they can pass through one dimensional boundary, then it stands to reason they can pass through others. Perhaps concentrating so many humans in one area will only draw them toward you like a moth to the flame..."

Jason's expression morphs into a barely-veiled look of dismay. "That..."

"There's no point in lying." Diablo says. "So abandon that childish idea of yours. You need me more than I need you. I have leverage and you don't. I suggest you take the deal and enjoy the warmth of falling under my... protection. In exchange for a few lives of a few measly mortal soldiers, the rest of humanity can live underneath the protective umbrella of my Cosmics, all while empowering yourselves as you unravel the mysterious seals that dastardly Archangel Raphael placed upon you."

Diablo looks around the table.

"Mmm. Shame the old codger didn't come here in person. It's always such a treat picking at his wrinkly brain..."

Jason and Neil both look at one another, their eyes telling a story of defeat. Neither of them wants to accept this 'generous offer.' Jason immediately realizes it's not so different from a mafia extortion racket. The demons will obtain the lion's share of the benefits, while humanity will only get the crumbs.

"Well...?" Diablo asks again, this time more insistent.

"...What will it be?"

Part 542: Fiona's Discovery

Inside the time-accelerated space known as Chrona, Jason Hiro sits with a gloomy expression. He watches the proceedings in realspace with a critical eye, staring with dismay at Diablo's smug, frozen face.

The Emperor of Annihilation looks at Jason's Dronesmith with a knowing gaze, a clear understanding in his eyes that Jason has little choice but to go along with his offer.

"It's a protection racket." Jason says quietly, the interior of the Spynet Sphere completely empty except for himself. "What the hell am I supposed to do? I guess I just have to say yes."

He doesn't reply immediately. After all, every second that passes in realspace gives him two hundred and fifty seconds to think in Chrona-time. He opts to use these precious minutes to debate many different methods of countering Diablo's offer, as well as whether or not he should haggle, or simply accept as-is.

"Humanity isn't in a good place right now." Jason says, continuing to mutter to himself. "We have enemies on all sides. The Plague, the Volgrim, the Demons... our allies are few and far between. Is hiding away in another realm our only way to stay alive?"

The Wordsmith closes his eyes, leans forward, and rests his face in his hands.

"Ugh. I don't know what to do here. Ultimately, Diablo's offer is exactly what I've always wanted: A truce between humanity and demonkind. But his intentions definitely aren't pure and noble. If we do cooperate to eliminate the Plague, what price will my species have to pay?"

"At the very least, demonkind will place powerful Cosmics on many different worlds, guarding them from threats and creating veritable fortresses that will safeguard their interests for the coming millennia, if not eons. That will make expanding humanity's influence difficult, and maybe even impossible."

"But then again, perhaps forming a truce now will lead to great things in the future. Diablo might not always be the top dog forever. If I can ascend to the realm of Middle Cosmic or higher, then I can pose a threat to him. If not me, maybe the Archangels? Maybe I can give them the power to resist Diablo? But the angels aren't trustworthy, in my opinion. Maybe I should continue trying to empower humans. If we can create Cosmics of our own, that would certainly help us rise to threaten the Archdemon's stranglehold on the Milky Way."

"Ah, but then again, would he let us do as we please? If humanity did come up with a way to threaten him, I bet he'd send all the demons to eliminate us right there and then. He'd at least force me to move humanity to Chrona or the Cube, which would isolate us and contain our influence..."

Slowly, Jason opens his eyes. He sits back upright and lowers his hands to his side.

"Chrona... the Cube... humanity needs a base of operation. We need an unassailable fortress nobody can mess with. The Cube is the most obvious choice, but I don't know if the Plague can get inside. Chrona isn't bad, but it's too small for the number of people I'd want to relocate here, and it's nowhere near self-sustaining yet. Both options would cause humanity to run out of food almost immediately, then starve to death. Damn. How do I create a self-sustaining biosphere...?"

Jason thinks about the Cube's incredible internal space, with far more room than the entirety of the original Sol star system. In terms of volume, he could easily fit the equivalent land-space of a million Earths inside of it. But the problem is, that would require an unthinkable amount of time and energy to properly terraform the otherwise barren void inside the Cube into self-sustaining biospheres complete with solar energy and a day/night cycle. After all, the natural order includes plenty of biodiversity, food chains, complicated weather systems, and all sorts of other phenomena Jason can't even properly comprehend without decades of self-education.

Humanity doesn't have that much time. At best, the Cube only contains a few isolated training areas for humanity's soldiers. It's completely useless as a homeworld for them to live inside. The food present inside Chrona isn't actually grown there, but instead, Jason conjured up a thousand-years worth of goods and placed them in stasis for himself and the others to use as desired.

If the Wordsmith wants a permanent solution, he needs to explore his options.

"We can't hold Tarus II." Jason mutters. "If Diablo wants it, he can simply take it. I don't give a damn if Hope has Excalibur or any other artifacts. The Archdemon's body regenerates too quickly; he's too powerful for us to defeat. I couldn't even beat a Bottom Cosmic like Mephisto. How am I going to fight a far stronger entity like Diablo or Dosena?"

Slowly, Jason shakes his head.

"There's no other choice. I'll just have to accept his demands. At the least, Diablo is right that the Plague is the most pressing issue facing the Milky Way. We need to defeat it first. That will certainly take a long time, possibly even centuries. During that time, I can start working on contingency plans, like making the Cube more self-sustaining and finding a way to empower my people to continue struggling for survival. We will not go quietly into that good night."

After coming to this decision, Jason exhales softly. He transmits a command to the Dronesmith, allowing it to speak in his place and transfer his words to Diablo. Over the course of ten, twenty, or perhaps even thirty real-time seconds, dozens of minutes will pass in Chrona-time, giving Jason even more room to think about the issue. He deliberately orders his drone to speak slightly slower than normal, to drag out the wait and give himself even more time to think. Once he concludes this decision, he leans back in his chair and silently watches as the Dronesmith begins to open its mouth and speak.

Of course, actually waiting for it to say even a single sentence would take forever, so he doesn't bother. Instead, Jason's mind drifts, and he thinks about all the research and tests he's been doing over the past few weeks. For each hour in realspace, two hundred and fifty pass in Chrona. That equates to almost ten and a half days.

Thanks to the arrival of Rebecca, Jason's tests have proceeded quite smoothly. He's spent time working with the Felorians, teleporting them in and out of Chrona periodically to ensure they don't become too acclimated to the effects of extreme time dilation, while mainly focusing on improving their magical abilities and ability to self-improve.

At the same time, Jason has also maintained a keen interest in the Psions he brought to Chrona over a month ago. While they aren't high-level among their species, the enclave he picked actually turned out to be extremely useful, providing insights for the Felorians and teaching them a potential method to evolve their powers over time.

"Cultivation..." Jason says to himself, his eyes looking at one of the Spynet Sphere's many monitors at random. "The power to self-improve by slowly comprehending the fundamental principles of the universe, then bending their rules to improve one's self. How such a feat works, I simply can't understand."

Unfortunately for Jason, he doesn't seem to be capable of perceiving the basics of cultivation for his own use. His powers innately appeared within his body as a result of the Heroic Aura. He has never had to work to improve them, and he's never felt sure if he even could, assuming he wanted to.

His powers simply... 'are.' They feel unchanging and immutable, like an ocean that has long existed and only needs to be explored to fully plumb its depths.

But cultivation is completely different. According to the Psions, one can start out as a weak mortal yet slowly rise to the status of a god so long as they focus their mind on comprehending the deeper Truths of the universe.

Given the incompatibilities of Jason's magic compared to how the Psions and Felorians function, he simply cannot understand how they learn, and thus must step back and allow them to function on their own, forming comprehensions as they please while merely hoping for the best.

But as that thought comes and goes, another thoughts takes its place.

"What makes the Angels, Titans, and Demons so different?"

Jason raises an eyebrow as this thought occurs to him.

"Especially the demons. Figures like Orias are so different from the rest that it's as if they operate on entirely different frameworks of power. How does he turn different-colored gems into a diverse array of magical powers? Why is Belial able to change the shape of her body at will, yet no other demons or other entities possess such a convenient power? What made Agares able to transform his body into a lizard? Why did this ability later transfer to other individuals like Diablo and Belial, only to have such differing effects? Diablo's transformation turns him into a Cosmic powerhouse, but Belial's is decidedly far weaker. There's just no rhyme or reason to any of it..."

As this thought comes to Jason, he frowns.

The Wordsmith sits up straight, his eyebrows curling together.

"No. That's not right. There's always an underlying theory. The conservation of energy still applies. Every action has an equal and opposite reaction. There must be an explanation as to how all of these massively different abilities exist. The question is, am I smart enough to create a framework for explaining it all...?"

His frown deepens.

"Phoebe is. Marie probably is. Unarin might be, as well. I probably shouldn't be smart enough, but I have one advantage none of them do. I already possess magical power. Surely I have at least a small edge in being able to test out the underlying principles directly, rather than relying purely on observation and conjecture."

He rises from his chair, then begins to pace around the room with his head lowered, falling deep into thought.

"My Wordsmithing is innate. It relies on my soul's strength to empower most effects directly, but there's also a strong mental component. That implies the brain and soul are connected in some way. My mana reserves are less important for my Wordsmithing to function than my imagination."

"But then you take someone like Orias... his powers are, shall we say, hard-coded. He cannot use magic at all unless he channels it through an external object, like a gem. It's almost as if he needs 'equipment' to function. He's not like other demons who can simply wave their hands and conjure powers out of thin air."

"But speaking of other demons, you also have people like Beelzebub, whose powers are clearly focused on a single element. He can only wield fire magic and nothing else. But it's strange how that manifests in ways one wouldn't expect, such as through his extreme regeneration. His powers are even more 'hard-coded' than Orias's, there don't appear to be any ways for him to branch out through his imagination. He can find new ways of using his existing powers, but he can't invent new ones."

Jason pauses. He looks up at the ceiling for a moment, the lowers his head once more.

"Cultivators use comprehensions of the universe's Truths and its fundamental laws to bend reality to their whims. Individuals such as Confessor Vulpanix can create momentary paradoxes, conjuring multiple versions of themselves by bending space and time. But she doesn't have full control of time... she can't reverse it to go back and stop the Plague before it appeared 100,000 years ago. There are hard limits on what she can achieve."

"So, what does all this mean?" Jason asks himself. "Comprehension is important for some metaphysical powers. Willpower can also be crucial. Faith energy might play a role. There's also mental capacity, imagination, the strength of one's soul, one's internal mana capacity, one's ability to rely on external objects..."

Jason pauses before one of the monitors, a screen that shows the current location and activities of Founder Unarin at all times. He gazes at it for a moment, watching as Unarin stands nearly-frozen while speaking to his brother Randis about some matter happening inside the Volgrim Empire's borders.

"Perhaps I need to define some terminology and set some parameters for the framework." Jason once again says to himself. "In a video game, there are clear differences between Sorcerers, Necromancers, and Artificers. The same seems to be true of real-life metaphysics. I need to comprehend the underlying theory to figure out... to figure out..."

He trails off, not certain of where his brain is even going.

"...why am I thinking about all of this, anyway? Just to better understand metaphysics as a whole?"

"No. That's not a good enough reason. There are so many matters that require my attention, I can't be wasting my time on useless fluff. I need a better reason."

"Hmm..."

He pauses again, his eyes drifting to the current image and relative position of the Archdemon's physical body, still located in the voidspace of Sharmur.

"Yeah. That's why." Jason mutters. "My Wordsmithing is extremely versatile, but it has too many possibilities, so I get brain overload trying to decide what to do with it. Perhaps by understanding how all metaphysical phenomena function, I can better define the parameters of my own magic. Why was I unable to use 'Kill' on Amelia six years ago? Was my soul weaker than hers? Was I not truly prepared to kill her, so it was a failure of my Will? Was my imagination lacking? Did she have a defense secretly prepared that I failed to anticipate?"

"What about when Beelzebub detonated on Tarus II? Why couldn't I fully contain his explosion? Why did he suddenly produce Gressil's Chaos Energy? Why was that energy specifically able to counter me? Could I have prepared a better counter if I knew about Chaos Energy beforehand? Could I stop Beelzebub if he detonated in the future? What about Gressil himself, can I find a way to counter his magic nullification powers?"

"Soul strength. Imagination. Willpower. Mana capacity. Artificing. Cosmic energy. The pieces are all there... but I'm missing something to unify the theory..."

Jason hems and haws for a while longer, but always, the elusive feeling in the back of his mind remains out of grasp. He struggles to fit the last piece of the puzzle together, but he isn't even sure if it's merely a single piece, or multiple pieces that he's overlooked. This failure frustrates him, making him feel as if he is truly too stupid to solve the mystery.

Eventually, the door to the Spynet Sphere opens, dragging Jason back to reality. He turns to see Fiona running inside, a look of excitement on her face.

"Jason... I did it!" Fiona exclaims, stars dancing in her eyes. "I succeeded! I... I can't believe it!"

"Huh?" Jason asks. "You did what? I'm lost, honey."

"You don't remember?" Fiona asks, running over to him while hugging her hands against her chest. "The brain scans! I've been scanning the brains of humans, the Psions you brought here, and lots of demons. I recently asked Phoebe to scan the brains of some humans on Tarus II and send them to me, and I think I found the thing I've been looking for!"

She pauses, waiting for Jason to state the thing she's clearly most excited about, but with Jason's thoughts still in a bit of a fog, he remains confused.

"So, you found...?"

"The human FLAW!" Fiona exclaims, stamping her foot on the ground. "I can't believe you forgot. JASON, it's the FLAW! The thing Raphael had his sister Uzziel put inside of all the humans to limit our future potential. I finally found it, hiding inside the human brain!"

"Oh!" Jason exclaims, finally understanding her excitement. "You really found it?! I thought that would be impossible."

"I thought it was, too." Fiona says, regaining her earlier excitement as she sees the light-bulbs switch on in Jason's head. "But the scans of humans from Tarus II finally gave me what I needed. Do you remember the Power Glove and how it's been having remarkable effects on our troops?"

Jason nods. "That one trooper, Samuel Baker, he seems to have permanently turned into a male Fairy. It's given him quite a powerful arsenal of magical abilities. And then there's Private Ashley, she has a high compatibility with the Orc transformation..."

"That's exactly it." Fiona says, her expression turning serious. "You won't believe what I found, Jason. The Power Gloves... I'm not sure how it works, but it seems some of the people using the gloves have fixed their Human Flaw. When I checked the brain scans of over a hundred humans, Samuel and Ashley both has a slightly different cerebral structure compared to other humans. Comparing their brains with the brains or ordinary troopers who haven't used the Power Glove gave me a lot of useful data points. I think the anomaly I detected was the Human Flaw, the one preventing humans from using magic!"

Jason blinks twice. "What about the Felorians?"

"They ALSO don't have the Flaw!" Fiona exclaims. "I can't be a hundred percent sure, but if you would check with your Wordsmithing I think we can obtain conclusive proof!"

Jason squeezes Fiona's shoulder and smiles. "Then let's do exactly that."

He and her quickly leave and head over to her warehouse, where the replicas of duplicated exotics remain sitting on shelves, a product of Jason's recent experimentation with Rebecca's assistance.

The Cybernite woman stands in place, unmoving, as her cybernetic brain rapidly causes a nearby computer screen to scroll through hundreds of images per second. She analyzes Fiona's latest data while waiting for Jason to arrive. As he does, she turns to look at him, her brain still actively scanning the documents.

"I've confirmed Fiona's hypothesis." Rebecca says. "There is a 99.97777% repeating chance that the cerebral physiology she has observed are what is causing Humanity's Flaw. I only need your confirmation to be 100% certain."

Jason nods as he walks over. "That's what I'm here for. I'm curious, though. Marie Becker didn't know about Humanity's Flaw?"

"If she did, she didn't tell me." Rebecca answers. "Finding the Flaw is actually quite tricky. We never had any humans to scan who didn't possess the Flaw. There were Felorians, of course, but if we only compared baseline humans to Felorians, that would only give us two data points. The physiological difference Fiona has observed is the same across baseline humans, Felorians, and most crucially, certain users of the Power Glove. The Respected also seem to lack the Human Flaw as well."

To better explain her point, Rebecca summons more than a dozen images of different cerebral scans, causing phantom brains to levitate in the air via holographic three-dimensional projections.

She points at three of them. "These scans are from various baseline humans."

She points at two more. "These are from two Felorians, Brunhilda and Sariah."

Then she points at three more. "Samuel Baker, Ashley McCarthy, and a randomly selected soldier possessing low compatibility with all known Power Glove transformations."

Rebecca looks at Jason with a serious expression. "All of these individuals possess differing cerebral structures. However, there is a single piece of brain matter weighing less than five milligrams positioned between the spinal cord and the brain stem itself that we have identified as the likely 'Human Flaw.' This microscopic area does not exist in the brains of the Felorians, Samuel Baker, or Ashley McCarthy. However, it does exist across all observed baseline humans and various Power Glove-using soldiers. I suspect that if we scan your brain, you will also lack this piece of cerebral tissue, and therefore confirm the hypothesis."

Jason nods. "Scan away, then."

Without delay, Rebecca lifts up a small handheld device a few inches from Jason's face. It makes a single beeping sound, then she pulls it away and downloads its data into her computational cortex.

Moments later, she smiles at Jason.

"As expected."

"So we've identified the Human Flaw." Jason says slowly. "This is big. We need to run tests immediately. If I erase that piece of brain matter from various humans, that should clear up the blockage and grant them immediate powers. We could see new Heroes arising all at once!"

"I can neither confirm nor deny this hypothesis." Rebecca replies. "However, I would like to draw your attention to a few other scans we made. There are several Felorians I've scanned who don't haven't demonstrated any magical affinity at all, despite also lacking the Human Flaw. The same is true of several Power Glove users in the human army. While some seem to have lost their Flaw, they also have not greatly increased their affinities to various transformations. The data is... scattered at best."

"Then we'll make more data." Jason says decisively. "I'm still going to accept Diablo's demands. But if this is all true, we may have just obtained a new chip we can use in the upcoming war. If we can secretly grow our own Heroes at home, we may yet have a way to elevate ourselves to new heights."

"Maybe we can even reach the level of the Archdemon..." Fiona says thoughtfully.

"I sure hope so." Jason concludes. "Let's get started."

Part 543: Jason's Plan

Emperor Diablo continues to levitate in the air above the table. He waits for a few moments after asking Jason Hiro what his response will be.

It does not escape Diablo's notice that the 'thing' sitting in Jason's seat is not actually Jason himself. Instead, it is an automated drone with a cybernetic interior and flesh covering its surface. However, thanks to the Wordsmith's magic, the Dronesmith appears completely alive to those possessing only mundane senses. Even Neil Adams can't tell anything is off about Jason, let alone the other humans. Perhaps only his wife Phoebe knows, as well as Diablo and a few of the more observant demons such as Beelzebub and Belial.

But even though Diablo immediately sees through the Wordsmith's body, he doesn't possess infinite knowledge regarding the Wordsmith. He doesn't know Jason is currently holed up inside a time-accelerated domain where every minute in the physical universe translates to two hundred and fifty inside Chrona. And so, he also doesn't realize in the few seconds Jason pauses before responding, nearly a thousand have passed inside Chrona, giving Jason plenty of time to prepare his response.

The Dronesmith blinks its eyes and smiles politely at Diablo, its expression neither servile nor arrogant. 'Jason' maintains the perfect level of status in his body language to place himself as an equal to Diablo without lowering or raising himself to a different level of importance. This is important for both of their sakes, as it ensures neither one of them will go too far in their negotiations.

"You drive a hard bargain." Jason says. "But... in the interests of future cooperation, I suppose I have no choice but to accept on humanity's behalf. While I'm sure many people seated here won't be too happy about you taking back the Labyrinth and using our armed forces to benefit demonkind, the fact of the matter is that the Plague is an existential threat to the Milky Way. As well, you and I both know the Plague only represents the beginning of a future extra-galactic war."

"Yes, yes, very true, Wordsmith." Diablo says with a smile. "A wise man submits to circumstance."

"Indeed, but I'm not done speaking." Jason retorts. "There are things I know that you do not. There are things you know that I do not. We can claim to have superior intelligence over one another all day, but I believe a more... equitable distribution of future-obtained assets would benefit us both."

Diablo's smile faintly turns to a frown. "Your meaning?"

"We help you secure worlds only for you to instate Middle Cosmics as their permanent guardians, yet humanity receives no benefits outside some claim you can help us fix our Flaw. While this offer isn't bad, I think you can do better."

Jason leans back for a few seconds, as if taking time to think, all the while buying himself tens of minutes in Chrona.

"Hmm. It won't do for you to simply give worlds we re-conquer to humanity, since we'll still be vulnerable if the Plague returns. And obviously if we're 'protected' by your Cosmics, that will put us in a... difficult position."

Jason abruptly smiles, causing Diablo's frown to deepen further. "The solution seems obvious. I want some of the worlds we help you take back to be assigned to our allied demon brothers and sisters. We will uplift friendly demons to the rank of Cosmic in the same way you have, thus providing strongholds for humanity to live upon."

"What?" Diablo asks, his expression souring.

"How is that beneficial to us at all?" Neil asks, his own expression just as sour as Diablo's. "Either way, we'd still be putting the lives of good men and women in the hands of demons!"

"We would." Jason acknowledges. "And I have no problem with that. In the end, Neil, I am still humanity's leader, and I still want to try and make whole the gap between our species and the demons. Not all demons hate humans, and plenty of them I consider my good friends, such as Samantha here, or Kiari, among others."

Jason gestures to his left, where the two female Emperors are sitting together beside Beelzebub. It doesn't escape anyone's notice that Jason doesn't include Beelzebub in his 'friends', but that much is certainly to be expected.

"I would leave up the choice of who among our demon compatriots wants to become locked a single world for the rest of eternity, but I'm sure more than a few would be willing to accept such a burden and its associated responsibilities." Jason continues.

"Samantha's healing abilities are too vital to too many humans, monsters, and demons for me to want to tether her to a single world, but perhaps her abilities would become so powerful that she could heal someone across the entire galaxy. Kiari is not much of a frontline combatant, so perhaps she would be better served creating powerful bug-minions as a Cosmic. If not them, we can raise other Emperors, such as from the Hell of Lust, or what remains of the Hell of Isolation."

"A clever plan." Diablo growls, visibly annoyed Jason thought up this idea. But his annoyance fades after a moment. "I suppose this is an acceptable compromise. Traitors these demons might be to their people and disloyal to their highest rulers, but still demons nonetheless."

"Then that's settled." Jason says. "I want nothing more than to eradicate the Plague and bring an end to it as much as you. As for what comes afterward... we'll just have to see, won't we?"

"Yes. We will have to see." Diablo says, his smile faintly returning.

For a brief moment, neither of the men says anything, but their thoughts swirl quickly as they contemplate the sudden change of plans.

Not bad. The kid moved quickly to solidify his position. Diablo thinks. But demons tethered to worlds are no threat to me. Better yet, they become immobile, unable to assist their comrades meaningfully. Jason overplayed his hand here.

Jason also keeps his thoughts to himself. Diablo probably thinks me attaching my strongest demon allies to worlds will limit their movements. But who says those tethers cannot be unmade, or maybe even reforged later? Perhaps I can find a way to allow my Cosmic allies to move freely within the Milky Way, if only under limited circumstances.

Jason's Dronesmith rises from his chair. Neil does too, though the human commander cannot even contain the roiling fury under the surface. Twice, he glowers at Jason hatefully, looking away to try and recompose himself, but failing both times. The betrayal he feels from Jason not only accepting Diablo's offer without consulting his military commander, but even deciding to haphazardly put degenerate demons in charge of future worlds sickens Neil to his core.

That blasted idiot Wordsmith! Neil thinks. He's giving Diablo everything he wanted. Now my men will have to go out and bravely die on the frontlines only to hand the fruits of their labor to demons! Good demons, bad demons, is there even a distinction?! That idealistic fool of a Wordsmith has screwed his people over yet again, but he's too stupid to see it!

While all three leaders have their own thoughts, none of them voice those thoughts out loud. Diablo merely folds his hands behind his back and glances around the table at the various humans, monster, and demons sitting there.

"So it's settled then. Very well, with that out of the way, I'll be off. I would like your people to vacate the Core as quickly as possible. Out of consideration for our newfound friendship, I will allow you to keep some essential personnel stationed inside the Labyrinth as you please. But the lion's share of the workspace must go to my people."

Neil sneers at Diablo. "Can your demons even handle the opening and closing of portals? The technology is quite difficult to comprehend, especially for your kind."

Diablo looks at Neil with a faint expression of pity, as if he were a harmless mutt barking to establish his dominance yet utterly failing due to standing before a pack of wolves. "You don't need to worry about that. I have plenty of capable allies who are up for the task."

Without another word, Diablo waves his hand, and his Astral Form dissipates into motes of light. It vanishes after a few seconds, leaving the hall silent.

Neil only manages to restrain himself for five seconds before finally snapping at the Wordsmith. "Oh, what a fine job you've done today, Jason. You gave Diablo everything he wanted, everything he needed!"

"We made plenty of gains ourselves." Jason says slowly. "I know it might not seem like much, but the situation is under control. Everyone, I expect you to start packing up and exiting the Core post-haste. Let's get out within the next 24 hours."

"So that's it, then?" Neil asks. "We just tuck our tails and scamper away? We're not even going to try to fight?!"

Surprisingly, it's Beelzebub who answers Neil first. "That would be a fool's endeavor. You truly cannot comprehend how useless mundane weapons of war are against a Cosmic entity who possesses unmatched regeneration and the power to shatter planets with his fists. Even if Diablo made no further moves, he has a massive army of Emperors at his disposal who can project power you don't stand a chance against. What are you going to do, slap him? Piss him off? Surely you're smarter than this."

"Sure, maybe we don't literally fight him, but to simply bow down and kiss his feet?!" Neil snaps. "This is outrageous!"

Neil throws his hands up in a wild gesture of rage, then turns and storms out of the room. General Magnus Chadwick steadily follows after him, as does Hans Wagner and the rest of his entourage

Not long after, Jason exhales softly, then looks around at the remaining humans, monsters, and demons.

"Well. That could have gone worse."

"Could have gone better, too." Belial says blandly. "I don't understand, Jason. Neil makes at least a bit of a point. We don't have to fight back against Diablo, but to simply cower to his demands... it leaves a bad taste in my mouth."

"He's such a big bully." Kiari complains, crossing her arms. "But uh... what's this about turning Emperors into Cosmics? Were you serious about what you said, Jason?"

"I am serious." Jason answers. "But it doesn't have to be you, Kiari. We have the Belial Booster. We can raise our own Emperors, given time. We'll have plenty of candidates to choose from."

"I'm surprised Diablo didn't include the Belial Booster, or even a copy of it, in his demands." Phoebe says. "You'd think with all the Emperors he has at his disposal, and soon all the Cosmics too, he'd love an easy way to convert demonic power and soul energy into fresh new Emperors..."

"Ah. That's the thing." Jason replies. "Diablo has a truly incredible way of forming Emperors now."

He spends a few minutes telling everyone about the exobeast essence beads created by Glinch and how they can empower ordinary demons to the rank of Duke and Emperor with shocking ease. This causes many of the demons at the table to look at each other strangely.

"Is that... truly a viable way to become an Emperor? There must be a tradeoff." Belial says.

"There's no way some exobeast essence could have such an incredible effect and not have downsides." Beelzebub answers. "Based on what Jason said, it seems these pills hurt a demon's foundation in some way. That's why Glinch considers them 'exobeast slop.' Beyond that, I can't guess what the problems would be."

"That's my assumption too." Belial mutters. "In any case, it's neither here nor there. If Diablo doesn't need us to empower Emperors, then we've lost our leverage. We won't be able to sway the Hells into any mutual benefits if they can get roughly the same thing from Diablo. Most demons would rather serve their own kind than a human, even if the benefits are slightly less than what they received before."

"The Hell of Lust is still on our side." Belial says. "But now that Emperor Melody has become a Cosmic, I don't know how the remaining members of the Hell of Isolation will react."

"Can you go and check on them for me?" Jason asks.

"Yeah. I can do that." Belial answers with a hopeful smile. It fades after a moment. "Just don't be surprised if... I mean, they are friendly to humanity, but..."

"It's fine." Jason says, reaching over to squeeze her shoulder. "Don't try to pressure them or anything. We'll make do even if only the Hell of Lust stays on our side. Even if they don't, as a matter of fact."

Belial looks at him questioningly, but Jason doesn't say anything further. She starts to stand up, but then Jason glances at his wife.

"Actually, Samantha, Phoebe, before you both depart, I need to talk to you in private. Let's just go over there for a minute. This won't take long."

He points to a corner of the room, and the two women slowly nod, uncertain what he has to say. Under the curious glances of Beelzebub, Kiari, and several others, Jason and Phoebe join Belial as they walk over to the corner, then Jason utters a few Words of Power, enveloping themselves in a privacy field that makes them all but disappear from reality.

Beelzebub frowns. What is Jason up to?

Inside the field, Jason looks around for a moment, his smile from before disappearing.

"Alright, I checked and we're alone. As best as I can tell, no Psions snooping on us, barring some undetectable micro-nano-bio-bots or other bullshit."

Having learned his lesson from Rebecca's training, Jason doesn't take lightly the threat of Creator Demila or some other Psion snooping on him even when he enters one of his Wordsmithed privacy bubbles.

He stands across from Phoebe and Belial, then sighs.

"It has come to my attention that Diablo may be... plotting something dangerous. He has a number of demons working under him now with entirely novel powers none of us have ever encountered. I need the two of you to work together and do something for me over the next week or so. Samantha, this job will mostly fall on you, but Phoebe, I want you to support her logistically, sending out notifications to everyone you can."

The two women look at each other in confusion, then nod at Jason, watching with wide eyes as he holds out his palm, and a white crystal magically materializes in his grasp.

"This is a brain scanning crystal." Jason explains. "Samantha, Phoebe is going to summon every human soldier and civilian to your hospital over the next week or so. No, actually, make that every human, then every monster and demon, just to keep suspicions down. I will provide you with fifty of these crystals. I want you and some trusted subordinates to scan the brains of everyone who comes to the hospital, and the crystals will turn red or green. Mark down anyone who turns red, then when you're done and you've scanned all our allies, give Phoebe the list of whoever failed the check. I'll handle the rest from there."

"This sounds pretty serious." Belial says. "What are we... scanning for?"

"I don't want to say exactly." Jason answers. "It's just a hunch. I believe there might be a demon capable of synthesizing a dangerous cerebral contagion which could inflict serious damage upon humans. If I'm wrong, then this is just a precaution, but if I'm right, I'll be able to find the common link and snuff out the problem before it even flares up."

"You think he'd go that far?" Belial asks, only to pause and shake her head. "No, what am I saying? The Diablo I saw today was far, far different from the one I've known since the Ancient Era. It's obvious he'd stoop to this level of evil."

"Managing all these people is going to be a logistical burden." Phoebe says. "Even for me. We're talking millions of people and only fifty crystals. I doubt we could do this in two months, let alone a week..."

"It won't take that long." Jason says. "Here, I'll show you how it works."

He lifts up the crystal, then walks over to his wife. He injects his mana into the crystal after holding it up to her head, then a second later it glows faintly red.

Belial's expression darkens. "Phoebe... she's been contaminated?"

"Possibly." Jason says. "But I already guessed as much. You don't need to worry about that. As you can see, the scanning process doesn't even take five seconds. You can have people walk into an office and walk out after ten seconds later. A revolving door will get them out of your hair lickety-split. Once you guys get me that list, I can take care of the rest. I'll make sure anyone afflicted has their health evaluated without them even knowing. Remember, we don't want to cause a panic. Just tell your staff that this is a routine inspection using Phoebe's new crystal scanning technology."

Belial looks at Phoebe with deep concern. Then she nods at Jason.

"I'll take care of this. Just get me those crystals and I'll start scanning people night and day until the work is done. We demons can go without sleep for a long, long time if needed."

"No need to over-exert yourself." Jason says. "If you have more capable personnel, I can provide you with more crystals. This task should be done swiftly but don't fall apart for my sake..."

"I'll be fine." Belial says, taking the crystal from Jason.

She smiles at Jason and Phoebe, then gives both of the humans a hug before Jason teleports her directly to Tarus II afterward.

Once Belial disappears, Phoebe looks at Jason seriously. "What am I infected with?"

Jason's smile disappears. "Don't be mad, honey. I lied to Samantha just now."

"Huh? You did?!" Phoebe asks, slightly aghast. "You don't trust her? After all we've been through?!"

"I absolutely do. But this situation is different." Jason explains. "I don't want this information getting out to anyone in realspace. Only you and I can know. At least for now."

He pauses.

"You remember what Diablo said before? About fixing Humanity's Flaw? We don't need him for that. I've already found the way to fix it myself."

Phoebe's heart skips a beat. Her eyes widen. "You did? Since when?"

"The word 'when' is a little relative for both of us." Jason says. "It was a few days ago... my time. It was less than an hour ago... your time. Fiona and Rebecca have been working hard to scan and evaluate a bunch of human, demon, and Volgrim brains. We found a microscopic piece of brain matter we've identified as the so-called 'Human Flaw.' The Crystals don't detect a virus, they detect that Flaw."

He shrugs. "Actually they don't just detect it, they also immediately destroy it. I chose to have the crystals glow red for anyone who already had their Flaw fixed via the Power Gloves. Yeah that's a whole thing. Turns out the gloves can sometimes fix the Flaw in certain people at random, but the results are inconclusive."

"So why all the hush-hush secrecy?" Phoebe asks, her expression still one of annoyance. "Why lie to Sammy of all people? She's our closest friend, Jason. We can absolutely trust her."

"Yes we can. But every individual who knows is one more link that could reveal this information to the Volgrim Empire. Don't forget we have spies in our ranks. I'm still trying to root out the Changelings. I don't want to take any chances..."

Jason gently pokes his wife's collarbone. "You know and I know. That's enough. I don't want to get anyone's hopes up, anyway. I have no idea what removing Humanity's Flaw will do. It might not accomplish anything. People might gain the power to see through walls or something, or people might randomly uplift themselves to the rank of Cosmic. I refuse to believe Raphael went to the trouble of limiting humanity's potential if we weren't going to amount to much anyway. He must have seen something that made him scared."

"Or perhaps the old coot learned his lesson from the demons." Phoebe says with a sour expression. "Anyway. I'll tolerate this one time, Jason. But don't ever put me in a position where I have to lie to my best friend again. That's really screwed up of you."

Jason smiles weakly, trying not to look guilty. He touches Phoebe's stomach, smiling as he feels her noticeably larger belly.

"The baby's not far away." Jason mutters. "A few months at most. That's dozens of years in Chrona-time. Hopefully I'll have had enough time to solve all the problems facing humanity by then. If humanity can grow strong enough, we won't need to fear the demons, the Volgrim, or even the Plague. But it currently hinges on just what will happen if our people have their limiter removed. I hope it all works out well."

Phoebe smiles. "I do too, Jason."

The two of them lean forward and start to kiss, but Phoebe pulls back all of a sudden and frowns.

"Wait. Jason... is that you? Something's a little... off about you."

Jason flinches. "I, ah..."

His wife stares into his eyes for a moment, and her expression droops.

"What the- this is the Dronesmith! Were you seriously about to kiss me with your robo-clone? I thought you actually came down here for once!"

"I... can feel the sensations the Dronesmith feels if I want." Jason says, though his excuse feels a tad lame.

"Why don't you get your hiney back to realspace instead, then?" Phoebe asks. "Kiss me in person, you dummy."

Phoebe lightly teases Jason, but when he doesn't laugh, her smile fades.

"Jason?"

"I can't." The Wordsmith says, averting his eyes. "I'm... I can't leave Chrona, Phoebe. I'm trapped here. At least for now."

"What? Trapped??" Phoebe asks, feeling even more startled than she was earlier. "What do you mean? What aren't you telling me this time?"

"I didn't want to worry you." Jason replies. "It's just... well, the effects of time-dilation can be... severe. Traveling from a higher time dilation to a lower one can cause severe problems. Blinker... she returned from realspace and nearly died. It took us a lot of work to stabilize her condition and get her back on her feet. I'm currently looking into mitigation strategies for myself and the rest."

Jason hesitantly explains his current situation to Phoebe, and a few minutes later, she falls silent.

"250 times the speed of realspace." Phoebe mutters. "Of course it can't be that convenient. There would have to be side effects. It's only three months till the baby is due, but that's 750 months in Chrona time. Jason, that's well over half a century."

"It is a lot of time. Yeah." Jason acknowledges. "I want to hold you. To hug you. To kiss you... but I can't leave here until I solve the time dilation problem. And I definitely can't bring you or any humans here either. I'll be trapping my species inside Chrona's dimension, like I've already done for Kar, Blinker, and the others."

Jason hangs his shoulders heavily.

"What's done is done. In the meantime, you just need to focus on helping me with the problems in realspace. I will make sure to devote plenty of time to making things as quick and easy for you as possible."

"What about my big debate with Neil?" Phoebe asks.

Jason blinks. "Your what?"

"The debate in a week." Phoebe says, frowning. "You know. To debate the future of humanity's path forward. Don't tell me you forgot!"

"Oh, right, a week. Next week." Jason says, scratching his head. "I... okay, yeah, I forgot. It's been a long time for me. It's easy to forget about these minor matters."

"M-minor matters???" Phoebe exclaims. "Jason if we screw up, Neil could sway half the population to follow his rule! He and Hope could brainwash them and leave us with far fewer people."

"Might be better that way..." Jason says slowly. "More redundancy. Having the entire population of humanity located on one planet is a disaster waiting to happen. Spreading ourselves out across a few planets is assuredly much better in the long run."

He shrugs.

"Just do your best, honey. If you fail to sway the hearts of the people... it's fine. We'll manage. Neil's anti-demon stance is making more sense now that Diablo has become such a big threat. Maybe he has a good idea, for once..."

Phoebe closes her eyes and massages the bridge of her nose. "Okay. I'll do that. Thanks, I guess."

Jason gives her a hug, but now that she knows she's only embracing a robot, Phoebe's response is decidedly more lukewarm. The Dronesmith smiles awkwardly, then disperses the privacy field and vanishes, teleporting back to Chrona.

Phoebe sighs as she turns back to the table full of expectant gazes, who now see only her returning without Jason and Belial.

My husband can be such a handful. Phoebe thinks.

Part 544: Indomitable

Before Diablo's astral appearance inside the Core and his meeting with humanity's leaders, a massive war was expected to unfold. Countless humans as well as their allied monster and demon comrades mentally went to red alert, expecting a genocide to occur. However, over the next 24 hours, that didn't end up happening. Instead, Jason Hiro bowed his head to the Archdemon and stepped aside, evacuating the Core except for some key personnel. The demons returned to take control of their domain, with ten of Diablo's new Emperors leading the advance.

This loss of a central hub proves to be a crippling blow to humanity's moral center. Countless people figuratively turn their eyes toward the Wordsmith with looks of scorn and disgust. Whether they can see him or not, many of them end up with a mental image of him shivering in fear before the Archdemon, then quickly bowing his head and retreating like a beaten dog.

It doesn't help that Neil Adams is all too pleased to fan the flames and spread rumors through military channels that the demons must have found some severe leverage to hold over the Wordsmith's head. Public sentiment quickly sours, and countless people begin to rethink their opinion of the Wordsmith, assuming they hadn't already been doing so over the past six years.

Between Beelzebub's detonation and subsequent 'forgiveness', or the massive number of lives lost during Stormbringer, or the way Jason blithely allowed demons to integrate into human society, many people begin to think deeply about whether or not they actually want the First Wordsmith as their leader.

"I just don't get it, daddy." Lily Brown complains to her father. "How can the Wordsmith be such a sissy? He didn't even put up a fight!"

Benjamin Brown makes a few sandwiches inside his kitchen while his daughter sits at the table and waits for her food. He glances at Lily, then shrugs nonchalantly before continuing to place some meat, cheese, and vegetables native to Tarus II on the bread.

"I wasn't invited to the discussion, so I don't know what was said and what wasn't." Benjamin says, his tone mild. "But I doubt the rumors going around are entirely true. The Wordsmith's power is vast. I doubt he's simply given up and pledged obeisance to the Archdemon. Even if he has... I'm not entirely opposed."

As a collaborator who worked with the demons for 100,000 years following the end of the Energy Wars, Benjamin Brown has long lost his feelings of distrust and hatred toward the demons. He instead views them as longtime friends and companions, so he doesn't mind if Diablo takes control and rules over humanity once more.

After all, Diablo did that in the past, and everything went well until the Wordsmith showed up. Surely, returning to his former role in an even more powerful manner could only lead to a better future than before, right?

But Lily appears less convinced. "That Wordsmith keeps screwing up again and again. I still haven't forgiven him for killing Ose! She may have been a little heavy-handed towards humanity sometimes, but she was a good person at heart! She didn't deserve to die!"

Benjamin snorts. "Right. Ose, a good person. You keep telling yourself that, sweetie. Here, eat your food before you head off to work."

He plops down a plate with three sandwiches on it, and his daughter quickly snaps them up and scarfs them down.

"Right! At least working with everyone here has been pretty fulfilling. Oh, and daddy, have you visited the hospital yet?"

"The hospital?" Benjamin asks, blinking twice. "Why would I need to go there?"

"Because of the mandatory crystal-scanning session." Lily explains between bites. "I'm going there before work today. It doesn't take long. You just pop in and they do a five-second scan of your body with these crystals Miss Hiro made. Apparently it clears up your chakra pathways or something."

"Oh. That hospital thing." Benjamin says with a roll of his eyes. "It's not for clearing your chakra, it's to scan for irregularities in your body's spiritual foundation. Word's been handed down from the military that the recent shift in the Labyrinth's mana may have caused some imbalances in the mana on Tarus II. The Wordsmith's wife is scanning everyone just to be sure."

"Right! It's a mana/chakra thing." Lily chirps. "Just like I said! Anyway, I'm gonna drop by before work so I can say hi to Beli. I've been meaning to catch up with her but I just haven't had the time."

"Mmm. You have fun with that… succubus." Benjamin says, barely containing a frown. "Ugh. You're just like your mother."

* * *

Inside Tarus II's hospital, Belial stands in a small room with a human soldier an arm's length away. She holds up the clear crystal Jason gave to her, and it glows red for a moment.

"Hmm…" Belial says, faintly frowning. She makes a note on the paper, then motions for the woman to leave. After she departs, Belial calls out, "Jacob Reyson!"

A man walks in, and Belial scans him with the crystal. It turns green, and she nods before waving him out.

"Marcus Wheatley!"

"Delphina Zero-Eight!"

"Erin Maegar!"

One by one, she calls out the names on her list, causing people to come in, stand for a few seconds as she scans them, then leave. The process is mind-numbingly simple and takes no time at all. Having been at this for over twenty hours, she doesn't feel particularly fatigued, but she does become bored out of her mind, ultimately repeating the process purely on autopilot while her thoughts wander.

"Jarod Ryner!"

"Lucas Zero-Six!"

Some of the people have last names using only numbers. This turns out to be a requirement passed down by the military, since plenty of humans originally came from small tribes on worlds where last names simply weren't necessary. For these people, they are assigned a number for their last name until they marry someone else with a last name or decide to come up with one of their own.

"Henry Cliff!"

When she calls out this name, Belial's brain momentarily reactivates. She blinks and looks up as the person enters the room.

So it's him. She thinks.

She pauses for half a second, as if debating whether or not to scan the fidgeting young man before her.

What if he is infected? Maybe I just shouldn't say anything. Then he can die like a bastard deserves.

Belial's pupils flicker indecisively, but only for a moment. She ultimately decides to swipe the crystal over his body, giving him a scan like all the others.

It lights up green, and he simply nods at her before exiting the room.

Seems he wasn't infected after all. Belial thinks. Bummer.

"Jenny Mathers!"

* * *

Henry, formerly a private in humanity's army, but now one of the most hated traitors on Tarus II, numbly walks out of the hospital room, neither understanding the purpose of Belial scanning him, nor particularly caring what the results might have been.

It turned green. Must have been good news. Henry thinks to himself as he shuffles through the corridor, keeping his head down. These days, he doesn't like meeting other people's eyes, especially when they're fellow humans. First time for everything.

As he walks, Henry flinches when he suddenly sees something moving toward him out of the corner of his eye. He jerks back reflexively, only to see the face of a familiar man as the fellow reaches out to touch Henry's shoulder.

"Henry!" The man says, turning his touch into a waving motion. "Haven't seen or heard from you in a while. How have you been?"

"H-how have I been?" Henry asks, momentarily dumbfounded. He glances around at the people lining up in the hallway, many of whom immediately recognize him. A series of glares and jeers come his way, making him quickly lower his eyes.

"I've been good." Henry immediately lies. "Catch you later, Saul."

"Whoa, whoa. What's the big rush?" Saul asks. "Got a hot date?"

Henry shrugs. "No. Don't have much of anything going on, actually."

"Great! Why don't you wait out there in the main hall a few minutes." Saul replies. "It won't take me long to get scanned. I'm close to the front of the line."

"Oh. Alright... sure." Henry says, uncertain if he should reject Solomon's nephew or not. In the end, his anxiety about being seen in public loses to his desire to see even one friendly face.

Henry awkwardly continues shuffling out of the corridor, pausing only when he reaches the main entry area which is now jam-packed with humans waiting their turn to get scanned. Three dozen different lines form going down different corridors, leading to many different rooms. Grima, the receptionist goblin, dutifully hands out tickets and room numbers to everyone who approaches his desk.

Henry figuratively twiddles his thumbs, finally becoming invisible now that he's stepped within a large enough mass of people that nobody nearby pays him any mind. Every few seconds, the lines will shift forward while other people walk back down the halls, having completed their scans.

Like Saul said, it doesn't take him long to finish his scans and head down the hall to meet up with Henry.

"There you are!" Saul laughs, clapping Henry on the back. "What say you and me go grab a bite to eat, eh? I found this great goblin-run meat stand half a click from here, won't take us a minute to reach it. Gotta get Kiari something too, lord knows she goes bananas for their barbecued 'Jhoral' meat."

Henry shrugs. "Yeah, sure, whatever works."

He and Saul make their way out of the hospital, with Saul mostly filling the dead air while Henry only offers perfunctory nods or sometimes says yes or no. But otherwise, Henry doesn't say much.

"My results came up green! Isn't that wonderful?" Saul asks. "Dunno what those crystals are scanning for, but green sounds good to me. How about you?"

Henry shrugs. "Mine was green too."

"Great! That's just great..."

Saul trails off. He walks up to the meat stand and orders some food, then glances at Henry. "You want anything? Bill's on me."

"No, no, I couldn't burden you like that." Henry says, waving his hand dismissively. "I, uh, I just ate a little bit ago. You go ahead though."

"Burden me?" Saul scoffs. "Henry, my girlfriend is a Demon Emperor. Through her bugs, Kiari earns more Merit Tokens than any other person in the city barring perhaps one of those fairy queens. It's no trouble at all."

"Well, uh... I mean, if you insist..." Henry mumbles, before randomly pointing at something on the menu. "I guess I could try that."

A few minutes later, he and Saul sit on a bench inside the nearby Central Gardens, where they see the ghost of the former Heroes, Sir Lorent and Shana, both painting on canvasses off in the distance while some kids and a few teens mimic them.

"So. You haven't really answered my question." Saul says after taking a big bite out of his barbecued meat. He licks his fingers, savoring the sweet and tangy residue with a quiet groan of pleasure. "How have things been, Henry?"

"Oh, you know." Henry says, taking an even bigger bite to stuff his mouth so he doesn't have to talk. "Pretty good."

"Yeah? Is that so..." Saul says, once again trailing off.

This time, he doesn't speak for a good thirty seconds. Saul munches on his meat while looking off into the distance.

"It's been hard on you." He finally says, having finished off one of the ribs he purchased. He wipes his hands with a napkin, then pauses his eating to look at Henry sitting beside him. "After that inquisition thing, I started feeling worried for you."

Henry flinches. In his heart of hearts, he hoped Saul hadn't even heard about what happened. After all, Saul usually keeps to himself and stays in his hut, enjoying the simple life. He's not much of a worldly man, caring little for the greater good or other divine acts of providence. Henry hoped he might have simply overlooked the tribunal entirely.

But given Kiari herself sat in the Lesser Demon audience only a stone's throw away from the primary platform, that would obviously have been a pipe dream. There wasn't a chance she didn't detail that day's events to her lover when she returned home.

"It's fine." Henry says. "I'm alive, aren't I?"

"Man does not live on bread alone." Saul says. "I'm guessing most people don't want to talk to you these days?"

Henry doesn't respond for a few moments.

"...No. Not really."

"I thought not." Saul says, biting into the next piece of rib-meat, but this time much more slowly and deliberately than before. He spends a few seconds chewing it while he thinks about what to say next. "You screwed up. But everyone does eventually, kid. My screw-up caused me to fall into the clutches of an undying monster for 100,000 years. I lost contact with my entire family, and awoke in the far-future to find they had perished to the annals of time."

Despite his grim words, Saul chuckles. "Everyone except for my annoying uncle. Why Solomon lived long enough to tease me, I'll never know."

"That must have been a hard transition for you." Henry says, glancing at Saul with a newfound sense of sympathy. "What allowed you to endure?"

Once again, it takes Saul a few seconds to respond. He silently chews his meat before answering.

"...I considered ending it all. Many times. Without my family, what did I have to live for? I could vaguely remember bits and pieces of the last 100,000 years. Memories of being a monster. Sometimes mining in caves. Sometimes whipping human servants on Bahamut's orders."

He pauses.

"But I didn't end my life. And I'm glad I didn't. I held on, and before long, I met my uncle. Then time passed and I met Kiari. She wasn't an Emperor at the time, but merely a flirty demon girl with these cute freckles I couldn't take my eyes off..."

He bobs his head from side to side, momentarily becoming lost in his memories before snapping back to reality.

"That was four years ago. Nowadays, I've come to think this might be the happiest period of my life."

"You pulled through." Henry says with a smile. "I'm glad for you."

"Yes." Saul says seriously, meeting Henry's gaze. "But I'm worried for you. It's not easy finding the willpower to go on when it feels like you've lost everything. You were Neil Adams' top sniper. A lot of people respected you. Everyone wanted to be your friend. You even had some big accomplishments during Stormbringer. But now nobody wants to be around you, you've lost your military rank, and... what else do you have left?"

Henry lowers his eyes and looks away.

"Nothing." He says, his chest cold and numb. "I'm going through the motions. That's all."

"I assumed that might be the case." Saul nods. "I'm guessing you don't have much in the way of Merit Tokens, huh? Driving people around can't pay much."

"Well. I get by." Henry replies.

"I'd like it if you did more than 'get by.'" Saul says. He reaches into his pocket and pulls out a piece of paper and a pen. After writing something down, he hands it to the young man.

"Here. My wife recently started building this new high-tech facility with her bugs. Phoebe Hiro personally commissioned it for the upcoming war effort against the Plague. I'm gonna get you in on the ground floor as a technician. You'll be in a specialized suit all day, so nobody will see your face if you don't want them to. It's all very hush-hush, so you don't even need to tell people your full name. You can make a good income there, maybe get a fresh start."

Henry flinches, recoiling a half inch from Saul as if the man had just squirted him in the face with water.

"Huh? Why would you offer me this? What do you have to gain?"

"Gain?" Saul fires back, giving the kid a deep smirk. "You little brat. Who do you think I am? I'm not helping you because I want something from you. I'm helping you because I see a friend in need."

"Okay. But I'm a traitor to humanity. I almost got Neil Adams killed." Henry explains. "You shouldn't associate with the likes of me, or..."

"Or what? Are people going to badmouth me? Make me lose my job?" Saul retorts. "I'm a hermit living in a hut. I leech off my hot demon girlfriend's income so I don't have to do any hard work. I don't give a damn what anyone says."

He moves the piece of paper closer, making Henry follow the movement with his eyes.

"Kid, you made one big mistake. You're not a bad person. Don't let anyone tell you otherwise. Even my jerk of an uncle got duped by a few women back in the day, and people call him the 'Knowledge-Seeker.' If the so-called wisest Hero of all time can screw up and get his entire lineage killed by demons, yet still earn redemption, so can you."

A warm feeling begins to smolder inside Henry's stomach. He gently reaches out and takes the piece of paper from Saul's hand.

"I... see. Alright. Thank you very much. It means a lot that you'd do a big favor for me like this."

"It's not big at all." Saul says, gently squeezing Henry's shoulder. "But I do hope it helps you. Remember, humans are not like other species. We're a social group that rely on one another. Rugged individualism may take you far, but the power of groups working together is far more formidable. If you need someone to talk to, I'm always available. It's not like I have much going on at home besides tending to my garden."

"Maybe I'll drop by sometime and help you water your plants." Henry says.

"I hope so. Kiari is usually too busy to join me there."

The two men finish their food, and the mood becomes a little lighter as Henry's spirits lift up, little by little. The loneliness and isolation he felt over the past couple of weeks had been eating at him constantly, and it's only now that he's found someone to vent to that he realized he needed it all along.

Eventually, the two men go their separate ways. Once Henry leaves, he feels a bit of a hop in his step. He hums quietly to himself and gets going down the road.

As he walks, Henry feels a pair of eyes watching him. He turns to look down the road, where he sees a random human male looking his way. The man immediately appears familiar to Henry, but it takes him a moment to make the mental connection.

Isn't that Neil's friend, Makoto Ueda? No, that's right, he had his soul taken over by that ancient Hero. What was his name again...?

Unable to remember Siddhartha Gautama's name, Henry pauses mid-step and raises an eyebrow as the Japanese-looking man walks over to him.

"Ah, Henry. It seems you've regained a bit of a spark in your eyes."

"Yeah, uh, sure." Henry says with a frown. "Something like that. Can I help you?"

Buddha stares at the young man for several long seconds, making Henry feel extremely awkward. Eventually, he shrugs.

"It seems the Wordsmith discovered a method. Things are going to become interesting soon, young man. I hope your willpower is ready for the trials and tribulations."

Henry's expression shifts from awkwardness to confusion. "I... huh? What are you talking about?"

"The Great Shattering draws nearer every day." Buddha answers, his words not helping clarify matters at all for Henry. "When it arrives, despair will seize the hearts of men. I can only hope capable new Heroes will rise up to replace the old..."

"New Heroes?" Henry asks. "Like Wordsmiths?"

"Any man can become a Hero." Buddha answers. "Magic is not required. Only a brave heart wielding the power of the indomitable human spirit. Perhaps, if your willpower is strong enough, it could be you who people look up to someday."

"I find that hard to believe." Henry retorts, looking away with a bitter expression on his face. Already, the good feelings from his interaction with Saul have disappeared as if they never existed. "Everyone wants me dead."

"For now." Buddha answers with a nod. "But the machinations of Karma are not to be trifled with. You reap what you sow. Start planting seeds now and they will fully germinate when the time is right."

Henry's eyes practically bug out of his head. He stares at Buddha with even more confusion than before, but the Japanese man simply waves at him, then turns and walks away.

A few seconds later, Henry shakes his head.

"What a strange fellow."

Part 545: Act of Defiance

Hope Hiro and his fiancé, Amelia Greyheart, stand inside a small chamber within the central nexus of the Hall of Heroes. Before Hope stands a slender, narrow platform with a Heroic Artifact resting atop it. This platform happens to cradle none other than the Dominion Rod, an item possessing the soul of the First Hero to have ever walked the mortal plane... King Jepthath.

Jepthath himself stands opposite the artifact. He and every other person in the chapter remain completely silent, watching as Hope holds his palms above the artifact, beads of sweat silently sliding down his forehead. For thirty minutes, he has held this pose, silently struggling with a task of some significance.

Almost there. Solomon thinks, watching from the side. Shouldn't be long now.

Jepthath closes his eyes. He takes a deep breath, inhaling spiritual energy, while focusing his mind.

At that moment, Hope's pupils become visibly relaxed. His shoulders sag, and his arms flop to his side. He starts to stumble backward, and Amelia catches him.

"Suc...cess..." Hope gasps, before his legs give out underneath him.

Amelia helps the Wordsmith sag to the floor. He lays there for a good few minutes, while Solomon, Elizabeth Kindelmann, and several other Trueborn Heroes including Moses and Aaron all offer words of praise, thanking the young man for his hard work.

"You have done well." Jepthath says, opening his eyes. His irises momentarily glow bright white before the color recedes, returning his eyes to their ordinary blue color. "The connection has been perfectly established."

Despite his anticipation, Solomon controls his emotions. He waits until Hope, ever the hero of the hour, can regain some of his stamina and shakily stand back up with Amelia's help.

"So it worked?" Hope finally asks Jepthath. "You've connected to all of humanity?"

"Not all of them." Jepthath says slowly. "My power, as well as that of the Dominion Rod, will not be able to influence or connect to any humans who are already Trueborn or Lowborn Heroes. Additionally, humans who have built up significant amount of spiritual power may resist the connection. That being said, how many humans as of yet possess such qualifications? No more than a handful, I would imagine."

Hope nods slowly. "Can you project your visions through the staff?"

A few moments pass. Jepthath holds up a hand, causing the crystal in the center of the Dominion Rod to flash bright white. A beam of energy radiates outward, transforming the entirety of the chamber into a 360-degree panoramic view of a street locale somewhere on Tarus II.

Hope and the others find themselves visually transported to a picnic bench where a pretty red-haired girl bats her eyelashes at them, laughing at some previously unheard joke. Strangely enough, a pair of hands lift up a large sandwich filled with meat, and that sandwich moves across the three-dimensional space toward the Dominion Rod before partially disappearing, then reappearing with a huge bite taken out of it.

"Mmm, so good." A man's voice says, though it's unclear who the speaker is. "Love this place. That goblin cooks the best meat topside of the plateau."

Around the picnic bench, dozens of humans, monsters, and demons walk around and frolic inside the local park, the central community area intended for these sorts of meetups.

Hope turns around, and discovers that the clarity of the world drops significantly within a strict 90-degree viewing cone. Beyond that, it becomes a hazy fog with only faint grey apparitions of potential things moving about that the person whose eyes they seem to be viewing through cannot actually see.

"So that's how it works." Hope says. "You can connect to the mind of any human on Tarus II and see the world through their eyes?"

"I can do a lot more than that." Jepthath says calmly. "I can control their minds and force my will upon them, if I so desire. I can read their thoughts and look into their memories. I can make them share pain and pleasure. I can unite all of them, alter their desires, and much, much more."

Hope nods slowly, but a look of displeasure crosses his face.

"No... I don't think you should be doing any of that. Look, this will allow all of us to get a look at what's happening in the outside world. We can keep an eye on everyone and secretly ensure the demons aren't infiltrating our ranks."

He looks at Jepthath pointedly. "But interfering with humanity's free will? I draw the line there. I know that your powers were once considered necessary as humanity was in a crisis of extinction, but unless we reach that point again, I do NOT want to impose such a life upon what remains of our species."

Solomon nods. "I agree. Jepthath, don't go too far. Hope has established this connection so the Hall of Heroes can always maintain contact with the outside world. But it would not be appropriate for us old fogeys to take action except in the direst of emergencies."

"I am not a child, Knowledge-Seeker." Jepthath says mildly. "I know what limits should and should not be breached. I am content to sit back and let this era's two Heroes have at one another as they learn the ropes. I simply offer my guidance and talents if they wish to use them."

"Alright. I'm glad we understand each other." Hope says with a smile. "Now, I suppose I should ask, can you identify any humans you were unable to connect to?"

Jepthath falls silently for a moment. He starts waving his hands, surprising Hope as the spherical room changes to show the entire planet of Tarus II levitating in the void, its surface wrapping around and enveloping the Dominion Rod. Hundreds of thousands, if not millions of dots seemingly devour one rather small area on one of the planet's continents, with a few scattered dots nearby and almost none in other places across the planet.

"I am connected not only to Tarus II's humans, but those inside the Labyrinth, and elsewhere, such as Maiura." Jepthath explains. "So far, I have not been able to connect with the minds of any of the humans who died and were resurrected as The Respected. Their spiritual potential has become too substantial for the Rod to make a connection. The same is true of certain key T-REX users, such as Private Ashley McCarthy. Finally, there are individuals such as Neil Adams, Phoebe Hiro, and others like them who you Wordsmiths blocked off with your magic. I cannot forge a connection to their minds."

Hope quickly waves his hand. "That- that's fine. We don't need to see into Neil's mind, and certainly not Phoebe's. It wouldn't be appropriate."

Amelia glances at Hope and raises an eyebrow. "To say the least."

Hope smiles at his fiancé and kisses her cheek. "You're cute when you're jealous."

* * *

An hour later, after Hope and Jepthath have reviewed the possibilities of the new Dominion-Net, as Hope has taken to calling it, the Wordsmith finds a question crossing his mind.

"So wait, you can't connect to humans who have grown in spiritual potential?" Hope asks. "Then what about humans you CAN connect to, who later become spiritually powerful?"

"Ah, as in humans who ascend only after I've established a connection." Jepthath says. "In those cases, my connection will still be integrated within them, but if they discover it, they will likely be able to pull it out."

"That's too bad." Hope mutters.

"When I roamed the Earth, eons ago, my power was used only to subjugate lowers humans and grant them the single power I possessed; that of the fallen Titan King, Hercules." Jepthath explains. "Tremendous strength, speed, and durability. It could turn any man into a fearsome killing machine. With our minds united, we became a force capable of slaughtering gods. But the downside was… our powers were quite simplistic."

Jepthath shrugs.

"Great strength certainly is incredible in matters of war, but we live in an era where metallic vehicles float in the void, capable of bombarding planets from afar with blasts of war-god energy. We live in an era where Cosmic demons can sunder worlds with a single breath of destructive power. We live in an era where a single High Psion can bring the totality of humankind to its knees with a wave of their hand."

Jepthath shakes his head. "In such an era, an era where Jason Hiro has already come up with a method to grant humans formidable strength en-masse, my ancient powers are not much to speak of at all."

Amelia stands up a little straighter. "The Body Boosters are certainly amazing, but your power to unite minds and create a human-spanning 'Omnivision' to share intelligence, and all the other benefits that come with that… those are still extremely valuable."

"Perhaps. But do not mistake my words for humility. What I mean to say is that my powers have a secret benefit that has not been useful until this exact moment in time."

A playful smile crosses Jepthath's lips.

"I have been catching up on the machinations and evolution of the numerous Demon Emperors which arose in the period after my life ended. It seems one of them came to obtain a power not dissimilar to mine..."

"What?" Hope asks, his heart skipping a beat. "There's a demon with a power similar to yours?"

"Of course." Jepthath answers. "His name is Auger, the Emperor of Distribution. You've surely heard of him."

Hope nods slowly. "Auger rules the Fourth Hell of Punishment. His power is the ability to contract subordinates, take their powers, and pass them around between one another so they... so they..."

The Wordsmith pauses. A strange look enters his eyes.

"Wait. Are you saying you can do that, too? If humans contract with you, they can swap powers around at will?"

"Exactly." Jepthath says with a smile. "But my power is even more incredible than Auger's. My subordinates can share thoughts, emotions, knowledge, and powers. They do not need to 'trade'. If one person obtains a formidable ability, the Legion as a whole can obtain that power all at once. This is known as the Collective Uplifting. Back in my day, this power only ever manifested in the sharing of our progenitor's strength, that of Titan King Hercules. But nowadays, as more and more humans become uplifted, the results could become far more heaven-defying..."

"That's absolutely ridiculous." Hope says. "If I contracted with you, then the entirety of humanity could become Wordsmiths!"

"Potentially." Jepthath says, lowering his eyes modestly. "But it is not as simple as you might assume. Every human has a different level of potential and talent from another. Some humans are more gifted in the ways of shadow, while others are masters of light. Some wield fire as if they were born in a volcano, while others act as dolphins when wielding the water element. Your power is a special one that likely cannot be fully comprehended by ordinary humans. At best, they might only be able to wield a single element of Wordsmithing properly."

Hope momentarily recalls that the color of his soul was said to be 'rainbow' in nature, as told to him by Confessor Vulpanix. By contrast, most other living souls would only be one or two colors, at most.

Of course, having more colors and abilities does not inherently make one more powerful, and in fact reduces the precision of their individual abilities. But for the purposes of making Wordsmiths out of all the other humans, it certainly presents a barrier.

In any case, neither Hope nor Jason would want to see Wordsmiths rise up in the tens or hundreds or thousands, so this isn't a negative for them.

"Humans linked to the Dominion-Net now who become uplifted later will have the capability to pass that power on to everyone else." Amelia says, concluding the explanation herself. "That sounds extremely impressive."

"It is, but only if humanity manages to uplift at least a few formidable warriors." Jepthath says. "There are countless humans linked to my consciousness now, yet none of them have noticed the faint change in their spirituality. I have begun to probe each individual, looking to see if I can find any special seeds. If I do, I will notify you."

"Great." Hope says with a smile. "My deepest thanks, Jepthath. You and the other Heroes are going to do great work keeping humanity's future stable and secure."

After concluding their business, everyone but Jepthath eventually leaves the room. Unfortunately, due to the creation of the Dominion-Net, Jepthath has become forced to stay inside the observation room at the heart of the Hall of Heroes, not far from Solomon's Library. But this solitude doesn't bother the First Hero in the slightest. After all, he bore the loneliness of 100,000 years without complaint. Being linked to millions of human souls is already a huge difference in social quality.

Jepthath's spiritual gaze casually wanders across the humans newly subordinated to himself. A fact he didn't deign to mention to Hope is that without conducting a proper ceremony wherein people declare their obeisance to him, the effects of his powers would be somewhat limited, but that issue can always be rectified later once Hope finds a way to return to Tarus II without suffering from Time Dilation Sickness.

"Hmm..." Jepthath murmurs to himself, as his gaze fixates on one seemingly ordinary young man. "This lad... he seems to have recently been bolstered by the power of an Envoy. He might be worth keeping an eye on..."

A day has passed since the titanic battle between Founder Dosena and Melody, the Deity of Defiance.

Thanks to her incredible speed of Cosmic Regeneration, Melody has already put herself somewhat back together, but she still looks like a miserable mess, with horrible bruises and burns scattered across her body, along with slowly mending lacerations and cuts.

After Diablo left to clean up the remaining Kolvaxian-infested worlds with the help of his Emperors, Melody had no choice but to lay on Thillow's moon, motionless, while her body healed itself. Now, she manages to slowly stand up with a pained hobble, looking around herself at the broken, shattered world left behind by her battle.

Victory. Loss. Did it even matter? Melody thinks bitterly.

She looks up at the distant stars, expanding her cosmic senses to momentarily swoon at the sensations she feels.

Never, in all her years, has she felt so unfathomably powerful, and yet so completely minuscule and powerless.

Because, in her mind's eye, when she gazes into the abyss, she vaguely feels the eyes of countless distant Cosmic monsters slowly turning their gazes toward her...

Melody looks away, too afraid to continue drawing the attention of... whatever horrifying creatures those might have been.

There are so many Entities in existence as strong as me, if not far stronger. I am nothing at all. Melody thinks. I was like a toddler trying to beat a giant during my battle against Dosena. I bet Diablo would beat my ass just as badly.

She slowly levitates upward, taking care to inhale as much Cosmic Energy from the ambient environment as possible to heal her body. While her wounds are truly too severe to restore at a high speed, and while she certainly cannot hope to match Beelzebub's ridiculous rate of regeneration, her speed dwarfs any other demon barring Diablo. It will only take a day or two for her to fully recover.

She flies toward the world of Sharmur, arriving within less than an hour. At her peak condition, she could have made it within a minute or two, but as badly injured as she is now, Melody simply has to fly a lot more slowly.

She enters the upper atmosphere, then descends toward the planet's warpgate, where she finds only a handful of Dukes lounging around, awaiting her return.

"Melody." One of them says. "You're back sooner than we expected. Boss Diablo said you got pretty fucked up in your fight with the Second Founder."

"My injuries are nowhere near fully healed." Melody says softly, as she lands on the ground a short distance away. "Where is everyone?"

"They left. Boss Diablo has other planets to conquer, you know? Can't be sticking around here all day."

"Of course. That does make sense..."

Melody lowers her eyes, feeling somewhat depressed for reasons she isn't quite able to put into words.

"Well. Thank you for telling me. I'm going to find a nice, quiet mountain plateau so I can rest."

"Yeah, boss said you'd be napping for a while. Sounds good to us. Take care." The Duke says with a wave.

Without another word, Melody departs, taking to the skies once more to fly a few hundred miles away. She finds a mountain covered in snow, then plops down amidst the wintry ice to sigh and exhale a warm breath of turbid air.

Her body sinks into the snow, but she doesn't feel its cold at all. Compared to her Cosmic powers, this subzero chill might as well be a gentle mid-summer's breeze.

Ten minutes pass. Then twenty, and even thirty.

Melody gazes off despondently into the distance for a while, but as she does, she begins to feel that familiar flickering sensation of being watched.

She lifts her eyes, peering across space and time.

A faint smile crosses her face.

"Hey. Wordsmith. I know it's you watching me. Come out and talk. I'm in neither the mood nor any condition to fight."

A few seconds pass, but nothing happens.

She frowns.

"Come on. I KNOW it's you. Don't be a little bitch."

This time, a shift ripples in space, and Jason Hiro materializes a short distance away, levitating in the air with his hands resting on his hips.

"Sorry." Jason says. "I wasn't trying to keep you in suspense. There were just some... things I had to take care of."

"Yeah?" Melody asks. "Is that why you sent a robot here instead of your real body? Not because you're afraid this is a trick by the evil demons to kill the Wordsmith with a sneak attack?"

"Not at all. I trust you fully." Jason says, his smile brightening. "But this Dronesmith is the only way I currently have to maintain contact with realspace. It's complicated, but we can just say I've ended up in a little bit of a pickle. I'll have the problem resolved eventually."

"Oh." Melody replies, her tone turning glum. "I see."

A few moments pass. Jason scratches his cheek awkwardly.

"So. You wanted to see me?"

"Yeah. Listen. I just had one bitch of a day." Melody snarks. "No doubt, you saw the whole thing."

"I... I may have seen... a considerable amount of it..." Jason says awkwardly.

"You saw me get uplifted, then get my face introduced to the dirt by the Second Founder?"

"Yeah."

"And she was going to kill me, but only didn't because of Diablo's brilliant schemes?"

"...Yeah."

"And then after she left, Diablo slapped me around and told me I was a worthless pile of garbage?"

"...Can I plead the fifth?"

Jason's expression becomes more and more awkward, until finally Melody can't help but let out a mild chuckle. "Hehe. Okay, that's a pretty funny face you're making. I tell you what, Wordsmith. I like you a lot more than I like the so-called Emperor of Annihilation running things for my species."

Jason blinks. "So-called? You don't think he's truly Diablo?"

"I knew Diablo a long time. If that really is him, he's undergone such a violent personality shift he's become unrecognizable." Melody says. "He's not a guy I want to follow. Problem is, I'm trapped. I can't beat him. If we come to blows, I'll lose. If he has to sacrifice me, I don't believe he'll hold back for a second."

She points a finger at her chest.

"But that doesn't mean I'm gonna bend over and let him have at me like I'm his personal fuccubus. So I called you here to tell you one thing, Jason Hiro. If a time comes when humanity needs my help, I'm here for you. If you need something that I can provide, I'm here to help. This world? It's yours if you want it. Diablo gave me ruling rights and he didn't say only demons could live here. As far as I'm concerned, that means humans and monsters are A-OK."

Jason frowns. "That's... an extremely generous offer to make. But it feels a bit... inappropriate?"

"You forget who I am." Melody explains. "I used to be one of the Emperors ruling the Hell of Isolation. We were the ONLY 'pro-human' Hell out of ALL Seven Hells. We got along just fine with your people. Don't believe me? I bet you've got plenty of humans living with you now who will tell you about the wicked parties we used to throw. Me, Guura, Viola, Murmur, Shax... we all used to get along just great."

Melody drops her arm to her side. Her posture slumps, and a look of quiet despair takes over.

"But then... then that day happened. You pulled the humans away from Sharmur. I wouldn't blame you for that, except it somehow alerted the Plague to our planet's location. The Kolvaxians attacked us, and... most of the demons of my Hell were eaten alive. They're gone now. All my best friends. My family."

Jason lowers his eyes. "I'm sorry, Melody. I truly didn't mean for that to happen."

"Of course you didn't." Melody says, wiping a thumb across the bottom of her eye. "You're not a jerk, just a bit of a short-sighted moron. I'd never have guessed teleporting the humans away would alert the Plague, so why would you? It's water under the bridge. All I'm saying is... I'd like to restore that which was lost. You know? Make it all... whole again."

"You can't bring back the dead." Jason says softly. "Lord knows I wish I could. I'd bring my little girl back."

"Right. I can't do that, but I can honor them. I can resist the urge to give up by learning lessons from my previous mistakes. Now that I'm a Middle Cosmic, I won't ever let the Plague come back and get an easy win again. If your people come here, they'll have a bona fide powerhouse watching over them."

She shrugs. "That Neil guy probably won't like the idea. But I don't care about him. I just want to bring back all the humans who used to live here. If you're cool with that, I'd also like to bring back all the former members of my Hell. The ones still alive, that is. Since I can't leave this planet, maybe you can at least deliver the invitation for me?"

Jason nods. "Yeah. I can do that. But what if Diablo finds out? Aren't you worried he'll...?"

"What? Kill me? He already threatened to do that. As far as I'm concerned, he's not the Diablo I used to know. He's a skinwalker disguised as Deebs. I won't let fear control me."

"I see. That's very admirable of you." Jason says. "Then I'll send that invitation out, as you requested. And who knows? Perhaps my Wordsmithing may find a way to untether you, or at least unrestrict your movements in some ways. I may be able to provide benefits Diablo can't..."

"That would be a welcome bonus." Melody says, smiling back. "Thank you, Wordsmith. Now get the hell out of here before Deebs finds out we've been talking."

The Wordsmith shrugs. "Can do. See you around, Deity of Defiance."

His body shimmers and twists, disappearing into space.

After a few moments, Melody scrunches up her face.

In retrospect, that Deity title feels a BIT theatrical. Prooobably could have toned it down a tad...

Part 546: New Milky Way Menace

On a world controlled by the Volgrim known as Eldanis III, located near the galactic core, between the Milky Way's western and southern quadrant border...

Alarms blare across the industrial world's surface. High in orbit, tens of 6th and 7th Level Psions surround the planet, using their Psionic abilities to pick out the highest value rescue-targets and yank them off the planet to shuttles in the upper atmosphere, where they can be transported to safety.

On Eldanis' surface, the Plague once again attacks, swarming and growing in number as it devours Volgrim after Volgrim, yanking them beneath the surface only for those individuals to return a short while later, their bodies covered in mottled green skin and their eyes and mouths forever sealed shut.

The faceless plaguehosts terrorize the Technopaths and Changelings who comprise the majority population of this particular world. While some low-level Psions did originally live on Eldanis III, their numbers were far fewer than those of their Technopath and Changeling peers. When the Plague attacked out of nowhere, they fell to despair, choosing to kill themselves and immolate their bodies, returning to the Psionic Well rather than merely live long enough to be devoured.

Naturally, low-level Psions have not yet been deemed worthy of placing their souls onto specialized Psion-controlled worlds where they can puppeteer bodies remotely. That privilege is reserved only for Psions who have advanced to a sufficient level of authority and power that they can be granted extra chances at life. Therefore, the vast majority of Psions who killed themselves in this way will never walk the mortal coil again, delivering a painful long-term blow to their Empire.

But they were granted that choice by the Founders themselves. Rather than force his subjects to live life underneath a freakish alien phenotype's will, Founder Unarin informed his people that if they were in danger of imminent death by the Plague, they would be allowed to take their lives in the hope of denying their hated blood-enemy a chance of weaponizing them against their remaining friends and family. Unfortunately, it is usually only the Psions who have the will and courage to terminate their existences when that moment comes, while the Technopaths and Changelings will almost always fall to the Plague without resisting.

On this particular day, a 7th Level Psion known as Praetor Revan leads the defending forces as he and his allies seek to snap up as many high-value civilians and military personnel as possible before the Plague can get to them. Unfortunately, with less than a hundred High Psions in orbit, and the overwhelming majority of them only being at the 6th Level, the speed at which they can retrieve key personnel is distressingly low.

Revan grimaces as he tactically points out various targets on the surface below, ignoring the low value Psions who have contributed little to Eldanis III's technical achievements over the past few millennia. At a time like this, with the Plague bursting out of the planet's soil, he simply doesn't have a single second to spare for caring about no-name civilians and other useless individuals.

[These two.] Revan says, flicking a Psionic marker onto a pair of Technopaths on the surface, 100 kilometers below. [And that one. I'll recover this individual here, you go for that other one...]

He doesn't bother stating names, as even that would cost him an extra second he can't afford. Rapid-fire, he yanks Technopaths and Changelings off the surface, pulling them into shuttles at the same time his fellow Psions repeat his tactics. Unfortunately, as one of less than half a dozen 7th Level Psions in orbit, he is far, far faster and more capable than his lesser peers. Time and time again, he watches in distress as a Volgrim he pointed out gets picked off by the Plague because his 5th and 6th Level peers simply aren't as capable as him at recovery operations.

[Move faster! DAMMIT! You're not keeping up!] Revan snaps, barely able to contain his rage as yet another high-level Technopath researcher gets yanked underground before they can be saved. [You imbecile! I told you THAT researcher was the high-value target, not the other one! Gah!]

[Sorry, Praetor! I'm pushing myself to my limits!] A female Psion says apologetically. [My Primal Psionics are not up to the task!]

[Then you'd better improve quickly! Lives depend on you!] Revan exclaims. [Now make sure you pick up that individual there!]

The rescue operation continues at full speed. On the surface below, one Technopath hurriedly climbs atop a massive 100-meter-tall boulder in the middle of a ravine while looking around in terror. At any second, a single Kolvaxian could leap out of the ravine's walls and tackle him to the dirt. If that happens, he won't last for even a second!

'Please, Founders, guide me!" The Technopath cries to himself as he hears distant screams that occasionally fall silent. "Founders! Founders, I am your loyal subject! Do not let me die here!!"

At that moment, a strange sensation seizes the Technopath's body. He begins to levitate upward as a Psion in the upper atmosphere starts quickly dragging him up into the sky toward the awaiting transport ships which dare not draw any closer to the planet's surface.

"Yes! Founders, you have heard my plea!" The Technopath rejoices. "I shall sing your praises until the end of this Eternity, Founder Unarin! Founder Dosena, you are the most benevolent and beautiful of all Volgrim-"

Suddenly, the Technopath's cries of happiness cease. A sensation of terror engulfs his stomach as a planetary broadcast transmits across all frequencies, including the ones his cerebral implants are still capable of picking up.

WARNING. COSMIC-LEVEL PLAGUEHOSTS HAVE BEEN DETECTED INSIDE ELDANIS III'S CORE. ALL PSIONS, PREPARE FOR BATTLE. CEASE ALL RESCUE OPERATIONS AND TAKE UP COMBAT FORMATIONS.

The psionic power lifting the Technopath's body abruptly vanishes, causing him to scream in terror as he begins rapidly falling toward the planet below. Having already been lifted more than three kilometers into the sky, the fall downward causes him to reach terminal velocity within seconds. His last words are little more than guttural shrieks of terror before his body slams into the ground, shattering all of his bones and rendering him as dead as the rocks around himself...

At that moment, an 8th Level Psion emerges from the planet's interior. It bursts out of the ground and races up into the sky toward the shuttles filled with juicy, high-value targets.

[It's Executor Huron's doppleganger!] Praetor Revan declares, transmitting his voice to all the other Psions in orbit. [All 7th Level Psions, join me! All lower Psions, retreat behind us! Create the formations like we planned! My peers and I will do battle against this monster!]

Praetor Revan keeps his tone dignified in order to convey a sense of authority, but his heart shakes with fear. After all, while Executor Huron's Kolvax-copy might not possess the same raw power as an 8th Level Psion, it surely possesses power greater than most 7th Level Psions, including himself! Even if Revan and the others of his rank combine forces, they still might perish to their enemy!

Five 7th Level Psions join Revan. They quickly teleport and push the nearest shuttles away from their incoming enemy and make themselves as inviting as possible to draw the Kolvaxian-Psion's attention. Like a Predator Missile dumbly chasing after the hottest target, the enemy Executor quickly homes in on them and continue racing upward without a hint of fear.

[Now!!] Revan roars.

At once, a web of attacks fires at the False Executor, with one of the 7th Level Psions blasting Huron with a superheated tachyon beam, and another sealing his movements with Restriction Psionics. Revan himself amplifies his Primal Psionics to the max before firing a concussive wave of raw psionic power at Huron's body to try and slow him down.

The Kolvaxian Psion formerly known as Huron endures the bombardments with frightening ease. The tachyon beam blasts off his left arm, but he regrows it within two seconds. Revan's raw psionic power barely slows Huron at all, and the restriction psionics fail to even tickle him!

Revan's heart turns cold. He lets out the Volgrim equivalent of a curse before he and the others race away in opposite directions, letting Huron charge into the space where they were just levitating. Huron unfortunately gives chase after Revan, picking him out as the strongest opponent while grabbing at Revan with his own peak-level Primal Psionics.

[Damn!!] Revan curses, as he sees space constricting around himself. A giant hand made of raw psionic energy grabs at him, intending to crush his body into meat paste, but Revan releases a wave of his own Primal Psionics to break apart his enemy's attack.

Unfortunately, while he can match his opponent in one discipline, he doesn't stand a chance against Huron in melee range, because Huron happens to be known as the Planet Buster of Executors. His physical body has achieved a level of durability not even Founder Dosena can match, and unlike his more technical Psionic skills, his Kolvaxian copy retains ALL the benefits of his Body Manipulation prowess!

[NOOOO!] Revan shrieks as Huron races toward him with a palm reared back.

SLAP!!

Executor Huron's copy slams his palm against Revan's chest after closing the gap in a single second. Revan doesn't even have time to register the blow. His vision goes black as his body explodes into meat-paste beneath the crushing power of that single blow!

[Praetor Revan is defeated!] Another 7th Level Psion declares. [All Volgrim! FALL BACK! This world is lost!]

Now the de-facto leader of the Psion remnants, Creator Marian takes control, guiding her fellow Volgrim to jump to warp even as the rampaging Kolvax-clone begins shredding any shuttles and ships unfortunate enough to have not escaped in time before its appearance.

Her heart turns cold as she senses the gaze of Executor Huron's doppleganger turn to look at her.

[No! Damn you, monster!] Creator Marian roars. [Stay back, you filth! You beast!!]

She flees through the void as quickly as she can, putting distance between herself and Eldanis III, but unfortunately, the Kolvaxxed Executor continues chasing after her, closing the distance more and more every second!

[No, no, no!!] Marian screams. [I don't want to die, not like this!]

Losing in glorious combat isn't such a bad thing to most Psions, especially the battle-hardened ones. But losing to a Kolvaxian simply isn't the same. In many ways, these alien creatures are like biological machines. They offer no witty banter, nor do they have any sense of honor. They are lower than beasts in terms of intellectual capability, and thus losing to them feels like a thousand slaps across the face to any Psion unfortunate enough to find themselves outmatched.

Even worse, there is always the chance that instead of killing her, Marian's pursuer might infest her body and seize control of it in the same way the Kolvaxians originally did to Executors Huron and Sartran themselves.

Now that would truly be a horrific way to die!

But just as Huron's copy is about to reach Marian and land the killing blow, it abruptly stops chasing her, then turns on a dime and races back toward the planet.

Marian's heart continues to pound frantically. She doesn't stop fleeing for a full minute until she's good and sure she's put distance between herself and the Executor, now returning to Eldanis III. When she does stop, she turns around to look after his departing aura in confusion.

[Why... why did the Executor stop chasing me? I am still well within the planet's Plague Radius!]

Marian quickly focuses her mind. She scans the planet, and what she finds shocks her to her core!

A powerful Cosmic signature suddenly emerges on Eldanis III from out of nowhere, a signature of such formidable might that Marian's multitude of eyes bug out of her head.

[The Second Founder? She came here in person? No... it's not her... it's not a Volgrim at all!]

Executor Huron charges across the void, returning to Eldanis III's upper atmosphere in record time. He slams into it like a meteor, piercing the bubble enveloping the hazy industrial world with a violent BANG as the Kolvaxian races toward a figure waiting on the planet below.

Demon Emperor Diablo, piloting the body of the Archdemon, merely looks up at the descending figure with a sneer.

"COME TO DIE?"

Huron's body crashes into the Archdemon at ten times the speed of sound. The Kolvaxian slams Diablo into the planet's surface with such force that it shatters a part of the continent, carving out massive canyons and fissures for miles in every direction. But when Huron starts to attack again, one of Diablo's massive hands snaps at the tiny Kolvaxian and wraps around it, enveloping it in cosmic demonic energy.

"A VALIANT EFFORT." Diablo's voice booms from the Archdemon's mouth as he squeezes the creature in his grasp. "BUT ULTIMATELY FUTILE."

Diablo crushes the Kolvaxian with all his strength, but he becomes momentarily surprised when he fails to squash it like a bug. The sheer power of Huron's body matches the Archdemon pound for pound, allowing it to pry open the gigantic hand enveloping its body and break out.

It launches another attack, flying at the Archdemon's head with its arm reared back.

THUMP!!

A fist of deceptively small size crashes against the Archdemon's chin, causing Diablo's vision to blur as he's sent flying backward. He crashes into the dirt and grinds it with his back, but deftly flips himself up and backward, reorienting his body just as the Kolvaxian comes flying toward him again.

Diablo sucks in a breath of cosmic energy. Then, less than a second later, he fires a beam of destruction with pinpoint precision from his mouth!

BOOOOOM!!

This time, the Archdemon prevails. He strikes the Kolvaxian-clone with his full Power of Annihilation, eradicating it from existence and spraying its remains backward into a fine mist of ash and burnt blood.

Just like that, the Archdemon eradicates the Kolvaxian that killed Praetor Revan and nearly killed Creator Marian as well. He laughs uproariously as a portal opens behind him and Demon Emperors begin to spill out.

"BEGIN THE CLEANSING! HAHAHA. THIS WORLD BELONGS TO THE DEMONS!"

By the time Marian returns, she finds herself dazed as she sees only the aftermath of Emperor Diablo's short battle. Nowhere does the Kolvaxian appear, and she barely manages to pick up its residual psionic energy emanating from a few particles of flesh blowing away in the wind.

Marian remains in space, watching coldly as the Emperor of Annihilation and his army of demons sweeps outward, clearing the planet while sending tentacles deep into the core to subvert the Kolvaxian's control of Eldanis III's life energy.

Within an hour, the planet has been fully cleansed. The Volgrim who weren't yet converted to Kolvaxians remain alive, the majority of them never even knowing what exactly saved their lives.

[You are Emperor Diablo.] Marian says, as she descends from the upper atmosphere to face the massive body of her demon adversary. [Thank you for saving Eldanis III from the Plague. The Volgrim owe you a great debt.]

Creator Marian speaks with a certain level of humility, but she does not come off as a weak-willed minion eager to please Diablo. In her eyes, the Archdemon is certainly terrifying, but how can this one demon compare to the might and majesty of the Second Founder? He must surely be at least a little inferior to the Volgrim's most powerful Cosmic, and as such, an excessive amount of deference would only make her people look weak in the eyes of the mud-dwellers.

But despite giving Diablo a generous amount of face, as well as her deepest thanks, Marian is shocked to see that Diablo... doesn't appear impressed by her words of flattery.

He projects an Astral Clone into the air before the Archdemon's body, revealing his true self to the Psion while looking at her with an expression of disinterest.

"I do not require your thanks. The Volgrim owe me nothing. I am laying claim to this world as a part of the New Demon Empire. I will grant you the kindness of one month to evacuate what remains of your people from Eldanis III. If you wish to remain operating here, we can discuss a 'tribute' of sorts in exchange for the right to continue residing within this voidspace."

Creator's Marian's eyes nearly burst from her skull in a rage. [What?! How dare you! You have taken one step too far, demonspawn! This world is a part of the Volgrim Empire! We would be happy to offer a reward for any meritorious services rendered, but if you attempt to forcibly seize this planet, you will incur the wrath of our Second Founder!]

"Yes. Your amazing Second Founder. My tentacles shake with fear." Diablo says mildly, looking at the High Psion as if she were a clown. "You may feel free to inform the Second Founder of Eldanis III's new status. If she wishes to come and challenge me, she may do so at her leisure. I think you will find, however, that she is not nearly as eager to defend her honor as you believe her to be..."

Marian's objections die in her throat. She stares with bloodshot eyes at Diablo's spiritual avatar, desperately wanting to rip out the disrespectful eyes of this mangy little mud-dweller. Unfortunately, she is nowhere near strong enough to threaten him, and so, she must hold her tongue.

[You... do you intend to make an enemy of the Volgrim Empire?] Mariam asks, her tone dripping with venom.

"Is your lauded Empire willing to make an enemy of me?" Diablo fires back. "I am at present the only creature capable of combating the Plague. If you ever want to make use of my services, well... I suppose you had best learn to 'play nice', eh? Hehehe..."

Diablo grins smugly at the Psion female, then his Astral Form fades away, leaving her to levitate all by herself, feeling rather foolish about the whole interaction.

Damn him... Marian thinks, her eyes turning red with indignation. How dare this mud-dweller treat my people in such a manner! But I dare not cause a diplomatic incident. I will simply have to report what has happened to the Founders at once! They will know what to do. Founder Unarin will guide us, as he always has.

Silently, she curses Diablo in her heart before turning away and flying back into the Void.

All the while, Diablo simply watches her departure with a hint of bemusement.

Yes, go on, little dove. You be sure and tell Unarin what events have transpired. Each world my people seize shall become a grim reminder to the First Founder that the Volgrim are no longer worthy of calling themselves the Milky Way's 'sole apex species.'

I cannot wait to finally sit down and have a friendly 'chat' with the First Founder. We have SO much to discuss...

Diablo turns to look at the Emperors that have finished cleaning up the Kolvaxians on Eldanis III.

"YOU." Diablo says, pointing randomly at one of the Emperors recently empowered by Glinch's exobeast pills. "YOU WILL BE THIS WORLD'S WARDEN. CHOOSE WHAT TYPE YOU WOULD PREFER TO BECOME. YOU HAVE ONE HOUR TO DECIDE. I WILL NOT WAIT ANY LONGER."

Part 547: Unwanted Visitor

Four days pass as the Milky Way's galactic situation slowly continues to evolve.

Diablo takes over six new star systems in this time. He instates new Wardens, with a surprising number of them choosing the strictest limitation of becoming Stellar Wardens, locked to a single star system for the rest of their lives, but ultimately becoming Middle Cosmics close to the same strength as Diablo's Archdemon form.

Even the Emperor of Annihilation finds himself momentarily at a loss when he considers their choice, but ultimately, it doesn't take much explaining to figure out why they would opt to lock themselves to a single star system for the rest of eternity.

Aside from Melody becoming the Warden of the Shredder System, the other six new Wardens are all recently-evolved Emperors who were boosted through Glinch's power. Melody was, in fact, the only naturally-uplifted Emperor who obtained her power through good old-fashioned human soul-devouring.

Of course, her rise to prominence happened well before the completion of the Energy Wars. Perhaps, had she been born on Sharmur from a Broodmother's belly, she might find the act of devouring human souls to be utterly incompatible with the creed laid down by Shax and Murmur.

But now, following her secret discussion with the Wordsmith, she has begun to feel rather ambivalent about the actions she took in her past. Vile they may have been, if not outright war crimes and atrocities, but now she has obtained enough strength to protect the humans, if only in some small way.

As for the other Wardens, what they seek is the opportunity to become rulers of their own private domains. Rather than acting as mere Emperors who share control amongst one of the Seven Hells, they can instead become tyrants wielding full authority over their chosen worlds.

As the ancient proverb goes, 'tis better to be the head of a dog than the tail of a lion. The majority of demons would rather rule with total control over an entire world than share control with a dozen other contenders. And so, Diablo's offer lights a fire under the newfangled Emperors, making all of them begin to pick out their future domains with greedy eyes, seeking to control beautiful and lush worlds rather than rocky, barren wastelands such as Diabolus.

The Archdemon doesn't make the choice complicated for them. As long as they become Wardens with the goal of creating fortresses for demonkind, they can do anything they want to their worlds in the future.

Selfishness is not a glitch in Diablo's plan, but rather the main goal.

* * *

At the same time, across these four days, many other events transpire.

Jason Hiro spends another 1,000 days or so inside Chrona, working on countless projects with Fiona and Rebecca's assistance.

Belial manages to scan every single human known in the Milky Way except for the Wordsmiths and a few individuals located inside Chrona and the Hall of Heroes. She also begins scanning demons and monsters in addition to the humans.

The Volgrim take notice of key worlds being stolen away by Diablo, whose actions only have the thinnest veneer of 'saving' them from the Plague.

And of course, Phoebe Hiro and Neil Adams continue drafting the speeches they will soon utter as they plan for a major split between humanity, laying claim to the few million lives that remain.

It is during this period, four days after the dramatic return of the Archdemon, that Neil sits inside his office, looking at some reports given to him by Debra.

"Hmm..." Neil grunts, as he looks at a troubling piece of newly acquired information. "You're sure about this?"

Debra stands on the opposite side of the desk. She pushes her glasses up her nose and nods. "The numbers don't lie."

"It can't be a coincidence." Neil mutters. "Not many people came up 'green' when Belial scanned them. More than 99% of all humans were scanned and came up 'red' with Phoebe's crystals. Of the ones who came up green, most of them were Power Glove users. The rest were The Respected. So what does it mean? Is there an infection spreading among our strongest humans?"

"So far, every demon and monster scanned has come up red as well." Debra points out. "I don't know what these crystals are supposed to achieve, but a certain undercurrent of fear is already spreading. If we don't come up with an explanation, people will panic. They already think there might be an infection of sorts spreading among the military personnel."

"An infection..." Neil mutters. "Is that what it truly is? I find that notion hard to believe. I'm missing a crucial clue, something that would explain all this. Jason and Phoebe are keeping the truth of the matter close to their chests."

"You could add a section to your speech regarding the matter." Debra suggests. "Something about calling them out for deceiving the public."

"Perhaps I could." Neil says noncommittally. "Though I've had this... feeling lately. This feeling I'm being watched."

He glances around the room with a look of disinterest, then shrugs.

"Could be a Psion, such as Creator Demila. Could be a demon, such as Gressil. Could even be Jason himself. Who can say, hmm?"

"Gressil?" Debra asks, her heart-rate spiking for a second. "Shouldn't we put some stronger guards in here?!"

"If the invisible boogeyman wanted me dead or captured, I don't imagine I'd still be sitting here." Neil says dismissively. "Gressil can nullify magic. His physical strength is great enough that perhaps only Belial can stand up to him in direct combat. His ability to teleport around is also quite troubling. Do you think if I positioned ten of our mightiest human guards in my office at all times, they could stop him from taking me?"

Debra purses her lips. "I suppose not."

"And that is why I don't bother." Neil says with a shrug. "If Gressil comes for me, so be it. If the Volgrim take me out, so be it. If Jason decides to eliminate me, then by goddamn, so be it. I'll become a martyr, and that will be the end of my story."

Neil pauses. He looks at Debra with a faint smile.

"But it's funny, isn't it? None of them have done so for whatever reasons. I'm only an ordinary human. The only thing protecting me is the threat of what Hope might do, or what my death might signify to humanity. I don't think either of those are particularly compelling factors to keep my life intact. I can only assume I'm simply not worth assassinating at this moment in time. Perhaps that will change in the future as my perceived value to humanity rises."

"I hope not..." Debra whispers. "You're very important to your species, Neil. None of us want to see you die."

"And neither do I." Neil concludes. "But death comes for everyone eventually. Even for the supposed 'immortals' that live within our galaxy, it is only a matter of time..."

Neil and Debra exchange a few more words, but eventually she leaves him to his own devices, closing the door after she departs.

Neil sits for twenty minutes, mulling over various reports as he continues to mentally plot out his speech to humanity.

"Oh, Jason..." Neil mutters. "What are you up to with those crystals, I wonder?"

As he continues to think, a sudden pit opens up in Neil's stomach. His body stiffens, and the hairs on the back of his neck lift up and begin to tingle.

Reflexively, Neil looks up from his documents, where he sees an intruder standing in front of the door, looking at him. A male demon who wasn't there only a second before.

"You!" Neil snaps, gnashing his teeth together. "What the hell do you think you're doing, showing your face here? I have nothing to say to the likes of you."

Emperor Diablo, now in his Astral Body, stands imposingly less than twenty feet away from Neil, with one hand resting comfortably on his hip. His black cloak with gold trim gives him an air of majesty. He smiles warmly at Neil, then waves his free hand casually.

"Hello, Neil. You and I have not yet had the chance to talk. I was hoping to rectify that."

"We spoke four days ago." Neil says, narrowing his eyes to glare daggers at the Emperor of Annihilation. "I have nothing to say to a filthy Demon Emperor. If you're going to kill me, just don't leave a mess for Debra. Otherwise, I'll make sure my spirit haunts you for the rest of eternity, hellspawn."

"So dramatic." Diablo says, as he walks forward, approaching Neil's desk. "Would you mind if I took a seat?"

Neil doesn't even get a chance to refuse. Diablo smoothly plops down in the chair across from Neil and leans into it, his false body appearing remarkably physical as it somehow interacts with the physical world.

"Ahh, now that's better." Diablo says, his smile broadening as he sees the rage on Neil's face. "I'm so busy lately, I never get a chance to simply sit down, relax my legs, you know? Such a shame."

"Why are you here, bothering me?" Neil asks. "Like I said, we have nothing we need to discuss."

"Oh, but I disagree, Neil." Diablo says while leaning forward. "We have so much to talk about. We may have spoken four days ago, but that didn't really count in my eyes. I always enjoy private discussions with those of the intellectual persuasion. You're such a fascinating human, especially the way you've so smoothly taken over humanity's military and made yourself indespensible to one of the Wordsmiths. A decisive man like you is much more interesting than those smooth-brained imbeciles. Don't you agree?"

"Flattery from a demon will only piss me off." Neil fires back. "Get to the point. You test my patience."

"No time for pleasantries. I can respect that." Diablo says, leaning back in his chair once again.

Several seconds pass as both men gaze at one another in silence. Eventually, Diablo speaks.

"I could use your help, Neil Adams. I'm willing to offer terms that you should find acceptable, and possibly even highly desirable."

Neil blinks twice. Hearing these words from Diablo momentarily makes him lose his composure. He snorts derisively, stifling a laugh.

"My help. You want my help?? Pahaha! That is a funny line, Emperor of Annihilation. I did not take you for a jester."

"I'm dead serious." Diablo says, his expression turning grim. "As we speak, my main body is battling on a certain world within the Milky Way, fighting to eliminate the Plague's presence from that world. When I inevitably succeed, I will install a Demon Emperor there, crowning them a Warden and transforming them into a Cosmic powerhouse like me."

Diablo pauses for a few seconds before continuing.

"But, a problem emerges. You see, Neil, I cannot take these worlds alone. That is to say, I can, but doing so takes a very long time and is not efficient. To that end, I use my Emperors and Dukes to fight back the hordes of Kolvaxians so that I can focus on the most important step to defeating the Plague: subverting the life energy contained within each contaminated world's core."

Diablo looks off to the side and shrugs.

"But, as you may imagine, there is a problem with this model. The number of Emperors at my disposal will grow thinner and thinner over time. Already, I've Uplifted more than half a dozen. In a few weeks time, I will only have a handful of Emperors left. That will drastically slow the speed of planetary subversion to a crawl."

Neil smirks. "Sounds like a serious problem for the New Demon Empire. Best of luck in dealing with that."

"You don't get it..." Diablo says with a dramatic sigh. "This is not a 'demon problem.' This is a problem for all Sentients living in the Milky Way. Don't get me wrong, Neil, my people will reap enormous benefits if we take control of hundreds, even thousands of worlds. But our enemy is a monstrous entity that grows more powerful every day. I am attempting to tickle a Kraken to death. If I cannot outpace the Plague, it will eventually consume more worlds than I can save. It will come for humanity and the Volgrim both."

"I don't see how this is a problem for you at all." Neil says. "So what if it takes out humanity and the Volgrim? Are you telling me, with all those mighty Wardens you've created, the demons will be in danger?"

Diablo does not laugh or smile. He looks at Neil with an expression of grim intent.

"Yes. They will. The Plague is always evolving. It is constantly expanding its power. If the Plague defeats the Volgrim, it may obtain the powers contained within Founder Dosena's body. If it learns to harness the full power of its stolen Psion hosts, then that will result in a bloodbath for my remaining Wardens. They are all isolated and cannot reinforce one another. If a hundred Psion-hosts attack, they will overrun one Warden after another until the whole tower of power collapses."

Diablo pauses.

"But that is not the true dilemma, Neil Adams. The core underlying issue is that, even if the humans, demons, and Volgrim defeat the Plague, the next war our galaxy will have to face will be one I have already spoken to you about, known as Akasha's Game. In that war, the singular power of demonkind will not be enough to claim victory. Only a united front will allow our galaxy to achieve military superiority."

Neil smirks upon hearing the name of 'Akasha' once again, but he doesn't dwell on it.

"So what are you proposing, hellspawn? Do you want me to work with you? To help you beat back the Plague so you can 'protect' our galaxy? Are your intentions truly that selfless and honorable?"

"I don't expect you to like me, Neil." Diablo says. "It is clear that you have a longstanding prejudice against my people. Fair enough. You have suffered immensely because of demons and monsters alike. Not only you personally, but humanity as a whole."

Diablo continues. "I will not ask you to join me for any selfless or noble reasons. I will instead offer an exchange of benefits. Your followers would likely rebel if they believed you had become sympathetic to us putrid bloodskins, so I think it would make more sense if we formulated a more... appropriate compromise."

Neil exhales deeply through his nostrils. "I don't compromise with your kind."

"Well, perhaps you should." Diablo posits. "I am currently the Milky Way's only chance at pushing back against the Plague. My Archdemon form uniquely has the power to claw back ground the Volgrim lost to the Kolvaxian menace. Unless one of your Wordsmiths, or perhaps one of your amazing inventors comes up with a solution of their own, we need each other. I need your human military, and you need the services I can provide."

"Hahahaha!" Neil suddenly laughs. "Services? What could you possibly offer to turn me to your side?! You underestimate how deeply my hatred of bloodskins runs!"

"The first thing I can offer you, I will give freely." Diablo says. "Information. I know why the Wordsmith has chosen to scan all the humans, demons, and monsters that are allied with him."

"What?" Neil asks, suddenly very interested in what Diablo has to say. "How could you possibly know that? Are you and him already working together?"

"By no means, though I wouldn't mind approaching Jason next." Diablo says, exposing a toothy grin. "The Wordsmith's sloppiness has simply tripped him up again. You see, Neil, Jason has discovered a method to repair Humanity's Flaw. The very same one I talked about at the meeting four days ago. He just couldn't help himself and he had to immediately put his solution into action, if only to spite me..."

"Humanity's Flaw..." Neil says, his eyes flickering as he looks away. "...only The Respected and some users of the Power Gloves showed up with the color green when scanned."

"Those aren't scanning crystals." Diablo says with a soft chuckle. "Think of them more as... medical crystals. When they turn green, that only indicates a person's Flaw has already been cured. But when they turn red, it means the Flaw has just been corrected."

He pauses before adding, "and when the crystal turns red for demons and monsters, it means nothing happened at all. The entire scanning of monsters and demons is a complete misdirection meant to confuse everyone."

Neil nods along, but he looks at Diablo with deep suspicion. "How kind of you to inform me of this. Why not keep the information to yourself? And how did you find out, assuming this actually is the truth?"

"I am a Cosmic." Diablo says mysteriously. "I am able to see mana pathways in a manner you simply cannot comprehend. As for why I told you, that is obviously to express my goodwill. I will speak of this matter to nobody else. You may spread the information or keep it to yourself as you please."

"How generous of you." Neil says dryly. "But if you think this knowledge is enough to sway me..."

"Humanity's Flaw is one of its greatest tragedies." Diablo says, his tone becoming oddly sympathetic. "I know how deeply this has hurt your people, even if you do not. The demons once had a Flaw as well. Our angel oppressors would not allow us to threaten their reign, and it was only through a gift given to us by the last dragon, Leviathan, that we were able to take control of the power within ourselves."

"The power to eat souls." Neil says. "What a wonderful and not at all monstrous ability."

"I don't know what powers you humans may obtain through the repairing of your Flaw." Diablo continues, ignoring Neil's barbs. "But what I do know is that your lives will be greatly enhanced in due time. Since you do not have a dragon to empower you, your evolution will likely come more gradually. Be prepared for massive societal shifts."

Diablo lifts his hand and holds his palm face-up in a show of openness.

"Neil. Enemies need not be eternal. When a proper exchange of benefits occurs, even a blood feud can cool. If you help me take planets from the Plague, I will give you a portion of those worlds to rule as humanity sees fit. We can take back our galaxy from the Plague, and the Volgrim as well. Can you not imagine such a future? Three factions, separate but distinct, all working together to unite against a common cause? Would it not be glorious?"

"I cannot envision even a single thing you can offer me that would turn me into your ally." Neil retorts. "What good is a world taken from the Plague? I would have to plant a Warden on its soil to prevent the Plague from seizing its core again. And a Warden can only be a demon. Whether they are from your kind, or one of our supposed 'allies,' it matters not. Perhaps, if humans could become Wardens, my ear might bend itself to your offer more willingly. But I don't see you making such an offer..."

Diablo's expression darkens. "Indeed, I am unable to Uplift humans. My ability is only compatible with demons. At least as far as I know."

"Then what other reason do we have to work together?" Neil presses. "I'm still talking to you, aren't I?"

Diablo once again falls silent for a few moments.

"Where is Hope Hiro? Is he available to speak?"

"I haven't spoken to him in a few days." Neil says, divulging no other information. "Anything you say to me, I will relay to him."

"That's awfully generous of you." Diablo answers. "Perhaps in the future, I'll take you up on that offer. Well, I already knew it probably wouldn't change anything if I asked for your help. Still, I felt the need to ask anyway, if only to see how our talk might play out."

"You've certainly given me a few useful nuggets of information." Neil says with a smile. "But I'm sorry, Diablo. I don't think you and I will ever truly be capable of becoming allies."

"Who can say?" Diablo asks, before motioning with his hand. He conjures a small card with magical demonic writing infused onto its surface, then reaches out and places the card on Neil's desk. "This is my calling card. I formed it from my Cosmic power. If you should ever change your mind, or if you feel like talking, you may use this to contact me at any time."

Neil glances at the card, but doesn't reach out to pick it up.

"I'll have someone who specializes in magic take a look at it later. Are we done here?"

"Yes." Diablo answers, before standing up. "We are. My apologies for dropping in out of the blue. Next time, I'll bring a bouquet of flowers for that pretty secretary of yours."

"She'd rather drop dead than take flowers from a demon." Neil says with a bland expression. He rises from his chair, still maintaining eye contact with Diablo. "Be seeing you, Archdemon. Or rather, I hope I won't."

"Haha. Such a charming fellow." Diablo says, before reaching up to touch his forehead.

A moment later, his body fades away, but his calling card remains on the desk, faintly glowing with demonic energy...

Neil glares at the card. He deliberately refuses to touch it, not sure whether it might possess any magic that could contaminate his soul or some other nefarious power.

Instead, he touches a comm button on his desk. "Debra. Would you mind calling one of the Fairy Queens for me? Or Princess Melia. Yes, any of them will do. Thank you."

Neil sits back down at his desk. His expression shifts between a variety of emotions as he glares at Diablo's calling card.

Nothing will ever cause me to take a demon at his word. Neil thinks.

Nothing at all...

Part 548: Future Apex Predator

Inside the Hall of Heroes.

Hope Hiro manipulates a fist-sized magical crystal carefully, holding it in his hands as if it were the most precious object in the universe. He examines its brilliantly shining interior with a hint of awe, marveling at the rainbow-colors racing around inside at faster than the speed of sound. Watching them for too long makes him feel a little dizzy, but the sight is so awe-inspiring he finds it hard to tear his eyes away. Like the ancient humans who first observed the Aurora Borealis, Hope feels almost as if he is looking at a force of nature that defies common sense, a mystical force no man should be allowed to hold in the palm of his hand.

Now inside the Central Gardens, Hope and his fiance, Amelia, stand together while Solomon, Psymin Miralax, and Elizabeth Kindelmann stand across from them.

No longer does the Garden appear as simplistic and grassy as before. Four days have passed in realspace, but 400 have passed inside the Hall of Heroes.

Through natural processes, and a bit of help from the denizens of this realm, a surprising amount of foliage has grown, including plants, flowers, and vines. Ivy vines snake their way around various structures, left unchecked and allowed to grow as they please. A few ancient Heroes revived inside the Hall of Heroes do possess powers related to plants, so they sometimes nudge the vines to grow in certain ways, but otherwise everyone is more than happy to let the place become greener at its own pace.

"This crystal looks incredible." Hope says to Elizabeth Kindelmann. "Will it work?"

Elizabeth rests a hand on her hip. She waves the other hand around, emphasizing her uncertainty. "It might, but it also might not. I am no master of temporal physics. I had to rely heavily on Miss Psymin's counsel to guide my powers. If I didn't have access to your Wordsmithing, I'd never have been able to complete the Dilation Crystal, no matter how much I wanted to do so."

"It will function." Psymin says, her robotic voice still as uncanny as ever. "Confidence threshold. High."

Hope looks at Solomon for confirmation. The old man slowly nods, but he doesn't appear nearly as certain as Psymin.

"The artifact... should work." Solomon says, keeping the pace of his words measured. "But we are dealing with a physics conundrum nobody among the Volgrim have ever been able to solve. Time Dilation Sickness is a severe problem that can result in instantaneous death. If the crystal doesn't work, then... you might..."

He trails off, allowing the others to draw their own conclusions for his words.

Amelia's expression turns ugly. She chews her lip and holds onto Hope's arm. "I don't know. We should test it on someone else first."

"Who?" Hope asks. "There aren't many biological entities living here who would suffice as a replacement. It's just you, me, Psymin here, and-"

Hope pauses, and his eyes turn down. His expression becomes complicated.

"Unacceptable." Psymin immediately says. "My people. Captured. Prisoners. Not test subjects."

Amelia's eyes light up. "Now hold on just a second! I'm sure there's at least a couple unimportant nobodies we could use among the Volgrim in stasis. Just pick a random guy who never accomplished much! Hope is one of only two Wordsmiths. His life is incomparably precious compared to some no-name Volgrim!"

Psymin's eyes remain as cold as the abyss. She does not flare up with rage, but she does look at Amelia with a faint but unmistakable murderous edge.

"Your words. Watch them." Psymin warns. "I am not. Helpless."

For a brief moment, the air between the group seems to chill by a few degrees. Amelia opens her mouth to say something, but when she looks into Psymin's eyes, she loses her nerve and looks away, feeling an inexplicable fear swell within her chest.

"None of that talk." Hope says, quickly stepping in to defuse the situation. "If I need to test on individuals other than me, I can just bring... I don't know, monsters or demons to the Hall of Heroes. Those Volgrim are ones I captured who came from a Black Level world. Even the lowest of them is probably a super genius compared to any average human."

Psymin turns her gaze away from Amelia to Hope. Her eyes subtly soften.

"Monsters. Demons. Acceptable test subjects."

"Yes, I agree." Solomon says, gesturing toward the Dilation Crystal in Hope's hands. "Let us not tempt fate just yet, my boy. Grab a few goblins off the surface and bring them to us. We'll leave them here for a few days to adjust to the temporal dilation, then we'll send them back using the crystal's power. If a mishap occurs… well, at least it won't be to you."

Hope frowns. "Goblins have been mostly good to humanity. Demons have not. Maybe we should test on some low-ranking demons first…"

Amelia interrupts that idea. "Demon might be humanity's enemy, but do you really want to ruin the atmosphere by bringing a bunch of Demon Imps or Grunts to the Hall of Heroes?"

Hope glances around the beautiful garden. Not far away, he sees Moses, Aaron, Jepthath, and other Heroes randomly sitting around, talking to one another like old friends and comrades as they rest upon boulders, chairs, or amidst patches of flowers, all of them genuinely having a good time. He can only imagine what 100,000 years of solitude would do to these ancient men and women's psyches, and how much they would hate seeing demons in the flesh again.

"…Goblins it is." Hope concludes.

Not long after, Hope closes his eyes and focuses his mind as he begins to speak several Words of Power in a row.

"Let's see… what Goblins do I know? Who can I find easily? Hmm… Locate. Detect. Find. Search…"

He pauses for a few moments as names and faces begin to trickle into his mind.

"Sure… that one will do," Hope says, with his eyes still closed. "And that one, that one… Teleport! Teleport! Teleport!"

Three flashes of light ignite in the space between Hope and the others. Seconds later, three goblins materialize inside the Gardens, all of them looking more than a little confused and disoriented.

"Huh?" One of the goblins says, the tallest of the three, a fellow wearing yellow animal-skins with half a dozen golden earrings lining each of his ears. "What me doing? How me get here? Where grass-place??"

Another goblin, the shortest of the three, wears what can only be described as vaguely feminine clothing, but they appear ratty and worn-out. She turns out to be the only female goblin of the three, and completely unashamed regarding her raggedy clothes.

"Not know..." The female says. "Me dig in mine, now stand in flower field. No make sense!"

Finally, the third goblin is neither the shortest nor the tallest of the three. He wears well-maintained clothes that make him appear refined and elegant. Not only does he sport a sharp red and blue tunic, but pants of the same colors and shoes with curled tips that all together indicate he's not as simple as his brother and sister.

That third goblin hesitantly looks around at the tall folk towering above them.

"Hm? Hope Hiro? Solomon? Have you brought us here?"

Hope nods. "Welcome, visitors. I am humanity's Hero, Hope Hiro. This here is Solomon, my fiance Amelia, Elizabeth Kindelmann, and a Volgrim guest, Psymin Miralax. As for the reason I've brought you here..."

Hope launches into a simplified explanation of temporal mechanics, but quickly realizes the goblins are not quite understanding his words. At the same time, the third goblin directs a strange look Psymin's way before quickly averting his eyes to focus only on Hope. Nobody notices this look except for perhaps Psymin herself, but she says nothing about it.

"Alright," Hope says eventually. "I'm guessing you guys don't really understand, but you don't need to, either. I'm going to have your bodies adjust to the temporal dilation here for a few days, then I'll send you back to realspace with the crystal in hand and see what happens."

The first male goblin scratches his head. "We get foods?"

"Foods?" The female says. "Meats? Can we gets meats? Me hungry."

"Are we in any significant danger?" The third goblin asks. "All this talk of temporal dilation sounds serious."

Hope looks at the third goblin for a moment. "Oh... that's right, you're Grima, aren't you? I wasn't really paying attention, but your name sounded familiar, so I picked you. You work at the hospital on Tarus II..."

Grima quickly bows his head. "Indeed, it is me. I am but a humble receptionist, Master Hiro. It is wonderful to see you in good health once more. Some were beginning to spread rumors of an illicit nature, given you have not been seen in several days."

Hope glances at Solomon for a moment before returning his gaze to the top of Grima's bowed head. "Never really thought about it before, but you're pretty well-spoken for a goblin."

Grima raises his head and frowns. "Jokes like that could be considered rude, Master Hiro. My clan comes from a noble line of learned goblins. We are not like the... others of our kind."

Grima doesn't make any overt gestures, but his eyes do glance at the other two goblins beside him. Luckily, they're too stupid to realize he's just insulted them.

"Yeah, Grima big smart!" The female says, running her fingers down Grima's back with a lurid expression. "Me like big smart!"

Grima's face crinkles up, but otherwise he doesn't protest her touch out loud.

"I see. So it's like that." Hope says, shrugging. "Well, whatever. I'll just send you back last, Grima. Probably send that fellow beside you first, then the woman."

"As long as I can be of service to the great Hero, I shall do whatever you ask of me." Grima says, bowing humbly.

Hope smiles. The goblin certainly seems out of place next to his male and female comrades, but his mannerisms make him a lot more tolerable to Hope's sensibilities. If the two idiots die, Hope thinks to himself he wouldn't mind, but he'd rather not sacrifice Grima needlessly.

"I'll take care of you." Hope says, patting Grima's head. "You're in no danger."

Hope creates a special holding area at the edge of the Gardens to ensure the Goblins can't wander around and gather any intelligence. He informs them that they're not guests, but essentially prisoners while they're here, as this is a top secret area. The two idiot goblins don't really get the point, but Grima does. Eventually, Hope shrugs and gives them some random knick-knacks to keep them occupied for a few days, as well as food, toiletries, and bedding.

Fortunately, goblins are more than capable of dealing with intense boredom. So long as they have something to build or holes and caves to dig, they usually don't care about the concept of 'having fun.'

After Hope leaves with Amelia to go deal with another matter, Solomon and Elizabeth head off to manage their own affairs.

Psymin starts to leave, but hesitates just a short while. She lingers nearby and seemingly looks at the goblins with a hint of curiosity, but unbeknownst to any of the humans, she and Grima make a series of quick, barely noticeable body and hand movements that communicate a wealth of information.

Satisfied, Psymin continues on her way, no longer communicating with the goblin in any other manner so as to keep a low profile.

After she, too, departs, Grima settles down to await the events of the coming few days.

Interesting. The supposed goblin thinks. So this place is called the Hall of Heroes. A time dilation factor of 100-to-1. The Hero is presently unable to leave. The reason he brought this one and the other two goblins here is to assess whether his new crystal invention will allow him to depart this dimension without suffering ill effects.

Grima slowly strokes his chin while a cunning light flickers in his eyes.

The Founders must learn of this information. Grima concludes.

On the world of Tarus II, no fewer than five minutes after Neil Adams concludes his discussion with Diablo, a faint figure levitates in the Void, more than a hundred kilometers above the planet's surface. A singular individual of immense power, yet nowhere near capable of threatening the Archdemon with her abilities.

Creator Demila.

The powerful 7th Level Psion levitates in place, having observed the entire meeting between Neil Adams and Diablo. A look of intense interest rests upon her face. Her figure remains unseen to the natural universe as she hides herself within a spatial tear -an ability many High Psions learn to separate themselves from their lesser peers- and contemplates what she has just witnessed.

Humanity's Flaw. I have not heard of this concept before. Demila thinks. It seems profound. Whatever this 'flaw' is, it seems like something the Founders will want to know about. I must alert them of the human's activities at once.

Demila's body shifts.

In an instant, she blasts out of Tarus II's gravity well and rockets into the Void, traveling at hundreds of times the speed of light.

While her speed is truly astounding, in the grand scheme of Warp travel, it is nothing much, and nowhere near as impressive as Founder Dosena's void traversing capabilities. At any other time, she would opt to use the nearest Warpgate to return to Volgarius, but right now, she feels a certain degree of subterfuge is necessary. Therefore, she opts not to use the Tarus II Warpgate, but instead one a few hundred lightyears away, on a different world unclaimed by the Plague.

While this detour will cost her a few days, it is nothing much to an entity as long-lived as Demila, who has endured for well over a million star-cycles. In her mind, such a brief period of time is barely even a blink of an eye.

Demila races across the Void, exiting the Tarus system's outer reaches within only a few minutes.

As she moves, she suddenly feels a disturbance within her mind, causing her to slow to a halt and freeze in place.

Demila stops and looks around. Her eyes narrow as she feels as though something is watching her.

[Don't be so alarmed.] A female voice abruptly says, making Demila's expression turn ugly. [It's only me. I woke up after observing something interesting.]

[Parasite.] Demila growls. [You should have stayed asleep.]

[Oh, come now,] Desire says softly, her voice loving and sweet like a succubus. [Demila dearest, I only want what you want.]

[You want what your master wants!] Demila hisses. [We are not allies. Stay your tongue, she-devil.]

Desire chuckles softly, but doesn't respond.

Thinking that perhaps the parasite in her head has once again gone inert, Demila hesitantly starts to accelerate again before rapidly accelerating back to her peak speed.

But not five minutes later, Desire irritates her by opening her figurative mouth...

[Demila, dearest. Where exactly do you think you're going?]

[I am returning to the Founders!] Demila exclaims. [I hold information they MUST hear!]

[Heh heh heh.] Desire giggles. [Is that so. Do you even know the value of what you've acquired?]

Demila frowns. [I do not. Humanity seems to have 'fixed a flaw', a notion Diablo seemed keen on keeping hidden. Now your words imply it is indeed a Founder-level secret. Therefore they must be informed!]

[Humanity's Flaw is extremely significant.] Desire says slowly, affirming her thoughts. [But... this needy way you worship your Founders... oh, Demila darling, it's so wretched to my sensibilities. You're like a beaten puppy clinging to its abusive owner, hoping to receive a treat. Why must you insist on rejecting your true self in order to fawn over beings who will never grant you the respect you deserve?]

Demila's expression darkens, but she does not slow down. She pushes herself to accelerate faster.

[Shut up!]

[Ah, but I don't want to, love.] Desire whispers. [I... I care for you, you know. We've been together only a short while, but I can look at your situation from the perspective of an outsider. Don't you think it's rather disgusting how the lauded Second Founder always disrespects and insults you? Don't you think you deserve better after a million years of servitude to the Volgrim Empire?]

Demila continues to push herself, but inside, her stomach turns slightly queasy at Desire's words.

[Dammit. I told you to SHUT your mouth!] Demila roars.

[I refuse. Categorically.] Desire says. [Demila. The information you are about to freely hand over to your 'superiors' is inestimably valuable. Humanity's Flaw is as important to their ascension as demonkind's once was. Before the great dragon known as Leviathan uplifted the demon species, they were shackled and limited to the power of the weakest mortals, forced to live in the forms of mere imps for all eternity. After he granted them a sliver of his power, the demons rose to the heights they have today.]

She pauses.

[The humans can now accomplish similar, if not greater feats. But by telling the Founders, you are inviting a catastrophe upon humanity. Founder Unarin will not remain quiet while two Apex Species rise up in unison to obliterate his Empire. The Plague is already fearsome enough. The Milky Way does not have the resources to sustain four Apex Species ripping it apart from the inside.]

[If fixing their Flaw will truly make humanity as formidable as you say, then I now know I have to tell the Founders even more quickly than I originally planned.] Demila says, her expression becoming grim.

[I do not disagree.] Desire says slowly. [I think you should inform the Founders.]

Demila's body jerks slightly. [What? You do?! But you said...]

[Do not confuse my intentions.] Desire says, her words taking on a sinister edge. [You are too naive, Creator Demila. One million years old, but utterly lacking in craftiness. You are nothing more than a puppet doing as its masters command. You lack the intuition and intellect required to break free of your shackles. But isn't that why I am here?]

Demila finally starts to slow down. She drops to merely half the speed of light as she looks within herself, once again trying but failing to gaze upon Desire's true form.

[Speak plainly, parasite.] Demila says, frowning deeply. [What do you expect me to do? Tell the Founders? Not tell them?]

[First, I would like you to use the brain the Creator gave you.] Desire says dryly. [Knowledge is power, Demila. Giving it away freely at the first possible moment weakens your position. Instead, you should accumulate secrets and save them for the most... opportune moment. Only Jason Hiro, Neil Adams, and Diablo know of Humanity's Flaw being fixed, along with yourself. Everyone has a vested interest in keeping this information a secret... including you.]

[You already said the humans could threaten the Volgrim Empire now that their Flaw has been repaired.] Demila replies, frowning as she tries to follow Desire's logic. [That means every cycle I withhold this information, the humans will grow more formidable.]

[You should keep this information to yourself... for now.] Desire says slowly. [But that does not mean you will hold it to your chest forever, Demila dearest. Because as it just so happens, I have recently seen a way for you to fulfill your heart's truest desire while also becoming the Volgrim Empire's greatest individual, perhaps even more respected than Founder Dosena herself. If you listen to me, I can make all your wishes come true.]

[I'm not that easily manipulated.] Demila says. [You'll have to give me proof, parasite. How could hiding humanity's secrets benefit not only myself, by the Volgrim Empire as well?]

For some reason, Demila suddenly gets a distinct visual impression of a hideous creature grinning evilly from deep within her soul. Desire's tone becomes sinister as she chuckles softly.

[Heh heh heh... because I know of an ancient demonic method to empower you, Demila. A technique that will make you so formidable, not even the Second Founder will be able to oppose you. And when you use this ability, you will become too powerful for her to suppress. They will never again laugh at you. They will never again mock you. They will fear you, they will be filled with awe by your presence, and eventually... they will worship you. Once you tap into this strength, once you do as I say... you will become the most powerful Psion to have ever lived.]

Demila's body shudders again. She desperately tries to resist Desire's siren song, but the hunger in her heart, the need for validation, ripples unceasingly over and over, becoming stronger with each reverberation.

She finally slows to a stop, no longer feeling the need to continue with her original plan.

[How... how would this technique... empower me?] Demila asks softly.

[It's quite simple, actually.] Desire says. [You see, all you have to do is...]

Desire slowly and methodically outlines a plan to her host, a plan so outrageous that Demila's pupils repeatedly contract and expand, over and over, her heart suffering terrible blows.

[No. No! That's unthinkable! That's evil!] Demila screams. [I would become a monster!]

[A monster? Perhaps.] Desire says. [An abomination. A horror not even the Void would find pleasant to look upon. But even you have to admit that the situation is looking quite dire for your beloved Empire. Do you think the Second Founder can hold on alone when Diablo is raising an army of Middle Cosmics? Only by uplifting yourself to the rank of Apex Cosmic will your people be able to achieve complete and total dominion of the galaxy.]

She pauses.

[And only then will you be able to protect the galaxy from the horrors lurking within the Void. The true enemies that have yet to show themselves...]

Demila's last bit of resistance hangs on by the thinnest of threads. [What about you? What about the demons? If the Volgrim obtain total control, then your people...]

['My' people? Whoever do you mean?] Desire asks sarcastically. [Master Gressil does not care about the lives of his fellow demons. And you will become his greatest ally. Why would he fear the Volgrim Empire when a friend like you will ultimately be running things? If you wish to exterminate the demons, you will be able to do so at your whim. And if not... then there won't be any problem, will there?]

Demila's body goes limp. She finally loses her last bit of resolve against Desire's tactics. She looks out at the void, seemingly watching as her targeted Warpgate disappears from sight.

Then, she turns around and starts heading back to Tarus II.

[Your argument is horrifying, yet sound and logical. This is a time of war. If a few billion must suffer immeasurably to save trillions of lives, then so be it. I will become the Milky Way's mightiest entity.]

Desire's grin widens, ever so slightly.

[Yes. Perhaps even its Ruler...]

Part 549: Bubblegum Battlesuit

Inside the Psion soul-holding facility located on a world known as Veladoria, Confessor Vulpanix stands stiffly inside an observation room while being watched by a pair of Changeling scientists. The two Changelings are known as Remi and Dalis, and are extremely highly-ranked individuals among their kind. Stationed permanently on the world of Veladoria, they have lived here for well over 500,000 cycles and have never left.

Remi is a blue-skinned Changeling with bright red eyes who wears a somewhat ornate purple uniform, showing they are of a higher station than their peer. As for Dalis, they are the lower-ranked of the two, though the difference is not particularly high. They have onyx-black skin with pale white bulbous eyes, vaguely resembling a giant housefly from Earth. Dalis may be the lower-ranked of the two, but they are still a highly respected expert in their scientific fields, or else they would not be stationed on such a prestigious facility.

The two individuals watch with rapt attention, as they always do, while the High Psion inside the testing chamber breathes heavily, exhausted from the last hour of hard work.

Confessor Vulpanix focuses her mind. She closes her eyes for a moment, then opens them, conjuring a shaky image of a psionic sword, one with a curved blade that vaguely resembles a scimitar from Earth. However, this blade appears rather alien in origin, with a round handle its wielder must hold in a peculiar, non-standard way.

She only manages to summon the projection of psionic energy for a few seconds before it destabilizes and breaks apart, causing her to stumble forward and collapse to her knees.

[Aaaah...] Vulpanix thinks, her words projecting outward weakly.

"You have performed admirably." Remi says, its expression giving away no clues as to its inner thoughts. "This one is impressed by your recuperation speed. When you first started, you were able to perform a few feats of the 2nd Level of Psionics. However, it is clear to this one that your performance has quickly degraded over time. If you continue pushing yourself, you will only harm your foundation."

"This one concurs." Dalis affirms. "To be able to regain so much of your Psionic Potential in only four rotational cycles is highly admirable, Confessor. However, your rehabilitation cannot be rushed. The Psions who attempt to return to active duty too quickly always suffer in the end."

[I am… not… like my peers.] Vulpanix says, not even looking behind herself toward the observation window. [I am better than them. I learned faster. I will recover faster. I achieved the rank of 7th Level in record time, setting a new bar for my peers to follow. I will not stay locked in here like a cripple for tens of orbital cycles!]

"You are free to leave at any time of your choosing." Dalis says. "This one does not appreciate the implication that we are holding you prisoner, Confessor Vulpanix. Please exercise better judgment when speaking."

Vulpanix immediately thinks to say something snappy, but when she turns to look back at the two emotionless Changelings, she loses her nerve. She lowers her eyes, then looks away.

[…My apologies, seniors. I did not mean to imply that was the case. I spoke without thinking. Please forgive me.]

"You have suffered a terrible loss." Remi says smoothly, playing the diplomat as always. "It is not unexpected for you to feel slighted or to lose control of your emotions once in a while. This one has seen many incredible prodigies of the Psionic Arts over the ages. Even as far back as before the Great Wars, this one witnessed countless gifted Psions lose themselves to despair following their First Death. Your psyche is formidable enough that you will not suffer the same fates as those before you. This one believes you will recover in record time."

"But do be careful not to push yourself too hard." Dalis butts in, looking at their peer with an indescribable expression. "The war is unending, Confessor. Better to have you return to the frontlines late than for you to severely injure your Psionic Seed and never recover your full potential."

Vulpanix slowly nods. [I contemplate, and I comprehend. I will proceed with more caution, seniors. Thank you for sharing your wisdom.]

The two Changelings nod.

[It is our pleasure.] Dalis says. [Take a break for now, Confessor. We have many other Psions to observe, and we have measured your therapy progress to a satisfactory degree. We will resume therapy in twelve standard time-units.]

After resolving things with their junior, the two researchers send Vulpanix out, then bring in another Psion to replace her. The male Psion levitates inward on a hover-chair, unable to walk due to his badly weakened state.

"Praetor Revan, you may begin." Dalis says. "But please do not exhaust yourself. You have only just revived and as such cannot be considered to be in a good condition to tap into your Psionic Seed."

The exhausted Psion nods heavily at the Changeling researchers. [This one contemplates... comprehends...]

He begins using his Psionics as best as he can, but he barely manages to make a few objects in the chamber wobble around. Unlike Vulpanix, who was easily able to wield the full power of a 1st Level Psion and a portion of the 2nd Level, Praetor Revan is far weaker and cannot put up a good show for his seniors.

Even so, neither of the Changelings judges him for his weak performance. After all, Vulpanix was granted a precious Hyper Revival Stimulant and Revan was not, so her Seed will assuredly return to its optimal state sooner.

"How unfortunate." Dalis says, looking away from the chamber's current occupant. "We are losing Psions faster every cycle. By the time Vulpanix returns to duty, two or three more High Psions will have fallen. The rate of attrition is increasing over time."

"This war is a battle for our survival." Remi says sagely. "It is a tragedy that this one was able to witness the fall of the Sentinels but might not live to see the destruction of the Plague. This one fears not even the Founders can grant us salvation. The Volgrim Empire is likely to lose this time..."

"What of the Archdemon?" Dalis asks. "He has made many bold moves of late. He even took the Eldanis System away from our control, yet we did not stop him. For the Founders to tolerate such an affront to their dignity, the situation must be even more hopeless than we imagine."

"The Archdemon possesses a method to push back, and potentially even defeat the Plague." Remi replies. "It is possible the Founders are considering an alliance. Better to fall behind the demons while living to tell the tale of our people to future generations than for us to become refugees fleeing into the Void. Other galaxies will be far more hostile to our kind than the Milky Way ever could..."

"An alliance with demons." Dalis mutters. "How far our Empire has fallen..."

The two of them continue testing several other High Psions, then they retire for the day, heading over to the cafeteria to engage in shared nutritional supplements. Both of them procure softened loaves of Nutrient Matter, which they then proceed to sit down and eat at a table.

The two individuals silently consume their nutrients, neither complaining about the complete lack of taste and texture, nor enjoying it in the slightest. They have eaten these nutrient loaves countless times in a row and no longer care about discussing the chore out loud.

In the end, despite their lofty positions, they are merely servants of the Founders.

Just as they are about to finish eating, a certain Technopath walks into the room. Both Changelings notice the newcomer and quickly stand up, turning to face him out of respect.

"Celestial Designer Goldis." Dalis says. "How may these juniors be of service?"

"Be at ease." Goldis says, lifting his aged hand up to reveal the soft and loose skin hanging from his arm. "I merely wished to inquire about the status of Confessor Vulpanix. How is her recovery proceeding?"

"Better than expected." Remi says. "As we noted in our report, the Psion prodigy possesses a hardy psyche and a robust foundation. This one believes she will be able to return to active duty within one orbital cycle."

"This one concurs." Dalis adds. "Confessor Vulpanix is already displaying the ability to tap into the 2nd Level. This is certainly out of the ordinary, given she has only returned to consciousness for a mere four Rotational Cycles."

"Mmm, that child is not bad. Not bad at all." Goldis says. "Ah... such a shame, though. She has the potential to make it to the 9th Level, but little Dosena won't allow that to happen."

Dalis blinks.

"Founder Dosena... won't let her?"

"She won't allow any of the Psions to reach that level." Goldis says, sighing to himself with melancholy. "Of course, I feel as if perhaps the old traditions should be relaxed in these trying times, but little Dosena won't listen to an old relic like me."

"That is... the first this one has heard of such a matter." Dalis says, glancing at their comrade. "Remi, were you informed of this before?"

"This one heard of such a restriction many thousands of cycles ago." Remi says casually. "This one does not question the wisdom of the Founders. If they are restricting Psions from advancing past the 8th Level, there is likely a reason behind their actions."

"Eh." Goldis grunts. "It's not as deep as you think. That brat of a Second Founder is just afraid. Hmph. She doesn't want to return to the era of rapid ascensions, when there were twenty 9th Level Psions all fighting one another for supremacy. Better to make things simple, keep herself in charge."

He folds his arms behind his back and nods, not thinking much of how these words are presently shocking the wits out of his junior.

"So... so many 9th Level Psions?" Dalis asks, visibly baffled. "This one was under the impression that at the Volgrim Empire's peak, there were only six such individuals who reigned."

"Six?" Goldis asks, before leaning his head back. "Ah. That was only at the end of the Great Wars. By that point, the Sentinels had killed most of the others. It was only because of Unarin's bold thinking and deep cunning that Founder Dosena and the other Elder Psions were able to ambush and subdue the Sentinel Leader, Mulgris. After they locked down Mulgris's programming, the Seventh Great War finally came to an end..."

Goldis's eyes drift away. He mutters something to himself about a 'Gatekeeper Protocol' before reorienting his thoughts toward his juniors once more.

"Mmm. In any case, the limitations exist for a reason. With the revelation that Diablo has found a way to mass-produce Middle Cosmics, I wonder if little Dosena will change her mind, hmm? Bah, it doesn't matter. This relic has no way of changing our lauded Second Founder's mind. She will do as she wishes."

He waves a tentacle whimsically in the air, as if the matter has nothing to do with him.

"Senior..." Dalis says slowly. "You should not speak so casually about the Second Founder. What if she learns of your words?"

"Hmm? So what if she does?" Goldis asks, narrowing his eyes at the younger of the two Changelings. "It was me who operated on her following that dreadful ambush... I took care of her and nursed her back to health. If it weren't for me, she might have given up on her Path and lost the will to live. That brat won't forget her filial piety even if a thousand Apex Cosmics demand she cast me to the abyss. She's a grateful brat, if nothing else."

"The Second Founder was defeated?" Dalis asks, shocked by Goldis's words. "But... this one was under the impression-"

"Everyone loses a battle once in a while." Goldis says nonchalantly, waving his hands in the air. "It's no wonder she goes to the trouble of blocking other Psions from reaching the 9th Level, given what happened on that dreadful day. But then again, back then, Ascending to the highest ranks took a very... different form."

He pauses for a moment, then shakes his head.

"Never mind. I'd rather not discuss such dreadful deeds. You two should finish consuming your nutrient loaves. I've other matters to attend."

"Thank you for taking time to speak with us." Remi says, bowing their head politely. "May the Founders guide your path."

Goldis offers some perfunctory words of his own before slowly ambling away. After he leaves, Dalis looks at their superior with wondrous eyes.

"The Second Founder lost a battle. This one simply cannot conceive of such a thing."

"If Celestial Designer Goldis will not speak of the matter, then neither will this one." Remi says dryly. "This one will be returning to their quarters to finish their nutrients. Good day."

Remi departs, leaving Dalis behind to silently consume what remains of their food.

"This one did not realize the depths of their ignorance." Dalis mutters to itself. "The Volgrim history is truly rich beyond compare..."

"Yo, grandma! How ya been?" Bael asks, grinning stupidly at the apparition of an ancient Archangel as she pauses her hammering to scowl at him.

"Art thou here merely to bother me?" Archangel Camael asks. "Leave, Bael. I have work to do."

"Aw, c'mon, grandma!" Bael crows. "I just wanted to say hi. Why you gotta be so mean? I actually saw an old friend of yours recently. Some angel granny who I thought was you for a bit, but she turned out to be someone else."

Camel frowns. "Another Archangel?"

"Nah. Don't think she was an Archangel." Bael says, scratching his head. "Probably just a... a normal one, I guess? She kinda poofed out of nowhere and then she flew away to beat the tar outta Mephisto. He became a Demon Dee-tee, see, so he was all like strong and stuff. He even slapped me around a little bit- can you believe it?? Freakin' JERK! Who does that prick think he is?"

Camael winces under the barrage of verbal diarrhea Bael sends her way. Unable to parse what he's saying, she decides he's just making up random stories, so she resumes her hammering as she forges a new artifact.

"I see. Well, do not let me stop thee. Be on thy way, Bael."

"Oh, okay. Thanks for talkin', granny! Nice chat we've had!" Bael chirps before turning and sauntering away.

As he heads back into the depths of Eden, leaving Camael behind, Bael saunters forward with a chirp and a whistle, adjusting his Mjolnir-belt as he marches to the beat of his own drum.

"Are you having a good time?" Ose asks, her spectral form watching him with dulled eyes.

"Eeeyup! Damn straight!" Bael says. "Deebs is back, Mephisto got his shit kicked in, and now we're workin' on all kinds of fun stuff. OOOOH Ose! OSE!! Can I play with the sword today? Pleasepleasepleasepleaaaaase!"

Ose's already dim eyes become even duller. "It's not a toy, Bael. It's a powerful artifact. You are not allowed to 'play' with it."

"But it looks so BADASS!" Bael exclaims. "I never thought about it before, but swords are kinda sick, ya know? A flail is great too, but sometimes a fella just needs to have a big fuck-off sword stuck to his belt if he wants to look cool."

Ose aggressively rolls her eyes. "The Tempest Blade is not a toy. It's a weapon of mass destruction. I don't trust you to wield it without killing yourself."

"Pft. C'mon, do you think I'm some kinda little bitch?" Bael snarks. "I'm taking the sword, Ose!"

"No you're not!" Ose retorts.

"Yeah, I AM!" Bael repeats, turning to head down one of Eden's many halls. As he walks, a large metallic bipedal robot steps into his path, blocking the hallway ahead of him.

"Bael. Duke of Pain. Have you finished speaking to the Archangel?" ADAM asks, looking at Bael with its cold, automaton eyes.

"Uh, yup. Just got done yapping with grandma." Bael says, giving the creepy robot a big thumbs up. "Decided it's time I uh, I learned how to uh, uh, practice with that cool zappy sword I saw yesterday."

Having been back inside of Eden for four days now, Bael has dealt with a few things Ose wanted him to do, but now it's only a matter of time before her plans enter the next phase. As for sitting around waiting with his thumb up his butt, that doesn't appeal to Bael at all. He'd rather have some fun and play with a cool sword, but alas, ADAM seems to understand Ose's mindset and sees right through Bael's ploy.

"You are not a suitable wielder of the Tempest Blade." ADAM says, looking at Bael coldly. "Your inability to manipulate magic means you will suffer serious injuries if you touch the sword. However, it just so happens that someone else is currently practicing with it. You may observe her if you wish."

Bael's excited smile slips away. "Aw, c'mon man! I can totally handle a stupid sword. I made Big Bonk submit!"

"Mjölnir is a living artifact with basic traits of sentience inherent in its design. The Tempest Blade is not. Your tactics will not suffice. It possesses no sentience you can tame."

"I... I mean..." Bael says dumbly. "I won't know til I try!"

"You will not 'try' anything." ADAM says simply. "Now follow me. You will enjoy what I am about to show you."

Lacking a way to overpower the shockingly strong former Protectorate, Bael simply lowers his head and gives up. With his shoulders slumped, he follows behind ADAM as the robot silently guides him down multiple hallways, down a few flights of stairs, and past other mechanized drones and support robots until they reach a large indoor training area.

There, Bael sees something he never expected.

Abby, the Baron of Happy Thoughts, wears a striking white-and-pink robotic suit not unlike the Matriarch Armor, but designed from slightly lower-end materials and with a striking emphasis on 'looking cute'. The fact it has a giant pink heart on the chestplate makes it clear to even the dumbest observer that Abby must have had it custom-designed to fit her personal aesthetics.

Inside the arena, Abby faces off against six battle-bots, each of them bipedal like ADAM and wielding various types of high-end melee weaponry. One of the bots holds a bo staff in its grasp, while another wields an electrified katana, and another grips a massive battle axe.

Because Abby's face is visible through her helmet visor, Bael is easily able to identify her. "Huh? What the heck? Since when is Abby a fighting type? And why does SHE get to play with the zappy sword??"

The robotic enemies stab, swing, slash, and bash at Abby, but she dodges their attacks with deft precision, moving far faster and more nimbly than Bael ever thought she was capable of doing. She leaps into the air, somersaults, and twists her body to slip between the gaps in two attacks while slashing her thunderous longsword downward, slicing the axe-wielding battle-bot in half.

Then Abby slithers around, sliding like a snake as she skates over to the katana-wielding bot. It spins around and snaps the sword in a wide arc, aiming to behead her, but she retaliates by carefully deflecting the katana with her Tempest Blade, angling it away and causing the battle-bot to momentarily trip over itself. Then she shoulder-checks it and sends the robot tumbling before pouncing on it and impaling the Tempest Blade through its helmet into the floor. Massive waves of lightning rupture outward, electrifying the other bots and slowing them down while Abby yanks the sword back out and charges into battle once more.

Five minutes later, as Bael watches in stunned silence, Abby concludes the exercise having only taken a few minor hits. Her armor sports a few cuts and dents, but otherwise appears to still be in fighting condition.

She walks out of the arena and immediately spots ADAM and Bael.

"Ohmygosh! HI Bael!!" Abby squeaks excitedly, yanking her helmet off to bat her eyes at him, or rather, the body he's possessing. "Did you see all that? I've been practicing a lot these last few days!"

"You were awesome, toots!" Bael says. "I didn't know you could fight like that! When did an Oracle like you become so kick-butt?"

"Ah, well, that is to say..." Abby coughs, suddenly appearing awkward. "I, I mean, I did do the fighting, right? It was me... but the uh, the armor... well let's just say Ose's armor is wicked cool! It kinda... helped me a lot."

"Huh? The armor did?" Bael asks, squinting at the very girly and cutesy pink battle-armor Abby is wearing. "How?"

"It's, um... I don't know!" Abby says helplessly. "You know... it uses technology or something! It makes me think faster, and move faster... and some other stuff..."

"The Personal Automated Battlesuit uses cerebral mapping technology to enhance the user's thinking and reaction speeds." ADAM says, jumping in to explain. "It uses the same artificial intelligence technologies that guide my cerebral simulator. Thus, Abby can perform at roughly the same level as myself so long as she is wearing the PAB."

ADAM pauses to look at Abby meaningfully. "However, your actual fighting capabilities are inadequate. You lack any sort of killing sense. Multiple times, the PAB guided your blade when it should not have needed to."

Abby grimaces. "Yeah. I can tell the armor is doing all the hard work..."

"Even so, your combat results are impressive." ADAM continues. "Manufacturing Protectorates like me would require a vast quantity of high and low Exotics. But making armor 'shells' for demons to wear is comparatively simple. For a Baron of such poor fighting capability to do battle against multiple Duke-class opponents and come out on top is nothing short of incredible. When this technology reaches the hands of the other demons, it will uplift the common masses into super-soldiers."

"Whoa, whoa." Bael says, holding up his hands. "Whaddya mean? We're giving this stuff out now? I thought it was 'sposed to be a big secret."

"That is why you returned to Eden, is it not?" ADAM inquires. "Master Ose intends to finally distribute the promised military equipment that will begin to uplift demonkind to the next tier of existence."

"Oh. Wow, I didn't know Ose had plans like that." Bael says sheepishly. "Guess it sounds cool."

"The problem with demonkind is that it possesses quantity but not quality. We are unable to elevate demons in the way Glinch can, but we can grant the weaker members of our species far superior strength. In this way, even our Grunts and Lords will be capable of threatening the Plagueborn."

"Yeah, yeah, sure. Sounds good to me." Bael says, not really caring one way or the other. "So anyway, hey Abby! Can I play with the super cool zappy sword??"

Abby frowns at Bael. "That's... not a good idea, big guy. This sword is really dangerous. Took me a full day before I could use it without my hand going numb. It's better if you don't."

"Indeed." ADAM adds. "Besides, Abby still has a round of combat against multiple powerful exobeasts to fulfill before she is done for the day. You may stay and watch if you wish, Duke of Pain."

"I do?" Abby complains. "Aw man, I'm all sweaty and gross now though! I need to go take a shower... OH hey, Bael, why don't you come and take a shower with me?! Or even a bubble-bath! It'll be tons of fun!"

"Uh, nah." Bael says, waving his hand. "Baths suck. I'll pass."

"What!" Abby exclaims. "Bael... Bael, you've been staying clean, right?"

"Stop trying to trick me, woman." Bael grouches. "I'm not getting in no bath or shower. I hate the water."

"Oh my devils!" Abby practically screams. "Bael, I won't let you defile Ose's perfect body by not keeping clean! Once I'm done wiping the floor with these exobeasts, I'm gonna scrub you til you're spotless!"

Bael's expression deflates. "Do we have to?"

"WE DO!"

"Aw, rats."

Part 550: Chrona Advancements

From Jason Hiro's perspective, nearly three full years have passed since he spoke to Demon Deity of Defiance, Melody. He has not remained idle in that time, but has instead worked hard alongside Fiona to continue expanding not only his arsenal, but humanity's as well.

Unseen by the rest of the galaxy, Jason has used these past 1000 days to greatly enhance his understanding of Wordsmithing. He has even made some shocking discoveries about its applications, discoveries that he decides to keep in his back pocket as an ace in the hole. He even comes to believe Hope Hiro might not know of Wordsmithing's true might...

Not only does Jason unlock secrets hidden within his Wordsmithing, but with all this extra time he also searches the galaxy, finding out new things he's never seen before. He discovers the true location of Veladoria, finally putting to rest the mystery of where the Psions hold their souls. He learns of the truth about Psions; that every High Psion has opted to place their souls in a remote location and detach them from their bodies, ultimately piloting their bodies like remote-controlled drones. If their bodies perish, they can grow new ones and return to the world of the living for a time.

He already knew some of this, due to having traveled to Veladoria in his soul form a few years ago. But compared to his fragmented knowledge from back then, the intelligence gains he's made thanks to the Spynet Sphere have been incomparable.

Jason has spied on the Volgrim more and more as the years pass, expanding to many of the primary worlds run by each of the Volgrim sub-species. In addition to Veladoria, he found another secret Psion soul-world code-named Red Forge. He found a world run almost entirely by Changelings, one which has provided him more than a few useful insights. He even managed to identify more than a dozen planets controlled exclusively by the Technopaths.

But in all this time, Jason has not yet found even a single planet outside of Volgarius itself with a single Ascended on it. Outside of Unarin, Muuxunuu, and Unarin's brother Randis, Jason hasn't found a fourth Ascended anywhere.

"They have to be hiding in a remote location." Jason mutters to himself. "But there are so many planets... this army of Unarin's could be anywhere."

Indeed, the one thing Jason has managed to confirm is that every Volgrim inherently knows that the sheer quantity of Ascended vastly, completely, and unfathomably outstrips the populations of all the other sub-species. The fact their consciousnesses reside within a galactic net owned by the Volgrim is proof of that. Unfortunately, they could be living in stasis beneath any random rocky world, inside of space stations gliding silently within the depths of the Void, or any other location.

Even after examining more than 300 planets carefully, Jason has barely scrutinized a millionth of the Milky Way's life-bearing worlds. There are simply too many to look at, with seemingly infinite void-space between them.

"It's like looking for a needle inside a billion haystacks. I just have to hope one of the Volgrim slips up eventually and reveals the location of one of these worlds. Or perhaps I need to find a way to infiltrate the Ascended Net..."

On this day, a day of no specific importance, Jason finds himself sitting atop one of the many buildings inside Chrona with his legs dangling over the edge. Not far away, the sounds of children laughing and playing drift toward his ears. Kar and Blinker's kids chase each other around with sticks, swinging at one another as they play-fight.

As for Blinker herself, she managed to recover a couple of years prior, and now she has returned back to her prime level of strength. But because of the effects of time dilation, she decides to simply stay in Chrona and not return to realspace again. The chance of meeting an ugly end is too scary for her to bear. She wouldn't want to leave her children without a mother...

Jason sits on the roof of the building for over six hours. He thinks about a lot of things, and occasionally practices with his Wordsmithing to try out his new tricks.

But eventually, he decides he's had enough. He stands up, then jumps to the ground below, landing lightly on his toes as if he were a feather.

Jason walks toward a new facility located on the western edge of Chrona's only city. As he approaches it, he passes by dozens of small housing units, each filled with Psions from Aspirator Raavul's enclave. One of those Psions lingers out front, and immediately spots Jason as he approaches.

[Wordsmith! So good to see you again!] The young male exclaims. [I was wondering if you might put me on tonight's Spynet duty!]

"Hello, Ferral." Jason says with a smile. "Are you actually going to help us spy, or are you going to continue looking at pretty planets again?"

[The beauty of the universe makes my Psionic Seed pulsate with happiness!] Initiator Ferral says with great enthusiasm. [I long to gaze at the stars and the woodlands for all eternity. The majesty of existence simply should not be squandered!]

Jason looks at the young Psion for a moment. He touches his chin, thinking about something unknown.

"You said your Seed pulsates when you look at the beauty of life? That seems an awful lot like you may have found a Path..."

Having observed Psions in secret for over three years now, Jason has familiarized himself with a certain level of understanding about how their abilities function. The key for a Psion to grow more powerful is to contemplate and comprehend the greater Truths of the universe. However, in order to do this, they must find an object or concept that excites them enough to allow them to endlessly fixate on it.

[Oh... I suppose you might be right.] Ferral says, lowering his many eyes as he falls into thought. [Master Raavul says that I possess high aptitudes, but low interest in the psionic disciplines...]

"Life is a beautiful thing." Jason says. "To fixate on existence, to appreciate the majesty and grandeur of the universe... even if it doesn't help your Seed at all, I don't see a problem with that. So hey, you can take a shift at the Spynet. But I'll have to put someone else there with you, since I know you'll slack off."

[Oh, most excellent!] Ferral exclaims. [Thank you, Jason Hiro. Joining you is the best choice I have ever made!]

"No need to get all sappy." Jason says with a light chuckle. "Have fun, Ferral."

The young Initiator takes his leave, and Jason resumes his walk toward the newest facility in Chrona. Completed only a month earlier, its appearance is quite striking, as hundreds of powerful magic and psionic runes cover its surface, glowing and pulsating with colors that change over time. As for the facility itself, it resembles a giant orb one hundred feet tall, but for some reason, Jason chose to half-bury it in the ground, making only its upper half visible from outside. To the uninitiated, it would appear to be a dome-structure not dissimilar to the Spynet Sphere itself.

When Jason arrives at the entrance, he waits for a moment. The entire sphere slowly rotates upward, causing a door to 'roll' out of the ground and appear before the Wordsmith.

He steps inside, entering a brightly lit interior that pulses with the same colors as the runes on the exterior. When the runes outside turn red, so too does the interior lighting. The same goes for all the other colors.

Inside the facility's center is a strikingly familiar device; a seemingly identical copy of the Volgrim Warpgates. However, unlike those gates, this one does not connect to the Volgrim network, but has its own purpose.

When Jason enters, he spots two individuals, Rebecca and Blinker, both of them standing before the facilities' controls, looking at a display and its readouts as a series of numbers and diagrams show up.

Rebecca turns to look at him. "Jason. Done sight-seeing?"

"I had some things to think about." Jason says mildly. "Wordsmith stuff."

"I see." Rebecca continues. "Well, we've finished calibrating the Rescue Matrix. It should function as expected."

Blinker gives Jason a strange look. Currently in her enlarged form, she stands only a couple heads shorter than the Wordsmith as he approaches. "I don't get it, big guy. Why is it a one-way gate? Shouldn't it be able to take us to and from realspace?"

"No." Jason says simply. "The transition to a higher time dilation is not a problem. But the transition back to realspace is violent and jarring. I no longer have a reliable method of slowing down Chrona's time dilation. If I were to try, I'd probably kill everyone here by accident, myself included."

"About that." Rebecca says. "Jason, have you monitored the exact TDR specifications of Chrona?"

"Err, no." Jason says slowly. "Why?"

"I have been running some calculations..." Rebecca says, conjuring some numbers into the air via her holographic hand-projectors. "It seems the original TDR you set for Chrona was 249.732-to-1. One day in realspace, 249.732 days inside. But look at this. The current TDR is now at 250.331-to-1."

She looks at Jason meaningfully.

"Chrona's internal dilation is accelerating over time. Left unchecked, this could reach dangerous levels within a few Chrona-centuries."

She pauses again.

"Or it might stabilize once it reaches a certain TDR value. I don't have enough information to draw any specific conclusions."

Jason frowns at this news. "That sounds serious. Maybe I should try and find some way to slow it down after all..."

"That isn't an ideal solution." Rebecca counters. "The entities living inside Chrona have already adapted their cellular biology to this dimension's dilation. Lowering the TDR would most likely cause widespread biological damage you cannot predict. Rather than slowing Chrona down, you should seek to stabilize its current level."

"Alright." Jason says with a nod. "I'll work on that soon, then. Now, let's get back to the Rescue Matrix."

He stands between both women as Blinker launches into a quick explanation.

"We've managed to identify every human, monster, and demon aligned with our cause." Blinker explains. "Thanks to the Brain Scanning Crystals, we've marked millions of allied soldiers and civilians alike. We can beam them into Chrona in the event of a catastrophe if needed."

"That should always be a last-ditch option." Jason says sternly. "Bringing them to Chrona means condemning them to living here for the rest of eternity, unless we can solve the higher dimensional formula. We still don't know if Chrona is entirely 'secure.' For all we know, Diablo or Dosena or some other abomination might find a way inside. We can't put all our eggs in one basket."

"We do have one limitation." Rebecca interjects while pointing at the central gate. "We can only summon one entity every second from realspace to Chrona. Those seconds are in Chrona-time, of course. That means in the event of a catastrophe, we will only be able to rescue two hundred and fifty humans, monsters, demons, or whatever else for every real-time second that passes."

"What? So few?" Jason asks with a frown. "That's not many at all. I thought I made it so the Rescue Matrix could beam up tens of thousands, if not millions of people!"

"You have gravely underestimated the interference of Chrona's temporal-gravity well." Rebecca says solemnly. "Beaming friendlies inside Chrona means they have to travel through the higher dimensions. Your Wordsmithing might be able to directly counter such a force, but most mundane and extraordinary means generally cannot. The Rescue Matrix is no exception."

"Damn..." Jason mumbles. "I really thought this was a 'get out of jail free' card."

"There is another option." Blinker suddenly says. "The Rescue Matrix can be used to move millions of people after all... but only across realspace. If we program a few destinations ahead of time, we could beam all of humanity to an allied world in realspace, or possibly the Cube."

"The Cube consists of multiple segmented higher dimensions." Jason says, tapping the console to bring up its known specifications. "Humanity has currently utilized less than a fraction of a percent of its internal space, but the spaces we've created all have slightly elevated TDR values."

"A TDR of 3 or 5 or even 10 isn't insurmountable." Rebecca says. "It would be like ramming a spaceship into a planet's atmosphere. The higher the TDR, the thicker the atmosphere and the more drag and heat the ship would have to endure. For that reason, it's best if we keep humans inside realspace, or send them only into the lowest TDR areas of the Cube."

"The solution is easy then." Jason concludes. "I'll just have to whip up a large area inside the Cube that can sustain itself and that exists at a normal TDR level. We can use fairy formation magic to allow people to seamlessly travel between higher and lower TDR areas seamlessly. They won't even feel the difference."

"Just be aware formations can't do everything." Blinker says. "Once you reach a dilation value of 10-to-1, formations will start to break down and eventually collapse, assuming they don't simply compress anyone who passes through into a singularity."

"Noted." Jason concludes.

The discussion continues for a while longer, and Jason ultimately obtains all the answers he was looking for.

"Have any of the Psions made any breakthroughs?" He eventually asks Blinker.

"Not a chance." Blinker answers. "It'll be decades before any of them even come close to reaching the next rank. And it only gets harder after that. We're probably looking at centuries or millennia for further breakthroughs."

"The step from the 1st to 2nd Level is not insignificant to the average Psion." Rebecca explains. "But the jump to what Psions consider 'military level' is unfathomable. Countless promising Aspirants have failed, becoming stuck at the 5th Level."

"Yeah, but isn't the 5th Level... Demon Emperor strength?" Jason asks. "6th is like a stepping stone between Mortal and Cosmic. 7th is a Bottom Cosmic. 8th is a Low Cosmic. And 9th is a Middle Cosmic. Being stuck at the 5th Level still means you could crush demons with ease. How is that weak?"

Rebecca sighs. "You don't get it, Jason. Your concept of power comes from your years of fighting with the demons. But in the Volgrim's eyes, both of your species are mere mud-dwellers. Their weakest military-ranking Psions could flatten the Earth during the Energy Wars, and they had hundreds of thousands of them. If they had sent a large swarm of 5th Level Psions, they could have defeated Earth's forces quite easily, but it would have been a humiliating loss of face for the Psions."

"It's not about being as strong as the peak of a mud-dwelling civilization." Rebecca concludes. "It's about demonstrating that the Psion Army's weakest soldiers are more than capable of single-handedly crushing any who stand against them with contemptible ease."

"They seem so egotistical." Blinker says in disgust. "What a bunch of high and mighty elitists."

Rebecca shrugs. "If it makes you feel better, the Volgrim are only strong in comparison to the current Milky Way. Compared to the Ancient Archangels, Titans, and Dragons, they're mere peons themselves. And that doesn't even factor in the fighting forces of distant galaxies."

Jason frowns. He looks ahead at the Rescue Matrix Gate, then utters a Word of Power.

"Projection."

Before him, a large image of a spiraling galaxy appears, followed by another, far larger galaxy a short distance away. The difference in size simply isn't comparable at all. The second is nearly double the diameter of the first, and the density of its stars is at least three times greater.

"Andromeda is the biggest galaxy within the Local Group." Jason says quietly. "I've tried, many times, to peer inside it. I've tried to attune the Spynet Sphere, to peer into its confines and look at some of its worlds. For three years I've tried. But I can't see anything. Not one damn thing."

He looks at Rebecca meaningfully.

"What do you know about the denizens of the other galaxies? What do you know about the other Rulers and their subjects?"

Rebecca lowers her eyes.

"Nothing, Jason. Nothing at all."

"You're kidding." Jason says quietly. "How can you, or at least Marie, not know?"

"Miss Becker cannot peer past Andromeda's Akashic Barrier, and neither can you, it seems." Rebecca says, raising her eyes to meet his. "The Rules forbid it. It is not yet time for The Game to begin in full, so it hasn't. Until it does, you're better off not wasting your energy. Just focus on making yourself and humanity stronger. As long as you do that, we may someday find a way to make High and Apex Cosmics. If that happens, we might stand a chance in the intergalactic wars to come."

She shrugs.

"If not, we'll die. All of us. It's as simple as that. In Akasha's Game, every Ruler plays for keeps."

"And the Milky Way doesn't have a Ruler." Jason says, more to himself than either of the women. "Only a board full of pawns."

It takes Jason a moment to compose himself. He disperses the floating image of the two galaxies, then smooths his T-shirt.

"One last thing. My experiments with countering time dilation haven't been going well. I think I might be able to protect myself from the effects of returning to realspace, but I don't think I can do the same for anyone else. Not at the moment anyway."

"I can come and go as I please." Rebecca says. "My digitized brain ensures time dilation won't affect me adversely. But if you can't protect anyone but yourself, then Blinker, Kar, and all the others will be stuck here. That includes the Psions..."

"Once I've figured out a method to allow myself to come and go, I'll try to make it applicable to anyone." Jason explains. "Perhaps I could become the first person in the Milky Way to figure out a method of safely traveling between higher and lower temporal dimensions!"

Neither Blinker nor Rebecca appears impressed.

"Yeah. Good luck with that." Blinker says sarcastically. "There's no WAY you're smarter than the High Psions and Technopaths who've been working with higher dimensions for eons."

"It's possible you might find a way to rewrite reality via the usage of your power, but that's not the same thing as comprehending the Truths of temporal mechanics." Rebecca adds, shaking her head. "But I suppose even an unorthodox method is better than nothing. At the very least, you could be the first person to find a loophole in physics. That's worth something."

Jason flicks his eyes between both women.

"Wow, ladies. Thanks for the words of encouragement. I'm getting all choked up here."

He shakes his head, then turns around and leaves, relatively satisfied by the potential of the Rescue Matrix, though less so by its limitations when transferring people to Chrona.

After Jason departs the Rescue Matrix facility, he mumbles out loud to himself.

"If push comes to shove, we could evacuate... let's see, 250 people each realspace second, and there are how many seconds in a day? Mumble mumble, 86,400 seconds... multiplied by 250... so we could teleport 21,600,000 people each realspace day. So it would take less than a quarter of a day to move everyone here. That's not too bad, I guess."

Jason quickly does a quick bit of arithmetic without even resorting to Wordsmithing. Thankfully, having enhanced his brain a bit here and there with it, he has become capable of doing basic mental math as if he were a living calculator, though he's nowhere at the level of his wife, Rebecca, or even the average Technopath.

But still. For Jason, it's a huge improvement.

"Oh, I almost forgot..." Jason says to himself. "Phoebe and Neil have that debate happening soon. I'd better move quickly if I want to see it in person..."

Part 551: Flashpoint

Five more days pass in realspace.

During this time, a growing sense of anticipation fills the air. Posters spring up all around Tarus II's sole major city, the Fortress of Retribution. These posters show the faces of Neil Adams and Phoebe Hiro, and speak of a Genesis Point, a coming debate that will change the trajectory of human society forever.

With only three million or so humans left in the Milky Way, their population is truly insignificant compared to their demon and monster peers. Even the lizardmen have a population of two million, living within Marie Becker's secret dimensions and a few pockets of the Labyrinth. Compared to the unthinkable number of demons and Volgrim, humanity feels minuscule, utterly insignificant.

Over the last month, following the conclusion of Stormbringer and the changes made by Jason Hiro, a sizable population of demons from two distinct Hells have made themselves at home on Tarus II, with many of them living on the outskirts of the Fortress of Retribution's main city limits. These demons come specifically from the Hell of Isolation and the Hell of Lust.

The Hell of Isolation, in keeping true to its name, usually stays out of the main human city. These demon refugees have heard rumblings of a soon-to-come rebuilding of the planet Sharmur, but they have yet to receive any instructions from its new Demon Deity, Melody.

At the same time, the Hell of Lust has welcomed three new Emperors into its ranks. Thanks to the Belial Booster, the Dukes named Jahn, Silvia, and Bree have all uplifted themselves, assuming the titles of Emperors of Consent, Humiliation, and Adultery, respectively.

In contrast, the Hell of Lust is more than happy to integrate its succubi and incubi into the ranks of humanity, a fact that has caused great concern among those aligned more closely to Neil Adams' political ideology. Countless humans secretly or outwardly react with disgust when they see humans walking hand in hand with male and female demonic sluts, these various sex-fiends always eager to fornicate with the nearest human at hand.

Unlike most demons, succubi and incubi are not innately immortal. They must feed upon the pleasure of other sentients in order to maintain their youthful vigor. But thankfully, contrary to the ancient legends, this does not suck the life out of their human partners, nor does it harm them in the slightest. In fact, pairing off with a Lust-demon has no downsides for their human partners, outside of experiencing prejudice from other humans.

And so, while the Demons of Lust quietly spread themselves around human society, a sense of growing discontent begins to smolder under the surface.

Inside one of the pubs scattered around the city, a pair of men growl at each other while flickering stink-eyes at some of the other humans and demons situated further away.

"It's not right." One of the men says. "It's disgusting. An act against God."

"Preach it." The other man says. "Every time I see a brother walk off with another succubus bitch, I get a sinking feeling in my gut. They're taking away good men and women, preventing us from having children. Every human that lays with a bloodskin means one less human baby born. And you know we need every baby we can get."

"We're losing the reproduction war." The other man says. "There's no way these succubi are as benign as everyone thinks. I bet Diablo's running things from the shadows. He wants to replace humans slowly over time, make us subservient to the demons."

The second man snarls under his breath. "It's a conspiracy, and the Wordsmith is totally blind to all of it."

"Yeah, well, at least we have Commander Adams on our side. He's going to take the Wordsmith's Wife to task. Miss Hiro needs to see just how bad things have become."

"What if she's part of the conspiracy?" The second man asks under his breath. "Miss Hiro isn't stupid. She's married to Jason Hiro. I'm sure she knows all about what these devil-witches are up to. I heard she and her husband even bring the Emperor of Passion to their bedchambers once in a while..."

"Belial? Tsk. Yeah, you're probably right. Damn, the rot goes deep. If Commander Adams calls us to action though, you'd better believe I'm answering his summons."

"One hundred percent."

The two men continue to mutter under their breath, not giving a damn who hears them. If they hadn't been ordered a few times before to keep their voices down, they might even bellow their thoughts in public, but luckily Neil Adams has seen fit to instate strict discipline until the conclusion of the Great Debate.

However, elsewhere inside the bar, one rather rotund female demoness can't help but frown when she hears the two men talk. Her hearing has become much sharper in recent times, a sign of her imminent rise to the rank of Demon Grunt...

"Succubus sluts are all so gross. I bet Ose bewitched Mister Beelzebub with succubus magic. Well, maybe if I can become a succubus, I'll have what it takes to woo him back."

* * *

Elsewhere in the city, guards spring up on various corners, wielding heavy crowd control shotguns designed to electrocute and paralyze large groups of humans and weaker monsters and demons, should the situation turn dire. With the Great Debate soon to arrive, they have orders not to allow any chaos to engulf the Fortress of Retribution. Order must be preserved.

"You think the Commander is going to win the debate?" One of the female soldiers asks.

"God, I hope so." A male soldier behind her grunts. "It's about time we had some change around here. And not Jason-change either, but good change. Need to remind these demons that we humans have plenty of bite to back up our bark."

The man notices a demon frowning in his direction. He frowns back inside his faceless T-REX.

"The fuck are you looking at, bloodskin?! Move along!"

The demon lowers his head and shuffles away, allowing the soldier's mood to improve.

"At least these grunts know how to listen to their superiors. Man, I hope Neil slaps the hell out of whatever crap the Wordsmith has to say."

"The Wordsmiths aren't going to join the debate." The woman says. "It's only Commander Adams and Miss Hiro."

"What?! You mean even Hope won't chime in with his thoughts?"

"Nope." The woman says. "It's just those two. Yeah, I don't get it either. This debate is all about how Jason has failed us, but the coward doesn't have anything to say. This is why Commander Adams is the superior leader. With him guiding Hope Hiro, we'll have a better future following the Second Wordsmith."

"Can't argue with facts." The male soldier replies.

* * *

Inside the Tarus II hospital at the western edge of the upper plateau, Belial sighs to herself as she walks down the corridors and passes yet another T-REX-wearing trooper. She steps into a break room and slumps into an easy-chair, lolling her head back in frustration.

Leeroy, the Duke of Restoration, sits nearby, reading an old demonic book about the history of various fallen Emperors. He lifts his eyes up from the book to look at her.

"Are you doing okay?" He asks.

"I mean. Not really." Belial says, her long black hair spilling over the back of her chair. "A lot of demons are starting to feel nervous. The results of today's big debate will have reverberations for potentially centuries. There's rumors Neil Adams wants to pull all the humans to Maiura except the hardline 'demon lovers' who he considers riddled with sin. He's going to set back demon and human relations a hundred years."

Leeroy shrugs. "It's unfortunate, but I've been expecting this to happen eventually. Frankly, the First Wordsmith has done a terrible job managing the situation. We're sitting on a powder keg waiting to blow."

Belial frowns. She lifts her head up to look at Leeroy. "What do you mean?"

"Can't you see?" Leeroy asks. "All these different humans with unique views are being shoved into a one-size-fits-all situation. How many humans have had their friends and loved ones die to Beelzebub's detonation? How many personally suffered as a result of Stormbringer? How many lived under the oppression of our people for tens of millennia, with history stretching back further than their scrolls could record? And you really think they can just set aside their fear and anger to appease the First Wordsmith's morality?"

The Duke of Restoration shakes his head and returns his gaze to his book. "Our people have committed terrible, unforgivable evils, Samantha. If I were in the humans' place, I certainly wouldn't be capable of letting bygones be bygones. It's a miracle nobody has resorted to extreme acts of terrorism against the so-called 'good demons.' If this debate pans out poorly, we could be looking at a mass insurrection against the current regime."

Belial's rosy red skin turns light pink as she pales with unease.

"Surely... they wouldn't go that far?"

"Humans are short-lived and unpredictable." Leeroy says authoritatively. "If you look up the ancient records from Earth, it's clear that they will not tolerate foreigners they dislike for long. A reckoning will come, one way or another. I don't see any tenable route to peace for the Wordsmiths."

"Jason will think of something. At the very least, Phoebe will." Belial says, sitting up straight in her chair. "She always comes through."

* * *

At a shack built up against the western edge of the plateau, not far from the hospital, a male human and his demon fiance lay in bed within their humble abode, with the demoness laying on her side while the human lays on his back while reading a book about botany.

"Honey..." The demoness, Kiari, says. "Aren't you going to go to the big debate today?"

She lays on her side facing away from her fiance, Saul. He glances at her, then reaches over and squeezes her arm. "No, I don't think so, love. You've been feeling unwell for almost five hours, so I'll just stay here. Besides, I don't really care what the other humans decide to do, as long as I get to continue living with you. I'll hear about whatever happened from the grapevine later."

Kiari mumbles something to herself, then makes a weird noise in her throat. "Ugh... I... I haven't ever been sick before. What could be causing this?"

Saul frowns. He puts down his book, then looks at his wife's back seriously. "Demons don't get sick, do they?"

"Almost never, unless another demon is deliberately trying to poison us. Oh... you don't think I've been poisoned, do you?" Kiari asks, slowly rolling onto her back to look at Saul.

"Hmm. I certainly hope not." Saul mutters. "You're in no condition to walk. Why don't I go and grab someone with a vehicle? I'll have a friend drive us up to the hospital to have Samantha check you out."

"I... I don't want to bother her for no reason." Kiari says, putting on a brave face. "It's probably nothing. Plus she'll be going to see the Great Debate anyway. She won't have time for me..."

"I'm not going to risk your life." Saul says firmly, as he slides his legs over the edge of the bed, stands up, and starts getting dressed. "I'd much rather inconvenience Samantha so long as we can confirm you just have some mild form of demon flu. What if Mephisto is poisoning us, or something? What if that Neil Adams fellow is up to no good?"

Kiari's eyes flash with alarm. "Neil Adams? You don't think he'd...?"

"I know he hates demons. He could have had one of his troopers poison you discreetly. If not him, it could be someone else." Saul says. "There's no room for second chances. Unlike us humans, you demons don't have a Lazarus Tower to revive you if things go south. You'll probably end up... inside of Mephisto's stomach."

Kiari moans in pain. "M-Mephisto? Ohh... I don't... I wouldn't like that..."

"Right." Saul says, as he pulls on a tunic. "Well, I'll be back in ten or fifteen minutes. I'll try and find someone as fast as I can."

"Okay..." Kiari mutters, as she closes her eyes and creases her brow. "Please be quick about it. I don't want to be alone right now. And I'm feeling so hot..."

* * *

Phoebe Hiro sits at a desk inside her bedroom. For two weeks, she's come and gone, but not once has Jason returned to her side.

His Dronesmith has, but she wouldn't go to bed with an automaton.

So, she stays alone in her room, sometimes enjoying the quiet and solitude, but other times she feels rather empty and lonely. With Jason trapped inside Chrona, she hasn't been able to see or touch her husband for two full weeks.

Th thing that bother Phoebe the most, though, isn't even her own loneliness. It's the thought that for each day she's gone to bed without Jason, he's done the same thing two hundred and fifty times.

On this day in particular, only a couple of hours before the Great Debate, she feels especially forlorn. She looks at the papers in her hand and checks her notes, but a terrible heaviness weighs on her heart.

"I wish Daisy were still here." Phoebe mutters to herself. "God, I wish..."

She sets the papers down on her desk, then lifts her eyes to stare blankly at the wall for a few minutes. Nothing in particular comes to her mind. She simply feels a deep weight of expectations looming over her shoulders.

"Can I really do it?" She asks herself. "Can I get all these people to unite their hearts into a singular goal? It feels impossible."

After a few more minutes, she decides to get up, go to the Central Gardens, and visit her nephew, Sir Lorent. The trip doesn't take her long, perhaps only a quarter of an hour, and as always she finds him painting on an easel while little Shana does the same. Phoebe smiles as she approaches, seeing that Shana's painting skills have improved a lot.

"Lorent." Phoebe says from behind him.

The man blinks in surprise, then turns around to flash a huge smile at her. "Aunt Phoebe! How good to see you. It's been a few days."

"Sorry." Phoebe says. "I've been busy lately prepping for this damned debate with Neil Adams."

"Ohh, I almost forgot about that." Lorent says with a sagely nod of his head. "What were you debating again?"

"The matter of Jason's leadership, and whether or not humanity should stay on Tarus II or split in half, with some people going to Maiura and some staying here." Phoebe answers.

"Mmm. That's a topic too heavy for the likes of me." Lorent says with a light laugh. "I, ah... I kill things, and I paint. That's all I'm good for, none of that political talk."

"Right." Phoebe says, stifling a frown as she looks away. "Oh, Shana! How have you been, little sweetheart? Is Uncle Lorent treating you well?"

Shana turns and beams a huge smile at her adoptive aunt. "Yeah! Lorent good! Teach me to paint! See? Pretty pictures!"

Shana gestures to her easel, where an image of a rather handsome man rests, a surprisingly mature portrait of Jason Hiro's face with intricate lines interspersed with detailed hair follicles. The more closely Phoebe looks at the painting, the more surprised she becomes by its stunning quality.

"You... you drew that?" Phoebe asks. "You're really gifted, Shana!"

"Yeah! Drew these too!" Shana says proudly, lifting the still-wet painting to reveal previous works hiding underneath it.

Phoebe looks on in ever-increasing surprise as Shana reveals a portrait of Neil Adams, Lorent, and even Phoebe herself. But what most surprises her is that more than a dozen paintings have been devoted to one blonde woman in particular, a woman Phoebe has only seen a few times before.

"Aren't these paintings of Joan of Arc?" Phoebe asks, pointing at the powerful and heroic images of Joan, sometimes drawn in a portrait-style, but more often taken as action-images of her swinging a sword or striking a heroic pose.

"Yeah, yeah!" Shana chirps, visibly excited by Phoebe's praise. "Nice lady likes Joan. I draw Joan. Nice lady keeps coming!"

"Nice lady...?" Phoebe asks, directing a questioning look at Lorent.

"I don't know who she is. Someone named Cammy." Lorent replies with a shrug of his shoulders. "She and her friend Serra come by once in a while to admire our paintings. Shana likes to draw images of Joan of Arc because Cammy enjoys looking at them."

He pauses.

"I must admit, Joan of Arc was a wonderful woman. A powerful Hero. I'd like to have spoken to her at some point. It's unfortunate her blade was destroyed when the Polaris star went supernova. Her remnant soul has been lost to the sands of time."

Even Shana becomes less enthusiastic. "Yeah... Joan of Arc awesome. Wish I meet her too."

"I was able to see her in action when she fought the Archdemon." Phoebe says. "She was... certainly fearsome."

Phoebe sighs, then reaches over to stroke the top of Shana's faintly corporeal head. "Well, I just wanted to drop by and say hello. I'll be engaging in that debate in a couple of hours."

"Mmm. I don't have much interest in watching it, auntie, but I do pray for your success." Lorent says. "I wish only the best for you."

"Thank you, nephew. Your words are all I need." Phoebe says with a smile.

* * *

Neil Adams paces back and forth in front of a large mirror, looking at himself while motioning with his hands.

"My fellow Tarusians! No, that's too broad. Should I say fellow humans? That would exclude the monsters. I need to exclude the demons, of course, but the greeting should feel warm and sincere. Perhaps... my fellow humans and monsters... hmm, yes, that does sound a bit better. A tad long in the tooth though."

Sitting off to the side, Linda Hurent looks at the man pacing back and forth with a serious expression. "Are you sure this is going to go the way you want, Neil? Phoebe has the heart of the people on her side. Even those who don't like her still respect her, but most of them adore her. She can't know everyone's name like she used to in the past, but she still has a reputation for being warm and approachable. If you attack her, you'll make yourself into a villain."

"Hmph. Warm and approachable..." Neil says mockingly as he looks at himself in the mirror. "We're entering a flashpoint, my dear. What people crave right now is stability. Fortitude. They want a strong leader who can point them in the direction that will benefit them the most. They need someone authoritative to save them from themselves. Someone willing to speak of the filth rotting our society from the inside-out."

"That's all well and good, but I worry this debate is going a step too far." Linda says. "If anything goes wrong, you could turn the hearts of our soldiers away. We need our brave men and women if we're going to keep the demons on the back-foot."

"If there's one thing I'm not worried about, it's losing the hearts of our service-members." Neil says calmly. "I know for sure that Jason does not command the love of the people. He was the first to save them, yes, but he squandered their good will time and time again. Now, most humans only pray he will not bring another catastrophe upon them due to his incompetence. His lack of planning has caused his undoing."

Linda taps her chin. "What about his recent movements? You know, with the crystals? What was he planning when he had all the humans, monsters, and demons scanned with them?"

Neil turns and smiles at her. "It's funny you ask. I've prepared a certain section of my speech on that very matter. It will be quite interesting to discuss."

"Any previews for me?" Linda presses.

"Not even for you. Just sit back and enjoy the surprises." Neil says. "I've worked hard on this speech. It is the ultimate culmination of my plans. I will unite humanity proper. I won't let Jason drag us down any longer. With Hope at my side, we'll break humanity into pieces and rebuild it ten times stronger than before!"

"I certainly hope you succeed." Linda says nervously. "Diablo has been making such terrifying moves, lately. He has everyone on edge."

"Mmm. Diablo..." Neil says, trailing off without adding anything else.

The Great Debate looms imminently.

Part 552: The Great Debate

On the southern side of the Fortress of Retribution, well off the plateau of the upper city, a massive stadium stands erected; none other than the same stadium where Beelzebub's Inquisition was held, along with the other traitors to humanity.

But today, that stadium has been reworked to fit its new purpose as a venue for the Great Debate. More than 300,000 seats have been erected inside the arena's center, all facing the upper platform where the VIPs have opted to sit. Additionally, large amounts of space have been erected along the back and side walls for even more seating, allowing a total capacity of 500,000 people to fit in its interior.

Outside, people congregate en-masse as well, watching the event via giant screens mounted along the exterior. These screens project images of the VIP booth as well as the crowd of 500,000 to show off audience reactions while the debate progresses.

Three million humans remain in the Milky Way, but even among the relatively tiny number of demons that have allied themselves to humanity, their populations still total in the hundreds of millions. The Hells of Isolation and Lust alone dwarf humanity tens of times over, to say nothing of all the monsters aligned with humanity's interests.

While the totality of demonkind is not particularly amenable to humanity's interests, even two or three percent of their species is still an unfathomably large number, given the fact trillions of demons live inside the Labyrinth and across various worlds of the Milky Way.

At its apex, Earth held a population of twenty billion humans. For each life-bearing world the demons control, they easily have that many members of their species living there, if not far more. 100,000 years of expansion efforts by the Broodmothers, and the fact that demons do not die of old age, has allowed their population to balloon to a ridiculous extent.

However, a pointed decision was still made by Phoebe Hiro and Neil Adams both. Aside from a few exceptions involving the VIP lounge, only humans would be allowed inside the inner area of the Southern Stadium. Given the outsized impact this debate would have on humanity, it seems only prudent to both to have the most important members of their species represented, with many human nobles and lords taking the central seats. As former controllers of tribes and kingdoms that were once beholden to the demons, they all wield small but significant pockets of influence among their subjects, past and present alike.

Brunhilda, leader of the Felorians, is one such example of these people. Given that the Felorians have become a significant powerhouse in humanity's military, she ends up nabbing a seat inside the VIP booth. Others also join her, such as General Magnus Chadwick, Fairy Princess Melia, Emperor Belial, and several other allied Emperors from the Hells of Isolation and Lust.

But for the otherwise 'ordinary' human leaders, those who ruled over small and medium sized tribes and kingdoms, they have to make due with being seated inside the central arena. They will have no say in the outcome of today's debate.

Along with the notable VIPs, Phoebe sits just behind the primary microphone platform, with Belial on her left. Neil sits on the opposite side, with Linda conspicuously seated beside him as well. Interestingly, she wears a beautiful blue dress with a slit that goes up her right leg, revealing her tantalizing thighs. This dress was actually chosen for her by Neil himself, who picked it to make her appear as beautiful as possible on this momentous day.

As the time to begin approaches, Linda maintains her cool and smiles prettily for the cameras, but inside she feels uneasy, as she is quite worried about how today's events could play out.

"I hope you know what you're doing..." Linda says softly.

"Just smile for the cameras." Neil says. "I may need your help later. I hope you're alright with standing in front of a crowd."

"I'm a soldier, not a politician..." Linda whispers back.

"Good soldiers follow orders." Neil says, nudging her side with a cheeky elbow.

The people in the crowd talk loudly among themselves as the beginning of the Great Debate approaches. Their voices form an incomprehensible throng, a dull roar that makes one's ears ring if they try to listen for any individual words. The louder the roar becomes, the louder people have to talk just to hear their adjacent neighbor, compounding the situation and making it worse.

However, within seconds, the roar dies down, and all the humans fall utterly silent. Atop the VIP seating area, a tall and powerful Minotaur steps forward and slaps his chest as he takes hold of the microphone.

"Greetings, humans, monsters, and demons alike. I am Yamir of Clan Ironhorn, head of Yamir Food Industries. As a neutral third party, I have been chosen to moderate today's debate between our two debaters, Commander Neil Adams, leader of the Human Military Force, and Phoebe Hiro, pre-eminent inventor of mankind's technologies, as well as the wife of the First Wordsmith."

He pauses to sweep his eyes across the massive crowd, but doesn't so much as flinch from the pressure.

"Today is a momentous occasion." Yamir continues, lifting his hand and making a small gesture with it. "Humanity stands at a flashpoint, a decision that will affect it for generations to come. When I was a young bull, I was rejected by my clan and sent to live in exile. By chance, I became enslaved to the creature known as Bahamut, and following her death I pledged myself to her slayers, Kar the King of Monsters, as well as his cute sidekick, the Wordsmith Jason Hiro."

"In recent years, the Wordsmith has come under increasing scrutiny and criticism. His failures to use his power proactively meant humanity's defenses were inadequate at defending itself during the invasion of Stormbringer. Millions died as a result of Emperor Ose's machinations, along with the deaths caused by Duke Beelzebub's bodily detonation. Of late, the movements of Emperor Diablo have caused waves of fear to spread among the common folks. With humanity possessing just three million survivors, can they possibly hope to compete in a galactic battlefield where Plagues, Aliens, and Demons all wish to feast upon their bodies and souls?"

Yamir keeps his tone even, focusing purely on the known facts while issuing no direct opinions of his own. His words, thought somewhat alarming, instead comfort the crowd, assuring them that their fears are being heard and responded to. Above all else, everyone wants to believe that they won't leave this debate feeling as if the bigger picture is being overlooked in favor of petty squabbles and disputes.

"A choice emerges." Yamir continues. "Continue to keep humanity together in order to focus our power, or split it in half between Tarus II and the world of Maiura. Should humans who have no love for demons be forced to live among their former tormentors?

Should humans who hold no ill will be forced to live with those they consider traumatized bigots? Or is there perhaps a compromise the two sides could follow that would allow them to move past their disputes and harmonize their intents? Perhaps when split apart, humans will fracture and weaken, but together you may become unbreakable?"

"I am unwilling to answer that question for myself. So, in the spirit of the Great Debate, I shall now turn the microphone over to the first speaker, Commander Neil Adams. After flipping a coin before coming on stage, it was determined that he would be the first to speak, and thus set the tone for today's meeting. For the rules of the debate, when one side is speaking, the other side must remain silent. There will be two rounds of back-and-forth arguing before the two leaders will be allowed to cross-examine one another more directly."

Yamir slowly turns around to gesture toward Neil Adams.

"Commander Adams. Your turn begins now. You have fifteen minutes to state your opening argument."

Neil Adams stands up from his chair and smiles. He glances behind himself for a moment at his fellow humans, as well as a few of the monsters and demons, including Belial, who have taken up seats not far from himself. He doesn't say anything to them, then walks forward and politely takes the microphone from Yamir.

"Thank you, Brother Yamir." Neil says, as he waits a few moments for the Minotaur to return to his chair and take a seat. Then Neil turns to face the audience.

"Brothers and sisters, comrades in arms, my fellow humans and our allied monsters alike. We have all lived through strange and unexpected times over the past six years, for better and for worse. Great tragedies follow behind uplifting feats of human martial prowess every week, it sometimes seems."

The deliberate omission of demons from Neil's introduction doesn't take anyone by surprise. Belial stifles the urge to glare at his back, despite hating the way he always snubs her.

He projects a warm smile outward, making himself appear extra friendly to the audience.

"I love humanity. I love my fellow humans, male and female, black, white, and all the other colors. But I won't lie... I fear for the future we are careening toward. Humanity is anchored to a single orb inside the vast cosmos. Had that vile archfiend Mephisto gone mad, he might have launched an attack that slaughtered all of us in an instant. Cosmic Entities that make Mephisto look like a harmless puppy abound, especially among the Volgrim, and all it would take is one of them having a particularly bad day to kill us all in one fell swoop."

Neil closes his eyes and sighs softly.

"Humanity possesses unimaginable potential. We believe ourselves to be short-lived, fragile, and over-reliant on our technology. But the truth is, our species is the most adaptable in the Milky Way, capable of overcoming any adversary given enough time. Sadly, time is what we lack the most. We have entered the war against the Plague far too late. It has spent nearly 100,000 years spreading across our galaxy, and in that time it has grown to become immensely powerful."

"But while the Plague may be the enemy of all life in our galaxy, and humanity's current highest priority, what will come afterward if we should manage to eradicate this blood-hungry parasite from our domain? Do you believe the war will stop there? Of course not. We will still have the Volgrim to deal with... and then the demons."

Neil's smile disappears. He rests his free hand on his hip and stands up a little straighter.

"Demonkind is humanity's greatest enemy. Not the Plague, and not the Volgrim. Don't get me wrong, the Plague is our most formidable foe at the moment, and the Volgrim possess plenty of power to quash humanity as we stand today, but no enemy has shown the same level of ruthlessness toward us as the demons have. No enemy wants to enslave us and feast on our souls to the same degree that they do."

Neil raises a finger in warning. "Demons gleefully live in our midst. They are spreading among our people. Succubi and incubi sleep with humans wantonly. Grunts and Lords seek to teach our children their demonic ways, appearing as 'guest speakers' in their schools. They say they are on our side, but how can that be the case when their entire species remained silent in the face of 100,000 years of atrocities?"

"Some would point out that half a million demons fought on our side during Operation Stormbringer. But I ask... so what?"

"What is half a million demons in the grand scheme of things? Their population numbers in the trillions! Don't you find it more likely these bloodskins are simply biding their time, snuggling up to us to reap the benefits of quick ascension via the Belial Booster and other such amenities while waiting for Diablo to amass enough power that he will be able to behead our leadership in one fell swoop?"

Neil's 'kindly leader' appearance fades away, replaced instead with a dismissive sneer.

"The truth is, these demons are not our allies. Use your heads! Even if the ones who align themselves with us now are 'truly' aligned with our interests, they don't represent a fraction of one percent of demonkind's total population. And can we really believe in their alliances? When the going gets tough, can we truly expect them to stay on our side? Or will they stealthily abandon us to return to Diablo's beck and call?"

He pauses.

"Maybe you think I'm being too dramatic. After all, they already took a risk by staying with us during Stormbringer, and even now, as Diablo has risen to power. But surely, if you look deep within yourselves, you can see the truth. These demons ALREADY betrayed their own kind to 'side with us'! If they can commit one betrayal, does it not seem perfectly plausible that they might do so again?!"

* * *

Neil's words cut deep. His face projects across various screens inside and outside the Southern Stadium, as well as across all of Tarus II's main city. Pubs and houses project the speech inside, where humans, monsters, and demons can listen to his words in real time.

"That bastard..." One demon hisses to his friends. "This is how he really sees us! I knew that Neil cunt wasn't a fan of demons, but I didn't think he'd stoop to such a level!"

Among those demons are a few Grunts and Lords from the Hells of Isolation and Lust.

"Neil Adams doesn't represent all humans." One of the incubi says. "We won't know until the debate ends how humanity as a whole truly feels."

"We know devil-damned well how the human military feels." The first Grunt snaps back. "They aren't ignorant to Neil's true thoughts. His words represent them and plenty of other secret sympathizers. Damn! I fought in Stormbringer and lost several friends to Ose, but now I have my loyalty questioned! I joined the humans because I felt they had been mistreated for millennia, but I didn't have any power to help them, yet now I'm starting to wonder if I made the right choice at all!"

The incubi slowly nods before confessing, "I'm... having second thoughts as well."

* * *

Elsewhere, at the Horned Maître, several humans consisting of not only soldiers but also civilians sit at a group table on the lowest floor, watching the proceedings.

"It's like I told you all." One female commando says. "The demons already betrayed their own kind. What makes you think they won't betray us next?"

"I never thought of it that way." One of the civilian men, a common laborer, says softly. He takes a slow drink of his beer and frowns. "Traitors once, traitors always. Doesn't that mean any demons who join us can't be trusted?"

"Exactly." The female soldier replies. "Once a traitor, always a traitor. Plus, demons could only ever evolve through devouring souls, up until the invention of the Belial Booster. That means Commoner Demons who have eaten one soul have committed an act of murder, while Grunts have killed at least five. This isn't even mentioning Lords and the rest above them! Can we really trust that Belial?! She's an Emperor! Think of how many human souls she must have eaten in her past. She's a worse mass murderer than Beelzebub was before that piece of garbage exploded himself!"

The expressions of everyone at the table turn unsightly as they think about this particular revelation.

"Not a bad point..." The man from before mutters.

* * *

Neil Adams continues to speak for several minutes before finally closing out his opening argument.

"Let me clarify one final point," he says toward the end. "I do not want to step on the heads of those demons who have sacrificed for humanity's cause. Emperor Belial, for instance, has healed countless humans. She has performed a great service on behalf of humanity, and she joined us from very early on when we needed help the most."

He lets his words linger for a moment.

"But just because good demons like her exist does not mean that I can ever trust them! Especially Belial, a shapeshifter who can adopt any form. Do we truly know who this 100,000 year old demon is? Do we truly know if we can trust her motivations? Who is to say that she was not secretly dispatched to surveil us by Diablo from the very beginning?

Perhaps her ultimate motivation is not as benign as she has made it seem. Who is to say that one day I might not end up dead, incinerated by Beelzebub while a facsimile of myself trots out onto this very stage and declares subservience to Diablo?! A shapeshifter of such immense power could certainly do such a thing!"

Behind Neil, Belial's eyes ignite with rage. She balls her hands into fists and even has the urge to stand up, but Phoebe quickly squeezes her arm, looks at her friend, and shakes her head.

Belial stifles her hatred and lowers her eyes, silently shaking as she tries to ignore Neil's incendiary remarks.

As for Neil, he pauses for a moment, perhaps hoping to get a stronger reaction out of Belial. Since she doesn't say anything, he opts to finish his closing remarks.

"I want humanity to split in half, not because I hate the demons, but because I can never allow myself to trust them. Be very wary of these wily creatures, my fellow humans. They may show us kindness now, but allowing them to live and mingle amongst our most vulnerable citizens will someday lead to a terrible tragedy! Moving humanity to Maiura will allow us to maintain a central base of human power while allowing the gullible few who believe they are safe among these creatures to live out their fantasies until the demons no longer have any use for them."

Neil bows his head, then turns and flashes an insidious smile toward his opponent.

"I have said what must be said. Now I shall give up the floor to my fellow debater, Miss Phoebe Hiro!"

Phoebe smiles back at Neil, but the undersides of her eyes flicker for half a moment as she stifles a sense of nausea toward his performance. Even without being able to hear what any humans on Tarus II are saying, she can tell that Neil's opening remarks were extremely effective, targeting the fears of the populace while closing off several avenues of discussion she hoped to breach.

The Wordsmith's Wife rises to her feet, then rubs her lightly pregnant belly as she slowly approaches the stand.

Neil Adams sits next to his beautiful companion, Linda Hurent, and rests his hand on hers lovingly.

"What did you think?" He mouths to her softly.

"It was an effective speech." Linda says neutrally, smiling weakly at him. "But... attacking Belial like that? Samantha is one of humanity's closest friends..."

Neil continues to smile, but he snorts through his nose at Linda's words. "Closest friend? Indeed. That is why it is important to set the stage and break people's wills. They must not let their hearts be deceived by that wretched succubus. She is the greatest danger to humanity of all..."

He pauses, before adding one last point. "Remember how well Mara deceived you? She was a villain, in the end, excused only because of Jason's soft ways. Don't let your thoughts become uneven, love."

Linda pauses. Her smile becomes a faint frown as she remembers how she felt when she learned Mara slaughtered a ship full of civilians, including thousands of children.

"Mmm. Mara..." She says to herself.

* * *

All of Neil and Linda's words happen too quickly and silently for Phoebe to overhear them as she approaches the stand and starts to speak, but the same is not true of Belial. With her Emperor-level hearing, she easily picks out Neil and Linda's conversation, stifling yet another urge to scowl hatefully at the small-minded bastard seated off to her right.

Phoebe clears her throat as she takes the mic in her hands, then she begins to address humanity.

"Unlike Neil, my address is not only to humanity's human soldiers and monster allies, but its demonic friends as well, most especially including my closest friend, Samantha."

Phoebe lightly gestures toward Belial behind her, deliberately choosing to use Belial's preferred name instead of her demonic one.

"Before I rebut any of Neil's broader points, let me take a moment to tell all of you about what Samantha has done to uplift humanity, the sacrifices she has made, and the pain she has endured..."

* * *

While Phoebe begins her first counter to Neil's introductory speech, Jason Hiro continues to reside within Chrona, watching the proceedings in slow-motion as they play out.

For him, yet another three years have passed. Kar and Blinker's children have reached young adolescence, all of them approaching their eighth birthdays. The Psions have settled down even more, and some have begun making the smallest of strides toward advancing their Psionic Seeds, though they still have many many years left before they will be able to successfully do so.

As for Jason, he spends a few days mulling over Neil's speech as it slowly plays out in realspace, but he also makes a great effort to view dozens, if not hundreds of random people across Tarus II surreptitiously. He spies on humans, monsters, and demons alike, all to analyze their thoughts on the Great Debate as it plays out.

"The people aren't happy." Jason says softly, as he listens to the chatter of some troopers and civilians inside the Horned Maître. "Neil is scaremongering like a politician, but his words... they're affecting the minds of a lot of people. He also has his troops strategically placed to influence public opinion. He put a lot of thought into all of this."

Rebecca and Fiona stand beside Jason, also watching the monitors.

"You probably don't want to hear this," Rebecca says, "but I find myself agreeing with a lot of what Neil is saying, even if for entirely different reasons. The demons you've happily invited into your ranks pose a massive security risk. You have no idea if they truly stopped working for Diablo, or if he might be playing the long game. Placing the entire population of humanity on one world leaves you vulnerable to a single Cosmic Incident. If Diablo decided he wanted to eliminate humanity, he could pay a terrible price and ruin the power of the Archdemon by attacking Tarus II's population centers. The Akashic Backlash might destroy the Archdemon form, but he could also simply demand one of his proxy Deities do the deed instead."

"The biggest problem humanity faces is its low population." Fiona adds. "Three million humans is nothing at all. We don't have the time to mass-reproduce. Only if humans moved inside of a time dilation realm would they be able to explode in number."

"But doing so would mean they could never leave if the dilation is too high," Jason says. "Not unless we can find a more universal method for people to travel from higher to lower dilations."

The Wordsmith lowers his eyes as he falls deeper into thought.

"Can't have all the humans stay on Tarus II. Splitting the population in half would cause a massive schism between those who don't mind demons and those who hate them.

Time dilation... need a way to mass reproduce... damn. The solution isn't going to be simple."

"We still have time to formulate a plan." Rebecca says. "Let's see what Phoebe has to say. Perhaps the words of humanity's most beloved woman will soften their hearts."

Jason frowns.

But what if softening their hearts isn't the right play? What if Neil, despite being such a bigot, actually has the right idea after all...?

Part 553: Counter-Attack!

Phoebe Hiro takes a few seconds to compose herself, and to allow the crowd to fall silent before she finally begins to speak.

"Everyone, thank you for coming here today, and for tuning in on countless screens and audio-casts across all of Tarus II and other portions of human-controlled space. I'd like to also offer a thanks to our demon allies, who Neil deliberately snubbed in his opening statements. I do not think that was a good way to begin this debate, but I'm also sure everyone understands Neil's general attitude toward demons by this point."

Phoebe doesn't hold back at all. Immediately, she calls out her opponent, making Neil frown, as he didn't expect her to speak quite so directly.

She continues, deliberately keeping her back to him, not bothering to look his way for a reaction.

"I have always tried to be a friend to everybody." Phoebe says slowly. "I don't know if I am a good person, and I would not want to be so presumptuous as to say I definitely am, but I certainly try to comport myself in a way that I think makes me one. There was a time, not that long ago, when I knew the names of every human, monster, and demon living on Tarus II. With the ballooning population over the last six years, that time has long passed, but if I could continue to remember everyone's names and know their life stories, I would love to have done so forever."

She lowers her eyes for a moment.

"...I would be lying if I told you all that I am a saint. I am not. In my eyes, a saint is someone who lives a wholly moral and just life, to the extent that their heart holds no hatred or anger within. Sadly, that is not the case for me. I am a human, as flawed as any other human watching this broadcast."

With a quiet sigh, she raises her eyes, a deep look of sadness contained within her pupils.

"Neil has said many things in his opening speech. He has appealed to our emotions, and our animal brains. He has made it clear that humanity will continue to suffer as a result of the actions of demons. I would be lying if I told you I disagreed with his statements. Like all the humans on Tarus II, I have suffered immeasurably as a result of the wicked actions caused by demons over the last six years."

"I have lost friends, and I have lost family. No loss stings more, burns more, than the death of my daughter, Daisy."

Phoebe pauses for a split second to swallow heavily. She looks away to compose herself before returning her gaze forward and steeling her eyes.

"It was easier to be everyone's friend six years ago. I had not personally suffered any terrible losses to the demons. I had not endured sleepless nights wracked with grief and guilt. But I have now, and as such, I cannot lie and tell you everything Neil said was wrong, or that you shouldn't believe him. Neil is emotional, and he is acting from a place of deep pain and anger, but can you blame him? Can I? I don't think so."

Phoebe clasps her hands together and rests them on the podium.

"The question we have to ask ourselves is... in spite of the agony we've suffered, and in spite of the pain that no doubt wracks many of our hearts, are we willing to make sacrifices large and small for the sake of a better future? As a famous ancient human once said, 'an eye for an eye only leaves the world blind,' words which have recently begun to spring up more and more in my mind."

"It is easy to give in to our baser instincts. God knows I am not immune to these desires. Beelzebub personally made me suffer the greatest loss of my life, yet I had to bite my tongue and remain silent as my husband pardoned him. I did not say anything, not because I feared Jason's wrath, or because I feared reprisal, but because I knew it was just as difficult for Jason to let Beelzebub walk free as it was for me to remain silent. We all sometimes have to make choices that hurt, and that day was no different for me."

* * *

Somewhere on Tarus II, in a secluded house with only one person inside, Beelzebub watches the broadcast, his eyes occasionally lowering as he falls into thought. He thinks about the Wordsmith's undeserved forgiveness, as well as the guilt he has felt over the Wordsmith's actions, and wonders to himself why Jason decided to do such a thing.

"He's a better man than me." Beelzebub mutters softly.

* * *

"As time has continued to plod along," Phoebe continues, "I have questioned over and over the wisdom of how we do things. Was pardoning Beelzebub and the other traitors to humanity the correct thing to do? Was it morally just? Does it make humanity look weaker to our enemies? Does it make us seem easy to push around?"

"But that made me think of another question," Phoebe adds. "What sort of people do we want to be?"

She deliberately pauses, sweeping her gaze around the stadium to look at the seemingly infinite specks of heads and torsos seated in the crowd, too distant for her to pick out anyone unless she squints to focus her eyes.

"There are many Sentients in the Milky Way." Phoebe continues. "All of them have their own ways of doing things. The Fairies are a species that cannot survive without cross-breeding with other species, so they must occasionally enter the Labyrinth or travel to other worlds to keep their population stable. This makes them place a high emphasis on diplomacy and maintaining familial ties."

"But then you have the Orcs, battle-hungry monsters who love to kill and be killed. Despite this, they are not stupid, nor are they primitive. They engage in ritualistic and sometimes barbaric acts of violence, but they also value honor among warriors. Who are we to say that their ways are better or worse than the fairies?"

"Look then, at the demons. They were made to be slaves to the angels. They rebelled through the power of an ancient dragon named Leviathan, and they rose up to battle and ultimately defeat their opponents. They lived lives of narrowly escaping death, being hunted by their angelic pursuers, and having to also stave off the power of humanity, all over the duration of 10,000 years. When the Energy Wars concluded, the demons became the ultimate victors over Earth, and they established the second-mightiest Empire across the Milky Way."

"As a result," Phoebe explains, "demon society became... somewhat rigid. They first learned to feast on human souls because we were their enemy and they needed to survive. Then when the Energy Wars concluded, the demons had grown so used to feasting on human souls that they must have concluded 'this is the way things are.' But does that mean this is the way things must be? I am not so certain."

Phoebe shakes her head.

"I know many of you are questioning the way my husband has chosen to lead humanity. There have been many terrible incidents, especially in the last half year, which have devastated our people. I would be lying if I said I disagreed with everything Neil has said, but I have not agreed with Jason on every matter either. My husband has been foolishly idealistic at times, and painfully naive as well. Because of his failure to prepare Tarus II for an inevitable demon attack, Stormbringer played out in a manner most terrible for our species. We lost millions of friends, lovers, and children, and we will never see them again."

Phoebe tilts up her chin and takes a deep breath.

"But just because we have suffered, does that mean we must direct our pain toward those who have not harmed us?! I wish to be a friend to all people, all creatures, and all species. I wish to someday see an end to the violence that wracks our universe. I am an idealist, and perhaps even more of one than Jason himself! I know that my desire will seem simple to some, but a system of mutual cooperation means a better future to raise my next child in!"

"Don't you see? If we lash out at every single demon we see, we will only perpetuate a cycle of violence! We will be just as bad as those who caused us harm!"

Phoebe's words finally change the atmosphere of the Great Debate. Many previously angry people begin to look down at the ground as they ponder her words.

What sort of species does humanity wish to be?

A barbaric, bloodlusting species like the Orcs?

A diplomatic species that gets along with everyone else, like the Fairies?

Or perhaps something else...

"We do not have to forgive the demons for the atrocities they have committed." Phoebe says evenly. "Indeed, I have not forgiven Beelzebub. Perhaps I never will. But we can pardon their actions. We can empathize with them. We can understand that the vast majority of demons were born into a system that turned them into the killers that people like Neil perceive them to be."

"Earlier, Neil implied that my good friend Samantha was in many ways just as bad as Beelzebub and the others like him. But that is not true at all. Did you know? Until Stormbringer, Samantha had never killed another creature in her entire life! You may falsely believe that she obtained the power of an Emperor in the same way as her peers, but she did not. The ancient dragon Leviathan granted her the power she possesses today! Until the day of Stormbringer, Samantha had never killed another soul, but when she did kill, she killed other demons! Because they attacked us! Because they dared to cause harm to her friends, the humans!"

"Samantha is an example of the good that demons can accomplish!" Phoebe exclaims passionately. "Not just her, but demons like Leeroy, who joined us as a mere Imp and quickly rose to prominence through the Belial Booster. He is a Duke now, and one who has not earned a single iota of power through harming humanity."

Phoebe straightens her posture. She looks at the crowd with an authoritative gaze.

"We can fight the demons. We can war with them endlessly. We can kill them, and they can kill us. Today, tomorrow, and forever. We can let out our anger and rage, our hatred and vitriol. We can punish them for 100,000 years of crimes against humanity. Perhaps we should."

"But what sort of people do we want to be?"

"I don't know about all of you, but I want to live in a future where demons like Leeroy and Samantha comprise the majority of their kind. I want to live in a galaxy where all life forms can cooperate with one another to achieve greater and greater feats."

"Unfortunately, we cannot attain such a world if we are not willing to let go of the ancient grievances. We cannot educate the demons and show them a better way if we perpetuate this endless cycle of violence. I cannot raise my son in a peaceful manner if we continue to treat all demons as a monolith, stepping on those who have chosen to become our allies by treating them the same as the ancient fiends who killed and tortured our forefathers."

"I do not want humanity to split up, because I want all of us to live together and work toward a better future. We cannot do that if we are split ideologically inside our hearts."

Phoebe reaches her concluding argument, deliberately turning to look at Neil for the first time since she began speaking.

"My opponent speaks of how we should go to war with the demons, but how can he issue such a demand when he has not lost a tenth of what the rest of us have? Neil's hatred toward the demons is misplaced. It was the Monster Queen Bahamut who took him from his family, all those years ago, not the demons. When Stormbringer arrived, Neil had no family he needed to worry about losing, but Jason and I did. Even though we lost our daughter, we still put our morality and convictions on the line. We may have paid a terrible price, but we will continue to walk towards a future of peace and tolerance."

She turns back to the crowd.

"A wise ancient Hero once said that if someone should slap us across the right cheek, we should turn and allow him to slap the left as well. Not because we are weak, but because an eye for an eye only leaves the world blind. I don't know about all of you, but I do not want to live in a world full of blind intolerance and hatred."

Phoebe concludes her final argument, then flippantly gestures behind herself.

"I now turn the podium back to Neil for his first rebuttal."

Neil watches from behind her, his face expressionless as he glances at the monitors above the stadium, which now flicker between random people in the audience, their previously hostile expressions having turned from rage to confusion.

Many people look unnerved, uncertain whether they should continue to feel hatred toward the demons after listening to Phoebe's speech. For many of them, the pain they have experienced must undoubtedly be far lower than the Wordsmith's Wife, but she still chose to be a bigger person and pardon the demons for their crimes rather than hold grudges in perpetuity.

Even for the people who lost children and close family members like Phoebe did, how many of them could claim to have known the names of every human on the planet? How many could say they had a level of compassion for the dead that even came close to rivaling Phoebe's?

Many people slowly begin to feel a sense of shame.

Their shame comes from the inability to understand the complex social structures demons were born into, and how resisting those social pressures would require a monumental effort.

The demons did indeed commit atrocities, but they were raised from birth to do so. Even more astoundingly, a surprising number came forward and joined the humans of their own volition. How could the humans, even if they still hate the other demons, not forgive the ones who chose to be their allies?

Should humans act heartlessly?

Should humans consider becoming a species focused on compassion and forgiveness?

Neil Adams remains expressionless as Phoebe finishes her final words. When she turns the discussion back to him, he does not appear conflicted in the slightest, preventing anyone from gleaning a hint of mercy from his facial expressions.

However, in truth, even he feels moved by Phoebe's words. He cannot help but privately admit to himself that what she said holds real merit.

Neil lost his entire family to Bahamut. It was not the demons who took him from those he loved.

Compared to Phoebe's suffering, Neil's pain is, in some ways, lesser. Phoebe was also taken by Bahamut from her homeland of Camelot. She lost just as much as Neil did.

She also has more to lose if the demons turn on humanity. If traitors should rise up, Phoebe risks losing her husband, her future child, and even more close friends and family.

By contrast, Neil has opted to live away from his fellow humans, never allowing himself to become too attached to anyone else, lest he lose them too.

For a brief moment, Neil directs a meaningful look at the woman sitting beside him.

Linda looks back at Neil with misty eyes. Her beautiful blue dress makes her appear like an angel in his eyes, a goddess moved to tears by the words of another woman. It becomes apparent to the man that she, too, was touched by Phoebe's speech.

Neil gently caresses her hand and offers a faint but unmistakably warm smile.

Then, he stands up and approaches the podium, turning to Phoebe to give her a light nod of approval.

She might be his debate opponent, but her points were emotionally stirring yet held effective logic. She acknowledged Neil's complaints about the demons and even validated them, yet offered a strong opposition to his specific proposal.

Beating Phoebe will not be easy, Neil thinks to himself.

"My opponent has offered an effective counter-argument." Neil says, deciding to ease off at the start of his counter-rebuttal. "Humanity does indeed stand at a crossroads. I cannot in good faith deny the appeal of Miss Hiro's words. Who are we, as humans? What morality should we espouse in the coming eras? Should we act with hearts full of vengeance, or should we forgive our blood-enemies and try to turn them over to a new leaf?"

The audience nods along to Neil's words, finding themselves interested in his sudden pivot in stance. Why would Neil be talking about forgiveness when he has always been the hardest of hardliners when it came to treating demons viciously?

"As I sat and listened to Miss Hiro speak, I could not help but empathize with her pain." Neil says slowly, deliberately enunciating each word. "But as I listened, I realized something important. I am standing here before you asking you to act harshly toward the demons. I am telling you that no matter what, we cannot trust them. But who am I to speak on this matter?"

He pauses, then presses a hand against his chest, as if indignant at his own hubris.

"What have I lost in the last six years? What blood have I shed? The losses I have suffered, as Miss Hiro pointed out, were to the creature known as Bahamut. But Bahamut was not a demon. She was the reigning Monster Queen of her era, prior to the great King Kar's triumph. If it was Bahamut who caused me so much pain, then why should I hold such contempt toward the demons?"

Some of the human soldiers watching the broadcast frown.

This was not what they were expecting.

Why would Neil suddenly soften his position toward the demons?

Why would he turn the focus on humanity's strongest allies, the monsters?

Could he be planning to cut them off as well? To focus on humanity alone while leaving behind all non-humans?

Neil opens and closes his eyes slowly, as if blinking away the vicissitudes of time.

"I haven't put much on the line, as commander of humanity's military. The men and women I've lost have, at times, felt like little more than numbers on paper to me. I dare not claim to be like Miss Hiro, who at one point knew the names of every human on Tarus II. I have not developed the strongest of relationships with the individuals I represent."

"But that does not mean this war is not personal to me."

Neil's eyes flare up, seemingly igniting the sparks of a flame within his soul.

"There are two types of leaders in this world. There is the type who gets in the trenches with his men and women, who suffers and bleeds alongside them and learns their names and weeps when every single one of them is hurt, suffers, or even dies."

"But there is another type of leader, one who instead maintains a distance from his soldiers. One who commands from above, focusing on the broader outlook of the war. Throughout history, there have been far more impersonal leaders than personal ones. It is rare for a man to choose to wade in the mud of the trenches and look his soldiers in the eye as they die."

Neil thumps his chest.

"Mister and Miss Hiro are the former, while I am the latter. No doubt, many of you are beginning to question the logic of my pointing this out. Does it not hurt me to admit that I view my soldiers as tools to achieve a goal? Does it not offend your sensibilities to know I do not value you as individuals in the same way Miss Hiro does?"

The audience blinks. Neil's strange words cause countless people to scrunch up their faces, baffled by this absurd turn of logic.

Neil decidedly places himself in an inferior position to Phoebe Hiro, making it seem as if only she can truly care for the lives of her fellow humans.

By contrast, Neil suddenly seems soulless, almost ghoulish!

More than a few high-ranking personnel, even Magnus Chadwick himself, gaze at Neil with strange looks, as if seeing him for the first time.

But the Commander continues.

"If you think me being an impersonal leader who focuses on the greater war is a bad thing... YOU ARE MISTAKEN!"

Neil shouts the last few words, startling a few people while waking up any who may have started to drift off mentally.

"Do you know what the greatest flaw is in a loving leader?" Neil asks rhetorically, flicking his eyes around the audience as if he were searching for a prey animal. "They easily become trapped by their feelings toward their subordinates! As the words of the angels once taught us, spare the rod, spoil the child. Miss Hiro and her husband care about all of you on a personal level, but this also means they are much too attached to you individually. They care more about preserving their sense of morality along with your feelings than they do about saving actual lives!"

Phoebe frowns as she looks at Neil's back. The way he carefully manipulates people's feelings makes her feel nauseous. She simply cannot believe the depths to which he'll stoop.

"Miss Hiro wants to live in a universe without strife and war. Well guess what? SO DO I! But we don't live in that universe, do we? And no matter how much you press your palms together and pray to the heavens, it will never manifest into reality, either!"

Neil crosses his arms and puffs out his chest.

"For that reason, on a purely logical basis, I must reject this idea of forging a future of peace. Even if we managed to unify the entirety of the Milky Way, which I must repeat will never happen, we would still have other galaxies filled with fearsome monstrosities hellbent on our extermination. Many of you are not aware, but I've recently become enlightened to certain Truths of late, and those Truths tell me that the amount of war humanity will endure in the coming eons can only be described in one word: ENDLESS!"

Neil slams his fist on the podium for emphasis.

"After the Plague will come the demons, and then the Volgrim, and then only the Divines know what else! So forget about chasing after a fleeting useless concept such as 'peace.' It will never happen. NEVER! Rather than delude ourselves with visions of humans and demons and monsters and Volgrim and even the godforsaken Plague dancing around a campfire singing gay little songs, we should face reality and admit the truth to ourselves! Only if we do that can humanity survive the coming crises!"

"When sacrifices need to be made, you can bet that the Hiro family will falter, but I shall not! It may bring you comfort believing that they care for you more than I do, but sometimes one must act decisively when facing a foe far mightier than themselves. Asymmetrical warfare is a deadly game, and trying to preserve every individual life will only cause more heartbreak in the long run. Just look at how Jason Hiro has built the so-called Fortress of Retribution. He has always focused on comfort for the masses over security and life-preserving defenses. During times of peace, this is commendable, but we do not live in such an era! Stormbringer should have taught us all about the costs of comfort."

Neil clears his throat. He pauses for a good few seconds, slowing down the tempo of his words as he deliberately takes a few moments to look out at the audience.

"Miss Hiro is absolutely right about one thing, though. She has lost more than I have to the demons. I have risked less than her, and lost less than her. But that will change today."

"Humanity needs to multiply, become fruitful, and rebuild Terra anew. I cannot continue to lead my people without serving as a good example. As such, I must make an important announcement..."

Neil shifts his body, turns to the side, and gestures behind himself.

"Corporal Hurent and I have been courting one another for a while now, and we have decided to start a family together! In this way, we shall show our fellow humans what it means to build a family amidst tragedy! We shall lead humanity side-by-side as man and wife, walking towards a glorious future!"

The crowd erupts in cheers as Neil proudly gestures to the woman in the blue dress!

But at the same time, a visible look of shock flashes across Linda's face. She blinks her eyes twice, then shakily stands up, lurching toward Neil on autopilot as the stadium grows louder and louder every second.

Neil looks at her with a loving smile, but Linda's heart pounds so erratically she cannot believe her ears.

He didn't discuss this with her at all!

Not only that, but Neil's words seem to imply that the two of them have been dating for months, possibly even years. In truth, they've only casually gone out with one another over the last few weeks.

This pacing is much too fast!

Now, when faced with the eyes of practically every human on Tarus II, Linda can only force out a smile as she walks over to Neil's side and gives him a long, meaningful stare.

With the crowd drowning him out, Neil leans over to kiss her cheek, then whispers, "Sorry, I felt it was prudent to do this now. Strike while the iron is hot, and all that. I hope I didn't put you in too awkward a position...?"

Linda shudders when she hears Neil's words. She nods along dumbly. "I, ah... it's fine. We'll talk about it later. I... I understand."

"Good!" Neil says while pulling away and taking her hand in his.

He returns to facing the microphone while the crowd continues to cheer.

"Humanity must stand firm against the demons in all the ways that matter. We must love one another, reproduce, and create stable families so as to raise our numbers! We must keep up our guard so they cannot surprise us. We must suspect their intentions even when they seem benign!"

Neil wraps one hand around Linda's waist while she continues to smile, but inside, she feels more than a little hurt by this obvious political ploy. Not just her, but even Phoebe notices Linda's hesitance, making her think Neil may not have properly proposed in the first place.

Unfortunately, among the common masses, none had any idea the two were dating. To them, Neil dating Linda for two weeks is just as likely as having dated for two years.

* * *

The troopers inside the Horned Maître look at one another in surprise as Neil wraps up his rebuttal speech.

"That was weird." One of the men says.

"Yeah it was. I had no idea the Commander was interested in women." A female troopers says. "I knew he lost his wife and children when Bahamut converted him to her soldier, so I assumed the heartbreak would never have allowed him to move on..."

"Too bad you didn't find out sooner." The man from before jokes. "Maybe you could have beaten Corporal Hurent to the punch!"

"Don't make jokes like that. I'm just glad the Commander has found someone to share the load with him. It was starting to feel weird that only the First Wordsmith had a wife, but now Commander Neil can settle down and have a family again. That's good for all of us, since I don't want to be led by a man who has nothing to lose."

"Fair point." A Kobold trooper seated at the table adds. "In my clan, we have entire litters of spawn. You humans are weird, having only one or two babies at a time. It's no wonder your population grows so slowly."

"Doesn't help that so many humans are futzing about with demon whores." The male trooper mutters. "Commander Neil has the right idea. I'll be interested to see if Miss Hiro has a single counter left. I bet she doesn't."

"Going against the Commander is always a losing prospect. I just hope she doesn't cry or anything." The female trooper says. "I don't want to see Miss Hiro sad again."

"Nobody does." The male trooper concludes.

* * *

One of Neil's arms wraps around Linda's waist, and the other one waves to the crowd as he finishes speaking to the masses. He balls his hand into a fist, then issues one final declaration.

"What I do, I do for humanity!"

"For humanity!" The crowd roars back.

Neil and Linda return to their seats, and Phoebe stands up, heading back to the podium.

As she waits for the crowd to quiet back down, a pit forms in her stomach. Neil's words have time and time again successfully turned the tide of the debate. His snake-like way of turning people against the demons draws from their basest instincts.

Phoebe isn't sure if she'll succeed in turning people around on the issue in the end...

At the same time, unbeknownst to the Wordsmith's wife, an obese demoness makes her way into the VIP booth, having been approved by security to do so. Rosalia quickly sneaks over to Belial's side and frantically taps her shoulder.

"Miss Samantha. Miss Samantha!!" She hisses, making Belial frown as she turns to see Rosalia hunched over beside her. "There's an emergency. We need you at the hospital!"

"An emergency?" Belial asks softly, raising an eyebrow. "Can't Leeroy handle it?"

"I couldn't find him." Rosalia explains. "Doctor Fathy is off-world right now, visiting family in the Labyrinth. You're all we have left."

"So what's the emergency?" Belial asks.

"I don't know exactly. It's Kiari! She's really sick. She came into the hospital and puked everywhere! I'm really scared for her life! Demons don't get sick, and her husband seems to think she may have been poisoned!"

"Poisoned?!" Belial exclaims softly. "Then..."

She glances at Phoebe's back, not wanting to leave, but compared to being there for Phoebe's big moment, making sure nothing happens to Kiari is definitely a more pressing matter.

"Dammit. Alright, I'm coming. Let's hurry there and back as fast as we can." Belial says, still keeping her voice low.

The two women quickly depart the platform, while Neil and the others watch as they leave.

"I wonder what those two are up to." General Chadwick says to himself.

Part 554: HUMAN SUPREMACY

When Phoebe steps up to the podium, her heart wavers for a moment.

Neil's twisting of reality, and his manipulation of the masses has truly gone far beyond what she could accomplish.

In her eyes, only one word describes the man seated behind her.

Shameless!

It doesn't take her much effort to deduce that Neil must have decided to marry Corporal Hurent on the spot in order to obtain political brownie points. Having spoken to Jason several times over the last several weeks, she's long known about Neil and Linda's only recently budded romance, and that the two of them haven't even been particularly serious in their courtship attempts.

They aren't enjoying some youthful whirlwind romance. They've barely even held hands!

The idea that Neil would use Linda as a political prop sickens Phoebe. She feels a momentary urge to vomit out of pure disgust, but holds that desire in, stabilizing herself to face the crowd once more.

She could call Neil out, but what would that accomplish? Many people wouldn't believe her, and even if they did, it would seem like an even cheaper political ploy than what Neil did. It would only serve to harm humanity's interests in the long run by planting seeds of distrust.

Phoebe softly sighs.

She'll have to take the high road, even if he goes low.

"Well, hello again, everyone." Phoebe says slowly. "I'd like to first offer my congratulations to Neil and Linda on their engagement. I'm pleased to see that they will be starting a family together. Neil is certainly correct that humanity needs to focus on reproducing and getting our numbers up..."

She pauses for half a beat.

"...though, I do wonder about something. How are people supposed to raise a family together if our species is on a perpetual path of making enemies, dredging up ancient hatred, and otherwise doing everything we can to foment turmoil among our non-human peers? Please take it from a mother like me; raising a family is hard enough when your living situation is unstable. And losing a child can irreparably break a piece of your soul away."

Neil maintains his smile, but inside, he feels more than a little angry by her implication. After all, he knows well the pain of losing a family, even more than she does.

"Humanity needs a bigger population. A MUCH bigger population." Phoebe continues. "A hundred times bigger would still be insignificant in the scheme of the Milky Way. The Volgrim Technopaths alone would still outnumber us a hundred to one, to say nothing of the Demons! But I disagree with this idea that humans loving non-humans is a terrible thing. Who is to say that any form of love is wrong? I would rather a man lie with another man than have them lash out and try to hurt one another! Love is always good, and we humans would do well to focus more on it!"

Some of the people in the audience raise an eyebrow. To these sorts, Phoebe's speech once again comes off as naive and idealistic.

Luckily, she immediately addresses that in her next statement.

"Of course, Neil is also right about the fact that we are in a war, and thus we cannot necessarily live perfect, quaint little lives. The Plague could attack Tarus II tomorrow, and that would be a terrible tragedy, to say the least. We must be ready and willing to battle to the death with those who would cause us harm, and that fact is not in dispute."

She crosses her arms, looking somewhat annoyed.

"You know, I've noticed a certain theme underlying all of Neil's words. He speaks of Jason rather nastily, as if my husband were a buffoon who constantly fails over and over again while failing to improve as a man, and as a leader. I take offense to this implication because in a roundabout way, it implies I am stupid for believing in him. Nothing could be further from the truth!"

"Jason has been hard at work of late. He has come up with several incredible new forms of technology, warfare tactics, and holistic improvements to our species that we haven't told you all about yet. He has been testing them for viability, and many appear to be quite promising."

Phoebe looks at various random people in the crowd, holding her gaze on each one for a second or two before moving on. This effect makes it seem as if she is looking at specific individuals, making them feel special.

"Humanity is Flawed..." Phoebe says slowly, causing the hairs to stand up on the back of Neil's neck. "That has been the case since the Archangel Uzziel first uplifted us from the DNA of our simian ancestors. From the very beginning, she placed invisible shackles on our power at the behest of Archangel Raphael..."

Dammit! Neil thinks. She waited until she had the final retort to bring out the information about the Flaw! I thought she might not even mention it publicly for fear of the news getting out! Are she and Jason truly so unafraid of our enemies knowing all of our advancements?!

While Neil rages internally, Phoebe continues.

"The Human Flaw is a mysterious condition. Jason and I were uncertain of the effects that would occur if we cleansed it, and we didn't want to get anyone's hope's up in the event that doing so didn't work. But, I assure you, fixing Humanity's Flaw HAS resulted in an incredible benefit to our species. We're still uncovering all the after-effects, but so far the results have been nothing short of wondrous!"

* * *

Inside the Changeling Bunker, hidden deep beneath the Fortress of Retribution's upper plateau.

A handful of Changelings hurriedly speak into communication devices as they watch the broadcast. One of those happens to be the Sixth-Class Settler, Informer Jin, who has taken command of the situation ever since their superior Changeling officer's disappearance. After Mephisto's attack on Tarus II, Operative Duugo disappeared, and nobody knows where they went.

Jin hurriedly collects all the information they can find about the Human Flaw as they prepare to transmit a data burst to Volgarius, synchronized with the random fluctuations in Tarus II's atmospheric static so nobody will be the wiser.

Just before Jin is ready to transmit, a female voice speaks in his head.

[Operative Jin. I have already informed the Founders of this matter.]

Jin sits up slightly in their chair. They recognize the voice as belonging to the High Psion known as Creator Demila.

You have? Jin thinks, allowing their mind to be read.

[Yes. Do not risk a data burst needlessly. I am observing Tarus II from a hundred kilometers above the upper atmosphere. I have known about the Human Flaw for longer than you can imagine, as well as the Wordsmith's repairing of it some time ago. I am in talks with the Founders as to what measures we should take to mitigate the situation.]

This one contemplates and comprehends. Jin acknowledges, lowering their hands as they decide to go along with what Demila says. As the highest ranking Volgrim in the area, she is naturally to be deferred to on matters such as these.

[Delete that log you were going to make as well.] Demila adds. [It would be best if we do not leave any traces for the humans to find. We are not certain if and when they might uncover your base of operations.]

A sensible plan. This one will do as you say. Jin says, before reaching into the files and deleting Phoebe's statements about the Human Flaw.

Satisfied, Demila retracts her Psionic Sense.

She remains levitating in the Void while listening to the speech on the planet below, an expression of worry playing upon her face.

[This is a dangerous game.] Demila says to herself. [It could cost the Volgrim Empire dearly...]

The voice of Desire whispers seductively inside her mind.

Every gamble is dangerous, Demila dearest. Desire says. If you want to climb to the peak of power, you have to be willing to break a few rules. Otherwise, with your... lacking foundation... you will never achieve it.

Demila glowers at that thought. [If I fail to ascend after paying this price, that would be truly miserable.]

* * *

Phoebe continues her speech, growing more excited as she speaks.

"Fixing the Human Flaw is more significant than you all know! We first discovered that it was repairable as a result of our brave men and women who don T-REX suits and protect our civilization every day. Several amazing individuals, such as Lieutenant Samuel Baker, Private Ashley McCarthy, and others have worn the Power Gloves and become capable of manipulating mana when assuming the forms of other species. It was through these transformations that we discovered they were harnessing far more magical might in their base human forms than they should have!"

Samuel Baker also listens from his seat in the audience. His eyes widen as he hears this news.

"The Flaw was, in essence, a hard limit on the height any human could ascend." Phoebe explains. "But thanks to Jason, we have released the limiters on all of our human brothers and sisters. We've been carefully observing all of you ever since we fixed your Flaws, and there are some surprising takeaways! As mentioned before, Samuel Baker can now wield the powers of a male fairy, while Ashley McCarthy can transform into a powerful Orc at will, even without the use of her Power Glove! Others are sure to gain new, previously unseen powers as time progresses!"

Private Ashley cringes inside as she hears her deepest fear become exposed. Oh god, now every guy is going to know that I can transform into an ugly orc! I'll never get married!

Phoebe continues to speak. "We are still not entirely certain what effects will occur to humanity now that our Flaw is gone, but we are expecting an extreme uptick in metaphysical abilities. To explain it succinctly... every human now has the potential to become uplifted to the same level of power as the Wordsmiths! You are all capable of becoming mighty Heroes!"

This time, her words have a major effect. Until this moment, nobody in the crowd quite understood the significance of fixing the Flaw.

What would it do, allow them to become fairies? Orcs?

That didn't sound particularly appealing.

Sure, they might be able to wield more power on the battlefield. But if they had to turn into a whole other species, would they even be 'human' anymore?

However, now that they realize they could climb to the same peak as the Wordsmiths, this excites them greatly!

The crowd goes wild!

Who wouldn't want to be able to conjure any phenomena they desired with a single word? Who wouldn't want to ensure their own safety in a chaotic galaxy?!

Cheers roar throughout the crowd as people stand and applaud Phoebe.

"Incredible!"

"Thank you, First Wordsmith!"

"Thank you, Miss Hiro!"

"Humanity will conquer the universe!"

Phoebe smiles at everyone, waving politely as she waits for them to calm down. Before long, the roaring crowd loses some momentum, and they return to their seats.

The atmosphere of the debate changes permanently though, as people realize the Wordsmith has not been remaining idle. If humanity were to obtain just one more powerful Hero at the level of the Wordsmiths, who knows how much further their species could be uplifted? From that perspective, healing the Flaw is a tremendous merit that could never be repaid.

"As I said before," Phoebe continues, "my husband and I expect to observe many strange metaphysical phenomena occurring as time passes. If any of you spontaneously start controlling flames, or become weirdly adept at brewing tea, or anything else that seems out of the ordinary, I would advise you to seek me out or someone else in the administrative sector. We need to document all the changes so we can find out the full extent of healing Humanity's Flaw. In the coming months, Jason and I will release a detailed report on our findings so that all humans can benefit from our research."

Phoebe pauses for a moment.

She clears her throat and assumes a much more serious expression.

"There is one last side-effect of curing the Flaw." She says. "It's only hypothesized at the moment, but we believe it may be of even greater significance than granting every human the chance to become a Hero..."

The audience falls silent. Everyone listens with rapt attention.

What could be even crazier than becoming a Hero?!

Elsewhere, on Tarus II, Belial and Rosalia hurry back to the Western Hospital atop the Upper Plateau.

Within a minute, they race into the hospital and down a hallway, where they find one of the human nurses standing beside a hospital bed, while Kiari thrashes around on it, rubbing her head and massaging her chest.

"Aargh!" Kiari cries. "Hurts! Oh devils, it hurrrts!"

"Kiari!" Belial exclaims, quickly darting to her side. "Where does it hurt?! I'm here to help!"

"Everywhere..." Kiari whines. "H-head, chest, stomach, even m-my butt! It all hurts! Feels... feels like there's a parasite eating me alive! Aaaugh!"

"A parasite?" Belial asks with a frown.

Rosalia's heart skips a beat, but she says nothing, only watching anxiously as an invisible question mark seems to coalesce above Belial's head.

"I faintly remember... didn't that one Emperor back then use parasites?" Belial mumbles to herself. "He implanted them in countless demons... but he's been dead for eons. It can't be him."

She quickly shakes her head, then returns her attention to Kiari. "Here, let me inspect you with my magic..."

Belial transmits a general purpose healing pulse into Kiari's body, greatly easing her pain.

After less than ten seconds, her eyes widen in shock.

"What! How... how is this even possible?" Belial gasps.

"Did you find the problem?" Rosalia asks, suddenly feeling nervous. "It's not some sort of a parasite... is it?"

"Well. Depending on... how you define a parasite... it could be called that." Belial mutters to Rosalia.

She turns to look at Kiari, who has calmed down somewhat thanks to the pain-reducing power of Belial's magic.

"Kiari. I don't know how this is possible but... somehow..."

She pauses.

"...you've become pregnant!"

Kiari doesn't immediately react. She looks at Belial in confusion.

"What? Pregnant? No... that isn't possible. Only Broodmothers can bear children. How could I...?"

"I don't know." Belial says helplessly. "I was under the impression demonesses didn't even have wombs. Somehow, in some way... a miracle has occurred."

Kiari looks at Belial for a few seconds, and the realization dawns on her that the Emperor of Passion is telling the truth.

The impossible has happened.

Kiari's eyes turn moist. She tentatively touches her belly, a look of awe on her face.

"I'm... I'm going to be a mother?"

"Through our experimentation, we have made a shocking discovery." Phoebe says, continuing from before. "The human genome is exceptionally powerful. It is a force of nature none of us knew could exist. The Human Flaw did not merely limit our ability to wield magic... it also limited our biology itself."

Her expression becomes focused.

"The human genome is frighteningly potent. It can overpower other genomes in ways my husband and I have only begun to discover. Our research has concluded that in the event of a cross-species mating attempt, if the human should impregnate or become impregnated by a non-human... the resulting child will have a 95% chance of being human when born."

Neil's eyes flicker with shock. This news completely catches him off-guard. Never did he imagine that the Hiros were holding back such a secret!

Revealing it now completely changes the dynamic of their debate!

"That isn't all." Phoebe continues. "As you are all aware, the human species is the shortest-lived of all Sentients. Haven't you always wondered why we humans barely make it to 100 years of age while the demons and various monster species are effectively immortal, or at least live far longer than us?"

She shakes her head.

"You might be thinking that fixing the Flaw will make our species immortal. No. It will not. But we have finally uncovered the reason for why we live such short lives. And the answer is unbelievable."

Phoebe pauses to build anticipation. She looks up at the sky, as if peering at the Psion hovering in the upper stratosphere, then she looks back down at her fellow humans.

"As it turns out, the human ability to assimilate in its natural form far eclipses the ability of any other Sentient species. Not just the monsters, not just the demons, but even the Volgrim too. With the flaw fixed, many of you will sudden come into possession of vastly swifter minds, bodies that can be trained at speeds far eclipsing your previous performance, and superhuman abilities we cannot even begin to comprehend!"

Phoebe stands up straighter than before, maintaining a proud posture.

"Neil was right when he said we should become fruitful and multiply our population! What he did NOT know is that we humans no longer need to stick strictly to ourselves! I imagine that soon, VERY soon, a wave of pregnant monsters and demons will begin appearing all across Tarus II! In fact, I'd bet good money many are already pregnant as I speak!"

* * *

The impact of Phoebe's words this time far eclipse everything she's previously said.

All across Tarus II, various succubi, various female monsters, and even a few female goblins gasp as they hear her words.

"Pregnant?" One succubi asks. "I... I've been with several human men recently! There's no way I'm pregnant, right??"

"This is great!" Another succubus chirps. "I've always been jealous of human women for getting to raise their own kids. Maybe I'll be a mother soon myself!"

A female Harpie covers her mouth with her wings as she blushes toward her human mate. "Th-that's why, for the past few days, I've been feeling..."

* * *

"Jason and I had a child not long after we met." Phoebe continues. "At the time, it all felt like things moved quickly, but now I know why. It's because Heroes like Jason innately lack the Human Flaw. They are powerful and effective reproducers, and soon all the men and women of our species will be like him. Repopulation will not be a problem so long as we stick together!"

Phoebe finally reaches the conclusion of her speech.

"That is why I must reject Neil's notion that humans and demons cannot intermingle. If we want to restore humanity's greatness, then our demon allies will be able to help us more than we imagined! We must stick together as one people! Humans, monsters, and demons alike! Together, we can create a better future not just for humanity, but for the entirety of the Milky Way! We can defeat the Plague, then spread love and peace across the cosmos!"

"Now, my fellow humans... who's with me?!"

Phoebe raises her fist in the air. In unison, nearly the entire theater of people join her!

Everyone rises from their seats, and a huge cheer erupts all across human-controlled space!

Not just the humans, but the monsters and demons as well! All of them feel well-represented, and as if they have not been excluded by the First Wordsmith and his wife. Unlike Neil, who seems to only spread disorder among species, Phoebe truly seems to have everyone's interests at heart, and that continues to make her more universally likable than her opponent.

As Phoebe stands in place, waiting for the crowd to finish their cheering, Neil slowly stands up. His eyelids flicker with annoyance as he realizes he has been played by the Wordsmith's Wife. Even with Hope's help, he did not realize the full extent of what fixing the Human Flaw could accomplish.

Now, he will have to change his strategy on the fly.

He approaches the podium to stand side-by-side with Phoebe, shooting her an emotionless glance that doesn't give away his inner thoughts.

"Good speech." He mutters.

"Thank you." Phoebe says, beaming a triumphant smile back at him.

The second phase of the debate will soon begin...

Part 555: What Makes a Human?!

Following the end of the two opening and closing arguments, the Great Debate enters a new format. No longer do Phoebe and Neil speak unopposed, but instead they both stand at their respective podiums on the left and right, with Yamir positioned between them.

The Minotaur holds up a microphone and speaks. "People of humanity, today has truly been eye-opening to this humble chef. Mister Adams and Miss Hiro have both revealed shocking and interesting information. Not only has Neil spoken of Threats we will someday face, originating from within our own galaxy as well as more distant ones, but Phoebe has told us that Humanity has lost its Flaw! What this means for the future, I cannot say exactly, but I am certainly interested in hearing more."

The Minotaur turns to look at Neil. "Commander Adams, is it fair to say that your position in this debate is that humanity should split in half for the sake of maintaining a cohesive bloodline and culture? Should they split apart in order to ensure a more 'pure' species takes root in the Milky Way, while allowing demon and monster-lovers to stay here, on Tarus II?"

The corner of Neil's eye flickers while he forces a smile. "There is more to it than that. We are also vulnerable to a single act of destruction! By placing all of humanity on one world, we make it possible for a powerful Cosmic deviant such as Mephisto to annihilate our species in merely one attack! As for leaving humans behind, I would honestly prefer if all humans went to Maiura while leaving the demons behind, but that doesn't seem likely to happen."

"You contradict yourself!" Phoebe exclaims, interjecting without hesitation. "You say humanity should split in order to ensure we cannot fall all at once, but you would also rather all the humans stay together in a mono-culture. Admit the truth, Neil. You're just a bigot who hates demons! I bet you'd even prefer it if our monster allies weren't a part of your perfect and pure society!"

"That is not what I said." Neil answers calmly. "Humans need to stick together in these times. We have a tiny fraction of the population of other Sentients. We cannot risk spreading ourselves out and preventing our population growth from accelerating."

Yamir holds up his hand to politely prevent Phoebe from jumping in. "That is an interesting statement, Commander. But what about Miss Hiro's revelation that humans are potentially a superior species in the genetics department? If humans can indeed somehow impregnate or become impregnated by non-human species while almost always bearing human children, then does this not imply that humans are no longer at risk of going extinct? Why, a single human male could sire hundreds of offspring with non-human females!"

Neil's eye twitches again. He starts to open his mouth, only to pause for half a second. Then he opens it again, but closes it once more, as if struggling to speak the truth within his mind.

All at once, he erupts with anger. "Those will NOT be trueborn humans! They will be bastards born of sin! I don't care what Miss Hiro says, a demon who gives birth to a so-called human will actually be spawning a servant of the devils!"

Countless people in the audience flinch in surprise at Neil's explosive words. Many outright gasp, shocked he would say such words out loud.

Indeed, many humans, especially those loyal to him in the military, hold such views. But the reason they feel expectant toward him is because they believed Neil would make their views more palatable to the masses.

Instead, he does the opposite!

* * *

All across Tarus II, more than a million humans watching the broadcast recoil from their screens in horror, hearing his clearly xenophobic views made manifest through his wicked lips.

"I can't believe this clown!" One human male civilian says. "Everyone knows Neil doesn't like demons, but who knew the true depths of his hatred?? There are obviously countless evil demons out there, but I'm not gonna listen to this prick while he shits on the good ones like Samantha! She saved my boy from an infection that would've killed him!"

"She helped my husband recover from a broken back." A woman nearby adds. "He fell from a roof and would have been paralyzed for life, but Samantha and Leeroy patched him right up. If the Commander can't even acknowledge the good done by demons like them, how can we trust his judgment?"

A trooper sitting in the same room frowns. "Neil might have gone a little too far, but you can't pretend he's wrong. Humans need to stick together! We need to repopulate!"

"We CAN repopulate! We'll easily make babies with tons of non-humans!"

"Those won't be humans! Like Neil said, they'll be half-breed hellspawn!"

"You're just as bad as him, you bastard! Get the hell out of this bar! We don't want you here!"

* * *

Phoebe listens to Neil's words, unaware of the outbreak of anti-Neil sentiment across Tarus II, but fully aware that his words absolutely went too far.

Rather than retort or saying anything, Phoebe remains silent, allowing Neil to continue shouting expletives while Yamir's expression turns dimmer and dimmer.

A wise person does not interrupt their enemies when they are making a mistake, Phoebe thinks to herself.

"Commander, are you saying that human children born of demons won't be trueborn humans after all, but half-breed bastards?" Yamir asks.

"That's exactly what I'm saying!" Neil snaps. "How can anyone think differently?! You really expect to take the WORDSMITH at face value? That imbecile has shot humanity in the foot too many times to be believed. How can he possibly know about the long-term effects of cross-breeding with demons? He only fixed the Flaw two weeks ago!"

"And what about humans breeding with monsters, such as Minotaurs, Harpies, and Goblins?" Yamir asks, his eyes suddenly narrowing to slits. "Are our progeny also considered... half-breed filth?"

"I-" Neil starts to say, only to suddenly realize the trap he just fell into. "I... that's not what I meant! Monsters are a valued ally of humanity! They're not the same as demons. Not at all!"

"So you believe that it would be fine if humans were to hatch children with their monstrous comrades?" Yamir asks, pressing the point harder.

"I... well- well of course!" Neil stutters, as sweat begins to build up on his forehead. "Monsters are... they are good friends... NO! God dammit, do you really want to make me say it?!"

Neil's fury explodes once again. "Humans belong with HUMANS! Not demons! Not monsters! Humans belong with their own kind! There, I said it! Does that make you feel better?!"

Yamir, and many other monsters like him, look at Neil with a new set of eyes, suddenly realizing their commander isn't only anti-demon, but anti-monster as well. His explosive words shatter the beliefs of countless humans, making them even angrier as his bigoted words touch upon a reverse scale of anger they never expected to feel on this day.

Many people ball their hands into fists while rage-filled thoughts roll around in their heads.

I can't believe it! Attacking demons is one thing, but the monsters have proven time and time again to be humanity's most loyal allies!

How could the Commander think such thoughts? King Kar gave his life to save humanity! Millions of monsters died during Stormbringer!

My best friend was a HARPIE! That fellow was my brother in arms! I'll never forgive the Commander for this!

Despite his rage-filled words, Neil doesn't lose his rationality. For once, he simply feels that holding back is no longer beneficial.

What does it matter if he enrages half of the humans?

So what if they decide to stay with Phoebe.

Would he really want a bunch of weak-willed demon and monster-lovers to come with him to his idyllic paradise on Maiura?

NO!

Far better for him to keep the humans who hold the values closest to his to come along.

Besides! Neil realizes something extremely important.

Humans aren't just able to breed with non-humans now. They're also able to breed with one another much more easily!

That means a much smaller population of pureblooded humans will be able to increase in number faster and more reliably than before.

So what if half of humanity stays with the First Wordsmith? Those who go along with Neil will be the most loyal, diehard purists of human thought he could ever pray for.

And so, Neil suddenly goes on the offensive...

"Wake up!" Neil barks at the crowd, while turning away from Yamir to ignore him entirely. "Do you disagree with me? Do you truly think these monsters are our friends?! It was a monster ruler, Bahamut, who imprisoned me and countless numbers of you! Bahamut even imprisoned my opponent, Phoebe! Do you really think that just because a tiny portion of monsters and demons have chosen to 'side' with humanity that they can be trusted? I THINK NOT!"

Neil sneers viciously. "These creatures are only pretending to be our allies! When push comes to shove, if the Volgrim attack, or the demons launch a full-scale invasion with the help of their new Archdemon, I would not count on our so-called Monster Allies to stand alongside us! For all we know, many of these monsters could be Volgrim Changelings! Spies sent to keep an eye on us until the time is right!"

Neil's words further enrage the people sympathetic to the demons and monsters, but at the same time they fire up his supporters, making them raise their fists in solidarity!

"Finally!" One soldier exclaims with a huge grin. "The Commander's saying what needs to be said! I'm about sick and goddamn tired of pretending to be friendly with these scaled, feathered, furry freaks!"

"Here, here, brother!" Another soldier adds. "Screw these 'demi' sympathizers! My trigger finger's itching!"

However, as Neil continues to rant, Phoebe's frown deepens. She finally realizes his newfound goal, and this causes her to finally speak up.

"Alright Neil. That is QUITE enough!" Phoebe roars, her voice booming loud enough to actually startle Neil into a momentary lapse of speaking. For some reason, the voice she bellows with doesn't just jolt him into silence, but for a moment, it even frightens him!

Something about her voice hits him with physical force, making the blood in his body roil momentarily. He whips his head to the side to look at her, stunned by this strange... attack?

"I think we've all gotten your point." Phoebe barks. "You want to split humanity? You want to form a coalition of bigots and xenophobes? FINE! Anyone willing to support you, as far as I'm concerned, is not a true human! We're more than violent thugs! We are HUMANS! That means we have compassion! We have love! We have empathy! I will not tolerate your intolerance a moment longer!"

"Compassion, love, empathy?!" Neil shoots back. "You speak of those traits as if they haven't resulted in the weakness that brought us down to our current numbers! It was your spineless husband who nearly brought our species to extinction!"

"My husband is a great man!" Phoebe retorts, shoving Yamir out of the way so she can shove a finger in Neil's face. "His flaws can be fixed with time! He can become smarter! He can become wiser! But you're a fool who is stuck in the past! All you want is to drag us into a never-ending war!"

"Humans thrive in times of danger!" Neil counters, slapping her hand aside. "We are a species with battle baked into our blood! Not a bunch of pathetic, piss-ant pansies! Maybe YOUR ways are holding us back!"

"I'll tell you what's holding us back-!" Phoebe starts to exclaim...

But suddenly, a flash of light erupts in the middle of the stage, catching her and Neil both offguard. They both step backward as that light materializes between them, in front of Yamir.

At that moment, a figure materializes out of thin air, his disposition imposing, and a powerful aura of divine energy rolling off the sword held in his right hand. In his left, a shepherd's staff hangs loosely, while a brilliant golden crown rests atop his head. He wears a white military uniform that appears distinguished and regal at the same time.

"Enough." Hope Hiro says, as his figure comes into focus for the cameras. "Enough from both of you."

Hope looks at Neil with a strange, distant expression. Then he turns his head to look at Phoebe, this time with a faintly empathetic look that shows his appearing here was not an easy decision to make.

The Second Wordsmith turns his attention to the people in the audience.

He lifts the sword in his hands up into the air, revealing its full glory to the people watching from all corners of humanity.

"Humans... are an Apex Species." Hope says slowly. "We are formidable. We are powerful. But we are also vulnerable. We are disorganized, distracted, and disturbed. Look inside yourselves. Is this the Humanity you want the rest of the galaxy to see? A shameful bunch of arguing monkeys who can't make up their minds on anything?"

Hope lowers the blade known as Excalibur, but continues to allow its power to permeate outward, bathing the audience in waves of Holy Energy.

"My friend, Neil, has said a lot of things today." Hope says slowly. "Many things that I agreed with, and many that I did not. I cannot in good conscience allow him to slander the good name of our monster allies. Monster King Kar was a close friend of mine. Perhaps even my best friend. At the same time, while I have always held plenty of resentment toward the demons, I cannot go to the extreme lengths Neil has. There are good demons out there. Great demons. Demons I would trust more than some of my fellow humans."

Humanity's second most renowned Hero sighs softly.

"Phoebe has also made some good points. I watched from afar, and honestly, I became a little impressed by her and Jason's plans for a greater humanity. Can you imagine it? Our people... ascending to all become Heroes in their own right? It is a vision of the future I'd dearly like to see."

He smiles for a moment, but then that moment passes, and the smile slips away.

"I have a vision of my own. I have a vision of a united humanity... but different from the one proposed by Phoebe."

This time, Hope lifts up his left arm, revealing the coiled head of a Shepherd's Staff.

"This is the Dominion Rod." Hope says evenly. "It is possessed by the soul of the very first Human Hero. The ancient Hero-King known as Jepthath. And the power he wields is terrifying, indeed."

"Through the power of the Dominion Rod, those who swear fealty to Jepthath can become linked to one another. You have already had your Flaws cured. You will develop different, unique powers over time. But the Dominion Rod can take this future trajectory... and supercharge it!"

Hope's eyes flash with excitement.

"Those who swear fealty can become united in minds, bodies, and souls! We will share our thoughts! We will share our desires! If one of you gains the power to manipulate flames, ALL humans will obtain that power! If a human gains the power to copy a Psion, then ALL humans will obtain that power!"

"Even if not one human gains a new power, we will all share ONE power; the one belonging to Jepthath! We will become as strong as the ancient Titans! We'll have bodies capable of shattering buildings! The strength to move mountains! The speed to do battle with Demon Emperors! Every human will reach the apex of what the mortal world can offer!"

Hope glances at Phoebe for a moment before looking back at the people again.

"What humanity lacks is time. Perhaps, if Phoebe and Jason have their way, some of you, many of you, or even all of you may ascend to become Heroes as strong as Jason and I. But then again, perhaps none of you will! And even if you do, how long will that take?"

"By swearing fealty to Jepthath, we can immediately empower our species! We can gain the capital to stand our ground and make our enemies afraid of crossing us! We won't need to fear deceptions, because our minds will be united. No Changeling will infiltrate us, because our minds will be united! And even if someone succeeds... we can simply crush them like a bug! The other Sentients will no longer be able to trample on our dignity!"

As Hope speaks, the eyes of many humans light up with excitement.

Who wouldn't want to gain incredible strength and speed, especially if it came as easily as the Second Wordsmith claims?

Who wouldn't want to solve the problems plaguing human society just by swearing fealty to an ancient, powerful Hero?

Who wouldn't want to uplift themselves and gain access to a variety of powers as more and more humans manifested their true human powers?

Many people who were outraged at Neil find themselves leaning more toward Hope's proposition.

Many who were ardent followers of Neil also become swayed by Hope's offer. For plenty of soldiers, more strength means more of a chance at becoming powerful enough to protect their friends and families!

While the monster and demon allies of humanity aren't exactly enthralled by an offer that won't benefit them, they do feel that Hope suddenly feels like a less vile alternative to Neil's outright xenophobia. Better for humanity to become capable of protecting itself while staying friends with its demon and monster allies than to turn on them viciously.

Just as Hope is about to hold up the Dominion Rod and ask for his fellow humans to follow his lead...

Foop!

Another figure pops into existence, this time on Phoebe's left.

Jason Hiro!

The First Wordsmith, like his counterpart, watched the proceedings, only now deciding to make his move after seeing his clone break the unspoken rule of not interfering with Neil and Phoebe's debate.

Phoebe jumps in surprise as she feels her husbands hand lightly press against her back. She turns to look at him.

"Jason?"

"It's me." Jason says, smiling at her. "It's really me. I solved the issue... and it seems Hope did too."

Jason looks over Phoebe's head at his clone, who also turns to look at him.

Hope and Jason frown in unison, with Hope immediately becoming annoyed that Jason would show his face, while Jason is equally annoyed he had to make an appearance to even out the power imbalance.

"You just couldn't help yourself, could you?" Jason asks blandly, his voice projecting to the audience without even needing a microphone. "You had to come here and swing your big sword around, let everyone know about your super-duper plan to perfectly solve humanity's problems."

Hope sneers. "At least I have a sword, Jason. I have Excalibur, humanity's mightiest weapon! I have Solomon's Crown, which grants me wisdom beyond anything you can offer. And I have the Dominion Rod, which will allow me to unify our people into an unstoppable force!"

Jason crosses his arms, looking unamused.

"I don't have any of those things, Hope. But I don't need them either. Because I have something you don't..."

He pauses.

"...I have a brain!"

Hope blinks. "Excuse me? Care to repeat that?"

"You tried to fool everyone, but it's too bad I showed up." Jason snaps back. He turns his head to look at the crowd. "Hope told you the truth about the Dominion Rod's power. But what he failed to tell you was the cost of accepting it as your master!"

Thousands of people form invisible question marks over their heads.

The cost of accepting its power? What cost? Many quietly wonder.

"Hope sneakily slipped a portion of the truth into his little speech," Jason explains, "but he downplayed the severity. Didn't you hear what he said? Once you accept the power of the Dominion Rod, you will have to share everything. Your thoughts, your emotions, even your deepest, darkest secrets. And that's not all!"

Hope glowers at Jason as the First Wordsmith continues speaking.

"When you become a servant of Jepthath, you lose ALL your autonomy! If Jepthath so desires, he will be able to control the lot of you like puppets! If he tells you to throw yourselves into a burning star for the 'good of humanity,' that is exactly what you'll have to do. If he tells you to give up your husbands and wives to others he deems more worthy, then THAT is what you'll do! You won't have a say in the matter!"

Jason turns his head to glare cruelly at Hope. "Am I lying, Hope? Do you dare offer a retort?! You tried to sucker people into a free lunch, but anyone with a brain knows power always has a cost!"

Hope squeezes the Dominion Rod tightly, hurting his palm as he exerts his maximum strength onto its handle. "The price is not too steep to pay! Humanity needs power!"

"If people go along with your scheme, they won't even BE humans anymore!" Jason shouts back. "What makes a human, Hope, Neil?! My wife and I believe it is our compassion, our love, and our empathy! But I would go even further! It is our individuality, yet also our ability to sacrifice for the good of others! By becoming a monolith of thought, we would be no better than the Plague, or even the Volgrim! A bunch of drones doing as the Commander Unit demands! That is NOT the humanity I want to see!"

Jason pounds his fist against his palm for emphasis.

"If this debate has shown me one thing, it is that I was painfully naive. I didn't think humanity's differences had grown as big as I now understand they have. But now I see the truth... there are many who want to kill, kill, kill, and there are just as many who wish to spread love and peace! These two factions are fundamentally opposed. We cannot remain united any longer!"

Hope blinks. So does Neil.

"Wait..." Neil says slowly. "Are you implying...?"

"I agree with you, for once, Neil." Jason says authoritatively. "Humanity cannot remain united. In fact, I say it MUST NOT! Through your ignorance and bigotry, you have convinced me of such QUITE thoroughly! How can I stand alongside those who think nothing but vitriolic thoughts towards others who have never treated them badly in the slightest?!"

Jason flashes a look of rage toward the crowd.

"I have heard the truth of the matter spoken through your lips! I heard what many of you whispered when you thought none were listening. There are countless humans among you I do not wish to call my friends any longer."

"So, from this day forward, I declare that humanity should split apart!" Jason roars.

The crowd explodes with shock.

During this entire debate, Jason's wife argued for unity, but at the very end, he swooped in and undermined all of her arguments.

Doesn't he feel that he betrayed and made her look like a fool??

Jason's expression calms down. "While I say that we must split, I do not think two factions is enough. Neil is right about one thing. We are exceptionally vulnerable to a single, coordinated attack! Even if humanity splits to two different worlds, such as Tarus II and Maiura, we are only barely more likely to survive two attacks from Demon Deities, Cosmic Psions, or other frightening monsters."

He turns his entire body to face the crowd, then lifts a finger for emphasis.

"I have a proposition for all of you. Humanity can now breed with non-humans to make more humans. Therefore, the future path we must take is logical. Become many and fill the Milky Way! I have spoken to Demon Deity Melody, ruler of the world of Sharmur. She has taken back control of the planet, and wishes to re-establish a safe haven for humans and demons alike. If any of you wish to join her, you may do so at your leisure!"

Countless humans, especially those who once lived on Sharmur, flash expressions of excitement at one another!

They enjoyed wonderful lives on Sharmur, free of strife, until the Wordsmith took them away. To them, this could not be a better offer, and they immediately decide they would rather stick with a reliable leader like Melody than their fellow humans who have continually dropped the ball.

"But that isn't all!" Jason says. "Do you enjoy living here, on Tarus II? So be it! Stay here, and remain among this community I have built up over the last six years. I promise I will do better in protecting you all, and I will make your stay here even more pleasant than before."

"But what if you align more with Neil's interests? Fine! Go and be with him, or Hope, or wherever you wish. Go to the Labyrinth, or to any other world you prefer. Do not feel obligated to stay here if your bigotry will not allow it. Don't let the door hit your asses on the way out!"

Jason chuckles smugly. "And if you want to go along with Hope's offer? To become a slave of the First Hero? Go ahead! I'm sure nothing bad will come of those who become vassals to that ancient powerhouse. Your lives will definitely be 'smooth sailing'. Hah!"

Jason's mocking tone causes many who still remained interested in Hope's deal to only solidify their plans. Despite hearing the price they might have to pay, they would still rather place their faith in Hope than in Jason, and not much would ever change their minds...

"I have other offers, for those of you who might be interested." Jason continues. "Fairy Queen Blinker has told me the fairies might be interested in re-homing humans who are willing. I also have certain secret places some of you may wish to go to if you want to avoid the upcoming wars entirely. These secluded domains will not be easy for the Volgrim, the Demons, or the Plague to locate. Time will pass quickly inside, and you will live boring but stable lives. For those of you only interested in rearing families, I would recommend this option! In fact, I bet even Hope could recommend a 'special space' of his own!"

Jason and Hope exchange a glance. The Second Wordsmith frowns, realizing Jason must have learned about the existence of the Hall of Heroes. But then again, Hope also knows Jason has his own time-accelerated realm. The two of them are not unique in this regard.

As for the details of their respective realms, neither one knows the exact location of their hidden domains. In that respect, they are both equal...

"So that is that!" Jason concludes. "You're all Sentients. You know who you are! As Humans, you should have the right to make your own decisions. I no longer believe that coddling the lot of you and forcing you into some unified, egalitarian utopia will ever properly work. Better to let you choose the lives you want to live, and reap the rewards or suffer the consequences of those choices. I only pray you won't regret whatever decisions you make."

Jason waves his hand flippantly.

"That is all! I will be opening a cross-species hall for people to apply for their preferred destination. A few weeks from now, we will announce the results, and you can all go to whatever place your heart desires!"

He turns to look at his opponents. "Neil! Hope! Do the two of you have any issues with this decree?"

Both men glare at Jason. Neither one offers a word of retort.

"No." Neil says quietly. "I've gotten what I wanted."

"As have I." Hope says darkly. "Well played, Jason."

The First Wordsmith ignores his clone's snide compliment.

"Then it's settled. I declare this farce of a 'Great Debate' to be over. DISMISSED!"

As Jason speaks the final words that will be broadcast to all his fellow humans, a collective sigh of relief goes up around Tarus II, Maiura, and the other sectors that tuned in to watch.

This day has changed the status quo forever... and only time will tell if it was for the better.

Next Part

Part 556: A Welcome Reprieve

An hour after the conclusion of the Great Debate, Jason and Phoebe sneak back to their room to finally enjoy some private time together.

For Phoebe, a little over three weeks have passed since her husband went to Chrona.

But for Jason, he has not seen his beautiful wife in a substantially longer period of time...

The two lovers kiss one another. They allow their hands and legs to roam as they twine their bodies, each one making their partner feel waves of pleasure and ecstasy. Having felt a little pent-up from weeks of hard work and lonely nights in bed, Phoebe is quite excited to be back together with her husband, but after thirty minutes together, even she finds her passion doesn't come close to what Jason can muster!

"Okay! Okay, let's... let's pause for a moment!" Phoebe gasps, pulling herself away from Jason as she flops onto her back. "Gods, you're like an animal today, love. If you keep chewing on them like that, I'm afraid you're going to bite them off!"

Jason licks his lips and grins cheekily. "Sorry, babe. It's just been- you know? It's been years for me. Years! Me and Fiona kept our distance, and the whole time I couldn't stop thinking about when I'd get to come back and see you. In the last few months, it REALLY gave me the drive to finish solving my time dilation problem!"

Phoebe remains silent for a few seconds. She swallows gulps of air while massaging her breasts, wincing slightly as she touches the naughty teeth marks Jason left...

"I won't lie, I was a little worried that you and Fiona might... but I knew you were faithful. I just wish you'd go a little easier on me! Don't you think Timothy is going to need these when he arrives?"

"Hah! I can heal them later." Jason smirks, before pouncing on her and pressing his lips against hers. "But for now, you and me need to make up for lost time!"

"Ah! This- ahh! Alright, then!" Phoebe exclaims, before her moans drown out any other words.

* * *

Another two hours pass.

Jason uses Words of Power several times, easily restoring himself and Phoebe's stamina multiple times. They twist like pretzels, trying out all manner of different lewd positions, before finally they both decide they've had their fill.

Eventually, they conclude their unbelievably intense rounds of lovemaking, then they snuggle together, finally satisfied.

"Lord... marrying a Wordsmith is a life goal every woman should aspire to." Phoebe mutters to herself, as Jason wraps himself around her from behind. "I love you so much, Jason."

"I love you too, honey." Jason replies, nibbling on her ear playfully. "And it's because I love you that I did what I did today. I hope you're not mad at me."

Phoebe chuckles. "I just wish you'd given me a heads up. I thought the entire point of the debate was to focus on keeping humanity united. Why would you change your mind all of a sudden?"

"Well... it wasn't really 'all of a sudden' for me. After all, an hour for the debate was 250 hours for me. That's almost ten and a half days, honey. I talked to Fiona, Rebecca, Kar, even Blinker and the Psions throughout the whole affair. My... views started evolving as a result."

Phoebe simply shrugs, not caring one way or the other. "I always thought splitting up humanity was smarter anyway, so I'm glad you came around."

"Thanks for supporting my original idea, even if it was dumb. That's why you're the best wife." Jason says, kissing her neck.

A minute passes as the two lay there, falling silent. Eventually, Phoebe rolls around to face Jason, then wraps her arms around his back and pulls her face close to his.

"So. What now?" She asks quietly. "You had an entire week to ruminate on your new plan. Any thoughts you want to share?"

Jason lightly bumps his forehead against hers. "I came up with a magically empowered device capable of synchronizing the internal dilations of people in higher realms so they can travel back to lower realms. It will almost entirely mitigate the effects of time dilation at any ratio below 25-to-1, but it's less effective the higher one climbs. In any case, that means I can look into expanding the usage of alternate dimensions, especially those inside the Cube. We can rapidly grow humanity's population, and its power, by using this method."

"That sounds incredible." Phoebe says, though her tone betrays a lack of enthusiasm. "But... are you sure there won't be any after-effects? And what about you? If this device you made is less effective at higher dilations, then you shouldn't be okay... right?"

"I... I do have to return to Chrona within a few days." Jason admits. "The technical details aren't too important, but essentially, with Blinker's help, I created a device that can output consumable magic glyphs. These glyphs bind to the body and prevent it from destabilizing when traveling into different time dilation zones. Unfortunately, their magic wears out faster the more extreme of a dilation one travels to and from."

"So your glyph or whatever, it's only going to last you a few days?" Phoebe asks, her pupils suddenly trembling in fright. "Isn't that terrible?? Will you die if you don't return in time?!"

"I will die, yes, but it won't be immediate." Jason explains, only to see a look of alarm spark in her eyes. He hurriedly clarifies: "No no, it's not what you think! When the glyph wears off, my body will start to desynchronize with realspace. As long as I quickly return to Chrona, I'll only end up a little fatigued, but if I drag my feet, then I could suffer... irreparable damage."

"Jason!" Phoebe cries. "Is that supposed to make me feel better?! Now I'm only going to be thinking of the danger you're putting yourself in just to come back here and deal with a bunch of mundane nonsense!"

"It's not nonsense." Jason says firmly. "I solved the dilemma with Neil and Hope, and I got to come back home and bang my hot wife. That's a win in my book any day of the week."

"Oh, you!" Phoebe laughs, releasing some tension in spite of her nerves. "You always try to hit me with a cute line. But don't think I'm letting you stay here long! You need to get your butt back to Chrona ASAP or I won't be able to sleep at night."

"Hehe, you won't be able to sleep anyway." Jason says, grinning evilly. "I'm gonna be bending you into every conceivable shape each night until I return!"

"You perverted, naughty scoundrel!"

Later, as the night draws near, Jason finally exits his abode with some pep in his step. He steps out into the darkness and looks up at the starry sky with a look of deep satisfaction.

Somehow, it just feels to him like things are going to be alright.

Hardly has that thought occurred when a voice speaks from the side. "All done having fun?"

Jason jumps in surprise. He turns to see Hope Hiro glowering at him as he leans back against a tree outside Bahamut's former manor.

"The hell?" Jason asks. "Have you been waiting for me out here?"

"I set a proximity alarm to alert me when you left. Then I teleported here." Hope answers. "Now, shut the fuck up about nonsense. I want to know what you're playing at. Why did you change your mind?"

Jason turns to face Hope directly. He crosses his arms and assumes an aloof posture.

"You're telling me you can't figure it out? I listened to what you and Neil had to say. I listened to what our fellow humans had to say. I decided the unification plan was a non-starter, and adjusted accordingly."

He leans forward slightly. "You're welcome, by the way. Now you can go build your death cult or whatever, Neil can fuck off to his planet of xenophobes, and I can focus on building humanity up, proper."

"That's what I hate the most about you." Hope snaps back. "You've messed up a thousand times, but you always have this smug, self-assured air of superiority about you. You were handed the powers of a god on a platter, but all you ever do is screw up and waste your gifts."

"I've definitely failed a few times." Jason admits. "But you're blowing those instances way out of proportion. I already feel bad enough about my failures. I already beat myself up over Daisy's death. Do you have to act like such a piece of shit toward me? We're both still cut from the same cloth, Hope!"

Slightly taken aback, Hope pauses his verbal barrage. A look of guilt flashes over his face, and he forces himself to calm down.

Five seconds of silence follow.

"I'm sorry." Hope says quietly. "You're right. I went too far. If it was my daughter, I'd probably never stop torturing myself."

He looks away and chews his lower lip.

"I just don't get it, Jason. Why change your mind?"

"You've never really understood the way I think." Jason answers. "Which is weird. Of all the people in the universe, I should be the one you understand best. And yet sometimes your thoughts are as alien to me as mine are to you. We've diverged into entirely different people."

He continues. "It's like I said at the Debate. You and Neil have the right idea, but the wrong reasons. Humanity does need to split up. We're vulnerable to a single attack, like Neil said. I just think splitting from the demons because of mere bigotry is not the right reason to do so. In this coming new era of empowered humans, it may become evident that demons are humanity's greatest ally."

Hope shuffles his feet. "I don't agree with Neil on everything. We're not a uni-mind. I think he goes too far with his hatred of the demons. Especially, as Phoebe mentioned, since he didn't really lose anyone to the demons. He lost them to Bahamut. In that regard, his hatred of demons is almost nonsensical."

But..." Hope says, directing a withering gaze toward Jason, "just because he hasn't suffered to the demons doesn't mean humanity as a whole hasn't. Come on, Jason. Surely you can acknowledge the harms they've caused us."

"Of course I can." Jason says. "But I'm not about to rehash this debate with you. Let's just let bygones be bygones and move on. We both have the same goal, Hope. We want to see humanity prosper."

"I'd like to think so." Hope responds. "But you still haven't answered my question. What are your plans for the humans who side with you? People are going to be casting their votes soon. Are you really going to allow demons to mingle with humans, unchecked, in perpetuity?"

"Unchecked is... an interesting word choice." Jason says calmly. "Hope, you know how I feel about politics. I say we treat our different factions as experiments. We need to see which one will lead to the most prosperous future. Maybe a xenophobic civilization will make humanity stronger, but maybe an open-minded one will be better still."

"Hmm..."

Hope rumbles in his throat, then looks at the ground, falling into thought.

"That's... not the worst idea."

"Right?" Jason says, before continuing, "I can't pretend to be any sort of expert on what to do next, Hope, but even you can see there's a lot of future paths opening up now that the Human Flaw is gone. I truly pray at least one of our splinter civilizations can explode in population and power. Humanity is practically extinct in terms of galactic population."

For a moment, Hope remains silent.

"I should also mention, Jason. It seems you haven't permanently solved your time dilation issue."

Jason frowns. "I haven't. You?"

"I seem to be a bit luckier than you." Hope replies. "My acceleration is only 100-to-1. Based on the quantum particles you're emanating, it seems you've been playing a riskier game."

Jason evenly gazes at his clone. "250-to-1."

"That's what I thought. Take this as a bit of friendly advice," Hope says, "I have a few prominent Technopaths inside my funhouse. They've told me that higher and higher TDR's pose orders of magnitude more danger to biological bodies. You're putting everyone inside your hidden dimension in danger. Don't play around with their lives."

"Thanks. I'll keep that in mind." Jason replies.

"You'd better." Hope counters. "Kar and Blinker are my friends too, Jason. If your stupidity causes them harm, I'll come for your head."

The two men continue to look at one another for a few seconds, then Hope turns to the side.

"Return."

He vanishes from the spot, disappearing into the ether while leaving his original body behind.

Jason remains standing in place for a while, his former good mood now entirely gone. A faint sense of unease wells up in his chest.

"I've improved a lot." Jason says to himself. "But Hope has, too. I'll need to work harder to stay ahead of him..."

Jason turns and walks away, heading deeper into town.

Later, Jason sits down inside the Horned Maître while Kelkin's moonlight radiates down upon its mother planet, illuminating the nighttime even more than Luna once did for Earth.

As the moonlight spills in through a window, the First Wordsmith sits at the head of a table with a handful of his friends.

Emperors Belial and Kiari sit next to each other, with Kiari's fiance Saul positioned on her right and Belial on her left. Across the table, Brunhilda sits, as well as Benjamin Brown and Samuel Baker.

"Congratulations, Kiari, Saul." Benjamin Brown says. "I've never heard of a demoness becoming pregnant before. We're about to enter some interesting times."

"Thank you!" Kiari says, her cheeks flushing happily as she beams at her fiance. "I can't believe it! I was so scared at first because I thought I was poisoned, but then it turns out it was just morning sickness! Now me and Saul are going to have a baby and... I don't know what to expect!"

"I couldn't be happier." Saul says mildly, smiling back at Kiari. He turns to look at Jason. "She's not in any danger though, is she? Can demons properly give birth...?"

"I can't say entirely for certain." Jason answers. "We did run some tests. The corrected human genome is... extremely potent. It can allow organisms incapable of replication to become capable. There are probably other effects, but we just don't know yet. I left the technical details to Fiona and Rebecca."

A moment of silence follows.

"This is going to change everything, you know." Belial says to Jason. "Fixing the Flaw, I mean. A horde of unexpected pregnancies is hardly the most shocking aftermath. What about humans gaining magic en-masse? Doesn't that strike you as dangerous?"

Samuel frowns. "Hey. What is your implication? That humans can't control ourselves? You demons have had magic for a hundred thousand years, but now it's a problem if your lessers get access too?"

"That's not what I meant." Belial hurriedly explains. "I'm just saying- Neil's side wants to kill all the demons. Now the humans will have the tools to do so. Don't you think this is only going to lead to more violence in the long run?"

"Honestly? I can't stand you demons." Samuel snarls, his words causing Belial and Kiari to both flinch in unison. "Demons have killed countless people I loved. This war might not be personal for Commander Neil, but it's personal for me."

"W-why are you even here, then?" Belial asks, outraged by his provocation. "We met to congratulate Kiari on the baby!"

"I came because I needed to speak to Jason. Not because I give a damn about some bloodskins." Samuel snaps back. He quickly turns his head to look at Jason. "Here, take this."

Samuel reaches into his pocket, pulls out a glowing purple pentagon infused with magical energy, then tosses it to Jason. The Wordsmith reflexively snaps his hand up to catch the palm-sized object, only to look at Samuel in confusion as the man stands up and starts to walk away.

"It's from Princess Melia." Samuel says, throwing his hand in the air flippantly. "She said you'd know what to do with it. I'm outta here."

The man storms off, leaving the others behind more than a little confused.

All except for Benjamin Brown. He sips some beer and chuckles. "If I told you that son of a bitch had a chip on his shoulder, I'd be lying by omission."

"Way more than a chip. More like a whole mountain." Brunhilda grumbles. "Kiari, I want you to know that the Felorians do not consider the demons to be our blood-enemies. I am certainly happy the Wind Mother has graced you with the gift of a child. And I apologize for that fool's undeserved anger."

"There's no need to apologize." Kiari says bitterly, lowering her eyes. "I'm used to it."

Jason's gaze momentarily turns dismal. Sensing the awkward atmosphere, he stands up and lifts the magical pentagon Samuel gave him. "Well. I've gotta be going. Phoebe will drop by to offer her congratulations tomorrow, Kiari. She's pretty tired after the debate and had to turn in early."

"I understand." Kiari says, smiling cutely at the Wordsmith. "Thank you so much for stepping in at the end. I was worried Neil was going to hurt Phoebe's feelings or say something really mean. Too bad I missed the broadcast, on account of this random baby dumped in my lap."

"I'm sure you'll be able to catch a re-run." Jason says, pointing to a monitor in the corner of the bar, which silently plays back the speech with closed captions. "I'll talk to you guys tomorrow."

* * *

He makes his way outside, and eventually wanders over to a secluded area where he erects a privacy field around himself, scanning it to make sure no errant Psions are watching.

Then, Jason lifts up the purple pentagon and looks at it more closely.

"Identify." He says.

Hundreds of intricate runes glisten with magical power across the item's surface. Jason's Word of Power identifies it as a Fairy Transmission Crystal, something Blinker has mentioned to him in passing, though admittedly he wouldn't have recognized it without his magic's assistance.

When Jason looks at the item deeper, he becomes fascinated by the incredibly tiny and precise carvings etched into the crystal's surface. Not mere abstract runes, many of them faintly depict strange beasts and creatures the Wordsmith has never seen in his life. It's only when he really squints that he's even able to make out the face of a woman he's never seen before.

"Melia? No, not her. Someone older. Hmm, now how did Blinker say to activate one of these...?"

Jason infuses his mana into the Transmission Crystal, but it doesn't activate. He tries doing what Blinker told him to do, but for some reason, he just can't seem to make it work.

"Fuck it." Jason mutters under his breath. "Activate."

Immediately, the crystal's faint glow turns as bright as a lightbulb. It leaps out of his palm and levitates into the air, while a magical hologram materializes from the core and bubbles into reality.

A beautiful but noticeably elderly fairy woman springs into existence, her lightly baggy eyes giving her the air of an ancient woman who has seen more than most can comprehend. Her beautiful white hair complements her purple dress, making it obvious to anyone with eyeballs that she is no commoner among her people. She looks around the privacy bubble and nods to herself, as if confirming something.

Then she directs her gaze toward Jason.

"Good day to you, First Wordsmith. I am the Fairy Matriarch, Lady Calanthra. I am pleased to see that you took the proper precautions before activating my crystal."

Jason blinks in surprise. He squints his eyes, then suddenly realizes something. "Wait, this isn't a recording?"

"Indeed, it is not." Calanthra says simply. "I prefer not to leave my world unless absolutely necessary, so I send my daughters out to deliver these crystals when I need to speak to someone distant."

A twinkle sparks in her eyes. She smiles playfully. "Funnily, I tampered with this crystal. I made it non-functional as a test. Only a Fairy Queen should be able to fix the flaws I introduced, yet you also seem to be capable of doing so. That is good. It tells me your magical capabilities are just as impressive as my children claim."

Jason coughs, feeling a little embarrassed that he passed her test without meaning to. "I see! Uh, so, what did you want to talk to me about?"

"I watched that debate between your wife and the commander of humanity's armies. I found your statement at the end to be quite interesting. You said that humanity could go to the world of Pixiv to join my people..."

Jason blinks. "I... I'm sorry. I spoke to Blinker before the debate, and she told me it was worth putting on the table. I guess I should have asked you first."

"There is no need for apologies." Calanthra says, waving her hand dismissively. "As the former Monster Queen, a bearer of the Sphinx's cursed magic, she possesses authority equal to mine. In matters of Pixiv's prosperity, I come before her, but for any external matters, she ranks above me. That is what my people decided when we heard her husband had passed his power to her."

Calanthra waves her hand, conjuring a comfortable and luxurious chair to sit in. She plops down in it and sighs. "Ahh, these weary old bones hate to stay standing for long periods..."

Jason looks behind himself. "Chair."

He also takes a seat, making Calanthra nod with approval. "A Word of Power, is it? What an ability. Impressive, if I may be so bold in my choice of words."

"Not to be rude," Jason says, "and compliments are always nice, but can we get to the point? Is there a reason you wanted to speak to me?"

"Yes, many." Calanthra responds. "But before I tell you why I've come, I have a question for the First Wordsmith."

"Okay." Jason says uncertainly. "And that would be...?"

"What do you know about the fairies?" She asks.

"About your people? In general?" Jason asks. "Uhh. I've spoken to Blinker a bunch. I know, uh... fairies are magical. You have wings. You can shrink and grow. You live on Pixiv. You... have a hard time reproducing. You have almost no male fairies among your population..."

He pauses while scrunching up his forehead to think. "You're also good at formations... I don't know a lot, now that I think about it."

"That is to be expected." Calanthra says. "After all, my people are reclusive by nature. We don't like to draw attention to ourselves. Not good for long-term survival prospects."

"Huh? You don't??" Jason asks, appearing totally confused. "But fairies have to, you know, procreate with the males of other species. You get around if you know what I mean. Doesn't really allow you to be 'reclusive'."

"Just because our daughters need to frolic with the males of other species, that does not mean we allow them to flap their lips at will." Calanthra answers. "There are rules we set. Strict rules. There are certain... Truths... we do not wish to get out into the greater galactic community."

"Truths." Jason repeats, eyeing her with more suspicion than before. "I've been hearing that word a lot, lately."

"I'd imagine you are. As Akasha's Game reaches its boiling point, the Rulers of the cosmos are beginning to disseminate those Truths in preparation for the Unending War."

Calanthra's eyes take on a more ominous glint as she gazes at the Wordsmith, not as a pretty and demure queen of the Fairies, but a strangely ancient being, one who has seen things he cannot fathom.

"Tell me, Jason Hiro of the Human species. How old are your people? How far back does your history date?"

"Not far enough." Jason admits. "I think before the Energy Wars, the most ancient records were barely 50,000 years old."

"Fifty thousand Sol Cycles." Calanthra says. "And what of the demons?"

"They're older than us..." Jason says. "I'm not sure how much older though."

"Add another hundred thousand years." Calanthra says. "That is when Archangel Uzziel formed the first Imps from cosmic dust. But what about before the demons, I wonder? Are there any species older than them?"

Jason nods slowly. "Well yeah. The angels were the first Sentients in the Milky Way, then they made the Dragons, then came the Titans."

"And what about the Volgrim?" Calanthra asks. "Do you know when they came on the scene?"

"I... not really." Jason admits. "A million years ago?"

"Ten million." Calanthra replies. "That is when the first Volgrim evolved from the primitives of their world and rose up to become the rulers of Old Volgarius."

For a long moment, Jason looks at Calanthra. A strange thought bubbles up in his mind.

"So... how old are the fairies, then?" Jason asks slowly. "Since the Volgrim were the first Sentients to colonize the galaxy after the angels fell, you must have evolved after they did. Right...?"

Calanthra's smile turns ominous.

"That was the right question to ask, Wordsmith."

She leans forward.

"The Volgrim were not the first Sentients in the Milky Way. It was my people. The Fairies. And we arrived here..."

"...fifty million years ago!"

Next Part

Part 557: Ascension Net

On the world of Volgarius, inside the Founder's Thumb.

Unarin calmly walks into the main command center of the upper floors. He pauses for a second, looking at the dedicated team of Technopaths and Changelings who keep his mighty empire running, with all of them either directly linked to massive central networks that collect and gather information from abroad, or those who remain in contact with military forces currently in conflict.

In the center of the room, a massive hologram of the Milky Way spirals slowly above a table with a hole cut in its center. Various items sit on the tabletop, including datapads, experimental technology that has yet to be deployed in the field, and important design documents in need of approval.

Standing in the center of the table is none other than Unarin's obsidian-skinned brother, Randis, one of the three Ascended that live permanently inside the Founder's Thumb.

Randis looks up at the galactic hologram. Hundreds of points of light stand out from the rest, with some of them colored red, some colored yellow, and some colored blue. As for the vast majority, they are colored red.

The different colors, of course, represent worlds in various levels of danger, usually due to the Plague. White-colored worlds have no current major problems to speak of, and can run without Randis's intervention. Blue worlds exist in the periphery of danger and could come under threat at any time. Yellow worlds are at extreme risk from the Plague or have had major disruptions reported, while the red worlds are under attack and require immediate assistance.

When Unarin glances at the current situation of the Milky Way, as he usually does, he pauses for a moment to frown.

Slowly, he walks over to the edge of the table while his brother Randis continues to focus on the projection above him, reaching out to touch the differently-colored dots and issue commands to the forces stationed on those worlds as required.

After ten long seconds of silence, irritation flashes across Randis's face. He doesn't look at Unarin, but his attention noticeably shifts to the red-skinned Ascended.

"What is it?"

Randis's tone does not contain any warmth or brotherly love. He continues to remain focused on his duties.

"The number of Reds seems lower than usual." Unarin says. "Substantially so."

"You can thank the demons for that." Randis says. "Diablo has been up to his usual antics. He has 'helpfully' liberated more than a hundred worlds from the Plague so far. Curiously, he tends to focus on worlds currently in the process of being overrun, not worlds that have long become Kolvaxian strongholds."

"He's stopping the Plague from expanding." Unarin says mildly. "But at the same time, he's taking territory away from us. He's earning double the gains while expending half the effort."

"It's truly a genius play." Randis praises sarcastically. "And we can't do anything to stop him. The worlds he's taking from us were already going to be overrun by the Plague anyway. We just have to grit our teeth and endure."

"The Plague makes no further gains, we continue to lose power, and the Demons only strengthen over time." Unarin concludes. "This situation is starting to feel... untenable."

"Indeed." Randis says.

He continues to interact with the Volgrim Net, communicating in parallel with thousands of Volgrim thanks to his exceptional brain and talent at multi-tasking, but this doesn't even slightly harm his ability to hold a conversation.

"Is that all?" Randis eventually asks.

Unarin folds his hands behind his back. Then, he turns and walks away.

"Yes. That is all, brother. Keep up the good work."

"Don't tell me what to do." Randis retorts. "I am well aware of what our Empire needs."

Unarin pauses to look back at his brother, but eventually continues on his way without saying a word.

As he exits the Command Center, Unarin encounters Muuxunuu, his trusted administrator of affairs. She stands silently in the hallway, clearly waiting for him to exit, with her palms clasped at her waist.

"He still hates me." Unarin mutters.

"Yes." Muuxunuu says, in that same semi-robotic tone she always uses. "This is unlikely to change at any point in the future without external means."

Unarin smiles. He walks up to Muuxunuu and reaches his hand out to stroke her hair-tendrils. Her expression remains impassive as he kneads and toys with them lovingly, but her eyes do twitch slightly, revealing some sort of suppressed emotion.

"You used to love when I did this." Unarin murmurs. "What I wouldn't give to go back to those days..."

"My likes and dislikes are irrelevant." Muuxunuu says. "I came to find you because it is time for the Ascension Refresh."

"Oh." Unarin says as he reaches over to hold her chin in his hands, massaging the tip of her jaw with his thumb. "So soon? Feels like I did it just a few cycles ago."

"Synchronization coherency has decreased by 1.2% as a result of losing two worlds critical to the Ascension Net's infrastructure." Muuxunuu explains, unmoved by Unarin's touch. "The Ascension Net is at risk of decoupling several million users as a result."

Unarin finally pulls his hands away from Muuxunuu and sighs heavily, as if the weight of the world has momentarily increased by a hundredfold.

"Very well. I guess I'll deal with that, next."

He and Muuxunuu turn and walk down the hallway together. Unarin deliberately places his hand on Muuxunuu's back, but like always, she does not respond to his touch.

Even so, it still provides the First Founder a faint sense of comfort.

"Truly, I miss the old times..." He says to himself.

The two ascend upstairs until they reach Unarin's Sanctum, then they head inside through its giant double doors. Unarin and Muuxunuu eventually step into a small room located off to the side where a large glass pod filled with bubbling liquid resides.

Without fanfare, Unarin strips off his clothes, then climbs above the tank and hops inside, inhaling deeply to fill his lungs with the watery concoction.

Following this, he waits.

His consciousness becomes hazy.

His eyes begin to flutter...

He drifts off into an endless sleep, all while Muuxunuu keeps careful watch over his body's physical condition.

* * *

Unarin awakens.

He opens his eyes to find himself dressed in a resplendent and glorious military uniform, one that denotes his status as the Highest Among High. Its white color and red pinstripes give him a distinctive flair for the extravagant, making him appear a leader among exobeasts.

The world fizzles around Unarin, and countless tall, glittering white structures spring into existence.

Different from the bland and utilitarian stratoscrapers on Volgarius, these buildings only rise up a few thousand feet into the sky, and each one is completely unique. One building resembles a corkscrew with a lance stabbed through its center, as if someone had enveloped an ancient weapon with an observation deck just for their own pleasure.

Another structure looks like a series of geometric shapes stacked on top of and beside one another, making it mind-bending to look at.

And still another resembles a giant statue of Unarin himself, his palm lifted before himself, a simulacrum of the Milky Way suspended above his palm, slowly rotating as if to imply the First Founder has the entire galaxy in his grasp. What is most impressive, though, is that the miniature galaxy is not a hologram, but more than a billion tiny spheres, each a quarter the size of a standard playing marble, and all of them colored and carved with intricate detail to reflect the properties of the worlds and stars they represent.

How long could such an incredible display have taken to create? Only the greatest craftsman among the Ascended would know...

Unarin finds himself standing inside the Ascension Net, where hundreds of thousands of other Ascended walk around, their differently-colored skin making them resemble a living rainbow made of flesh and cloth. Surprisingly, most of the Ascended do not look impressive. They wear ordinary civilian clothes with simple colors and basic patterns. But among them, elites stick out here and there, wearing more elaborate military garb, training outfits for combat, and even heavy armor meant for military warfare. Innumerable trillions of Ascended live their lives inside the Ascension Net, but in this particular capital city, only fifty million or so can call it their home.

The moment Unarin arrives, the beautiful blackened starry sky above changes color. Its hue turns red, and an automated voice speaks from above.

"First Founder Unarin has made landfall in the city district of New Velaria. All citizens in the area, be alert for his movements and show all proper respect to his greatness."

Immediately, every Ascended in the city pauses what they are doing to look around them, uncertain where Unarin has arrived. Those nearest the First Founder spot him before the rest, and excitement appears in their eyes.

"He's here! First Founder! We are honored by your presence!"

"The Greatest Ascended! Everyone, show respect!"

"Step aside, Lord Vetreus is on his way!"

Countless cries go up among the crowd. Even after a million years of coming into the Ascension Net, Unarin has not spoken to or contacted more than 90% of the Volgrim currently residing within it. A chance to get just a glimpse of the First Founder is unfathomably rare, so his appearances always spark a great fervor among the crowd.

"Everyone, everyone. Thank you." Unarin says politely, nodding to those nearby while offering a friendly wave. Unlike the heavy emotions he displayed before entering the Ascension Net, he puts on a good show of compassion and strength for his fellow Ascended. "You honor me."

The crowd continues to cheer, while a noticeably taller blue-skinned Ascended wearing a black uniform pushes through them, making his way toward Unarin. When he reaches the First Founder, he pauses to bow at the waist.

"Founder Unarin. Thank you for visiting my city."

"Brother Vetreus," Unarin says, walking over to pat the other's shoulder. "There's no need to stand on formality. Let us retire to a quieter place. I need to speak with the Velaria Council."

"Of course." Vetreus says, straightening his posture to return to his full height. He stands more than a head taller than the First Founder, yet his presence somehow seems smaller due to Unarin's regal aura. "No doubt, they are already preparing for your arrival."

The two of them cut through the crowd, with all the Ascended nearby spreading out and making room for Unarin to walk. None of them do anything as vulgar as attempting to touch or speak to him, as their respect for him is higher than the heavens!

Before long, Unarin and Vetreus walk into a large building best described as a series of cubes separated by various walkways, each cube representing a structure isolated from the rest, levitating in the air via anti-gravitic propulsion. The extravagant cost of such a building could not easily be paid in the modern times; only in the Ascension Net where resources are practically infinite.

"Tell me," Vetreus says casually. "How goes the War outside?"

"Quite well." Unarin says with a smile. "The Volgrim still rule the galaxy. As of late, the Plague has all but frozen its advance thanks to assistance from a certain group of mud-dwellers. They came up with an innovative method to push those monsters back, and as a result we have begun to make inroads towards claiming the lost territory once again."

"Good. Good!" Vetrues says twice. "In truth, First Founder, I was beginning to feel dread toward the situation outside. The Ascended could be an incredible asset in the War. Why have you held off on at least deploying our elite shock troops?"

Unarin shakes his head. "It would be a complete loss for us if the Plague managed to capture just one Ascended. Its ability to assimilate the strengths of those it devours makes the Plague a fearsome adversary. Do you want the bodies of every Kolvaxian to become as strong as ours?"

"Hmm... that is true." Vetreus murmurs with a troubled expression. "I suppose that means you do not intend for our people to make their arrival onto the scene just yet."

"If I can help it, none of the Ascended will ever do battle with the Kolvaxians." Unarin sighs heavily. "The day I issue that demand will be the day I must admit the war is likely lost."

Vetreus pauses his walking to turn and direct a grim gaze at Unarin.

"Brother Unarin. Do you truly have so little faith in us?"

"It's not that." Unarin says, smiling weakly. "But if the true power of the Ascended must be unleashed, I would rather it be in glorious battle against the Dark Ones, rather than their weakest minions..."

"Ah. Then I shall not press the issue further." Vetreus concedes.

They resume walking, enter a grav-lift, and transfer between three different levitating cube-facilities before arriving in the uppermost one, where they step into a conference room with fifteen chairs positioned around a table.

At once, beams of light flash inside the room. Thirteen different Ascended materialize, each one a powerful warrior, diplomat, or other such talented figure of ancient yore. They wear extravagant robes, uniforms, and light armor, making them appear either fearsome or renowned in some capacity.

Even so, none of them immediately speak, but instead bow their heads to wait while Unarin walks to the head of the table, and pulls out the chair there.

As he takes a seat, with Vetreus sitting on his immediate right, Unarin waves his hand.

"Begin."

The other thirteen raise their heads. They also sit down, lining the table off into the distance as they look at Unarin with respectful gazes.

"First Founder." A blue-skinned woman on Unarin's left says. Her crimson eyes and ornately decorated hail-tendrils give her a princess-like vibe. "Recently, 20 million Ascended were abruptly disconnected from the Ascension Net. I would like to know what caused this malfunction."

Unarin's right eye twitches. "Lady Perii. A world essential to the Ascension Net's infrastructure was overtaken by the Plague. As a result, we suffered a momentary but severe outage until the backups on other worlds took over the processing burden."

He pauses for half a breath before adding, "But you need not be worried. We have backed up the connections and restored those we lost. They will return soon enough."

"That is good." Perii says slowly. She runs her fingers along the seams of her ornate red and gold dress, accentuating her figure. "But what of the War situation? For an entire planet to fall..."

"We lose minor planets all the time." Unarin says dismissively. "They do not possess much value, so we ignore them. Rarely do the Volgrim suffer a loss to our core systems.

As I told Vetreus on the way here, one of our vassal species, the Demons, has recently obtained a unique ability to devour the Plague. Emperor Diablo has been core in pushing the Plague back, and thus we are looking to reward him with commendations, given time."

"So there is a light at the end of the galaxy." Another female Volgrim says. With skin as black as Randis's, she wears a light ensemble of skull-covered armor and other decorations on her tendrils to make herself appear fearsome to her foes. "Does that mean that you do not intend to awaken the Ascended after all?"

"Apologies, Admiral Merris." Unarin says. "I have not yet made up my mind. The War is looking winnable now, but it will take time for us to be sure."

"Mmm..." Merris says, her eyebrows knitting together. "My soldiers have long looked forward to making their triumphant return to the outer galaxy. I hope you will make a determination sooner rather than later."

Unarin tosses his hands lightly. "There are many conflicting factors at play. Placing the Ascended in the Plague's way could serve to empower our foes. I do not wish to do that unless necessary. In the meantime, Project Blinding Light may serve a greater purpose in the future. You should all prepare yourselves in case I need you to activate it."

"Is the project ready?" Perii asks. "I was under the impression it was... only experimental."

"It is." Unarin says mildly. "But should a crisis emerge, it will perform as predicted. I have looked into the theory myself and validated it with the High Technopaths."

"We should abide by Unarin's commands." Vetreus says, warning his fellow council members. "He is the one who saved our Empire. Unarin knows best."

"Unarin knows best." The other Ascended say, nodding their heads at him.

The meeting continues for a while, with Unarin informing everyone of the goings-on in the outer galaxy. Eventually, he concludes the talks, and departs the room with Vetreus at his side.

As the two men walk down the hall, Vetreus smiles at Unarin.

"All this heavy talk makes one's mind weak. Let us discuss something lighter."

Unarin nods. "That would be best."

"Your wife!" Vetreus says cheerfully. "How is she faring these days? She still has yet to enter the Ascended Net. She's still alive, isn't she?"

Unarin's expression remains calm. However, a faint gloominess builds up in his eyes. He lowers his gaze for a moment while he walks, but Vetreus does not notice.

"Yes. Muuxunuu... she is as well as ever." Unarin says numbly. "I've asked her to visit the Ascension Net time and time again, but she simply doesn't seem interested. I'm sorry for her... lack of concern."

"No, no. It is fine." Vetreus says, still smiling. "Lady Muuxunuu is truly the most beautiful of our people. The kindest, most compassionate. Ahh, so many suitors were jealous that you won her hand, back in the ancient times. Everyone feels more assured because she is there to keep your spirits up while you fight this damned War."

"Aye. Every time I look at her..." Unarin says, his words catching in his throat for half a breath, "...I feel the same love that I always have."

"Good, good." Vetreus says. "And what of Randis? Is your brother doing well, too?"

"He leads the war effort." Unarin says neutrally. "Every day, he manages tens of thousands of minor and major matters. The Empire would not be the same without him behind the scenes. Randis is... truly irreplaceable."

"Haha, excellent, most excellent." Vetreus says, never once having noticed the faint pain in Unarin's voice. To him, the First Founder has always been a cold and logical Sentient. He does not seem to be acting out of character in the least. "If it were not for the three of you, we might never have defeated those damned Sentinels. You must take care to always stick together, First Founder. Only the bonds of love you three share can give you the strength to stand bravely against our monstrous foes."

Unarin swallows a lump in his throat. "I couldn't... put it better if I tried."

Unarin finishes his business inside the Ascension Net, then he eventually disconnects.

His consciousness resurfaces inside the tank full of liquid, and he emerges from its watery depths soaked to the bone.

As the First Founder climbs out of the tank and splashes messily across the floor, Muuxunuu stands at the ready, a large towel held in her grasp.

"First Founder." Muuxunuu says emotionlessly. "Allow me to dry your body."

"Oh. You don't have to do that..." Unarin says. "I'll just use a sonic shower."

"Your statement is correct. I do not have to." Muuxunuu says. "But I still wish to do so."

"That... alright then." Unarin says softly.

He extends his arms outward, allowing the pink-skinned Ascended woman to wipe at his nude body, drying him attentively.

As Muuxunuu starts from his feet and works her way up, her eyes meet Unarin's when she goes to dry his arms. In that instant, a faint spark appears in her pupils.

But then it disappears.

She looks away and finishes drying him off.

Then, she steps back and looks at him with no expression at all.

"The task is finished. I have cleaned your clothes and set them over there."

Unarin doesn't immediately walk over to where she indicated. Instead, he stands in place, looking at her with a complicated gaze.

He takes a step toward Muuxunuu, and she remains in place.

Then he takes another step, and another...

He walks over to her, then strokes her neck with his hand. He plays with her hair-tendrils, but she still shows no reaction.

"You know..." Unarin says quietly. "Brother Vetreus asked about you. I had to lie to him again."

"What is there to lie about?" Muuxunuu asks, uncomprehending.

"What, indeed?" Unarin says bitterly.

He leans his face towards hers, as if to gently kiss her, but he pauses mid-movement and pulls away.

"No." Unarin says, lowering his eyes. "I don't deserve it."

Ultimately, he turns away from Muuxunuu and slowly shuffles back to his regal garb. He slides his robes back on, but each piece of fabric presses on him like an anvil, the burden of their significance feeling unearned, and making him uncomfortable from the bottom of his soul.

After he finishes, Unarin stares ahead blankly at the wall.

"...It was the right thing to do." He whispers. "I had to do it. It was the only way."

"But why... why did she have to pay the heaviest price?"

The question he whispers into the void receives no reply.

Perhaps there are no longer any who are capable of answering...

Next Part

Part 558: Matriarch Calanthra

"Fifty million years?" Jason asks, as he looks at Lady Calanthra in shock. "That feels a little over the top!"

The Fairy Matriarch smiles at the young Wordsmith with kind eyes. "It is not as exaggerated as you believe, Jason. The Angels were formed from the dust of the Cosmos. They are many billions of years old. Even the Titans and Dragons are far older than my people, despite coming into existence well after their predecessors. In that respect, the annals of time would treat fifty million and ten million years as almost the same point of origination. A blink of an eye in the cosmic scale."

She lifts her chin up to deliver a playful smile.

"But also, you did not hear what I said properly. I said the fairies arrived in the Milky Way fifty million years ago. And that single word is what should make my story most interesting to you."

"Arrived..." Jason repeats. "You didn't 'evolve' like the Volgrim did. And if that's the case... then where did you arrive from?"

Instead of immediately answering his question, Calanthra licks her soft pink lips. "Mmm. Are you busy right now? I would like to invite you to speak to me in person on Pixiv. It will make things... more convenient to explain."

"You want me to travel across the galaxy right now?" Jason asks in surprise. "I... I guess I could. But I've never been to Pixiv before. I don't have a way to arrive there immediately, so I'll have to travel through space or take a Warpgate."

"Is that so?" She asks innocently. "And here I thought you might have put down one of those 'waypoints' of yours on our world."

"You know about Waypoints?" Jason asks, his expression incredulous. "How?!"

"I know a great many things about you, the Volgrim, and others that I would not normally reveal." Calanthra says mysteriously. "We fairies are more than meets the eye. We keep a low profile and deliberately blend among the so-called 'monsters,' but that does not mean we are like them. It merely allows us to blend in with the Milky Way's populace so that we do not provoke its native forces."

Jason nods slowly, but a deep suspicion wells up within his heart. "The more you talk, the more I begin to feel your people are a bit... sinister."

Calanthra shrugs. "I can see why you would think that. But I assure you, we fairies are quite benign. We hold no ambitions toward galactic conquest. Even if we wanted to act in such a gluttonous manner, we couldn't. Our species has been... limited."

"Limited, how?" Jason probes.

"We cannot become Cosmics." Calanthra says softly. "We were cursed by a powerful Ruler. The shackles placed upon us are forged through the Truths wielded by those Beyond Cosmic. Even your Wordsmithing would be void before such a power."

Jason nods slowly, not sure if he fully believes her, and in fact hoping she's exaggerating.

The fact some horrifying eldritch horror could seal his powers frightens Jason out of his wits. Against such might, what use is struggling at all?

"Well," Calanthra says, "since you have not set a Waypoint upon Pixiv, we'll just have to use the old-fashioned method. In fact, this transmission Crystal has two functions. Not only can it send and receive audio-visual transmissions, but it also has a Recall function built into it. If you can copy that function, you will be able to travel with it back to Pixiv to meet me in person."

"This crystal can travel all the way across the galaxy?" Jason asks, feeling the ability must surely be exaggerated. "I find that hard to believe."

"It is made from exotics native to Pixiv." Calanthra explains. "Besides, imagine how troublesome it would be if every time I finished conversing with someone, I had to send a courier to fetch my crystals back. Therefore, I build a homing function into every Fairy Transmission Crystal I send out in order to retrieve them later."

Jason nods. Her words make sense. If he conversed in such a manner, he'd probably do the same thing, too.

"Alright. So I just replicate this crystal's homing function, and I can pop over to say hi?"

"That's right." Calanthra says. "I will be awaiting your arrival."

She lowers her head, then her body rapidly dissolves into motes of light. The crystal hovers in midair for a second afterward, then plummets downward, landing in the grass with a soft thud.

Jason bends over. He picks it up, then stands and erases the chair behind himself from existence.

"Hmm..." Jason mutters softly. "Blinker's my good friend. Melia has treated humanity well. Calanthra seems fine... but I don't think I should go into a potential enemy's territory all alone. I don't know anything about Calanthra beyond what she's told me..."

Instead of teleporting directly to Pixiv, Jason takes a half-minute to jump back into Chrona's space and talk to Fiona and Blinker before he ultimately warps right back to where he was standing 30 real-time seconds before. He picks up the Transmission Crystal, holds it up, and utters a few words of power.

"Observe. Triangulate. Locate. Pinpoint. Activate."

An instant later, he vanishes from the spot and emerges where his Wordsmithing predicted he would; right at the entrance to a massive white castle carved out of limestone-like rock somewhere on Pixiv's western continent.

With night having fallen on the fairy's homeworld, Jason takes a moment to look around. He finds that this gigantic castle spans an area of twenty square kilometers, and a cursory sweep with his Wordsmithing identifies fewer than fifty thousand fairies inside. The sparse population makes him raise an eyebrow, but he realizes the fairies have always had trouble procreating, so their numbers are probably low in general.

The starry sky above catches Jason's attention. He looks up and becomes momentarily dazed, marveling at how much brighter and beautiful it is compared to Tarus II. With less light radiating from the castle than from Tarus II's main city, the light pollution levels are lower, allowing him to see far more of the cosmic brilliance above.

"Wow..." Jason mutters.

Surprisingly, aside from the castle, there isn't anything else in the area but a beautiful and pristine forest. With all fairies possessing wings, they don't have the mobility issues humans do, and can thus live further apart from each other.

Jason starts to step toward the castle, but as he does, a formidable power begins to press down upon his body. Startled, he backs away, and that feeling reduces.

What the heck?

Jason tries stepping toward the castle again, but this time more slowly. As he inches nearer, the power presses down harder and harder, allowing him to comprehend what it even is.

A gravity field... Jason thinks.

If he were to continue walking forward, the gravity would double, then triple, then continue growing stronger and strong until he collapsed into a shivering pile of flesh and bone.

Two words appear in Jason's head as he makes this connection.

Formation Magic!

One of the fairies' signature abilities makes its appearance, and the Wordsmith easily recognizes it thanks to years spent talking to Blinker. As one of the premier magical species, the fairies possess incredible means to fortify static positions with powerful countermeasures, as well as to provide themselves with unique utility effects other species, including the Volgrim, could never hope to replicate!

Jason takes a moment, then he utters a Word of Power.

"Neutralize."

However, contrary to his expectation, the gravity field doesn't disappear.

It only weakens!

He continues to feel it pressing down upon him, though its might becomes substantially less potent, allowing him to walk forward again.

Wordsmithing can't neutralize fairy magic? Jason thinks, silently shocked in his heart. Nothing has ever been capable of countering my magic before. This is unexpected...

He walks forward, arriving at the gate after a short minute. Abruptly, a woman appears before him, as if popping out of midair. She wears a pretty pink dress with jeweled green leaves embroidered into it at random, her dress's color matching her hair. Surprisingly, she appears quite young, perhaps only twenty years old by human standards.

Of course, considering she is a fairy, Jason dares not assume she is as young as she appears.

"Hi, Wordsmith!" The fairy girl says cheerfully. "The Matriarch told me you would be arriving soon. I thought that was interesting how you managed to negate most of the power of the Ninth Exterior Formation. Your magic is neat!"

Jason blinks. "You saw me?"

"Oh, sure. I was standing right here the whole time." She says. "I was just hiding inside an Invisibility Conflux. It's a simple trick, no big deal! Oh! I forgot to introduce myself. My name is Hefastria, but you can call me Hefa! It's nice to make your acquaintance!"

"Miss Hefastria." Jason says politely, nodding his head. "So you're here to take me to Matriarch Calanthra?"

"Yup!" Hefa says cutely, with a wink and a smile. Her wings flutter playfully as she looks him up and down. "It's not often a male gets to enter the Capital. This will be a treat for everyone!"

Jason follows after Hefa while she waves her hand to open invisible gateways past each Formation that blocks their path.

"There's no... men inside?" Jason asks.

"We only have half a dozen male fairies still alive." Hefa explains. "And non-fairies are strictly disallowed on Pixiv. Therefore, in the Matriarch's palace, there are only girls."

She shoots a suspicious glance at Jason.

"But don't get any ideas. Even if someone propositions you, you have to turn them down!"

"I'm married." Jason says, pointing to the ring on his finger. "And faithful."

"Married, huh?" Hefa says uncertainly. "What's that mean? Did someone cut off your... equipment?"

"What? No!" Jason gasps, feeling a cold chill down below. "It means I already have a wife. I have a female human I love very much!"

"Ohh, you have a mating pair already." Hefa says, relieved. "That's right! I remember reading somewhere about how humans tend to lean monogamous. How strange! Wouldn't you get bored after being stuck with the same lady for 100,000 years? Variety is the spice of life!"

"Humans don't typically live to 100,000 years..." Jason says slowly. "Or even a thousand years. Most barely make it to a hundred..."

"Seriously?" Hefa gasps, before smacking her forehead. "Right! Humans die super fast too. Jeez, your species is WEIRD! No wonder they rank among the Lower Seventy."

"The Lower Seventy?" Jason repeats.

"Yeah. The Lower Seventy Sentients of the Milky Way." Hefa helpfully explains. "You know, like Goblins, Harpies, Cats, Dogs..."

"Oh, come on." Jason retorts. "Humans are way better than cats and dogs."

"Ehh, I've seen the crystal-cordings of your wars. I wouldn't be so sure if I were you." Hefa says smugly.

The two travel further into the castle's interior land, and as they do, Jason blinks in surprise when the night sky abruptly vanishes, replaced instead with a brilliant sunny day!

Birds chirp in trees planted along the cobbled roadside. Dogs run around, barking playfully as they tussle with one another. More than a few fairy girls water their gardens as they stand outside their delightful rustic cottages, blinking their huge watery eyes as they look up and see a human male walking into their domain.

"Dogs?" Jason asks, looking at Hefa curiously.

"A fairy's best friend!" She chirps. "We found all sorts of cute critters on that Earth of yours, so we moved them here. I like raccoons the best. I have a dozen of them living at my manor!"

She notices the surprise on Jason's face. "What? Earth isn't special. We have all kinds of other creatures from across the galaxy that we moved here. It's easy for fairies to do."

"I see." Jason says, looking away from her to gaze at the paradise-like interior that was hidden by the external formations. "I'm a little surprised, is all. To think Pixiv was hiding such wonders from the rest of the galaxy."

"We live simple lives." Hefa says, her voice becoming more subdued. "After the Ancient Tragedies, we decided we would pursue our own happiness without harming the interests of the external galactic leaders. It's allowed us to keep our heads down."

"That's an admirable way of thinking." Jason praises. "If only there wasn't a Threat looming over our heads, maybe we humans could try something similar."

Hefa shakes her head. She looks at the Wordsmith with a hint of sympathy.

"From what I have heard, your people are far too warlike for that to ever be possible. Your storied history is nothing but violence stacked on violence. While a few might manage to pursue a simpler lifestyle, the vast majority never could."

"We may never know." Jason concludes.

After ten long minutes of walking, the two of them finally arrive at the main castle located in the depths of the capital city. Massive statues of ancient male and female fairies loom above them, towering hundreds of feet tall. As they walk inside, these statues face the walkway, each one striking heroic poses that serve to awe the viewer.

Jason's eyes flick from one figure to another, reminding him of the El-Dorado room inside the Labyrinth where he found the statues of the Three Kings.

"I take it these fairies were figures of some renown?"

"Most of them have died." Hefa says regretfully. "Many of them came from the Precursor Era, before the Great Migration. The Matriarch will likely tell you about them, if you wish to know more."

Jason frowns. Precursor Era? Great Migration? Hmm...

No doubt, it must have something to do with what Calanthra told him before.

The fairies 'arrived' in the Milky Way, huh? I think I'm starting to get an idea of what the Matriarch meant.

As they walk past the line of statues, two at the very end catch Jason's eye.

He looks at the one on the right. "That's Lady Calanthra, isn't it?"

"Yes. That is our Matriarch." Hefa says, smiling at him.

Jason's gaze moves to the left, where he spots a much older-looking woman, her body covered in powerful-looking armor distinct from all the fairies before. Unlike her predecessors who wore beautiful and dainty robes or other pleasantries, this woman on the left at the end appears quite fearsome!

"She is the Matriarch's mother." Hefa says respectfully. "She was the former Matriarch, Lady Erenia. Unfortunately, she passed away from grievous wounds after the Great Migration, passing her position to her daughter."

"Wow. She must have been a mighty warrior." Jason mutters.

"The strongest fairy to have ever lived." Hefa acknowledges. "I was never able to meet her myself, as I was born millions of years after her death. But I have seen her exploits in the record crystals. If it wasn't for Lady Erenia, our whole species might have perished..."

Before long, Jason and Hefastria reach their final destination, the banquet hall, where they spot hundreds of royal fairy princesses eating together, giggling as they sit at a table. Innumerable eyes sweep toward Jason as he arrives, and whispers go up around the giant table.

"A man?"

"A human. I heard he possesses magical power."

"He's fairly handsome. Do you think mother would let us...?"

"Not a chance. You know what she always says about men."

"Aww..."

Jason's attuned ears easily pick up some of the conversations, but he maintains a neutral expression.

These fairy girls sure seem horny. Jason thinks.

He looks around the table for Calanthra, but to his surprise, he only spots her when he turns his gaze off to the side. There, he spots a huge golden throne positioned in the back of the room atop a tall platform. He almost slaps himself for missing it, giving how distinctive it is compared to everything else.

Hefa stops walking, then gestures to him. "You go on ahead. I've completed my task."

"Oh, alright." Jason says. "Nice meeting you, Hefastria."

"You too!" She chirps, waving cutely before flitting away.

Jason approaches the throne, and a silly thought occurs to him. It's weird how the fairies are all human-sized. I always assumed they preferred to stay small, like Blinker. I'll have to ask Calanthra about that later.

When Jason reaches the throne, Calanthra smiles at him. "I'm surprised you didn't teleport directly here."

"I wanted to take the scenic route." Jason replies, bowing his head politely. "It's good to meet you in person, Matriarch."

"Just 'Calanthra' is fine." Calanthra says with a dismissive wave. "You and I can be said to be equals, given we are the respective rulers of our civilizations. Let us not stand on ceremony."

"If you insist." Jason replies, raising his head.

Calanthra waves her hand, and an illusion formation activates, shrouding the space around herself and the Wordsmith in an impenetrable veil of secrecy. Instantly, all the pretty fairy princesses vanish from sight, and Jason finds himself standing in a pitch-black void where he can only make out Calanthra's radiant form, as well as her throne.

"Please excuse me, but I must take certain precautions." Calanthra explains. "What I am about to tell you should not be leaked to the Volgrim, nor the demons. In fact, I'd prefer if you didn't even tell your wife, Wordsmith."

Jason frowns. "Not even Phoebe? Let me guess. This has to do with your 'arrival' in the Milky Way. I've already made some guesses of my own."

"That's right." Calanthra affirms. "This secret is extremely sensitive, and it could paint my people as a target. I cannot force you to remain silent, but I would like to know if you are willing to promise not to leak a word of what I'm about to tell you to another soul."

"You came to me first." Jason says. "I must assume you're taking a risk telling me this. So, on my honor as Humanity's Hero, I promise not to tell anyone, including my own wife."

Calanthra's body sags slightly in relief. "Good. Thank you, Jason. I appreciate that you would say that. There's no point bothering with a soul contract or whatnot. I also tend to believe that cooperation and mutual benefits are superior when it comes to solidifying alliances."

"Oh? You want an alliance with me?" Jason asks, his eyebrows rising in surprise.

"You, yes, but more importantly, humanity as a species." Calanthra explains. "Because of the recent developments you and your wife revealed on that debate stage, I have reason to believe humanity and the fairies can offer one another substantial benefits in the coming years."

She continues. "Ordinarily, I would not go to these lengths, but as you well know, the Plague only continues to encroach on the Milky Way's stability. Our future is in flux, and my people face just as much risk of going extinct as you humans, the demons, and the Volgrim too."

"It is only together, in a unified capacity, that the fairies and the humans working together can continue to survive in this unfathomably cruel cosmos."

Jason nods seriously. He crosses his arms and widens his stance.

"You've piqued my interest. I'm listening." He says.

"As you may have already guessed," Calanthra explains, "my people, the Fairies, are not from the Milky Way. We are also not fifty million years old. In fact, like the Angels, we are a Precursor Civilization. We have existed since the formation of this Eternity."

Jason's heart skips a beat hearing the truth comes from her lips. He doesn't allow the emotion to show on his face.

"You're as old as the angels?" He asks meaningfully.

"Indeed, we are." Calanthra affirms. "And once, we were just as powerful. We were Cosmics standing at the apex of strength in our home galaxy."

Calanthra lowers her eyes. A deep sense of loss dances in the light of her pupils.

"But that was a long time ago. Our reign ended with the arrival of the Dark Ones."

"The Dark Ones?" Jason asks. "From Andromeda? You're from Andromeda?"

"We are." Calanthra answers. "The fairies were once the supreme rulers of Andromeda, many billions of years ago. But we fell because of our own infighting and the arrival of a superior Apex Species. Now, we are but a shadow of our former selves."

She sighs softly.

"I wonder if you would like to give voice to the question on your mind, Wordsmith."

"I have a lot of questions." Jason says, nodding slowly. "But... I guess I'll start with the first one. If fairies were once Apex Cosmics, and if you have a humanoid form along with wings... does that mean you are related to the angels?"

Calanthra smiles. "The angels? We are not related to them, no."

She pauses.

"But... have you ever heard of... Convergent Evolution?"

Part 559: Eye of Yredelemnul

"Convergent Evolution." Jason repeats. He pauses for a moment to collect his thoughts. "The tendency for species to evolve toward certain similar characteristics over time, ones which are often evolutionarily superior or grant significant advantages. For example, having an even-number of legs to walk on, such as two or four or six."

The Wordsmith materializes a chair for himself, like he did when speaking to Calanthra back on Tarus II. He conjures a table and some tea, then passes a cup to Calanthra while taking one for himself.

"Exactly." Calanthra confirms, as she gracefully accepts Jason's offer and procures his offered cup. "Angels are bipedal creatures with two arms and two legs. They have wings. In that way, fairies are similar."

"Okay." Jason says with a frown. "But... angels didn't 'evolve.' They were created by the Milky Way's former Ruler, the Creator. Unless you're telling me fairies evolved from angels, but that would contradict what you just said."

"Angels did not evolve in the strictest sense of the word. That is correct." Calanthra continues. "And like the angels, my people also were created at the beginning of the universe by our own Ruler. Our Ruler was a powerful entity known as The Timeless. She lived for at least seventy Eternities in total."

Jason blinks twice. "Was. Lived. So... she's dead? Like my Creator?"

"The Timeless has indeed disappeared into the annals of myth." Calanthra says without a shred of emotion. "It is regrettable, but in Akasha's game, such events happen every Eternity. New Rulers uplift themselves from Apex Cosmics. Old ones die to their enemies. There are countless Rulers scattered across the cosmos. Some Rulers control tens of galaxies, while others control only one. The Creator was the latter, as was The Timeless."

"But what does all of this have to do with convergent evolution?" Jason presses.

"I'm getting to that. No need to be impatient." Calanthra says helplessly. "Andromeda and the Milky Way are neighbor galaxies; very close together and boasting somewhat similar levels of strength. There are many other galaxies in our Local Group, and outside that group there are tens of billions more. The Rulers have contested one another for Eternities innumerable, their memories and knowledge having long, long passed a point that you would be able to fathom. As such, their Galaxy Wars have raged for cumulative septillions upon septillions of Eternities, and they have learned what the ideal forms for Sentient species are."

Calanthra continues. "The bipedal form is considered to be extremely potent. It is versatile and well-balanced. The Quadrupedal form affords more power and speed, but often sacrifices intelligence. The tetrapod and octopod forms are less common, as are non-legged forms. So, while the fairies and angels did not 'evolve' in the strictest sense, our Rulers created us with the knowledge of what forms tended to be the most powerful based on their many Eternities worth of knowledge. In Akasha's Game, every minor advantage can snowball into a game-winning move as Eternities enter the competition phase."

Jason nods slowly. "How do you know all of this, anyway? Have you lived through multiple Eternities yourself?"

"By no means." Calanthra answers with a shake of her head. "I was born shortly after my people migrated to the Milky Way. My mother died after the migration, so I have no memories of our ancient past. As far as I am concerned, I am a child of the Milky Way, through and through. I have no sentimental attachments to Andromeda. My mother did, though, and she would often... speak of its beauty."

Calanthra's eyes become contemplative. She looks away, sighing softly as she remembers the short but sweet time she spent living with her mother as a child.

"Like I said before, Jason. The Timeless crafted the image of my people at the start of our Eternity. Based on our similarities to one another, it makes sense to assume our two Rulers knew one another. Perhaps they were hotly competing with one another, as most neighboring Rulers tend to do. But then again, perhaps not. The Creator died at the beginning of the Eternity, which should not be possible, going by Akasha's rules. That likely altered The Timeless's plans, throwing her mental state into disarray. It allowed the Dark Ones to strike, killing her and allowing our galaxy to fall early on."

"I'm getting mixed messages..." Jason mutters. "From what I've learned from Unarin, there are barriers around galaxies that prevent the Game from being initiated before a preset period. If so, then how would your Ruler fall?"

"How did yours?" Calanthra retorts. "There are many ways a Ruler could be assassinated. And The Game is not inflexible. Anything which amuses Akasha can be allowed. Perhaps the Dark Ones bribed him to lower the barrier. Perhaps, like the Plague, the Dark Ones slipped inside and secretly established a warpgate of sorts that allowed their Apex Cosmics to travel over and slaughter our High Fairies. Unfortunately, I am not learned in the ways of Rulers, so I can only hypothesize. I was only born after the migration to the Milky Way, after all."

Jason slowly nods. He leans forward to pour himself more tea before continuing. "Then that begs another question. How did your people 'migrate' to the Milky Way? How did YOU pass through the Akashic Barrier? Something isn't adding up, Calanthra."

"The answer to that question is... complicated." Calanthra says. "During the war against the Dark Ones, our mightiest fairy queens and kings fell one after the other. Apex Cosmics who had ruled for billions of years were unable to cope with the onslaught of our enemies, and so, we perished along with our Ruler."

She pauses.

"...I have looked into the history of the Milky Way. I know that the angels were a warlike species who viciously battled with one another early on. My people were not like that. We were extremely cooperative among our highest echelons. Working beneath our Ruler, we sought to increase our power and live extravagant lives while preparing for the day the Akashic Barriers lowered and The Game would begin. This meant, unlike the Milky Way which gradually killed its Highest off through self-immolation, we possessed unfathomably powerful and vast armies capable of doing battle with multiple galaxies at a time. There was a Plan, and we were ready to make great gains during this Eternity."

Calanthra takes a long, slow sip of her tea. She hesitates before continuing.

"Based on what my mother has told me, along with the historical ledgers I've read, we could not fathom the fierceness of the Dark Ones. From the very beginning, we were utterly outmatched. We had Apex Cosmics aplenty, and yet no matter what terrifying magic we unleashed, we could not withstand their assault. My mother was, in the end, the last Apex Cosmic of our people. In order to open up a path to the Milky Way, she paid a terrible price and reduced all the remnants of our people to the level of High Mortals."

Calanthra raises her crystal blue eyes to look at Jason with deep meaning. "You see, Wordsmith, Akasha's rules become less restrictive the weaker you are. Rulers who break the Akashic Laws pay terrible prices, often losing their lives. Apex Cosmics, High Cosmics, and so on... if they interfere with the lives of mere mortals, they can also suffer brutal fates, up to and including death. But the weaker one is, and the lower their status, the more leniency we are afforded. That is why, even though my people continue to draw breath, we will never again be able to stand among the highest echelons of galactic society. The Fairy species is doomed to lose the War during this eternity."

"I think I get it." Jason says slowly. "Your mother, as the last Apex Cosmic, expended all her remaining power. She opened up a portal to the Milky Way and traveled here along with what remained of your people before closing the gate behind herself."

"A portal?" Calanthra asks.

She shakes her head and looks away.

"No, dear boy. Not quite 'a portal.' But... perhaps it is time for me to show you."

Calanthra sets down her cup of tea, smiles at Jason, then rises to her feet. Seeing her stand up, Jason does the same, looking at her with interest as she gestures to the left.

"If you'll follow me, I think you will be quite surprised by the Truth behind our arrival in the Milky Way."

Jason nods. "I'm certainly interested in- what the heck?!"

His eyes drift from Calanthra back to her throne, and what he sees startles him.

While Calanthra has stood up, she also remains seated at the same time.

There are two Calanthras! The one still sitting on the throne has her eyes tightly closed, her head leaned forward, and the appearance of a puppet with its strings cut.

Noticing the look of shock on Jason's face, the Fairy Matriarch merely smiles and shakes her head. She gestures behind herself at the motionless form she left behind.

"Tragic, isn't it? For millions of years, I have been unable to stand up from that throne. The Curse placed upon me by the Dark Ones only grows stronger over time. In order to walk around, I have to resort to an illusionary duplicate. I'm sorry you had to witness such a pathetic sight."

Jason's heart skips a beat. He looks at Calanthra with pity in his eyes. "You're... cursed? In what way? Can my Wordsmithing undo it?"

"Your power is impressive." Calanthra says with a weak smile. "But only among mortals. When it comes to the machinations of Cosmics, let alone Rulers, your power is nothing at all. If you attempt to peer into the source of the curse placed upon me, I am afraid it will only draw Their eyes to you as well. It's best not to involve yourself in matters of Rulers until you have achieved the ultimate goal of being a Candidate."

Jason grimaces at her words. In his heart, he feels he must surely be able to undo the curse, but then again, he doesn't know anything about it, and he doesn't know Calanthra that well. Putting himself at risk for a complete stranger whose motivations are not fully understood doesn't sound like a good idea.

I can always try undoing it later. Jason thinks, before returning his attention to the Matriarch's illusionary clone.

"So..." Jason says, changing the subject, "you use a lot of plurals when it comes to the 'Dark Ones.' Are there multiple Rulers or something? I was under the impression only one Ruler could control a galaxy at a time."

"There are indeed multiple." Calanthra says. "As for how many, I do not know, exactly. The Dark Ones are a collective of Rulers that all ascended during different Eternities. They work together to amass power and bully individual Rulers, such as The Creator, The Timeless, and so on. Alliances are not forbidden in Akasha's Game, so there is nothing preventing them from adopting this strategy."

"So, does their name mean they all wield the power of darkness?" Jason asks.

"I... don't know." Calanthra says helplessly. "I only know what my mother told me, and she was not a Ruler herself. The information mortals and cosmics can obtain is nothing compared to what a Ruler will amass over multiple Eternities."

Calanthra gestures to Jason, and he falls into step alongside her as she disables the privacy screen, returning both of them to reality. The fairy princesses at the table look over, seeing their Matriarch reappear with the Wordsmith.

"I'll be taking this male for a walk." Calanthra says. "Nobody is to follow."

"Yes, Matriarch." The princesses respond in unison.

Jason and her head out of the royal greeting chamber through a side entrance. They begin walking down a hall adorned with unbelievably beautiful paintings, all of which astound Jason due to their lifelike imagery.

"Incredible..." Jason says, pausing before one of them. "This image... I cannot even comprehend how it was painted."

That painting depicts a paradise-class world with pink and red plants surrounding a village of carefully crafted but modestly constructed cottages, each one unique from the others, with different colors of paint used for each building's exterior. Many different male and female fairies sit, stand, and dance together, all of them looking happy and blissful as they enjoy what can only be described as the most idyllic life possible.

Calanthra smiles, but the expression contains a certain sense of sadness with it.

"One of our former homeworlds in Andromeda." She says. "Mother told me it wasn't unique at all. Most fairies used their magic to craft beautiful utopias free of strife. Despite our immense power, The Timeless seemed to want us to simply live our little lives, enjoying the simple pleasantries, rather than building up immense forces to rival other Rulers."

"So the fairies didn't have a standing army?" Jason questions.

"We did. No doubt about that." Calanthra answers. "But only those who had the desire to battle were promoted to the top of the hierarchy, acting as silent guardians while they awaited the inevitable days of reckoning. We didn't expect the sudden arrival of the Dark Ones at the edge of our galaxy, which was how they were able to catch us off-guard. Perhaps if we did, we might have fortified our galaxy more extensively. We might have survived the invasion."

The two continue walking. Jason idly admires the paintings as they travel, his eyes flicking from one to the other.

"These paintings are so lifelike." He says. "It's almost like they're not even paintings at all. They look like windows to other times and places."

Calanthra chuckles. "These paintings were made with magic. Not many fairies can craft ones at the level on display here in the capital. I happen to have the talent, as does Princess Melia, who you are acquainted with. There are different levels to Transcended Paintings, as we call them. Nine in total. The ones on display here only go up to the sixth level. We lost the most ancient paintings during the Dark War, unfortunately. Most of the ones you see now were made by fairies native to the Milky Way. That is why we cannot produce anything at the Cosmic level."

Jason looks at her in surprise. "That's right. Earlier, you implied there are no Cosmics among the fairies. Why is that? Surely, with a heritage as rich as yours..."

"As I said before, my people are cursed." Calanthra says, sighing yet again. "Haah... cursed to never produce another Cosmic among our ranks. In fact, you denizens of the Milky Way are cursed, too. Because of the actions of your precursors, you are also unable to become Cosmics in the Way of Magic. It is quite an unfortunate tragedy..."

Jason scoffs. He folds his hands behind his back and smirks at her. "Guess you're not up to date on the news. Diablo has been mass-producing Cosmics with ease. Mephisto became a Cosmic. The Volgrim have Cosmics too. Seems they're crawling outta the friggin' woodwork these days."

"You misunderstand what I said." Calanthra explains patiently. "I said you are unable to produce Cosmics through the Way of Magic. There are still ways to Ascend using other means. But harnessing the innate magical power of your galaxy is no longer possible. Because of the Angels, who drained the Milky Way of its power during the Primordial Era, the magical power left behind is thin and incapable of producing Cosmics."

She continues. "Mephisto ascended by using the cursed power of soulcrafting. Diablo is elevating Cosmics by attaching their power to stellar bodies. This limits their mobility and prevents them from being considered 'True Cosmics.' As for the Volgrim..."

Calanthra shakes her head and chuckles.

"Those Volgrim certainly are interesting. Their Psionic Power is derived from a... different source... than what the ancient angels used. The Psionic Well."

"I take it you've been observing the Psions long enough to understand how they uplift themselves." Jason says, his question rhetorical.

"To be honest, nobody who isn't a Psion fully understands it. Not even me." Calanthra admits. "But in any case, that's neither here nor there. My greater point is that the fairies cannot become Cosmics anymore. Not only because of the thin magical energy inside the Milky Way, but because of the curse the new Ruler of Andromeda inflicted upon us as we fled. Every fairy is limited to the rank of High Mortal, forever prevented from returning to our former glory. Not even your Wordsmithing should be capable of undoing it."

"I see." Jason says, looking away. "That's... really unfortunate."

"We've grown used to it. It is not worth complaining about anymore." Calanthra replies.

After exiting the hallway of paintings, Calanthra leads Jason left and right, past countless opulent rooms, and outdoors, where they eventually stop inside a vast garden adorned with bio-luminescent trees, ponds filled with algae and critters hiding beneath, and flowers stacked atop thirty-foot-tall statues.

In the center of the garden, a large pond, made perfectly round by stones lining its banks and inner depths, remains motionless without a single creature inside. Four statues of ancient fairies stand around the pond, their palms aimed at a central point thirty feet above its surface, as of trying to contain some unfathomable power from erupting...

Jason glances around. "Hm? This garden is empty. Where are all the other fairies?"

"Nobody is allowed here but me." Calanthra says, her tone solemn. "These are the Eternal Waters. The connection between realms."

Suddenly, Calanthra claps her palms together. Instantly, the artificial sunlight above the city vanishes, plunging Jason and herself into darkness.

Jason jumps in fright, not expecting this turn of events. Just as his bewildered mind is about to catch up to the point he might start asking questions, his heart drops into his shoes!

Between the four statues, at the central point where their palms are aiming, a ghostly, blood-red eye flickers around, its evil presence fixating on Jason with a malevolent gaze that flash-freezes his blood.

"What the fuck!" Jason blurts, jumping back two steps. "WHAT THE FUCK?!"

The horrifying eye says nothing. It does not communicate with him, but instead stares at the Wordsmith in a manner most monstrous, making him feel like a rat being eyed by a horde of hungry wolves.

Never has he felt so small and vulnerable. Not even when facing down the Archdemon!

"One of the eyes of Yredelemnul." Calanthra says, looking at the Wordsmith with an inexplicable gaze. "Frightening, isn't it? This is an incipient eye my mother stole from a Ruler among the Dark Ones. Its power is limited, and its sentience restrained. But even so, it is utterly terrifying."

"This eye... belonged to a Ruler?!" Jason exclaims. "Why the hell are you just letting it sit there? Shouldn't we kill it?!"

"Kill it?" Calanthra repeats. "This eye is hideous, terrifying, and malicious, no doubt, but it is also my people's unwitting benefactor. Through Yredelemnul's Eye, we were able to harness a small amount of focused cosmic power, just enough to open a crack between dimensions."

She looks at the eye, which has continued to stare at Jason, unblinking, the entire time.

"It cannot exist without total darkness. That is why we always keep this city covered in blinding light. But, when the time comes for me to activate its power, I must deactivate the Endless Sunlight Formation, if only for a short while."

Jason's skin crawls as the eye continues to gaze at him. He forces himself to look away, because for some reason its gaze feels magnetic, drawing his eyes toward it for unfathomable but no-doubt sinister reasons.

"Okay!" Jason shouts. "You can turn it off now! Are we done yet?!"

"Done?" Calanthra asks. "Wordsmith, we have only just begun."

Without hesitation, she aims a finger at the eye. A beam of light as bright as the midday sun blasts at the eye, making it tremble and weep tears of blood.

These tears fall from the silently raging eye to the pond below. The pond illuminates with an ominous bloody glow, and storm clouds materialize in the sky above. Lightning crackles downward, striking the eye and causing it to bleed and tremble even more profusely. The pond turns redder and redder, until, in a moment of ferocity...

Yredelemnul's eye explodes!

BOOM!

A shockwave blasts outward, but to Jason's surprise, it doesn't even so much as ripple the grass around him. It passes through his body and momentarily jolts his soul, but otherwise, it has no effect on the physical world.

With the eye gone, the pond begins to swirl rapidly until it becomes a maelstrom of stormy water, spinning round and round without splashing beyond the confines of its rocky exterior.

"Get ready!" Calanthra shouts. "When the water stills, jump inside!"

"Jump inside?!" Jason asks, horrified. "It's filled with blood!"

"Not blood in the way you imagine." Calanthra explains. "Cosmic Essence. The blood of a Ruler is more powerful than any exotic you can imagine. The pond will become a gateway to the other dimension soon. Now, ready yourself!"

"I..."

Jason starts to argue with her, but decides to bite his tongue.

"What kind of portal is it?" He asks. "Where will it take me?!"

"It will transport us to a place you cannot even imagine." Calanthra says. "After shattering the eye, it will require one Pixiv-cycle to restore itself. If you don't come with me now, you'll have to wait another year to learn the Truths you want to know most!"

Jason hesitates.

He grits his teeth, momentarily feeling indecisive.

At that moment, the waters stop spinning, and a hazy image of a far-away land appears.

"Now!" Calanthra shouts. "If you aren't coming, then I'll go alone!"

"Fuck it!" Jason snaps. "I'll go, I'll GO, goddammit!"

Calanthra jumps into the pond, and less than a second later, Jason steels his nerves... and jumps in after her!

The moment they pass through the boundary between dimensions, Jason seemingly spins in midair and lands on his feet. He looks backward, only to see the portal closing behind himself.

The gateway back to the Milky Way disappears!

"Shit." Jason curses softly. He directs a withering stare at Calanthra. "You've trapped us here?!"

"We are not trapped." Calanthra says with a smile. "We can leave at any time we wish. Now, look around you. What do you see?"

Jason blinks. He turns his gaze around to take in the sights.

What he sees upends his understanding of reality.

He and Calanthra stand atop a small stone platform amidst a pitch-black void seemingly overlooking not the Milky Way, but all of the cosmos itself.

No matter which way Jason looks, he sees an infinite number of galaxies, stars, black holes, and other cosmic phenomena he cannot even begin to describe in words.

By looking at any of these entities, his vision begins to move toward them, drawing them nearer.

He can look at any star of any galaxy and view it with a frightening level of clarity!

"What... what is this place?" Jason asks.

"This is the entrance to Ripped Space." Calanthra says softly. "A viewport into every Eternity that has ever existed, up to and including the current one."

Calanthra smiles at Jason.

"It is through the power of Ripspace that my people were able to travel to the Milky Way... among other destinations."

"Fairies aren't only in the Milky Way?" Jason asks, suddenly comprehending her meaning.

"My people have taken up residence in many galaxies." Calanthra responds. "But unlike the Milky Way's fairies, our interstellar brothers and sisters... are unlikely to have met good ends."

After a pause, she takes Jason's hand in hers.

"Well? Would you like to go exploring?"

Part 560: Ancient Domains

"Hell yeah, I wanna go exploring." Jason says to Calanthra with a smile. "How do we navigate around Ripspace though? Traveling to other galaxies is going to take billions of years, right? Surely, there's a shortcut."

"Ripspace is not as it seems." Calanthra explains, gesturing grandly to the epic sight before them. "It is a connection between the past and the present; the near and far. The further away or the further back you want to travel, the higher the price you will have to pay."

Jason's smile vanishes. "Wait... you can use Ripspace to travel back in time?!"

"No." Calanthra clarifies. "Time is linear. We cannot travel through it. Some can slow it down or speed it up. A rare few can even pause it for a short while. But moving forward and backward is impossible. Countless have attempted to do so over the eons, but all have failed."

She looks at Jason meaningfully. "Many Rulers would wipe out galaxies if it might let them obtain such a power. The fact they still haven't proves it is impossible."

Jason nods slowly. "I won't lie. I have a lot of regrets. Sometimes I wish I could go back in time and save my daughter from dying."

"Everyone has regrets." Calanthra muses, looking off into the distance. "I have plenty, myself. But it's better this way. There would be pandemonium if time travel ever became possible."

She pauses before continuing with her explanation. "While we cannot go back in time, we can look back into time. Pinpointing exact moments in history is difficult, to say the least, but it is possible to use Ripspace to search for key moments in intergalactic history."

"So it's like a massive seer-stone." Jason muses aloud. "But wait, didn't you imply earlier that you used Ripspace to travel to the Milky Way from Andromeda? How does it allow you to jump between galaxies? Are other species using Ripspace for intergalactic travel?"

"You can indeed use Ripspace to travel to distant reaches of space." Calanthra explains. "But... you have to pay a certain price. Akasha's Barriers still protect every galaxy. Cosmics cannot travel between them easily. Mortals can, but the price we must pay is unimaginably steep. That is also the reason my mother perished not long after arriving in the Milky Way and giving birth to me."

The Fairy Monarch sighs softly.

"My people used the power of Ripspace to travel to several other galaxies. We were fortunate that the Creator had died, allowing us to take up residence here in secret, but the Angels, Titans, and Dragons were still a threat we could not overlook. Later, the Volgrim rose up too, and that was something that worried us for a while. Particularly when their Sentinels began to rapaciously erase the lives of innumerable Sentients."

She waves her hand. "Ultimately, very few galaxies didn't have a Ruler in power. Traveling to one that did meant flipping a coin and praying our people could avoid their gaze. Sadly, time has shown me that we were likely unsuccessful. I have lost contact with all my sisters across the cosmos."

The image of innumerable galaxies floating in the distance changes before Jason's eyes. Calanthra manipulates some unseen power, causing herself and Jason to suddenly materialize directly in front of a beautiful spiral galaxy.

"This is our Milky Way." Calanthra explains, waving her hand to conjure another, far bigger galaxy beside it. "And this is Andromeda."

"Is it just me or does Andromeda seem... brighter?" Jason asks.

"Andromeda contains far more interstellar particles, cosmic energy, and latent magical power than the Milky Way." Calanthra says. "Of course, in the ancient past, it had even more than it does now, but such is the way of entropy and Chaos."

Jason nods. "How exactly do galaxies lose power over time? Doesn't this feel self-defeating in a way?"

"Every Ruler enters the Unending War with a strategy." Calanthra says, motioning with her hands to disperse the galaxies and reveal images of ghostly creatures, some standing on two legs, some on four, and plenty that appear as mere blobs of energy. "I cannot pretend to know the thoughts of such high and mighty beings, especially as I am a mere mortal myself. Even so, I can definitively state that there are Rulers who seek to put as much galactic energy into their initial creations as possible, while others wish to adopt a more energy-efficient growth-model."

She pokes her finger against Jason's chest. "Take the angels and humans, for instance. The Creator poured the vast majority of his power into creating a galaxy full of Apex Cosmics. At their peak, the angels as a whole commanded enough power to flatten other galaxies. But what did they do instead? They fought with one another, killing themselves due to sheer boredom, if not outright ego."

"I see." Jason says, brushing Calanthra's finger away. "So the Creator dumped all the Milky Way's energy into the angels. I take it this is uncommon among Rulers?"

"Of course. It's a wasteful strategy and usually loses Rulers the War for that Eternity." Calanthra says dismissively. "The Timeless used a different strategy. She created the fairies as mere mortals that evolved over time, gaining greater and greater power through their own efforts. This meant that instead of devouring Andromeda's abundant Cosmic energy, they could slowly sap off its excess over time. For you see, the more energy a galaxy has, the more it can produce. If you ration it long enough, you can reap more of it across the duration of an Eternity."

"That makes sense." Jason concludes. "It's like a Rush build in an RTS versus an Economy build. You sacrifice long-term gains in exchange for short-term power. The problem is, with Akasha's Barriers preventing Rulers from attacking their enemies straight away, a Rush build is dumb because you're just wasting your resources and sacrificing Cosmic energy when you'll actually need it."

Calanthra blinks twice. She looks at Jason with a strange expression, then turns away for a moment, trying to understand the strange terms he's used. They mostly make sense, but some of them are a little...

She shakes her head and returns to the topic at hand. "Right. Rush strategy versus Economy. Of... course. Well, in any case, there is one advantage toward the first strategy. If you drain all the energy from your galaxy, it becomes less appealing for other Rulers to attack. Because Andromeda was so large and still filled with Cosmic power even billions of years after the Expansion Era, it stoked the hunger of the Dark Ones. Meanwhile, the Milky Way only needs to deal with the Plague, which is threatening for mortals, but manageable for Cosmics. In that respect, we've gotten off much luckier."

"I get the bigger picture now." Jason says with a nod. He turns to look back at the cosmos before him. "So, what about all this? Are we gonna go exploring, or what?"

"In order to explore the universe presented here, we would need to make sacrifices we cannot afford. I think you would find the price most disagreeable. But there is something we can explore freely..."

She waves her hand, and instantly, the brilliant and beautiful cosmic view of the universe vanishes.

In its place, Jason and Calanthra suddenly appear inside a dead, barren wasteland. Brown and grey dirt rises up in huge dunes stretching off into the distance. Fallen towers made of gold and stone lay on their sides, or stick into the ground, buried nearly up to their tops as they point diagonally toward the sky.

And speaking of the sky, it glows faintly grey, as if some weak, pale imitation of a star were trying to shine through a thin atmosphere clouded by dust and grime. The very air itself smells of sulfur and toxins, making Jason's nose curl up when he takes a breath.

"Ugh... what the hell? Where are we now?" Jason asks, as he turns and looks around at the dead world surrounding him.

"An Ancient Domain." Calanthra says softly. "A remnant of a dead universe. All life stripped away. All hope lost. Septillions of different Sentient species, gone. Their mortals, their Cosmics, reduced to dust by the Contraction."

The Wordsmith frowns. "This Ancient Domain represents a dead universe? But how can that be possible? If the Heat Death played out and all the galaxies faded to cosmic dust, then there already wouldn't be anything left. And then, if the entire universe collapsed into a singularity before exploding again, there definitely wouldn't be anything left behind resembling physical matter."

"You perceive reality through just three dimensions." Calanthra intones. "Time and space can be considered two dimensions. Cosmic Power is another dimension. I must admit I do not understand how Ancient Domains have continued to exist across countless Eternities, and I don't know how they retain a vaguely familiar form... but I can assure you that in spite of bending logic itself, they do exist and they can provide tangible benefits to those dedicated to exploring them."

"You've been exploring them, then?" Jason asks, turning away from the dead world to scrutinize Calanthra's phantasmal image.

"Me, a little. But often, I dispatch my descendants to scour these Ancient Domains for things of value. It may surprise you, but there are powerful artifacts, vengeful spirits, and all manner of other inter-dimensional horrors lurking within these so-called dead-lands."

Calanthra pauses. She shifts her posture to look at Jason deeply.

"And that is why I've brought you here, Jason. It's time for me to get down to the crux of the matter and breach the subject that I find most important."

He nods. "I'm listening."

"It's like this." Calanthra explains. "The Ancient Domains are unfathomably broad. Think of how large a universe is. Think of how many universes have existed. Think of how much space my people have yet to explore."

She pauses.

"The gains we have received have made my people stronger than you would expect. Among those gains are Yredelemnul's Eye and other leftover remnants of power that many dead ancient Rulers lost when their Existences became forfeit. While their tangible Existences may have perished, their spirits sometimes live on in these broad, unending dead universes..."

"That's why you approached me." Jason says, while crossing his arms and leaning on the ball of his heel. "You said you wanted an alliance with humanity. You... want humans to help you explore the Ancient Domains?"

"Trust is hard to come by among mortals, Cosmics, and Rulers." Calanthra says simply. "I never would have considered allying with the humans before, but you have shown me the broadness of your mind during the debate against your clone and the commander of your military. To some, you certainly appear naive, but to me I see an opportunity I would be foolish to ignore."

She continues. "The Fairies cannot reproduce efficiently. Every fairy we send into the Ancient Domain is one less fairy we have among our Empire. We already have a difficult time replenishing our numbers through the remaining Male Fairies, but do you think it is easy for us to reproduce with other species?"

Jason slowly shakes his head. "Blinker and Kar's children were all crocodiles, not fairies. From that, I can only imagine that most of the time, your mating attempts do not create more of yourselves, but instead more non-fairy children."

"That's exactly correct." Calanthra replies. "But that all changed recently when I found out one of your human males somehow spontaneously altered his genetic profile to become a fairy. There is no doubt about it; Samuel Baker harnesses all the capability to reproduce that you humans do, as well as the trueborn powers of any male fairy."

"So... are you seeking a marriage alliance with Samuel Baker?" Jason asks, scratching his head in confusion. "You could just ask him yourself, you know?"

"This is not about one man." Calanthra retorts. "Samuel Baker, if he were to join our ranks, would certainly help us stave off extinction for a while longer. But that is hardly worth all this melodrama and me taking you to the Ancient Domain in person..."

Jason's eyes widen in realization. "I see! You... you're thinking that if my magic could make one male fairy, I could surely make another, and another..."

"Yes, precisely." Calanthra says, revealing a beautiful smile. "Additionally, if humans were to assist us in scouring these Ancient Domains, we could make great gains together. There is plenty of room for another species to join ours in locating powerful artifacts and other items capable of Uplifting us."

"You want to become Cosmics still." Jason muses. "You haven't resigned yourselves to your current fate."

"Quite the opposite." Calanthra says. "The curse placed upon us is unbreakable by those beneath the realm of Ruler. As I said before, the fairies have lost this Eternity's war. However, while we cannot Ascend any longer, that does not mean the humans are subject to the same limitation. If we could groom a human into becoming the Milky Way's Ruler, we could finally break free of our shackles by virtue of having a powerful ally."

She pauses, looking meaningfully at the Wordsmith.

"If the Demons or the Volgrim were to become our Ruler, we would not enjoy such a benefit. At best, we would only maintain the status quo, and at worst, they might eradicate us out of fear of having an unsightly tumor in their midst."

"Haha." Jason laughs. "So you brought me here to show your sincerity. I get it. Well, I'm definitely not opposed to helping you. Blinker is my good friend. If she were to ask me, I'd definitely say yes to just about any request."

Jason turns away. He walks a few feet off to the side and pauses, standing to gaze out at the Ancient Domain and its endlessly rolling plains which stretches off into the infinite distance...

"Here's what I can do." Jason says. "My people are already working on laying out the options for humanity and where our fellow men and women will depart over the next few weeks. Some will travel to Maiura. Some will go to Sharmur. Some will stay on Tarus II. It's no trouble at all to put Pixiv on the list, especially as I was already planning to do that. I even have some other places I'd like to include, too..."

"Such as Camael's Cube?" Calanthra asks with a smile. "Or do you perhaps mean Chrona and Hope's Hall of Heroes?"

Jason nearly jumps out of his skin. He whirls around to look at Calanthra with shock in his eyes. "What?! How do you know about Chrona? How do you also know about where Hope has been hiding?? I don't even know that much!"

"For those who are talented in magic, it is possible to see through many lies and deceptions." Calanthra says calmly, unfazed by the alarm on Jason's face. "Your Spynet Sphere isn't so different from the many options I have at my disposal. I have many means to keep an eye on the galaxy. And while Diablo does not know exactly where or what Chrona is, he certainly knows of its general existence."

Her smile turns cold. "I would advise you not to take Unarin lightly either, Wordsmith. That ancient creature is more capable than you can imagine. He is hiding a great many secrets from the galaxy... secrets he does not know that I am aware of. If he were to learn of the true extent of my information web, I fear that he would dispatch a handful of High Psions to eliminate the fairy species tomorrow."

Calanthra's words truly rock Jason to his core. All along, he assumed the precautions he put on Chrona, precautions that fooled even Hope, would make his hidden dimension impossible to detect.

But how could he be so naive?

As the daughter of an Apex Cosmic, Calanthra must have her means, and that likely means Unarin and Diablo aren't too far behind either.

"Shit." Jason curses, lowering his head as a flicker of anger smolders in his heart. "I was too complacent. Chrona isn't secure, which means it's only a matter of time before more Cosmics learn of its existence. How long before they can find its exact location and invade it?"

"Calm yourself, child." Calanthra says soothingly. "The situation is not that dire. After all, Chrona still exists within a highly accelerated timespace. Any biological entity that wishes to travel there could suffer severe after-effects. Furthermore, the entities born inside will be too adapted to living within a higher dimension, so they won't pose much threat to the creatures of realspace."

She waves her hand. "Let's move on, Jason. I want to discuss other matters before dying of old age."

The Wordsmith cools himself off. He inhales deeply, then returns his attention to her.

"Alright. What next, then?"

"Fairies are not the only Sentients capable of entering Ancient Domains." Calanthra explains. "There are others who rarely appear inside here. That is why exploring these domains can be dangerous. The good news is that Cosmics have little need to enter these barren lands, as most of the heritages, treasures, and other such gains you might find inside are only useful to mortals. There are exceptions, but they are so rare as to be a needle found within ten million haystacks. A waste of effort better spent simply progressing one's Cosmic power the ordinary way."

"So what you're saying is, when you send fairies into an Ancient Domain, they can die as a result of crossing paths with Sentients from other galaxies." Jason concludes. "But if you had an army of humans to enter with you, your people would be a lot safer."

"Safety in numbers, yes. And you humans are... uniquely advantaged in Ancient Domain exploration." Calanthra says mysteriously. "Before that, though... do you know what the Power of Imagination is, Wordsmith?"

Jason raises an eyebrow. "Imagination? Like the mental ability to visualize stuff in your head? Yeah. It's not that complicated to understand."

"Ah, that's where you're wrong." Calanthra chides gently. "Imagination is the key to magical power. Imagination, Conception, Visualization, these are all key capabilities powerful maguses and sorcerors use to uplift their capabilities! And as it turns out, most Sentients are actually quite terrible at conceptualizing thoughts into imagery."

She gestures grandly. "Just take the Volgrim! You may think they are a powerful Sentient species, but in fact the Volgrim have terrible imaginations. They are stodgy, dull, and lack a great deal of creativity. All the gains their Technopaths make through technology are developed via brute force. They slowly improve their technological prowess by minute fractions over long periods of time, eventually resulting in a large and cohesive buildup."

"At the same time, the Psions Uplift themselves through meditation and sitting motionless for thousands of years at a time. Can a species capable of such incredible feats of drudgery also possess limitless imagination? I think not."

"Maybe the reason they're able to sit still for so long is because they live in their imagination?" Jason posits. "In which case their power of imagination should be quite formidable, right?"

"Possible, but unlikely." Calanthra says with a wave of her hand. "Never mind that. The point I'm trying to make is that humans have an extremely high affinity for magic. If your people were to ally with mine, we could teach you our ways. You could help us through your Wordsmithing and superior genetics, creating more fairies and humans alike. This would create a recursive cycle that would continually bolster both our species to greater and greater heights!"

She lowers her voice back to normal. "An alliance with humanity would have other benefits. You humans are equally adept in technology and magic both. You are versatile, capable of learning any skill provided you have time to devote to your studies. The bursts of inspiration you receive also allow you to make large jumps in capability as well, which could mean that in a relatively short period, you might even be capable of challenging the Volgrim."

Jason nods. "That does sound tempting, Calanthra. I'm willing to help you, but I won't demand my people join the fairies. It would be better if those who were the most interested did so instead."

Calanthra playfully twirls a finger through her hair. "Well. My daughters are all beautiful. Perhaps you should make mention that the fairies are... aggressively interested in copulation?"

"COUGH COUGH!" Jason wheezes, taking a step back as he asses her bold choice of words. "Yeah! Uh, I can probably- I'll let everyone know about that too. Obviously!"

Calanthra chuckles. "Such a shy boy."

They continue walking toward one of the nearest fallen towers embedded in the soil of the Ancient Domain.

"You know, Jason." Calanthra says. "You are a Candidate. You have the capability to become a Ruler someday."

"I am?" Jason asks, before thinking back to a conversation in the past. "Oh yeah, someone did mention that to me before. But... eh. I don't know. Becoming a Ruler sounds awful."

"Awful?" Calanthra asks. "How so?"

"It seems... lonely." Jason says, his voice softening. "Imagine all your loved ones dying, but you're stuck behind, living through the end of an Eternity, which takes trillions of years before Heat Death finally eradicates everything. Then comes the next Eternity, where you can remake your species again... but it won't be the same. Even if you remake your loved ones, it won't really be them."

Jason lowers and shakes his head. "That sort of life doesn't suit me."

"I understand why you'd think that way." Calanthra says. "In fact, you are suffering from the same affliction that plagues all Candidates who began their Existences as Biologicals. We have too many ties to the mortal world, so the majority of Biologicals who ascend to the rank of Ruler... fall to their non-biological opponents."

"As for the things which are not biological..." Calanthra says, looking at Jason with disgust. "You should already know what they are."

"Highly evolved Artificial Intelligences?" Jason guesses.

"That's right." Calanthra affirms. "There are several tiers of power a superintelligence can possess. The Volgrim have taken great care to prevent anything above a Beta Core from forming in the Milky Way, but once, a long time ago... they made a huge mess by accidentally creating the Milky Way's first Alpha Core Synthmind."

Calanthra chuckles. "The stupid fools didn't only create an Alpha Core, they gave it autonomy in the hopes it would be able to stop the wars between their factions. They built indestructible bipedal bodies for its splintered intelligences, and called them... Sentinels. Luckily, they were able to defeat the Alpha Core before it ascended further, but countless other biological species have failed at that juncture, creating an Alpha Core that ultimately devoured the full power of their galaxy for itself."

A chill trickles down Jason's spine. "You're saying the vast majority of Rulers are actually Alpha Core AIs? AIs that control entire galaxies?!"

"No, Jason." Calanthra counters. "Alpha Cores can defeat advanced civilizations. But there is one Existence higher than an Alpha Core, a tier that can only be reached once it has swallowed the power of a galaxy."

"That would be an Omega Core. a sentient artificial intelligence that has become Ruler over one or more galaxies. And in Akasha's game, more than 90% of all Rulers are estimated to be these superior lifeforms."

"It is for that reason that these highly adaptable entities are known as The Evolved."

Part 561: Milky Way's Agent

"The Evolved." Jason repeats thoughtfully. "Were the Sentinels capable of becoming Evolved?"

"They were not." Calanthra explains. "The Sentinels were not made with the intention of accelerated learning. Their programming was relatively fixed, making it so they would not grow infinitely more intelligent over time. That being said, at their base level, the leader of the Sentinels, named Mulgris, was absolutely an Alpha-Core level intelligence. Mulgris was the Command Unit; the brain of the Sentinels. It might have had a slight chance at someday rising to the status of Omega Core, but it did have limiters built in to its programming."

Jason blinks at Calanthra. "How do you know so much about technology?"

"Demons are technophobes." Calanthra sneers dismissively. "The fairies don't use technology much, but we're not totally ignorant. In fact, many monsters are somewhat adept in using it. The fairies are hardly an exception."

"Oh, right. True." Jason says with a nod. "Goblins are surprisingly good with tech stuff..."

He and Calanthra talk a little more, but eventually the conversation winds down.

The two of them begin walking toward the base of one of the sunken towers buried at an angle inside the Ancient Domain's soil. Its faded golden top makes it seem as if it were once part of an opulent and extravagant palace, but after an unknown number of eons, it has lost its shine and become rather haggard.

"Inspect." Jason says.

He waits for a moment, then frowns.

"...strange. My Wordsmithing feels fuzzy, somehow. The details I'm getting about this tower are hazy at best."

"Your magic is rare and powerful." Calanthra says. "I have long suspected it is not ordinary magic tied to the strength of your body, as most magic is. Rather, you are something of an Agent for the Milky Way. Since we are currently standing within a space outside the Cosmos's reach, the connection to your magic has become tentative."

Jason's eyebrows shoot up in alarm. "You're saying my magic is a lot weaker inside an Ancient Domain?!"

"Of course." Calanthra says. "If a new Ruler were to ever take over the Milky Way someday and they were your enemy, they might be able to sever the connection to your Wordsmithing. The same is true if an enemy Ruler were to destroy the Milky Way in its entirety. Even if you traveled to a new galaxy, you would either become powerless, or the full might of your magic would be greatly reduced."

That news troubles Jason. "Do I... have a counter?"

"As a matter of fact, you do." Calanthra chuckles. "Too much of your power is tied up in the central nexus of the Milky Way. I don't know how that happened, but you can change the status quo over time if you wish."

She continues. "But before you do that, you should consider the benefits of your current ability set. In the short term, a new Ruler is unlikely to rise. We have no formidable Apex Cosmics in our galaxy, certainly none coming within reach of seizing power. Because your magic is tied to the power of the Milky Way as a whole, it allows you to tap into the infinite versatility of Imagination without restraint. Should you choose to divorce yourself from the Milky Way, you would gain more autonomy, but you would likely lose much of the potency your Wordsmithing currently possesses."

"Wait, how do you know I'm an 'agent of the Milky Way'?" Jason asks with a frown. "I've never heard anything about this before."

"I don't know it for sure." Calanthra admits. "But my mother was an Agent of Andromeda. There are doubtless several Sentients in the Milky Way who were chosen by it and granted special abilities. You're not unique in that regard; every galaxy has them."

Jason's frown deepens. "Doesn't that mean the Milky Way has a bunch of 'agents'? Wait, no, more importantly, how the heck can a galaxy have an agent? I'd understand if a Ruler did, but... a galaxy?? It's just a bazillion stars all floating together. The very idea makes no sense."

Calanthra chuckles. "Galaxies possess consciousnesses, Jason. They are not 'sentient' in the way you and I are, but they possess Ego borne from the wills of all the creatures that live within their confines. The Milky Way's Ego is comprised of the thoughts and desires of Humans, Angels, Titans, Volgrim, Demons, and even us Fairies, after millions of years spent living and integrating into its consciousness."

"So," she continues, "you must understand that every galaxy is capable of selectively choosing and empowering individual Sentients they deem 'worthy.' While I suspect you are an Agent, I cannot say that entirely for certain. There's simply no way to tell unless one reaches the level of a High or Apex Cosmic. I'm merely guessing."

"You believe I am, though, because my power seems weaker now that we're in the Ancient Domain?" Jason asks.

"The Ancient Domain exists outside the realm of the Modern Cosmos." Calanthra says. "If your power were entirely your own, it would remain unaffected. The power of the Milky Way cannot pierce the barrier of Ripspace. Thus, I rest my case."

Jason nods silently, then pushes the thought to the back of his mind.

If my power isn't fully my own, I can investigate it later, he thinks. What's more important is learning more about the Ancient Domain itself.

He returns to examining the faded golden tower. He and Calanthra walk around its exterior, but they don't find any entrances. Eventually, she rears back and smashes her fist against its wall, causing a huge hole to burst open and fragments to fly inside!

Jason looks at her, and she smirks at him. "What? You think because I'm an old woman floating around in an illusory form I can't also punch like the Balrog?"

Jason shrugs. "I mean, you're a top-mortal expert, right? You're as strong as a Demon Emperor? So I guess you being super strong makes sense. It's just... I figured you'd be all... magical and shit."

"Well, you're not wrong." Calanthra concedes, as she steps into the newly opened passage. "My physical body isn't particularly strong. I actually used a spatial compression technique to fire a shockwave at the wall. It's a neat trick. You should try it sometime."

Jason rubs his chin as he follows behind her. "Yeah. Maybe I should."

The two of them step inside and find themselves in a pitch black room devoid of all light. Jason utters a few Words of Power to illuminate the area, but his magic sputters out, forcing Calanthra to intervene. She conjures luminous balls of mana and casts them in different directions, revealing some sort of alien church. Unfamiliar avian figures, resembling bipedal feathered birds of noble origin, rest on the ceiling and walls. The faded stained glass windows appear mostly shattered and broken due to the passage of time, but Jason can vaguely make out images of the bird-people no matter which direction he looks.

"Huh. So what civilization is this?" Jason asks.

"I don't know." Calanthra replies. "When one enters Ripspace, the landing point is always different. This is why exploration teams sent inside cannot be rescued. Even if a second team goes into Ripspace just a few hours after the first, they could be separated by tens of galaxies worth of distance. It's impossible to traverse Ripspace and map it out in any reliable manner. We can only hope to stumble across a treasure and bring it back with us to Realspace."

Jason nods. He walks over to a statue that has fallen to the ground, a statue depicting a powerful-looking bird-person, his avian face looking much more regal and his body appearing more humanoid than the Harpies Jason has come to know since his departure of the Cryopod.

"Ripspace connects to countless different Eternities, right?" Jason asks. "So this avian species could be from the previous Eternity, or a thousand Eternities before that, or even further and further...?"

"Correct." Calanthra says, as she busies herself flitting about, examining the cracks and crevices of the room. "We've lucked out by landing directly in the middle of an ancient civilization, but it's perfectly possible these creatures were primitives with no noteworthy treasures. Then again, they could have been Apex Sentients that ruled over their galaxy at one point. It is impossible to say unless we investigate further."

"All life becomes void before the advent of a Collapse." Jason says solemnly. "Someday, that will include the humans and Fairies alike."

"Yes, perhaps." Calanthra says nonchalantly. "But then again, we will probably die well before the end of this Eternity. The Dark Ones might kill us, or some other Ruler's minions. But hey, that's life for you!"

"Such a comforting thought." Jason says uneasily.

Over the next few hours, he and Calanthra continue examining the structure, as well as searching through the other nearby ones. All they manage to find are more crumbled ruins of the unknown avian species, but then, before they are about to leave, Jason exclaims in excitement.

"Look! I found something!"

Calanthra flits over to his side, where she finds him holding a ruined book with barely legible words written in ancient ink that has nearly turned to dust after countless eons.

Having searched a rather large area, the two of them only managed to stumble across this book in a village of ruined stone houses, and it wasn't even hidden inside a particularly prestigious looking structure either.

Jason scrunches up his face. "Translate."

His Wordsmithing hazily starts to make some of the words comprehensible, but then after a moment, the magic fails, and their meaning vanishes.

He scowls in frustration, but three more attempts repeat the previous failure, forcing him to turn to Calanthra.

"I cannot read the words." Calanthra says. "Based on some of the drawings, it might be... an apothecary manual."

"Apothecary??" Jason asks in bewilderment. "What's that?"

"A type of mystic who can create potions using magically enhanced ingredients." Calanthra explains. "See these faded drawings here? These appear to be plants and weeds, likely part of the local environment. Even if we could perfectly translate the words, it would be meaningless as the plants from that world are obviously long-dead. But still, we can try taking the book back to Realspace to translate it there."

"At the very least, it'll make for a sick souvenir." Jason says with a smile. "How many people can claim they've read books that came from a different time and universe?"

Calanthra smiles back. "Not many, I'd imagine. You can always give it as a gift to your wife or-"

Suddenly, Calanthra's smile vanishes. Her eyes shrink to pinpricks and she stands up straight, looking around fearfully.

"What?" Jason asks, standing up as well. "What is it??"

"Someone's here." Calanthra says, looking toward the doorway. "They've surrounded us!"

Without another word, she raises her hand.

Whoomph.

The power of spacetime wraps around her and Jason both, yanking them back to Realspace.

But in the instant it takes her spell to transport them, a pitch black figure comprised of evil energy suddenly pounces through the doorway and leaps at Jason! Its luminous red eyes boil with bloodlust as it opens a mouth full of teeth to bite at his neck!

"Shi-!"

Jason cries out in fear, but right before the creature can make contact with his body, he and Calanthra arrive back on the world of Pixiv, where they plummet ten feet to the ground below, slamming brutally on their backs!

THUNK!

"Ugh-uhHH!" Jason cries out instinctively as the air is driven from his chest.

He lies on his back, cringing and bending around as the fear and adrenaline quickly wear off, replaced instead with spine-tingling pain.

"Ahh, fuck! Shit! What the f-fuck was that?!" Jason coughs. He rolls onto his side and trembles for a moment before dragging himself to his knees. "Heal!"

Thankfully, after returning to Realspace, his magical powers work once more, allowing him to instantly heal his body and restore his physical form.

Calanthra wipes sweat from her forehead. As an illusory body, the fall didn't hurt her, but even she was not prepared for that sudden attack. "I'm sorry, Jason. I let my guard down because I was having fun answering all your questions. I should have placed protective sigils as we moved around."

"That isn't an answer." Jason says, as he finally rises to his feet. "What the hell were those monsters? They looked like Shades or Shadow-walkers!"

"I don't know what they were." She says with a sigh. "Like I told you before, the ancient civilizations are all dead, but Sentients from the current Eternity can sometimes find their way around the Ancient Domains. Those were monsters capable of ripping us apart, especially as you didn't have proper access to Wordsmithing, and I'm only a phantasmal clone. If I'd been more prepared, we could have escaped sooner and not risked our lives."

Jason's expression turns ugly. "If I send humans into the Ancient Domain, and they have to fight horrible creatures like that, there's a high likelihood everyone will die."

"Possibly. Yes." Calanthra affirms. "But such is the risk they'd need to take. We didn't recover any treasures this time, but at least we managed to retrieve that book."

She looks around for the book, but after a moment, her expression falls.

"Oh."

Jason follows her gaze. He finds a crumbled pile of ash next to where he landed.

"It must have disintegrated on impact." Calanthra mutters. "It was so old and brittle that falling from such a height shattered it into powder..."

Jason turns around, but when he does, his heart turns cold. Yredelemnul's Eye awakens amidst the four statues and directs a piercing glare toward him, shrouding his body with the power of a Ruler!

"Damn!" Calanthra growls. "Let there be light!"

She stomps her foot, activating the city's formation once more. Daylight materializes inside the courtyard, causing Yredelemnul's Eye to vanish, and for Jason's heart to stop pounding like the drums of war.

"For god's sake." Jason mutters, turning his attention back to the crumbled remains of the book. "Restore. Remake. Recreate..."

He tries several different Words of Power, but all he manages to do is make a brand new book with no writing inside whatsoever. The blank pages make him feel dismayed, as if all the time he spent in the Ancient Domain was wasted.

Calanthra senses his thoughts. "Your viewpoint has expanded. You learned that your Wordsmithing does not work properly within Ripspace. I would say today was quite fruitful, Jason. Don't worry too much about losing that Avian species' book."

"I'll try not to." Jason mumbles, disheartened. "I was just really looking forward to showing Phoebe something cool."

Jason stores the book inside a hidden space. He looks at the four statues contemplatively.

"Want to visit Ripspace again?" Calanthra asks. "We'll arrive somewhere else, so those shadow-monsters won't be around."

"Nooo thank you!" Jason laughs nervously. "I'll pass. I was just thinking that there must be something special about these statues for them to have the power to contain a fragment of a Ruler."

"Of course." Calanthra says. "Yredelemnul's Eye usually could only be suppressed by the power of another Ruler, but since we lacked such a thing, we had to sacrifice the souls of four Apex Cosmics, placing them inside these statues to suppress his power."

Before Jason can offer any words of sympathy, she raises her hand. "Save your breath. Those Cosmics saved countless fairy lives. They were more than willing to give up theirs if it meant securing a safe haven for their descendants."

"It's still tragic." Jason says. "Akasha's Game is brutal at heart. It allows no survivors."

"The game wouldn't be any fun for the Rulers if their minions simply lived enjoyable and easy lives." Calanthra says. "It's for this reason that they encourage such violence. The War is unending."

The two of them finally leave the garden and head back inside, where they enter the hallway of paintings Jason saw before.

"Not all is as bad as it seems." Calanthra explains. "These paintings harness limitless energy and potential. Did you know that if a Painting Mystic becomes proficient enough, they can create entire worlds filled with life via a work of art?"

"You mentioned something like that before." Jason says. "I guess that means you can infinitely expand your living space? You can create worlds to live on without encroaching on the territory of other celestial powerhouses?"

"Not anymore, we can't." Calanthra says sadly. "Our Cosmic Painters have all fallen. We only have a few of the Ancient Paintings left. They are our most prized possessions, as they contain energy which once belonged to our lost homeworlds. By going inside, we fairies can reminisce on the old times, the ancient days before the Great Migration."

Calanthra sighs and shakes her head. She touches one of the paintings lovingly, but doesn't offer to show Jason the inside of any of them.

Instead, she looks at him with renewed interest. "You know... there is a certain individual living on Tarus II. He possesses an affinity for Mystic Painting. I wonder if you might be willing to convey to him our interest in... exploring his talents?"

Jason stares at her for half a beat before a light bulb goes off above his head. "Wait, do you mean Sir Lorent? Phoebe's nephew?"

"Indeed, that very Hero." Calanthra answers. "His paintings lack a certain spark of life, but I think, given time, we might be able to improve his talents if he were to come and live with us. Could you extend my offer to him when you return?"

"Sure. That's not a problem at all." Jason says, before pausing to add, "I must warn you though, I don't control Sir Lorent. If he doesn't want to pay you a visit, I won't command him to do so."

"I would never force a fellow artisan's hand." Calanthra says. "But I do thank you in advance for conveying my wishes."

As they depart the Hall of Paintings, Jason turns a questioning gaze her way.

"Say... I've been wondering. When I met Blinker, she was super tiny and shrunken down. I expected most fairies to be like that, but you're all... human sized. Why is that?"

"We are standard-biped-sized." Calanthra counters. "But we do often shrink ourselves when in the presence of other Milky Way Sentients. As for why we do so, you should be able to guess."

Jason contemplates that thought for a moment.

"Hmm... perhaps because it makes you appear less intimidating?"

"That's one reason. We like to make ourselves appear small and weak. We become more agreeable in the eyes of our equals and less eye-catching in the eyes of our superiors. This is one reason the Volgrim don't pay much attention to our movements. Not only do they have a Plague to fight, but they don't care too much about a one-world civilization."

"By the way," Calanthra adds. "My people have another problem. Because of Mephisto's actions, luring a powerful Apex Cosmic Archangel here, the capital city of Pixiv fell a few weeks ago. It housed a certain artifact that kept us from being detected by the Plague. I now worry our safety has been compromised. You should warn any humans who wish to come here about that fact."

"Were you able to rebuild the stealth artifact?" Jason asks.

"Partially, using remnants from the original one." Calanthra says. "But the entire planet is not yet fully protected. It could take us months to return to our prior status quo. In the meantime... the Plague has likely identified us as a target."

"Why hasn't it struck yet then?"

"We don't know. That is the most worrying aspect."

Eventually, Jason and Calanthra arrive back in the main lobby. By now, the fairy princesses have finished eating and dispersed, leaving the hall feeling empty.

"One last thing before you go," Calanthra says, "my offer remains on the table. I'd love it if you took a few of my daughters back with you. They are beautiful, fertile, and trained well. You can fill them up as you please-"

"Ahem, AHEM!!" Jason coughs, interrupting her. "It's been GREAT talking to you, Miss Monarch! I think I need to be going home to my WIFE now. Take care, and we'll talk in the future!"

Without waiting for a goodbye, Jason utters a Word of Power and vanishes from the spot, leaving Calanthra to stare wistfully at his afterimage.

"Oh, such a cute boy." She mutters to herself. "He'd make for a fine son in law if I could just snag him. Tut-tut."

She chuckles playfully to herself, then merges her phantasmal body back into her physical one.

"Well anyway. Back to business as usual, I suppose."

Part 562: Parahuman Corps

Seven days after the Great Debate, Immigration Centers open up around Tarus II. Four of them in total, with one at each side of the city: North, east, west, and south. These centers provide a huge building for people to go and place their preferred future residence following the Great Debate, so everyone will be able to quickly and efficiently organize their future living accommodations.

Several high profile individuals staff the posts at each Immigration Center. For the western center, which allows people to migrate to Sharmur, a handful of demons and humans take the lead, including Emperor Kiari. For the northern center, which allows people to migrate to Maiura, Neil's personal assistant Debra takes the lead. As for the southern and eastern centers, these are for transferring to Pixiv and for either staying on Tarus II or migrating to folded spaces under the control of Jason Hiro.

While Jason does not immediately open up the possibility of humans living inside Chrona, he certainly does for the folded spaces within the Cube. Unbeknownst to almost every Sentient in the Milky Way, Jason begins aggressively expanding Camael's Cube's internal space. He creates multiple different spaces, with some of them the size of Tarus II and others that are bigger or smaller, depending on the needs. Most interestingly, he experiments by changing the time-flow between different spaces, with some accelerating time five-fold while others accelerate fifty-fold.

With the help of Blinker's fairy friends, such as Princess Melia, Jason also establishes gates that can travel around inside the Cube, allowing people to smoothly travel between higher and lower dilation zones. In this way, he can see what the effects of high and low TDR are on humans over time.

But on the surface of Tarus II, most of the attention goes to the Immigration Centers. Millions of humans and tens of millions of their allied demon and monster comrades have to make hard decisions on where they will go, following the conclusion of the Great Debate a week earlier.

On this day, Hope Hiro joins Debra at the Northern Center, helping her with the workload of a large number of people who want to migrate to Maiura. He sits inside an isolated tent-area with a short line of thirty or so people extending outside, while not far away, Debra's much larger tent has fifty times the number of people in line and she requires half a dozen helpers to keep it moving along at a reasonable pace.

"I don't get it," A married pair of Troopers say as they sit in Hope's tent and talk to him directly. "What's the difference between coming under you or Neil? Aren't you close friends? Isn't the Commander your superior officer?"

Hope nods at the woman who asked the question. "We're friends, yes. But Neil and I are going to be leading different branches of humanity's military. In the ancient times, when Earth was still around, we had divisions such as the Army, the Navy, the Coast Guard, and so on. Many nations organized their militaries differently, but that's beside the point."

He continues. "As I'm sure you two are aware, Neil is a... traditionalist. He wants boots on the ground. He wants you to pick up your guns and fight that good fight against the demons. But what I'm offering is different."

The male troopers glances to the side, where he sees a large white panel explaining all the benefits of joining Hope's Parahuman Corps. Several diagrams describe the benefits being offered along with the gains they will surely reap.

"Well, from what I've heard, this whole arrangement feels a bit... culty." The male trooper says, his voice sounding slightly nervous. "Look, I like you a lot, Commander Hope. You fought hard for us when we needed to expand. You ended up captured and tortured by that piece of shit Gressil, but you rebounded and you came back better than ever. I admire that about you. But this... this whole 'submitting to Jepthath' thing sounds really weird, sir."

Hope smiles weakly. "I get it. I do. But that's the thing. Neil is offering for you to do what you've always done. You wear an exosuit, you shoot demons and xenos dead. Nothing wrong with that. But I'm offering for you to join on the ground floor of humanity's future strongest military force."

Hope's voice becomes more excited as he continues to explain. "See, by submitting to Jepthath, you will become a part of something bigger. Better. Greater! Humans united in mind, body, and soul. You will become physically stronger by a factor of ten, maybe even a hundred. Don't you hate feeling like the demons are more powerful than you? Don't you hate having to make up the difference with these flimsy suits when any Emperor can still rip you apart?"

"The transformation isn't a problem." The female trooper says. "Obviously, becoming far stronger is a huge benefit. But Jason Hiro said we're going to become slaves if we join you! He said we would lose all control and Jepthath would turn us into his pawns!"

Hope's expression crinkles into a look of disgust. "Jason? You really think Jason gave you the full story? Look, I get it. Up there, on that stage, it probably looked like I was out of my element or like I didn't have any good explanations. It probably seems like he cornered me."

He waggles a finger chidingly. "But that's exactly what Jason wanted! He talks a big talk about uniting together and all that crap, but in the end it was Jason who decided to split humanity apart. He had his wife take the fall for that stupidly unpopular Unification Plan, and when the time came, he felt the changing winds and flip-flopped! But I've been consistent right from the beginning. Humans need to stick together!"

Still sensing the uncertainty from the troopers, Hope waves his hand dismissively. "Jepthath isn't going to control you and turn you into sex-puppets or some weird crap. Look, you two are religious, right? Haven't you ever heard of turning your body over to the Will of God in your moment of weakness?"

Both troopers nod slowly. "Well, yeah." The man says. "Who hasn't?"

"It's exactly like that." Hope explains. "Let's say a demon invasion occurs. You become scared. You try to move, but your legs freeze up. When a demon hits you, you die. But not with Jepthath around! He can take control and give you the strength to stand up and save yourself! He can put all that strength you've gained to good use! And now imagine you're fighting in a platoon of soldiers who've been surrounded by the enemy. Wouldn't you like it if you could get a shot of liquid courage injected into your mind by the strongest member of the team? With Jepthath's power, all of us become as strong as our strongest link!"

Seeing that his words have finally made an impact, Hope smiles.

"Besides. You're already in my tent, right? Do you really want to go out and walk to the back of Debra's line? You'll be waiting for hours. Seems like such a hassle, doesn't it?"

The woman glances outside and grimaces when she sees a line nearly a thousand people deep.

She and her husband lean together and whisper for a few moments, then they sigh and turn back to Hope.

"...We'll join you, Commander Hope."

"I sure appreciate the enthusiasm." Hope jokes. He slides a digital pad over to them. "Just put your names here, check this box, and..."

A few minutes later, they leave the tent, and Hope sighs. "Finally. Another one. Shit, I was hoping for ten times as many people, if not a hundred. Jason really smeared me good... next!"

He calls out to the line outside the tent, and the flap flips open to allow a single man to walk inside.

Hope's eyes light up. "Hey, Henry! Henry, my guy! You came to me first?!"

The young man with bags under his eyes, Henry Cliff, smiles at Hope. "Commander. This felt the most fitting place for me to come, sir. You know, since most people can't stand me, since I sort of... betrayed Commander Neil, and all that."

Hope shakes Henry's hand, and the two of them sit down. Hope smiles at the young man, but notices a look of melancholy on his face.

"You have any questions?" Hope asks. "Anything that you need convincing about?"

"Oh, it's nothing like that." Henry says, shrugging his shoulders and sighing softly. "I would have come to your side no matter what. You are one of the few people who's shown me any kindness, sir. I know I screwed up. I just want to make a difference."

Hope nods. "Do you know what you're getting yourself into? Do you understand what Jepthath is all about?"

"I get it, sir." Henry answers. "If I can fight the good fight, I'll do anything, sir. Honestly, I thought I'd never be able to join the military again. My only worry now is that you'll tell me 'no' and I'll be stuck making deliveries for the rest of eternity."

"Haha, no worries, Henry. No worries." Hope says, his smile widening. "Everyone deserves a second chance. It's a shame Jason can't understand that, but you know how he is. More importantly, after today I'll expect you to stop calling me 'sir'. We're better friends than that!"

"We're friends?" Henry asks, his body slightly jolting in surprise. "I... I didn't know you saw me that way."

"You know we're practically the same age, right?" Hope asks, reaching across the table to lightly slap Henry's shoulder. "C'mon, you've gotta lighten up a little bit. Anyone who joins my Parahuman Corps will become a Hero, like me, capable of punching the average Demon Duke into the dirt and easily bringing the fight to Emperors. You were the best goddamn sniper we had, so we'll put your enhanced sensitivity and reaction speeds to good use on the battlefield."

"That would be amazing, Hope." Henry says, his smile becoming gentler. "Thank you for giving me this opportunity. I won't let you down."

"I know you won't." Hope says. "I sense a great will to do good hiding inside you. Over time, I think we'll be able to awaken it, to humanity's benefit."

* * *

A few hours later, after Hope has signed up those who will come, and as night descends, he steps out of the tent, only to see an equally-long line still stretching out in front of Debra's tent.

"...damn." Hope mutters. "And I thought I had a pretty good yield. It's barely a drop in the bucket."

His expression falls. He glances at the immigration sheet in his hands, discovering he only managed to sign a few hundred people today.

"It's less than yesterday, too." Hope mutters. "I've barely signed two thousand, total. Jepthath's power works better with more and more people linked together, though. Fucking Jason. He really screwed me this time."

As Hope curses to himself, a trooper walks over to him and deactivates her helmet, revealing the face of an older woman Hope recognizes.

"Hm?" Hope grunts, looking at her. "Linda! Good to see you."

"Hey, Hope." Linda says. "Neil told me to ask you to pay him a visit once you were done. You mind?"

Hope blinks. "Sure, sure. Not a problem at all. I'll pop over right now."

After saying goodbye, Hope utters a Word of Power and teleports directly outside Neil's office, slightly startling a few people nearby, but they quickly recover when they see who arrived.

Hope knocks on the door, then enters after Neil tells him he can come in.

"Neil." Hope says, nodding respectfully. "What's up?"

"Are things going well for you?" Neil asks, looking up from a mountain of paperwork on his desk. He stands up and walks over to shake Hope's hand. "I hear you haven't gotten many immigration requests."

The corner of Hope's eye twitches at Neil's statement. "Y-yeah. Well, you know I'm looking for quality over quantity, haha..."

He shakes Neil's hand, then the two of them sit down with the desk between them.

"You don't have to lie to me." Neil says, shaking his head. "Jason pulled a dirty trick on you, Hope. I see real value in your Parahuman Corps. I want to... try and divert some people your way."

"Oh yeah? You do?" Hope asks, his eyes narrowing. "And what's this little favor gonna cost me?"

For a brief moment, silence follows.

Neil looks at Hope intently. He rests his elbows on the table, and his chin atop his folded hands.

"Hope. Are you aware of the... conversation I held with Diablo a little over a week ago?"

Hope's eye twitches again. "I am. You turned him down."

"So you were listening." Neil says quietly. "I thought you might be. No doubt Jason was listening, too. As I'm sure you are aware, I hold quite a strong hatred for the demons. Some detractors have even called my hatred 'irrational.'"

He lifts his head up and sits back in his chair.

"We are at a crossroads, Hope. I have built my current existence on hating demons. I cannot alter that identity without paying a price. But if you think Diablo's offer did not move me, you were not paying attention."

A half-breath of silence follows.

"Hope." Neil says, after a pause. "I want you to take Diablo's offer."

"What?!" Hope exclaims. "The fuck are you talking about??"

"Don't act surprised." Neil says calmly. "The demons are only able to turn Emperors into Cosmics. They have, at most, a hundred Emperors. That's a hundred worlds they can take back permanently from the Plague. But there are tens of billions of planets and star systems in our galaxy. The demons are nowhere close to stalling the war against the Plague, let alone winning it."

He continues. "Even if Diablo can uplift ten thousand new Emperors, which I strongly doubt he can, that's still nothing at all in the grand scheme of things. We humans need real practical experience in battle against these 'Kolvaxians.' We need to know what they are capable of. We need to know how they fight, what their strengths and weaknesses are, and so on. If we engage the Plague in battle alone, our soldiers will die miserable deaths."

"I see..." Hope says. "So, since Diablo has a 100% success rate against the Kolvaxians so far, you think we should help him conquer worlds in order to test our troops."

"That's right." Neil says. "But it won't do if you only bring your Parahuman Troops to battle. First off, the reception hasn't been particularly enthusiastic toward them, and secondly, we need to train our troops en-masse. I want tens or even hundreds of thousands of soldiers forging real practical experience on the battlefield. The problem is, I cannot give this order with my identity as it stands now. Only you can."

"Jason could too." Hope points out. "He'd love to have soldiers fight beside the demons."

"That's exactly what I want to avoid." Neil quickly retorts. "If Jason takes command, he'll make it seem like we humans are buddy-buddying up with our former enemies and becoming closer. If you do it, you can frame this as a simple military exercise. Nothing more, nothing less. An exchange of benefits."

"There is a problem." Hope says slowly. "You can say our men and women are getting 'combat experience' but the demons will still reap the ultimate rewards. They clear out the Plague, they place a Cosmic in command, and they ultimately gain a new world rich in resources."

Neil's nose twitches. "I know. In an ideal scenario, we would simply elevate one of our humans to the rank of Cosmic. Force Diablo to make it work. But I'm guessing that's infeasible."

Hope nods. "Completely. I have observed Diablo a few times from afar. The process of forging a new Cosmic requires a body to become overwhelmed with the energy of a star. Human bodies are more frail than Demon Lords, let alone Barons, Dukes, and Emperors. Any human who tried to become a Cosmic through Diablo's method would explode. At least it would be a quick death."

"A sturdy body is required?" Neil asks. "Then… what about a body empowered through Jepthath?"

Hope pauses for a moment to think about this. He massages his chin, then communicates with Jepthath through the Dominion Rod.

"…Jepthath says it might be possible, but only a human who was sufficiently powerful could do so. An ancient Hero like Arthur might have been able to pull it off. Jepthath himself probably couldn't have. Hercules, the ancient Titan, would have likely been able to."

He shakes his head. "This is all assuming Diablo's method isn't limited to demons. More likely, it is. Even if it isn't, he won't reveal that fact. Uplifting humans stands counter to his long term goals."

"I would rather not use a demon's ascension ability to empower our people." Neil says mildly. "So let's strike that option from the list."

Neil reaches over to grab a cup of coffee. He takes a few sips, then sets it back down.

"Here is what you're going to do, Hope. You are going to declare that you are building an anti-Kolvaxian task force. You'll say that killing the Plague takes precedent for now, and that you strong-armed me into this position. I will remain silent and allow you to take full credit for any future victories you make, all in order to train our soldiers well."

Hope nods. "I might get all the credit, but I'll take all the blame if something goes wrong."

"Every reward requires one to pay an equivalent price. Humanity needs this, Hope, and I cannot give it to them. I'm going to focus on building up Maiura in the coming weeks and months, but you need to be leading our troops into battle to give them the experience they so desperately need."

"Alright. I agree with that proposal." Hope says, as he stands up. "We'll talk later, Neil."

He turns to leave, but before he can reach the door, Neil speaks up.

"Hope. One last thing."

Hope pauses. He turns to look at Neil.

"...Yeah?"

"Do you know what humanity's biggest advantage is?" Neil asks. "Or perhaps instead, what demonkind's biggest disadvantage is?"

The Wordsmith thinks for a moment. "Our... willpower?"

"Perhaps. But I am referring to our capacity for growth." Neil says slowly. "The demons are stagnant, Hope. This method of ascending to Cosmic is pathetic, if you truly think about it. They anchor their lives to a single planet, give up their freedom, and in exchange only obtain a one-time power-up."

Neil lifts his chin to peer down the bridge of his nose at Hope. "In that manner, the Volgrim are quite similar. They have long plateaued when it comes to their technological progress. They make minor, incremental changes over long periods of time, but their creativity is much duller than ours. Their Psions are the same as they were millions of years ago."

"So you think humans are different?" Hope asks.

"I know we are." Neil says slowly. "We possess something neither the demons nor the Volgrim do. We have science, we have technology, and we have magic. If we can obtain just a bit of breathing room, we can rapidly develop our strengths. We can steal Volgrim technology, reverse engineer it, and make it our own. We can create new Heroes capable of harnessing incredible magical power. Then, we can combine the two to create warriors unstoppable among our rivals."

Neil lifts a finger and points it at Hope.

"But we need time, Hope. We need time. There is a race for galactic supremacy underway. Our rivals started millions of years before us, and their headstart is, to say the least, considerable. We can only catch up to them if we tap into the true power lurking within our genes."

Hope listens silently while Neil speaks, absorbing his mentor's words.

"You have to take this assignment seriously, Hope." Neil says, his words solemn. "All it will take is one mistake, one moment of inattentiveness, and our species will go extinct in an instant. We are not strong enough to resist the forces opposing us, not right now. But given time, I believe humanity will rise up and crush these interlopers."

Hope nods. "I understand, Neil."

"Good. I pray you do." Neil says, closing his eyes heavily. "Now get out there and make some magic happen. Don't just rely on Jepthath either. Use the full force of your Wordsmithing to empower our boys and girls. Make our soldiers a force to be reckoned with."

Hope and Neil exchange one last look. They nod at each other, then the Wordsmith exits the room, closing the door behind himself as he departs.

Neil remains quiet for a moment.

"I'll play your game for now, Diablo. But it won't be long before my species stops being mere pieces you can shove around the board."

"Underestimate humanity at your peril."

Part 563: Deal with a Devil

Unarin paces around his Inner Sanctum, his eyes closed, as he has done countless times for countless different reasons over his long, storied life.

Without any other Volgrim within several stories, let alone those foolish enough to barge in on the First Founder, he has always been able to enjoy a certain degree of peace during these moments of solitude. Unlike some Sentients, Unarin has never been one to feel lonely during isolation, as he possesses a formidable brain that allows him to think about innumerable subjects all at the same time.

Philosophy, literature, battle tactics, empire building, the individual performance of millions of high-level subordinates, and many many other things always keep a portion of his mental focus occupied, preventing him from experiencing boredom. Rare are the times when he deliberately decides to think about nothing at all and simply stare into the Void, allowing himself to focus and achieve tranquility.

But for the past 90,000 cycles, he has almost never done so, as the Plague has morphed over time into an omnipresent Threat he cannot afford to ignore. In recent millennia, that Threat has evolved to become greater and greater, and now it occupies more of his brainpower than ever before.

If Unarin were to give an exact estimate, he might even say the Plague was valued at a full 22% of his mental real-estate. An unfathomable amount, compared to all the other matters involved in running the Volgrim Empire.

As Unarin closes his eyes and thinks, time passes swiftly in the real world. His mind, though occupied, always keeps a sliver of consciousness focused on the happenings around him. While he might not be a Psion trained in Brain Enhancing, his mental acuity does not lose out in the slightest to Dosena, the progenitor of that very same branch of Psionics. Over many ages, his brain has enlarged and compressed itself over time, allowing him to out-think his enemies should he devote a fraction of his acuity to the Threats they pose.

It is because of this accumulation over three million years that Unarin immediately notices a fluctuation within the space of his Inner Sanctum. He pivots on his heel and turns to face a projection of magical energy as it coalesces into the figure of a bipedal, red-skinned demon within the span of just three short seconds.

Diablo, the Emperor of Annihilation, materializes a short distance from Unarin, his projected figure still adorned with the same robes he always wore before he merged with the body of the Archdemon.

"Founder Unarin." Diablo says, after flicking his eyes around the Inner Sanctum. "You reacted quickly. It seems you were expecting me."

Unarin blinks slowly. "You took your time. I thought you might show a few rotational cycles ago. Been busy?"

"Oh, you know how it is." Diablo says, waving his hand flippantly. "So many worlds to liberate. So little time for pleasantries and idle pursuits."

The Emperor of Annihilation pauses for a moment. He glances up toward a specific direction, as if peering through the ceiling.

"Second Founder. There's no need for you to lurk like a vulture. Why not come down and say hello to an old friend?"

Hardly have the words left his lips before a disturbance of Psionic Energy materializes beside Unarin. Founder Dosena levitates a half-inch off the ground, her feet barely missing the floor as she crosses her arms and remains at Unarin's side protectively.

[Diablo. Do not speak in such a familiar tone to me.] Dosena bites. [We are neither friends nor allies.]

"We're not?" Diablo asks innocently. "I am but a humble Emperor of the Demons, a loyal vassal to the great and mighty Volgrim Empire. Have I wronged you in some way?"

He spreads his hands out and smiles kindly, like a simple old man unassuming of his relationship to a greater power.

Dosena's eyes narrow. She does not appear amused.

"You've come for a reason." Unarin interjects. "I believe I have deduced roughly eighty-seven point six percent of that reason, but it would be best if you told me in your own words what you wish to discuss."

Instead of immediately answering, Diablo turns and wanders to the left, slowly walking past tables, shelves, and other displays of various pieces of artwork and other cultural artifacts. His gaze moves from one item to the next as he spares half a glance at some, and pauses to focus on others for a second or two.

"Such a grand display." Diablo says after a full minute of silence. "It hurts this humble Demon Emperor's feelings that you've never invited him to your Inner Sanctum, Unarin. To collect a mountain of beautiful artworks and yet never show them off... don't you find it to be a waste?"

"Those who are worthy may enter." Unarin says. "You are now worthy, so you are allowed to enter."

"I'm now worthy?" Diablo asks, turning his head to peer at Unarin out of the corner of his eye. "You allow me to look? Goodness, you're certainly a generous benefactor. I would hate to spoil your good mood and force you to evict me."

[Watch your words.] Dosena warns. [This frail projection of yours stands no chance against me. If I wish to banish you, you cannot resist.]

She sneers. [In fact, why don't you bring that lumbering body of yours to Volgarius? I will show you the meaning of true power.]

Diablo and Dosena exchange a glance. He stops and stands in place, looking at her with the same intensity she forces upon him.

"Someday, the two of us should... exchange a few blows." Diablo says slowly. "Trade insights. I have long desired to witness the full might of the Volgrim's greatest warrior."

[I will hold back a little so that you can save face.] Dosena says, her eyes curling into a smile. [It would not do for such a mighty Cosmic as yourself to lose too quickly.]

Unarin sighs. "Dosena, you may go. I will speak to our guest alone."

[Your will is mine.] Dosena says, nodding at Unarin before flickering away.

Diablo pauses for a moment, then he bares a toothy smile.

"Your mutt is well-trained." He praises sarcastically. "Will she give you her paw if you ask?"

"Even the best trained dog of a human has the blood of countless wolf ancestors flowing through its veins." Unarin fires back. "Tread carefully, lest you cause her to bite."

Diablo continues to maintain his fierce gaze for only a few seconds longer. Then he turns his whole body and reduces his aggressive stance.

"Let's get down to business." Diablo says.

"Certainly." Unarin says. "I was starting to wonder if you only came here to trade quips."

The two men walk over to a small table with four wooden chairs surrounding it. They take a seat beneath a chandelier of seemingly orcish origin, then both sigh softly under their breaths.

"Two weeks ago," Diablo says, "I began my campaign to retake the Milky Way."

His words do not seem to differentiate who he was liberating it from, and neither does Unarin ask for clarification.

"Before then, I only somewhat comprehended the scale of the conflict." Diablo continues. "Now, thanks to my newfound power, I can safely understand just how badly you are losing. Every day that passes, your forces get pushed back another dozen or so worlds at a time. You never make any gains, and only continue to lose ground."

Diablo chuckles. "I imagine the situation is truly agony for an intellectual like yourself. No matter what science or psionics you throw at the Kolvaxians, you cannot seem to push them back. Their expansion must have been so slow at the start, like a snail stuck to an adhesive agent that only made the tiniest forward momentum. But with each new world they took, the Plagueborn began to build up more and more momentum, while you only had one option to stop them."

Diablo's smile turns more sinister. He leans forward with a mocking gaze, directing it at Unarin as if it were a sword capable of impaling his adversary's ego.

"You blew up the planets taken by the Plague using Marie Becker's Neutron Bombs. And, I'm guessing, at one point you blew them all up. Every single world where the Plague had taken root. You destroyed them all. Yet somehow they returned. You brought hundreds of Paradise-class worlds to ruin for nothing. You were flabbergasted. You had no idea how the Plague was able to return again and again and again."

Unarin lifts up his chin. "And?"

Seeing the composed look on the First Founder's face, Diablo leans back in his chair. His evil smile returns to a simple smirk.

"You can pretend to be in control all you want, First Founder. The truth is, you're beginning to feel desperate. Thanks to the Wordsmith, you know about the Cosmic Realm enveloping the Milky Way. Like an egg protecting a chick before it hatches, this dimension was intended to give the Archangels another weapon in the future Unending War. But alas, those foolish pheasants perished, and now all that remains of them are a few souls sticking stubbornly to the physical world through mere remnant souls."

"But what does it matter?" Diablo continues. "Perhaps if you had known about the Cosmic Realm at the start, you could have killed the Plague before it reached a tipping point. But now? You have no chance whatsoever. Short of a miraculous scientific breakthrough, you're going to lose this war once even a single battle-line collapses. The Plague has taken over the entire periphery of the galaxy and is now working its way inward. Once it reaches the middle and core systems, there will be no escape."

Diablo pauses for a moment to mockingly puff out his lips and look around, as if searching for a savior in the darkness.

"Oh dear, so what is a humble Founder supposed to do when the mud-dwelling species he despises start suddenly rising up with ways to defeat his enemy? Try and force them to bend the knee? But with what military? You can't spare the soldiers to suppress me. Or perhaps you should simply allow the entire Milky Way to fall so long as it allows you to look good until the last moment. So many options, and none of them seem to give you the victory you desire."

Unarin slowly blinks. He doesn't respond to Diablo's mockery, instead opting to let the Demon Emperor get it out of his system.

"Is that all?" Unarin asks. "Or do you have a proposal for me? The day is young and we have plenty of discussions we could be pursuing."

"Sorry, Unarin. I'm so young compared to you. So childish." Diablo says with a smile. "Forgive me for my youthful folly. I'll just cut to the chase now. Save us the long-winded diatribes."

His smile disappears.

"I am running out of Emperors. There are only so many I can uplift. In order to make an Emperor, I need a Duke. But once I run out of those, I'll need Barons, but that will require me to uplift them two levels instead of one. And once the Barons have all been run out, I'll need to dig into the Lords... and so on."

Unarin nods, having already deduced as much himself.

"The problem is," Diablo says, "we need to fortify the cores of every world I take back from the Plague. You see, Unarin, the Plague infests world cores, and in doing so it opens gateways where it can transfer forces from the Cosmic Realm to our material plane with ease. I can take a world from the Plague, but if I don't attach a powerhouse to that world, it will remain available for the Plague to retake at a later date. That means even if I were to request Founder Dosena herself to stand guard over a world, unless she anchored herself to the world's core, it would still be weak to another Plague invasion in the future."

Unarin's eyes flicker with insight. "So that's the trick you've been using. I ignorantly assumed you only attached Emperors to Celestial bodies for the sake of obtaining Cosmic powerhouses, but all this time you were also preventing the Plague from ever returning to those systems."

"Something like that." Diablo says. "Actually, the Plague can still return. The method the Plague has historically used to corrupt worlds is by suddenly and inexplicably appearing on the planet's surface. This is because the Kolvaxians would materialize inside the world's core, infest it, then start making their way to the surface. However, they do not need to use this method to attack planets in the future. Now that you have fed them a willing and ready supply of High Psions, they can simply traverse the Void. If they sneak up on and subdue a Planar Warden, perhaps by infecting them with the Plague, then they can infest the world once again. Therefore, even though I have made the worlds impossible for the Plague to traditionally infest, those worlds are far from invulnerable."

Unarin closes his eyes for a moment to think.

"In that case, even though it seems you have made great gains versus the Plague, it is not inevitable at all that you will continue to win one easy victory after another. The further you spread your base of power, and the more you stretch your forces out, the more vulnerable your Wardens are to assassination attempts by sneaky Cosmic Plagueborn."

"That is right." Diablo says. "And now we reach the part where you come in."

Unarin opens his eyes. Diablo leans forward in his chair.

"There are two issues I'm currently facing." Diablo explains. "First. Despite conquering tens of worlds so far within just two short weeks, my speed of conquest is painfully slow compared to the Plague's expansion. At best, I am only keeping up with the speed of worlds lost every day, and the Plague has a ninety-millennia headstart on me."

"Secondly, I'm about to run out of Emperors. Uplifting more will take time. Even if I uplift all the demons above the rank of Baron, that's less than 50,000 elites across all the remaining Hells. 50,000 star systems compared to the totality of the galaxy? It's nothing at all."

Diablo slowly raises a finger and points it at Unarin.

"This deal I'm about to offer is better than you deserve. If I had come onto the scene 50,000 years ago, it wouldn't even be on the table. Simply put, you don't deserve it."

"Well. I thank you for your generosity in advance." Unarin says mildly. "Continue."

"Here's the deal." Diablo explains. "I want your help in two ways. First: You will send troops with advanced weaponry, psionic power, and anything else you can spare to every world as I begin to conquer them. This will greatly increase my speed of assimilation, allowing me to conquer each world's core with ease. The faster I take worlds, the faster we can begin working to push the Plague back."

"I don't have troops to spare." Unarin says. "You said it yourself. My poor, fragile Empire is barely holding on. We're unraveling at the seams."

Unarin dons an expression of mock weakness, shaking his head and throwing up his hands helplessly.

Diablo doesn't buy it.

"I'm not asking for your Executors. I don't even need any Psions at or above the 6th level. In fact, it's better if you give me Psions of the 3rd, 4th, and 5th level. 5th Level Psions are roughly equivalent to Demon Emperors, and that just so happens to work out perfectly for the second condition."

Unarin's eyes flicker once again as he realizes what Diablo is implying.

"You mean to say...?"

"That's right." Diablo says with a smile. "Since there aren't enough Emperors to go around, I'm going to let you have some of the worlds we'll be retaking. By choosing a 5th Level Psion, of which I know you possess many, I can forcibly attach their Psionic Souls to the cores of these worlds and turn them into Planar Wardens. Oh, certainly, they will not become the mighty High Psions of ancient yore, those who could flit around and smash the galaxy into pieces. But look at it this way. Would they have made a difference otherwise before the Plague crushed your Empire into dust? I think you know the answer."

The way Unarin looks at Diablo changes. For the first time in a long time, he gazes at an inferior mud-dweller with an expression of appreciation.

"Impressive, Diablo. Earth had one philosophy I read about in the past known as the Carrot and the Stick. To be an effective leader, one should alternate between rewards and punishment in order to obtain maximum material gain. You have clearly mastered this branch of philosophy."

He pauses.

"By taking over a few key worlds of mine right before they were about to be conquered, you displayed your power to the masses. You made yourself look benevolent to my citizens, allowing word to get out regarding your acts of saving innocents. You made me look weak, incapable of protecting them, and gave your species a reputation as being able to accomplish the impossible. Now that you have succeeded, that has put me in a predicament. Sooner or later, word will spread across my entire Empire, and I will begin to look the fool. Our galactic situation would still not improve over time, and thus my people's confidence in me would slowly erode."

"But now that you've waited an appropriate length of time and demonstrated your prowess to my lieutenants and generals, you show up here offering the solution to my dilemma. I can stand against you obstinately, praying for a chance to overcome the Plague through our own means, or I can take your deal, speed up the conquest of the Plague, and ultimately win the war. I'll just have to admit that you, and thus the demons, are superior to the Volgrim on this matter."

"Unarin, Unarin." Diablo says, waving his hand in the sweetest and most loving manner he can muster. "It's nothing like that. In these trying times, your loyal vassals have come up with a single method to defeat one singular enemy. And since I have informed you of the way to keep the Plague at bay, by preventing world cores from being assimilated, it's perfectly plausible your mighty Empire can find a way to succeed like I have. Despite my one singular success, in all other matters, the demons are still weak and inferior compared to the Volgrim. Your technological superiority alone- need I say more?"

Unarin's expression becomes ugly. "5th Level Psions are the backbone of my military. Given time, a decent portion of them will reach the 7th Level, and eventually the 8th."

"A decent portion, you say?" Diablo asks, his saccharine-sweet expression disappearing. "There's no reason to exaggerate. You barely have a dozen Executors fighting beneath your name. As for the 7th Level Psions, perhaps a few hundred? The number of Lower Psions that manage to Ascend to the ranks of Cosmic is certainly infinitely higher than the demons, but the number that attain the highest levels are still tragically low. I'm offering you… an alternative way to bolster your forces."

Diablo crosses his arms. "If you agree to ally with me, I can empower the 5th Level Psions who fight alongside me up to the rank of 7th Level. You and I both should agree that popping out Executors is not ideal, because while it would empower your forces tremendously, it could also cause a certain amount of strife to appear within your ranks. Similarly, there should only be one 9th Level Psion in the Volgrim Empire."

Unarin's eyes narrow. "Turning Demon Emperors into Bottom Level Cosmics is the third and weakest option at your disposal. Do you truly expect me to accept such a mediocre deal?"

"Oh, it's not such a bad offer at all." Diablo retorts. "Becoming a Free Warden will cap the level of strength these young Psions will attain, certainly. They will never step beyond the 5th Level in their base state, or the 7th Level when residing upon their chosen planet. But in exchange, they can still flit about the cosmos as needed, and provide ample power to the worlds they protect when necessary."

"How generous of you." Unarin counters. "Protecting me from my own soldiers. Here's a better idea. I'll help you if you can… sweeten the deal. I would very much like to have a few extra Executors in the back wing. Say, a few hundred or so. Hardly any to speak of at all. What say you regarding this proposal?"

Diablo rubs his jaw and looks off to the side. "No, no, I can already imagine the strife that would cause among your military. Imagine poor Executor Nufaris finding out that he has dozens or even hundreds of competitors that leaped up to the same rank as him with relative ease. No doubt, he would start to call your leadership into question."

"Whether my Executors complain means nothing in the grand scheme-" Unarin starts to say, only to pause mid-sentence as Dosena communicates with him privately.

Several seconds of silence follow as his eyes turn to the side. Swiftly, he and the Second Founder have a long and detailed discourse, unheard by Diablo. Even so, the Emperor of Annihilation smiles smugly when he sees Unarin returning his gaze to him.

"Changed your mind?" Diablo asks.

"In light of other evidence, I have indeed." Unarin says mildly. "Alright. Military support during your conquests in exchange for control of certain liberated worlds. But. In exchange for elevating no Psions beyond the 7th Level, we will get to... discuss the allocation of worlds that go to the Volgrim and Demons. After all, if you snatch up all the high-resource worlds and leave us the scraps, there won't be much value for us in this arrangement, will there?"

Diablo's smile flickers. His eyelid twitches for some reason unknown, but he still maintains eye contact with the First Founder.

"Very well. As for how those worlds should be allocated... we have plenty of time to discuss the matter slowly. Let's focus on liberating a few to start so we can see how effective this... partnership... will be."

Unarin smiles amiably. "I like the 'new you', Diablo. You've become more ruthless and pragmatic of late. What caused this change, I wonder?"

Diablo chuckles.

"I'm the same as I've always been, Unarin."

"Somehow," Unarin counters, "I doubt that very much."

Part 564: Hardcore Henry

A few days pass. Unbeknownst to humanity, Unarin decisively dispatches some of his 5th and 6th Level Psions to assist Diablo's goals of planetary conquest. At the same time, he also adds in more than a hundred thousand High Technopath Warriors, frontline combatants outfitted with lethal weaponry embedded into every inch of their bodies. These warriors, unlike mindless automatons, fight with biological intuition and the power of technological supremacy. When the Volgrim combine their forces with that of the demons, they multiply Diablo's planetary capture speed severalfold, allowing him to take new worlds in just a few hours, sometimes even only a single hour.

But humanity doesn't know about this, aside from the Wordsmiths using their special spying methods. Rather, they remain fully focused on the planetary migration efforts.

All across Tarus II, more and more humans, demons, and monsters make key decisions about whether they will immigrate or whether they will remain on Tarus II.

Kiari and Saul pause outside the Northern Immigration Center.

"Nah. None of these." Saul says to his fiance. "I like our cabin just fine. It's in a good spot. It's secluded. And most of the demons and monsters are staying on Tarus II anyway, right?"

Kiari rubs her belly. Already, she's begun to develop the tiniest baby bump.

"Yeah. I don't wanna go anywhere, either. Oh, hey, Beelzebub!"

Kiari waves cheerfully to a certain Demon Emperor nearby. Beelzebub casually walks over and waves back.

"You two moving?" Beelzebub asks, sticking his hands in the pockets of his slacks.

"We decided against that." Saul answers. "How about you?"

"I'm staying. Obviously." Beelzebub says with a shrug. "Where else am I gonna go? Pixiv, with the fairies? They only want humans. Maiura? That's not an option. One of those 'secret' places Jason's been yammering about? Humans and monsters only."

"You could live on Hell Harbor. Or Sharmur!" Kiari chirps cutely with her eyes turning upward into crescent moons. "I hear Diablo's had a few Dukes reconstructing Hell Harbor after the Archangel attack."

Beelzebub waves his hand in a flippant manner. "Pass. I'm good with staying here. Besides, whenever I leave Tarus II, I always feel a bit... weaker. It's as if I'm more powerful when I'm here, but I can't deduce why for the life of me."

He taps his chin thoughtfully. "Could just be my imagination. Who knows."

"Well, I'm glad you're sticking around!" Kiari says. "You've had it rough, and you've done bad things, but I feel you're a good guy at heart."

"It's nice someone believes in me." Beelzebub says with a smile. "If anyone comes to cause trouble here, I'll kick 'em out of the star system myself."

"That's the spirit!" Saul laughs.

* * *

Meanwhile, at the Western Immigration Center, other people also congregate together, pondering where they belong.

"Daddy!" Lily Brown exclaims, stomping her feet. "I don't WANNA!"

"We've stayed here long enough." Benjamin Brown says, gently squeezing his daughter's arm. "Tarus II is in a precarious situation. I don't feel this place is safe. We have to return to Hell Harbor now that the Slithering Spire is finished with its reconstruction efforts."

"You can go if you want." Lily says, crossing her arms and turning away from her father defiantly. "I heard Beli is staying here. That means I am too! Besides, I've made lots of friends with the humans. I don't want to go back to Hell Harbor."

"What you want is not up for debate here, young lady." Benjamin Brown says, his face darkening. "I am your father. You will do as I say."

"No, I won't!" Lily shoots back. "I'm thousands of years old, daddy! I'm an adult. I can make my own decisions! Or are you really going to treat me like a little girl for the rest of eternity?!"

"That's not what I mean, and you know it!" Benjamin barks back. "Dammit, this is for your own good. Stop chasing that succubus and use your head for once! The First Wordsmith is too lackadaisical to lead this planet to any long-lasting good times. You can't trust his judgment."

"Who said anything about the stupid Wordsmith??" Lily asks, bewildered. "I don't care about him. I've never even met him! I only care about Beli and my friends. No matter what you say, I'm staying here. And that's FINAL."

"You... you!" Benjamin roars. "You're just like your mother!"

"What? Strong and independent?" Lily scoffs. "Don't be mad because she left you, daddy. I'm making my own choices. If you try to force me back to Hell Harbor, I'll just sneak away. And if you lock me in a dungeon, you'll be proving what a piece of work you are!"

"I... I don't even know what to say." Benjamin Brown says, dismayed. "Fine. Alright? You want to pull the mother card, be like that. You can stay here. I need to return to Hell Harbor, though. I have too many things that require my attention."

He pauses. He looks around for a moment, frowning.

"You know, Lily. If... if you're not near me, I can't protect you."

"Protect me? Why would I need your protection?" Lily scoffs. "I'm a nobody. There ain't no demons gunning for me."

"That isn't entirely true..." Benjamin mutters, as his thoughts turn to a certain prison warden. "Look, I had a friend make you this necklace. It has a special savior beacon built into it. If you ever need me, activate it. Daddy will come running, no matter where you are in the galaxy. It has trans-dimensional properties so even if you're 90,000 lightyears away, I should be able to track you down."

Lily crinkles her nose. "Be honest. This is just your way of keeping tabs on me, isn't it?"

Benjamin chuckles. "Not by any means. I want to make sure you're safe, sweetheart. Your brothers and sisters are all grown up, off doing their own thing. You're... the only one I have left. The others haven't spoken to me in ages."

Lily's heart softens as she notices the pained look on Benjamin's face.

"Daddy... daddy, don't cry, okay? It's not- I'll keep the necklace, okay? And I'll call you regularly, maybe even pay a visit to Hell Harbor once in a while. I'm just gonna be... living here for the moment. Staying independent!"

Benjamin sighs. "Alright, baby girl. You keep yourself safe then. Don't ever take that necklace off, alright?"

"I won't, daddy. Bye now!"

* * *

"Pixiv, is it?" A young man at the Southern Immigration Center asks. "Of course it would be for you, sir. I'm just surprised she's going too."

Lieutenant Samuel Baker glances at the woman standing beside him, Private Ashley Mccarthy. As one of humanity's foremost powerhouses, capable of transforming into an orc at will even without her Power Glove, she has attracted a lot of attention of late, attention she doesn't particularly enjoy.

"I'm hoping the fairies can help me." Ashley says, crossing her arms. "I don't get why I have to transform into a stupid ugly orc. I wanna be able to turn into a cute and dainty fairy, like Lieutenant Baker."

"Hey." Samuel growls at her. "I do NOT look cute and dainty. I look... masculine as hell. Man, if I could trade my crappy fairy transformation with you, I'd be HAPPY to do it."

"Well, even the Wordsmiths can't fix this problem, so I doubt the fairies can." Ashley grouches. "But I've gotta at least try! Plus, I heard there's going to be a special task force assembled when we reach the fairies. Seems they have some sort of mission that will be really beneficial for us. At least that's the word on the grapevine."

"That's what I've heard too." Samuel says. "In any case, who else is coming to Pixiv?"

"Some of the other soldiers." Ashley answers. "Especially ones who've prematurely gained transformations through the Power Glove. I hear the majority of them have signed up for a transfer to Pixiv. The Felorians, too!"

"Even them?" Samuel asks, his eyes shining with surprise. "It seems Pixiv is the destination of choice for magically-enhanced humans. Interesting."

"I hear Mister Yamir is planning to expand his restaurant enterprise to multiple worlds in one go." The young man running the sign-up line says. "He's going to build a restaurant on Sharmur, Hell Harbor, Pixiv, anywhere that will take him. It seems his food is so popular nobody wants to turn him down!"

"That minotaur has some real business acumen." Ashley says, rubbing her chin. "I heard that the goblins have been acting similarly too. They're going to all the different worlds! Seems they don't have any specific attachments to Tarus II."

"So if all these bigshots are going to other worlds, who's staying here?" Samuel asks.

"Lots of allied demons, mostly." Ashley answers. "Plenty of monsters. Not too many humans. There is Miss Hiro, but that much is expected. I heard Hans Wagner is packing up to go to Maiura, actually. His base on Tarus's moon, Kelkin, has been where he does most of his inventing stuff, but it's a pretty inconvenient location. He wants to put his boots on normal planet ground for once."

"General Chadwick is going with Commander Neil to Maiura." The young male recruiter adds. "Oh! And have you heard of the Cybernites? Seems they've been busy helping work on some big tech project alongside Neil's inventors, including Hans Wagner."

"Dang." Samuel mutters. "We're really all splitting up, huh? Everyone's going to different places."

"It's better this way." Ashley says. "Trying to get all these different people to work together was like herding cats. Personally I'm looking forward to seeing how everything shakes out in the end."

"You know what?" Samuel asks. "Me too, Ashley. Me too."

* * *

Near the Eastern side of the Fortress of Retribution's upper plateau.

At the edge of the city, a notable structure stands tall, a magical privacy field of immense power surrounding it to isolate all the goings-on inside. This building happens to be none other than the Archangel's church, a place where Uriel lives following her bodily transformation back into her original self. Despite still technically possessing the body of a Demon Duke, she now seems identical to her physical form from more than 100,000 years prior to her death during the War in Heaven.

Inside the church, a male human and a pair of female angels stand opposite the four Archangels. Siddhartha Gautama, Cassiel, and Soleil all look at Raphael, Michael, Gabriel, and Uriel with differing expressions.

"I don't understand." Cassiel says softly. "Why would you want to leave, Raphael?"

The Archangel of Wisdom shakes his head. He looks at the floor with a complicated expression.

"Verily, this decision was not one I wished to make." Raphael says, his words slow and deliberate. "My alliance with the First Wordsmith hath grown tenuous over many a recent day, but not in any recent weeks hath he deigned to speak to me. Meanwhile, my relationship with the Second Wordsmith art still somewhat warm."

"There is no point in our remaining on Tarus II." Michael explains. "We do not wish to reside upon a world primarily populated by monsters and bloodskins. The majority of humanity hath opted to travel to Maiura, and so too shall we go with them."

Gabriel nods. "Humans art our allies. Why stay? Better to migrate where the humans have gone."

Soleil frowns. "That might be true, I suppose. But us having to depart all of a sudden still feels quite abrupt."

"Do not misunderstand." Raphael quickly says. "Cassiel, thou art still the Daughter of Heaven. Thou needeth not walk in our footsteps. T'would be best if Soleil and thee remaineth here while my siblings and I go to Maiura. In this way, we can spread the word of the Creator in two locations at once."

"Oh. I see..." Cassiel says, lowering her eyes. A look of sadness fills her gaze, as well as more than a hint of loneliness. "I... I don't know if I'm strong enough to stay here all by myself."

"Now now," Buddha interjects, "you will not be alone, little one. I'll stay with you, as will Soleil. Additionally, you seem to have made a new acquaintance in that Belial, yes? Perhaps this would be a good time to spread your wings and meet new people."

"Buddha's right!" Soleil says excitedly. "Cass, this is a great chance for you to make lots of new friends!!"

"New friends..." Cassiel says hesitantly. "Y-yes. I suppose... that would be... nice."

Uriel and her brothers exchange a knowing glance. She turns and walks over to Cassiel, squeezing her shoulder lovingly.

"We shalt leave this church to thee, little one. Do with it whatever thou dost desire. It shalt be thy home, and perhaps a meeting place for those who wish to bear witness to thy future rise."

Michael also takes a step forward. "Daughter of Heaven. I consider thyself a sister in spirit, if not in blood. Therefore, what I am about to say, I hope thou doth understand I speak it with only the best of intentions."

He pauses.

"Thou requireth power. Spiritual power. Faith energy. We Archangels cans't truly live well on the energy supplied by that hateful bloodskin, Barbatos, but thy vessel is not the same as ours. As a Lazarite, thou requireth Faith Energy to keep thy spirit burning. I hope thou shalt pursue it in the hopes of elevating thyself to a level where none can oppress thee."

"Thou art the last living hope of our species." Gabriel adds. "We Archangels live on as mere sparks of light, but thou art a burning star with unlimited potential. Please live well in our absence."

Cassiel looks at each of the Archangels in kind. She nods at each one of them, etching their loving words on her heart.

"Very well. Faith Energy. I'll do what I can, brothers, sister. Perhaps, if I have a chance, I'll even come to visit you all on Maiura sometime."

"That would indeed be delightful." Raphael says with a jovial chuckle. "Fare thee well then, little one. We shalt take our leave."

With a nod from each of the four Archangels, they merge back into Uriel's body, and she strides out the church doors, leaving Buddha, Cassiel, and Soleil behind.

As Buddha watches Uriel depart, he narrows his eyes menacingly, but neither of the women notices this subtle action.

Raphael...

"Everyone. Thank you for coming today." Hope Hiro says, as he stands before a throng of people all gathered together inside a massive church-like building. This facility, erected on the planet of Maiura a good distance away from the main cities and towns, stands alone, isolated within the wilderness. Dense trees and foliage would even be visible through the windows if they weren't made of stained glass, depicting images of numerous ancient Heroes of myth.

The people standing before Hope nod in unison. They say nothing, instead waiting for Hope to continue his speech.

Among these people is Henry Cliff. He looks at Hope with reverence and respect that even borders on unbridled idol worship. In his eyes, Hope Hiro is his savior, his one path back to greatness, a chance he cannot afford to miss.

Without Hope, he is nobody. A civilian who will only ever live in the shadow of better men.

"As of today," Hope continues, "the tallies are in. This is it. Those of you who have signed on to be a part of my Parahuman Corps are the only ones who leaped to such a decision. I am truly grateful for your faith in me."

Hope pauses. His gaze sweeps across not only Henry, but all the people present.

"Before I continue, is it just my imagination or are a good number of you not actually service-members? I seem to be seeing quite a few civilians present."

One man in the front row nods nervously. "Y-yes, Commander Hiro, sir. I'm Mikael. I didn't join the military originally, but when I heard about your Parahuman Corps, it really struck a cord with me. If I can become strong enough to protect myself from demons, that would be amazing!"

Hope frowns. "Your motives aren't exactly pure, Mikael. The power I'm about to bestow upon all of you will indeed strengthen your bodies, but without a foundation of military training, do you truly think you'll be able to accomplish much? Not a chance. Expect to endure some grueling military drills tailored to your enhanced physique before I set you loose in the world of ordinary humans."

He returns his eyes to the others. "That goes for all of you. Yes, you will be able to obtain great strength in the easiest manner possible. But allow me to disabuse you all of the notion that this pathway to easy power will make you as strong as a Demon Emperor, or a Duke, or even a Baron. If you have no combat techniques, then you're just a big strong infant waiting to be executed by any remotely competent opponent! A complete pushover!"

The Wordsmith doesn't mince his words. "Submitting to Jepthath's power is a serious rite of passage. If your hearts are impure, he will reject you! You will have to head out and join the common folks on Maiura, hanging your head in shame and knowing you weren't good enough to join the elites!"

He looks around one last time. "With all that said, are any of you here having second thoughts?!"

"Sir, no sir!" The crowd roars, their collective voices momentarily making Hope's ears ring. He mutters a quick Word of Power under his breath to fix that issue, then he motions with his hand and immediately summons the Dominion Rod into his grasp.

"Here is how this is going to work." Hope says. "I shall manifest the image of Jepthath into reality. Look up to him. Pray to him. Accept him in your heart. When you hear his words in your mind, you will have the option to accept or deny his offer. Those who accept will become Jepthath's Chosen, the Illuminators of the future, Parahumans who tower above their fellow man! But as for those who are unworthy? You will remain with the common rabble."

Seeing decisive looks on everyone's faces, Hope smiles. "Alright then. Let us begin."

He holds up the Shepherd's Staff, and the gem in the center of its upper crook immediately begins to glow a bright white. At that moment, a phantasmal figure materializes in the air, his massive image towering thirty feet high. The top of his head seemingly scrapes the ceiling of the makeshift church, making everyone present gasp in amazement.

"My children." Jepthath says, holding out his hands in a welcoming gesture. He smiles like a kind old grandfather at them. "Hear me now. I am the First Hero. I am the Illuminator. I light the path for those to follow. To those who are attuned to my strength, greater benefits will be available. Perhaps, among you, there may even be a special soul possessing the highest affinity to my power. If so, he may be capable of mimicking my full power without reservation! But, doubtless, there will be those among you lacking in affinity entirely."

He sighs. "That is unfortunate, but it is how things are. Now, pray to me. Reach out with your heart, mind, and soul. Feel the touch of my Light..."

A warm aura spreads out of Jepthath's towering form. It washes across the massed crowd, making many of them feel snug and cozy. They close their eyes and pray earnestly to the Illuminator, sometimes opening their eyes to look up at him as they feel Jepthath's power surge into their bodies.

"I feel it!" One woman cries out. "The strength! The power! Uwaaaa!!"

Her muscles bulge dramatically. Her shirt rips in several places, and her height increases by half a foot. She roars mightily to the heavens as a large fraction of Jepthath's power enters her body and Mind Realm.

"I feel it too!" Another man cries. "Power! Overwhelming! Aaaaahh!!"

He, and many others like him, roar in ecstasy as Jepthath's power begins rapidly bolstering one person after another.

Strangely, Henry Cliff doesn't feel anything at first. But when the power starts to trickle into his bloodstream, a voice speaks in his head.

[There you are, boy. Lord Henry of the Illuminators. I have been expecting you for a while, young one.]

Henry blinks. The world around him slows to a stop as he looks up at Jepthath in shock.

[You... know my name?] Henry asks.

[Indeed I do.] Jepthath says with a smile. [Not long ago, Hope performed a ritual that allowed me to make initial contact with all of humanity. However, my power could not flow through them until they agreed to this ritual. It was then that I felt your strength for the first time. You are more formidable than you believe, my child.]

Henry looks down in shame. [You must be thinking of someone else, Great Illuminator. I am nothing at all. A mere nobody. A sinner.]

[You call yourself a sinner? Silly child. I am friends with the Greatest Sinner.] Jepthath chides gently. [King Arthur committed a crime far worse than you could imagine, yet he is still remembered as a legend. In the future, so too shall you join him among humanity's greats.]

Henry looks up again. [I... will?]

[Your compatibility with my power... is perfect.] Jepthath answers, visibly satisfied. [Look! Your body has not swelled up at all! Unlike the others who balloon in strength because their souls are impure, your willpower is formidable enough to reject the corruption of my nascent soul. It is for this reason that I have decided to name you... My Champion.]

Boom!

A massive detonation of energy explodes inside Henry's body. He staggers in surprise, as instead of great pain, waves of ecstasy flood his vessel. He can't help but release a moan of pleasure as his mind seemingly unlocks its full potential, his muscles pulsate with a strength greater than he ever could have imagined, and his soul condenses into its purest form.

[Power!] Henry exclaims. [I feel it! I feel... so much power!]

"Uaaaaahh!!" Henry roars as he tilts his head up to the ceiling. "I am a mortal no more! I am your champion, Jepthath!"

Hope's eyes sparkle as he looks at the previously ordinary-seeming young man. He looks up at Jepthath, who smiles back at him, answering his unspoken question with a single gaze.

But suddenly, in the midst of this joyous occasion, Jepthath's image changes color from a loving and calm blue to a dangerous shade of red. His eyes narrow as he snaps his gaze around the room.

"WHERE?!" Jepthath roars, his piercing eyes jumping from one human to another. "YOU! It's YOU!!" Jepthath snarls, stabbing a finger toward a random woman in the crowd.

That woman freezes in place, like a deer in the headlights. Hope looks at her. All the other humans do too, everyone turning in unison as they feel a deep, nauseating rejection from her entirety.

"Human... she's not HUMAN!" Henry growls, balling his hands into fists. "She's not one of us! She's a CHANGELING!!"

Panicked, the woman starts to push through the crowd, but in an instant, tens of hands latch onto her from every angle, grabbing her arms, shirt, hair, and neck. They pin her in place while Henry walks through the crowd with eyes full of bloodlust. He grins wickedly and nods his head as he stomps toward the woman.

"Trying to sell us out, you filthy infiltrator?! TOO BAD! This is where your story ends!!"

In an instant, he lunges forward and punches his fist at the woman's stomach.

SPLURT!!

He rams his arm through her gut and blasts her entrails backward, spraying off-colored blood on the Parahumans behind her. The woman's mouth opens reflexively, and she vomits blood, unable to stop herself.

"N-no! Guhuk! Mis-misunderstanding! We- COUGH!!"

"Spare us your pitiful begging." Henry sneers, before sweeping his arm upward, tearing through her body with ease.

RIIIIIP!

A sickening series of snapping bones sounds off in the room like a series of firecrackers. A second later, the woman sags lifelessly in the grasp of those present. They release her, and allow her to collapse into a puddle of blood at her feet.

Just when it seems the madness is over, Henry slowly turns around to look at another person in the crowd behind him.

"Heh heh heh. You stupid bastard. Did you think I missed you, too?"

"Wait!" The man screams. "This isn't what you think! We're just supposed to observe-"

He doesn't get to finish his sentence. Henry snaps toward him, rears his fist back, and sends it flying at the Changeling's head. So unfathomable is his strength that he blasts apart the man's head like a watermelon, showering the people behind him with bits of blood, bone, and brain matter.

Hope watches, silently, as Henry performs these acts. He nods with approval, even directing a small smile Henry's way.

"Hardcore, Henry."

Before the ceremony fully comes to an end, Henry kills another three Changelings, ensuring that not a single one manages to make it out alive and report news of what happened to the Founders.

It will be some time before they come to realize the significance of the events that transpired on this day...

Part 565: Henry's Humility

In the immediate aftermath of his empowerment, Henry basks in the glow of adoration from his fellow Parahumans. A deep sense of satisfaction wells up in his chest after slaughtering the five Changelings who dared to infiltrate their solemn ceremony, and he looks at the Second Wordsmith with gratitude and profound respect. Without Hope Hiro, he would still be a mere civilian, doomed to live a life of mediocrity. All of that has changed now.

As for Hope, he pats Henry's blood-covered shoulder and smiles. "Well done, Henry. Anyone here could have killed those Changelings, but you were the first to react. Maybe you even managed to prevent them from leaking what happened here, too. I sure hope you did."

Henry grins. "Just doing my duty for the good of humanity, Commander."

Several soldiers nearby whoop and cheer as they slap Henry's back and congratulate him. But while they give the young man the credit he deserves, Hope has a few other people gather the bodies of the Changelings and lie them down, side to side. Despite the gruesome sights of their mangled corpses, Hope doesn't even blink. He's long become desensitized to such violent imagery.

"Scan. Examine." Hope says, sending Words of Power out to probe the corpses. "Hmm."

Henry pulls away from the crowd to walk over and crouch down beside his Commander. "Notice something, sir?"

"I haven't." Hope says. "That's the problem. Every inch of these people looks identical to the average human. You're... sure they were Volgrim Changelings, right? Like, you're one hundred percent sure? Because everything I'm seeing here indicates they're ordinary humans."

Henry nods seriously. "Without a doubt. When Jepthath connected to my mind, I could read the thoughts and sense the emotions of everyone around me. But not these five. Their minds were... void. When I probed deeper, I came into contact with words and thoughts that didn't feel human. It was like if I tried to describe to you how a slug experiences the world around it. Completely alien."

"So you could only tell because of Jepthath's power." Hope muses. "That poses a problem. I can't verify these are aliens at all. If they really are Changelings, their disguises are incredible. The blood is slightly discolored, so that might be worth looking into, but otherwise even their genetic makeup is identical to that of any human."

"I think you should examine their souls, sir." Henry suggests. "Or their brains. I'm telling you, they didn't think in the same way I did at all. It was almost frightening how weird their thought patterns were. I can't really put the experience into words."

Another man nearby nods. "I felt the same thing too, Commander. Lord Henry isn't lying."

"I know he isn't." Hope says with a smile, before raising an eyebrow. "Wait, 'Lord' Henry?"

"That is what the Sovereign has decreed all of us should call him by." The man says. "He is Jepthath's Champion. He possesses the same strength and power the Sovereign did when he walked the Earth. It's only fair to call him our Lord."

Hope looks at Henry. The young man doesn't physically appear any different from before. Compared to the roided-up Parahumans who also ascended, Henry appears the same as before, almost as if he didn't power up in the slightest.

"I want some of you to deliver these corpses to Neil in secret." Hope says to a nearby soldier. "I'll let him know you're coming ahead of time. Don't tell anyone these are Changelings. Just say they were training casualties."

"Yes sir!" The soldier says, before gathering a few other people to cover the bodies and drag them away.

As the crowd disperses to discuss the day's events, Hope slaps Henry's back. "Come with me."

He and Henry stand up, then they exit the church and head deep into the woods. After walking for a couple of kilometers, Hope cracks his neck, then turns to face Henry.

"We'll spar here."

Henry blinks. "Sir?"

"My body is augmented." Hope says mildly. "Due to an accident six years ago, billions of nanites ended up embedded under my skin. Over time, they're merged with my biological makeup and enhanced me in lots of different ways. My bones are durable, my mind is quicker, even my blood pumps a little faster."

Hope assumes a guarding stance. He raises both of his fists and looks at Henry seriously. "We'll start off light, but as long as neither of us ends up dead because of a single sudden hit, I should be able to heal any damage we take."

Henry nods. He takes a deep breath, then assumes his own combat stance, dancing between his heels and toes as he starts moving from side to side.

"I've gotta warn you, Commander." Henry says. "I haven't tested my strength yet, but the Sovereign says I'm as strong as he was when he was alive. I also have access to all of his knowledge on fighting, as well as the knowledge of everyone he's ever connected with, and the 10,000 who joined his consciousness today."

"That's why I said we'll start light." Hope says with a smile. "I'm no novice, but when it comes to combat? I doubt I'm Jepthath's match. HUH!"

He suddenly lunges toward Henry and sends a jab at his opponent's right shoulder. Henry lightly pivots from the flat of his foot to his heel, turning slightly to avoid the attack.

THWAP!

Hope sees stars as the side of Henry's fist bashes against his left ear, sending him sprawling to the dirt. Hope blinks his eyes, needing a few seconds to register just what in the hell happened.

"Commander!" Henry exclaims. "Are you okay?!"

He quickly leans down to pick Hope up, and the Wordsmith clumsily climbs to his feet, visibly dazed.

"...huh? Huh?? You... hit me?" Hope asks, incredulous. "I didn't... even... see you move."

"I tried to restrain my strength." Henry says, blushing in embarrassment. "I thought that backfist would only knock you to the side a little bit."

Hope rubs the side of his head. He opens and closes his jaw while a ringing sound squeals in his ear. "Normalize. Heal. It's no problem, Henry. That's the whole point of this exercise, to see how strong you are. Clearly, I was way off the mark in my estimations. I'm going to need to take this a lot more seriously."

Hope once again assumes his guarded-stance. "Empower. Strength. Defense. Swiftness. Agility. Reaction. Prediction..."

He strings along several dozen Words of Power, all of them being spells that he has confirmed will help him during hand-to-hand combat fights thanks to his six years of practice, as well as his training inside the Hall of Heroes.

Finally, he finishes off with one last word. "Invincibility. There, that should make my body basically a slab of tungsten."

"You're all done, sir?" Henry asks, his eyes sparkling innocently. "I'll make sure not to hit you in the head again."

"I'm far stronger than before." Hope warns him. "Don't hold back on my account. Though, do try to avoid my jaw. I can't Wordsmith if I can't speak."

"Noted, sir." Henry says back, as he once again resumes his dance-like steps of combat footwork.

The two men start trading blows once more. This time, Hope manages to match his opponent in the physicality department. When Henry sends a crushing blow toward Hope's chest, the Wordsmith takes the hit, staggers back, then leaps forward to spike a jab at Henry's throat. Henry slaps his fist aside, than ducks low and tries sweeping Hope's feet. The Wordsmith lightly hops, evades the sweep, and plants his feet firmly on the ground before punching down at Henry's lowered head.

Over and over, the two men attack and defend, the sounds of their fists, arms, feet, and legs making contact as they disturb the nearby woodland creatures.

For twenty long minutes, they fight. Eventually, Hope pulls back, sweat covering his whole body. Comparatively, Henry appears somewhat relaxed, as if the sparring session was barely even a warmup.

"I'm not your equal." Hope says mildly. "Strength-wise, I can barely match up to you. But when it comes to technique? I feel like a toddler fighting a martial arts master. I can barely even land any hits, but you're constantly knocking me around like I'm in a goddamn pinball machine."

Henry blushes again. "Sorry, Commander. I held back as best as I could to match your strength level."

"Wait, you're still holding back??" Hope asks, bewildered.

"Well, yes, sir." Henry says, scratching his nose sheepishly. "You said this was only a sparring match. If I were to go all-out I'd probably have easily..."

He trails off, causing the implication to linger in the air.

Hope blinks his eyes, feeling as if a bomb has exploded in his mind. "Henry! Be honest with me. How much have you been holding back?"

"Well. I don't have any exact numbers or whatever." Henry says, looking away. "I mean, I probably used less than half my strength? Can you perhaps boost yourself more? Then I can get a more accurate estimate..."

Visibly dismayed, Hope hangs his head and looks at the ground in disbelief.

"...So this is what Solomon meant when he said Specialists are better than Generalists in their specific field. Sorry, Henry, but if I strengthen my body any more, I'll probably explode. This is all I can manage for now. Let's call it good for today."

"Oh. Alright then!" Henry says, cheering up a bit. "It was a lot of fun anyway, Commander! I feel so powerful now, like I could rip a tank apart with my bare hands! If I have any one complaint, it would just be..."

He pauses, then looks away.

"Well. I'm not usually one for using my fists. I was a sniper when I worked under Neil. I'd rather be using a gun if I'm being honest, but now it feels like I'd be wasting my strength if I did that instead of using my whole body."

"Yeah. Maybe..." Hope says uncertainly. "Or perhaps we need to get you a new weapon and set of armor that better matches what your body can accomplish now, to say nothing of your new status. I'll talk to Hans Wagner and see what he thinks."

With their sparring session complete, both men teleport back to Maiuran High Command, now located in the city of Adamsburg, a fortress built atop the planet's tallest mountain. Despite its immense height and seemingly awkward geographical positioning, because of the efforts of several Fairy Princesses, there exist teleportation matrices at the bottom that can send any number of civilians and troops upward and downward as needed.

This city atop a peak, named Mount Adams after the commander himself, stands as a testament to what humanity can accomplish even with surprisingly limited resources. In fact, Hope Hiro had almost nothing to do with its construction. It was built a few years earlier at the command of Neil himself, who wished to have a secure fallback location in the event of a total collapse of humanity's ranks. While it would normally be quite secure, its carrying capacity was unfortunately too limited to hold all the humans in existence during the Stormbringer assault.

Now though, with humanity's population having been decreased by a significant margin, Adamsburg provides a safe and secure shelter for the humans to start from, allowing them to begin working their way outward to conquer more of Maiura's fertile territory.

As Hope and Henry teleport into the city built atop the mountain, Henry looks around in wonder. "Wow! I should have come here sooner."

Hundreds of residences made of rock and stone dot the city's interior. Thirty-foot walls shield the city from external attacks, which would also have to aim those attacks upward to even reach the city's underside.

In many ways, it resembles a medieval city, but with electricity powering it courtesy of Hope's few material contributions. Thanks to his Wordsmithing, he was able to add a miniaturized fusion reactor to the city's electrical grid, allowing it to self-sustain its residents as needed for the next several hundred years.

When the two men arrive inside Adamsburg, Hope starts walking toward the city center, where Neil's personal office sits comfortably within a few minutes of walking distance in any direction. But hardly has Hope taken ten steps before a series of invisible question marks pop up over his head. He turns around to see Henry standing in place, clearly content to stay behind.

"What are you doing?" Hope asks. "Come on! Let's go see Neil!"

"Huh? Me?" Henry asks, his face paling. "You want... me... to see the Commander? I- I don't know, Hope. That doesn't seem- I don't think that would be a good idea. I know he hates me for what I did. I can't look him in the eye anymore."

Hope realizes the reason for Henry's lollygagging. He chuckles under his breath. "You don't need to worry about that. Neil's not the sort of guy to hold a grudge. Even if he is, all you have to do is sit through one tongue-lashing and admit you screwed up, and he'll forgive you."

"Are... are you sure?" Henry asks, wincing. "I don't know."

"I've known Neil for six years. We're extremely close, almost like father and son." Hope says. "Now come on! If you're going to call yourself 'Jepthath's Envoy' then you're gonna need to grow a goddamn spine, man."

"I have a spine!" Henry protests. "But... it's easier killing demons than facing Commander Adams again. I hate that I nearly got him killed, all because of that demon bitch."

"Good. Be sure and tell him that." Hope concludes.

The two men resume walking. They pass by hundreds of civilians in the bustling city, many of whom have only migrated within the past few days. In fact, more than eighty percent of Maiura's human population have come from Tarus II after the Great Debate, which has caused a certain amount of friction among those who settled here for a longer time before.

"Goddammit!" One man yells as he stands in a line outside a popular restaurant. "Ever since you Tarus yokels came along, this place has been packed every day! I used to be able to walk in and sit down. Why do I need a reservation just because you yahoos moved here, huh??"

"Quiet down!" A man ahead of him yells back. "We're all waiting. Fair is fair!"

Hope observes the interaction as he passes, then swiftly forgets about it a few moments later. Squabbles of this level aren't of any interest to him, and will instead be dealt with by the city enforcers if things turn violent.

He and Henry eventually arrive at a sizable building that resembles a library, with architectural flourishes that give it a classical look, yet without skimping on the security. Numerous troopers patrol outside, while a half-dozen sit and stand atop the slanted roof, keeping an eye out for airborne threats. When Neil is on base, everyone always remains on high alert, just in case.

Both men walk inside, and Hope nods at a blonde woman with glasses. "Debra. Is Neil busy right now?"

"Only if it's not you asking." Debra says with a smile. Then her eyes meet Henry's and that smile disappears. "You brought him here?"

"I have a good reason." Hope says, ignoring the protest in her eyes as he walks Henry over to Neil's office door. He knocks twice, then lowers the handle to push the door open.

Neil looks up, momentarily surprised someone would just walk right in, but only until he realizes it's Hope. "How did the ceremony go?" He asks.

Hope doesn't say anything. He steps into the room, then gestures behind himself at Henry, who slowly walks inside, reflexively lowering his head out of shame.

"C-commander." Henry mumbles, wringing his hands together.

"So it's you." Neil says. He looks at Hope with narrowed eyes. "You brought him here because...?"

Instead of answering, Hope tilts his head up. "Privacy. Barrier. Solidify. Opaque. Scan..."

He erects a privacy field around the room, taking care to triple-check and ensure no Psions are inside the bubble where they can listen in. After satisfying his desire for privacy, he smiles politely at Neil.

"I'd like to introduce you to the strongest member of the Parahuman Corps, Neil. Henry Cliff has obtained a perfect compatibility rating with Jepthath's power. He is as strong as the ancient Hero-King was when he walked the Earth, and has thus been named Jepthath's Champion. You can also call him Lord Henry, or the Illuminator's Envoy, if you prefer."

Neil listens to Hope's introduction. He looks Henry up and down, but to his layman eyes, the young man still appears only as strong as any average soldier. Certainly not as impressive as Hope seems to think.

"I- uh, Commander." Henry says, stuttering and mashing his words together. "Don't-don't let my, uh, appearance fool you. Ahaha... I'm pretty strong."

"He beat my ass during our sparring session." Hope says plainly. "And I was going at him with everything I had. Henry here didn't even break a sweat."

For several long seconds, the room falls into an awkward silence.

Neil simply stares at Henry, and the young man becomes visibly more uncomfortable by the second. Finally, he breaks composure and steps toward Neil while holding his palms out.

"Commander! I... I am so sorry. I am filled with shame at my actions during Stormbringer. I betrayed you! I betrayed humanity. Ose may have assumed the form of a beautiful human woman, but I didn't follow protocol and report her to the higher-ups!

Because of me, you ended up captured by the demons and suffered terrible torture! I don't know how I can redeem myself, but I'll do anything- ANYTHING, if it satisfies you."

Neil continues to remain silent for a few seconds longer.

"...Will you kill yourself if I ask you to do so?"

Henry flinches at the question. He starts to open his mouth, but then he pauses for a moment before lowering his head.

"I'm sorry, Commander. That's the one thing I cannot do for you."

"Oh? And why is that?" Neil asks, unfazed.

"Because, sir. I'm not some ordinary civilian anymore. I answer to a higher power. I have a Calling now, and a strength that I cannot throw away uselessly. I need to use Jepthath's strength to save as many human lives as possible! But if, in the future, my power becomes irrelevant, I would be willing to follow your... request."

Neil again stays quiet. He looks Henry up and down a few times, clearly thinking to himself about something unknown.

Finally, he stands up from his chair and folds his hands behind his back.

"That was an excellent response. It seems the time spent in that prison cell gave you a chance to think about what sort of person you were becoming, and what sort of person you'd want to be."

He continues. "I'll be honest, boy. I never blamed you for what you did. Demons are wiley. Crafty. You are young and stupid. You thought with your lower head instead of the brain the Creator gave you. Even so, I know if Ose hadn't pretended to be a human, you'd never have done as she asked. You'd have turned against her the moment you realized she was a demon."

The Commander inhales sharply. "Every man makes mistakes. But it is not these errors which define us. Rather, it is the lessons we learn from them that shape our potential and turn boys into men. I see now that you have grown a little wiser and will not be fooled so easily in the future."

Henry nods heavily. "I cannot claim I'll never make another mistake, Commander. But I promise to do my best not to fall for any bloodskin's forked tongue again."

Neil chuckles. "You know, when I was younger- before Bahamut took me, that is, I fought under a Hero named Napoleon."

He continues. "In Napoleon's army, there were plenty of fellows who screwed up basic orders, failed to follow simple commands, but Napoleon often forgave them even when it seemed nonsensical. Why, on one occasion, some fool lit a cigar near a barrel of gunpowder and damn near killed three people nearby, not to mention himself. When Napoleon only let the man off with a stern rebuke... I was so confused at the time. I questioned him about the matter in private, and do you know what he told me?"

Hope and Henry both listen intently as Neil pauses to let their minds run wild.

"He told me, 'Neil, what would you have me do? Kill the bastard? Better to let him live. For the price of one barrel of gunpowder, we taught that man a valuable lesson. You can bet going forward he'll be far more prudent about his actions!' And I must say, Napoleon was right. That person ended up becoming a lieutenant toward the end of the war, decorated for his valor, and well known for his sometimes-excessive level of caution."

Neil shrugs. "Compared to the price you paid, which actually ended up being nothing at all, I'd say the lesson you learned was equally valuable. I'm fine in the end. Alive and fully intact in body, mind, and soul. Contrary to what you might believe, no demons tortured me, though they did deny me a bit of food in a pathetic, half-assed attempt to weaken my morale. It's too bad they underestimated the indomitable will of the human spirit."

Henry nods, fully comprehending Neil's words. "I understand, Commander. Your wisdom is truly sublime."

"I'm glad to have you back, Henry." Neil says with a smile. "You were my best sniper. I'll be watching your military career with great interest in the future. Don't disappoint me."

Henry slaps his chest. "I promise I won't, sir!"

After the two men exchange a few more pleasantries, Neil has Hope teleport Henry outside of the privacy barrier, leaving the Wordsmith and Commander Adams alone.

In an instant, Neil's smile vanishes. In its face, an icy-cold gaze fixates on Hope.

"That Jepthath is really something." Neil says frostily. "I'll bet you didn't even notice what just happened."

Hope blinks twice. "Huh? What- what do you mean? Are you telling me you only pretended to accept Henry's apology?"

"Henry didn't apologize. Jepthath did." Neil explains slowly, waiting for Hope to catch on. "Come on, boy. You're smarter than this. Don't tell me you didn't notice the abrupt change in Henry's demeanor. I'm not a close friend of his, but we've spoken on several occasions. He's never been this decisive before."

"I... I don't know." Hope says, frowning at Neil. "I think Henry really wanted to get that apology off his chest, Neil. Why are you saying it was Jepthath talking? I mean, I know Jepthath could have used the Dominion Rod's connection to seize control of Henry, but that seems unlikely, don't you think??"

Neil shrugs again. "Maybe you're right. Maybe Jepthath didn't take direct control. But that whole shpiel about a 'higher calling'? Give me a break. Don't you know who Henry is? He's an illiterate human we rescued from one of the savage worlds. He's adapted to modern human society somewhat, true, but since when has he ever been so well-spoken? No, I can state with absolute confidence that Jepthath had a hand in that boy's emotional transformation. It's up to you whether you believe me or not."

Hope's frown deepens. He glances behind himself, as if trying to see the doorway hidden by his Privacy Field. He turns back to Neil, unwilling to concede this point.

"Let's agree to disagree, Neil. Henry's a good guy. He screwed up once, yeah, but you didn't have to lie to him to make him feel better."

"I spoke no lies. I meant every word I said." Neil counters calmly. "Whether or not Jepthath took over for a while, Henry has learned a lesson and it may just turn him into a true man. But we won't know for the foreseeable future, so let's move on to other things."

He meets Hope's gaze. "Have you spoken to Diablo yet?"

"No. I was waiting to see how the Illumination Ceremony played out." Hope explains. "Now I know, and we've gained a lot of bargaining chips. If you really want me to lead troopers into battle alongside the demons, then I'll do it."

"It has to be you." Neil says. "My reputation won't allow me to take Diablo's deal, but you can play the moderate in this situation."

Hope snorts. "Heh. Sometimes you make me think you're a real funny guy, Neil. I'll go find and talk to Diablo after this, don't you worry. Maybe within the next week we can start fighting alongside him."

"That would be for the best." Neil concludes. "Anything else?"

"Yeah. One last thing." Hope says, his tone of voice changing to something resembling a bubbling anger. "There were five Changelings that tried to attend the ceremony. Jepthath sniffed them out when he tried connecting to their minds, and Henry killed them. Our troops should be bringing the bodies soon."

"Changelings." Neil says, tightening his eyebrows. "You're positive it was them? To date, we haven't had any luck detecting them."

"Jepthath's power seems to be the key." Hope explains. "Now that we have five bodies to examine, we'll need to do so in absolute secrecy. I fear the Volgrim already know about the deaths of their spies, but it's possible they might not. In any case, with five bodies to examine, we might find a biological marker or some sort of DNA sequence we can use to identify other Changelings in the future."

A few seconds pass. Neil looks at Hope questioningly.

"You're telling me the differences aren't obvious? Did you even examine their corpses?"

"Of course." Hope says. "That's the first thing I did! But no dice. I'm telling you Neil, if the Parahumans weren't swearing up and down these five were Changelings, I'd have no idea! Their internal organs, their brains, every piece of them came up human even when I looked at them with my Wordsmithing. It's fucking uncanny is what it is. And creepy."

Neil's expression turns ugly. "All along I assumed they were only deceiving us with their outward appearance. If their entire body can blend in with any populace, then we're in real trouble, Hope. We have five bodies to cut open but even those might not help us identify other Volgrim spies!"

"Yeah. You're telling me." Hope mutters.

The two of them chatter a while longer, then Hope turns to leave.

"I'll be visiting Diablo next." Hope says. "Until next time, Neil."

"Until next time." Neil says, as Hope dissipates the Privacy Field.

The Wordsmith teleports away, leaving Neil to plunk back in his chair and rest his elbows on his desk.

Humanity's Military Commander stares vacantly ahead for a long while, thinking about various things.

Jepthath, you are a sneaky one.

Part 566: Test of Unity

A few days after Neil and Hope's meeting.

Henry Cliff walks alone down the hallways of the Labyrinth. He wears a purple-colored T-REX, a status symbol put in place by the higher-ups as a sign of his newfound prestige and military ranking. Its color, as well as the other new colors among the army allow for a quick idea of the ranking of any human soldier at a glance, especially among those who don't know the humans well, such as their allies for today.

Henry's feet quietly plod against the Labyrinth's compacted dirt floor. His breathing remains even despite having walked for over thirty minutes. Thanks to his newly enhanced body, he could run for a thousand kilometers without breaking a sweat. Even he isn't entirely certain just how strong he is. Perhaps, if he were to come to blows with a Demon Emperor, he might roll them out like a sleeping bag.

As he walks, Henry's newfound clarity of purpose mixes with the voices and thoughts of ten thousand other members of Jepthath's Legion. No, more accurately, they are Henry's Legion, now. While their power might be derived from Jepthath, it was the Hero-King's decision to give Henry command of them and become his Voice.

Each person who joined on that day possessed their own thoughts, feelings, and talents. Their combined cumulative experience, which could now be tapped into at will, easily amounted to more than 350,000 years. If the age of every person who merged had been 10, that would have given them 100,000 years, but the fact the average turned out to be 35 elevated their cumulative total dramatically.

And that was to say nothing of the people who had once been a part of Jepthath's Legion in the past. When Henry first became inducted into the Legion, he was shocked by just how much wisdom Jepthath possessed. While he did not have the truly unfathomable and vast breadth of knowledge Solomon possessed, Jepthath was amazing in his own way. What he lacked in raw information, he made up in with mastery of combat.

If Solomon possessed the combined cumulative knowledge of humanity, Jepthath possessed its raw hand-to-hand fighting prowess. And that served to bolster Henry's state of mind significantly.

Just by integrating into the Legion, Henry's ability to peer into the essence of combat increased ten thousand-fold. Over the last few days, he had happened to pass by several different training grounds for humanity's soldiers on Maiura, most of them having been erected at some point by Neil Adams in the past six years. Henry was not impressed by what he saw. If anything, he was disgusted.

[Their movements are so crude. So lacking in refinement.] He would often think, while conversing with the ancient Hero-King. [I want to train them. I can't stand to imagine them using their sloppy combat skills against old demon monsters.]

[A waste of time.] Jepthath would chide gently, whenever he and Henry had this conversation. [The knowledge you have obtained effortlessly cannot be communicated through words or demonstrations. The only way one can become as proficient as the members of Our Legion is by directly transferring Our combined knowledge through Our souls and minds.]

[Then we have to convince more to join Us!] Henry would exclaim. [These fools are wasting their time flailing about, trying to reinvent the wheel. If they joined Us, they would gain all of Our power in the art of war and become capable of adding to Our collective consciousness!]

Jepthath shakes his head. [I made a deal with the Wordsmith. We will not forcibly recruit anyone. If you wish to convince more to join Us, you must demonstrate Our power. Not only do you possess knowledge of countless schools of fighting, but you also possess intimate knowledge of battlefield tactics and guerrilla warfare. By demonstrating that Knowledge is Power, you can enlighten the foolish masses as to what they are missing out on.]

Henry nodded sincerely at that time. He looked up at the night sky and clenched his fist with determination.

Humanity was wasting its capabilities! If other humans only knew how small and frail they were, they would jump at the chance to join the Legion!

Less than a week before, Henry had been a disgraced soldier, a mere civilian, a person who might never even get the opportunity to shine the boots of those he had once trained with.

But now he was an officer, an elite warrior many would come to fear and respect.

This realization made his heart leap and his throat dry. In many ways, he sometimes felt he didn't deserve this position. He certainly hadn't earned it.

Not yet. Someday he would. Someday soon.

His thoughts come back to the present. He continues walking, ultimately falling into step beside an ordinary human commando also donning a T-REX. A small artistic flourish on the side of her armor, a pink rose, hints to him the other soldier might be a woman.

The grey-armored soldier turns her head to look at him as she walks. "Oh! You startled me. And you are?"

Unable to see her face, Henry looks at her helmet instead, and her name and other information pop up in his HUD, allowing him to see her identity.

"I'm Lieutenant Henry Cliff." He says. "You're Private Ashley McCarthy? Aren't you the lady who can transform into an orc?"

Immediately, her previously formal tone turns cold. Ashley snaps her head forward, no longer looking at him.

"Every time. Every time! Is that all I am anymore? Just the ugly bitch who turns into an orc?!"

"Whoa, whoa!" Henry exclaims, taken aback by her response. "I'm sorry, uh, Miss McCarthy. I didn't mean to apologize- I mean, I didn't apologize- mean to offend you! I- I uh, sorry!"

He stumbles over his words, feeling suddenly ashamed that he spoke so bluntly without considering the other person's feelings. Then again, how could he have known it was such a sore subject for her? That thought also makes him feel unfairly slighted, as he committed a blunder without meaning to.

"No, no I'm sorry." Ashley quickly says, suddenly realizing how rudely she just spoke to a superior officer. "It's not your fault, Lieutenant. I, I just... it's a long story. I never asked for this ability. I hate it."

"You hate it?" Henry asks, as they round a corner, passing a dozen goblins who carefully press against the side-wall to avoid the giant humans. "Pardon my bluntness, but why? In this time of war, possessing an orc form must make you pretty strong. Valuable. You could be on the fast-track to a higher rank if you have any ambition."

"Higher rank." Ashley mutters under her breath. "As if that's something I'd want. I'm not some big brained Terran from Old Earth. I'm just a normal girl from one of the Wild Worlds. I only want to be pointed at an enemy so I can hurt them."

That sounds an awful lot like something an orc would say, Henry thinks, but wisely keeps to himself.

"Does turning into an orc make you stronger?" Henry asks, choosing to turn the discussion down a more positive path.

"Oh, sure. A bit stronger." Ashley concedes. "You know how the Body Booster improves a human's baseline physique, putting some of us on par with certain low-ranking Demon Lords? Well, my Orc transformation stacks on that, sort of. I can pick up and throw boulders pretty far."

She pauses, before adding, "I mean, it is really fun being that strong."

Henry reaches up to rub his chin, only for his hand to clank against his T-REX's helmet. He gives up on the idea and lowers his arm again.

"I recently got a, uh, a pretty substantial boost to my strength. You remember how Commander Hope offered for people to merge with the Hero Jepthath? I did that, and it made me a lot stronger."

He turns to look at the woman beside him, but she simply gazes forward, her helmet offering no insight into her current expression.

Her words, however, definitely give away what she's thinking.

"Oh. You're one of the cultists."

Her disappointed tone makes Henry's heart skip a beat.

"No, no, no!" Henry exclaims. "Not a cultist. Who told you that?? Jepthath's Legion have simply unified Our minds and bolstered Our bodies, making Us a lot stronger."

She remains quiet for a few moments.

"Yeah... that's... what a cultist would say."

"We're not a cult..." Henry protests feebly, but his words fall on deaf ears.

This isn't the first time someone has directed a look of disgust his way, or visibly cringed when he proudly declared himself one of Jepthath's Chosen.

Jason's words during the Great Debate made a lot of people immediately strike becoming a Parahuman off their list. They'd rather be ordinary soldiers in body armor rather than part of a weird, unified hive-mind.

Dismayed, the young man falls silent. He doesn't say anything for a full minute, and perhaps feeling bad about dismissing him so easily, Ashley decides to reignite the conversation as they draw closer to their destination.

"So what's it like. Being inside a, uh... hive mind? Is it weird?"

"We're not a hive-mind." Henry says, his mood deflating even further. "We're... we're like brothers and sisters. We understand one another. We share thoughts, insights, wisdom."

This time, Ashley tries to exercise a little tact. "It just doesn't sound right for me. I guess everyone has their own preferences. Me, I think I'd die of shame if everyone around me could hear my every thought. The embarrassment alone..."

She trails off and shakes her head.

But this time, Henry doesn't just back down.

"It's not what you think at all." Henry says. "Do you know why you feel fear at the thought of sharing your thoughts? It's because you're self-absorbed."

"What?!" Ashley exclaims, pausing her walk to look at him. No doubt, her helmet hides an expression of disbelief. "What do you mean by that... sir?"

Henry also pauses. He turns to face her, resting his hands on his hips. "You have friends, right? Maybe even a best friend?"

"O-of course!" Ashley says, her tone defensive. "What, you think I'm friendless just because I'm not a part of some bee-hive?"

"That's not what I'm getting at." Henry says patiently, holding out his hand and modulating his tone so he'll come off less aggressive. "Think about your friend, or your best friend. Really think about it. What's the most embarrassing thing you remember about him or her? What's the worst social gaffe they've made that you can't get out of your head?"

Ashley pauses. She lowers her head and falls into thought for a moment.

"I don't know. I can't think of anything. Why?"

"What about other people?" Henry asks. "Has anyone else you know made any serious social fuck-ups recently?"

"Social ones? No. There have been a few generally bad events recently, like finding out Baron Mara killed a bunch of people. But she's not my friend anyway, so..."

"THAT is my point." Henry states emphatically. "You don't think about the weird and embarrassing things your friends do. So why do you believe they're so fixated on yours?"

Ashley lifts her head to look at him. She remains silent, digesting his words, so he continues to press the issue.

"Do you know why you find things about yourself embarrassing? It's not your fault. Most people are extremely self-conscious about their own insecurities. Now that I've become a part of the Legion, I experience everyone else's insecurities all at the same time as I experience mine. In doing so, I realize that mine never amounted to anything at all. When you have ten thousand other people worrying about what they're wearing, or if they look fashionable, or some other tedious bullshit, you quickly realize that all of them amount to white noise. They don't matter."

He throws his hand up dramatically.

"I'm not picking on you. It's just a fact of human consciousness. All people are held back by their fear of social pressure, but much of that is because we don't know what goes on in the heads of our fellow men and women. If you could see their deranged sexual fantasies all at once, you would realize you're not weird at all. Everyone has a kink. If you enjoy looking at gross bugs, guess what? Someone else is unbothered by bodily fluids. We're all weird, and joining the Legion just made that clearer to me."

He pauses, unable to see the look on her face. "Sorry, I hope I'm not coming off as condescending. Does any of this make sense to you?"

Ashley slowly nods. "Mmm. Yeah, it does."

Henry heaves a sigh of relief. "Well, great! Great. I was worried I was starting to sound a little long-winded."

Ashley turns away and resumes walking. "You're definitely in a cult."

"Goddammit." Henry grumbles.

* * *

Before long, the two of them make it to the meeting location, where they arrive inside a massive, hollowed-out area inside the Labyrinth. There, they find, of all things, a new Volgrim Warpgate installed, its destination some unknown desert on a planet Henry can't immediately identify.

As they enter the massive arena-like staging area, Henry becomes momentarily disoriented. His newly enhanced senses pick up surges of spiritual energy, all spread out across the humans, demons, monsters, and other creatures inside. The powerful Demon Emperors, only a few of whom have yet to Ascend to Demon Deity, stand near the portal, using their strength as a show of force. Despite their proud expressions, Henry's keen senses detect a hint of fear in their eyes, as they seem to be unable to properly stand as strong as they always have. It's as if they are being suppressed by something...

"Whoa!" Ashley gasps. "I can't believe it. Why are the Volgrim here?"

"The Volgrim?" Henry asks, following her gaze based on the direction her helmet is pointed.

Somewhere in the mass of the crowd, a handful of decidedly alien-looking creatures with tentacles writing under their mouths and heavily-armored bodies stand at attention, looking like proud leaders and commanders. Their postures indicate a level of arrogance bred into their bones by millions of years of dominance over the Milky Way. Compared to the slightly fearful Demon Emperors, these Technopaths truly stand out as cream of the crop, with unknown augmentations that likely elevate their combat prowess to the peak.

"Those are Volgrim?" Henry asks. "Huh. The only one I've ever seen was that one female, the one who didn't have a mouth. She was presiding over my, uh, my tribunal..."

"Your tribunal?" Ashley asks.

She pauses, then turns to look at him strangely.

"Cliff... Henry Cliff? What the- you're that traitor! What- how even...?? You're a Lieutenant now? I didn't even recognize your name- no, forget that. Why are you in uniform? Weren't you banned basically forever from rejoining the military?"

"I was banned from rejoining the main military." Henry says, lowering his head in shame. "But, uhm, Hope's Parahumans are... different. It's a different jurisdiction."

Ashley takes a step to the side, pulling away from him. He can't see her expression, but based on her voice, she suddenly seems disgusted by him.

"All this time, I was talking to him." She mutters to herself, as she turns and walks away without another word.

Henry stands there, silently. He watches her depart, a feeling of bitterness welling up in his heart. He could pull rank on her, write her up for insubordination. Given his new status as a high-ranker, it would be easy to do.

But he doesn't.

In truth, he doesn't blame Ashley for her feelings. Because of his actions, Neil Adams was captured and humanity likely lost far more people during Stormbringer as a result. He indirectly caused the deaths of hundreds, perhaps even thousands.

How can he demand respect from her when he feels he doesn't deserve it?

As that thought wells up in Henry's mind, the thoughts of the Legion feed back into him, suppressing his negative emotions. All of them comment on his feelings and insecurities, offering kind words to help him feel better.

[You cannot and should not demand respect, no, but you can earn it back through your actions.] A 52-year-old Legionnaire says. [People like her will come around in due time. Perform admirably and make the Legion proud.]

[That woman is a mere Private.] Jepthath chimes in. [Do not allow your emotions to be tangled up by the feelings of a random soldier. You will need to bolster your Willpower if you seek to reach the peak of what you can achieve.]

[Right. My willpower.] Henry says, as his mood drastically swings back up. He hardens his heart, casting aside Ashley's comment and instead meditating for a moment to clear his mind. [Thank you, everyone, for the support.]

With his thoughts clear, Henry strides toward the front, keeping his gaze fixed on the Volgrim Technopaths. Having never seen these creatures before, he finds their horrid-looking tentacle mouths fascinating and yet creepy to look at. While all of them appear to be gender-ambiguous, certainly at first glance, as he comes closer, he does manage to make out one or two female-sounding voices among them. Or perhaps they might be higher-pitched males. He isn't entirely sure, and it seems a taboo subject to breach.

"-the Task Force will be working alongside these Technopath Envoys." Demon Emperor Yardrat says, his tone even and unbothered by the Technopaths to his left. "Naturally, full command of this operation will still go to the Archdemon, as the ranking Cosmic. However, because he will be busy dealing with the highest level threats, control of the ground forces will go to one member of each species, chosen via several votes of consensus. Today's operation is a test, and its purpose is to ensure we all work together properly. NO friendly fire. Our enemy is the Plague and nobody else. Save your personal grievances, vendettas, and petty squabbles for after we take our galaxy back from the Kolvaxians."

He gestures to the ten Technopaths. "The Volgrim have dispatched an army of 100,000 Technopath soldiers, and they will be commanded by this High Technopath named Loputo Jidelor, a high ranking commander of Clan Symmetra's ground forces."

Each of the Technopaths possesses their own combination of flesh and blood bodily parts mixed with metal limb replacements, armor-addons, and other such things. In Jidelor's case, he stands on two flesh and blood legs. However, in place of his right arm is a long, metallic limb with dozens of razor-thin threads waving to and fro where his 'wrist' ends. Each one moves independently, much like the tentacles on his left arm, but their movements appear far more precise. Dozens of metallic pieces are attached seemingly at random to his skin and skull.

Jidelor nods. "I am an experienced battlefield commander, but I am not a frontline soldier. I will be controlling our siege weaponry and directing our soldiers from the back."

Yardrat nods, then continues. "For the Demons, it goes without saying that just like with the last ten operations, Emperor Serena will be commanding our forces. Her ability to link souls together has proven instrumental in rapid battlefield communications, and her ability to sense souls allows her to keep up with the emergence of new Plagueborn until the point Diablo steals the world core back."

A beautiful demoness with sightless eyes nearby waves her hand delicately. "I will be in your care, everyone. Let us make it to the end without losing any demons this time."

"For the monsters, Fairy Princess Melia will take point." Yardrat says, nodding to another beautiful woman with green hair, fairy wings, and a look of boredom permanently etched onto her face.

Unlike the previous two commanders, Melia doesn't give a speech. In fact, she only rolls her eyes, crosses her arms, and looks away.

"Alright, and for the humans, General Chadwick will be taking charge." Yardrat concludes. He gestures to a massive Norwegian man who has now donned a Rhino T-REX variant and rests his hands around the shaft of a massive battleaxe. Its head rests on the ground, and he supports his massive armored frame by resting on the weapon's handle.

"Everyone." Chadwick says. "It is my honor to lead this mission. Naturally, Commander Neil is not happy about having to work with the demons, and I cannot imagine all of our soldiers are either. However, I pledge on Hope Hiro's honor that we will not commit any cowardly deeds of treachery, any backstabbing, or anything else of that sort! It was Hope Hiro who pushed for this arrangement because he wants humanity's soldiers to get real battle experience against the Plague. Let's be sure to make good use of this time to bury as many hatchets as we can!"

The crowd nods along to Chadwick's words. Some of the humans vocalize their approval, but many more remain silent.

The humans here are not normal civilians. They are military personnel, countless many of whom have not forgiven the demons. They may never forgive them, if their leaders are being honest.

Perhaps sensing the tenseness in the air, Yardrat briskly moves the pace along.

"In thirty minutes, we will begin. Transfer your forces to my world so that I can begin preparation to open the Intragalactic Portals. The Swarm has begun adapting to my tactics of late, so the moment those portals open, we'll need boots on the ground. No delays! If the Plague has its way, it might flood through the portals back to us, and that would be a whole bloody devil-damned mess."

The other leaders nod solemnly. They spread apart to talk to their forces, and Henry heaves a sigh.

In thirty minutes, we'll find out just how stable this alliance truly is.

Part 567: Reaver Invasion

One hundred thousand humans. One hundred thousand Technopaths. A thousand 4th and 5th Level Psions. A thousand Demon elites, mainly consisting of Barons, Dukes, and a few remaining Emperors.

This massive army stands on a recently reclaimed world, a fairly bland planet with minimal life signs and a barely breathable atmosphere named after its new Planar Warden, Yardrat, the Temporal.

This planet, Yardris, is nothing more than a platform to elevate Yardrat's powers to the level of a Bottom Cosmic. It has no other demons on it, and he almost never spends any time there except when staging operations to assault new worlds. If the Plague were to take it back tomorrow, he would simply return to being an ordinary Demon Emperor, then attach himself to a new world at Diablo's behest.

Thus, Yardrat becomes the poster boy for what the so-called 'weakest' Demon Deities can accomplish. While he might not have obtained the power to crack planets and traverse the Void with ease, his fundamental abilities have still received a massive boost in power whenever he stands upon his chosen world. In cases like these, being able to create portals far wider and more stable than the ones he made as an Emperor grant him unparalleled strategic value. Not even the Volgrim can mimic his abilities, leaving some of the Lesser Psions present feeling a little annoyed.

[The Demons are growing powerful frighteningly quickly.] One of the 5th Level Psions says in private to a nearby companion. [Their sudden ability to fortify planets with a single Cosmic would mean nothing during ordinary times, but with the Plague pressing upon us, the Volgrim Empire cannot stop the demons from taking what is ours.]

His fellow Psion, a female with onyx-black skin, remains aloof. [Trust in our leader. First Founder Unarin is too wise to allow this Threat to evolve within his domain unchecked. You would do well to assume he has already begun preparing contingencies, assuming he did not do so countless orbital cycles ago.]

[I suppose you are correct.] The male Psion murmurs. [I would not be surprised if Founder Unarin had several plans formulated in the event any mud-dwelling species suddenly obtained large numbers of Cosmics.]

The two of them continue to converse, sometimes including other nearby Psions in their discussion as they debate over whether or not Founder Unarin's wisdom is truly as unfathomable as they imagine.

Meanwhile, Henry Cliff paces around at the periphery of the human troops. Surprisingly, he is the only member of Jepthath's Legion to join this first expedition, since the other Parahumans have opted to put their strengths to use rapidly constructing a new base of operations for their future living conditions. Through his mental link to the Legion, Henry can easily monitor their progress, and he often gasps quietly as they rip trees out of the ground, split them with their bare hands, and throw together a simple log and stone city within just the first 12 hours after their ascension.

But Henry doesn't put much attention on the rest of the Legion. His job today is to set a shining example of what the Legion can accomplish, as well as to gather intel on the current power level of the Demons and Volgrim.

Before long, Hope Hiro materializes in the center of the massed human army. Henry turns to look at Hope, and is momentarily surprised to see a beautiful blonde woman standing beside the Wordsmith. Tall, gorgeous, and extremely formidable in appearance, the woman stands with her arms crossed, wearing a blue-colored metal armor that appears rather ancient at first glance, as if it were made during the medieval era of Old Earth. A sword hangs at her side, hidden within her scabbard, but Henry recognizes it as Excalibur.

In the time it takes Henry to register the woman's appearance, Jepthath speaks in his mind. [She is Artoria Pendragon. A Black Hole Construct formed in the image of King Arthur himself.]

[A Black Hole Construct?] Henry asks.

[During a battle some time back, Jason Hiro created two of those Constructs by compressing the bodies of many different powerful demon corpses, among other things. In a fit of rage, he formed two self-thinking creatures with independent personalities. One of them refers to herself as Soleil and stands alongside the last living angel, Cassiel, also known as the Daughter of Heaven. The other stands over there now and has taken up the identity of a female version of King Arthur.]

[Oh! I see. I didn't even know these two existed.]

[That would be because you were in prison.] Jepthath says, faintly smirking at Henry's discomforted reaction.

Their conversation concludes in the blink of an eye. Hope raises his hand to grab everyone's attention, then he levitates a few feet upward so all the human commandos can get a good look at him.

"Everyone. We will be starting the operation in only a minute or two. I've already spoken to Emperor Diablo and outlined how this test operation should play out. I will be placing Lady Artoria on the western flank of our forces, and my own super-soldier, Henry Cliff, on the eastern flank. Together, the two of them will protect our massed soldiers from any sudden high-ranking Plaguehosts. Should Cosmic Kolvaxians make an appearance, the leaders of each faction have already prepared several contingencies."

Linda Hurent, standing not far away, raises her hand. "Hope! Are you going to fight in the field? We cannot risk handing a Wordsmith to the Plague."

"Oh, hey, Linda." Hope says, offering a tight smile to her before returning his attention to the other soldiers. "I will not be directly participating. I'm going to be taking an active role in commanding from the backlines and using my power to intervene should any of our brave soldiers fall into crisis. For the rest of you, I'll expect you to listen to General Chadwick's orders, as he will be your commander once the operation begins. Are there any further questions?"

A few men and women do indeed volunteer their questions, and Hope fields them smoothly before moving on. As the timer counts down, he walks over to Linda and frowns.

"Neil wouldn't want you here."

"I know." Linda says. "But I am a soldier. I fight for humanity. I represent Neil's interests by coming here, especially since you and I both know he can't be present due to the message it would send."

Hope glances at the army of demons out of the corner of his eye. "I suppose not. But don't do anything rash, Linda. We can afford to lose a few grunts if we must but I will not risk losing you. It would devastate Neil."

He pauses, then looks her in the eye. "By the way. That stunt he pulled at the Great Debate? That was bullshit. You two haven't been dating very long. Are you really okay with him using you like that?"

Linda sighs. "It was a move of political expediency. It didn't make me feel good. But... I care for Neil. If this is how he wants to use me, then I'll play along."

"You're a grown woman." Hope says. "I won't tell you how to live your life. But I recommend after this battle, you go back there and make sure Neil knows that wasn't okay. He should have proposed in private first, not used you like a prop. Even if you would have said yes, it was still wrong."

Linda smiles helplessly. "I do plan to talk to him about it eventually. We just... haven't had the right moment yet."

"I've said my piece." Hope concludes. "Take care out there, Linda. I'll make sure to protect you."

At the same time as Hope talks to Linda, Henry walks over to the formidable looking Artoria. She notices his approach and turns to face him.

"Artoria?" Henry asks, belatedly realizing it's a bit of a silly introduction. "Jepthath told me about you."

Artoria says nothing. She merely rests her hands on her hips and stares at Henry silently.

"You're pretty strong, I assume?" Henry asks, feeling even more awkward when she again fails to respond. "I, I uh, I got a power-up from Jepthath recently. I was thinking after today's battle, you and I could spar a bit? I need to face a strong opponent."

The Black Hole Construct blinks twice. "Yes."

"Yes?" Henry repeats. "Great! Let's, uh, meet up on Maiura?"

Once again, Artoria blinks twice. "Yes."

Then, she turns away, decisively ending the conversation.

Henry lamely stammers something out before turning and walking away, feeling somewhat embarrassed.

"Holy shit, that was so awkward." He mutters to himself.

Jepthath snickers. [Does this old man perhaps sense a hint of... interest... in the scary but beautiful woman? Be careful, boy. She can take a beating... and dish one out.]

After Henry leaves, Hope walks over to Artoria, sparing Henry's departing figure a glance, as well as a chuckle.

"Made a friend, Artoria?"

The tell blonde woman looks at him with disinterest.

"Guess not." Hope says, snickering to himself. "Hey, before you go out there, I wanted to offer you this. You might need it."

Hope grabs a sword at his waist and pulls it out of its sheath, revealing the original Excalibur, glowing faintly due to the immense mana stored within.

"I'd feel a lot better if you went onto the battlefield with this." Hope says, holding Excalibur out for her to take it. "Whaddya say?"

Artoria slightly shakes her head. "No."

Hope frowns. He gestures to the replica of Excalibur hanging at her side. "The real Excalibur is much stronger. With it, you'll be able to control Arthur's power of light magic. Since I can't show up on the battlefield without risking giving the Plague a Wordsmith, this is the next best option."

Artoria slowly grips the hilt of her Pseudo-Excalibur. "I like this one. It's sharp."

"Yes, yes, I know it's sharp. Maybe even a little sharper than the original blade." Hope says, his tone turning faintly exasperated. "But come on, nothing beats the original! You don't have any magic you can use for long-ranged attacks!"

"I don't need magic." Artoria says coldly. "I'm strong."

"Well..."

Hope trails off. Seeing the look of determination in Artoria's eyes, he decides to throw in the towel. After sliding the genuine Excalibur back into its sheath, he heaves a sigh.

"Alright. You took on Lucifer and Gressil. I guess you'll be okay. Just make sure to protect the humans, alright? If any Cosmic Kolvaxians show up, let Diablo and the Volgrim deal with them. We only have a few major threats worth worrying about, and they're not very strong, so it should be a cake-walk. Diablo's taken back a hundred worlds already, so he knows all the tricks the Plague can unleash on us."

Artoria nods. "It's time. You should leave now."

Hope nods at her, then he speaks a Word of Power to return to the Hall of Heroes.

Not long after his departure, Commander Chadwick steps up. "Alright, everyone. Thirty seconds! Engage your T-REX's and prepare for battle!"

Henry nods. He slaps his chest, causing a layer of nano-machines to swarm over his body. Linda covers her head up with a helmet, as do all the other humans. Only Artoria remains in her medieval armor without any other protection. More than a few soldiers look at her in confusion, as if she were suicidal, but those in the know quickly spread the word about her true power.

Her skin and bones are like flexible titanium. She has no blood and thus cannot bleed. Her vision is capable of switching from telescopic to microscopic in an instant. Her punches can sunder mountains. In terms of durability, she comes second only to Bael back in his prime.

As for breathing a little toxic air? She wouldn't even bat an eye.

Yardrat teleports overhead. Now a Bottom Cosmic, he summons forth the power of a Demon Deity, then materializes an absolutely massive thousand-foot-wide transparent portal, one which reveals a fallen industrial world which once belonged to the Technopaths. This world fell over thirty thousand years before, and the infrastructure every soldier can see appears decrepit, rusted, and ruined.

Wherever the world might be located, it has long lost the industrial base which made it valuable. Even so, it must be retaken, as must ALL the other worlds lost to the Plague over the last 90,000 years.

The War has only just begun.

"CHARGE!!" Yardrat yells, sending forth the demons to attack first. At the same time, he opens a portal elsewhere on Yardris, a portal big enough for Diablo to pass through in his Archdemon form. Thus, the Archdemon arrives on the Kolvaxxed Planet at the same time as the first of his demon soldiers.

By the time the humans and Volgrim follow the initial burst of demons, the planet has already come to life.

The plants vibrate, transmitting incomprehensible messages deep underground. The creatures of the land scatter and flee. Winds whip up, causing an earthen odor to spread throughout the air, one which the humans' T-REX's instantly filter out.

Pheremones.

The moment Diablo steps foot on this world, a planet once referred to as 'Reaver' by its inhabitants, the Kolvaxians take notice.

Mere seconds pass before creatures with mottled green skin burst out of the ground and rush at the invading army. Diablo lances his tentacles into the soil to begin the process of contesting Reaver's core while his Emperors, Dukes, and Barons start blasting the Kolvaxians with all they've got.

One of the newly crowned Emperors immediately hardens the ground beneath himself, spreading this effect beneath the feet of other nearby demons, then the soil beneath Yardrat's portal. He continues to spread it around, making the ground as solid as iron, all for one explicit purpose: Preventing the Kolvaxians from emerging directly underneath the invading army.

In the past, the demons were caught off-guard a couple of times when the alien monsters managed to surprise them with sneak attacks from below. Naturally, the demons survived and even escaped the fate of consumption via their enemies, but Diablo also took care to ensure such a thing would never happen again!

At the same time as the demons fortify the area and lay a foundation to conquer the planet, humanity's soldiers join the Volgrim in two flanks that sweep around outside the demons to form twin walls of flesh. Technopath elites don highly advanced combat armor which augment their already terrifying augmented flesh and bone bodies. Unlike the simple Technopath technicians who have fallen to the Kolvaxians en-masse for 90,000 years, these soldiers are warriors that have killed thousands of Kolvaxians each. Battle-hardened, capable of staring death in the face and making the Grim Reaper himself blink, these Technopaths follow the orders of Loputo Jidelor as he issues commands.

"Artillery, form up. I want three squads on the north, east, and western sides. Place two armored divisions in the rear. Keep your eye on that biomass forming north-east three clicks out."

Calmly and carefully, Loputo Jidelor issues commands in the same way he has for centuries. While he is not even close to the oldest Technopath present on Reaver today, he is a noble bred for leadership by the elites of Clan Symmetra. He has never faltered in the face of adversity, nor will he do so today.

Chadwick surrounds the demons on the flank opposite the Technopaths. "Rhino squad, move to the front! Clear a path! Hummers, give me aerial support. Suppress the horde amassing at three o'clock! Use your grenades! Spectres, scan for high-level targets and point them out to Lieutenant Cliff and Lady Artoria!"

Henry storms into battle, becoming momentarily frenzied as he rips a tree out of the ground and swings it in a huge arc, splattering ten Kolvaxians instantly as the ten-ton makeshift weapon kills them dead. He hefts the tree horizontally, then throws it forward to send it smashing into the horde like a bowling ball. Even more Kolvaxians get crushed under this attack, but Henry's expression falls when just as many new Plagueborn continue to crawl out of the ground and charge the army.

"Shit." Henry curses inside his helmet. "They're weak. Easy to kill. But there's so many!"

Soldiers behind Henry take aim with their rifles. They unload thousands of bullets into the swarm, killing a hundred Kolvaxians in a second, then a hundred more.

But it doesn't matter. The creatures just keep coming.

"Remember!" Chadwick shouts. "Our endgame isn't extermination. We just have to hold this area! Every Kolvaxian we kill strains the planet's core, weakening it and allowing Diablo to absorb it faster! It's only a matter of time until we win, so keep shooting but DON'T press forward!"

Chadwick's timely reminder snaps Henry out of his daze. Indeed, the objective today is not to kill all the Kolvaxians. The Volgrim have informed demonkind and humanity both that this is an impossible goal. The Kolvaxians can simply call more of their horde over from any of the million-plus worlds they've taken.

As the surface of hardened steel continues to expand outward, its rate of expansion slows. The Demon Emperor who conjured it reaches his limits and collapses, allowing Yardrat to teleport him away. With his goal complete, the humans, demons, and Volgrim now have a bastion the Kolvaxians cannot 'swim' through, and thus a viable defensive platform they can hold on to.

Bullets spray outward in all directions wantonly, like the rain of a waterfall upon a desert. Humans and Technopaths mow down the Kolvaxians with ease and keep them at bay, but the corpses of those fallen creatures turn to rotted meat and pus before sinking back into the soil, ensuring that a wall of bodies will not form around the invaders.

Minutes pass. Soldiers begin to sweat as they realize that slowly, very very slowly, the Kolvaxians are beginning to gain a small amount of ground over time.

Diablo sweeps a beam of destruction from the Archdemon's mouth, atomizing countless Kolvaxians in a circle around the invading forces. This allows the humans and Volgrim to reset the losses they were taking up to that point. Even Loputo Jidelor can't help but breathe a little easier, as they continue to easily cut down any Kolvaxians that come at them.

Henry rips apart a Kolvaxian with his bare hands, causing its internal organs to splatter against his exosuit. He throws a punch at another Kolvaxian, sending its head flying like a projectile, where it batters another Kolvaxian dead.

[So many!!] Henry howls in frustration. [How long are we supposed to do this?!]

[Relax, boy.] Jepthath says. [At least you're getting a workout. If Solomon's guesses are correct, it should take less than an hour before this world falls.]

[Less than an hour?] Henry asks telepathically. [And how long has it been?]

[Eight minutes, forty-seven seconds.] Jepthath says blandly. [Endure the pain. I fought wars much more brutal than this against the bloodskins.]

[Yeah, yeah!] Henry grouches.

Every so often, Henry can't help but shoot a glance Artoria's way. Her golden hair glows as she fights, becoming slightly more luminous every time she kills a foe. Already, her blade has claimed the lives of more than three hundred Kolvaxians, their blood incapable of dirtying her clothing, let alone causing her harm.

[She's... absorbing the Kolvaxians?] Henry asks.

[Artoria is a Black Hole Construct. She is capable of enhancing her strength by devouring the life forces of her foes.] Jepthath explains, his spiritual avatar obtaining this information from Solomon and Arthur in the Hall of Heroes. [The Kolvaxians are not too strong, but their sheer quantity should bolster her strength a bit.]

The battle rages. More and more Kolvaxians die, but not a single human, Volgrim, or Demon does!

In the skies above, a thousand 4th and 5th Level Psions levitate, using a wide variety of powers to assist the others below them. Among these Psions, the majority of them are masters of Primal Psionics, using raw telekinesis at its highest form. They push and pull things around, smash down onto the planet's surface with the weight of freight trains, and rip apart Kolvaxians from the inside-out.

Among the Psions, only a couple of them possess any form of healing powers. Their abilities prevent them from materially contributing to the battle in an offensive manner, but allow them to save the lives of anyone injured as the minutes pass.

Suddenly, among the Psions, one of them, just a hair's length from stepping into the 6th Level, snaps his head toward a certain direction.

[Incoming!] The commanding Psion exclaims. [Cosmic signature inbound!]

A mile from the invasion force, one of the two Executors taken by the Plague bursts out of the soil and races into the sky. It only takes a fraction of a second for the Psions assembled to identify the attacker.

[Everyone! Executor Huron's doppelganger is here! Be on your guard. His clone is a Bottom Cosmic with a high mastery of Primal Psionics!]

Wordlessly, the elites present snap their heads toward the incoming threat.

Henry gazes toward the powerful Psionic signature as it races up into the sky, then back down toward the invasion force.

Artoria also looks at the incoming threat with an expression of interest.

Diablo turns the Archdemon's head toward Huron's clone and sneers.

"HOW MANY TIMES WILL YOU COME, ONLY TO SUFFER A DEFEAT? MISERABLE CLONE. YOU WILL DIE TODAY LIKE YOU HAVE DIED TO ME A THOUSAND TIMES BEFORE."

Huron's Clone does not speak. It simply races toward the center of the invasion force while conjuring a shell of hardened psionic energy around itself.

The true fight begins.

Part 568: Reaversal of Fate

Executor Huron's Kolvax-clone charges at the invasion force. Its body, already standing at the peak of what a Body Enhancer can achieve, grants it unparalleled defensive capabilities. When adding on to that durability with a psionic force field conjured from the raw telekinesis of Primal Psionics, 'Huron' becomes almost unkillable!

Diablo fires off a blast of destructive energy from the Archdemon's mouth, intercepting Huron's charge in midair. The attack, capable of reducing mountains to rubble, merely knocks Huron aside and sends him crashing into the dirt. He immediately leaps up and charges again, suicidally rushing at the human forces from a tricky angle Diablo can't strike at without threatening the invasion force's battle-lines.

Luckily, Lady Artoria intervenes.

Before Huron can smash into the 100,000 human soldiers, Artoria leaps into his path and slashes pseudo-Excalibur horizontally, batting him aside by using her strength and the sword's hardness to strike him like a baseball. The Executor gets knocked to the side, but the impact is clearly far weaker than what Diablo was able to accomplish.

Undeterred, Artoria doesn't give the false Psion a chance to attack again. She presses the attack, sheathing her sword and jumping into melee range to directly battle with the Kolvax-clone! Her fists smash against the psionic barrier protecting Huron, forcing the Kolvaxian to drop the barrier so he can use his superior body to deal with her in hand-to-hand combat.

When it comes to their mastery of the Psionic disciplines, all the Kolvaxxed Psions perform far worse than their original-selves. Executor Sartran himself possesses strength at the Low Cosmic level, but his Kolvax-clone only manages to bring out the abilities of a Bottom Cosmic. The same is mostly true of Executor Huron's clone, except for one small detail.

Body Enhancer Psions do not lose any physical power. They are as strong in their Kolvaxian forms as their original bodies, meaning Huron's clone is just as physically powerful as his original self, a Low Cosmic Executor.

Artoria's fists smash against Huron's face. The Kolvaxian doesn't even blink, as if pain has lost its meaning. He pounds Artoria back, with the two of them trading ten punches and kicks every second. The sound of thunder detonates rapidly, deafening anyone with enhanced hearing or those lacking ear protection who might happen to be nearby. Several demons in the distance wince as they continue to fight the Kolvaxian horde while sparing horrified looks at Artoria's brutal melee.

"How the hell is that human woman so strong?! Even Diablo has to be a little careful when that Huron guy shows up!"

"That can't be a human! She must be Belial or something! I bet she turned herself into a human bitch so we wouldn't recognize her!"

"If it IS Belial, she's doing a shit job at hiding her strength! Holy CRAP that broad is badass!"

Bullets tear apart the Kolvaxians nearby, preventing them from swarming Artoria and Huron as they duke it out. Over and over, Huron's gaze turns to the humans, as if eyeing a delicious meal just out of reach, but Artoria's fists always snap the Kolvax-clone's attention back to her.

"Your opponent is ME, foul creature!"

Artoria swings both fists toward the Executor's head from opposite angles, smashing his right and left ears with dual-punches that would burst any lesser creature's head like a watermelon. Instead, the sound of steel striking steel rings out. Artoria's seemingly indestructible body meets its match, as Huron's body is no weaker! They seem to be evenly matched in all areas.

Just when it seems like their battle has reached a stalemate, Henry rushes over and delivers a bone-crushing kick against Huron's back, causing the Executor to stumble forward. Artoria punches him from the front, which knocks him back in Henry's direction.

In an instant, the two of them form a silently understood partnership. They exchange no words, but instead treat one another as equals, knocking the Executor back and forth like a pinball as the slower-minded Kolvaxian becomes momentarily overwhelmed by their shared strength.

However, despite their combined powers, the two of them both become frustrated.

Their fists lack the striking power to actually kill this creature!

Thankfully, after Artoria punches Huron backward, she remembers the sword at her waist, reaches down, and pulls it out while also sweeping it in a diagonal line from up to down, cutting across Huron's body.

However...

The Psion isn't bisected as Artoria expected!

Her sword, despite being able to seemingly cut though anything, only ends up biting into Huron's flesh and glancing off his insanely resilient bones! She manages to chip off a few calcium flakes, but doesn't cause a grievous injury as intended.

Her reward for this failed assassination is a brutal punch to the face when Huron counters while her guard is down.

CRACK!!

Artoria gets blasted backward. She slams into the human soldiers behind her, killing ten as her body acts as a cannonball and strikes them with the force of an enraged Executor's striking power.

"ARTORIA!!" Henry roars.

The young man's eyes widen, and his pupils dilate. A savage fury boils within him as he realizes the Executor is about to charge into the human soldier's ranks to finish her off.

"YOU! WILL NOT! TOUCH HER!"

He pounces on the Kolvaxian from behind, wrapping his arms and legs around Huron in an excellent display of Brazilian Jujitsu. Henry's rage causes his strength to escalate, becoming stronger as his rage builds. He snakes his limbs around the Executor, hampering the Kolvaxian's movements as it struggles to break free and throw him off.

At the same time, Diablo continues to push deeper and deeper into Reaver's core with his tentacles, biting through waves of Kolvaxians as they swim toward the surface, blocking his patch and slowing him down.

Unlike the other planets Diablo has taken in recent weeks, Reaver has been corrupted by the Kolvaxians over tens of thousands of years. It was one of the first to fall, and has been continually reinforced by the Kolvaxian hive's toxicity over all these millennia. Taking one of their stronghold worlds is much harder than the periphery ones, Diablo discovers, which means its conquest will require more time to complete.

"YARDRAT. ASSIST THE HUMANS."

Diablo's voice booms in the air. He speaks with a voice capable of projecting across cosmic distances, and as such, Yardrat hears his demand.

The Temporal Deity summons forth the power of a Bottom Cosmic. He opens up two portals to different worlds controlled by different Demon Deities, then creates a pair of passages to the world of Reaver, allowing the rifts to materialize in the planet's sky.

Compared to the immense size and majesty of the Archdemon, the two Deities who appear beyond those two portals do not seem particularly frightening. Their bodies have not inflated in size, but they are both Middle Cosmics possessing strength similar to the Archdemon himself.

Melody, the Demon Deity of Defiance, levitates in the sky with a haughty look on her face. Now fully recovered from the ass-beating Dosena gave her, the muscular demoness stands proudly, unwilling to show weakness before her lessers. Her long black hair hangs down below her butt, while jewelry adorns her face, hands, neck, ears, and anywhere else she can attach it. In many ways, she looks like a punk rocker girl, despite how she isn't holding a guitar.

At the same time, another Demon Deity appears inside the other portal. Kristoff, the Devourer.

Kristoff's pale gray skin, a hallmark of the vampires, contrasts with his glowing red eyes and his fashionable cloak. His elongated nails give him a feral, animalistic look, while his fangs barely poke out from beneath his teeth. The rise to Deity has made him far more attractive to look at, though the loss of his wife has long dulled his cravings for any pleasures of the mortal coil.

Together, Melody and Kristoff release dangerous auras that rival the Archdemon, causing the Plaguehosts below to take notice.

Without warning, Kristoff snaps his hand forward, conjuring a spear made of cosmically charged blood. It jumps through the portal and rushes toward the momentarily immobilized Executor Huron with pinpoint precision. Henry doesn't even get an instant to react before that spear blasts through the Kolvaxian's head, bursting it apart and spraying Henry's helmet with blood and entrails. The spear perfectly misses the young man holding onto the Executor's back, but the near-death experience still gives him the fright of his life!

"What the hell?!" Henry exclaims, terrified out of his wits. He looks up into the sky and gasps.

At the same time, Melody opens her mouth and roars, sending a wave of concussive sonic energy downward with enough force to obliterate a city. This attack, also carefully aimed, smashes into the Kolvaxian horde and obliterates twenty-five thousand of the monsters at once, slowing the momentum of their western assault to a crawl! This gives the Technopath soldiers a brief reprieve and allows them to make some headway where before they were losing ground.

Despite the assist from the demons, Loputo Jidelor glances up at the two Middle Cosmics in the sky with a distinct sense of unease.

[Send a report back to Volgarius.] He transmits over a secure channel to one of his communication field officers. [The demons possess a method to project Cosmic force across the galaxy. They are not as immobile and toothless as we believed.]

Diablo watches the display of power from his subordinates with a deep sense of pride. His cosmic senses easily glean the astonishment and fear from the Volgrim forces, making his real body, hidden within the Archdemon, smile evilly.

The Volgrim are afraid. Good. They should be.

Did they really think my Deities were trapped within their star systems, unable to act during crucial moments? This should give Unarin more reasons to tread carefully around me, moving forward. Heh-heh-heh...

While Diablo gloats, Henry drops the corpse of Huron to the ground, and it melts into a mess of pus and blood, absorbing into the soil as the planet consumes the Executor's vitality for unknown reasons that surely benefit the Kolvaxians.

Artoria jumps back over to Henry. She looks him up and down, then nods.

"Thank you for the assistance. You fight well."

Henry nods as his adrenaline wears off. "Yeah. Yeah! Don't worry. I've got your back."

Artoria says nothing else. She uses Excalibur to make more sweeping attacks at the nearby horde, while Henry borrows a massive greathammer from one of the local Rhino troopers to augment his striking range. It doesn't take more than three minutes before Henry feels a familiar sinking sensation in the back of his head.

A pit forms in his stomach as his Heroic senses warn him of two Cosmic signatures materializing in the planet's core.

"He's back!" Henry shouts. "And this time, that Psion is bringing a friend!"

The planet's surface bursts open a mile away. Executors Huron and Sartran fly into the sky, their attention divided between the two Demon Deities above and the juicy human, demon, and Volgrim assets on the ground.

Huron dives, while Sartran levitates. Sartran places himself in the sky between the two Demon Deities and Huron, while Huron re-enters battle with Henry and Artoria.

Sartran fires twin beams of lightning from each hand, striking at each of the Demon Deities. Unlike Huron, whose bodily strength is firmly at the peak of a Low Cosmic, Sartran is only as strong as a Bottom Cosmic, two entire levels below Melody and Kristoff. His attacks barely even make them flinch.

Melody holds up her arm and takes the lightning strike on her left shoulder, chuckling as it slightly tickles her nerves. She punches the air and sends a focused blast of sound back at Sartran, which he dodges by flickering to the side. Unfortunately, her attack detonates at the edge of the human forces, atomizing a hundred men and women, sending them to meet their maker in the afterlife.

"Shit." Melody curses, glowering at the Executor. "Watch out, Kristoff! If we attack him, we're liable to hit our own troops! Just focus on drawing his attention."

Kristoff nods. He deflects the electrical attack with a blood shield, then creates a whip made of blood and lashes it through the portal toward Sartran, attempting to either grab and immobilize the creature, or to snap the whip-tip in such a way it rips him to shreds.

Unfortunately, Sartran's mastery of energy gives him unparalleled speed. He flickers three times in a row, dodging Kristoff's attacks while giving the Devourer Deity a look of animalistic hunger.

As the two Deities take frustrated potshots at Sartran, Artoria and Henry fight for their lives, desperately holding on as they try everything they can to kill the false Huron. This time, Huron taps into his other abilities, one of which is a powerful transmutation effect. He shifts his body's appearance, absorbing the soil around himself and turning mere rock and dirt into a hammer-gauntlet melted onto his fist. He smashes his new weapon against Henry's face, sending the young man tumbling helplessly backward until he crashes into one of the tanks humanity brought to the battleground.

While Henry shakes the daze out of his eyes, Artoria ducks and dodges Huron's deadly new weapon. He swings at her face, but she drops to her knees and stabs pseudo-Excalibur at his throat. The blade glances off Huron's durable cartilage, failing to behead him.

From behind, a portion of the 5th Level Psions direct some of their attacks toward the two Cosmic threats. Despite there not being a single Cosmic among the Volgrim ranks for this invasion, the 5th Level Psions aren't completely unable to affect the battles between elites. Their long-ranged attacks send up clouds of dust and interference around Sartran and Huron, occasionally making the Executor-clones miss crucial hits or deflect deadly attacks that otherwise might have connected.

[We need backup.] One of the 5th Level Psions says. [Contact Creator Demila. She should be stationed on Tarus II. She needs to make it here in time to reinforce our battle-lines. We must not let the mud-dwellers outshine us!]

His command transmits downward to the reconnaissance squads of the Technopaths, who relay that order through quantum nodes scattered throughout the Milky Way. Not five seconds later, Demila receives the command and starts making her way off-world, through the Labyrinth, toward the Warpgate that will take her to Yardrat's planet.

Of course, she won't arrive for a while, and will need Yardrat to teleport her, but the delay won't slow a powerful Psion by much.

In the meantime, Henry and Artoria increasingly hone their teamwork. Thanks to countless millions of human-years worth of combat training being essentially downloaded to his brain, Henry is no worse at the art of combat than perhaps the great Buddha himself. He easily switches between different fighting styles with fluidity and grace, using his enhanced body to deliver hits that would have killed Gressil in an instant, were he to have swapped places with Buddha. Over and over, Henry's greathammer smashes into Executor Huron's face, back, and legs with enough force to shatter tanks into scrap metal.

Combined with Artoria's deadly Excalibur, the two of them manage to hold the Executor back, though they fail to land a killing blow.

"God DAMMIT!" Henry screams, firing off a punch at the Executor. He sends the false Psion flying backward, but Huron reorients himself in midair to land on his feet. "Why aren't you DYING?! I'm too weak! This suit is slowing me down!"

Henry takes half a second to think, his brain whirling at accelerated speeds well beyond what ordinary humans can achieve.

It's as if the suit is try too hard to hold itself together! I can feel my T-REX straining to keep up with me. It's useless! It isn't enhancing my power, it's holding me back!

Henry's eyes flash with intuition. He communicates this thought to Jepthath, who immediately agrees with him.

[That exosuit is too primitive, boy. It will strengthen any ordinary human soldier, but for a Parahuman like you, it will only make your movements more sluggish and your striking power weaker. Abandon it!]

Henry doesn't hesitate. He grabs onto the power system affixed to the center of his chest and rips it off, causing the nanites around himself to crumble apart. Then he crushes it with his bare hands and tosses it aside.

The wind blows against Henry's face. The scent of death lingers in the air, a smell the T-REX previously filtered out but which Henry can now detect with his enhanced senses.

Dead humans, mostly fallen due to accidental crossfire from the Demon Deities above, or because of Artoria being sent flying, cause strange emotions to well up within Henry. He suddenly feels intimately close to those who have fallen. He becomes momentarily dazed, realizing that human lives are so painfully fragile that if he does not step up, even more of them will perish.

Humanity needs champions. He must become one of them, capable of taking down those who would do his species harm.

His will to resist the inevitable strengthens.

Executor Huron, perhaps sensing Henry's moment of inattentiveness, rushes at the oblivious human as he dumbly looks around. The Kolvaxian Plaguehost morphs his arm into a blade almost as sharp as the false Excalibur, then slashes at Henry's neck.

Henry's body blurs. He drops down instantly, ducks the attack, and pivots on his heel to swing his fist upward at Huron's chin.

CRACK!!

Every bone in the Executor's jaw turns to powder under the impact! A deafening shockwave blasts outward as Henry's punch not only shatters all the bones in Huron's head, but disconnects his skull from his spine.

The Executor careens helplessly up into the sky. His body spins and twists multiple times, and his lifeless corpse eventually crashes against the planet somewhere ten kilometers in the distance, splattering into pus and blood as his life essence dissipates.

Artoria shoots a look of disbelief Henry's way. Her usual aloof expression changes, even if only for an instant, revealing a look of admiration.

"...Excellent." She says. "The suit was holding you back."

"Yeah. It was." Henry says, as he lifts his greathammer once again. "Let's keep fighting! Shouldn't take long before Diablo captures the planet's core!"

Artoria looks deeply at the young man for a moment longer. Then she looks away, her expression reverting to its default emotion of bland disinterest.

The two continue fighting, and sure enough, not two minutes later, Cosmic energy builds up inside Reaver's core.

"Incoming!" Henry shouts. "Huron's about to- what...?"

Henry blinks twice. He looks behind himself, up at the sky, where he sees Sartran continuing to fire potshots at the two Demon Deities who remain hidden behind their portals. Then he turns his head back to look down at the soil, as if peering through Reaver's confines directly into its core.

"If Sartran is still here, then why are there two Cosmic energy signatures on the way?"

Diablo instantly detects the anomaly. The Archdemon's head snaps toward the pair of incoming threats, and a rumble of anger growls in the Archdemon's throat.

"SO. YOU'VE FINALLY DECIDED TO SHOW YOURSELF. AFTER ALL THIS TIME..."

Melody's expression changes. She looks through her portal towards the other one, where Kristoff levitates on his homeworld.

"It's the third Kolvaxian Executor! He's finally decided to show his face!"

"The third one?" Kristoff asks, his face contorting into a look of disbelief. "We've conquered a hundred worlds and he hasn't shown up until now. What changed?"

Nobody answers Kristoff's question, because nobody knows. When the soil bursts again, it isn't just Huron who appears, but a third Executor, the scariest of them all.

Executor Nufaris.

Considered the most powerful Executor, an 8th Level Psion who is also the youngest among his peers, Nufaris was the one who advanced most rapidly during the Energy Wars, achieving incredible feats in his fight against humanity. Despite being the youngest, he possesses more latent potential than any of his peers. Many Volgrim have even come to believe he has the highest chances of reaching the 9th Level.

As for his doppelganger, his Kolvaxxed clone?

Frightening doesn't even begin to describe it.

The moment the fake Nufaris emerges from the planet's soil, every Cosmic and Cosmic-adjacent life-form in the area stiffens in fear for a moment. Diablo narrows his eyes from within the Archdemon's body, gazing at Nufaris with a respect he never expected.

"COME. FIGHT ME, YOU PALE SHADOW OF A TRUE LEGEND." Diablo taunts. "YOU ARE INCAPABLE OF DEFEATING ME. EVEN THREE FALSE PSIONS WILL NOT BE MY MATCH."

Diablo charges up a laser of destruction within the Archdemon's mouth.

He fires it at Nufaris, knowing that despite being a prodigy, Nufaris is not a Body Enhancer master like Huron. His physical strength is actually quite weak!

But when the beam of destruction lances toward Nufaris, it somehow bends around him, curving as if pulled aside by the gravity of a black hole.

Diablo's attack blasts off into the horizon, traveling harmlessly into the Void where it may travel unobstructed for the rest of eternity!

"WHAT?"

Diablo momentarily becomes baffled. He didn't expect this to happen!

Nufaris ignores Diablo. He and Huron instead race toward the invasion force, but this time, they do not direct their animosity toward the ordinary human soldiers.

They aim for Henry and Artoria!

Henry might not normally know who Nufaris is, but thanks to Jepthath's connection to Psymin Miralax in the Hall of Heroes, he has long been debriefed on the various abilities of the Kolvaxian Psions.

"Shit!" Henry exclaims. "I barely managed to kill Huron! I don't know if I can handle Nufaris too!"

"Then don't." Artoria says. "You will battle Huron. Leave the new one to me. I will test his strength."

"Alright. Be careful!" Henry says. "His body is weaker than Huron's. You might be able to land a killing blow with Excalibur."

The two don't get any additional time to strategize. Both Executors race at them in unison!

Huron and Nufaris both aim for Artoria, but Henry intervenes. He jumps in front of Huron and tackles him to the ground, making sure to keep away from the horde of ordinary Kolvaxians as the human soldiers behind him continually mow down the horde with gunfire.

As Henry fights for his life against Huron, Artoria dances with her blade, striking at Nufaris while the Kolvaxian sends blasts of shadow, light, fire, ice, wind, and lightning in her direction. Nufaris summons clones of himself made of different elements, and they surround Artoria, attacking her from all angles.

If Artoria possessed the capacity for it, she might start to nervously sweat. Nufaris's Kolvax-clone continually confounds her senses! When she strikes at one of the mirages, she misses and receives a blow from the side as recompense. She gets battered sideways, right into the attack of another clone as it, too, sends her flying.

Luckily, she keeps her cool. Artoria glares at the main body, but it switches places with her clones, then fires a chain of lightning at her, wrapping around her sword-arm and hampering her slash before she can land a decisive hit on a different clone.

"Damn you." Artoria growls, one of the few words she's spontaneously spoken during the entire operation. "I will not lose to a false idol. You are nothing before me."

She breaks free of the electrical chain, shattering it with brute force. Nufaris batters her around again, but her insanely resilient body ensures she takes almost no damage from any attacks he successfully lands.

From above, a spear of blood races downward, tearing through Nufaris's real body. Unfortunately, the false Psion changes positions with one of his clones at the last second, sacrificing it, then re-summoning it a moment later.

Nufaris ignores the distant threat of the two Demon Deities. The Kolvaxian puts a strange amount of focus on Artoria, soloing her while paying no attention at all to the other humans, demons, and Volgrim among the invasion force. For some reason, it doesn't even seem to care about Diablo...

Artoria smiles. By drawing all of Nufaris's attention, she is actively keeping the humans safe. As long as this frightening creature doesn't pay any attention to them, Diablo's conquest will continue to proceed and the casualties will be kept to a minimum.

The humans, demons, and Volgrim will win the battle!

"Beat me down all you like." Artoria sneers. "You're a pale shadow of the true Nufaris. I wouldn't fear him, and I certainly don't fear you!"

As she continues to taunt the Kolvaxian, something strange happens.

A smile appears on the Kolvaxian's mouthless face.

Artoria's heart turns cold.

Something about the Kolvaxian abruptly makes her feel a deep fear, a terror that only those who have faced a superior existence could ever comprehend. A primal sense of danger that those who are hunters would only experience when they become the hunted.

Nufaris slowly points a finger at Artoria.

Two words speak inside her mind, words that contain a mixture of human, demon, and Volgrim sensations.

[YOU. IN...TER...ES...TING...]

"What?" Artoria whispers. "You... speak?!"

'Nufaris' says nothing else. That strange, hideous smile spreads across his entire face.

Abruptly, he grabs at Artoria, lifting her with a force resembling gravity, but perhaps reminiscent of Primal Psionics.

"Ahh!"

Artoria cries out, but she doesn't have any time to say more. Nufaris suddenly flings his arm. He hurls Artoria away from the humans, out toward the Kolvaxian horde!

Henry catches a glimpse of this moment from the corner of his eye. As he punches Huron's teeth in, he shrieks in disbelief.

"Artoria! NOOO!!"

Unable to fly. Unable to activate any magic. Artoria careens helplessly away from the safety of the human soldiers. She crashes into the mass of Kolvaxians, and they swarm on top of her like ants ripping at a centipede. Her formidable body prevents her from taking any damage, but the sheer number of Kolvaxians grabbing at her face, arms, legs, shoulders, chest, and hair makes it impossible for her to fight back. She opens her mouth to scream, but a hand grabs her from behind and silences her before she can make a sound.

She fights like hell. She feebly tries to swing her false Excalibur around, but the horde wrenches it from her grasp. She bucks and pulls, tugs and yanks, but slowly, she is drawn more and more toward the soil...

Inside the Hall of Heroes, Hope roars at the top of his lungs. "RETURN! PUSH! EXPLODE!! God DAMMIT! Nothing's working! There's some sort of magical interference! Solomon, Jepthath, what do I do?! I can't get her out of there!"

"It's the Kolvaxians," Solomon quickly explains. "They possess a primal form of Chaos Energy. It interferes with magical powers, just like Gressil does!"

"Then how can I save her?!" Hope asks. "Hurry!"

Even with the Hall of Heroes operating at 100 times the flow of realspace, a few hundred seconds isn't long enough for Solomon to think of a rescue strategy. The Kolvaxians have never done something like this before, and it catches everyone off-guard.

"I... I could try and create a piece of technology-" Solomon offers, but Hope interrupts him.

"Too slow! I need something now!"

At that moment, a portal opens on the world of Reaver. Creator Demila emerges from it just in time to see Artoria thrown by Nufaris and swallowed by the Plague.

Her eyes turn livid.

[YOU!]

She races toward Artoria. She stretches out her Primal Psionic to try and rip away the horde, but Nufaris and Sartran both jump in front of her and begin attacking with all their strength. They force Demila to go on the defensive, and she can only watch helplessly as Artoria is dragged further and further downward.

Eventually, she disappears beneath the soil.

Artoria loses her ability to resist. The Plague pulls her toward the planet's core, and her body goes limp. Some unknown power seizes and silences her, just as it has countless others.

If even the Executors could not resist, how could a mortal like her?

"Artoria!!" Henry shrieks, his eyes filling with tears. He glares hatefully at Huron, and his strength erupts once again. "YOU FUCKING MONSTER! DIE!!"

Henry's fist blasts the side of Huron's head. He cracks the hardy Executor's skull and sends him flying, but Henry doesn't stop there. He dashes after the Executor and punches him again, then again! He smashes his face down into the soil and releases an unrelenting fury of fists.

"You worthless! Piece! Of SHIT! How DARE you! Eat! This! Fist!"

Henry atomizes Huron's skull, crushing it to pieces and spraying green-colored brains and blood all over the hardened floor. He snaps his head toward Nufaris, a look of death in his eyes.

"You're NEXT, motherfucker!"

But at that moment, Nufaris's body sags. He flops downward, collapsing to the ground as every drop of power in his body disappears.

At the same time, Sartran also collapses. Both Plaguehosts flop to the soil, collapsing lifelessly as their bodies splatter apart, dissipating into blood and pus.

One second later, the entire Horde on Reaver slows to a stop. The Kolvaxians cease their assault. They freeze up, stiffen, then fall over, all of them bursting apart as some unknown effect ends their lives.

For a brief moment, the entire battle concludes. The bewildered forces of humanity, demonkind, and the Volgrim watch in disbelief as their enemies perish around them, melting into disgusting puddles of goo and bone and marrow that would surely stink to high heaven if their exosuits didn't filter out the rank odor.

Loputo Jidelor cranes his head from side to side. "What happened? Why is the Plague dying?"

"It was that human woman!" Another Volgrim says. "After the Plague swallowed her, there must have been a backlash. Perhaps she transmitted a disease to them?"

Founder Demila frowns. She turns to look at the Archdemon, but its massive eyeless head gives no clues as to Diablo's mood.

[Diablo.] She says, looking at the Archdemon intently. [I only just arrived. What happened? Can you make sense of this?]

Diablo doesn't answer. Inside the Archdemon's body, the Emperor of Annihilation looks just as perplexed as the others.

Nothing about this situation makes sense. Why would the Plague collapse after devouring the Black Hole Construct. Could something about her biology have caused the swarm great harm? Perhaps her unique nature has affected the 'heart' of the swarm?

Diablo continues to attack the planet's core. Over the next five minutes, nothing further happens with the Kolvaxians. He draws closer and closer to fully conquering Reaver, and his mood improves.

"WE'VE ALMOST WON." Diablo declares. "ONLY A FEW MORE MINUTES, AND REAVER WILL BE OURS."

Sighs of relief go up among the invasion force. Only Henry looks bitterly at the area where Artoria was surrounded, ensnared, and taken.

"Why... why did it have to be her?" He mutters. "She was... so powerful... so valiant. She didn't deserve to die. Even if her death ends the Plague's Threat forever, was it worth losing her?"

Diablo's assimilation of the Core continues unabated. Just as he is about to finish the job, a sense of danger appears in his mind!

Kolvaxians begin swimming up from the Core once again. This time, they move much more quickly and aggressively! They tear through the planet's soil, racing toward the surface at speeds three times faster than before.

"EVERYONE!" Diablo shouts. "THE PLAGUE ISN'T DEAD! IT'S-"

He doesn't get to finish his sentence. The Kolvaxians explode from the soil and charge at the invasion force with renewed fervor. As the humans, demons, and Volgrim return to the previous status quo, they grimly fire bullets and artillery into the horde.

But this time, something goes horribly wrong.

It only takes five seconds before people realize that the status quo is no longer intact.

Bullets that once would have killed a Plaguehost instead bounce off them. The swarm converges, breaking through the invasion force's battle lines with horrifying ease!

"Oh my GOD!" A man at the front shrieks. "Something's different! They-"

A Kolvaxian pounces on him and impales its fist through his stomach, ripping through his exosuit with contemptuous ease. In the blink of an eye, ten more Kolvaxians leapfrog past and rip through the men and women behind him, causing screams of terror to unfold among humanity's side.

The Volgrim are no better off! The Kolvaxians shred through their Technopath elites as if they were schoolchildren being wiped out by crack teams of elite government forces. The unexpected ferocity and power of the Kolvaxian uprising frightens the Volgrim out of their wits.

[This is impossible!] Demila exclaims. [The horde! It's become stronger! Their bodies! They're practically invulnerable!]

A chill goes down Diablo's spine. Where before he would have completely ignored any threat posed by ordinary Kolvaxians, now they climb across the Archdemon's body and begin ripping into it, tearing out massive hunks of flesh and meat with their newfound strength.

It doesn't take long for Diablo to realize what has transpired.

Seven Devils. It was the Black Hole Construct. Somehow... somehow... after devouring her, it resulted... in a massive evolution in the Plague's fighting power! How could this have happened?!

* * *

Across the Milky Way, a cataclysm unfolds. Countless worlds besieged by the Plague fall faster than ever. No longer can ordinary weapons and artillery harm them. Even the might of 7th and 8th Level Psions fail to mass-kill the Plague like before. Countless brave Psions and Technopaths perish before they can comprehend just what in the hell has happened.

Red Level Alerts spring up at the Founder's Thumb. Unarin's brother, Randis, scrambles to figure out what is happening.

"UNARIN!" Randis roars. "There's been a collapse! A full collapse! The Plague- it's become drastically empowered! I... I'm issuing a full retreat from the frontlines! This is a Founder Level Threat!"

Unarin quickly runs over to Randis's side. "What caused this? How has the Enemy become so much stronger?"

"I'm still trying to parse the data." Randis says, his tone becoming more frantic as the seconds pass. "Something... empowered physique, nearly impenetrable bodies... every single Plaguehost has gained a body on par with Executor Huron! This is absurd! What could cause such a qualitative leap in power?!"

Dosena's voice speaks from an unknown realm. [There has been an unexpected development on the world of Reaver. Diablo's invasion caused a catastrophe. This is all his fault.]

"That damnable demon." Randis hisses. "I knew we shouldn't have worked with him!"

* * *

[Retreat!] Demila roars. [Volgrim, fall back!]

Diablo chimes in as well. "ALL DEMONS, THIS BATTLE HAS BECOME UNWINNABLE. YARDRAT, BEGIN THE EVACUATION! WE MUST SURVIVE TO FIGHT ANOTHER DAY!"

The invasion of Reaver fails.

In its place, a new horror emerges.

The era of the unstoppable Bio-Plague.

Part 569: Reaver's End

Jason Hiro teleports inside the realm of Chrona, just outside the Spynet Sphere. He quickly enters and finds Fiona, Blinker, Kar, and Initiator Ferrel watching the screens.

He doesn't even get to speak before Fiona turns and interrupts the question he was about to ask.

"Artoria is gone."

Jason's heart turns cold.

"Gone? What do you mean, gone?"

"The Plague. They pulled a dirty trick. The last Kolvaxxed Executor finally showed himself. Executor Nufaris's clone fought Artoria, but he threw her into the horde. We detected multiple activations of Words of Power- I'm guessing that wasn't you?"

"It wasn't." Jason says quietly.

"Then it was Hope." Fiona says. "He failed to rescue her from the horde."

"Once the Plague closes in on someone, the chaotic auras around their bodies will interfere with all forms of magic." Jason explains. "Like Gressil's aura, but weaker."

"Gressil..." Fiona says, returning her gaze to the monitors.

A few moments pass. Jason quickly walks around, looking at the different displays. On this particular day, most of the monitors have been attuned to various worlds currently embroiled in conflict with the Plague. Not only Reaver, but several other planets that were being attacked by the Kolvaxians, most of them along the border of Volgrim space.

"Hm?" Jason grunts. "What's going on? Why isn't the Plague moving? Why did it stop attacking?"

You mean you don't know?" Blinker asks, shooting Jason a quizzical glance. "This isn't part of your big plan? Having Artoria get eaten so you can kill the Plague?"

Jason blinks twice. "I'd never wish that upon her. Even if she is 'just' a Black Hole Construct. I don't want that for Soleil either! This is a horrifying tragedy."

With realspace's progression slowed down by a factor of two hundred and fifty, the people inside Chrona get plenty of time to debate just what the hell is going on while the Plaguehosts remain deathly silent, melting into pus and blood as they submerge back into the soil of the various worlds they were previously overrunning.

"So you didn't plan this?" Fiona asks.

"No way." Jason answers. "If this kills the Plague, it's a happy accident. But I'm not sure the price was worth paying."

"Hurgh. Trading the life of a mindless construct for the entirety of the Plague is absolutely a price worth paying." Kar says, interjecting his own opinion.

"Artoria wasn't mindless. She was sentient, just like you and me." Jason counters. "I know the needs of the many outweigh the needs of the few, but this is absolutely a tragedy. At the very least, Artoria was a unique life-form. She and Soleil are the only Black Hole Constructs that have ever existed."

"Whatever your opinion on what's transpired, it's already happened." Blinker interjects. "We need to capitalize on this development. If the Plague is really dead, then that means the Volgrim military has become free to do what it wants again! This is a nightmare scenario for humanity."

Jason's expression turns ugly. "That's a good point. So what the hell do we do? Humanity is the weakest major faction in the Milky Way, outside the collective might of the monsters. But they're relatively neutral and don't present a threat to the demons or Volgrim, so they will get ignored or recruited."

"You can say this was all deliberate. Part of a plan." Kar offers. "You've been acting all secret and quiet-like, recently. Really picking up on this King's big brain moves. I bet you could convince the Volgrim to think so."

Jason exchanges a glance with Fiona, then he looks at Kar. "You think that's a good idea?"

"Hurgh. Don't give specifics." Kar growls. "Never give those. Just be general. You made Artoria. She was a test. The Plague ate her. The Plague is dead. All part of your plan. Then you just let the Volgrim guess what comes next. You keep them guessing."

Fiona strokes her chin. "I... think this is worth considering."

Initiator Ferrel looks at the others around him, the humans and monsters. [I do not think your plan will work. Founder Unarin is wise. Founder Unarin will see through this facade.]

Jason looks at the Initiator, then he looks away. He closes his eyes and massages the bridge of his nose.

"We can't be direct about it." Jason says. "If I just come out and laugh like an idiot, saying 'It was all part of my master plan!' he'll see right through it."

"Then go about this in an indirect way." Fiona encourages. "Let hints slip. Keep people guessing what your next move is. You did make Artoria. She was eaten. The Plague died. These facts are indisputable. It's not hard to tie everything together."

Jason scrunches up his face. The thought of weaponizing poor Artoria's death makes him feel a little ill, but if he can prevent further deaths...

"Alright. Let's brainstorm how we'll do this then. As a famous man once said, never let a tragedy go to waste. Humanity needs any leg-up it can get. We'll starts by disseminating information through our soldiers, making rumors spread about how I-"

"Wait!" Blinker suddenly exclaims, interrupting him.

Jason turns to the fairy, where he sees her looking at one of the monitors focused on the world of Reaver.

"What is it?" Jason asks.

"Something's changed." Blinker says. "Our soldiers look spooked."

Seconds pass in realspace. Each one requires 250 seconds to pass inside Chrona, but all the major players wait with bated breath as time crawls forward at a glacial pace.

"No... no this is impossible." Jason whispers. "Detect! Scan!"

He transmits multiple Words of Power through one of the monitors, investigating the status of Reaver.

"IT'S ALIVE?!" Jason cries out, horrified. "Artoria didn't kill the Plague! She only paused it!"

"Across the whole galaxy." Fiona adds, looking spooked. "But now it's back. What happened? Was it simply frozen for a brief period?"

Nobody answers her. They simply wait, allowing minutes to pass as they watch the Plaguehosts slowly claw their way back to the surface.

"They're faster." Jason says, his throat dry. "Three times faster. Look how quickly the Kolvaxians are burrowing out of Reaver's core."

"Faster is bad." Fiona says. "Really bad."

One realspace minute passes. This translates to over 4 hours in Chrona time.

Even so, nobody relaxes. Jason, Fiona, Blinker, Kar, and Initiator Ferrel all watch the screens with tight faces. They wait, and wait, and wait some more.

"The first Kolvaxian just made landfall." Fiona says quietly. "East-side. Three more will follow in two real-seconds."

And so, they do. Time continues to crawl forward as hundreds and hundreds of Kolvaxians emerge and charge at the human and Volgrim forces enveloping the demons in the center.

Suddenly, Fiona's eyes widen.

"Oh my god!"

Jason follows her gaze to the monitor, but he doesn't see anything that stands out, just human soldiers firing into the wall of encroaching Kolvaxians.

"What? What is it?" Jason asks, bewildered.

"The Kolvaxians! They... they've become bulletproof! Our weapons aren't hurting them at all!"

Blinker goes still. Her heart skips a beat.

Almost in unison, everyone in the Spynet Sphere comes to the same conclusion at once.

"Artoria." Jason says. "She... her body... she must have..."

"We have to move fast!" Fiona shrieks. "Jason! Quick, start teleporting our people out of there!"

"I'm not commanding the operation!" Jason shouts back. "It would be a breach of-"

"Fuck protocol." She snaps, looking at him with angry eyes. "Save our people! HURRY!"

Jason takes three seconds to react. Three precious seconds that don't amount to much time in realspace, but they aren't nothing either.

Without answering his mind-wife directly, he turns his attention to the humans at the front of the horde. "Return! Return! Return! Shit!!"

To his horror, he finds that the soldiers closest to the horde have already been enveloped by bubbles of chaotic energy, preventing his Wordsmithing from reaching them. Decisively, he switches gears, targeting people further back, but still as close to the front as he can manage.

"Return! Return! Return!"

This time, he finds success. People vanish one at a time from amidst the horde, reappearing on Yardrat's staging world as the designated fallback point.

Every Chrona-second, Jason manages to save one to two people at a time. He repeats the same word, over and over and over.

And over.

And over...

Roughly three to four hundred people disappear from Reaver's surface every real-time second. They disappear so fast that only Initiator Ferrel notices a certain anomaly.

[Jason Hiro is not the only one teleporting humans away.] Ferrel says, transmitting his telepathic words to everyone except for Jason, so as to not distract him. [I suspect Hope Hiro is also rescuing his fellow humans.]

"Good." Fiona whispers, as she shoots a glance at Jason. "We need to move quickly, no matter what."

Jason says the word Return so many times in such rapid succession that he starts to feel dizzy. He pauses to catch his breath, as well as to activate a mana bead, causing ten seconds to pass and just as many people to possibly die to the Plague.

"Not fast enough." He mutters. "Fuck it. Time for me to get serious."

Jason focuses his mind. He narrows his eyes, then look at the monitor with deep intent.

"Da! Da! Da! Da! Da!"

He fires off a single syllable, barely even a word at all. Each time he speaks, a person disappears, but this time at nearly twice the speed they were vanishing before.

Fiona looks at him with a complicated gaze. It seems his training has paid off. He's finally putting that new skill to good use...

Over the next minutes, the army of 100,000 humans dwindles down, disappearing quickly as Jason and Hope work in tandem. Unfortunately, sometimes both of them target the same person, causing that person to teleport to the same location twice. These happen more and more frequently, wasting time and mana as their lack of communication starts to bite them in the ass. The fewer the humans who remain, the more often they come into conflict.

"Da! Da! Da! Fuck you Hope, you fucking idiot!" Jason roars. "Quick picking the same people as me, you stupid piece of-! Da! DA! DA!!"

All the while, Fiona and the others can only stand and watch, hoping the Wordsmiths will save as many lives as they possibly can.

The only help they can provide is moral support. No more than that, even if their hearts ache to do so.

On the world of Reaver, the situation becomes more and more dire by the second. Weapons fail to inflict material damage on the Plaguehosts. Only the attacks of powerful Cosmics and Cosmic-adjacent individuals, such as Diablo, Melody, Kristoff, Demila, and even Henry, can so much as push back the Plague for moments at a time. As for killing them, only Diablo and Kristoff have the strength, and only when they focus their attacks to inflict the greatest amount of damage on the smallest area. Wiping out swathes of Plaguehosts has become completely impossible.

Seeing the horde fall upon a pair of female soldiers who are too close to the front to be teleported out, Henry explodes with rage.

"YOU WILL NOT HURT THEM!" The young man roars, his muscles bulging with veins. Heroically, perhaps even suicidally, he jumps toward the two women, spreads his arms, then claps his hands together with every drop of strength his body can summon.

BOOOOM!!!

A shockwave detonates from the point where his palms meet, slamming into the horde and blasting their bodies backward! The women cry out and hold onto the ground, but they nearly get swept away as well. Luckily, Henry is able to react quickly enough to grab both of them under his arms and jump backward.

Not even two seconds later, the horde fills in the gap Henry made and continues clawing forward, each Plaguehost charging over the others nearby as they silently charge toward the juicy mortal flesh before them.

The faceless monsters wreak havoc, killing more than a thousand humans the Wordsmiths were unable to save in time. Eventually, Henry is the last to be pulled off Reaver as the Wordsmiths teleport him out, then cease their activities, leaving the Volgrim and demons to their fates.

"You Wordsmith bastaaaards!" Emperor Crow roars. As one of the few remaining Emperors who has yet to ascend to the rank of Cosmic, she can still put her powerful body to use on the frontlines of the war. Unfortunately, even she realizes her strength is nothing compared to the mass of bodies rushing toward her. She and the other demons are hopelessly outmatched, and the Wordsmiths have stopped teleporting their allies out!

"YARDRAT!" Diablo roars. "SAVE OUR PEOPLE. SAVE THE VOLGRIM. HURRY."

The two portals linking Kristoff and Melody to Reaver collapse, and instead a giant portal opens smack in-between the demons and Technopaths. Without hesitation, both forces rush inside, swarming as fast as they can while the Psions above clip through the top of the portal, all of them arriving on the world of Yardris.

The instant the last survivor makes it through, Yardrat closes the portal.

But there is a complication.

Diablo is left alone on Reaver!

With no allies to back him up, the powerful Archdemon roars with fury at his opponents. He sprays beams of destruction indiscriminately, unleashing his full power at will as he fights off the horde tearing at him from ten thousand different angles.

The Kolvaxians rip at Diablo's flesh. They tear the Archdemon's body apart, even as it quickly regenerates the damage. Like rabid wolves, they work as one mind, a group hellbent on causing his destruction.

At the same time, Diablo finally succeeds in disconnecting himself from Reaver's core. The Archdemon hunches down, then leaps into the sky, ignoring the Kolvaxians that continue to hold onto his massive body. He soars toward Reaver's upper atmosphere, his speed slower than ever as the wounds continue to accumulate. Even the mighty Archdemon cannot regenerate forever...

But, without any other Kolvaxians able to attach to him, bit by bit, Diablo tears the ones that remain off him by using his teeth-tentacles. These giant maws of death bite onto the mortal Kolvaxians, but they fail to break the skin of these hardy foes, instead opting to fling the Kolvaxians back toward the planet's surface.

Slowly, steadily, Diablo makes his way toward Reaver's star, intending to burn the rest away with its heat.

As he flees, Diablo's heart turns cold.

He senses the approach of three Cosmic signatures behind him.

He doesn't even have to look to know who they are.

Executors Huron, Sartran, and Nufaris chase the Archdemon. Most horrifyingly, they bring more than ten thousand mortal Kolvaxians along behind them, levitating their flightless comrades through the use of Primal Psionics.

Diablo shivers as he looks at the terrifying force following after him.

"YARDRAT." Diablo says to the void. "DO NOT OPEN A PORTAL. I MUST FIGHT THEM MYSELF."

If Yardrat were to open a portal, he'd not only bring Diablo to a new location, but also the Kolvaxians still clinging tightly to the Archdemon's skin. Just a single one of these creatures would be a huge threat, let alone more than a thousand of them!

Diablo has to deal with the Kolvaxians alone before he can make his great escape.

But then, from the surface of Reaver, another mass of Kolvaxians begins levitating toward the skies.

Rarely used. Rarely seen. They are the 5th, 6th, and 7th Level Psions that have fallen to the Plague over tens of millennia.

For some reason, they almost never attack worlds, leaving such tasks to the flightless Technopath and monster Kolvaxians instead.

But, perhaps because of a chance to devour a juicy foe like the Archdemon, tens of thousands of them take to the Void, giving chase as Diablo flees for his life.

There's too many. Diablo thinks. The Plague has changed drastically. Every individual Plaguehost possesses a body on par with Executor Huron. Since that is the case, just how much more frightening have the Executors become?

Diablo charges up a laser-beam of destruction. He blasts it at Nufaris, who flickers to the side and easily avoids it. Two of the mortal Kolvaxians behind him catch the laser by accident, and their bodies explode to ash.

This fact offers no consolation to Diablo. The Plague continues to gain on him.

Abruptly, Nufaris accelerates. His body flashes forward at a speed far beyond Diablo's expectations, and in an instant, he leapfrogs the Archdemon, jumping into his path to turn around and face him.

NO! Diablo thinks, horrified.

Nufaris flings his ball of mortal Kolvaxians at Diablo, dispersing them like a net. Diablo tries to slow down, to dodge them, but his massive body is much slower than usual thanks to the serious injuries he's suffered. Countless Kolvaxians grab onto him and join the others, ripping at his flesh with their talons.

Diablo does not feel any pain. The Archdemon's meaty and muscled body might as well be impervious to such sensations, but he can still feel the Kolvaxians worming their way deeper and deeper inside.

Nufaris charges at Diablo. The Archdemon tries to swing his arm, to smash the tiny Kolvaxxed-Executor aside, but Nufaris's clone bends its body through a spatial warping technique, wraps around Diablo's arm, and races toward his head in a single split-second.

BOOM!!!

A silent explosion detonates in space as Nufaris punches Diablo with enough force to flatten planets. That power transmits through the Archdemon's head and nervous system directly to Diablo's body at the core. He opens his mouth in a wordless scream, but he fails to make any noise due to the Archdemon flesh pressing on him from all directions.

BOOOM! BOOOM!!!

Two more times, Nufaris strikes the Archdemon, paralyzing Diablo with those attacks.

Then Sartran and Huron join the fight. They pepper Diablo with even more mortal Kolvaxians, tearing apart his flesh and striking him in the back and legs, battering him senseless until he is unable to resist.

Darkness starts to swallow Diablo's mind. Under the assault of these empowered Kolvaxians, he realizes too late that he is utterly defenseless against them.

"YAR…DRAT…" Diablo says, his voice weak as he communicates with his fellow Deity. "THEY… HAVE… EVOLVED… NOT… HOLDING… BACK… POWER… THE… EXECUTORS…"

Another violent impact jars Diablo's senses. He realizes it won't be long before the mortal Kolvaxians reach his core, the place where his true body is hiding.

No! No, I can't die like this… Diablo thinks. His body energizes one last time as he wills himself to make a fateful decision which will change the course of Milky Way history.

THIS PLAGUE WILL NOT TAKE ME ALIVE!

Diablo activates the power of Destruction hidden within himself. He energizes every cell of the Archdemon's body, turning its internal atomic power into a bomb of unbelievable strength.

In a manner not dissimilar to Beelzebub's detonation, Diablo self-destructs, conjuring a light far brighter than the local star.

The Reaver system vaporizes. Planets turn to ash. All three Executors erupt into rivers of flame as a light too bright for mortal eyes to gaze upon wipes their bodies from existence, causing the nearby star to ignite into a supernova.

Years later, this light will become visible to the star-systems nearest Reaver. As for whether the entities living on those planets will comprehend the sacrifice made, or whether they will care, none can say.

Diablo, the Emperor of Annihilation, dies in a fiery blast rivaled only by the energy of creation itself.

On the world of Yardris, eighty thousand Technopath soldiers, a thousand Psions, and a thousand demons collapse to the ground, beaten and exhausted as Yardrat hurriedly seals the portal behind them. Having narrowly escaped with their lives, the Technopaths suffered much heavier losses than their human counterparts. Because of the Wordsmiths, only a thousand human soldiers fell to the Kolvaxian horde. But, lacking such champions among their people, the Technopaths lost twenty percent of their elite soldiers.

They arrive on the world of Yardris not far from the human survivors Hope and Jason rescued. Immediately, tensions rise as the demons and Volgrim glare daggers at the 'allies' who abandoned them.

Creator Demila surveys the survivors with a gloomy expression. Hatred boils her blood as she thinks about those shitstain Wordsmiths and how they didn't even bother trying to save the Volgrim or demons!

Not knowing of Diablo's fate as he fights for his life, Demila quickly checks the nearby Volgrim, breathing a faint sigh of relief when she realizes Loputo Jidelor, the leader of the Technopaths, has survived.

"Eeeyargh!"

A female Demon Duke shrieks in pain. Her cry causes the blood of every Sentient on Yardris to run cold.

They quickly look around, and find the person who screamed, only for their eyes to go as wide as saucers.

Among the demon ranks, a single Kolvaxian remains, having somehow made it through the portal at the last possible second. It stands with its fist plunged into the female Duke's chest. Threads of green, veiny vines spread throughout her body, making her eyes turn cold. Her face begins to disappear as skin grows over it, and her movements slow to a stop.

Emperor Crow gasps. "A Kolvaxian! It's eating Duke Miranda! Quickly, KILL IT!"

One would expect the full might of a thousand Demon Emperors to be able to kill a single Kolvaxian.

They would be wrong.

With the monster's feet firmly planted on Yardris's soil, it remains standing even as lasers, fireballs, ice-blasts, and raw telekinetic energy smash into its body from every direction. Pieces of its skin sometimes flake off, but otherwise it remains all but impervious to the attacks being sent its way.

Yardrat's eyes turn frigid. "Seven devils. This... it isn't taking Miranda underground. It's assimilating her right here. The Plague has improved its consumption power!"

He immediately conjures a portal to Kristoff's world, then a portal to Demon Deity Vespera's world. As the newly crowned Deity of Quasars, she commands immense shadowy power, as well as the power of starlight and cosmic radiation.

"Kristoff! Vespera! A Kolvaxian made it through! Kill it quickly!"

Yardrat, despite being perfectly capable of putting up a fight, is only a Bottom Cosmic. Compared to his Middle Cosmic peers, he simply lacks the striking power to kill these newly empowered Kolvaxians, and thus does not even bother trying.

Kristoff wastes no time. He fires a spear of blood at the Kolvaxian, but it anticipates his attack, diving underground while dragging Duke Miranda along with it.

"Where did it go?!" Emperor Crow exclaims, looking down at the soil in fear. She jumps upward, using her wings to fly as high as she can.

She receives an answer not long after. Two Technopath soldiers scream in terror as green claws grab onto their feet and drag them beneath the soil.

Yardrat's thoughts turn chaotic.

"Oh no."

Part 570: Elevated Threat

Recommended Listening

The Volgrim have long grown accustomed to the horrors of the Kolvaxians. Their soldiers, especially, are not weak of mind. Even knowing that one of the strongest Kolvaxian mutations of all time has just occurred, and that two of their elite soldiers have just been taken from the center of their ranks with more to follow, they do not display any extreme emotions on their faces. They act professionally, spreading out while keeping wary eyes on their surroundings.

The humans and demons, on the other hand, are not the same.

Screams of fear go up among the humans. The demons completely panic and break formation as they frantically attack the ground, all while also knowing their weak and feeble attacks won't cause any damage to these horrifying new Plaguehosts!

Crow, the Emperor of Sacrifice, a proud and long-lived Demon Elite, panics because she is terrified of dying a death where even her formidable powers cannot protect her.

Dawn, the Demon Duke of Stillness, panics because she has only just achieved enough strength to join the elites of her people, but has not lived a long enough life to actually enjoy that power.

Many other demons shriek and scream, feeling that their long and cushy lives are about to come to an end.

Zagan, the Emperor of Transmuting, one of the demons who was recently uplifted from the rank of Duke, slaps his palms against the dirt. He summons an ultra-hard, concrete-like soil around himself, spreading it out like he did at the start of the battle on the world of Reaver. He quickly creates a stable platform to try and block the Kolvaxians from attacking from below.

He fails.

The newly empowered creatures tear through his transmuted concrete floor and grab a pair of Dukes, a Technopath soldier, and one of the human commandos, dragging all four to a death beneath the soil.

Zagan freaks out. His defensive barrier, which saved him and the allied forces on Reaver, has become nothing more than a minor obstacle to the Plaguehosts.

From above, Kristoff and Vespera watch uselessly as one Kolvaxian becomes two, then four, then eight. They want nothing more than to strike out at the creatures, but their enemies lurk beneath the soil where they cannot be sensed, even by Demon Deities.

"What do we do?!" Kristoff shouts, feeling an ache in his heart. He feels as weak and useless now as he did when his wife fell, months before, to the Archangels. He cannot save his friends, yet again. This, in spite of being a mighty Middle Cosmic!

"I do not know." Vespera says, her expression ugly. "Those bastards will surely show themselves! Surely!"

Henry Cliff looks around frantically, his eyes searching for any solution to this crisis. If he is grabbed by the Kolvaxians, he does not know what would happen to Jepthath's Legion. Would the Kolvaxians gain control of it? Would he become severed from Jepthath's Light? Would it cause a horrible feedback as the two 'hive minds' battle between one another? How could Jepthath's piddly 10,000-strong Legion compare to a force comprised of tens of trillions of Sentients?!

Creator Demila tenses her body. She starts to reach out with her power, to envelop every Sentient in harm's way and lift them above the ground, anything to keep them out of the easy reach of their enemies below.

But it is at this moment when a figure materializes in the air above and races toward the ground at an alarming speed.

BOOM!

It crashes into the dirt, moving too fast for almost anyone to make out. Only Demila, Yardrat, and the other Deities catch a glimpse of the figure.

"Wait, is that...?" Vespera asks.

"What is that fool doing?!" Kristoff howls. "He mustn't put himself in harm's way! The whole war hinges on his abilities!"

Seconds later, all eight Kolvaxians are torn out of the soil and thrown into the sky, their bodies bound together at the waist by a series of linked chains. As they hurtle upward, the figure that sent them flying bursts out of the ground behind them, giving chase.

The entire army looks upward, following the unexpected savior with their eyes.

"It's Commander Hope!" Linda Hurent shouts.

The Wordsmith races after the Kolvaxians, even as they fall back toward the planet's soil below. He summons a sword in his grasp, then chops it at the head of a Kolvaxian in the rear, but the sword fails to land a killing blow, instead striking the Kolvaxian like a hammer and sending all the chained-together creatures hurtling toward the soil even faster than before.

Boom-boom-boom!

They crash into the dirt and immediately burrow underground again, using the chains to pull each other along, even as they fail to break the bindings between themselves. The Wordsmith gives chase, diving underground to pursue his foes.

"That isn't Hope..." Henry says under his breath. "It must be Jason..."

A feeling of fear takes the armies once again as, seconds later, the Wordsmith hasn't resurfaced yet.

"Beneath us!" Emperor Crow shouts.

All the humans, demons, and Volgrim quickly look down at their feet, realizing the Kolvaxians must be about to surface.

However, their gazes turn to confusion.

Somehow, while they were focused on the distraction above, a floor made of steel silently materialized beneath them. It stretches out for over ten thousand meters in every direction, protecting every member of the allied forces from being attacked from below.

Huh? Emperor Zagan thinks, his expression turning to confusion. When the hell did that get there?

"Prepare yourselves!" Crow shouts. "If this floor holds, the Plague will have to attack us from the sides!"

As if to punctuate her words, a sound like a gong being struck rings out eight times in a row beneath the armies. The floor of steel faintly rumbles, making everyone sigh with relief.

Loputo Jidelor, the assigned leader of the Technopaths, narrows his eyes.

This is no ordinary steel! Its hardness is ten, a hundred, perhaps even a thousand times more fearsome! What sort of incredible alloy is this?!

Momentarily foiled, the eight Kolvaxians start to swim to the sides of the ultra-hard barrier barring them from the juicy Sentients above. They burst out of the soil and pounce from the western edge of the platform at the Technopaths, only for Jason Hiro to foop into existence between the Kolvaxian attackers and the Volgrim defenders, his palm raised.

A thunderous blast of energy fires from his palm, striking the lead Kolvaxian and sending it flying backward.

A split-second later, Jason disappears from his spot and reappears in the path of the eight Kolvaxians as they are helplessly yanked away by that damned chain binding all eight of them together. In a manner that might appear comical if the stakes weren't so high, Jason summons a huge greathammer and swings it upward, banging it against the back of the nearest Kolvaxian and flinging them up, up, up into the sky.

Jason looks toward the two Demon Deities within the portals Yardrat summoned. "I lack striking power! Help me kill these things!"

Kristoff and Vespera, despite having been struck dumb by Jason's sudden appearance and reversal of an unwinnable situation, quickly gather their wits about them. Kristoff fires two spears of blood, blasting apart the heads of two Kolvaxians in the middle of the chain. Vespera conjures a pair of twin shadow-swords, sweeping their blades at the necks of another two Kolvaxians. Unfortunately, she only manages to behead one of them, and the other survives with a shallow gash running across its neck.

"Damn!" Vespera hisses. "Their bodies are ridiculously durable!"

The eight Kolvaxians, three of them now corpses, fall toward the planet. They smash into the soil, then disappear, swimming out of sight as they circle around the army once again.

Jason hesitates this time, not chasing directly after the monsters. His eyes jump all over the place, as if thinking about a hundred different things all at once.

Suddenly, the ground explodes beneath him. A Kolvaxian leaps up at Jason and stabs its clawed hand at his chest.

RIIIIP!

It tears through Jason's outer shirt, plunges through his chest, and bursts out of his back before he can react.

"JASON!!" Henry cries.

Linda's eyes widen in horror. "No! Not like this!"

Just as the entire crowd is about to descend into chaos, Jason pushes toward the Kolvaxian that attacked him. He grabs it, ignoring its arm plunged through his chest, and wraps his arms around his foe. Then he dives at the soil, dragging his opponent into the underground depths.

Seconds after Jason and the chain of Kolvaxians disappear, a rumble in the planet's depths signals a massive underground explosion, one that knocks a fewer of the less sure-footed soldiers onto their asses.

"What happened?" Private Ashley McCarthy asks. "Did the Wordsmith die? Ah!"

She lets out a yelp of surprise when Jason materializes in midair on the human side of the army, his body fully healed and perfectly intact. Neither she nor anyone else present can quite make out what the hell happened.

That is to say, everyone except for the Cosmics.

Demila sneers. So it's not the real Wordsmith here. That brat had me worried. It's his robot clone.

Yardrat breathes a sigh of relief. Is he trying to give us all heart attacks? A little communication would be nice.

The soil shifts. The chained-together Kolvaxians emerge, this time more slowly and hesitantly, onto Yardris's surface. Appearing much warier than before, they no longer charge stupidly at the Sentients, but eye the Wordsmith in the sky with a look of intelligence.

Jason's expression turns ugly.

Of the Kolvaxians he 'killed', all but one of them have regenerated. Somehow, seven Kolvaxians remain among the living, despite the fact that three, if not four, should have died by now.

The Kolvaxians yank at the chains attached to their waists, but they fail to break the links. They try to pull apart, to spread out like they did before, but the Wordsmith's bindings prevent them from splitting up.

What alloy is the Wordsmith using to bind the Kolvaxians together? Loputo Jidelor thinks. Is it the same one he used to shield us from below? I don't know if even a Middle Cosmic could shatter it...

Unable to break the chains, the Kolvaxians try a different tactic.

They attack each other!

The Kolvaxians use their own power to rip one another apart, slashing at each other's waists with their razor-sharp claws, severing their bodies in half, causing the weaker-stomached human soldiers to turn green with disgust.

"Oh, god! Why are they- no, WHAT are they doing?" Ashley asks. "They're killing each other!"

But she is wrong.

After severing their bodies, the Kolvaxians drag themselves along the ground, extracting their lower halves from the shackles that bound their waists, then they press their stumps together and rapidly heal the damage, making Jason's eyes narrow.

"So that's why." Jason says, seemingly speaking to himself, but for the benefit of his audience as well. "Kolvaxians used to die easily. Now they've obtained a powerful regenerative factor, in addition to their hardy bodies. They're nearly as hard to kill as Beelzebub and Bael combined."

A chill goes down Emperor Crow's spine.

Just how fearsome would a demon be if they possessed Bael's defense and strength, but also Beelzebub's regenerative capabilities?

Even if one could somehow get past their enemy's superior defenses, they'd still have to contend with a body that could heal itself in seconds!

The Kolvaxians from before are no longer comparable to the ones that exist now.

The one dead Kolvaxian melts into the dirt, disappearing from sight. The other seven dive underground, circling the metallic platform protecting the invasion armies like a small, elite group of trained sharks.

Jason quickly looks behind himself at one person in particular.

"Henry! I'm gonna need some help here. Grab that sword!"

"That sword?" Henry asks, baffled. "What sword- huh??"

He looks down at his feet, and his eyes nearly pop out of his head as he spots a beautiful blood-red blade sitting on the ground at his feet. He hasn't the faintest clue when it appeared, but its size is far bigger than the average longsword. In many ways, it resembles a Claymore, or perhaps a Bastard Sword. At 6 feet long (1.8 meters), it's nearly as big as the young man himself.

Henry quickly reaches down to pick up the sword, but he staggers and almost trips due to its immense weight!

Somehow, the sword weighs nearly two tons, which is well within his means to heft around, but certainly deceptive when looking at the widened blade without touching it. Henry wraps both hands around the hilt, grunts for a moment, and lifts it up, gasping with surprise at just how much weight he'll be able to put into any single swing of it.

"What a good sword." Henry praises, looking at Jason with complex emotions.

Jason looks away to survey the battlefield. "The Kolvaxians will return any second. There are runes inscribed above the handle. They can activate different effects, so try them all out. You shall protect the human side. I'll take care of the rest!"

Jason teleports away, reappearing on the western edge while Henry remains at the east. Simultaneously, two more Jasons materialize on the north and south edges of the metallic platform to anticipate the Kolvaxian's appearance.

With only moments to spare, Henry quickly examines his new sword. He spots five glowing runes embedded on the sword's thick crossguard, within reach of his uppermost thumb if he reaches toward them deliberately, but not able to be unintentionally pressed.

The five runes glow different colors. Red, blue, green, yellow, and brown.

He presses the brown one. Suddenly, the sword doubles in weight. He grunts in surprise, nearly dropping it and allowing it to cleave a nearby soldier! But he presses the rune once again, and this time, the weight reduces by three quarters, halving it from the original weight it was when he first picked it up.

This must be a setting that alters its physical properties. Henry thinks. Lighter and easier to swing around without exhausting myself, versus heavier and capable of dealing deadlier blows. Against the new Kolvaxians, heavier is almost certainly better!

He presses the blue rune, and the blade of the sword gains a freezing cold effect. One more press, and its element changes to water, allowing it to extinguish fire!

The red rune likewise cycles the blade between fire and blood elements, while the yellow one gives the weapon a lightning enhancement. Strangely, the yellow one seems to have a second setting that doesn't do anything obvious, and this is made more confusing by the final green rune also doing nothing obvious.

But Henry doesn't get a chance to ask Jason about the different rune effects. The ground explodes once more, and a single Kolvaxian leaps at him, while two Kolvaxians pounce at each other the other sides, where Jason's Dronesmiths have already anticipated their arrival.

Henry's eyes flare with passion and rage. The memory of losing Artoria smolders in his heart, making him direct a wicked look toward his foe as the Kolvaxian jumps at him with lethal intent.

Automatically, as if having already rehearsed the action, Henry's thumb flicks to tap the brown rune twice, setting the sword to its four-ton weight parameter, and he concludes by activating its flame mode.

"You will PAY for what you did, monster!" Henry roars, charging at the Kolvaxian.

Riiiip!

His empowered sword slashes diagonally across the Kolvaxian's body, from its shoulder to its waist. In a single move, he bisects the creature, then spin-kicks it, sending it flying away. The Kolvaxians impacts the dirt, but it melts back underground, then pounces at Henry a moment later, fully healed after merging its two halves together again.

Henry stabs the monster, ramming his sword through its chest. He beheads it, then bursts its body into flames, scorching what remains of it to ash. In seconds, he demolishes one of the monsters that previously would have rendered even the mightiest Demon Emperors helpless.

He turns to look at the Dronesmiths, but is shocked to find that despite having to face two Kolvaxians each, they've already finished the job. All seven Kolvaxians lay dead, their bodies reduced to ash in the wake of Jason's immense battle prowess.

The looks of shock on the nearby Demon Emperor faces say it all. They look at Jason with awe, reverence, and horror. Never did they expect that the Wordsmith would rise to such heights. Killing Ose a few months earlier was already frightening, but compared to the feat he demonstrated mere moments ago? It was nothing at all.

Yardrat, Kristoff, and Vespera all wear ugly expressions. They look at the Wordsmith with a mixture of gratitude and shame, unable to believe that he defeated the Kolvaxians they were floundering against.

Just as the armies of the allied factions are about to come to terms with Jason's feats, one of his Dronesmiths speaks, sucking the wind out of the area.

"Diablo is dead. The Kolvaxians killed him."

"What?!" Yardrat asks.

"No! That's impossible!" Vespera exclaims.

All three Deities send their Cosmic senses outward, pointing them toward the part of the Milky Way where they last saw Diablo, the area of space belonging to Reaver and its star system.

What they receive back are cosmic waves of blinding light and heat generated by a recent supernova detonation.

Their faces fall. Their emotions become turbulent.

"How... how could Diablo die?" Kristoff asks in disbelief. "He's the Archdemon! He can regenerate from anything!"

"Not even the Archangels could kill him during the Ancient Era!" Yardrat protests. "He'll reappear soon!"

"He won't." Jason says simply, allowing his words to linger in the air. "The Archdemon is dead. And along with him, the hope of slowly overtaking the Plague through his methods has also disappeared."

Jason Hiro sweeps his gaze across the human soldiers, the demon elites, and the Volgrim warriors.

"The Plague has swallowed every world it presently resides upon. All the worlds marked as 'contested' earlier today have fallen. That only leaves us with the question of what we should do next."

Hope Hiro materializes in the air beside Jason. He directs an accusatory gaze toward Jason, his eyes narrowing as he examines his counterpart.

Jason's appearance here has awarded him great prestige in the eyes of his enemies. By systematically wiping out the Plaguehosts mostly on his own, Jason has established a momentary aura of invincibility, one that may yield great gains in the future.

Compared to Hope, he simply feels... superior.

"Then let's talk about what comes next." Hope says, crossing his arms. "I'm sure we'd all like to hear your thoughts on the matter."

Hope pauses.

"After all. This mess is your fault."

Volgarius, inside the Founder's Thumb.

Founder Unarin leans forward, resting both of his palms on the galactic starmap as it projects into the air above the Strategy Table. To his left, his brother Randis stands, his expression dim. Muuxunuu stands on Unarin's right, her limpid eyes displaying no emotion.

"Seventeen thousand, one hundred forty-nine worlds. Gone." Randis says. "All of them fell nearly in unison. A complete collapse of the ranks."

"What happened?" Unarin asks. "How did the Plague become so powerful, so quickly?"

Founder Dosena's voice drifts into the Situation Room from a position unknown.

[I am communicating with several High Psions. We are still investigating what happened. However, I have confirmed that Diablo has fallen to the Plague in the Reaver system. Before the swarm could devour his individuality, he self-destructed, causing the local star to initiate a supernova detonation. The Reaver system is gone.]

"Reaver was a valuable industrial world." Unarin says softly. "Diablo would have proven a thorn in our side, eventually. But his death is nothing compared to the empowering of the Plague. I'd take ten demons on par with Diablo over today's catastrophe. It is only a matter of time before the Milky Way falls, now."

A brief moment of silence follows Unarin's declaration.

Dosena speaks, her tone uncertain. [Perhaps not.]

"Hm?" Unarin grunts, looking up at the ceiling, as if to search for her. "Your meaning?"

[I expected the Plague to immediately begin appearing on new worlds, infesting them like before. But it hasn't.] Dosena explains. [The swarm is acting... strange.]

"Strange." Unarin repeats. "Strange, how?"

[It seems slower. More reticent. I cannot pinpoint the reason why.] Dosena says, choosing her words carefully. [Perhaps whatever empowered the Plague was not entirely an 'upgrade.']

"A minor reprieve, perhaps." Unarin says, more to himself than the others. "I certainly hope so. If push comes to shove, we will have only one option remaining to deal with the Plague."

Once again, a crushing wall of silence fills the room.

When Dosena replies, her tone is ominous. [That decision would be... inadvisable.]

"We've run out of options." Unarin says. "You think I want to awaken them? Diablo was our only chance at winning the war, his ambitions be damned. With him gone, the situation would already be terrible. But now that the Plague has become practically undefeatable, they are all we have left."

[We still have the Wordsmiths.] Dosena says. [Though unreliable, they may yet present an opportunity to stage a comeback. The Sentinels must not be awakened.]

Unarin closes his eyes. He shakes his head, feeling as if he's aged a million years.

"I know the price we'd pay. At least... the Sentinels were once Volgrim. We can take pride in knowing that the Milky Way would still be run by descendants of the Creator, if nothing else."

[Mutual destruction is useless.] Dosena says. [I will not remain silent if you decide to unleash those metal monsters.]

"But will you stop me?" Unarin asks.

Dosena does not reply. Her presence fades from the room, seemingly answering his question in a roundabout manner.

Of course you won't. Unarin thinks, returning his gaze to the galactic map. Because even if you oppose my decision, you know there can be no other way to end the war. The Sentinels are the final solution to the Kolvaxians. They will end our civilization, but they will also take revenge for us in our stead.

A hollow victory is still a victory in the end. I'll seize any win I can obtain before my life ends.

Part 571: Henry's Promise

"My fault?" Jason asks, as he looks Hope in the eye. "My fault? You're going to play the blame game here and now, after this colossal fuck-up? This was YOUR operation! You were supposed to be supporting the invasion force from the rear! I barely got back in time to start teleporting everyone to Yardris! Then you sat on your ass while I swooped in and finished off the Kolvaxians that were about to kill EVERYONE here!"

He pauses to take the smallest of breaths.

"Just how in the goddamn HELL do you get on a high horse and think it's okay to blame me?!"

The crowd below flicks their eyes from one Wordsmith to the other. Many suspicious, if not outright hateful gazes fixate on Hope, while just as many grateful expressions hover on Jason. Clearly, one of the two Wordsmiths has done more to save their lives than the other, and not by an insignificant margin.

Hope points a finger at Jason. "You planned for this to happen! You sabotaged me!"

Bewildered, Jason scrunches up his face. "Planned for what? For Artoria to get eaten by the fucking Plague? Are you an imbecile?? Maybe you think I made it look easy, but it took the cooperation of Henry and two Middle Cosmic Demon Deities to kill just eight of these newly enhanced Kolvaxians. This is quite literally the worst situation the galaxy could be in, and you think I somehow orchestrated all of this to my benefit? What benefit do I get?! The privilege of knowing all of humanity is about to die?!"

In the midst of his argumentation, Jason throws a bone out to Vespera and Kristoff. Without their timely assistance, his Dronesmiths would not have been able to land the killing blows on the final six Kolvaxians.

Hope grabs at his hair. He tugs on it, looking more than a little insane as he points a shaky finger at the First Wordsmith. "I don't KNOW what your plan is! I just know you always have a way of fucking up in such a way it makes ME look bad! And what a coincidence that you made Artoria and she just so happened to be the catalyst that empowered the Plague. You MUST have done this intentionally!"

Yardrat looks at Hope with an expression of disbelief. "Do you even hear yourself right now? What in the Seven Hells is rolling around in your head? A bag of rocks?"

"Don't you see it?!" Hope snarls, directing his rage at the Bottom Cosmic who dared to speak up. "Diablo is DEAD! You think this chicanery happened by accident? No! Jason orchestrated it! Somehow, he benefits, just you wait and see! He already has safe havens made for the humans. He gets to come out on top, looking like the good guy, while punishing everyone else!"

Yardrat raises an eyebrow, but it's Emperor Crow who speaks next.

"I don't know if Jason has some plot or if you're a raving lunatic babbling nonsense. But what I DO know is both of you only teleported the humans off-world. What about us? What about the demons and Volgrim? Were you just going to leave us to DIE?!"

Kristoff's expression turns ugly. "Answer the question, Wordsmiths! Both of you! This was a betrayal, plain and simple!"

Loputo Jidelor says nothing, but he pays careful attention to the body movements and facial expressions of both Wordsmiths, recording their replies for archival and later perusal. Perhaps the First Founder will be able to glean important details that Loputo cannot.

"I ran myself ragged rescuing the humans." Jason says. "All together, Hope and I managed to save just under a hundred thousand people, one at a time. Do you know how many times I had to say the word 'Return'? Quite literally seventy thousand times. Hope probably rescued forty thousand while I rescued sixty. Not that I was counting, but I was so exhausted I wanted to die by the end. I only recovered enough to intervene with my Dronesmiths because I was able to take a power-nap for a few hours."

Hope grimaces. "The situation was similar for me. Even pulling upon Excalibur's power, I barely managed to save the humans. I hoped Yardrat would be able to save the demons, and he did, as Solomon advised. I fell unconscious afterward and only woke up right as Jason killed the last Kolvaxians."

Hearing that both Wordsmiths were somehow sleeping or unconscious for 'several hours' confuses the demons and humans, but the Volgrim aren't quite so befuddled.

"You were both residing within time-accelerated domains." Loputo Jidelor points out. "That is why you were able to rescue so many humans, so quickly. But you still gambled with our lives. That was unacceptable."

"I don't care what your excuses were." Yardrat adds. "I knew opening a portal would risk bringing the Plague to Yardris, and I was right. We're lucky everyone didn't die at the end."

"Not lucky." Jason says. "I planned for several negative contingencies in the months leading up to this operation. I never could have planned for the Plague to become so terrifying, but I did anticipate needing to fight the Executor Plaguehosts. My Dronesmiths were well-equipped for the situation at hand."

Hope sneers. "And yet you claim you didn't plan this all out! How convenient that you ended up the strongest player at the end."

Jason glares at his clone. "Do you want to fight, Hope? We can fight. I'm exhausted, but so are you. Maybe, while the newly empowered Plague rips our galaxy apart, you and I can beat each other to death and let the others die in the aftermath. Is that what you want?"

"Boys, boys, calm down your raging hormones." Vespera says, intervening with her words. "You're embarrassing yourselves! Hope might be throwing random accusations around, but he has made a few points I find hard to ignore. Jason, it is not unreasonable to point out that you have benefited from the death of Diablo and the revelation to us of your power. All I can say is that I'm disappointed beyond belief by how today's events have transpired. Maybe this was a big win for the First Wordsmith, but overall I feel it was a terrible loss for ALL the Sentients present. Our Foe is stronger than ever, while we have only weakened."

Kristoff nods at his comrade from across their two portals. "Well-spoken, Vespera. Everyone, let us set aside the ugly matters. What are we going to do next, now that the Plague has become practically invincible? Expecting Middle Cosmics to shred through their mortal bodies one at a time is infeasible. I'd die of exhaustion before I killed fifty thousand, let alone a million, billion, or trillion Plaguehosts."

[I need to contact the Founders.] Demila says. [It is clear that the trust we've extended each other has become compromised. At the same time, we need each other more than ever, barring some unknown trump card the Wordsmiths are holding in reserve.]

Demila directs a withering glare Jason's way. He frowns at her.

"Don't look at me. I'm NOT holding some secret from all of you. What happened today was a tragedy. I didn't mastermind some brilliant plan to benefit humanity and fuck over the rest of you. All of this was an accident!"

[Yes, that is what you've claimed.] Demila says, not deigning to continue the line of discussion. [I've received tentative word from the Second Founder that the Plague has ceased its activities for the moment. No further worlds have been attacked, which indicates some unknown variable at play.]

Hope glowers at Jason, but he doesn't speak his concerns.

As if we don't all know who might have put that 'unknown variable' into play. Bastard, Jason...

His animosity isn't hidden at all, so Jason easily picks up on it. He doesn't confront his clone though, and instead moves on to other things.

"Gate. All humans, step through and return to Tarus II. Volgrim, I can open a gate back to Volgarius, if you'd like."

He materializes a false Warpgate that connects back to a designated position on Tarus II, allowing the human soldiers to start filing through, but the Volgrim reject his offer.

[No need.] Demila says. [We will return using Deity Yardrat's methods.]

Jason nods. She doesn't trust me now. All because of what Hope has been insinuating. For fuck's sake...

The humans go their own way, while the demons and Volgrim stick together, shooting side-glances at their former allies. The betrayal by the humans, whether intentional or unintentional, rubs both of them the wrong way. And while the demons might not have Diablo on their side anymore, thus drastically reducing their bargaining power, they have already demonstrated the ability to project Middle Cosmic fighting power throughout the Milky Way. They still have ways to make inroads with the Volgrim if the situation continues to worsen, and it likely will.

As for the puny humans? Aside from the Wordsmiths and Henry, they are clearly still the weakest faction. They won't last long if they don't come back to the bargaining table while offering serious concessions.

Jason thinks about these facts, and many others, as he and Hope herd the soldiers into the portal that will take all of them back to the Northern Side of Tarus II. Once everyone steps through, Jason closes the portal, then he turns to Henry.

"You made good use of that sword. You killed the Kolvaxian faster than I thought you would. I was worried you might get overwhelmed and devoured, but you didn't."

Hope stands next to Henry, glowering at Jason. But he remains silent while Jason and his 'lackey' make conversation.

"Well, this sword is incredible. I can't believe you made it for me." Henry says, tempering his excitement. The knowledge Hope is looking over his shoulder ensures he can't display too much enthusiasm, lest he upset his benefactor. Ultimately, his station in life was achieved only because he aligned himself with the Second Wordsmith, not the First. "Do you want it back now?"

"The sword is yours." Jason says. "I made it specifically for you after observing your capabilities during training, and during the initial fighting on Reaver. I can't mass-produce more. It is truly a one-of-a-kind artifact. I haven't even given it a name yet; thought I'd let you do that yourself."

Henry glances at Hope, but the Second Wordsmith remains silent. He simply continues to glare at Jason, barely keeping his anger contained.

Sensing the deep animosity between Hope and Jason, Henry sighs. In his mind, the two Wordsmiths should be working for humanity's mutual benefit, but Hope's deep distrust of his former self only worsens whenever the two come into contact. It isn't Henry's place to intervene. He instead focuses on the here and now.

He looks back at Jason. "Can you tell me about the runes? What do they all do? The yellow and green ones don't seem to do anything obvious..."

"You've already figured some of them out, I assume, but I can give you a more detailed explanation." Jason says. "I made this weapon over the span of a week, along with Blinker's assistance. In actuality, it is more than thirty swords all combined into one via the power of Wordsmithing and fairy magic. The runes allow you to change the state of the blade using quantum entanglement. You see, using a sort of complicated series of logic gates, I was able to make it so you can have up to two runes active, enabling a lot of different combinations-"

Jason pauses, realizing Henry's eyes are starting to fog over. Despite becoming massively more competent as a result of joining Jepthath's Legion, he's still an illiterate young fellow from one of the Wild Worlds, lacking in 'book smarts'.

Jason changes his track of speech instantly.

"-combinations that don't matter too much. All that matters is that you can combine two different 'states' of the sword together in most cases, though a few won't work very well. I believe there's a few edge cases that might allow three runes to be active at once, so you'll just have to experiment and see."

"Okay, but what do all the, uh, colors do?" Henry asks.

"The Brown Rune is the simplest one to understand." Jason explains. "Blinker calls it the Material Rune because it affects the weapon's material composition, like its weight, durability, and sharpness. It has three states, making it weigh one ton, two tons, and four tons. We designed these weights to apply to your enhanced body based on our examinations of what you're capable of lifting."

Henry nods. "I guessed about that much."

"Next, the red rune." Jason continues. "The three states are 'off', 'blood,' and 'flame.' The Blood Form will allow the weapon to drain the vitality of your opponents into the weapon, and thus, yourself, allowing you to conserve stamina while sucking the life out of your enemies. It won't be any use against machines, but that much should be obvious. The flame-mode, as you've already found out, is great for burning apart the atomic structure of your opponent's bodies. It's almost like you're swinging around a Beelzebub-in-sword-form, or something."

"So that's what the blood-sword does..." Henry mutters, looking at the weapon in his grasp with awe. "Amazing!"

Hope scowls. He doesn't want to ruin Henry's good mood, and the sword is truly a weapon suited to him, but the fact Jason is slowly making 'his' guy look at him favorably rankles him more than ever. He turns away, mutters the word 'Return' under his breath, and vanishes.

With Hope abruptly disappearing, Henry's good mood disappears. He turns to the side, looking at the spot where Hope was just standing, and sighs.

"Hope will get over this." Jason says. "At least, I think he will. It's hard to say. He blames me for everything these days."

"You're not giving me this sword to suck up to me, are you?" Henry asks. "Not that I don't love it! This weapon is just what I needed! But..."

Jason shakes his head. He chuckles quietly. "No, Henry. This has nothing to do with me wanting to sway you to my side or whatever. I've never disliked you. If anything, you should be one of the people I like most. After all, you fucked over Neil, right? And Neil and I were 'enemies,' so to speak. I don't think that's worth praising, or anything. I'm just saying, in terms of 'where we should be,' you and I aren't opponents to one another. I'm glad to see Hope was able to help you get back on your feet. You were a victim of Ose's manipulation, and Ose was able to manipulate you because I didn't take enough precautions against someone of her capabilities, despite having Solomon's Crown at the time."

Henry frowns. He doesn't like being reminded of what he did to Neil. The moment passes, and he moves on.

"I pray I don't fall for someone's deception that easily ever again." Henry mutters.

"As do I." Jason agrees.

The First Wordsmith continues explaining to Henry what all the other colored runes do, making the young man's eyebrows raise multiple times.

"The Blue Rune is the Rune of Cold. It contains the elemental power of Water and Ice, but isn't compatible with the Fire Rune. Blood should work, though."

"The Yellow Rune contains a Lightning mode, but also a mode I've termed 'Hyperspeed'. It doesn't actually make you faster, but it should greatly enhance your perception of time, temporarily drawing your brain into a concentrated Time Dilation realm 250 times faster than realspace. This will allow you to think faster, mentally train faster, perhaps even sleep faster! Maybe you can get a good night's rest every day with just a few minutes spent in realspace! But don't abuse it, it might have serious negative repercussions for your mental health."

"Finally, the Green Rune. I'm personally calling it the Rune of Health, but you can call it something else if you like. The first setting, I actually got the idea from the Kolvaxians. It will allow you to regenerate your wounds and recover from most injuries, but only so long as you are in contact with the soil of a planet. You will essentially create a miniature Formation around yourself that draws in ambient life energy to heal your body. Think of it like having Belial around whenever you get in a pickle. It should work well in conjunction with the Blood Rune for even more efficient healing!"

Henry gasps. "That is a super-useful ability. Amazing!"

"Right?" Jason asks. "And the second setting is for defense. I based it on Bael, but it does happen to bear some similarities to the new Kolvaxians too. It makes your body extremely durable so you can take heavier hits."

Jason continues. "The idea is that with this sword, you'll be able to adapt your fighting style to different Threats. You can become one of humanity's champions, like Hope and I. We need strong humans if we're going to survive the coming galaxy wars. The sword's powers draw upon your internal mana reserves, so the more powerful you become, the stronger the sword will become!"

Henry nods. "I certainly appreciate the assistance. But..."

He pauses.

"Why didn't you or Hope save Artoria? With a single word, you could have teleported her out of the danger zone. She didn't deserve to die like that."

"We couldn't." Jason explains. "The Kolvaxians have a power not dissimilar to Gressil. They can nullify many different magical abilities within a certain range of their bodies. Teleportation becomes a lot harder, for example. It's why I couldn't rescue the human troopers who were closest to the front-lines. We lost a lot of good men and women as a result."

"But they can come back to life, right?" Henry asks. "The Psion Executors were devoured by the Plague, but they're still around. Can't the Lazarus Tower bring our people back? Maybe even bring Artoria back?"

Jason falls silent. He looks away, his expression becoming morose.

"Sorry, Henry. That isn't the case. The Psions are a special case. Any humans devoured by the Plague will have their souls consumed as well. The Lazarus Tower can't revive them. As for Artoria, she wasn't a human, so she couldn't benefit from the Tower. Artoria... is gone."

"Oh."

Henry looks at his amazing new sword, but he no longer feels as enthusiastic about its powers. He thinks to himself that he'd give it away in a heartbeat if it could bring Artoria back, and the troopers who fell at the front-lines. They didn't deserve to die, and the weapon simply pales in comparison to their lives.

"You liked her." Jason says simply, startling Henry out of his thoughts. "Artoria, I mean."

"I, I mean, liked her?" Henry asks, blushing slightly. "Well, she was beautiful. But we didn't know each other. It was a childish crush. And she wasn't a human anyway. Plus we barely talked. I didn't even save her... I don't deserve to feel anything when I let her die like that."

"Don't do that." Jason says, reaching out to squeeze Henry's shoulder. "Don't diminish your feelings like that. You know, I loved Amelia too, in my own childish way. Then I had to kill her because she became a monster. Now she's back, and it's rather surreal knowing she and my clone are together. Just because bad things happened, that doesn't diminish the feelings I once had for her. You shouldn't hate yourself just because you failed at a task you weren't equipped to handle. Neither physically nor emotionally. Perhaps, if I'd given you that sword a little sooner, Artoria might still be here."

Henry smiles weakly. He looks at the ground, feeling an indescribably raw emotion claw at his heart.

"You're right."

He pauses.

"Artoria." Henry says, looking at the sword. "I'll name it in remembrance of her. When I fight, I'll... I'll keep that image of her in my heart. That way, her memory will never fade."

He looks up at the warm blue sky, feeling misty-eyed for the first time in a long time.

"She might not have been a human, but she fought for us. I'll take revenge in her name. I'll wipe out the Kolvaxians... and if there's any way to bring Artoria back, I'll spend the rest of my life searching for it."

Jason smiles tightly, his lips drawing a thin line as he looks at the sad young man in front of him.

"You do that, Henry. Every soldier needs the will to fight. Make Artoria proud by saving the people she would have wanted to save."

He pulls his hand away from Henry's shoulder, then he pauses.

"...You know, Artoria was a Black Hole Construct. But she isn't the only one I made."

"What?" Henry asks, startled. "Artoria has a clone?"

"No. Not a clone. More like... a sister. Her name is Soleil." Jason explains. "She's taken the shape of an angel, and she lives in the eastern church, topside of the Plateau. You've seen the church, right?"

Henry nods slowly. "She's like Artoria, then?"

"Well. They're different people. Artoria was... quiet. Silent, by most accounts. Soleil talks a lot more. She's also..."

Jason pauses. He lowers his voice and leans in close to whisper in Henry's ear.

"She's protecting the last angel, Cassiel. The last truly-living angel, not like the Archangels who are mere souls contained within rings."

"Cassiel..." Henry whispers. "If she can be considered Artoria's sister, then I'll do what I can to protect her in Artoria's stead."

"Artoria would like that." Jason says, smiling more genuinely than before. "I can introduce you later, if you'd like. Right now, though, I have to deal with today's matters. We'll talk again soon, alright?"

Henry nods. "I hope so. Thank you for the sword, Jason."

"The best way you can thank me is by mastering its powers." Jason says. "Make 'Artoria' a weapon our enemies will fear to go against."

"I will."

With a nod, Jason takes his leave. The Dronesmith turns and walks away, leaving Henry to his thoughts.

Henry looks down at the sword in his hands and smiles.

"Artoria."

* * *

Hope Hiro watches the Dronesmith from the Hall of Heroes. He sneers at Jason's words, growing more and more disgusted as Jason worms his way into Henry's good graces.

"Bastard." Hope mutters, scrying the Dronesmith's movements. "You think I wouldn't notice? What a coincidence that sword is, eh? Beelzebub's flames. Nerissa's ice. The magic of demons, and the entire 'Health Rune' seems a little too 'similar' to the Kolvaxians for my liking."

Hope's eye twitches.

"You may have the others fooled, but not me. Somehow, some way, you engineered all of this. I'm going to find out how, and when I do, I'm going to make everyone see you for the liar and the manipulator that you truly are."

A voice seemingly whispers in the back of Hope's mind, driving his thoughts further in that direction.

He sneers.

"Then... I'll kill you myself."

Part 572: Beauty and the Beast

After Jason and Hope depart, Henry finds himself momentarily stranded alone at the Northern Base. This short period of isolation disappears quickly once the other soldiers notice the two Wordsmiths have disappeared. As if responding to an unknown Henry-Signal, more then ten thousand men and women descend upon Henry and surround him, cheering wildly.

"Henry!" General Chadwick exclaim. "Great work out there, young man! You truly proved yourself today!"

"You were so cool!" One of the female troopers says.

"You didn't flinch when the Kolvaxians attacked! You even managed to kill one!" A different man says. "My bullets wouldn't have staggered it!"

"I was wrong about you. You're not so bad after all."

"Are all the members of Hope's Parahumans as strong as you? Can I become one?"

"You? What about me? I want in!"

"I always believed in you, kid!"

"You're so handsome! Are you dating anyone?"

"Yo, Henry, show us what that sword can do, man!"

"Can you lift a tank for us?"

"We'd have died if it wasn't for you!"

* * *

Countless words barrage Henry, but he keeps his cool. After connecting to Jepthath's power, he has long grown used to the dull roar of other voices in his head, so this crowd doesn't faze him. However, he does grow annoyed by some of the self-serving praises these people are giving him.

That one guy saying he 'always believed in me' was one of the people who snubbed me after the Tribunal. He's a coward and a liar. Henry thinks.

[Most people are.] Jepthath confirms. [Do not fall for the pleasant words of flattery foisted upon you by such types. Everyone wants to get close to a Hero, but if you lose your power, how many will stay by your side? Only the ones who do can be qualified to be your trusted comrades.]

Henry nods and smiles perfunctorily as whoops and cheers go up around the crowd. He pulls out Artoria's blade, then stabs it into a boulder nearby, inviting people to try and pull it out. More than a hundred try, and it eventually becomes a bit of a game for them.

Eventually, Private Ashley walks over to Henry while the others are trying to pull the sword out.

"I'm sorry about earlier, Henry." Ashley says. "I disrespected you because of the Tribunal. You saved my life, as well as the lives of everyone else here. You deserve better from us."

Henry looks at the pretty young brown-haired girl, only a year older than him. Her sparkling eyes catch his gaze, and he swallows a small lump in his throat before looking off to the side, at Artoria's blade.

"It's fine. I can't really judge people for not liking me. What I did to Neil was reprehensible."

"Maybe so." Ashley says. "And to be honest, we wouldn't be having this conversation if you hadn't saved everyone here. But we all do respect strength. I just want to apologize to you because it's the right thing to do. You might be a lot stronger than the rest of us, but you're no Demon Deity. You still risked your life against those Kolvaxians, and you ultimately saved tens of thousands of lives. I think you've redeemed yourself a thousand times over."

Henry's eyes drift back to Ashley. He smiles lightly.

"Well. That does make me feel a bit better. Thanks, Ashley."

She smiles back, playing with her hair as she looks away. "It's the bare minimum, really. I was so disrespectful to you before the raid, I really ought to wash my mouth out with soap. I also don't want you thinking I'm only sucking up and trying to get in your good graces now that you're so powerful."

"The thought never even crossed my mind." Henry lies. "What do you say about trying to pull Artoria out of the stone?"

Ashley blinks. "You... named the sword after Artoria?"

"Yeah." Henry says, his smile dimming. "It felt appropriate, given her sacrifice."

"Were you and Artoria an item?" Ashley asks.

"No. Nothing like that. I will admit to a small crush I developed during the battle but... it was short-lived. She and I barely ever spoke, and I doubt she held any thoughts toward me. Now she's gone. I'll never see her again."

Ashley nods her head solemnly, her expression sympathetic. "We lost a good one. That was the second time I ever saw Artoria fight, the first being when she fought Demon Deity Mephisto. She left an impact, but I wish she'd been around longer so she could enjoy life."

Henry's eyes momentarily harden. A dark expression passes over his face as he gazes at Artoria's blade.

"Somehow, I'll make the Kolvaxians pay. I'll make it my life's mission if I have to. Not just for Artoria, but for all the others who've died."

The two continue talking for a little bit, and Henry's emotions cool. Eventually, their conversation draws to a close, and Henry walks over to Artoria, embedded in the stone.

"Did anybody manage to pull it out?" He asks.

"Not one person." Linda Hurent says, watching from the sidelines. "That thing must weigh a ton!"

"Two tons, actually." Henry says. "In its default state. One ton in its lightweight form, and four in its heaviest mode. Does anyone else want to give it one last try?"

Ashley grins. "I will! Probably won't accomplish anything other than looking like a dummy, but I've gotta try!"

She activates her full T-REX, enveloping her body, then she grabs the handle and tugs mightily with all her strength.

"Hunnnngh!"

Unfortunately, Ashley doesn't even manage to make the blade shift its weight. She gives up, perspiring lightly within her suit's confines.

"Never mind! You must be ridiculously strong to swing this thing around at its full weight, Henry."

Henry shrugs. "Definitely. But we all know you're holding back, Ashley. Why don't you... monsterize? Show us what you can really do?"

Despite wearing a helmet that hides her face, Ashley still freezes like a deer in the headlights. She slowly looks around, where many people are looking at her with hungry eyes, waiting to see what the strongest Orc-Morpher can do.

"I... I don't wanna become an orc again!" Ashley complains. "Orcs are so ugly! I think I'll pass..."

"Come on, Ashley!"

"You can do it!"

"Let's go, girl! Show us what you've got!"

"Just do it! Don't be scared!"

"We're not judging you! Show us how strong you are!"

Under the pressure from her peers, Ashley's hesitation crumbles. She grimaces inside her helmet, but eventually retracts her exosuit, standing only in her normal combat fatigues. After a second's hesitation, she reaches inside herself and grabs onto the power within, monsterizing her body and rapidly releasing the power of an orc!

Her height increases by 50%. Her muscles explode. Ashley roars to the sky as she towers nine feet tall, dwarfing every other human around her and causing them to look up at her with awe-filled eyes. While her true combat power in her orc form might not meet the level of a Demon Duke, she's certainly at the level of a Demon Baron, and her physical body likely breaks that limiter, if only by a little.

Her uniform tears in several places, but she manages to retain her modesty. Luckily, in her orc form, many of her inhibitions disappear, and she ends up standing proudly, looking down on the tiny people around her with a wicked grin.

"This puny little sword won't stop me anymore!" Ashley declares, in a manner more verbose than most orcs. While she might have become one of them, her brain patterns are still distinctly human.

Henry blinks twice. He's seen Ashley in her orc form once before, in a training area, but for some reason...

Has she gotten taller? Henry wonders to himself. She seems stronger than I remember.

Jepthath watches the scene through Henry's eyes. He chuckles mischievously. [Heh. Now there's a fine woman. You don't find too many of her caliber no matter how hard you look, yet this little lady is strangely bashful about displaying her abilities. If she practiced more, she could put up a good fight against you, Henry.]

Ashley reaches down and grabs hold of Artoria. She pulls, and the blade immediately shudders as she starts yanking it up out of the rock. Not two seconds later, she pulls it free and shakily holds it overhead, using both hands as she holds it in the sky.

"Woohoo! I did it! Ashley McCarthy is the best!"

The crowd cheers!

"Amazing, Ashley! You're stronger than I expected!"

"We couldn't even budge the sword a millimeter but you pulled it all the way out!"

People congratulate Ashley, making her think that maybe monsterizing isn't always as bad as she expects. Even some of the men direct appreciative gazes her way, admiring her finely toned and muscled body. The shredded clothes don't hurt her aesthetics, either.

After a few moments, Ashley lowers Artoria, appearing visibly tired. Despite being able to pull the blade out of the rock and lift it up, the weapon is still extremely taxing on her orc physique. She holds it out, and Henry takes it from her grasp. Compared to Ashley, Henry easily hefts the sword with one hand, while she can barely do so with both hands. The difference is obvious.

Still, nobody in the crowd mocks her. None of them even came close to wielding it, so her feat is still extremely impressive.

"You should monsterize more often." Henry says. "Maybe even consider joining Jepthath's Legion. Perhaps your ability could transfer to the other people, allowing many of us to monsterize at will."

Linda Hurent shakes her head. "Our studies have shown that different people have different affinities for various monster species. Ashley is the only S-class Orc-Genome transformer we've found. Other people are capable of transforming with the Power Gloves, but their strength always pales compared to hers."

Ashley sweeps her long brown hair out of her face. She grins in a way that might appear monstrous if she wasn't still human in important ways. Her lower teeth stick out of her mouth in a manner similar to ancient Sabertooth Tigers, albeit in reverse. "You are right. I do not think my ability will help others. It is too niche."

"Jepthath's power defies conventional wisdom." Henry says, pressing the matter a little more. "We can share powers and abilities among all the Legion members at once. In order to make a stronger humanity, I think this is worth a shot."

Ashley shrugs, clearly not interested. But, hearing they might obtain strength similar to Henry, many men and women in the vicinity think a little more carefully about the young man's offer. In this time of uncertainty, a surefire powerup is hard to ignore.

* * *

Sometime later, Ashley reverts to her human form and grabs a spare set of clothes from the northern barracks. She and Henry decide to walk off together, leaving the crowds behind. They wander from the north side of Tarus II to the west side, through the residential streets.

"So." Ashley says. "Was what Hope said true?"

"What are you talking about?" Henry asks, before remembering what she means. "You mean about Jason manipulating the entire situation? About him sacrificing Artoria to take control of the Kolvaxians? It sounds dumb to me, but I don't know all the facts."

"Hope and Jason are always at each other's throats," Ashley says, before quickly amending that observation. "Correction: Hope is always finding new reasons to hate Jason. It's one of the reasons I'd rather stick with Neil. Hope seems like a good leader, but he's unhinged in his own way."

"All three of humanity's leaders have big problems." Henry says. "Neil is extremely bigoted toward demons, to the point of offending our allies like Belial. Hope is always making up conspiracies about Jason, and Jason is... lazy. His inaction caused millions of deaths during Stormbringer. None of them are perfect."

"Yeah, I guess you're right." Ashley says. "They're all flawed men. Still though, I keep thinking about what Hope said. What if he's right? What if Jason really is secretly manipulating the situation? We almost never see him anymore. And that robotic body he was using on Yardris? I hear it's not the first time he's brought it out."

"We can't risk the Wordsmiths getting caught by the Plague." Henry says. "The Kolvaxians have already become so strong we can't hope to hold them back anymore. I don't know how we're surviving the next year..."

"Maybe we aren't." Ashley says gloomily. "Just eight of those creatures nearly killed two hundred thousand humans, demons, and Volgrim. You, Jason, and the Demon Deities may have exterminated that handful of Kolvaxians, but there are trillions more. If we have to fight a war of attrition, we'll lose. It's as simple as that."

"You're probably right," is all Henry can muster up as a response.

A momentary lull in the conversation follows. Henry and Ashley make their way up the plateau into the central district, where they buy some food. Henry gets a sausage in a bun with relish and ketchup, while Ashley chooses a burger with cheese and pickles, along with some fries. They sit down at an outdoor table and start to eat.

"Say, I've been wondering," Henry says between bites, "how often do you monsterize yourself?"

Ashley looks away, blushing in embarrassment. "As rarely as possible. Only during missions when it's a critical moment."

"But why?" Henry asks ignorantly, looking at her in surprise. "During these times, we need every champion we can get. You seem stronger than the last time I saw you in your orc form."

"I do?" Ashley asks. "You're imagining things."

Henry takes a bite of his sausage and thinks for a moment. "No, no I don't think I am. Some of the other Legion members have seen you in action before. Looking through their memories, I can see that you've monsterized at least a dozen times publicly before. Your orc body has gotten bigger and stronger compared to the first time you transformed."

Ashley frowns. She licks a bit of mustard from her lips, then takes another bite of her burger.

"So, what are you saying? I get stronger every time I transform?"

"I don't know." Henry admits. "Maybe you do. Maybe you don't. Or maybe you're getting stronger in some other way. How do orcs usually train their bodies?"

"I wouldn't know. There aren't any orcs on Tarus II, or living in human civilization," Ashley says, before correcting herself. "Actually I think there's a few that were in the Core, but I try to avoid them. I don't want people looking at me... like that."

"Like what?"

"Like I'm some ugly, tall, muscled orc girl." Ashley grumbles. "I want everyone to see me as a cute and dainty damsel, not some roided up monster-thug."

Henry looks at her. He pauses eating to contemplate what he's just heard.

"You... don't know?"

"Don't know what?" Ashley asks.

"A lot of, uh, a lot of the guys are into that." Henry says, scratching his cheek. "You're not going to be scaring anyone away, Ashley. I think rather than worrying about that, you should stop trying to restrain yourself. Just be the best warrior you can be. If it's, I dunno, dates you're trying to get, you will get plenty of them. Trust me on that."

Ashley shakes her head. "Guys are always intimidated by me. I don't think it will work out. I really don't want to be single for the rest of my life."

"Then why not be more assertive?" Henry asks. "You don't need to wait for a guy to approach you. Approach them! Ask them out first."

"And scare them off? Or intimidate them into dating me?" Ashley asks, her expression turning serious. "No, no I can't do that. It wouldn't be right."

Henry shrugs his shoulders. He finishes the last of his sausage and bun, then licks his fingers contentedly.

"I just think you're acting too scared of other people's opinions. Considering you're so strong and cool, you should act more like your real personality. It's better to be with someone when both of you are your true selves than to fake who you are and be miserable the whole time."

"And just how would you know who my 'true self' is?" Ashley challenges. "This is only the second time we've ever talked."

Henry looks away, this time being the one who is embarrassed. "Well. I do have the memories of all the other Legion people. A lot of them have spoken to you before."

"What the heck!" Ashley exclaims. "That's not fair! And it's weird too. I don't get to know all the little conversations you've had in the past, so why do you get to know mine?"

"It's just part of being the Legion." Henry says, defending himself lamely. "If you joined, you'd get the same privilege. We'd be able to look inside each other's heads."

"Ew, no way." Ashley replies, looking away. "Sorry but that's still so weird to think about. Thanks for the invitation, but just... I can't imagine looking into other people's thoughts or letting other people look into mine."

"It's just an offer." Henry says, with a shrug of his shoulders. "Once you get used to it, it feels totally normal being able to know what all the people around you are thinking at any given moment. It's... intimate.. in a way that even being a father and son or a brother and sister can't compare to."

"Or a lover?" Ashley quips.

"Probably."

The two fall silent. Ashley finishes her burger, then she wipes her face with a napkin and sets her plate aside.

She looks at Henry for a moment, then crooks the sides of her mouth into a cute smile.

"You know, Henry, maybe you were onto something earlier."

"I was?" Henry asks.

"Absolutely. You said I should be more assertive, right?"

"I... did..." Henry says slowly, as he notices her playful smile. "Why? What's... on your mind?"

"We should go on a date!" Ashley proclaims. "You and me. Together, I mean. I won't join that Legion of yours, so you'll just have to wonder what I'm thinking."

Henry blinks. He stares at her for several seconds, momentarily lost for words.

"You... uh, you want..."

"What?" Ashley asks. "Were you just huffing smoke earlier? I thought you said guys liked big muscled orc girls?"

A hint of color spreads across the tips of Henry's ears. He looks away, rubs his hands together under the table, and coughs.

"W-well, I mean. Yeah. Yeah, I did say that. And I, uh, meant it, too."

He and Ashley happen to look each other in the eyes, but they both quickly look away, suddenly feeling embarrassed.

"Err..." Ashley grunts. "I've... never dated anyone before."

"Me neither." Henry mumbles. "I didn't expect this. I don't... I don't know what to say. Or do."

"It's probably not a good time to date anyway." Ashley says, moving a stray strand of hair out of her face. "You know. With the Kolvaxians and all."

"Yeah." Henry says. "We could go to war any second. We might not even be alive a month from now."

"And what if one of us dies?" Ashley asks, lowering her eyes. "It would feel... so bad."

"So tragic." Henry acknowledges.

They fall silent once again. This time, a full minute passes as they don't say anything, instead folding in on themselves, thinking only their own thoughts.

Henry slowly stands up. He picks up his plate and garbage, and Ashley mimics him. They toss their food away, then they pause and look at one another.

"Maybe 'date' is too strong a word." Ashley says self-consciously. "Um. Why don't we just, you know, meet up here tomorrow? Get some more food or something."

"Yeah. Yeah, that sounds fine." Henry says, smiling goofily. "A little food never hurt anyone."

"Right! And who knows, maybe we could go to the park or something." Ashley adds.

"Right, yeah, totally. Or do some training together." Henry says. "I have been needing a good training partner..."

"Oh, yeah. Same. Me too. Definitely." Ashley babbles. "Training partner. Mhm."

They both awkwardly smile at one another for several seconds before suppressing some involuntary giggles. Henry looks off to the side, and coughs into his fist. "Uh! So, see you tomorrow, then, Ash?"

"Ash?" She repeats. "Already shortening my name, Henny?"

"Sorry! It just happened." Henry blurts out.

"No, it's fine. It was... cute of you." Ashley says, giggling at her unexpected new nickname.

The two slowly pull apart, then they go their separate ways. Henry stumbles about in a faint daze, smiling more goofily than ever.

[Way to go, Henry.] One of the Legion members praises. [Not the smoothest way I've seen someone get a girlfriend, but praiseworthy nonetheless.]

[For your date tomorrow,] one of the female Legion members says, [you should remember to get Ashley some flowers. Maybe a cute hair ornament. I can tell she likes those things, even if she doesn't say it.]

[Don't do the 'training' thing with her, not just yet.] One of the men says. [Just go to the lake or something. Keep it casual.]

[I completely disagree!] A different woman adds. [You should always follow your heart and be yourself. Henry, you like to train and fight, and so does Ashley. Be yourselves and train together!]

A chorus of advice and well-wishes greets Henry, making him feel warm and fuzzy, but also a tiny bit miffed. Having his private life get spied on isn't exactly something he would have wanted before joining the Legion, but ultimately, he ends up accepting it.

[Say, uh, Jepthath?] Henry asks. [Is there a way to, uh, you know... turn off the Legion-link during... private times?]

Jepthath snorts. [If you are worried about others peeping on you, don't bother. You will quickly grow out of any prudish thoughts once you observe your fellow Legion members enjoying their own raucous moments, boy. It won't take a year before you've observed so many depraved moments of raw passionate intercourse that nothing will be able to faze you anymore. After all, we humans are naturally sexual creatures.]

Henry coughs. He covers his face with his hands, feeling his cheeks fill with blood.

Maybe it's not such a bad thing that Ashley doesn't want to join the Legion. Knowing how self-conscious she is, she might die of embarrassment if they ever were to...

"Cough cough!"

Henry's eyes flicker all over the place as the thoughts of a hot-blooded young man rush to his mind. Several of the older Legion-members laugh uproariously at his embarrassment, trading all sorts of pointed quips as they make their 'fearless leader' sweat bullets.

[UMMM. So, uh, Jepthath!] Henry groans, hurriedly changing the topic. [What do you think about Hope?]

[Hope?] Jepthath asks, his huge grin immediately turning to a frown. [Are you asking my thoughts on his… conspiracy theory?]

[Yes.] Henry nods, forcibly tuning out the other Legionnaires. [It all seems a bit far-fetched to me.]

Jepthath remains silent for a moment.

[That's because it is. Hope is letting his hatred cloud his judgment. After that shameful display, I'm starting to harbor second thoughts toward him.] Jepthath admits. [Maybe having him be the face of our recruitment isn't such a good idea. Meanwhile, you managed to perform well enough that many people will likely begin actively seeking us out.]

Henry cocks his head. [What are you implying?]

[Nothing yet.] Jepthath says mildly. [I'm only expressing my disappointment in Hope's leadership. My goal is to unify humanity into a form we might call Super Humanity. A people united in mind, will, and body. A species at the apex of the Milky Way's strength. But Hope is so hellbent on defeating Jason that he doesn't have his species' best interests in mind.]

Jepthath thoughtfully strokes his beard. [Perhaps it may soon become time for us to… go our own way.]

[Split off from Hope?] Henry asks with widened eyes. [That… I don't know if I can do that, Jepthath. I wouldn't be where I am if it weren't for him.]

[I am not speaking of a betrayal. More like… an amicable parting of ways.] Jepthath says smoothly. [Hope was instrumental in obtaining our first 10,000 Legionnaires, but our growth immediately struck a wall afterward. I believe you are the figure most suitable for expanding our recruitment efforts, moving forward.]

Henry nods seriously. The thought of turning on Hope leaves him feeling sick in an inexplicable way, but he has to admit Jepthath's argument does hold water.

[I'll think about it.] Henry concludes.

[That is all I ask.] Jepthath says, smiling.

Henry turns his thoughts away from this uncomfortable discussion, refocusing his thoughts on tomorrow's date with Ashley.

But Jepthath does not.

In actuality, disconnected from the Legion Net, Jepthath is secretly able to harbor thoughts hidden from the rest of his followers.

Hope's usefulness may be coming to an end. Jepthath thinks as he looks around the Hall of Heroes. Henry is a much more suitable vessel to carry out my will. Hope's efforts have been half-hearted at best, but Henry…

Jepthath secretly crooks a smile.

He is a far better Agent than I could have ever prayed for. It may have taken a hundred thousand years, but perhaps my power will finally surpass its limits in a way no-one ever expected…

Part 573: New Horizons

While the humans are rejoicing over the rise of Henry and mourning the loss of 10,000 good soldiers, the demons find themselves in a truly miserable state of affairs. Not one demon, except for perhaps Abby, the Baron of Happy Thoughts, is in a good headspace.

All the Demon Deities enter the Labyrinth, traveling to it either in person if they are a Bottom or Low Cosmic, or via Astral Forms if they are Middle Cosmics trapped on their homeworlds.

In total, over 100 Cosmic Demons band together in the same arena where Beelzebub once rose from Baron to Duke, and a smaller number of Emperors join them. In total, only ten Emperors hadn't ascended at the time of Diablo's death, making them the ultimate losers who have lost their chance at ascension.

Ultimately, they don't feel too bad about that fact. At the least, the difference between them and the Bottom Cosmics isn't too high, and they can always try and flee the Milky Way if the Plague charges, while the Low and Middle Cosmics will have to stand their ground and die.

A grim atmosphere pervades the congregation of demons. The Grunts, Lords, and Barons sit in the audience seats, while their Duke, Emperor, and Deity leaders stand in the central arena, with the lesser demons having no real say in the proceedings. This meeting is for the elites to determine the future of demon civilization, so they have the most say.

Among the demons, there are a couple conspicuous absences. Emperor Yumagi is not present, and neither is Gorn, Beelzebub, Kiari, or Belial. For the first two, they have their own circumstances to deal with, while the latter three are all demons aligned with humanity. This meeting is only for those who wholeheartedly support their own species' interests.

But one demon stands tall above the others. He is the Middle Cosmic who recently ascended through Diablo's power.

Auger, the Demon Deity of Civilizations.

More powerful than ever, Auger's seemingly fragile old-man body contains a boundless energy. He does not appear intimidating in the slightest, but he still retains all the same lethal power he did as an Emperor, dialed up a million times higher than before.

With Diablo gone, many demons subconsciously cannot help but look to Auger now as the de-facto leader of demonkind. His power is utterly unique, and he presents himself in a way that inspires at least a bit of hope among his peers.

"Everyone." Auger says, waving his hand lightly. "I know that today's events have unsettled you all."

His Astral Body might not be as formidable as the true bodies of Bottom and Low Cosmics, but it still possesses enough strength to wipe any mortal Emperor off the face of the map if they were to oppose him. He easily projects his voice outward so the arena full of demons can hear him.

"Diablo is dead." Auger says. "We have always known that Diablo possessed the incredible ability to regenerate from death in a manner similar to Satan and Beelzebub. During the War in Heaven, his body was crushed into pulp and yet he somehow revived in his Archdemon form. However, that is the extent of his ability. He was only able to revive in the Archdemon's body, but we never saw what happened if he was utterly obliterated once in that state."

Auger heaves a quiet sigh. "Now we know. He is dead. Well and truly eradicated from existence. All the Cosmics here have done their best to search for his body, but not even Serena was able to locate him. We must assume the worst and prepare for what may be our final battle."

Demon Deity Melody grimaces. She lowers her head, thinking private thoughts about how untenable the situation has become.

Kristoff's gaze is like steel. He gazes at Auger without any emotion, waiting only to see if this legendary figure will be able to pull a miracle out of his hat.

Serena, now the Soulmancer Deity, is also a Middle Cosmic like Kristoff and Auger. Her sightless eyes seem to penetrate all of creation, allowing her to see the fundamental laws comprising the souls of all around her, but even she is not certain what actions to take next.

Yardrat, the Temporal Deity, crosses his arms. "How should we proceed? We cannot evolve any further without Diablo. We never had a method to advance to Deity until he showed up. But at the same time, we have far more Middle Cosmics than the Volgrim. United, our military strength should be far above theirs."

"And yet our power amounts to nothing at all." Emperor Crow grumbles. "Kristoff and Melody were barely able to kill half a dozen Kolvaxians. Certainly, should those creatures show up on your homeworlds, you would do much more damage, but we need to be able to project military might across the galaxy, and that is where we fail."

Auger smiles and nods. "You are correct, Crow. And that is why I've gathered you all here today."

Everyone listens attentively as Auger begins to describe his new vision for the Demon Empire.

"In simple terms, we cannot win this war unless we unite." Auger explains. "I want every demon present, including my fellow Middle Cosmics, to submit to me."

"That's your plan?" Emperor Crow asks. "We all unite our abilities through you and thus we take over the galaxy? We need to have faith you won't abuse this ridiculous control to leave us defenseless even after we eradicate the Plague, assuming that's even possible?"

Bael, a Duke-Emperor hybrid with questionable status among his peers, chafes at Auger's statement. "Man! Get real, bub. Auger, there ain't no way we can just go along with such a dumb plan. Nobody's gonna trust you not to screw with 'em once this is all said 'n done."

"The humans have reawakened the power of a long-dormant Hero." Auger says calmly. "Jepthath. I think many of you should be familiar with his name."

At the mention of the Illuminator, Bael's face goes rigid. He momentarily recalls one of the most terrifying moments of his life, a single battle that shattered his faith in his own invincibility and left him mentally scarred.

"No... no way." Bael mutters. "It can't be him... that guy died a long time ago..."

Auger ignores the terror on Bael's face. "Jepthath's powers mirror my own. He is able to absorb the strengths, abilities, and knowledge of his subordinates. He passes them around, granting an exponential increase in power to his Legion as a whole. The more who join, the more potent the Legion's abilities become. Once any individual obtains a metaphysical ability, all the members of his Legion will gain that ability."

Auger's expression becomes grim. "I won't lie. Jepthath's ability is similar to mine, but better in almost every way. If demonkind does not tap into my Power of Distribution, we will someday fall to the humans who have aligned with Jepthath. The only saving grace we have at present is the fact most humans are free-spirited and do not wish to submit to that ancient Hero-King. But as the Plague presses inward, will their compunctions hold? I think not."

Yardrat nods along to Auger's words. "I have said it once, and I will say it again. Auger has never mistreated me or my fellow demons. We have been subordinates of him for a hundred thousand years. When our territories were threatened, he distributed powers necessary to keep us alive. The more who join Auger, the more potent his abilities become. At the very least, demons possess magic far surpassing humanity. We can still defeat them with quality and quantity."

"I have already subjugated the Hell of Blood to Auger." Kristoff says. "You all know this. I regret nothing. I have also come under his power, so he can tap into my abilities at will, and channel additional abilities to me as needed."

Auger smiles at Kristoff, silently thanking him for speaking such words at this critical juncture.

"My abilities have become stronger than ever." Auger says, turning his attention back to the crowd. "Yardrat is only a Bottom Cosmic, yet when his powers are imparted upon Kristoff, they rise to the rank of Middle Cosmic. Do you understand what this means? I have one crucial advantage over Jepthath! He grants the abilities of all his subordinates to all his other subordinates at once, but the effects are drastically weakened based on their affinity. Not so for me. Kristoff is able to wield the full power of Yardrat's magic in addition to his own, making him a force to be feared!"

Bael listens silently to Auger's speech, and eventually he raises his hand.

"Hold up, bub. Are you tellin' me if I joined ya, I could use magic and stuff from other demons?"

"Naturally." Auger says with a nod. "You have lost all of your powers after transferring into Ose's body, but I could make you whole once more. Since you are a Duke possessing the body of an Emperor, you should be able to wield the power of an Emperor if I granted it to you, at least in theory."

More and more demons start to come around to Auger's offer. Right now, faced with the death of Diablo and the empowerment of the Plague, the demons urgently need a way to protect themselves. Many lower demons realize they won't benefit as much from obtaining Auger's power, but at the very least if they suck up to him and offer their currently low-level powers, he might see fit to protect them, or possibly even reward them.

Who knows whether or not one of the low level Grunts or Lords in the audience might end up possessing a unique ability that could win demonkind the war?

Even so, a few demons aren't convinced.

"I'm not interested." Melody says, crossing her arms. "This power comes at a cost. The price of giving up the entirety of demonkind to you, Auger, would mean throwing away our uniqueness. We would no longer be free, but serfs you could dispose of at any time."

"How dare you!" Yardrat snaps at Melody's astral form. "Auger would never do such a thing! You are slandering him!"

"I agree with Melody." Demon Deity Serena says. "I am loyal only to Gorn."

Auger frowns. "Gorn is merely an Emperor. With Diablo gone, he will never be able to ascend. Do you truly intend to follow the orders of a mere mortal when you yourself are so much more, Serena?"

"Caw-caw!" Crow snaps. "What do you mean ONLY an Emperor? Is that how you think of me too?!"

"You and Gorn are not the same." Auger quickly corrects. "Gorn has holed himself up uselessly at this time of demonkind's greatest need, while you have fought bravely on the frontlines. I would be honored if you joined my cause."

"I don't like you talking badly about Gorn." Crow says with a glare. "He is one of my closest comrades. We have ruled the Hell of Calamity together for many millennia. Good luck poaching someone else for your schemes."

A brief murmur goes around the crowd, but it quickly subsides.

"I am interested in joining Auger." Demon Deity Vespera declares. "I was but an ordinary Duke of the Hell of Blood until Glinch and Diablo both uplifted me. If my power can help to save demonkind, I will grant it freely."

Rhesus, the Emperor of Ripping, nods along to Vespera's words. "Me and Ves go way back. If she's with Auger, then so am I."

Another nearby Emperor chimes in. "I'll stand with Auger."

"As will I." Vepar, the Demon Deity of Erosion adds.

"Me too."

"And me!"

"Not me, I'm out!"

"I'm not becoming Auger's slave."

"Neither am I!"

A multitude of voices go up around the crowd. Surprisingly, half of the Deities, Emperors, and Dukes present decide to go along with Auger's ambition. He smiles confidently, glad that so many have finally been swayed, but disappointed that just as many have refused.

Damn that Melody. Auger thinks to himself. She was the most vocal when it came to opposing me. I will not forget this betrayal.

He keeps his anger hidden and raises a triumphant fist. "Everyone! If you stand beside me, I assure you our species will rise to a height it never could have imagined before! I will lead our species to galactic domination! Someday, we will mark Diablo's death as the beginning of our greatest upward swing in power!"

"Here, here!" The demons cheer.

"Let's go, Auger!" Others exclaim.

As for Bael, he listens to the roaring crowd and shrugs.

"Eh. Never mind. I'll just do my own thing."

Inside the Matriarch Armor, Ose glowers at Auger with deep mistrust.

He'd never have tried this when I was around. It's too bad I'm not able to intervene and prevent these fools from chaining their ankles for the rest of eternity. Once one accepts Auger's deal, they can never break free. His power is just as absolute as Satan's Soul Contracts.

These damned idiots...

On the world of Volgarius, inside the Founder's Ring Finger.

"Fourth Founder. Thank you for meeting me on such short notice."

Founder Cuanali, leader of the Technopaths, nods to the young male before her.

"Loputo Jidelor. I wish to hear what happened during Operation Plague Destruction from a firsthand observer. Please speak freely."

As one of the most formidable Technopaths in the entire Volgrim Empire, Cuanali has given up nearly every part of her biological body in exchange for raw technological power. More automaton than biological, all that remains of her former flesh and blood roots is her biological brain, and even that has been heavily digitized to allow for enhanced processing capabilities.

Loputo Jidelor stands atop two flesh-and-blood legs. Those contrast with his mechanical right arm, making him appear clumsy and lopsided, especially in comparison to the killing-machine known as the Fourth Founder. His implants are vastly inferior to hers, another sign of his comparatively lowly upbringing.

Loputo gestures to his left, where Creator Demila stands, her expression ugly.

"Everything I am about to say, Creator Demila will confirm." Loputo says, keeping his emotions in check so as to not embarrass himself. "First, I must start with the beginning of this cycle's events..."

He quickly but succinctly verbally informs the Fourth Founder of what happened while simultaneously transmitting the collective videos and holo-recordings taken by all the Technopaths on scene. Likewise, several memory crystals recorded by the Psions find their way into Cuanali's hands, and her expression turns severe.

She is not a Brain Enhancer like Dosena, nor does she possess the same raw calculating power that Unarin does, but Cuanali still has an enhanced cognitive ability as formidable as both of them! She has long constructed numerous supercomputers hidden within quantum tunnels, computers as big as many mining-class worlds that even Dosena would have trouble locating. Scattered around the Milky Way, each of these worlds afford Cuanali a raw ability to compute and think that make her a monster at innovation and technological prowess!

It takes her mere seconds to watch and analyze every recorded angle of the battle, as well as Loputo Jidelor's personal observations regarding what happened.

"The strife among the Wordsmiths is more severe than we anticipated." Cuanali says emotionlessly, her words eerily mechanical and precise. "The Second Wordsmith has made many accusations, but we lack evidence for his claims."

[I do not know if the First Wordsmith is secretly plotting behind Unarin's back.] Demila says carefully. [But I am prepared to investigate more deeply, if the Founders will it. This claim that he has found a method to control the Plague is deeply unsettling.]

"I have spoken to Unarin about this subject." Cuanalia says. "He is unconvinced. He believes Jason Hiro is not the sort of person who would do this. Hope Hiro is likely giving in to hysterical emotions."

[Possibly.] Demila says mildly. [So, is Unarin opposed to my... investigation?]

"You have his permission to scour the planet for clues." Cuanali says. "Right now, the Plague has ceased all movements. We are not certain what is happening to it internally. Perhaps the hivemind has become compromised. In any case, it has not spread to another world in the last half-cycle. We are keeping a close watch over all controlled worlds for new Plaguehosts."

[I will take my leave, then.] Demila says, bowing her head reverentially to the Fourth Founder before jumping through space to disappear.

After Demila departs, Loputo Jidelor frowns. "Fourth Founder. If I may speak freely?"

"You may." She replies.

"The galactic situation has changed too rapidly." Loputo says. "Diablo was our only hope for eradicating the Plague. Now that it is even stronger than ever, perhaps to the point of invincibility, how can we survive?"

"The situation is not untenable." Cuanali says carefully. "The status quo has been greatly upset in recent cycles, but much of the disturbance has been a net positive for the Volgrim."

She continues. "First, we now know of the False Cosmic Realm, created by the ancient Archangel Raphael. This is likely where the majority of the Plaguehosts reside."

"Secondly, we know that the Plague needs to infest planet cores to spread across the galaxy. That means we may be able to research new methods of slowing it down, possibly even retaking lost worlds once again. If Diablo could do it, then perhaps we can too."

"Thirdly, the Wordsmiths may be able to innovate new solutions for defeating the Plague. Jason Hiro was able to conjure those strange, unbreakable chains. Whatever material he used, it may prove useful for capturing Plaguehosts alive."

"But what if we cannot trust the Wordsmiths?" Loputo asks. "What if they are not being… entirely forthcoming with us?"

"Such concerns are well within Founder Unarin's ability to perceive." Cuanali says, her tone unmoved. "He defeated the Sentinels. The Wordsmiths will not be able to threaten him."

After a few more minutes of talking, the Fourth Founder dismisses her junior, sending Loputo away to think about the latest happenings.

She stands inside the Ring Finger surrounded by circuitry in the walls, ceiling, and floors. The entire room glows an eerie green due to all of the light produced by the glowing wires, morphing her beautiful blue skin into a sickly green.

"I refuse to unleash the Sentinels." Cuanali says to nobody in particular.

"I will find another solution."

Part 574: Tactical Preparations

Fiona lowers her head as a fluctuation of energy surges through Chrona's worldspace for a split-second. She steps out of the Spynet Sphere, where she finds a person she's been waiting to appear for the past several days.

"Jason." She says with a faint smile. "You're back."

"For the foreseeable future." Jason confirms. "I visited Phoebe for a little bit, but I can't be doing that too much moving forward. We have a lot of things to take care of and we don't know how much time we have left before taking care of them becomes untenable."

He pauses for a moment, massaging his forehead as the shift in time-space dilation disorients his brain. The feeling passes, and his body re-acclimates to Chrona's TDR.

"Okay." Jason says, blinking his eyes twice. "Did you finish mapping everything out?"

"I handed it off to Rebecca." Fiona says, gesturing to a warehouse Jason has been using to hold his exponentially increasing pile of projects. "She's carefully prioritized your upcoming tasks based on importance, time-sensitivity, and expected impact."

Jason nods seriously. "The Plague is still inert?"

"No movements yet." Fiona answers. "We've been keeping an eye on Randis, since he's in charge of resource distribution, military movements, and all sorts of other high and mid-level operations across the Volgrim Empire. After the events on Reaver, the number of Red-level events has plunged into the single digits."

Jason massages his chin. "Didn't they previously average a few hundred a day?"

"Yes. And almost all of the red-level events were Kolvaxian related." Fiona explains. "I've done some digging, and apparently before the Kolvaxians attacked the Milky Way, Red-level events were so rare that the Volgrim might only experience one every 100 or so years. The major exception being during the Energy Wars when a few popped up in a short period of time involving the Archangels and Demon Emperors."

"Also the Seven Great Wars of the ancient past?" Jason posits.

"Well. No. Not exactly. The 'Alert Level' system was only conceived after the defeat of the Sentinels." Fiona retorts. "But... records of the ancient past are hard to find. I imagine Unarin has deliberately obfuscated them."

Jason looks at the Spynet Sphere contemplatively.

"He might know." Jason says.

"About us watching him?" Fiona asks.

"Yeah." Jason says cryptically. "At the very least, Unarin has to have guessed we could be. I doubt he'd overlook such an obvious possibility. We should assume the 'obfuscation' you've encountered could also be intentional misdirection on his part. It's plausible Unarin could be doctoring historical archives to throw us off if we search them in the future. He could also have done this ages ago to trip up other sorts of saboteurs. Plus, it's just smart to hide truth behind lies in case another Volgrim rises up to challenge him. Maybe the reports you've seen aren't all true."

Fiona remains silent for a few seconds. She ponders Jason's words.

"If Unarin did know we were watching, would he do something about it? Actively, I mean."

"I think he would." Jason affirms.

The Wordsmith looks off to the side. He thinks for a while before frowning.

"I feel like Unarin would... have some sort of backup prepared in case a higher power began scrutinizing his Empire."

"Backup?" Fiona asks.

"Yeah. He has to have thought of the idea many times. What if an Apex Cosmic from another galaxy were to start peeping on him to gather intelligence? He'd probably have... I dunno... a whole secret language of some sort mapped out in case they did."

"That does sound like something Unarin would do." Fiona concedes.

"Only problem is, if Unarin made up the language, I don't think I'd have any way of decoding it." Jason mutters.

He thinks for a while.

Then, he thinks some more.

"Couldn't I?" He asks nobody in particular, as his mind conjures different ideas for how to deal with such an eventuality.

The two half-spouses remain silent for a little longer before Jason shakes his head.

"Later. Let's deal with more pressing matters."

He and Fiona walk over to the warehouse, where they find half a dozen Psions working with Rebecca, who guides them quickly and fluidly.

[Unknown device, possibly offensive in nature. Placement?] Initiator Dunal, one of the slower-minded Psions asks, as he holds up a palm-sized circular object.

Rebecca glances at it for only a moment before looking away.

"Quantum tunneler. Medium priority. Blue shelf."

Dunal nods, and moves to set the item on the low-priority shelf, while a different Psion levitates a large flat platform with room for items to be placed onto its surface.

[Wordsmithium Duplicator.] Initiator Lufa, the Psion who wishes most to become a Technopath, eagerly says. [It does not appear to function at present.]

"High priority." Rebecca answers. "Red shelf."

Initiator Tarim, the wannabe Changeling, is next. He hefts a large box filled with assorted mechanical parts and looks at Rebecca helplessly.

[I do not comprehend the contents of this box.] Tarim says.

Rebecca glances at it. "Those are the nearly-completed components of the Transdimensional Transfer Array. High priority. Tuck it under the red shelf too."

[What about this necklace?] Ferral, the bright-eyed Jason-fanatic asks. [There is a strange energy swirling about it.]

"Levitation artifact. Bottom priority, green shelf." Rebecca answers.

Jason walks into the warehouse to find a calm chaos unfolding as one Psion after the other holds up different items, each of the six having their own different affinities for tech, with some being utterly nonexistent while one of them is clearly heads and shoulders above the rest.

Lufa, ever the Technopath aspirant, seeks to learn all about technology, a fact that would make him a pariah on Volgarius among his fellow Psions, yet elicits little more than a 'ho-hum' among his newest compatriots.

"How are things going?" Jason asks.

Rebecca turns to smile at him. "Quite well, I'd say. We have categorized and prioritized 70% of your random projects. You have truly been too scatterbrained over the years, so this renewed focus should assist you in deciding what research paths to take your Wordsmithing down next."

"If Fiona gave you the go-ahead, I'm willing to listen." Jason says neutrally. "What do you think my highest priority projects should be?"

Rebecca gestures at the Psions. They stop coming after her with more random knick-knacks, then turn and leave the warehouse. Clearly, she is about to discuss important matters with the Wordsmith.

"The Plague could explode with activity in the next five real-time minutes. It may also not do anything for a day, or a week, or a month. The uncertainty has driven much of my decision making. I have decided to prioritize high-impact short-term gains over long-term ones. I have also decided to emphasize any projects that grant either a high level of combat strength against the Plague's new form, or methods to 'save' humanity and give yourselves more time to improve your situation. Unfortunately, escape is not a long-term strategy as we are trapped in this galaxy with the Plaguehosts."

"How much of a threat do the new Kolvaxians pose?" Jason asks. "Don't hold anything back."

"Simply put," Rebecca explains, "the bodies of every Kolvaxian have become as durable as Artoria's body was. And since she was able to trade blows with Executor Huron, that means the Plague has collectively become as physically imposing as the Executor himself."

Jason's expression doesn't change. He already anticipated this was the case. "Do we have any counters to the Plague?"

"Almost none." Rebecca replies. "But that doesn't mean exactly none. For example, Henry Cliff proved effective in single combat against one of the Plaguehosts. The sword you gave him was able to kill the Kolvaxian in a single strike."

"Henry is an anomaly." Jason says, stone-faced. "I can't just duplicate his sword, either. It's risen to the level of 'artifact.' Even if I could mass-produce them, he had to use it in its heaviest state to land a killing blow. Very few soldiers could wield it."

"What about Samantha?" Fiona interjects. "She's strong enough. Maybe you could make a special sword just for her?"

Jason shrugs. "I can, sure. It's mostly just Wordsmithium and an elemental enchantment amped up to an extreme level. But I can't make many similar swords. The mana requirements alone are ridiculous."

"Wordsmithium is going to be extremely important, moving forward." Rebecca says, sensing an appropriate moment to speak up. "I cannot emphasize that enough. In terms of durability, it is the highest grade alloy in the Milky Way. If we built a fortress out of Wordsmithium, the Plague likely wouldn't be able to penetrate it."

"A whole fortress?" Jason asks with a frown. "That's a BIG ask. The cost of making Wordsmithium is insane. A single ton of the stuff would require... god, I don't even know..."

"Roughly twenty-four days of maximum mana output from you." Rebecca says, smirking at Jason's surprised expression. "I ran the calculations several months ago."

"So you understand why I can't do it." Jason says, sighing heavily. "I mean, even if I succeeded in making a Wordsmithium duplicator, the energy costs alone-"

"That won't be a problem." Rebecca says. "Since your magic defies physics, we can use that to our advantage. The conservation of energy is a physical phenomena related to the 'mundane' forces of nature, such as endothermic and exothermic reactions. However, 'magic' pulls from a different source; the power of Imagination."

"I don't understand." Fiona says. "Imagination, okay, but where does THAT energy come from? Why does it regenerate whenever Jason sleeps? How does a single night's sleep allow him and any other human to fully recover their mana?"

"I have theories, but no solid evidence." Rebecca says. "If I had to guess, I would say the power of Imagination is fueled by Cosmic forces we simply cannot understand. It may have something to do with the innate power of our galaxy. Or it might not."

Jason momentarily recalls a conversation he had with Calanthra regarding the Milky Way's source of magic, but he doesn't bother to bring it up.

"So what does this have to do with creating Wordsmithium?" Jason asks. "Don't tell me you've found a way to generate infinite energy using my power."

"Infinite? No." Rebecca clarifies. "But for our purposes? Functionally endless."

She turns to the side, and holds up her hand, causing a hologram of the Milky Way to appear.

"There are hundreds of billions of stars in the Milky Way. These stars output tremendous amounts of energy in the form of nuclear fusion, heat, and radiation, to name a few elements. In terms of output, each individual star far outpaces you, Jason. Therefore..."

She glances at Jason, and he nods.

"If we can capture the power of stars, we can convert it into energy for the Wordsmithium Duplicator."

"Exactly." Rebecca concludes.

Despite her pleased smile, Jason doesn't appear as excited about the idea.

"I tried converting mundane energy into mana. The conversion ration was terrible. Something like 99% of the energy went to waste, and I don't think we can create Wordsmithium within the bounds of the universe's physics. Only magic can break through that limiter."

"Jason, you're being dense." Fiona chides. "Do you understand just how much energy a single star outputs? If we can capture that energy, or even just a portion of it, even if we only convert 1% of it to mana, that's still a thousand times more than you can output each day."

"Maybe not a thousand times," Rebecca quickly corrects, "but certainly ten times or a hundred times. Possibly more. I think that if we start immediately working on a solar-to-mana conversion project, we should be able to use it to transmit energy directly across the dimensional barriers to Chrona. Then, we can start building bigger projects that will ultimately reap huge dividends over the coming decades."

"Let's assume your idea works out." Jason says. "What projects should we put that energy toward?"

"Our highest priority should be countering the Plague." Fiona says. "But we also need to improve humanity's existence. We need to multiply humanity's population a hundredfold. We need to spread them out across the stars, and we need to ensure our allies are amply rewarded so they continue to assist us."

"Our Cosmic power is nonexistent." Rebecca says. "If possible, we should find a way to nurture human Cosmics. This has never occurred before, but perhaps Henry or one of the Wordsmiths might make a breakthrough in the near future. If not any of you, then someone else. If we can't create human Cosmics, then finding a way to uplift friendly monsters and demons, such as Belial, Blinker, Kiari, and so on would be to our benefit."

"Injuries and sickness have historically been easy for us to cure." Fiona points out. "Samantha has always taken care of the people on Tarus II. But that won't be the case moving forward. Even if our people weren't spreading across the galaxy, asking her to take care of billions of Sentients alone is an act of cruelty."

"So we need magical healing that doesn't rely on Belial." Jason says thoughtfully. "Definitely doable. I should have worked on this ages ago if I'm being honest."

"I want you to focus on completing the Transdimensional Transfer Array as your second, possibly third priority." Rebecca says. "The ability to transfer people across the different TDR-spaces smoothly and without killing them will provide immeasurable value to humanity's long-term stability. Additionally, if we can successfully build multiple arrays, we will have ways to save people in the event of a Plague attack. The Volgrim can't use magical devices to teleport people across the galaxy, but we can."

Fiona looks around thoughtfully. "The Volgrim have lost a lot of citizens to the Plague. If we develop this technology, shouldn't we consider giving it to them as a show of good faith?"

"I don't think so." Jason immediately replies. "Not a chance. It's truly awful how many trillions or even septillions of Volgrim have fallen to the Plague, but the Volgrim are only our ally in this one situation. We cannot afford to give them an incredible new ability like instant galactic traversal. There are too many ways such a power could be abused."

"Jason's right." Rebecca agrees. "The Demons have Warpers who possess similar abilities. We're lucky they aren't very imaginative or they could have come up with better ways of overrunning humanity than Operation Stormbringer showed."

Jason remembers the portals summoned by the Warpers and how Mara's sister Ying-Ying was one of the individuals who helped flood humanity's land with demons to try and overrun them. It was fortunate the humans managed to survive, but the price they paid was truly awful...

As Fiona and Rebecca pause to debate the finer merits of giving the Volgrim this advanced technology, Jason glances at the shelves Rebecca and the Psions organized.

There's one project I haven't started yet. He thinks. I should see if I can put all that excess energy to use in potentially breaking the curse put upon the fairy species. If they become capable of rising to Cosmic, then they'd make great allies for humanity. Especially with Blinker on our side.

He doesn't speak this thought, though. What Calanthra told him was said in confidence, and it wouldn't be right to break that trust. Not even his wives should know unless absolutely necessary.

"Wordsmithium." Jason says out loud. "What are some practical uses we can come up with for it?"

"Too many to count." Rebecca replies. "Armor, weapons, walls, spaceship components, you name it. Wordsmithium isn't just nigh-unbreakable, it also absorbs impacts at a level which no other alloy can compare. We can also make flexible variants with other practical uses, for that matter."

"Why do we need to convert a star's energy to mana?" Fiona asks, changing the subject somewhat thoughtlessly. "Jason can already make fusion reactors. Isn't that good enough?"

"Their output is fine if we want to provide power for a million people, but for industrial purposes of converting mundane energy to mana, they're insufficient. Barely a drop in the bucket." Rebecca says. "Any other questions?"

"No. I think we have enough to get started." Jason concludes. "Time is tight, after all."

"Let's pray the Plague doesn't come flooding into the local star systems at ten times its original pace." Rebecca says, her voice monotone. "We need as much of a reprieve as we can get."

The other two exhale unhappily at her words, but don't bother to follow up with any particularly witty comments. Ultimately, Jason and Fiona are afraid to jinx themselves and put humanity's future in peril. They need all the time they can get.

Jason walks over to his desk in the corner, which has a computer station a thousand times better than anything he'd have found on Old Earth, as well as a single gigantic monitor with more than a hundred windows visible, detailing all of the different projects and goals Rebecca thinks he should work on next.

The sight makes him feel a little sad.

Phoebe's going to have Timothy in four or five months. Jason thinks. Even if it's only in five months, that's 1,250 Chrona months. Almost 105 years. If I have to stay in here the whole time, I'll go crazy. I need to make time for her, assuming the Plague doesn't launch a final offensive.

Every year in realspace is two hundred and fifty Chrona years. Just half a year out there is a hundred and twenty-five years in here. Yet, even with all that time, compared to how long the Volgrim have lived, it's nothing at all.

Can I truly come up with a way to save humanity? Even with Rebecca and Fiona's help?

Unfortunately, nobody can answer the Wordsmith. He hesitates to ask these questions out loud, for he doesn't want to worry his mind-wife, nor his Cybernite assistant.

Hope, you'd better be working just as hard as I am. Jason thinks to himself. I can't be the only damned Wordsmith fighting for humanity's survival!

Part 575: New Hall Resident

While Jason, Fiona, Rebecca, and the other people living inside Chrona work to improve humanity's future, their counterparts in the Hall of Heroes also take the upcoming transitional period seriously, treating it as a potential turning point in humanity's future.

If the Wordsmiths do not rise to the challenge of preparing humanity for the Plague's next onslaught, their species will fall, and the Milky Way will be overrun. Countless Sentients will perish, and the galaxy will become nothing more than a playground for the hivemind. Nobody wants to see this occur, so even Hope is forced to at least temporarily set aside his hatred for Jason to focus on the bigger picture.

Inside the Hall of Heroes, a specially designated area known as the Hall of Transference hangs off at the 'western' side of the special dimension. Isolated from the other areas, its purpose is to provide an area for people to enter and exit the Hall of Heroes as needed, returning to-and-from Realspace through the special means Hope has crafted with the help of a certain Celestial Designer. The room glitters with gold, like much of the Hall of Heroes. With Solomon having crafted the designs for the entire special dimension, he just can't help but make every building as gaudy as possible, making Hope and Amelia feel as if they've opted to live inside the houses of some weird rapper from 21st century Earth.

Hope and Amelia stand together before a large lozenge-shaped diamond. The beautiful white crystal spins atop a magical matrix Hope created with the help of Solomon and Psymin Miralax, both of whom stand a little off to the left, also gazing forward past the crystal.

Amelia waves her hand, conjuring a bit of magical power from within herself to enter the crystal and activate its power matrices. Moments later, a figure made of light materializes across from the four observers, and it rapidly coalesces into the body and clothing of a male human.

"Oh! I made it." The man says, looking around his entry point with an expression of deep interest. "Wow! Zees place is incredible!"

"Welcome to the Hall of Heroes, Hans." Hope says with a smile. He walks over to shake the man's hand, and Hans meets his gesture with a firm grip. "We've prepared everything for your arrival, as you requested."

Amelia walks around the Transference Crystal to stand beside her fiance. "Are you certain you're okay with living here on a permanent basis?"

Hans waves his hand flippantly. "Here, Moonbase Kelkin, Maiura, it does not matter! A scientist lives where zee research can be done most effectively! OH! And you zere, you are zee Technopath I have been hearing about?"

Hans directs his gaze over to Solomon, who he already knows well, and Psymin Miralax, who he has never had the privilege to meet before.

"A formal greeting. Psymin Miralax. Pleasure." Psymin says, her harsh robotic tone and stilted manner of speaking not doing her any favors with the first impressions.

Luckily, Hans doesn't care about such a minor thing at all. Instead, his eyes light up at the thought of getting to work alongside such a storied character as Psymin, someone who assisted in creating the most fearsome weapons the Milky Way has ever seen. He eagerly trots over to her with a sparkle in his eyes.

"I am looking forward to working alongside you!"

"I follow orders. Wordsmith's orders." Psymin says blandly, expressing neither interest nor regret in working with this 'genius' human. She has seen countless genius Technopaths over the eons, and so she is not easily impressed anymore. Certainly not by a random mud-dweller. In her eyes, the smartest human is about as impressive as the smartest ant, with Solomon being the lone exception. "Working with you. I will comply."

If Hans notices her dismissive attitude, he doesn't show it on his face. He clasps his hands together and turns to look at Solomon. "Well? When can we get started?"

The Knowledge-Seeker smiles at his fellow thinker. "We've built the lab according to the specifications you gave us. Psymin and I even added some embellishments. If you'd be so kind as to follow me..."

He turns and walks toward the fortified door leading out of the Hall of Transference, which itself passes through a narrow hallway just big enough for bipeds under ten feet tall to pass through. With nothing but Void surrounding the Hall of Heroes, if one were to try and break into the main structure, they would instead become trapped by the power of concentrated Entropy. It wouldn't harm a Cosmic, but as for a mere mortal? They might suffer terribly, if not die a horrible death.

Solomon leads the group around the Hall of Heroes, showing off the various facilities to their newest guest. Hans' eyes sparkle with excitement as he observes the Artifact Hall, the Hall of Legends, the Central Garden, and several different rest and relaxation rooms. Additionally, dozens of Heroes have had specific accommodations built according to their tastes, with priority granted to the Trueborn before the Lowborn.

After showing off more than a dozen key facilities, Solomon pauses to point out the place he considers 'home', the Library of Knowledge, which he has been filling with books for dozens of years now.

"Feel free to enter here and look up any information you wish." Solomon says to Hans. "Additionally, you may don my Crown any time Hope isn't wearing it to augment your knowledge base further. Unfortunately, while I can grant you information, I cannot improve your ability to comprehend it."

"I have worn your Crown before." Hans says with a casual wave of his hand. "I look forward to improving my center of knowledge once again! And goodness, zees library is truly impressive. You must spend all your free time here, yes?"

"Less than you'd think." Solomon says. "I can multi-task extremely well. My writing speed is also incomprehensible to most, and errors never appear in my books."

He leads Hans to the most important new facility in the Hall of Heroes, the Hall of Innovation. Inside, they find countless small cubes lined up and stacked on top of each other against the walls with computers linked up to them. Robotic arms hang from the ceiling, and multiple large circular, square, and rectangular pads sit off to the sides, each of them large enough to fit automobiles or even armored tanks atop their surfaces.

Soft neon blue lights illuminate the room, and for once this particular Hall lacks the golden, gaudy flourishes the others do. Clearly, Solomon was not the main designer.

Indeed, Psymin Miralax steps forward and takes the lead as she addresses the design of the room.

"Quantum storage chambers." She says, pointing to the numerous cubes stacked atop and beside one another along the walls. "Each has high capacity. Storage potential, extreme. One cube. Four metric tons. Quantum computer links together. Interface to extract contents."

Hans looks at the computer attached to the cubes.

"You can store four metric tons per cube? And at a glance zere seems to be around a hundred cubes..."

"It's about 400 tons, yeah. Each cube has a pocket dimension inside so they can store immense amounts of material for whatever needs you have." Hope says. "The cubes are modular, so we can add more with ease. We can also expand the size of the facility as needed. If you require any adjustments, let us know. We want you to reach your full potential here."

Psymin nods, then continues speaking. "Mechanical arms. Alpha classification. Used on Volgarius. Highly dexterous. Extreme grip strength. Delicate touch. Load rating: 100 tons."

"Each arm can lift 100 tons? Wow!" Hans chirps, his eyes curving upward as he rubs his hands together in glee. "I can hardly wait to get started!"

She points at the differently shaped pads on the ground. "Molecular assemblers. You call them Replicators. Capable of mass production. Versatile. Magic-augmented. Multiple variants. Some produce matter. Some produce energy. One produces Exotics."

"Exotics?" Hans asks, bewildered.

"Special types of compounds." Solomon answers. "But only a few limited options, for now. We can try to acquire other ones, but don't expect miracles. These stations are meant for you to produce materials you'll then need to shape into new inventions with other tools in the workshop. They should be far superior to the ones you were using on Tarus II."

After Hans asks some questions and Psymin or Solomon fire back enough answers to satisfy him, he leans on the ball of his heel, looking extremely pleased.

"What an excellent workshop! I am pleased to come and serve humanity's greater interests, moving forward. Zank you for zee extensive introduction, Miss Miralax."

"I serve the Volgrim Empire." Psymin says, her tone mild. "The Plague must be stopped. I cannot do it. Any assistance helps."

Hans glances at Solomon. "I am curious. Why don't YOU be zee one to make zee inventions? You are smart, yes?"

"I'm a highly intelligent man, of course." Solomon says, nodding his head perfunctorily. "But I am... not terribly creative. Imaginative. I can collect the knowledge of other beings and combine that knowledge to make new inventions, but only within somewhat rigid guidelines. In terms of inventiveness, I'm nowhere near your level, or Phoebe Hiro's level, for that matter. That's why we want you here, developing weapons to combat the Plague. You may even be able to come up with innovations the Volgrim couldn't."

Psymin's face contorts into a derisive sneer, but she says nothing. In her eyes, addressing Solomon's comment would be beneath her. A mud-dweller has no chance of outperforming millions of years worth of Technopath accumulation. Even if the ignorant human 'genius' steals all the information out of her head via Solomon's Crown, he can't hope to make any advancements beyond what she would have made in the same time frame. More likely, he'll be so hopelessly lost and confused by the high science in her head that he'll give up and become a mountain-dwelling hermit.

Perhaps she might be a little fearful of Solomon himself, given his incredible achievements, but this no-name 'Hans' fellow simply cannot amount to much.

"So, Hans!" Hope says, clapping his hands together. "Anything you want to work on first?"

Hans frowns, looking indecisive for a moment. Psymin chuckles under her breath, seeing the sudden look of stupidity wash over his face. No doubt, he'll try coming up with some primitive form of warfare he considers advanced, making her feel at least momentarily bad for the poor ignorant ape.

"Ah, so many choices, it is hard to choose." Hans says, shaking his head and sighing. "Well, I brought a datachip with me for potential projects. Perhaps you all can help me decide!"

Psymin continues to watch as he wanders over to the nearest computer terminal and plugs the chip in. It takes a minute for him to navigate the folders, and as he does, she rolls her eyes.

All these theatrics, only to embarrass himself. Truly, the mud-dwelling people of the Milky Way are unable to grasp how small they are in the grand scheme of-

"Zee Plague has become quite strong now." Hans says, interrupting her train of thought. "But I did examine zee footage our people took of zee battle on Reaver, and I uncovered some new insights!"

Psymin rolls her eyes again. She dissected the data herself, and none of it stood out to her. She was easily able to tell that the Plague had become more formidable in every way, making most previously effective attack vectors obsolete. The Plague obtained a comprehensive upgrade, and new weapons would need to be ten or even a hundred times more potent to inflict lasting damage to the Plaguehosts.

What insights could he have possibly made compared to a long-lived Technopath like herself?

"First," Hans says, opening up a clip of Henry fighting the individual Plaguehost on Yardris, "zee new combatant Henry has revealed a potential flaw in zee Plague's biology. See when he attacks it with his flaming sword? He was easily able to kill zee Kolvaxian with a single strike!"

"We know that much." Hope says impatiently. "But giving our soldiers such powerful weapons would be useless. Most of them aren't strong enough to wield them, and mass-producing artifacts like Henry's new sword isn't even something I know how to do yet. I didn't even know Jason could do that, so I'll need to catch up to him on the research front."

"No, no, we do not need swords, boy!" Hans says, frowning at Hope's obvious ignorance. "Zee sword is not important. Look at zee Kolvaxian's body after Henry smote it dead!"

He zooms in the image, allowing the others to see the Kolvaxian Henry killed up close and personal. Invisible question marks pop up over Hope, Solomon, and Psymin's heads as they struggle to understand what Hans is pointing out.

He's trying to appear smart. Psymin concludes, unimpressed. Acting as if he's spotted something the rest of us haven't. There is nothing to see but a dead body, the same as the other seven!

Ignorant to her thoughts, Hans clicks his tongue. He changes the monitor to show the other dead Kolvaxians, and when he does, everyone leans in to look more closely.

"Look at zee other seven Kolvaxians." Hans says. "Look at zeir injuries. Zeir bodies may have died, but zeir injuries continued to regenerate! Only zee one Henry killed remained completely lifeless."

Solomon glances at Hans. "You're saying the other seven were still alive? Or maybe they would come back to life?"

"No, zat is unlikely." Hans says, turning to face his compatriots with a proud look on his face. "What I am trying to indicate is zat zee one Henry struck was zee only one zat did not regenerate its wounds. Perhaps zis indicates a genetic weakness to... fire?"

"Fire?" Hope asks, blinking his eyes twice. "Because Henry's blade was enchanted with flames... so when he cut it down... the flames cauterized the wounds and prevented the Kolvaxian from restoring itself?"

"Yes! Exactly!" Hans says, clapping his fist in his palm. "I believe zee Plague's new bodies may not be as durable as we believe. Perhaps zey have grown more powerful because of life energy derived from plants, but zis has made zem weak to flames. Soldiers equipped with fire-attribute weapons, napalm, and so on might be able to inflict serious damage!"

Psymin's heart skips a beat. Even she failed to notice the anomalous activity in the corpse Henry killed. Perhaps because she was so focused on all the dead Plaguehosts collectively, she didn't think to compare the methods used for killing each one.

"If our soldiers can't land killing blows, what good does this information do us?" Hope asks.

"Boy, you still zink like a civilian sometimes." Hans says, shaking his head with a sigh. "Attrition! Wars of attrition can benefit us greatly since our enemies are unintelligent and hive-minded. We can surprise zem, burn zem, cause zem to regenerate more slowly until zey collapse from exhaustion. Zen, one good shot to zee head might finish zem off! Alternatively, we can make autonomous weapons focusing on wielding fire and flames!"

He pulls up images of the Warframes he's been building, weapons of war humanity has not yet seen fit to use, but when paired with this new knowledge might make them extremely effective against the new Kolvaxian horde.

"We must zink creatively if we are to stand a chance against zis new Threat." Hans says, as he opens up multiple images and sketches of designs for new Warframes focused on battling the Plague. "Not only fire, but other forms of attack may be essential for combating zese new foes. You say zeir bodies are indestructible? I zink not! I remember Jason made a sword zat can cut any material. Why not equip such weapons onto our new Warframes, hmm?"

At the mention of Jason's name, Hope's face darkens slightly, but he doesn't say anything. Interrupting Hans now wouldn't be prudent, and it wouldn't accomplish anything anyway.

"Cut any material?" Psymin scoffs. "Impossible. Pseudo Excalibur could not cut the real Excalibur."

"Zat is because zee true Excalibur is shrouded in a powerful aura of light energy," Hans says with a smile. "Zee fake Excalibur is fantastic against mundane materials, such as zose comprising zee Kolvaxian bodies. It is not so effective against special energy such as magic."

He pivots on a dime. "Hope, tell me about zee special alloy Jason summoned. What do you know about it?"

"Special alloy?" Hope asks, before remembering that weird platform Jason conjured beneath the allied armies. "I don't know what it was..."

"I bet it was somezing you could make." Hans says, with a flippant wave of his hand. "If not, zen go ask Jason how he made it. Such an alloy would make my Warframes impervious to damage! We could crush zee Kolvaxians with ease!"

"I'm not asking Jason shit." Hope grouches. "I'll figure out how to make that alloy or whatever. Don't you even worry about it."

"Right, right. Zen let us talk about my many other ideas in full," Hans continues.

He launches into a long explanation of his many ideas, causing Psymin's face to rapidly vacillate between expressions ranging from shock, to outrage, to anger, to disbelief, and even to outright confusion.

"Zee Plague is drawn to life energy. We could fake life energy on other worlds to draw zee Plague away from our most sensitive planets and safe harbors!"

"Instead of killing zee Plague when it attacks, why not trap it? Use Stasis Cannons to create time-bubbles zat will trap zee Plaguehosts in temporal micro-realms 1,000 times slower than realspace!"

"We could also trap zem with gravity bombs, similar to Diablo's power. Slow zem down, place zem under gravity one zousand times stronger than the local planet zey've infested. Zen we can pick zem off with ease!"

"Hope can make dimensional pockets of space, yes? Zen why not create a dimension zat we can shunt zee Plaguehosts into with special weapons or other gadgets? We could teleport zem into zee special dimension, effectively getting rid of zem!"

"Oh, and once inside, why not start a fire zat burns hotter zen zee core of a star? Hope, you can do such a zing, yes?"

"How about targeting their biological weaknesses? Nanites could disassemble zee Plague at zee atomic level, causing zem to turn to dust after zee nanites have devoured zeir bodies from zee inside-out!"

"And why stop zeir? We could bury nanites inside zee crusts of planets zee Plague is likely to attack, causing any burrowing hosts to be eaten alive before zey can even reach zee surface. We might never even know zey were zere!"

"Oh, and about zis material, 'Trifrancium'. Is rare, yes? Why not try to find ways to make more of it? Surely, with zee Wordsmith's power, we can invent some way to create Trifrancium farms, even if poor and inefficient!"

Finally, after hearing too much nonsense, Psymin blows her stack.

"Outrageous! Trifrancium farms! Impossible! You speak nonsense. Trifrancium cannot be replicated. You are ignorant. Stupid mud-dweller!"

"Stupid?" Hans asks, frowning at the Volgrim who he now realizes has been looking down on him the entire time. "You're stupid! Your whole family is stupid! You zink I do not know zee amazing technical marvels your people have made? Boring! Lacking in imagination! You make big death weapons zat hit hard but have no special flourishes. Where do you get off calling me stupid, hmm?"

Psymin doesn't back down. Her robotic voice turns slightly gargled as she strains to speak more words than usual. "Your ideas will not work. Impossible to create. How can we fake life energy? How can we mass-produce dimensional pockets? The conservation of energy prohibits this. You ignore reality!"

Hope raises an eyebrow. Solomon shakes his head, laughing at the exchange of barbs.

They both know what's coming next.

"And you call ME ignorant!" Hans barks back. "Verdammt! Stupid Volgrim woman! Why worry about the limits of reality when we have a Wordsmith on our side? Do you not understand how incredible magic-based technology is?! Of COURSE we can shunt zee Kolvaxians into pocket dimensions. It is as easy as performing a party trick! Hope can do zat in his sleep!"

"Plagueborn neutralize magic." Psymin points out, waving her hands angrily. "Power similar to Gressil. Eerily similar."

"Big deal. So what?!" Hans snorts. "Neutralizing magical spells is not zee same as neutralizing zee loopholes used to make magic-based weapons. Ptuh! I spit in zee face of physical limitations! Hope and I will show you how zee true ingenuity of humanity can easily topple reality!"

Hope crosses his arms. "Damn right. If Hans says it can be done, I'll believe him."

"Hans is one of the greatest minds I've ever encountered." Solomon adds, backing Hope up. "You should not be so quick to judge him. If Phoebe wasn't overshadowing him all this time, he'd have been one of humanity's brightest shining stars."

Psymin does not appear impressed. She groans and turns away, unable to believe the idiocy of these simpletons. Even Solomon has somehow been deluded by the wild and fanciful claims of this raving madman.

Genius? What genius?! He's going to waste resources on wild goose chases!

All she knows is that bringing Hans to the Hall of Heroes was the biggest mistake made by humanity so far. With the Plague looming in the not-so-distant future, a catastrophe will surely swallow the Milky Way, along with all its inhabitants.

She softly sighs, causing a raspy robotic noise to rumble from her vocal cords.

"Such is the foolishness of mud-dwellers." She mutters to nobody in particular.

Amelia looks at Hans with defiant eyes.

"Don't let Psymin get you down. Let's show this Volgrim what us 'mud-dwellers' can accomplish when we put our minds to a task!"

"You said it!" Hope adds.

While Psymin watches, Hans immediately gets to work teleporting the Warframes from Tarus II into his new workshop, falling into a zen state as he hurriedly jumps right into the first stages of his new life in the Hall of Heroes.

Hope, meanwhile, thinks to himself about one important matter only he can specifically work on.

Henry is my soldier. I can't let Jason take him away with a fancy present. As good as that sword is, it doesn't suit a sniper like Henry well.

I need to make him a Big Fucking Gun.

Part 576: Seven Months Later

Seven months, or a little more than half a year, pass in Realspace.

With its first period of peace following Jason Hiro's awakening in the Cryopod seven years earlier, Humanity obtains a short but sweet period of breathing room to grow.

Under ordinary circumstances, seven months wouldn't mean much. Even children conceived at the start of such a period wouldn't be born yet. But because of the existence of the Wordsmiths, the reality of the situation has deviated from any sane observer's expectations.

For the people living inside the lowest TDR-area of the Cube, which moves through time at twice the speed of Realspace, 14 months have passed.

For those living in the five-times-faster areas, 35 months have passed.

And for those who opted to live inside the highest TDR zone, which moves at ten times the speed of Realspace, 70 long months have passed.

70 months is no small number. For those who conceived at or around the moment they entered, their children will have already turned five years old. Those children know nothing of the universe outside, living contentedly inside a veritable paradise free of predators and fear alongside their parents.

Perhaps, even on Ancient Earth, none ever lived such a luxurious existence, benefiting from the rapid accumulation and development of the greater Human Empire while paying little to no price to do so.

And yet, compared to the situation inside the Hall of Heroes and Chrona, the residents of the Cube cannot begin to fathom just how much time has passed.

For the permanent residents of the Hall of Heroes, well over 58 years have passed.

And for those living inside Chrona, 146 years have come and gone like the wind.

To the Volgrim, 146 years is nothing at all. A short isolation session for the High Psions to meditate on their Psionic Seeds. A brief period of development for a new but minor technological innovation. A tiny and insignificant blip on the timeline of their multi-million-year Empire.

But for the humans, 146 years of development inside a secret dimension has yielded gains far beyond any they could have ever imagined...

For Beelzebub, it is a day like any other. Ordinary. Somewhat boring. Lacking in excitement.

The Emperor of Inferno doesn't usually sleep, since his body has no need for it. Some Emperors do if they are injured, or if they have undergone significant mental stress, or perhaps if they are fornicating with humans. In the eyes of demons, humans need to sleep so much because their bodies are fragile and weak, like those of other lower Sentients. Higher Demons may rest their eyes for a bit after passionate lovemaking with one or more human partners, but even then, it's not something they absolutely must do to survive. Merely one of a million pleasures they occasionally indulge in.

Beelzebub strides around his residence, a small house he had the humans build for him with a few accumulated Merits. Over the past seven months, he has traveled to the Belial Booster and Uplifted dozens of lower demons allied with humanity. Not just him, but Belial, Kiari, and other Emperors who have joined the human ranks.

Leeroy, formerly the Duke of Restoration, has risen to the rank of Emperor and earned a new title. Upon doing so, his powers of healing surged to a level beyond even Belial, making him humanity's most capable healer. This allowed him to take over the entire Hospital, affording Belial more free time for her own activities.

As the newly crowned Emperor of Duality, his powers over life have reached a level of being able to even restore even the most broken and damaged brains of people injured through any means. Had Belial been knocked into a coma and Leeroy been around with his current power, he could have woken her up without any trouble.

Beelzebub slips his arms into his long-sleeved white undershirt. He wraps a tie around his neck, slides it beneath his collar, and looks in the mirror while quickly and efficiently adjusting its position. Afterward, he steps into his black suit pants and waist coat, adjusts his belt, and sits for a moment to put on his black shoes.

Beelzebub has always been one of the demons who dressed impeccably. Indeed, it was his species that created suits and latex outfits, which were later co-opted by the humans.

Demons found this irksome, but it didn't really matter. All demons knew humans were thieves, so it was best not to get into conflict with them over such minor matters.

With great care, he laces up his shoes. He stands up and checks himself out in the mirror, turning to examine his sides and back to ensure there isn't a speck of dust on his person.

After a few moments, he stops and looks at himself with a sense of despair.

"No. I'm not feeling it today."

In an instant, Beelzebub ignites his entire body with flames. He burns away all of his clothes, reducing his expensive suit to ash. His shoes melt into sticky tar, and his room catches fire. But just as quickly as he summons the fire, he sucks it away, reducing the damage to a bare minimum.

At his level, conjuring flames is no longer his limit. He can absorb them and extinguish them just as easily.

He stands fully nude in front of his mirror, shakes his head, then walks over to his closet to grab a white T-shirt and some baggy cargo shorts. He slips them on, then steps into a pair of black flip-flops.

He exits his house wearing an outfit so casual and nondescript that the Beelzebub of just one year before might have vomited in horror. Yet, he now feels absolutely nothing. This casual dressing down simply doesn't mean a thing to him anymore.

Beelzebub shoves his hands in his pockets. His house, situated atop a mountain five miles north of the Western Warpgate puts him at the edge of human civilization on Tarus II. Already, in just the last seven months, half a dozen new cities have been created across Tarus II. No longer is the Fortress of Retribution the only place humans live, but other isolated areas where resources are rich and privacy is high.

At two miles above sea level, the air is too thin for most humans to live comfortably. But to a Demon Emperor like Beelzebub, it doesn't harm him in the least. He doesn't experience even the slightest shortness of breath. Perhaps that is because, due to reasons unknown to him, he is more than a mere, ordinary Emperor.

Beelzebub levitates off the ground. He begins to travel forward at a slow and steady pace, no longer needing to fly via flame-jets ignited under his feet. Instead, the energy of the universe, and the latent heat in his surroundings propels him through a means perhaps even he does not fully comprehend.

Beelzebub silently soars down the mountain toward the Fortress of Retribution. It takes him ten minutes to travel the distance, but he is not in any particular rush to go anywhere, so he doesn't care.

Beneath him, the apartment complexes have expanded on the western edge of the city by two orders of magnitude. Thanks to Phoebe Hiro's incredible home-building inventions, people can construct large dwellings in a single day, and huge apartment complexes in half a week. With humanity's population rapidly ballooning not only because of their own species, but intercourse with other species, the need for family residences has exploded.

If the changes on Tarus II are considered extreme, the changes across the entire Milky Way are even more so. Already, a small but rapidly ballooning population of humans has taken residence on Pixiv, the world of the fairies. Humans have also returned to Sharmur, along with a surprisingly large number of demons. With Diablo dead, the Middle Cosmic Deities have seen fit to take more personal control of their territories. After all, while they would have felt threatened by the Archdemon, him being gone has proven to be a potential blessing in disguise.

Not only have Pixiv and Sharmur become colonized by humans, but Maiura's population has likewise increased, albeit not quite as ridiculously. When humans lacking the Flaw breed only with other humans, the pregnancy rate increases, but the growth rate of their fetuses remains unchanged. A mother still needs nine months to bear a child, which means that Maiura's first generation of children have yet to be born.

Or at least, that would seem to be the case for those unaware of the Wordsmith's dimensional-creation abilities. Who can truly say whether Hope Hiro has remained as silent as his other half...

Beelzebub flies above the residential region toward the upper plateau in the center. When he arrives, he touches down, and only a few people nearby even give him a second glance. These days, Barons, Dukes, and Emperors are an all-too-common sight on Tarus II. Even the sight of Beelzebub doesn't stir much interest among people, aside from the most ardent haters of the famed genocidal maniac.

Beelzebub walks past a food stand erected in the central plaza, where a simple meat vendor sells some fresh exobeast-burgers to a pair of pretty human girls. Beelzebub frowns for a moment and glances at the girls' backs. One of them has dark black hair, while the other has white hair, making them look like yin and yang together.

"-just love a good Brittle Burger, Cammy!" The black-haired girl chirps. "You have to admit, the way the juice spills out is so satisfying!"

"It is." Cammy replies, her voice soft. "But... I don't know if I feel good about eating meat. Murdering animals just to eat them is a little..."

"Oh, you don't have to if you don't want to. I hear there's a veggie burger stand a couple blocks over. Wanna try that instead?"

"Sure, I'd like that, Serra." Cammy says.

The two of them turn to leave, but they flinch slightly when they see Beelzebub looking at them. Cammy's eyes widen a fraction, while Serra's posture stiffens. She takes a step forward, putting herself between Cammy and Beelzebub.

Suddenly feeling awkward, Beelzebub coughs and looks away. He quickly turns and leaves, feeling bad that he startled the two girls. It's not the first time people have looked at him with hatred, or fear, or some other raw emotion. Even so, it always makes him feel a deep pang of guilt.

Thought they seemed familiar. Beelzebub thinks to himself. Stupid. I shouldn't just stand and stare at two women. They'll probably think I'm a deviant. Best to keep my eyes to myself.

As Beelzebub departs, Cammy walks up behind Serra and whispers softly, "That's Beelzebub?"

"Yeah." Serra whispers under her breath. "He killed a lot of people."

"He doesn't seem so bad." Cammy mutters. "There's a sadness in his eyes."

"Don't be fooled. He's one of the worst monsters in the galaxy." Serra growls. She coughs, then forces a smile. "Let's... let's go get those veggie burgers, okay?"

"Yeah. Sure."

* * *

Beelzebub wanders over to the central gardens. He spots the figure of the former Hero, Sir Lorent, teaching an entire class of children how to paint, while his cute little assistant, Shana, demonstrates his teachings to those who aren't quite swift of mind enough to pick up on his explanations the first time. Over the past seven months, Lorent has obtained a deal of notoriety for his works of art, fame which he has put to good use educating people on the joys of artistic expression.

Beelzebub watches the lesson from afar, his enhanced hearing picking up bits of what Lorent is saying. Something about the flow of colors, blending different shades to create never-before seen hues, and some sappy stuff about how emotions can be made manifest through art.

Beelzebub doesn't care about art, so it goes in one ear and out the other.

He turns to walk away from the garden, only to pause when he sees a man and a woman walking toward him, the man holding a babbling baby in his arms.

"Beelzebub! It's great to see you." The man says with a smile.

"Hey, Beelzebub!" The woman chirps, her red face turning pink with a happy flush.

"Saul. Kiari." Beelzebub says, directing a nod both their ways. "How's married life treating you two?"

"The baby has been such a new experience!" Kiari says excitedly. "She's always hungry, always crying, and she's so hard to put to bed. Luckily I don't need to sleep anyway, so I try and take care of her so Saul can rest."

"I take care of little Sheba during the day." Saul says, motioning with his head toward the little girl in his arms. Interestingly, despite having pale human-colored skin like Saul, she has pointed demonic ears, like Kiari, marking her as a cross-species baby.

"Bah bah?" The baby babbles, looking at Beelzebub curiously.

"She's a cute child." Beelzebub says politely, smiling at the little girl.

"Want to hold her?" Kiari asks. "She seems to like you!"

Beelzebub coughs. "No, no, I ah, I don't know about that. I'm not good with the little creatures..."

"Little creatures?" Kiari repeats, directing a wry smile his way. "Oh, Beelzebub! You're such a funny guy. Come on, just give it a try! Saul's arms are getting tired anyway, so this'll give him a moment of reprieve."

"Well, I mean, I don't really-" Beelzebub starts to way, only to swallow his words as Saul steps toward him with the baby outstretched. "I- I suppose I could give it a try. Ugh."

Beelzebub crinkles his nose to hide his despair. What does he give a damn about some other person's baby? This is all just so annoying...

With a barely hidden grimace, Beelzebub carefully holds the baby in his arms, just like Saul shows him. Little Sheba pulls at his white T-shirt and babbles something nonsensical, but her eyes seem to light up when she looks at him.

"Aww, I knew it!" Kiari squeaks. "Sheba loves you! You should come by and play with her some time, Beelzebub! Neither Saul nor me really have any family, so it'd be great if Sheba had a uncle around!"

"An uncle?" Beelzebub asks. "Well- I mean, I don't know if that word really applies. That's more of a human term, yes?"

"Bah bah! Beel-Beel!" Sheba cries, grabbing at Beelzebub's shirt a little tighter.

"Eeee!!!! She said your name!!!" Kiari half-screams, hopping up and down in excitement. "Did you hear, Saul! She said Beelzebub!"

Saul chuckles. "Her first word, and it's not even 'mama' or 'dada.' Kids these days are really something."

The trio continues to chat for a minute, but when Beelzebub tries to pawn the baby off to Kiari, Sheba continues to hold onto his shirt as if it were a lifeline.

Even in spite of his faint annoyance, Beelzebub can't help but admit the baby is a little cute. Not that cute of course. It's just a stupid human baby, dumber than an imp. Heck, even imps are spawned with the basic ability to speak, so human babies are way below that level.

But...

Well...

She is just a little bit cute.

Beelzebub chuckles, but quickly catches himself and returns to his usual stoic expression. "Hmph. Little brat really doesn't want to let go, does she?"

"Bah bah! Bleh bleh!"

* * *

Beelzebub and Sheba finally part ways. The little girl starts crying afterward, forcing Kiari to soothe her with some gentle back-pats.

She wanders away, leaving Beelzebub and Saul alone for a few minutes.

"So." Saul says, his smile fading. "You doing alright, Beelzebub?"

"I'm quite fine. Thanks for asking." Beelzebub replies.

"Hmm. You're wearing... odd clothes. For you, I mean. This isn't your usual style," Saul points out, gesturing to the T-shirt and shorts with a nod of his head. "Trying something new?"

"Yes. Something like that." Beelzebub answers.

A momentary pause.

"...well. Alright, it's rather... that is to say, I'm not exactly..."

Beelzebub mumbles some words Saul can't quite make out. He looks off to the side, his frustration made obvious by his facial expression.

"I don't even know, Saul." Beelzebub finally says, his expression darkening. "It's this... this feeling. There's something wrong with me, but I can't put my finger on it."

"Something wrong with you?" Saul repeats, as he leans back on his heel and strokes his short beard. "Like what?"

"That's the thing. I don't know." Beelzebub answers. "I feel as though... I'm... stagnant."

He pauses again to collect his thoughts.

"I don't think I can put it into words. It's simply a feeling of stagnancy. I see humanity rapidly evolving, adapting, changing. I see the demons have uplifted themselves, but that's it. We're like the Volgrim. We move, we think, we evolve too slowly to stop what's coming. The Plague has changed, and I feel its Threat looming over us."

Saul remains silent. He listens as Beelzebub continues to speak.

"I'm the same demon I've always been. My mentality has changed somewhat, but I haven't made any serious improvements in my capabilities. I'm just a fellow who throws fireballs. When all you can do is shoot flames, every problem is solved by turning things to ash. It makes me feel so... limited."

"I see." Saul says, his expression becoming serious. "You know me. I don't keep up with the stuff that goes on around the galaxy. I just tend to my garden and make sure my wife is happy. But I've heard stuff from Kiari recently that made me feel the way you do."

He pauses.

"The demons have rebuilt Hell Harbor. But they didn't really improve it. The same forces that destroyed Hell Harbor could destroy it again. The Plague took out Sharmur, but it could do the same thing a second time. The demons do stuff, and when that stuff fails, they just do it again."

He raises a pointed eyebrow. "You demons are a bunch of blockheads. That's what I think. You're not creative at all."

"Right, yes. Creativity, or a lack thereof. That's what I've been feeling, lately." Beelzebub says with a deep nod. "I'm stuck in a rut. I don't know how to get out of it either."

For a brief moment, neither man says a word.

"Beelzebub..." Saul says, breaking the silence. "You said you're a flame-guy, right? You manipulate flames?"

"That's right." Beelzebub says. "It's sort of 'my thing.'"

"Sure, sure. But... is that all you can do?"

Beelzebub blinks. "Pardon?"

"You have the power to conjure fire, right? You can, well, you know... blow yourself up. But is that all? What is fire, but energy? Have you ever thought about that?"

Momentarily stunned, Beelzebub looks down at the ground.

"Fire... energy... no, I don't think I've ever given it much thought. My body tells me what I can do, and so I do it."

Saul snorts. He shakes his head, crosses his arms, and looks at Beelzebub derisively.

"Any human worth their salt, put inside your body, would be doing all kinds of stuff to experiment with their arsenal. Maybe that's why you feel stagnant, brother. Why are you only doing the bare minimum with the powers the Creator gave you? Even the Wordsmith slacked off in the beginning, but look at what he's accomplished after putting his mind to the test! Your abilities might be more limited than the power of Wordsmithing, but with a little bit of imagination, maybe you could do a lot more than you think."

Saul gestures off to the side, where Kiari nurses her baby under a small blanket.

"You know, funny story. Kiari manipulates bugs, right? She can command them, move them around, and even make them grow as big as busses. That's pretty interesting, right? But she had a similar problem as you. She didn't feel like she could do much with those limited abilities."

"She's been building entire cities with her bugs single-handedly." Beelzebub points out. "That's been more helpful to the humans than anything I've done."

"Kiari has earned more Merits than any other individual aligned with humanity." Saul acknowledges. "But that's not my point. Kiari had a lack of imagination, just like you. I convinced her to try experimenting, and she found all sorts of novel uses for her bugs she'd never even considered before. Bugs can spin webs, fly, spit venom, suck blood, and all manner of other useful deeds. When used correctly, any one of those abilities can have dozens of practical applications, both industrially, militarily, and in the realm of consumer goods."

Saul chuckles. "Shoot, who do you think tends to the Central Gardens? It's mostly Kiari. She permanently changed the way the bugs in here think, reproduce, and evolve, so the garden can maintain itself while keeping the creepy-crawlies out of sight. It's beautiful, and it's harmonious."

Beelzebub glances around himself at all the beautiful flowers, trees, and ponds filled with fish and other small creatures that have taken up life amidst Tarus II's Central Gardens. Suddenly, the gardens take on a new meaning. They are a deep expression of Kiari's love for humanity. They are an expression of her latent, budding creativity, born from the love she has shared with a seemingly ordinary human male.

"Imagination. Creativity. Limitations..." Beelzebub mutters, more to himself than to Saul. "I see. I still don't entirely get it, but... but maybe you're onto something, Saul. Maybe I have been missing the forest for the trees..."

Saul smiles kindly. He takes a step forward and claps Beelzebub's shoulder.

"I think you're getting the picture. Don't be so hard on yourself, Beelzebub. Maybe if you find yourself a cute human girl, she'll make a big impact on you. Maybe she could even help you unlock the potential that Kiari and I see in you."

Beelzebub smiles wryly. "I can try, I suppose. I just don't think I'm a good enough guy. Nobody will ever forgive me for my past actions. Even if they did, I don't know if I'd deserve such a grace."

"No. You're too hard on yourself." Saul says, pulling away his hand. "It's easy for someone to be a good person when they were born into a virtuous family and loving home. It's much harder for someone who was born into a culture of violence to become good. And, in my opinion, the latter is far more praiseworthy."

"Hmm. Maybe so..." Beelzebub concludes, a thoughtful expression playing at the edges of his face.

Kiari wanders back over. She, Saul, and Beelzebub talk a while longer, then they depart, heading off to deal with the important matters that have been stacking up. Despite her love for Sheba, Kiari has many duties to attend, and she cannot set them aside for long.

After they depart, Beelzebub sits on a bench in the Gardens. He listens to the chirping of birds, the trickling of pond water, and the distant, faint voice of Sir Lorent as the ancient Hero continues to speak to the children before him on the merits of artwork.

"If only I could go back in time and slap my younger self." Beelzebub says with a chuckle. "That fool had no idea how wonderful humans truly are. I have to do right by them... even if they never stop hating me. It's what they deserve."

He leans back on the bench and looks up at the blue-green sky.

"Maybe I should find someone to talk to about my powers. Surely... surely there is more I can do. This cannot be the limit of my capabilities..."

Part 577: Birthday Boy

While 7 months have passed in Realspace, 58 years have passed in the Hall of Heroes.

Hope Hiro, and the other denizens who have entered extreme time dilation, have not spent those years idly.

The Plague is an ever-present threat. Despite its significantly slowed-down movements, it has become a hundred, if not a thousand times harder to kill any individual Plaguehost. When massed together, an army of Kolvaxians is by all practical measurements an unstoppable force.

Hope has spent the last 58 years developing counters for the galaxy's most fearsome monsters.

Inside a secret containment room inside the Hall of Heroes, a carefully isolated Kolvaxian smashes against a magically enhanced barrier of mundane energy. Comprised of 'Wordsmithium' Hope made in his own way, Hope has placed the monster inside a transparent glass barrier made of essentially unbreakable materials. While a Cosmic level enemy could likely break the Wordglassium, as Hope has taken to calling it after communicating with his other self, even a Kolvaxian with a body as formidable as the modern strain cannot escape.

BOOM!

BOOM!

Mountain-shaking blows smash against the glass over and over, but the impact of the creature's fists dissipate instantly. Thanks to targeted enhancements, Hope has taken great care to ensure the glass is vibration-proof. Any blows struck against it will get canceled out by counter-vibrations. The barrier is so transparent that unless one looks for the smudges of blood where the creature's fists have struck the glass, they won't be able to tell where it starts and where it ends.

Hope and Hans stand at a computer terminal some distance away from the glass enclosure. Hans observes several readings detailing the internal stats inside the containment glass, and he nods to himself as he confirms the readings.

"Tenacious bastard." Hope grunts, watching with his arms crossed.

Hope has long found a way to capture individual Kolvaxians, something even the Volgrim's top scientists could never accomplish. This has allowed him and the people inside the Hall of Heroes to carry out targeted experiments against their future enemies.

"Zey all are." Hans says, looking at his display readouts. "Next, zee nanites."

An instant later, a metal canister teleports into the center of the glass-covered barrier. The Kolvaxian ignores it, mindlessly continuing to strike at the wall.

The top of the canister pops off, and a grey smoke rushes out of it, lunging at the Kolvaxian as if guided by a higher intelligence.

Hope watches. Hans watches.

The Kolvaxian's movements abruptly change. It swats at the grey cloud as if trying to shoo away a swarm of bees. This proves to be the wrong choice, as the cloud easily adheres to the Kolvaxian's limbs and begins burrowing inside.

The moment every nanite from the canister has clamped onto their prey, the Kolvaxian bursts into flames!

Empowered by some unknown magic, the Nanites transform into thousand-degree molten spores, liquefying the Kolvaxian's insides. Its durable bones shudder and weaken. Its skin rapidly blackens, then peels off and slops to the floor in a disgusting, putrid display that makes Hope's eyes water. The creature staggers, trips, and falls to its knees, its movements becoming indescribable.

The Kolvaxian finally becomes inert. It flops lifelessly to the ground, its body only twitching reflexively, no longer through any conscious effort.

Hope grins. He squeezes Hans' shoulder. "Amazing. Yet another success. You never have a bad day, do you?"

Hans doesn't appear quite as satisfied. "Zee nanites are not reusable. A single canister only kills one Kolvaxian. Zis is not a good long-term strategy."

"It's a weapon that can kill previously-thought-unkillable enemies." Hope says, his smile turning gentler. "Don't lose sight of that. Every weapon in our arsenal is another tactic we can use against these monsters."

"I will keep working on zee other armaments." Hans says with a wave of his hand. "You may go. Zees are all zee demonstrations I have to show you today."

Hope nods at Hans. He shoots one last glance at the Kolvaxian as its body crumbles to ash, then he turns and exits the Containment Hall.

"Hey! There you are!" Amelia says the moment he steps into a nearby Hall of Recreation, one of many scattered around the Hall of Heroes. This particular one has a large park with simulated sunlight, hundreds of trees and flowers, and more than a few Technopaths who have been assigned to its daily care.

Hope smiles at his wife. Despite having aged nearly 60 years, Amelia is just as young and beautiful as ever, with not even a hint of aging visible on her face. She looks exactly the same as the day she entered the Hall of Heroes, as does Hope.

"The test was a success." Hope says, as he walks over and plants a kiss on his wife's cheek. The two of them were married over 6 months ago in Realspace terms; 56 years in the Hall's time-frame. "One dead Kolvaxian, served crispy-fried."

"That's great!" Amelia chirps, before suddenly falling silent and looking at Hope intently.

Hope blinks.

"What?"

She doesn't answer.

"What??" Hope asks. "Is there something on my face?"

Amelia frowns. "Hope! It's Blake's birthday! I told you last week it was coming up! How could you forget?!"

"Oh, shit." Hope curses, slapping his face. "That was today? I completely forgot..."

"Boys only turn sixteen once." Amelia chides him gently. "We need to make today a special one for him."

"I already made him his present." Hope says. "I'm just glad you reminded me before it was too late. Did you make a cake or anything?"

"Darn right I did." Amelia snickers. "I suppose I could have you magic one out of thin air, but nothing beats home cooking!"

"That's for sure." Hope says. "Now, uh, give me fifteen minutes, then bring Blake over to the Forging Hall. I'll get Mandy and Levi so we can surprise him."

Amelia nods, shoots Hope a sweet smile, then scampers away. Hope can't help but take in the sight of his wife's backside as she zips around the corner.

"Hate to see her leave, but I love to watch her go." Hope chuckles slyly to himself.

Hope turns and leaves. He heads the opposite direction, to the Hall of Forging, where the ancient Heroes construct artifacts of different types. The moment Hope steps inside, he blinks in surprise upon spotting his oldest son, Levi, and his middle daughter, Mandy, aged 50 and 30 respectively. The two of them stand with more than three dozen Heroes, including the Heavenly Blacksmith, Elizabeth Kindelmann, alongside many others.

"You're already here?" Hope asks.

"Well YEAH." Mandy snarks. "Unlike you, daddy, we've known it was Blake's birthday all week. Don't tell me you forgot and mom had to remind you."

"Ah... haha... I do have his present ready. I just... forgot it was today." Hope says helplessly. "OH! Right, that means I need to bring your aunt and uncle here! One moment."

Hope focuses his attention for half a second.

"Locate. Locate. Examine. Return. Return."

Just like that, Neil Adams and his wife, Linda Adams, appear inside the Hall of Forging before Hope. Linda, looking just a little bit pregnant, leans onto Neil as she blinks in surprise.

"Oh! Is it now?"

"It is." Hope answers. "Hey Neil, Hey Linda. It's Blake's birthday, so I wanted you two to be here for it. He'll be here in just a few minutes."

"I didn't get to bring his present." Linda says, disappointed. "I didn't realize you'd pop me over so abruptly."

"Where is it?" Hope asks. "I can teleport it here."

While Hope quickly takes care of those matters, Neil sizes up Hope's other two children, Levi and Mandy.

"Wow, look at you." Neil says, appreciating Levi's incredibly muscular and powerful body. The faint glimmering of scales can just barely be seen beneath his skin. Levi's thick black hair gives him an almost feral, animalistic appearance. "You have only grown more impressive since I last saw you, boy."

Levi smiles. "Thanks, Uncle Neil. I train in the Battle Chamber every day. My father has a strict workout regimen prepared for me, and I always follow it to the T."

"And Mandy!" Neil says, leaning over to kiss the pretty middle-aged woman's cheek. "You're as beautiful as your mother. Have you made any fun new discoveries?"

Unlike Blake, who has shaggy black hair, Mandy has soft, brown, bouncy hair with some light curls. Her coquettish smile belies her true nature as a scientist and experimenter. She bats her long eyelashes at Neil and smiles.

"More than a dozen in the last year! Crafting new runes is always such an exciting venture, but I never have enough materials. Say! Uncle, since my birthday is coming up in a few months, could you maybe try and secure some new Exotics for me? Our supplies are running low and I use them up faster than Realspace can replenish them."

"Exotics, huh?" Neil mumbles. "Easier said than done. The number of exotics present on human-controlled worlds is practically none. We might have luck with Pixiv, but the demon and Volgrim worlds are still no-go zones. Maybe I can try bartering with one of the Deities..."

Suddenly, Hope speaks up. "He's coming!"

Just like that, Hope and his kids, as well as Linda and Neil, sneak off to hide while the Heroes who usually populate the Hall of Forging return to their busywork, acting as if nothing is amiss.

Moments later, Amelia and a teenage boy step into the Hall, with the young man looking a little perplexed.

"But why does she need me, mom?" Blake asks.

"Elizabeth is working on a shadow-affinity artifact." Amelia explains. "We're hoping it will resonate extremely well with you. And if it doesn't, well, there's always..."

"SURPRISE!"

Suddenly, Blake's extended family jumps out of several prepared positions, startling the young man and making him burst into a huge grin.

"You guys DID remember!" Blake exclaims. "Oh, I should have known you were trying to trick me, mom! Hahaha!"

Levi and Mandy both laugh, delighted at Blake's genuine surprise. Levi claps his little brother on the back, nearly knocking Blake off his feet. Luckily, Blake manages to stabilize himself by attaching his feet to a stray shadow cast by his sister's body.

"Happy birthday, son." Hope says, wrapping an arm around Blake's shoulders. "Sixteen years old, about to become your own man. Everyone here got you a present, but naturally dad's present is the best!"

"AHEM." Amelia coughs, clearing her throat. "That's why dad is going to go last!"

"I don't care about the presents." Blake says with a huge smile. "I'm just glad Uncle Neil and Aunt Linda made it. Why don't you two visit more often?"

Neil smiles helplessly and shakes his head. "Young man, if Linda and I were to come for every one of your birthdays, we'd never get anything done! Each of you ages a year every three-and-a-half Realspace days. That means you'll have a birthday roughly every one of our days! I can't afford to be coming here constantly when there's so much to do in Realspace."

"Oh, yeah." Blake says, his smiling fading a little. "Dad, when can I go and visit Realspace?"

"Your brother and sister already do, once in a while." Hope says. "But you have to wait 'til you're eighteen. Then you can go if you like. I don't recommend visiting too often, though. You'll suddenly find your siblings are tens of years older than before if you're gone too long!"

"Yeah, but we're immortal." Blake points out. "The whole 'years' thing doesn't really matter, does it?"

"When you're sixteen, one year is 1/16th of your life." Hope explains. "The individual years matter less and pass quicker once you're a hundred, a thousand, and so on. That's what I've picked up from the Technopaths, anyway. For now, you really don't want to miss all that potential bonding time with your siblings."

"Yeah, yeah." Mandy says, waving her dad's words away. "Now enough with the philosophy. Come on, Blake! Let's open your presents!!"

Everyone quickly gathers around, including the many different ancient Heroes of the Forging Hall. Blake opens one present after another, each one an absolutely shocking artifact, priceless treasure, or even heartwarming gift carefully planned for the birthday boy.

"Wow! These two daggers are great!" Blake exclaims. "Thanks, Aunt Elizabeth!"

"They should meld well with your shadow-powers." Elizabeth says, smiling sweetly at her adopted nephew. "Be sure to practice with them later."

"Is this a new Exosuit variant?" Blake asks, looking at his mom a minute later.

"Yes, it's similar to mine. It's called a Spectre T-REX, I asked Phoebe to custom-build one for you. You can consider this a joint gift from her and me both. She did want to apologize for not visiting, but you know how she feels about entering Hypertime, especially now that she's had the baby."

Blake grins widely. "That's fine! When I go to realspace I'm gonna give her a big hug! For now, I'll just have to give you a hug first, mom!"

Spoiled half to death, Blake gets one present after another. Even his Aunt and Uncle give him something special.

"This is from me, Linda, and Hans." Neil says, as he hands a small spherical device to the young man. "I'll admit, Hans did all the work building it, but Linda and I worked for a few days on the concept when we had free time. We deserve a little credit."

"Rotate the top and bottom of the sphere in opposite directions." Linda says helpfully, as she gestures to the small metal orb in Blake's grasp. "It has two settings."

Invisible question marks pop up over the teenage boy's head. Puzzled, he rotates the top clockwise, then counter-clockwise. An image of Neil suddenly materializes in the air, a small hologram that floats over top of the sphere.

Holo-Neil smiles at Blake. "Hey, Blake. I'm here whenever you need me now. Always ready to talk if you want to vent."

Blake flinches in surprise. He looks at his aunt and uncle in disbelief.

"Wait, so this...?"

"It's a sphere that contains holo-clones of our current selves." Neil explains. "As time goes on, those two will diverge from the Linda and me of today, but still, they're effectively a lot like us. We actually had the idea because of Phoebe and her spiritual clone, Fiona. I'd be honored if you could help our clones choose new names."

Blake quickly rotates the orb in the opposite direction, causing a projection of Linda to appear instead. For a brief moment, he falls silent. Then, tears well up in his eyes.

"This... this is such a great present. Th-thanks, Aunt Linda. Uncle Neil. I... I always wished I could see you more."

"Oh, sweetie. You don't need to cry." Linda says, her heart warming upon seeing his reaction. She reaches over and pulls him in for a hug, while Neil does the same. "We're just sorry we couldn't be here for you more often."

"When you deactivate the sphere, our clones will go into hibernation." Neil says. "For them, between activations, only an instant will pass. Just twist the sphere whenever you feel lonely. It's not as good as us being here in person, but it's the next best thing."

Blake wipes his teary eyes. "This is... it's so good... thank you both, so much..."

Hope watches his son crying, feeling a hint of dismay deep within himself.

Unfortunately, none of Hope's kids have lived normal lives. 'Normal', of course, being a difficult-to-define word. They've mostly been stuck inside the Hall of Heroes, which is indeed a massive dimensional space, but feels too clean and pristine compared to the rawness of Realspace.

Hope wishes his children could have lived with their fellow humans and grown up around other children their ages. But unfortunately, the circumstances did not allow for such a thing to occur.

The Plague's threat has only become more omnipresent. Time is not on humanity's side. Hope's children will someday become core protectors of the human species. They cannot afford to age slowly and peacefully. They must reach their full potential, and soon.

"One last present, son." Hope says. "Honestly, it's not as good as Neil and Linda's holo-clones, but... well, I just thought it was neat."

Hope holds out a small box with a bow on top. Blake takes it, then unwraps it to reveal a blue, oval-shaped object with a scaled pattern covering its exterior.

The teenager blinks. "An egg?"

"That's right, son. And not just any egg. This is actually the egg of a recently deceased exobeast on Pixiv. It's a type of winged serpent... kind of like the old Chinese Dragons of ancient Earth myths. Probably not as cool, but, you know."

Hope shrugs. "I was thinking of getting you a dog, but personally, I thought an exobeast pet would be a lot more fun. If you don't want it..."

"What do you mean?!" Blake exclaims. "Of course I want it! I get a freaking exobeast?! Dad, this present is so cool! Thank you, thank you!!"

Blake hugs his father, making Hope and Amelia smile warmly at each other.

"I don't know much about the creature, so I don't know when it will hatch. I don't even know what it eats... but I had Mandy put a seal on it so it won't attack humans once it's hatched. That way it'll be safe to handle."

"I'll take good care of it. I promise." Blake swears solemnly. He looks at his older brother. "Levi, did you ever get a pet?"

"Nah. Didn't really want one." Levi says, rustling his brother's hair. "I know you're gonna love this little guy though. Or girl, maybe. I actually helped dad get the egg. Unfortunately, its mother died during an attack by another exobeast, so the egg would have likely withered and died if we hadn't found it in time."

Blake's birthday party continues for a while longer. Amelia reveals the large cake she made with the help of one of the Technopaths, and all the people except for the spiritual-bodied Heroes partake in the confection, crowing about how amazing Amelia's cooking has become over the last fifty-plus years.

"I sure hope it's improved!" Amelia laughs. "Not like I've got much else to do around here than train in the Queen Network and raise my kids!"

"Oh, you use the Queen Network?" Linda asks, surprised. "I haven't seen you in there."

"I don't bother with the ranked ladder." Amelia explains. "I also play asynchronously, so I play against recorded opponents, not live battles. The time dilation makes it impossible to join the live leagues. Oh! I also play with the original power level of the Black Queen, so... I tend to fight against projections of Demon Emperors and other similar powerhouses."

Linda glances at Neil. He nods. "I heard about it from Hope a few months back. The Queen Network has been instrumental in helping offer a solid training platform for our troops, Amelia, so I want to thank you for all the hard work you and the Fairies have put into maintaining and updating it."

Blake perks his ears up. "The Queen Network? Mom, can I join it now? I'm sixteen. I'm practically an adult!"

Amelia starts to reject him, but then she pauses and tilts her head.

"Hmm. I suppose that's fine. You have your powers now, but putting you up against an experienced demon opponent might be too much. Let's start with one of Jepthath's Legionnaires, okay? We'll call it my birthday present to you. But FIRST, young man, you go and put that egg your dad gave you somewhere warm. Make sure to take good care of it until it hatches, okay?"

"Okay, sure! Just gimme a few minutes and I'll be right back!" Blake shouts, before jumping up, carefully grabbing the egg, and hauling ass out of the Forging Hall to head back to his personal dormitory

After Blake leaves, the adults remain quiet for a few moments.

"Hope, when we're done here, would you mind sending me and Linda over to Volgarius?" Neil says, interrupting the silence.

"Volgarius?" Hope asks, surprised. "What for?"

"I have a meeting with Founder Unarin today." Neil explains. "I was going to ask you to teleport us there before I remembered it was Blake's 16th. Might as well kill two birds with one stone."

Hope nods slowly. "You want to go there alone? No bodyguards? At least let me go with you, or heck, why not bring Levi along?"

"Absolutely not." Neil says, raising his palm decisively. "Hope, optics matter. Going there with Linda gives an impression of strength. We already have a Wordsmith in the back wing. Unarin won't try anything. But bringing your oldest son would send a message of weakness, implying we need backup or we fear reprisal. I also don't think Levi would be able to stand up to Dosena or even the Executors, so why put him in a position of danger?"

"Uncle Neil's right." Levi agrees with a nod of his head. "With so much uncertainty swirling around the Plague, now is not the time to look weak in front of the Volgrim."

Hope shrugs. "Well, alright then. I'll be keeping an eye on you though, Neil. In case you need help. I'll give you a talisman you can activate that will instantly alert me if any tomfoolery happens."

"That much is fine." Neil says. "I'll be relying on you."

Some time later, after Blake's birthday party concludes, Hope sends Neil and Linda back to Realspace, then he watches as his wife and kids head out with Blake over to the Hall of Competition, where the Queen Network Nodes await.

Hope, however, remains behind. His expression becomes solemn.

Neil didn't tell me he set up a meeting with Unarin. I haven't been keeping much of an eye on him or anyone else over the last few years. To think I let something this important slip past me...

Part 578: Meeting With Unarin

Hope teleports Neil and Linda to the landing platform of the Founder's Thumb on the world of Volgarius. The moment they arrive, the husband and wife duo pause for a few moments to get their bearings while turning and looking around themselves.

An island of foliage forms a green barrier separating the Founder's Fingers from the not-too-distant hellscape of glass and steel that has come to devour every last inch of the rest of Volgarius. Even from their high vantage point, Neil and Linda cannot make out the tops of the Stratoscrapers that have pierced miles above the planet's thick cloud-cover. Only the area directly above the Founder's Fingers lacks clouds, allowing them to faintly make out the distant Void they can never hope to touch with their mortal abilities.

Unarin's residence, the Founder's Thumb, is without a doubt the most politically important strategic position in the entire Milky Way. It is from this lone skyscraper, far smaller than the stratoscrapers in the distance, yet somehow much more imposing as a result, that countless decisions take place on a daily basis which will affects the livelihoods of trillions of Volgrim.

Neil's heart thumps in his chest. Despite trying to maintain his cool, seeing is believing. Compared to the paltry little 'city' he has constructed on Maiura, he cannot help but feel like an uneducated country bumpkin stumbling into the castle of an intergalactic deity.

Neil is nothing at all. He is dirt beneath Unarin's shoes. Were it not for his moderate intellect, which Unarin has found slightly interesting, he might not have even been invited here today.

What 'leader of humanity's military'?

What 'man who holds the Wordsmith's ear'?

These are meaningless titles before true political power. He has no prayer of throwing his weight around before Unarin. The best he can do is act with shrewd intent, putting his unique Terran strengths to the test.

Perhaps, something useful may come of this visit.

* * *

Five minutes pass while Neil and Linda survey the distant horizons, the buzzing of spaceships numbering in the millions as their speck-sized silhouettes zip across Volgarius's sky. Eventually, they turn when they hear the quiet footsteps of someone approaching them.

"Greetings, Neil Adams, leader of the human army. I am Muuxunuu, First Founder Unarin's Head Administrator."

A beautiful pink-skinned Ascended stands before them, her limpid blue eyes transfixing the attention of both Terrans. For a moment, Linda suddenly feels ashamed, as if she is but a mud wasp standing before a fairy queen. She momentarily feels inadequate as a woman, devoid of any feminine charm. She feels old, ugly, and perhaps even a little bitter.

That thought passes when she sees no affection in Neil's eyes. He truly has no interest in the beauty of an alien princess or whoever this 'Muuxunuu' might be.

"I have come to pay the lauded First Founder a visit at his request." Neil says, his tone neither servile nor overly egotistical. "I pray I did not arrive too early?"

"You have arrived at the designated time." Muuxunuu says, turning her attention to the woman at Neil's side.

"My wife, Linda Adams." Neil says, gesturing to his right.

"I hope my coming here was not a breach of decorum." Linda quickly says, lowering her head when she meets Muuxunuu's gaze. Unlike Neil, she is not an adept politician, and she cannot help but react involuntarily when placed before a creature of such exquisite beauty.

"Founder Unarin will be pleased to meet the wife of Neil Adams." Muuxunuu says, her tone giving no hint as to her own thoughts on the matter. "Please follow me. I will guide you to Unarin's Garden."

Neil and Linda nod. They follow behind Muuxunuu, remaining silent as she begins leading them down various hallways, past Technopaths and Changelings of many different types. Some of the Changelings are in their natural states, but more than a few have half-adopted the forms of other Sentient creatures across the Milky Way. One Changeling even sports fairy wings, making Neil frown.

The halls they travel through are bleakly nondescript. No interesting murals have been painted on the walls, nor have any words been etched or portraits been placed. Neil's mind swirls with countless observations as he realizes just how bland the lives are of his presumptuous alien overlords.

They have no imagination. They seemingly lack all creativity and interest in art itself.

Their society is stagnant, and they have lost their momentum.

A smile flickers on Neil's face for half a second. It quickly disappears.

So it's like that, hm? Neil thinks. Perhaps I can use this to my advantage.

It takes nearly twenty minutes to ride down various turbolifts and walk down different floors and halls of the Founder's Thumb before they arrive at the bottom level and step outside into the sunny day. Volgarius's star burns a little more orange than Sol did on Earth, but Neil only notices the difference if he really looks for it. He and Linda follow behind Muuxunuu as she leads them across a paved walkway adorned with beautiful blue and green color patterns. For the first time, Neil notices a hint of artistic flair, and it slightly surprises him.

That flair becomes more and more pronounced as they draw closer to Unarin's Gardens, a beautiful oasis of greenery complete with trees, terraces, and a large central fountain with a statue of a male Ascended at its peak, the man's hand raised up to the sky as if trying to grasp the universe within the palm of his hand.

Neil and Linda both pause to look up at the statue. Having seen Unarin's image several times in the past, they can't help but think the fellow depicted is not the First Founder, but someone else. The details don't quite line up, but they aren't familiar enough with Ascended appearances to pinpoint what details are incorrect.

Just as they're about to ask Muuxunuu, a voice speaks from the opposite side of the fountain.

"His name was Vedric. The greatest Ascended to ever live."

Unarin steps out from behind the fountain, slowly walking around its large water-filled border as he speaks.

"He was the first of our kind. He mastered our unique abilities and helped to make our sub-species rule over the others. While he held no aspirations for leadership, his gifts for visions of the future were unparalleled."

"Unarin." Neil says, bowing his head slightly to be polite. "It's good to finally meet you."

"And to meet you as well." Unarin says with a smile.

"This is my wife-"

"Linda." Unarin says, nodding to her in response before Neil can finish his sentence. "I do try to keep abreast of humanity's political situation and important marriages where pertinent. My dear Linda, you are quite the lovely flower."

"Oh, you're just being polite." Linda says, lowering her eyes. "I'm not pretty at all."

"Au contraire," Unarin says with a nod to Neil, "I beg to disagree. Your species has such a unique aesthetic, I always enjoy looking at its males and females."

The three of them exchange some more words while Muuxunuu wanders off, leaving Unarin alone with the two humans. Neil eventually gestures up at the statue.

"Vedric, you said? And he was able to see into the future?"

"That's correct. The tapestry of time is not one mere mortals can peer through, but Brother Vedric was a unique case. He was one of the Milky Way's Four Envoys, the Envoy of Karma. As such, he was able to see the karmic web woven by the actions of his future descendants."

Unarin sighs softly. "But unfortunately, one day, he peered too far into the future. He saw something he was not supposed to see, and died shortly after. The last words he spoke to me were..."

Unarin trails off, causing Neil to raise an eyebrow. "They were?"

"The Great Shattering." Unarin says softly. "He told me I would be one of its causes. Beyond that, I've little understanding of just what it was that my brother saw. A monumental event certain to affect the balance of our galaxy in some drastic way, at the least."

"It sounds ominous." Linda says. "I don't look forward to things being 'shattered.' It's always a negative event."

Unarin looks at her for a moment, then he nods.

"You're probably right."

He pauses, then gestures toward the Garden's interior.

"If the two of you would be so kind, I'd like to meet with someone to complete our little party."

Neil and Linda follow behind Unarin, slightly puzzled by his implication. They pass through a pair of stone columns attached to a moss-covered wall, where they enter the heart of Unarin's Garden. Inside, a long brook trickles quietly, and small birds and insects buzz around, preying on those weaker than them. Some of the bugs seem quite familiar to Neil and Linda, but others are truly alien.

However, they don't pay much attention to the sights, because what they find inside is a powerful Demon Emperor standing with her arms folded behind her back.

"Emperor Crow." Neil says, his kindly eyes hardening in an instant. He examines the blue-feathered Emperor with visible hostility, but keeps his words in check so as to not disturb Unarin or make a scene.

"I understand you are not friendly with the demons, Neil." Unarin says, turning to look back at the two humans. "This is not conducive to a good future between our species. The four of us will sit and discuss this matter."

Crow and Neil both nod. Unarin and his three guests sit at a small wooden table while a pair of beautiful Technopath women bring them refreshments. Neil and Linda remain silent, waiting for Unarin to continue the conversation.

"So this is why you had me wait." Crow says instead. "You want me to parley with the humans."

"I want all of us to talk. To speak without holding anything back. And to resolve a certain number of longstanding issues." Unarin says, correcting her with a mild tone. "The Milky Way is on the precipice of defeat. Only by uniting all of our species together can we defeat the New Kolvaxians. It will not do for me to have to worry about one of you backstabbing the other at a critical moment."

Unarin directs a harsh look at Neil. "This especially means you. Even now, you are barely capable of suppressing your bigotry in a setting this cordial."

"It isn't bigotry." Neil snaps back. "That would imply an undeserved hatred of another race or species. The demons deserve to be hated for all the horrors they've wrought on humanity."

"Indeed, I will not deny those past actions were truly vile." Unarin affirms. "I must also confess to my own tacit acceptance of the old status quo. I allowed the demons to predate on your species. In hindsight, I should not have done that. I should have taken a more active role in brokering peace and unity between the two."

Neil nods. "Yes. You should have."

"Still, nobody can change the past." Unarin says. "Many have tried, all have failed. What is more important is the journey we must take as we approach the future."

Unarin pauses for a moment. He clears his throat before he continues speaking.

"I want to clear the air between our three factions. Right here, and right now. I believe all three of you may hold false assumptions about me and my goals. It is essential these beliefs be rectified in order for us to cooperate more closely."

Linda tilts her head. "What do you mean?"

"I have little doubt, based upon observations I've made and reports I've read, that many humans, demons, and monsters think me a tyrant hellbent on holding power." Unarin carefully explains. "You believe that I want nothing more than to control the entire galaxy, place your species in submissive positions, and humiliate you for my own pleasure."

He pauses.

"Well? Am I off the mark?"

Neil maintains a tight smile, but his eye noticeably twitches. Crow doesn't respond, and neither does he.

Their silence speaks volumes.

"I can understand why you would believe such a thing." Unarin says. "Your species have entire libraries filled with tales of mighty Emperors, Kings, and Presidents who committed horrifying atrocities to further their own ambitions. If these histories are filled with such commonalities, than how can you possibly trust any self-appointed galactic ruler such as myself?"

Once again, Unarin falls silent, allowing his words to percolate in the air.

"I cannot offer you anything beyond my word. I am willing to divide the Milky Way into four sections if we win this war. The Human Empire, the Demon Empire, the Monster Empire, and the Volgrim Empire. Compared to the upcoming Akashic War, our squabbles are nothing at all. We would do well to unify our strengths and work together to seek common ground."

Neil blinks in surprise. He didn't expect Unarin to take the discussion in this direction.

"You would give up three quarters of the Milky way to other Apex Species?"

"Of course." Unarin says. "The Plague has not been entirely negative toward the Milky Way. Did you know that every world the Plague infests will, over time, grow to become a Paradise-class planet? The Plague devours life, but at the same time it spreads life abundantly. It kolforms worlds from dead rocks into life-rich planets any of our species would thrive on."

Neil glances at Crow. She looks back at him, both of them having only heard this information for the first time.

"So." Neil says. "We work together, exterminate the Plague, and there will ultimately end up being far more worlds for our species to colonize than before? A hidden benefit to tens of millennia of brutal death and violence?"

"Precisely." Unarin answers.

Linda clears her throat. "How do we know that you will keep your word? And how do we know our species united can take the Milky Way back?"

"As I said," Unarin says with a sigh, "I can only make a verbal promise with you. You would have to take me at my word. As for whether or not our species will succeed, that doesn't matter now, does it?"

"It doesn't?" Linda asks, bewildered.

"Of course not." Unarin retorts. "I am saying that in the event we succeed, we will divide the galaxy four ways. But if we don't succeed, it doesn't matter. We'll all be dead anyway."

"I can't agree to a proposal this important on my own." Crow says. "I am only an envoy for the Deities, here to represent their interests, not to make decisions on their behalf."

"I don't expect an immediate answer." Unarin says. "But before you drag your feet to see if you can entice a better offer out of me, I'd like to show all of you something."

Unarin activates a holographic display on the table, showing a map of the Milky Way.

"You three may be under the impression that the Kolvaxians have gone into hibernation, or have fallen inert. That is not the case. Rather, they seem to have either lost or given up the ability to infest dozens and hundreds of worlds at once. Now, they appear on a single world at a time, but without infesting the planet's core. They materialize on the surface, but differently from how they used to."

Unarin shows a series of red dots showing Kolvaxian infestations over the past seven Tarus-months.

"Only fifty worlds lost." Neil notes. "A sliver of a fraction of what it used to be."

"In the past, we would lose a thousand worlds a day. You're not wrong." Unarin says slowly. "But the difference is, now the Volgrim, and any other species on the worlds being attacked, have no recourse at all. The Kolvaxians wipe out only one world at a time, but it no longer takes them ten to twenty cycles to fully exterminate all Sentient life. They can do it in less than one, and nothing we throw at these menaces can exterminate them. They have become too powerful."

Crow's expression becomes gloomy. Neil remains impassive.

"Hold on." Linda says, frowning as she looks at the map. "Is it just me, or does it seem as if the worlds infected all directly link to one another? As if the Kolvaxians are moving from one planet to the next in a line of some sort?"

Unarin raises his eyebrow. "An astute observation, Miss Adams. I see why Neil married you. Yes indeed, there is a pattern, and it shows that whatever method the Kolvaxians are using to world-hop, it seems to be moving toward the core planets."

"Towards Volgarius." Neil says.

"Not just Volgarius." Unarin correct him. "Numaria is in the path of a future attack, as are Tarus II, Maiura, and Pixiv. These are all key strongholds we do not wish to lose."

Linda points at one of the dots. "This one is the most recent attack, right? But it's dated over a month ago."

"And that is why I called you here today." Unarin says, once again nodding appreciatively at her. "The Plague has gone silent for twenty-nine of your Maiuran cycles. It has not infested any worlds, which implies to me it is about to planet-hop to a very important strategic stronghold. I do not know which one, but I fear it will cause a great disaster if we are not prepared."

Unarin abruptly slams the side of his fist on the wooden table, making the other three jump!

"Now is NOT the time for division or civil wars!" He exclaims, startling the others with his sudden change in demeanor. "The Plague is but the weakest footsoldiers of our future enemies. How can we stand with our chins held high during the Akashic War if we are too busy biting at each other's ankles like dumb, untrained mutts? I am pledging now that if any Kolvaxians attack one of your allied worlds, I shall dispatch my Executors to assist you in your defense. Since they no longer need to spread themselves out around the galaxy, my High Psions can mass their strength to tilt the fight in a more favorable direction."

"But didn't you say before that you weren't able to save any worlds from falling to the New Plague?" Crow asks pointedly.

"That's true. We're still attempting to create weapons that are effective against the Enhanced Plaguehosts." Unarin admits. "We can kill individual Kolvaxians, let there be no mistake, but when they clump together, there is little we can do to wipe them out en-masse. That is why I want the Demon Deities and Wordsmiths to join hands with my High Psions. If the Plague only attacks one world at a time, then together we might be able to stop their momentum!"

"I don't know about that." Linda says, crossing her arms. "What if the Plague is toying with us? What if its central hivemind is only pretending to be capable of attacking one world at a time? Perhaps if we mass all our forces together, it can instead lash out at ten thousand worlds and eradicate them in an instant. We'd be playing right into its hands!"

Once again, Linda makes an excellent observation that forces Unarin to cool his engines. He nods brusquely at her.

"I have considered that possibility. Naturally, if we are all working together, we will be at a disadvantage if such a situation occurs. But what does it matter if that is the case? If the Kolvaxians attack like before, we cannot stop them as easily than we did in the past. The only evidence I have to refute your question is that the Plague no longer infests world cores. Every Executor I've sent to investigate has said as much."

Linda and Neil look at one another. This sudden expectation of laying down their arms has caught them off-guard, but it has come at a truly opportune time. Nobody wants to face this terrifying and unstoppable new Plague on their own. Certainly not the humans, who don't have a single Cosmic in their ranks.

"I..." Neil says slowly. "I... will accept your generous offer, Unarin. Humanity will pledge to fight alongside the Volgrim... and the demons... if the Plague should attack any of your worlds."

Unarin smiles perfunctorily at Neil. "Excellent. That is what I was hoping to hear. And what about you, Crow?"

Seeing Unarin's attention shift to the Demon Emperor so suddenly, Neil's expression turns slightly darker. He immediately realizes that while Unarin would like to secure the Wordsmith's assistance, it is truly the demons with their multitude of Middle Cosmics who have the firepower he needs to protect the Volgrim's worlds.

Compared to the lauded demons, the humans simply... don't measure up.

Neil sneers deep in his heart. You want to underestimate humanity? Feel free to do so at your leisure, First Founder. You may find my humble species has a bigger bite than bark when the going gets tough.

As for Crow, she maintains an aloof posture. "I will bring this matter up to the Deities. I promise to have an answer as soon as possible, and pray that we will be able to come to an... amicable resolution of interests."

"As do I!" Unarin says with a wide smile. "Now, before you all go on your way, why don't I introduce you to some long-lost Volgrim delicacies? You might as well have a taste of what our old culture has to offer, hmm?"

Neil and Linda laugh politely. "How could we refuse such graciousness, First Founder?"

Part 579: Queen's Gambit

Back inside the Hall of Heroes, Amelia and her three children walk through the labyrinthine layout of the special dimension quickly, bee-lining toward the Hall of Queens, where several Queen Network nodes have been constructed. As one of the most reliable ways to train and gain battle experience, the Queen Network has exploded in popularity over the last seven months, surpassing even the training areas inside the Cube as the most-desired place for human soldiers, monsters, and allied demons to put their lives on the line.

Blake's heartrate rises as they enter the chamber. Inside, they find twenty-five comfortable-looking chairs with orbs mounted on the arm-rests where their hands are meant to be placed. Amelia immediately sits in one of the chairs, while Levi and Mandy sit on her left, leaving one chair open on the right. Blake pauses for a moment, noticing a couple of Technopaths and even one of the ancient Heroes are already in the middle of virtual training sessions.

"Who's that old guy?" Blake asks, pointing at the spiritual apparition sitting in one of the chairs. Somehow, there is actually a Hero he's never met before.

"Don't be rude, young man." Amelia says sternly. "That's Jeremiah. He's a reclusive Hero, usually stays in his own special domain, a forest Hope created for him."

"Oh... I didn't know there were still Heroes I hadn't met." Blake says, sitting in the chair to his mother's right. "What are his powers?"

"I'll take you to meet him sometime." Amelia says. "Then you can ask him yourself. It's not nice to talk about people behind their backs."

"Sorry, mom." Blake says, looking away with a hint of guilt. He didn't mean to pry, but his curiosity got the best of him.

"Anyway." Amelia says. "Rest your arms on the sides, then place your palms on the control orbs. Lean back in the chair, and the Queen Network will automatically activate."

Blake glances at his brother and sister. Already, Levi and Mandy have closed their eyes and fallen into a trance, so they don't add anything to the conversation. Seeing how quickly they fell into a daze, Blake just does as his mother says, leans his head back, and...

* * *

[Welcome to the Queen Network. My designation is the Unified Management Interface. You may refer to me as UMI. Please enter your desired username before continuing.]

Blake blinks twice. He stares in momentary confusion at the black void before him, where a digital representation of a woman made of binary code stands idly, looking at him with an expressionless face.

[Huh?] Blake says, his mouth not moving, but his thought projecting into the void. [Where am I?]

[You have entered the initial setup screen for the Queen Network.] Umi says. [Please enter your username so we may continue.]

Blake stares at her for a few seconds. [What's a... 'username'...?]

[In the Queen Network, you may use your real identity or a pseudonym. Many users prefer to keep their exact identity unknown. Since you may interact with hostile users, for the sake of preventing bullying and other undesirable behavior, it is recommended that you operate under a pseudonym. Please enter your username.]

Blake scratches his head. He isn't a kid raised on the ancient Internet, so all of this is rather new to him.

[Um... how about, uh... Dark Master?]

[That username is taken.] Umi answers. [Please select another.]

[What? Taken? How is it taken?]

[You are not allowed to use the same username as another individual.] Umi impatiently explains. [Select a different username.]

[Uh, alright. What about, um, "Dark Master 1"?]

[That username is taken. Please select another.]

[What?! Then how about Dark Master 2??]

[That username is taken. Please select another.]

[Dark Master 3???]

[That username is taken. Please select another.]

Blake grabs at his hair in a frenzy. [How many goddamned Dark Masters are there??]

[In total, seven point three trillion users have entered the Queen Network at one time or another.] Umi explains. [Many of them include demons talented in the manipulation of darkness. Thus, common usernames have already been taken.]

[Holy hell, you've got to be kidding me. Alright, then how about, uh, 'Lord of Darkness'?]

[That username is taken. Please select another.]

[Shadow King?]

[That username is taken. Please select another.]

[OH COME ON!]

* * *

Seemingly half an hour later, Blake's bloodshot eyes finally pop open in surprise.

[That username is not taken. Welcome to the Queen Network, xXSexyDarkBoi42Xx. Would you like to create an avatar so as to keep your identity a secret?]

[An avatar? Uh, sure, I guess.]

[Entering avatar creation. Please select the ideal parameters for your appearance.]

Blake's eye twitches. A holographic person appears before him, mirroring his exact appearance. Beside it, a massive horde of sliders and dropdown menus also appear, allowing him to customize any part of his avatar's appearance.

He glances at the first one and his eyes nearly pop out of his head.

[What the heck?! I can change my gender??]

[Naturally. Many users opt to do so. Do not assume every male user you meet is a man in Realspace, and the same is true of female users.]

Just out of curiosity, naturally, Blake changes his gender to female, gawking slightly when his avatar's appearance changes to fit the new mold.

[Is that what I'd look like as a girl? Damn, I'd be kinda cute.]

He discards the idea immediately, though. Given he's about to hang out with his mother, brother, and sister, they'd tease him relentlessly if he made his avatar into a girl.

Blake spends more than an hour customizing his character's appearance. He can't help but bulk up xXSexyDarkBoi42Xx's muscles a bit, make him just a little taller and more handsome, maybe turn his jawline a little more pointed...

By the end, when he looks at his new character, he is able to smile with satisfaction. [Damn, I wish I actually looked like this. I'd be able to get a girlfriend, easy. Not that there's a lot of options inside the Hall of Heroes...]

[Avatar creation confirmed. Depositing player xXSexyDarkBoi42Xx into the Hall of Heroes lobby.]

Seconds later, Blake's vision changes. He materializes inside a large green outdoor park with mystical marbles of light floating in the air around him. Not far away, he spots several 'booths' with holographic UMI companions and floating words above the booths reading things like "1v1 Arena" and "Paired Duels" and "Free for All".

"Uh... Blake?" A voice says behind him when he appears.

Blake turns around to see a cute-looking bipedal dragon-girl with a long, pointy tail. Her soft eyelashes bat at him seductively, making his heart skip a beat.

"Who are you?" Blake asks, bewildered. "I thought this place was supposed to be anonymous?"

"I'm... your brother." The cute girl says. "Levi."

"The hell?!" Blake gawks, choking on his own virtual spit. "Why are you a chick??"

At that moment, a massive man covered in heavy armor walks over and slaps Blake's back, nearly knocking him off his feet.

"Oh come on, little bro. It's fun to change genders! It also helps obscure our identities!"

"Mandy?!" Blake asks, nearly fainting from shock. "You're a guy in here??"

His sister, now wearing the skin of an 8-foot-tall male Orc, looks terribly fearsome compared to her usual demeanor. She chuckles, those usually-wholesome sounds feeling a bit sinister when leaving her monstrous mouth. "Why not? You can look like anything you want. Later on, you can even change your appearance if you earn enough Platinum Queen Points. I like to change things up a lot."

But then, amidst the insanity, Amelia walks over, looking the same as she always has. Unlike Blake's siblings, Amelia has opted to maintain her exact appearance from the real world, which baffles Blake even further.

"Now now, there's no need to tease your little brother." Amelia says, scolding Levi and Mandy both. "He's not used to how things work in the virtual world."

"Why do you look the same, mom?" Blake asks.

She shrugs. "I didn't feel the need to alter my appearance. I have enough identity issues without compounding onto them."

"Oh."

Levi smirks. "Nice nick, xXSexyDarkBoi42Xx."

"Oh come on!" Blake protests. "Every good name was already taken! This was the best I could get! What about you, huh??"

Levi's smirk widens. He points above his head, and for the first time, Blake realizes the word above his brother's head is the username he chose.

"What?! DRAGON?? Your username is Dragon?! Why do you get such a simple name?!"

"I joined the Queen Network way earlier than you." Levi says with a shrug. "My good luck, I suppose."

Blake snaps his gaze toward his sister. Her username is Runemaster.

And as for his mother? Dark Queen.

"GREAT! So I'm the only one stuck with a lousy username. This sucks."

"I'll pull some strings to get you a better username." Amelia offers. "I helped design the Queen Network, after all. I'm sure I can ensure my children get preferential treatment."

She pauses before chuckling to herself. "The way you made yourself look all macho... it reminds me of Jason Hiro, back in the day. He used to look like a skinny twig, but then he beefed himself up with his Wordsmithing. At the time I thought it felt disingenuous. Now I see it's pretty normal."

"Uncle Jason, huh?" Blake mutters to himself.

Amelia and her kids ultimately wander over to a nearby display terminal, one that shows all sorts of numbers and stats. Blake examines it for a minute, observing that it seems to show a list of usernames followed by a ranking from #1 all the way to the bottom of the heap. Additionally, the higher the rank, the more 'points' each user seems to have.

"There's a whole leaderboard system in play." Levi explains, batting her eyes cutely whenever she speaks as if to play up her female persona for shits and giggles. "See, the first-ranked user is Lord Henry, since he frequently joins the Queen Network to have a bit of fun. He has over fifty million points with an ELO of 4200."

"Uh. What's an 'ELO'?" Blake asks, worried the question might sound stupid.

"It's a general numerical ranking. People start with 800 points at default, and can go up or down based on who they match against." Mandy jumps in to explain. "I have an ELO of 3317, so I'm considered as being a high ranked user, but I'm nowhere near the top. If you win a fight against someone with a lower ELO than you, you'll be lucky to get one or two points added, but if you lose to a lower-ranked ELO user, then you'll lose a LOT of points. The same is true in the inverse, of course. Generally, most people try to battle against people with as close of an ELO to them as possible, though sometimes new users do join and start challenging high-rankers immediately."

Blake scratches his chin absentmindedly. "How is Lord Henry ranked number one? Aren't there Demon Emperors stronger than him? What about the Demon Deities or the High Psions?"

"Cosmics aren't allowed to participate in the Queen Network." Amelia explains. "Besides, their cosmic power would probably corrupt and ruin the network anyway. It's better if they keep their distance. Not that they'd want to join anyway; there's no challenge for them in fighting a bunch of weak little mortals."

"If they did join though," Levi jumps in, "there are different types of Leaderboards. Lord Henry is only ranked #1 in the singles 1v1 leaderboard. There are also 2v2s, Group Battles, Skirmishes, Battle Sims, and all kinds of other competitive and non-competitive simulation zones. Mom has worked hard to add new and exciting ways of letting people train their abilities. Perhaps we might someday add a Cosmic Battleground or something."

Amelia smirks. "Yeah. Maybe someday. You can add it yourself!"

A few minutes pass. Amelia glances at Blake a few times, as if to assess his strengths. Having trained all of her children in how to control their abilities, she's fairly confident she knows what the broad scope of their abilities are.

"Levi, you and Blake can train in a 1v1 battle to start. Mandy and I will watch from the spectator stands."

"Aw, but MOM!" Mandy protests, stomping her massive foot against the ground. "I wanted to push Blake around!"

"I know you did, but Blake is inexperienced." Amelia chides. "Levi is a better trainer. He'll take it easy on his little brother. Right, Levi?"

Levi giggles in a weirdly cute way and covers his mouth. "Oh, mommy, of course I will! You know me!"

"Stop acting cute. No traumatizing your brother." Amelia warns.

"Yeah, yeah, fine." Levi concedes, rolling his eyes.

Blake's right eye continuously twitches. Seeing his brother acting like a cute teenage girl has his brain all sorts of fucked up. He always believed Levi was a big, macho dude, but seeing this side of him has Blake questioning everything he thought he knew.

Moments later, Blake and Levi teleport into a dirt arena with overbearing heat pounding down on them, a brilliant sun in the sky, and tall rock pillars planted in the ground, many of them angled diagonally to various degrees. These towering pillars appear to have been naturally formed over the ages by erosion. Their bodies project huge shadows to shelter users from the heat.

Blake looks up at the sky, toward the scorching sun. "Wow, this simulation is realistic as hell. I'd never have guessed I wasn't really in a desert if I didn't remember entering the Queen Network."

"It's a bit of an unfair battlefield." Levi says, wrinkling his nose. "You're a shadow-master, right? Not many shadows around here. If I stay in the light, you won't be able to hurt me!"

Blake grimaces. "Don't take me for a weakling! I've trained with Solomon lots of times!"

Before Levi can retort, Blake abruptly disappears. He pops out of a nearby shadow behind the high point of a pillar, then pounces down at his brother from behind, conjuring a wispy shadow-knife that becomes less distinct when the sunlight hits it.

Slash!

Blake swipes at his brother, but Levi casually steps to the side and chortles.

"Nice try, dummy. You're not tricking me that easily. I know all your tricks."

THUMP!

Levi's fist drives into Blake's stomach, sending him flying away. Blake crashes into the dirt and skids twenty feet, tearing his skin to bits and making him roll around uncontrollably.

"Ugh! Guh... guhuk..."

He coughs out blood, feeling a sense of terror in his heart. Levi's strength is insane! It felt to Blake as if his brother hit him with a sledgehammer!

"Hey! LEVI! You little shit! I TOLD YOU to go EASY on Blake!" Amelia roars from a hovering spectator platform in the air. "Don't MAKE ME come down there, young man!"

Levi's smile instantly disappears. He looks up, then swallows heavily. "S-sorry, mother. I thought I pulled my punch-"

"I have eyes! Don't even TRY to wiggle out of this one. One more hit like that and I'll shove you back up where you came from!"

"Y-yes, mother." Levi says, his expression turning a little glum. He hurries over to Blake to help him up. "Hey, hey are you okay, little bro?"

Blake coughs painfully. The simulated pain in his stomach feels so real he wishes he could die. "I'm fuh-fine, fine..."

He stumbles to his feet, feeling weaker than he ever has before. Raised from birth to become a Hero like his father and siblings, Blake has always considered himself a powerhouse. Yet it is now that he realizes his physical capabilities really aren't that much better than a baseline human. If his brother had used his full draconic strength, he might have been pounded into meat paste.

"You can't just jump at me like that." Levi explains. "In a real battle, I'd have swooped in and finished you off. Use your head, bro. Your shadows are what you should fight with, not your flimsy little body."

Levi pauses.

"Maybe we should have you wear that new Spectre suit you got for your birthday."

"Nope!" Amelia says from above, her keen ears picking up on the conversation. "You just play defense, Levi. No T-REX shenanigans for now. Let your little brother see if he can knock you on your butt."

"Yes, mother." Levi says meekly, not daring to argue with her.

Once again, Levi and Blake take up battle stances. Blake starts teleporting around, firing shadow knives, shadow nets, and other items at his brother from afar. Each time, Levi handily breaks them, dodges them, or tanks the hit without feeling a thing.

Minutes pass. Blake becomes more and more frustrated as his paltry dark abilities fail to do anything to his brother's formidable body.

"This is so unfair!" Blake complains. "There's too much light in this arena! I can't use my shadows when they're this weakened!"

"No complaining." Mandy says from her spectator platform, next to Amelia's. Her deep masculine voice booms across the arena. "In the future, you'll fight enemies under even more unfair conditions than this. You have to adapt to the situation!"

Blake grimaces. How can he adapt? He can barely even make his brother flinch. The most his wimpy little shadow-attacks ever seem to amount to is a splash of water against the dragon's face.

Over and over, Blake tries to knock his brother down, or even make him stumble a bit. He keeps failing, and his despair reaches its apex.

"Goddammit Levi!" Blake finally wails, dropping to his knees in frustration. "Why are you so strong? Why did you get all the good powers?! My abilities SUCK! I can't do anything when there's light around, and who the hell wants to fight a battle in the darkness? I'm USELESS!"

Amelia frowns, watching from above. "Blake, don't say that. Shadow powers and darkness aren't 'useless.' They once happened to be my core power-set. You're just not using them correctly."

"Then HOW do I do better with them?!" Blake asks, looking up to his mother with a glimmer of hopefulness in his eyes.

"I... don't know. The 'concept' of your abilities is different from how mine used to work." Amelia says hesitantly. "Mine were a bit... punchier. My shadows weren't weakened much by light."

"Well mine ARE!" Blake howls again, feeling even more outraged. "This is so unfair. SO unfair!"

"Come on, Blake." Levi says, his girly and cutesy voice sounding aggravating to his brother's twitching ears. "Don't be like that. You just need to grow a bit more. My powers were a lot weaker when I was sixteen. Yours will surely improve over time!"

"That doesn't help me NOW!" Blake roars jumping to his feet. "All I need to do is knock you off your feet! That's all! I just need a push! I need the light to stop weakening me!"

Blake pauses.

He glances up at the scorching sun. Its omnipresent heat makes him feel miserable, hot, and sweaty. But at the same time, it is a source of seemingly limitless energy. Even if the star itself is fake, its conceptualization still exists in the simulation.

For several seconds, he remains silent.

Why did I have to get stuck with crappy darkness magic? Blake rages inside his heart. I could have had any power, but for some reason, I had to become a so-called 'master of shadows.' Some master I am! I'm no stronger than a Demon Lord! If only there was another way... a way to make my shadows... stronger...

Blake's heart skips a beat.

He looks up at the sun, and somehow, the temperature seems to cool around him by a few degrees.

The sunlight warms his body.

It energizes him.

His breathing quickens as he slowly turns to look at his gloating brother. Despite Levi's look of 'sadness' at Blake's despair, it becomes obvious to Blake at a glance that his older brother is actually quite pleased at being able to stand strong. He seems to enjoy projecting his strength, even if he can't show it in front of Amelia.

You're looking down on me. Blake thinks, as his right eye starts to twitch. But you won't look so damn smug if I knock you... flat... on your ass!

The sunlight empowers Blake. His eyes flicker with a golden color, then he abruptly takes a heavy step toward Levi, stomps his foot down, and thrusts his hands forward, aiming both his palms at Levi.

WHOOMPH!

A blast of light fires out of Blake's hands, crosses the thirty-foot distance to Levi instantly, and slams into his chest.

Thump!

Levi flies backward and crashes onto his back, a dumbstruck look on his face.

"What?" Mandy cries.

"WHAT?!" Amelia exclaims, even louder. "Was that... light magic?!"

Blake stands, frozen. He stares with a look of delight at his brother's girly figure laying in the dirt. It takes three seconds before Levi picks himself up and looks at Blake, astonished. Blake's unexpected attack didn't hurt him at all, but it definitely startled him.

"Hey... Blake..." Levi says slowly. "You, what did you, I mean... how?"

"I don't know!" Blake shouts. "I just- I felt like my shadows were limiting me, so I reached into myself and... boom! I shot a light-blast! It was way stronger than my shadow-attacks too!"

Amelia and Mandy drop down out of the sky. They land beside Blake and evaluate him carefully.

"Light magic." Amelia says, having composed herself. "This... this is a strange development, Blake."

"I know, right?" Blake exclaims, grinning giddily. "Have you ever heard of someone wielding light and dark magic at the same time, mom?"

She nods seriously. "I have. Archangel Uriel could do it, after possessing the body of Barbatos. But... your new ability made me think of something else."

She glances at all three of her children, one by one.

"Levi. When you were born, your dad and I agreed to name you after my best friend, the last living dragon, Leviathan. You went on to gain draconian traits as you aged, making you resemble him in ways I never expected."

"Mandy. We named you after Hope and Jason's foster mother, Amanda. Your runecrafting powers didn't seem to come from anywhere in particular, but they did appear to form in response to your interactions with fairies over the years."

"And Blake. We named you after my companion later in life, Blaarjiim. He was an orb which granted me the power of darkness. It did not escape my notice that you, likewise, gained shadow-powers."

She pauses.

"But Blaarjiim had a brother. A companion orb named Hoarhiim. He was an orb that possessed the power of light. The two of them were inextricably linked. When Blaarjiim died, Hoarhiim followed not long after."

She crosses her arms and nods meaningfully at each of her children.

"Levi and Blake, for some reason, have inherited powers from the people we named them after. Levi gained the powers of a dragon, while Blake gained the powers of darkness, and now light as well. As for Mandy, her powers don't seem to have had any specific 'idea' behind them."

"What are you saying, mom?" Blake asks. "Is this good or bad?"

"It's... uncharted territory." Amelia says slowly. "You see, not long after you were born, Hope and I had a long talk with Solomon. The Knowledge-Seeker informed us of a hypothesis he was pursuing, and one that now seems to make sense, especially given the new ability you've just demonstrated."

She continues. "Solomon believes that all three of you are Trueborn Heroes. But this shouldn't be possible, because the only way to become a Trueborn Hero is by the previous Trueborn Hero dying, which would cause the Heroic Aura to pass on to another worthy human."

Levi, Mandy, and Blake all nod in unison. They've heard the explanation of the Heroic Aura many times from many different Heroes over the years.

"So how can we all be Trueborn, then?" Levi asks. "And what does that have to do with Blake's new control over light?"

"Well," Amelia answers, "Solomon's theory has several parts. He believes that with you, Hope and I had a strong 'conceptualization' in mind when we named you. Leviathan was my closest companion for millennia. I loved him dearly. So by naming you after him, I 'imagined' the traits of a dragon within you."

"Then, for Mandy, we didn't have any particular traits in mind when we named her. We only intended to honor Hope's foster mother. So, Mandy developed unique powers on her own."

"Then there's me." Blake says, looking at his mother with interest.

"Yes, you." Amelia affirms. "You were named after a shadow-orb, and gained shadow powers. But now you've also obtained light powers. Is that because Blaarjiim and Hoarhiim had linked powers that have now transposed themselves into you, or is it because you conceptualized a new usage of your powers? What exactly caused you to tap into the opposite of your existing shadow magic?"

Her question gives Blake pause. He remains silent for a few moments, touching his lip and looking down as he falls into thought.

"I'm not sure exactly. I just thought it was annoying that my shadows wouldn't work in the light, and that it would be so much better if I could make use of the light for my own purposes."

Mandy immediately chimes in. "That makes sense."

"It does?" Blake asks.

"Of course." Mandy replies, adopting a know-it-all attitude as she smugly smirks with her orcish face. "After all, what is darkness but the absence of light? Maybe you've never actually been a darkness manipulator. Maybe you're a light manipulator! Or maybe you've always been both, but mom just steered you toward a more limited path unintentionally."

"I'm sorry if I did." Amelia says, bowing her head contritely. "I'm just glad you've become stronger, sweetheart."

She pauses before continuing.

"Solomon hypothesized that human children who are born without the Flaw and later gain powers might be 'steered' toward a specific set of powers through Conceptualization. I wasn't sure if his words had any merit before, but we seem to have hit the bullseye two out of three times with you and Levi. Only Mandy differs, but it also seems to prove the rule."

Levi tilts his head. "Then... what about Daisy?"

"Jason's daughter?" Amelia asks, taken aback. "We... never really got to see what she was capable of. She was taken from us too soon. But her powers seemed quite formidable. They included healing on par with Belial, telekinesis, and even summoning Titans."

"She wasn't named after anyone?" Levi asks.

"No. Neither was Timothy." Amelia says, before pausing to add, "I wonder if he'll develop powers next."

"I bet he will. But he's still super young." Mandy says. "Nobody can tell what abilities he'll get in due time. The problem is, if he stays in Realspace, we'll all be hundreds of years old before he turns sixteen. Who knows what the galaxy's situation will be like by that point?"

"I'm not sure why Phoebe is so wary of entering hypertime." Amelia mutters. "She'd make a lot more progress inside of it."

"Maybe Jason hasn't solved all the side effects?" Levi suggests. "She probably didn't want to go inside while she was pregnant. Or maybe she's worried it will affect Timothy negatively."

"Well, we turned out fine." Mandy says with a shrug. "We'll just have to see if we can convince Aunt Phoebe to take Timothy inside later."

* * *

The group continues to test Blake's new power, but unfortunately, all he seems to be able to do is make his eyes glow and fire off a bolt of light energy when he absorbs the light around himself. The concussive force is surprisingly strong, but unfortunately, it lacks penetrating and destructive power.

By the end of the training session, Blake feels a little better, but also a little worse.

"I gained a new ability, or at least a new understanding of my existing powers... but my 'light manipulation' sucks. What good is a shitty 'Light Punch'?"

"I can't help you with this aspect of your powers." Amelia says. "But we can talk to your dad later. I think King Arthur might be able to help you, since he was one of the most powerful Light Masters of all time. Maybe your father can lend you Excalibur."

Blake jumps in fright. "No, mom! I can't ask dad that! There's no way I'm worthy to wield Arthur's blade! It's too dangerous."

"You're advising caution?" Amelia scoffs. "And here I thought boys were supposed to be headstrong and reckless. Don't worry, I'll make sure everything is in order first. Let's head home and eat some food before we look for your dad."

Amelia leads her kids over to the exit point, but Blake pauses before they leave. "Wait, what about me fighting with Mandy? I've never seen her magic in action before!"

"You can do that later." Amelia says, waving her hand flippantly.

"We can." Mandy says with a nod. "Come on, Blake. I'm not much of a fighter, anyway. I'd only be embarrassing myself."

"Aww, man." Blake grumbles, falling into step behind the others.

As the family leaves the Queen Network, they pass by a familiar old man they saw earlier. The Mountain Hermit, Jeremiah, stands off to the side, looking at the scoreboard. He glances at Levi, mutters something under his breath, then saunters off, leaving Amelia and her kids scratching their heads.

"What's that about?" Blake asks.

Levi's expression changes. He quickly runs over to the scoreboard and scowls. "Bastard! He beat my Target Breaking record again! That slippery old fart always manages to squeeze out more points when I have my back turned!"

Mandy snorts. "Oh, you poor baby."

Part 580: Daughter's Defiance

"The ancient angels teach us that love and acceptance are core to spreading the faith of the Divine across human civilization." A beautiful black-haired woman says, as she stands before a church filled with people listening intently to her words.

Most of the seats, save a few scattered spots at random, have been filled with men, women and children, all of whom focus their full attention on her speech.

"I posit now, that in humanity's period of growth, love and acceptance should come second to the power of belief." The woman says, as she gestures to a gigantic painting behind her, a painting of a female angel with a halo above her head. Few in the audience recognize the painting, but it depicts the angel known as Cassiel, rescued months earlier by the Wordsmith.

"Our goddess, Lady Cassiel, is no ordinary angel. She is the last of her people." The speaker continues. "She has survived for ages, but her power is weak. Long ago, she was a formidable existence. She was a terror to the demons, capable of killing even the mightiest of Emperors! If you put your faith in her, pray to her, and spread the word of her love, Cassiel will grow more and more powerful, someday even stepping out of the darkness into the light. She will become a beacon for all of us, leading humanity to a glorious future, safe from the machinations of our enemies!"

The woman pauses for half a breath.

"Times are different. Long ago, demons were humanity's blood enemy. These days, a noteworthy portion of our former enemies have become our friends and companions. But make no mistake. The same Emperors who once roamed Earth still live on various worlds, having become more powerful than any of you can possibly imagine. A day may yet come when we require Cassiel's power to save us. But she cannot save those who are unwilling to save themselves! By placing your belief in our Lady, by praying to her daily, you can strengthen her and make her capable of becoming our bulwark!"

The woman continues speaking at length, extolling the virtues of her Lady, as well as the feats Cassiel once accomplished when she walked Old Earth.

"Trained by Archangel Raphael, she mastered her angelic powers to a degree no other Lazarite could match! Unlike those pompous 'true' angels, Cassiel is a former human, like our brave Respected, a woman who gained divine power after death. It is because she is a former human that we can trust her to hold humanity's best interests in high regard. She needs us as much as we need her! I hope that someday all of you faithful ones will be able to meet her in person!"

Unbeknownst to the audience, an ordinary-looking brown-haired woman sits silently, fixated on her companion who is speaking to the audience. Blending in with the other humans, nobody notices the Heaven's Shroud locket concealed beneath her clothes, allowing her to maintain her false appearance.

Cassiel, currently in her persona of 'Cammy', watches as her friend Soleil, posing as 'Serra,' offers persuasive words to the audience listening with rapt attention.

Twenty minutes later, Soleil asks the audience to close their eyes and focus their minds, offering a hearted prayer to Cassiel as a small flow of spiritual energy travels from their bodies to the painting above, which then enters Cassiel's soul through a mystical link unimaginable to science.

"Everyone, thank you for coming today." Soleil says warmly. "Before you leave, please take some literature packets from the tables beside the entrance, as well as a bag of cookies. I offer my sincerest gratitude to the volunteers who helped me bake them fresh this morning."

The people in the audience rouse themselves, stand up, and shuffle around as some of them talk to the people closest, while other make their way toward the cookies and literature near the exit doors.

Meanwhile, Cassiel and Soleil stealthily meet up with one another, Cassiel blushing as she finds it hard to meet her closest friend's gaze.

"It's... still so embarrassing, even after half a year." Cassiel mutters. "All those words you say, claiming I can save humanity. I don't believe any of it."

"I speak from the heart." Soleil says. "You're stronger than you know. Just because you've lost confidence in yourself doesn't mean I have."

Cassiel shuffles her feet, looking shyly at the men and woman a short distance away. She can make out some of their conversations, where they talk about her, unaware the idol of their affection stands a mere stone's throw away.

"You know." Soleil says, interrupting Cassiel's thoughts. "It would make a big impression on everyone if you showed up in person. Lots of people have heard rumors that an angel saved the lives of several children earlier this year. If you gave a speech, we could sextuple the spread of Cassiel's Children overnight!"

Cassiel grimaces. "I didn't save anyone. Gressil... still killed them."

"That wasn't your fault." Soleil says gently. "You can't blame yourself."

"I can, and I will." Cassiel mutters stubbornly. "If only I'd done more, those kids would still be alive."

Soleil shakes her head. "Well, it's probably best we don't reveal you anyway. I wouldn't want one of those Demon Deities turning their attention toward us to snuff out your light before you're strong enough to protect yourself. Even I'm no use against a Cosmic."

* * *

Some time afterward, the church clears out and the people mostly all leave. However, one dark-skinned woman remains behind, seated in the pews all by herself. Given the total emptiness of the seats around her, Soleil and Cassiel easily notice her sitting by her lonesome. The woman sits with her head bowed and her eyes closed, seemingly deep in prayer.

Cassiel blinks. The woman's bright pink hair pops out, drawing anyone's eyes who might gaze her way.

"Excuse me." Cassiel says timidly, walking a few steps toward her. "Lily? Are you doing alright?"

Lily Brown, daughter of Benjamin Brown, raises her eyes to look at Cassiel. She smiles cutely.

"I'm doing FINE. I just want to be extra sure I'm giving you as much faith energy as I can."

Having seen Cassiel transform from human to angel months earlier, when Cassiel saved the group of young girls, Lily is well aware of her true identity. In recent months, she has tried coming to the church as often as possible, especially now that her father has departed Tarus II.

"I appreciate the thought." Cassiel says. "Me and Soleil were thinking about entering the Queen Network after service today. Want to join us again?"

"I'd love to!" Lily says, jumping to her feet. "I always love fighting other people on there."

"I... also enjoy it." Cassiel says, sighing softly. "In cyberspace, I don't have any limitations."

Cassiel, Soleil, and Lily all walk into the back of the church, where a specialized room has been set up with five connection nodes to the Queen Network. Cassiel and Lily each take a seat, but Soleil doesn't join them. She instead stands guard beside Cassiel, keeping a watchful eye for Gressil. He hasn't approached Cassiel in seven months, but Soleil always assumes he could be lurking nearby. She never stops keeping her guard up.

Cassiel joins the Queen Network. She materializes inside the church's lobby alongside Lily, who maintains the same appearance she has in reality. However, Cassiel assumes the appearance of a beautiful white-haired Frenchwoman, one with a helmet covering her head, armor protecting her body, and angelic wings attached to her back.

Her username, if seen by any Emperor in the know, would not necessarily draw attention.

Archangel of Retribution.

Donning the falsified identity of Uriel, Cassiel always takes care to pretend she is the Archangel herself, a fact which has caused many Emperors who joined the Queen Network and went up against her to immediately resign. If she were to act as her true self, she might cause the demons who encounter her in the virtual world to pay attention, realizing an important historical warrior has somehow survived to the modern day.

That would not be good. There are only a few places such an angel could be hiding, and it wouldn't take long for them to sniff her out.

As for Lily Brown, she has a unique username of her own. Smashing Flower.

While she is nowhere near the top of the power rankings, she is more than capable of holding her own in the Mortal tier. When facing the average Demon Lord, and sometimes even the weaker Demon Barons, she can defeat them in 1v1 combat.

"I'm really excited!" Lily chirps. "I'm hoping to break past 1400 ELO today. How about you?"

Cassiel blinks. "I don't pay much attention to that. Sorry."

"You must be highly ranked though, right?" Lily asks. "Lemme check."

She walks over to a nearby terminal and looks Cassiel's username up. What she finds causes her nose to crinkle.

"Oh, come on! This information is restricted?! What's up with that?"

"Miss Amelia hid the information at my request." Cassiel explains. "The less information other users know about me, the better."

"Oh. I suppose that's fine then." Lily says, somewhat unconvinced.

"Yes. But I don't like having to hide." Cassiel says while softly massaging her left arm. She looks away, sadness hidden beneath her eyes. "I used to be someone. Now I'm a nobody. I fear I don't have what it takes anymore to step back up to my duties."

"Your duties?" Lily asks.

"Protecting people. Fighting for justice." Cassiel says numbly. "It used to mean everything to me. Now I don't know if it means anything."

She shakes her head. Then she turns away, changing the subject to focus on her surroundings.

"I'm going to fight." Cassiel says.

"Okay. I'll watch from the stands for now." Lily says, smiling cheerfully. "I can always fight someone later. Good luck out there. I'll be cheering you on!"

Cassiel activates the 1v1 Battle option, causing her body to dissipate into particles of light and reappear inside a virtual arena. At the same time, Lily appears in the spectators stands, surprised when she finds several hundred demons already in place to watch the fight.

"Ohh!" One of the demons says. "Look! The Boss is gonna fight... the heck! Is that an angel?"

"It's Archangel Uriel!" Another demon exclaims. "I didn't know she was in the 'Queenie' too?"

"I heard she's been popping up once in a while." A third demon says. "How's the Boss gonna handle this, I wonder?"

"She's untouchable. Don't you even worry!"

* * *

Cassiel finds herself standing atop a large asteroid under nearly pitch-black fighting conditions. The light of billions of distant stars faintly illuminates the rock around her, but the lighting conditions are so poor that if it weren't for her divine constitution, she'd be practically blind.

The asteroid's gray dust crunches beneath her feet. Cassiel looks ahead, where she sees a Demon Emperor standing in the distance, the demon's feathered body faintly glowing blue as a result of her infernal energy.

"Oh?" The demon says, her voice dark. "Archangel Uriel? I heard you defeated Emperor Zagan recently. Don't you think it's beneath you to participate in these battles among mere mortals?"

Cassiel says nothing. She merely looks at the bird-like figure through the eye-slits in her helmet.

Emperor Crow. One of the most physically powerful demons of all time, even competing with Bael when he was a Duke.

Cassiel knows all about Crow.

After all... The Daughter of Heaven killed Emperor Red Raven 100,000 years ago.

After a moment of silence, Cassiel holds out her right and left hands. A tower shield materializes in her left hand, while a spear pops into existence within her right.

She slams the bottom of the shield against the ground and takes up a defensive stance, eyeing her opponent coldly.

"Right to the action?" Crow snorts. "Even for you, Uriel, this is awfully rude. Don't you want to fire off a few barbs before we do battle?"

Cassiel deliberately deepens her inflection. She infuses mana into her vocal organs, altering them as she's practiced to perfectly mimic Uriel's voice.

"Shut up and fight."

Crow's taunting smile vanishes. She sneers at her opponent's arrogant words.

"Fine. Since it's you, I won't be able to hold back. I should warn you now... even I'm not sure how strong I've become in recent years. HUH!!"

She suddenly launches forward, traveling the fifty-meter distance instantly. She sweeps her leg out and smashes it against Cassiel's light shield, bashing it against her opponent's upper body and sending the angel hurtling away!

But in a single second, Cassiel flaps her wings, spins her body, and converts the reverse-momentum into an agile backspin. She tilts her wings and launches up into the sky, using her magic to create a sort of 'slide' in front of herself. She bends her body, twists around, and flies back at Crow while holding the shield up.

BOOM!!

Cassiel crashes into the Emperor of Sacrifice from above, smashing her into the dirt. She uses the full weight of her body, the speed of being launched away, and the durability of her shield to turn herself into a battering ram.

Crow gets knocked fifty feet into the Asteroid's hard surface, groaning as she takes the full impact.

"Ugh! Damn!"

Still, because of how hard her feathers are, along with her body's innate durability, Crow doesn't suffer much of an injury. She swings her arm toward the top of the crater, firing iron feathers as if they were ballistic missiles.

Cassiel raises her shield, and Crow's feathers crash into it with thunderous force, each strike blasting her backward five steps at a time.

"Grrrgh!"

Cassiel growls under her breath. One of the feathers strikes her enchanted helmet, but it luckily glances off and doesn't cause a severe injury. By the time she's recovered from Crow's second attack, the Demon Emperor has already jumped out of the pit and continued to press her advantage.

* * *

Minutes pass.

Crow and Cassiel launch attacks that run the gamut from probing strikes to feints to all-out full-power blasts.

In one second, Cassiel conjures a greathammer made of light. She smashes it against her opponent and leaves Crow reeling.

In the next second, Crow rakes at Cassiel's chest with her talons, ripping through the metal and tearing huge gashes across her sternum.

As the battle progresses, Crow looks at her opponent more warily than before.

Something isn't right. She thinks. Uriel has only used light magic this whole time. She hasn't tapped into her flames, water, air, or even Barbatos's magnetism. Perhaps she cannot wield the latter inside the Queenie, but why would she neglect the former?

Crow suffers an especially violent blow to her head, leaving her reeling. She jumps backward and nearly trips from dizziness, but quickly shakes the pain off to glare daggers at her opponent.

"How dare you!" Crow shouts. "You think you have the right to look down on me?! Filthy pigeon! Bring out your entire arsenal! I know you're holding back!"

Cassiel remains emotionless. "I use only the powers required. Thou art not worthy of the rest."

"The HELL I'm not!" Crow roars, enraged at this obvious attempt at humiliation.

How dare Uriel look down on her! How dare she hold back, implying Crow isn't worthy of her full power.

I might not be a lauded Cosmic, but I still stand at the apex of the Mortal realm! I'll show you what it means to underestimate me!

At the same time, Cassiel breathes heavier than at the start of the fight. Sometimes her breaths even come in ragged gasps.

She isn't holding back. Crow is an extremely strong adversary, and just to cause her opponent any amount of long-term damage, Cassiel has to use 100% of her attack power with every blow, leaving herself exhausted.

I used to be better than this. Cassiel thinks. My skills have grown rusty. I've forgotten to use the weapon that makes Lazarites have potential far beyond what the Archangels intended.

She frowns. But if I do that... it might reveal my identity.

Suddenly, Crow launches toward Cassiel. Her eyes glow redder than before as she enters a berserk state, causing her muscles to bulge and speed to double.

I... I can't hold back! Cassiel thinks. I'm tired of being afraid! I'm tired of living in fear!

Just as Crow is about to land a punishing blow on her enemy, Cassiel takes a step backward, holds up her palm, and conjures a pair of circular disks of light in front of and behind herself.

Foop!

Crow passes through the disks, revealing them to be portals. She travels right past Cassiel, whiffing her punch across the open air while invisible question marks pop up above her head.

Huh? Crow thinks, turning around to look at her opponent.

What she sees next completely bewilders her.

Cassiel abruptly changes shape. A massive set of light armor phases out of the ground, wraps around herself, and lifts her into the air. Crow turns around and gawks as, within the space of just three seconds, Cassiel becomes engulfed in a towering metallic-looking mass of robotic parts, allowing her to stand over twenty feet tall.

Sporting a high powered Gauss Cannon on her right arm and a flamethrower on her left, Cassiel takes the form of a large bipedal robot, a sight so absurd that it nearly makes the eyes pop out of all the demonic audience members.

"What the hell?!" One of the demons exclaims. "Ain't that one of those human machines?"

"I saw one kinda like it during Stormbringer!" Another demons says. "Well, not me, but one of my buddies among the Warpers did."

"That's so cool!" Lily squeaks, stars dancing in her eyes. "I didn't know Cass- I mean, Uriel could do that!"

Crow's stomach sinks. Seeing this massive machine isn't exactly frightening to her. After all, it is merely a projection of light energy, and will crumple apart if struck with a heavy enough blow.

The problem is that the machine represents something she never would have thought of if she hadn't seen it in person.

"Who the hell are you?!" Crow snarls. "You deceiver! You're not Uriel! You're an imposter!"

"That isn't important." Cassiel says, her voice strangely calm. "What is important is that I win."

Cassiel's mechanized Warframe body moves fast, far faster than it should have any right to. Since its frame is made out of weightless particles of light that are held together by Cassiel's mental power, it can move the same speed as her human-sized body.

BOOM BOOM BOOM!

The Archangel Frame stomps toward Crow at a frightening speed. Crow presses her beak together and chitters like an angry bird, enraged at this deception.

"If you won't tell me who you are willingly, I'll FORCE it out of you!"

"Nobody will ever force me to do anything against my will again." Cassiel vows, taking aim with the flamethrower on her right arm.

Fwoosh!

Three thousand degree flames belch forth, blasting Crow and pushing her backward. She claps her wings together, sending a shockwave out to blow away Cassiel's fire, but the flames continue to spew out of her left arm-cannon unerringly and quickly press back against Crow's feathers.

This angel isn't Uriel. Crow thinks quickly. That means she shouldn't have access to Uriel's multitude of abilities, yet she is somehow able to conjure flames? How is that even possible?!

Cassiel stomps her foot down, but Crow jumps to the side, causing the robotic leg to stomp the asteroid and send shards of rock out in every direction from the impact zone. Cassiel whirls her primary cannon around and fires a heavy Gauss cannon at Crow, blasting the Demon Emperor of Sacrifice with energized ballistic rounds traveling at near-light speeds.

CRACK!!!

The shots blast apart the position where Crow is standing, slamming her into the asteroid and causing a massive chunk of it to break apart and fly off into the void, along with Crow herself.

All the while, the spectator stands gawk and gasp, horrified by the amount of power the false Archangel is demonstrating.

"If she's not Uriel, then who the hell is she? Another Archangel?"

"I heard Camael reappeared recently. Maybe it's her!"

"It can't be any ordinary angel. She must be an Archangel! But why is she trying to hide her identity?"

"She's training here to hone her power and learn our secrets. She's one wiley pigeon bitch!"

All the while, droplets of virtual sweat cling to Lily's back. She realizes the demons here are beginning to draw closer and closer to the truth of Cassiel's identity, but Lily never bothered to hide her face. Lily's bright pink hair stands out, and her identity is well-known to many of the higher demons.

If Lily says anything, she'll only draw more attention to herself. Thus, she keeps quiet, slinking down in her chair in a half-assed attempt to blend in.

Meanwhile, the battle between Cassiel and Crow rages harder and harder. With her mechanized Warframe, Cassiel gains a tremendous advantage in the virtual space she'd never possess in the real world. Crow becomes spooked as she witnesses the power of this hidden 'Archangel', and even she begins to believe this must be Camael in disguise.

The powers Cassiel is displaying are a little weird, especially the way she seems to conjure humanlike machinery, but Camael was a crafter of artifacts. Surely, she could build excellent copies of whatever the humans make.

"You deceiver!" Crow roars, lunging at the Warframe to try and smash it to pieces. "I'll kill you!"

But before she can land her attack, Cassiel summons a gigantic greatsword in both of the Warframe's hands, then swings it down at Crow with all her strength.

CRACK!!

Crow's durable body takes the slash without splitting in half, but the sheer power behind Cassiel's attack slams Crow into the asteroid for the last time, breaking half the bones in her body and reducing her internal organs to mush.

An instant later, everything concludes with the virtualized voice of Umi speaking to the combatants and audience to announce the verdict.

[Combatant 'Archangel of Retribution' has won. ELO rating increased by 140 points. Ranking adjusted from 145th place to 137th place.]

Crow lays on the ground, her body wracked with virtual agony. She looks up at the menacing machine towering over her with eyes full of hatred.

"Cam…ael…you…evil…"

Cassiel, likewise, looks at her enemy's broken body. She says nothing, turns around, and disappears from the arena, leaving Crow with her audience of demon fans.

At the same time, Lily surreptitiously disappears from the crowd, breathing a sigh of relief that the self-absorbed demons didn't seem to notice her.

She and Cassiel reappear in the Church Lobby, and Lily starts hopping up and down excitedly. "Wow, Cassiel! That was amazing! Awe-inspiring! I didn't know you were so strong! Have you always been able to do that?"

Cassiel looks at her human friend quietly for a moment before answering.

"Do what?"

"The- the THING!" Lily squeaks. "You made like a HUGE robot! I thought angels didn't understand technology!"

"I'm not a pure angel." Cassiel says, her voice soft. "I am a Lazarite. A fallen human revived in an angel's body. My powers and abilities are the same as every other Lazarite who once lived."

"Ohh, a Lazarite." Lily nods. "I think you mentioned that before. That's why you have a halo over your head, right?"

Cassiel nods.

"Lazarites have only one ability. We can manifest our imaginations into reality as physical constructs made of light."

She continues. "In the ancient past, Lazarites used their imaginations to conjure simple weapons, shields, and armor. They never manifested items that were especially complex because the Archangels led them to believe this was impossible."

Cassiel lowers her eyes. She suddenly appears sad in a profound way, even a little despondent.

"I was different. Because of my life's circumstances, I believed I could do more with my abilities. I began to experiment. Those experiments were successful. And that is when the Archangels took notice."

Lily nods, remaining silent while her friend talks.

"Raphael took me under his wing. He trained me to become the mightiest Lazarite. He called me the Daughter of Heaven, Heaven's Chosen, and the Child of Light. All titles designed to give me a fearsome image. But he... he made me promise not to tell the other Lazarites the truth. Only I could know the true power of human imagination."

Cassiel holds her palms at her waist, looking at her fingers as if they were covered in blood.

"I listened to Raphael. I did as he said. All the while, that nagging feeling ate at me, told me I was betraying my fellow Lazarites. I wish I'd listened to it, back then. I realize the truth now."

"The truth?" Lily asks.

Cassiel looks up into Lily's eyes.

"Raphael was afraid. Lazarites outnumbered the Pureblooded angels a thousand to one. If these former humans realized the true power of their Imagination, they might rise up and seize control of Heaven. Even if they were weaker individually, the power of Lazarites could easily merge with living humans on Earth, leading to an unstoppable insurrection. That is why Raphael chose to make me his pawn."

Cassiel drops her arms to her side, defeated.

"I did what he ordered. I killed who he told me to kill. In the end, the angels lost the war. All because of his fear and greed. Even now, I still listen to him whenever he tells me to do something. I'm like a beaten dog that only knows one trick."

"No..." Lily says softly, reaching out to take Cassiel's hand. "You're not. Don't say that. You're strong! You have the power to stand up for yourself."

"I don't." Cassiel says with a sigh. "In this virtual world, I possess a strength greater than I ever had in reality. Even at my peak, I would still drain my power if I fought a long battle. I would need more Faith Energy to restore my reserves. And as for now? I'm no match for even a Demon Lord."

Lily frowns. "That just means we need to spread faith in you across all of human space. If we can get more people to believe in you, we can make you stronger!"

For a time, Cassiel doesn't reply.

She lowers her eyes and stares at the floor, her eyes hollow.

"Why would anyone believe in me when I don't even believe in myself?"

Emperor Crow exits the Queen Network from a node on Diabolus, one created by the fairies at the demons' request. She arrives in her private underground chamber and balls up both her hands into fists. Her bloodshot eyes boil with rage as she recalls the humiliating loss she just suffered.

"No... no! I can't believe it! How can she be Camael? If that angel is Camael, I'll shed all my feathers and boil myself alive! Her powers were too different from any of the Archangels! Too exotic. They reminded me more of..."

She pauses. The Queen Network interface hums behind her, a blue light subtly illuminating her small, private room filled with a thousand trinkets depicting different birds found across the Milky Way. As an avid avian appreciator, Crow has observed countless feathered and featherless flying creatures over the millennia, studying them as a hobby when she's bored.

But now, her eyes look at nothing in particular. A devilish smile plays upon her face.

"She... isn't... an Archangel. No. She's a Lazarite. I've seen that ability before. She summons complex devices in a way only a former human could. That would explain why she is so strong. But if she is a Lazarite, then how has she survived and evaded our detection for all these years? Is she the only one? Or are there others?"

Crow's eyes flicker with insight. She slowly releases the tension in her fists, unballing them as she thinks carefully on what these revelations might mean.

"There was a Lazarite once. Long ago. The Mightiest Lazarite. The Daughter of Heaven. Could it be her? But I remember that she was captured by demons, raped, tortured, and killed. It couldn't be her. Perhaps one of her comrades? A copycat?"

Crow's beak clicks repeatedly as she taps its lower and upper points together in thought.

"It is her. I'm not wrong." Crow muses. "She's the Daughter of Heaven. Raphael's Champion. The killer of Emperor Red Raven."

Crow's eyes flash with venom.

"She killed my husband. That bitch. She's still alive, somehow, and now she's honing her skills in the Queen Network."

The Emperor of Sacrifice hunches her body over and begins pacing back and forth.

"Why fake her identity? Perhaps she isn't strong enough yet to stand on her own. She's strong in the human's false battle-world, but weak in realspace. That means she's hiding somewhere. She's vulnerable."

Crow smiles evilly.

"HEH HEH HEH. THAT MEANS IF I FIND HER, I CAN CAPTURE HER. TORTURE HER. PEEL HER APART."

Her eyes turn feral as her tongue snakes out and licks the sides of her beak.

"HUSBAND. AFTER ALL THESE YEARS, A DELICIOUS OPPORTUNITY HAS PRESENTED ITSELF. I CAN GET REVENGE. HEH HEH HEH."

Crow turns her eyes toward the doorway. She strides toward it, shoves it open, and strides outside.

"Can't tell the others. That filthy grey-feathered bitch is mine. I want her all to myself. I'll draw out her suffering until she's lost all the life in her eyes. Then I'll eat her and obtain her power for myself! GEHEHEH!"

The door closes behind Crow. As she walks away, the dimly lit Queen Network abruptly loses all its light. A figure appears in the darkness, looking at Crow's departing silhouette through a crack in the door.

The two-headed figure glares at her. He says nothing, then disappears, returning the magical power back to the room.

Crow never even senses his presence.

Part 581: Evolution Revolution

[Your skills are inferior.] Initiator Ferral brags. [This race belongs to me. I am more than a hundred kart-lengths ahead of you.]

"It's not over 'til it's over." Jason says, as he stares at the screen. "This is the final lap. Anything can happen."

[I have been in the lead since the very beginning. It is impossible for me to lose. This game is no challenge at all.]

"Yeahhh, we'll see about that." Jason says, as he drives over an item box.

Seconds later, Jason's Kart transforms into a Bullet Bill, racing ahead at hypersonic speeds and knocking two racers out of his way. On the final turn, he shoots up behind Ferral, causing the Initiator's heart-rate to spike.

[No! This is impossible! You were in the seventh position until this lap! How could you suddenly be in second?! You are cheating! Gah, and I keep getting only COINS! Why are my items so much worse than yours? I cannot even time the button presses to get a good item!]

In the last few seconds, Jason lobs a red shell forward, smashes it into Ferral's kart, and takes the lead on the final turn, stealing first place while three other karts also pass Ferral's momentarily incapacitated Donkey Kong. Ferral jumps out of his seat, roaring in fury.

[How could I lose?! My skills were clearly superior! This game is rigged!]

Jason leans back in his seat, looking up at the giant projected screen in his personal gaming studio with a look of pure smugness. "Ah, it's too bad, Ferral. You still don't understand Mario Kart's 'rubber banding' system. It gives better items to the people who aren't in first place to make it easier for them to catch up."

[That system is stupid!] Ferral complains. [The superior racer should win based on his skills, not cheap items that grant a last second advantage! I do not like this game!]

"Well they do say not to hate the player; hate the game." Jason says, his grin widening. "Looks like you're on the right track. Anyway, it's about time for me to head out. Seems I whooped you pretty good today, Ferral. Maybe work on your skills a bit more and we'll have a rematch next time, eh?"

[You did not 'whoop' me.] Ferral says, sulking with his arms crossed and dropping his controller at his feet. [You cheated. Terrans only know how to cheat when faced with the glorious capabilities of a trueborn Volgrim.]

"Yeah yeah, that's what a loser would say." Jason taunts, as he gets up from his chair and stretches. He looks at a nearby clock, then strides away. "I've got work to do, and Fiona will get mad if I play games for too long. See you later."

Ferral doesn't reply. The young Initiator simply continues to grumble in his head, muttering incomprehensibly about what a bunch of cheating mud-dwellers the humans are.

Jason walks through his gaming and entertainment room, a massive center with more than a thousand video game consoles and a huge digital library of movies, TV shows, and other entertainment taken from Earth before its destruction. Thanks to the Volgrim collecting every piece of cultural media humanity ever created, Jason was able to recover humanity's gaming heritage as well as its filmography and music by secretly raiding the Volgrim's data stores. Now, he can play any game ever made, watch any movie, listen to any song, and even admire humanity's greatest pieces of artwork as desired.

In his youth, Jason would have simply set up his life in here and never left, but unfortunately, he is an adult now with adult responsibilities. He can't spend much time playing games or watching movies. Therefore, he mostly leaves the room to Ferral and also Kar's kids. At least, those among them who are interested.

Jason exits his underground entertainment theater. He steps onto Chrona's surface and inhales the fresh morning air, looking up at the artificial sun in the sky with a smile on his face.

After 144 years living inside Chrona, Jason has made lots of improvements to the mirror dimension. Now, 'fake' stars hover in the sky, and Chrona even has a day and night cycle. The dimension's internal space has expanded by more than ten times as the Crocodiles spread out, taking up residence as Chrona's primary life-forms. Kar and Blinker live inside a large mansion up on a hill, acting as the de-facto leaders of Chrona, attending to its daily needs while Jason and Fiona continue to put all their focus on using Chrona as a tool to improve humanity's situation in Realspace.

At the same time, the few Psion residents of Chrona have opted not to all live together. Each one has constructed a residence for themselves in some isolated area, with one of them living near a lake, another up in the mountains, and so on. Only Ferral is the weird one, as he has chosen to live in the middle of Chrona's biggest city, which formerly was the only one. Blinker Bay, as many of the crocodiles have taken to calling it, is named after their mother, and now exists on the edge of a large lake filled with lots of fish and other creatures. Thanks to Blinker deliberately importing creatures from Realspace into Chrona, her beautiful crocodile children and grandchildren have plenty of delicious fish to eat, whenever they want.

And like the Labyrinth, Chrona now expands on its own, slowly, over time. It feeds off the excess life energy produced by its inhabitants, expanding perhaps a foot in diameter every single day that passes. While the growth may not be noticeable in short bursts, over the years, it has greatly expanded, allowing for many new areas to open up and become inhabitable.

Even Jason himself doesn't know exactly how the process works.

The Wordsmith walks over to his mind-wife's workshop, where he finds Fiona and Rebecca hard at work like usual. He gives Fiona a kiss on the cheek, her corporeal appearance no longer a surprise to him, while gently squeezing Rebecca's shoulder. "Hey, what did I miss?"

"Done playing games with Ferral?" Fiona asks, amused. "Rebecca thought we might be able to improve the Healing Orbs today by making them use Exotics to provide different types of healing effects."

Rebecca holds up a necklace with a glowing blue marble attached. "My tests with the Healing Orbs have proven they work, but the effects are rather slow. Compared to Belial or Leeroy taking deliberate action to heal people, the orbs are vastly inferior. People will be in pain for much longer than if they paid those demons a visit."

She gestures to the table, where different forms of powder have been dumped in tiny piles here and there. She points at a pile of faintly glowing black powder and begins to explain. "This is Rhizite. I crumbled a few milligrams of it into dust form so the Healing Orbs could more easily absorb it. My tests have shown it can speed up the healing factor by about 25%. Unfortunately, it also increases the pain of healing by a moderate amount."

She points at some poisonous-looking pink-and-green liquid in a vial. "And this is an extract from the fangs of a Pelorin, a creature living on one of the Volgrim's designated exobeast reserve worlds. It's exceptionally good at countering toxins and parasites, but it also causes severe seizures and headaches during the healing process."

Jason frowns. "The side effects of each of these sounds severe."

"Yes." Rebecca acknowledges. "I'm not having much luck finding a panacea. The best method for healing someone in bad condition is still for you, Leeroy, or Belial to take personal action. These Healing Orbs are only suitable for mass healing on a budget."

"At least they're better than the body's natural response." Fiona chimes in. "Humans can't naturally regenerate a lost limb. Even if it takes a few years, Healing Orbs make that possible."

"We'll take things one step at a time." Jason says with a smile. "I'm going to practice in the Battle Arena for a bit. Then later, I'm heading to Realspace to visit Phoebe and Timothy."

Rebecca frowns. "I assume you'll be gone a few weeks. Jason, before you leave, I need you to stabilize Chrona's Time Dilation Matrix again."

"Again??" Jason asks, bewildered. "I stabilized it just the other day."

"Actually, that was nine days ago." Rebecca corrects. "Since then, the dilation has risen from 251.466 to 251.985. The acceleration is occurring more often and rising faster when it does."

Jason looks at Fiona and Rebecca solemnly. "Any ideas why?"

"Best guess, it's because Chrona's size is increasing." Fiona explains. "As the number of crocodiles increases, the amount of life energy available also does. This causes Chrona to expand a little faster over time, which is accelerating the frequency you'll need to keep stabilizing the dilation. It's a similar principle to the Labyrinth, but with the added complexity of time dilation thrown into the mix."

Jason groans. "Man. I'll need to craft a whole magic-based system to stabilize Chrona on a more permanent basis. But I don't have a lot of understanding in the field of temporal mechanics. Looks like I'll need to study for ten or so years just to get a grip on it. Bah, I'll do that later. For now, stabilizing things manually is working fine."

"I wouldn't say things are 'fine.'" Rebecca quips. "Eventually, you're going to be stabilizing the time dilation every few days, then every day, then every so-many number of hours. You need to create a solution sooner rather than later."

I know, I know." Jason says, waving his hand. "And if the time dilation gets too high, the solutions I've made for Time Dilation sickness will stop working. Nobody will be able to leave Chrona as the dilation shoots upward. It's a whole mess."

He shrugs. "Unfortunately, I don't have a simple solution. Like I said, unless I invest ten years in studying temporal mechanics, I'm not going to be able to solve this problem."

Fiona hesitates.

"...You could probably get the answer if you put on Solomon's Crown."

Jason's expression turns stern. "You know that's not an option. Even if I wanted to, which I definitely don't, Hope wouldn't let me. I don't trust that old man, and I don't trust Raphael either. Both of them are hiding lots of secrets. It's best we solve these problems ourselves."

Jason continues talking to both women for a little longer, then eventually he splits off. "I'll see you two later. And don't worry, I'll take care of the time dilation before I leave today."

"Bye, Jason." Fiona says, giving him a kiss on the cheek. "Tell Phoebe I said 'hello.'"

Jason gives his mind-wife a loving squeeze on the shoulder, then makes his way outside. He heads toward a special Battle Zone crafted over 80 years earlier, one filled with magical symbols focused on protection and containment.

One he draws within a block's radius of the facility, he begins to feel the tell-tale vibrations of combat impacts taking place inside. He walks over to the entrance, pauses to put some earmuffs on, then steps inside.

WHUMP! WHUMP!!

Deafening aftershocks rattle Jason's bones. He walks down a long hallway into an auditorium with a few hundred seats placed behind a containment barrier, and a specialized arena not dissimilar to the Queen Network's battle zones. However, this arena is not made in a virtual space, but in reality itself.

A field littered with tall trees sits in the center of the courtyard. There, a powerful-looking crocodile wearing glorious golden battle armor engages in violent combat with one of the Psions, Initiator Dunal. As a mere 1st Level Psion, he is extremely weak compared to any other member of his species, but he is still thousands of years old and possesses a decent level of combat competency.

Dunal's opponent turns out to be Kar and Blinker's thirdborn child, Kallista. As a crocodilian warrior over 140 years old, she has spent more than a century honing her combat skills with the spear to a level far surpassing her brothers and sisters. She may once have been a whiny brat, long ago, but those were the ancient times. Now, she is an elite of the First Generation of crocodile warriors.

Blinker and Kar have not stopped having children. Every few years, without fail, Blinker has given birth to a new pod of croco-spawn, and by now more than 50 generations have been born in Chrona's space. Whether she has three children at once or as many as a dozen, Blinker names and loves all of them, using her superior mind to recall all their names and childhoods.

Kallista bobs and weaves while Dunal fires off powerful blasts of Primal Psionic energy. The somewhat slow-witted Psion moves with deliberate care, always keeping distance between himself and his adversary. Each blast of raw telekinetic power strikes Kallista as it if were a punch manifested from mental energy, knocking her back, but her armor deflects and absorbs the blows, preventing her from suffering severe damage.

Kallista flicks her tongue out. Her blue scales shine from the gaps in her golden armor, revealing potential 'weak points' Dunal would never be so stupid as to attack. She pants like a dog, one of her signature traits, and darts toward Dunal while stabbing her spear at his stomach.

The Psion instantly conjures a shield of raw telekinesis, revolving it around himself as if it were made of water. He forces Kallista's deadly attack to the side, causing it to miss entirely. He then punishes her with a telekinetic punch to the face, pummeling her into the dirt!

Inside the audience, several dozen crocodiles, all of them much younger than Kallista, whoop and cheer at the sight of this incredible fight! While Kallista and Dunal might only technically possess the power of mere Demon Lords, they are both far better in the realm of combat than any demon of comparable strength. Inside Chrona, aside from playing the Wordsmith's video games, the best way to let off steam and have some fun is either by fighting virtual opponents inside the Queen Network, or real flesh and blood opponents in the Battle Arena.

As such, the vast majority of crocodiles and Psions have become battle maniacs! All they do every day is train their bodies and their minds. If they aren't actively fighting one another, they are meditating to enhance their insights into the art of warfare. They frequently consult one another to offer insights and pointers.

As it stands, the most powerful entity inside Chrona is undoubtedly Jason Hiro. The second strongest, most would argue, is Blinker. After her, most would say that Aspirator Raavul is the next pillar of Chrona's might, but a few in the know also posit Rebecca must be exceptionally strong thanks to her Cybernite body and built-in skills. While she has never bothered engaging in these petty battles, her strength must surely be impressive!

As for the 1st Level Psions and the crocodile children, they are far weaker than the previous four mentioned, but they are still highly trained warriors with a profound grasp of the technical aspects of combat. Their reaction times and combat impulses have been beaten into them over many decades by their mother and their peers outside Chrona, in the Queen Network.

* * *

Jason stops at the edge of the Arena. He glances around until he spots a familiar face, then he walks around the seating area, inside the combat barrier. Soon, he arrives at the densest cluster of crocodiles, where he finds Kar lounging in a chair, munching on some fish.

"Hurgh. Turtle. Are you here to fight?" Kar asks, his words causing the younger Crocodiles around him to take notice of the Wordsmith's presence.

"Not really. I was thinking about it, but instead I decided to spectate for a bit." Jason answers. "Kallista's spearmanship is better than I remember. She's been improving a lot."

"Hurgh! If only you knew. She found a powerful Demon warrior inside the Queen Net." Kar explains. "His virtual self has been teaching her spearmanship at her request."

Jason nods approvingly. "I think someday your kids are going to make a big difference in the War outside."

"Of course!" Kar boasts. "They are MY spawn, after all! They come from the seed of the mightiest Crocodile!"

Jason smiles and pats his friend's back, but inside he can't help feeling a little sad.

The damage Mephisto caused to Kar's soul has proven irreparable. No matter what Jason has tried, he simply hasn't been able to heal Kar's injuries, leaving him forever incapable of obtaining the power he once held. At best, Kar can obtain a cybernetically augmented body and increase his combat strength to the peak of whatever human technology might someday achieve, but his magical potential will never return.

Even so, Kar appears undaunted. He lives in the moment, reveling in his children's accomplishments with the utmost pride, living vicariously through them as if he were still in his glory days.

Jason can't help but surmise that Kar, despite losing the power he once held, has achieved true happiness. He is a warrior no more, but he has restored his species, and that has given him a deeper feeling of contentment than any transitory state of 'power' ever could.

Huh. Maybe Kar actually has life all figured out. Jason muses.

"Look, papa!" One of the younger crocodiles exclaims. "Big sis is about to go all-out!"

Jason and Kar turn their attention to the arena, where Initiator Dunal has once again knocked Kallista to the side. His psionic blasts might not be too strong, but they have become highly focused over time, striking with the impact of cannonballs. Were he to fight a human military during Earth's 21st century, he would surely be able to punch holes in tanks and flip over vehicles via his metacognition.

Unfortunately, his opponent is also a master of combat. Born with the inherent spiritual power of her mother and the physical strength of her father, Kallista has already begun walking a road with no known upper limit, and she may someday surpass even Kar in his prime, as may all of her brothers and sisters.

Kallista's tongue lolls out as she pants excitedly. "I can feel your attacks weakening! You are running out of stamina, Dunal!"

Dunal's expression appears the same as ever, but any observer who knows him can easily see that Kallista's words ring true. He is visibly fatigued and no longer able to fight as fiercely as he did at the beginning of the battle. Dunal's senses pick out the audience members, and he feels a pang of shame when he senses the Wordsmith's presence.

The Mightiest Human is watching! Dunal thinks. I cannot afford to lose so pitifully while Jason Hiro is here. I will bring shame upon the Volgrim Empire if I do! But I am at my limit! Every time we battle, I only fall further and further behind! I haven't beaten Kallista in the last five years, and this time will not be any different!

His expression darkens. It's infuriating. These mud-dwellers should have no chance against me, but I am limited by the output of my body! If only there was a way I could overwhelm her and make Kallista concede defeat, but her vitality is simply too strong. I will once again fail and make my fellow Psions weep...

Kallista lunges at Dunal. Her spear stabs out three times, and he quickly manages to deflect the attacks, yet his offensive strength has dwindled to such a point that he can only step backward time and time again, allowing his crocodilian adversary to press her advantage!

Repeatedly, Kallista steps toward him, dancing with her spear, making sweeping strikes to knock him off-kilter, and constantly barraging his ever-weakening psionic shield.

Kar's daughter shoots a glance toward the spectator stands. She grins to herself, seeing the Wordsmith watch her with an impressed expression.

My idol is here! Kallista thinks. He is happy to see my performance! He admires my improvement! I'm not at Uncle Jason's level yet, but I will someday reach it, then surpass him! I'll make my father proud and become the strongest of all my siblings!

Fantasies dance in her eyes, but those thoughts momentarily cloud her judgment. As she revels in the admiration of her siblings and her idol, Kallista fails to notice a storm brewing on Dunal's face. The Psion, pushed back time and time again, soon finds himself drawing worryingly close to the edge of the arena barrier. With his back against the wall, he can no longer fall back any further!

I'm going to lose! Dunal roars in his head. I cannot fall here! Not with the Wordsmith watching me! I might as well give up my Path and become a recluse! What good is the raw power of Primal Psionics if all I can do is knock around a mud-dweller for a bit before suffering such a humiliating defeat? I need more power!

More power! Dunal thinks.

MORE! POWER!!

Dunal's emotions turn turbulent. His rage grows explosively, and at the same time, an invisible crack rapidly spreads across his Psionic seed.

Elsewhere on Chrona, Aspirator Raavul, meditating inside her personal study, suddenly opens up her eyes and looks toward the Battle Arena.

[It's happening! Finally!] She thinks, shocked beyond words. [But... so soon?!]

Dunal's Psionic Seed cracks faster and faster. Too late, Kallista turns around and looks at him in horror as his power begins to climb up, up, up!

"What the-?! You! Shit, how are you...?!"

Kallista starts to jump backward, but she's too late.

Dunal's Psionic Seed explodes! It erupts with the full power of an awakened 2nd Level Psion, shattering with a force far beyond his comprehension. In an instant, Dunal taps into the Psionic Well, and his eyes close as visions of an ancient Psion flow into his mind.

At the same time, the eruption of energy rushes out of his body, slams into Kallista, and throws her back with horrifying strength. She screams as she hurtles across the arena, crashing through two giant trees and slamming into the distant barrier on the complete opposite side where she stood only moments before. Luckily, because of her innate durability and the armor protecting her, she only suffers minor injuries, but the shock to her psyche is much more profound.

"You! You're evolving?!" Kallista exclaims, scared at first, then overjoyed as she realizes Dunal is the first Initiator to jump to the rank beyond that of a 1st Level Psion.

But Dunal does not answer. He remains silent as his mind merges into the Psionic Well, falling deep into conversation with an ancient Psion who also once mastered the power of Primal Psionics.

Jason's eyes shine. He crows to Kar, "It's actually happening! What luck for it to happen right on one of the days I visited!"

Kar chuckles. "Hurgh. Perhaps it was not merely luck, little Turtle. My children, and the Mother Psion's Disciples, they all look up to you. Your presence alone can inspire greatness in others."

Kallista respectfully does not attack Dunal. She remains standing, tending to her wounds while his Psionic Seed coalesces into its ultimate form. It gains a red sheen, though none of the people present have any way of observing it, and then that red color fades away...

After less than a minute, Dunal opens his eyes. Because of Chrona's extreme time dilation, a ritual that would ordinarily require several hours to complete occurs in a fraction of the time. Two hundred and fifty minutes worth of mind-merging happens in less than one, and he reaps all of the gains at a speed that would disturb any other Psionic master.

Dunal's aura changes. A sense of gravitas surrounds him. He taps into the same well of power as he did before, but now his understanding of the universe's principles evolves far beyond its previous barriers.

[I comprehend now.] Dunal says. [My mind is Awake. I was but a foolish seedling before, ignorant to a great many Truths. No wonder it took me seven thousand Cycles to grok enough Truths to finally ascend. How pitiful my view of Reality was. I must give my deepest thanks to my Ancestor. She has taught me well.]

All of Dunal's fatigue from before disappears. His Seed, energized by his Awakening, burns with fiery heat, igniting his pores and allowing him to drink the faintest, weakest wisps of the universe's Cosmic power. Unfortunately, he is still far too immature to baptize himself in True Cosmic Energy, but someday, should he reach the 6th Level, that will change.

Raavul bursts into the Battle Arena's entrance. She quickly levitates forward to evaluate her student, and a look of shock passes across her eyes.

[A Perfect Ascendance! Dunal, how is this possible? For you to Ascend before your peers is already miraculous enough, but never in my wildest musings did I believe your Seed could Ascend at this quality! You have obtained the firmest possible Foundation upon which to build your future growth!]

Dunal's eyes shine. He bows respectfully toward his teacher.

[Master. I was slow of mind before. I was dull, uncoordinated. It was your excellent teaching, and the competition with my peers that have allowed my Ascendance. I spoke to a Progenitor who lived over one point five million cycles in the past. She informed me that a Perfect Ascension was something only achieved by a select few of our people, including Second Founder Dosena herself...]

Dunal quickly recounts the discussion he held with the ancient Psion master, causing Raavul's eyes to widen and narrow repeatedly. The more profound Truths escape her understanding, but even the shallowest words spoken from such an ancient legend cause her nostrils to flare and her breathing to quicken.

[I see! All this time, I believed that Comprehension was the crux of a solid Foundation, but there was more to it after all. True Combat is a key component of forming a Psionic Seed. Since you have successfully replicated a feat the Second Founder once accomplished, that means you could someday walk the same path as her.]

Jason, listening in on the sidelines, frowns slightly. He crosses his arms and strolls into the Battle Arena.

"Hold on. You're saying because Dunal has repeatedly engaged in battle with the Crocodiles, it helped solidify his Psionic Seed to the level of Perfection?"

Raavul turns to the Wordsmith and quickly nods. [Of course. Why? Did I say something incorrect?]

"No, I wouldn't call it incorrect..." Jason says slowly. "It just seems... obvious? Have your people been taught not to engage in combat?"

[Of course we fight.] Raavul says. [...but not until a Psion reaches the 3rd Level are they typically put in extreme combat situations. It has been the common belief that fighting before one's Path is set will lead to a worse outcome. I am very surprised at this upending of common knowledge.]

A brief moment of silence follows. Jason's expression becomes uneasy.

"You're a warrior species. Don't you find it a little odd that the solution to a 'perfect seed' is simply to fight more? Doesn't this seem obvious to you?"

[Of course, now that the logic is laid out, it makes perfect sense.] Raavul says. [The more we fight, the more we condense our Seeds. I still do not see a problem.]

Jason looks at Raavul. Then he looks at Dunal.

"I guess I'm not spelling it out plainly enough. Who decided that avoiding combat until a Psion reached the 3rd Level was 'common sense'? Doesn't that seem almost... deliberate? As if someone were trying to hide an important Truth about Psionic Ascension?"

He leans forward. "Someone important?"

Raavul's smiling eyes lose some of their glimmer. She looks at Jason, troubled, then looks away.

[Someone important. Someone who would benefit from keeping Psions in the dark about the true Path we should all walk... someone who would... stand to gain from our ignorance.]

Jason continues to gaze at the side of Raavul's head. Her expression gradually becomes more and more disturbed, until she finally looks at the Wordsmith again.

[You are strongly implying Founder Dosena is the culprit.] Raavul accuses. [That notion seems far-fetched.]

"Does it?" Jason challenges. "I find it rather suspicious the Volgrim have never had a Psion break past the level of Executor since the end of the Seven Great Wars. Don't you? And now we see that Dunal here has just done something previously thought 'impossible' by following what I would certainly call common sense training. That doesn't strike you as odd?"

Kallista, having approached her opponent a while ago, looks just as bothered as the others. "Uncle, are you saying the Volgrim Founders are deliberately weakening the Psions? I don't want to insult your intellect, but considering they are fighting a losing war against the Plague, doesn't that seem rather foolish? Wouldn't they want to have the strongest armies possible?"

"I would hope so." Jason answers. "But maybe Dosena is keeping her 'people' down deliberately. I've heard that in the ancient past, she killed all the other 9th Level Psions. Maybe she has an... ego problem. She doesn't want someone else challenging her position."

[My apologies, Wordsmith.] Raavul says curtly. [But that does not sound like the Second Founder I know.]

"And just how well do you know your Second Founder?" Jason retorts. "Ever had a chat with her? Because I have. Her every word exudes arrogance."

[The Second Founder helped save our people from the Sentinels. She has every right to be arrogant.] Raavul replies, no longer looking at Jason in quite the same friendly manner she did only a few minutes before. [I would appreciate it if you discontinued disparaging the Mightiest Psion. She is not the villain you are making her out to be.]

"Right, I was only hypothesizing." Jason says, holding up his palms. "Sorry. I went a little too far. Maybe this is all just a big coincidence. In any case, we should all be grateful for Dunal's Ascension. He's going to become a real powerhouse in the future!"

Raavul's frosty eyes warm a little. She looks away from Jason toward her student. [Yes. Congratulations, Dunal. I look forward to seeing your growth over the coming cycles. I will also be putting your peers on much stricter combat training in the hopes they can someday obtain a Perfected Seed, as you have.]

[I contemplate and comprehend your wisdom, Aspirator.] Dunal says respectfully. [From now on, my title shall be Servitor. I shall continue my studies and aim to surpass the legends of my Progenitors, becoming a master of Primal Psionics. And next, to enhance my thinking speed, I shall walk the Path of the Second Founder, becoming a Brain Enhancer to complement my raw Primal power.]

"Don't get ahead of yourself." Jason says with a chuckle. "Take things one step at a time. You still have a long way to go before you reach the 3rd Level, if past Ascension rates among your people are anything to go by."

[Inside Chrona, I have nothing if not time.] Dunal says, bowing his head politely. [Now then. I have kept my opponent waiting long enough. Daughter of Kar, are you ready to suffer a defeat most humiliating?]

A sneer fills Kallista's countenance. "Well well, seems your little power-up has made you a lot cockier! Don't think I'll go down easy, because Kar's spawn always fight until we can't move anymore!"

Jason and Raavul make their way out of the Arena. They watch from the sides as Dunal and Kallista once again do battle.

But this time, the situation completely inverts. Dunal's power rise is so shocking that Jason cannot help but gasp repeatedly as the newly Ascended Psion makes short work of his opponent. Using nothing but raw telekinetic power, Dunal thrashes Kallista around, slamming her against the barriers with brutal force, pounding her into the dirt, and otherwise treating her like a chew toy. No matter how incredible Kallista seemed before, anyone with two brain cells to rub together can easily see that she has completely and overwhelmingly lost the fight.

Less than a minute later, Kallista collapses, her body beaten and broken. Despite the horrific beating she took, Jason still gets the impression Dunal didn't act overly aggressive toward her. In fact, at several points, he held back his true power, taking care not to land any overly deadly strikes.

"Absolutely unbelievable." Jason says to Raavul as they watch the fight conclude. "He's as strong as a Demon Baron now. Stronger even, in some ways."

[The first Four Levels of Psionic Ascension are roughly equal to the power of Demon Mortals.] Raavul explains calmly. [At the 4th Level, Psions should be about as powerful as most Demon Emperors, depending on the matchup. At the 5th Level, Psions are overwhelmingly superior to all but the strongest Demon Emperors, such as Satan, and they become eligible to enter the Volgrim military. At the 6th Level, not even Satan himself could touch a Psion.]

"And at the 7th Level, they become Bottom Cosmics." Jason says, his expression becoming a frown. "Hmm. Kind of strange, don't you think?"

[Strange?] Raavul questions.

"Yeah. If the absolute peak of demonic power is equivalent to a 5th level Psion, then why is the next evolution for a Demon the rank of 'Deity'? Shouldn't there be something in-between? Like... I dunno... Demon Half-Deity, or 'DemiDemon,' or Demon Demigod. You know what I mean? Feels like there's a rank missing."

[Demons are innate Soul Manipulators.] Raavul posits. [Perhaps the forcible evolution to Deity simply bypasses a rank demons could acquire normally if they were not hampering themselves via Soul Manipulation. Perhaps if a demon could grow to the rank of Emperor without feasting on souls, in much the way they are doing now on Tarus II, they might discover a level beyond Emperor.]

She shrugs in a decidedly 'human' manner.

[Or perhaps such a rank simply doesn't exist.]

"Yeah. Maybe it just doesn't exist." Jason grunts. "Sure would be neat if it did, though. Well, scary, now that I think about it. Since at least even Bottom Cosmics are limited by the Akashic Rules. I wouldn't want a 'planetary threat' among the Demons who could act recklessly and genocide billions without consequence. Probably better we never pull the genie out of that bottle."

Jason shakes his head. He walks over to Kallista, not bothering to heal her as her brothers and sisters instead haul her off to the Recovery Rooms, where she will take a bath in a vat of magical energy and slowly heal herself back to full.

"You may have lost, but it was a good fight." Jason says to the barely conscious crocodile. "Lots of fun to watch. I'm really proud of you, kid."

Kallista gurgles out a bloody chuckle. "Kyargh... thanks... uncle Jason. Kyahaha..."

After Kallista is escorted away, Jason also makes his departure. He says goodbye to Kar, offers Dunal his praises over his evolution, then teleports to a platform on the edge of Blinker Bay. A teleportation matrix leading back to Realspace stands in isolation, its magical runes belying a thousand powerful enchantments designed to ward away the effects of 250x Time Dilation for those returning to Realspace. Over the decades, Jason and Blinker have worked with Rebecca many times to improve the system. Now, anyone can return to Realspace with little to no side effects.

However, the Psions have already decided to make Chrona their permanent home, and Blinker won't let her kids go back. Instead, everyone has decided they quite enjoy living in a 250x accelerated dilation-space, so literally nobody but Jason ever uses the Transfer Matrix.

Before doing anything else, Jason utters several Words of Power, targeted at Chrona's dimensional space. He stabilizes its time dilation, then he turns his attention to the teleporter.

The Wordsmith steps onto the platform. He keys in some commands onto the magical transference system, setting it to 'outbound' mode, then he targets a carefully calculated position on Tarus II, one of the designated safe landing points where he won't accidentally teleport inside someone, killing himself and that person.

Of course, if Jason wanted, he could also use Chrona's Transfer Matrix to teleport people into the time-accelerated realm without any issues. But that isn't his goal today.

After setting all the options, Jason inhales, then gazes at the center of the teleporter runes.

"Time to play with my baby boy. Heehee! I'm so excited!"

A second later, Jason vanishes from the spot.

Foop!

Part 582: Beginning of the End

"There he is! Little Timmy!" Jason excitedly whispers. His eyes light up with the joy of fatherhood as he hovers over his one-month-old son's crib, where the infant snoozes quietly, having just gone through another long and tumultuous day of babyhood.

Phoebe stands beside Jason, looking a little tired, but with eyes as warm as any happy mother should have. She hugs onto Jason's arm and yawns, resting her cheek on his shoulder.

"I just put Timothy to bed." Phoebe whispers. "Let's keep the volume down."

"Man. I should have come here a few days ago." Jason grouches. "I'd have loved to put him down."

"I'd have liked that too." Phoebe says.

Jason's wife is acutely aware that every minute he spends in Realspace is 250 minutes he's giving up in Chrona. Humanity is still plenty vulnerable, even despite their incredible acceleration over the last seven months. Every extra day Jason spends working on a new device, or a magical augment for humanity, or literally anything of value is a day humanity as a whole gains another handhold against the Plague.

In many ways, it saddens Phoebe, making her feel as if she's selfishly wasting the time of humanity's mightiest guardian. Only the knowledge that Hope is also making gains for humanity helps stave off those dark thoughts.

Jason glances at his wife. His smile fades as he sees the indecisiveness on her face.

"Phoebe. I know what you're thinking." Jason says softly. "There's an easy solution. Just come back with me to Chrona. I know you were worried the time dilation might affect your pregnancy, but Timothy has already been born. We can raise him quickly inside Chrona and make a new family together, like Hope and Amelia have done with their kids."

Phoebe sighs. "I don't want to do that, Jason. Not that I don't love Kar and Blinker, but I don't want our son being raised without any fellow human children around. All my friends are here in Realspace too. I'd have to leave them behind and age decades while they remained practically frozen, barely inching along day by day..."

"That's what I've had to do already." Jason points out. "Aging almost 150 years while you've barely changed at all has been exceptionally difficult for me."

The Wordsmith looks away. He closes his eyes and rubs his glabella in frustration.

"It won't be as bad as you think. In fact, it'll be an amazing experience." Jason says after a few moments of contemplation. "Think of all the amazing inventions you could have worked on if you'd been in Chrona with me. We could have been keeping each other company all the time..."

Phoebe shakes her head slowly. "And Timothy?"

"Look, if you want our son to make friends with other kids, that's an easy solution. We'll just bring more humans into Chrona." Jason says. "I've been thinking we'll need more anyway."

"What about the Changelings?" Phoebe asks. "You still haven't found a way to uncover them. Right? The only foolproof method is by using Jepthath's power, and that would entail bringing members of Jepthath's Legion into Chrona."

"Yeah... still pretty stumped on that." Jason says with a groan.

Thankfully, as has been the par in recent years, Jason has always proactively put down information barriers whenever he appears in Realspace to ensure no pesky Psions can spy on his discussions. They might not be capable of keeping out Dosena, but they should be 100% effective against weaklings like Creator Demila.

"Then it's a no from me, Jason." Phoebe says. "Besides. If what Fiona said is right, then Chrona's dimensional stability is deteriorating over time. Every new life form that is born or enters Chrona will cause it to accelerate faster and faster, forcing you to manually stabilize it each time. Timothy and I would only add to that deterioration."

She continues. "And let's say you have to leave Chrona for an extended period. If I'm in there and the time flux gets high enough, I'd lose contact with Realspace. Decades, centuries, or millennia could pass before you returned. No doubt I'd invent amazing things, but the social isolation... I don't know if I could handle it, Jason. I don't know if I could live thousands of years without you."

Jason sighs. Then he chuckles.

"I think you're being a little melodramatic, honey. Nothing that nuts is going to happen."

Phoebe crosses her arms. "Jason, you can't even sleep a single night with me in Realspace anymore. Staying with me for a couple of hours at a time is your limit. If you were to stay with me for one day, 250 days would pass in Chrona and the breakpoint would occur. You already have to stabilize the dimension-space once every few weeks. What happens if you miss that time cutoff, and then MONTHS pass without you inside? Don't you understand that things would become so dire you couldn't even return to Chrona without suffering severe after-effects?"

For once, Jason falls completely silent. He touches his chin and looks at the floor, falling deep into thought as he debates the finer merits of her points.

"...Alright." He says, after a minute of silence. "But can you at least consider transferring to one of the Cube-spaces? Even a ten-times acceleration would make things easier for us. Then when I come to visit you, there will only be a 25x time differential between that Cube-space and Chrona."

Phoebe frowns, causing Jason to quickly add, "Oh! And there's LOTS of human kids there! Timothy could make plenty of friends! Plus the Cube-spaces are completely stable!"

Phoebe's frown vanishes. She rolls her eyes, sighs, then smiles.

"I'll think about it."

"Great!" Jason chirps. "That's all I wanted. Now, what say we try making another baby, eh?"

"You are such a horn-dog." Phoebe says helplessly. "It's not a race to catch up to Hope."

"No, I know. I know." Jason says. "I just... want to have more kids. If all of Hope's children have powers, and Daisy had powers, then Timothy likely will too. And that means our future children will. I don't know why things are working out like that, but I feel we have a duty to create more future protectors for humanity."

Phoebe groans. "Oh, how romantic, Jason. And here I thought you wanted kids because you wanted to make a big happy family with me."

"Hey! I do!" Jason protests, turning his attention to the sleeping baby. "I mean just look at him. He's so cuuute! I wanna squish Timmy's little cheeks and tell him I love him and give him a brother, and a sister, and another brother, and another sister-"

"I get the point!" Phoebe says, bursting into a smile. "Alright, alright. Just give me some resting time. Giving birth isn't exactly fun, Jason. Women aren't babymaking machines, and I have a lot of projects on my plate."

An invisible lightbulb pops up over Jason's head. "Oh, I know! I can better fulfill my duties to humanity if I have more kids, so what if I get two or three side-chicks, honey? I bet I could put a baby in each of them if I- OWW OWW hey, I was joking! I was joking!! Haha!"

Phoebe socks Jason in the arm twice, growling at him as he actually has the audacity to bring up cheating on her. Luckily, they both know Jason is way too loyal to actually do such a thing, but Phoebe still feigns anger at the thought.

"You just keep it in your pants for a few months, buster." Phoebe snarks. "We'll have another one when the time is right."

"Maybe we can have twins!" Jason suggests, which elicits another pair of punches on his shoulder. "Oww, oww! Kidding, kidding! Haha!"

Phoebe pauses her 'vicious' onslaught to tilt her head. "Well, I guess I could consider it. But not unless you promise to develop a babyporter."

"The hell's a 'babyporter'?" Jason asks, bewildered.

"You know. It would teleport the baby out of the womb painlessly." Phoebe explains. "I bet you could create something like that."

"Huh. I never thought about that." Jason says. "I'd need to find a way to seamlessly sever the umbilical cord, displace the baby's mass without abruptly causing a spatial bubble inside your- huh?"

Jason pauses.

He turns to look off to the side, and his facial expression warps.

"What! Shit, now? Of all times?!"

Phoebe flinches on seeing his reaction. "What's wrong?"

Jason looks at her, his expression grim.

"It's happening."

On the world of Maiura, Henry and Ashley enjoy a rare day off from their duties, training, and other essential work. Having spent most of the previous week either inside the Queen Network or working with other recently empowered members of the Legion, Henry is quite tired mentally from being in constant Work Mode, and Ashley feels much the same way.

Unlike Henry, she's spent most of her time over the last seven months mastering her Monsterization. As time has passed, her ability to transform into an Orc has become second nature to her, to the point she can morph her body in seconds without even needing the Power Glove, and be able to maintain that level of strength indefinitely.

In fact, her strength has gradually increased to levels well beyond what any human doing ordinary strength training could accomplish. In a pinch, she can rip apart heavily armored tanks with her bare hands. She can easily lift a ten ton weight and throw it several hundred feet! She might not be at Henry's level yet, but she has the sense she may reach him in due time, and someday even surpass him.

But neither of the two thinks about those things.

Instead, they sit on a picnic blanket in a flower-covered field at the base of Mount Adams where one of the smaller local villages has sprung up spontaneously. Not many people live down there, but those who do tend to be civilians and non-essential personnel working light duty.

A warm spring breeze wafts across the meadow. One of the more interesting features of humanity living on two planets is that while spring might be happening on Maiura, it's already Autumn's equivalent on Tarus II. By the time summer arrives on Maiura, the snow will have begun to fall across humanity's main living areas on humanity's previous homeworld.

This has created an interesting but unexpected tourism mini-industry, one which will surely germinate and grow as the centuries and millennia pass. Someday, it will be completely ordinary for people to leave one of the worlds during the winter to live on the other in a summer home, even if the two populations 'technically' reside on one of the worlds primarily.

Ashley munches on a sandwich made with meat from a locally sourced Maiuran animal, some creature hunted in the nearby forces by the local villagers, with a couple slices of a tomato-like vegetable thrown in for added flavor. A line of meat-juice drips down her chin, which she hurriedly wipes away.

Henry lays on his back with his hands behind his head. He looks up at the sky, admiring the beautiful and thick cloud formations swirling above, making distinct patterns that he sometimes ascribes with anthropomorphic features subconsciously.

"Hey, can you pass me the juice?" Ashley asks, gesturing to a small container of liquid on Henry's opposite side.

He casually grabs it with one hand, passes the container over his chest to his girlfriend, then puts his hand back behind his head.

"Thanks." Ashley says, smiling at him.

She pauses for a moment, noticing Henry hasn't smiled back. He continues to look up at the sky, seemingly lost in his thoughts.

After pouring herself a cup of some locally sourced berry juice, Ashley sighs. "You're doing it again."

"Huh? Doing what?" Henry asks, blinking a few times as he slightly turns his head to look at her.

"You're living in your head. Again. With all the 'others.'"

Henry frowns slightly, then returns to looking up at the sky.

"Babe, I'm the leader of the Legion. I have to stay in contact with them. It's just a subconscious thing. I'm still right here, ready to talk whenever you need."

"We're supposed to be enjoying a day off together." Ashley says, her voice a tad bitter. "But you're always devoting a large part of your mind to them. It makes me feel like... like an accessory."

Once more, Henry looks at his girlfriend with a slight turn of his head. "Why do we always come back to this topic?"

"Because it's the big divide." Ashley answers, forcing herself to maintain a neutral tone. "I understand you have your responsibilities, Henry. But I'm always playing second fiddle to a thousand other people."

"Well, it's closer to fifty thousand now." Henry adds, before wincing when he realizes he only made her point stronger.

"Fifty thousand!" Ashley says, a little louder. She gives him an exasperated glance, then angrily chomps into her sandwich. "What are they telling you right now? That I'm whining again? Like always?"

"Babe. It's not like that." Henry says, rolling onto his side to lift up his head and rest his cheek on his palm. "I can't turn off the connection. They're always present, but we don't always... talk to each other? It's just a passive thing."

"It makes me uncomfortable." Ashley says, after a moment of silence. "Really uncomfortable. Sometimes, when I see you looking at me, it feels like, like, I guess like twenty five thousand other men are also getting an eyeful. What are they saying about me? Are they judging me? I don't know. I can't hear them."

"Right, you can't hear them." Henry says. "So why does it matter?"

Seeing her expression darken, he quickly adds, "Look, you could just join the Legion, honey. It feels great, and you'd become so much stronger. Like me! What's wrong with that?"

"Humans aren't meant to share their every waking thought and emotion with a collective." Ashley counters. "We're not bugs, Henry. We might be social creatures, but too much intimacy is weird. I don't want to join Jepthath's cult."

Henry lowers his eyes to stare at the grass.

"It's not a cult..."

His argument feels feeble in the moment. Truthfully, he can't help but acknowledge her argument is an emotional one, but he understands why she feels that way. Perhaps he'd feel the same if he swapped places with her.

"Hey." Henry says, looking back up at her. "Is this why... you and I... we're never...?"

"Never what?" Ashley asks, meeting his gaze.

"You know." Henry says. "Intimate. You rarely kiss me. We've never had a toss in the sheets. We're basically just friends who look at each other affectionately. Is our relationship doomed to stay like this?"

This time, it's Ashley who breaks eye contact. She looks off into the distance, sighing with a heavy heart.

"Doomed? I don't know. I can't get that feeling of being watched out of my head. It wouldn't just be you and me. I'd feel as if I were being... ogled. Watched by a bunch of men I can't see or interact with. A peep show for creeps. It makes me... so uncomfortable."

Henry lifts himself up into a sitting position. He reaches out to touch Ashley's shoulder.

"Babe, it's not like that. I see and feel what the other Legion members feel. We're all so used to, you know, to frolicking and that other stuff, it's not like we're a bunch of perverts. There's just as many women as men in the Legion. For all of us, it's more of a... an emotional bonding experience. We all enjoy romance, love, sex... we all enjoy the carnal pleasures of the flesh, but we also experience what it feels to give birth, to experience the pain of motherhood. It brings us closer together."

"But see? See??" Ashley snaps, pulling away from his touch. "That's weird! It's creepy! God, hearing you describe it makes me feel even dirtier. Carnal pleasures, do you even hear the words you're using?"

Henry lowers his arm and hangs his head helplessly. "I... I don't know what to say. I'm just trying to-"

He pauses for a moment as a thought enters his mind, a thought transmitted from one of the female members of the Legion.

Slowly, he lifts his eyes up to look at the profile of his girlfriend's face, slightly alarmed.

"Hey... uh... this, uh... what is this... really about?"

"Pardon?" Ashley asks, glancing at him with a look of alarm.

Henry remains quiet for a moment. He decides to fess up.

"Lauren- you remember Lauren, right?"

Ashley nods slowly. "We met a few months ago. What about her?"

"Well, she told me just now... ah, I don't know if I should- well, I'll just... I can't stop thinking about it, now that she's mentioned it."

Henry bites his lip. He looks at Ashley with a guilty expression.

"You... do you have some... other reason, for worrying about, you know... the 'peep show' stuff. It doesn't quite- you know? It doesn't feel like it's coming entirely out of thin air."

Ashley looks at Henry. Her expression remains neutral for a moment. Then, her eyelids sag a little. She slowly looks at the ground.

"I don't want to talk about it."

Henry's heart skips a beat. "So, there is something- I, I mean... something bad?"

Ashley quickly shakes her head. Her expression becomes stony as she turns her head away from Henry.

"I don't want to talk about it."

Inside Henry's head, the Legion remains quiet. All of them feel a deep and serious solemn pain cross their souls. Several of the women, and a surprising number of the men, they transmit a series of shared experiences among the collective. Henry experiences those emotions. He replays those painful memories, raw emotions that hurt to feel, as brutal acts of violence play out in all their minds.

Sadistic acts. Acts that no woman or man should ever have to suffer. Being pinned down, forced by someone stronger than them...

A flicker of rage passes over Henry's face, followed by an equally painful feeling of helplessness.

Ashley doesn't need to tell him what happened. After seven months together, the reasons for her hesitation become clear, making him feel guilty for not having noticed the signs sooner.

"I'm sorry." Henry says softly. "I didn't know. If... if that's the way you feel, I can see why... this relationship might not work out between us."

Ashley's body jerks slightly. She quickly turns her head to look at him.

"Henry, no. I- I don't want to... break up. I don't want that."

"I'm not going to subject you to any further pain." Henry says solemnly. "Humans suffered unimaginably before the Wordsmith appeared. I lost my friend Piper years ago. I know what the demons did to humans even before that. Hell, it wasn't just the demons, or the monsters. Humans could be equally cruel to their fellow men... and women. I can only imagine what you endured."

Ashley's breathing hastens. She lowers the half-eaten sandwich in her hand, shakily setting it and her drink on the picnic cloth before clasping her hands together.

"It's not like that, Henry. I just- I need to get over some stuff, okay? I'm trying to... to cope. I want to be strong and stand up for myself. I don't want to be weak... like I was before. But sometimes, there are these dark images I can't get out of my head. Memories."

She looks at him for half a second, then looks away.

"When I look at you, I think of when... when other people were looking at me. Laughing at me. Humiliating me. I should have said something sooner, but I've just kept it all inside for seven months, and now it's ruining another relationship. It always does."

"Nothing is ruined. Not yet." Henry says, steeling his voice. He quickly reaches out to touch her shoulder again. This time, she doesn't pull away. "Whatever you've gone through, I want to be there for you. I won't judge you for it. I won't blame you. How could I? It wasn't your fault."

He shifts his weight slightly, pulling himself a little closer. "Ashley. I love you. Okay? I really love you. And if this Legion thing bothers you. If it really bothers you... I'll give it up."

"What?!" Ashley exclaims, turning to look at him in shock. "No! Henry, you can't. You have a duty. An obligation to humanity."

"No one man is the Legion." Henry says solemnly. "Obviously, if I could choose, I'd pick to keep you and the Legion both. But even if it means losing my new status, my superhuman powers, or all the rest of it, I'd still pick you. Because I think you're worth that much."

"What does it mean to be a human?" Henry continues. "Humans are so many things. We seek justice, we seek freedom... but we also seek love. Love is so important, and our enemies always underestimate just how essential it is to us. The demons never truly understood the love we feel, and neither did the angels. Especially not the Volgrim. It's why mothers give their lives to save their children, and fathers give their lives in war for their families. Frankly, if I wasn't willing to give up the Legion for you, I wouldn't be worthy of calling myself a man."

Ashley's expression softens. "You... don't have to go that far, Henry. I know how hard it was for you before you joined the Legion. I'd never make you give it up."

"You wouldn't be making me do anything." Henry says sternly. "I'd do it freely. For you."

Ashley smiles, a sad expression tinged with relief. To hear the man she loves finally putting her above the Legion makes her feel an unexpected warmth. She looks at Henry with a deeper affection than before, suddenly feeling her previous fears wash away.

"No. You stay with the Legion, Henry." Ashley says. "And you stay with me. We've needed to have this talk for a long time. I'm glad we did."

"I am too." Henry says, smiling toothily. "We'll work out the other stuff along the way. If you still have doubts moving forward... just tell me. Okay?"

"I'll tell you. I will." Ashley promises. "Thank you for being so understanding."

Henry and Ashley lean forward. They give each other a gentle kiss. She blushes cutely, then pulls away, returning to finish her sandwich, a happy glow on her face. At the same time, Henry smiles, feeling satisfied with how things have progressed between them.

Love is not a sprint, after all, but a marathon.

Only with understanding and acceptance can two people truly forge a lifelong bond.

In time, they can iron out the trauma she has experienced, and perhaps even move beyond it.

Sometimes I forget just how much damage our species has endured, Henry thinks. Today was a reminder not to live in my head and be so self-absorbed. Everyone has it rough, but some people have it worse than the rest.

Some time later, Henry returns to laying on his back with his hands folded behind his head. This time, he puts much more of his focus on his girlfriend, giving her the attention she deserves. As for the Legion, they do not bother him as much, and seek to keep out of his affairs to keep the cross-chatter to a minimum.

Their leader has earned that much.

Ashley takes a long sip from her drink. She turns to Henry as if to say something, then she pauses and cocks her head.

"Hm? Did you hear that?"

"Hear what?" Henry asks.

He sits up and looks around, yet even his superhuman hearing doesn't detect anything.

But then, after a few seconds, a distant scream of terror, barely audible, reaches his ears.

"Huh? Something's happening." Henry says, quickly jumping to his feet. "Stay here."

"No. I'll go with you." Ashley says, immediately monsterizing her body.

In just five seconds, she grows from five and a half feet tall to over eight feet, towering above her boyfriend. Then, she and Henry take off toward the commotion.

As they race across the meadow, the distant scream becomes several. They quickly spot dozens of people running toward them in a panic, fleeing from something unseen. Looks of terror hang on all of their faces as they scramble over and around anything in their path, running like panicked animals.

It doesn't take Henry and Ashley long to find what caused the disturbance.

At the edge of the village, five bipedal creatures with mottled green skin and faceless heads grab hold of people, stab their arms into those people's chests, and penetrate their ribs with green slithering tentacles that invade their veins and infest their hearts.

Henry's heart goes cold. In a single second, his terror washes across the Legion, waking all of them up and rousing them from whatever activity they all might be pursuing at that moment.

[KOLVAXIANS ON MAIURA!] Jepthath's voice telepathically booms. [Everyone! TO ARMS!]

Part 583: All Hell Breaks Loose

In an instant, countless failsafe warnings go off across human space. People jump into action, immediately enacting previously-prepared battle plans. Both of the Wordsmiths act in unison, and Neil Adams, still on Volgarius, receives real-time updates instantly.

Jepthath stands inside the Hall of Heroes, transmitting his thoughts and the vision of multiple Legionnaires onto viewscreens inside a command center built specifically for recon purposes. A live video feed of what Henry is seeing streams to one of the consoles, while similar livestreams play out from the POVs of more than a hundred other high level Legionnaires. Because of his dedicated magical abilities, Jepthath is easily able to synchronize all of their visions into a cohesive narrative, delivering updates to his fellow Heroes.

Solomon strategizes. He examines the data feeds and begins barking orders, allowing Jepthath to lead the Legion around where the need is greatest.

"Five Kolvaxians sighted on Maiura." Solomon says. "Other Kolvaxians assumed to be in the area. Legion Leader Henry is on the scene. I want Legion Generals Lauren and Diego moving people to Region Adams-114 and Adams-117. Additionally, I want scouting intel on Tarus II, Pixiv, and Sharmur. We need to know if there are Kolvaxians attacking other human-heavy worlds."

While Solomon assists Jepthath, Hope meets up with his kids and wife.

"I want to help!" Blake protests. "My powers can make a difference!"

"Absolutely not." Mandy says, shaking her head at her little brother. "You're not ready. You're too young. Dad and Levi will be taking the fight from the front and I'll be assisting from the back. If you go out there, as fresh of a newbie as you are, you'll just become a liability. You need years more training."

"Mandy's right." Levi says, squeezing his little brother's shoulder. "You stay here. I know in time you'll become a powerful weapon for humanity. But that time is not now. Not today."

Hope nods at his kids, his expression grim. "Levi, I need you to be extra careful. Fighting against one Kolvaxian in the training room won't be like fighting tens, hundreds, or even millions of them in Realspace. We do NOT want a repeat of Artoria. If they grab you, I fear they might make another evolutionary leap in their physical biology again."

Levi nods. "Don't worry, dad, I'll be careful. I have Aunt Elizabeth's Greathammer. Together, we'll be unstoppable."

"The Kolvaxians are extremely resistant to blunt damage." Amelia warns. "If you find your attacks aren't landing, switch to a blade. I'll have Karla on standby for you."

"Right. Thanks, mom." Levi says, leaning over to kiss her cheek. "Wish us luck."

Not long afterward, Hope, Levi, and Mandy all vanish in a flash of light, teleporting to Realspace and leaving Blake and Amelia behind. The young man scowls bitterly, his lower lip trembling as he wrestles with feelings of dismay.

"It's not fair. I could help out there. I should be out there!"

"Don't be selfish." Amelia says, her expression darkening. "You think I don't want to go out there and help, young man? I assure you, it hurts just as bad that I'm stuck here, like a useless invalid. I used to be powerful in the past. I used to command magic that made Demon Emperors fearful. Now I'm only an ordinary woman."

Amelia's eyes flicker with self-recrimination. "I used to be somebody. Now I'm an ordinary housewife. I could still go out there and be more effective than ordinary human troopers in a lot of ways, but if I did, I know I'd be making Hope worried all the time and forcing him to keep an eye on me. It's like I'd be tying up half of his attention because he'd constantly be afraid of me getting killed. That's why I have to stay here."

Blake lowers his eyes. "But then... what can I do right now?"

"Go and train in the Queen Network." Amelia says. "Don't stop training. Master your abilities. The sooner you become a capable fighter, the sooner you can go against the Kolvaxians and humanity's other enemies."

A moment of silence follows. Blake nods slowly, then he reaches over and hugs his mother.

"Alright. Sorry, mom. I didn't mean to make a scene."

"It's fine, baby." Amelia says softly. "Let's just do what we can to help others in the meantime, okay?"

"Okay, mom."

On Volgarius, Neil and Linda receive news of the attack only moments before Unarin. By the time they've turned to inform him of the happenings on Maiura, Unarin has already been fully appraised of the situation.

"I knew it." Unarin says coldly. "This attack has been nearly a human-month in the making. Neil, I will dispatch my strongest Psions and Technopaths to Maiura, post-haste. You should return there in the meantime."

Emperor Crow looks at the two humans for a second, then closes her eyes sagely. "The demons will also-"

"We don't need the help of any demons." Neil interrupts. "My people will be fine with the help of the Volgrim."

"Mister Adams." Unarin says. "Now is not the time for your bigotry. This war is bigger than you. You must set aside past prejudices if you are to crush the Kolvaxians. To date, no worlds have ever survived a Kolvaxian invasion, especially not after their Empowerment."

"I agree with Unarin." Linda quickly adds. "We need all the help we can get. Don't turn the demons down, Neil."

The human military commander hesitates. He looks at Crow, and she crosses her feathered arms.

"Hey, if you don't want our help, you're free to tackle the unkillable death machine on your own." Crow says smugly. "Knock yourself out."

"Fine. We'll take the help of the demons. And if we survive this, we'll help your people if you ever get attacked too." Neil says. "It's only fair."

"Right. It's only fair." Crow replies, echoing Neil. "Such a generous man. Well? You'd better get going."

Neil swallows the words he truly wants to say. He taps a magical pendant on his chest, and a moment later, he and Linda vanish, teleported by Hope's power.

After they disappear, Crow stands up from her seat and cracks her back.

"Thank you for the meal, Unarin. This has been pleasant."

Unarin looks at her coldly. "You should stop antagonizing the humans. I'm loathe to say it, but the Volgrim need their power. And so do you."

"We demons are powerful enough." Crow retorts. "We can handle ourselves. In case you've forgotten, we have more than half a dozen Middle Cosmics. You have one."

"You think that's impressive?" Unarin asks derisively. "In case you've forgotten, above a Middle Cosmic is a High Cosmic. And above those are Apex Cosmics. The Milky Way has neither of the latter ranks, but other galaxies have many. We are weaklings. Your paltry starbound Cosmics would crumble if but a single High Cosmic entered the Milky Way's Akashic Barrier, let alone an Apex Cosmic. I think the recent appearance of that Archangel should be proof enough."

"We've unlocked the secret to breaking through." Crow says confidently. "We will figure something out in time."

"No. You won't." Unarin growls. "Diablo was your sole path to Ascension. With him gone, the number of Demon Deities can only decrease."

"And just who do you think taught Diablo the way to Elevate our people?" Crow fires back. "The First Emperor. He's still around. He will come up with a new plan, assuming we don't do that ourselves."

"Hah hah hah..." Unarin laughs joylessly, lowering and shaking his head at the same time. "Oh, how little you know. Do you still not understand the truth? That Voidborn is no 'demon' at all. The fact he pretends to be a Demon Emperor while truly being a Cosmic should make you quite worried. Whatever he is, he's playing your species for fools. He's using you like pawns. I fear the day will come when he will plunge a dagger into your back, as well as all the rest of us."

Crow frowns. "If he's not a demon, then what is he? Do you even know?"

"I don't. And that's really the problem. He's an enigma, even to me." Unarin concludes. "I have guesses, of course, but there's simply not enough evidence to substantiate any claims."

The First Founder waves his hand flippantly.

"You should go. Time is of the essence. I need to coordinate my Psions to reach Maiura. You and the Deities should hurry up and reinforce the humans before it's too late."

"Yes. We'll get right on that." Crow says, gurgling sinisterly in her throat.

She steps away from the table, and a few moments later, a portal opens up, created by Demon Deity Yardrat halfway across the galaxy. She passes through it and disappears.

[Dosena.] Unarin thinks. [How long until our forces reach Maiura?]

[Three standard time units.] Dosena replies.

[Too slow. Far too slow.] Unarin says with a scowl. [Use the Warpgates. Speed things up. I don't give a damn about your pride. This is our chance to make inroads with the humans. We need them to feel grateful to us.]

Dosena's voice takes a moment to respond.

[...Very well. We will use the Maiuran Warpgate to accelerate our arrival time.]

[Oh, don't get all pissy with me.] Unarin snaps. [Dammit, Dosena. This is important.]

[I simply think you're taking these mud-dwellers too seriously.] Dosena says blandly. [What can humans do that our greatest Technopath inventors cannot?]

Unarin snorts. [I guess you'll just have to wait until you've reached Maiura, won't you? You'll know then.]

On Maiura, three seconds pass from the moment Henry spots the Kolvaxian to the moment he takes action.

Merely three seconds.

And in that time, 300 seconds pass in the Hall of Heroes, while 750 seconds pass in Chrona.

Without delay, a dozen other Legionnaires teleport into the Hall of Heroes, arm themselves with pre-planned loadouts of artifact armors and weapons, then teleport onto Maiura to stand tall beside their Champion.

Simultaneously, Amelia controls the teleportation networks inside the Hall of Heroes to begin rapidly and efficiently teleporting any human and monster civilians out of the line of fire. Those people vanish, moving from the Kolvaxian landing zone up into the heavily reinforced city atop Mount Adams.

Just as the Legionnaires appear, so also do Hope, Levi, and Mandy. The three Heroes of Humanity stand tall, quickly taking in their surroundings while the Legion's reinforcements move to assist their Champion.

Mandy waves her hand, and a piece of magical parchment appears in her grasp as if pulled out of thin air. Her eyes flicker with light, and the paper explodes into flames, causing a magical rune to materialize above her head. That rune pulses with powers, sending something like a sonar ping out in all directions through the air and ground.

"Seventeen more Kolvaxians." Mandy says grimly. "Burrowing away from us at high speeds. They're traveling toward the distant civilians we haven't teleported yet."

"So many already? Damn!" Hope curses. "Mandy, Levi, you two work together to take out any you can find. I'm going to help with these five first!"

"Okay." Levi says, turning to his sister. "Lead the way."

With his sister's massive rune pinpointing the enemies hidden below the soil, Levi and Mandy race off to the west to chase after seven closely grouped-together Kolvaxians, while the other ten creatures disperse and make it too difficult to follow them.

Meanwhile, Henry stands alone for a few moments against those five. His aura explodes with power as he reaches into the pocket dimension of a small pendant hanging around his neck. He pulls out Artoria, his mightiest weapon, and switches it to its heaviest setting while also activating its flame-mode.

Then he attacks!

Wearing no armor or anything to project his seemingly fragile human body, Henry lunges at the Kolvaxians to draw their attention and present himself as an appetizing meal. After many months of occasionally visiting the Hall of Heroes to train against captured Kolvaxians, Henry has long grown accustomed to fighting them. No human, except for possibly Levi, is as adept at combating the faceless monsters in the same brutal manner Henry is.

His sword swings slowly, each heft of the blade a deliberate and ponderous action empowered by the strength of his muscles. In his first swing, he diagonally cleaves one of the Kolvaxians from its neck to its hip, severing it in two while also instantly cauterizing the wounds with magical flames. The monster collapses to its knees, then it falls over and starts writhing around, trying to grab anything nearby purely out of reflex.

Henry easily avoids the fallen creature. Even though cutting it in half won't kill it, the cauterization ensures it won't regenerate quickly. He pivots to the remaining four, all of which rush him and try to rake his skin with their claws. One of them grabs his shirt, but

Henry pulls away, tearing the cloth and leaving the Kolvaxian to grasp at the air futilely. He spins the sword around and lops off the Kolvaxian's head, decapitating it in a single move! Even so, its body falls to the ground and spasms, still alive.

While Henry swiftly brings each of the Kolvaxians down one by one, his girlfriend remains in her monsterized form. Ashley wields a massive greathammer made at her request, one which doesn't have the cutting potential of Artoria, but which does have a special function built in.

A magical jet booster on the opposite side of his flattened head ignites as she raises the hammer overhead, allowing her to swing it down with ten times her usual strength. She smashes the head of the Kolvaxian Henry bisected, splattering its brains and killing it on the spot. As for the second Kolvaxian, it takes her a few seconds to extract the hammer from the splattered corpse, raise it overhead, and bring it down once more.

SPLAT!!

She and Henry have trained together in a special chamber made by Hope for people like them. They have grown closer over the last several months and learned to refine their teamwork. As such, Henry brings down the Kolvaxians, and Ashley finishes them off, allowing the duo to hunt and kill at maximum efficiency.

Simultaneously, the other nearby members of the Legion attack the remaining Kolvaxians from the sides and from behind, hemming the creatures in and restraining their movements. While these lesser Legionnaires might not be at Henry's level, they can still put up far more of a fight than any other mundane human soldier. Even the humans who have reached the maximum of what their bodies can tolerate from the Body Boosters are no match for ordinary Legionnaires.

Within a single minute, Hope and Ashley work together with the lesser Legion members to kill off those five Kolvaxians. But their expressions don't turn to smiles.

"There's still more Kolvaxians appearing." Henry tells his girlfriend with a grim expression. Since she isn't part of the Legion, he has to keep her verbally informed on the situation. "Kolvaxians are still emerging elsewhere on the planet. They infected multiple monsters and several humans. The seventeen that left before have become forty-nine."

"Forty-nine known Kolvaxians, Lord Henry." Says Lauren, one of the Legion Commanders. "There are likely others we can't sense."

"Every second is precious." Ashley adds. "Let's split up in groups of two and three."

Even in these few seconds of exchange, the Hall of Heroes continues teleporting more Legionnaires from across the galaxy to Maiura, continually reinforcing the soldiers there. But, at the same time, Kolvaxians keep appearing on the planet from a mysterious source. The Legionnaires nod along to Ashley's suggestion in unison, then they all split apart and rush off, leaving Ashley and Henry by themselves.

"Come on!" Henry says, anger growing on his face. "Let's kill these bastards!"

Hope gives chase after a pair of Kolvaxians. He wields the full power of Excalibur, his feet blazing with light as he 'skates' just above the ground on a pair of mystical shoes boosted by his daughter's Runes. Thanks to having humanity's first Runecrafter for a child, Hope has gained access to powerful enchanted armor and weapons, a fact that has helped him catch up to Jason's own homegrown artifacts.

The Second Wordsmith moves quickly. His eyes light up as he spins around to build momentum, then violently slashes across one of the Kolvaxian's midsections, cutting it across both of its arms and chest. The monster topples forward and collapses to the dirt, while Hope follows up with an empowered burst of divine magic channeled through Excalibur's blade. He impales the Kolvaxian's head, killing it on the spot. Then he turns to fight the second one.

But at that second, Jason appears!

Jason, now decked out from head to toe in a flashy golden set of armor, does not come alone. Two other copies of himself, his 'Dronesmiths', join the original body, controlled via a combination of his thoughts and artificial intelligence. They attack the Kolvaxian, one of the drones stabbing its thigh and the other one stabbing it throat. Their combination attack pins it in place long enough for Jason to land the killing blow, obliterating its existence with a slash of his Subatomic Atomizer Sword. The SAS instantly disperses a cloud of nanites throughout the Kolvaxian's body, eating it alive and turning it to dust in less than three seconds, causing it to melt into a cloud of ash and blow into the wind.

Hope's face warps in fury. "Hey! What the fuck was that? I've GOT it! I can handle myself, Jason! I didn't ask for your help!"

Jason barely even registers Hope's anger. He's grown all too used to his clone's outbursts over the years.

"Next time, a 'thanks' will suffice." Jason says blandly. "I just came here to tell you I'm going to work on cleaning up the Kolvaxians in the north. Their numbers are rising quickly. If you tackle the south side of Mount Adams, we can sweep around and take them all out."

"No. NO. Absolutely not!" Hope exclaims, this time eliciting a set of raised eyebrows from Jason and both his Dronesmiths. "Maiura is MY world. Stay the fuck out of my business. I don't need your help."

"What? Are you being serious right now??" Jason asks, bewildered. "For god's sake, Hope. This is NOT the time for your petty bullshit. Lives are at stake. People are being infected as we speak!"

"And I'll eliminate anyone who is infected. I WILL." Hope states, snarling at his original body. "I don't WANT, I don't NEED, and I sure as fuck don't DESIRE your help! Stay out of my business! Go play with your baby! My people have prepped for a Kolvaxian attack. We can handle ourselves!"

"You're being completely unreasonable! You're being an idiot!" Jason fires back. "The Volgrim can't stop the Kolvaxians, so what makes you think you're any different?!"

"I AM different!" Hope shouts, causing a blood vessel on the side of his head to pulsate. "I'm not YOU. I'm not a goddamn fuck-up who got his own daughter killed! I sure as hell don't want you ruining things here like you did on Tarus II!"

Jason blinks.

He takes a step back, looking at Hope in disbelief.

"...After all this time. You'd really go that low? Fuck you, Hope. You want to handle this on your own? You want to wear the big boy pants? Show everyone what a badass you are? Fine. I'll stay out of your way. Maiura is yours. But if those Kolvaxians show up anywhere else, I'm not letting this farce proceed any further."

"You don't need to worry about that. We'll be just fine on our own." Hope counters. "Now leave! LEAVE!"

Dismayed, Jason looks at Hope with an expression of disgust. Never did he imagine Hope's hatred had grown to such a level. The fact Hope would put lives at risk disgusts

Jason more than anything else Hope has said or done.

"Let's pray your little ego trip doesn't cause any problems." Jason says, before turning away. "Return."

He vanishes. A moment later, so do the Dronesmiths.

Jason appears inside Chrona, his expression downcast. He walks over to the Spynet Sphere, where he sees a bewildered Fiona looking at him strangely.

"What was that about?" She asks.

"Hell if I know." Jason mutters. "I thought Hope moved past his hatred for me. It seems he's gotten worse since last month, even."

Fiona shakes her head. "So we're just going to sit here and do nothing?"

"Of course not." Jason says, standing up straighter. "My other half might choose to be a moron, but I'm not throwing lives away. Let's put all those teleportation matrices to good use. Start moving anyone who isn't in the Legion off Maiura. Make sure to target isolated people so Hope doesn't notice."

"Where should I move them?" Fiona asks.

"We have several options." Jason answers. "Cube spaces. Tarus II. Pixiv. Even Sharmur, I suppose."

"I'd advise against Sharmur." Fiona interjects. "Maiurans are not receptive to the demons. Best to keep them separate."

"Right. Not Sharmur then. Pixiv and the Cube spaces should be fine." Jason says. "Let's get to working. Every second that passes in reality is potentially another casualty. The new Plague infects FAST."

"Yeah. It sure does." Fiona says glumly.

She turns back to the screens monitoring the Milky Way, and Jason falls silent, thinking different thoughts to himself.

Why the hell is Hope acting so damn irrational when it comes to me? Is he really that willing to throw lives away? Just for his stupid ego? Something doesn't add up...

What context am I missing...?

Part 584: Observing the Chaos

The Plague makes landfall on Maiura, but contrary to the expectations of the demons and the Volgrim, the human species does not immediately fold and descend into chaos.

Utilizing the unique abilities of their Heroes, including both Wordsmiths, all the entities within the Hall of Heroes, and Hope's children, the humans themselves begin activating a series of pre-planned countermeasures to the Kolvaxian menace. At the same time, their allies among the Monsters chip in, though the support of Demons is not looked upon fondly by Maiura's human supremacist population.

Luckily, the Threat posed by the Kolvaxians is far too high for these closed-minded people to have much sway. Even Neil himself gives in, informing the other human worlds that Demons are allowed to participate in this war. However, after his horrible comments on monsters and demons at the Great Debate, more than a few of the monsters who once looked up to him no longer decide to make their way to the world being overtaken by the galactic menace.

And so, within just minutes, a myriad of different human, monster, demon, and Volgrim allies descend upon Maiura, rushing to help the humans during their time of need.

Founder Dosena does not travel there, but she does personally dispatch four Executors and a dozen 7th-Level Psions. They arrive quickly, using the ancient Warpgates to travel across the Milky Way in a fraction of the time that even their superior spatial navigation powers would allow.

Creator Demila is the first to arrive on the scene. She levitates a mile above Mount Adams, scanning the planet's surface with her Psionic senses. She hides within a spatial tear, making herself invisible to the primitive mud-dwellers while waiting for her fellow Psions to arrive. Not thirty seconds later, some of them do, followed by even more.

Executor Vi invisibly flickers past the humans running around barking orders at one another, jumping into position beside her subordinate.

[Status?] Vi asks Demila, though both of them wait for a moment as the other Executors and 7th-Level Psions show up.

Once the bulk of their strongest people arrive, Demila updates them on what she's found.

[The mud-dwellers are holding their own.] She says. [Extremely well. Surprisingly well, even. Hope Hiro's children all possess Heroic powers, and while they are not as multi-faceted as the Wordsmith's abilities, they are certainly strong.]

[I read about them in your recent reports.] Divinator Fellrun, the newest member of the Executors says. [This seems to imply that Heroes who breed can create other Heroes, yet this was not the case during or before the Energy Wars. It appears the Wordsmiths are unique in some way.]

As a Specialist who grew his abilities from a smaller pool of Psionic Powers, Fellrun's quantitative abilities are not as strong as the others, but his preferred specializations grant him a frightening advantage in the realms of reconnaissance. He can easily see through illusions and detect phenomena of which no other Executor is capable.

[Jason Hiro previously had a child named Daisy Hiro. She possessed powerful latent abilities of her own at the age of only six orbital cycles.] Demila explains. As the expert on recent human advances, one who has been observing them carefully for nearly a year, she is much better informed than the Executors who until recently were always on the front-lines of the Kolvaxian War. [It is probably that this genetic predisposition to inheriting powers is being passed down from them due to a magically-induced mutation. I am having our best Changelings observe from afar before we engage in direct experiments.]

Executor Riley levitates with her arms crossed, looking disdainfully at the ant-like humans below. [I do not comprehend. How are these mud-dwellers faring so well against the Plague? I have personally fought the newly enhanced Plaguehosts. They are extremely difficult for even Executors to kill, yet I am currently observing multiple mortal mud-dwellers executing them with ease.]

Her gaze fixates first on Henry as he cuts down a handful of Kolvaxians, then it flickers over to Hope Hiro, and finally to Hope's son, Levi. All three of these superhumans singlehandedly manage to take down one to two Kolvaxians at a time, revealing their extraordinary strength.

[Their weapons are extraordinary.] Divinator Fellrun observes. His keen vision easily pierces the Truths hidden from those with clouded eyes. [The human wielding the flaming sword...]

[He is Lord Henry Cliff.] Demila says, providing context for the Psions not in the know about humanity's key individuals.

[This 'Henry Cliff' is an interesting individual.] Fellrun continues. [His physical parameters are not a match for the Enhanced Kolvaxians. However, he wields an extraordinary sword with a bladed edge capable of cutting alloys beyond what its physical design implies. Its metaphysical properties must be extremely advanced. I suspect the humans have acquired the skills of a Legendary Blacksmith.]

[A Legendary Blacksmith?] Executor Sartran asks with a frown. [Archangel Camael? Is it true that she has reappeared? I believed the rumors to be unconfirmed.]

[Not necessarily the Archangel, no.] Fellrun replies. [It is likely the humans are using the powers of the Heroes they stole from Moonbase Serris. Hope Hiro must have used his Wordsmithing to activate one of their souls for humanity's benefit.]

Sartran nods slowly. He has of course heard about the fate that befell Serris, but unfortunately, as a front-line fighter, he didn't have much time or energy to devote to matters related to the homeworld. He was unaware of the full extent of humanity's treachery.

[If that is the case, then these humans are advancing more rapidly than we predicted.] Sartran says, his words heavy. [We must inform the Founders of this. Creator Demila, take care to report every anomaly while we focus on assisting the humans in surviving this Plague onslaught.]

A flicker of ill intent passes across Demila's eyes, but nobody notices. Perhaps if she had a mouth, she might sneer at her superiors, unaware of her true intentions.

[Of course. I am dutifully reporting every matter, no matter how minor, to the Five Founders.] Demila says, quickly bowing her head subserviently.

Sartran nods. He glances at Executor Huron, the most physically imposing of all the High Psions.

[Huron. Some of these mud-dwellers are killing the Plaguehosts with relative ease. That means they may even be capable of threatening you.]

[Hah. You jest.] Executor Huron spits back. [These clumsy creatures cannot bring out even a fraction of my body's power. What use is a weapon when placed in the hands of an amateur? Do not insult my battle prowess by comparing it to mere Kolvaxians.]

[Those 'mere Kolvaxians' managed to get the better of both of us, and that was before they became empowered by the Black Hole Construct.] Sartran replies modestly, looking at Huron with a hint of pity. [It is not a good look for one to speak so boastfully when they have already lost to an inferior opponent.]

Huron doesn't respond. He simply falls silent, growling inside his own head about how Sartran would dare to speak such words in the presence of others.

Unfortunately, Huron cannot offer a counter-argument. Sartran's assessments are accurate, after all.

Executor Vi patiently watches the battle below. [The humans are containing the Plague decently enough for now. We shall wait to intervene until they require our assistance. Let Maiura serve as a testing ground for how the humans will fare against our enemies, moving forward. If this world falls, they will still have others to fall back to.]

[So we will do nothing?] Demila asks.

[We may pull humans out of the way, teleporting them if the situation becomes too dangerous.] Vi replies. [But the Second Founder's were absolute. We must measure humanity's strength. Other considerations come second.]

[Very well.] Demila says, turning her attention back to the humans below. [We shall do as the Second Founder commands.]

The Kolvaxians continue to split apart, making things difficult for humanity's soldiers. Since each individual Kolvaxian is so powerful that only someone at Hope Hiro or Henry's level can reliably kill one, the ordinary soldiers have but one job; slowing the Plaguehosts down.

Despite the three champions managing to kill over a dozen Kolvaxians in less than a minute, more and more of the creatures continue to appear. The Kolvaxian numbers tick upward slowly but steadily, going from a handful to more than fifty, and eventually even a hundred.

Screams cry out all around the base of Mount Adams. With a population of a few hundred thousand humans on Maiura, even if most of them are located inside the fort built atop the mountain, tens of thousands of individuals still live outside its protective embrace.

A father tries to protect his daughter when one Kolvaxians bursts out of the ground, exploding through the floor into their home. The faceless monster wastes no time in stabbing its hand into the man's chest, impaling him and draining all the strength from his body. The man groans in pain as green tendrils flood into his blood vessels, rapidly infecting him and turning his skin the same sickly color as the monster that attacked him.

Not ten seconds later, the Kolvaxian pulls its hand out. The little girl screams as it attacks her next, repeating the pattern. All the while, her father burrows into the soil to complete his metamorphosis.

The father and daughter fade away from reality, no longer remaining the individuals they once were.

They become one with the Swarm.

Moments after the little girl burrows into the soil, three members of the Legion break down the door. They jump into the shack and battle the Kolvaxian three-on-one, roaring with rage as they realize whoever once lived in this isolated hut has disappeared from human memory. No longer will they be individuals, but monsters condemned to live an existence of pseudo-death.

Two of the Legionnaires wield massive greatswords, empowered with Runes made by Hope's daughter, Mandy. Their edges shine with a reddish sheen, revealing the heat flowing along their blades. But unfortunately, unlike Henry, the two Legionnaires are not nearly as well equipped nor as strong as him. They take turns cutting and hacking at the Kolvaxian to try and kill it, but the creature regenerates its wounds. The third Legionnaire tries to pin the monster down with a trident, using her superior range to stab it from afar. She wishes to immobilize it long enough for her brothers to land a killing blow...

But unfortunately, her artifact is too weak! It fails to penetrate the Kolvaxian's thick carapace. Like a toddler trying to stab a tank to death with a stick, her weapon continuously glances off the Kolvaxian's hide, completely ineffective at its purpose.

Suddenly, the Kolvaxian lunges at her. It wraps its five-fingered hand around her neck, lifts her up, and slams her into the floor like a ragdoll. The woman's vision momentarily goes blank, before the Kolvaxian stabs its other hand into her chest.

"AAAAARGH!"

All three Legionnaires scream in unison. The infection spreads through her body, and her agony transmits to the entire rest of the Legion, including Henry himself!

"AAAHH!" Henry screams, doubling over in pain right as he's about to engage his seventh Kolvaxian.

Luckily, his girlfriend jumps in the way and smashes the creature aside with her orcish strength. She saves her boyfriend from being infected, and a moment later, his screams stop.

"Are you okay?!" Ashley asks.

"I'm alright!" Henry says, staggering to his feet. "One of the Legionnaires- she's gone. Jepthath cut her off before the parasite could infect the rest of us- but she's GONE!"

Henry's eyes momentarily mist up. He can't help but remember that one woman's personality, her thoughts and feelings, the fear she felt as the tendrils ripped through her body, turning her into...

But he doesn't have time to mourn. The Kolvaxian Ashley smashed aside quickly re-engages, forcing Henry to fight once more!

And yet, the screams of two more Legionnaires join together in his mind. The trio failed. They weren't strong enough to contain that lone Kolvaxian. It successfully infected the father, daughter, and the three Legionnaires who attacked it.

Thus, five more Kolvaxians join the Swarm. All without a casualty to show for humanity's benefit.

Henry quickly cuts down the enemy in front of him. He kills his Kolvaxian foe, then grits his teeth as painful memories finally come flowing.

"Each time- every time a Kolvaxian infects someone in the Legion, we all feel it! This is bad! This is really bad!"

Ashley looks at him, uncertain. "What do we do, then?"

"Keep fighting! We have to keep fighting." Henry urges. "We need to evacuate everyone."

But inside of Henry's mind, Jepthath speaks.

[No. Not all is lost. We've anticipated this day would come. We've made preparations. Have faith, my Champion. Now is not the time for your mind to buckle. Humanity is FAR from beaten!]

Neil Adams materializes atop Mount Adams, inside the heart of his empire. He pauses for half a breath to get his bearings, where he finds himself inside his newly built command center with a holographic globe of the planet, now zoomed in on the local region where the Kolvaxians have appeared.

"Neil, you're here. That was quicker than I expected."

Neil turns to look in the direction of the speaker, where he finds General Chadwick standing at attention in front of the holographic display. All around him, other Lieutenants and Corporals move calmly and efficiently, relaying orders to distant platoons as the situation on Maiura continues to worsen.

"Status?" Neil asks, folding his hands behind his back and walking toward Chadwick. At the same time, Linda materializes and joins him.

"So far, we estimate north of one hundred Kolvaxians have taken root." Chadwick says, pointing at a series of red dots surrounding Mount Adams. "We're not able to track the Kolvaxians easily. Their chaotic energies inhibit magical detectors. The Runes laid down by Hope's daughter are of no use. That leaves mundane technologies."

"Surely they must be tripping the underground runic grid." Linda says. "Even if we can't actively detect them, we need only pay attention to which runes are inhibited and where."

"Yes, we're using methods like that to follow the Kolvaxian's underground movements." Chadwick explains. "But Kolvaxians 'swim' beneath the soil fast. I'm talking several hundreds of kilometers per hour. They trip one rune, and five seconds later they're already tripping a different rune a kilometer away. On top of that, multiple Kolvaxians can trip multiple runes at a time, making it hard to estimate the direction they're traveling. We're trying to use seismic monitors to track their movements, but they barely even disturb the soil as they swim."

"Troublesome." Neil says, his expression darkening. "Is our killing efficiency keeping pace with their replication?"

"Not even close." Chadwick says. "For every bogey we wipe out, three more take their place. Those isolated settlers are our worst enemies. The Kolvaxians are picking off the loners and the small families, which gives them even more hosts to aim for the larger settlements. We've only evacuated 2% of Maiura's populace, or 15% of the ones outside Mount Adams. If the situation keeps worsening, the Kolvaxians will hit a critical mass. We won't be able to stop them!"

Before Chadwick can continue, a distant boom suddenly rumbles in the air. Every person inside the fortress built atop Mount Adams staggers slightly as the city itself vibrates.

"...They've reached the first defensive layer." Neil says, his eyes betraying no emotion. "We'd better pray Hope's Wordsmithium as is effective as the stuff Jason makes."

Boom.

The city rumbles again as a Kolvaxian strikes the underground barrier protecting the city, cutting its upper level off from the soil beneath it.

Several months ago, a massive ten-foot-thick wall of Wordsmithium was erected around the entirety of the city's base. The only way inside is to climb over the city's walls or approach it from above. But luckily, only the Psionic Plaguehosts can levitate, and they are not present on Maiura.

Again and again, the city rumbles as a lone Kolvaxian somewhere in the underground depths pounds on the solid Wordsmithium barrier, but luckily it doesn't even make a dent.

Still, its actions cause people to feel fear. A hint of panic spreads as people look to Neil for signs of security.

The Commander does not falter. He continues to remain impassive, as if the earthquakes beneath his feet have nothing to do with him.

"Start deploying the Secondary Measures." Neil orders. "We need to slow the Plague down. It's replicating too quickly. And get Hans on the line. Tell him it's time for our counter-attack."

Chadwick nods. "Consider it done."

"It's about time we show the galaxy the true might of humanity." Linda says, though her grim expression betrays her lack of confidence.

Hope Hiro charges at yet another Kolvaxian. He lifts Excalibur overhead, then roars with rage as he brings the Divine Blade down, cleaving the monster in two. Before it can regenerate, he slices and dices it into sashimi, killing it as dead as he ever could.

[PILOT HOPE HIRO. THIS SYSTEM IS DETECTING AN ANOMALOUS SPATIAL SURGE.] Centurion's nanites say, transmitting their words directly into hope's mind.

Hope glances around. He breathes heavier than usual, but Excalibur's energy quickly revitalizes his body, keeping him in tip-top shape.

Now inside a small settlement to the northwest of Mount Adams, Hope has already watched ten people be infected by the Plague. Their bodies dove underground to finish the conversion process before re-emerging from the soil, empowered just like all the rest.

It tears him apart when he thinks about how many innocent humans he's had to kill; people who had no choice but to attack him as their infested minds told them to do.

"An anomaly? Where?" Hope asks, quickly looking around.

Then, something happens that shocks Hope to his core.

A Kolvaxian appears in front of him as if stepping out from behind a one-way glass wall. The creature resembles an Orc, but with clawed talons instead of simple human-like fingers. It appears as if teleporting via Wordsmithing, a fact that completely wrecks Hope's conception of reality. Then, it turns to face him, and goes on the attack!

"The hell?!" Hope gasps. "Where did it come from?!"

Nobody answers him. Hope is alone in this fight.

He defends himself, using Excalibur's power to conjure a shield of light. When the monster attacks, Hope summons forth Hammurabi's Stele, making blinding words of radiance flash forth into reality.

EYE FOR AN EYE.

When the creature claws at the barrier, its attack gets rebounded, causing terrible claw-gashes to rip across its chest and send it flying backward. The creature does not scream in pain, due to lacking a mouth, but it does writhe on the ground for a moment before healing its wounds. It draws upon the energy of the soil to revitalize its body, affording it a rate of regeneration far beyond the ordinary.

Then Hope attacks!

He slashes at the creature, but Excalibur only bites into the monster's skin before stopping when it hits a bone. The monster's physique appears much hardier than the others, causing Hope's heart to skip a beat.

Strong! Hope thinks while retracting Excalibur.

He viciously chops at the monster, dancing around while keeping his feet off the ground, always alert for a possible ambush. His hovering boots, empowered by his daughter, grant him a mobility advantage, effectively letting him dance like a butterfly and sting like a bee.

Crack! Crack! Boom!

Excalibur smashes against the Empowered Kolvaxian, but again and again, Hope fails to cut through its resilient bones. The heavy sword simply lacks the striking power needed to finish the monster off.

Suddenly, it swings a backfist at Hope, catching him off-guard. Hope's mind becomes a blur as that fist strikes the side of his head and sends him flying! He wakes up seconds later face-down in the dirt with Excalibur a stone's throw away.

"Aww... shid..." Hope moans, feeling stars dance in his eyes.

The sounds of feet stomping toward him wake him up. Hope shakily jumps up to see the gorilla-like Kolvaxian charging, its fists raised as it prepares to end his life.

"PUSH!" Hope shouts, conjuring the full power of Wordsmithing.

A wave of power surges at the Kolvaxian. But instead of sending it flying away, the creature's chaotic energy neutralizes the magic of the attack, leaving only the breeze of the shockwave to splash harmlessly against its body.

"No!" Hope cries, horror in his eyes.

Abruptly, a figure appears in the monster's path. A figure Hope never in a million years expected to come to his rescue.

A demon with two heads.

BOOM!

Gressil, the Warden of Faith's End, smashes his fist into the Kolvaxian's face and sends it tumbling backward. He fails to inflict any meaningful damage to it, but still buys Hope a few seconds to grab Excalibur.

Hope does that.

He dives for the sword, then points it at Gressil, uncertain.

Gressil raises his lip in a sneer. "Haha."

Then, he vanishes, leaving Hope alone with the charging Kolvaxian once again.

Hope's heart turns cold. What the hell? Why would HE show up here? What the hell is this about?!

But he doesn't have time to dwell on such thoughts. With Gressil 'gone', or at least hiding somewhere unseen, Hope still has to deal with the Kolvaxian right in front of him.

And so, he does.

Hope goes all-out. He empowers Excalibur with his Wordsmithing, calling upon Arthur's spirit to lash out and unleash a full-powered Divine Slash at a downward angle. He finally breaks the creature's bones, shatters its body, and obliterates it from existence, killing it on the spot.

Afterward, Hope feels no joy. Only worry and fear.

He looks around in a panic, trying to perceive the enemy he knows must be hiding nearby.

"Show yourself!" Hope shouts.

Gressil does not appear.

Instead, his voice speaks on the wind.

"Your time has not yet come, Hope Hiro. You still have a role to play. I won't let you die before I've seen it all through."

Hope's eyes narrow. "Seen what through? I don't have time for your games, goddammit!"

"The moment it all collapses." Gressil says, his tone sinister. "The moment it all shatters. We're so close. Don't die on me now, Hope. I've always believed in your potential. You're the one who can make it all possible."

"The fuck does THAT mean?!" Hope spits back.

Gressil doesn't reply. The Wordsmith's question lingers in the wind, unanswered.

Hope snarls angrily. He slashes at the ground in a fit of anger, but ultimately, his rage leads to nothing.

"You fucker. You fucking fucker." Hope hisses. "Eat shit and die, Gressil. Teleport."

He vanishes from the spot, traveling elsewhere to continue the good fight.

Gressil watches from a short distance away. His body invisible, undetectable.

"Haha. He's so close to breaking. All he needs is a push. Just one little push. He doesn't even know it yet. Haha."

Gressil strokes his chin.

"There is... one outlier. Raphael. You really think you're sneaky, don't you? But it's fine. The game wouldn't be fun without other players. Haha."

The Warden of Faith's End dissipates into the wind...

Part 585: Battlefield Star

The battle intensifies on Maiura's surface. As minutes pass, more and more Kolvaxians continue to appear, but what worries humanity's military the most is an unnerving discovery they make early on; a discovery that goes beyond their calculations.

"What do you mean 'it just appeared'?" Neil asks, bewildered. "It teleported in front of you?"

"Yes." Hope answers quickly, his voice transmitting over the communication channel while he battles yet another one of the monsters. "The Kolvaxian simply appeared out of thin air. That must mean they have a way to teleport onto Maiura without conquering the planet's core. The rate of teleportation is much slower, but they can materialize anywhere, and each individual Kolvaxian is worth a thousand of the ones before they evolved!"

Neil's expression turns ugly. "At least you found out early on. This is important information. I'll adjust our strategies to compensate."

Hope cuts off the communication channel, and Neil turns to his wife. "That explains how they're appearing so fast. They aren't just infecting our people, they're bringing fresh bodies here."

"But how?" Linda asks. "I know Kolvaxians have historically made landfall on worlds by teleporting one of their kind onto a planet's surface, but the records implied they only did this once, perhaps because it was difficult to pull off. If they can do it repeatedly, then why didn't they do it sooner?"

"It might be... a new ability." Neil says, closing his eyes. "These creatures have already adapted by devouring Artoria's power. Perhaps they've assimilated another ability now. Either way, it's bad news for us. We have to assume a rogue Kolvaxian could appear inside the fortress at any moment! I want all our people on the lookout, ready to sound the alarm in an instant. Damn, and we still have a hundred thousand civilians inside the walls... we can't possibly keep an eye on all of them."

"You worry about the military." Linda says. "Leave evacuating the civilians to me."

On the northern side of Mount Adams, Hope Hiro battles Kolvaxians alone. A handful of Legionnaires also fight in the area to offer support if he needs it.

On the southern side, Henry and Ashley work together with two hundred Legionnaires, working to systematically take down one Kolvaxian after another.

On the western side, Hope's children, Levi and Mandy, fight alongside their monster and human comrades to inflict as much damage as possible on the monsters.

But on the eastern side, humanity lacks a champion capable of killing the monsters one-by-one with ease. Here, the soldiers fight for their lives, utilizing teamwork to slow the creatures down, cut them apart, and burn their bodies to ash, all while lacking the punching power of Excalibur or Artoria to even the odds.

Two of the higher-ranking Legionnaires join the eastern humans in an effort to help shore up their fighting capabilities. Lieutenants Lauren Mallard and Diego Rivers have achieved resonance ratings worth eighty percent of Jepthath's power when he once roamed the earth. Even both of them combined aren't a match for Henry, but they are still leagues stronger than any ordinary human troopers.

The two Legion Lieutenants each command a small platoon of about 100 soldiers each, some of whom are Legionnaires, but others of whom are ordinary men, women, and monsters empowered through the Body Boosters and their T-REX suits.

Soldiers wearing Spectre Suits raise themselves up into the air via their spinal tendrils. Each of these troopers, once intended to be used in stealth warfare, has taken on a pseudo-aerial support role instead. They stand roughly thirty feet above their comrades, each one holding a newly designed weapon made by Hans; the XM-250 Titan.

These guns are truly massive. Weighing in at 600 pounds (272 kilos), the only way even the enhanced soldiers can properly bear the weight is by constructing the guns to attach directly to their Spectre suits, wrapping around the troopers for stability and accuracy.

Each XM-250 Titan takes advantage of recent advancements made by Hope's daughter, Mandy. In this way, they are able to store fifty kilos of ammunition inside a pocket dimension, reducing the weight each trooper has to bear.

Each Titan's micro-fusion reactor allows it to utilize not only mundane bullets, but empowered elemental rounds and even switch to an energy-firing mode, albeit one that is not nearly as capable at injuring such resilient foes as the Kolvaxians.

With thirty Spectre troopers supporting from the backlines, the human resistance unloads a hailstorm of heavy gunfire down, the bullets pounding more than two dozen Kolvaxians as they stomp forward, making their way toward the juicy human targets enveloped in armor.

"First bogey approaching the 100-yard danger zone!" Lieutenant Lauren calls out. "Grenade!"

At her command, one of the ordinary soldiers near the front reaches into his bag, pulls out a glassy orb with spiraling streams of energy inside, and he lobs it with all his strength at the closest Kolvaxian.

The orb travels with unerring accuracy. It strikes the ground at the Kolvaxian's feet and explodes, causing a two-meter bubble to burst into existence, enveloping the creature in a dimension of ultra-slow spacetime, freezing it on the spot!

Now moving two hundred times slower than in reality, for every 200 seconds that passes in realspace, just one passes inside the Kolvaxian's bubble. It essentially freezes in place, allowing the troopers to redirect their fire at the creature's allies instead.

Unfortunately, even with the mighty firepower of the XM-250 Titan hammering into the flesh of the Kolvaxians, the humans aren't able to inflict meaningful permanent damage. Lauren grimaces, gritting her teeth as the creatures continue to stop forward, pushed back and slowed down by the unending waterfall of bullets striking their bodies, but not actually stopped or prevented from continuing.

Suddenly, a scream goes up in the middle of her soldiers. Lauren's heart skips a beat as she swivels her head to see a Kolvaxian bursting out from underground and plunging its claw into a woman's chest, infecting her and causing panic to erupt among the ranks.

Reflexively, one of the men nearby throws a stasis grenade at the Kolvaxian, but in his panic the grenade misses its target, instead striking Legion Lieutenant Diego, freezing him on the spot! Diego's attachment to the Legion goes dark, cutting him off until the stasis bubble disappears, but that unfortunately won't happen for another five minutes!

"No, dammit!" Lauren exclaims, grabbing her enchanted sword and rushing toward the Kolvaxian in their midst.

Lauren slashes at the monster, and her sword bites into its skin and bone, but the blade catches in the creature's ribcage and quickly heals up, trapping her weapon inside the Kolvaxian's body.

"Shit, shit, shit!" Lauren exclaims. She lets go of the hilt right as the Kolvaxian slashes its claw at her, narrowly avoiding the attack which would likely have infected her on the spot. Lauren quickly goes into a defensive stances, dodging and weaving after the Kolvaxian tosses the infected trooper aside and attacks her with everything it has.

At the same time, due to Lauren's inability to guide her troops, the front-lines begin to lose focus, allowing more Kolvaxians to draw nearer and nearer. Several stasis grenades land amidst the encroaching Kolvaxians, but a few go wide, trapping empty sections of the battlefield in dimensional bubbles, making their limited ammunition reserves deplete quickly. Unfortunately, due to a lack of time and precious materials, only a few thousand stasis grenades have been properly developed, and more will take time to craft. Every missed grenade is a huge waste of resources!

Lauren's heartrate elevates. Without a proper weapon capable of defeating the Kolvaxian in her ranks, she's a sitting duck! Teetering on the edge of death, not even her enchanted golden armor will protect her for long. Every Kolvaxian has the physical body of a Cosmic. No mortal armor is capable of protecting the humans for long!

Just then, a streak of red light races across the skies. It burns the upper atmosphere, launching from atop Mount Adams as it charges toward Lauren's position. Several soldiers look up just in time to see a huge fireball of ten-thousand-degree heat rush toward the Kolvaxian closest to the front-lines.

BOOM!!

The fireball crashes into the nearest Kolvaxian and slams it into the soil, forming a massive scorched crater. From within that crater, explosive flashes of light burst out, one after the other, before going silent.

Beelzebub, the Emperor of Inferno, steps out of the crater victoriously, his opponent reduced to ash. He ignites a flame-whip in his hand and starts lashing out madly at two nearby Kolvaxians, cutting through their armored skin and bones with a bit of difficulty, in the same way he did years before when battling his mentor, Agares. As it turns out, his fire-whip has enough focused heat-energy to even penetrate through the defenses of these sturdy Kolvaxians.

"Beelzebub? It's HIM?!" One of the troopers gasps.

"Shit, why did it have to be that bastard who saved us?" Another complains.

"I don't give a damn if it's Beelzebub or Satan the Devil! We were all about to die!"

"But he's Beelzebub! He's the one who-"

"Shut your mouth and be thankful! We need all hands on deck, you moron!"

Beelzebub ignores the cries of outrage from some of the shortsighted troops. He's long expected people to reject his help, but helping them even if they hate him takes precedence during this crisis.

After taking out the nearest threats, Beelzebub rockets over to Lauren. He pounces upon the Kolvaxian from behind while superheating his palms with nuclear energy. Beelzebub explodes his palms, directing the energy deep into the Kolvaxian's body and irradiating its internal organs with the heat of a relatively cool star. The monster's body seizes up for a second, allowing Beelzebub's hands to regenerate, and for him to once again direct a second nuclear attack into the monster's muscles and bones.

The creature falls down, dead. The second trooper who was infected only moments before starts to stand up, but Beelzebub rushes over to finish him off.

With a few moments to spare, Beelzebub glances at Lauren, who has retrieved her sword from the dead Kolvaxian's body.

"You're leading this platoon?" Beelzebub asks.

"I am." Lauren answers, her expression failing to conceal a distinct flavor of malevolent hatred. Beelzebub easily picks up on the fact he must have hurt or killed someone very close to Lauren in the past, likely when he ignited his body in the thermonuclear explosion above the former Hero City.

He doesn't have time to spare any mental energy toward her hatred. He has a job to do, and that job is saving as many people as possible.

"I'll kill as many Kolvaxians as I can." Beelzebub says. "Focus on preventing them from reaching you. Keep up the gunfire."

"You don't need to worry about us." Lauren retorts. "We humans can hold our own."

Really? It didn't look that way when I arrived, Beelzebub thinks.

He doesn't vocalize his intrusive thought.

"Just do what you feel is right, then." Beelzebub concedes. "If a few stray bullets hit me, I'll forgive you."

He leaps back into the battle, and Lauren sneers. As if we'd ever want or need your forgiveness, murderer.

Beelzebub's whip lashes out time after time, biting into the sturdy bodies of the Kolvaxians and slowly cutting them apart, one by one. Unfortunately, when he tries using other attacks, they badly lack the striking effectiveness necessary to kill the creatures.

Their bodies are simply too sturdy!

Damn! Beelzebub thinks, as he finally whips one of the creatures across its chest to leave a deep enough wound for himself to finish the job with a focused stream of flames. I feel more limited than ever! Each one of these monsters has a body on par with a Demon Deity! It's a miracle a mere Emperor like me can do anything to them in the first place! Is there a way I can make a bigger impact?

Beelzebub's thoughts wander for a moment too long. A Kolvaxian melts out of the ground behind him, then stabs its claw into his back.

Riiiip!

"Aaargh! You piece of trash!" Beelzebub screams, desperately wishing he didn't feel pain so clearly after his return to the mortal coil. "Aaaaugh!"

The humans behind Beelzebub widen their eyes in horror.

If the Kolvaxians capture and absorb Beelzebub, they might obtain another terrifying boost in combat effectiveness. This is something nobody wants to see, not even if they hate the Emperor of Inferno!

"Assist Beelzebub!" Lauren shouts. "Quick! Knock that Kolvaxian down!"

But unfortunately, even when half of the XM-250 Titan Troopers fire their deadliest rounds into the Kolvaxian's back, they barely manage to stagger it. The creature's tendrils writhe around inside Beelzebub's body, working quickly to infect his veins.

Beelzebub instantly realizes the Kolvaxian's goal. It pulls on his back, dragging him toward the ground as it uses all its strength to yank him to his final earthen grave.

"Like HELL I'll let you eat me!" Beelzebub roars. His eyes ignite with flame, and he directs that flame into the core of his body.

The flame rapidly rises past 10,000 degrees Kelvin. It heats to 15,000 degrees, then 20,000. 30,000!

A super-ignition sequence begins as all of Beelzebub's cells burn at their maximum temperature, rapidly charging up for a nuclear detonation.

Lauren's heart goes cold. She and all the troopers nearby gasp in fear as their T-REX's report the imminent self-destruction of the Infernal Emperor.

"EVERYONE! GET DOWN!" Lauren shrieks. "He's going to blow!!"

Beelzebub roars to the sky. Every one of his cells continues to increase in temperature, causing a light as bright as Maiura's star to light up on the battlefield. The human soldiers look away, shielding their eyes as they dive to the dirt. Even so, they know they cannot hope to survive his detonation. They're certainly in the immediate blast zone.

But, after several seconds, Lauren's thoughts brighten.

He hasn't exploded yet? What's going on?

She cracks her eyes open, but Beelzebub's body is still radiating a light bright enough to permanently blind her. Surprisingly, the heat that should have roasted everyone alive has not traveled far from him. Instead, Beelzebub forcibly prevents himself from actually exploding. He deliberately contains and revolves all the heat being output from his bones around his immediate surroundings, containing his power so it won't harm the humans.

The Kolvaxians that should have pressed the attack on the humans all step back, as if fearful of the star that has turned their companion to dust. Already, the Kolvaxian that dared to sneak-attack Beelzebub has perished, evaporating long before he reached his ultimate temperature of 50,000 degrees Kelvin.

Beelzebub grins wickedly. He recalls a conversation he had with Saul and Kiari not even a day before, a conversation about his lack of imagination.

"HEH HEH HEH." Beelzebub laughs. "It seems I don't HAVE to detonate myself. If I contain the power and limit the radiation, I can turn myself into... A LIVING STAR!"

Beelzebub launches forward, buoyed by the heat lifting him off the ground. He races toward the Kolvaxians, and the moment he draws toward the nearest one, its skin rapidly burns away, revealing its muscles and bone underneath.

Beelzebub grabs the Kolvaxian by the throat. With a "HARRUMPH", he sends a surge of heat blasting directly into the monster's meridians, detonating it like a grenade from the inside-out. The Kolvaxian dies on the spot, exploding into ash!

Over the next few minutes, Beelzebub chases down the other nearby Kolvaxians, though he fails to catch a few that dove underground and swam away. For those unlucky enough to end up in his grasp, they perish within seconds, and Beelzebub ultimately stands tall, having achieved a feat that not even Henry could accomplish.

Gradually, Beelzebub's light dims. His body sags as the immense power he was outputting dies down, leaving him feeling exhausted.

The strain... is immense.

Beelzebub returns to his normal appearance. Frustratingly, he finds that he has once again seared his suit to ash, forcing him to cloak his demonhood, among other things, in flames.

Lauren opens her eyes. She blinks several times, wincing as spots blur her vision. She manages to make out multiple piles of ash, as well as Beelzebub's flaming body, but she cannot see the Kolvaxians anywhere.

"They're dead. Most of them." Beelzebub says, flying back over to the army. "Sorry for the light. Did I blind anyone permanently? Leeroy might be able to heal you."

"Our T-REX's compensated for the change in lighting, at least to a certain extent." Lauren says, looking at him with a faint sense of fear and awe. "You... what did you do? I expected you to... go nuclear."

"That would have harmed all of you. I couldn't go that far." Beelzebub explains. "Instead, I circulated the heat around myself, feeding it back into my body over and over to repeat the process. I'd love to tell you it's a new technique I've been practicing, but it came to me... just now."

"Well. You saved our lives." Lauren says, assessing the Emperor more carefully. "So... thanks."

"Sure. Anytime." Beelzebub says, sighing heavily. "But that attack was too draining. I don't even know where I got the energy to pull it off. Don't feel like I can do it again. Even a Flame Whip would be too tiring..."

"You've done enough. Take a break and leave the stragglers to us." Lauren says. "Well... if you want to pitch in again, feel free to come back a second time."

Beelzebub glances around. He notices that the expressions of the troopers have changed. No longer do they look at him with outright hatred and hostility, but instead faint begrudging admiration.

It's progress. Beelzebub thinks.

Beelzebub moves to the backline to stand atop a sturdy makeshift floor made of Wordsmithium. In this way, Kolvaxians won't be able to pounce at him from below, at least not easily.

He takes a break to regain his stamina, while the Kolvaxians reappear before the human troops, pushing slowly against the wall of gunfire to try and break the defensive lines.

The battle isn't going amazingly. Beelzebub thinks. A lot of humans have fallen already. But they're holding on. If things continue to progress the way they have, the Kolvaxians will run out of infectable bodies before long. Humanity has been preparing for this attack. They may even be the first world to successfully rout the Kolvaxians!

He frowns.

But who knows what will happen next? We should be prepared for the worst to happen, as well.

Shortly after Beelzebub takes his rest, Lieutenant Diego's time-stasis finally breaks. For him, a mere two seconds pass, barely even a few blinks of an eye. He reappears in Realspace, looking panicked as he swivels around, trying to locate the Kolvaxian that just attacked his men. Instead, he spots Beelzebub cloaked in flames, looking at him with wry amusement.

"Beelzebub?!" Diego asks, bewildered. "The Kolvaxian- where is...?"

"I killed it." Beelzebub says with a chuckle. "And the others. You're welcome."

"I... I see." Diego says, his adrenaline cooling off. "Well. Thanks a lot, I suppose-"

Diego goes quiet mid-sentence. He pauses and looks away as a voice crackles in the speaker of his T-REX.

"-forcements needed! I repeat, Hope Hiro's children are in danger! Dispatch reinforcements to Adams-014! The Western Front is in danger of collapse!"

"The hell?" Diego mutters. "Beelzebub, can you fly? The western front needs help! Hope Hiro's children are in danger."

Beelzebub quickly nods. "I am fatigued from exerting myself, but I'll recover quickly. Which direction should I go?"

Diego points to the west. "That way! The opposite side of Mount Adams."

"Alright. Will you be okay if I leave?" Beelzebub asks.

Diego hesitates. He glances at the few remaining Kolvaxians that are slowly approaching the front-lines. Even though Beelzebub killed most of them, even a mere handful of them are still a terrifying Threat no human would be capable of killing, barring a few specified Champions.

"...We'll manage." Diego says quietly. "The Wordsmith's children are more important than us, anyway. Just go! If we die here, then you must at least ensure humanity's future Heroes live on!"

"I'll be going, then." Beelzebub says, before jumping into the air and igniting flames beneath his feet. He rockets up into the sky, racing over the top of Mount Adams as he disappears into the distance.

Diego grimaces. "Godspeed."

Part 586: Runes and Dragons

In terms of singular offensive power, humanity's strongest soldier is without a doubt Lord Henry Cliff, leader of Jepthath's Legion. Perhaps Demon Emperor Belial could fight him to a standstill or even overpower him, but neither have tested that possibility yet.

In terms of combat versatility, humanity's two greatest combatants are the Wordsmiths. Jason and Hope Hiro may lack the direct striking power of Henry, but they make up for it with their own carefully honed techniques and preferences for how to wield their magic.

Therefore, despite being extremely powerful himself, Hope Hiro's eldest son, Levi, sometimes finds himself overshadowed by his older peers.

He is strong. His physical prowess isn't quite at Henry Cliff's level, but he is certainly one of the five most imposing warriors on humanity's side.

He is fast, though not a 'speedster' in the classical sense. One of his most useful abilities is his Heroic Sense, something formed over time by his exposure to the Hall of Heroes. By tapping into its subspace dimension with a fragment of his mind, Levi can momentarily increase his thinking speed a hundredfold, as if he had teleported back into the Hall of Heroes!

This enables him to react to new situations as they appear, and to come up with detailed combat strategies on the fly.

But as strong as he is, and as fast as he can think in high stress situations, there is one category Humanity's Dragon dominates in, and that is his body's durability.

Comparable to Bael in his prime, albeit not quite at the level of Wordsmithium, Levi's scales provide him enough defensive strength to serve as a mobile bulwark, tanking attacks that would cripple or kill Henry Cliff if they landed. While Henry certainly has strong bones and tough skin, his defenses are like paper compared to a man enveloped in dragon-scales.

Levi grins as yet another Kolvaxian punches his stomach to try and infect him. The creature's fist thuds ineffectively, bending its wrist awkwardly as several small tendons and bones snap at the moment of impact. Levi retaliates with a dragonscaled fist, pounding the creature's faceless head and sending it flying backward.

The Kolvaxian hurtles into the distance, twisting and spinning as it careens helplessly a hundred feet away. It lands in a heap, then quickly jumps back up, not hurt too badly by the attack.

However, despite lacking the physical striking power necessary to kill these creatures, Levi is far from out of tricks. Behind him, his moderately younger sister, Mandy, levitates ten feet in the air, taking care to avoid touching the ground. Unlike her brother, she is merely a mortal human, lacking in strength and defenses innately. She is a much softer target the Kolvaxians could overpower if they wished.

But the matured woman is a lot like her father, in certain ways.

Mandy is a versatile mage. She has powers beyond comprehension.

She is humanity's sole Runemaster.

The Kolvaxians continually and uselessly target Levi, not because he is a more desirable target than his sister, but because they are incapable of perceiving Mandy's existence. The Runemaster cloaks her body in a shield of Ambient Energy taken from a crack between dimensions, making her odor indistinguishable from background smells, her body invisible to the many forms of known light, and her movements imperceptible to all but the most powerful of Psions.

Invisible, undetectable, Mandy hovers near her brother protectively, using her Runes not only to lash out and strike the Kolvaxians when they're at their weakest, but to bolster her brother's already formidable capabilities through Runic Augments.

The blonde-haired woman reaches into a crack between dimensions. She pulls out a piece of magically enhanced parchment with a glowing rune formed of ten thousand minuscule, mystical lines of intertwined energy. This Rune, something she created years ago, is part of her ever-increasing armory of tools she has developed to enhance her and her brother's combat and support capabilities.

She quickly holds up the Rune and chants in a mystical tone. "Runic Decree, Immolation Aura!"

The parchment explodes into dust. A microsecond later, waves of heat erupt from Levi's scales. They radiate outward, lighting the grasslands aflame and causing the skin of every Kolvaxian within ten meters to catch fire. The creatures step backward, perhaps thinking to pull away, but they don't get a chance to do so. Mandy activates another Runic Decree, one that complements the Immolation Aura's effect.

"Runic Decree, I Am Your Target!"

Lines of magical power appear across Levi's body, illuminating in the gaps between his layer of scales. His scales turn black, while the magical runes glow red, making him appear as a shadowy creature wreathed in flame.

The Kolvaxians stop retreating. They charge at him in a frenzy, silently rushing to their doom.

The closer they draw, the greater the heat they experience. Each successive meter results in a rise of one thousand degrees Kelvin, and by the time they draw within the range of Levi's fists, even their durable bodies begin to crack and split apart from the outrageous heat Levi is emanating!

Levi doesn't hesitate. He grabs the back of one Kolvaxian's head, then yanks toward himself, splatting it against his burning chest. The creatures head explodes into blood and ash, its formidable bones weakened to the point of breakage from the heat.

Levi chuckles as he repeats this action, killing ten of the monsters one after the other! But before he can finish off the other twenty, his flaming aura dies off, as does his aura of aggression.

[Hold them back for a minute.] Mandy orders her brother telepathically. [I've activated ten Higher Runes since the battle began. I'm nearing my limits.]

Levi doesn't complain. Having exterminated so many Kolvaxians in quick succession, he's already surpassed his father and Henry Cliff in killing efficiency, even if he isn't aware of that fact. He hasn't had time to chat with them, so he isn't up to date on their current situations.

[Hurry and regain your stamina.] Levi transmits back to his sister. [Every Kolvaxian we kill slows their progress. We can't let them run away and infect more people!]

Mandy scowls. [I'll return soon.]

Regenerating her mental focus, her mana, and her inner strength is no easy feat. Mandy abruptly disappears, returning to the Hall of Heroes to leave her brother alone on Maiura. She arrives inside a secret chamber covered in hundreds of permanently-active Runes that glow in a variety of rainbow-like colors. There, she sits inside a pool of glowing condensed mana and meditates, de-stressing while she clears her mind. She purposefully teleports into a private room where even her mother and little brother will not disturb her, a place few even know about due to building it herself.

When she arrives, Mandy carefully absorbs the pool's mana, rejuvenating her soul and allowing her to restore herself to near-peak condition.

One hundred minutes pass in the Hall of Heroes.

One minute in Realspace.

Mandy blinks her eyes. She stands up, steps out of the Mana Pool, then activates a Rune.

"Runic Decree, Position Swap!"

She vanishes from her secret enclave and reappears in Realspace, inside her sealed dimension. She frowns when she sees that the thirty Kolvaxians she left with her brother have increased in number, right back to forty! They've already replenished the losses suffered by her Immolation Aura, making her feel as if that spell was a total waste!

[I'm back.] Mandy says, keeping her telepathy short and succinct. [The Kolvaxians are multiplying more quickly than we predicted. The Auras I cast before were inefficient. Let's switch to longer-lasting, localized Runes.]

Levi punches a Kolvaxian in the chest, and it retaliates with a claw-swipe across his face, knocking him into the dirt. Another Kolvaxian bursts out of the ground beneath him to grab at the back of his neck, but Levi senses the sneak attack and rolls to the side, evading it.

[Empower my claws!] Levi orders. [And make sure I'm drawing aggro! A few Kolvaxians have left already. I don't want more joining them!]

Mandy frowns. There's forty here, yet more have left? The situation is worse than I expected.

She keeps that thought to herself. [Alright, we'll switch to Plan Heat-Six.]

Mandy pulls a pair of parchments out of thin air. "Runic Enhancement, Standard Strength Boost! Runic Enhancement, Sharpened Talons! Runic Enhancement, Flame Claws!"

Unfortunately, over the years, Mandy has learned that her powers have limitations. Some Runes are extremely strong, but they conflict with other powerful runes, rendering both Runes inoperable and useless. Often, it's better to combine weaker Runes, rather than the most formidable ones which often fail when activated together.

She empowers her brother's arms with longer-lasting Runes, allowing him a lengthier usage time, albeit with a narrower striking capability. Unlike the Immolation Aura, which can turn nearby Kolvaxians into charred bones and ashy meat, the 'Sharp and Scorching Claws' combo is better for drawn-out battles, granting her brother ten minutes of empowerment as opposed to just one. The burden to activate these Runes is also noticeably less, ensuring she won't have to return to the Hall of Heroes as quickly.

Levi continues to fight the Kolvaxians. But now his ordinary claws glow with radiant heat, turning his scales a bright orange. He attacks a nearby Kolvaxian like a feral animal, tackling it to the dirt while he rakes at its race, burning huge chunks of flesh and bone away. He rips and tears, killing it on the spot, but other Kolvaxians continue to attack him from the sides, pounding his scales with their fists and sending painful tremors deep into his internal organs.

The Dragon's Successor grunts. His scales are extremely durable, but his enemies all possess bodies at the Cosmic level! Even simple punches and kicks from them have the power to send the tops of mountains flying! If it weren't for him possessing a sliver of the power of dragons, his heart and lungs would have likely imploded under their barrage of attacks!

"Quit hitting me!" Levi roars, slashing his claws madly at three of the Kolvaxians nearest him. He manages to connect with one of their heads, but the other two duck his slashes and retaliate with punches aimed at his stomach and ribs.

Their attacks fail to connect. Mandy conjures an Elemental Guardian of Wind to assist her brother, and the gaseous creature flits around, using its ethereal body to distract the Kolvaxians while blowing their attacks off-course with bursts of wind. It summons small tornadoes, it cuts at them with focused wind-blades, and it does everything it can within its mana-based 'programming' to keep Levi safe.

Minutes pass.

Levi fights hard. He punches and kicks the Kolvaxians. He rips them apart, becoming more savage and feral as the minutes pass. He focuses on survival and killing efficiency, while his sister watches and manipulates the battlefield's changing situation from overhead.

Mandy's expression turns uglier and uglier.

Every time Levi manages to kill a Kolvaxian or two, another one shows up. They emerge from the ground, they appear out of thin air... where are all these Kolvaxians coming from? If he slows down for even a few seconds, they regenerate faster than he can kill them! This is insanity!

By this point, she has summoned two Flame Elementals in addition to her Wind Elemental. The monstrous three-meter-tall guardians tower over her brother and the Kolvaxians, burning the Horde and pushing it back as best as they can.

The problem is, when Mandy does another quick headcount, she continues to find that about forty Kolvaxians remain in the area.

We've made no progress! None at all! Mandy exclaims in her head, feeling a sense of existential dread. It's like we're trying to swim upstream, but we remain fixed in the same spot! My brother is going to run out of stamina eventually. When he does, we'll have no choice left but to retreat. Then these Kolvaxians will be free to wreak havoc across- wait, what's that?

The ground underneath Levi's feet rumbles, seemingly caused by a weak earthquake. So busy is Levi fighting that he doesn't even notice the disturbance. He gasps for breath and pants like a dog while jumping as crazily as ever, slaughtering Kolvaxians with a flaming sword his sister conjured for him, weaker than Artoria, but strong enough to kill the Kolvaxians decently fast.

[Levi! Watch out!] Mandy yells. [Something's emerging from below!]

Her Rune-net, buried a few hundred feet underground, abruptly turns off, as if deactivated by a powerful anti-magic field. Mandy's heart chills when she senses a field of energy similar to Gressil's making its way toward the surface.

To his credit, Levi listens to her words. He punts one of the Kolvaxians to the right, checks beneath his feet, then leaps into the air. The Wind Elemental blows him higher, sending him rocketing up several hundred feet before he falls back to the planet below.

The moment he lands on his feet, the ground explodes beneath the Elementals, where Levi had been standing just seconds prior!

A massive glowing-green claw bursts out of the soil and slaps down on the Elementals, crushing them with an anti-magic force field. They explode into motes of light, their artificial souls feeling no pain as their existences implode.

Then, another claw emerges. And another!

A ten-meter-tall monstrosity emerges from underground, its blank face as empty and soulless as any other Kolvaxian. Like some sort of gigantic spider, its eight-legged body emerges and flattens the soil beneath its claws. A bulbous four-sectioned thorax gives its central body the appearance of an ant, but its muscular limbs that end in five-digit claws make it a confusing amalgamation of ant, spider, and monster.

Levi's eyes widen. [What in the goddamn is that?]

[A Kolvaxxed Exobeast.] Mandy says, her tone grim. [I don't recognize the species.]

Already, the ordinary Kolvaxians have started rushing toward Levi's new position. On cue, the Megavaxian, as Mandy has opted to name it, also charges at Levi.

But once it starts to move, its anti-magic field expands outward and sweeps across Mandy's position. With a painful jolt, her stomach roils, and the field of privacy magic enveloping her collapses.

Her position becomes fully exposed to the Swarm!

"Aaah!" Mandy cries out, as her levitation magic also dissipates. She plummets to the soil below, tensing up as she realizes she's about to hit the ground like a bag of rocks.

"Sis!" Levi exclaims. "No!"

He jumps into the air, dropping his flaming sword so as to not accidentally hurt her. The sword dissipates anyway, once the Megavaxian's anti-magic field makes contact with its body. It disappears before hitting the ground, as if falling into an invisible black hole.

Levi grabs his sister's comparatively diminutive form out of midair, jarring her senses and making her wince in pain. The impact hits her hard enough to rattle her skull and make her feel like a wet piece of paper nearly torn to shreds in a storm.

Her brother controls his descent by tensing his legs to act like shock absorbers. He lands on his feet and reduces the landing impact as best as he can, but his sharp arm-scales cut into the underside of his sister's back and legs, carving gashes and bloody marks. As soon as he lands, he spins on his heel and starts running as fast as he can from the horde of Kolvaxians giving chase.

Levi carries his sister like a princess, not even daring to look over his shoulder at the rapidly pursuing enemy forces. Unfortunately, while his reaction times might be exceptional, his actual running speed is not too fast. He might sprint like a superhuman, but the Kolvaxians dive underground and pursue him from behind and below, rapidly gaining on him as if smelling blood in the water.

Shredded and injured, Mandy still has the sense to slap the T-REX activation module on her chest. She envelops her body with nanites, finally granting herself a measure of protection. Levi continues to hold her, but he adjusts his grip to allow the nanites to cover her underside so his scales won't bite directly into her flesh.

"Reserve personnel, this is Mandy Hiro of the Western Division!" Mandy calls out over her T-REX transmitter. "Unknown Kolvaxian monster has just appeared at Adams-011! We need backup immediately! I'm injured, and all magic around the creature is being neutralized! It's wielding Chaos Energy, like Emperor Gressil!"

"Roger that." Comes a reply over the comms. "This is Eagle at Dispatch. I'm diverting Emperor Beelzebub your way and requesting additional backup. I've received word that Emperor Belial is being teleported north of your position. Archangel Squad is waiting for additional details. Please inform me of the nature of the Threat."

Mandy grits her teeth as her jostling body continues to swell and hurt while her brother holds her and runs. She turns her head to look at the pursuing enemies, horrified by the fact that another twenty-plus Kolvaxians have joined the chase.

"Sixty- no, seventy Kolvaxians in hot pursuit. Apex Kolvaxian, tentatively code-named Megavaxian has appeared. Megavaxian is ten meters tall, with eight limbs..."

She quickly details the monster's physical parameters, and the response from Dispatch takes several seconds to respond.

"Roger that. Archangel Squad is on the way. Standby for imminent arrival of Emperor Belial."

In the distance, just outside the range of the anti-magic field, a figure materializes on the plains. Belial, the Emperor of Passion, quickly looks around herself to assess her surroundings, then she turns to look at the rapidly approaching duo of Levi and Mandy, as well as the small but terrifying number of Kolvaxian elites behind them.

"Spawn of the Devil." Belial gasps. "What in damnation is THAT thing?!"

Belial shakes her head. It doesn't matter what the creature's exact name is, only its capabilities. Clearly, as some sort of mutated exobeast, its threat level is high, possibly much higher than the ordinary Kolvaxians. Its anti-magic aura alone makes it capable of serving as a deterrent to many different members of humanity's military. Fairies wouldn't stand a chance against it!

Inside Belial's head, Fiona speaks. [The anti-magic bubble is almost on you. Here, take this. Jason made it for you a few years ago just for situations like this. Stay safe, Sammy! And thanks for getting me eyes on the enemy asset.]

A tall metal canister materializes next to Samantha, teleported from Chrona right to her position. Samantha presses her palm against an activation symbol on the front, and the whole container unfolds outward, revealing a set of golden Wordsmithium platemail inside, its exterior glittering majestically under Maiura's moonlight.

The Demon Emperor hesitates. [I've never worn armor before. This will limit my mobility.]

[Don't worry, Jason designed it with your abilities in mind.] Fiona explains. [It's not Ordinary Wordsmithium. It's a bit less durable, but in excha-]

Her voice abruptly cuts off, and Samantha senses that the anti-magic bubble has enveloped her position. In less than fifteen seconds, Levi and the pursuing Kolvaxians will be on her like flies on a carcass.

"Screw it. Girls love shiny clothes." Samantha mutters under her breath.

She melts her body, stretching and shrinking to slip into the gaps of the Wordsmithium suit. In just five seconds, she dons the glittering golden armor, adjusting her shape to perfectly fit inside its confines.

Belial steps out of the container, pausing when she notices a sword inside. She recognizes it as looking similar to the one wielded by Henry Cliff, except instead of being a silvery blade, it's been colored black with red accents to better match Belial's style.

On it, a note rests, written in Fiona's style of penmanship.

I asked Jason to make this for you. Love you! Hope you like it, Sammy!~

"Aww, that's so sweet." Belial smiles. She grabs the sword, grunting as she feels its immense weight in her hands.

Having heard tales of Henry's exploits in the Queen Network, she already knows some of the functionality of his most-used weapon. She adjusts its settings, switching it to its heaviest weight as well as its flaming-blade functionality. Then, she turns to face the approaching Kolvaxians.

"Alright. Showtime."

Part 587: Megavaxian

Belial's Wordsmithium armor covers her entire body, leaving only the smallest gaps at her joints. Nanites rush in to fill those gaps anyway, protecting her from any poisons, toxins, or other airborne contagions that might otherwise threaten her. Her armor weighs in at more than 250 kilos, but for a Demon Emperor as strong as the Emperor of Passion, the weight is no different from a suit of cardboard. She barely even feels it.

The succubi's horns stick out through a pair of holes on the sides of the helmet. Her massive shoulder pauldrons give her a fierce and intimidating appearance, while her heavily armored knees, legs, and feet grant her additional options for close combat. If her sword or fists can't deal enough damage, she'll surely be able to use the extra armor on her legs for heavy bludgeoning blows.

Once Belial dons her specialized armor, Fiona's voice transmits into the helmet's earpiece.

"I can't speak to you through magical means. Right now, I'm relaying my words through a specialized transmitter. How's the armor?"

"It's great." Belial says, grimacing as she watches Hope's son rushing toward her, the Megavaxian not far behind. "Talk later."

Belial cries out to increase her adrenaline. She stomps against the soil and leaps into the air, ascending fifty feet in the blink of an eye. The massive faceless monster does not roar at her, but its head inclines upward, clearly detecting the incoming threat.

With a fiery blade aimed at the sky, Belial descends toward the creature, swinging her newly obtained weapon downward with all her strength!

BOOM!

Artoria's altered-copy fails to cut into the hardy Megavaxian's hide, but the nearly unbreakable blade acts as a hammer, its edge pounding the monster into the planet's soil. The Megavaxian's eight legs split apart, and its underbelly slams downward, momentarily halting it in place and allowing Levi to put some distance between himself and the monster behind him. He continues running without stopping, while Mandy cranes her neck around to look back at the aftermath of Belial's attack.

"She barely pierced the skin!" Mandy exclaims. "The Megavaxian is way tougher than ordinary Kolvaxians!"

"Then we'll just have to hit it harder." Levi declares.

Belial's body remains aloft in the air for a second, mainly due to the reverse impact force of her sword's strike. In that single second, she spies the dozens of smaller-but-still-dangerous ordinary Kolvaxians swarming around the Megavaxian.

So many?

Belial falls to the ground and lands in front of the Megavaxian. Her inability to fly leaves her momentarily vulnerable to an attack, but luckily the Megavaxian doesn't lash out to attack her until her feet make landfall.

It rises up, regains its footing, then charges!

The giant spider-like monster accelerates far quicker than its bulk would imply, sending a chill down Belial's spine. She leaps backward to put distance between herself and the approaching mass of Kolvaxians, then she snaps her right leg out, stretching with her rubber-like body to not only send a kick at the monster's "face", but also to push off it and travel away even faster.

Her ploy works. She uses the monster's face as a springboard and accelerates away, using the Megavaxian's forward momentum to accelerate herself even faster. Surprisingly, the Wordsmithium armor deforms and stretches along with her leg, ensuring she doesn't reveal skin or an opening for the monsters to gain an opening. Without this, infecting her on the spot will be a lot harder.

Belial lands near Levi, still fleeing with Mandy. She jogs backward, keeping an eye on the Kolvaxians following them.

"Are you both okay?" Belial asks.

"I'm fine. My sister is a little shaken up." Levi answers. "Stall the Megavaxian. I'm going to drop Mandy outside its anti-magic range, then I'll come back and join you!"

"Got it." Belial answers.

She transmits the full situation to Fiona, who in turn transfers that information to the other forces.

"This armor is really something." Belial adds idly, as she re-enters battle. "How is it so heavy, yet also stretchy?"

"Jason made it specifically for you." Fiona replies over the comms. "It's not as durable as ordinary Wordsmithium, but it's still extremely pierce and cut-resistant. Its blunt impact resistance is decisively lower than ordinary Wordsmithium, but compared to mundane Steel or other common alloys, you're still in better hands. Most importantly, it can stretch and deform in tandem with your body. Test it out so we know what to improve in the future. Also, stay safe! These new Kolvaxians are not a threat you should try to handle alone! Archangel Uriel should be joining you within one minute!"

"Uriel, huh?" Belial grunts. "Great. Just who I wanted watching my back."

She doesn't bother complaining too much. Fiona is already aware of how bad the relationship is between Uriel and all the demons. But then again, Belial and Uriel did fight on the same side during Stormbringer. They shouldn't be the worst of enemies at this moment.

Belial re-engages the Megavaxian and the other Kolvaxians, putting all her focus into staying alive while slowing them down. Fiona guides her over comms, and she launches a series of focused strikes at the largest Kolvaxian ever sighted while dancing around and staying nimble, keeping her feet off the ground as much as possible. She doesn't want a sneaky Kolvaxian to pounce out of the dirt and grab her from below, after all.

Her body stretches and deforms, whipping around at increasingly fast speeds as she builds up momentum, her arms snapping forward like rubber bands. Each time she sends her sword or a left hook flying, she stalls the Megavaxian slightly, its Cosmic-level body still unable to fully resist the force of her incredible strength! When her sword and fists land, she uses the impact momentum to increase the strength of her next attack, and soon her speed reaches a dizzying level.

Her new weapon shows off its power, leaving streaks of fire in the air as it snaps out, reverses, then swirls around and fires outward once more. Soon, Belial shifts strategy as the ordinary Kolvaxians pass the Megavaxian and rush at her. She uses her left fist to slow down the Megavaxian while her sword whips around to strike at the smaller ones.

Slash! Thumb! Slash! Thump!

The more Belial builds up her momentum, the more dangerous her sword becomes. If Henry Cliff were to see what she was doing, he'd surely gasp in surprise. Her striking power far exceeds his, and the increasing momentum becomes deadly when she slashes at the ordinary Kolvaxians for the first time.

She bisects them cleanly, cutting two Kolvaxians in half as her sword sweeps outward, slicing their waists in half and cauterizing the wounds. When the sword pulls back, she pirhouettes like a ballerina, spinning on her toes to increase the next swing's speed further. She cuts down two more Kolvaxians while sending a punch flying at the Megavaxian.

All by herself, Belial stalls the charging enemies, allowing Levi to finally draw out of the Megavaxian's range. He puts his sister down, and she re-activates her Runes, allowing her to heal her injuries and take to the skies once more.

Mandy takes care to map out and assess the Megavaxian's chaotic energy. She sends a pulse of mana toward it, one which expands and dissipates everywhere around the Megavaxian, weakening and fading as it makes contact with the 'bubble' of mana vacuum around the monster.

"Total area of influence is about zero-point-seventy-five kilometers." Mandy says steadily. "At zero-point-five kilometers, all mana is rendered ineffective, but even before that, all magic is noticeably weakened. We'll have to rely on physical attacks and technology to kill this thing."

Her brother runs toward Belial, moving to assist her in battle. At the same time, Mandy looks up into the sky. Her highly attuned senses, bolstered by her magic and enhancements granted by her father's Wordsmithing, allow her to see a figure of light descending from above at extreme speeds.

Uriel, the Archangel of Vengeance, flies toward the Megavaxian like an eagle descending upon a fish in a lake. She holds a spear made of Wordsmithium, one which glows with divine power. She holds it in place, aiming its point ahead of herself as she builds a massive amount of kinetic energy behind her charge.

Right as Levi arrives beside Belial, Uriel's charge reaches its crescendo. She smashes into the Megavaxian from above, plunging her spear into the slightly narrower gap between its head and thorax. The divinely enchanted weapon flies from her grip and pierces all the way through the monster's skin and bone. It continues traveling downward until it exits the creature's lower abdomen and dives underground.

Uriel does not lament the loss of her weapon. Instead, she treats the lost spear as a one-time-use javelin, moving to retrieve a new pair of spears on her back. As she grabs hold of them, the Megavaxian shudders. It halts its movement and falls to the ground, momentarily stopping due to the severed connection between its head and body.

However, this pause does not last long. Uriel slashes at the Megavaxian's skin from above, but this time, she fails to cut deeply into the monster's flesh. Any shallow wounds she inflicts heal up at a frightening speed, outpacing the damage she can deal. Unable to tap into her magic, Uriel cannot imbue her weapons with any elemental effects such as fire or divine energy. Thus, her mundane weapon fails to cause serious damage to the Megavaxian.

Inside the Megavaxian's aura of anti-magic, Uriel also cannot contact her siblings. They become trapped inside her Mind Realm, suppressed and unable to speak. Even so, she has fought countless battles. She does not require Raphael's guidance in matters of combat and war.

Uriel adapts quickly. Several Kolvaxians leap and crawl up the Megavaxian's sides. They charge at her, forcing the Archangel to give up for a while on killing the infected exobeast. She spins her spears and jumps around atop the Megavaxian's back, cutting at the smaller Kolvaxians as they arrive. Her spears behead a few of the Kolvaxians, but often she finds herself unable to land killing blows when her weapons glance off their sturdy bones or the Kolvaxians duck and dodge her attacks, adapting to her combat capabilities in real-time.

Abruptly, one of the Kolvaxians ducks under a spear-sweep, lunges toward her, and punches at Uriel's stomach with all its strength.

"Oof!" Uriel gasps, as the monster's cosmic strength drives the air from her lungs and sends her flying.

She hurtles off the Megavaxian's back and falls to the ground, flapping her wings and stalling mid-air to glide a short distance before impacting the dirt with a heavy thump.

Uriel presses the butts of her spears into the ground and climbs back to her feet, coughing a few times as she winces in pain. Each individual Kolvaxian is so strong that if she doesn't take them seriously, she could easily die a dog's death!

More Kolvaxians rush her, and Uriel finally decides to work together with the other two Champions to try and finish these creatures off once and for all. She jumps into the air and flies over to Levi and Belial's side, where she sees a surprisingly exquisite display of teamwork from the human and demon duo.

Levi acts as a frontline tank. Using his sturdy defenses, he draws the aggression of the Kolvaxians, pulling them away from Belial. His striking power is much weaker than hers, but his defenses are superior. Her new Wordsmithium armor is nowhere near the level of the demihuman's dragon-scales.

Her sword snaps out and slashes, again and again. With Levi drawing the heat away, Belial is able to kill the ordinary Kolvaxians much more easily. She not only cuts one to three of them in half at a time, but she finishes them off afterward before they can regenerate.

"Uriel!" Levi calls out. "Slow the Megavaxian down. Draw its attention. Leave the small fry to us!"

Uriel grunts. Much as she hates to admit it, she won't be able to kill the Megavaxian alone. Wiping out the ordinary Kolvaxians will have to come first.

"I shalt do my best." Uriel says.

And so, over the next five minutes, Uriel does just that. Belial and Levi cut down tens of Kolvaxians, killing them with the greatest efficiency seen on Maiura to date, while Uriel uses her large body and wings to draw the exobeast's attention.

Unable to use spells, Uriel has no choice but to stick close to the Megavaxian. It rears up on its hind legs, exposing its underbelly but allowing it to use its other six limbs and their spindly 'fingers' to attack. The monster attacks Uriel, whipping at her with its claws, trying to swat her out of the air while ordinary Kolvaxians pounce at her from below.

Uriel dodges the creature's attacks, using her wings to nimbly dive and swoop in midair. She tries to cut off the creatures fingers, but they prove to be made more of bone than of skin and muscle. Her attacks glance right off.

"Damn!" Uriel curses. "How art these creatures so hardy?!"

A sense of threat enters Uriel's mind. Reflexively, she looks up into the sky, where she sees a plume of flame rushing toward her position. She identifies the potential threat as Beelzebub, then she frowns.

Beelzebub levitates in the sky, flames covering up his still-nude private bits. Fire shoots from his feet, allowing him to remain aloft, and he begins swirling an inferno in his palms, spiraling it around faster and faster to increase its heat and impact force. Beelzebub senses the wall of anti-magic surrounding the Megavaxian and wisely decides not to draw any closer.

The orb of fire in Beelzebub's hands condenses smaller and smaller. He continues intensifying its power, sending hotter flames into it while spinning it at the maximum speed he can possibly maintain.

Finally, Beelzebub shouts. "Everyone! GET BACK!"

The Emperor of Inferno holds the spiraling orb in one palm. His body shakes painfully as its screaming heat tears at the space around himself, threatening to condense further into a singularity. Before that can happen, Beelzebub releases a primal, savage roar. He forces a gap in the spiraling power and takes aim at the Megavaxian below.

KSEEEEW!

A laser of fire blasts out of the orb, fully concentrated, spiraling to keep its focus tightly contained.

The laser races downward at half the speed of sound, superheating the air around it before smashing into the head of the Megavaxian, tearing through its entire body, and glassing the planet beneath it! The soil instantly turns to magma, heated tens of thousands of degrees in an instant!

Beelzebub roars again, using all of his strength to sweep the laser up, then down.

While the origin of his flames might be magical, once they exit his body's sphere of influence, ordinary physics take over. They penetrate the Megavaxian's shield of anti-magic, then tear through its body with 50,000 degree heat.

Beelzebub bisects the monster in half!

But, worried the monster isn't yet dead, Beelzebub roars one last time, then he flings the remainder of the concentrated orb downward, sending it flying toward the severed and vulnerable interior of the creature's body.

Uriel's heart jolts. She flaps her wings and races away as fast as she can. The infernal orb flies like a sniper bullet, strikes the inside of the Megavaxian's 'stomach', and explodes!

BOOOOM!!

A localized nuclear explosion rips outward, blasting the two halves of the monster's body away, irradiating its corpse, and liquefying its insides! Under such a terrifying heat-blast, not even its bones in the immediate area survive the detonation.

Levi and Belial gasp in horror. They can't possibly move out of the way! The nuclear explosion will surely kill them!

An instant later, Beelzebub fireports in front of them, activates his magic, and holds out both of his palms.

The light of the ignition flashes, blinding him, but he forces the heat to expand around himself and the other two. It bypasses their bodies, sparing their lives, but flash-ignites the land around Beelzebub, Belial, and Levi. A wasteland of hellfire spread outward for a kilometer in every direction before the impact fades away.

The Megavaxian's corpse flops to the left and right, each half scorched beyond recognition. Before long, the two halves turn to dust, falling into a pile of ashes in their own shadows.

As for the other nearby Kolvaxians, those that were in the immediate vicinity of the detonation perished instantly, while others dove underground to flee to unknown destinations.

Levi's chest rises and falls. He breathes heavily, feeling more than a twinge of terror at the devastation the Infernal Emperor just unleashed. If that fireball had struck Levi, even he would have likely died on the spot.

"Beelzebub! That was dangerous! You nearly killed us!" Belial exclaims.

"But I didn't." Beelzebub says, turning to look at her. "If the backlash of my Nuclear Orb had killed you, I'd have died afterward. The Wordsmith's Curse would ensure as much."

He sticks his thumb over his shoulder. "One big bad down. No need to thank me. You guys sure seemed to have it under control."

Levi grimaces. Despite Beelzebub's arrogant words, he isn't wrong in his implication. Even Belial would have had great difficulty killing the Megavaxian.

"...Thanks." Levi grunts. "Wait, my sister, is she okay?"

He looks up into the sky and breathes a sigh of relief. Naturally, when Mandy saw what Beelzebub was about to do, she fled a great distance, shielding herself from the aftermath.

Uriel flies downward. She lands beside the group, directing a hateful glare at Beelzebub.

"Foolish bloodskin! What in damnation was that attack?! Where was thy warning? Verily, I hath nearly perished in the blast!"

"Pft. Calm your tits, Uriel." Beelzebub scoffs. "You already survived one of my nuclear blasts. This one was much smaller and more contained. I decided to experiment with my abilities a little, and everything turned out fine. Now are we done yapping? There's still more Kolvaxians to kill."

Alongside Uriel, Raphael, Michael, and Gabriel materialize. She conjures their Constructs, allowing them to take physical form.

"Thy arrogance is going to lead to the death of someone." Raphael chides. "These Kolvaxians art evolving. Communicate better with thy allies, foolish brat. T'would be an awful matter if the Wordsmith's boy had burned to ash in the wake of thy attack."

"Shut up, Raphael." Beelzebub spits back. "Don't act like you have any authority over me. I'm off to handle some real business now."

Beelzebub doesn't wait for a reply before igniting flames beneath his feet and rocketing up into the sky. He departs quickly, leaving the others behind to deal with their problems.

"Insolent bastard." Michael growls.

"At least Beelzebub's ploy succeeded." Levi says. "I don't know if you people were paying attention, but killing that Megavaxian should have taken us at least another ten minutes, if not more. He saved us a lot of trouble, and we all ended up okay. Let's not look a gift horse in the mouth."

Belial rolls her eyes inside her helmet. "Levi's right. I can't stand his attitude, but Beelzebub brought us results. Let's hurry up and get moving. The Kolvaxians are still multiplying every second we waste."

"Onward we go, then." Raphael says, as he and the other Archangels launch themselves into the skies, taking off to fly elsewhere the need is greatest.

* * *

In the atmosphere above, the High Psions watch the humans with rapt attention.

[The mud dweller's improvement speed is shocking.] Executor Vi says. [I don't think most 7th Level Psions could have killed that 'Megavaxian', yet a mere mortal like Beelzebub succeeded.]

A faint frown flickers across Creator Demila's face, but she quickly conceals it and schools her expression. [Don't be too impressed. Beelzebub's flames are particularly effective against the Kolvaxians. Any Energy Manipulator among our kind should have similar or even greater success if they focus their efforts.]

[Executor Sartran, what do you think?] Vi asks, directing her attention to the most powerful Energy Manipulator in the Volgrim Empire, barring Dosena herself.

Sartran, unlike Beelzebub, tends to focus his efforts on the power of electricity and lightning.

He frowns at Vi's implication. [My attainments in the element of fire are quite paltry. Heat-based energy can come in many forms, but my strengths are best expressed through quick, instantaneous bursts of power. Beelzebub is better at building up power quickly and maintaining it. I cannot replicate his success against a similarly corrupted exobeast.]

Vi frowns. [What about Executor Nufaris?]

[His talents lie in the manipulation of Space and Time.] Sartran replies. [His Energy Manipulation is only so-so.]

Hearing such a frank admission from one of the highest Volgrim in the entire Empire slightly surprises Creator Demila, but it's nothing much to the other Executors. They have always been frank with one another about their strengths and weaknesses. At the highest levels, Executors are not able to find many sparring partners or confidantes, and as such they tend to rely on their peers of equal stature.

[The humans are failing to keep up with the Plague's spread.] Executor Huron says. [They had to direct four of their so-called 'Champions' to defeat that small-scale horde and the Megavaxian. In doing so, they allowed the Northern Front to collapse. Hope Hiro could not cope with so many Plagueborn by himself.]

The Executors all look at one another.

[It's nearly time for us to make our move.] Vi says.

[Let us wait a bit longer.] Sartran argues. [Just a bit longer.]

The Executors all nod.

[We must show these foolish humans the true power of the Volgrim Empire.] Vi says. [If we save them in their time of greatest need, they will appreciate our efforts all the more.]

[Words of wisdom spoken most truthfully.] Sartran concludes.

Creator Demila's eyes flicker with devious thoughts, yet she remains silent.

She also agrees that the time is not yet right, but her motivations are completely different...

Part 588: Hopeful Struggle

The Northern Battlefield collapses. With only Hope and a platoon of ordinary Legionnaires available to battle the rapidly growing number of Kolvaxians, they simply cannot contain the Plague's spread.

Hope tries. He really does.

But it doesn't matter.

Even though the Second Wordsmith is one of humanity's Champions, he is not a Cosmic. He can battle at the Cosmic level, but only because of Excalibur and a few other key artifacts borrowed from ancient Trueborn Heroes. In terms of actual combat potential, he ultimately comes up short compared to each individual Champion battling the Megavaxian. With their powers combined, Belial, Beelzebub, Levi, Mandy, and the Archangels are all capable of taking on superior threats.

Hope flies into the sky, looking down on the swarm as they fight their way closer and closer to several dozen surrounded Legionnaires. Within seconds, those brave men and women will surely lose their lives.

"Return!" Hope shouts, teleporting them into the safety of Mount Adams' fortified position. He grimaces and spins Excalibur in his hand, firing a full-power blast of divine energy into a mass of a dozen Kolvaxians, but the attack merely pounds one of them into the ground before it jumps back up, unharmed, and resumes its charge toward the base of the mountain.

"Shit. Dammit!" Hope curses. Excalibur's long-range attacks are quite fearsome, but against monsters as powerful as the ordinary Kolvaxians, it lacks a focused striking ability capable of executing clean kills.

"Where are the Warframes, Hans?!" Hope exclaims into his T-REX's mic. "I needed them YESTERDAY!"

"Zey are en-route." Hans says, deliberately adopting a calm tone. "I launched zem from zee base five minutes ago. Zey should be arriving shortly."

"Should be. Should be?! We don't have time for guesses!" Hope says, quickly looking up into the skies. He squints as the encroaching night-time darkness makes it nearly impossible to make out any details in the sky. Maiura's star has already dipped below the horizon, and now only fading rays of its light allow the battlefield to remain somewhat visible. Were it not for humanity's T-REX suits, they'd be at a huge disadvantage in a nighttime battle.

After a few moments, Hope spots his targets. Three dots of light swooping across the upper atmosphere at high speeds, but still minutes away.

"I see them!" Hope says into his microphone. "Cut the thrusters. I'm bringing them here early."

"Very well." Hans replies over comms. "But I warn you. Zey are not yet powerful enough to turn zee tides of battle."

"I just need some backup! I can cut through the Kolvaxians myself as long as they don't surround me." Hope responds.

He pauses for a moment, then utters several Words of Power.

"Momentum. Halt. Teleport! Momentum. Halt. Teleport..."

One by one, back to back, three massive egg-shaped metal capsules slam into the soil, landing thrusters-down as they impact the planet with violent thuds. The first capsule bursts open, and five large Warframes leap out in unison, their twenty-foot-tall bodies making them more than three times the height and ten times the overall size of an average human.

These five Warframes feature identically-patterned paint jobs, with black being their primary colors, but each individual having racing stripes drawn across their surfaces in one different color per unit. The lead Warframe is colored red and black, while another is green and black, another is yellow and black, and so on.

These imposing mechs rise to their full heights. The red-colored mech ignites a flaming sword held in the grip of both its arms. The blue-colored mech activates an icy blue sword. The yellow one flares a blade of lightning, and the purple and green mechs respectively reveal plasma and acid blades.

Each of the mechs have heads emblazoned with wings where a human's 'ears' would be. At the same time, glowing white wings expand out of their backs, illuminating the darkness around them and making each one a beacon in the night.

"Cherub Platoon successfully landed." The lead pilot says calmly, his flaming sword raising into an aggressive stance as he stares down the approaching Kolvaxian horde.

The second capsule also explodes open. This time, just two 30-foot-tall Warframes emerge, falling from the platform a few feet and smashing into the dirt. They are unique machines, each one rolling on a gyroscopic orb, radiating gravitic waves around themselves to keep their bodies aloft.

The twin machines, unlike the Valkyries before them, do not have unique paint jobs. They simply have images of purple shields emblazoned on their chests, while the rest of their frames are plain, unadorned metal.

These two newcomers roll around on their spiked balls to fall into line behind the five Valkyries. They level twin Gauss cannons, one attached to each arm, at the incoming Plagueborn.

"Ballbusters One and Two have landed." The lead pilot says into his comm.

For the final pod, when it explodes open, only one machine slowly rolls out. This one dwarfs all the previous ones, rising 50-feet high, rolling on tank treads, with a dual-barrel machine-gun cannon in place of its head. Its left arm glows yellow, radiating a fierce electric power, while the right arm glows red, emitting an equally fierce fiery heat.

This machine's paint job is far more fierce than the ones before it, with blood-red crimson causing every surface to glow ominously in the night, and multiple blue running lights situated around its exterior make it a high-profile target for any enemy to attack. Unfortunately for the Kolvaxians, this is a heavy machine with extremely thick Wordsmithium armor. It will not go down easily.

"Armads online." The pilot says. "No residual damage from the landing detected. All systems nominal."

Hope breathes a sigh of relief. "Alright everyone! Let's beat these alien freaks back and save Maiura!"

"Yes, commander!" All the pilots exclaim in unison.

The battle resumes in earnest! The five Cherub models race out at high speeds, spreading their radiant wings to take to the air. They flicker around, leaving trails of glowing particles behind them as they flit from foe to foe, waving their colorful and deadly swords to and fro.

Behind them, the Armads takes point, immediately pointing its machine-gun head at the thickest mass of Kolvaxians. Its cannons begin firing concussive energy bullets into the crowd, not aiming to kill any Kolvaxians, but to bring their charge to a halt! The projectiles it fires lack the power to bruise the Kolvaxians, let alone kill them, but they're still great for stalling large masses of enemies.

Each bullet explodes on impact, creating shockwaves that rapidly pound the Kolvaxians backward, bringing entire masses to a halt!

At the same time, behind the Armads, on its right and left, the Ballbusters take up positions, aiming their dual-cannons with extreme precision.

BLAT! BLAT! BLAT!

Every 2.5 seconds, they discharge a round from their right or left Gauss Cannons, alternating shots to ensure the guns won't overheat. The operators fully expect a prolonged battle, and as such they don't attempt to stress their machines.

The Gauss Cannons prove highly effective against the ordinary Kolvaxians. Each round fired crashes into the heads of various Kolvaxians positioned here or there, blasting their skull and brains apart and sending them flying backward, where they will crash to the ground and lie unmoving for a while.

Unfortunately, despite the highly energized gauss rounds being capable of dealing high damage to the Kolvaxians, the monsters are still able to regenerate from their wounds. Even with their heads destroyed, most of the Kolvaxians still draw energy from Maiura's soil, regenerating their injuries and returning to active combat within a minute or so.

The Armads, meanwhile, fires even more slowly than both of the Ballbusters. Every ten seconds, its Infernal Cannon or its Thunder Lance shoot a single round that explode with such force that any Kolvaxian directly struck is either blasted apart or scorched to ash, slaughtered on the spot! It's only because of the Armads' slow firing rate that the massive machine is not an optimal choice for killing the monsters.

As the battlefield begins to change, Hope dives down and enters the fray. He activates several Words of Power, accelerating his thoughts and movement speed, allowing him to become a blur as he dances around the fringes of the Kolvaxian forces, cutting them down, one by one, with the power of the almighty Excalibur! Hope's speed, while not the absolute fastest compared to a demon like Ose or even the ancient Titan Zeus, is still at the high end of the mortal spectrum. Any Kolvaxians that try to attack him end up whiffing their attacks, missing entirely.

His rich combat experience gives him a strong foundation to duel the monsters and cut them down one-by-one.

With one Wordsmith and eight Warframes, the situation changes for the better. The Armads maintains a steady stream of suppressive fire, unloading rapid bolts of explosive energy on the nearest Kolvaxians to slow them down while its twin-cannons steadily kill one Kolvaxian at a time. The Ballbusters roll around, keeping mobile so that any Kolvaxians who might burst out of the ground won't be able to rip them apart before they react. Their cannons, while weaker than the Armads, still provide a strong suppressive effect, giving Hope and the Armads more time to react to incoming threats.

But it turns out the most important Warframe assets are none other than the Cherubs. Using the power of technology, they actually wield more physical strength than Henry Cliff while also being faster and lighter on their feet. Nimble and agile, these machines act as heavy-hitting glass cannons, cutting down Kolvaxians one after the other.

However, the Cherubs have one huge downside, and that is their extremely thin top level of armor. Despite their internals being protected by Wordsmithium, that particular layer is so thin that if a single Kolvaxian were to land a punch on them, their entire Warframe might explode into pieces!

Thus, the five Cherub pilots focus on quick, singular attacks, followed immediately by hasty retreats. Hit and run tactics. Guerrilla warfare!

The Red pilot slashes with his flame sword, cutting through two Kolvaxians at the same time. He bisects both and scorches the wounds to drastically slow their healing, but he fails to kill those two. Unperturbed, he springs into the sky and flaps his wings to avoid any potential follow-up attacks before diving back down elsewhere to repeat his process.

The Blue pilot wields a freezing blade. When she cuts into a Kolvaxian, she chills the monster's blood to an extreme level, flash-freezing it and grinding it to a halt. Her ability to kill the creatures is even lower than the Red Pilot, but in exchange, she immobilizes her enemies for far longer periods.

The Green pilot's acidic blade deals less direct damage, but when he cuts through a Kolvaxian, the acid remains for a long time afterward, continuing to fester and burn with the hopes it will eventually corrode a vital organ and kill the creature. Unfortunately, his acidic blade does not slow his enemies as much as Blue or stop them dead in their tracks like Red's would.

Yellow's lightning blade is more of an experimental weapon. Its edge is extremely dull, terrible for cutting through soft and hard tissue, but in exchange every swing unleashes a thunder-blast, sending multiple Kolvaxians hurtling away! The Yellow pilot swings multiple times whenever he lands, rapidly knocking away tens of Kolvaxians before taking to the air to recharge his sword back to its maximum potential.

Finally, the Purple pilot wields the fiercest blade of all, a plasma blade mixing the scorching power of fire with the explosive power of lightning. When she slashes at a Kolvaxian, the blade burns its way into the monster's internals, then explodes, sending the monster's body parts hurtling away in all directions! She kills more Kolvaxians than any of the other Cherubs, at least half as many as Hope himself! Unfortunately, because of the light armor on her mech, she has to take great care not to attack more than one or two Kolvaxians at a time before taking to the sky again.

Like this, the five experimental Cherubs, the two Ballbusters, and the Armads provide effective partners for Hope, greatly alleviating the burden of killing and forcing the Kolvaxian swarm to switch between different targets. The Cherubs sting like wasps, occasionally killing Kolvaxians but mostly slowing them down. The Ballbusters knock the Kolvaxians down or pound them into the dirt, only rarely landing killing shots, while the Armads is the best of both worlds, keeping the swarm at bay with its machine-guns and killing the Kolvaxians slowly.

Hope's morale surges! Despite being annoyed with Hans for taking so long to launch the Warframes, Hope understands why he needed time. Hans was caught off-guard, not expecting the Kolvaxians to suddenly strike at Maiura. Even so, he swapped out the armaments on his Warframes to best suit the situation and he dispatched them quickly enough to make a difference.

Now it's up to Hope and these eight pilots to wipe them out and clean up the Northern Front!

Hope and the Cherubs dance around the battlefield's edges while the swarm continues pressing toward the Armads and the Ballbusters. Every single second, hundreds of Kolvaxians are knocked backward or pushed down, slowed to a crawl. Every few seconds, a Kolvaxian dies to Hope or one of the Warframes.

But even so, the swarm continue to progress. The Kolvaxians push closer and closer to the three strongest Warframes, as if dragging themselves along the ground by their bloodied fingernails. With no long-range solutions for attacking, they can only endure the brutal assault of humanity's nine warriors while making small headway toward their ultimate objective.

"Commander!" The Armads pilot exclaims. "They've reached the 100-yard line! We're not able to stop their advancement!"

"How many Kolvaxians are still alive?" Hope asks, transmitting his words via the nanites within his body.

"Six hundred and thirteen." The Armads pilot responds, in between shots.

Hope cuts down another Kolvaxian, but his expression turns to disbelief. "How the hell is that possible? We're killing them faster than ever! You're telling me we only killed forty in the last minute?!"

"No, sir." The Armads pilot says grimly. "We've killed eighty-seven. But their rate of replenishment is increasing over time. If I look closely, I can see more of them appearing in the back-lines every so often."

Hope's expression turns grim.

How are the Kolvaxians arriving on Maiura without infesting the planet's core? This goes against everything we learned about them in the past!

But he doesn't have any answers. Neither do the Warframe pilots.

"Shit! There's a disturbance under the soil." One of the Ballbuster pilots yelps. "Beneath us!"

The ground explodes, and a pair of Kolvaxians leaps at the Ballbuster from below. The pilot agilely rolls to the side, dodging their swipe, but when she tries to swivel her guns to shoot the ambushers, they dive back underground and pop up on her other side, then punch her machine and send her crashing into the Armads.

"Argh! Shit!" The pilot cries, as dozens of warning lights go off. "Activate Gravity Transducers!"

Immediately, a field of powerful suppressive energy radiates around her Warframe, causing anything in the vicinity to become ten times heavier. The Armads trembles as part of this field grabs the right side of its frame and tugs downward, but its internals are sturdy enough not to collapse from the extra weight.

As for the two Kolvaixans, they shudder and slow to a halt, their feet pressing into the soil as their bodies gain thousands of pounds of mass.

But then they start to move again. Slower than before, but still frighteningly fast in the Ballbuster pilot's eyes. She tries to aim her remaining gun at them, but the weapon malfunctions and an arc of electricity jumps to a different part before completely short-circuiting. The gun flops downward, useless, while the rest of her frame loses its combat strength.

"I can't stop them!" The woman yells. "They're closing in!"

Hope Hiro teleports over, arriving just in the nick of time. His blade slashes twice, and he murders the monsters before they can kill the second Ballbuster pilot. He ignores the suppressive gravity field thanks to Excalibur, its aura shielding him from such a threat with ease. With a single glance, Hope recognizes that her Warframe has lost its operation ability.

"Return." Hope says without a second thought. The pilot and Warframe disappear, teleporting to Hans' secret laboratory elsewhere on the planet, deep inside a Wordsmithium bunker the Plague will not be able to easily break inside.

"We're down one Warframe!" Hope shouts. "But don't be afraid! Reinforcements are on their way. My son and daughter will arrive soon! We just need to hold out!"

The Second Wordsmith tries to boost the morale of his soldiers, but unfortunately, words mean little in the face of such unrelenting pressure. With one Ballbuster down, the swarm's speed surges, and they begin drawing closer and closer to the Armads and remaining Ballbuster, making the pilots of both start to sweat.

"When they get too close, just retreat!" The Armads pilot says to the Ballbuster pilot. "My armor is sturdy. I'll be fine. But you won't! Don't throw your life away for nothing."

"I refuse to give ground." The Ballbuster pilot retorts. "So many have died today. Too many humans! I won't concede ground, and I won't flee! I'll stay here until the bitter end. For humanity!"

"For humanity!" The five Cherubs roar.

The Cherubs all speed up their attacks, striking faster and more often, risking their lives to kill and slow down even more of the Kolvaxian scum. They have to save their two comrades from certain death!

It's at this moment when a figure swoops down from the sky and smashes directly into the center of the Kolvaxian swarm, sending dozens of the monsters flying out in all directions, their bodies spinning through the air uncontrollably. Uriel, the Archangel of Retribution, cloaks herself in a set of Wordsmithium armor not dissimilar to the one Phoebe gave to Belial. Its resplendent golden hue glows in the dark of the night, making her stand out from the mass of Kolvaxians around herself.

She wields two spears, also crafted from Wordsmithium. One red, and one gold. Recreations of her ancient artifacts, the Gae Bolg and Gungnir, granted by her sister Camael. While they are not nearly at the level of those ancient artifacts, they're good enough for her current needs. Jason crafted them with great care.

Like a hurricane, Uriel spins her spears rapidly, battering the Kolvaxians and creating disorder among their ranks. Her brothers all materialize, one after the other, also engaging in battle while trying not to maintain prolonged contact with the creatures embodied by Chaos. Their auras, while much weaker than the Megavaxian, still grant them a certain level of protection and even immunity against sustained magical attacks.

"Hah hah hah!" Uriel laughs uproariously. "None of thee shalt perish so long as I draw breath! I am Uriel, the last living Archangel! Hear my cry!"

She flaps her wings and launches herself like a missile into the back-lines of the Kolvaxian horde, holding her spears horizontally in a V-shape to turn herself into a wedge-like battering ram.

Immediately, she splits the army like Moses split the Red Sea, dividing the Kolvaxians in half and causing them to fly apart.

"Pitiful! Pathetic!" Uriel boasts. "Thy bodies art strong, but thy true power pales in comparison to myself! I shalt treat thee like training dummies, ripe for abuse!"

Uriel rampages unhindered, like a Brute demon tearing through a schoolyard full of children. Each sweep of her spears batters the ordinary Kolvaxians away, preventing any of them from coming close and landing killing blows.

She doesn't manage to kill even a single one, but it doesn't matter. With her arrival, the pressure on the Warframes drops drastically, allowing them to continue slowly but steadily killing the Kolvaxians. Uriel draws their aggression, while Hope and his human allies focus on landing the killing blows.

"So formidable!" The Ballbuster operator exclaims. "So this is the Archangel's true power? I'd only heard rumors, but seeing her in the flesh is even more incredible!"

The longer Uriel sustains her attacks, the more divine energy she is able to output, rapidly rising in power as she builds up her momentum and dashes between her foes, flapping her wings to create shockwaves and jump from one group of Kolvaxians to the next.

Soon, the Kolvaxians drop in number. Because of the sustained efforts of Uriel, Hope, and the Warframe operators, they manage to cut the Kolvaxians down to a local population of 500, and eventually 450!

"Keep it up!" Hope shouts. "We're making progress! Just fifteen- no, ten more minutes!"

Suddenly, Uriel lets out a cry of shock. Something strikes her body so hard that it sends her flying across the battlefield like a cannonball. She pounds through tens of Kolvaxians, skips across the ground like a rock, and smashes into the Armads with enough force to shove it thirty feet backward! Luckily, its Wordsmithium armor saves it from sustaining serious damage, but several warning indicators still pop up.

Uriel coughs. With her momentum shattered, she extricates herself from the small dent made in the Armads' shell and staggers to her feet, still gripping her spears. She looks at the back-lines of the Kolvaxian swarm, where she sees a single figure levitating in the air.

A Kolvaxian converted from a former Psion.

Uriel's eyes narrow. She coughs a few times to clear some blood from her lungs, then she grimaces.

"I wondered when such a creature borne of malfeasance would appear. COME! Thy sneak attacks shalt only succeed once, pitiful snake."

Hope's expression darkens. Despite the fact that the Kolvaxians have surely assimilated tens of thousands, perhaps even millions of Psions over the last 100,000 years, they rarely appear on the battlefields.

That can only mean the invaders are getting serious now.

* * *

In the skies above, the High Psions narrow their eyes. The immediately detect the presence of the newcomer and they grimace in anger.

[It is time.] Executor Riley says.

[No. Wait a little longer.] Executor Vi retorts. [The Archangel can handle one of such a foe. The true menace has yet to show itself. We must be ready to act when it does.]

[Hmph. Then we'll do as you say.] Riley concedes, lowering her battle intent.

All the while, Creator Demila watches, waiting for the right moment to act.

Part 589: Energon

Inside Chrona, Jason Hiro alternates between watching the Maiuran War unfold via the Spynet Sphere, and traveling into his warehouse to take care of several important side projects. Even if the battle on Maiura concludes in just one realspace day, that's still 250 Chrona-days Jason can spend productively working on multiple projects to enhance his strength, as well as the abilities of his fellow humans.

For him, twenty days have already passed since the Kolvaxians first appeared. Jason sometimes thinks about the recent conversation he had with Hope. He scowls every time his subconscious mind brings it up.

"What an idiot. What a colossal moron. When did Hope become so stupid?" Jason wonders out loud, as he manipulates an artifact-knife in his hand, looking at it absentmindedly.

At this moment, Jason stands inside his warehouse. Thanks to the hard work of Rebecca, all his past and present artificing projects have been stored and organized on various shelves and inside mundane and magical containers, their details easily accessible via the central warehouse control system.

This particular dagger represents a random side experiment he decided to embark on just today; a simple design aimed at maximizing one highly specific attribute to the highest extent possible.

A dagger that strikes as many times at once as possible for the sake of stacking up the hits to deal a critical deathblow!

Jason stands before a training dummy, one imbued with exceptionally powerful regeneration magic, and a body made out of the hardest Wordsmithium he's ever produced. Intended to be a testing dummy for battling the Kolvaxians, this puppet is even more durable and regenerative than even the Kolvaxians themselves. Jason takes its design seriously, not skimping on the materials used to make it, as he worries the Kolvaxians may even strengthen over time.

Whenever he designs a new weapon, Jason goes to every possible length to ensure it will be effective against humanity's most frightening foe.

Abruptly, Jason stabs at the dummy's head, and the magic inside the knife activates, causing his arm to phase through time and space.

Stab-stab-stab-stab...

When his knife's stab lands, seven phantom images of his arm also land at the exact moment, causing a huge hole to explode in the dummy's head!

Quickly, Jason retracts his hand, watching as the dummy rapidly regenerates the Wordsmithium used to hold it together.

"Solid piercing capability, but I can't get the duplication threshold above seven. I guess that's the limit. What do you think, Rebecca?"

Jason turns to look at his loyal assistant, the Cybernite who has been crucial in helping him evolve his abilities. Rebecca watches the process silently, nodding her head when she hears Jason's query.

"Seven is fine. What's important is that the strike is highly focused. The armor-penetrative abilities are maximized, while the explosive power is minimized."

"But this knife can only deal with one Kolvaxian at a time." Jason points out. "And it requires 170 Energons to produce."

"170 Energons for an artifact of this quality isn't bad." Rebecca says. "Currently, we're able to capture 1,152 Energons across the Milky Way every Chrona-day. That means we could produce nearly seven knives each cycle."

"Yes, but only if we reduce the Wordsmithium volume to near-zero." Jason objects. "We need all the Wordsmithium we can get."

"The Quantum Knife is itself made of Class V Wordsmithium." Rebecca argues. "Compared to a thousand or so tons of Class I Wordsmithium, we're not making a loss."

Over the last several years, Rebecca and Jason have worked together to formalize a new system of energy mathematics. By harnessing the power of more than a hundred stars in remote locations hidden across the Milky Way, far from the Plague or Volgrim's influence, Jason has been able to secretly siphon the full energy of entire stars and convert it to mana for his own use.

The conversation ratio is truly terrible. 99% of the mundane energy is lost during the conversion, but the resulting mana gained is just as pure as the mana Jason's body innately produces, yet far, far more voluminous.

In fact, the amount of energy vastly exceeds what even Excalibur is capable of outputting! If Hope were to learn this fact, his ears would likely explode from rage...

After so many years, Jason has developed many different 'types' of Wordsmithium, possessing countless unique properties. Compared to the original highly durable but rather 'bland' Class I Wordsmithium he made years ago, the newest evolutions are multiple epochs superior.

One Energon gained from the Milky Way's stars roughly equates to a single ton of Class I Wordsmithium, while Class II requires 2.5 Energons, Class III requires 10 Energons, Class IV requires 50 Energons, and Class V requires 500...

Of course, these numbers are only estimates. Due to mystical reasons Jason and Rebecca have yet to fully unravel, sometimes they are able to produce more or less Wordsmithium than the incoming Energons imply, leaving them to scratch their heads. But by now, they've mostly figured out the averages.

"Seven knives made of Class V Wordsmithium are not that impressive." Jason also retorts. "Forget a single ton of Class V Wordsmithium, those knives don't amount to a fraction of a ton! Most of the mana is spent imbuing them with the Enchantments!"

"Spent, but not wasted." Rebecca says, waving her finger chidingly. "As long as you continue to locate stars in hidden locations, the Energon production will ramp up over time. But actually, I do have a better idea for the knives."

"You do? I'm all ears." Jason says, fiddling with the knife's edge.

"I say we retry the enchanting process. This time, aim for the bottom end of six strikes. As long as the knife can reliably stab six times, that will be more than good enough for our needs, and it will lower the Energon cost to manufacture them considerably. Furthermore, we haven't added an elemental enchantment. Since the Kolvaxians are weak to fire, let's try mixing that in. Six strikes that plunge flames, or plasma, or even raw explosive energy into their bodies should allow for potential one-hit kills."

Jason chews his bottom lip. "Wasn't the entire point to get as many stabs in as possible? Doesn't dropping the threshold to six impalements fly in the face of your original design idea?"

Rebecca shrugs. "This is the scientific way, Jason. I extrapolated based on past data and suggested this development trajectory. It hasn't gone according to those projections, so we'll alter the plan and try again. Remember, the true goal is to develop weapons efficient enough for ordinary soldiers to fight back the Kolvaxian hordes. And if we develop weapons of that quality, they should also prove effective against many Cosmic threats."

Jason sobers up, remembering his primary goal. "Right. Good point. Okay, we'll take a break for a few hours then. When I come back, I'll retry with the new design principle. If we're lucky, maybe I can lower the Energon cost below 125... that would be big."

He sets the knife on his machining table beside half a dozen previous prototypes. Then, he stretches and pops his back, but he doesn't leave the warehouse.

"Something else?" Rebecca asks.

"It's Hope." Jason mutters. "I keep thinking about what he said to me. Why is he so insistent on me staying away from Maiura? He's putting lives at risk."

"You don't have to do as he says." Rebecca points out. "So what if he gets mad that you're helping? This is no time for a small-minded man causing thousands or even millions to die."

"That's a logical way to put it." Jason says, raising an eyebrow. "But things are never that simple. Hope isn't an idiot. He's actually really smart. Hell, not that many years ago I even felt he was way smarter than me. It's important humanity doesn't become divided during this crisis. If him and I start butting heads, it could lead to a catastrophe."

Rebecca crosses her arms. She looks at Jason meaningfully.

"Is that why you're staying here, working on these projects? You're afraid of pissing Hope off?"

"No, I'm not afraid of him." Jason snorts. "But this is about the bigger picture. If I enrage him, or cross some unseen invisible line, I might set him off. What if he lashes out?"

Rebecca falls silent.

Several seconds pass as she looks at Jason, her eyes betraying no emotion.

"If things have degraded that far, Jason, then..."

She pauses.

"...perhaps you should eliminate him."

"What?!" Jason asks. "Are you actually saying I should kill Hope?"

Rebecca shrugs. "I have no attachment to him. I don't even necessarily think it's a good idea. But humanity already has a Wordsmith. It would be extremely remiss of me to pretend that allowing a loose cannon Wordsmith to rampage around and threaten the stability of the galaxy is perfectly okay. It is not. If you're this worried about Hope, then maybe you should consider acting in a more final capacity."

This time, it's Jason who falls silent. He stares at Rebecca, his mouth slightly agape, incredulous.

"That's- that's such a fucked up thing to say. Even if Hope hates me, he's still fundamentally a good person! He cares about everyone else. He just has a vendetta against me! I don't know why he does, but I'm sure if I could figure it out..."

"What?" Rebecca scoffs, shaking her head. "You could convince him to calm down? Make peace with him? Jason, based on everything you've said and I've observed, it's obvious why Hope hates you."

Jason blinks. "It is?"

"Yes. He hates you because someone else is bending his ear and whispering hateful words about you. I'll leave it to you to guess who, since you're more familiar with the major players that might be involved."

Stunned, Jason looks away. He glances off to the side and falls into thought for a short while.

"Neil hates me. The two of them talk a lot. But Neil's not a moron. I don't think he'd be so blatant as to tell Hope to hate me constantly. I barely even get in Neil's way anymore."

Jason continues. "So who else? Linda? Amelia? That seems doubtful. Jepthath? We've never even spoken, so I doubt it's him..."

One name pops out in Jason's mind, causing his frown to deepen.

"Seriously? Solomon? Could it be him? I mean, he and I left on bad terms. He puppeteered my body without my consent twice, and he even tried to kill Belial and make me the scapegoat. It must be him. But even for Solomon, this is insane. He and Hope are always together inside the Hall of Heroes. Who knows what he's telling Hope when I can't hear."

"Solomon is the most likely culprit." Rebecca admits. "But there is another suspect. Raphael."

"Raphael??" Jason asks, even more bewildered than before. "That's way too out of left field. I mean, Raphael hasn't been entirely honest with me at times, but I doubt there's that much mutual hatred between us. Plus, Hope and Raphael don't seem to spend a lot of time together. No, Solomon seems the most likely suspect, much as I hate to say so."

Jason groans audibly. "What a pain in my ass. It explains why Hope so irrationally hates me. He's always been jealous of the fact that I ended up being the original body, and the fact I was rather heartless to him in the beginning. That was definitely my fault, but... I just didn't realize! If I had known he was literally an exact copy of me, I'd have treated him differently! I wouldn't have let him fall into Neil's clutches and be manipulated, I wouldn't-"

"Stop, Jason." Rebecca says, holding up her palm. "There's no sense in blaming yourself. What happened, happened. The crucial question is, can you unravel Hope's conspiratorial mindset? And if not, then is it really okay to let him keep living as he has until now?"

Jason's expression darkens. He leans back against the machining table and stares at the ground, falling into deep contemplation.

"I don't like killing." Jason eventually says. "Not killing demons, angels, Volgrim, or humans. Not killing anything. But if the need arises, I won't hold back."

"And what, exactly, would you determine to be the moment the 'need arises'?" Rebecca counters. "Hope is pushing harder and harder to sideline you. He's putting people's lives in danger. If not now, then when? Are you going to sit back and let people die?"

Before Jason can answer, she shakes her head.

"Just to be clear, I don't really care what the answer is. Whether a thousand humans live in the Milky Way or a billion, it doesn't matter to me. In my opinion, Cybernites are a superior evolution of the human species. I'd much rather focus on converting more people to my species than saving 'mere mortal' lives. But even with that said, I don't want to see humans die needlessly either. Most importantly, I want you to make a decision that won't ruin your mindset and set you on a course for catastrophe."

Jason nods along to her words, but continues to look at the floor. "If I let Hope do as he pleases, that could lead to a catastrophe. If I make up a sloppy reason and kill him, that could equally cause a catastrophe. This is not an easy dilemma to solve. If I could only... fix his outlook on life... it would be so much easier. If I could figure out why he hates me so much, maybe I could..."

The Wordsmith strokes his chin. He closes his eyes and sighs.

"I will think about this over the next several days."

"What about the situation on Maiura?" Rebecca asks. "Are you going to remain uninvolved?"

Jason looks at her with a glint in his eye. "I haven't exactly been doing nothing, you know. I've already saved some people. But... I think I'll work a bit harder. There's still room for improvement."

"I agree." Rebecca says, smiling at him.

The two of them stand up straight. They exchange a few more pleasantries, then Jason departs, heading back to the Spynet Sphere. As he walks, he thinks about a great many things, but mostly about how he should deal with Hope.

"Hope. Oh, Hope. Honestly... I wish I hadn't made you. I wish I knew back then what I know now. You brought Amelia back. You fought against me every step of the way. But you haven't been all bad, have you?"

Jason chuckles, but his voice lacks any joy.

"There haven't been many good times between you and me. But... I respected you, once. I respected that you made a name for yourself. I knew I screwed up, early on. I regretted the way I treated you. If only you would let me reconcile, couldn't we work past our differences? What do you gain by hating me, other than pain and misery? Isn't there a better way?"

"I don't want to kill him." Jason whispers to himself. "I don't want that. And I don't want him to kill me either. What if he lashes out, just to hurt me? What if he attacks Phoebe, or Samantha? Would he? I used to think he wouldn't, but maybe times have changed. He's becoming an unstable variable."

Jason walks up to the Spynet Sphere, and the door on its side slides open. Inside, Fiona stands alone, gazing at the monitors as she keeps her hand on a control panel for the teleportation matrices. Every once in a while, she teleports someone off-world in secret, making sure not to draw Hope or Neil's gazes.

"Another nineteen hundred and forty." She says as Jason enters. "I've been careful to only rescue isolated individuals or duos."

"Good. That's good." Jason says blandly, not really paying attention. He stands behind Fiona, then reaches over to squeeze her shoulders. "Can we talk? It's about Hope."

Fiona frowns. She turns all the way around to look at Jason.

"What about him?"

Jason's shoulders sag.

"I need your input. I need to come up with a way to handle him."

"Alright." Fiona says. "I'm listening."

"Man, what are we all doing, just standing around with our thumbs up our butts? I'm bored! Let's go already!"

Bael loudly complains, over and over again, to anyone within earshot. Whether they want to listen or not, all of the demons nearby have no choice but to roll their eyes as he whines, bitches, and moans.

Here on the world of Yardris, a massive legion of Demon Emperors, Dukes, and Barons nervously wait for the command to come down through Yardrat to them. The top-level Demon Deities, specifically the Middle Cosmics, hold the true power over demonkind. And recently, a large number of Higher Demons have even chosen to side with Demon Deity Auger, passing their abilities on to him. Thus, he holds more sway over demonkind than any other demon in the ancient past.

"Bael, stop it." Crow says, waving her wing dismissively. "We leave when the higher-ups tell us to leave."

Yardrat paces around, looking a little uncomfortable about the situation, but also plenty happy not to be heading out already.

"Have you forgotten?" Yardrat asks. "The Wordsmiths left you to die on the world of Reaver. They rescued all their fellow humans, but not the demons or Volgrim. Who cares if we don't rush over at the drop of the hat?"

"Yeah! Fuck 'em!" Emperor Fae cackles evilly. "Screw those Wordshits! Always acting high and mighty like they're better than us! I'd love to shove a bomb up their butts, lemme tell you that!"

Emperor Nymph bats her eyes while sitting on a stump she grew just so she could have a seat. "I would rather not go anyway. What good are Emperors against the new Plague? My magic will not be of any use. Even Fae probably won't be able to do more than knock the Plagueborn around a little. The only demons who can offer support to the humans are the Low and Middle Cosmics."

Bael casually picks his nose, flicking the booger on the ground afterward. "I wonder who'd win in a fight. Mephisto, or one of these new green-guys?"

"Doesn't matter." Demon Deity Melody says, her Astral Body floating off to the side. "Mephisto is probably dead. The Volgrim wanted to refine his dragon bones for some awful purpose. It's best not to think about that stuff."

Bael's expression turns glum. He kicks a rock into some nearby grass and sighs. "Man. I miss playin' Sticks and Bones with Mephy-boy. It's a shame he had to go all power-crazy and get his butt whooped. Why couldn't he just stay like he was before?"

"You're one of the only demons who doesn't care about power." Yardrat points out. "Mephisto saw an opportunity and took it. I can't even fault him for it. Shame, though. If he'd just waited, Diablo could have uplifted him a lot more painlessly."

"Yeah. Well. Deebs ain't around no more." Bael grunts.

The demons continue to loiter around, waiting for minutes upon minutes, even a full hour.

Eventually, Melody straightens her posture and assumes a more alert stance. She levitates into the air to hover fifty feet above all the demons, drawing their gazes.

"Alright, everyone. The Deities have communed. We've made our decision. As Nymph pointed out, there's really no point in mere mortal demons showing up to battle the Plague. Instead, the Middle Cosmics will use Yardrat's magic to project their powers onto Maiura."

She continues. "The situation on Maiura took a terrible turn a few minutes ago. It doesn't look like the humans are going to be able to hold on after all, so we have to make a move now. We might all still feel aggrieved by the way the Wordsmiths left us high and dry on Reaver, but in the end, we need to work together if we're to defeat the Plague."

"Oh." Fae says, blinking twice. "So... does that mean we can go home?"

"Yes." Melody says, rolling her eyes. "You can leave now."

Her Astral Body disappears, turning into cosmic dust and leaving all the Emperors and their subordinates feeling gloomy. As the crowd disperses and most of the demons prepare to travel back to the Labyrinth, one demon complains louder than ever.

"MAN! This stinks! I could've been takin' a nap this whole time! You jerks woke me up for nothing!"

"Shut up, Bael!"

Part 590: Sartran Switchup

Uriel gazes up at the singular levitating Kolvaxian, a foreboding premonition bubbling behind her eyes. As the ordinary Kolvaxians charge at her, she flaps her wings and leaps into the air, soaring well out of their reach.

At the same time, the Psiovaxian flies directly at her while summoning an energy field formed from Primal Psionics around itself. The faceless monster emotionlessly plows into the Archangel's body, knocking her away, but not far enough to truly injure her. Uriel easily spins in the air and flaps her wings to halt her momentum, dashing to the side in midair while spinning her twin spears around at increasingly fast speeds!

Bang! Crack!

Her spears smash against the Psiovaxian's barrier, and it retaliates by firing concentrated 'bullets' of psionic power at her, striking Uriel's armor one time after another. Uriel grunts in pain and conjures walls of light to defend herself, but the bullets blast right through, only slowing down a bit and reducing the damage her body takes.

In the skies above, the High Psions watch her battle intently, crossing their arms while they wait for a change that will require their assistance.

[Primal Psionics and a Body Enhancer.] Executor Vi says. [Psionic output appears to be around the 5th Level. It must be a 6th Level Psionic Plaguehost.]

[Roughly equivalent to an average Demon Emperor.] Executor Sartran adds. [Uriel can handle the situation.]

Demila frowns. [It's not accurate to only evaluate this Plaguehost as wielding strength at the 5th Level. It also possesses a Cosmic-grade body. Its Body Enhancements will strengthen equivalently.]

[The battle has barely begun.] Sartran says evenly. [This world has no idea of the pain it is about to suffer. For some reason, the Plague does not tend to send Psions to the frontlines. When it does, it will not stop at merely one or two hosts. It will send a swarm beyond comprehension.]

Demila nods. She has rarely fought on the frontlines against the Plague, and even when she did, that was tens of millennia ago, when the Plague was much weaker. Since its evolution, she has never personally fought an Enhanced Plaguehost. She does not have a strong idea of just how dangerous they are, aside from what she witnessed on Reaver.

With Uriel no longer able to assist the Warframes and Hope, they once again fall into a bad situation. The Second Wordsmith grimaces as the Kolvaxians begin pushing forward once again, ignoring any losses as they make their way toward the armored mechs and their juicy human pilots.

Thankfully, Uriel pushed the swarm back enough that the Cherubs and Armads were able to mow down a good number of ordinary Kolvaxians. Unfortunately, even more Kolvaxians continued to appear during that period, so their numbers only dwindled by a small amount.

"There's still sixty-three Kolvaxian left!" The Armads pilot calls out, before blasting another one to smithereens. "Sixty-two now!"

A hint of despair rings out in his voice as he witnesses two Kolvaxians teleport onto the rear of the battlefield. Killing one won't matter if two more appear!

Several Kolvaxians dive underground. Hope quickly takes to the air, ready to attack when they pop back up. He hovers near the lone remaining Ballbuster protectively, waiting for an opportunity to strike.

Some distance away, a female demon abruptly appears out of thin air. She stumbles slightly, then looks around to evaluate her new position.

"I'm about 500 yards away." She says, speaking into her shining golden armor's comm system. She hefts her flaming sword and turns her attention to the swarm descending upon the Warframes. "Thanks for the assist, Fiona."

"Anytime, Sammy." Fiona says back. "But watch your back. Hope's been acting weird recently."

Fiona pauses.

"Beelzebub isn't coming. He's gone to assist Henry."

"Between me, Uriel, and Hope, we should be able to handle ourselves." Belial says, though her tone betrays a lack of trust. "At least, I think we can."

Belial jumps forward, moving swiftly despite the armor shielding her body. She joins Hope, fighting off the Kolvaxians emerging from underground while Uriel battles the Psion in the sky above.

Over the next ten minutes, a furious melee follows. Hope spots Belial immediately, but he's so preoccupied with protecting the Ballbuster and Armads, while also killing Kolvaxians as quickly as possible, that he doesn't have the attention to spare for Belial's appearance. Even he has to admit she came at a good time.

Uriel's figure leaves white afterimages as she and the Psiovaxian collide in the air. Uriel summons powerful beams and streams of fire, pelting her foe in the same way Beelzebub would, but with less effectiveness. Her flames are simply nowhere near the level of Beelzebub's, lacking the concentration and raw energetic power of his magic.

But, luckily, she doesn't only wield fire magic. She is a master of many elements, including water, ice, flames, wind, earth, light, dark, and even magnetism... though tapping into the power of magnetism continues to give her an ominous foreboding sensation in the back of her mind.

Uriel's twin spears stab at the Psiovaxian. It spins and pirouettes in midair, moving more gracefully and intelligently than the comparatively stupid horde below. While the mundane Kolvaxians slowly begin to dwindle under the combined attacks of Hope, Belial, and the Warframes, Uriel can only do her best to land a killing blow on her foe.

But no matter how hard she tries, she finds she just isn't powerful enough!

Just like with the Megavaxian, Uriel is frustrated by her lack of striking power. Hope wields Excalibur while Belial wields a blade identical in function to Henry's sword, but Uriel's Wordsmithium spears are not at the level of those two artifacts. In terms of durability, they're practically unbreakable, but the spears are not heavy enough to break the bones of the new Kolvaxians, nor are they sharp enough to effortlessly split them like logs.

"Dammit! DAMMIT!" Uriel roars. "Why cans't thou simply perish?!"

Out of frustration, Uriel finally reaches the edge of desperation. She looks inside her Mind Realm and grabs at Gabriel's soul.

"Assist me, brother!" Uriel cries.

Boom!

Uriel's eyes glow with ominous light as Gabriel materializes inside of her body, swapping places with his sister's soul. At the same time, Uriel lends her control over the elements, and she presses her two spears together, causing them to melt together as part of their innate mystical functionality.

Designed by Fiona and crafted via Jason's powers of Wordsmithing, Uriel's replicas of the Gae Bolg and Gungnir are not the transcendent-level artifacts Camael once made, but they are still unique and powerful in their own ways.

They fuse within seconds, transforming into a massive greatsword weighing over ten tons!

Gabriel's eyes pierce the fog of battle. His ancient gaze fixates on the creature before him. The Psiovaxian hesitates as it senses its opponent's aura has drastically changed.

Uriel, the Archangel of Vengeance, has swapped control with Gabriel, the Archangel of Power.

"Come." Gabriel says, his deep voice escaping Uriel's lips like a rumble of distant lightning. "Let me test thy strength, monster born of heresy."

Gabriel moves slowly but with purpose. He flaps his wings and flies at the creature while wielding a comically oversized eight-foot-long greatsword, swinging it down as if it were a hammer.

The Psiovaxian flickers to the side, and Gabriel's swing misses! His sword whiffs the empty air, but a surge of power chops outward, blasting the ground and carving a trench 3 kilometers long, seemingly splitting Maiura's continental plate in two.

"Hmph." Gabriel grunts. "I am out of practice. Serve as my training dummy, wretched filth."

He attacks again, but this time, he adjusts to Uriel's bodily dimensions a bit better. When the Psiovaxian dodges, he attacks again. And again!

Each time, Gabriel builds up momentum and acclimates to the nuances of his sister's borrowed body. He is not used to controlling a body as small and light as hers, nor one lacking in physical strength, but his personal power begins to exert more and more control, changing her muscles to adapt to his sensibilities.

As the seconds pass and turn into minutes, Uriel's body grows stronger and fitter. Her muscles expand in size. Her height increases, taking her from just under six feet tall to over eight feet in height. She begins to resemble an ancient Amazon Warrior, and her body's compatibility with Gabriel's chosen greatsword improves constantly.

BOOM!!

Gabriel finally lands a hit, slashing at the Psiovaxian and hammering it down into the ground. The faceless creature does not let out a scream as it plunges a thousand feet deep into the soil, blasting a massive wave of dirt and rocks outward, startling Hope and the others as they momentarily have to shield themselves from the wall of debris. Hope casts a Word of Power, preventing thousands of tons of dirt and rock from burying himself and the Warframes alive, while also benefiting Belial too.

Unfortunately, the Psiovaxian quickly emerges from the ground seconds later, only slightly injured. Not only is its body durable, but a shield of raw telekinetic energy continues to envelop it, making it even more durable than before.

The Psiovaxian does not charge at Gabriel or attack him again. Instead, it jumps out of the ground and hovers backward, looking warily at Gabriel with its unseen eyes.

"Hmm?"

Gabriel grunts. He has long disabused himself of any notion that this creature is 'stupid'. It clearly seems to have an intelligence of its own, albeit alien, its goals unknown.

"What sort of creature art thou, I wonder?" Gabriel asks calmly. The flames on his greatsword intensify, illuminating his glowing eyes with a crimson color. "Dost thou understandeth my words? Or dost thou intendeth to continue playing a fool?"

The Psiovaxian says nothing. It stares at him for a few moments.

Then, it slightly moves its right hand.

Abruptly, another Psiovaxian appears beside it.

"Hmm?!" Gabriel grunts, frowning deeply.

And then, another!

And another!

Within five seconds, the lone Psiovaxian is joined by four others, all of them looking completely indistinguishable from one another, let alone the ordinary Kolvaxians on the ground.

The five faceless creatures levitate motionlessly before Gabriel for but a single second.

Then, four of them fly away!

East and west, one Kolvaxian goes in each direction, while two rocket southward toward the fortress atop Mount Adams and the battlefield beyond.

[Oh no!] Uriel exclaims. [Brother! Just one of these creatures is too much for thee to handle. Now they art splitting up; thou shalt be unable to give chase!]

Gabriel's heart quickly becomes calm.

"If this world shoulds't fall, then so be it. The opponent before me is the only one I shalt pursue. Humanity has other Champions at its disposal."

Gabriel smiles.

"And not only humanity..."

In the skies above, the Executors immediately notice the change in the situation.

[It is time. Spread out.] Executor Riley says. [Sartran, you go south. Vi, east. Huron, north. I shall protect the western side.]

[And me?] Demila asks.

[You shall stay here with Divinator Fellrun. Protect the central human fortress.] Riley orders. [The humans are incapable of surviving without our assistance.]

[They are only mud-dwellers in the end.] Fellrun adds. [Worry not. I shall aid the humans with all my strength.]

A glint appears in Demila's eyes. [As will I.]

In a single second, the Volgrim's conversation plays out, and four of the five Executors race away, traveling multiple miles in the blink of an eye. Their departing figures leave little more than a flicker of light as they each arrive at their designated rendezvous points.

Therefore, in the few seconds it takes the Psiovaxians to charge toward the other battlefields, the Psion Executors react in that same span of time, jumping in front of their Kolvaxian enemies and startling Gabriel.

Gabriel barely gets an instant to react before Executor Huron seemingly materializes between the Archangel and his Psiovaxian enemy.

"What? You-" Gabriel starts to say.

CRACK!

Huron slams his body into the Psiovaxian, blasting it backward and turning it into a beam of light that immediately ignites explosively as it rips across Maiura's surface. The friction from the thick lower atmosphere causes it to explode with the same force of a meteor striking the upper atmosphere, and that Psiovaxian smashes into a distant forest less than a second later, blasting apart the trees and turning them to ash.

The Psiovaxian instantly dies, eradicated by Huron's overwhelming power!

As a Low Cosmic possessing a body even the Middle Cosmic Dosena cannot compare with, Huron's physical strength is thousands of times greater than even Gabriel! If he wanted to kill the Archangel, it would take little more than a slap to turn the Archangel of Power into a pile of meat paste.

Gabriel's heart jumps in alarm. Even despite being a relatively calm individual, he is still shocked by the power Huron just displayed.

If this were the Primordial Era, Huron wouldn't be much of a threat. Back then, even the lowest angel was an Apex Cosmic. But that was hundreds of millions, even billions of years in the past.

Nowadays, Huron is one of the most powerful individuals in the entire Milky Way. Compared to the decrepit and weakened Archangels, he is a mountain while they are barely a boulder.

Huron sneers contemptuously at the person he just saved.

[Uriel? Or is it Gabriel, now? Never the matter. I will handle the elite enemies. You can mop up the fodder.]

Another Psiovaxian materializes. Before Gabriel can react, Huron's body blurs, and the monster is blasted apart at the atomic level, its remains launched across the horizon to burn up on impact.

Gabriel's shock turns to a silent despair. Despite his stoic nature, being faced with the truth of his weakness rattles him to his core.

Long ago, he was a powerful Archangel, revered by his peers, able to stand up to any creature on Earth and make them know the terror of his wrath.

Before that, in the ancient times before he lost his memories, he was even mightier, the most powerful of all the Archangels, the one that none could ever defeat.

But now?

He is merely a shell of his former self. An errant soul clinging to the material realm, lacking in strength, a pawn in place of what was once a juggernaut.

Huron's sneer deepens. He cannot help but feel a deep sense of satisfaction when he senses the humiliation of his lesser.

What Archangels? What ancient primordial monsters?

All that remains of their ancient civilization are pitiful insects, not even at the apex of mortal strength.

Of course, if the Archangels were to truly unite their power, Huron's snide attitude would vanish instantly. Even he is not certain of the full depths of the Cherubiim's power.

But, in any case, it doesn't matter. He has confirmed the Cherubiim cannot reappear for a long time. The Archangels used their power once, and will need a long period of time before they can merge once more to unleash its strength. In the meantime, they are but playthings for the Volgrim Empire.

And who knows? Maybe the Cherubiim itself is not as big a threat as they imagined. Perhaps Dosena could handle it on her own, or even one of the Executors.

Hehehe. Wouldn't that be an interesting fight? Huron thinks.

* * *

At the Southern Front.

Henry's sword, Artoria, swings time after time. He kills one Kolvaxian and then another, tirelessly slaughtering them as quickly as possible.

BANG!

A Kolvaxian smashes Henry in the face, sending him flying away. He grinds across the dirt and quickly flips himself back onto his feet, swaying for a moment as he shakes off his disorientation. Blood flows from his nose, and a nasty pair of gashes cut across his cheek, causing even more blood to drip off his jawline.

With two black eyes, multiple sprained bones, and his upper and lower lips both split from powerful Kolvaxian punches, Henry's image cuts a sorry figure. His allies sometimes glance at him and grimace in sympathy.

But Henry ignores the pain. He continues to fight!

At the same time, Ashley picks up his slack, sometimes attacking ferociously, other times holding back. If Henry gets hit, she quickly shields him. If he attacks but fails to kill his foe, she finishes them off.

More than a hundred powerful Legionnaires join Henry. Together, their unified vision and thoughts amplify each other's powers, allowing them to move and react to attacks they shouldn't see coming. The instant a Kolvaxian pounces out of the ground and one Legionnaire sees the attack coming, all of them do. The troopers in that area react instantly, jumping or dodging to the side to evade the attack while their comrades spin around and cut the monster down.

But even so, the Kolvaxians continue to spawn faster and faster. As the first hour of the battle finishes and the second begins, Henry and the other soldiers truly start to feel exhausted. No matter how many Kolvaxians they kill, more just keep coming! And since every Kolvaxian takes all their strength to fully kill, they cannot rest, take it easy, or hold a bit of strength in reserve. Oftentimes, they feel as if they're trying to cut down trees by slapping them until they break!

"Come on!" Henry yells in between gasps of breath. "Do you people wanna live forever? Just keep killing them!"

Across the sky, a naked demon cloaked in fire rockets toward Henry's battalion. Beelzebub looks down at the wall of Kolvaxians, his expression gloomy.

"No matter how many we kill, more keep coming. Shouldn't Maiura evacuate? Just give up. There's no point in wasting any more energy."

But still, he continues flying toward Henry's position. At the same time, Beelzebub summons a pair of tightly condensed fire-orbs, spiraling them as fast as possible to increase their rotational speed and their internal temperature.

He pauses in the air, levitating via flames beneath his feet. He continues to spin up the orbs, making them emit a harsh screeching sound as scorching winds rotate around the Infernal Emperor, cloaking him in a haze of heat.

When Beelzebub feels that the orbs have reached a satisfactory level, he charges downward, slamming into the center of the Kolvaxians and sending a wave of fire outward to blast them apart. Then, he starts swinging his palms around, slapping at the nearest Kolvaxians without letting go of his orbs.

The effect is immediate and drastic!

Beelzebub's Flame Palms tear through the Kolvaxian bodies with relative ease. Each time his palm slaps at a Kolvaxian's head, a heat like that of a star's center shreds them apart, melting their skulls into bonemeal. With his right hand, he destroys their heads, and with his left, he targets their torsos, destroying one after the other to prevent any chances of survival.

Beelzebub's arrival alleviates some of the pressure on Henry. Unlike Neil, Henry doesn't have an extreme level of hatred for the demons. He feels some level of disgust for them purely due to Jepthath's influence, but ultimately his thoughts about Beelzebub are relatively benign. After all, Henry 'betrayed' humanity by accident. If he could be redeemed, then why not Beelzebub?

"Thanks for the assist!" Henry calls out to Beelzebub. "I don't know how much longer we'd have lasted without you! Ugh!"

Henry cuts down another Kolvaxian, while Beelzebub does the same.

"No need for thanks. Just doing my duty." Beelzebub grunts, brushing off the compliment. He also kills a Kolvaxian while speaking, keeping his words short and succinct. "I can't kill a horde alone, but I can help."

Beelzebub fights alongside Henry's platoon for a while, but then his attention shifts as he senses a powerful entity rocketing toward the Southern Front at an alarming speed. Beelzebub quickly notices a faint field of chaos energy around it, marking it as a Kolvaxian like the rest, but its speed is too high to be any ordinary creature.

Before Beelzebub can call out the incoming threat, another even more powerful figure abruptly appears in its path.

A thunderstorm explodes to the north, between the troopers and Mount Adams!

Beelzebub jumps into the air for a few seconds, pausing to stare with wide open eyes as a thousand bolts of lightning suddenly detonate like bombs, blasting the incoming Psiovaxian to smithereens. Seconds later, an 8th Level Psion, Sartran, remains. He levitates aloofly above the ground, appearing quite smug and pleased with himself as he looks at the shattered corpse he successfully intercepted.

[Beelzebub.] Sartran says, projecting his thoughts across the battlefield with ease. [I've been looking forward to meeting you. Mind if I lend you a hand?]

Beelzebub's arms hang limp at his waist, still clutching his spiraling orbs of flame.

"...That would be great." Beelzebub says after a few seconds.

[Wonderful. I won't need long.] Sartran says, his eyes curving up in the Volgrim approximation of a smile.

Part 591: Beelzebub's Imagination

True to his word, Sartran begins attacking the ordinary Kolvaxians with a ferocity unmatched by any of humanity's current champions. His body blurs and flickers as he teleports from spot to spot, flinging ungodly powerful lightning blasts downward, atomizing Kolvaxians one after the other, quickly killing twenty of them in less than a minute.

Beelzebub, meanwhile, struggles to kill one at a time every five to ten seconds. He cannot help but gasp softly as he watches one of the strongest Volgrim in existence obliterating these foes en-masse one after the other.

Henry, likewise, feels a sense of awe and fear. He can kill a Kolvaxian every ten to thirty seconds, depending on how lucky his attacks are when they land. The combination of a flame-imbued Artoria striking multiple vital areas in a single strike ends up divided by his accumulating exhaustion, which in turn slows him down. As the battle has raged for nearly two hours already, Henry has grown to find himself less capable of killing Kolvaxians in a single blow. Often, he needs three to five to finally finish a foe off.

The situation is even worse for his fellow Legionnaires and his girlfriend. Ashley and the Lesser Legionnaires are simply incapable of killing Kolvaxians by themselves. Every dead Kolvaxian comes as a result of their tight teamwork and tens of carefully aimed, full strength blows delivered as quickly as possible. If they attack a Kolvaxian and it manages to dive underground, it will return later, fully healed, wasting all their effort.

The same is true across all of Maiura. While it might seem to the ordinary humans watching from afar that humanity's Champions are capable of 'easily' killing the Enhanced Kolvaxians, the truth is that every one-on-one battle is a matter of life and death.

Every single Kolvaxian has the physical defensiveness of Executor Huron. Their bones are practically as durable as Bael's original body! If they successfully punch or kick a human and send them flying, even one as strong as Henry, they're sure to suffer life-threatening injuries!

The sense of frustration and looming death that was once beginning to take hold of the Southern Defender's minds eases up noticeably. With Sartran showing up to take some of the heat off humanity's forces, they slow down their attacks, pull back a little, and rest their weary arms and legs. Naturally, they continue to fight, but they do so at a noticeably weaker level, allowing their tired arms to swing with less impact than before.

Naturally, Sartran notices this. He shakes his head while firing another explosive bolt of lightning, blasting a Kolvaxian to kingdom come. But he doesn't dislike the humans for this. After all, he was weak once too. All the Executors were. If he were forced to fight at his maximum power for a prolonged period, he would also grow weary and need to rest. This much is natural.

Only Beelzebub continues to fight as ferociously as before. Despite Sartran's appearance immediately and drastically weakening the Southern horde, Beelzebub still fights at his full strength, his body as full of vigor as ever.

Sartran's gaze flickers. He glances appreciatively toward the Demon Emperor, smiling with his eyes.

[Beelzebub.] Sartran says, communicating privately with only the Emperor of Inferno, not the others. [I have heard a bit about you in recent cycles. You are quite an interesting demon.]

"Hmm?" Beelzebub grunts, only flicking his gaze upward for a split-second before returning his attention to the horde. "Stop distracting me, Volgrim!"

[No need to speak out loud.] Sartran says. [The others won't hear our conversation that way, and that would allow us to communicate more efficiently anyway. According to records our Changelings have written, you've not been a Demon Emperor for long. Isn't that right?]

Beelzebub frowns. He fires a beam of concentrated nuclear energy like a laser directly into a Kolvaxian's chest, blasting it apart and killing two more Kolvaxians directly behind it. This attack fatigues him a little, so he jumps into the air and rockets upward, emitting fire from beneath his feet.

[What's it to you?] Beelzebub asks accusingly, shooting an ugly glance Sartran's way.

[Hoho. You young ones are so hot-blooded.] Sartran says, smiling in amusement with his eyes. [Did you know I spoke to your mentor, Agares, on several occasions? He and I played Sticks and Bones in the past... before the Kolvaxians first appeared. That was during the first ten thousand cycles following the Energy Wars of Earth's lore.]

Sartran chuckles. [I can sense your hostility, Beelzebub. But there's no need for that. I'm not like most other Psions, let alone my fellow Executors. I do not look down on 'mud dwellers'. I think the different species are quite cute.]

[Wow. Thanks for the compliment.] Beelzebub says sarcastically. [Are we done yapping now?]

Beelzebub holds his hand up in a claw pose. Five spiraling orbs of nuclear energy build up, then he snaps his claw forward and sends the orbs hurtling downward at the Kolvaxians.

Boom-boom-boom-boom-boom!

At once, five powerful concentrated explosions detonate, killing two Kolvaxians and sending eight more flying away, badly injured. The injured ones dive underground to heal their wounds by absorbing the planet's energy.

[Dammit!] Beelzebub growls. [I missed my shots! It's all your fault! You distracted me!]

Sartran casually fires out multiple powerful bolts of lightning. He kills three Kolvaxians that have drawn worryingly close to the human's battle-lines.

[Your demonic ability is the manipulation of fire, it seems. But there is also an element of nuclear energy. Fascinating. It seems you are a born Energy Manipulator. I've met a few demons who could qualify as Energy Manipulators, including Emperor Ose, but they always seemed stuck in their ways, only capable of manipulating one element. You're the first I've met that can manipulate a sub-element.]

[You knew Ose?] Beelzebub asks, feeling his stomach tighten.

He wouldn't want to say it out loud... but Beelzebub did care about Ose. She was the first and only woman he ever connected with. Even though he came to find out she was merely using him, he couldn't bring himself to hate her. Her death left a hole in his heart.

Just by mentioning Ose, Sartran manages to catch Beelzebub's interest. Naturally, the Executor picks up on this fact.

[Oh yes. She was a stuck-up female. Arrogant beyond belief. But interesting, too. The only demon I knew who could comprehend the field of technology. I found her to be an engrossing conversation partner. Naturally, as an Electricity and Lightning-focused

Psion, I also know a good deal about technology. We were able to hold many fruitful conversations during my time in Hell.]

He pauses.

[Naturally, because of the mind-wipes, Agares, along with other demons I befriended, forgot my identity. Ose didn't forget, but she still put distance between us. That was a shame. I've always considered myself a friend of demonkind. I place your species on the same level as my own, much to my colleagues' chagrin.]

Beelzebub's glare softens a little. In his mind, this 'Sartran' is quite easy to talk to, lacking the arrogance and condescending nature of the other Volgrim Beelzebub has met, like Demila.

[That's kind of you to say.] Beelzebub says neutrally, while firing another fire-beam at the Kolvaxians below.

[Well, I wanted to speak to you specifically, Beelzebub.] Sartran says, finally getting to his greater point. [As a demon who has unlocked a secondary Element, I wished to ask... what allowed you to comprehend the power of Nuclear Fire?]

[It just came to me one day, when I blew up my body in a fit of rage.] Beelzebub says, recalling the first time he blew himself up to try and kill Hope, Belial, and Archangel Uriel. [Actually, it came when I first ascended to Duke. I found I was able to spontaneously make parts of my body explode whenever I wished. Along with my enhanced regenerative powers and lack of pain, I found that I could rip off my arm and fling it at people to blow them to bits. It amused me greatly.]

[Oh.] Sartran says, a hint of disappointment in his tone. [That's a shame. I hoped it was something more profound.]

[More profound? In what way?] Beelzebub counters.

Instead of directly answering Beelzebub's question, Sartran's aura suddenly changes. Rather than firing bolts of lightning, he summons a sword made out of roaring flames, then materializes amidst the Kolvaxians below, swinging it crazily to cut them down, one after the other.

Slash! Slash! Swish-swish-slash!

His sword dances to and fro, killing them even faster than his lightning did, let alone Henry's sword, Artoria.

Beelzebub's eyes widen to the point of absurdity. Just when he thinks Sartran is going to cut all the Kolvaxians down, the Executor flickers back up into the sky and dematerializes his fire-sword.

[Don't be too impressed.] Sartran says blandly. [Fighting in the middle of a Kolvaxian swarm, especially ones as powerful as these, is a recipe for disaster. Much safer to bombard them from afar.]

[You can control fire too?!] Beelzebub asks, bewildered.

[Haha. A lot more than that.]

Sartran holds out his palm.

Fwip! THOOM!

A flash of light fires from his palm, smashes into one of the Kolvaxians, and pounds it deep into the ground, plunging it more than 500 meters beneath the planet's surface.

Beelzebub's jaw drops.

[Light is also a form of energy. There are many ways to manipulate it.] Sartran explains. [I could focus on heat, or increase the luminosity to blind enemy vision and sensors. I could increase its radiation level to mimic the light of a star, irradiating my foes and rotting their internal organs. I could change the frequency to infrared or ultraviolet to pierce different sorts of defenses. X-rays and gamma rays are also an option. Truthfully though, I'm the High Psion who is most talented in terms of Energy Manipulation, even surpassing Founder Dosena, but my best talent is in electrical energy. It is the one I am most effective at controlling in all situations, so it's the form I use most often.]

He shrugs. [Comparatively, my flame control is quite poor. Even you are better than me at manipulating different types of fire.]

Beelzebub nods dumbly. His mind struggles to wrap around Sartran's explanation.

[You're saying... I don't manipulate fire? I manipulate energy?]

[I have no idea.] Sartran admits. [There are many Energy Manipulating Psions within the Volgrim Empire. I'm not the only one, I'm simply the strongest. I know a few individuals who are superior to me in the field of flame control.]

His look of interest toward Beelzebub deepens.

[But even compared to them... you are something else. Your stamina seems inexhaustible. Your regenerative capabilities are not a trait I've seen crop up among my fellow Energy Manipulators. There's something... special about you. Something I can't quite pin down. I am very much looking forward to your future feats.]

Beelzebub falls silent.

He doesn't immediately respond to Sartran, instead frowning as he falls deep into thought.

Sartran continues to wallop the Kolvaxian army, shredding them with ease and quickly culling their numbers down from one hundred and fifty to less than forty. Every Kolvaxian he kills makes their collective threat drop lower than before, making it progressively easier and easier to kill more of them.

Beelzebub, for his part, stops the slaughter. He gazes absentmindedly at the ground below while thinking many different thoughts.

Energy Manipulation. Is that what I do? How do flames relate to nuclear energy? What is nuclear energy itself? Why can my body regenerate from mortal wounds while the High Psions cannot? Is there truly something unique about me compared to them?

After a moment, his eyes flicker.

The Phoenix's Feather. Somehow, I obtained it in my youth, and it empowered me greatly. It must have altered my abilities. Made me more formidable. It granted me my regenerative powers... but what about my connection to fire? Is that also mine, or did that come from the Phoenix?

He recalls a conversation he had with Yama, not that long ago...

* * *

"How did I obtain the Phoenix's Feather?" Beelzebub asked. "I've known I possessed the power of Nirvana for a while now, but I wasn't aware other demons knew. So how did all of you find out?"

"You were only an ordinary imp..." Yama said slowly. "Then one day, a strange entity appeared in the Labyrinth. The First Hell tracked its position as it rushed toward you, then entered your soul. You were too spiritually dull to notice its arrival, but the rest of us were not so foolish."

Beelzebub frowned. "You're saying... the Phoenix Feather chose me at random? But where did it come from?"

"How should we know?" Yama said helplessly. "You lucked out, brat! There's nothing more to it! What, do you think you were chosen because you were special? Like we said, you're not special at all! You're just one fortunate little imp-bastard!"

Beelzebub ignored Yama's goading to focus on the underlying hints behind his words.

"You don't find that even a little odd?" Beelzebub asked. "That I simply obtained the Phoenix Feather at random? Is it not possible... this could be someone's plot? Perhaps they gave it to me for some ulterior motive?"

Yama grimaced. "Still trying to build up a conspiracy? Think what you like. We've told you all we know. We don't give a damn if you believe us or not..."

* * *

Who gave me the feather? Beelzebub thinks. Or perhaps more importantly, was it for a good reason, or a bad one? Can I weaponize it? Are my abilities different from other demons? Do I have more potential I've yet failed to excavate?

He glances at Sartran. The Executor blasts another duo of Kolvaxians to bits, then smiles with his eyes at Beelzebub, easily reading the young demon's mind.

[I don't know what this 'Phoenix' is, but it sounds special.] Sartran says casually. [I wouldn't bother searching for an ulterior motive. Maybe you were chosen. Maybe you lucked into your abilities. But whatever the case may be, I believe you have even greater potential than you think. You just need... a little imagination.]

Beelzebub's eyes flash.

[That's the same thing Saul said. He told me I haven't been exploring my powers enough. I've become stagnant, merely going along with what my instincts say are possible.]

Beelzebub looks at his palms. A sense of shame wells up in his chest. A feeling of waste.

[More. I can do more. I can BE more!]

He raises his eyes to the sky. In that moment, a distant sensation of pride returns to his mind and body.

That pride deepens, becoming something more.

Ambition!

A lack of satisfaction with the status quo!

He is Beelzebub. He is not a follower, nor a leader. He is just himself. He is not content with the way things are.

Like the parting of a veil, he seemingly looks up at the cosmic nature of the universe, realizing that there are new dimensions which previously remained invisible to his eyes.

[Energy. It's all energy! I get it now! I understand!]

Beelzebub's gaze snaps back downward, to the remaining Kolvaxians below.

He lifts up his palm and begins calling upon his magic to summon a revolving fireball within his grasp.

That fireball spins, faster and faster, increasing in speed and temperature. Like before, he wields its power with the intent to create a micro-sized star within the palm of his hand.

[Not enough. It isn't nearly enough!]

Beelzebub's eyes blaze with ambition. He stares at the fire, burning his pupils as the light within becomes more and more blinding. As painful as the death and rebirth of his retinas might be, he continues to stare, sensing not only with his eyes, but his very soul.

Not like this... more like this. No, a little different. The atomic structure is wrong. More energetic. More chaotic. Less orderly. More... EXPLOSIVE!

A vicious sound begins to emanate from the orb. A high-pitched whine screeches outward, sounding like a skillsaw cutting into wood. That screeching changes multiple times, eventually sounding like the distant crackling of lightning!

Crackle! Crackle!!

Sartran's eyes widen. He becomes tongue-tied as he watches Beelzebub achieve in less than a minute the sort of successful experimentation that previously took the Executor hundreds of years.

[Amazing! Impressive! With only his soul's intuition alone? He's a genius! A prodigy!] Sartran praises.

"Hah! Hahahaha! HAHAHAHAH!"

Beelzebub cackles madly, his grin turning feral as the white star in his palm bursts out with small bolts of nuclear lightning, some of them shooting skyward, others out to the right and left. The faster it revolves, the more crazily the energy within erupts, like a bomb mere milliseconds from going off.

"Let's see what kind of damage this will do!" Beelzebub exclaims, before rearing his arm back and flinging the electrical bomb downward.

It flies into the center of the remaining Kolvaxians and explodes with terrific power, sending hundreds of bolts of lightning in every direction.

BOOOOM!!!

Every single remaining Kolvaxian, all thirty-five of them, blow up, vaporized by the raw power of Beelzebub's experimental lightning bomb.

Their bodies turn to ash and spray outward, annihilated at the atomic level.

Sartran instantly conjures a shield around the humans, causing the bolts of lightning to be redirected, saving countless lives. Beelzebub quickly realizes that if Sartran hadn't done so, he'd have potentially killed all of the Legionnaires, including Henry and Ashley!

"Damn!" Beelzebub yells. "Apologies! Thank you, Sartran. If you hadn't intervened... I must have lost my mind, taking such a risk! But the power! The explosive power! It was so intoxicating!"

Sartran chuckles uneasily. [No worries, my young friend. Many have lost themselves in a moment of euphoric bliss. Transcending one's abilities, especially in such a rapid manner, can be more seductive than the whispers of a lover. You must take care to watch how you evolve your abilities moving forward.]

Beelzebub calms down. He holds up his palm once again, and a faint crackle begins to appear.

He conjures a much smaller, weaker, and more easily controllable bolt of lightning in his palm.

Then he throws it into the distance. It crosses the horizon at the speed of light, igniting a distant forest when it strikes a random tree.

"Lightning. Truly, lightning! I can wield the same sort of ability as Ose! All this time, I had eyes but could not see the distant mountain peaks! I owe this breakthrough to your words."

Sartran shakes his head. [No. You always had this potential hidden within yourself. Truly, I am in awe. You are a genius in every sense of the word. Your natural instincts are beyond mine. When I was a young Psion, my talents paled in comparison to yours. You will achieve great things in the future.]

He pauses before adding, [Continue to experiment. You have only scratched the surface of what 'energy manipulation' can achieve. I hope in the future we will be able to deepen our friendship. Indeed, I would love to teach a prodigy like you more techniques, moving forward. In these uncertain times, the Milky Way always needs more champions.]

Beelzebub sincerely bows at the waist toward Sartran.

[In my eyes, you are half a teacher to me, like Agares was. I will remember your words for the rest of my life.]

Kolvaxians continue to appear, materializing in the distance after Beelzebub eradicated the entirety of the remaining swarm. Sartran sits back, watching happily as his half-disciple continues to try new things with his new mastery of lightning.

Beelzebub releases the flames under his feet. He emits electrical energy in a sphere around his body, levitating by inverting the planet's gravitic energy around himself. In this way, he is seemingly able to fly without appearing nearly as eye-catching as before.

Perhaps in the future, this will turn into a stealthy manner of approaching different types of combats!

[Bravo. Brilliant!] Sartran praises continually. [Your adaptation is unbelievable! I've never seen someone alter the form of their power with such ease. At this rate, you might even-]

[BACKUP! I NEED BACKUP!!]

A psionic voice blasts every human and non-human on Maiura, causing their brains to lock up for a moment. Beelzebub loses control of his powers, causing him to fall from the sky and slam into the dirt below. Henry screams in pain. Ashley falls to her knees, crying out as she also loses control of her five senses for a few seconds.

Archangel Uriel slashes at a Kolvaxian, but the sudden bombardment of a screaming psionic voice jars her brain. She stumbles clumsily toward the Kolvaxian, and it punches her with its full strength, sending her flying!

Belial, Hope, Levi, Mandy, and countless Legionnaires lose their ability to think for a few seconds. So powerful is the voice that they momentarily become braindead, like lobotomy victims.

Executor Sartran snaps his head to the east.

[EXECUTOR VI!]

He ignores Beelzebub's pain, as well as the pain of the sprawled-out humans nearby.

His body flickers, and an instant later, he pounces across the horizon, traveling to the Eastern Front in the blink of an eye.

Beelzebub is the first to recover. He stands up, holding his head as a migraine assaults him.

"...the hell was that?" Beelzebub mumbles, looking around in uncertainty. "What's going on?"

Little do the Maiurans know, but the battle is about to enter a new period of death and destruction.

Part 592: The Weakest Executors

The Executors of the Volgrim Empire are all old monsters. That much could be easily ascertained by how powerful their psionics have grown over the eons, as well as the number of psionic disciplines they have mastered over their lives. Among the Executors, not one is a slouch, and each has their own specialization.

However, while all of the Executors might be powerful enough to sunder worlds and cause mass destruction with ease, that does not mean they are equally competent in different situations.

Executor Riley proves to be a great example of this phenomena in action.

Sent to the Western Front to backup Mandy and Levi, Riley arrives intending to help Hope's children cull the Kolvaxians and reduce their numbers. Unfortunately, while her powers are frightening and impressive given her Low Cosmic power, they are not ideal for combating the Plague's swarm.

Riley flickers into existence a hundred meters in the air above the two humans. It takes them several long seconds to even notice her presence. Riley spends that time quickly assessing the Kolvaxian's forces and composition, then right as she is about to start attacking with her unique methods, Mandy glances upward, sensing her presence.

Unaware of how the situation has just changed, Mandy almost starts to question the Executor's arrival. However, she ultimately doesn't, instead opting to inform her brother that Riley has arrived, though she isn't sure what Psion Riley is, having never met her before.

Riley, likewise, doesn't bother wasting any useless words on the humans. She motions with her hands, causing a ghastly blob of green gaseous material to materialize in front of her chest. It balloons from the size of a grapefuit to the size of a beach ball, and then triples in size one last time, becoming twice as tall as Riley's body, and far bigger in total circumference.

This orb of energy releases streams of gas upward. Those streams turn into ghostly figures resembling small, doll-sized copies of Riley herself.

Then, they begin flying downward at terrifying speeds, splitting up and charging at the Kolvaxian hordes without fear of death.

[Beware, mud-dwellers.] Riley finally says. [My Phantasms will not distinguish between friend or foe. If they draw near, take cover and do not touch them. You will die a terrible death if you fail to heed my warning.]

Like before, Levi has not been able to kill the Kolvaxians effectively. Lacking a weapon as formidable as Artoria or Belial's new blood-colored blade, he has had to resort to his raw draconic strength. This has allowed more than 600 Kolvaxians to swarm together, causing the Western Front's situation to become the most dangerous of them all. With more and more Kolvaxians appearing every minute, it is only Mandy's Runes enhancing her brother's killing potential that allowed both of them to last as long as they have.

Thus, when the strange and unnerving Phantasms race downward, Levi is all too happy to get the hell out of their way and retreat.

He and Mandy watch with wide-opened eyes as the tiny ghosts charge into the bodies of the Kolvaxians, causing them to seize up and shudder, momentarily losing their ability to advance. Any Kolvaxians struck by a Phantasm act in the same way a housecat would if they were sprayed in the face with water, flinching and pulling backward reflexively.

Riley frowns. [Damnation. I knew it wouldn't be so easy.]

She watches with an increasingly uglier expression as parts of the Kolvaxian's bodies begin to rot and melt away, the Phantasms eating them from the inside-out, liquefying their innards in a manner that produces a stench most foul.

Unfortunately, while many of the Kolvaxians end up losing an arm or having crucial internal organs melt into goop from the acrid attacks of Riley's Phantasms, their speed of regeneration allows them to outlast any singular Phantasm that attacks them!

The ghosts that enter a given Kolvaxian use up the energy inside their bodies, cause extreme damage, and then fade away within ten to thirty seconds. But once gone, the Kolvaxians rapidly regenerate from their injuries and return to pristine fighting form!

[I hoped my Phantasms would prove effective, but I knew in my heart they would not.] Riley explains to the bewildered humans below. She converses with them in a fraction of a second, using her enhanced meta-cognition to equally speed up their understanding of her words.

[My Phantasms are able to corrode the physical forms of living creatures, melting them into puddles of blood and bile. Unfortunately, the Kolvaxians have such durable bodies and extreme regeneration that merely one Phantasm at a time will not be sufficient to kill them. I will need the two of you to assist me by striking at their bodies when they are weakest. I can at least soften the enemy's defenses enough for your fists and magic to kill them.]

Mandy frowns. "Can't you hit them with multiple Phantasms at once instead?"

[I could.] Riley acknowledges. [But I cannot materialize too many Phantasms at the same time. Fifty is my upper limit, and they will be less effective if multiple of them battle at the same time. Phantasms are equally prone to killing one another as they are their designated enemies.]

"Then we'll do it your way." Levi says, cracking his neck. "Let's see if my fists will be any more effective with you weakening these bastards!"

He jumps into the battle, sending a punch flying at the chest of one of the Kolvaxians that has seized up, unable to move.

Splat!

Levi's fist strikes the Kolvaxian with the strength of a dragon, blasting it apart and causing its head, arms, and legs to scatter in different directions. Unfortunately, with the creature's head still intact, it is not truly dead, but at least regenerating from such a grievous wound will take tens of minutes.

"Sis! Finish them off!" Levi shouts, lunging at another Kolvaxian.

"Right." Mandy says, summoning a piece of parchment with a glowing golden Rune of an arrow inscribed on its front.

"Runic Decree, Hermes' Quiver!"

At once, six arrows formed from golden light materialize above her head, pointing down at her foes. The instant Levi blasts apart a Kolvaxian and its head goes flying, a flash of gold fires at the speed of light, crossing the distance to instantly strike and obliterate the Kolvaxian's skull.

Thanks to Riley's Phantasms, Hope's children gain a much more viable and efficient method of killing the creatures!

Riley's expression remains ugly. Unlike Sartran and Huron, she is incapable of killing the Kolvaxians as quickly or efficiently as them. Having to rely on the contributions of mere mud-dwellers to achieve victory ruffles her feathers in an indescribable manner.

[It's my own fault.] Riley mutters to herself. [I was a Creator before I reached the 8th Level. A single Phantasm was once easily capable of wiping out dozens of these creatures at a time before that idiot Wordsmith fed them the greatest meal of their existence. Now it takes multiple Phantasms just to kill one Kolvaxian. I will need to improve their killing efficiency moving forward or the other Executors will leave me in the dust!]

Naturally, Riley possesses many other methods of slaughtering foes en-masse, but the problem is that she has always acted more as a bully to the weak, focusing her abilities over the years on mass-slaughtering weaklings rather than doing battle against the strongest foes. In the past, if she did have to fight a mighty adversary, she could gang up on them with multiple Phantasms. How could she have predicted that the Kolvaxians would all collectively gain durable bodies on par with Huron?!

If Riley were to fight Huron himself, she would remain confident in standing a good chance of defeating or even killing him. After all, even he would be unable to fight off fifty Phantasms at once.

But if there were hundreds of Huron-clones attacking her from all sides, she would naturally lose. It wouldn't be a fair fight at all!

Thus, she can only grimace with her eyes and fight alongside the pathetic humans, metaphorically swallowing her grievances and using this battle to figure out a good counter for future battles against the enhanced Plague.

As the trio starts whittling the Kolvaxians down, a portal appears in the sky. Demon Deity Kristoff becomes visible, sweeping his gaze around the field as his fellow Deity, Yardrat, allows him to project his power across interstellar distances.

He immediately evaluates the battle situation and exchanges a look with Executor Riley. Her expression turns cold as she realizes the Demon Deity has come to help.

But, unlike with the humans, she doesn't feel too aggrieved. Even with her assistance, the swarm on the Western Front has almost reached a critical mass where the trio's killing speed will require hours of effort to eliminate all the enemies. Kristoff's backup comes at the perfect moment.

Additionally, Kristoff is a Middle Cosmic. His power exceeds Riley's, so she wouldn't feel humiliated if she lost to him in combat.

Such is the mental state of a High Psion.

Kristoff immediately summons powerful spears made of blood. He flings them downward at the speed of sound, causing them to spike through the abdomens and heads of one Kolvaxian after another. Kristoff doesn't merely throw and forget his spears either. Because they are connected to his blood, he is able to control them with a form of hemokinesis, allowing them to spear a Kolvaxian, explode into a bloody mist, and reform into new spears once more!

Like this, Kristoff rapidly and brutally tears through the Kolvaxians, killing them much faster than the combined efforts of Riley and the two humans did before. Even the Executor raises a metaphorical eyebrow at how much Kristoff's killing efficiency has spiked.

[It seems you have been practicing since the battle on Reaver.] Riley says, directing her words to Kristoff in secret. [The difference between your past and present performance is like night and day.]

Kristoff smiles at her.

[I am far from the only Deity who has worked hard to master my new abilities. In light of the threat the Kolvaxians pose us, we have all undertaken extreme pains to pool our collective might. In the future, our feats will frighten you.]

The two of them keep their words secret, not allowing the humans below to converse. For Riley, this is because she doesn't believe mere mud-dwellers deserve to hear from her unless necessary. For Kristoff, it's because there are some things he would prefer his future enemies not know...

Suddenly, from afar, Executor Vi's voice blasts outward, stunning all the allied forces on Maiura with her storm of emotions.

[BACKUP! I NEED BACKUP!!]

Riley's heart jumps in her chest. She immediately diverts her attention from the Western Front to the Eastern Front, on the opposite side of Mount Adams.

Without giving a damn about the humans below, Riley kicks her feet against the empty sky and launches herself like a beam of light, disappearing far faster than any mortal's eyes could follow. By the time Mandy and Levi recover from Executor Vi's telepathic scream, Riley has already left them alone with Demon Deity Kristoff.

"Don't be alarmed." Kristoff says. "Executor Riley had to leave. The true Threat has emerged. It will require the efforts of all the Executors to stop."

Levi grimaces as half a dozen Kolvaxians attack him from multiple directions.

"Dammit, she really left us in the lurch."

* * *

Some time earlier.

On the Eastern Front, humanity was never able to put any Champions in place. Henry, Belial, Levi, and even Archangel Uriel were all diverted to the other battlefields, causing the buildup of Kolvaxians in the Eastern Front to become utterly overwhelming. Luckily, Hans Wagner foresaw the collapse coming.

At first, only a huge army of Legionnaires and ordinary troopers fought there. In terms of individual combat assets, the Eastern Front surpassed the other Fronts a thousand to one! Henry and Ashley only fought alongside a few dozen Legionnaires, Hope only fought alongside a handful of Warframes and later Belial and Uriel, and Levi and Mandy fought completely alone.

But on the Eastern Front, the vast majority of humanity's 'ordinary' military assets worked together to push back the horde for as long as they possibly could.

Temporal Grenades flew through the air and exploded, trapping five to ten Kolvaxians at a time inside temporary time-prisons, freezing them in place and creating solid barriers that would trap any other Kolvaxians if they stepped inside.

Later, at the moment when around ten Warframes arrived to back up Hope, more than fifty showed up at the Eastern Front, with Hans directing them to the frontlines where the ordinary troopers needed the most help.

Finally, the troopers no longer had to rely on killing the Kolvaxians via thousands of superficial wounds. Once five Armads showed up, they begin to cut down the monsters one after the other, finally carving a path of destruction through them. Combined with an even greater number of Cherubs and several Ballbusters for backup, these three basic but powerful mech types allow humanity to finally gain a foothold and push back the Kolvaxians.

But that was only until the first Psiovaxian appeared. At that point, it began to wreak havoc among the norms, killing tens of men and women in seconds, waving its hands to slaughter them like fish in a bucket.

The moment the Psiovaxians appeared, the Executors took notice. They jumped to the different battlefields to help the humans fortify their positions, and that is how Executor Vi came to arrive at the Eastern Front.

After arriving and killing the Psiovaxian with a bit of effort, Vi pauses to look around. Among the High Psions, she is the least experienced in warfare among all of them. She has not fought on the frontlines much, and the few times she did were emergencies where all Executors were needed on deck. Traditionally, she has always remained stationed on Volgarius where her abilities could be best displayed.

While no Executor is truly weak, and all of them could take out a 7th Level Psion with relative ease, Vi is undoubtedly the weakest one among her fellow high rankers. Her abilities are not specialized for combat. She is the Volgrim Empire's premiere Psyker, a master of mental control, telepathy, and empathic manipulation. She has always focused her efforts on psychological warfare and manipulation of the masses, going to great length to surveil all of Volgarius and keep an eye on any possible dissidents who might arise.

Of course, Vi does possess one extremely formidable combat ability, and that is her mastery of Primal Psionics. For every ten Psions, seven of them will have some level of unique mastery over this flexible style of telekinetic power. Primal Psionics are the purest expression of Psionic power, and as such, no Psion above the 6th Level will forgo its huge benefits.

But among every Psion, there are still variations. Some of them only train their Primal Psionics to a barely passable level, allowing them to create crude barriers of telekinesis, or fly around at passable speeds. Those who are more dedicated will come up with new and unique methods of expressing their Psionics, such as Executor Huron, who trained for tens of millennia to forge his body into an unbreakable war machine, and his Primal Psionics into a material harder than exosteel. In Huron's hands, his raw telekinetic abilities are an expression of his pursuit of physical power to the extreme.

Vi is similar in that her Primal Psionics also reflect her mental focus. As a Psyker who focuses on precise control over others, and delving deep into their minds with her incredible telepathic ability, her Primal Psionics take the form of 'extreme precision.' She can mold her telekinesis into countless shapes, and can condense it into small and even microscopic 'bullets', firing them with unbelievable accuracy and power.

If Huron is a hammer, Vi is a scalpel. She reduces collateral damage to an absolute minimum, and does so proudly.

From on high above the humans, Vi crosses her arms, looking down at the horde of Plagueborn with a vague expression of disgust.

[No matter how many times I look at them, the Kolvaxians are simply hideous.] She muses to herself. [Once individuals, now nothing more than faceless monsters controlled by a hivemind. Walking tragedies that need to be put out of their misery.]

Without moving her body, Vi instantly condenses a hundred pellets out of raw telekinetic energy. She condenses and hardens them to the extreme, takes aim, and fires them into the horde below, perfectly targeting the hearts, heads, and torsos of multiple monsters in the front.

BOOM BOOM BOOM!!

Her pellets strike the creatures at a fraction of the speed of light, instantly smiting them on the spot and punching their bodies backward, down into the planet's soil.

But Vi frowns.

Of the thirty Kolvaxians she struck, only two perished. The others suffered light to heavy wounds, but quickly regenerated once swallowed by the planet's soil around them.

[Accursed fiends. To think the foolish humans gave such a boon to our enemies! If it weren't for the Wordsmith, the Kolvaxians would have remained easy to slaughter en-masse, but now even I struggle to kill a handful at a time. Their new strength is unbelievable!]

Vi launches another barrage at a different group of Kolvaxians. She kills three of them and badly injures another twenty, but once again the survivors dive underground, regenerate their wounds, and swim back up to the surface.

Vi is, without a doubt, able to kill the Kolvaxians much more easily than the humans below her. But compared to her fellow Executors, and even a few individuals like Henry and Belial, her efficiency isn't impressive at all. Every single one of Huron's punches or Sartran's lightning attacks causes terrible destruction among the Kolvaxian ranks, but Vi's wide-area slaughtering is several steps below theirs.

Naturally, Vi realizes this fact immediately. If she had a mouth, she'd probably spit angrily to vent her frustration.

Luckily, even without Vi helping them, the human troopers have long grown used to fighting the Kolvaxians. Vi returns to watching impassively, waiting for future Psiovaxians to appear, while scanning the scene below her.

Men and women fight for their lives. The weak mud-dwellers throw a Temporal Grenade at the biggest batches of Kolvaxians once in a while to slow their advance, while the Armads and Ballbusters whittle down their foes one by one. Cherubs dive like birds to execute Kolvaxians with decapitation strikes before flitting back up into the air. The more Kolvaxians these ordinary troopers kill, the more adept they become at taking out the ones afterward.

Vi's expression softens.

[Mud-dwellers are weak, but tenacious. These humans, especially.]

In her heart, she can't help but admire them. While some of the more proficient Legionnaires do possess a bit of metaphysical power, by and by large the majority of human troops are ordinary mortals with only slightly stronger than average bodies. Even a 2nd Level Psion would easily crush them if they were to come to blows.

But the humans' teamwork, their innovative ideas on warfare, and their tenacity allows them to adapt to changing circumstances and find better and more efficient killing methods against their foes.

[If I sent a thousand 5th Level Psions to battle Executor Huron, those disciples would surely perish within the hour. But I wonder if the humans would have a chance of success? Mmm. Probably not. After all, a ruthless and intelligent Psion like Huron is not comparable to these mindless bipedal beasts. The Kolvaxians lack mental acuity and-]

BOOM!!

The ground abruptly blasts open behind the Eastern Kolvaxians, startling Vi out of her thoughts. She instantly snaps her attention to the disturbance, and her heart freezes to ice.

Two Psiovaxians emerge from the soil, racing toward her at a speed no mortal's eyes could hope to follow, and which Vi's enhanced cognition can only give her a bit of time to react.

[The Kolvaxxed Executors!] Vi screams in her mind. [Huron and Sartran! They're here!]

The two ambushers rush at Vi, and she quickly beats a hasty retreat while firing her psionic pellets at them to try and knock them off-course. Unfortunately, Huron's doppelganger tanks the hits without flinching while Sartran conjures a storm of lightning to fire at her fleeing back.

Crackle! CRACK!!

The lightning explodes against Vi's hastily prepared psionic shield, making her scream in pain inside her mind.

The moment she regains her breath, she continues to flee while projecting her voice outward across the entire planet.

[BACKUP! I NEED BACKUP!!]

This raw projection of her telepathic power immediately brainlocks every Sentient below a certain level of power on Maiura. All the humans below her, champions like Henry and Belial, everyone but her fellow Executors and the ordinary Kolvaxians become stunlocked for a few seconds as their brains nearly burst from the power in her voice.

Unfortunately, even as Vi immediately senses the rapid approach of her fellow Executors, she also realizes that her telepathic powers are useless against the enhanced Kolvaxians. The Kolvaxxed Executors don't flinch, informing her that her tools in this next battle will be painfully inadequate.

[Why did they have to choose ME?!] Vi complains in her heart.

The question naturally has an answer. The Kolvaxxed Executors aren't here to play games. They fully intend to add another Executor to their ranks.

And, most frighteningly, the third and final one is still nowhere to be seen.

Executor Nufaris's doppelganger could strike from anywhere at any time, and so it becomes a hidden threat lurking, making Vi more fearful. She might be a lauded High Psion, but even she fears falling into the clutches of the Kolvaxians.

[Hurry! Hurry!] Vi says. [Don't let them devour me!]

Part 593: Divinator Fellrun

At the start of the Maiuran War, the humans felt deep fear. They knew their enemy was terrifying, but at the same time, they believed they had made advances big enough to allow them to accomplish what no Volgrim world had done before.

When the Kolvaxians ripped across Maiura, that fear intensified, but then it eventually settled back down. A hundred thousand civilians and soldiers died, but eventually the rest evacuated, leaving only the bunch remaining inside Fort Adams' confines. With no more weaklings to pick off, humanity's losses steeply fell, and their soldiers started pushing back.

Over the course of the next two hours, the humans began killing the Kolvaxians en-masse.

It was too easy.

Sure, only their Champions could effectively kill the creatures at first, but then the Warframes arrived and began laying down suppressive fire that could match those Champions. And with that, the soldiers' confidence surged!

They could win this war. Even if it took longer than they originally expected, they would kill all the Kolvaxians and take their planet back.

That victorious feeling did not last.

The Kolvaxians had only initiated the war with their weakest, slowest, dumbest soldiers.

The worst had yet to arrive.

* * *

Kolvaxor Sartran and Kolvaxor Huron surround Executor Riley on her right and left. She ducks, dodges, and weaves, trying to attack them with compressed Psionic Bullets, but as expected, her attacks do absolutely nothing to Huron and barely manage to make Sartran flinch.

Her expression chills. [The Kolvaxors are beyond our projections! All Executors, join me!]

Within two seconds, Executors Sartran, Huron, Vi, and Divinator Fellrun all flicker into position, surrounding the Kolvaxors from all four sides, forming a second ring around Riley at the center.

[False 'me', your time to die has arrived!] Huron declares, his eyes flashing with ambition. He pounces at his Kolvax-clone and hurls a punch at it capable of obliterating mountains.

But before his strike can meet its mark, the Kolvaxor instantly spins around and sends a kick flying that bats aside Huron's arm and slams into his shoulder, blasting him into the distance and firing him like a cannonball.

Huron screams in shock as his body careens helplessly, crashing into a distant mountain peak until he embeds half a mile into its core.

That abrupt reversal of his attack sends a pang of fear through the minds of the other Executors.

[Impossible! Huron has always been able to overpower his doppelganger!] Executor Sartran exclaims in shock.

[That was before. This is now!] Riley retorts. [Things are not as they were! The body enhancement given by the human's comrade applied to all the Kolvaxians, including Huron's copy. That means it now occupies a body even more invincible than Huron himself!]

The other Executors feel a surge of fear jolt their minds. How can they not, given this horrifying revelation?

In the past, if they fought a Kolvaxor, they could be assured they were fighting an inferior version of themselves. Sartran's Kolvax-clone would wipe the floor with any 7th-Level Psion, but with his inferior display of Psionics, he would have no chance against the original Sartran.

But now, his doppelganger's body is on par with Huron, and Huron's clone is two times stronger than his original self! That means they aren't fighting inferior clones anymore, but unique monsters with bodies that will not be killable in a short period of time!

Huron himself erupts from the mountain, tearing out of its confines while entirely uninjured. He flickers across the sky and returns to his Kolvax-copy with a fist raised, and the copy meets his punch with a fist of its own. The two of them erupt into battle, and this time it is Huron who has to proactively dodge and change up his fighting style so that he can outmaneuver his slightly dumber doppelganger.

[Vi, Riley! Help Huron!] Sartran himself says. [Fellrun and I will tackle my copy.]

The two female Executors nod. They jump away, hoping to assist Huron in at least pinning down his insanely powerful copy while only leaving two Executors to handle Sartran's clone.

Strangely, Kolvaxor Sartran appears at ease, watching silently with its arms crossed as the three Executors battle its lone comrade. Sartran himself growls angrily at his clone, narrowing his eyes as he meets its faceless gaze.

[I've killed you a thousand times, fiend.] Sartran hisses. [Even if your body is stronger, your powers are inferior! You're nothing compared to me!]

The Kolvaxor doesn't respond. It radiates a smug sense of superiority, making it seem as though Sartran's words were nothing more than childish taunts.

Abruptly it vanishes and teleports right in front of Divinator Fellrun, conjuring a powerful orb of lightning in its right hand and a hyper-condensed blob of water in its left.

Just as it snaps its hand forward to attack Fellrun, the Divinator dodges nimbly, predicting the Kolvaxor's movement with his precognitive abilities. It uses water to enhance its lightning's conductive effects, but the attack fires off into the distance, sailing into the horizon uselessly.

CRACKLE!

Sartran himself blasts his clone with a much faster bolt of 8th Level lightning, slightly scarring its skin and knocking it away, but otherwise leaving it unharmed.

His expression dims.

Any time the two of them fought in the past, Sartran would have crushed his clone with ease. But now, his clone's 7th Level lightning hurts him about as little as his 8th Level lightning hurts the Kolvaxor. His strengthened abilities are offset by the Kolvaxor's greatly enhanced body, and vice-versa.

The difference is, his clone can afford to fight from afar, or draw in and battle up close. Sartran is not nearly as adept in melee combat, so he absolutely must keep his distance or he'll die before he has a chance to react!

Perhaps sensing this, Kolvaxor Sartran lunges at its Executor-self, summoning a sword made of lightning to slash at him.

But then, Divinator Fellrun appears between the two, a smug look twinkling in his eyes.

[You'll have to get through me first, fiend.]

Fellrun lightly waves his hand. Instantly, a twelve-foot long spear materializes in his grasp, one which radiates an aura of exotic power. This highly durable weapon is crafted from none other than Living Moldanium, the strongest material possessed by the Volgrim Empire!

He spins the spear around his body, instantly making it burst with an oppressive speed and momentum beyond what any mortal could comprehend, and then he snaps the tip of the spear at Kolvaxor Sartran's body.

THUNK!

It impacts the Kolvaxor like a train crashing into a car. The Kolvaxor proves unable to dodge Fellrun's attack and goes flying into the distance, smashing into the planet's surface and skipping across the soil like a rock across a pond's surface.

None of the Executors are truly weak. And among them, Fellrun is considered the third-strongest. His body might not be the most powerful, and his control over Psionics is certainly inferior to the likes of Sartran, Riley, and Nufaris, but he has a merit none of the others do.

Fellrun is a battle maniac!

In 700,000 years, he has never taken a vacation. He has always trained, day in and day out, mastering every weapon he can get his hands on.

He has traveled from world to world, learning from every species in the Milky Way, and even species beyond, all in order to master their fighting forms.

If Buddha is known as the Combat God of Humanity, then Fellrun is the Combat God of the Volgrim. He can use any fighting style, switching between them with fluidic grace. He can wield any weapon, be it mundane or technological.

And that is hardly the full extent of his powers.

Fellrun casually turns his head to the side. His body bends at the exact moment Kolvaxor Sartran reappears and slashes his electric sword at him. Fellrun evades the attack an instant before it actually occurs, weaponizing another one of his formidable and unique talents, an ability that presently makes him the only non-Executor among his fellow 8th Level Psions.

Precognition!

Fellrun does not need to deliberately peer into the future. At all times, he possesses an active sense of future events a few seconds in advance. He can peer into multiple future realities, in a manner not dissimilar to Confessor Vulpanix. Unlike her, he does not use this power to summon copies of himself from multiple possible realities, but instead to divine the potential attack vectors of his enemies.

This multiplies his combat strength!

Kolvaxor Sartran's attack whiffs harmlessly to Fellrun's side. The Divinator revolves his spear around his body and delivers a brutal blow with the heavy butt-end of it to Sartran's head, sending the monster reeling to the side.

Executor Sartran himself ends up watching, metaphorically slack-jawed, as his senior easily bests this repulsive clone single-handedly!

Among the six 8th Level Psions, there is a commonly understood hierarchy of power.

Executor Vi, the weakest, 750,000 years old.

Executor Riley, the second weakest, 645,000 years old.

Executor Sartran, the third weakest, 800,000 years old.

Divinator Fellrun, the third strongest, 1,000,000 years old.

Executor Huron, the second strongest, 750,000 years old.

And finally...

Executor Nufaris, the strongest of them all, just 150,000 years old.

Before the Kolvaxians appeared, before the Energy Wars on Earth, before Nufaris arrived on the scene, these rankings were a little different.

Fellrun was considered the strongest Executor!

Huron was barely considered beneath him.

Naturally, these rankings changed over time. Vi and Riley might be considered the weakest, but they were still planet-crushers in their own right if the need was great enough. Vi could defeat Fellrun in combat under the right circumstances.

But before mass-slaughter and planetary annihilation of weak but infinitely numerous Kolvaxians became the most important metric for strength, solo combat skills were the most important measure for the Executors.

And not one of the 8th Level Psions could hold a candle to Divinator Fellrun.

Even today, that statement still holds true.

Kolvaxor Sartran tries, again and again, to evade Fellrun, to bypass him, to attack from a tricky angle, and to do anything it can to reach the much weaker and easier to kill Executor Sartran hiding behind his superior.

But unfortunately, before the Volgrim's God of Combat, no trick is enough to evade him.

[Weak. Too weak.] Fellrun sneers, ducking to avoid another blast of electricity, then stabbing his spear into the Kolvaxor's belly. He cuts open a shallow wound, but it doesn't go deep enough to cause a grievous injury.

Fellrun seemingly toys with the monster, beating and battering it with the ease of a trained soldier smacking around a child. Each attack jars the Kolvaxor's senses, making its vision tremble when the heavy end of the spear blasts the side of its head and rattles its brain, or when Fellrun shoves the tip into the spot where its eyes should be and splits its skull.

But it just doesn't matter.

Fellrun can't kill the creature!

Ordinary Kolvaxians would end up cut down by the Divinator like wheat by the chaff. But these superior Kolvaxors have greatly enhanced combat capabilities as a result of their 7th Level Psionic abilities. They are much hardier and can deflect or block blows that would kill their weaker siblings.

[Bah!] Fellrun growls. [It's like bashing a hunk of metal from left to right! This creature is so hard to kill, yet utterly non-threatening!]

Suddenly, his eyes flicker. Fellrun dodges to the side, bending his body in an odd manner right as Kolvaxor Huron appears and punches the spot where he levitated only an instant before. Fellrun smashes his spear into Huron's head, but the Kolvaxor barely even twitches from the impact.

Fellrun senses a grave threat to his life. He activates his psionic power, doubling the flow of time around his body-space, and then immediately flickers away, evading the next attack by Kolvaxor Sartran.

The Divinator is not only a god of combat and a prophet of the immediate future, but also an accomplished Temporal Manipulator!

His ability to alter the flow of time at the highest levels is not something even Founder Dosena can achieve; an accomplishment belonging entirely to himself. He is hundreds of thousands of years older than some of the other Executors, and he has put those millennia to good use by mastering many different branches of Psionics.

[Apologies!] Executor Vi exclaims. [Huron's Kolvax-clone is too hard to pin-down! We can't hurt it at all!]

[At all?] Fellrun asks, troubled. The two Kolvaxors attack him from the left and right, alternating between blasts of lightning and planet-busting punches and kicks while he gracefully dodges and predicts their attacks.

Unfortunately, while Fellrun's agility and combat senses are leagues beyond his opponents, his endurance is not. His body is fairly strong, more so than most of the other Executors, but still far weaker than Huron's. If one of the Kolvaxors lands a decisive blow, Fellrun will suffer a terrible and grievous injury that might even kill him on the spot! Especially Kolvaxor Huron, whose strength is far beyond the original body.

[Not even a little!] Executor Huron roars, feeling aggrieved in his heart. [Those stupid mud-dwellers! I've spent so many cycles pursuing an indestructible body but the fools HANDED it to my Kolvax-clone! This is a grievance I will never forgive!]

Executor Riley summons phantasms to attack Huron's clone. The Kolvaxor completely ignores the fetid phantoms, even when they travel inside the monster's body and wreak havoc. It turns out her abilities can barely even injure the Kolvaxor's internal organs, and they can't do anything to its empowered bones, muscles, and skin!

Vi's compressed Psionic Bullets ricochet harmlessly off Kolvaxor Huron's body. No matter how much she compresses, sharpens, or hardens her bullets before firing, she ends up feeling as if she were flinging plastic pellets at a wall of ten-foot-thick steel.

[What insanity!] Riley cries. [This monster is strong! Way too strong!]

[We can't defeat it, only slow it down or trap it.] Vi analyzes. [Perhaps if Founder Dosena were here, she might…]

[The Second Founder must protect the homeworld.] Sartran counters. [There are five of us and only two Kolvaxors. We can still win!]

Sartran's words fall on deaf minds. By now, even the mighty Huron has begun to believe they cannot defeat the Kolvaxors. Even if they somehow, miraculously, manage to kill the two of them, the Kolvaxors will simply regenerate and reappear in the future!

Without any recourse to take but battling to the death, the five Executors attack the pair of Kolvaxors with a vicious fury.

Ten minutes pass, then a full hour.

In the skies above the human forces, the storm of cosmic-level attacks causes tens of shockwaves to radiate outward, deafening anyone within earshot and often causing internal injuries to the ordinary humans fighting on the Eastern Front. Even their T-REX suits don't shield them from the mere after-effects of the Executor's battle.

Lightning crackles. Fists smash against one another. A spear ignites the air as it heats up due to the friction of whirling around Fellrun's body.

The Executors battle for their lives, sometimes trying to pin Kolvaxor Huron down, other times trying to kill Kolvaxor Sartran.

Eventually, Fellrun takes a big risk. He splits off from the other four and directly battles Kolvaxor Huron while shouting to his comrades, [Kill Kolvaxor Sartran! No matter what! Kill it! I will hold off this one for as long as I can!]

Fellrun doesn't wait for a response. He initiates a brutal series of speedy attacks, spinning his lance around his body with ever increasing speed and ferocity. Every second, he strikes one of Kolvaxor Huron's limbs, his head, his chest, and even his back three to five times. He becomes a living hurricane as he greatly overpowers Huron's brute strength with speed and technique!

At the same time, Executors Vi, Riley, and Huron pin down Kolvaxor Sartran. The Kolvaxian tries repeatedly to break free of the encirclement, but Huron batters him around while Vi pins him in place with her Psionic Bullets, dealing light to moderate damage but mainly focusing on crippling his movements. Riley ends up dealing the most damage with her phantasms, while Sartran himself stays back and begins to charge up an incredibly powerful orb of psionic lightning.

Several seconds pass, and then a full minute. Perhaps having learned a minor trick from Beelzebub, Sartran condenses the power of his lightning orb as much as possible, continuously pumping his psionic power into the orb while forcing its increasingly explosive energy to remain contained in the smallest space possible.

Kzzaaat! Kzzzzaat!!

High pitched screams erupt continuously from the lightning orb. It increases its revolution speed, becoming hotter and hotter as more furious energies spiral inside its core.

Finally, Sartran lunges at his Kolvax clone. A single command from him causes the other three Executors to lash out and grab the Kolvaxor, holding it down so it can't escape the inevitable.

Right as Sartran starts to press the thermonuclear lightning orb into his doppelganger's chest...

Foop!

It vanishes!

[No!] Sartran screams, his eyes shooting open in horror.

BOOOOM!!!

The orb explodes with all its expected power, blasting the four Executors away and sending them hurtling in four different directions.

Thousands of bolts of lightning fire in every direction at random. Many of them crash into Mount Adams, striking the Wordsmithium walls and instantly killing the majority of guards stationed along the top of those walls. Plenty of other bolts fire at the ground a mile below, killing hundreds of human troopers, blowing apart Warframes, and sending thunderous explosions outward wherever the rest of the bolts strike.

In an instant, Sartran's attack kills more than thirty thousand humans and monsters, badly cripples tens of thousands more, and leaves just as many reeling on the ground, stunned or unconscious.

Sartran himself coughs as blood flows from burns all over his body. The sheer aftermath of the attack would have been fine if it had detonated inside the body of such a formidable Kolvaxor, but instead, it detonated in the open air, causing him horrific injuries.

[No... how... how could it...?] Sartran wonders, his head reeling.

His blurry vision clear up after a few moments. He spots Executor Huron locked in deadly combat with two foes, and those two enemies send a chill down Sartran's spine.

As before, Divinator Fellrun battles Kolvaxor Huron. But now, Executor Huron battles Kolvaxor Sartran...

...and Kolvaxor Nufaris.

The final of the Kolvaxor trio reveals itself, its faceless head providing no clue as to the emotions it might be feeling, if it indeed experiences any at all.

[Dammit!] Executor Sartran exclaims, glancing around to see that Executors Vi and Riley managed to survive the explosion in better condition than him. [That tricky Nufaris-clone! It teleported my copy away right before I could land my attack! BASTARD!]

As angry and aggrieved as Sartran feels, a deeper sense of fear inevitably swallows his heart.

In the past, these three Kolvaxors could barely amount to two Executors when it came to their combat potential.

But now, each Kolvaxor is worth two Executors on their own. They not only possess a formidable arsenal of Psionic powers, but all of them have bodies on par with or beyond Executor Huron.

The Kolvaxors are not easy to defeat anymore. In fact, they are more difficult than the Executors themselves!

One on one, not a single Executor believes they can reliably defeat or kill their doppelgangers after Artoria's bodily empowerment occurred.

[The five of us are outmatched.] Sartran thinks. [We will need Executor Nufaris's help to level the playing field. Even then, the Plague only needs to take down one of us to win completely. Once they have a fourth Executor's body to play with, we'll never win a battle again!]

Sartran levitates off the ground. He transmits a command to his subordinate.

[Creator Demila. Inform the humans that they MUST evacuate Maiura. This world is lost. We cannot hold back the enemies for long.]

Demila's reply is brief but succinct.

[I contemplate, and I comprehend.]

Demila, still levitating above Mount Adams by herself, smiles with eyes full of malice and ill-intent.

The finale has arrived.

Part 594: The Kolvaxian Conspiracy

Across all of the four battlefields, the humans continue to fight with all their hearts. The Eastern battlefield suffers terrible losses as a result of the Executor's battle in the skies, and the remaining humans rapidly crumble under the pressure of the remnant Cosmic shockwaves slamming into their bodies and psychic attacks that jar their minds. Before long, everyone dies, and the Kolvaxians swarm toward Mount Adams.

[Attention all humans and human allies.] Creator Demila says, her voice cutting through the fog of battle and piercing into the minds of the humans, demons, monsters, and even the few remnant angels. [Maiura is lost. The Executor Plaguehosts are too powerful. You must flee! Begin immediately retreating to safety!]

Inside Fort Adams, behind the increasingly fragile safety of their Wordsmithium walls, only twenty thousand soldiers remain. Among them are humans and monsters, but zero demons. Demila alone levitates above the city, keeping an eye out for any Psiovaxians that might take to the skies and threaten the humans within.

Her eyes hide a deep secret, but her appearance maintains the facade of a Volgrim protector, assigned to assist the humans to the best of her ability.

Not long after her declaration, the ground beneath Fort Adams begins to rumble. Distant booms reverberate half a kilometer beneath the feet of the humans, rapidly increasing in frequency as the ordinary Kolvaxians arrive and begin pounding on the Wordsmithium barrier beneath the people's feet. The dirt soil under their feet trembles and cracks from the mere aftershocks of those horrifying impacts, swelling the humans' minds with a sense of dread.

Many of the soldiers start to twitch. Even if they are professional killers, they have watched live feeds from their comrades outside the walls, men and women who are now dead and turned into the very monsters attacking them from the planet's depths. None of them can remain emotionless and stoic in the face of such a terrifying threat.

Neil Adams grimaces. He hesitates for a long minute, listening as the volume of the thrumming within the depths grows louder and louder.

Finally, he taps the side of his T-REX helmet.

"Attention all troopers. Creator Demila is right. We must evacuate. I will have Hope retreat from the Northern Front and begin teleporting people back into the Labyrinth. Everyone else, return through the Warpgate now!"

Quiet sighs of relief go up among the troopers, but many men and women still silently lament the fact they have to give up Maiura.

This was supposed to be their new homeworld!

Maiura was going to become the birthplace of a superior humanity, one unburdened by love of foul demons or other wretched creatures!

But now, it has fallen.

After spending many years quietly building lives on Maiura, the longest-lived residents feel a deep sense of loss. Many of the people who arrived are recent immigrants, only coming here after the Great Debate. But a sizable portion are not, and it is those who had children and started to live fulfilling lives who feel this loss the deepest.

Neil Adams is no different.

For him, Maiura represented his political ambitions. He and Hope will likely be able to build up another world, but at what cost? How long will it last? Will the Plague show up there, too?

Neil's eyes flicker with hatred. He hates the Kolvaxians, but secretly he feels these creatures are not acting naturally. While he lacks evidence for his hypothesis, some aspects of the Plague's attack simply never added up.

Why did it cease all battles on all other worlds in the Milky Way?

Why did it beeline straight to Maiura and attack them?

"Artoria...?" Neil mutters out loud, where no-one can hear him.

The moment the Black Hole Construct was taken by the Plague, that's when everything changed. Could her personality have somehow infected the Plague? Could her memories be special enough to guide the Plague to Maiura?

Neil isn't certain, and he doesn't have time to think about it now.

But once the situation cools off, he secretly vows to himself that he will investigate the matter.

* * *

Hope Hiro jumps into the air. He grimaces as a pair of Psiovaxians attack him on the right and left, these powerful creatures each both standing at the 6th Level of the Volgrim, possessing strength on par with 5th Level Psions.

He wields Excalibur in both hands, dashing between them with the swiftness of a fly dodging a flyswatter. The Psiovaxians silently pursue him, with one of them conjuring flame chains to snap at and ensnare him, while the other one fires poisoned needles made out of condensed Psionic power.

Hope dodges the needles whenever they fly at him, shuddering when the needles rip through rock and stone or embed deeply into the armor of the Warframes below him. Just when Hope isn't sure how to handle these two creatures in the fastest way possible, Uriel joins him and begins attacking with a furious salvo. Possessed by the spirit of her brother Gabriel, she wields a greatsword that can hammer and slash effectively enough to pressure one of the Psiovaxians. With her help, Hope cuts one of them down, then he and his makeshift ally kill the other.

Gabriel speaks afterward. "Hope. Neil called for a retreat. Thou must teleport the remaining combatants off Maiura. Verily, I shalt hold back the enemies here. I will draw their focus."

Hope nods. "Alright. It's time we faced reality. Maiura is lost! I can't believe I'm saying it, but this situation isn't salvageable, and it's only getting worse."

After affirming Neil's decision, Hope flies into the sky, leaving the Archangel behind.

Gabriel gives up control of Uriel's mind, allowing the Archangel of Retribution to regain control of her body. At the same time, the other Archangels appear beside their sister with grim expressions of their faces.

Raphael speaks first. "This battle is not what it seems, siblings. There is a greater force at play here."

"The Kolvaxians art not as simple as they appear." Michael affirms. "They act as mindless beasts, but they always hold back until the humans gain an advantage. Then they reveal another card from their sleeves."

"Every time we think we've made a breakthrough, the Kolvaxians reveal another dimension of their abilities." Uriel says coldly. "I believeth even now they hath not shown the full extent of their power."

Uriel splits apart the greatsword Gabriel was using, causing it to revert into her signature twin-spears. Then she alters the appearance of the Gae Bolg, changing it into a single longsword before tossing it to her brother Michael.

Like this, Michael gains a formidable weapon that may help him in combating the Plague.

"Remember, our goal now art not to kill these beasts, but merely distract them." Gabriel says. "Keep thy wits about thee, and take care to draw the fiends' attention!"

After speaking, the Archangels rejoin the battle, the four of them working together to assist Hope as he swiftly starts teleporting soldiers away from the Northern front. Since all of them are only inside the Warframes, it doesn't take him long.

Hope glances at Belial. He hesitates for a moment, then starts to fly toward the Western Front to retrieve his children. Just as Hope is about to leave, Belial suddenly disappears, teleported away.

Hope's expression turns ugly.

Jason! He's still watching, after all.

Secretly, Hope was thinking of leaving Belial here. With the Warframes gone, there would be no chance of her surviving. But since Jason teleported her away, that destroys Hope's plan.

Always ready to protect his vicious demon friends. Hope thinks. I told you to stay out of Maiura's business! Damn you, Jason!

Hope departs, leaving Uriel and her brothers behind. Immediately the swarm charges at the angels, threatening to put them down. But luckily, the Archangels simply take to the air, leaving their grounded enemies without a prayer of catching them.

Naturally, with their Cosmic-level bodies, the Kolvaxians are still able to leap into the air hundreds of feet high. But the moment they pounce, the Archangels dash to the sides, flying around with flaps of their wings to nimbly and agilely dodge their comparatively clumsy enemies.

"Come, test me if thou dost dare!" Uriel challenges. "I am not afraid of thee!"

* * *

Hope quickly arrives at his children's side, finding Mandy and Levi fighting with the assistance of Demon Deity Kristoff above. Kristoff's blood spears skewer and slaughter the Kolvaxians like before, but with noticeably higher difficulty than they did before. Without Executor Riley to weaken the Kolvaxians, his spears often end up breaking bones and destroying internal organs, but those injuries regenerate before the Kolvaxians die.

"Alright, kids!" Hope shouts. "We're leaving! RETURN! RETURN!"

Mandy and Levi barely get a second to process Hope's words before they abruptly disappear and return to the Hall of Heroes.

Demon Deity Kristoff glances at Hope. He frowns.

"What are you doing? The Kolvaxians will fall upon Mount Adams within a minute."

"A minute is all we need to evacuate." Hope retorts. "Things happen fast when I'm involved."

Hope doesn't stick around to hear Kristoff's retort. Instead, he jumps into the air and races away, this time heading to the Southern Front to rescue the still rather-large army of humans fighting alongside Henry, Ashley, and Beelzebub. Unfortunately, the Eastern Front has entirely collapsed, with no survivors left...

* * *

Boom!

Boom!

The reverberations beneath Fort Adams grow louder and louder. Every second, the intensity ramps up, but still, the Wordsmithium barrier holds without showing the slightest dent. Even with half a kilometer of soil separating the Wordsmithium from the feet of the soldiers, they can still feel the ground vibrating constantly.

Eventually, Kolvaxians begin rapidly scaling the walls of the fortress, incentivising the humans inside to move faster as they race through the Warpgate. Creator Demila summons hundreds of simple orb-shaped psionic constructs to man the walls, blasting the Kolvaxians back down into the valley below before they can make it inside.

"Come on people, pick up the pace! Let's move, move, MOVE!" General Chadwick shouts, spinning his arm in the direction of the Warpgate. "You too, Commander! Let's get the hell out of here!"

"I'll leave once everyone else is gone." Neil retorts. "It won't do for me to be among the first to evacuate."

"With all due respect, sir, that's inadvisable. You're our most important asset aside from Hope himself." Chadwick argues.

"Well, as long as I'm in charge, I will- hmm?"

Neil pauses. He frowns as a 'humming' resonates in the air, causing his bones to subtly vibrate.

"What is that noise?" Neil asks, right before all hell breaks loose.

* * *

"It is time, sister." Michael says. "Let us leave!"

The Archangels continue dodging the Kolvaxians below as they leap into the air, but each time, the Kolvaxians hurtle away wildly, completely missing their agile enemies.

Hardly has a minute passed after the Wordsmith's departure when a strange vibration rumbles the air. Uriel's expression changes as she senses something shift on the battlefield.

"What is this feeling? What's happening?" Uriel wonders out loud.

All of a sudden, the Kolvaxians stop frenzying. They cease leaping into the sky, and stop in place, looking up at Uriel with their faceless gazes.

The Archangel of Retribution feels a cold chill go down her spine. Seeing her enemies no longer leaping up at her like rabid dogs, she senses an eerie, alien intelligence hidden within their changed postures.

"What... what is this...?" Uriel whispers.

Michael's expression turns solemn.

"...RUN!"

He grabs his sister, then flies away. Raphael and Gabriel follow behind them, but as they depart, Uriel shoots a glance over her shoulder, looking backward at the silent and unmoving swarm.

All at once, every single Kolvaxian begins to levitate off the ground.

Uriel's skin turns to ice.

"Levit... levitation... they art... PSIONS?!"

An instant later, the swarm of five hundred Kolvaxians takes to the air, no longer moving with the clumsiness of mindless monsters, but with the cold, precise minds of alien hunters.

A swarm of Psiovaxians charges after Uriel and her brothers, making all of them feel terror in their hearts.

"They're Psions!" Gabriel roars. "All of them! We were fooled!"

At the same time, across Maiura's multiple battlefronts, seemingly ordinary Kolvaxians rise up, taking to the skies as they race toward Mount Adams' peak. On the Southern Front, Hope and his allies come under attack by hundreds of Psiovaxians as they also reveal the truth of their nature.

"Help! Help us- AAAAHH!!"

A Legionnaire screams pitifully as his body is blasted to pieces by a psionic force exceeding what even a Demon Emperor could output.

Sprinkled among the Psiovaxians are not only 3rd and 4th and 5th Level Psions, but 6th Level Psions and a pair of 7th Level Psions.

Hope and the other humans become panicked as their understanding of the Kolvaxians instantly upends itself. Hope wields Excalibur with every last drop of power he can summon, while Beelzebub flies around, blasting the 6th and 7th Level Psions with the full force of his nuclear hellfire.

Not even caring about fighting alongside a Demon Emperor, Hope and Beelzebub try to protect the humans from the skies while Henry and the Legionnaires battle on the ground. The weaker Psions, still far more powerful than Demon Dukes and Emperors while also possessing Cosmic bodies, beat the hell out of the human soldiers, killing one after another of their weakest members.

"We can't keep this up!" One of the Legionnaires screams. "We need to escape! Commander Hiro, help!!"

Two portals open in the sky. The figures of Demon Deity Kristoff and Melody appear, both of them acting hurriedly to try and reverse the changing situation on Maiura at Demon Deity Auger's command.

This time, instead of summoning spears made of blood, Kristoff reaches through the portal and taps into the power of blood to forcefully empower the bodies of all the humans, as well as Beelzebub. He metaphorically boils their blood, increasing their healing factor and filling them with boundless energy, all while conjuring a Blood Legion of demonic monsters on the outskirts to act as meatshields for the humans.

Kristoff's goal this time is not to kill the Kolvaxians, but to save the humans. As such, he changes up his strategy to try and operate on the defense as much as possible.

At the same time, Demon Deity Melody weaponizes her power over sound to fire concentrated blasts of sound downward, being careful not to unleash wide-area damage, but only to target the strongest Kolvaxians within her line of sight.

Hope conjures a force field around the troopers and himself, using Excalibur as a battery to empower and strengthen the shield, while Beelzebub flickers around outside the shield, going on the offense to unleash hellfire and lightning on his foes.

Beelzebub grits his teeth. "Weak! I'm too weak!"

Even his most powerful and concentrated flames sputter uselessly against the hardened psionic barriers of the 7th Level Psiovaxians. When the two 7th Level Psiovaxians work together to attack and suppress him, Beelzebub becomes crippled, unable to assist the others. Thankfully, Melody's sonic screams impact the Psiovaxian elites with enough force to shatter their shields, freeing Beelzebub from their deadly embrace.

* * *

Five hundred Psiovaxians chase down Archangel Uriel. Among them is a single 7th Level Psiovaxian, a powerhouse with the ability to warp and bend space. This lone creature possesses psionic strength at the Bottom Level of Cosmic Power, allowing it to easily outpace the Archangel, arriving in front of her while blasting her with a beam of necrotic death energy. Uriel screams in pain as that deadly beam rips a hole in her stomach, badly wounding her and crippling her movement.

Still, she perseveres! Uriel's eyes figuratively glow with wrath, and she flaps her wings, turning her body into a battering ram. She summons a wall of holy energy and slams it into the Psiovaxian, sending it careening away.

But, that momentary pause gives the weaker horde of Psiovaxians time to catch up! Raphael, Michael, and Gabriel hurry to shield their sister from behind, using their own bodies as divine walls and their abilities as obfuscation.

Uriel hurriedly tries to fly away, but multiple powerful tendrils of telekinetic energy snap at her, weave between her brothers' fragile barrier, and wrap around her limbs, ensnaring and preventing her from escaping.

With a mighty roar, Uriel's eyes begin to shine with divine power.

"THOU SHALT NOT BIND ME!"

Boom!

She detonates divine energy in her body, blasting apart those otherwise powerful but invisible chains of telekinesis, then she flaps her wings again, rushing toward the mountain top.

From afar, she easily sees the thousands of Kolvaxians swarming every side of Mount Adams. Her heart turns pale as many of the nearest ones turn to look at her, then leap into the air, conjuring psionic power to fly toward her from every conceivable direction.

No! Damnation! Uriel roars in her mind. I shalt not be bound! I shalt not fall here!

She moves quickly, dodging and weaving as she picks out a small momentary gap in the incoming encirclement. She starts to race toward it, but at that moment, the 7th Level Psiovaxian flickers into position, its faceless gaze seemingly meeting her eyes.

Shit!! Uriel curses internally, looking around for a different gap in the incoming enemies.

Just as she is about to move toward one last glimmer of freedom...

CRACK!

Something smashes into Uriel's back, sending her careening toward the planet below, and straight into the horde of Kolvaxians.

BOOM!!

Uriel crashes helplessly into the indestructible bodies of her faceless foes. She panics as powerful hands grab at her from all directions. She tries to break free, but she fails to find leverage. The Kolvaxians rip her spear from her hands, then crash into Michael and Gabriel, swarming them and ripping their construct bodies apart until they return to motes of light.

Her eyes jump into the sky, as if looking for a savior. What she sees instead leaves her momentarily stunned.

There are two 7th Level Kolvaxians, their auras completely identical. One of them struck her, but the other was the one that blocked her passage.

So there were two... Uriel thinks, as countless hands pull at her face and mouth, grabbing her wings and pulling her back, back, down toward the ground.

She tries to fight them off, but it doesn't matter. Her strength is not enough to save her.

Her eyes flicker as her legs are dragged underground.

One of the two 7th Level Psiovaxians vanishes, leaving only the other in place. At that moment, she seems to realize something.

It was... an... illusion?!

The last thing Uriel sees as her torso and arms are pulled underground is her eldest brother, Raphael, staring down at her, his expression dark, but no intent on his face to try and save her.

"Raph-!"

Uriel tries to scream his name, but dirt rushes into her mouth and the ground swallows her whole. The horde drags her into the planet's depths.

Raphael closes his eyes, and then his construct body dissipates into motes of light.

* * *

"Come on, everyone! We don't have much time!" General Chadwick shouts, waving his arms in a spiral motion toward the glowing Warpgate leading to the Labyrinth Core.

Tens of troopers rush past every second while Creator Demila and her Psionic Constructs do battle with the Psiovaxians trying to fly over the walls and attack the humans.

Luckily, Demila is a million-year-old war veteran who has fought tens of thousands of battles against foes both weak and strong. Against the vast majority of other 7th Level

Psions, she will win decisively in battle, with only the most powerful elites posing a real threat. Even when the 7th Level Psiovaxians attack, she is able to hold them back.

With Demila providing an effective shield from the Psiovaxians outside, the humans manage to contain their panic and flee in a relatively orderly, if hurried manner.

The rhythmic booming of Kolvaxians smashing their bodies against the Wordsmithium underneath constantly amps up the adrenaline and fear in the trooper's minds, but they still act like professional soldiers and not unruly civilians.

All of that changes when, out of nowhere, the ground explodes.

Between the Warpgate and the remaining few thousand men and women, a massive hole blasts upward, and Psiovaxians begin pouring out of it, charging toward the juicy humans still inside Fort Adams.

"Oh no! NO!" Chadwick exclaims, his face turning pale.

Neil quickly pulls a gun off his back and fires into the horde, as does his wife. At the same time, the instant the hole erupts, the Warpgate shuts off, its connection severed from the other side. The humans inside the Core wouldn't take a chance of allowing even one of those horrible monsters into Hell, or it could mean the end of all sentient life in the Milky Way!

"Stand and fight!" Neil roars.

The remaining few thousand humans, none of them Legionnaires, all of them ordinary humans and a scattering of monsters, whip out their guns and fire into the horde, their bullets proving nearly useless. Even the heavier cannons only knock one or two Kolvaxians back at a time, and the swarm rapidly descends upon them.

At that moment, five figures materialize inside the Fortress, between the defenseless humans and their monstrous foes. Five figures clad in golden Wordsmithium regalia imbued with massive amounts of magical power.

Jason Hiro's Dronesmiths!

Much stronger than the last time he fought the Kolvaxians impromptu on the world of Reaver, Jason's drones stand valiantly, creating powerful barriers of energy to beat back the horde. At the same time, he materializes multiple portals at the rear of the remaining soldiers, spatial gates leading back to safety.

"Go!!" One of the Dronesmiths shouts. "I'll hold them off!"

Unwilling to stand idly on the sidelines any longer, Jason takes direct action and protects his fellow humans, causing Neil to look at him in a new light. Chadwick, Linda, and the rest all quickly turn tail and run, but Neil pauses for half a second, directing a look of admiration Jason's way.

"...I was wrong about you." Neil mutters. "This is how a true Hero should act."

Jason doesn't hear Neil's words, or perhaps he does but chooses not to acknowledge them. His Dronesmiths blast extremely potent beams of energy at random Psiovaxians, ripping their cellular makeup to shreds and atomizing them into piles of ash and gore.

Neil finally turns and runs. As he follows up behind his men and women, the last dozen of them make it through Jason's portals.

Linda pauses, turning to gesture to her husband.

"Come on, Neil!"

The ground explodes behind Neil. A Psiovaxians pounces at him, but luckily the human Commander has enough of a headstart to escape its attack. With Demila hovering above protectively, just one single Psion won't be able to catch him.

But then, Neil trips.

His feet somehow move incorrectly. He clumsily stumbles over seemingly nothing, losing his balance.

Neil's heart turns cold. He faceplants against the floor, a look of horror in his eyes.

Trip, how could he trip? There's no way he could be so clumsy!

He tries to jump to his feet and keep running, but for some reason, his body seems to become much heavier than before. The subtle interactions of his muscles don't function in the way his brain expects, making him take seconds longer to get up then they usually should.

And then, the Kolvaxian pounces on him.

"NEIL!!" Linda screams, taking aim with her gun to shoot uselessly at the monster wrapping its arms around her husband's chest from behind.

She watches, horrified, as the creature yanks Neil backward, dives into the dirt, and disappears with him, dragging her husband into the depths of Maiura's soil.

Just like that, Neil disappears, with even Jason unable to save him.

Linda's pupils shrink to pinpricks. She stares, dazed, unable to move, seemingly watching and waiting for Neil to return.

But he doesn't.

Neil Adams is gone.

Jason Hiro, watching from Chrona, turns pale with horror. That Psiovaxian in particular exuded a powerful field of Chaos energy that limited his ability to affect the situation. Short of fighting it in melee combat, Jason could not have saved Neil with so little time to react.

"Neil! Neil, no..." Jason whispers.

Chadwick grabs Linda. He pulls her away, and the last of the humans inside Fort Adams beat a hasty retreat. With all of them gone, the Dronesmiths no longer have any reason to stay. And so, they vanish, leaving only Creator Demila behind.

Demila's expression remains inscrutable. She flickers away, leaving the Kolvaxians to crawl around and take over Fort Adams. She teleports into the battle at the Southern Front to assist the last remaining humans there, and eventually, Hope opens a portal, allowing everyone to escape. Jason teleports Beelzebub back to Tarus II, and the last remaining humans disappear from Maiura, condemning it to the Plague for the foreseeable future. With them gone, Demon Deities Kristoff and Melody also fade away, Yardrat sealing off his portals so the Psiovaxians won't be able to travel to their worlds.

Only the Executors remain in the skies above, battling their Kolvaxor foes.

[Everyone! You must retreat!] Creator Demila urges. [The humans have all escaped! Do not stay here and damn yourselves to oblivion!]

[Easier said than done!] Executor Sartran complains. [Dammit! These False Ones are too powerful! We can't extricate ourselves! What are we going to do?!]

As soon as he asks the question, Jason's five Dronesmiths materialize in the air, joining the battle.

"You Executors flee!" Jason declares. "I'll hold them off! You just need to escape so we don't feed another Cosmic body to them!"

And with that, Jason manages to hold off the Kolvaxors long enough for the Executors to break away and flee for their lives. The psionic vibrations of five thousand Psiovaxians pursuing from behind chills them to their bones, forcing them and Demila to pick up the pace.

The Psions all race into the Void as fast as they can, ditching the planet and leaving with their tails tucked between their legs while Jason's Dronesmiths fight at full power to try and make the Psiovaxians bleed.

Unfortunately, Jason quickly finds that stalling the Kolvaxor hosts is the best outcome he can attain. He fails to land any deadly blows on them, and Kolvaxor Huron ultimately tears through the Dronesmiths like a hot knife through butter, shredding them apart and forcing them to self destruct.

The battle ends on Maiura with a complete victory for the Kolvaxians, and a total loss for humanity.

But it is what comes next that seals humanity's ultimate fate...

Part 595: The Usual Suspects

If humanity's first loss to the Kolvaxians was a wake-up call, their second loss was beyond the realm of a nightmare. 300,000 men, women and children, dead. Humans and their monster allies alike, particularly among the civilian populace.

Families destroyed. Lives ruined. Bonds broken.

Inside the Labyrinth Core, which is no longer a safe space for humanity but a temporary refuge for many of the survivors who weren't sent to Tarus II instead, more than 100,000 military personnel congregate, with scattered civilians among their numbers. Maiura was initially focused on its martial prowess, boasting a far larger contingent of trained service-members than Tarus II, owing to most of the military being loyal to Neil Adams. Now, with their civilian population decimated, out of the million or so humans who lived there, only about 800,000 humans remain.

The Core, jam-packed with humans, monsters, and demons, spills out into the surrounding Labyrinth hallways in huge numbers. For miles in every direction, people who are tired and fearful huddle around, waiting for news of what happened to reach them.

Normally, they might need to wait for military personnel to receive updates through their T-REX communicators, but as it happens, a lot of Legionnaires made it off Maiura, and they maintain a direct mental link with the others among their kind.

"A total collapse of the ranks?"

"My son! Where is he?! He was playing with his friends! Has anyone seen him??"

"You're saying at the end, all of the Kolvaxians were actually Psions? Then why didn't they use their abilities sooner? Were those creatures just toying with us?!"

"Has anyone seen my wife? Her name is Jenna, she has black hair, and I think she was wearing a green dress with..."

"Is Commander Hope okay? Has anyone heard from him?"

* * *

Among these elite humans, scattered reports of the happenings on Maiura spread quickly. Various Legionnaires, connected to their allies inside Fort Adams, as well as Henry on the Southern Front, are able to reliably update their fellow humans on what's been happening.

Confusion quickly turns to fear. A deep chill goes down the backs of the survivors as they realize they escaped before the situation truly turned dire.

General Magnus Chadwick was one of the last few people to leave Fort Adams before its collapse. He arrives inside the Core amongst a throng of anxious civilians and jumpy troopers, many of them asking him painful questions about what happened.

Instead of answering them, General Chadwick leads several top advisors into a private side room; the very same one Neil used to use when his base of operations was located in the Labyrinth. After closing the door and sitting around a table, Chadwick, Linda Hurent, and a handful of other people sink into their seats, remaining silent for twenty long seconds.

An aura of doom lingers in the air.

"Neil..." Linda finally says, her voice heavy with emotion. She looks blankly at the far wall, clutching her pregnant belly while thinking a great many thoughts she can't begin to elucidate.

"He's gone." Chadwick says gloomily. "He's really gone."

Lieutenant Samuel Baker also joins the discussion. Unfortunately, he was not on Maiura initially, and due to the need to evacuate civilians over bringing combatants to the battlefield, he never made it there to fight. Even so, he's still one of the higher ranking military officers, so he sits in with the rest.

"How did he fall?" Samuel asks.

"A Kolvaxian pounced on him from behind." Chadwick mutters, staring dazedly at the table. "Dragged him into the dirt. We couldn't stick around after that."

Debra, Neil's assistant, also joins the meeting. Despite the death of one of her closest friends, she remains stoic, not showing any emotion on her face.

"What about Archangel Uriel? Did she make it out?"

"I... don't know." Chadwick says. "She was alone, surrounded by Kolvaxians. But she is an Archangel. She and her brothers should be able to handle themselves."

Linda sighs. "What about when the Psiovaxians appeared at the end? Could she have escaped their encirclement?"

"We'll have to ask Commander Hope when he returns." Chadwick says. "Aside from him, Jason, and perhaps the Demon Deities or the Executors, nobody knows what happened on Maiura outside what we saw directly."

"We'll have to check when he returns, then." Debra says. "Right now, we need to understand the greater war situation so we can prepare for what comes next. The Kolvaxian attack caught us completely off-guard. I've already entered talks with the fairies to transfer our people to Pixiv. If Tarus II should come under siege by the Kolvaxians next, their backup will be the world of Sharmur."

"Hmph. With Demon Deity Melody. How... appropriate." Chadwick sneers. "Neil would weep if he were still-"

Right in the middle of Chadwick's sentence, a commotion breaks out just outside the door. Raising an eyebrow, Chadwick walks over, opens it, and checks with the guards outside. Then he closes the door and walks back to sit at his chair.

"It seems the battle is over. Hope, Henry, and the rest made it back. Barely."

* * *

Henry Cliff slowly staggers forward, wrapping an arm around his monsterized girlfriend, Ashley, as she helps him drag his wounded body over to some stairs leading up and out of the Labyrinth Core so he can sit down and take a load off. All around them, the loud noises of people asking questions, rambling words they can't make out from the crowd, and the general hubbub of an extremely packed meeting ground makes their ears buzz.

Hope follows behind them. He appears to be in good condition, mainly thanks to his nanite-enhanced body, but the truth is that the furious battle against the army of Psiovaxians nearly lead to his death multiple times. His bloodshot eyes tell the true story of how narrowly he made it out alive.

"We're glad to see you back, Commander Hope!" One of the many people nearby says.

"You too, Lord Henry! Let's see if we can get you patched up."

"Private Ashley, are you okay? Do you need anything to eat or drink? You look exhausted!"

Henry numbly nods along to the words of those around him, while Ashley directs her angry orc-scowl at the bystanders. "Back off, everyone! Give us some space! Henry almost died, and so did Hope! Give them a rest, for heaven's sake!"

The crowd hurriedly quiets down, but their nervous, bubbly energy continues to radiate outward as people still direct fewer but plenty persistent questions toward the trio.

"Commander Hope, any idea on what happened to Archangel Uriel?" One man finally asks.

"Uriel?" Hope replies. "She didn't make it back?"

"No sir. The higher-ups aren't talking about what happened before they left. All we know is that the Kolvaxians were all Psions, and they launched a sneak attack! It's amazing you made it out alive!"

Hope's heart turns cold. "One moment."

He closes his eyes.

"Locate."

Hope utters a Word of Power, and his surroundings go quiet. The soldiers hold their breath, waiting for the answer they've been dreading.

"...No response." Hope says, his expression turning ugly. "I can locate living creatures no matter where they are, but not if they're inside an anti-magic field, like Gressil's Chaos Energy, or... if they're dead."

Henry slowly raises his bloodied head, his cheeks cut up and mangled from several claws he took to the face.

"I... haven't really had time to listen to the other Legionnaires. You don't think Uriel is...?"

"She might be." Hope says quietly. "Stupid. I shouldn't have left her there, even if she asked. I thought against those mundane Kolvaxians, she'd be able to dodge them and attack from afar. But since they were all Psions, that was a different story."

He pauses, looking at the other men. "I'll find out what happened to Uriel as quickly as I can. Where's Neil and Chadwick? I need to talk to them."

Hardly have the words left Hope's mouth before his surroundings fall silent. The men, women, and monsters surrounding him all recoil slightly, then avert their eyes.

"You... Commander... you don't know? You haven't heard yet?" One man finally asks.

"Haven't heard what?" Hope asks, as a pit forms in his stomach.

He doesn't have to ask.

The reactions of the people around him immediately tells him what must have happened.

"Commander Neil." The trooper says, swallowing heavily. "He... didn't make it. He fell."

He fell.

He fell.

He fell...

Those two words echo inside Hope's mind, causing his knees to become wobbly for a moment. He nearly loses his balance as a flood of emotion washes through his mind, making him feel an indescribable sense of horror and shock.

"No... no, he- he can't be..." Hope says softly. "Fell? What do you mean? How? When?!"

"You should talk to Chadwick." The soldier says, averting his eyes guiltily. "He's in... Neil's old office."

Hope doesn't hesitate. He stumbles forward, his movements frantic, almost drunken. An instant later, he remembers who he is, then speaks a Word of Power to teleport directly into Neil's old work room, the very same place Hope was 'born'.

Hope's sudden appearance makes the military leaders inside jump slightly, but they recognize their guest immediately.

Hope opens his mouth. He starts to say something. To ask what happened, or perhaps to simply say something- anything at all.

But then he sees Linda sitting in Neil's old chair, her eyes downcast, her expression dead.

The reality, the gravity of the situation, truly hits him.

"Linda..." Hope whispers. "Linda... when? How?"

Linda doesn't answer him. It's Chadwick who speaks in her stead, intervening due to her complete lack of ability to speak.

"Hope. It all happened so fast." Chadwick says, keeping his gruff voice as soft as he can manage. "First, the Executors left us..."

Chadwick quickly and succinctly explains to Hope the truth of the matter. Hope's expression falls further and further into despair. He learns of the Executors leaving Demila behind, the attack from the Kolvaxians and Psiovaxians as they scaled the sides of the fortress, Neil's strange demand to stay until the end, and finally, the moment the Kolvaxians exploded through the underground Wordsmithium barrier, charging at the humans until Jason intervened.

Hope slumps to the ground, his back against the wall. His mental numbness becomes so profound that he begins to shake uncontrollably.

Tears well up in his eyes as Chadwick finishes the story, telling him about how Neil was dragged away by the monsters, never to be seen again.

"No... no he can't... we can still... save him? Save... can we... save Neil? Kolvaxian? Is he- my fault, it was all my fault!"

Hope presses his face into his palms, heaving sobs as he truly realizes the man he considered half a father is now dead. Gone forever. Lost to the creatures known for devouring planets whole.

Chadwick and the others fall silent, listening to the Wordsmith's crying and choked sobs with eyes full of their own tears.

In truth, everyone here knows how much Neil meant to Hope. Even when Hope and Neil had their squabbles, or when Hope childishly thought of plotting against him... he never wanted to hurt Neil. He just thought he could do better if he went his own way.

But now... Hope will never know. He'll never be able to rub his superiority in Neil's face, or receive the praise he so desperately craved from his father figure.

Chadwick stands up. He hesitantly walks over to Hope's side, then sits beside him on the floor.

"It's... okay, son. It's okay to cry. Let it all out."

Magnus reaches his hand over to gently squeeze Hope's shoulder, but the moment he makes contact, Hope jerks away, looking at him with tear-stained eyes full of rage.

"Don't touch me! And don't call me SON! Only Neil was allowed to call me that! And he's gone now! He's gone! And it's all MY fault! It's all... my..."

Hope grits his teeth. He looks at the floor as if gazing into the abyss, then, under his breath, he mutters...

"Teleport."

Hope vanishes from the spot, leaving Chadwick startled.

"What? Where did he go?"

Debra shakes her head. "Hope is over a hundred years old. He's an old man now compared to us. But in a lot of ways, he's still a broken youth. Let him cry in solitude. This is almost certainly the worst day of his life."

* * *

Hope reappears in the Labyrinth, tens of miles away. Still seated, he sits in the darkness, crying, not wanting to be around anyone right now. Excalibur faintly illuminates the pitch-black void around him, allowing him to make out the outlines of his body.

His tears come out in sputters, his choked sobs catching in his throat while his chest burns painfully.

Never has he cried like this. Neither has Jason.

The two of them have always been similar in this regard. Bottling up their emotions, smoldering, and bearing the pain silently, unable to let others see their tears.

Even when Jason lost his daughter, he couldn't cry. He wanted to weep over her death, but he couldn't bring himself to let out his full emotions...

But this time, Hope does cry.

In the darkness, with no-one else around, he finally gains some quiet time for himself. He releases all the pent-up pain, weeping like none have ever seen a man cry in their lives.

And then, in the middle of that pain, a voice speaks in the darkness.

"Haha. Shame what happened."

Hope's heart freezes. He shakily jumps to his feet, pulls Excalibur out of its scabbard, and shakily points it toward the direction of that voice, allowing its glow to brighten, illuminating the surrounding area.

"G-Gressil!" Hope shouts, his voice shaky due to his abruptly halted tears. "You! What do you want? Back off! I'll fucking kill you right now! DON'T YOU TEST ME!"

From the darkness ahead, just outside the range of Excalibur's luminosity, two smoldering red eyes glow.

Gressil gazes at Hope from afar, staying away from him either due to Excalibur's threat, or simply because he feels like it. Even with his enhanced vision, Hope can't make out more than Gressil's eyes. His body remains cloaked by the Labyrinth's shadows.

"Now, now. Is that any way to speak to the person who saved your life?" Gressil asks. "You owe me one, kid. Haha."

He laughs darkly, his tone containing no amusement.

The man and demon fall silent for a moment. Gressil smirks in the darkness when he notices Excalibur's tip trembling in Hope's hand.

"What... what do you want?" Hope asks. "Are you here to poke at my wounds? I'm not in the mood for your bullshit."

"Can't an old friend come and say hello?" Gressil asks. "Also, I wanted to offer my condolences. It's a real shame what happened to Neil. The way he 'accidentally' tripped and fell at the end. Such a clumsy fellow."

"BASTARD!"

Hope's eyes snap open. He lunges into the darkness and stabs Excalibur at Gressil, aiming to impale the prison warden on its tip.

But the moment Excalibur draws too close, Gressil's body melts away, turning into particles of dust as Hope completely misses his lunge.

Immediately, the Wordsmith spins around, looking warily to the left and right for Gressil to be down one of the two directions in the pitch black hallway.

"It was you." Hope growls. "YOU killed Neil. You've been controlling the Plague this whole time! Admit it, Gressil! You MONSTER!"

Gressil doesn't reappear. Instead, his voice speaks from both ends of the hallway, reaching Hope at the same time.

"I would love to take credit, Hope. Truly, I would. Haha. It would be so delightful if I could create something as perfect as the Plague. Sadly, my best efforts merely led to the Grez, and they are not a thousandth as ingenious as the Kolvaxians. I am not the one controlling them."

"LIAR!" Hope shouts. "They wield Chaos Energy! I've felt it! Once I tell everyone the truth, they'll hunt you to the ends of Hell! You'll never be able to escape the humans, demons, and the Volgrim all working together!"

Gressil reappears, casually leaning against the wall a few hundred feet behind where Hope started. The Wordsmith cautiously turns to face him while keeping his senses ready in case Gressil attacks from behind him again.

"Well. Believe what you want." Gressil says with a shrug. "Bleh. The Plague isn't my style. I'm not trying to assimilate all of creation into one 'mindless' species. I want Chaos, boy. I want to enjoy myself, watching all the different Sentients rip each other apart. It's no fun if you all join together and become part of some boring hivemind. Use your head. You know I'm telling the truth."

Hope's eyes flicker. "If it's not you, then explain the Chaos energy. You can't!"

"Of course I can." Gressil chuckles. "I am the Master of Chaos. I can create it, spread it, and do with it as I please. But I'm not the only one who can wield its power."

Gressil lowers his head, looking at the floor thoughtfully.

"Beelzebub. When he blew himself up on Tarus II, he wielded the power of Chaos, even if only for a moment. So, too, does the Plague. It's really that simple."

Hope frowns. "How does that follow? You're not making any sense."

"Chaos is the embodiment of negative energy." Gressil explains. "Specifically, it is the embodiment of the deepest rage, the darkest hatred, and other such negative emotions. Any transcendent life-form, even you, can harness Chaos's full power if their emotions reach such a level. Beelzebub tapped into that rage when he detonated his body. Thus, the Kolvaxians also harness a deep sense of hatred you cannot fathom."

Gressil's words successfully stupefy the Wordsmith. Hope squints while looking into the darkness, trying to read Gressil's casual body language while keeping Excalibur pointed at the prison warden. He doesn't see any lies in Gressil's posture, though that could be due to his own fluctuating emotions.

"The Kolvaxians are a mindless mass of monstrosities." Hope argues. "They can't possibly be harboring some deep sense of overwhelming hatred. You're grasping at straws."

Gressil sneers. He tilts his head back up to look at Hope.

"Am I?"

A moment of silence follows as Hope isn't quite sure how to respond.

"You know so little about the 'Plague.'" Gressil says darkly. "You think it consists of a bunch of brainless instinct-driven creatures, but I'll bet you weren't feeling that way each time it revealed a new facet of its abilities. Even now, the Kolvaxians are hiding their true capabilities. They're toying with you for their amusement. I would know. I also like to play with my food. Haha."

"Do you know who, or what, is controlling the Plague?" Hope finally asks.

"Haha." Gressil laughs again. "You're asking the wrong question, kid. Whether I know or not, I won't tell you anyway. It's not fun if I do. The better question you should ask is... who truly killed Neil?"

Hope's heart skips a beat. He wipes at his eyes with his free hand, drying his tears while controlling the slowly building rage simmering in his stomach.

"Who killed him?" Hope asks. "If you know... say it!"

"I don't need to say anything." Gressil replies. "You already know who, and you know it wasn't me. Neil was a driver of Chaos. Killing him wouldn't benefit me. But it would benefit... someone else."

Hope's pupils shrink, ever so slightly. Many thoughts boil to the surface as he remembers what the other human military leaders told him.

"...How did the Kolvaxians break through the Wordsmithium? Even if they possessed high level Psionic power, that Wordsmithium should have held. And then, right after they broke through, Jason appeared..."

Hope sucks in a sharp breath. His vision clears up as he realizes the crux of the matter.

"It was him. It was always HIM!"

Gressil smiles. "Seems you've figured something out. Well then. I'll be going now. Do with this revelation whatever you please. Just don't bore me. Haha."

Gressil turns and walks away, his body fading into the shadows as seamlessly as Yama's would. After he leaves, Hope stares at the ground, lowering Excalibur until its tip rests against the floor.

"Jason... you did it... you always hated Neil... but this time... YOU'VE GONE TOO FAR."

He gnashes his teeth, grinding them together before uttering a single Word of Power that will change the Karma of the Milky Way Galaxy.

"TELEPORT!"

Part 596: Planetquakes

Jason sat in front of the monitors inside the Spynet Sphere. For several long minutes, he stared at the images of Neil falling to the Plague, replaying them in his head, even as the Plague's latent Chaos Energy distorted the vision of the probing magic he had placed inside Mount Adams.

By the time the Plague overran the fortress, Jason lost all vision of the happenings inside. He tried to watch what Hope was doing, but the sheer number of Psiovaxians in the area made doing so extremely difficult. Every minute in realspace was hours in Chrona-time, so Jason would often leave to deal with other matters for half a day, then return to replay the last few minutes of realspace-happenings when he had more time.

Eventually, after several weeks, the war on Masiura finally drew to a close. Jason watched as Hope and the rest slowly teleported away, one by one, ultimately rescuing the last of the Legionnaires, Henry, and himself.

Jason heaved a faint sigh of relief. It was over.

But the cost paid was… too high.

He sat inside the Spynet Sphere for a full hour afterward, staring blankly at the ground.

Neil Adams had died.

Hope would soon find out.

How could this not change the situation? How could Hope not lash out and blame Jason somehow, some way, like he always did?

And so, Jason deliberately kept an eye on him. Watching as Hope materialized inside the Core, spoke to the others for several long, excruciating realspace-minutes.

Jason kept leaving to work on his important project, returning when his anxiety got the better of him.

He watched as Hope finally had the news broken to him before teleporting away to hide inside the Labyrinth.

Jason's heart constricted with pain. He and Hope didn't get along, that much was true. But in some ways, Jason viewed Hope in the same way he did Daisy.

Jason failed his daughter. She died because of him.

But he also failed Hope. He made a clone, then treated that clone like garbage.

Now his clone hated him. And Jason couldn't blame Hope, even if some of Hope's mental logic was stretched to the extreme.

He failed his daughter. And he failed his clone.

In some ways... Hope was like a son to Jason. That might not be the perfect analogy, but it certainly gave Jason a great many unpleasant feelings when he dreamt up the comparison.

As Hope sat in the darkness, barely illuminated by the light of his sword, Jason watched. A sense of deep shame washed over him, making him feel a pain most indescribable.

And then... Hope abruptly vanished.

"Huh?"

Jason blinked. He quickly uttered a Word of Power to try and find Hope's whereabouts, but...

"Locate! Trace!"

There was nothing.

No response.

Jason's heart turned to ice. How could he lose contact with his clone out of nowhere?

Many realspace minutes and Chrona-hours passed. Jason hurriedly tried all sorts of tricks to locate Hope, but everything he did told him that Hope was enveloped in a field of anti-energy.

And only one creature could create such a field...

"Gressil!"

Jason's face flashed with rage. Was Gressil attacking Hope right at this second? Was he trying to take advantage of Hope's emotional weakness to capture him once again?!

Right as Jason was about to attempt sending in his Dronesmiths, Hope reappeared.

But no longer did he appear broken and despondent.

There, in the pitch-blackness of the Labyrinth, illuminated solely by the glow of his legendary sword, a single expression wormed its way onto Hope's face.

Blinding rage.

Jason's heart stopped. He suddenly realized something that he should have realized long ago.

Gressil wasn't trying to capture Hope again.

He was subverting him.

He was likely the one who had been whispering conspiracies into Hope's ear, just like Neil did.

The two of them must have had a dialogue, a secret discussion Jason couldn't peep in on.

And Jason had no idea what they had spoken about.

Then, Hope slowly spoke a single Word of Power...

"Te...le...po...rt..."

He vanished from the Labyrinth, and Jason lost track of him for several realspace minutes.

"Locate." Jason said many Chrona-hours later, only to blink twice as he spotted Hope levitating in a somewhat strange and unexpected place: The void a thousand miles above Tarus II.

Inside the vacuum of space, Excalibur's energy field enveloped Hope, protecting him from the deadliness of space. He levitated in the air with a malevolent expression on his face.

And then he began to speak...

"Jason Hiro!" Hope shouts, his voice projecting not only out and into the void, but down to the world of Tarus II beneath him. "You murderer! It was you! YOU killed Neil! I was blind to the true monster you are. BUT NO MORE! Get your ass out here, RIGHT NOW! Fight me, you coward! You son of a bitch! You'll PAY for what you've done!"

Hope sneers. "And if you don't come out here, I'll hurt you as badly as you've hurt me AND the rest of humanity! You want to target MY loved ones? I'll target YOURS!!"

On the world of Tarus II, countless people look up into the sky in confusion. They easily make out Hope's voice, and despite its identical timbre and intonation to Jason's, it doesn't take a genius to figure out who's speaking.

"What? Commander Hope said Jason killed Neil? How could he do that?"

"I should have known! Jason and Neil never got along, but to think he'd go this far!"

"Is Hope threatening us? He's forcing Jason to fight him?"

"Of course he isn't threatening 'us', he's probably referring to Phoebe, or maybe Jason's son."

"What the- that's just as fucked up! That's evil!"

"Eye for an eye, tooth for a tooth! If Jason didn't want his family targeted, maybe he shouldn't have targeted Hope's!"

"Hope could be making it all up. You know he hates Jason irrationally!"

"Since Jason killed Neil, it's not that irrational of a hatred, now, is it?!"

* * *

Countless voices form a cacophony of formless noise. Many people look up into the skies with fear, anger, and expectant looks on their faces. Many soldiers grind their teeth as they immediately believe Hope's words. Why would he lie?! He must have some indisputable proof Jason killed Neil! And even if he doesn't have proof, the motive is clear enough, as well as the means! Neil was too popular, so Jason murdered him to silence him!

Thanks to the footage captured by a few of the last remaining T-REX's on the scene, many people watched as Neil abruptly tripped over his own feet during his final moments. This footage was even shared by the higher-ups to show people Neil's last moments, and also to ensure no silly rumors of him actually being alive persisted.

Unfortunately for Jason, that footage badly incriminated him. How could a man as well-put-together and valiant as Neil trip so clumsily, even during a life and death moment? Jason did it! He tried to make it look like an accident, but he underestimated the ability of his fellow humans to see through his lies!

Hope's words slowly pour into the realm of Chrona. Jason's expression darkens as he listens, realizing that this situation is rapidly becoming unsalvageable.

"Fiona." Jason says, turning to his former mind-wife.

She purses her lips, looking at him with saddened eyes.

"Yes?"

"I didn't do it." Jason says.

"I know you didn't." Fiona softly replies. "But... I'm afraid the evidence Hope can procure won't make you look good."

"What do you think I should do?" Jason asks.

A long moment of silence follows.

Fiona crosses her arms and closes her eyes.

"Hope was a mistake." Fiona finally says. "And so was I. You made clones thoughtlessly and for selfish reasons. I've... turned out okay. I have made a new purpose for myself. But Hope... he was broken too thoroughly. I don't think you can salvage the situation."

Jason's shoulders sink.

"I... wished you wouldn't say that."

"There's no both-sidesing this story." Fiona replies. "Today, you and Hope have to fight. How it all ends will be your choice. Both of you."

"What if there isn't room in the Milky Way for two Wordsmiths?" Jason asks. "What if he won't listen to reason?"

"Then I guess you're going to have to hurt his wife and children." Fiona says seriously. "But that will be a decision you make. Either way, I don't want to see you die, so... make sure you cross your T's and dot your I's."

"Alright." Jason says. "Just in case, before I do anything else, there's some preparations I need you to make."

Jason and Fiona talk for several minutes longer. He elaborates a plan to her, one that makes Fiona's face scrunch up slightly.

"...Phoebe won't like that."

"I have to keep her safe, and everyone else." Jason says. "I can't risk Hope flying off the handle and hurting her. So it'll be up to you to monitor the situation."

"Then I'll do whatever I can to help." Fiona says, smiling weakly. "Go get 'em, tiger."

* * *

"Come on, Jason!" Hope shouts. "Show yourself! If you don't-"

Hardly have the words left his mouth before a faint displacement of space a short distance away reveals the arrival of the person Hope wants to see the most. Hope's eyes flick to the left as he spots Jason, wearing a white T-shirt and blue jeans, not looking even slightly ready for a fight.

"Hope." Jason says calmly. "I don't want to fight you. And I didn't kill Neil. I tried to save him, but I failed."

"Is that so?" Hope asks, curling up his lip in disdain. He rests his left hand on his hip while pointing Excalibur at Jason with his other hand. "If you're so innocent, then why didn't you come here in person? Why have your little Robo-Jason do the talking for you? Guilty conscience, perhaps?"

"I didn't kill Neil." Jason repeats. "Hope, we've had our differences over the years. I've screwed up plenty of times. But I would never kill an innocent person! Certainly not a fellow human."

"You wouldn't?" Hope asks, lilting his voice slightly. "And what about Amelia?"

"She wasn't innocent and you know that!" Jason snaps back. "I loved Amelia! I didn't want to hurt her! But she became a monster! She devoured an entire planet full of people. She and Neil aren't comparable!"

Hope shakes his head. He smirks at the robotic copy of his original self.

"I'm sure that's what you tell yourself. You say you couldn't fix Amelia, but I did. I showed her compassion and brought out her human side. You executed her, and then you executed Neil. Now you're lying to try and deceive the galaxy. But I know about you, Jason. I know all your tricks."

"Gressil's been talking to you." Jason says quietly. "That 'Amelia' you're dating isn't Amelia at all. She's Debra's sister. You brainwashed her into becoming someone else! You changed her memories, her appearance, even her personality. She was a woman named Annette, until you twisted her into someone else! If she were the real Amelia, you'd never have had a happily ever after!"

"Annette wanted me to change who she was." Hope counters. "She was devoted to me. Debra introduced us, and she offered to become the woman I loved most. It was her decision!"

"Now who's trying to convince themselves of a lie?!" Jason asks. "The truth is, you're here because you're always letting yourself be manipulated. By Neil, Gressil, even by me! And I'm sorry, Hope. I really am. I treated you like trash when I first created you, and you didn't deserve that."

Jason pauses.

"But I didn't kill Neil. Think, Hope, think! I'm not the only person who has the desire and the capability to hurt or kill Neil! Gressil does too! That fucker can turn invisible and hide himself from our Wordsmithing! It's obvious he killed Neil and did all this to turn you against me!"

"I thought as much too," Hope retorts. "But after he and I had a little chat, I realized who the real devil was in all of this. Your goal wasn't only to kill Neil. It was to ruin ME as well! And you willingly sacrificed 100,000 people just to do that!"

Jason blinks twice, looking aghast.

"W-what the fuck are you on about now? Are you also blaming me for what happened on Maiura??"

"Of course I am. And I'm not blaming you in some roundabout wishy-washy way either." Hope says, his voice crackling with anger. "You must think I have the memory of a goldfish. You already know how to manipulate the Plague. You called it to the world of Sharmur, and then you called it to Maiura, all so you could swoop in and play the hero!"

"You're nuts. You're actually psychotic." Jason mutters. "I did nothing of the sort! You're swallowing Gressil's lies way too easily, Hope! How can you even BELIEVE the words of a demon who tortured you for days, cut off your fucking limbs, and left you like a pig for the slaughter?? Don't forget it was ME who saved you! My allies, at the least!"

"I hate Gressil, don't get me wrong." Hope says slowly. "And someday, someday soon, I'm going to make him pay. I'm going to brutally torture him until he begs for mercy before killing him. But that doesn't change the fact that you're a murderer and the first one I'm going to take down. Today. Right here and now."

Hope lowers Excalibur. His anger dissipates, leaving him more focused and ready for a fight as he eyes Jason's drone down.

"So you won't listen to reason?" Jason asks. "You refuse to believe my words? I'll say it again, Hope. I didn't kill Neil."

"I used my Wordsmithing already to look up what happened." Hope replies. "I saw him trip and fall unnaturally. I know it was you. No more bullshitting. Let's settle this once and for all."

Excalibur ignites with a bright white light, wrapping its energy around Hope's body and providing him with a transparent set of glowing plated armor. His eyes brighten as well, revealing the hatred smoldering within.

"Fine. I'll fight you." Jason says. "This is the only way we'll be able to finally settle our differences. May the best Wordsmith win."

"Don't worry." Hope concludes. "I will. It's my ONLY desire!"

Then he and Jason lunge at one another.

In the day-lit skies above Tarus II, extremely bright flashes of light begin to erupt, grabbing the attention of many people who happen to look upward. Then, moments later, the planet rumbles, as if an earthquake at 3.0 on the Richter scale were occurring on every continent all at once. Faint rumblings startle the populace, making those who aren't outside wonder what the heck is going on.

Naturally, Hope's words easily reached everyone, and so it doesn't take much for people to figure out what's going on.

"Hope and Jason are fighting in space! What we're feeling are the distant aftershocks of their battle! Just how powerful are they??"

"They must already be at the Cosmic level, like those High Psions. This is crazy! Are they going to kill each other?"

"Commander Hope is too honorable to do something like that. If anything, he'll just beat Jason black and blue, forcing him to apologize."

"Apologize?! You think a few words will make up for Jason murdering Commander Neil? I bet Hope is going for Jason's head."

"Who says Hope will win? Don't you remember when Jason appeared on Yardris? He wiped the floor with those empowered Kolvaxians. I bet Jason will take Hope out easily."

"You wanna bet money on that?"

"Idiots! How can you talk about betting money at a time like this? We need unity and leadership, not for the Wordsmiths to fight each other. What if the Plague shows up here?!"

Once again, countless people argue among each other about just what, precisely, is going to happen.

The minor earthquakes rocking the planet only cause minor instability. A man trying to paint his roof slips and falls due to the vibration, cracking his head and causing others to rush him to the hospital. Emperor Leeroy naturally takes care of his injuries, along with the injuries of other people.

As the battle begins to rage, the earthquakes sometimes ramp up for a moment or two, causing even more vibrations to erupt, making more people lose their footing. People begin to worry, and a few even start to panic.

"Is the planet going to come apart at the seams?"

"Are we in danger? This battle is scary!"

The flashes of light in the sky above intensify, and so too do the earthquakes. Finally, after the first one to reach a 4.0 on the Richter Scale occurs, a planet-wide broadcast plays out via Phoebe Hiro's voice.

"Fellow humans, monsters, and demons. We are going to temporarily relocate to the worlds of Sharmur and Pixiv, under the control of Demon Deity Melody and the Fairy Queens, respectively. I advise that anyone who was living on Maiura go to Pixiv, while anyone who lives on Tarus II should go to Sharmur, but it's entirely up to each of you individually. My husband came to an agreement with Demon Deity Melody that in the event of an emergency, she would protect any humans who settled on Sharmur."

Phoebe continues to speak. "The Warpgate will take you all to the Core, where you will be able to quickly and efficiently transfer to Pixiv or Sharmur. I know this is a scary time, but please proceed in a calm and orderly manner."

Soldiers quickly take control of the situation. They form up lines on the streets, forming calm and orderly processions leading out of the northerns, eastern, and southern parts of the main human city to flow toward the Warpgate at the Western Edge.

All the while, flashes of light continue to strike at one another in the sky above.

* * *

Inside Tarus II's central area, the Fortress of Retribution, a pair of angels stand inside their church, their expressions downcast. Dozens of people sit in the pews outside, appearing worried about the earthquakes rumbling beneath the church. As for Cassiel and Soleil, they face one another in a private side-room, away from prying eyes.

"Archangel Uriel... is dead?" Cassiel asks.

"That is what Lady Fiona transmitted to me." Soleil replies. "It seems she and her brothers were swarmed by the Psiovaxians at the end. That means you are the last angel in the Milky Way."

"And you." Cassiel says, touching Soleil's arm lightly.

"I am not truly an angel. I am merely a Black Hole Construct fashioned to be a facsimile of one." Soleil retorts. "Now then. Let us leave this world. I have a bad feeling about the Wordsmith's battle."

"Do you think Hope will win, or Jason?" Cassiel asks.

Soleil shrugs. "I am uncertain. I only feel the battle will not end in a victory benefiting humanity's interests. One way or another, they are going to suffer a terrible loss today."

"I was a human once." Cassiel says. "A long, long time ago. I don't want my fellow humans to suffer."

"Then we must evacuate." Soleil says decisively. "Especially you. I will not risk anything happening to the last angel in the Milky Way, possibly even the universe."

"Thank you, Soleil." Cassiel says, her face flushing with warmth. "For always taking care of me. Even if that's only because it's what Jason told you to do."

Soleil frowns. "I have long grown out of the programming he forced upon me. I am myself. I am an individual. I protect you because I care. If Jason told me to hurt you, I would refuse. He no longer has any sway over my actions."

"I see. Well. Then, in that case, I must thank you again."

Soleil takes Cassiel's hand. She leads her out into the pews, where they both inform Cassiel's followers of the evacuation orders. Then, everyone begins to leave, with the two angels following closely behind.

"Let's grab anyone else we can on the way out." Cassiel suggests.

"No. Your safety comes first." Soleil says.

Cassiel's expression turns gloomy. "I can't leave people to die."

Soleil hesitates. She looks at her friend, and her expression softens.

"Alright. Then we'll make for the Warpgate while serving as a light to illuminate the path. Let's spread hope instead of fear. Order instead of chaos."

Cassiel nods. "Yeah. We'll do that."

The two of them flap their wings and take to the skies, beginning the first step on Cassiel's journey to become humanity's Guiding Star...

Part 597: Tarnished History

Recommended Listening

The two Wordsmiths look at each other for only a single second.

Then Hope attacks.

The Second Wordsmith snaps first, revealing the rage he no longer feels he has to conceal. Instantly, he pounces at Jason, swinging Excalibur with the fury of a hurricane. The blade swishes at Jason's left and right, while the agile Dronesmith dodges with shocking ease.

Wearing no armor at all, this lone Dronesmith slithers and bends its body at unnatural angles, piloted remotely by Jason inside Chrona using a mixture of verbal commands and telepathy. With a 250x time differential as an advantage, Jason has the absolute advantage in reaction speed, allowing him to see Hope's attacks telegraphed, then reacting accordingly.

Hope sweeps the divine blade horizontally, cutting at the drone's torso, The drone bends its body into a U-shape, dodging that attack by the slimmest of margins and wasting Hope's energy.

"Slippery bastard!" Hope snarls. "Is dodging all you know how to do?!"

"No." Jason says through his Dronesmith's mouth. "It's not."

Hope stabs at the Dronesmith's right shoulder. The drone twists its body slightly, easily avoiding the strike. The instant it dodges, it's body blurs and distorts. It jumps at Hope without warning and slams its other shoulder into his chest, sending him flying!

"Ah!"

Hope cries out in surprise. The Dronesmith's attack comes so suddenly that he doesn't even see the attack hit!

Thankfully, the power of Excalibur, as well as his nanite-infused body, protects him from a severe injury. He quickly assumes a defensive stance, keeping his grip firmly on Excalibur so Jason won't be able to snatch it away. He rubs his chest with his free hand.

"Normalize. So you can counter!"

"I don't want to fight you." Jason says calmly. "But don't mistake my hesitancy for pacifism. I will fight you if necessary. And you'll lose. You have no idea how much I've trained over the last few centuries, nor how hard."

Hope sneers. "That might be true, but it won't- ACCELERATE!"

Suddenly, right in the middle of his sentence, Hope utters a Word of Power, increasing his body's speed. He savagely attacks the Dronesmith, cutting at it with all his fury. But instead of a burst of acceleration to let him cleave the drone in two, his body abruptly decelerates, and his thoughts become groggy.

His attack moves slower than before. He swings Excalibur with a speed that makes him feel as if he's switched to fighting underwater with a sword made of cardboard. The drone doesn't even make an exaggerated motion to dodge, it simply hovers backward, looking at him with the same blank expression as before as his pitiful strike misses by a mile.

What? Hope thinks. How did my Word of Power fail? It should have worked, unless...

A moment later, the deceleration wears off as Excalibur and Hope's nanites naturally counter the spell placed upon him. His speed returns to normal, and he looks at the drone with an expression of even hotter rage than before.

"So it's like that. You hide in Chrona, where you have the advantage of time on your side. You heard me start to utter a Word of Power, and you countered me before I could even complete the effect. No matter what I do, you can see through the essence of my attacks instantly!"

The Dronesmith nods. "Yeah. It's a cheap trick. But effective. Does it matter? If you can't even beat my drone, then don't bother with thinking you'll have a chance against me in person. Face it, Hope. I outclass you now. Things aren't the way they were when I first made you."

"You think you're better than me." Hope says, his tone darkening. "But what else is new? You've always thought you were the superior Wordsmith, even when I wiped the floor with you. I know the truth about Chrona. Your dimension has a TDR of 200, which is twice the Hall of Heroes, but that also makes it less stable. You have to stay inside more than I do otherwise you could suffer severe side effects."

"Actually, it's a 250x differential." Jason retorts. "And those 'side effects' aren't as serious as you make them out to be. I solved them years ago. I just choose to fight you with a drone because it's all I need to use to win."

"Liar." Hope snaps back. "It's because you're afraid. If we fought on equal terms, I'd cut off your head before you could react. You're siccing your drone on me so you won't have to risk getting hurt. Or worse."

"I'm multi-tasking." Jason counters. "While I fight you, I'm continuing to improve my Wordsmithing and invent things that will help human society. If I go to you in person, I will only end up focusing on you instead of the bigger picture."

"Bullshit. You're a coward. A complete fucking coward!" Hope roars. "Get your ass out here! Locate!"

Hope once again tries to utilize a Word of Power, but the instant it activates, it fails, causing him to fail at sensing his foe. He wastes a minuscule amount of mana, which really amounts to nothing at all with Excalibur serving as his battery.

"Fuck!" Hope snarls. "Coward! COWARD!"

"You can insult me all you want." Jason says. "But it doesn't matter what you say or how many times you say it. I am who I am, and I know I didn't kill Neil. I wish you'd believe me, but outside of tampering with your mind, there doesn't seem to be any way I can convince you. So here I am, at least providing you with an outlet for your aggression."

Hope's eyes narrow.

"Always looking down on me. Since the very beginning. Always treating me like the inferior 'you', or even worse, a bratty child. But I'm not a kid, Jason. I'm the only adult in the room, and I'm not going to let you play games with the lives of your fellow humans!"

Hope slides his thumb down Excalibur's crossguard, tapping into it to communicate with King Arthur through their mental link. Instantly, King Arthur receives his command, then transfers that command back to Solomon inside Chrona.

Multiple pre-planned occurrences rapidly play out, taking less than a second of realspace-time.

Solomon's Crown materializes on top of Hope's head. A series of spells activate, empowered by several Heroes hidden within the Hall of Heroes' confines, two of the key players being Moses and Aaron.

Energy surges into Hope's body. His blue eyes sparkle faintly as his connection to Excalibur deepens. Naturally, Jason immediately notices the prominent golden, gem-encrusted crown that has appeared atop Hope's head.

With Solomon accelerating Hope's thoughts and Excalibur empowering his body, Hope attacks the Dronesmith again. This time, Jason is not able to handily wave his clone off or easily dismiss him.

What follows is a fast and brutal melee.

The Dronesmith summons a silver-colored sword of its own, one that lacks any extravagant visual qualities or flair, but appears to be built solidly with reliable materials. The blade, not a replica of Excalibur, but its own creation entirely, matches Excalibur's durability and cutting power, yet lacks its extraordinary mana-generation qualities.

It makes up for this loss in its more tangible properties, such as its far greater weight of almost ten tons. It strikes with deceptive swiftness, countering Excalibur's mana-infused properties.

Bang! Clang! Clang!

Hope swiftly attacks the drone, and Jason counters by swinging his sword against Hope's. The two of them trade several slashes, with Hope aiming for killing blows with every attack, while Jason responds with perfectly aimed slashes and follow-ups that deflect or bat aside Hope's vicious strikes.

In the span of less than a minute, the two men trade blows several dozen times, with Hope sprouting wings and flying around Jason, circling the drone like a hawk. He repeatedly attacks when he spots a moment of weakness, but Jason always sees the attack coming and deflects it at the last second.

"Hope. I'm trying to give you a chance here." Jason warns. "I've been watching you for years. You've been slowly going mad, acting less and less like yourself. You aren't acting like the man Amelia would want you to be!"

"Don't weaponize my wife, you piece of shit." Hope fires back, summoning power onto Excalibur to try and cut through Jason's sword. He fails, and Jason easily knocks his slash to the side. "One way or another, one of us is not leaving here alive!"

"This all started after Gressil captured you." Jason says, ignoring Hope's words. "After he kidnapped you, tortured you, and left you limbless on that table. I know you blame me for what happened, but it was clearly him who did that! Don't let Gressil manipulate your thoughts! You're better than this!"

Hope's eye twitches. He feels a pang of agony in his chest at the reminder of that horrifying ordeal. This causes his anger to intensify.

"You DARE mention that?! Fuck you, Jason! FUCK you! How can you speak of something so casually when you know NOTHING about my suffering?! I'm a better Wordsmith than you because my psyche was forged in the fires of pain and agony! You're a soft weakling who fights through proxies!"

A brief silence follows as the two men again trade five attacks, then five more, neither making any headway.

"You speak of 'forging' as if your trauma made you stronger." Jason says emotionlessly. "But what if that's not the truth at all? What if instead it broke you? What if it made you weaker than before? Can you argue otherwise?"

"I don't need to argue with you. You're an insect." Hope sneers. "I'll let my sword do the talking."

Secretly, Hope sends a surge of spiritual energy into a necklace hidden under his clothes. On this necklace, several dozen tiny objects hang, attached by a string empowered via Wordsmithing. Rather than calling it a 'string', it would be more accurate to call it a strand of Wordsmithium fashioned in the design of a string.

And these tiny objects are not pieces of jewelry, but instead, shrunken Heroic Artifacts!

Hope's trickle of mana taps into one of those artifacts, a tiny walking staff that once belonged to the Mountain Hermit, Jeremiah. A second later, Hope's eyes faintly change. He gains the ability to seemingly peer through all of creation, allowing him to see lines drawn in the air, lines which trail and predict the movement of the Dronesmith.

As if peering into the Matrix, Hope's eyes dart from side to side, looking through the fabric of reality, even peering into the true mechanical construction of his foe. It takes no effort on his part to spot the deficiencies of this mechanical wonder, and for him to identify minor but crucial flaws he can exploit!

Hope snaps again! He charges at Jason, swinging his sword in the same wild style as he has several times before. Jason's drone quickly counters, blocking the attack as Hope swipes at his left side, but then Hope changes his attack at the last second, turning the sword from a wild slash into a carefully aimed stab!

The drone tries to deflect his attack, but due to an awkward combination of mitigating factors, its arm joints fail to rotate at the exact degree needed to fully deflect the blow.

Excalibur slides past Jason's sword and narrowly stabs into the drone's waist, then slashes outward, ripping a hole in its skin right above where a human's thigh would be.

Naturally, the drone feels no pain, but it still flickers backward as Jason takes a few minutes inside Chrona to evaluate the damage.

"Hahaha. First blood goes to me." Hope says, grinning evilly. "And soon, second blood, third blood, all the way to the final attack."

"Nice feint. You actually deceived me." Jason replies.

As he speaks, the hole ripped in the drone's thigh instantly repairs itself, undoing the damage Excalibur caused. But Hope doesn't bother worrying about it. Even if he shatters the drone's body, this battle is little more than a warm-up exercise. Jason can always send more drones. Killing the First Wordsmith is the only way for Hope to truly win.

"Things aren't going to go the way they did before." Hope says confidently. "You can't stall me forever, asshole. I'll find your weaknesses. I'll exploit them. I'll rip apart your little toys, and then I'll rip apart you."

Inside Chrona, Jason's expression dims slightly.

The expression doesn't reach the face of his drone. It remains just as stoic as ever.

"I just don't understand." Jason says slowly. "We're not enemies, Hope. You don't have to be so stubborn. If you just listened to reason, you'd know I didn't kill Neil. I'm not deliberately sabotaging you. And for god's sake, I obviously don't control the Plague. You've been fed a stream of lies, and now you're going to execute me for them?"

"We're way beyond 'reason' and measured words." Hope says, chuckling under his breath. "Your feeble attempts to cloud my mind are pathetic. My ancestors smile on me. They support me in my battle. Can you say the same?"

"I don't have the Hero comrades you do." Jason answers. "But that doesn't mean no Heroes support me. And even if they didn't, it wouldn't matter. I've seen enough here to know the truth about you."

Hope's smile twists slightly. He frowns at Jason.

"And that truth is?"

"You've been slacking." Jason immediately answers. "Your Wordsmithing is sloppy. Crude. You're relying on the other Heroes to empower yourself. I'll admit, it's something I used to do, and probably still would be doing if Solomon hadn't jumped ship to you. But in truth, it's been a blessing not having my hand held by ancient fossils. I constantly use my Wordsmithing. I hone it, train it, and master it to the fullest extent that I possibly can."

Jason lightly points his sword at Hope.

"That's the difference between you and me. I failed before, but I won't fail again. I learned from my mistakes. I mastered my powers. I have become a fully self-actualized Hero on par with my predecessors. I can stand on my own two feet with pride. But you? You've hobbled yourself by relying on the abilities of others. You have no clue just how incredible Wordsmithing truly is. How can you defeat me when you can't even control your own ego?"

Hope's eye twitches. A dark cloud washes over his face as his emotions rapidly begin to boil. He ignores Solomon yelling at him inside his mind, warning him not to lose control and fall victim to Jason's goading.

"That smugness. Oh, how I hate it. If I can't beat you today, I'll kill myself tomorrow. That's how dead-set I am on killing you, Jason. I'll pay you back for every humiliation you've dealt me. And I'll start by breaking your drone's body so your soul can learn humility!"

Hope attacks once more. This time, despite his anger, he focuses all his thoughts on the battle, using Jeremiah's ability to peer through the essence of warfare.

When the Dronesmith attacks, he evades by the slimmest of margins, counters, and swipes Excalibur across its chest.

When he attacks first, he feints, ducks, and even dodges the drone's counter-attack, toying with it and easily outmaneuvering its increasingly clumsy movements.

Before, the drone seemed slick and untouchable. But now, Hope sees that it is in fact quite a limited mechanical construct. It is little more than a vessel Jason can use to unleash his Wordsmithing remotely. In truth, Jason's fine control of the Dronesmith is atrocious and incapable of threatening a sufficiently prepared enemy.

The Kolvaxians lost because of Jason's Wordsmithing. Their limited intellect prevented them from countering his drone.

But Hope is not a mindless Plagueborn. He is a Wordsmith who understands Jason's abilities, so he is able to counter his opponent's methods.

* * *

Minutes pass. Half an hour later, Hope grins as he continues to brutally attack the weakened drone. By now, hundreds of small cuts line the drone's body, with Jason no longer able to rapidly repair its injuries due to how frequently Hope lands shallow and serious hits. And with Hope not letting up even a little bit, he's frequently able to make major gains, learning how the drone fights and adapting to its combat style.

One big gain Hope makes during this period is when he notices an odd pattern in the Drone's movements. Every five or so minutes, the drone's combat capabilities take a massive nose-dive. It doesn't fight as well as before, and its combat style even switches up to be distinctly different. Often, it will switch to focusing on defense, usually with middling results.

During these periods, the drone almost entirely stops talking to Hope. If it does speak, it doesn't say anything of substance, and merely gives curt 'yes' or 'no' replies.

Naturally, with Solomon's assistance, Hope manages to figure out the truth of the matter.

[Five minutes in realspace is 1,250 minutes in Chrona.] Solomon explains to Hope through his Mind Realm link. [That's twenty hours. Jason is probably staying awake while you fight him, and using his spare attention to control the drone. But when he finally needs sleep, he puts someone else in control of it. Possibly Fiona, or someone else within Chrona. That's why it stops responding. They don't want to give away that Jason isn't the one controlling it.]

Hope's eyes flash. [Jason must be pushing himself to sleep for only 4-6 hours at a time. That means, every five minutes, I have only a minute of time to use my Wordsmithing while Jason can't retaliate! But if I do that and he wakes up, he'll likely realize I've figured out his dilation dilemma!]

Solomon nods grimly. [Then we'll have to strike hard and fast the next time he goes to sleep. I estimate another four minutes and fifteen seconds before that happens, based on the previous cycles.]

Hope narrows his eyes. [Tell me when that moment arrives. I'll take care of the rest!]

* * *

Inside Hope's Mind Realm, many different Heroes sit around in chairs and recliners, having built up Hope's Mind Realm to be a comfortable environment, yet also one that provides stimulation via ancient electronic video games, or simulations for them to battle one another and pass the time.

One Hero sits off by himself in a garden not dissimilar to the one in the Hall of Heroes. Jeremiah, the Mountain Hermit, sips some coffee from a fancy cup while looking off into the distance, not paying much attention to anything in particular.

Solomon approaches him, then takes a seat in a nearby chair.

"Ah, Jeremiah. So, what do you think of the battle so far?"

Jeremiah doesn't answer at first. He continues to drink his coffee for a few moments, then slowly blinks his eyes and looks at Solomon, appearing confused.

"Hmm?"

"The battle outside. Hope versus Jason." Solomon repeats. "Your power is helping the boy fight much harder than before! I'll bet that makes you proud."

Jeremiah, once again, slowly blinks his eyes, uncomprehending.

"My... power. My gift?"

"Yes." Solomon says, this time becoming the confused one. "He's using your eyes to fight Jason."

"Ah." Jeremiah says, looking away.

After several long seconds, and another sip of coffee, Jeremiah looks at Solomon, meeting his expectant gaze.

"Who is... Jason?"

"Y-you don't know??" Solomon asks, bewildered. Unfortunately, despite more than a century passing since his awakening inside the Hall of Heroes, Jeremiah hasn't spoken to hardly anyone, including the Knowledge-Seeker. Solomon simply doesn't know much about him.

"No." Jeremiah answers. "I do not."

"Well, I have a few minutes to spare." Solomon mutters. "It's like this. Hope is the Second Wordsmith, and Jason..."

Over the next three or so minutes, Solomon explains the basic histories of the two Wordsmiths to Jeremiah, who in turn remains silent, staring off into the distance while he sips his coffee.

"...and that's how we get to today, where the two of them are fighting." Solomon concludes. "Have you not been watching realspace through Hope's eyes?"

Jeremiah closes his eyes for a moment. Then, he opens them, turning to look at Solomon once more.

"Sorry... your name... who are you?"

"S...Solomon..." Solomon says, feeling the energy deflate from his body. "The Knowledge-Seeker."

"Oh. So it's like that." Jeremiah says slowly, looking away once more. "Are we done talking?"

"I..."

Solomon starts to mutter something, but the complete lack of interest from his fellow Hero makes him feel as if he's pouring the waters of his mental energy into a bucket filled with holes. It's all ultimately seeping out and going to waste.

"I'll just... take my leave. Pleasure chatting with you, Jeremiah."

"Right. Same." Jeremiah mutters perfunctorily, as Solomon trudges away.

Many minutes later, Jeremiah slowly blinks his eyes.

"What a strange fellow. Never stops talking..."

Part 598: The Demon Inside

Recommended Listening

Hope continues attacking Jason, wearing down the Dronesmith more and more every minute. Eventually, as the fourth minute arrives, the Drone's movements change. It starts fighting more defensively, using its sword to block attacks instead of slashing and stabbing at Hope's openings. It stops speaking, and Hope's eyes flare with excitement.

The time is now!

Without hesitation, Hope, who had seemingly stopped bothering with Wordsmithing up to that point, suddenly begins calling out Words of Power rapid-fire.

"Detect! Locate! Uncover! Examine! Dissipate! Normalize! TELEPORT!"

In the span of just a few seconds, Hope abruptly locks onto Jason's location somewhere in the general vicinity of Tarus II, uncovers his hidden soul signature, and removes all of Jason's protective wards.

Then, he teleports his other-self out of Chrona, making Jason's sleeping figure materialize right in front of him! Wearing a simple black long-sleeved short and some black jeans, Jason appears just as ordinary as ever, lacking any armor to protect his fragile human body.

Got you, you son of a bitch!

Hope's eyes snap open, and a feral grin appears on his face.

"DIE!!"

He pounces at Jason and slashes his sword down, but right before the sword can connect, Jason's eyes open. He shimmers to the side, and Excalibur misses him by a metaphorical mile!

"Nice reaction time!" Hope sneers. "I knew it was too easy! ACCELERATE!"

His body's speed increases, and he intensifies his assault, speaking additional Words of Power while Jason smoothly dodges his attacks, the margin of dodging decreasing with each sweep of Excalibur's blade.

"Die! Die! DIE!!"

Hope becomes furious. His quick execution failed, yet somehow, Jason woke up and easily dodged the attack that should have beheaded him.

Even worse, Jason doesn't say a word, merely looking at his clone with eyes full of mockery.

Less than a minute later, after dodging one of Excalibur's slashes by the narrowest of margins, Jason abruptly teleports 500 feet away, crosses his arms, and smirks at Hope.

"You fell for it."

"What?" Hope asks, frowning at the same time as his sneer slips. "What are you talking about! All you know how to do is dodge!"

"I'm not Jason." Jason says, his words confusing Hope even more. "You allowed your hatred to blind you. I honestly didn't think this trick would work, but it did."

Bewildered, Hope pauses his assault. He and Solomon quickly communicate, causing his expression to darken.

"No... it can't be. You're... another Dronesmith?! But that's impossible! I locked onto your soul signature!"

'Jason' rolls his eyes. "Is that so? Wow. My true, genuine soul signature. Guess I must really be Jason then. Go ahead, cut me in half... if you even possess the ability. Find out just how silly you look right now."

Inside Hope's Mind Realm, Solomon's expression visibly dims.

"...He's not screwing with you, lad. That truly isn't Jason. He must have faked his soul signature, knowing you'd try and lock onto him when he went to sleep. He knew needing to sleep was a huge weakness, so he compensated for it. Brilliantly, I might add."

Those last few words reveal a hint of genuine admiration Solomon still feels for his first Wordsmith pupil. Though the two of them left on bad terms, Solomon can't help but feel a bit nostalgic when he remembers the first time Jason stood up to him and walked his own way, refusing to see things the way Solomon wanted him to.

After showing Jason the entirety of the Ancient Era, Solomon thought Jason would finally understand his perspective, and in truth, Jason did. But he also possessed his own unique point of view, and thus ended up not going along with Solomon's grand plans.

In the end, Solomon sent himself to Hope, finding a more pliable subject, yet also one who somewhat... lacked his own backbone.

Unlike Jason, Hope had already grown accustomed to doing what another person said, that person being Neil Adams. Listening to Solomon's advice came more easily for him than it did for Jason, who had become more independent over time.

When Solomon sees his former pupil outwitting his current one, he can't help but feel a bit of pride. Jason has learned to anticipate his enemies, not merely react to them when it's already too late.

Even so, Solomon pushes that feeling of pride down.

Hope is his student now, and the key to realizing his ambitions for someday slaughtering all the demons. Until Jason is slain, he will always be a thorn in the Knowledge-Seeker's side.

"A fake?" Hope growls. "I dispelled all the enchantments! I even normalized your metaphysical state! How can you possibly be a Dronesmith?! Examine!"

Hope's heart sinks. His Word of Power doesn't fail, and ultimately gives him the information he didn't want to hear.

The Jason before him is a Dronesmith, same as the one he's been fighting until now.

"To think Wordsmithing could be used in such a slimy, deceptive way." Hope says, practically spitting the words at Jason.

"The word you're looking for is 'intelligent'." Jason fires back. "A word that has failed to describe you in recent years. You're falling apart, Hope. Your mental acuity is degrading, as if you've been struck by Alzheimers. What happened to turn you into such a deranged conspiracy theorist? Don't you want to improve yourself, save humanity, and make the galaxy a better place for all? We both come from the same source! I don't understand how we've diverged so far!"

"All I desire is to punish you for killing Neil." Hope replies. "For now, that's it. That's my goal. Once I kill you, I can take everything back that belongs to me. All the things you've stolen from me..."

"Does that include Phoebe?" Jason asks. "Is she... 'yours'?"

"She was." Hope says slowly. "Maybe she should still be. Great kings have often had multiple wives. Solomon, for instance. If I'm going to become a legendary figure... I'd only be following the precedent they set."

Finally, Jason's stoic expression cracks, ever so slightly.

"You really are gone, Hope. There's nothing left of me in there. You're a hollow man. A shell of what you should be. Pathetic. I've no more sympathy for you."

Abruptly, four additional Jasons materialize around Hope. In unison, all of them summon magically enhanced golden Wordsmithium armor, becoming identical no matter how Hope looks at them. Even the damaged Dronesmith disappears and reappears, repaired back to full integrity, or perhaps swapped out for a fresh one sporting Wordsmithium armor.

"I'm done going easy on you." Jason finally says, the last Dronesmith conjuring armor onto itself. "You were right. Today, one of us isn't going to walk away from here alive. I only regret that I'll be hurting Amelia again."

Hope smirks. "If I win, I'll take Phoebe back. If you win, you'll get Amelia. How's that sound? Nice and fair, 'big brother'?"

"Like I said, you're too far gone." Jason repeats. "Even if she were the true Amelia, and not a shoddy facsimile conjured from your tormented nightmares, I wouldn't toy with a woman's heart like that. The fact you would? Well. That has some disturbing implications. It makes me wonder how much of you I have in me."

Jason's Dronesmith lifts its helmeted chin, ever so slightly.

"After I kill you, I'll release Amelia from whatever spell you've put her under. Maybe Gressil really did ruin your mind. You've even starting to think like that demented rapist."

"FUCK YOU!"

Hope doesn't fire back a witty retort. He attacks!

Despite being surrounded by six Dronesmiths, Hope engages in battle with all of them, bravely or perhaps stupidly doing battle despite being outnumbered and surrounded in every direction.

This fight will determine which Wordsmith will rule the galaxy!

Inside Chrona, Jason sits inside the Spynet Sphere, his attention on many different things at once. Six tiny spheres of energy levitate around his head, connected by thin threads of magical energy visible to the naked eye. These strings of mana fade into Jason's skull, allowing him to monitor each of the Dronesmiths in unison while not needing to keep too much of his focus on them.

He holds a sword in his hand, pausing every twenty to thirty seconds to communicate with his drones and issue them orders, controlling their bodies with pointed directions, then returning his focus in short bursts to the sword once more.

"Examine. Damn. It's still not quite... Eru. No, that isn't it either..."

He pauses, looks up at the Spynet screens, then switches his attention to the drones, then once again back to the sword.

"Multiply. Examine. Maybe that's the problem. Four is the limit. If I go for five, the enchantment destabilizes... Undo."

Behind him, Fiona and Rebecca sit at a pair of computer terminals and deliver intel about the current situation to Phoebe and a select few others on Tarus II. They also work to begin evacuation procedures, since they aren't certain of how dangerous Hope's future actions are going to be. He might lash out and attack the civilians if things don't go his way, so both women work to move people off-world in preparation for that possibility.

Once more, he rotates through his tasks, while Rebecca and Fiona periodically glance at him occasionally.

"How are you holding up? Need me to tag in?" Fiona asks.

"No. I can handle Hope." Jason says bluntly, not bothering with too many words. He can't spare the mental capacity.

Fiona frowns, looking at Jason's back from afar. To her, he seems tired, even more than the last few days.

Indeed, as Solomon guessed, Jason has needed to sleep deeply following these long sessions of twenty-hour battles. Unlike Hope, who has battled his alternate self for less than an hour, Jason has already fought without stopping for several days, soon to close in on a week.

If he were only piloting one Dronesmith, he wouldn't be terribly fatigued. But he has been doing far more than just this.

Controlling a drone, keeping an eye on the galactic situation via the Spynet Sphere, talking to Hope while waiting tens of minutes for the time-delay to allow him to finish speaking, and testing his powers all at the same time... Jason has kept extremely busy.

Now that Jason needs to manipulate six drones at once, even the lauded First Wordsmith is beginning to find that his mental abilities aren't able to keep up.

Jason blinks his eyes more often than usual. Every time he taps into the six Dronesmiths to control their movements, his forehead creases deeply, showing the strain his brain is enduring. He slows the pace of his Wordsmithing tests to put more attention on the battle, and eventually he sets the sword on the ground, giving up on his experiments entirely.

Several minutes of silence follow.

As Fiona and Rebecca steal glances at him, Jason finally decides to speak.

"This is impossible. It's like I'm trying to perfectly execute six Tool Assisted Speedruns at the same time."

Fiona blinks twice. "What?"

"The time differential," Jason randomly explains. "It's just like one of those TAS's. Wait, you don't know what that means..."

He pauses for a moment, transmitting more commands to the drones before continuing. Then he turns in his chair to look at his spiritual wife-clone.

"You've never played any of those video games I set up in the recreation center, have you?"

Fiona shakes her head. "I haven't. Sorry, Jason. They're just not something I understand the appeal of."

"Well, when I was a kid, seemingly living an ordinary life, they were a form of escapism for me." Jason continues to explain. "At some point, people started doing this thing called 'speedrunning' where they would try to play and beat video games in the fastest possible time."

He pauses every so often to communicate with his drones, but always returns to the topic at hand afterward.

"Naturally, at some point, records started hitting the limits of what humans could physically achieve. If a game could be beaten in a minute and thirty-four seconds, it might not be possible to optimize even a single extra second out of the speedrun. That's when TAS's began to surge in popularity. People would slow the game down to a fraction of the normal speed and play it by pressing buttons at extremely specific moments to perfectly control the characters beyond a superhuman level."

"But," Jason continues, "that doesn't mean games became easier to beat. On the contrary. Playing games at 1% their normal speed means needing to adapt to an entire new paradigm of controls and thinking about how button presses work. It became more about predicting movements and reactions to input rather than moving purely on instinct. If a speedrunner presses the 'jump' button, it could be tens of real-world seconds before the character onscreen actually jumps, meaning there would be a huge delay in their actions."

Jason gestures behind himself, at the Spynet's screens, several of which show multiple angles of Hope and the Dronesmiths, seemingly frozen in time, but actually moving at almost imperceptibly slow speeds.

"It may seem like I have a huge advantage over Hope, but in fact, I have to look through the eyes of six drones, control their movements perfectly, and strike at Hope whenever his guard lowers. I'm lucky that my body isn't threatened by him, so even if he does land a vicious attack, it'll just be on a robot I can recreate and send back out there. I technically have the advantage in endurance."

Once again, he pauses to send more mental commands to his drones.

"Except that isn't actually the case. Hope is fighting at high speeds. For him, it's been thirty minutes of high-intensity nonstop combat. For me, it's been days and days of the slowest, most grueling, most boring wait-a-thon ever put to the screen. I have to patiently wait to see if the slash he's sending at Drone Three is a simple downward slash across the chest, and then react accordingly, or guess whether or not he plans to change the angle at the last instant, throwing my prediction off. If I don't pay perfect attention to his every move, I risk a drone falling to his schemes, which sets me back and emboldens him."

Rebecca nods. "I understand the problem. Humans are not usually capable of looking at things moving in extremely slow-motion and staying focused on those things for long periods of time. It is as if you are watching six different movies of grass growing and trying to predict the direction each individual shoot of grass will curve toward as it grows."

"Exactly!" Jason exclaims. "And even worse, my Wordsmithing is extremely weak due to the distance between me and Hope. I can't cast Words of Power on him directly, at least not very often, because I'd be going into conflict with Excalibur's massive pool of energy, and thus would expend too much of my own. The best I can do is counter Hope's Words of Power. Except if I slack off and don't pay attention to the words he speaks, he might slip a Word of Power in and I'll miss it due to the time differential. It's like I'm trying to Skype someone with a thirty minute delay on their responses. It's painful!"

Fiona blinks again, uncomprehending. "Skype...?"

"Old Earth thing. Never mind that." Jason says, waving his hand.

Another several minutes of silence follows. Jason's concentration slips up as his mind wanders. Suddenly, he slams his fist on his chair's arm.

"Son of a BITCH! He got one!"

Fiona glances at the video feed, where she sees Hope unleashing an empowered sword strike from Excalibur, slicing through one of the Dronesmiths and blasting its internal parts to bits. The clean strike essentially decapitates that drone's combat capabilities, taking it out of contention.

"It's okay, Jason. You can summon another one." Fiona says.

"Yeah. Yeah, I know." Jason growls. "Teleport. Teleport."

The destroyed Dronesmith vanishes, replaced instantly with a fresh new one. In realspace, a look of anger freezes on Hope's face, showing his dissatisfaction at the instant swapping of his defeated foe.

"C...O...W...A...R...D..."

Jason's anger bubbles up, unbidden.

"What a god damned selfish lunatic! He knows I didn't kill Neil! He's just doing all this to sate his ego and right the so-called wrongs I've committed against him! And even worse..."

Jason pauses. He glances at Fiona, then looks away.

"...Did you hear what Hope said earlier?" Jason asks. "About Phoebe and Amelia."

"I haven't been paying attention to your talks." Fiona says, shaking her head. "Why?"

Jason hesitates.

"He... Hope said something that struck me as... a little... rapey. It really didn't feel like something he would ever say, not in a million years, but he did. It disturbed me."

Fiona's frown deepens as Jason plays back a short clip of their discussion for her and Rebecca to hear.

"Disturbing is an understatement." Fiona mumbles. "Why would he say that? Why would he even think that? And what would his plan be to make it... work? Would he pretend to be you and deceive her? Would he expect her to jump into his arms? Or would he use Wordsmithing to control her mind?"

"All three possibilities are discomforting." Rebecca says. "The last one, especially so. As far as I'm aware, neither Wordsmith has ever gone so far as to manipulate the free will of other Sentients. Doing so crosses an ethical line, one I'm not certain they could come back from."

Jason's anger shifts. It turns to a hint of dismay, and then guilt.

"No. You're wrong, Rebecca. I did do it in the past. To Amelia."

He pauses, then continues.

"When Bahamut initially captured her, Kar, and me, Amelia started freaking out. I used my magic to control her emotions and dial them down. I did it for, at the time, what I thought was a good reason. But it created a terrible rift between us. It's partly why she left me and went on to become the Black Queen."

Jason hangs his head. His expression becomes solemn.

"What bothers me the most isn't even Hope's words, or his threats toward Phoebe. It's the implication that, despite how far we've diverged, we're not that different. What if I had swapped places with Hope? Would I be doing the same things as him? Pursuing only my own selfish thoughts and desires? Not caring how they affected other people? Becoming an obsessive, intent on subsuming power from those who I perceived as having wronged me? Believing in conspiracy theories so long as they validated my worldview?"

"Jason..." Fiona says softly. "You can't think like that."

"On the contrary. I can and I should." Jason retorts. "The way Hope is acting now is merely an extreme extension of past actions I once took. This seems to imply that if I'm not careful, I could become like him. I don't ever want that to happen."

Jason concludes his self-examination with a warning to himself, solidifying his determination never to fall into the same pits of selfishness and despair Hope has.

In the First Wordsmith's eyes, his other half has become a blight on the Milky Way's future. A harbinger of potential evil that could become an even greater threat than the Plague someday.

"I have to kill him." Jason says softly. "There's no longer any other way this can end between us. It's him or me."

Jason clenches both of his fists, resting his arms on the side of his chair. He closes his eyes and focuses intently on the battle between his drones and his clone.

The battle continues to rage, ever so slowly. Even with his newfound determination, Jason's attention span wavers. Every torturous minute that passes melts into the other. Those minutes become an hour, and then two hours.

Jason flinches. "Motherfucker. He got another one. Tricky bastard."

"Teleport. Teleport."

Jason yanks the destroyed Dronesmith out of Realspace, then he sends another one to replace it. His weary eyes reveal the depths of exhaustion he's beginning to feel at this slow-motion game of cat and mouse.

"This is getting ridiculous." Jason mutters. "How long is it going to take before I-"

Mid-sentence, Jason disappears.

Fiona, busily focused on her tasks, takes two seconds to register the sudden cutting-off of his voice. When she turns around, she stares in confusion at his empty chair.

"Huh? What the- where did Jason go?"

Rebecca's eyebrows tighten.

"It's Hope! He somehow uncovered Jason's true location. He pulled Jason into Realspace!"

She quickly points at one of the monitors displaying the battle, where a baffled Jason stares, frozen in disbelief, at his clone.

The true battle has just begun.

Part 599: Hope's Deception

Six Dronesmiths surrounded Hope. At first, the Second Wordsmith began to feel a sense of foreboding mixed with extreme alarm. He knew Jason was able to control multiple Dronesmiths, but it was only after facing one of them in combat that he realized just how formidable these machines truly were.

But then the actual battle began, and Hope immediately became confused.

The machines fought with extreme precision. They targeted him whenever he was at his weakest, surrounding him from all directions and slashing, stabbing, or chopping at him with their individualized swords. Each one of the blades shone in a different color, though the performance appeared to be completely identical. Hope took to calling them by the colors of their swords.

Blue Drone seemed to be the one Hope fought earlier. It had accumulated significant damage over the course of their fight, but all of that damage disappeared after Jason swapped it for a fresh machine when Hope looked away for a second.

Red Drone was the first to strike, and always the most aggressive. Whenever Hope turned to face another drone, it was always Red who attacked the fastest, seemingly disregarding its own bodily integrity.

Yellow Drone moved the fastest, backing up Red to combo with any of its offensive movements. If Hope clashed with Red, Yellow would follow next.

Green, Black, and White all had their own purposes. They focused on interfering with Hope's movements, harrying him when his back was turned, and otherwise exuding a threat that forced him to keep them in mind. Even when they didn't attack, Hope couldn't ignore them, for fear of a sneak attack from behind.

Damn... Hope thought, after the fighting intensified for a few minutes. Jason really is going all-out! He's aiming for my head! He wants to kill me!

But that only furthered Hope's determination.

What else is new?! He's ALWAYS wanted me gone. Jason can't stand the fact that I'm better than him. I'm the superior Wordsmith! That's why he always undermines and tries to make me look bad!

With Solomon's help, Hope began to laser-focus on dealing with Jason's drones. Solomon monitored them in real-time, while Hope fought with his mental speed increased to the limit of what the Crown could manage.

In this way, Hope made his first major realization.

* * *

[Jason's robots aren't as dangerous as I first thought!] Hope mentally exclaims, deflecting one of Red's slashes and hovering to the side to evade a followup by Yellow. [The six of them combined are only a little deadlier than Blue was all by itself earlier.]

[These drones are acting partially autonomously.] Solomon replies. [I've noticed some of their movements repeating. My guess is that Jason is giving them specific directions from Chrona some of the time, but allowing them to fight autonomously during other times. In Autonomous Mode, they're not much of a threat at all. Their artificial intelligence is atrocious.]

[Jason probably hooked Centurion up to their internal cores,] Hope thinks. [But I have Centurion inside me, too!]

Hope taps into the nanites swimming within his body.

[Centurion, analyze the movements of these six Dronesmiths. Detect any regular patterns. When my body is under an anticipated threat, make me react to it automatically.]

[COMMAND CONFIRMED, PILOT HOPE HIRO.] Centurion booms. [SEMI-AUTOPILOT ACTIVATED. NOW ANTICIPATING INCOMING THREATS.]

Hope continues to fight. The more Jason's drones attack him, the more he becomes adept at quickly dodging their movements and anticipating their attacks in real-time.

During one maneuver, Hope slips up and accidentally dodges an attack from behind too slowly. A sword slashes across his back, drawing a long but shallow wound and making him wince in pain. Luckily, his nanites deflect the majority of the damage and quickly heal his injuries.

Hope spins in midair, somersaulting as if he were fighting underwater. In the 360-degree field of motion of fighting in space, Hope has absolute freedom to move as he needs, but also has to anticipate threats from every direction.

The longer he fights, the better Centurion's prediction algorithm becomes. Soon, Hope is able to match the drone's combat operations blow for blow, and then he quickly starts exceeding them thanks to Solomon's Crown tapping directly into Centurion's nanites. Hope bends flexibly, his bones and flesh-body acting more flexibly than the Dronesmiths' Wordsmithium-alloy internals.

Slash!

Excalibur rakes across the Green Drone, cutting a huge gash across its skin and severing multiple metallic ligaments. The drone quickly backs off, and two others zip in to fill the gap.

Foop!

The Green drone disappears, then reappears a second later, fully repaired.

[Damn! He's such a cheater!] Hope growls. But despite his complaining, his eyes shine as he realizes there might be a way to use Jason's 'cheating' against him.

Minutes pass. Soon, the battle has reached the half-hour mark. Barely even winded, Hope continues to fight just as aggressively as before, slashing Excalibur with a relentless fury. He begins to notice cracks in the Dronesmith's operating parameters. Sometimes, they dodge just a bit too slowly, or react sluggishly to his unexpected moves. He starts mixing in feints, twisting his sword at weird angles, moving toward a pair of Dronesmiths and attacking one but switching to the other at the last second.

Each time Hope does this, he finds that Jason fails to react in time.

Hope uncovers the truth of the matter.

[I'm fighting in real-time, but Jason must be reacting in 250x slowed-down time. That means he's having to deal with boredom and mental fatigue, while my adrenaline is still running high! He's been fighting me for two or three weeks at this point. There's no way he can easily hold his attention span in between sleeping sessions at such a high level! He's starting to slip up more and more!]

Solomon nods. [That seems to be the case. We should be able to use this to our advantage.]

[I already have an idea.] Hope thinks, a vicious smirk spreading across his face.

He continues battling. When he detects a lull in the drone's combat capabilities, the telltale sign that Jason has gone to sleep, Hope quickly whispers two Words of Power under his breath.

"Trace. Link."

Then, he charges at the Red Drone, meeting its aggression with an even greater viciousness of his own!

Slash, slash, slash!

Hope rakes his sword from left to right, severing the drone in half. He quickly launches himself toward the Yellow Drone as if to kill it, but secretly he keeps his attention on the Red one.

When it disappears and a new one reappears, Hope's smirk doubles in intensity.

Gotcha, motherfucker.

He lets out a wild roar, as if angered by his loss, then slams his sword against Yellow's sword.

The moment the blades clang together, Hope quickly whispers another Word of Power.

"Locate."

This time, he doesn't lock on to a position inside the Chrona system, but a hidden dimension located somewhere halfway across the Milky Way.

[I found him!] Hope exclaims. [That sneaky bastard, he didn't hide Chrona inside Tarus II's voidspace. I don't know where it is exactly, but it's about 12,000 lightyears from here.]

Solomon smiles. [And what are you going to do with this information?]

Hope doesn't even bother responding inside his mind.

"Recall."

The moment Hope speaks the Word of Power, his eyes snap open as Jason materializes a few feet away, clearly in the middle of a sentence about to say something.

Hope doesn't hesitate. Before Jason can get his bearings, Hope lunges at him and swings the sword downward at Jason's neck, intending to diagonally cut him in half from the shoulder to the hip.

Unfortunately, even a mere second in Realspace is 250 inside Chrona...

Jason's body instantly flickers backward 100 meters. Hope's slash completely misses, making him cut at nothing. He stumbles in midair, his body spinning from the accumulated momentum that failed to disperse on impact.

"Damn you!" Hope exclaims. "I was so close!!"

He quickly reorients himself and faces his other half, firing off a Word of Power to ascertain Jason's identity. This time, his magic fails to penetrate a barrier of magical power surrounding Jason.

But even the lack of an answer is an answer itself. The Dronesmiths clearly relayed to Hope what their internal mechanical parts looked like. Only Jason himself would have a body shielded from the effects of Hope's Wordsmithing.

"You finally got me." Jason says, his tone surprisingly calm. His voice beams across the vacuum of space, entering Hope's ears through some mystical method the Second Wordsmith can't quite ascertain. Jason certainly doesn't seem to be wearing any impressive artifacts or other magical devices. He wears nothing more than a plain white T-shirt and blue jeans.

[And yet you somehow predicted my movements.] Hope replies telepathically, his tone sullen.

"It wasn't difficult. I operated under the assumption that you, or more likely Solomon, would eventually sniff out my true location. I prepared contingencies, just in case."

Hope's eye twitches. "You had no time to react! How did you even speak a Word of Power?!"

Jason sighs. He shakes his head at his foolish clone.

"I already told you, Hope. You and I are no longer as we were. Your predecessors are coddling you. You rely on them and their abilities too much. I, on the other hand, am a fully realized Wordsmith. I've figured out a lot of amazing things our power can do. A fact you're apparently oblivious about."

Jason holds up his hand. Suddenly, three mysterious glowing marbles spring into existence above his upraised palm.

"Here's your first lesson. Wordsmithing is magic that works primarily based on your thoughts. The 'word' you speak is only one component. Figuring out this Truth may sound simple, but it unlocked the first step on an entire staircase of my understanding."

Hope raises Excalibur, putting a small but powerful barrier between himself and his original self.

For some reason, Jason's unerringly confident tone starts to make Hope feel a little bit nervous.

What gives Jason his confidence? Hope isn't sure. But it must be something significant; perhaps a secret about Wordsmithing that might overturn Hope's entire understanding of the system?

"You're saying that you're better than me because you've learned a few tricks?" Hope asks.

"If it were only a 'few tricks', you wouldn't be in much danger." Jason retorts. "In actuality, it's a complete deconstruction of how Wordsmithing itself works. I haven't spent the last hundred years dicking around. I spent it preparing for an intergalactic war that could break out at any time."

Jason shrugs. "Ah, but it's a shame I have to use my knowledge to kill you first."

"You can try, Jason." Hope says, as Excalibur's mana surges into his body, causing his eyes to glow. "You can try."

The three magical marbles of light vanish from Jason's palm. One second later, golden Wordsmithium armor appears on his body, followed immediately by a sword that perfectly replicates Excalibur's appearance jumping into his grasp. Finally, hundreds of glowing red lines etch themselves onto Jason's armor, giving it a bloody and intimidating air...

Two seconds later, both Wordsmiths leap forward in unison, ready to finally duel each other to the death.

Inside the Hall of Heroes.

Amelia and her three children stand next to a scrying orb controlled by Solomon. This orb projects a scene of the battle in Realspace, slowed down a hundred times, allowing them to follow what's happening as the battle between the Wordsmiths begins.

"Mom. Is dad going to win?" Blake, her youngest, asks.

He pauses waiting for an answer. When one doesn't come, he turns to look at her, only to see a distant look on her face.

"...Mom? Mom? Are you okay?"

Amelia blinks her eyes. A profound look of sadness washes over her face. She quickly hides her expression with the palm of her hand.

"It's... it's nothing. I- I just... I don't like the way this battle has played out. Hope isn't himself. He's gone crazy over killing Jason. His hatred.. it's too much."

Across the table, Levi and Mandy also watch the holographic projection of the battle. Unlike Jason, Hope does not have a Spynet of his own, but the mystical Scrying Station is able to project anything Solomon sees, as well as the vision of Jepthath's Legionnaires.

"Mother... are you thinking about what father said earlier?" Levi asks.

"I am. I can't stop." Amelia mutters, lowering her hand. She stares at the floor, appearing defeated. "Jason... called me a false image of Amelia. He's right. I'm not really her. I don't know who I am. And your father... what he said about me, and Phoebe... is that all we are to him? Merely objects for him to possess?"

Mandy appears discomforted by her mother's words. She massages her arm absentmindedly.

"Dad... didn't mean it, mom. He didn't. He was just saying those things to get under Uncle Jason's skin. They aren't really going to kill each other. Once dad lets out his aggression and finally answers who is the strongest Wordsmith, this will all be over."

A moment of silence follows.

"Is that true?" Blake asks. "Will dad stop before it's too late?"

"I... don't think so." Amelia says softly. "Your father... isn't bluffing. He really wants Jason dead. And what he said about Phoebe... I don't think Jason's going to let him off, either."

She sighs.

"I didn't want it to be like this. Constantly fighting among ourselves. Humans killing humans. We need to unite, especially after the attack on Maiura. How can Hope be so stubborn? It clearly wasn't Jason who killed Neil."

"I disagree." Levi says, injecting his own opinion into the discussion. "Jason had the means and the motive. Is Neil a clumsy person? No. Him tripping over his own feet was too out of place. Someone had to have made him do it. A single Word of Power would do the trick, and we'd have no way to detect it. I think Jason is doing all of this deliberately. He wants to eliminate our father and clean things up so there's only one Wordsmith left."

"No way!" Blake exclaims. "Uncle Jason wouldn't do that! He's not a mean guy! He's really nice!"

"He's been inside Chrona for two hundred years." Mandy says softly. "Even I'm nowhere near that old. I'm only fifty, and I already feel very different to how I was when I was twenty. We've barely interacted with Jason over all the years of his life. Who knows how much he's changed? Maybe he started to see dad as a threat."

"Exactly." Levi says with a nod of his head. "Mom, whatever feelings you might have about Jason, Hope is our dad and your husband. We have to root for him."

Amelia falls silent. She stares at the slow motion image of Hope and Jason clanging their swords together.

With a shake of her head, she turns and walks away. "I can't watch."

Her children stare at her as she walks out and leaves, a myriad of emotions playing upon their faces. She doesn't even look at them, instead making her way back to her bedroom.

Once inside, Amelia locks the door behind herself. She walks over to the corner of the room and sits on the floor in the corner, her back against the wall. She pulls up her legs and rests her forehead on her knees.

"I don't want Hope to die." Amelia says to nobody in particular. "I don't want Jason to die either. I'm so... so tired of being weak. Always too weak to change anything. I have to face the truth. I'm not the Black Queen. I never was. Jason's right. I'm nothing. A shell of a person Hope loved. I wanted to please him. I told him to make me into his dream woman. But in the end, he doesn't even really care about me. He wants Phoebe. He wants the real Amelia."

Amelia's eyes darken.

"I don't even know what I want anymore. I don't know what I desire. I want to be happy with Hope. But I'm not good enough for him. I'm just an accessory. A mother for his children. What if he doesn't love me at all? What if he never did?"

Amelia glances at a mirror on the wall, a mirror which reflects a strangely twisted version of herself. A mirror image that doesn't appear to her as it does to other people.

"...What do you think? What should I do? How can I become a person he loves? Is that even what I actually want?"

"I don't know. I don't know. Stop asking me. I don't know what I want. I don't even know who I am."

Tears well up in Amelia's eyes. Her lips quiver as she stifles a sob.

"Ugh... huu... I don't... I don't want him to die. But I can't change his fate! I'm not strong enough. I'm a pedestrian, observing from afar. The universe does what it wants, and I'm helpless. I'm completely helpless!"

Tears stream down her face. She wipes at her eyes, grits her teeth, and slams her fists against the carpet. The impact lets out a soft thud.

"I can't be a damsel in distress! Even if I'm not really Amelia, I still feel like I'm her! I have her memories! I must have a part of her IN me! Even if it's just a tiny sliver of her soul!"

Amelia's eyes redden. A sense of agitation builds inside her heart.

"That's... that's it! That's what I want! I want Hope to love me! I want to be someone he can love! I want to BECOME Amelia! But how can I do it? HOW??"

Her agitation grows stronger. She clenches her fists and presses them against the side of her head, rocking her body from side to side as she talks.

"I can feel it. Something! It's close. So close! There's a piece of Amelia still there! Something about her that I can tap into! It's not my imagination! It's really there! A second voice! It must be her!"

Amelia's expression becomes a little giddy. She wipes the last of her tears away, concentrating even harder on the strange sensation she's feeling.

"So... close... almost there-"

Foop!

Abruptly, Amelia disappears from the corner of the room, seemingly teleporting two feet forward.

As her surroundings abruptly change, even if only by a small amount, Amelia gasps.

"What?! I did something! How did I do that? What's going-"

Foop!

She teleports again. This time, she appears atop the middle of her bed, making her feel even more disoriented.

"What? What's going on? No... this isn't right. This isn't Amelia's power. It's something else. It's almost like I'm-"

Foop!

Amelia vanishes again.

But this time, she doesn't reappear.

The room falls silent.

Several hours pass before Amelia's children come to check on her.

All of them end up leaving while scratching their heads, looking as confused as anyone would be in such a situation.

Where did their mother go?

Part 600: Shocking Testimony

Recommended Listening

Unarin stands inside his Sanctum, alongside Dosena. The glint of many ancient pieces of art on the walls do not draw Unarin's attention as they usually would. Instead, his thoughts dwell on the rather sudden and unexpected battle between the two Wordsmiths, a battle he did not see coming but which also isn't entirely out of his expectations. Naturally, he noticed some tensions building between them in the past, but he could never fully account for the thoughts they were secretly holding within their time-accelerated domains.

The two highest Founders wait for a while until the individuals they've been expecting finally arrive.

The doors to Unarin's Sanctum slowly open, and two Psions enter. Executor Riley, and Executor Sartran.

They did not teleport inside, because that would be extremely disrespectful to the First Founder's authority. In the Volgrim Empire, none may enter his Sanctum without permission. Not even the highest of High Psions. Only three individuals have obtained such a special privilege, those being Founder Dosena, Muuxunuu, and Unarin's brother, Randis.

Not even the other three Founders possess the right to desecrate Unarin's Sanctum without permission. This therefore stands as a testament to the rest of the Empire on just how intimate Unarin's relation is to the other three. He even considers Dosena to be as close to him as his own family.

The Executors enter, agitation visible on their faces. Clearly, after the battle on Maiura, they did not anticipate that the two Wordsmiths would suddenly pounce at each other's throats.

Unarin faintly frowns. "Where is Creator Demila?"

Sartran bows his head. [Apologies, First Founder. After the battle, I dispatched her to check the situation on Tarus II. She will return shortly. Her infiltration skills are excellent.]

"I see." Unarin says, his tone plain. "I am interested in her perspective. She has been watching the humans for longer than the rest of you combined. She may be able to shed light on this new development."

[Are we going to intervene?] Riley asks.

Unarin remains silent for a time. He stares at her, his face giving away no clues as to his inner thoughts.

"...That will depend on any useful details you can give me, as well as Demila. Start by recounting the events on Maiura. Leave out nothing."

Sartran lifts his head. [With permission, I will transmit a psio-burst.]

Unarin nods. "To Dosena. Both of you."

The High Psions nod. They open up their minds and instantly transmit every single piece of information they collected during the battle on Maiura. Using her super-accelerated mind, Dosena finds it utterly trivial to sort through a mere few hours worth of memories, collecting and assessing each point one-by-one.

After checking to ensure none of the information is compromised, and also that none of the High Psions have been compromised, Dosena transmits a nearly identical data-burst to Unarin. It would not be acceptable for anyone but her to do this, for Unarin does not trust any other Psion with slipping information directly into his mind.

Not that they could, even if they wanted to. As a practitioner of the Mind of Void, Unarin's ability to resist Psionic mental links is powerful to the extreme. Over the eons, only Dosena has mentally communicated with him enough to bypass some of his filters.

A minute later, after Unarin silently receives Dosena's transmission, he finishes digesting all of the new information. His expression becomes inscrutable.

"As I suspected. There does indeed seem to be a sinister intelligence lurking within the heart of the swarm. It is not as mindless as it purports to be."

Unarin falls silent again for a few moments.

"The matter of Kolvaxians hiding their Psionic abilities is alarming. We must now assume that they are capable of deep planning and plotting. It is very likely the Executor Plaguehosts are feigning weakness. They are capable of fighting at the 8th Level of Psionics. They merely choose not to do so in order to make us complacent. From now on, we must assume that they will reveal this capability in a future battle."

[I have my own thoughts on the matter.] Dosena interjects, her voice plain. [I believe it is possible, perhaps even likely, that the Plague can replicate the same host over multiple instances. The swarm has never shown this to be possible, but if we assume it is, then we could see ten copies of Executor Huron appear within Milky Way space all at once. Perhaps even a hundred copies, a thousand, or millions.]

"That is a terrifying thought." Unarin mutters. "If true, then this war is already lost. The Plague will be unstoppable. There is no point in entertaining such thoughts. We already know that killing a unique Plaguehost, such as Sartran's doppelganger, will cause it to regenerate elsewhere. I prefer we assume that only one of these individuals may appear at any given time. Anything else is a gross violation of the laws of Cosmic Conservation. I refuse to believe Akasha would allow any Ruler to create such an unstoppable army."

Dosena doesn't retort. Even she believes this to be a step too far, and would simply mean that the war is lost. The Second Founder might be powerful, but not even she could defeat a thousand of Huron's clones attacking her all at once. Her best option at that point would be to flee for her life.

At that point, why even bother fighting anymore? The Volgrim might as well start hiding in pocket dimensions or fleeing into the Unknown.

Unarin begins pacing back and forth, allowing his thoughts to wander.

"The matter with Neil Adams is... troublesome. I spoke to him on this very day, and was even beginning to make plans to deepen our collaboration. He was wiser than I expected, though burdened by his hatred of demons. I still believed we could work together to achieve greater things."

"For him to abruptly stumble and fall over his feet like a clown... it seems there was some external intervention involved. Creator Demila was the closest during that event. Let us wait to hear her testimony before I make any final decisions."

Unarin's eyes betray no emotion, but internally, he already has a suspect in mind.

It was Demila, not Jason, who caused Neil's death. Hope Hiro jumped to a different conclusion because of his hatred of Jason, but the matter is all too clear to me, as it must be to Jason. But why would Demila kill Neil Adams? Especially without my permission? I shall give her a chance to explain herself before I render judgment.

A flicker of killing intent flashes through Unarin's heart. This unruly subordinate failed to capture Gressil and has reported only the most useless information until now. She caused a major diplomatic incident, and it could cause a huge rift between humanity and the Volgrim.

To do all of that without Unarin's permission, she had better have a good reason!

The First Founder does not tolerate insubordination.

Unarin and the Psions engage in further small talk, dissecting the events of that day, as well as discussing several key losses. The deaths of the Archangels genuinely surprise Unarin the most. How could Raphael allow his foolish sister to blunder into the Kolvaxian's claws? Unarin begins to wonder what sorts of powers the swarm will obtain once it digests Archangel Uriel completely.

Twenty minutes later, Creator Demila arrives back on Volgarius, traveling to it via a Warpgate. She hurries to the Founder's Thumb as quickly as possible, causing Dosena to frown as she senses the rapid approach of her junior.

[Something isn't right.] Dosena remarks privately to Unarin. [Her emotions are unstable. She is uncharacteristically anxious.]

Unarin narrows his eyes.

"Is that so..."

Not even a minute later, Creator Demila teleports just outside the Sanctum. She waits, her body trembling, until Unarin motions with his hand. Then, she power-walks inside.

After entering, and before Unarin can say anything else, Creator Demila quickly drops to one knee and bows her head deeply while slapping a hand over her heart.

[Founders, forgive me! I acted without permission!]

Unarin blinks. This wasn't what he expected.

"Elaborate." Unarin says, drawing the word out.

Creator Demila keeps her head lowered, unwilling, or perhaps afraid to look into Unarin's eyes.

[It was I who caused Neil Adams' death to the Plague.] Demila freely admits. [I did this without permission and caused an unavoidable incident to occur. However! I had a good reason for doing what I did.]

"I should certainly hope you did." Unarin says, his heart flickering once more with killing intent.

This imbecile!

Perhaps Demila might be unaware, but Unarin is quite certain Jason had already established surveillance inside the Founder's Thumb. For her to blunder inside and admit to killing Neil Adams, this will surely escalate the conflict. Even Unarin himself only spoke of the matter in vague and cryptic hints, so as to not give the Wordsmith an angle upon which he could attack them after the battle.

Demila hurriedly explains. [First Founder. I have been keeping a close eye on the populations of Tarus II and Maiura for several cycles. I was investigating many cryptic happenings among the human populace, but it was the battle on Maiura against the Plague that caused me great alarm. I knew I had to act quickly, or else the entire Volgrim Empire would suffer a horrible tragedy!]

Unarin blinks. Once again, she surprises him with her words. What could she be angling for?

"A tragedy?" Unarin repeats. "Speak quickly. My patience wanes."

Demila raises her head, looking earnestly at Unarin.

[The humans have deceived us. They are not as weak and pitiful as they seem. They are developing an army capable of crushing the Plague and the Volgrim alike!]

This time, it's Dosena who answers. [What? Outrageous. We would know if such a matter were true.]

[With all due respect, Second Founder, I am not deceiving you.] Demila says. [I recently noticed that some of the humans were displaying extraordinary metaphysical powers. I initially attributed these powers to the effects of the 'Power Gloves' made by Jason Hiro. But I did not fully realize the scale at which they were operating. Humans have begun wielding powers en-masse. Their deaths at Maiura were a feint!]

"A feint?" Unarin repeats again, reeling slightly from disbelief. "Do you mean to tell me that Jason Hiro willingly allowed thousands of humans to die in order to deceive me? He is not the sort of person to do such a thing."

[Perhaps he was not such a person before,] Demila counters, [but he is now. He has spent hundreds of years inside a time-accelerated dimension known as 'Chrona'. The

Jason you met in the past was far younger and more naive than the one battling Hope Hiro today. The Jason that has secretly aged inside Chrona has been making plans to destroy the Volgrim Empire. He has mastered his Wordsmithing and uncovered horrifying uses that will cause our complete and total extermination!]

"Creator Demila." Unarin says, his tone filled with warning. "The humans are our allies. I would advise you to pick and choose your words carefully. If you do not have evidence to back up your claims, I will have the Executors exterminate you on the spot. Admitting to killing Neil Adams is heinous enough, but if you cannot satisfy my demands, there will be no saving you."

Demila hurriedly lowers her head. [Of course, First Founder. I would not dare utter such accusations without the proper evidence.]

Demila lifts up her palm, revealing a data shard held within her grasp. She allows it to levitate for a moment before teleporting it to Founder Dosena.

This shard happens to be a highly encrypted data shard often used by the Changelings. Normally, Psions would not be able to readily access it, but Dosena is different. She casually hacks its security parameters within seconds, then taps inside to look at the data and images within.

Her expression gradually darkens.

Inside the shard, videos and Changeling testimonies of humans possessing incredible metaphysical powers en-masse are revealed one by one, each item showing detailed reports on how the humans are rapidly learning to master their powers.

But Dosena is not immediately impressed.

[These abilities are slightly worrying, but not one human is shown wielding powers at the Cosmic level. They are no threat to us. The abilities afforded by these 'Power Gloves' are not even a threat to our 5th Level Psions, let alone the High Psions.]

[As I said, I only recently uncovered all the evidence.] Demila explains. [There is more. I believe… the humans have fixed their 'Flaw'.]

"What?!" Unarin asks, this time visibly shocked. "You're certain? The Flaw that prevents them from freely harnessing the power of Magic?"

[That very one.] Demila says, her tone grim. [I have also collected evidence that Jason Hiro has constructed a massive cube-like artifact with temporal enchantments placed on

it. He is using this artifact to train human troops. I don't have conclusive proof, but it's likely he has raised at least one Bottom Cosmic human inside the Cube's confines.]

Demila continues speaking, turning the Truths of the matter into 10% lies, exaggerating tiny details and magnifying possible negative outcomes. As Unarin listens, his heart begins to sink.

"You... state that Jason drew the Plague to Maiura to eliminate Neil's threat, and to give himself a justification to battle Hope Hiro. You believe he is planning to kill Hope as well. These are nothing more than points of baseless conjecture. We don't know his thoughts."

[We have to strike.] Demila pleads. [Once Jason kills his clone, he will have obtained solid control of humanity's forces. He is already building a coalition with the demons and monsters. Even if you don't think Jason or the humans pose us a threat, what of the Middle Cosmic Demon Deities? If they unite behind the Wordsmith, they will be able to overwhelm us!]

[More assumptions.] Dosena retorts. [You have not demonstrated that Jason is able to truly threaten the Plague. It does not matter how much of a threat the humans pose to the Volgrim. We are all going to die to these newly empowered Plagueborn. Lest you've forgotten, they are now capable of crushing our Executors. It won't be long before the Plague can even threaten me.]

Demila falls silent for a moment. Her expression turns as dark as the night.

[With all due respect, Second Founder. I believe you've forgotten something important.]

Dosena blinks. She glances at Unarin, who also appears slightly confused.

What 'important' thing could they be forgetting?

Demila lowers her eyes and shakes her head.

[Jason Hiro already controls the Plague.] Demila quietly declares.

[What?!] Executor Sartran exclaims. [Impossible! There's no way you believe such a thing!]

[A laughable claim.] Executor Riley mutters, rolling her eyes derisively. [Even for you, this is pure delusion.]

[I am not deluded.] Demila replies calmly. [Jason Hiro seized control of the Plague during the battle on Reaver. It was a masterful stroke. He deceived us all. Do you really think the Plague's actions following that battle made sense, given what we knew of them? Do you truly believe the Plague has been hiding its intellect from us all this time?]

Unarin remains silent. He listens carefully, taking great care to separate his increasing alarm from his rational mind. If Demila is telling the truth, it would mean the Volgrim Empire is about to lose the war.

If she is telling the truth, then there is no longer any hope of defeating the Plague. The humans have already seized victory.

[Jason Hiro 'fed' his so-called 'Black Hole Construct' to the swarm.] Demila explains. [He empowered the swarm, but also subverted it to follow his will. That is why the swarm's behavior has changed so drastically. When I realized this, I had to take immediate action to kill Neil Adams. Jason planned to take out Neil later; to slowly amass power in secret while making us fear the New Plague. But the truth is that the Plague is already under his control. Now he has to hurriedly battle his clone, throwing his long-term plans into momentary disarray.]

Demila lifts her hand and balls it into a fist.

[Founder Unarin! We must strike! Quickly, while we still can! Jason and Hope are battling now, in Realspace. They are together, in the same place! If we hurry, we can eliminate their Threat! I do not know what will become of the Plague, but anything is better than having an intelligent mind controlling it to wipe us out!]

* * *

A minute passes.

Unarin remains totally silent. He stares at the floor, thinking countless thoughts. Sometimes, he touches his nose, other times, he scratches his thigh. These minor movements draw no attention from the Psion observers, but Dosena's psionic senses take notice.

"This... accusation." Unarin says, sighing heavily. "The whole time, it has been... pure conjecture. I follow the lines of reasoning, Creator Demila. I do. But it can just as easily be attributed to accidents and unintentional mistakes. If Jason is really as frighteningly intelligent as you claimed, I would have divined so by now."

Demila's heart sinks.

"I'm afraid that, despite your warnings, I cannot act on mere words alone." Unarin finally says, straightening his posture. He folds his hands behind his back and assumes his typical domineering stance. "Regarding the matter of human empowerment, this is certainly minor cause for alarm, but the rest is baseless and would put our relations with the humans in danger. In this time of uncertainty, I welcome a human army powerful enough to assist us in our battle against the Plague."

[Wh-what?] Demila asks, bewildered. [Founder Unarin! I must protest! I know the evidence is not perfectly solid, but surely you can see reason! Jason Hiro has seized control of the Plague, and he-]

"Not another word." Unarin says, his tone turning cold. "I told you before. If you failed to meet the level of evidence I require, I would punish you severely. You have caused a rift between myself and the Wordsmiths. If Hope Hiro wins the battle, it is likely he will find out about your actions and launch an attack on us for killing his mentor and closest friend. If Jason Hiro wins, he might be grateful, but he also might be angered by our interference in his plans, as well as your attempts to slander his good name."

Like a disappointed father, Unarin closes his eyes and shakes his head.

"I cannot in good conscience allow you to go unpunished. After the battle between Wordsmiths has concluded, I will take diplomatic action to investigate the matter of humanity's Flaw being fixed, and I will sincerely apologize to the victor for your vile acts."

[Founder Unarin!] Demila exclaims, her voice panicked.

"Dosena. Take her and the Executors away." Unarin says, waving his hand in a slightly odd manner. "I will begin thinking about how to sincerely apologize to the Wordsmiths for our violation of their trust."

Dosena nods. [As you command, First Founder.]

Demila tries to protest, but Dosena's powerful psionics grab onto her and yank her into a hidden pocket dimension. The other two Executors fall silent, allowing themselves to be taken as well.

After they have all departed, Unarin heaves a huge sigh.

"...To think it came to this."

Part 601: Duel of Fates

Recommended Listening

Jason and Hope don't hesitate. The moment Jason summons his imposing golden Wordsmithium armor, he lunges at Hope, his supposed 'replica' of Excalibur slashing at Hope's neck.

Hope lifts Excalibur and parries Jason's attack. But when their blades collide, the metaphorical weight of a mountain crashes into Hope and sends him flying away.

Jason gives chase, rushing to land the final blow!

[Shit! He hits hard!] Hope thinks to himself and the Heroes presently residing within his Mind Realm.

With his mind accelerated by Solomon's Crown, Hope's reaction speed proves far superior to Jason. The First Wordsmith's movements seem outright sluggish by comparison, especially now that he has lost the boost given to him by Chrona's time dilation.

It doesn't even take a split second for Hope to recover from being sent flying. He quickly shouts, "Reorient," and his body stops careening through the Void. When Jason rushes him, Hope thinks of another Word of Power to follow up from the previous one.

"Heavy!"

His body triples in mass. When Jason's sword slams into his once again, the impact still jars his senses, baffling him with how much power the First Wordsmith is able to project. Each slash from this 'False Excalibur' might as well be a point-blank shot from a tank shell!

But thankfully for Hope, he resists!

The second hit almost makes him lose his grip on Excalibur, but he uses his intimate attachment to the divine blade to telekinetically yank it back into his grasp.

"You're such an amateur." Jason says, his expression hidden behind his helmet.

Jason slashes his replica blade once more, but just as Hope is preparing for another heavy-as-a-mountain strike, Jason's movements drastically speed up!

Jason's body blurs to the right. He flickers to Hope's right side and slashes at the Second Wordsmith, causing Hope's heart to leap in fright.

"Deflect!" Hope hurriedly shouts right before the sword hits him.

Jason's attack bounces off an invisible barrier that hastily projects around Hope's arm, but before Hope can breath a sigh of relief, a strange mirage-like after-image replays, and Jason's sword slashes downward once, twice, three more times!

RIIIIIP!

Jason slices Hope's right arm into thirds, severing it from his body, and causing agony to tear through Hope's mind.

In that single instant, Hope realizes he's been had! Jason's sword isn't what it seems to be on the surface!

"Teleport!" Hope shouts, disappearing and reappearing several miles into the distance. The moment he materializes, the pain of losing his arm surges into his brain, making him scream in pain. "Aaaargh!"

Jason teleports a short distance away, but he doesn't close the gap. He simply looks at Hope, his unseen face inscrutable to the Second Wordsmith.

"You're a disgrace." Jason says, his tone cold. "A hundred years inside your 'Hall of Heroes' and you're still a Wordsmith stuck in the First Level of Wordsmithing. I can see through your shallow repertoire of abilities with a single glance. Pathetic."

Every word Jason speaks infuriates Hope to his core! Hope quickly regrows his arm, and Jason watches without taking action, as if laughing at the thought Hope might have a chance.

"Eat my ass!" Hope growls. "Regenerate! Strengthen! Empower! The hell makes you so confident in your 'superior' Wordsmithing, anyway?! You're doing the same shit as me!"

Jason chuckles softly under his breath.

"Haha. Am I?"

Jason lunges toward Hope again, having waited for his Clone to regenerate his left arm. Hope quickly summons a barrier of mana around himself, intending to prevent Jason from sneak-attacking him again. Jason won't be able to break through Excalibur's barrier that easily!

Hardly has the thought entered Hope's mind when his pupils shrink to pinpricks. Jason dumbly charges directly at the barrier like an idiot, raises his sword, and cuts down...

His sword passes right through the hardened magical barrier as if it doesn't exist at all! Jason cuts through it like a practiced sushi chef slicing sashimi!

Hope quickly strikes at Jason's sword, and he even manages to deflect the blade, but he quickly realizes the attack just now wasn't a genuine threat to him.

Jason is toying with him.

"Wow, nice barrier." Jason says, his cold tone now carrying a sardonic edge. "Never seen that one before. Definitely wouldn't have made a note to prepare for it in case we ever came to blows. Come on, Hope! Got any tricks I haven't seen?"

From the very beginning of their duel, Jason has surprised and startled Hope time and time again.

The Second Wordsmith quickly realizes that Jason isn't playing around. He's been preparing for their battle for years.

There's only one thing that irks Hope...

"I thought you wanted me dead." Hope says. "Why let me regenerate my arm? I was defenseless."

"Were you?" Jason asks. "Maybe. But then again, maybe not. You do have that old bastard Solomon rattling around in your head. I might seem arrogant to you, but actually, I'm just being careful. I always assume you're capable of killing me at a moment's notice so that I can fight you as seriously as possible."

"Bullshit!" Hope exclaims. "You're treating this whole battle like it's a game."

Jason doesn't respond for several seconds.

When he does respond, his voice raises an octave, as if slightly excited.

"Hope, Hope, Hope. Don't you know? Every second here is 250 seconds inside Chrona..."

As Jason speaks, his Dronesmiths materialize around Hope, all six of them! While wearing the same armor as Jason, no longer do they wield differently colored swords.

Every single one is an exact replication of Jason's current appearance, making them effectively a six-times force multiplier!

"Last chance, Hope." Jason says. "No more fucking around. I'm going to kill you in the next thirty seconds if you don't start fighting like your life depends on it."

Hope's right eye twitches. He glances uneasily at the six Dronesmiths that have appeared, then his posture slightly relaxes.

"You know what? Fine. Your Wordsmithing is a little better than mine. But I'm still the one chosen by our predecessors. I'll claim victory today and take back everything I desire."

Hope's eyes shimmer with light. They start to glow a brilliant blue and white as he channels the power of the Heroes he's come to know within the Hall of Heroes.

At once, a series of phantasmal arms grow out of Hope's back. Each of these arms grips onto an ancient artifact, mainly consisting of martial weapons such as swords, spears, and axes, but one of them even turns out to be a bow, and another makes Jason's heart turn cold.

"What the- you THIEF! How DARE you! There's no chance Sir Lorent would go along willingly with your plan to fight me!"

In one of Hope's phantasmal arms, a large crimson halberd rests, its blade glowing with ominous bloody energy as Hope channels its true power.

"Well, on that, you're right." Hope says, shrugging. "But me and Solomon didn't give him much of a choice. It's fine. If you think about it, I can still technically be considered his aunt's husband. He's fighting for a good cause."

"The FUCK he is!" Jason roars.

No longer does he sound as calm and in control as before. The abuse of Sir Lorent, Phoebe's last 'living' relative, her precious nephew, touches on a reverse scale of offensiveness that drives Jason to the brink of rage!

All six Dronesmiths charge at Hope, and so does Jason. Under their encirclement, a furious melee breaks out!

The vacuum of the void prevents any noise from propagating. Without air to allow soundwaves to spread, only the dull impact of magical shockwaves rattle the brains and teeth of the combatants.

Over the next few minutes, Hope and Jason furiously battle! They charge at one another, retreating, flanking, faking each other out while growing used to each other's tricks and throwing new ones into the mix.

Solomon does a lot of heavy lifting for Hope. He analyzes the battle using the mental acceleration of his Crown and comes to an important realization.

[Jason's sword is similar to the one he granted to Corporal Henry!] Solomon hurriedly explains. [It can change 'forms' and wield unique abilities. But he has to change the settings using his thumb, or perhaps his mind. He can't use all of them at once, and the total number of abilities the sword can unleash are limited to a handful or less!]

Hope nods. He doesn't have time to chat with Solomon, not while manipulating his small army of phantom arms like some sort of eldritch horror monster.

Already, Hope has noted down three core abilities of Jason's sword, ones he's simply labeled [Mountain Smash], [Multistrike], and [Magic Nullification]. These abilities allow Jason to take on different threats, but they also might not be the only abilities his sword possesses.

After all, Henry's sword has five different 'colors', and those powers can be mixed and matched. For all Hope knows, Jason's sword is far better than Henry's.

In fact, it's extremely likely this is the case! Jason has had plenty of time to refine and execute on the concepts that made 'Artoria' so powerful. If he didn't have a far stronger version of that sword, then what the hell was he doing all that time inside Chrona?

Powerful strikes impact one another, sending out magical pulses that reach the nearby moon of Kelkin, as well as the slightly more distant world of Tarus II. These spatial quakes cause terrible restlessness and instability among the terrain, forcing the remaining leaders to call for an evacuation. The Wordsmiths battle, unaware of the devastation their powerful blows are unleashing.

Indeed, by this point, the two of them have touched upon the realm of Cosmic power. While neither Wordsmith is truly a Cosmic entity, the attacks they unleash, and the defensive prowess of their armor and bodies allow them to match at least Bottom Level Cosmics in destructive capability.

Unfortunately for Jason, Hope discovers a minor but important weakness of his as they battle.

Jason always weakens his attacks when Sir Lorent's halberd comes within striking range!

As the duel continues, Hope begins deliberating using the threat of damaging Sir Lorent's halberd to force Jason to back off potentially dangerous attacks. When Jason gets too close to his body, Hope shamelessly moves the halberd in front of himself, grinning as Jason is forced to divert his attack to a more favorable vector for Hope.

"You piece of shit!" Jason shouts. "Lorent is a good man! He just wants to paint and make art! How can you treat him in this way?! If he dies, it'll be your fault!"

"But he won't die." Hope counters. "Because you're being very careful not to damage his artifact. Right, Jason? And really, if you did break it and he died, how would it be my fault? You'd be the one who landed the killing blow."

With Jason constantly forced to pull back, Hope smells an opportunity. He goes on the attack, charging at Jason and pressing his advantage.

Time after time, Hope draws closer and closer to Jason, cutting with Excalibur and using Solomon to predict which of the three forms Jason's sword will take. At the same time, he uses Sir Lorent's halberd as his defensive bulwark, always ensuring Jason can't close the gap.

With so many phantasmal arms sticking out of Hope's back and fighting semi-autonomously on their own, the only way to kill him is through a frontal attack. His back is theoretically safer than his stomach!

Suddenly, Hope lunges forward. He slashes Excalibur horizontally, and manages to land a terrible blow, slicing through Jason's Wordsmithium armor with chilling ease. He cuts across Jason's ribcage, biting deep into the First Wordsmith's flesh!

...But unfortunately for Hope, Jason switches positions stealthily with one of his Dronesmiths. Hope only half-bisects one of them, and it immediately teleports back to Chrona for repairs.

"Nice swap." Hope remarks blandly, before firing off a Word of Power to search for the 'real' Wordsmith. Unfortunately, all the remaining six Wordsmithium-clad 'drones' have the same aura. Hope finds that the trick which helped him uncover Jason's location earlier no longer works. Jason has learned from his previous mistake, and now all six of the remaining enemies possess the same aura.

"A cheap trick." Every single remaining 'drone' says at the same time, speaking in unison as they pause their assault. "But Hope, aren't you getting bored of this Basic Wordsmithing battle? Why don't I up the ante and reveal the power of Level Two Wordsmithing?"

"Level Two Wordsmithing?" Hope repeats, bewildered. "What does that even mean? How many 'levels' are there?"

"As of now, I'd say there's five." Jason says, speaking through all of the drones at once. "Level One is pretty simple. You speak a Word of Power, and a magical effect happens. It's basic stuff. It's also the best you can do, what with your clumsy and unskilled usage of your power."

"Fuck off!" Hope snarls, charging back at the Drones once more.

"Seems you don't believe me." Jason retorts. "That's fine. I'll just show you what Level Two Wordsmithing means, and we'll see if you can wrap your head around it without me explaining."

Jason then sighs dramatically. "Oh, who am I kidding? You've got Solomon there. I'm sure he'll figure it out for you."

"God, I'm so SICK of listening to you BLABBER!" Hope screams, as he and the Dronesmiths once again engage in battle.

On the world of Tarus II, the planet-quakes steadily grow more violent, causing some of the buildings with weaker foundations to suffer partial collapses. People and monsters end up trapped under the debris, forcing emergency crews to divert attention to rescue them. Unfortunately, some people end up dying, which results in their souls entering the Lazarus Tower.

But with the battle between Wordsmiths building in power, some begin to worry that the Lazarus Tower isn't safe. What if it collapses? Will people no longer be able to revive?

Unfortunately, this is the case. The Lazarus Tower uses the remnant artifact known as Valac's Lantern to capture the souls of the dead after they first die. It cannot save lives a second time, but the ability to give unlucky people a second chance at life, let alone resurrecting them in the powerful bodies of the Respected, makes it Tarus II's most valuable building.

However, the tower is deeply connected to the planet's core. It cannot be moved except by Jason or Hope using their Wordsmithing, so the human leaders are powerless to uproot it. They have no choice but to pray it won't crumble and kill all the souls trapped inside who have yet to revive.

It's during this time of crisis that an unlikely hero emerges to help people. Beelzebub reappears on Tarus II following the Maiuran War. He hurries around, flying at supersonic speeds to race from one crisis zone to another. Using carefully targeted beams of fire, he cuts through the debris of crumbled buildings and uses his superior Demon Emperor physique to pull trapped men, women, and children from the rubble.

Even so, Beelzebub quickly becomes flustered by just how many people need saving. He starts setting small fires around the city in order to Fireport between them, increasing the speed of jumping back and forth, but even so, he can only help so many people so fast.

"What the devil are those Wordsmith idiots doing up there?!" Beelzebub grumbles to himself as he lifts multiple tons of rubble off a trapped Felaris girl. With both her ankles broken, Beelzebub has to fly her over to the medical corps before he can move on to the next trapped victims.

Beelzebub directs a withering glare toward the Void above. Thanks to his keen demonic vision, he can just barely make out the faintest flashes of distant light, the tangible after-effects of Hope and Jason's battle. But it's the explosions of Bottom Cosmic power that light up the sky, giving him and the other demons the heebie-jeebies.

The amount of power Jason and Hope are outputting is truly terrifying!

"If only I could fly up there and slap some sense into them." Beelzebub mutters.

Unfortunately, his flames will not function properly in space due to the lack of oxygen, so he'd need to rely on solar heat to fly. And as a mortal, even if standing at the apex of said mortality, he is not immune to the void's vacuum. Flying into outer space would suffocate him and cause him to fall into a coma. His regenerative abilities would prevent him from dying, but it would surely be an agonizing experience.

Beelzebub arrives near the eastern side of the plateau. He finds Kiari already helping rescue some people with her oversized bugs.

"Beelzebub!" Kiari exclaims. "You're here! Great! I need you to handle the exobeast uprisings!"

"The what, now?" Beelzebub asks.

"Because of the Wordsmith's battle, exobeasts all over Tarus II have gone into a frenzy! They usually stay in their forests and leave us alone, but now they're going berserk! They've started charging toward the city, and barely anyone is strong enough to stop them!"

Beelzebub hesitates for a moment, torn between rescuing more people trapped in the rubble versus fighting battles against the exobeasts. He ultimately decides to do as Kiari says, and takes off, launching into the sky while a stream of fire follows in his wake.

Kiari has enough bugs to help excavate the injured. Only Beelzebub and precious few other champions can handle such massive exobeasts!

Indeed, it doesn't take longer than a minute for Beelzebub to spot a strange living tree in the distance, one with thousands of vines sprouting from its body. The monstrous and overgrown creature silently whips its vines around, each one striking the ground with enough force to shatter concrete. Humans and monsters flee for their lives, with none of them able to threaten the exobeast in the slightest.

Beelzebub sneers. "A wood-type creature. You shouldn't have threatened my pet humans, you rotten stump!"

The Emperor of Inferno furiously attacks the tree, spraying it with highly focused 3000-degree jets of flame that glow white-hot in the midday sunlight. The tree immediately ceases its attack on the tiny bipeds and turns to face its new threat.

Silent, never making a sound, the exobeast whips at Beelzebub multiple times, sometimes inflicting painful blows as one or two of its vines manage to connect, but typically suffering disastrous losses. Its deadly vines perish by the tens, causing its body to shudder and shake as pain transmits from its scorched limbs to its central core, or whatever vital organ it possesses with some relation to a brain.

Beelzebub shows no mercy. The sight of several dead humans nearby enrages him, and he charges directly at the tree, detonating an explosion of flame energy outward from the center of his chest!

BOOM!!

Thousands of degrees of infernal hellfire scorch the tree to death, burning it to ashes as it collapses into its footprint. The humans who were fleeing pause to look at Beelzebub in amazement, shocked that humanity's former greatest enemy has become one of its most powerful champions!

But none of them have time to cheer. They continue running toward the Warpgate, hundreds of thousands of them, all moving to try and save themselves.

At the same time, flickers of light sometimes envelop families of humans and monsters, pulling them away. Those humans end up being taken to various inner dimensions of Camael's Cube, though surprisingly Fiona also opts to start teleporting carefully selected humans into Chrona as well.

During these uncertain times, she can no longer afford to be as cautious as before. Humanity's existence is at stake! It's more important that the humans are able to survive than that Chrona's secrecy continue being maintained.

Beelzebub turns away from the tree-like exobeast's corpse. He flies into the air and discovers a distant rock-like exobeast attacking other humans.

Beelzebub grimaces.

"Damn. That one's going to be a little harder."

With a sigh of resignation, he charges in, ready to resume his quest of saving lives.

All the while, he silently begins to forge a legend that will completely reshape the way humanity thinks of him...

Part 602: Devourer

Recommended Listening

Since the beginning of their battle, Jason has established a decisive power advantage over his clone. Time and time again, he reveals tricks and powers Hope never thought possible, showing the truth of his mastery over Wordsmithing.

But that pales in comparison to the true power he hasn't shown.

Jason is the True Wordsmith. Over the last 200 years inside Chrona, he has spent that time mastering his powers to a degree Hope cannot fathom. Even Solomon repeatedly expresses quiet surprise at how far his former pupil has evolved.

Jason and the five remaining Dronesmiths hover a short distance away from Hope, helmets obscuring their faces. Even so, Hope senses an aura of disdain from his other self. Jason is clearly unimpressed by Hope's clumsy use of Wordsmithing, and he makes no attempt to hide his thoughts on the matter.

Hope charges at one of Jason's drones, expecting their battle to go like before. Instead, the drone backs away, going on the defensive. When Hope slashes Excalibur, the drone simply flies backward even faster, evading the attack without trying to deflect it or strike back. All of the other drones pull away as well, making Hope frown.

"What's the matter? Scared, Jason?" Hope sneers furiously attacking the clone even faster. "Don't be a pussy! Fight me like a man!"

"Careful." All six 'Jasons' say in unison. "Your 'Neil' is showing."

At once, a change occurs. One of the drones swaps out its sword, exchanging it with a two-handed magical-looking staff with purple gems inset at the top of its frame. With intricate runic patterns etched onto its shaft, as well as golden drawings of creatures Hope can't quite make out, the staff appears no less formidable than the Dominion Rod itself.

The purple rod spooks Hope, making him pause his attack. He expected Jason to reveal a new facet of his Excalibur-clone, but instead, he summoned an entirely different weapon type; something Hope has never seen before.

What the hell is Jason cooking? Hope wonders.

"Truth be told," Jason himself says, now standing apart from his drones, "I'm actually not much of a swordsman. Phoebe and Fiona both still kick my ass any day of the week. I've been fighting you with a handicap all this time. My true calling is actually this bad boy. It will help show off the Wordsmithing you've become blind to, Hope."

Hope quickly examines the newly revealed 'Jason', but he isn't entirely certain if this is another of Jason's tricks, or it's the real Jason himself.

"Inspect!"

Hope's Word of Power gives him no clues. For all he knows, the staff-wielding Jason is one of his drones, or it might not be. Hope simply can't tell!

But at this point, Hope is beyond caring. Whether or not it's really Jason, Hope needs to destroy that one speaking, as well as the rest of the drones. The only way to truly eliminate Jason is by destroying all of his backups!

"Whatever!" Hope declares. "Do your worst!"

The moment the words leave Hope's mouth, Magus Jason acts. He starts waving his staff in a series of patterns while calling out the same Word of Power over and over again.

"Activate. Activate. Activate."

Swords materialize around Jason. Like a swarm of bees, their numbers increase from one all the way to twenty. Each sword acts on its own, like a living artifact. They buzz with energy, revolving around Jason like planets caught in his orbit.

Then, Jason charges at Hope, and all of the swords attack.

A hurricane of steel falls upon Hope. Previously, the Dronesmiths made him feel a little oppressed, but that pales in comparison to the feeling generated by these sentient swords.

One after another, relentlessly, a maelstrom of blades cuts, slashes, and stabs at Hope. His multi-armed form retaliates with a great fury, trying desperately to deflect and swat away the sometimes-annoying, sometimes-terrifying storm of swords.

"Deflect! Block! Barrier!" Hope shouts.

"Activate. Activate. Activate." Jason retorts.

Jason continues repeating the same Word of Power. This time, instead of summoning even more swords, they begin wielding new forms of magical power.

Some of them slash at Hope with thousand-degree flames.

Some strike at him with lightning blasts.

Others bite at his flanks with an icy chill.

Along with the summoned swords, Jason's five remaining drones join the action. They attack Hope from all the different angles, forcing him to dance to Jason's rhythm. Within just a minute of furious combat, Hope already starts to feel deeply oppressed.

Jason's method of fighting is unfair. Truly unfair!

Unlike Hope, who likes to fight his enemies head-on, Jason hangs back, directing the battle from a distance. He speaks the same Word of Power over and over again, causing new and unexpected effects to play out as his weapons change their forms and attack patterns constantly.

Sometimes, the swords become lances. Other times, they change into hammers, both small and large.

[This is insanity!] Hope exclaims, while desperately beating back the hurricane of weapons and drones attacking him from all sides. [I'm.... I'm going to have to take a risk!]

Solomon's tone remains grim. [Jason has you outmatched. Do whatever it takes to win!]

Hope hesitates for a short while. He tries to see if he can adapt to Jason's style of combat, but he just doesn't have the ability to split his attention in so many different directions, not even with the assistance of Solomon's Crown.

Even so, he does finally make a small gain.

[Jason's acting all goddamned coy about his 'superior' Wordsmithing, but I already know what this is!] Hope exclaims. [He cast Words of Power on objects, then 'activates' their effects! THAT'S his so-called super secret Wordsmithing bullshit?! I can do that too!!]

Naturally, even though Hope recognizes what Jason's so-called 'Second Level' is, he doesn't have time to sit down in the middle of their battle and make his own extra-special artifacts filled with latent magic effects.

But what really pisses Hope off is the sheer number of effects Jason continues to activate!

"Activate. Activate. Activate." Jason repeats, time after time.

Soon, beams of piercing energy start firing out of the swords. They bombard Hope from all directions, striking him and wounding him badly with lasers made of necrotic energy that burn his internal organs and make him howl in pain.

Tiny orbs of explosive power burst out of Jason's armor and fly at Hope faster than his mouth can react, exploding next to him and rocking his senses as they detonate with the force of grenades.

Just one of these explosions would blast an ordinary human into meat chunks. If it weren't for his nanite-infused body and Excalibur's aura protecting him, Hope would have died a thousand times over!

Finally, Hope's eyes flare with insight.

[It's time to get serious! Hammurabi, I'm counting on you!]

Hammurabi's voice booms in Hope's mind. [I shall do what I can.]

Hammurabi's artifact secretly activates at the exact same time as three of Jason's drones lunge at Hope, aiming to land killing blows.

The instant their swords are about to strike Hope, he lowers his defenses!

Jason's heart skips a beat. This unexpected move is too bizarre! He doesn't have a chance to stop his drones, and is left helpless as their swords impale Hope's heart, stomach, and cut at his neck to decapitate him.

Shik-shik-slash!

Hope remains motionless. The blades impale and cut him while beams of necrotic energy fly into his body unimpeded and Jason's artifact blades cut at all his exposed flanks.

An instant later, all hell breaks loose.

The drone that 'decapited' Hope instead finds its own head parted from its shoulders.

The drone aiming to stab Hope in the heart abruptly shudders as a powerful attack stabs into its chest, destroying several core parts of its chassis.

The drone that stabbed his stomach suffers an equally devastating setback.

As for Jason himself, hundreds of wounds suddenly erupt on his body, causing blinding pain to assault him from all directions. Tears, rips, cuts, and stabs slash at his skin and muscles, biting into more than a dozen of his internal organs. The pain is so swift and immediate that he doesn't even have a chance to scream.

The wind is driven from Jason's body, causing him to soundlessly gasp, then cough up blood!

"Kuhuk!"

Jason shudders. His mind goes blank as the pain of a hundred deep and shallow cuts and stabs impale him. He nearly dies on the spot!

Luckily, a pre-determined magical effect inside his armor activates, momentarily empowering his internal organs. A wave of healing energy on par with Belial's strongest healing magic washes over him, rapidly sealing up his injuries and cleansing the necrosis that was about to erase his existence.

But all these effects still take time. Time that Hope immediately seeks to exploit.

A hungry look flashes inside Hope's eyes. Without hesitation, he ignores all the Dronesmiths around himself, and pounces at Jason!

"TELEPORT!"

Hope instantly flashes over to Jason's stunned, wounded, regenerating body. He slashes Excalibur at Jason's neck, grinning evilly as victory is finally within his grasp!

Then Jason shimmers away.

Hope's slash goes wide, cutting across the spot where Jason hovered only an instant earlier. His pupils shrink to pinpricks.

He's been had!

Jason reappears a second later, his body fully healed, but his helmet hiding a deep wariness within his gaze.

"You almost got me." Jason says solemnly. "I knew you had to have another trick up your sleeve. Whatever that was, it truly surprised me."

Hope sneers. "An eye for an eye, Jason. You barely escaped death just now. Your pitiful 'Level Two Wordsmithing' is nothing at all. If you think I only have one trick left, you're sorely mistaken. One more slip-up, and not even fifty levels of Wordsmithing will save you."

"I wouldn't be so sure about that." Jason says, his tone even. "But I did cheat a little. You forced me to use Level Three Wordsmithing without telling you. Magical effects that activate based upon pre-determined conditions are among my newest inventions. It saved my ass just now, and I have plenty more where that came from."

Hope glowers at his other self. [I didn't know Wordsmithing could be used like that. Doesn't this mean he can make his own artifacts?]

Solomon nods. [That's exactly what it means. It's what he's been doing the whole time. That staff he's holding is an artifact similar to the ones made by Camael. His armor is an artifact too, or perhaps several different artifacts. He doesn't need my artifact or any other predecessors', because he can make his own. Which also implies you could have been doing that all this time, too.]

Solomon's spoken words hide his true feelings beneath a subtle layer of subterfuge, one Hope might ordinarily pick up on if he weren't letting his emotions get the better of him.

But sadly, Hope is too hellbent on killing Jason to note Solomon's deeper meaning.

During this battle, the Knowledge-Seeker has grown to resent his pupil.

Compared to Jason's splendor, Hope's capabilities are far inferior. His mastery of Wordsmithing is sub-par. His emotions lead him by the nose, causing him to act far too thoughtlessly and constantly fall into Jason's traps. If it weren't for Excalibur's protection and the Crown accelerating his reaction speed, Hope would have died a hundred times by now.

Inside Hope's Mind Realm, Solomon glances at Hammurabi, seated a short distance away.

The two ancient kings exchange a glance. Unnoticed by Hope, both of them subtly shake their heads.

They've already determined that Hope is the weaker of the Wordsmiths. Even if Hope wins by wielding their powers, it will be a net loss for humanity. Solomon would rather Jason continue leading, using his newfound prowess and cunning to guide humanity toward a better future.

Sadly, Solomon also realizes this won't give him what he truly wants, which is the extinction of all demons. Jason is not keen on slaughtering their species, and so he would not go along with Solomon's wishes.

Decisions, decisions...

Solomon sighs softly. In his heart, he knows Hope is the better choice for leading humanity if the sole goal is to wipe out the demons, but losing such a splendid Hero as Jason would be a terrible tragedy.

The best choice now would be to leave both of them alive and continue building up Hope so that he can someday achieve Solomon's primary objective. Once all the demons are dead, Hope's use will come to an end, and Solomon won't care what happens to him then.

[Hope.] Solomon says, his tone soft. [You've lost. It's over. Hammurabi's power didn't let you land the killing blow. Jason won't fall for it a second time. We need to retreat to fight another day.]

Hope's head flinches as if Solomon had shot him in the face. [What?!]

[It's the truth.] Solomon replies, their conversation happening at the speed of accelerated thought. Comparatively, Jason's body seems to move in slow motion. [I no longer believe we can win. Jason instantly recovered from a wound that should have killed him. If he can do that, then he won't die to any of the other tricks we've planned.]

A look of disbelief momentarily passes over Hope's face. [You're betraying me? Right now, when we're this close?! I nearly killed Jason a moment ago! I have him right where I want him!]

[I'm not betraying you!] Solomon protests. [It's just... there's no longer any point in fighting. Be realistic! You can't beat Jason! He prepared for this fight better than we did. I'm loathe to say it, but Jason put his two hundred years of prep time to better use than we did, and now he's reaping the rewards. If we continue fighting, we're sure to lose. You'll die!]

For a while, a time that feels like minutes, but in actuality isn't even a single second, Hope's mind races. He reels in shock from Solomon's words, unable to believe what the old man has dared to say.

That shock quickly passes.

Rage replaces it.

[NO. We're NOT giving up! Just because you've lost your nerve doesn't mean I have too!] Hope mentally roars. [I can kill him! I'm better than him! I have the power of the predecessors on my side! Don't you dare give up on me now!]

Solomon's eye twitches. A cold glint flickers in his iris.

[Fine. I guess I have to say it, then.]

Hope frowns, sensing that Solomon is no longer willing to hold back.

[The truth is,] Solomon says, [we've lost faith in you. Jason has completely overtaken you in combat and leadership capabilities. Jason has mastered his power, while you've floundered. I know it's hard to hear, my boy, but I blame myself. Jason was right. I've coddled you, and inadvertently slowed your own heroic progression. If it weren't for me, perhaps you could have beaten Jason to uncovering these 'levels of Wordsmithing'. If this battle continues, you won't have our full support, and you'll die. It's as simple as that.]

[So. You are betraying me.] Hope answers, his tone ice-cold.

[It's not a betrayal!] Solomon exclaims. [God dammit, Hope! Be realistic, boy! You can't win! You've lost! Your obsession with one-upping Jason has been getting out of hand over the years, and you've said some truly disturbing things during this battle. We all believe you need to take time to find yourself, think about what sort of a man you're becoming!]

Hope's expression becomes ice cold. Solomon's words no longer move his heart.

[You are one to talk, Solomon.] Hope thinks, as his hands faintly tremble with accumulating rage. [You think I don't know what you really want? You don't care about me. You never have. You think of me as a tool you can use for your revenge. All you care about is eliminating the demons. I played along because I thought your abilities would help me achieve my goals... but like Jason, it seems I've finally realized the poisoned dagger you represent, keeping you by my side.]

Solomon's expression turns to stone. [You're speaking in absolutes. I'm not your enemy, Hope. We both have our own goals, but all I've ever wanted was to help you become the best Wordsmith ever! If we leave here, you can regroup and train harder to-]

[No more words from you, old man.] Hope interrupts. [I've listened to your lectures for a hundred years. I've long grown tired of them. Always so preachy. Always acting infallible, as if your shit didn't stink. And now you have the balls to admit you led me astray, yet think I should continue to value your counsel?]

Hope internally sneers.

[I only ever valued the power of your artifact. As for you yourself, you no longer have any real value to me.]

Jason watches from the side. For him, less than two seconds pass in realspace time.

"...Magical effects that activate based upon pre-determined conditions are among my newest inventions. It saved my ass just now, and I have plenty more when that came from." Jason says out loud.

Two seconds later, Hope's eyes abruptly and bizarrely snap open. A look of feral rage washes across his face, making Jason raise his guard.

Then, Hope shouts a Word of Power that leaves Jason confused. It is not the reaction he expected to his previous statement.

"DEVOUR!"

Jason blinks. Devour? What is he up to now?

Inside Hope's Mind Realm, Solomon's eyes shrink to pinpricks. [Hope! NO! NO!!]

His soul shakes and trembles. Unimaginable pain and agony rapidly begins eating at Solomon, ripping chunks of his ethereal body away and melting it into Hope's soul instead.

[Aaah! AAAAARRGH!]

Solomon shrieks in agony. His mind rapidly loses coherency, and the other Heroes inside Hope's Mind Realm jump backward, alarm palpable on their faces as they realize what Hope has just done.

[YOU SHOULDN'T HAVE GOTTEN IN THE WAY OF MY DESIRE, OLD MAN.] Hope roars in his head, his expression turning slightly demonic. [ALL THAT MATTERS IS KILLING JASON. YOU'RE NOT MY FRIEND. YOU'RE MY ENEMY. ALL MY ENEMIES MUST DIE.]

Solomon tries to speak, to beg for his life, but no words come out. More and more chunks rip out of his soul, and eventually, his consciousness fades to black.

Once he loses the ability to resist, the rest of his soul explodes into spiritual dust. Hope's soul foundation erupts with power.

In an instant, Hope gains all of Solomon's heroic abilities!

"UUUAAAHH!!"

Hope lifts his head and roars to the heavens. His eyes glow with hatred, rage, and satisfaction.

All at once, he fully taps into the power of Solomon's Crown. No longer does he need to use Solomon as a mediator between himself and the Crown's latent strengths, allowing his mind to accelerate its perception to a level he could never have previously fathomed.

Jason, watching from the side, feels his heart sink. All he sees is Hope shout a Word of Power, then roar like some sort of eldritch monster.

In Jason's heart, he senses something major has changed. Something vile and drastic, something that his clone should never have done.

"Always running his mouth!" Hope yells, before breaking out into a fit of demented laughter. "Hahahaha! Always mocking me, calling me 'boy', treating me like his puppet! But now who's LAUGHING, Solomon?! Me! ME! Hahaha! HAAAHAHAAAA!"

Jason's heart sinks into his stomach. It doesn't take a genius to figure out what Hope just did.

"No! Hope, you- you DIDN'T!"

"Oh, yes I DID!" Hope sneers, looking at Jason with an expression of naked malice. "Solomon is gone! His powers are mine! I should have done this a long time ago! Oh, it feels so GOOD! So delicious! Eating his soul has instantly made me more powerful than I ever could have dreamed!"

Hope's tongue snakes out of his mouth. He licks his lips while looking at Jason like a piece of juicy steak.

"Haha... I wonder what would happen if I ate your soul too, eh, Jason? You think I'd gain all those juicy new Wordsmithing abilities you've been working on? Oh, what a delicious twist that would be!"

"You murdering motherfucker!" Jason shouts back. "Solomon didn't deserve such a fate! How could you even do such a thing? Are you even still human?!"

"Human?" Hope repeats.

He pauses to think for a moment.

"Maybe I'm not human." Hope finally answers. "I'm better than a mere 'human'. I'm a HERO! A superior existence! The more souls I eat, the more powerful I'll become! All these stupid rules, all these limitations holding me back! So pointless! I should let myself be who I've always wanted to be!"

Jason's lip trembles. He looks at Hope like a monster, a true monster that has slithered out of the void.

"For Solomon's sake." Jason says slowly. "And for the sake of humanity, I cannot let you continue to live. I'm sorry, Hope. I wish it didn't have to be this way."

Hope laughs. "Haha. Just come at me, Jason. If you dare."

Jason's clone no longer has a shred of sanity left.

He's become a skinwalker, a feral beast following its selfish desires without a hint of empathy.

He is a human no more.

Part 603: HUMAN NO MORE

Recommended Listening

Hope Hiro, the Second Wordsmith, and one of only two living Heroes walking the mortal plane... brutally murders his mentor and supposed friend, King Solomon.

The reaction from the other Heroic Souls inside his Mind Realm is swift and immediate.

[You monster!] Hammurabi cries. [How could you?! My pupil! SOLOMON!!]

[Evil child.] Arthur adds, his tone ice-cold. [We were wrong to support you.]

Jepthath is the one who reacts the most violently. [Vicious little BASTARD! How dare you?! What level of depravity have you fallen into?!]

Elizabeth Kindelmann, Jeremiah the Hermit, Moses and Aaron; all these heroes quickly hear and spread the news of Hope's atrocity. They react with shock and horror, swiftly condemning his heinous actions!

But at the same time, a disturbing smile snakes onto Hope's face as countless words of criticism come his way.

[Quiet.]

Hope speaks in a tone so sinister it chills all of them to their cores.

[I should have done this a long time ago.] Hope says, transmitting his words at the speed of thought. Solomon's Crown bolsters his mental speed to a level far faster than Jason's. [If any of you want to waste further words, I'll devour you next. I am this generation's Hero. You will do as I say... or else.]

Inside the Hall of Heroes, Hope's children obtain news of what has happened through their sole remaining link to the outside universe; Jepthath. They sit inside the Central Gardens, dazed expressions playing upon their faces.

"It can't be..." Blake says, his eyes losing focus. "Dad wouldn't- he couldn't..."

"Dad's always been a little weird when it came to Uncle Jason." Mandy replies. "But this... this... even Solomon? How could he..."

"Our father isn't a murderer!" Levi shouts, slamming his fist on a nearby boulder. His draconian strength causes him to shatter the rock into fragments, crushing them into powder. "Solomon must have... must have tried to trick him!"

Hammurabi's spirit, simultaneously inside the Hall of Heroes and Hope's Mind Realm, shakes his head. He lowers his eyes, disbelief in his heart.

"No. Solomon was as honest as ever. That lad was... I wish... I should have told him how much I cared. I let my pride get the better of me. Now I'll... never see Solomon again... that poor boy..."

A single second passes in realspace time. Jason watches Hope, his stomach sinking as he realizes the depths of his clone's depravity.

Suddenly, Jason's three remaining Dronesmiths attack. They lunge at Hope and swing their swords with reckless abandon.

In Hope's eyes, their movements are as sluggish as if they were mucking their way around in quicksand.

With mere twitches and careful adjustments to his body's positioning, Hope deftly dodges and deflects their attacks. He slithers like a cobra, then wields Excalibur with a precision far beyond what he previously displayed.

Jason sends his enchanted blades to attack, but they don't even have time to draw close before Hope utters his first Word of Power since devouring Solomon.

"Inferno!"

Excalibur ignites with a thousand-degree flame. Hope suddenly pirouettes in midair, spinning with the grace of a ballerina as he allows one of Jason's clones to swing a sword underneath his rising leg.

Then, Hope swings Excalibur at the drone's neck.

He beheads it!

Hope takes out yet another of the drones, leaving only two more, as well as Jason's small army of enchanted daggers.

Electrical bursts ring out. Plumes of fire engulf the area. Bursts of ice explode, sending shrapnel flying.

Jason furiously tries to pin Hope down, but his clone's movements are too precise and calculated. He easily battles the remaining drones and Jason's daggers without breaking a sweat.

"Hahahaha! Pathetic!" Hope laughs. "It feels good, Jason! Solomon was really holding back on me! Now I can see the world as he did! Your movements are as sluggish as your thoughts are transparent!"

Jason's heart pounds with rising fervor.

He tried to kill Hope. He came so close, but Hope's sudden reversal of fates ended up taking out two of Jason's drones, and nearly killed Jason from the backlash.

A bead of sweat drips down Jason's forehead. The trick Hope used earlier with Hammurabi was not something Jason expected, so he had no way to counter it. Now, even as he desperately tries to kill Hope, he also finds himself holding back. He doesn't understand the mechanism used to reverse his attacks, and charging in blindly could cause him to nearly die again!

If it wasn't for Fiona teleporting me into Chrona for a second, Hope would have beheaded me on the spot. Jason thinks. I need to find out what his reversal ability is. Is it one of the Heroes? Can it be used multiple times in a row? Does it have a cooldown period? Is it always active?

Minute begin to tick by. Jason works with Fiona to disentangle his two remaining drones while also furiously launching an assault on Hope from afar. Anytime Hope starts to move toward Jason, the First Wordsmith quickly puts distance between them.

That reversal ability can't be active all the time. Jason thinks, his mind racing as he starts to put the pieces together. Hope isn't charging at me recklessly. If he were truly capable of turning any attack his opponent launched back on them, then he'd just rush at me without fear for his life. That means there's a weakness I can exploit!

A year ago in realspace time, Jason began using a very basic ability to 'predict' things that could happen in the future using simple and complex deductive reasoning.

Thanks to the power of Wordsmithing, Jason's so-called demonic alter-ego Smithy becomes unusually valuable in this fight against his clone!

Jason's brain metaphorically revolves like a typhoon. Thoughts collide together, creating sparks inside his Mind Realm as his mental engines work together to examines facts and clues, drawing links between established pieces of information.

I don't know what Heroes Hope has working under him. Jason thinks, as he dodges a beam of holy energy fired from Excalibur. But that reversal ability must belong to one of them.

The fight continues to rage. Jason swaps out his staff for the sword from earlier when Hope draws closer. A second later, the two of them start furiously attacking, with Hope using his accelerated perception to outplay Jason's swordsmanship over and over.

Sensing his imminent death, Jason scowls. Hope's ability to react in real-time has grown explosively.

Jason only has one way to retort.

"Activate!" Jason shouts.

An instant later, Jason's own perception of time speeds up. His eyes snap to the left and the right. Using his power of prediction, he starts estimating multiple different trajectories Excalibur is likely to travel, then he dodges several of them while swinging his own sword into the path of the rest.

CLANG CLANG CLANG!

A storm of collisions rings out in the vacuum, with both Wordsmiths slamming their blades together like a meat grinder.

Hope tries to kill Jason.

Jason tries to kill Hope.

But with Hope having devoured Solomon, his ability to combat the First Wordsmith rises to a level where they become almost exactly equal in combat strength.

Each time their blades impact one another, massive explosions of spiritual energy explode outward, firing toward Tarus II and intensifying the planetquakes ravaging Jason's homeworld.

The humans and monsters continue moving toward the Warpgate, but due to the battle between Wordsmiths, huge valleys and trenches rip open at various locations, creating 10-to-100 foot impassible gaps. Demons and monsters with flying abilities are easily able to bypass these canyons, but the relatively ordinary mundane humans have to take long detours to get around them.

Some people even fall inside, causing them severe injuries or even killing them!

This forces demons like Kiari and monsters like Yamir to divert some of their attention away from the rampaging exobeasts to saving the humans who have fallen tens of feet into the rips in the planet's surface.

But neither Jason nor Hope have any time to think about these things. They instead place every bit of their focus on killing one another, each one praying they'll be able to finish the other off and claim victory.

For the sake of themselves.

For the sake of humanity!

In Jason's eyes, Hope's blade moves ten different directions first, then it moves just once afterward as his predictive powers disentangle the possibilities of multiple future realities into a cohesive narrative. The longer he observes Hope's movements, the better his predictions become, allowing him to react faster and faster every minute!

Likewise, the more Hope notices Jason adapting to his movements, the more he struggles to change up his battle-style, shifting their dynamic once in a while to try and keep his other half on his toes.

"Deflect! Shift! Reorient! Sharpen! Explode!"

"Activate. Activate. Activate. Activate."

Hope constantly uses different Words of Power, but Jason never stops using the exact same one. Since the start of their battle, Jason has almost entirely only activated effects contained within his weapon or armor, frustrating Hope with just how many powers and latent abilities Jason seems to have stored within.

How many goddamned spells and enchantments has he put inside that single set of Wordsmithium armor?! Hope mentally cries out in frustration. This is fucking ridiculous! He keeps revealing new ones, too! All the time! There HAS to be a limit!

Jason's remaining drones hassle Hope from the sides. His enchanted blades doggedly pursue Hope, while Hope's multi-armed form battles all of them in unison.

But at the same time, Jason notices something important.

The other arms are not actually being controlled by Hope. They are manifested and controlled by the Heroes inside Hope's Mind Realm.

And those Heroes have become a lot less fervent in their support for Hope ever since he murdered Solomon.

Jason's prediction abilities continue to focus directly on the battle with Hope, but every so often, he spares a few thoughts for the meta-conditions of their battle, the behind-the-scenes circumstances that could make a crucial difference as the hours drag on.

The other Heroes may have supported Hope before, but I refuse to believe they would continue doing so after what he did to Solomon. Jason thinks. It's more likely they are only fighting now out of fear! They don't want to support Hope, but they don't want him to devour their souls next, either! They're not putting their all into the fight. If this keeps up, I might be able to spot an opening and go for the kill!

Jason isn't the only person who notices the weakening of Hope's combat abilities.

Hope does as well.

[Don't you bastards try to backstab me!] Hope exclaims. [Keep fighting! We're getting closer to killing Jason! I can sense it!]

Elizabeth Kindelmann grits her teeth. She fights a little harder, but in her heart, she feels deeply unnerved by the viciousness Hope has put on display. He is not acting like the same person she interacted with for the last hundred years, but she dares not speak up, lest he direct his wrath at her.

One of the Heroes, however, is not content with remaining silent.

Hammurabi glares with deep, unconcealed hatred out of Hope's eyes, making sure Hope can easily pick out his disgust from the forced blankness on the faces of the other Heroes.

[You worthless little devil.] Hammurabi spits, drool congealing at the edges of his teeth. [Solomon was my most precious pupil. You had NO right to murder him! I've decided I won't be helping you any more. If Jason comes close, my power will not shield you. Let him behead you and take revenge for Solomon's death! I will not remain quiet while you commit atrocities! My era has already come and gone! I won't cling to life just so a tyrant can wield my power like a bludgeon!]

Hope's expression turns nasty. [You dare talk back to me, old man?]

[Do your worst, demon!] Hammurabi roars. [Fellow Heroes! Stop assisting this fiend! We are not his pawns! Each of us is a proud legend of our own eras! We cannot cower to the whims of a narcissistic little murdering bastard just because we're afraid of death! We have already died once. What is another death at this point?! Give Jason a victory! If Hope wants to devour our souls, then let him! Show the universe that we Heroes are not the pitiful little lambs Hope wants us to be!]

Hope's heart palpitates with rage.

On the one hand, he'd love to kill Hammurabi. If this continues, Hammurabi's words will cause the other Heroes to grow a backbone. Should they all stop fighting at once, then Hope will lose to Jason without a doubt. He needs their help to stay in the battle!

But on the other hand, Hope has a minor problem getting in the way.

He can't find a lull in combat to kill Hammurabi!

With Jason no longer holding back, Hope just doesn't have a spare second to devour Hammurabi. And even if he did, he'd be vulnerable for a few seconds after assimilating Hammurabi's soul.

Jason might behead Hope before he could fully defeat Hammurabi in a soul battle.

This would obviously result in a complete loss for the Second Wordsmith.

Hope's eyes secretly flash. He uses Solomon's wisdom to quickly think of a hundred possibilities mid-battle, brainstorming a way he can cow and frighten the other Heroes, or otherwise control and force them to work for him.

Hammurabi's soul is as powerful as Solomon's was. Hope thinks. He and Arthur are going to be the hardest to subdue. Arthur has already started resisting me, but I've wielded Excalibur long enough to take over a portion of its control rights. The sword no longer has the power to easily reject me anymore. But the same isn't true of Hammurabi. If he fails to retaliate against one of Jason's crucial attacks, I'll die!

A vicious thought spreads inside Hope's mind. A way he can salvage the situation.

Fear is my greatest weapon. I can't hold back!

Without warning, Hope suddenly charges at Jason in a seemingly suicidal rush. Jason, about to stab Hope in the heart, reflexively pulls back, which actually surprises Hope.

Hope instantly understands his slight miscalculation. He expected Jason to attack, but Jason was still wary of Hammurabi's power. The First Wordsmith wouldn't want to take a risk and instantly lose the battle.

But that works just fine for Hope. As he charges at Jason, he suddenly shouts a Word of Power.

"Teleport!"

Hope vanishes, causing Jason to quickly look around, spreading out his senses. Expecting Hope to suddenly appear behind him or strike from a tricky angle, Jason is surprised when that doesn't happen.

"Locate." Jason says, turning his attention toward a certain direction in the pitch-black void.

He uncovers Hope's new location, more than a hundred miles in the distance, invisible against the backdrop of the cosmos.

As for Hope, having granted himself a few seconds of reprieve, he shouts another Word of Power.

"Devour!"

Hammurabi scowls. He grits his teeth, waiting for the magic that took Solomon's life to grab hold of his soul now and eradicate him from existence.

Instead, Elizabeth Kindelmann screams in horror. [Ahh! No, no!]

Hammurabi turns to look at her. But he doesn't see her body beginning to dissipate into particles of soul energy.

Instead, it's Jeremiah, the Mountain Hermit, who begins to fade.

The old man who kept to himself, who never hurt a soul, clutches his chest as he doubles over in pain. Jeremiah silently suffers as parts of his soul rapidly tear away, turning him into a paper doll riddled with holes.

[Hope, NO!] Hammurabi exclaims. [Not him! Not the Hermit! You FIEND!]

But his words fall upon deaf ears. A moment later, Jeremiah explodes into motes of light. Hope's eyes glow with insight as he gains control of all Jeremiah's powers, primarily his godlike vision. Combined with Solomon's mind, Hope becomes capable of perceiving things at a higher qualitative level than ever before!

[You SEE?!] Hope roars with a mixture of satisfaction and rage. [THAT'S what happens when you defy me! You want to keep running your mouth, Hammurabi?! Maybe you'll be next! Or maybe it will be someone else! You'd better do your job, or I'll make every last one of you suffer!]

Hammurabi's heart runs cold.

He was willing to sacrifice himself to make a point. He was willing to die if it meant defying the words of a tyrant.

But never did he imagine Hope would be so cold, so heartless as to murder Jeremiah of all people.

The kindly old Mountain Hermit. A man who enjoyed the solace of nature, who kept to his quiet forest and didn't bother anyone else.

How could it be him? How could Hope do such a thing?

[You... you are... a demon...] Hammurabi says slowly, feeling the blood drain from his face.

[What was that?] Hope hisses. [Care to repeat it? Want me to target someone else, Hammurabi?!]

[I... no... I didn't mean...]

[You'd better do as you're told.] Hope retorts, directing his metaphorical gaze at each of the Heroes inside his Mind Realm in turn. [You'd ALL better do as you're told. There's no more compromising here. There's no questioning my orders. I am this generation's HERO and that means you have to do as I say! If you don't, I'll just eat every last one of you!]

Hammurabi shudders. He and the other Heroes no longer feel as defiant as before. In fact, compared to Satan the Devil, Hope now seems far more vicious and beastlike than that ancient schemer ever did.

At least Satan had a 'code' he followed. Rules he lived by.

Hope seems to have lost all morality.

He's become a demon among demons. An archfiend even the ancient devils would tread lightly around.

Jason teleports a short distance away. He immediately senses that Hope's aura has changed again, making him seem noticeably more powerful.

"What did you do?" Jason asks. "What did you do, Hope?!"

"Why do people ask questions when they already know the answers?" Hope sneers. "I enjoyed the taste of a little snack. Now my powers are stronger than ever. You no longer have a prayer of winning this battle, Jason."

"They're not your powers." Jason snaps back, his heart darkening. "You're a thief. A liar. A demon wearing human skin. I don't know what changed you, but there's no saving the Hope I knew anymore."

"I've always been this way." Hope retorts. "I just... held back. I had a little too much 'you' in me. I wasn't willing to do whatever it took to achieve my desires. Now I am. I'm going to become the most powerful Hero who ever lived. Then I'll take over the Milky Way and make sure none will dare to defy me."

Excalibur glows brighter than before. Hope's eyes peer inside Jason's Wordsmithium, for the first time allowing him to look directly at his other half. No longer can Jason's armor conceal his face from his clone.

The two men look each other in the eyes. Hope's irises seem to glow a mixture of blue, red, and green, representing the taint and demonic inclinations that have infested his soul, while Jason's appear as bright and pure blue as ever.

"You're never going to win." Jason declares. "No matter how many souls you eat. No matter how many powers you steal. Because you're a directionless monster, lashing out with selfish greed. Humanity will never bend to a tyrant. They might fear you in the short term, but they will always resist you, even if only in their hearts. You'll have to sleep with one eye open, knowing someday someone would betray you. Maybe even your own wife and kids."

"Just wonderful, more platitudes and soft words." Hope sneers derisively. "Stuff the rest of what you're going to say right up your ass. I don't want to hear any of it."

"Oh, Hope." Jason says with a soft smile. "I know you don't."

Those words weren't meant for you. Jason thinks.

The remaining Heroes inside Hope's mind look at Jason silently. They still struggle with what they should do. Even Hammurabi looks less spirited than before.

But nevertheless, Jason's words strike a chord within their hearts.

Being devoured by Hope is a horrifying thought. Becoming the eternal soul-slaves to a madman is not something any of these ancient Heroes wishes to endure.

But compared with giving up their dignity, their will to live, and their Heroic virtues...

Faint sparks of light emerge within their souls.

Perhaps they may yet have a way to resist.

Hammurabi lowers his eyes.

To think Solomon abandoned this lad. My pupil had eyes but he could not see the true Hero before him all along.

"Enough yapping!" Hope roars. "This is it, Jason! This is the day you die!"

Hope shifts his gaze, aiming it at Excalibur.

"Focus! Empower! Siphon!"

Excalibur abruptly shines with a radiant light, then it dims as that light sucks into Hope's body.

His muscles grow, ever so slightly. Energy surges through his veins. His bones harden, and his tendons tighten as pure mana races into his very Existence.

"Oraaaa!!" Hope roars, lunging at Jason.

The final battle between man and beast reaches its decisive tipping point.

Part 604: Demonization

Fiona watches the battle play out in realspace. Her eyes flick from left to right as Blinker and Rebecca control the final remaining two Dronesmiths. Periodically, Fiona will take over Blinker's duties when the Fairy Queen tires out and needs to sleep, but usually Blinker remains the one controlling the drone.

Earlier, when there were more drones, some of the Psions helped out. Even Kar did, treating it like a game of life and death, though his heart clearly wasn't in the game when it came to potentially killing Hope. Even Hope's recent vile actions only served to ruin Kar's mood and make him retreat into himself, wandering over to the local Chrona lake to sit on the edge of the shoreline and ponder life's vicissitudes.

"The battle is really ramping up." Blinker says, keeping a steady eye on the painfully slow actions of the drones as they play out in realspace. "I still don't know how Jason managed to control ten of these things at once! Controlling a single one is already SO mentally taxing."

"Hope has sped up his movements and reaction speeds. The drones are not able to adequately keep up. We can only strike when his attention wavers to pull some pressure off Jason." Rebecca says, her tone giving no hints as to her thoughts on the situation. "Ultimately, this battle is Jason's to win or lose."

"Just keep doing what you need to do." Fiona replies. "The planetquakes are getting worse. I have to stay in contact with the remaining troops on Tarus II. It seems Jepthath's Legion have sprung into action more fervently. They're really helping speed things along. Hope doesn't know, but he's already completely lost Jepthath and Henry's allegiance. They're working together in secret to protect the people threatened by Hope's vicious attacks. Excalibur's power output is way too dangerous! If this battle goes on for another few hours, Tarus II is likely to suffer a partial environmental collapse. Perhaps even worse!"

"Both Wordsmiths are fighting at the levels of Bottom Cosmics." Rebecca points out. "At this level, the damage they can unleash is terrifying. Since they're not true Cosmics, they also aren't going to suffer any Akashic Backlashes due to the incidental damage caused by their battle. Neither of them has yet to properly Ascend."

Fiona blinks. "You know a surprising amount of information regarding that stuff."

"Not much more than you." Rebecca replies. "Miss Becker never spoke to me on this subject, and I imagine she knows much more than I do."

"Perhaps we'll have to talk to her after this." Fiona concludes.

* * *

On the surface of Tarus II, a few hundred feet from the Western Warpgate.

"Thanks for the assist!" Kiari exclaims, looking at the Legionnaire beside her with a sweet smile. "I didn't know you guys and gals were so strong! Even my bugs couldn't pull all that debris away so quickly!"

Lieutenant Lauren Mallard, one of the higher ranking Legionnaires, nods at Kiari brusquely. She projects a holographic map of the local area from a borrowed T-REX's wrist transmitter. "Let's not waste any words. Buildings keep collapsing, and lives are still in danger. I need you to send a swarm to this position here, and two clicks east on the other side of the city. One of those oversized spiders would help a lot, since we can put their webbing to good use pulling people out of a canyon."

"Sure. Anything else?" Kiari asks.

"The battle in orbit is only intensifying more and more. Lord Henry has decreed that we must all work together to assist the First Wordsmith. We're bringing more Legionnaires here to help- hm?"

Lauren glances at the Warpgate a short distance to the west. She frowns.

"Something wrong?" Kiari asks, following her gaze.

"It's... nothing." Lauren says hesitantly. "I thought I sensed something, but it was just the wind. Anyway, after you deal with those two situations, I need you to join Beelzebub to the north. There's another powerful exobeast rampaging, but it's a fire-type and his flames aren't having much effect."

"My bugs aren't very good against flames..." Kiari says hesitantly. "They'll get roasted."

"Anything helps. Lives are in danger." Lauren answers gruffly, in her usual military manner. "I need to go. We'll keep in touch."

"Okay! See you next time." Kiari chirps.

Recommended Listening

"You're gonna die Jason! You're gonna DIE!!"

Hope's attacks come at Jason like a hurricane. With the energy of Excalibur empowering him, Hope's nanite-infused body operates at a level of peak human physical fighting power it never has before. He greedily drinks in the power of the legendary blade's mana, elevating his skin, muscles, and bones to the highest level they will ever achieve.

His eyes snap to the left and right, up and down. His pupils seemingly leave blurs of movement as he tracks everything in his field of view. Even more frighteningly, his body is finally able to keep up with his heightened perception speed, and his sword-strikes rattle Jason's entire body when their weapons collide.

Jason's enchanted daggers strike at Hope, but Hope starts tanking some of them with his physical body. The magical blades glance right off his skin, due to the enhanced nanites buffed by Excalibur's mana. Forced to go on the defensive, Jason swaps out his sword for a new weapon he hasn't used yet.

Hope watches as, within a fraction of a second, Jason exchanges his sword for, of all things, a bo staff.

"Activate. Activate. Activate." Jason keeps saying, his own speed and power rising in an attempt to match Hope's.

Unfortunately, the First Wordsmith ends up fighting slightly on his back foot. Hope's power and natural perception speed are far above him. Only by relying on temporary boosts of mental speed enhancement can Jason keep up with his clone, while Hope never needs to worry about reactivating his now-natural abilities.

Even so, Jason's switch to a bo staff is not for nothing. He summons the staff and instantly begins spinning it around his body, revolving and whirling it at speeds far faster than any ordinary human could think of following with their eyes. Naturally, this does not apply to Hope, at least not immediately.

But soon, even Hope becomes astounded. The bo staff starts spinning with such deftness and dexterity that Hope loses sight of it every so often, failing to perceive where it will move and strike next.

The two men engage in a brutal close-quarters battle. Hope attacks Jason ferociously, but each time he strikes at Jason, multiple times per second, Jason deflects Excalibur with his enhanced bo staff. The First Wordsmith spins his body, seemingly dancing in the Void as he ducks and dodges Hope's attacks, sometimes jumping forward to smash his staff against Hope's face and body. But Hope also manages to deflect these attacks, resulting in a momentary stalemate.

"Impossible!" Hope shouts. "Swords, staves, magic, how are you practiced in so many areas?!"

Jason doesn't answer. He merely sneers beneath his helmet, an expression Hope perceives thanks to Jeremiah's newly acquired eyes.

In truth, Hope easily uncovers the truth of the matter. In the ancient world, human fighters could achieve mastery of a weapon if they wholeheartedly trained with it for five or so years, even dating back further than the ancient Roman Empire. Since Jason has had over two hundred years to train, he likely picked up several weapon masteries in his free time. He certainly won't match up to an ancient monster like one of the melee-focused Psions in terms of weapon proficiency, but compared to a fellow human like Hope, he's miles and miles ahead of them.

As the battle rages, Jason patiently observes Hope's demeanor. He realizes that Hope is not relying on the 'damage reversal' ability to protect himself, but instead his own hardened defenses.

Perhaps that power does belong to one of Hope's Heroes. Jason thinks. In which case, they must be resisting offering their powers to Hope. That means he's vulnerable!

Suddenly, in the middle of their furious melee, Jason spots a momentary opening. It appears for such a brief window that he almost misses it, but he still grabs his one chance to end the battle.

He swaps out his bo staff without hesitation, bringing back the sword and catching Hope off-guard.

Then Jason lunges at Hope, stabbing the sword right at Hope's heart!

SHIK!

Jason pierces Hope's heart, but he miscalculates!

Hammurabi activates his ability, Eye For an Eye, at just the right time!

"Cough!"

Jason's entire body seizes up. His own heart practically explodes, as if he had stupidly stabbed himself. His eyes blank out, and his emergency measures activate, working quickly to heal the damage.

But not quickly enough. Hope pounces on this opening, grinning wickedly as he swings his sword toward Jason's temporarily immobilized body.

Riiiip!

Hope cuts through something, but it isn't Jason. One of Jason's two remaining Dronesmiths jumps into Excalibur's path, taking the hit for Jason. Hope roars with anger, shoves the drone away, and attacks again, only for the final remaining Drone to jump into his path, interrupting his certain victory before he can succeed.

"YOU!!" Hope roars.

Hope tries to kill this final Dronesmith like he did the previous one, but to his surprise, it puts up a lot more of a fight.

Piloted by Rebecca, a half-machine half-human hybrid with processing power on par with Solomon's Crown, the final Dronesmith is much faster and more capable of battling the Wordsmith, especially thanks to the time dilation slowing things down to a more manageable speed.

Rebecca pilots the last Dronesmith deftly, taking full manual control of its body as if she were there on the battlefield in person. Unlike Blinker and the other pilots, who issued commands remotely, Rebecca doesn't hesitate to sync up her digitized brain to the drone, essentially projecting her own will onto the battlefield in person.

Hope's multi-armed body fights hard, but the arms controlled by the Heroes inside Hope don't move as swiftly as they did before, allowing Rebecca a little more breathing room...

She fights for ten long seconds, buying Jason enough time to fully regenerate from his wounds and snap back to reality.

Unfortunately, just as Jason awakens, Hope finally breaks through Rebecca's impeccable defense, bisects her Dronesmith, and pushes through to lunge at Jason once more.

"No more robot slaves to protect you!" Hope laughs uproariously. "No more lucky saves! I've killed you twice, Jason! It's only gonna take one more time, and I'll be the ultimate winner of our battle!"

Jason grimaces. He switches back to the bo staff, returning to his impeccable defensive posture. Despite Hope's bold and boisterous words, the truth is his combat form is much worse than Jason's. The First Wordsmith has spent two hundred years inventing new technology, spiritually mastering his Wordsmithing, and practicing the art of battle and war. He has learned what he is capable of and mastered his body's limits.

Compared to Hope, who deftly wields Excalibur but has a far more limited viewpoint on the world, Jason is much more well-rounded. Even being weaker than his Clone's physical strength, he is still able to keep up with Hope all the same.

"You're so pathetic, Hope." Jason retorts. "You haven't landed any good hits this whole battle. You keep relying on someone else's power to make me strike myself. So which Hero is it? Whose ability are you stealing?"

Hope's eyes ignite with metaphorical fire. "Think I'll give you a hint so you can turn the tables? Fuck off! Stop prying for answers! You'll never get any!"

"I wouldn't be so sure about that." Jason answers calmly.

Jason's mind revolves quickly. He assesses the battle with the help of processors built inside his Mind Realm, processors which enable his extremely practical 'prediction ability', enabling him to latch onto previous patterns and predict possible future events.

Hope glanced away for 0.73 seconds before replying. Possible tell for a lie: 14%.

Hope did not deny my claim about there being a Hero responsible for his 'reflection' ability. Likelihood my prediction is correct: 79%.

Hope's ability may have a cooldown. He relies on tanking physical damage directly, but reflects excessive damage using this external Hero's ability. Likelihood of statement being correct: 84%.

Unfortunately, Jason doesn't know about Hammurabi, nor does he know about any of the ancient Hero's abilities. Still, he is able to draw closer and closer to the truth every time Hope activates Hammurabi's power, allowing Jason to tighten a metaphorical noose around Hope's neck. If Hope were to understand how perceptive Jason has become, he might even be a little frightened.

Hope is, in many ways, no longer human. He has become a demon hellbent on devouring souls to empower himself.

But in some ways, Jason isn't entirely human himself, either. Taking lessons from Rebecca, he has semi-digitized parts of his brain, or more specifically his Mind Realm, building spiritual processors to handle vast quantities of real-time data. This has allowed him to accelerate his learning potential over time, master new weapons, new forms of combat, and other amazing feats Hope could never have dreamed of.

Unlike Hope, who has relied too much on the powers of other Heroes, Jason has leveraged his own Wordsmithing more and more, even growing to disdain the idea of using other people's powers.

Sure, Hammurabi might be a convenient way to reflect damage, but if Jason were to make his own damage reflection ability, it would be entirely under his own control. No doubt, after this battle concludes, and should he be the victor, he will go on to try and copy some of Hope's more inspired powers.

Eyes that can pierce through any barrier would certainly come in handy once in a while. Jason idly thinks.

While Jason reflects on the battle and other random things, Hope continues to grow more and more enraged.

No matter what tricks he pulls, he just can't kill Jason!

He tries. He really does.

He parries, stabs, slashes, teleports, flickers, pirouettes, and does all sorts of other fancy moves.

But each time, he fails to get past Jason's insane defensive techniques. The First Wordsmith's mastery of the bo staff borders on ridiculous! He spins it around his body so fast that Hope doesn't dare to get in close, lest he come under a hail of bone-shattering strikes that not even his enhanced nanites will protect him from.

[I can't break through. He's too strong!] Hope thinks. [Come on, you useless ancestors! What should I do? How can I beat him?]

But to Hope's chagrin, none of the other Heroes answer him. They all look away, averting their eyes as they continue to harden their hearts. No longer do they wish to serve him, but to see him fall.

This enrages Hope, but he doesn't have the time to devour anyone else, not with Jason remaining alert to the possibility of him doing so.

Hope's multi-armed body presents less and less of a threat the longer the battle drags on. With the Heroes inside his Mind Realm growing progressively less interested in fighting for his 'cause', their arms present almost no danger to Jason at all. Only Hope himself, wielding Excalibur, manages to pressure Jason.

[Useless! USELESS! All of you! Spineless fucking cowards!] Hope roars, even as nobody including Hammurabi deign to reply. [Do you want to die? DO YOU?!]

Elizabeth Kindelmann's eyes twitch. She directs a withering glare toward Hope, then resolutely abandons full control of the phantasmal arm she was manipulating.

[Do your worst.] Elizabeth says, closing her eyes as she waits for her inevitable death.

One by one, the other Heroes start to drop off, allowing their artifacts to go still. Jason instantly notices the rapid decline in movement behind Hope's body. His eyes shine with insight.

Hope is finally losing his grip on the other Heroes! They aren't willing to fight his dirty battles anymore. This also means his back is exposed! If I can just find a way past that horrid reflection ability, I can kill him!

Hope's situation slowly begins to unravel. The longer he fights Jason, the less of an advantage he holds. Jason dissects Hope's fighting style and begins to actively press his advantage, pushing hard to try and create an opening for himself to land the killing blow.

With his back metaphorically against a wall, Hope starts to feel desperate.

I can't kill him! I can't! This is ridiculous! I need information! I need to become better than him, and fast! But how? Should I devour another Hero?

Hope gnashes his teeth. It's all because of his Wordsmithing! Jason has those 'levels' he's been playing coy about, but if I had all his Wordsmithing knowledge, I could easily destroy him! It would be trivial!

Ah, that's right! I have Solomon's powers! If I just touch Jason, I can steal all the knowledge in his mind. I'll learn all his tricks and gain a decisive advantage!

With a newfound goal in mind, Hope suddenly fights more aggressively. Jason becomes slightly confused as Hope starts taking bigger risks, braving the storm of revolving bo staff blows to try and get closer to him.

Decisively, Jason pulls backward, frustrating Hope.

Shit! I can't get closer! That goddamned staff hits like a firetruck! He struck my chest and it felt like an anvil crushed my collarbone!

"Heal!" Hope shouts, patching up his injuries.

Jason smirks. "Ohhh, I see what's going on. You want to try and get close to me, touch me, and steal my memories. Hope, you're an actual fucking idiot. I'm wearing armor. Solomon's power only works on skin to skin contact! But I'll bet you didn't even know that, did you? Sorry to crush your dreams. Say, why don't you try using your Wordsmithing to take away my armor and weapon? Or have you also realized that won't work?"

Jason's taunts drill into Hope's ears painfully, enraging and frustrating him in equal measure. Hope's heart palpitates after realizing he's been seen through.

But even so, he needs a breakthrough! He needs to master Wordsmithing quickly! If he can just steal the knowledge of a superior Wordsmith, then he'll equalize the playing field. Combined with his two new Heroic abilities, he'll have an advantage Jason won't have a chance of breaking past!

But how? HOW?! Hope thinks.

"Disassemble! Disappear!" Hope shouts, trying to remove Jason's armor. To neither Wordsmith's surprise, Hope's Words of Power do absolutely nothing.

"Hahahaha!!" Jason laughs. "You actually did it! Oh my god, you're such an imbecile! Such a halfwit! Is that all you've got, Hope? I can see the end coming for you, little monster! Once I finish dissecting every part of your fighting style, I'll break your bones into powder! You won't have a chance in hell!"

"Shut the FUCK up!" Hope shouts, his words only sounding pathetic compared to Jason's taunts. "You haven't won, Jason!"

"Nope, not yet!" Jason says, as his smile disappears. "But soon. Soon I will. And then I'll finally be able to make up for the mistake of creating you."

Finally, Hope's rage cools. He continues striking at Jason and batting aside any dangerous bo staff hits, but his mind turns deathly calm.

Jason's right. He's going to win if this keeps up. And then he'll kill me. I won't be able to hide in the Hall of Heroes, not for long anyway. If I can uncover Chrona's hiding location, he can uncover mine. That means I have to win. There's no going back now.

A full minute passes. The two men continue fighting furiously as Hope thinks a little, then a lot.

Suddenly, a spark lights up in his eyes.

That's it. That's it! Solomon's power... he had a limitation I don't. If I combine it with...

Hope abruptly taps into Jeremiah's ability. He peers through Jason's armor, past his face, and into the very core of his brain.

An instant later, lines of magic materialize inside Hope's eyes.

Solomon's power successfully activates!

"URGGHH!" Jason cries out, as a painful lance of magic pierces into his brain.

"Aaaaah!" Hope also cries out, as two hundred years of memories fly out of Jason's brain, cross the Void, and travel into Hope's Mind Realm.

In an instant, both men shudder and fall still. Jason's spinning bo staff careens away as he loses his grip on it, but so too does Excalibur fly out of Hope's grip.

Both men float in the depths of space for three long, painful seconds.

Then, they wake up.

Hope's eyes snap open. He coughs, feeling momentarily delirious as countless memories from Jason's life replay in his Mind's Eye. He stumbles slightly, then clumsily calls out a Word of Power.

"Return!"

Excalibur reappears in his grasp, but Hope's grip becomes somewhat shaky. He rapidly tries to digest Jason's memories, but there are so many that he can't quite do it all at once. He has to pierce through the noise to find the most pertinent information.

Jason, likewise, recalls his bo staff. Pain surges through his brain, making him wince and frown as he struggles to heal the damage. His armor's innate ability quickly succeeds, restoring him to his peak condition.

The two Wordsmiths fall silent. Jason instantly understands what Hope has done, and his expression falls. No longer does he smile.

"Hope. You..."

Hope's head spins from vertigo. He looks at Jason, comprehending more and more of Jason's last two hundred years as each second passes.

"What the fuck? Jason, you- holy shit. That's what you've been doing? All this time?"

Jason's heart turns cold.

"So you succeeded." Jason mutters. "You somehow activated Solomon's power. I should have seen it coming. It's my fault. I got complacent."

"Never mind all that." Hope says, looking at Jason with an increasingly complicated expression. "You've been busy. Very busy. Busier than me, and not by a little either."

"I have to prepare for every possible eventuality." Jason says coldly. "You weren't supposed to know about them. No-one was."

Despite his anger and hatred of Jason, for at least a moment, Hope can't help but look at Jason with a hint of respect.

"...I'll admit it, Jason. You are the better Wordsmith. Were, I suppose. That's over now. I know all your secrets. But don't worry. After I kill you, I'll take over and carry on your work. You have my solemn promise."

Jason straightens his posture. He slowly starts twirling his bo staff once again, but this time, a cruel hatred flickers in his eyes.

"I never really thought about it before, but now I see why Solomon was so hated." Jason remarks. "Those memories were personal to me. Emotional. You don't deserve to look at them."

"I understand now why Daisy meant so much to you." Hope says softly. "For what it's worth, I'm sorry for the hateful things I've said. Losing your daughter... I shouldn't have talked about her in that way."

"You've gone way too far to even bother with these shitty, feeble apologies." Jason replies. "Shove any further words right up your ass."

Hope nods.

He lifts Excalibur more decisively than before. Jason's memories continue to play out in Hope's mind as he uses Solomon's powers in conjunction with the Crown to rapidly peer beyond the veil, understanding how Jason thinks, plans, and fights.

"Fair enough, Jason. But it's fine if you give up now. I've already won."

Jason snarls.

"You haven't won shit."

Part 605: The Final Wordsmith

For the first time since the battle has begun, a serious lull occurs as Jason and Hope wisely take a short break to size each other up.

Jason, unsure how many secrets Hope is going to figure out in the next few minutes, but having already started making preparations in case Hope broke through his mental barrier, starts thinking up brand-new counter-measures. Hope might have his memories, and he may have started to close the information gap, but Jason's clone still needs time to swallow all that new information and adapt it to himself.

Hope, as Jason predicts, is wary about immediately attacking. Even with Solomon's power and the Crown's mental acceleration, he isn't able to comb through two hundred years of memories in only a minute or two. Indeed, to fully digest his gains, he might need several months or even years.

Solomon spent centuries honing his powers. He learned how to rapidly filter through mountains and galaxies worth of information, drilling down to key information his opponents possessed. Hope has barely had any time at all to learn how to use Solomon's powers, and as a result he isn't even one percent as efficient in sorting through all that information.

Even so, Solomon often swallowed the thoughts and memories of ancient monsters like the Archangels and Psions, entities who lived for millions, tens of millions, or even billions of years. Hope only needs to sort through a mere two hundred, so his burden is infinitely lighter than what Solomon had to bear when he accessed the memories of the Volgrim's Celestial Designer, Psymin Miralax.

"Interesting." Hope says, breaching the momentary silence. "So it's like that. Two hundred years of preparation time. Even Batman would look at you in awe."

"You have my memories now." Jason says, narrowing his eyes. "So, at the very least, you can see the truth about Neil. You know goddamn well I didn't kill him."

Hope's eye twitches. He flickers through some of Jason's most recent memories.

Then he frowns.

It's as Jason said. He didn't kill Neil.

Hope hesitates. He lightly bites his lower lip.

Then a look of savage anger flickers over his face.

"No. You didn't. But you wanted to. I can see that much. You had several plans for how you wanted to eliminate him. You and Fiona even workshopped a few strategies!"

"I never acted on them!" Jason protests. "It wasn't me who killed Neil. Are you going to judge me for a thought-crime?"

"Heh heh heh..." Hope gurgles in his throat. "You may not have killed Neil, but you would have eventually. So what if you weren't his ultimate killer?! You were waiting for a chance to strike! You still deserve to die! And after I'm done with you, I'll hunt down his real killer and slaughter them too!"

"You've crossed too many lines today, Hope." Jason says. "Even if I wanted to forgive you, I couldn't. You've lost all sense of humanity. You've given in to your sick, deluded conspiracy theories. You blame everyone else, even when the truth is right in front of you. Not even looking at my most precious memories can deter you."

"And you once again talk in that preachy, moral high ground way you always do." Hope retorts. "What are you gonna do, Jason? I know all your tricks now! Once I master all your Wordsmithing powers and combine them with my newly acquired abilities, I'll become unstoppable! What can a simple Wordsmith do against an Empowered Wordsmith?! I can think faster than you, strategize faster, and I'll know what you're planning before the thought even enters your mind!"

Jason straightens his posture. He lowers his bo staff at an angle, pointing its top end at the ground.

"So you know everything now? You have all my memories. You're 'unstoppable'. And you think that means I can't win?"

Hope frowns. He continues to rapidly flick through Jason's memories, to find out what he was planning for this battle, but he quickly becomes frustrated by a simple chaotic factor he never predicted.

Jason made FAR too many plans for the future!

Not only for this battle against Hope, but also for battles against other future threats.

Jason has spent two hundred years preparing contingency plans for the Demon Emperors, the Demon Deities, the High Psions, Founder Dosena herself, and even enemies from beyond the depths of the Unknown.

Using his powers, Jason spent a surprising amount of time trying to investigate the situation inside other galaxies, such as Andromeda, the Cat's Eye, Messier, and other such places. His investigative magic often ended up firing at empty patches of the sky, but in a few cases he did manage to glean important pieces of information regarding his future threats.

All these actions accelerated following his travels with Calanthra, the Fairy Queen who took him through Yredelemnul's Eye into Ripspace. Jason learned a tiny hint about the Truths of the universe, causing him to divert some attention toward predicting future Threats.

But none of that matters to Hope right now. He instead focuses on trying to dig up as much of Jason's findings as he can so he can snatch victory from the jaws of defeat!

Instead, what Hope finds is disappointingly useless to him in the short term.

He uncovers memories of Jason training his swordsmanship, his mastery of the bo staff, daggers, and other such weapons. But these memories mean nothing to Hope, since thoughts cannot convey the full understanding of a training regimen, nor the instinctual movements provided by such training.

Watching a master train with the sword is practically useless compared to learning the sword in one's own way.

At the same time, Hope uncovers the truth about many of Jason's Wordsmithing tricks, but it turns out a huge number of them are heavily reliant on pre-made effects and other outcomes Hope doesn't have any time to replicate! What use is learning how to forge his own artifacts if he doesn't have the time to make one right now, in the middle of this crucial battle?!

But just as Hope has that thought, he finally discovers something useful amidst Jason's memories.

And that something also turns out to be immensely frustrating.

"Jason, you lying piece of shit!" Hope screams. "You fucker! You absolute fucker! All this time, I thought you were 'activating' effects hidden within your artifacts! But you weren't!! You were deceiving me the whole time!"

Jason's eyes glimmer. He realizes Hope is rapidly drilling down to the most dangerous Truths, the ones that will soon start giving him a decisive advantage in their final battle.

"That's right." Jason concedes. "I did deceive you. My Wordsmithium armor only has two effects, which you've no-doubt uncovered by now. On top of providing me incredible defense, it also provides an extreme burst of regeneration should I suffer a debilitating injury. And that's it. That's all there ever was."

Hope's heart sinks. He finally discovers the Five Levels of Wordsmithing, right as Jason reveals a core Truth he kept secret until this very moment.

The First Level: One may vocalize a Word of Power to create magic.

The Second Level: One may cast Words of Power onto oneself, others, or objects to temporarily or permanently enchant them, with different costs and gains.

The Third Level: One may multi-entangle multiple Words of Power at once, enhancing their effects, albeit with greater and greater chances of the combined effect fizzling out or becoming neutralized and worthless.

The Fourth Level: Words of Power are more dependent on Imagination than on anything else...

Hope's heart turns cold. It's only now that he realizes the truth behind Jason's so-called 'Activate' Word of Power.

Jason was never activating effects inside his armor. Each time he spoke, he conjured a brand new magical ability.

An ability that should have been determined by the form of the word, yet never actually was.

"Activate!" Hope suddenly shouts, pointing his palm at Jason.

But when Hope tries it, nothing happens.

"Activate! Activate!!!"

Hope tries to summon a fireball, or cause an explosion, yet each time he tries, he miserably fails. His mana drops by the slightest margin, yet no magical effects actually play out.

"Ha... haha... hahaha..." Jason slowly laughs, an evil smile playing on his face. "You really are a fucking imbecile, Hope. Did you think it would be that easy? Steal my knowledge, steal all my gains? It took me more than fifty years to comprehend the true profundities of Wordsmithing. Even if I taught you directly, it would still take at least ten."

Jason lifts up his chin and sneers at his dumbfounded clone.

"To vocalize a word, which holds an inherent meaning, while thinking of a different meaning entirely. This is no less than thinking two opposing thoughts at the same time. Solomon's powers might make it easier on you, but you still need training to do so. And I'm not going to give you the time you need to learn."

Suddenly, Jason launches at Hope, accelerating from a dead stop to a full-bore bull rush as his bo staff swaps out for a massive golden spear.

"Explode!" Jason shouts.

Hope jumps in alarm. He quickly raises his defense, waiting for an explosion, but instead, his body abruptly jerks and spins to the side, exposing his flank.

What?! Shit! It wasn't an explosion at all! He tricked me! Hope thinks.

Jason slams his spear into Hope's mana barrier formed by Excalibur.

Clang!

The impact sends Hope flying! Jason doesn't use his magic-cutting blade, but instead the raw ramming power of his weapon to inflict serious damage on Excalibur's barrier integrity.

Not wanting to be caught off-guard again, Hope tries to do the same trick as Jason.

"Teleport!"

In his head, Hope tries to imagine sending a bullet flying at Jason at the speed of light while deceiving him with a fake Word of Power. Instead, the spell fizzles, causing nothing to happen.

"Shit! Shit, shit, shit!" Hope curses.

"Come on, Hope! You have all my abilities! Use them against me!" Jason jeers, before stopping to face his clone once again.

"Elephant! Snake!"

Jason shouts out two bizarre Words of Power, and his body vanishes, turning invisible. Hope momentarily feels a Threat approaching, and raises his barrier to try and protect himself once more.

"Block!" Hope shouts, no longer trying to bother with this nonsense fake-Wordsmithing. Since he can't replicate what Jason is doing, he might as well just use good-old honest Wordsmithing to protect himself.

He succeeds. Jason clashes against the barrier summoned by Hope, causing his invisible form to momentarily flicker and reveal itself. He vanishes again, but not before Hope shouts another Word of Power.

"Reveal!"

Nothing happens. Jason remains invisible.

"Explode!" Jason shouts, but Hope doesn't fall for the same trick twice. He readies himself for Jason to teleport into his blind spot, or for his body to get forcibly spun around...

But then something ridiculous happens.

A massive explosion detonates right in front of Hope, flash-banging him with a light as bright as a star and making him reel backward and shriek in pain. "Aaaaargh!"

"You are such a gullible goober!" Jason taunts again, his voice coming from multiple directions. "Who said I only LIE when using Words of Power, Hope?! Honest Words of Power hit harder! You should know that if you have my memories! Now you have to be on guard for lies and the truth in equal measure!"

Hope's mind reels. "Heal!" He shouts, repairing his damaged eyes and vision while also trying to remain on guard from Jason's rapidly more distorted words, coming from all different angles.

"If you could do this from the beginning, then why didn't you?!" Hope shouts angrily. "Were you only toying with me??"

"These powers were never meant for the likes of you." Jason replies. "But you forced my hand, Hope! You crossed a line you never should have! Now I'm going to bring down an anvil on top of your head!"

Before Hope can ask what the hell Jason means, his original self starts shouting bizarre single-syllable words he's never heard before.

"Do! Rah! So! Mee! Lah! Hem! Shah!"

At that moment, another crucial thought plays in Hope's head.

The Fifth Level: Wordsmithing may require Words of Power, but the Words themselves are merely vocalizations. The most important components of a Wordsmith's magic occur inside their Imagination.

It's only now that Hope realizes just how many secrets Jason was holding in reserve.

The First Wordsmith flickers back into existence, then he disappears again. He starts teleporting around, seemingly at random, with Hope catching only split-second glimpses of his after-images as Jason circles Hope like a group of sharks, each momentary reveal causing a flash of terror to jolt Hope's heart.

"Ahhhh!" Hope roars, tapping into Excalibur's magic. "I won't die here! I won't!"

He rushes at the most recent of Jason's after-images, but a powerful impact slams into Excalibur's barrier from behind, throwing him off-course. Then another impacts his right side, and another slams into his left.

Boom! Boom! Boom!

Like a battleship being shelled from all sides, each impact transmits through Excalibur's barrier into the sword, then through Hope's hands into his body. His internal organs suffer painful blows, and Excalibur's seemingly 'infinite' energy starts to feel less and less infinite every second.

"Locate! Detect!" Hope shouts, but he fails to uncover Jason's hiding place.

"Mo! Rah! So! Lah!" Jason shouts, each new Word of Power coming from another direction.

Bullets blast Hope from all directions, slamming into his barrier at the speed of light. Thunderous spear strikes explode against the barrier, weakening them further.

"JASON!!" Hope roars. "You're forcing my hand! You son of a bitch!!"

Suddenly, Hope speaks another Word of Power.

"Extract!"

He summons a Heroic Artifact into his left hand, a massive blood-red spear that Jason will surely recognize instantly.

"One more move and he dies!" Hope screams. "Do you want Sir Lorent to die?! You'd better stop now, you bastard!"

Inside the flickering after-images, Jason glances at Hope.

He sees the fate of Sir Lorent being put into question.

It only takes him a split-second to make his decision.

[Fiona. Activate the Star-Net.]

Hope holds Lorent's spear protectively, not daring to actually kill him lest he lose his only prayer of surviving, but not wanting his threat to appear weak and feeble either. At this point, even if Hope were to devour all the other Heroes, he secretly worries he still won't be able to oppose Jason's rampant and overpowering usage of Wordsmithing.

Suddenly, a flicker of immense power transmits out of an unknown location. Hope's eyes snap onto this energy beam. He looks to the left in surprise as Jason's invisible form abruptly reveals itself when the light strikes him.

Golden energy harmlessly impacts Jason's Wordsmithium armor. The starlight super-enchants the platemail, empowering it far beyond its previous limits, even drilling into Jason's core body and pouring into several previously-placed, carefully calculated mana beads made to integrate with Jason's skeleton and internal organs.

For a brief second, Jason and Hope's eyes meet.

Then, Jason moves.

"...Huh?"

Hope mutters a single word, a badly phrased question, as something tears through his barrier and strikes his body.

He stares ahead distantly, uncomprehending.

...Huh?

He tries to speak, but fails. His mouth attempts to open but it remains unmoved.

Then his arms detach from his body.

He stares dumbly at this sight, his vision rapidly beginning to dim as he tries to understand what just happened.

Jason levitates behind Hope, his spear drawn. An instant later, he spins around, swaps out the spear for a sword, and begins quickly cutting, slicing, and hacking at his opponent's defeated form.

Slash slash slash!!

Jason cuts across Hope's neck. He severs his abdomen in half. He eviscerates both of Hope's arms, then his legs.

Jason's body moves like lightning. He carves across Hope like a meat grinder, dicing his clone into tens, hundreds, and then thousands of bits.

In an instant, the battle concludes.

Jason's empowered glowing golden body dims in luminosity.

He levitates in space, watching as a sickly mass of diced flesh spreads throughout the void, the last remnants of his clone's body.

Hope, the Second Wordsmith, is dead.

Despite the deceptively simple final win, Jason's heart palpitates with pain. The rush of empowering his body with the full power of the Star-Net was excruciating, like having his body thrown into a massive pot of water and boiled from head to toe. He shudders and shivers, feeling weaker than he's felt in a long time.

He looks at Hope's body, and he looks at the dozens of artifacts floating in the void that he took care not to damage.

Excalibur, in its full sized form, along with Sir Lorent's spear.

Solomon's Crown, carefully separated from the top of Hope's head by a razor-thin scalping swipe.

Hammurabi's miniature obelisk.

Many other tiny and shrunken Heroic artifacts Hope wore on a necklace...

Jason observes all of these. He reaches toward Excalibur, but an instant later, it vanishes.

Foop!

Then the other artifacts also vanish, one by one, in unison.

Foop, foop, foop!

Even in death, Hope was not totally useless. He planned a way for the artifacts to return to the Hall of Heroes, should his enemies attempt to steal them for themselves.

Only Lorent's Spear remains behind. Jason takes hold of it, sighing heavily as the Star-Net's after-effects start to hit him harder and harder by the second.

"Lorent. Are you alright?" Jason asks.

Inside the spear, Lorent's soul appears catatonic. He lays on the ground, motionless, badly injured by whatever means Hope used to control him.

"Don't worry." Jason mutters. "You're safe now. I'll fix you up. Return."

Jason sends Lorent's artifact to Chrona.

Then, he sighs. His shoulders sag, and his exhaustion deepens further.

[I've sent Lorent to you.] Jason transmits. [Tell me about the galactic situation.]

Even though he's tired beyond belief, Jason still has to think of the bigger picture. He listens intently as Fiona tells him what's been happening during his battle.

[The aftershocks from your battle devastated Tarus II.] Fiona explains. [We've lost at least 6,000 people to the planet-quakes, and only managed to evacuate a quarter of the population.]

Jason nods. [Now that the battle is over, those quakes should be stopping soon. I'll go down there and see what I can fix.]

Jason coughs. "Return."

He utters a Word of Power, causing his Wordsmithium armor to disappear and return to its holding place inside Chrona, where it can regenerate the damage it sustained from the Star-Net empowerment. With it gone, he breathes a little easier, no longer feeling suffocated by its weight.

[Hope isn't dead yet.] Jason says. [His soul will have become entangled inside the Lazarus Tower. I need to go there and take care of his... remnants.]

[What about losing the artifacts?] Fiona asks.

[They've gone to Hope's 'Hall of Heroes'.] Jason replies. [I can recover them later. With Hope gone, I can search out his hiding place. I'm not looking forward to talking to Amelia or their kids though.]

Fiona's reply takes a moment to arrive.

[...Do you feel guilty?]

[About killing Hope? Of course I do.] Jason answers, lowering his eyes. He stares at the mincemeat remains of his clone's corpse, feeling a little sick to his stomach. [I feel like... like I just aborted a child. I was a terrible father. I didn't raise him with love. I let him live his own life, and in the end, he- what the hell?!]

Jason's heart jumps.

In the midst of Hope's floating corpse, a strange, shadowy specter, barely visibly to the naked eye, but especially perceivable to Jason's spiritual senses, reveals itself.

[What... what the fuck is that?!] Jason asks, going on the alert. [Do you see that? There's a weird... goopy creature! It's right where Hope's brain used to be!]

Jason slowly raises his sword. He watches the strange creature with great trepidation. As he does, a single word transmits from its barely tangible form, past his defenses, into his mind.

[DE...SI...RE...]

[DE...SI...RE...]

[DE...SI...RE...]

Jason shivers. The creature's tone is both malevolent and seductive, like an ex-lover who only wishes for good things to happen to you, but for all the wrong reasons.

The more he looks at the creature, the more frightened he becomes.

[That thing... was it inside Hope? How did it survive my final attack?!]

Jason ponders carefully for a moment.

He thinks about a lot of things, like Hope's nonsensical motivations, his deep seated hatred, and how no amount of evidence would ever convince him to see Jason in a good light.

When Jason recalls all these incongruent facts, his predictive abilities activate, allowing him to put pieces together he was previously missing.

Is that why Hope acted the way he did? Was he being controlled by somebody, or something? Perhaps a demon? Perhaps even...

Suddenly, Fiona speaks in Jason's Mind Realm.

[JASON!! LOOK OUT! BEHIND-]

Jason's heart turns cold. The panic in her voice, before he even registered what she was saying, made him realize a life and death threat was upon him.

But before he could react...

BOOOOM!!!

A massive blast of cosmic power smashes into Jason from behind. His vision turns white, and his body instantly evaporates.

Hope's body disappears, along with the sentient parasite.

Everything in the vicinity explodes with the power of a star initiating a supernova.

In a single instant, Jason, the First Wordsmith, dies.

The smoke clears. The light dissipates.

Two figures materialize.

Founder Dosena and Creator Demila.

[Just in time.] Creator Demila says, breathing a sigh of relief. [We're fortunate the Wordsmith was distracted.]

[Was that truly him?] Dosena asks, her expression muted. [It seems both Wordsmiths are accounted for. But do we know if they have any additional clones?]

[I assure you. There are only the two.] Demila says smoothly. [My investigation has revealed that the Wordsmiths are only able to make perfect clones by combining their powers with Solomon's Crown. Neither Wordsmith wanted any further competition between the two of them, so they refused to make additional copies of themselves.]

Dosena glances around. She examines the fractured remains of the Dronesmiths before nodding succintly.

[Then it is done. Both Wordsmiths are dead. We must destroy the Lazarus Tower so they cannot revive. Only then will the Human Threat finally be rendered inert.]

She glances at Demila.

[You have finally provided a valuable service to the Volgrim Empire. Your warning came at a timely moment. Had you waited any longer, we might have missed our chance to exterminate these humans before they grew too powerful.]

Demila quickly bows her head. [I merely aim to serve the great Founders. It was your prescient decision-making that brought about this fortuitous outcome.]

Dosena resists the urge to roll all of her eyes. [The Executors will join us shortly. Come. Let us clean up the remnants of their sorry species.]

Fiona watches, her body frozen in shock, as the two High Psions casually reveal themselves, then start flying toward the helpless world of Tarus II.

"Jason..."

"Jason..."

"JASON!! NOOOO!!"

Part 606: Our Darkest Day

Inside the Labyrinth Core, anxiety etches itself onto the faces of every human present. The Demon Deities control the Labyrinth now, and their pressure is much higher than before thanks to Diablo's empowerment. Demons considered 'impure' become much weaker when inside the Labyrinth, while demons considered loyal to their species receive a substantial boost. Ordinary Emperors are now so strong that they are barely a half-step away from being considered Deities, while the Emperors aligned with humanity become as weak as Demon Dukes.

The humans and their allies tentatively flee into the Labyrinth, but their presence is tolerated, not preferred. Two of the remaining Demon Emperors, Fae and Crow, stand at the edges of the Core, watching as more and more humans stream inside. At the same time, phantasmal projections of Demon Deities levitate in the air at the top of the Core, standing on the ceiling while looking down on the humans below with disapproving eyes.

They don't make any moves to push the humans out. After all, the First Wordsmith's power has recently grown, revealing he has several cards hidden, and no Demon Emperor or Deity wants to get on his bad side. The Middle Cosmic demons might be able to shut him down or kill him if given the chance, but because of Diablo, they have all become attached to their homeworlds, unable to project power efficiently across intergalactic distances, except through their weakened Astral Avatars or portalling methods belonging to demons like Yardrat.

Demon Deity Auger looks at Demon Deity Melody, who stands with her arms crossed, glancing between the other Astral Deities present inside the Core. He frowns at her slightly, but says nothing.

During this time of turbulent turmoil, where humanity's two Wordsmiths are currently battling one another, the demon leaders have been forced to show restraint. Melody offers her tacit protection of the humans, not wanting to see tensions escalate, but she is heavily outnumbered by the other Deities. It is only because of the Wordsmiths and their future threat that she manages to hold fast against the other demons' pressure, but even she is beginning to feel a little out of her league in these dark times.

"Some of the humans have decided to relocate to Sharmur." Melody says, glancing at the other Demon Deities. "Nobody here has a problem with that. Right?"

"Of course not." Auger says, still eyeing her with disapproval. "Sharmur is your world. You may run it as you... see fit."

"I don't care how the humans decide to migrate, so long as it's not to my world." Yardrat adds. "You may mingle with these lesser beings as you please."

"Mmm." Melody grunts, nodding her head brusquely.

* * *

In the Core below, a small group of soldiers stands together, forming a light protective barrier around a woman seated in their center. Located off at the edge of the Core, in Neil's old room, Linda Hurent sits at his old desk, resting her elbows heavily while looking at a man across from her.

Lieutenant Diego Rivers, one of the higher ranking Legionnaires, stands on the other side of her desk, his arms crossed. Every so often, he relays new information regarding the battle between Wordsmiths. At the same time, due to wearing a top of the line T-REX, he also receives transmissions from other soldiers, as well as transmissions from Chrona. He serves as a unifying voice of three separate forces, giving Linda a clear overview on the battlefield's shifting positions.

Despite losing her husband only an hour prior, there is no sadness or anguish in Linda's eyes. Only a cold, hard ruthlessness.

Linda receives many different updates over the course of Jason and Hope's battle.

She and Chadwick, as well as other leaders, deliberate on what to do following Jason and Hope's battle. Ultimately, the winner will decide their course of action, with some people favoring re-unification of humanity's armies, and others desiring to maintain the current paradigm of 'Two Humanities'. Naturally, if Hope ends up the winner, he'll likely prefer forced reintegration, along with ostracizing traitors and demons, while Jason would likely prefer to keep the two separate.

Linda listens intently to Diego's updates. Thanks to his connection to Jepthath, he maintains a direct feed to the battle between Wordsmiths. He is also able to offer Linda an immediate update on one piece of crucial information.

"What did you say?" Linda asks, her gaze turning sharp. "Jason didn't kill Neil? You're certain?"

"Hope confirmed it." Diego nods. "He won't relent, though. Even after obtaining Jason's memories, he refuses to forgive the First Wordsmith. Jepthath is advising him to concede, but there's no room for reconciliation at this point."

"Of course there isn't. That stupid, brainless little..." Linda mutters, growling under her breath.

Some of the soldiers and commanders glance at one another out of the corners of their eyes. Hearing Linda curse Hope like this is surprising, since Neil would never do such a thing. But over the last hour, Linda's 'appreciation' for Hope has dwindled rapidly. Hearing about his brutal murder of two fellow Heroes has done him no favors in improving his image, and now that his entire reason for combating Jason has come into question, the absurdity of the situation slaps Linda across the face like a wet fish.

With Neil Adams gone, a surprising number of people look to Linda for support, as well as Chadwick. Despite Linda not formally being listed as commander of humanity's forces, she was close to Neil, and some people secretly pray she might make a decent substitute, while others privately think that just because she bears Neil's child, that doesn't make her qualified for such a high position. The latter group would prefer Magnus Chadwick take over instead.

As for Magnus himself, the portly Norwegian man does not seem particularly averse to either option. He was fine serving under Neil, and he would be fine with taking over in his stead too. But he holds a surprising amount of faith in Linda, and as such, he waits to see what she will do.

"We can't make any decisions yet." Linda says. "We have to wait until we see which Wordsmith will win. Only then-"

"Ah!" Diego suddenly exclaims, interrupting Linda. "Sorry, commander! It's just... Jason Hiro... defeated Hope! He killed him in a single strike!"

"What?" Linda asks, blinking twice. She sits up in her chair. "What do you mean?"

"I've lost visual on the battlefield." Diego explains. "Jepthath's artifact has already been recovered by the Hall of Heroes. But before Hope's death, I saw Jason unleash some sort of frightening cosmic power! He completely obliterated Hope in less than a second!

Lord Jepthath says it was one of the most incredible feats a Hero has ever pulled off, even rivaling King Arthur!"

Magnus and Linda exchange glances. They look around at the various other leaders, slightly in disbelief.

"...If Hope is dead, Jason will be sure to eliminate his remnants inside the Lazarus Tower. Their battle is over, and we must follow the new leader. We will make no attempt to save Hope's soul."

She gestures to Chadwick.

"With their battle concluded, the evacuation is no longer necessary. Continue the rescue operations, but plan for a swift return to order within the next few hours. I want repair crews on site, ready to rebuild and reinforce wherever necessary. By the time-"

"Ah!" Diego exclaims again, once more interrupting Linda. She pauses mid-sentence and looks at him, knowing he probably wouldn't interrupt without a good reason.

The look of shock frozen on Diego's face instantly turns her heart cold.

"Jason... Jason Hiro... he's been killed!" Diego says, his face aghast. "This is straight from Chrona! Oh my god! It- it was... it was the Volgrim! The Psions ambushed Jason right after his battle! They're on their way to Tarus II as we speak!"

"WHAT?!" Chadwick shouts, standing up from his chair. "A betrayal?! We have to act quickly!"

"This is the worst case scenario!" Linda adds, also standing up. "Inform the Cubers! We need them to start teleporting high value assets off-planet at once. Increase the evacuation speed! Let's start funneling people to Sharmur and Pixiv right away!"

Just then, Diego's face scrunches up as he reveals even more bad news.

"The Psions- they've attacked the Tarus II warpgate! They're raining damnation upon Tarus II! We've lost our physical link to the planet!"

"Shit." Linda curses. "Then we can't hold back. Contact Chrona and the Hall of Heroes. Tell them to join in. Start teleporting people off-world immediately! We need to save as many lives as possible!"

On Tarus II, powerful beams of psionic energy lance down from the skies above. Each beam travels just below the speed of light, smashing into the planet's surface with thunderous fury.

The very first target struck is the Lazarus Tower. It crumbles into dust as the Psions obliterate its existence. Never again will the souls contained within walk the cosmos.

The next is the Warpgate leading to the Labyrinth Core. It isn't destroyed, but a powerful attack strikes it with enough force to throw off all its calibrations, destabilizing it and forcing a shutdown.

All across Tarus II, people begin to panic.

Screams and cries of fear go up all around the Fortress of Solitude. Not that long ago, Jason built a massive 'glass' barrier around the Upper Plateau city and reinforced it, but he later removed that barrier due to coming to a 'peace' agreement with the demons.

Now, its conspicuous absence ensures there isn't even the slightest protection for any human caught in the barrage of psionic missiles plunging from the skies above.

Emperor Kiari tries to help people. She rushes to and fro, but eventually, she disappears, teleported off-world by one of the Cube's internal matrices.

So too are Doctor Fathy and Grima taken away, along with many other semi-important individuals. Once they vanish, the teleportation links start targeting humans at random, pulling them away as quickly as possible.

* * *

Five thousand miles above the upper atmosphere, far from the planet, Founder Dosena glares at her compatriot, Creator Demila. The 7th-Level Psion breathes heavily as she summons another orb of psionic power, punches it, and causes hundreds of missiles to fall toward the planet below. Each one strikes with precision, blasting apart one or more humans at a time, but Demila's attacks gradually slow down and weaken. Her shoulders heave as pain wracks her body.

[F-Founder Dosena...] Demila says, turning to look at her superior. [The... The Akashic Backlash... it's too much... I can't keep going like this.]

[Stop your whining!] Dosena shouts. [Pathetic excuse for a Psion! Why do you think I brought you along and not one of the Executors? You're merely a Bottom Cosmic. The Akashic Backlash will be far milder compared to what they or I endure! Hurry up! More and more humans are escaping every second. Founder Unarin made it clear we need to hunt down and kill every single human.]

Demila nods weakly. She hesitates, slowly charges up another barrage, then sends a few dozen beams of cosmic energy slamming into the surface below.

Dosena's eyes narrow. She grows incensed when she realizes that Demila's accuracy has declined even further.

[Stop putting on an act! You are a High Psion! Act your rank!]

Demila turns to look at her superior, weakness in her eyes. [Second Founder, I am trying, but the backlash… it is… truly too much. We should have brought weaker Psions…]

[Obviously.] Dosena growls. [Since at least THEY wouldn't have been as useless as you! Always the most pathetic excuse for a Psion. A million cycles old, yet you've failed to become Executor. You failed to hunt down a Demon Emperor, and now you're failing at this basic task! Gah! What a waste of space you've proven yourself to be!]

Dosena levitates forward, then shoves Demila aside.

[Just get out of my way! If you can't do it, then I will!]

[What? No, Second Founder, you can't!] Demila protests. [Your life will be in peril if you attack these mere mortals. Just wait until the Executors arrive with the reinforcements. They should be here soon.]

[We've already shut down the Warpgate. They will have to travel via a longer route.] Dosena counters. [I don't want to waste even a single time-unit. If you can't perform, then I will!]

Demila listens to Dosena's words. She offers a few feeble protests, but secretly her eyes glint with satisfaction.

Everything is going according to 'her' plan.

Even with Executor Nufaris traveling to a nearby star system via its Warpgate and then transferring to the Tarus sector through his superior spatial psionics, it'll still be at least five to ten minutes before he arrives.

That's more than enough time to spring the trap, Demila thinks.

With the Lazarus Tower obliterated on arrival, the Wordsmiths no longer have a chance of reviving. Their bodies have been scattered to ash, and their souls obliterated.

Now, all that remains is for Demila to eliminate her opposition and she can rightfully take her place at the top of Volgrim society...

Unaware of her junior's thoughts, Dosena levitates forward and rapidly begins charging up her power. After a few seconds, she fires more than a hundred beams of light that sweep across Tarus II's surface, crack the continental plates, and blast apart anything in their path. No matter how reinforced the building might be, simply getting grazed by her attack for a split second will cause any structure to dissipate into particles of light, along with the souls hiding inside.

Even so, despite her incredible power, Dosena does not attack wantonly and without restraint. Her powerful senses pick out all the humans, monsters, demons, and even the insects and other life forms. She deliberately targets only the humans, smashing their bodies and souls to pieces, killing them rapidly and without hesitation.

Demila's secret smug happiness deflates slightly when she realizes that despite her pretense of being severely injured by harming the mortals, Dosena actually appears to be entirely uninjured herself.

But how could that be possible? Surely, as a Middle Cosmic, she should be wracked with pain right now.

Dosena notices the confusion on her foolish junior's face.

[We Cosmics have a variety of ways to deal with the Akashic Backlash.] Dosena says, her words carrying a taunting edge. [I will pay dearly for this genocide, but only later. I developed a technique long ago to delay the effects of the Akashic Backlash for as long as possible.]

[So it's like that.] Demila says, bowing her head subserviently. [This foolish subordinate is ever impressed by your myriad methods, Second Founder.]

[Bah! Stop being 'impressed' and help me kill these insects!] Dosena counters.

Demila nods. She summons even weaker psionic attacks and sends them plunging toward the planet below.

When her attacks hit, she kills perhaps thirty ordinary humans, missing more than half her attacks. She sweats harder, acting as if the pain of the Akashic Backlash is truly too much for her to bear.

Dosena, meanwhile, begins to grow suspicious.

She is no fool. She has lived through many different ages and eras. Demila's pathetic nature has always been evident, but even for a stupid grunt like her, this act is simply too much.

Luckily, the Executors will arrive soon. At that point, Dosena will have some choice questions for her lesser associate.

Dosena continues raining fire and brimstone upon the world below. Humans perish every second, dying by the thousands, and even the tens of thousands.

[Half the humans are dead.] Demila says.

[A large number have escaped into the Labyrinth, and still others are being teleported off-world, likely to that 'cube'.] Dosena counters. [After we finish here, I'll need to uncover its location, and annihilate any humans hiding within.]

Dosena's attention wavers. As she speaks, one of her beams strafes across the center of the Fortress of Retribution. It smashes against the soil, pounding deep underground until it reaches a certain location with ten humans tied up together, all surrounding a certain metal box. The humans whimper and shiver, terrified out of their wits as the planet rumbles around them.

Dosena, too busy trying to detect human life forms holistically, fails to notice that this clump of humans is extremely suspicious. Thoughtlessly, she sweeps an attack right over top of them...

An instant later, a light as bright as Tarus's star ignites.

Tarus II rumbles.

Then, it explodes.

Instantly, Dosena snaps her eyes toward the sudden burst of super-ignited energy particles. She hastily taps into her powers, flickers a light-second away, then violently shudders as the full power of an Akashic Backlash tears through her body and veins.

Tarus II super-ignites, its core instantly detonating as if it were a miniature supernova.

Every single life-form still on the planet evaporates, turning to space dust. The light blinds Demila, and she too teleports away, closing her eyes and reaching out with her senses to try and detect Founder Dosena.

When she does, hunger emerges in her eyes. Demila detects Dosena's lifeless body floating in the Void, utterly incapacitated as all the power in her soul becomes locked away by a power Beyond Cosmic.

There she is! Demila thinks.

She ignores the planet exploding behind her and rushes toward the Second Founder.

[Second Founder! Are you alright?] Demila asks, concern thick in her voice.

But just before she can arrive, another Psion emerges from the Void, appearing between her and Dosena.

Demila abruptly jerks to a halt, looking at the newcomer with surprise.

[Executor Nufaris!] Demila exclaims, quickly making sure to put some pleasure in her tone. [You came just in time! Something happened! Tarus II-]

[I am aware of all that has transpired.] Executor Nufaris says, his pitch-black skin making him seemingly blend in with the Void. He looks down on Demila with eyes full of cunning, seemingly peering right through her very soul. [It seems there was a super-ignition of Trifrancium on the planet's surface. I have witnessed similar detonations before.]

The exploding form of Tarus II provides ample luminosity, mere tens of thousands of miles from the planet's former spatial position. Demila feels a chill as she sees Nufaris's piercing gaze looking deep within her bones.

[Yes! That is... what I was going to say.] Demila says, lowering her gaze. [Your wisdom is truly infinite.]

[Mmm.] Nufaris replies, still looking at Demila coldly.

Without another word, he flickers over to Dosena's position, then gently wraps his psionic power around her. At that moment, two more Executors emerge, protectively hovering around the Second Founder. Executors Riley and Sartran both appear, looking at Demila with suspicion-filled eyes.

[Executors?] Demila asks, suddenly feeling that things are taking a terrible turn. [Is... something wrong?]

[There have been a few questions regarding your recent reports.] Nufaris says, his tone dry. [Of course, we would never want to accuse a junior of any indiscretion without cause, but we intend to return with you to the homeworld for questioning. Creator Demila, do you willingly submit yourself for this investigation?]

Demila tries to keep her tone even. She glances at the Second Founder, her helpless form just barely out of reach, and then back at Nufaris.

[Of... of course. I am always ready to lay bare my Truths for the Highest Executor.]

[Your 'Truths', yes. I am certain those are still a valuable commodity in this day and age.] Nufaris says, a faint sneer appearing on his face.

By now, Demila cannot deny the facts any longer.

The other Executors have suspected her involvement with Gressil for a while. Perhaps they've been waiting for her to slip up.

And now, once she returns with them to Volgarius, she'll be on the chopping block for sure.

[But... what about the humans?] Demila asks, gesturing back toward the expanding bubble of heat and plasma that was once Tarus II.

[Executor Riley will handle the humans.] Nufaris says. [I am here to retrieve and heal Founder Dosena's injured body. As for Sartran... he will 'escort' you back to Volgarius.]

Executor Riley crosses her arms, assuming a lofty posture.

[Not many humans remain now. Eliminating them will be my pleasure.]

Sartran, meanwhile appears conflicted. [Are we continuing with the human's genocide? The entire premise was based on Demila's testimony, and she is no longer reliable.]

[The Wordsmiths are dead.] Riley says. [They were the cornerstone of our cooperation with their species. Even if Demila may have lied about a few things, the fact is that the humans did fix their Flaw, so more Heroes will arise. We cannot allow them to continue propagating.]

Demila shudders.

The Executors know. They know everything!

Well, perhaps not 'everything', but they have clearly not taken her at her word for some time. She was foolish to think they would!

[Hm?] Nufaris grunts, glancing toward Tarus II's exploding remnants. [What is that?]

His words cause the other Psions to look backward. Even Demila follows their gaze, confused.

Inside the center of the exploding planetary mass, a noticeable blip of metaphysical energy appears, causing the Psions to flinch.

[A Cosmic signature?] Sartran asks. [It's rapidly spiking in power.]

[What entity could possibly survive inside the remnants of a Trifrancium detonation?] Riley asks.

Seconds later, something unbelievable happens.

The heat mass erupting outward abruptly freezes, then it begins to reverse course, sucking back toward an unknown position somewhere in the center of the detonation.

[What in the Founders' names?!] Demila gasps. [It's a Bottom Cosmic! No, it's growing stronger every second!]

[Bottom Cosmic... Low Cosmic... by the ancients, it's... it's approaching the realm of Middle Cosmic!] Nufaris exclaims, showing emotions for the first time since his arrival.

From deep within the collapsing sphere of Trifrancic heat, a shriek of primal rage erupts.

"AAAAAAHH!!"

The rage contained within this screams visibly frightens all the Psions. Even Demila experiences a wave of horror at the pure, unadultered fury contained within that scream.

[No! I can't believe it!] Sartran shouts. [That voice! I recognize it! It's... it's...]

"VOL!"

"GRIM!"

"BAS!"

"TARDS!!"

Each syllable punches through the Void, impacting the Psions' psyches as if they were enduring psychic attacks. They flinch and hurriedly shield their bodies, looking toward the voice's source with growing horror.

[By the unholy wrath of the Sentinels!] Sartran shrieks. [It's Beelzebub! How did he survive such an explosion?! He must be absorbing the heat! He's- he's a Middle Cosmic now!!]

The last remnants of Tarus II's heated remains finally absorb into the figure at its center. Beelzebub, no longer a mere Emperor, explodes with a blinding light, becoming even brighter than Tarus II at the moment of its explosion. The Psions hurriedly look away, not daring to gaze directly into the full fury of his rage.

"YOU PSIONS WILL PAY!!" Beelzebub roars. "MY HUMANS! YOU KILLED MY HUMANS! MY FRIENDS! I'LL BURN YOUR EMPIRE TO ASH!!"

Nufaris doesn't hesitate.

[RUN!]

He grabs the Second Founder and flees right before Beelzebub shoots flames behind himself, turning into a fiery comet rocketing through the Void, hot on the tail of humanity's murderers.

The Cosmic Flame Deity is thus born...

Part 607: Our Brightest Night

Beelzebub awoke inside a blinding white void of light. He found himself laying on his back, and when he sat up, he had no idea where he even was.

A massive mountain loomed to the east, while fields of flaming trees burned all around him. Curious, Beelzebub stood up and walked over to the trees, but he couldn't make heads or tails of how their perpetually flaming branches worked.

"Wait, what am I doing here?" Beelzebub wondered. "Ah, the humans! Tarus II! Wasn't the planet under attack? Then... where is this place?"

"Hey, kid." A voice said from behind Beelzebub. "You're finally awake."

The young Demon Emperor turned around. He raised an eyebrow when he saw a strange, ghost-like, faceless and featureless 'person' standing behind him.

"Who are you?" Beelzebub asked. "No, what are you?"

"I'm the Creator." The person said, spreading his arms. "And this is the Cosmic Realm. I've been expecting your arrival for a long time."

"The Creator?" Beelzebub asked. "Wait, so you're that prick who kept fucking with me whenever I blew myself up? Does that mean I'm... dead?!"

"Not dead." The Creator answered. "You are a Candidate. A potential future Ruler of the Milky Way. And now, you've finally crossed the extraordinary threshold, becoming a Cosmic."

He gestured around himself grandly.

"These are Akasha's Plains. And that over there is the Staircase of Ascension. By climbing it, you can begin your journey to achieving ultimate power."

"I don't have time to climb some staircase!" Beelzebub shouted. "Tarus II is under attack. I have to revive, regenerate, and help push back whoever is responsible!"

"Ah. So you don't know." The Creator said, his tone mysterious.

"Don't know... what?" Beelzebub asked.

A moment of silence followed.

"Tarus II is gone. It was attacked by the Psions. They killed Jason Hiro, and they came to destroy the planet afterward. Now that it's gone, you have begun absorbing its essence into your body to empower yourself. This allowed you to push past the barrier of Demon Overlord into the realm of Demon Deity. And from there, your soul has entered the Cosmic Realm, where you can uplift yourself to a higher level."

Beelzebub blinked several times.

"What- hold on, you just hit me with a LOT there, old man! So it was the Psions who attacked Tarus II? The Psions?! But they were supposed to be our allies! And what's all this about a 'Demon Overlord'? I'm an Emperor, you numbskull."

The Creator's faceless expression didn't change, but Beelzebub somehow felt as if he could perceive a faint smile emanating from the Creator's visage.

"Oh, how little you know. The truth is, Beelzebub, your species came to power via soul manipulation. All along, you were stuck at the fifth level of Mortal Power, calling yourselves Emperors and wondering when you could become deities while entirely neglecting the final step to achieving that power."

The Creator calmly continued to speak, stunning Beelzebub with this new information. "Imps, Grunts, Lords, Barons, Dukes, and Emperors. The next rank after Emperor is Overlord, not Deity, but because of your soul manipulation, your species never managed to uncover this Truth."

Beelzebub's skin color lightened slightly as the blood rushed to his head. "So... that's why we always had such trouble trying to become Deities. We were effectively trying to skip past an entire rank we didn't know existed!"

"Indeed. But you, kid, lucked into a new path of progression. Because of your detonation during Stormbringer, you eradicated every last soul within yourself, returning to the level of a lowly mortal. The seed of the Phoenix called upon you, and when the Phoenix's Remnant found you, it flew into your body, directly empowering you to the rank of Overlord."

The Creator paused for a moment, allowing Beelzebub to digest his words.

"You are a True Demon. A Daemon, if you will. Almost a separate species, or rather, the species your people could have become if the allure and taint of soul manipulation had not swallowed them from the beginning. And who knows? Perhaps Archangel Raphael secretly pushed your people into that direction to subtly weaken your future potential. By making soul manipulation seem like a terrible and easy path to power, he may have influenced Satan to deliberately push the demons into this path of depravity."

Beelzebub lowered his eyes.

"A Demon Overlord. The first one ever..."

"No." The Creator replied. "Satan the Devil was the first Overlord. His wife, Belial, was empowered by the ancient dragon Leviathan, and nearly attained that rank herself. As someone who never practiced the art of soul manipulation, she could have reached the final level of mortal power had she known it existed. But she grew complacent, or perhaps she never cared for obtaining such power in the first place. Either way, as of now, you are the second Demon Overlord to have ever walked the cosmos."

"But I'm beyond that now, aren't I?" Beelzebub asks. "And this place... this Cosmic Realm. It's where I can ascend to the rank of Demon Deity."

The Creator gestured behind himself to the Staircase of Ascension.

"The sooner you begin, the sooner you can return to Realspace and exact your revenge. The Psions attacked Tarus II. They blew it up for their own selfish goals, and they even killed the First Wordsmith. As such, it is your chance to shine. You must use that hatred you feel to uplift your flames to the next level!"

Beelzebub's eyes narrow. "Those bastard Psions. You're right! I have to make them pay. I have to!"

The Creator lead Beelzebub to the Staircase of Ascension. After explaining the rules, he levitated to the side of the staircase, watching as the Overlord of Fission begin to sprint up the staircase, grimacing whenever divine bolts of lightning impacted his body, but still pushing as hard as possible to climb the staircase with all his strength.

"Good. Good!" The Creator exclaimed. "Keep climbing! Ten steps! Twenty!"

In the midst of Beelzebub's climb, a second Ruler approached to watch the Creator's newest asset making his way toward the pinnacle of ascension.

"Heh heh. What's this? Another little Candidate?" The Dark One asked, his winged bipedal body flying close to the Creator. "Ready to embarrass yourself again, Creator? After that pitiful- what was its designation? Melfitop?"

"Mephisto." The Creator replied, not deigning to give any credence to the Dark One's words.

"Haha, yes. Mephisto. That was its name! That sad excuse for a Cosmic hasn't left you too embarrassed to watch? Oh, your skin is thicker than I expected, you half dead ghost. It won't be long now before your Individuality crumbles. Then your galaxy will be ripe for the taking!"

The Creator ignored the Dark One, simply watching as Beelzebub pounced upon the 30th step, then continued to jump to the next one.

"Underestimate Beelzebub at your own peril." The Creator said. "I believe he will someday stomp your best Cosmics into the dirt."

"Hahahaha!!" The Dark One cackled. "Oh, I would love to see him try! Hmm?"

Finally turning his attention to Beelzebub's climb, the Dark One frowned. He crossed his huge, muscular arms and watched as Beelzebub reached the 40th step.

"...Well. His climbing speed isn't bad. I'll give you that."

But Beelzebub didn't stop there. He continued to climb.

The fiftieth step.

The sixtieth step.

The seventieth!

Soon, multiple other Rulers began to approach, each one assuming the simplistic body of an orb of light. Their celestial gazes fell upon the newest Cosmic to challenge Akasha's staircase.

"This entity is only climbing for the first time." Inquisitor, the Ruler of Messier said. "Its ascension speed is abnormal."

"I have detected an extreme level of bodily regeneration within its physical frame." The Absolute, Ruler of Triangulum, said. "This is aiding it in resisting and absorbing the Divine Lightning."

The Creator frowned. He did not enjoy the presence of these other Rulers, but neither could he force them to leave.

Instead, he floated downward, a little closer to Beelzebub.

"Keep climbing, boy! If you can reach the 100th step, you'll receive a special boon!"

Beelzebub gritted his teeth. He jumped to the 72nd step, grimacing in pain as a bolt of lightning struck his body, refined his inner energy, and changed him into a slightly more formidable being.

"What... what... boon?" Beelzebub finally asked.

"At the 100th step, you can ask a Divine Favor of Akasha! He can make countless miracles come true! He also grants a boon at the 250th, 1000th, and 10,000th steps, along with others far beyond those. But for you, all you need to do is reach the 100th step! If you can do that, you won't regret it!"

Beelzebub nodded. His eyes watered as the pain continued to increase.

He made his way to the 75th step. Then the 80th... then the 85th.

But by the time he reached the 90th, his body was beginning to give out. Countless beams of lightning struck him every time he climbed a step. His newly obtained affinity to lightning did nothing to shield him from Akasha's Wrath. Even his regeneration meant little in the face of such impossible odds.

Finally, Beelzebub collapsed on the 93rd step. He tried to move, but his muscles gave out, and his body lost all sensation.

"Ah. Too bad, kid." The Creator mumbled. "But even so! You have tempered yourself to heights I have not seen in the Milky Way's Cosmics for tens of Ages! Now, when you return to the physical realm, remember your anger! Remember your rage! Unleash your true power and show everyone why I designated you one of my Candidates!"

Beelzebub simply fluttered his eyelids in response. Then, exhaustion took him, and his soul was flung from the Cosmic Realm back to Realspace...

Not long after.

A molten fury hotter than anything seen in the Milky Way since its galactic center first formed gives chase after the High Psions.

Beelzebub, the Cosmic Flame Deity, rockets forward at superliminal speeds, rapidly closing the relatively short distance to his hated enemies. Fire streams out of his eyes, leaving tears of flame trailing in his wake. His entire body glows white-hot, raising the temperature around himself to well over 100,000 degrees.

Executor Nufaris is the first to flee. His duty, guarding Founder Dosena, takes precedence over all others. He uses his mastery of spatial translocation to traverse the Void faster than his comrades.

[Split up!] Executor Riley shouts, deliberately aiming her voice at the other Psions while excluding Beelzebub. [Try to draw him away from the Second Founder!]

Demila doesn't hesitate. A cunning light fills her eyes as she rapidly flickers away, choosing not to go along with the other Executors.

With Riley and Nufaris traveling 'north' and 'east' in galactic directional terms, Demila travels 'south,' seemingly fleeing for her life, but secretly expanding on her plots and machinations as a final chance for success falls into her lap.

But one Executor doesn't flee.

Executor Sartran holds up his palms and faces Beelzebub.

[Wait! Beelzebub, it's me! Sartran! Your mentor! Please, this is a misunderstanding! We did not intend to blow up the planet! It was an accident!]

"I DON'T BELIEVE YOU!" Beelzebub roars, deliberately aiming his charge at the target in front of him. He beelines for Sartran, his eyes filled with scorching hatred.

[An accident!] Sartran pleads. [Calm down! We can talk this out!]

Sartran's words fall on deaf ears. Seeing that Beelzebub has no intention to stop, Sartran roars with psionic fury. He summons barriers of electrically enchanted flames in front of himself, hoping that in spite of his Low Cosmic ranking, he might be able to beat back Beelzebub, or at the very least, slow him down for a time.

Beelzebub's nuclear-ignited body slams into the barriers and tears right through them. He grabs at Sartran's throat, but the Executor flickers to the side, barely dodging in time.

"HAH! YOU CALL YOURSELF MY MENTOR?! YOU LYING SACK OF SHIT! I ALREADY HAD A MENTOR, AND HIS NAME WAS AGARES! I KILLED HIM, AND I'LL KILL YOU TOO!!"

[Please! Calm down!] Sartran exclaims.

His words don't slow Beelzebub down even a little bit.

For a few short seconds, the two Cosmics tussle in the vacuum of space. Beelzebub fires unthinkably powerful beams of concentrated nuclear hellfire, and Sartran uses his superior control of energy to redirect and deflect some of them, but eventually, he falls into a trap when Beelzebub fireports behind him, aims his palm at Sartran, and screams a word in rage.

"SOULFIRE!!"

A blast of rainbow-colored flames smashes into Sartran's back, incinerating his body and swallowing his soul. Sartran's eyes pop open in one final moment of agony before his soul is ripped away from its holding facility on the secret Psion world Jason once called 'Mudball'. Unable to defend himself, Sartran falls into a slumber as Beelzebub swallows his soul, forcibly containing it within his Mind Realm.

But, having learned some important Truths from the Creator, Beelzebub does not devour Sartran's soul to empower his physical body. He merely contains it so that he might extract intelligence from his captive later.

Without hesitation, Beelzebub snaps his eyes toward the three retreating forms.

One of them is Demila. Beelzebub ignores her. A weak little 7th-Level Psion is of no consequence, and there are tens of thousands more like her across the Volgrim Empire.

That leaves only Executors Riley and Nufaris.

Since Nufaris took the Second Founder's body, he is the best target to pursue!

In the blink of an eye, Beelzebub blasts nuclear hellfire behind himself, rocketing after Nufaris at superliminal speeds far outpacing the speed of light.

"THE SECOND FOUNDER KILLED MY HUMANS!" Beelzebub screams into the Void. "I WON'T LET YOU RESCUE HER, FILTHY PSION!"

Executor Nufaris, the most powerful of all Executors, is still only a Low Cosmic compared to Beelzebub's Middle Cosmic status. His eyes darken as he senses Beelzebub's aura locking onto him.

Unlike Sartran, Nufaris doesn't bother speaking to his pursuer. Instead, he rapidly taps into his abilities, thinking of ways he might throw Beelzebub off his trail.

Unfortunately, the Void is both vast and empty. Nufaris realizes immediately that even if he enters a gas nebula or an exotic region, Beelzebub's Cosmic senses will not lose their lock on him. He will eventually catch up.

I will require a minimum of five rotational cycles to return to Volgarius. Nufaris thinks. But if I do, I'll be leading this Devil right to the empire's doorstep. It would be faster for me to reach a Warpgate, but the time required to calculate Volgarius's travel vectors will leave me vulnerable.

Nufaris looks at Dosena's unconscious body in his arms. Never has he seen his lauded Second Founder in as weak and pitiful a state as she is now.

Even worse, because she is unconscious, she has zero psionic defenses protecting her body. Ordinarily, Dosena could tank one of Beelzebub's attacks without flinching, but right now even a stray heat ray could burn her body to ash.

And that isn't even the worst part.

Founder Dosena's True Body contains her soul. If she dies to Beelzebub, we won't be able to revive her. This will result in a crippling loss for our Empire.

Suddenly, Nufaris senses Beelzebub's rapid approach from behind. His psionic senses lock onto Beelzebub, whose speed has drastically increased.

Nufaris's expression turns grim.

I can't escape him by moving in a straight line. I will have to bet everything on this!

Beelzebub chases Nufaris. His speed increases faster and faster every second, rapidly reaching twenty thousand times the speed of light!

"PSION SCUUUUM!!"

Beelzebub stretches out his hand, like a claw belonging to a fiery god of death. He grabs at the rapidly approaching body of Nufaris, grinning evilly as he senses victory within his grasp.

Then...

Foop!

Nufaris abruptly flickers an entire light-hour to the side. He halts his movement in an instant, and Beelzebub blasts right through the spot where he was flying only a moment earlier.

It takes Beelzebub a second or two to register what just happened. By the time he does, Nufaris has already begun flying in a new direction, putting huge distance between himself and Beelzebub.

Beelzebub realizes he's been had.

"Shit!"

A lot of the rage diffuses from Beelzebub's voice, replaced instead with confusion. He spins himself around and releases heat from his feet to stop his forward momentum, but it takes nearly thirty seconds, even with his boundless Cosmic power, to reverse direction and give chase after Nufaris yet again.

When Beelzebub chases him again, he once again whiffs the impact as Nufaris flickers away, using his vastly superior control over Spatial Psionics to instantly change the direction of his flight.

Beelzebub goes hurtling past Nufaris once more, screeching in rage about that damned, no good, dirty rotten cheater of a Psion.

This process repeats two more times.

Beelzebub gets closer and closer each time, trying to anticipate Nufaris's teleportation direction, but it simply doesn't matter. After they travel 500 Lightyears away from the Tarus system, Beelzebub's inferior control of his abilities reveals a devastating weakness Nufaris is able to grasp hold of time and time again.

On the fifth time, when Beelzebub is about to grab Nufaris, the Executor disappears once more.

Beelzebub halts his momentum faster than the previous times, but to his dismay, he doesn't detect Nufaris's new position at all. Instead, Nufaris's aura becomes extremely muted, as if he were suddenly hiding behind a thick barrier that reflected sonar.

"Hm? Where did he go?!" Beelzebub snarls.

Ten seconds pass.

Twenty.

Thirty.

Nufaris reappears, but Beelzebub's jaw drops when he realizes Nufaris has somehow made it more than thirty lightyears 'east' of Beelzebub's galactic position.

How did he travel so swiftly and stealthily?

That question causes Beelzebub's mind to burn with anger, but at the same time, he starts to notice a sensation of energy leaving his body.

"What the...? Why am I weakening, all of a sudden? Or has this been happening the whole time?"

Beelzebub looks around. He frowns as he realizes that his Cosmic Power is slowly starting to depart his body, but he isn't entirely sure why.

Frustrated, he gives chase after Nufaris again, but his energy starts draining even faster, until he eventually ceases his pursuit.

Finally, Beelzebub reaches out with his senses. He detects a 'thin' line of Cosmic Energy trailing back the direction he originally came from.

The direction of the Tarus system.

"Hmm..."

Beelzebub falls into contemplation for a moment. He eventually opts to fly back the direction he came, traveling after the line of cosmic energy. As he does, the sensation of his energy draining begins to lighten up. Once he draws within 100 lightyears of the system, it trickles down to a barely noticeable drain, and by the time he arrives back inside the system, it stops completely.

Beelzebub sweeps his gaze around. He senses the remainder of Tarus II's moon, Kelkin, which luckily was not engulfed by Tarus II's detonation, but which has lost its anchor to its celestial body.

Then, Beelzebub follows the line until he senses the emergence of a massive golden cube hidden within a pocket dimension.

"So... that thing is what's giving me my power?" Beelzebub mutters out loud, to nobody in particular.

* * *

Nufaris succeeds in evading his pursuer. He joins back up with Executor Riley, and the two of them frown as they realize they've lost Demila's signal.

[Executor Sartran is dead.] Riley tells her superior. [Beelzebub devoured his soul. It seems distance is no barrier to the new Demon Deity's signature ability, 'Soulfire.']

[How frightening.] Nufaris grunts. [That means if he had caught me, he might have devoured my soul and the Second Founder's as well.]

[What are we going to do?] Riley asks. [Founder Dosena is in terrible condition. It could take countless orbital cycles before she is capable of fighting again.]

[Our Empire is at its weakest.] Nufaris states. [We must meet with the First Founder and seek his counsel. But... I no longer have any doubts. Demila betrayed us. She tricked the Second Founder and caused her to suffer an extreme Akashic Backlash. We must send out an order across the Empire to capture and execute her on-sight.]

Riley looks away. Anger clouds her vision.

[To think that wretched old hag would betray her people. Death is too kind a mercy for her.]

She pauses, then looks at Nufaris.

[Beelzebub is no longer pursuing us, but he will likely come sooner or later. What do we do if he does?]

[That is up to the First Founder to decide.] Nufaris replies. [Come. Let us make haste back to Volgarius. We have too much to report.]

* * *

Founder Dosena, unconscious, remains unaware of the world around her. Unable to move her body, she is pitifully helpless, having to rely on her subordinates to save her life.

Even so, her formidable mind does not fall dormant, and she continues to 'dream' about a great many things.

She thinks back to that fateful moment when Demila came to her, barely an hour earlier.

Demila told Dosena and Unarin about the humans' secret and nefarious plans. Naturally, the two Founders noticed a few holes in her arguments, but the chance to rid themselves of the Wordsmiths was too good an opportunity and they had to take it.

Publicly, Unarin waved off Demila's concerns.

But in secret, he used subtle hand signals and body language to convey his true intentions to Dosena.

"The Wordsmith was our best shot. But he wasn't the only one."

"Kill them all."

Dosena seemed to acknowledge his decree to leave the Wordsmiths alone, but in truth, she took Demila, transmitted secret instructions to the Executors, and raced through the Warpgates to arrive at Tarus II before it was too late.

All these facts now make Dosena feel a bit sad and helpless.

We… were tricked. She thinks, her mind drifting on a sea of emptiness.

Should have… never… killed… the Wordsmith…

Part 608: Friends of Phoenix

Frustrated by his inability to catch the elusive Executor Nufaris, Beelzebub returns to the Tarus system. He stares despondently at the location where Tarus II once existed, now nothing more than tens of trillions of fragments of rock spewing out in all directions, likely to someday crash into the other planets across the system, as well as obliterate the moon of Kelkin on impact.

But with all the humans on Kelkin saved, what few there were, the survival of a sparse moonbase means nothing to Beelzebub. Instead, he feels a small hole in his heart.

"I failed them." Beelzebub says, lowering his head. "I promised these humans I would be better, become strong enough to protect them... but I couldn't protect anything. Now they're gone. All that remains are those who escaped to the Labyrinth."

With nothing better to do, Beelzebub follows the link of Cosmic energy chaining him to a secret hidden dimensional space. With surprising ease, he levitates forward and appears in this space, causing all the stars of the Milky Way to vanish, plunging him into deep darkness.

Up ahead, he spots a seemingly tiny golden cube, one that radiates lingering cosmic power, yet is clearly not as powerful as it should be.

Beelzebub flies forward, easily traveling tens of thousands of kilometers every second. At his casual sub-light pace, he draws closer and closer to the cube, which he quickly discovers is not small at all. In fact, it is quite massive, much bigger than the red giant star located within Tarus's system. At this scale, ten thousand Tarus II's could fit inside.

The closer he draws, the more awed Beelzebub becomes. He's never heard of this artifact before. Its very existence blindsides him, making him wonder what this object is and why, exactly, he's become attached to it.

Just as Beelzebub slows to a stop a thousand kilometers away, a figure instantly appears before him and starts speaking loudly, giving him a jumpscare.

[HI BEST FRIEND! I'VE BEEN WAITING FOR YOU!]

"Ahh!" Beelzebub exclaims, nearly jumping out of his skin. He reflexively punches a fireball at the 'attacker' but the attack instead disappears inside the tiny little flaming bird's body, making her do a loop-the-loop in excitement.

[Wow! Thank you for the fire! That's really nice of you!]

Beelzebub pauses for a few seconds, taking stock of this strange, tiny little bird.

"...Phoenix? Are you the Phoenix?"

[Well yeah, Best Friend! Who else could I be?] The Phoenix asks in her cute little girl voice. [You ask funny questions! You're funny!]

Beelzebub remains quiet for a moment. He recalls the time when a strange bird flew out of Jason and empowered his body. This led to his ascension to Demon Emperor, or rather, to Demon Overlord. It cleansed away his impurities and removed the taint of soul manipulation from him, allowing him to not only regain his former power but ascend far beyond it.

"What... is this giant cube?" Beelzebub asks. "And how are you related to it?"

[Oh, that's easy. My Bestest Best Friend made it for me!] The Phoenix chirps. [My Creator! She was a really nice person. I think. I don't actually remember her... or much of anything. Ohh!! Do you wanna come inside? I have lots of Small Friends in here!]

"Small Friends?" Beelzebub asks, befuddled.

He thinks for a moment, ultimately deciding that this Phoenix wouldn't harm him, given their apparent close relationship.

"Alright. Show me around. I could use something to distract myself."

[Okay! Great! Just follow me to the big stinky doorway.] The Phoenix says.

Beelzebub levitates after the Phoenix. He raises an eyebrow at her words.

How is a doorway 'stinky'? This Phoenix seems rather unreliable.

Before long, they arrive at a massive circular entrance leading inside the Cube. Big enough to fit ten Tarus II's, if it weren't for Beelzebub's cosmic senses, he might have trouble following its perimeter with his vision.

Once inside, Beelzebub and the Phoenix fly forward, and Beelzebub unsurprisingly finds that there isn't the faintest whiff of a 'stinky' odor in the air.

Then he gets the shock of his life.

All throughout the Cube, hundreds of autonomous machines buzz around, each one ranging in size from a moon to a planet. These machines do not function on technological principles, but magical ones. Energy churns around inside them as they perform various duties, mostly amounting to maintaining life support all throughout the Cube's interior.

To Beelzebub's surprise, outside of the Cube there is a vacuum like space, but after passing through the entrance, he arrives in a colossal interior space filled with oxygen and other life-uplifting gasses, all perfectly suited to Sentient needs.

And the longer Beelzebub looks, the more astonished he becomes. All throughout the Cube, there are 'bubbles' resembling small planets turned inside-out. Within these bubbles, Beelzebub senses the aura of humans and monsters living good lives, all within slightly time accelerated domains ranging from two to ten times Realspace speed.

"This Cube... is amazing." Beelzebub whispers. "Phoenix! How many humans are in here?"

The Phoenix pauses her flying. She spins around a few times, looking a little befuddled.

[Oh... I don't know... maybe a hundred?]

"That few?" Beelzebub asks. "Impossible. I sense at least a thousand in that little watery-bubble right over there!"

He points to one of the nearest planet-bubbles, and the Phoenix nods.

[That's what I said, Best Friend. There's a hundred Small Friends. A hundred thousand!]

"Oh! A hundred thousand? That's a good number, then." Beelzebub mutters.

The Phoenix continues flying deeper into the Cube, and Beelzebub follows her, his attention mostly focused on the humans all around him.

I don't know how many humans made it into the Labyrinth, but with the Wordsmiths dead, they're in grave danger! The humans here are a lot safer, especially now that they're under my protection, and their population will rapidly increase with time acceleration boosting their reproduction. But I can't ignore all the humans in Realspace.

"Phoenix," Beelzebub says, "There are other humans out in Realspace. Can you help me rescue them? I don't know how to get to the Labyrinth from here."

The Phoenix turns her head back to look at him.

[Realspace? Labyrinth? What are those?]

"You... don't know?" Beelzebub asks. "Then where did all these humans come from?"

[Big Ugly Rock.] The Phoenix says, seemingly losing interest. [I tried to save all the Small Friends like Good Friend told me, but then Big Ugly Rock disappeared. Rest of Small Friends disappeared with it.]

"Oh." Beelzebub says, his expression falling.

The Phoenix has a strange way of referring to people. Beelzebub contemplates. Big Ugly Rock must have been Tarus II. And her thinking is rather childish. I wonder if she even understands that all those people died.

Beelzebub doesn't press the issue. The Phoenix's immature way of speaking doesn't change the fact that it was her power which Uplifted him. He would never mock her, especially after she boosted him enough to take partial revenge on the Volgrim.

Beelzebub's gaze flicks inward. He scowls at Sartran's soul, thinking of all the ways he'll soon torture his so-called 'mentor' for information.

But now isn't the time.

"So, Phoenix, where are we going?" Beelzebub asks. "Where are you taking me?"

The Phoenix's expression lights up. Her bird-beak seems to curve up into a cute smile as she pauses her forward flight to buzz around Beelzebub excitedly.

[Great question, Best Friend! Good Friend went to sleep recently, but he won't wake up. I need your help to wake him up! You can do it, right? Right?]

Beelzebub raises an eyebrow. "You need my help to wake someone up? I mean, I guess. What's his name?"

The Phoenix pauses to give Beelzebub a strange look.

[I just told you, silly. He's Good Friend! Not as good of friend as Best Friend, but still Good Friend! Good Friend woke Phoenix up and made the Container stop being mean to Phoenix. Phoenix likes Good Friend! Good Friend gave Phoenix lots of Small Friends to play with too! Now Phoenix isn't bored all the time!]

Just as Beelzebub is about to say something, a mild sense of danger suddenly rushes toward him from behind. He quickly turns around to see a titanic floating twenty-sided star racing forward before abruptly coming to a stop half a kilometer away. Its presence dwarfs him in size like a skyscraper compared to an ant.

[HMM BRRM BRRM.]

The mechanical 'star' buzzes something incomprehensible at Beelzebub, but for some reason, he intuitively understands its speech.

[STATE YOUR DESIGNATION.]

Beelzebub frowns. "What are you?"

His refusal to answer the question angers the star. Its central core starts to glow red as it charges up an attack.

[INTRUDER DETECTED. ELIMINATE.]

"Who are you calling an intruder? The Phoenix invited me here, you lump of scrap metal!" Beelzebub snaps back. "You want to fight me?! Come on, give it your best shot!"

[Hey!] The Phoenix says, jumping between Beelzebub and the star. She snarls nastily at it. [Stupid Annoying Dummy! Go away! You're upsetting my Best Friend! You Big Jerk!]

The star pauses charging its attack.

[INTRUDER DESIGNATION?]

[He's Best Friend! Do you hear me, Big Jerk?? HE'S! BEST! FRIEND! Now go away!]

The star lowers its attacking intent.

[NOT INTRUDER?]

[No! He's a guest! You have to be nice to my guests!]

Just like that, the star deactivates its attack programming. It powers down, turns around, and flies away, accelerating from a dead stop to a breathtaking speed in an instant. It becomes a speck in the distance within seconds.

"...The hell was that?" Beelzebub asks, after it has left.

[One of the Ten Annoying Dummies.] The Phoenix replies, seemingly pouting. [Used to hurt me a lot until Good Friend made them a little nicer. But they're still mean! Stupid Big Jerks.]

Beelzebub scratches his head.

This place is weird.

It doesn't take much longer before they arrive at what Beelzebub estimates to be the central nexus of the entire Cube. There, a large stone platform levitates, nearly invisible strings of energy spreading out in all directions to control the climate of all the micro-worlds inside, as well as to empower the Cube's sentries and maintenance drones.

But that isn't what draws Beelzebub's attention.

Instead, he is shocked to feel a familiar soul resting atop the platform, enveloped in a flaming, divine barrier of energy to prevent the soul from escaping to the Great Beyond.

"That's... Jason Hiro's soul?!" Beelzebub exclaims, shocked beyond belief. "I thought- I thought he would have been trapped inside the Lazarus Tower when it was obliterated! To think he was here! Does that mean we can revive him??"

The Phoenix flies around Jason's soul playfully.

[Of course, silly! You always ask the funniest questions. Good Friend lost his body and he's sleeping now. But you can wake him up!]

Beelzebub's surprise turns to elation and excitement, but then his expression deflates.

"I can? But how? I don't know how to revive other people. Phoenix, are you sure I can do it?"

The Phoenix bobs up and down, almost as if nodding with her whole body.

[Yuppers! You can! But, err, well...]

She loses some of her enthusiasm, then she flies over and lands on Beelzebub's shoulder.

[Best Friend is really strong. Stronger than me. But Best Friend has to become weak to save Good Friend. Phoenix doesn't want to hurt Best Friend, but Phoenix also doesn't want Good Friend to sleep forever.]

Beelzebub remains quiet for a moment.

He thinks about the implications behind her words.

"I'm a Middle Cosmic now, and you're clearly much weaker than me. Are you saying that in order to revive Jason Hiro, I need to give up my power?"

The Phoenix nods her little head, ever so slightly. Her expression turns downcast.

[Phoenix is sorry. This is the only way. Phoenix doesn't want Best Friend to be weak, especially when Best Friend was so happy about becoming stronger before. Phoenix also sensed that Bad People hurt Good Friend. If Best Friend becomes weaker, Bad People might return and hurt Best Friend and Small Friends. Phoenix doesn't want her friends to suffer.]

Beelzebub remains quiet for a moment.

"This... 'weakening'. Is it permanent?"

[Yeah.] The Phoenix mutters softly. [Best Friend will have to get stronger again in some other way. You won't regain your strength over time.]

"I see." Beelzebub says.

Beelzebub becomes very still for a time.

He thinks carefully on the long term ramifications of this choice.

Right now, the Volgrim have lost the Threat of their Middle Cosmic, but they still have many powerful 8th and 7th Level Psions in their army. If just a handful of them attack, and Beelzebub isn't a Middle Cosmic anymore, the Cube will be in grave danger.

But at the same time, Jason's revival will mean a much brighter future for humanity. The Wordsmith can surely continue to innovate powerful new spells and abilities over time, uplifting humanity as a whole.

Furthermore, Beelzebub thinks to himself that he personally owes Jason a great debt. If it weren't for Jason inadvertently bestowing the Phoenix upon him, Beelzebub would have remained a mortal for the rest of his short, miserable life.

Even if giving up his power would result in him becoming a mortal again... it would still be worth it for repaying the debt he owes.

Beelzebub stays silent for only a few minutes. He thinks about many things. He contemplates the consequences of this choice.

And he ultimately makes his decision.

"Don't worry about it, Phoenix. I rose to a Middle Cosmic once already. So what if I have to do it again?"

Beelzebub sneers. His ego rapidly begins to inflate as a haughty expression imprints upon his face. He crosses his arms and assumes a domineering stance.

"Hah! The Great Beelzebub, backing down from a challenge? Unlikely! As if I'd fear having to work my way up to a Cosmic again. You know what? It was too easy the first time around! The second time, I ought to put a little effort into my Uplifting. It's no fun having someone else boost me by accident. Much better to work and improve my power the old fashioned way!"

[Wowowow!] The Phoenix chirps happily. [Best Friend is so cool! Best friend isn't scared of anything! Okay, so you want to help Phoenix wake up Good Friend now?]

"Yeah. Do what you have to." Beelzebub says, lowering his crossed arms to stare at Jason's soul seriously. "What do you need from me?"

The Phoenix flies over to the Wordsmith's soul. She lands atop it like a bird taking a perch. Then she looks at Beelzebub.

[Give Phoenix your power. Phoenix will do the rest.]

Beelzebub nods. In spite of his bravado, he still hesitates for a moment, but pushes through his wariness without hesitation.

I owe him this much!

Beelzebub summons his Cosmic energy. He begins carefully beaming it to the Phoenix through their invisible link, but the Phoenix swallows it so greedily and so easily that Beelzebub starts to turn up the pressure, sending more and more of his Cosmic power every second.

All the while, Beelzebub's Middle Cosmic energy rapidly deflates. He begins to feel somewhat sickly, and then, it happens.

He drops to the level of a Low Cosmic.

Slightly saddened by the reality of this loss, Beelzebub continues to press onward. He roars with fury and sends an even more powerful flood of energy the Phoenix's way, and she absorbs that too!

Before long, his Low Cosmic status also disappears. Beelzebub drops to the level of a Bottom Cosmic, the same as Mephisto.

Several minutes later, his energy finally plunges below the Cosmic level.

He returns to the realm of mortals, assuming the rank of Demon Overlord.

[That's... enough...] The Phoenix says, her expression pained.

Beelzebub stops transferring his energy. He blinks in surprise, having expected needing to give the Phoenix all of his energy and returning to the level of an ordinary mortal. Remaining at a Demon Overlord power is an extremely good outcome, especially compared to his fears.

But Beelzebub stops paying attention to any of that. His eyes widen as the Phoenix's tiny body rapidly assimilates his Cosmic power. It releases Jason's soul and takes to the air, crying out in pain and ecstasy as its miniature form inflates in size, quickly surpassing Beelzebub's height, then growing bigger, bigger, bigger...

Beelzebub's eyes nearly pop out of their sockets. The Phoenix grows until it reaches the level of the Sentry Stars, completely dwarfing Beelzebub with its immensity. It cries out again, screeching to the void and causing his brain to buzz with pain.

[I remember now.] The Phoenix says, no longer sounding childish and innocent. Its voice booms with the divine grace and gravitas of an ancient, wizened women far beyond her years. Her eyes sparkle with insight as she regains countless ancient memories previously locked away within her psyche.

[My creator: Camael. My purpose: To contain the Dark Dragon. My battle: Neverending. My suffering: Immeasurable. The weakening of my soul over the eons. The Dark Dragon's struggle to the bitter end. Its sudden and violent... escape.]

The Phoenix's eyes burn with peerless radiance. It sweeps its gaze across the Milky Way, frowning as it fails to detect the aura of its tormentor.

[Dead? Impossible. There are no Apex Cosmics alive now. How could that ancient fiend have perished? It must still be out there, somewhere, hiding.]

Then, the Phoenix turns its frightening gaze upon Beelzebub.

[Small one. Best Friend. You have revived a portion of my power. I offer my deepest gratitude. I am no longer strong enough to contend with that abomination from the Primordial Era, but now that I need not suppress it, I can seek out ways to increase my Cosmic Energy once more. I have already paid The Creator a visit. He has explained to me the current state of the galaxy. This is no longer a flourishing era, but a dead one, ripe for exploitation by the Milky Way's many enemies.]

Beelzebub feels a sense of primal awe from deep within his soul. The sheer majesty on display by the formerly silly bird goes way beyond anything he expected.

He only intended to revive Jason Hiro. He had no idea he would accidentally awaken this powerhouse.

"Phoenix? You're so... big! I didn't expect- I mean, did you intend for this to happen?"

The Phoenix looks at him blankly.

[My naive, weakened form knew very little of the galactic situation, or of mortal happenings. Guided purely by instincts, she only sought to revive the entity known as the Wordsmith, Jason Hiro. It is our good fortune that my embarrassing, weak little self managed to bring forth her former glory, even if purely by accident. I am ashamed you had to see me in such a pitiful state, my Best Friend.]

Beelzebub blushes slightly. Being called a 'Best Friend' by such an overwhelmingly powerful entity just doesn't feel as cute and endearing as before.

But, he wagers secretly that he'll get used to it in time.

"Can you bring back Jason Hiro now?" Beelzebub asks.

The Phoenix sweeps her mighty gaze over his soul.

[Indeed, I can. Though not a trivial feat to perform, it is well within my power. Due to the manner of his body's destruction, his soul has suffered some damage. Nothing I cannot repair. Because of his wise decision to tie his existence to mine, I possess many Cosmic inroads to the pathways of his soul. Reviving him is little more than a matter of a short time.]

Beelzebub bows his head. "Great Phoenix, I beseech you to revive the Wordsmith. The galaxy's fate relies on him."

The Phoenix remains quiet for a short time.

She recalls a certain divine vision her creator once spoke to her about in great secrecy, a prophecy of universal importance.

[More than you know. Less than you think. And certainly not in the way that you expect, my Best Friend.]

Magical energy swells within the Phoenix's chest. She taps into the full power of her newly revived Cosmic might and chuckles.

[Tis' a shame that I am only a Middle Cosmic. If I were an Apex Cosmic like in the past, bringing Jason Hiro back would take less than a second. Ah, the vicissitudes of time...]

She sends a beam of heavenly energy directly into Jason's soul, causing his psyche to scream in pain.

Some time afterward, The Wordsmith is reborn...

Part 609: Wordsmith's Woe (END OF BOOK 5)

Jason Hiro awakens slowly.

Very slowly.

His eyes open, but he fails to make out anything in front of him using his sight. In his field of view, the entire world is little more than a hazy, blurry mess of disorienting colors and confusion.

Sounds rumble into his ears. He fails to make them out.

Who is he? Where is he? What is he doing? What was he doing?

Like a child confused by the chaos of the universe, Jason fumbles his hands around, grabbing at his chest. He starts to shiver, slightly frightened by the sights and sounds barraging his senses.

Slowly, his mental acuity claws its way back to life. A hand lifts him up by the back of his head, pulling him into a sitting position, nearly making him vomit from dizziness.

"-awake? Can you hear me? Jason? Jason?"

A male voice speaks. Jason blinks his eyes, befuddled. He recognizes the words. He faintly recognizes the voice. But he also fails to remember how to work his own mouth and vocal cords.

Some unintelligible sputters escape his mouth. A female voice, much more powerful and grandiose than the male voice, replies inside his mind.

[His soul has suffered catastrophic damage. Give him a while. Rebuilding his brain was a simple task for me, but it will still require time for his soul to re-acclimate to his new body.]

Minutes pass. Jason's delirium lessens, bit by bit. He looks around, dazed and confused, eventually meeting the eyes of a strange, red-skinned man with pointy ears.

"Jason. It's me. Beelzebub. Can you understand me? Are you lucid?"

Jason slowly blinks.

"Beel...be..bub...?"

"Close. You've almost got it." Beelzebub says, slightly frowning. "How many fingers am I holding up?"

Jason head lolls forward. The urge to sleep nearly seizes hold of him, but Beelzebub lightly shakes him back awake.

"Focus, Jason. No sleep now. Sleep later, okay? How many fingers?"

Jason smiles, his expression slightly stupid. "Three."

"No there's- actually, you're right. It is three. I expected you to get it wrong. My bad." Beelzebub says, chuckling to himself. He looks behind Jason, at the massive form of the Phoenix. "How long will it take him to get back to his usual self?"

[Not long.] The Phoenix replies. [I'll have you know my ability to regrow bodies is beyond any mortal science or magic you could ever envision. It is my greatest purpose, and my highest accomplishment. Soon, Jason will remember who he is, and what he fights for. Just keep talking to him. And don't let him fall asleep. If he sleeps, it will cause the acclimation process to revert, and he might lose his soul again. This time, permanently.]

Beelzebub nods. Despite having already heard this, the reminder doesn't hurt. It would be a terrible tragedy if they brought Jason back to life, only for the Wordsmith to die a few minutes later because his soul was too sleepy.

Several more minutes pass. Eventually, some clarity returns to Jason's eyes. His breathing normalizes, and his expression becomes more placid. He stops wearing a stupid smile, and eventually he manages to sit up on his own.

"Beel...zebub..." Jason grunts, resting his face in his hands. "What are you... doing here? Where am I? What's going on?"

"You're inside the Cube." Beelzebub explains. "Camael's Cube. The Phoenix has just revived you."

Jason remains quiet for a few moments. He almost asks Beelzebub what the Cube is, who Camael is, and who the Phoenix is, but after a few seconds, the answers slowly bubble up in his mind, so he thinks better of it.

"Camael... Cube... Phoenix... I, uh, I see. Cube. Cube. Why am I in the Cube? I think... I was doing something... important..."

Beelzebub's frown deepens. He glances at the Phoenix, remembering the instructions she gave him. Even so, he didn't expect the temporary amnesia to be this severe.

Hopefully, Jason will return to his former intellect. It'd be a tragedy if he stayed an idiot forever. Beelzebub thinks.

But luckily, as more minutes pass, Jason remembers more and more of what happened.

"That's right. I was... fighting... someone."

"Hope." Beelzebub replies. "You were fighting Hope."

Jason scrunches up his face. "How could I fight 'hope'? That's just a concept. You can't fight an idea."

"No, I'm talking about Hope Hiro, your clone. Remember?" Beelzebub prompts.

"Ohhh... yeah... Hope Hiro." Jason mutters. "My clone. We were fighting... I don't remember- I said something, then he said... something... and then... what happened next?"

Beelzebub and the Phoenix exchange a glance. They both metaphorically shrug.

"We're not sure." Beelzebub says. "I didn't get to observe your battle. I don't know how it ended, other than that I think you killed Hope."

"I did?" Jason asks, turning slightly pale. "Why would I kill my clone? That doesn't seem like a very nice thing to do."

He pauses, thinks for a moment, then his expression becomes crestfallen.

"Not nice at all. But I remember now. He said some... nasty things... about my wife. He was a real jerk."

Jason nods slowly.

"...A real jerk."

Beelzebub resists the urge to raise his eyebrow until it smashes through the Cube's roof. Jason's weird sayings are actually starting to aggravate him a little, but at the same time, he can't really blame a guy who just went through a traumatic resurrection.

"Do you remember killing him?" Beelzebub asks.

Jason purses his lips. He remains silent for ten, perhaps twenty seconds.

"Yeah. I do. My Wordsmithing was superior. I managed to save the other Heroes, too. Including Lorent."

Beelzebub nods. He creases his brow and looks away.

"That should be about the time when the Volgrim attacked. They killed you, striking from behind. That's what the Phoenix said, anyway."

The Phoenix nods. [My weaker self received a transmission from Chrona informing me to begin immediate and nonstop evacuations. I followed the guidelines and did as I was told.]

Jason remains quiet for a moment. Then his head suddenly jerks in alarm.

"Wait- the Volgrim attacked? They killed me?! And then you revived me- that's why I'm here?!"

Beelzebub nods. "Jason, it's been over three hours since you died. After they killed you, the Psions attacked Tarus II. They... destroyed it. They killed every human who wasn't able to be teleported off-world in time."

"WHAT?!"

Jason nearly has a heart attack and dies a second time!

He jumps to his feet, then staggers and falls to his knees, coughing hysterically as his heart-rate spikes from adrenaline.

"NO! No!! It can't- they wouldn't! COUGH COUGH! How dare they?! The people! My COUGH, friends, my family! Where is everyone?! What happened to them?!"

Jason clutches his chest, sputtering painfully as the sudden and unexpected pain of loss and grief contrasts with his confusion from being reborn. He looks at Beelzebub, desperate for answers.

"I don't know how many are still alive, and I don't know how many died." Beelzebub says. "I checked, though. Your wife isn't here. She might be inside the Labyrinth-"

"The Labyrinth! That's it! I have to look for her!" Jason shouts. He pauses for half a second, his mind racing. "Heal! Normalize! Energy! Return!"

He rejuvenates his body, and before Beelzebub can warn him about his complete lack of clothing, the Wordsmith disappears.

"That... played out differently in my head." Beelzebub mutters to nobody in particular.

* * *

Demon Deity Yardrat's astral body levitates beside Demon Deities Kristoff, Auger, and Melody. Their four astral bodies 'stand' on the ceiling of the Labyrinth Core, unburdened by the limitations of gravity.

"With Beelzebub's sudden ascension, the humans are not as defenseless as they seemed a few hours ago." Auger points out. Naturally, he and the other Deities have sensed Beelzebub's Cosmic Aura from across the galaxy. "The Second Founder is in shambles, possibly even dead. That means the Volgrim are now the only major player in the Milky Way without a Middle Cosmic to protect them. That bodes well for us."

Yardrat smiles at Melody. "Of course, the humans depend on the kindness of two Demon Deities to protect them. That means, in essence, their fates are not theirs to control. I wonder what you think about this?"

Melody scowls. "I think rather than scheming against the humans, you should ask the bigger question here. How did Beelzebub uplift himself? And to such a level, I might add. He chased Executor Nufaris across several star systems. He is clearly not limited in the same way as the rest of us. Without Diablo, it should not have been possible to Ascend..."

The other three Demon Deities scowl back at Melody, then look at one another, not certain of what to say.

The humans gaining a second protector is truly shocking. If it were only Melody, that would be one thing. But for Beelzebub to become a Middle Cosmic too, and one who is not shackled to a single star system, that means his allegiance will be of the utmost importance moving forward.

"The future is not set in stone." Auger says, schooling his expression. "Melody, your love for the humans is... noble... but it is also fraught with peril. Those same humans could someday rise up and grow to resent you. Do you truly wish to work with Beelzebub and protect them? They are a danger to our species."

"They're only mortals. Leave them alone." Melody fires back. "Haven't they suffered enough? Now they've lost both of their homeworlds and have to start all over again."

"We demons have lost worlds too." Yardrat protests. "Hell Harbor was reduced to rubble. Sharmur, it will take you decades, perhaps even centuries to rebuild. And if the Plague returns, surely it will ease your mind to have allies like us at your disposal."

"With allies like you..." Melody repeats, crossing her muscled arms, "...who needs enemies?"

"Now now, there's no need to be so quick to anger." Auger says in a soothing tone. "After all, there are many concessions your fellow Deities would be willing to- huh?"

At once, all four Deities flick their eyes toward an outcropping inside the Core, slightly above the mass of humans and monsters who managed to evacuate and are now waiting in lines to travel to Sharmur and Pixiv.

There, atop that outcropping, an unbelievable sight grabs their attention, as well as the attention of everyone else in the vicinity.

A flash of light erupts outward, and a completely naked man materializes atop the platform.

Someone in the crowd screams in shock.

"What the f- isn't that... JASON? He's alive?!"

"The Wordsmith! How in the- I thought Chrona said he died?!"

Within just a few seconds, every pair of eyes in the vicinity turns to look at Jason, only to then immediately glance downward at his... manly bits.

Why the hell is the Wordsmith naked?

Jason doesn't answer that question. Too frantic with shock, he completely ignores the people's strange gazes and swivels his eyes from side to side.

"Phoebe! Where is Phoebe? Where is my wife? Has anyone seen her??"

His words cause the crowd to gasp. It really is him. As for why he's naked, that matters a lot less than answering his question. He must have been knocked unconscious and just woken up or something.

"We haven't seen her, Jason!" One trooper calls out, amplifying his voice with his T-REX. "You can ask High Command. General Chadwick and Linda Hurent are in Neil's old office!"

Jason nods. Without hesitation, he barks a Word of Power. "Teleport!"

He vanishes from the spot, making the three 'enemy' Demon Deities scowl even harder.

"It really is him!" Kristoff exclaims. "He used his Word Magic! How did he survive? I thought Dosena blasted him with her full Cosmic power?!"

Demon Deity Melody grins, her mood instantly rising. She smiles cheekily at her fellow Deity.

"I guess you can't help but keep underestimating the humans' mightiest Hero, huh?"

* * *

Jason flickers into Linda's office. She and Chadwick jump in shock, not even having had time to hear news of his return, so little time has it been since his arrival.

"Hope?! No- Jason?" Linda screams. "You're alive? You're... you're really alive?!"

"And why in gods' name are you buck naked?!" Chadwick asks, finally causing Jason to look downward.

"Ah- shit, sorry." Jason says, finally noticing his nudity. "Clothes. There, now forget about that. Where is Phoebe? Have you seen her? Is she safe?"

A moment of silence follows. Linda and Chadwick, still reeling from the revelation that Jason is alive, need a few seconds to grapple with this new fact, and then to think about his question.

"Phoebe isn't here." Linda finally answers. "I believe she was taken either by the Hall of Heroes, Chrona, or the Cube. I don't know which one. She was obviously designated a high priority asset, so she would have been the first person saved."

Jason blinks.

He thinks for a moment, then finally recalls an important fact.

He told Fiona before battling Hope that if anything should go wrong, no matter what, Fiona needed to prioritize saving Phoebe and Timothy above all else.

"Fuck! I'm so stupid!" Jason exclaims, clawing at his face. "If my memory wasn't so- never mind. You're right. Fiona has her! I should have realized."

Jason closes his eyes. He looks inside his Mind Realm to tap into the central control system for his Mental Supercomputer.

Over the last 200+ years, he has slowly built up an immense spiritual computer capable of accelerating his thoughts in short bursts, strategically analyzing enemy attack patterns, and predicting future events based on known and quantifiable data.

This supercomputer also has the useful function of allowing him to communicate with Chrona, even when his body is in Realspace, at hyper-accelerated speeds.

But when Jason looks inside his Mind Realm, he finds… nothing.

Nothing!

The entirety of his Mental Supercomputer is gone!

His expression turns cold. He opens his eyes and stares ahead vacantly, causing Linda and Chadwick to look at him in confusion.

He sure is acting weird, they think.

After a few moments, Jason puzzles out the truth of the matter.

Once he died, the Phoenix remade his body. And when she did, she likely reconstituted it from scratch. Naturally, his Mind Realm was made anew. It wouldn't have included his Mental Supercomputer.

That explains why Fiona didn't immediately contact me. Jason thinks. She couldn't. But it's no matter. I'll just speak to her now.

He nods at Linda and Chadwick. "I'll be back later. For now, start tallying the losses. I want a full report when I return."

Linda nods. "Consider it done."

Chadwick smiles. "It's good to have you back. It wasn't until you were gone that humanity realized how badly it needed you."

Jason doesn't bother replying. His anxiety is already making him dizzy with worry.

Since his brain no longer has its innate protections against the effects of Extreme Time Dilation, Jason makes sure to take half a minute Wordsmithing various protective effects before teleporting back to Chrona.

"Hyper. Accelerate. Contain. Protection. Defense. Accelerate. Condition. Reprieve. Expand. Defense…"

Finally, he speaks the last word needed to complete the ritual.

"Return."

Jason vanishes, leaving the others behind.

He appears inside the Spynet Sphere, where he finds Fiona standing there, her expression... inscrutable.

"Finally." Fiona says, sighing softly. "I really thought you were dead, Jason. I saw everything that happened. Everything before and after the Psions killed you."

Jason nods hurriedly. "That's good. You can tell me all about it later. But for now, I just need to know, where are Phoebe and Timothy? Are they safe? Did you bring them here like I told you?"

Fiona tucks her lower lip inward. She bows her head.

"It's been over a month, you know. A month since you died. And nearly a full week since the Phoenix revived you."

Jason blinks several times. He looks at Fiona with a bizarre expression.

"I get that this has been hard for you, Fiona. I do. I just- look, can we put that off? This talk? Just for a minute or two? Where's Phoebe? Is she okay?"

"A month is a long time, Jason." Fiona says, raising her eyes to meet his. "I lost my faith after the first two weeks. Once the Lazarus Tower was destroyed... I felt my heart break."

"Fiona... what... what is this?" Jason mumbles, feeling slightly dizzy. "What do you- why are you talking like this? Where's Phoebe?"

"I did what you told me to do." Fiona mutters, looking away. She touches her arm. "I just... I'm sorry, Jason. I'm sorry."

"Sorry? Sorry about what?" Jason asks. "Locate."

He pings his wife's location.

But the result comes back negative.

And in that moment, Jason's heart turns cold.

"What... what did you- where is she? What happened? Why can't I detect her?"

Fiona closes her eyes. She doesn't say anything, but merely gestures for Jason to follow.

His legs seemingly full of lead, Jason staggers along behind Fiona, feeling his stomach slowly plunge into the soles of his shoes.

They don't walk far.

Directly across from the Spynet Sphere, inside Jason's house, they pass through the front doors, and there, Jason sees a sight that nearly steals the life from his body on the spot.

"No... no... it can't be..." Jason whispers, stumbling forward as he places his hand on the cryogenic pod. Through its frosted glass, his wife's face peeks out, her eyes closed, in the silence of eternal sleep.

"She didn't make it." Fiona whispers. "I'm sorry, Jason. She... she was alive. I... I activated the teleportation array. She came here. So did Timothy. He made it, but... she... she died on the spot. I couldn't... I couldn't resuscitate her. I even tried bringing Samantha and Leeroy here, but they couldn't bring her back."

Several long seconds of silence follow.

Jason loses the strength in his legs. He slumps to his knees, his hands dragging against the ice-cold glasses as his forehead presses lifelessly against the cryopod.

"I'm sorry, Jason. I'm sorry." Fiona whispers, as tears well up in her eyes. "All I could do... was... preserve her. That's it. I can't- there's nothing left. No soul. And if there was, the- the Lazarus Tower... it's gone... so..."

Jason remains silent. He stares blankly into the cryopod, unable to speak. His eyes lose focus. His arms drop to his sides.

"Dead." Jason mutters. "Dead. Truly dead."

A faint flicker of light sparks in his soul. Abruptly, he looks up at Phoebe's face.

"Resurrect. Revive! Heal! Regenerate! Restore! Resurrect! Revive! Return!!"

Jason speaks one Word of Power after another.

He rapid-fires them out, repeating some, praying, hoping for a miracle.

But his prayers go unanswered.

Like Hope before him, who failed to truly revive Amelia, Jason also fails to bring his wife back.

His previous hollowness becomes even more empty and full of despair. He sags sideways, turns around, and lays back against the pod, looking up at the ceiling in a daze.

"I can't... fix her... I can't... bring her back... there's no point anymore... there's nothing..."

Fiona grits her teeth. "Jason. Jason! Look at me! You have Timothy. Your son! You still have Timothy! I'll get him for you! Think about what Phoebe would want. Don't let your son down!"

But her words fall on deaf ears.

"Oh. My son." Jason mumbles. "Yeah. Him. Good idea. Let me kill him too. Just like Daisy. Just like Phoebe. Kill him too. Kill them all. Everyone on Maiura. Everyone on Tarus. Kill all the humans. Kill all my friends. Kill my family. Just kill them all."

Jason stares at nothing. He looks into the abyss, feeling a new, horrible sensation swallow him whole.

A feeling of grief too black and frightening to put into words.

A loss so deep, so heart-wrenching that none who hadn't experienced something similar could comprehend the depths of such despair.

"Kill Phoebe. Kill Daisy. Kill Timothy. Kill Fiona. Kar. Blinker. Kill everyone. Hope was right. I'm useless. I'm nothing. I only bring death."

"No. Jason, that's not true." Fiona says. She bites her lip, then walks a little closer. "You can't- you can't blame yourself. This was... this was my fault. If I had just... calibrated the teleporter better... if I had... had..."

"Don't do that." Jason mumbles. "Don't try to make me feel better. It was my fault. It always was. It always is."

Slowly, as if his joints were moving with the same robotic motions as his Dronesmiths, Jason stands up. He smiles emptily at Fiona.

"Just go, Fiona. Just go. I want to be alone right now. With Phoebe. With my wife."

Fiona stares at Jason. She looks past him, at the cryopod with Phoebe's frozen body.

Unwilling to leave, she remains in place, hindered by indecision.

"Fiona. You can go." Jason says. "Looking at you right now... hurts. You're not Phoebe. But looking at you... makes the pain worse. Please go."

Fiona lowers her head. She ultimately relents. She slowly turns around and takes a step toward the door, pausing when she hears Jason say one last thing.

"I love you, Fiona." Jason says. "Just like... I loved Phoebe. I love you."

Tears well up in Fiona's eyes.

"I love you too, Jason."

Unable to look back, she exits the building, and the door closes behind her.

After her departure, Jason turns to Phoebe's pod. Silently, he presses some of the buttons on it, activating its wake-up procedure. Jason pulls his wife out of Cryostasis, then lifts her into his arms to carry her like a princess.

He stands there for a minute, in the silence of the room, before looking off into the distance.

"I... don't want... to be here... right now." Jason says to nobody in particular.

He remains quiet.

Then, he utters a Word of Power.

"Teleport."

Instantly, Jason departs Chrona's temporal space. He re-emerges into Realspace, arriving inside a pitch-black hallway.

An unknown, empty hallway somewhere in the Labyrinth.

Jason continues to stare forward for a full minute. Lost in thought, he reminisces about his past.

He remembers the first time he met Phoebe, shortly after Bahamut's death.

He remembers when Amelia cut his throat and left him to die.

It was Phoebe who nursed him back to health.

She treated him better than he deserved. When other people mocked him for being a cripple, no longer a mighty Wordsmith, she was there for him.

When she was injured during the battles against Satan and the Archdemon, Jason felt scared for her life, but she ultimately pulled through.

When they lost their daughter, Jason blamed himself, and he felt even worse for his wife.

And now, after all these years...

"I regret." Jason says under his breath, as he looks into the blackness enveloping his wife's face. Even with nothing to latch his eyes onto, he feels as if he can still see Phoebe looking at him, sadness in her eyes.

And why wouldn't she be sad?

He failed her.

He failed humanity.

He failed everyone.

Jason slumps down. He rests on the ground, his back against the wall, his wife in his arms.

"You know what?" Jason says, as if Phoebe will reply. "I don't care anymore. About anything. Any of this. I realize now. Ever since I met you, you were the one thing that always kept me going. The one thing I always cared about. Even when Daisy died, I was able to persevere because of you."

"But there's nothing left now."

"There's nothing for me to care about."

He momentarily thinks of his son, but even that thought barely lasts a minute.

"It's better if I don't stick around. I'll just kill him too." Jason mutters. "Fiona can raise him."

Jason gently runs his fingers through his wife's hair.

"Let's just stay like this. Okay? Til' death do us part. We'll stay like this... until I die. Then everything will be okay again."

Jason smiles.

"It'll all be fine."

He closes his eyes.

Time passes...

A minute...

An hour...

Perhaps a day.

Jason stops caring. His heart becomes stone.

All thoughts turn to Void...

Until...

A voice speaks in the darkness.

"Haha. Well. Isn't this sad?"

Jason opens his eyes. He gazes ahead at the wall he can't see. He sighs.

"Oh. It's you. Of course it's you."

"Come now. That's no way to talk to an old friend."

"Go away." Jason murmurs. "Or... you know what? Just kill me. That's fine. I don't care anymore."

"Yes. I can see that. Seems the wifey died. Shame. I thought you two were such a cute couple."

A momentary flicker of anger passes across Jason's vision. He looks to his left, where he sees a pair of blood-red eyes looking at him from the darkness, perhaps fifty feet away.

"Was it you? Did you kill her?"

"No, no. Don't be ridiculous, Jason." The demon says, chuckling sinisterly. "That wouldn't be any fun. Tormenting you is one thing, but all those people who died... they died because of you. Because of your incompetence. As for the wifey, welp, chalk it up to some bad luck. Sometimes... shit happens. Haha."

Jason's anger fades, replaced once more with the indifference of death. He looks at the wall ahead and sighs softly.

"I don't want to talk to anyone. If you're not here to kill me, then just leave. I want to be alone."

The demon falls silent for a few seconds.

"...How boring. You're no fun when you're like this, Jason. Don't you even know who I am? I'm your best friend. I'm your closest ally."

Jason snorts, painfully unamused. "The hell you are, Gressil. God. Your mind-games are so tiring. I don't have the interest in playing them anymore."

Gressil plods over and flops down beside Jason, then lightly squeezes his shoulder.

"Oh come on, kid. This isn't a game. It's reality. Haven't you realized the Truth yet?"

Jason doesn't answer. He simply closes his eyes and ignores Hell's prison warden.

Gressil smirks. "Jason. Do you remember when we first met?"

When Jason doesn't answer, Gressil continues. "No, I don't mean our first fun little game of cat and mouse. I mean before that. When I played 'gargoyle' and you stumbled upon my 'statue' shortly after exiting your cryopod. Didn't you ever think back on that little interaction and find it suspicious? Why was I there, right outside your cryopod's room?"

Jason still remains silent, so Gressil continues to speak.

He leans in a little closer, practically hissing in Jason's ear.

"It's because I let you out, Jason. I released you from that cryopod. I stole you away from Marie's laboratory with my little bag of tricks. Actually, I stole a few other pods first. I wasn't sure which one that Cat Mask put you in, but I knew I'd find it eventually."

Jason sighs.

"Alright. I'll bite. Why let me out, then?"

"Haha. Isn't it obvious?" Gressil asks, smiling even wider than before, with his hideous, long-beaked face. "It's because I was bored. Playing with these uninteresting three-dimensional opponents is no fun. But ever since you revived, there has been an endless cycle of Chaos. Countless wars, no more stalemates. No more Volgrim throwing bodies at the Plague for them to slowly, efficiently, mindlessly devour."

"Great. Good job." Jason mutters. "Are you done?"

Gressil squeezes Jason's shoulder again. "Come on, chum. Don't be boring! Be more vibrant! You're a Wordsmith! Why are you acting like a three-dimensional enemy when you should be thinking in four?"

"Gressil." Jason says, his tone as bland as ever. "I just don't care anymore. Okay? You know why. Stop wasting both of our time. If you're going to kill me, just kill me."

"Right. Because the wifey died." Gressil replies, sneakily jabbing another verbal knife into Jason's heart. "As I said before, it's such a shame she's gone. If only she were still around, you'd be fun to play with again."

"I already tried reviving her." Jason says. "It didn't work. Nothing works. My powers are useless. Just like me."

Gressil pushes himself off the ground and rises into a standing position. He cracks his back nonchalantly, looking off into the distance.

"Ahh, so true. So true. Wordsmithing can't bring people back from the dead. There's no take-backsies. No do-overs. Oh, if only you could fix all your past screw-ups. If only you could do it all over again, with the knowledge you have now. Surely you wouldn't make the same mistakes. But alas! There's no way that's possible!"

Gressil shakes his head, bemoaning Jason's lack of ability. He beats his chest in grief.

"If only life granted us second chances, perhaps I wouldn't be stuck, fused together with this rotten lump of flesh that once called itself my mother. Ah, but there are no do-overs. Isn't that right, Wordsmith? Isn't... that... right...? We just can't do things all over again..."

Jason unwillingly listens to Gressil. Slowly, his mind spins up a little, seemingly whirring back into action like a broken timepiece restored with a slight jolt of energy.

"Do things... all over... again?"

Jason blinks a few times. He looks into the darkness, at the place where he would normally see his wife's face.

Do it all over again.

Go back and fix the past.

Change things. Don't make the same mistakes.

Jason's heart thumps in his chest, as if turning from rock to flesh. A quiet gasp of air sucks into his lungs.

Go back.

Do it again.

TRY AGAIN.

ONE MORE TRY.

WON'T BE LIKE BEFORE.

Jason's body starts to tremble.

Fear, anticipation, excitement.

All these emotions blend together into an emotion Jason previously couldn't bring himself to feel.

Hope.

This emotion becomes so overpowering, so intoxicating, that Jason fails to resist its pull.

Like a magnet drawn to its opposite, Jason shakily rises, still holding his wife in his arms.

"To... go back... it can't be possible..."

Gressil sneers. He turns to look at Jason, his eyes narrowing in the darkness.

"Can't it? You're a Wordsmith. You can make the impossible... possible."

Jason's mind spins with excitement. The loss of yesterday suddenly becomes a possible redemption for tomorrow. He looks at the body held in his arms, and at once, he comes to a decision.

"I... have to try... even if not for me... for her! For them! For everyone!"

That idea coalesces into a concrete concept, and that concept finds its way onto Jason's tongue.

A Word of Power!

"REWIND!"

Jason utters a fateful word that will forever break the fabric of reality itself.

Power swells inside his body. An illumination as bright as a star ignites within his chest for a fraction of a second, lighting up all of his surroundings!

And then...

It vanishes.

An instant later, Jason's eyes lose their light.

The Wordsmith collapses, bringing his wife with him.

Both of their bodies ragdoll to the floor.

Dead.

Gressil stares at the two of them. An eerie glow illuminates within his soul.

His smile turns maniacal.

"Did it... I finally... DID IT..."

"HAH... HAHA... HAHAHAHAHA!!!"

Gressil rears his head back. He laughs uproariously, cackling to the heavens as countless potential futures branch out in his mind.

"SHATTERED! IT'S ALL BROKEN! CHAOS FOREVER! THE GREAT SHATTERING IS HERE! HAHAHAHAHA!!!"

"JASON HIRO, YOU REALLY DID IT! YOU DIDN'T FAIL ME AFTER ALL!"

"HAAAHAHAHAAA!!"

Gressil's greatest plan ultimately succeeds.

Everything will be different now.