Part 293: Retaking the Core

Due to the events of Stormbringer, humanity suffers a devastating loss. After well over two of the three million people on Tarus II perish, only half a million remain, with eighty percent of them being human, and the rest a mixture of monsters, along with a handful of allied demons.

Three days after Stormbringer's conclusion, outside the Fortress of Retribution's walls, every single member of humanity's survivors gather. With all of the injured and wounded healed by the Hero's seemingly limitless mana capacity, none appear injured on their bodies. However, their minds and souls are a different story. A downcast atmosphere lingers in the minds of every person present, with few exceptions.

Jason and Phoebe Hiro stand solemnly atop a fifty-foot-tall platform, allowing them to overlook the throng of humanity's last free individuals. Despite the possibility demonkind might attack again, nobody appears worried, having observed the Wordsmith's current level of power. With Camael's Cube at his beck and call, any invading force will surely perish instantly. None of the First Hell's survivors would be so stupid as to attack a world where their mightiest Emperor and Dukes fell.

A nearly invisible force-field hums in the skies above. It encompasses the entire planet, preventing Warpers from stepping foot on Tarus II's soil. Numerous magical embattlements dot the land. Their tremendous firepower and automated aim will allow them to repel any intruder who dares step foot on humanity's bulwark world without permission.

"Everyone," The Wordsmith begins. "Thank you for coming. I owe you all an apology... from the bottom of my heart. I am sorry. I have failed you."

He pauses for a beat, allowing his words to sink into the ears of the half-million-strong audience.

"We've all lost people precious to us during the despicable Stormbringer Attack. Ose planned to capture Hope and I in order to enslave humanity. She failed, in the end... but our victory has proven hollow. The cost we paid was too high. Far, far too high."

"We have made gains," He continues. "I have acquired a device which will catapult humanity to the stars and beyond. However, this device cannot bring back those we've lost. Were you to place it in the hands of the old me, the one who had lost nothing and was too afraid to take any actions that might prod our enemies into action, I would have wasted its potential."

"Yes, the truth is, I could have prevented all of this, even with my previous abilities. I could have constructed a field that would keep Warpers away. I could have made the demons fear me to the extent of ever provoking my wrath. I could have claimed so many demon lives that they would never risk my ire falling upon them. But I didn't. Instead, I spent my days merrily keeping to myself and playing nice."

"That is why, starting today, I make a solemn promise to everyone here that I will no longer allow another one of our children to suffer because of my inaction. I will not allow my soldiers to suffer and die for a bleak future of merely existing. We have the right to live freely. We have the right to survive, and even to thrive!"

Jason's words project throughout the sky, allowing anyone on the planet to hear him, let alone the throng positioned directly before him.

Phoebe gazes at the side of her husband's face. For a brief moment, a sense of loss appears in her eyes.

The man she fell in love with has changed irreversibly. No longer do those same optimistic eyes look out at the world, hoping for a compromise. Instead, the rip his heart has endured has shaken him and torn away the sheet covering his vision, making him truly see reality for its stained, ugly truths.

The Wordsmith's wife bows her head.

It's better this way. She thinks. I always tried to tell Jason he was too naïve. I just... I didn't want him to change this quickly... this abruptly. Not under these circumstances. The price we've paid was one I wish we hadn't.

Belial stands behind Phoebe, watching as the stone-faced mother stands silently beside her husband. She aches to comfort Phoebe, but with so many eyes focused on humanity's leaders, she doesn't feel right putting herself front and center. Especially with her identity as a Demon Emperor. In many ways, she feels even guiltier about the Stormbringer war than anyone else.

I'm the Second Emperor. I should have helped defend the Core at the start. Beelzebub? Mephisto? Bael? I could have fought alongside Kar and easily beaten all of them back. Ose was the only demon capable of beating me, but with Kar and Blinker there... we could have overwhelmed her!

Belial glances slightly to the right, where the Monster Queen sits on her shoulder, also watching the proceedings.

Belial touches Blinker's hair with her finger, offering what little emotional support she can. However, the Monster Queen appears unmoved. Blinker's gaze fixates on Jason's back, but her thoughts dwell elsewhere, imagining the children she could have raised with her husband.

"And that is why I will make the first strike today!" Jason proclaims, grabbing everyone's attention. "I will not allow these demons to so much as sneer in our general direction. Today... without anyone else's help. I will steal back the Core. It is mine to take. It is OURS to take!"

"Portal!"

The space before him rips apart, momentarily revealing the stunned faces of several demons as they turn to look at the intruder.

Without any fanfare, Jason activates his T-REX, enveloping himself in a sea of nanites. Then he steps through and closes the portal.

The audience, including Phoebe and Belial, appear momentarily stunned.

"What?" Belial whispers. "I didn't know Jason was going to do that!"

Phoebe blinks her eyes. "I-I... I didn't, either."

A single human steps inside the Labyrinth Core. Despite his face being exposed for the briefest of moments, none of the low-level grunts standing closest recognize him. By the time he enters the room, they can only gaze at the stupid fleshbag barging into their space before bursting into laughter.

"Oy, mates! Who's this bugger? What stupid fleshie thinks he can take us all on alone, eh?" Asks a Demon Lord nearby, an unpleasant-looking fellow with two tusk-like teeth jutting out of his lower jaw.

Almost fifty thousand demons walk and crawl around the Core's interior. After several days of cleanup, they've already pulled most of the debris outside and otherwise made the Core somewhat presentable. The louder the ruckus at the Wordsmith's location, the more heads that turn to face him.

The Demon Lord summons two bone spikes into his palms and laughs greedily. "Gut the bastard!"

He fires the spikes at Jason, even while a thousand other demons leap at the human in unison, all looking to bite off a piece of the Terran's armor and claim the easy kill for themselves.

An instant later, a silent explosion detonates inside the room. A flash of light spreads outward from the Wordsmith's body faster than the eye can follow. Any demon the expanding shockwave of holy energy touches disappears at the atomic level, vanishing from reality.

One second later, the room becomes eerily silent. A few confused orcs, minotaurs, goblins, and other assorted monsters stand, frozen in a mixture of surprise and shock as the fifty thousand demons around them seemingly vanish into thin air.

"H-huh?" One minotaur grunts, as he flicks his head from side to side. "Where... did the others... go?"

The Wordsmith raises his finger. He summons a pebble of condensed dark energy, which suddenly races away from him toward the nearest monster, a goblin. Before the goblin can react, its head explodes, and its body gets sucked into the small black orb, which grows minutely bigger.

Chaos erupts in the Core as the monsters realize the human that has appeared is the one who killed all of the demons and is now aiming for them! The bravest monsters charge Jason, but the rest flee toward the Core's exit. Some even rush toward an open portal targeted at another world somewhere in the Milky Way.

However, their speeds pale in comparison to the seemingly sentient orb of darkness. Like a miniature black hole hellbent on devouring all the Wordsmith's enemies, it zips around at the speed of sound, ripping apart anyone in its path and killing them before they can voice a grunt of pain.

One minute later, every enemy inside the Core disappears, leaving Jason alone.

The Wordsmith lowers his helmet and gazes around, a mildly dissatisfied expression on his face.

"...That was easier than I expected."

"Hell has lost all of its Emperors and Dukes," Mind-Phoebe says. "Barons appear to be in short supply. That just leaves Lords and a bunch of bottom-feeders."

Jason nods. "Mmm. Mephisto's still alive. But, I guess one Duke won't be much of a threat... not compared to the Hidden Hells. Belial said we'd have to start worrying about them, since I've effectively wiped out the entire power structure of the First Hell. Hard to believe these life-threatening enemies we've been facing all this time weren't even the tip of the iceberg."

His mind-wife nods. "I talked to Belial a bunch, and my real-self, too. They told me all sorts of info about the Hidden Emperors. Honestly... I don't see why they have stayed off in their corners all this time when they had the power to overthrow the First Hell all along."

Jason slowly shakes his head. "Have you forgotten? Standing above all the Seven Hells is the First Emperor. The one demon publicly ranked above Belial. Nobody knows who he is or what he looks like. They only know that those who go to face him return with all memories of his face and features erased from their minds. I can't even restore Belial's memories with my Wordsmithing, that's how deep his magic cuts."

The Wordsmith chews his lower lip as he glances around the empty Core.

"What sort of demon is the First Emperor? Is he strong enough for even me to be worried?"

Gabriel stands beside Phoebe in Jason's Mind Realm. He remains silent, clearly knowing nothing about the so-called First Emperor's identity.

After Jason muses for a few more minutes, he turns and strides out of the Core, finding himself standing before the substantially larger ball of sludge-like energy. Having devoured a few hundred fleeing monsters, it has already grown to twice Jason's size. For a brief moment, he even thinks to himself that it might be equal to Kar's stature.

"Halve. Reform. Disguise. Sentry."

With four words of power, he changes the shapeless, black hole-like blob into a pair of human-shaped figures identical to himself. They assume his appearance and stand at attention, awaiting his orders. With bodies far sturdier and denser than demonstone, they become a pair of nigh-unkillable sentries capable of defending the Core.

"Sentience. You two will stay out here. If demons come, kill them. If hostiles come, kill them. Anyone else? Tell me. I'll meet them myself."

The eerily human-shaped blobs nod their assent, then turn and stand at attention on either side of the former Great Doors to the Core, now both torn from their hinges and lost when the Core collapsed.

"There." Jason mutters. "I've taken back the Core. Soon, the rest of humanity's worlds will follow. The demons may have stolen them from us... but they cannot stop our inexorable march. Humanity's rise begins today."

"You sound awfully ominous." Phoebe mutters. "I'm glad you taking more proactive measures, Jason, but don't go too far."

"I'll go as far as I need to," Jason replies. "Whatever gets the job done. Now, we have a funeral to attend. I'm going to put some soldiers in the Core and head back to Tarus II."

His mind-wife shrugs. "Whatever works, love."

After returning to Tarus II, Jason shows everyone the reclaimed Core and continues explaining his future intentions. While a few people cheer, most simply nod, accepting that their Hero has finally stepped up to the plate. His victory over the Core gives them some inspiration, but the losses weighing on their mind continue to dampen their spirits.

Several hours later, Jason and a little over a dozen other people attend a private funeral.

The Wordsmith, Phoebe, Belial, Blinker, Makoto Ueda, and Hans Wagner all attend the funeral. Additionally, Chef Yamir, Salamander Ogie, Ogie's wife Jeera, General Chadwick, Corporal Hurent, Lieutenant Samuel, and Solomon's Nephew, Saul, also show up to attend.

Unlike the public ceremony for the millions of fallen citizens, this funeral only stands for two people: Sphinx King Kar, and the Wordsmith's daughter, Daisy.

Pictures of their faces rest upon two gravestones. Sadly, with neither of them having a body for anyone to bury, the funeral is mostly symbolic.

Blinker continues to sit on Belial's shoulder as they gaze at Kar's gravestone.

"Mephisto took my husband's body from me." She mutters. "I have to get it back. I can't let him desecrate Kar's legacy like that. He deserves to be buried with honor like he always wanted."

Belial and Phoebe stand next to each other. The Wordsmith's wife sighs. "You're pregnant, Blinker. You can't go chasing after Mephisto now. You owe it to Kar to have those kids first."

Belial nods. "Phoebe's right. Fairies only need a few months to give birth. Why don't you go back to the Fairy Queen's domain for a while and bear your children there? Raise them among the fairies, where the demons won't dare intrude."

Blinker shakes her head. "I never got along with those brainless idiots. They're always playing pranks and up to no good. If you haven't lived with the fairies, you won't understand how annoying they all are."

A few moments pass as a thoughtful glint appears in Blinker's eyes. "Well, there is one place I could go. I should visit Kar's mother, Marie. I wouldn't mind raising our children with the lizards. There's no chance the demons would try anything under Miss Marie's nose. She was also very loving and protective of Kar... so I bet she'd be alright with helping raise our kids. Then, once we've settled in... I can leave to chase down Mephisto and beat the crap out of him!"

Blinker sighs. "I barely even know the woman... and now I want to ask for her help after getting Kar killed. I'm the worst."

"Don't say that." Phoebe interjects. "You aren't at fault for what happened to Kar. Mephisto is. He planned everything, like a Viper slithering in the grass. He's your enemy, and he's my enemy, too."

While the three women talk, another group of people congregates together near Daisy's grave.

Jason, the Minotaur Chef Yamir, and Ogie all pay their respects to the Wordsmith's deceased daughter.

The old salamander sighs emotionally. "Poor lil' tyke. I'm gonna miss her. She always used to give me a big smile in the morning."

Chef Yamir echoes his sadness. "I loved cooking for the little one. She had an infectious energy about her."

Jason nods sagely, his gaze distant. "We have to work harder to make sure no other child suffers like Daisy did. As a father, I have to protect the children of humanity, as well as all the monster youngsters out there. I'm going to build a fortified location that not even a hundred Demon Emperors could penetrate without killing themselves. I will make sure something like Stormbringer never catches us offguard again."

Ogie's wife, Jeera, wanders over to her husband's side. Mister Hiro, as long as you do your best, I'm sure your little girl will smile at you from the Great Beyond."

Jason's expression darkens. "When people die, their souls end up in the River Styx. That means Mephisto might have Daisy's soul. Once I get everything sorted, I'm going to hunt that bastard down and take back all the souls of the people he's stolen. Daisy, Kar, and all the others, too."

Yamir blinks. "Are you serious? If he has Daisy's soul... then... couldn't you bring her back?"

"I don't know." Jason states. "But possibly, yes. I'm willing to risk everything if it means putting her soul back in a body. I can recreate Daisy's body with my Wordsmithing... I just can't bring her soul back from the Great Beyond. If it has somehow landed in Mephisto's grasp though... then there is a chance!"

A spark of light appears in the eyes of Yamir, Ogie, and Jeera.

"Really?!" Ogie asks. "That's great news! You-"

Before the salamander can continue, Jason raises his palm. "Don't say anything else, and keep your voice down. Beelzebub blasted the entire area with some sort of toxic, corrosive 'chaos energy.' It's entirely possible Daisy's soul was... I'd rather not say. I don't want to get anyone's hopes up, least of all Phoebe's. She's suffered enough because of me."

The other three nod quietly.

"Yes, of course." Yamir says, before lowering his gaze. "We can only pray..."

After a few moments, two figures walk up behind the Wordsmith.

"Ahem." A man says, clearing his throat. "Jason Hiro, ja? I wish to speak to you about somezing."

Jason turns around to look at the speaker, who turns out to be Hans Wagner, flanked by Makoto Ueda.

"Hans. Good to see you," Jason says, offering a weak smile. "What's up?"

"It is in regards to mein friend, Neil," Hans says. "Many believe zat he perished during zee Core collapse, ven zat hateful boy, Henry, left him behind. However, according to trace sensor readings, it seems his suit vas not destroyed ven zee Core crumbled. I believe he may still be alive."

The Wordsmith widens his eyes. "Really? So that could mean the demons did capture him. However, I've tried using 'Locate' to detect him, Daisy, Hope, and several others, but without any luck. If any of them are alive, then..."

Jason trails off, his meaning clear.

Hans shakes his head. "Nein. I believe zee demons have found some way to hide Neil's soul from your Vordsmithing. I don't know zee details, but it seems likely. He might be someone zey have designated a valuable hostage."

Both men fall silent, while Jason ponders Hans' meaning.

"The demons must have placed Neil in some isolated location. Maybe they placed a barrier around him which prevents my Wordsmithing from detecting him. The same might be true of Hope, too, but I don't think Ose managed to capture Hope before, during, or after the Stormbringer Attack. Something else is going on, and I don't know what..."

"I have nothing else to report," Hans says, throwing his palms up in exasperation. "Neil is mein good friend. I do not wish to imagine him suffering under zee demons' claws. I pray you can save him through your Vordsmithing, or through some other means."

"I'll do what I can," Jason promises.

Hans nods, then turns and walks away. However, after he leaves, Makoto Ueda stays behind. The Japanese man smiles half-heartedly, more out of politeness than for any other reason.

"Hiro-san, is good to see you again. I wish we speak under better circumstances." Makoto says.

Jason shakes his head. "It's enough that you came to pay your respects. Daisy liked you a lot."

"And I liked her, too. Such a charming child," Makoto replies. "I came to offer a shoulder if Hiro-san needs emotional support. Sometimes, great man have many burdens he cannot share with those closest to him. If you wish, you may visit me any time you wish. I have moved in with Saul outside of the city."

"Solomon's nephew..." Jason mutters, as he remembers Saul's face. "I haven't spoken to him in a while. Bah, we're not that close anyway. Thanks for the offer, I guess, but I'm doing alright."

"Very presumptuous of me," Makoto says, as he bows slightly at the waist and cups his hands. "Hiro-san has many friends and advisors. My guidance is shallow, and my wisdom limited."

"That's not true at all," Jason says, his smile strengthening for a moment. "You offered me valuable spiritual advice once, and I appreciated the assistance. Sometimes, an outside perspective can greatly help in a moment of crisis."

"Mhm. Yes, many thanks for your kind words," Makoto replies, before turning to walk away. "We speak again soon, I hope."

"Of course."

Makoto leaves Jason to mull over his words while taking his leave. As the Wordsmith mentally replays his life's mistakes, another group of people walks over, this one consisting of General Chadwick, Lieutenant Samuel, and Corporal Hurent.

"Jason, my boy!" Chadwick says, his voice much louder than the other funeral-goers. "How good to see you."

Pushed back by such a surprising amount of enthusiasm, Jason can't help but smile at Chadwick. "General. Thank you for your service during the Stormbringer Attack. Your leadership saved countless lives, including my wife's."

"Hahaha! I barely did anything, there's no need to thank this old man for doing his duty!" Chadwick laughs.

While the Wordsmith talks to the group of people surrounding him, Makoto Ueda slowly walks away from the funeral proceedings. His eyes flick to the darkening sky, as the sun slowly begins to set on Tarus II's horizon.

Life so fragile. So many die, but for what reason? Demons kill, humans kill, never does cycle of violence stop.

As the Japanese man walks, a flicker of light materializes behind him. Lasting for only an instant, nobody at the funeral notices as the firefly-sized speck rushes into Makoto's back, making him slow to a stop and freeze on the spot.

The Japanese man's eyes lose focus. He grinds to a halt and stares forward, his eyes still locked blankly on the sky.

After five minutes, he blinks wearily, a dazed look swallowing his face.

"...Where am I? What era is this?"

Makoto's voice takes on a curious cadence, different from how it normally sounds. He pauses to sweep his eyes from side to side, frowning as he takes in the unfamiliar sights.

"I do not recognize this sky. I do not recognize this location. The stars seem different. The smell in the air is foreign."

'Makoto' stretches his arms, then turns around to stare at the funeral proceedings with a look of confusion.

"These people... monsters standing alongside humans? It seems much has changed since I last returned. And that fellow there seems to have the aura of a Hero. How curious."

He nods slowly, while his thoughts turn inward, reflecting on the memories stored within his newly obtained body's vessel.

"...One hundred thousand years... demons have taken over Hell... Earth destroyed... so much has changed. I must reacclimate to this era if I hope to understand the proceedings of Karma."

'Makoto' turns away from the funeral and continues walking. This time, his steps appear more determined and full of conviction.

"I wonder how my protégé has fared."

Part 294: Mirror of Samsara

Three days earlier, halfway across the Milky Way, beneath the surface of a certain planet.

Hundreds of demons and goblins trudge back and forth between a series of interconnected caves. These demons, low-ranking Burrowers, assist their small-statured monster subordinates in the slow, gradual excavation process of digging down further and further into the planet's bowels.

Magically-powered torches hang on the walls, illuminating the underground passages with eerie, purple light. Piles of debris lay here and there, typically dropped by the laziest workers too tired to haul their refuse to designated dumping points.

Makeshift wooden and steel lines, vaguely resembling human-made railroad tracks, line the many passages, allowing for the efficient transport of countless tons of ore and mineral deposits.

A pair of goblins walk up to one of the many foreman Burrowers while pulling along a wheeled cart full of rocks and gems.

"Report." Says the Burrower, as she squints to look inside the trolley.

"Five kilos of tainted copper, seven or so of iron, got a few diamonds thrown in," Rattles off the older of the two goblins. "Half a kilo of Tanzanite. Uhh, we found some random bones, too..."

The foreman frowns. "Bones? If they ain't from a Titan or angel, I'm gonna have to dock you. We don't have room to store a bunch of crap."

"We already done excavated all the good shit!" The goblin complains. "What more you think we're gonna find?! Earth is all tapped out! Ain't nothin' left but low-level ore and some crusty-grade gems."

The foreman shakes her head. "If you don't find anything, you don't find anything. But don't try and pad your numbers by throwing in bones. Now, go throw them in the incinerator and get moving. Put some hustle in your step. Master Orias has been getting disappointed at our results, lately."

Both of the goblins lower their heads and nod silently, but in their heads, they grumble countless obscenities.

Master Orias, this. Master Orias, that. The heck is that fur-faced cunt even lookin' for, anyway? We're scraping our ding-dang claws to the bone just to look for bits of rock and metal. What a waste! Ain't even any demonstone left here! It's all mined-out!

The goblins return to their work, while the foreman stays behind and heaves a sigh. She, too, appears dissatisfied.

"I don't get it," The young Burrower mutters. "We haven't found any Heroic Artifacts for millennia, let alone any decent gems. Earth is a lost cause. We ought to move on to a better world, if only Master Orias would just get some sense in his head."

Hardly have the words escaped her lips before a tired-sounding voice speaks beside her.

"Oh? Tell me how you really feel, Skully."

The Burrower, Skully, whips around on her heel and widens her eyes in alarm as she spots the figure of her revered master, the Demon Baron of the Stars, Orias.

"M-Master Orias! I, err, I didn't mean anything by what I said! Forgive me, I-"

"Calm down, I'm not going to bite your ear off," Orias says, while tiredly waving his hand. "I just got back from Ose's Operation Stormbringer. It seems everything is going smoothly. With any luck, she'll pacify the rest of humanity in just a few hours."

"Really? That's good news!"

Skully bobs her head excitedly, only to pause when she sees Orias's vague smile fade away.

"Master Orias? Is something wrong?"

The Baron of the Stars shrugs. "Not really. Probably not. I don't know, frankly. It just seems as if I cannot commit to freeing myself from my mortal shackles. Always, these obligations press upon me. They weigh me down and cloud my thoughts. I can't see myself ever not being 'part of this world.' My master would be disappointed if he knew."

"Your master?" Skully asks, leaning her head curiously to the side. "Duke Bael? Mephisto?"

Orias shakes his head. "Nobody you know, Skully. If you'll excuse me, I need to examine the excavation teams."

"Of course," Skully says, quickly casting aside any further thoughts regarding Orias's mysterious master. To low-level demons like her, the machinations of Barons, Dukes, and Emperors are simply too far above her station to matter. "See you later, Master Orias!"

Orias offers another casual smile. As he turns to leave, he pauses and glances at her.

"And Skully... do watch your words. You never know who might be listening, and who might take offense to your unrequested criticisms."

Skully turns pale. Before she can offer an apology, Orias disappears in a flash of light, leaving her grasping for straws.

...I had better do as he says. She thinks, nodding seriously to herself.

Meanwhile, Orias flickers around, casually burning a few dozen stones he keeps in a pouch by his waist. With quite literally hundreds of tons of gems and rocks saved up over the eons and almost no other demons capable of using them in the same way as himself, Orias doesn't fuss over the loss of half a kilogram of emeralds or sapphires.

Traveling beneath the destroyed surface of Earth, Orias zips through the maze-like corridors of dug-out tunnels while visiting his many prominent foreman placed in overseer roles, their duty to assist and manage the excavation efforts of slowly and progressively digging deeper into Earth's bowels.

The Baron of the Stars wears a gloomy expression as he receives the same bad news as he has for the last several thousand years.

Very little valuable ore left.

No heroic artifacts.

No notable discoveries.

After a few hours of chatting with one overseer after the other, the Baron of the Stars pauses to summon some refreshing, ice-cool water. He conjures it through a blue-colored sapphire gem, swallowing its contents to clear the stale taste in his mouth. The stench of sulfur pervades a significant portion of Earth's underground tunnels.

Orias sits in a seven-way junction, with tunnels and paths leading in multiple directions up and down into the Earth's crust. He flicks his eyes between the different passages and sighs.

"An endless dream. Lazy, bereft of thought, lacking all wisdom and insight. Life is so... meaningless. Is this really all there is to the cosmos?"

Orias reaches into the folds of his robes. He pulls out a palm-sized mirror, one with a sizable chunk of its surface missing. The entire bottom-right section appears to have been snapped off, while other portions appear taped-together, with visible cracks separating the mirror into seven different portions, the final one missing.

"My master's artifact..." Orias murmurs. "I still haven't found the last piece after all these years. What will it take for me to finally reassemble the Mirror of Samsara?"

"Will anything even happen once I do?"

After staring at the broken artifact for several seconds, Orias sticks it back into the folds of his robes. He continues to sit and watch while small groups of goblins and demons wander past, many of them chit-chatting about banal observations, while a few offer friendly waves to Orias, their de-facto 'boss.'

After a long session of mindless ponderings, Orias rises to his feet. He starts to trudge down one of the hallways, only for a flash of light to appear ten feet in front of him. A Warper demoness, Ying-Ying, materializes while holding onto her blood-covered sister, Mara, the Baron of Games.

"Orias! Orias!" Ying-Ying shouts. "There you are! It's terrible! Oh, seven hells, have you heard the news?! We lost the Stormbringer War! The Hero reappeared and attacked viciously! He killed Ose and Bael, and then he murdered all of the demons surrounding Tarus II's human city, and then..."

Orias stands in place, listening while Ying-Ying babbles off the happenings he's missed. He eventually raises his palm and nods, gesturing to Mara's badly injured figure. "Let me help your sister, Ying-Ying."

"Oh, right!" Ying-Ying exclaims, as she gently lowers Mara to the dirt. "These big huge humans appeared, they were taller than the Slithering Spire! They beat Mara around mercilessly, she couldn't resist and barely managed to escape by the skin of her teeth. Luckily, I ran into her, or else..."

Orias snaps his fingers, causing a sapphire to crumble into dust in his palm. He gently massages Mara's face, throat, and stomach while spreading a layer of healing water across her injuries. "Giant humans, you said? That sounds an awful lot like..."

The Baron of the Stars pauses, uncertain if he should continue that line of thought.

"...Impossible. The Titans perished eons ago. None remain alive. Must have been one of the Wordsmith's tricks."

Ying-Ying's expression becomes sullen as she watches Orias slowly ease her sister's pain. "I don't know if it was a trick or not, but Ose is dead, and so is Bael. Artorias got taken over by Uriel, Beelzebub blew himself up, and now, only Mephisto remains. He's our last Duke! We're doomed, Orias! Doomed! How can we survive against fleshbags who succeeded in killing our only Emperor?! It won't be long before they rush in and rip apart the rest of us! Not to mention they still have that traitorous slut Belial on their side!"

Orias glances at Ying-Ying. He averts his eyes, unwilling to say more.

Ying-Ying is only a grunt. She does not know of the Hidden Hells, and it is not my place to educate her. Mephisto will be our leader moving forward... but never has the First Hell suffered such a catastrophic setback. I can't imagine what events will take place next.

"...We will have to wait for Mephisto's guidance," Orias says unhurriedly. "Worry not. Hell is not such a simple place. The Wordsmith might be powerful, but he is far from unstoppable. We still have resources we can pull from."

Ying-Ying's gloomy expression momentarily clears up. "Ohhh, does this have something to do with the Overlords?"

Immediately, Orias snaps his head up and locks eyes with Ying-Ying. "Who told you about them? Where did you hear that name?!"

Startled by Orias's violent shift in facial expression, Ying-Ying flinches and pulls back. "I-I heard it from Mara, of course. I didn't tell anyone else, you know..."

"Speak not of the Overlords," Orias says, as he flicks his gaze around to make sure nobody else is within earshot. "Their existence is secret for a reason."

"Are they super strong?" Ying-Ying asks. "Can they protect us?"

"Hah." Orias chuckles bitterly. "Not a chance. They are as much our enemies as our zookeepers. So long as we stay within our pens, they pay us little heed. We will have to defeat the Wordsmith ourselves. Devils forbid if the Overlords hear of the beating we've suffered."

Orias pulls his hands away from Mara and nods.

"There. I've stabilized her injuries. My healing abilities are mediocre at best, but she'll be fine once you get her to the Blood Pits."

"Thank you for helping, Orias," Ying-Ying says, as she bats her eyes. "If there's any way I can repay you… don't hesitate to tell me."

Orias looks her dead in the eye. "I suppose I could always use help digging through the mud mines."

"Ahaha! Such a joker!" Ying-Ying laughs nervously. "I was just kidding, just kidding. If you think Hell's situation will turn out fine, then I already feel a bit better."

"I don't know about 'fine,' but the situation isn't untenable. Take Mara and leave, young one."

"Okay!"

Ying-Ying picks up her sister's unconscious form and waves her hand to summon a portal. However, midway into the motion, she glances at Orias and raises an eyebrow.

"That's odd. Orias, why is your chest glowing?"

"My chest?" Orias asks. He lowers his eyes, only to see a soft light emanating from his pocket. A flicker of alarm goes through his nerves before he forces a casual smile. "Oh! It's just one of my gems. No reason for concern. I'll see you later, Ying-Ying."

"Okay! Bye-bye, then!" Ying-Ying says, while flashing a cute smile. She steps through her portal and closes it afterward, leaving Orias alone.

The instant she disappears, Orias's right hand disappears into the folds of his robes. He plucks out the Mirror of Samsara and stares at it with a look of shock and bewilderment. Its exterior faintly glows with holy energy, burning his skin and hurting him somewhat, though not enough to cause him any immediate injuries.

"Ouch! What in the Seven Hells? Why is my master's Mirror reacting? Has something changed?"

A few seconds later, the sounds of voices approach Orias. He turns his head and watches as three different Burrower foremen come running up, looks of astonishment on their faces.

"Master Orias! Master Orias! W-we detected something with your special jewels! There's a concentration of Holy Energy deep underground, a bit further than we've dug before!"

Orias's heart skips a beat. "Lead the way!"

He and the three other demons quickly descend into the tunnel systems. They steal curious glances at the object in Orias's hands, one which clearly seems to emanate some sort of Holy Energy of its own, but when Orias doesn't explain anything, they keep their questions to themselves.

Half an hour later, they arrive at an unexcavated wall, one with a faint but clear sensation of holy energy resonating several kilometers in the distance. Orias glances at the broken Mirror of Samara in his palm, and his eyes widen as he observes its glow increase by a small but noticeable amount.

"Start digging into this section," Orias says. "Recall everyone and bring them here. Everyone, you hear me? The relic could be anywhere in a twenty kilometer radius. Dig up, down, forward, backward, any possible direction. Scour every nook and cranny. I'll help."

Orias places the heroic artifact back into his robes, which only slightly muffles its light while making it burn his chest. He ignores the pain and gestures forward.

"What are you waiting for? Dig!"

Orias pulls out an amber-colored jewel and snaps his fingers, temporarily obtaining the power of Earth Manipulation like the Burrowers around him. He assists them in the excavation efforts, moving as quickly as he can.

Minutes pass. An hour. A day.

Three days pass in the blink of an eye.

Orias and his subordinates hollow out a massive part of the Earth. As they dig, his thoughts become more frantic.

We're so close. I can practically smell it! It's the last piece of Samsara! I must obtain it!

While they dig, Orias's thoughts turn to the general geography of the location.

After the Overlords annihilated all life on Earth, countless fragments of civilization spewed out across the planet. We seem to be about 800 kilometers west of the Indian region... even I didn't imagine my master's artifact would end up broken and cast so far away from its original resting place.

As the small army of a thousand demons and goblins dig, their pace begins to slow. They sense the closeness of the artifact, though its exact position evades them.

However, at some point, one of the goblins shrieks in delight.

"F-found it! Master Orias, I found it!!"

Immediately, a thousand pairs of eyes converge on that goblin's location. Before anyone can start to make a move, Orias teleports straight to the goblin's side, a look of fervency on his face.

"You did? Where? Show me!"

The goblin points toward a rock on the ground, seemingly ordinary, yet with a faint glow poking through a pinhole-sized opening on its top.

"Right here! I didn't dare touch it, since-"

"Good, good goblin!" Orias crows. He rudely pushes the goblin aside, yet the goblin offers no complaint. It, too, feels more than a little excited by Orias's passion.

Orias carefully excavates the rock with a bit of Earth Manipulation, then stands up and casts a quick glance at the goblin.

"You! Excellent work. I always reward the capable, so you may enjoy fifteen choices from my Golden Wares. Take whatever you like! As for everyone else, disband! I require absolute privacy!"

A chorus of voices speaks up in unison. "Yes, Master Orias! We obey!"

Minutes later, every demon and goblin in the vicinity retreats from the area, leaving Orias to stand alone in eerie silence. The Baron of the Stars breathes heavily, excitement on his face.

"...found it... we finally found it... the last piece of the Mirror of Samsara..."

His hands tremble as emotion threatens to overtake him. For over a hundred thousand years, he has dug through the depths of the Earth, searching for heroic relics, but especially pieces of his mentor's broken mirror.

"Master Buddha... at last... by fixing your relic, I might be able to speak to you once more."

Carefully, gingerly, Orias begins to peel apart the geode which has engulfed the last sliver of his relic's mentor. It takes him more than thirty minutes, but eventually, with the utmost care, Orias daintily extracts the jagged piece of the heroic artifact. It glows brightly as it now sits within less than two feet of the rest of itself inside Orias's pocket.

For a brief moment, Orias's heart stops. He plucks out the Mirror of Samsara and compares its missing piece to the small chunk held in his right hand.

After two seconds of deliberation, Orias places the missing shard into the incomplete Mirror of Samsara.

Then, a transformation occurs.

For a brief moment, the Mirror of Samara radiates a divine light hot enough to force Orias back. He quickly but carefully sets the mirror on the ground, then jumps away from it, raising his hand to shield his eyes.

"Aargh! Holy energy, it hurts!" Orias cries.

As the light inside the Mirror of Samsara builds, a faint humming sensation rumbles in the air. Orias watches with rapt attention, forcing himself to gaze upon the sunlike object even though it scorches his pupils.

All of a sudden, the light retracts! It sucks into the center of the mirror, then transforms into a small bead of light which shoots out of the mirror and into the air.

Before Orias can react, the bead of light disappears into the soil above him, vanishing into the Earth's depths. The Mirror of Samsara becomes dull, like a dead object, no longer radiating even the faintest trace of holy energy.

The Baron of the Stars halts his breathing. He stands locked in place, gazing at the dead artifact with a look of total bewilderment.

"W-what happened? Master? Hello?"

He suddenly dives forward and grabs the artifact, examining it with all of his physical and spiritual senses. To his horror, the artifact appears so dead that he can't detect even the slightest remnant of its former glory.

"What happened?! Where did that bead of light go?! Have I screwed up? All my work, all this time, all this effort... for nothing?! Nooo!!"

As Orias loses his last sliver of hope for ever meeting his master again, that bead of light travels across the Milky Way, heading for a world he visited not many days earlier.

It enters the body of Makoto Ueda, merges with his soul, and reforges his very essence into something new.

Siddhartha Gautama, the Great Buddha, gazes at the world around him with ancient wisdom, a mind and soul that are both timeless and peerless.

"Finally. I have reincarnated."

Part 295: Meeting of the Hidden Emperors (Part 1)

Hell Harbor. Three short days after the failure of Stormbringer.

Beneath the surface of the lush, utopia-like world, in a hidden demonic compound several kilometers underground, in a facility reinforced by a combination of magic and technology, a lavish meeting room sits.

This room features a long, rectangular table with seats for up to fifty guests, in a chamber filled with all manner of demonic imagery. Paintings of various moments in demon history hang on the walls, while torches sit in between the paintings, giving off a soft red light and allowing those seated to admire the artwork from afar.

At the front of the room, a large pair of double doors opens onto a small platform which descends into the room's center, while at the opposite end, an elaborate demonstone chalice filled with virgin blood rests, along with a pair of gargoyle-shaped statues beside it, their figures frozen as if bowing in reverence to the goblet's contents.

At the head of the long conference table, an odd sight reveals itself. Two dark-skinned humans, an old man and his daughter, Benjamin and Lily Brown, sit quietly with their hands in their laps, awaiting the arrival of... other guests.

Lily, a fresh-faced eighteen year old girl, glances nervously from side to side every minute or so.

"Daddy. Are you sure they're coming soon? We've been waiting for hours."

This girl, the very same one who got her face kicked in by Rosalia just a few years before, appears to have learned some level of manners from that incident. Still, as a teenager, her energy and anxiety levels go through the roof as the minutes tick past with no arrival from her father's 'esteemed guests.'

"Kings never show up on time." Benjamin Brown says, adjusting his suit's arm-collar. "They make you wait as part of a deliberate power-ploy, my dear. The first to arrive carries both the highest and the lowest status. They mustn't appear too eager to come here, lest their minions think they have become subservient to my whims... the whims of a mere human. At the same time, the first to show up will get the honor of choosing the best seat, the one which holds the most authority. It is a delicate balancing act."

Lily blinks in incomprehension. "...Are you messing with me, daddy? I doubt there's really all that much to showing up on time. It's just common courtesy to keep your appointment! These demonstone chairs are so uncomfortable, my butt is starting to hurt!"

"Shall I send a slave to fetch a padded cushion for you?" Benjamin asks.

Lily humphs in annoyance. "No! I'm a big girl. I can wait patiently."

Ben smiles. "Good. That's good."

Several more minutes pass. Lily continues to glance around, sighing melodramatically to herself.

"Sigh. Sigh! Daddy, is it true that Beelzebub died? I thought he could regenerate from anything, even death?"

"Last time Beelzebub detonated his body, he regenerated after just a few hours. This time, more than three days have passed, yet still we cannot detect even a hint of his soul's energy. According to the Oracles, the blast he unleashed on Tarus II was ten times mightier than the one he used to batter Uriel in the Labyrinth. It is likely that he overdrew his life reserves and... failed to regenerate."

A hint of disappointment appears on Lily's face.

"Oh. Is that so."

"Do you miss him?" Benjamin asks, suppressing a smile. "He was quite the attractive devil, after all. It wouldn't be unreasonable for you to fall in love with a male of his stature."

"F-fall in love?!" Lily sputters. "No way, daddy! Don't tease me! He was a piece of work, a real jerk! I'm glad he's gone!"

"If you say so," Ben replies, his smile turning mysterious. "Ah, to be young again."

Ben starts to say something else, but at that moment, a flicker of energy at the far end of the room catches his attention. The sensor modules inside his iris implants light up, revealing the presence of spatial transfer magic.

A moment later, five figures materialize near the blood-chalice, revealing themselves to be a group of Orcs dressed in elaborate robes, with one of the five wearing a set of ornate golden ceremonial armor. Their green skin appears surprisingly smooth to the touch, though their facial features appear only a bit less hideous than the average orcs one might encounter in the Labyrinth's hallways.

Benjamin's eyes flicker in recognition. "Oh? Two of the Ancients from the Hell of Calamity. I did not expect your eminent selves to show up first."

Of the five orcs, three of the lower-ranked ones step forward and pound their chests with their fists.

"Ancient Elder Maltus, Ancient Elder Huul! These two esteemed ones have deigned to show respect to this gathering!"

The two high-ranking orcs, standing several echelons above the weak, useless members of their species, ripple with a sense of power, authority, and majesty that smacks differently compared to the aura of a Demon Emperor.

Elder Maltus, the First Ancient, the second mightiest of all orcs in the Milky Way, steps forward. His glorious purple robes, emboldened with golden trim and the image of the original Zhurm, Sheol, emblazons itself across his chest. His mere presence causes Lily's throat to tighten.

"Benjamin Brown," Maltus growls. "My Zhurm apologizes. He is busy with a great many matters, and as such, cannot come to this... glorious meeting."

Benjamin smiles at Maltus, though the corners of his lips twitch ever so imperceptibly.

"Ah, yes. I'm sure the Zhurm has countless subjects vying for his attention. A lowly human like me is still humbled by your... majestic presence."

The other Ancient Orc, a female adorned in ornate golden armor, steps forward. Elder Huul clears her throat and shoots a nasty glare at Benjamin Brown. "How shameful for the First Hell to call for our esteemed presences, yet not send any of its elites to greet us. Ah, how far the Hell of Damnation has fallen! Ose dead, Bael dead, even your so-called shining star, Beelzebub... dead! Only Mephisto remains, yet that bone-headed brat lacks the guts to show himself before the Zhurm's mother! I am glad my son did not come, for he might put this whole Hell to the pyre if he were to experience such disrespect!"

Benjamin remains seated, in spite of Huul's words. "Your Elegance, lovely as always. Long has it been since I gazed upon your... beauty. Mephisto will arrive, soon. He is simply busy managing the First Hell's matters, as required with the fall of so many of our assets. I am merely his humble servant, here to guide the meeting until his arrival. Come, take a seat. I will call for refreshments."

Huul snorts derisively. "Refreshments. Always, you fleshbags know how to speak a few pretty words. Ah, but look at this charming daughter of yours. If you give her to me, I will bestow her upon my youngest son! He will ride this mare and ensure she bears ten fine spawn! Bahaha!"

Elder Maltus shoots a glance at Huul. Despite possessing a higher rank than her, he still hesitates to speak out against the Zhurm's mother.

"Lady Huul... Benjamin Brown may be a mere human, but his exploits during the Energy Wars-"

"Were ages ago! Just look at this decrepit old fart! He has long passed the glory of his youth!" Huul crows. "I show no respect to weaklings. He could never measure up to even one of my son's fingers!"

Lily frowns. She starts to open her mouth to defend her father, only for Benjamin Brown to erupt into laughter.

"Hah hah hah! Yes, Lady Huul, this old man has certainly lost much of his bite over the years. I am rusty, and my battle prowess isn't what it used to be."

Benjamin Brown pauses, as a strange look appears in his eyes.

"...But to imply that I have become weak and servile in my old age, would the esteemed guest dare to cross me in three blows, right here and now? I think you may find a delightful surprise awaits you."

Huul glances at Benjamin Brown, only for a shudder to run down her spine. For the briefest of moments, a hint of the famed Battle Devil reveals itself in Benjamin's eyes, the eyes of the man who lost his brother and flew into a berserk rage during the battle against the Fifth Hell, the Hell of Calamity. On that day, Benjamin Brown eviscerated more than ten Ancient Orcs, ripping them limb from limb and beating Huul herself so senseless that, were it not for the intervention of a certain Demon Emperor, she might have perished on the spot.

The Second Ancient hesitates for a moment. She gazes into the eyes of the man who once left a mark of terror on her soul, then turns away to clear her throat.

"Ahem... haha, yes, yes, you make a good point, fleshbag! Ah, where are my manners? This old woman is herself quite weak and dainty! Thinking of my current status, it would be unbecoming of me to spar during such an important occasion, such as this. Why don't we just let bygones be bygones? I think I shall take a seat."

Benjamin nods slowly. "Yes. That sounds like a wonderful plan. There are still so many more guests who will show up soon, after all."

The three low-ranking orcs stand off to the side of the room, keeping their mouths shut, while the two Ancients take their seats near the end of the table, opposite from Benjamin and Lily.

On the surface, their choice of seating appears random. Neither seating themselves at the direct end of the table, nor at the right or left-hand seats, they instead take up positions two seats down.

Benjamin notices this discrepancy and smiles inwardly.

It seems the Ancient Orcs still fear Emperor Gorn's wrath. They will not take the seat which they believe rightfully belongs to him. But if Emperor Auger should show up before Emperor Gorn, I wonder what sort of conflict will occur? Those two still violently feud, even after all this time. The competition for the title of 'Strongest Hell' will surely overflow at today's meeting.

After the two Ancients take their seats, the room's atmosphere turns noticeably colder. A certain tenseness lingers in the air, making it hard for Lily to catch her breath.

Elder Maltus turns his head to examine the pretty young girl. "The Second Elder spoke with a poor choice of words, earlier, but her general direction was not imprecise. This lovely young flower appears quite breedable! What is your name, child?"

Lily flinches under his direct questioning. The lewd intentions behind his words fluster her, making her look to her father for guidance. Benjamin Brown merely offers a slight nod to his daughter, forcing her to answer for herself.

"I am- my name is Lily Brown," Lily says, glancing sheepishly at Maltus. "I... I did not know orcs could be so... eloquent."

Maltus snorts. "Hmph. That is because the orcs we dispatch to the First Hell are the weakest, slowest, dumbest, and outright youngest of our kind. They have consumed precious little 'life water.' They have not earned their titles, nor have they baptized their weapons in blood. They are ignorant brutes, much like we Ancients once were, during the First Age. Before the First Zhurm established the might of the Orc Empire, our people were a mindless, brainless lot, killing and raping wantonly. Now, we are the mightiest monsters in all of the Seven Hells! We keep to ourselves, building up our power in secret, but we are more than happy for the greater universe to forget our true power. As a mighty human Hero once said, 'Appear weak when you are strong, and strong when you are weak.'"

"Sun Tzu," Huul says, snorting the name under her breath. "I met that male in combat once. He was a fearsome foe. I wished to breed with him, but he spat in my face. Hmph. That only made me desire him more!"

"Finding suitable breeding partners is so difficult in this era of wastrels," Maltus comments. "The once-mighty humans have fallen into disrepair. The First Hell barely houses any worthy mates. As the daughter of one of humanity's mightiest heroes, your genetics would enhance ours substantially. Why not join with us orcs and learn what a woman truly wants? We have many fine males who would-"

"My daughter will not join with the Orc Empire," Benjamin Brown says, cutting Maltus off mid-sentence. "She is a human and will bed with humans only."

Both of the Orc Ancients look at him with more than a hint of dismay.

"How unfortunate." Huul says, turning up her pig-like nose.

Even as the Orcs hide their dissatisfaction, Lily shifts in her chair uneasily.

Only bed with humans, hm? I probably shouldn't let daddy know about Belial, ehehe...

Just when everyone starts to settle into their seats, another flicker of light disturbs the air inside the underground meeting chamber. A single Demon Emperor materializes, alone, without any attendants at his side.

Benjamin's eyes flicker with recognition. "Yardrat, Emperor of the Void," He says, introducing the demon out loud more for his daughter's sake than for anyone else's.

The newcomer, a slender male demon with soft white hair, a pleasant smile, and casual white robes, resembles a demonic monk of some sort, a holy figure walking a pious journey. His dreamlike features immediately entrance Lily, causing her to blush madly as she looks at him.

Benjamin's daughter gazes at him like a lovestruck puppy. How can a demon be so… handsome? So pretty?! He's like a supermodel!

However, an instant later, the dainty-looking Emperor speaks with a voice so gravelly it reminds Lily of swords scraping against armor.

"Benjamin Brown. Emperor Auger could not attend this meeting. As you can imagine, he is as busy as ever. He has no interest in handling… minor mundanities."

Benjamin lowers his eyebrows. "Oh, is that so? Curious. This is the second time one of the Hidden Hells has not sent their highest leaders. Could it be that the Hidden Hells no longer put the First Hell in their eyes? Might this even be interpreted as a sign of disrespect toward the… First Emperor?"

A chill descends on the room. Despite their proud behavior only a few minutes earlier, both of the Ancient Orcs shift uncomfortably in their seats, imagining a pair of eyes fixating upon them from somewhere unknown.

Emperor Yardrat narrows his eyes. He gazes at Benjamin Brown like a venomous snake sizing up its prey.

"How could this small figure act so presumptuously? Emperor Auger is a very private individual. I speak on his behalf everywhere that I go. He values my abilities greatly. I would not dare to insult the… First Emperor."

Yardrat clears his throat.

"Ahem. But surely, given the events that have rocked the First Hell, the First Emperor might actually come out of his seclusion for once? Such a private individual hiding his face at a time like this… it does not speak of confidence to us servants of the pitiful, lesser Hells."

"I cannot, and dare not speak for the First Emperor." Benjamin Brown mutters. "I know as little about him as you. It is said that if a great calamity should fall upon the Labyrinth, he will reveal himself and save all of us. Why, according to some rumors, there is even a possibility he has… broken through the barrier."

Yardrat flinches. "The barrier? Which one do you speak of?"

"I think you know well the matter to which I am referring," Benjamin says, choosing his words with care. "Since demonkind's earliest days, not one of your people has managed to reach a level beyond Demon Emperor. No matter how many souls you consume or what arts you perform, no demon can attain that forbidden level of power which even the Titans and angels once feared. But rumor has it... the First Emperor may have succeeded. Why else do you think the Overlords hesitate to intrude too carelessly upon our domain?"

Benjamin leans back in his chair and smiles. "Rumor has it that prior to the mind-wipes, Executor Nufaris planned to wipe out demonkind. It was only when the First Emperor revealed his power that the Overlords pulled back and beat a hasty retreat, agreeing to leave us to our devices. Not even the great Satan himself commanded such a level of fear. It truly inspires one's imagination, don't you agree?"

Yardrat stands in place, examining Benjamin's face. All he finds is a sea of rock-solid confidence.

"Bah. We don't know if there's any truth to such rumors..." Yardrat mumbles. Still, he quiets down and stops prodding the lowly human, instead opting to teleport to the head of the table.

Yardrat reaches for the seat directly opposite Benjamin Brown. However, the moment his fingers touch the coveted chair, he freezes in place, thinking better of his decision. Without another word, he takes a seat at the right hand side of that coveted chair, tacitly admitting that he is unworthy to sit at the seat of highest honors.

Once again, an uncomfortable silence fills the room. Lily clears her throat.

"Emperor Yardrat, is it? I am Benjamin's daughter, Lily. What sort of powers do you wield? It looks like something involving teleportation?"

Despite her fear of the Demon Emperor, Lily's curiosity toward his astoundingly good looks and youthful appearance make her babble along, hoping to engage him in idle conversation.

Yardrat flashes her with an icy stare.

"...It is impolite to fish for information regarding a demon's powers. Especially one so revered as myself. Learn some manners, wench."

Lily's cute smile freezes on her face. She awkwardly bites her tongue and looks away.

"Y-yes. Of course."

The young woman folds her hands on her lap, idly pinching and pulling at the hem of her pink dress, while her father says nothing.

Benjamin's words, spoken several hours earlier before they arrived at this meeting location, play back in Lily's mind.

The Hidden Hells are absolutely terrifying. Say nothing that would offend them. If you enrage one of these fickle-minded Emperors, not even I will be able to protect you. They can make you die a thousand deaths in a thousand different ways, and I will never know who committed the murder. Pray they do not come to hate you... or to lust over you. The machinations of greedy Devils are not to be underestimated.

Remembering her father's warning, Lily falls silent, no longer attempting to speak to the pretty-boy Yardrat any longer. Despite his youthful appearance, he is surely tens, if not hundreds of times older than her.

Hardly has the conversation died down before another fifteen demons suddenly materialize near the blood-filled chalice, this time appearing with a violent bang! An explosion of blood erupts at each of their fifteen positions spraying the room in plasmic essence and causing Lily to flinch in disgust.

Before the bloody spray can land on anyone, it suddenly freezes in the air and retracts backward, splashing noiselessly into the chalice.

Of the fifteen new arrivals, only three of them appear to be Emperors, while the rest are all merely pretty and handsome-looking attendants.

Fenrir, Emperor of the Night. A buxom woman with blood-red lips, pale white skin, and pitch-black hair streaked with splotches of white here and there. She wears lavish furs taken from the hides of fearsome beasts on her homeworld, which gives her an exotic appearance reminiscent of a succubus.

Beside Fenrir stands her loyal attendant, Dawn, the Lord of Caves. Dawn appears chipper and excited to be at the meeting, yet stays quiet as she remains by her master's side.

While Fenrir's vampiric appearance stands apart from all the other 'normal' demons in existence, the other two Emperors beside her appear just as attention-grabbing, only in different ways.

Wolfram, the Emperor of Rending. Lupus, the Emperor of Scales.

These two Emperors also stand out from other demons thanks entirely to their fur-covered bodies. As descendants of the first werewolves created by the Evil Hero, Dracula, they sport powerful muscles, thick skin resistant to injuries, and iron-like fur capable of absorbing all types of damage that might cripple lesser Emperors.

As leader of the Werewolves, Wolfram towers more than nine feet tall, dwarfing the figures of every other demon in the room, yet still standing half a head shorter than the Ancient Orcs. He assumes a dominant posture, like an alpha wolf on the prowl for his equal. His beady yellow eyes flick around the room, examining those present with derision, as if they haven't any meaning to him.

Meanwhile, Lupus, a female werewolf, appears smaller than Wolfram, yet just as capable of shattering mountains and carving valleys for rivers to flow. Her furred body hides a secret; a second layer of defense beneath her iron-like fur. Scales, nearly as tough and durable as those belonging to the ancient dragons, give her a level of defense that perhaps only Bael himself might be capable of matching.

Both of the werewolves wear almost no clothing, only covering up their private bits with small strips of leather.

Benjamin Brown rises to his feet as he finally meets the actual leaders of one of the Hidden Hells.

"Ah, Fenrir, my dear. You are truly a sight for sore eyes. And Wolfram, Lupus, it has been a few millennia since we last spoke. I hope the two of you have fared well."

Fenrir crosses her arms, deliberately pushing up her breasts in a sensual manner. "Benjamin, darling, long has it been since I sampled your delectable fruit. It seems you've had some fun since we last 'sparred,' judging by that precious child on your right."

Lily glances at her father in confusion.

Has... daddy been involved with this Fenrir woman? I don't recall him mentioning her.

"This is my youngest daughter, Lily," Benjamin says, gesturing to her. "Come, have a seat, all three of you."

Lupus raises her eyebrow. "Fenrir, you have quite the interesting taste in males. I didn't take you for a fleshbag-lover."

"Do not judge the delicacies which you have not tasted for yourself," Fenrir says, batting her eyes innocently. "Benjamin Brown has bested many of Hell's mightiest women. Why, I hear he even enjoyed a short fling with miss Silvia herself. I do hope she shows up... she's such a fun character."

"I'll take your word on that." Lupus mutters.

Wolfram, however, remains silent. The massive werewolf male barely glances at anyone in the room, aside from Yardrat.

Emperor Yardrat meets Wolfram's gaze. "Have something to say, piss-ant? I can smell your musk from here."

Wolfram grunts. "Tsk. It seems Little Auger didn't show. What a pity. That pup always tucks his tail between his legs when I come barking."

"His lack of interest in this farce has nothing to do with you." Yardrat snaps. "Do not test my master's patience... or mine. I am not as slow to action as he... nor as forgiving."

"Heh heh..." Wolfram chuckles. "All bark and no bite. The Fourth Hell will always come up short to the Third."

"Now, now," Fenrir says, waving her delicate hand and revealing her painted-red nails. "This is no time for buffoonery. Let us take our seats. I am quite interested in what might happen once this meeting finally gets underway."

Up to this point, while all of the Demons so far have chosen to sit as far away from Benjamin Brown as possible, the Hell of Blood's participants surprise Lily by walking over and sitting directly next to her, on her father's right-hand side of the table.

Fenrir sits next to Lily, while Dawn sits between her master and the two werewolf Emperors.

"Lily," Fenrir says, smiling prettily. "Such a beautiful name. This is my assistant, Dawn. She is the Lord of Caves. She likes pretty girls, such as yourself."

Dawn leans forward to look past her master. "Hihi! I am Dawn! Very nice to meet you! It is always my plea-sure to speak to such beau-tiful human girls! So young and tasty, very delec-table, if I don't say so myself!"

Despite the odd references to 'taste,' Lily doesn't detect any hostile intentions behind Dawn's words. "Well, maybe after this meeting we'll get to talk some more! It's nice to meet you, too!"

As she leans back in her chair, Lily exhales a sigh of relief.

At least not ALL the demons in the Hidden Hells are colossal jerkbags! I might even make a 'friend' here... or better!

While the two juniors converse, Benjamin Brown locks eyes with Fenrir. She bats her eyes seductively, opting to speak to him via telepathy.

[Oh, Benny. Your child is so cute! Tsk, if only I could bear a girl from you, I would be so pleased.]

[You flatter me,] Ben says, smiling back, his expression going a bit beyond 'polite' into the realm of 'lurid.' [I have been quite busy attending to various matters in the Slithering Spire. Otherwise, I wouldn't mind if we spoke a bit more often.]

[Mmm, yes. I do miss our time spent together,] Fenrir says. [By the way, Kristoff apologizes for not coming. You know how he is. He detests all these political ploys. He'd rather spend his energy sucking the blood out of some delectable boy-toy.]

Benjamin snorts. [That's not all he's going to suck out.]

[Oh, you.]

While the two of them silently converse telepathically, at the other end of the table, Yardrat gazes at Fenrir with a look of silent contemplation.

Emperor Fenrir, the wily she-devil herself. Her position at Benjamin Brown's right hand side is anything but coincidental. If I were to ask, she'd surely say she just wants to draw close to her old flame... but what sort of fool am I? There's more to her seat than meets the eye.

His eyes narrow to slits.

Those rumors regarding the Battle Brothers must be true. Their bodies really were empowered through vampiric arts. And since the Battle Brothers worked directly under Mephisto, the current 'leader' of the First Hell... it is likely she intends to sink her claws into the Hell of Damnation and make herself the Second Emperor. Hah. Her ploys are transparent. That idiot, Mephisto, has led the werewolves straight to the rabbit's den.

He thinks himself capable of seizing control of the First Hell, but in the end, he's nothing more than Fenrir's unwitting pawn.

Yardrat's eyes flicker with insight.

No... perhaps not. Mephisto controls the River Styx. And now, none exist, save the First Emperor, who can oppose his wanton dipping into its waters. Could it be... is the reason he has not come here because he wishes to undergo his ascension, undisturbed?

Yardrat shudders.

The last time a Great Necromancer walked the Earth, his name was Valac. He forged an unstoppable empire of demons and undead that nearly wiped out the angels and Titans. If it hadn't been for Satan's return, Valac might never have perished. Mephisto as a Duke makes for a worrisome pawn, but as an Emperor, capable of wielding the power of life and death... he would genuinely become someone not even Fenrir could control!

While the Emperor of the Void ponders the true implications behind this meeting, Lupus snorts loudly, as if laughing at some unspoken joke.

"Haha. Oh, what joy it brings me to see that Ose perish to her own hubris. Even before she became an Emperor, I could never stand her smug attitude. Knowing we will soon have a far more worthy Second Emperor lifts my spirits."

Benjamin Brown turns his head to face Lupus. "You forget... no matter who assumes the position of Second Emperor, they will only hold that title until Diablo's reawakening. He might be comatose now, but he will eventually awaken and reassume control of the First Hell."

"Diablo..." Lupus repeats, her eyes turning misty. "Mmm. A real man, that one. Not soft and dainty, like Beelzebub... or Yardrat. I like it when men can punch through planets. I suppose if he returns, it won't be such a bad thing for the Seven Hells."

"I disagree!" Wolfram interjects. "The First Hell's decline is all Diablo's fault anyway. He failed to kill that Hero when he was just a brat. He allowed the Black Queen to run wild. Grawf! He has lost his prestige!"

Huul, the Second Ancient Orc, snaps her head to the left to look at Wolfram. "Hey! Watch your mouth. Don't even think of disrespecting Diablo in front of me! Lest we forget, it was Diablo's transformation which helped annihilate ninety-five percent of Heaven's forces during the War in Heaven! You could kill a thousand mighty foes and still not reach a fraction of the Emperor of Annihilation's achievements! Even the first Orc Zhurm paled before Diablo's greatness, let alone the likes of your people, who had yet to enter the Creator's eye!"

Yardrat crooks a faint, nasty smile. "Lady Huul speaks the truth. Emperor Diablo is not a demon you can casually insult. There is a reason my master did not quarrel with him running the First Hell. Diablo possessed the necessary... qualifications."

Momentarily mollified, Wolfram merely crosses his arms and turns up his nose.

"Hmph."

Realizing he cannot possibly dare to continue insulting one of demonkind's most decorated and mighty warriors, Wolfram decides to keep his mouth shut. A wise choice, given the attitudes of the people he even calls his friends.

Fenrir bats her eyes at Benjamin. "Speaking of Diablo, where is that lovable fellow? I should very much like to go and pay my respects to him."

The human shakes his head. "Sorry. No can do. Only three demons know of Diablo's location. Even I'm not sure where they hid him while he sleeps. He's in a vulnerable position, so until he reawakens, nobody is allowed to know where he rests."

"Oh, that lazy goof..." Fenrir comments flippantly. "He always did love a good nap. I'm sure he's enjoying his well-deserved sleep, lest we forget his conquests during the Energy Wars. He's been working so hard ever since Satan passed away... such a shame about those rumors, though."

Benjamin and the others present raise their eyebrows. "Rumors?"

"Oh, didn't you hear? I suppose Ose's dirty little secret hasn't gotten out, yet," Fenrir says, her tone mysterious. "Then again, the Wordsmith did kill all the witnesses to her filthy confession. Once everyone has arrived, perhaps I'll let you know."

Benjamin scrutinizes her face, but finds no signs of lying. "...Alright. We'll go along with that-"

Before he can finish his words, the two great doors behind him suddenly fly open, and a single red-haired demoness walks in, a maniacal look on her face.

"Hello, boys! Did you ugly little cunts miss me? Sorry I'm late, the spatial storms were CRAZY on the way over! Bahaha!"

Ben turns around to look behind himself, frowning when he sees her.

"Fae. The Emperor of Terror," He says, in a low, pained voice. "...Lovely to see you."

"Oh, piss off," Fae says, as the skinny, bony-looking demoness strides in the door. Her raggedy-red hair gives her the appearance of a beggar just strolled in from the street, while her ratty clothing looks like something she pulled off a fifty-year-old corpse lying in a ditch. Absolutely nothing about her evokes the majesty of a so-called Demon Emperor.

After she enters, the door closes behind her. She strides past Benjamin and the rest without paying them any heed, opting instead to meander toward Yardrat at the far end of the table.

"Hey! Slime-face! I told you to wait for me! Can't you see I had to get my nails done? This is a special occasion, so what kind of shit-faced brat leaves a delicate lady like me in waiting, huh?? I had to blow up like three Warpers just to get here! Such a pain in my ass!"

Yardrat stares at the demoness with a look of disgust. "I waited long enough. I assumed you weren't going to come."

"Hah! More like you hoped I wouldn't! Don't fuck with me, Yar-brat! You're just jealous of my good looks!"

To everyone's surprise, Fae strides right up to the seat of honor, pulls it back, and plops down.

"Wow, what a comfy chair! And to think not one of you losers had the balls to sit here! Bahahaha, the guts of the 'Hidden Emperors' turn more and more to shit every day! Ain't that right, Orc-face One and Orc-face Two? To say nothing of the hairy mutts seated next to the bloodsuckers, bahaha!"

Looks of anger go up around the table. The more Fae speaks, the more vile and pointed her words become. However, nobody speaks up to defend themselves, not even Wolfram. Something about her powers, abilities, and past history make them hesitant to get on her bad side.

"We're just waiting for the other Emperors to show up," Fenrir says, her tone muted and somewhat diplomatic.

"Yeah, yeah," Fae blabbers. "Where's the grub? Where's the booze? How can you have a big, ugly table like this but no refreshments?! If Bael were here, he'd know how to treat a lady! Oh, but too bad! You idiots went and got Hell's Best Boy killed! Fuckin' bunch of losers!"

Lily listens silently, but doesn't dare to stick her neck out and instead takes refuge behind Fenrir, making herself as small as possible. With Fae's wild antics, she definitely seems the 'crazy' type of demoness her father warned her to avoid the most.

Benjamin Brown and the others continue to wait, while Fae spews her hateful gibberish. All the while, the minutes tick past.

So many have already arrived, Benjamin thinks. And yet in total, not even half of the Hidden Emperors have shown their faces. I still expect many more to come.

Part 296: Meeting of the Hidden Emperors (Part 2)

After Fae's appearance, more than half an hour passes before another group of demons shows up. Surprisingly, when the giant double-doors to the room open, a massive group of half a dozen Emperors, Dukes, and their attendants walks in, with more than thirty attendees in total.

Benjamin Brown turns slightly in his chair to inspect the new arrivals, then mutters under his breath. "Oh? The Hells of Isolation and Lust showed up simultaneously. Interesting."

The Hell of Isolation, founded by the brother and sister Emperor duo, Shax, the Emperor of Resonance, and Murmur, the Emperor of Whispers. Its group consists of two Emperors and a Duke, along with their attendants.

First among the Sixth Hell's guests is Melody, the Emperor of Suppression. Despite her sing-songy name, her appearance is somewhat macho, with a relatively toned and muscular body, thick, full black hair that stretches down to her waist, and teeth studded with jewels. She wears an absurd amount of jewelry around her neck, on her face, and all over her hands. Even her bare midriff reveals a couple of piercings in her belly.

"Sup, losers?" Melody asks, her tone harsh. "Now that the life of the party's here, let's get started! Hahaha!"

She flashes a thumbs-up to Fae, who grins back in response.

"Finally, someone fun!" Fae replies.

Behind Melody stands Guura, the Emperor of Control. A playful-looking young girl with white and pink streaked hair, she appears to be only a young teenager, though when it comes to demons, appearances can be deceptive. She waves cutely to everyone, especially the members of the Hell of Blood. "Hey guys!! What's up?"

Guura wears a loose-fitting blue jacket, a bit more practical than Melody's tank-top and shorts. At her side hangs a loose collection of small musical instruments, including a flute, a harmonica, and a clarinet.

Emperor Fenrir smiles at the newcomers. "Ah, friends from the Hell of Isolation. How... quaint."

Finalizing the Hell of Isolation's big shots, a pudgy-looking male demon waddles in, his black dress shirt appearing just a bit too small for him, allowing his fat rolls to stick out over his pants. Dorma, the Duke of Delicacies, flicks his eyes around the chamber, scowling in annoyance. "Eh? No food? What kinda meeting is this? A gathering for 'poors'? The First Hell really has lost its marbles!"

After the Hell of Isolation's members enter, a group of Demon Dukes follow behind them. As members of the weakest Hell, the Hell of Lust, not a single Emperor appears among their ranks. Instead, their Hell is the most well-known for possessing a massive quantity of Demon Dukes.

Founded by Belial herself, the Hell of Lust is ranked as the Second Hell, though its combat strength rests at the absolute bottom. Were Belial not its official backer, it would have ranked Seventh for all eternity, even below the Hell of Corruption.

Three Dukes from the Hell of Lust follow the members from the Hell of Isolation.

Jahn, the Duke of Cuddles. An effeminate-looking male with pale pink skin, wearing waifish and breezy white clothes strides in first. As the leading Duke, he holds the most authority. His narrow eyes give him a bewitching appearance, while his incubus tail flicks around with a mind of its own, as if searching for the next person he might choose to be his lover.

"Hello, everyone. This pretty mister apologizes for showing up so late. I was having such a good chat with my friend Guura, I lost track of the time. Our delay is entirely my fault."

Right beside Jahn stands Silvia, the Duke of Whips. She stands surprisingly tall, with a slender body that makes her look like a walking red beanstalk. She towers over Jahn, wearing a black dominatrix-looking set of leather clothes that makes it appear she is the 'alpha' in their relationship. However, anyone who knows them knows that they hold no particularly strong feelings for each other. She simply doesn't like to let everyone think he is the strongest member of the Second Hell.

"Benji, darling," Silvia says, smiling coyly at the lone human male in the room. "It's been... a while."

Benjamin glances at Fenrir for a moment before turning to meet Silvia's gaze. "Indeed, it has."

Finally, the last demoness is none other than Bree, the Duke of Intoxication. Her presence is the most glaringly off-putting of all the demons who have assembled so far. She stumbles into the room, tripping over the doorframe and nearly falling flat on her face. Her slovenly clothing, at least three sizes too big, hangs off her rail-thin figure as if it were stolen from a street beggar and given to a drug addict. She curses loudly as she enters the room.

"Jesus Christ! Holy shit, which one of you fuckin' morons installed a death-trap in front of the goddamned door?! I nearly broke my nose walking in!"

Yardrat, still sitting at the far end of the table, feels his eye twitch reflexively.

"Ugh. And here I hoped she wouldn't show up..."

His whispered observation echoes in the minds of the other demons present, even if they don't vocalize their thoughts. Bree, one of the loudest and most obnoxious demons in Hell, is well known for her proclivity of using very un-demonic curses taken straight from angelic and human society.

The six guests from the Hells of Isolation and Lust once again surprise the demons present by taking up seats as close to Benjamin Brown as possible. Silvia, however, surprises no-one by picking the seat closest to the human, on his left-hand side, directly across from Lily.

"Who's this cutie?" Silvia asks, her eyes momentarily examining the child across from her. "She looks a lot like you, Benji-dear."

"She's my daughter, Lily," Benjamin replies, smiling warmly at Silvia. "I brought her here to... expand her horizons."

"I wish I could have a cute daughter like her," Silvia says, as she shoots a knowing glance at Fenrir next to Lily. "But we demonesses are doomed to live without experiencing the joys of motherhood."

Benjamin starts to speak, only for Bree to suddenly raise her voice. "Mother of god! That little brat ain't even got any tits! How's she 'sposed to get a guy without knockers?? Fleshbag brats are as flat as boards these days!"

Several demons nearby reflexively grind their teeth together at the sound of Bree's grating voice. Some of them shoot her nasty looks, but they don't speak up, worrying she'll turn that horrid voice and alcohol-laden breath in their direction. In the past, those who have told her to pipe down have ended up with quite the earful, so the rest know better than to even dignify her presence.

However, among those present, there are a few demons who don't mind Bree's mannerisms. Fae, still plopped down in the seat of honor, waves her hand excitedly. "Yo, Bree! Did you bring anything to drink? This meeting looks like it's gonna suck ass! Throw me something!"

"'Course I did!" Bree shouts back, her conversation with Fae drowning out all the others present. "Here, brought somethin' strong just so I could fall asleep. It'll knock you off yer' tits!"

"Fuck yeah!" Fae cackles, as she grabs a small flask thrown across the table by Bree. "The rest of these stodgers don't even know what they're missing! Bahaha!"

Dorma, the Duke of Delicacies, eyes the flask with more than a hint of jealousy. "I bet that tastes pretty good. Here, Bree. I was thinking of you, so I brought alone my own 'special present.' You'll like this!"

He tosses a skull-shaped flask a few seats down to Bree, who catches it reflexively, her body physically incapable of ignoring any object which might contain alcohol.

"Three's a party!" Bree laughs. "Thanks, Dorma! You're the goddamned best!"

As the three of them begin drinking together, growing progressively more intoxicated despite their physical distance, the other demons and Benjamin all roll their eyes.

Benjamin, in particular, eyes the positions the Hells of Isolation and Lust have placed themselves in, as well as the Hell of Blood.

These seating choices weren't chosen randomly. Three of the Hidden Hells are making the deliberate choice to align themselves with the First. Hmph. Shax's Hell, I can understand. He always was something of a human-lover. All peace, no war, that silly hippie bullshit that got him killed. And the Hell of Lust, well, they depend on humans to empower their succubi and incubi. But what I can't understand is why the Hell of Blood has chosen to align itself with the First. Is it only because Fenrir and I were once...? There must be another reason.

Unaware of Fenrir's machinations through Mephisto, Benjamin Brown can only postulate in his head the reasons behind her choice to sit as close to him and Lily as possible. As for the other Hells who have chosen to sit as far away as possible, their reactions are only natural. They resent the First Hell for superseding the command of Valac's Lantern, and thus, the River Styx.

Guura, the Emperor of Control, kicks her legs back and forth under her chair. "It's so quiet. Why don't you guys play some music or something? Get a band in here, liven this shebang up a bit!"

Melody groans in annoyance. "I told you this was going to be a boring meeting, but you never listen. Why do you think Viola didn't come? She hates stuffy gatherings like these. You're such a friggin' airhead."

Benjamin Brown examines the demons present.

The Hell of Lust brought three Dukes. Jahn, Silvia, and Bree.

The Hell of Blood brought Three Emperors. Fenrir, Wolfram, and Lupus.

The Hell of Punishment only brought Yardrat and Fae. Auger himself didn't deign to show up, nor did Glinch... not that I'm complaining. I'd rather never see Glinch in the flesh again...

The Hell of Calamity has yet to dispatch a single demon. Only the First and Second Ancient Orcs showed up. Even Ashura didn't think this meeting was worth showing up for.

The Hell of Isolation dispatched two Emperors and a Duke. Melody, Guura, and Dorma. Viola didn't show, because she detests meetings like these.

That only leaves... the Hell of Corruption. Yama has yet to show. There's no chance he would miss a meeting like this.

We almost have all of the major players. Once they arrive and Mephisto shows up, we can get the proceedings underway. Hmph. Perhaps I should have prepared refreshments after all. I didn't anticipate it would take several hours just for these lazy demons to get off their asses. Lily's bound to be getting hungry soon.

The many demons present engage in quiet conversation. Some of them, such as Fenrir, opt to speak telepathically. Other keep their voices low, while a few of them remain utterly silent.

Fae continues to sit at the seat of honor. She pulls her chair back and props her feet up on the corner of the table, crossing her legs and leaving her shoes to sit uncomfortably close to the two Ancient Orcs.

Huul glances at Fae, frowning in annoyance. "Disgusting."

"Got a problem, granny?" Fae asks, taunting the Second Ancient. "Maybe you should say it to my face! Hahaha! As if a bloody green-skin has any right to talk to others about nastiness!"

A look of rage flashes in Maltus's eyes. The First Ancient stands up, rising from his chair to send a gaze filled with fire at the Emperor of Terror. "Foolish wench. Speak not ill of my species, lest I remind you why the Fifth Hell is the most feared of all the Seven Hells!"

Fae doesn't flinch. "Go ahead, take a swing, you ugly little goblin. Maybe I should remind you why my title is Emperor of Terror, hahaha!"

Their spat draws the attention of the other demons present. A few of the attendees frown, uncertain of what the results will be if an Emperor from the Fourth Hell battles an Ancient Orc from the Fifth Hell.

Privately, even the most open-minded demon who is aware of the Seven Hells will often wonder whether their rankings are truly appropriate. After all, for the Hell of Lust to be ranked second is most certainly a farce predicated entirely on the leadership of the disgraced Second Emperor, Belial, someone who lacks even the right to show up to a meeting such as this one.

And as for the Fifth Hell... despite its seemingly low position, everyone present knows it might actually be tied with, if not stronger than the Hells of Blood and Punishment.

Only the machinations of Fenrir and the existence of Emperor Auger, privately considered to be the strongest of all Emperors, leave these questions in flux, presently lacking a resolution.

Maltus sneers coldly. "Do you think I won't dare to maim you in front of all these... esteemed guests?"

"Cut the crap." Fae says, her smile turning equally frigid. "You orcs are so pompous. You sling around threats of the 'Zhurm's wrath' this, and 'Orc Pride' that... but compared to a Demon Emperor, you monsters will always come up short. We all know the supposedly legendary Sphinx fell to a single Duke."

Fae's blunt words cause almost every demon present to frown. Despite the fact that all of them absolutely believe in the truth she states, under ordinary circumstances, they would never utter such slander casually. After all, while monsters might be weaker than their demonic leaders, they still perform many important functions in demon society. It wouldn't do if they were to rise up and start fighting back, demanding more rights and freedoms. Better to let their inferiority persist in a state of flux, a nebulous concept nobody would rather voice out loud.

"Fae. That's enough." Yardrat says. As an Emperor from the same Hell, he speaks up, using his borrowed authority from Auger. "You've gone too far. Apologize to the Ancients. They are mighty beings who stand on a... similar level to us Emperors."

Fae shoots a wicked glance at Yardrat and sneers. "Oh, please. So diplomatic! Don't act as if you think any differently from me! Orcs are inferior to demons, and so are all the other monsters! They're hardly fit to lick my boots."

Huul rises to her feet, mirroring Maltus. She nods slowly as she glances around the table.

"Good. Good! So this is how the Fourth Hell looks down upon the might of monsterkind! It seems you've all forgotten the true power my people possess! My son could crush any one of you in equal combat, yet you speak such wicked words when he isn't present!"

Sensing the change in atmosphere, Benjamin Brown stands up from his chair. "Now, hold on. All of you, settle down. This meeting is not the venue to settle long-standing quarrels. By the authority of the First Emperor-"

"The First Emperor can lick my ass!" Fae interrupts, startling the other demons with her heretic words. "He ain't even here! Big spooky Super-Emperor hasn't ever paid me a visit, so I don't believe he exists! He's just some bogeyman the First Hell made up to scare the rest of us into submission. Well, if your First Emperor is so damn tough, maybe he ought to straighten that pesky Hero out himself, eh? And slap these orcs back to the Ancient Era too, while he's at it! Bahahaha!"

"Fae!" Yardrat barks. "I said that's enough!"

"Here, here!" Fenrir says, raising her voice. "Speak not ill of the First Emperor. I personally witnessed his power when he forced the Overlords to back off, all those years ago! He saved us all!"

"You saw him with your own eyes?" Fae asks. "Then what's his name? What does he look like?! You don't even know! I bet your memories are fake! If he can erase memories, he can change them too! So, I say it again! If the First Emperor exists, let him strike me down right here and now!"

Despite Fae's increasingly provocative words, the two Orc Ancients actually calm down somewhat. Maltus and Huul share a look between each other, as well as an amused chuckle.

Haha. This foolish toddler. She actually dares to insult the First Emperor in front of all the others. Even if he doesn't kill her here, she'll surely suffer a gruesome end later.

Huul settles down first, lowering back into her seat. She grins jovially, shaking her head at Fae's stupidity.

"What an imbecile. I was going to beat the daylights out of you, but it would stain this matriarch's claws if I exchanged blows with a buffoon."

Maltus echoes her sentiments. "Agreed. Slandering the First Emperor is a death sentence. What little respect I had for miss Fae seems to have evaporated into the wind."

He sits back down, leaving Fae momentarily befuddled.

"Yeah? Well guess what, idiots? I'm still here! He didn't strike me down, because the First Emperor doesn't even exist! You idiots are all so gullible, falling for the First Hell's ploy."

"The Overlords fear the First Emperor." Benjamin Brown says, his voice quiet. As he sits back in his seat, he shakes his head. "That alone should be all the proof you need for his existence. Do you really think they would turn their weapons away from us... just because of some illusory ghost?"

Fae rolls her eyes. "It doesn't matter what you say. I know he doesn't exist. That's why I'm still alive, and why I'll stay that way. You're all just afraid I might be right. If I am, it means we've all been duped by a sham! Sounds an awful lot like something a bunch of idiot fleshbags would fall for, eh?"

After Fae finishes talking, the table becomes eerily quiet for a few long, painful moments.

Several demons try to appear unmoved, but their eyes turn reflective.

Not a single person present, the highest echelons of the Seven Hells, have ever seen the First Emperor in the flesh. Those who seem to remember him, including Fenrir herself, only remember the events of his ascension, his shocking rise to power and the moment he terrified the Overlords into beating a hasty retreat.

Under such circumstances, they can't help but ask a simple question.

Does the First Emperor truly exist, and if he does, why does he keep his identity a secret?

While this unspeakable thought percolates in the minds of everyone present, Fae offers a smug smirk, nodding in satisfaction to herself.

Good. It seems my words have gotten through to some of these morons. Even if they deny the truth, there's no other explanation. The First Emperor is clearly a fake. The rest of this 'meeting' should prove more interesting now, heh heh heh...

While many demons become lost in thought, a powerful aura sweeps across the room. Its might stands so far above those seated that some of them snap their heads up in alarm.

"The First Emperor?!" Yardrat mutters, surprise audible in his voice.

The doors to the room swish open quietly, allowing a pair of Demon Emperors to stride inside. Immediately, the breath that everyone was holding tightens in their chest as they gaze at the new arrivals.

Serena, the Emperor of Soul Whispers, one of the strongest demons in the Fifth Hell, strides forward. Her appearance is both wispy and illusory. Her beautiful white dress trails on the ground behind her, while her limpid eyes gaze forward blankly, without sight. Her hair rests atop her head in a pair of buns, while white and red paint covers her face, giving her a distinctly Chinese aesthetic, something which few demons deliberately imitate, given its human origins.

She pauses after stepping into the room. Her princess-like appearance causes the blood of many to boil as they gaze at her with widened eyes.

"His majesty, Emperor Gorn." She says, before stepping aside.

Behind her, an absolutely massive, towering Demon Emperor enters the room. Out of pure respect, almost every sentient present rises to their feet, showing respect to the second-ranked most powerful Emperor in existence, a being many privately equate as having nearly as much power as Auger himself.

Gorn, the Emperor of Many Faces, quietly steps forward. His seemingly bottomless well of mana physically sickens many of the weaker attendants in the room, intoxicating them as if they had inhaled a powerful sedative. The low-ranking orcs and demons standing off to the side shudder as they try to stay on their feet. Only Benjamin Brown and his daughter remain wholly immune to Gorn's presence, due to their inability to sense the power of his magic. Even so, Benjamin's internal sensors give off countless warnings, making his eyes widen in surprise.

Emperor Gorn has grown this mighty? Has he not yet reached the peak of what an Emperor can achieve?

The Emperor of Many Faces wears a simple black robe with no particular adornments. His face appears feral, with a bushy, pointed beard sticking out of his chin. His white hair is both regal and refined, yet his tall, muscular body seemingly gives him the illusory figure of a massive were-bear, a monster who might end up set off by the slightest provocation.

As Gorn walks into the room, he gently takes Serena's hand in his. They stride past the other demons without offering them a single glance.

"Emperor Gorn," Benjamin says, while keeping an eye on the alarming readouts of Gorn's mana in his peripheral vision. "You have come."

Gorn pauses for a moment, his gaze distant.

"How could I miss this event? I am not a fool, like Auger. I fear no-one. I only wish to see the events that will change the trajectory of the Seven Hells with my own eyes."

He finally looks at Benjamin, sending a shudder down the human's spine.

"...You have aged considerably." Gorn says. "Time is not kind to your species."

Benjamin lowers his head. "No, it is not."

"Mmm."

Gorn continues walking to the far end of the table. He pauses before Fae, the only demoness in the room who remained seated when he entered.

"Hello, Fae." Gorn says.

Fae glances at him casually, as if realizing he has just arrived. "Oh, heya Gorn! Long time, no see, buddy! Look, I kept this seat warm for ya!"

She climbs out of the chair, then steps aside, giving Gorn a good-natured slap on the back.

"I'm gonna go sit with my gal, Bree! It's more fun over there anyway!"

The moment she steps aside, Gorn removes her from his thoughts.

"Mmm. Despite what others say, you can be quite sensible at times."

Gorn takes his position at the seat of honor, finally displacing Fae. Despite the hopes of everyone present, he doesn't give the loudmouthed woman a violent beating like they thought he would. Instead, Fae wanders over and plops down beside Bree, bringing an end to the tyranny of her tongue-lashings with little more than a short exchange of words.

Serena sits beside Gorn, at his right-hand side, next to Yardrat and across from the two Ancient Orcs.

"Emperor Gorn." Huul says, offering a polite smile to the publicly-renowned, second-mightiest Emperor, the leader of her Hell. "It seems your seclusion was fruitful. You have once again increased your power."

Gorn slowly closes and opens his eyes, as if in a daze.

"Soul manipulation is far from a precise science. I have made gains. I have suffered losses. Ultimately... my strength increased a little. That is all that matters."

Emperor Gorn's polite demeanor hides the truth of his personality, the quiet and tense fear he brings to all those who truly know him. Not only has his body been baptized in blood countless times, but his conquests during the Energy Wars left many other Emperors shaking in their boots. Those who opposed him ended up ripped to shreds. Those who bent the knee only barely managed to escape with their lives.

His eyes, the eyes of an ancient predator, sweep across the room, forcing anyone whose gaze he meets to look away. Only one demoness feels no fear before him, her name being Fenrir, the Emperor of the Night.

Fenrir eyes Gorn icily, sizing up his progress over the past few millennia.

Gorn has not held back in his efforts to obtain power. He is even more terrifying than I recall. But pure strength is not always what wins a war. Auger and Gorn may hold their feud up as the pinnacle of what demons can attain... but the Hell of Blood will not fall behind. During this meeting, we will achieve total dominance, and it's all thanks to little Mephisto.

She curls the corner of her lips into a faint smile, but otherwise says nothing.

With Gorn's arrival, all other conversations fade away. Only the bravest person would dare to provoke him, or those lacking all sense of propriety. Surprisingly, even the loudmouths, Fae and Bree, keep their lips sealed.

Gorn snorts.

"Humph. It seems almost everyone is here. Yet still, one persistent little hold-out lingers in the shadows. Come out, Yama. Your flair for theatrics is beginning to annoy me."

The other Emperors and Dukes raise their eyebrows. They sweep their senses around the room, yet not one of them manages to detect anything out of the ordinary. However, just as they begin to doubt Gorn's words, a sinister voice drifts into their ears from every direction.

"Heh... heh... heh... we were planning a fun little surprise, but you caught us in the act. How embarrassing..."

The torches on the walls flicker for a moment, then go out. Darkness engulfs the room, though every being present still retains their sight, aside from one. Benjamin Brown's ocular implants instantly switch to a variety of visual modes, while the other demons and monsters possess vision superior to ordinary humans, allowing them to see in the gloom. Only Lily Brown finds herself awash in darkness, unable to see even two inches in front of her face.

On the ceiling above, an amorphous blob of shadow congeals itself into a massive face stretching across the sky. Two blood-red dots appear in the darkness, making Lily nearly wet herself in fear.

"Honored guests... we are the humble leader of the Hell of Corruption. We wished to make a dramatic entrance, yet that silly Gorn fellow took away all of our fun! Heh heh heh… we do hope this meeting will turn out productively."

Yama, the Emperor of Shadows, keeps true to his name by avoiding the light. As a being of pure darkness, he both fears and reviles it. Yet, where it is absent, his powers surpass all other demons, even Gorn and Auger themselves.

"So many beautiful women…" Yama says, as his comically small red eyes jump between all the female demons and non-demons alike. "Oh, how this humble Emperor longs to add you all to our harem! Hehehe… we have suffered many unfortunate losses, of late."

Silvia and the other members of the Hell of Lust roll their eyes. "Enough with the theatrics, Yama. Get down here and join us, already. This meeting has delayed for long enough."

Yama's body congeals into a human-sized blob of shadow. He melts across the ceiling and falls smack onto the center of the table, instantly transforming into a four-foot-tall vaguely demon-shaped blob of darkness.

"This young one… she meets our tastes quite nicely," Yama says, as he flickers forward to arrive right in front of Lily. "Too bad she is not a virgin, or we would be even more pleased, hehehe…"

The young girl nearly screams in fright, but to her surprise, her father stands up and reveals a flash of light in his palm.

"Do not test my patience, Emperor of Shadows. Sit your ass down. I do not take kindly to rapists."

A glowing flicker of starlight appears in the human's hand, illuminating the look of rage on his face. For the first time in her life, Lily discovers that her father can reveal such an expression, one she's never seen him use before.

Immediately, Yama recoils, as if slightly pained by the barely-glowing light in Benjamin's palm.

"Hehehe… so you expected our arrival and prepared accordingly. Clever fleshbag! But you were a fool to reveal this delightful female to us. Do not be surprised if she disappears one day from under your nose!"

The light in Benjamin's hand suddenly quadruples in brightness, forcing Yama back a second time and further brightening the chamber.

"If she does, then I'll know which Hell is responsible!" Benjamin barks.

Fenrir narrows her eyes. "Step back, Yama. You won't touch Benjamin Brown or his family."

Silvia nods. "Benji is not one you can provoke. He is a friend of my entire Hell."

Yama snaps his head toward the two women.

"Tsk. Fenrir might have some qualifications to run her mouth, but a mere Duke does not! Your so-called Second Hell is a disgrace! We alone could wipe it out in an afternoon, so do not test our patience! We might just take you as one of our playthings yet!"

"You'd risk making an enemy of the Hell of Isolation," Emperor Melody says, gazing at Yama's shadowy figure without a hint of fear. She curls her lips into a mocking grin, exposing her diamond-studded teeth. "The Hells of Lust and Isolation are like sworn brothers. Threaten them, and you'll piss us off, too. I knew the Shadow Emperor had some guts, but I didn't think he was a fucking idiot."

Yama's Hell, much like the Hell of Lust, holds its own special distinction. While the Hell of Lust lacks even a single Emperor, the Hell of Corruption not only possesses just one single Emperor, but a complete lack of Dukes, Barons, and Lords.

Indeed, the Hell of Corruption exists entirely due to Yama's presence. Only he, his Shades, and his Shadow-walkers populate the Seventh Hell's confines.

Thus, when pressed by a fellow Emperor, Yama's threats lose some of their bite. Faced with threats from the Hell of Blood and Isolation both, Yama can only slink back and offer a coy smile.

"Heh heh… this humble Emperor knows when we have met our match. We will stay quiet and observe this meeting from a safe distance. Do not let us sully the mood, for we shall gaze upon the lovely flowers from afar!"

Without another word, he dissipates into smoke, then floats upward and returns to the ceiling. After a few seconds, Yama's presence fades away, becoming invisible to all but the most mana-sensitive Emperors, such as Gorn. Many of the women at the table shiver uncomfortably at the thought that they cannot sense Yama unless he wishes for them to do so.

Benjamin Brown takes a few moments to collect himself. He sends a command through his implants to the torches on the wall, causing them to reignite. With their light returning to the conference room, Yama's threat becomes noticeably smaller.

I won't let that sexual predator touch my daughter. Ben thinks. Perhaps... it was a mistake bringing Lily here. In any case, it is too late for doubts. I will simply have to keep a close watch on her, moving forward.

With Yama's arrival, Benjamin Brown can finally exhale, releasing some of the tension in his limbs.

"Alright. Everyone has arrived. Emperor Auger did not show up, and neither did a few of the others... but those present should be sufficient to discuss these important matters moving forward. I trust you will relay the proceedings here to those who need to hear them."

Benjamin offers a pointed glance at Yardrat, who speaks for Emperor Auger. Yardrat faintly nods, but says nothing in reply.

"Very well then," Benjamin says. "In lieu of Mephisto's arrival, I hereby call this meeting to order. It's time we discuss the threat of the Wordsmith and what measures we shall take to deal with him."

Part 297: How to Kill a Wordsmith

Benjamin Brown silences the meeting hall with a declaration of war. However, what he receives in response are several seconds of awkward silence before Yardrat finally speaks.

"I beg your pardon? I was under the impression the purpose behind this meeting was to determine which Hell's members would ascend to the First Hell in order to fill the gaps left behind by all of its lost elites. Dealing with the Wordsmith is a mere trifle by comparison."

Several of the elites present nod their heads in agreement. The Second Ancient, Huul, speaks up immediately after him. "Just because the First Hell was incompetent does not mean the rest of us are the same! Just seven short years ago, the Hell of Damnation boasted the fighting powers of Diablo, Belial, Bael, Agares, Barbatos, and Mephisto. Considering Diablo's status as the legendary Archdemon and Belial's as the Second Emperor, none of us voiced any complaints. But today, only Mephisto remains, while the rest have perished, fallen comatose, or turned traitor!"

The First Ancient, Maltus, adds on to his junior's sentiment. "Not only that, but you even hurriedly added Ose and Beelzebub to your ranks, yet both of them perished as well. Promoting two juniors two ranks was already a mark of shame for the so-called First Hell, one which made it quite the laughingstock, but at least Ose served her time during the Energy Wars. How you could have the gall to feed souls to a babe like Beelzebub still eludes us!"

Benjamin Brown weathers the criticisms stoically, not even flinching as several representatives from the Hidden Hells openly mock the First Hell to his face.

"Ose may have been a bit of a hasty case, but Beelzebub was hardly unworthy. Besides, Beelzebub promoted himself, originally. He wielded the legendary Soulfire, a power thought lost to the Ancient Era. He swallowed the souls of enough humans to evolve from Lord to Baron, and his feats during the Battle Against the Black Queen earned him the chance at promoting to Duke."

"You're evading the point." Maltus replies, his voice cold. "The First Hell has flailed about drunkenly for seven years, now. You released the Wordsmith and the Black Queen, only to suffer self-inflicted wounds as a result. Now, you change the pretense of this meeting to one where the rest of us have to clean up your mess. No orc worth his salt would stoop so low without speaking first of the rewards!"

Gorn, seated at the end of the table, reveals a light smile. "These juniors speak the truth, Mister Brown. It is the job of the First Hell to clean up its mess. If you wish to enlist anyone's help, you should take the proper measures by promoting eligible demons to lead the Hell of Damnation. Naturally, the Hell of Calamity holds the most worthy members. I doubt anyone here would be so foolish as to quibble over this... minor issue."

The Emperor of Many Faces slowly glances at Yardrat, his provocative words aimed squarely at Yardrat's leader, Emperor Auger. The Emperor of the Void does not miss this distinction.

"Have you forgotten, Gorn? My liege, Auger, is the publicly recognized mightiest Emperor in existence... short of his eminence, the First Emperor. That is why our hell is ranked fourth and yours, fifth."

"And yet both of ours are ranked lower than the Hell of Blood, to say nothing of the Hell of Lust. Clearly, the old rankings mean nothing," Gorn sneers. "I think it's high-time we... adjusted... the old rankings. My Hell possesses the most Emperors. We are most fit to replace the First Hell."

From the middle of the table, Lupus, the Emperor of Scales, speaks up. "Replace? Hoho, your ambitions betray you, Many-Faced Emperor. This discussion is not about replacing the First Hell, lest we shift from seven Hells to six! It is merely about moving a few assets to the First Hell in order to establish leadership."

"The First Hell is rotten to the core," Gorn says, snorting hot air through his nose. "And I mean that in the most literal sense. Fleshbags have risen up and taken over the Labyrinth's Core, stealing access to our food supply. Only two Warpgates remain, both located at the furthest reaches of Hell. The First Hell is filled with fat, groveling weaklings. Countless millennia of being on top have softened their ambitions. If we must lose one of the Seven Hells, so be it. Six is more of a demonic number anyway."

Seated on Gorn's right-hand side, Serena speaks up, her sightless eyes fixated forward on the far wall.

"My king is right. The First Hell no longer holds any real significance. We must replace its hierarchy with that of the Fifth Hell before dealing with the Wordsmith. This new Hero may be powerful, but so was King Arthur, and he, too, fell to demonkind's might."

Serena's soft, gentle voice contrasts with her overbearing words. Despite the Emperor of Soul Whisper's dainty figure and pure white dress, giving her the appearance of a willowy twig that might break at the slightest touch, all of the leaders present know better than to underestimate her.

Before anyone else can speak, Benjamin Brown raises his voice.

"You overstep your authority, Emperor Gorn. I presently speak for the First Hell, and I will continue to do so until Mephisto arrives. Speaking of which, I suppose it's time to address the Duke of Mist specifically."

Gorn's expression remains impassive when the lowly human challenges him directly, but inside his heart, an ember of hatred ignites.

Benjamin continues. "Mephisto was wildly successful during the Stormbringer Invasion. The First Hell lost nearly all of its elite assets, but according to the intelligence I've received... Mephisto obtained several worthwhile returns. He not only whisked away Bael's body from beneath the humans' noses, but Ose's as well, in addition to Monster King Kar. That means Mephisto now possesses the souls and bodies of two Emperors and one Duke. What do you think will happen once he... evolves to the rank of Emperor?"

A jolt of realization shoots through a few of the less-informed Emperors and Dukes present. Yardrat appears less surprised than the others, while Gorn and Fenrir reveal wildly different expressions.

"Another hasty promotion." Gorn growls. "Mephisto is not worthy to lead the First Hell! He is only a Duke, one who will soon be newly ascended to Emperor! Have you forgotten Ose's failures after her botched promotion? The First Hell requires a leader with eons of experience. A stable leader who knows what he is doing."

"I agree," Yardrat quickly interjects. "And who better to lead than my liege, Auger?"

Emperor Serena turns her head in Yardrat's direction, though her eyes don't fix onto him. "Auger has chosen not to come, revealing his fear. My King is absolutely superior when it comes to a leader's demeanor. Further, all the Hidden Hells would rise up if forced to submit themselves to... Auger's methods."

More than half of the guests nod silently, well aware of the costs associated with Auger's 'blessing.' The ability to share and transfer powers necessarily requires submitting oneself entirely to the Emperor of Distribution, after all.

Benjamin Brown sighs. "Once again, Gorn, your ambition precedes you. You claim that Mephisto is unworthy. By whose standards does that statement hold true? He was Satan's protégé, trained by the Devil himself. Mephisto swiped Valac's Lantern from the angels, stealing their power of resurrection for your people and benefitting all Seven Hells as a result. When the Black Queen attacked, he did not hesitate to unleash a secret trump card to stop her; the body of Leviathan itself, thought lost during the ancient Energy Wars. And during Stormbringer, he crushed the humans all by himself several times. To say nothing of him possessing multiple Emperor-level bodies and souls..."

The human stares directly into Gorn's eyes. "Once Mephisto ascends, can you say with absolute confidence that, in a battle between only yourselves and the powers you control... you would come out on top?"

Gorn, the mightiest being in the room, meets the human's gaze. On the surface, he appears unmoved. However, in the back of his mind, he recalls the infamous tales of the previous High Necromancer, Valac, who nearly brought angelkind to their knees all by himself.

The rise of another elite Necromancer would cast a heavy wrench into Gorn's plans. However, when faced with the facts, even he finds it difficult to speak up regarding Mephisto's supposed unworthiness.

Luckily, Serena interjects, saving her king from an awkward moment.

"Mephisto does indeed possess the qualifications. However, I worry what fate the Seven Hells will face once a High Necromancer arises once again. Lest we forget, Emperor Valac was a cruel being, someone who frequently killed his lessers to enrich himself. While his power was all but absolute, so too was his tyrannical fist. Mephisto will face all of the same temptations, the desire to kill and enslave other demons and turn them into his undyingly loyal minions. I do not look forward to this possible future."

For once, Benjamin Brown appears stumped. He glances at his daughter for a moment, then to Emperor Fenrir. Unsure of what to say, he instead offers a lame excuse.

"...I do not believe Mephisto will go that far."

"Your beliefs matter little to me." Serena says, pressing the topic. "I have spoken to Mephisto on many occasions. He is a small-minded fellow with aspirations far too large for his capabilities. He is greedy to a fault and will assuredly cause the future I have predicted. I may not be an Oracle, but it hardly takes a seer to portent Mephisto's actions after his rise! Without Diablo and Belial to keep him in check, I know in my heart the terrible fate he will thrust upon us."

"You speak so casually of small minds," Emperor Fenrir says, as she leans back in her seat casually. "Yet you also speak of Mephisto's broad aspirations. I see that hypocrisy runs deep in the leaders of the Fifth Hell. Mephisto is by far the most suitable candidate for the position of Second Emperor. Perhaps you have forgotten this one fact, but I have not: The Seven Hells are presently no more than prisoners locked in a cage. The Overlords hang over us, their threat a weapon that could sever our heads at any moment."

Fenrir continues. "Mephisto is perfect for the role of Second Emperor because he alone possesses the ability and foresight to lead our people out of the darkness and into the light. After the mind-wipes, we have lost countless pieces of crucial information regarding the Overlords, which has forced us into a passive position, never daring to lift our heads and meet their eyes. Yet our 'benevolent' leaders have offered us the privilege of survival and a few paltry worlds upon which we may live."

"Mephisto offers us a new possibility!" Fenrir concludes. "We can finally rise up and break the shackles which have locked demonkind down! We can defeat our oppressors and seize control of the galaxy! This is the future we demons deserve!"

As Fenrir looks around the room, the expressions of the demons she meets turn icy. They silently shake their heads, disapproving of her stance.

Silvia, seated on Benjamin's left-hand side, is the first to speak. "Do you even hear what you're saying? Demonkind has grown no stronger since the Energy Wars, while the Overlords have continued to expand and conquer the Milky Way. The First Emperor only managed to scare them away with the threat of a pyrrhic victory, one which would cost them dearly but still eventually result in our destruction. No matter how highly you evaluate Mephisto, he cannot possibly pose the Overlords more of a threat than the First Emperor himself!"

Emperor Guura bows her head meekly. "Don't you guys think you're talking a little too casually about fighting the Overlords? If they're listening right now, we could all end up in hot water, you know!"

Benjamin waves his hand flippantly. "I took every precaution. If the Overlords can monitor this facility, they have truly expanded their capabilities."

"You don't need to worry about the Overlords," Fenrir says, answering Silvia and Guura both. "You all fear our oppressors, but what you don't know is that their strength has declined substantially over the past fifty millennia. I'll bet nobody here even knows about the war they've been fighting."

Despite his intense distrust toward Fenrir, Emperor Gorn can't help but perk up his ears at her words. Not only him, but Yardrat and the other Emperors all sit up a little straighter in their chairs.

"What's this about a war?" Asks the Second Ancient, Huul. "They're fighting each other now?"

"To be frank, I don't know the details," Fenrir says. "I've tried investigating, but my... servants haven't been able to pierce their intelligence nets, or to comprehend their technology. The Overlords are highly secretive, and the mental blocks they put on all of us affect me just as much as the rest of you. Even so, I've observed the signs of a terrible war ravaging their defenses. Their space-fleets appear to have substantially dropped in both quality and quantity. Many ships operate on skeleton crews. In particular, their observation platforms have reduced in number over the years. I don't know who they're fighting, but I do know that the Overlords are either losing or suffering an eternal stalemate."

Fenrir bats her eyes as she turns to look at Benjamin Brown.

"You haven't heard anything, have you, love?"

The human slowly shakes his head. "I have not. If anyone would know, it would be Diablo or Ose... but they never told me about any war. Diablo used to offer regular reports to the Overlords, and Ose was due for her first in just a month or two... until she died. Beyond them, the Overlords always kept a tight grip on those who knew their secrets. It would defeat the purpose of the mind-wipes if anyone here were to learn more about their workings."

"Emperor of the Night. How do we know you aren't making this supposed war up?" Yardrat asks, delivering a pointed glance at Fenrir. "Have you any proof to back up your claims?"

Fenrir shakes her head. "Not particularly. Only reports delivered to me by my pets... before they collapsed and died. You'll just have to take my word on it."

After she finishes talking, the room becomes quiet for a full minute.

Several Emperors and Dukes look at each other, sometimes raising their eyes to the ceiling in thought.

The concept of dealing with the almighty Overlords differs drastically compared to dealing with war-weakened Overlords. This possible dichotomy echoes in the minds of all the demons and orcs, making them dwell on Fenrir's postulations.

Even Gorn appears thoughtful. The Emperor of Many Faces strokes his white beard attentively, while his eyes glaze over.

Emperor Fenrir is many things, including a liar. But, she is neither suicidal nor foolish. If I assume that she still cares for demonkind, she would not lie about this possibility. Rising up against the Overlords would result in demonkind's extinction, and that is something nobody seated here desires. Therefore, if she has made these claims, she must have some level of confidence…

Yardrat also falls into thought.

Auger will wish to know of this news. Mephisto might be capable of defeating the Overlords given their supposed weakened state, but Auger himself is equally capable of such a feat. His powers would be perfect for a counter-attack and invasion.

Surprisingly, Gorn's consort, Serena, is the first to speak.

"I believe in Fenrir's claims. In this instance, I do not think she is lying. However, I must ask an important question. Are the enemies of the Overlords our friends? Might we possibly ally with them to achieve dominance, or is this war of theirs a civil war, instead? In the latter case, both sides might turn their weapons against us and wipe us out. In the former, an alliance could still result in our destruction if the Overlord's alien enemies backstab us afterward."

As the conversation turns toward the direction of an uprising, Benjamin Brown suddenly stands up and slaps his hand against the table.

"All of you! This discussion has diverted far enough from its original premise! Have you forgotten? We are here to discuss dealing with the Wordsmith! All this talk of superseding the First Hell and dealing with the Overlords is ludicrous when we are potentially facing demonkind's greatest threat to ever exist aside from the Overlords!"

Emperor Gorn rolls his eyes. "Ah, yes. The terrifying Wordsmith. Do feel free to enlighten us regarding his unparalleled power."

The First Ancient, Maltus, snorts derisively, echoing Gorn's sentiments. "I hear that brat is a pacifist, someone who hesitated to take any offensive actions following his appearance. He lived and fought passively, with only his deviant clone actually posing a minor threat to the First Hell. Even then, the clone has gone missing, leaving us with only the meek and mild original Hero to deal with!"

Several demons chuckle to themselves. They shake their heads, knowing full-well that the so-called legendary Hero is only a mere boy who has shrunk into his shell and tried to eke out an existence on Tarus II.

However, Benjamin's eyes harden as she sweeps a death-glare around the table.

"I expected better from the Hidden Hells. Have your eyes climbed up your asses? Your intelligence is outdated! Let me inform you all on the power this 'brat' actually possesses!"

He continues. "The Wordsmith came to Ose's residence, hoping to settle a peace treaty with her. She rejected him, and he left, only to vanish into thin air. However, his arrival spooked Ose, causing her to launch Stormbringer ahead of schedule."

Bree, the Duke of Intoxication, laughs gutturally. "You actually have the balls to speak of that embarrassment in front of all of us? Bahaha! Jesus Christ, the First Hell is a real shitshow!"

Benjamin continues, unhindered by her interruption. "The First Hell attacked, intending to capture both of the Wordsmiths. One of them was to go to Emperor Yama. The other would be kept for Ose's own purposes. I'm sure I need not explain what possible motives she might have had in mind. Even so, the human's 'passive' defenses proved incredibly robust! It took several days for the First Hell's elites to push past the Hero's battle lines."

Fenrir interjects. "Ose could have crushed the humans a lot sooner, love. She was merely hoping to capture a few important individuals alive, in particular, the Hero's wife and child. They would have made for great bargaining chips if the Hero eluded her."

Some of the Emperors frown at Fenrir's interjection. Once again, the information she possesses seems to exceed theirs by several margins, leaving them to feel somewhat inferior to the Third Hell.

"In any case," Benjamin says, "the Hero returned! And when he did, he possessed a weapon of unimaginable power, a divine angelic artifact that gave him access to nearly unlimited amounts of mana! This information was reported by countless witnesses during the battle! Now I ask all of you... what artifact, pray tell, could possess such a vast and limitless magical energy?"

Suddenly, the expression of every demon changes. Yardrat rises from his seat, a look of alarm on his face. "That's impossible!"

"And yet the evidence speaks for itself!" Benjamin shouts, pointing a glare directly at the Emperor of the Void. "The mana signature differed slightly, but without a doubt, it belonged to Camael. It couldn't have been anything but the divine blade, Excalibur!"

"Excalibur!" Gorn yells, his previously cool expression giving way to a momentary flicker of dread. "That artifact vanished ages ago! I thought the Overlords obtained it?!"

"Maybe they did." Benjamin says, his voice cold. "And yet the facts lay bare. Jason Hiro visited Ose on Hell Harbor, then vanished for multiple days. When he reappeared, he possessed the ultimate weapon, capable of slaying even the Archdemon himself. Where he obtained it, we don't know. It is entirely possible Jason Hiro traveled to the Overlords' home world and stole the divine blade from under their noses. It's also possible he used his unique abilities to locate the sword elsewhere in the cosmos."

Of all the demons present, only Fenrir and the werewolves from the Hell of Blood appear unmoved. Having already learned this information due to Fenrir's spies, they soak in the atmosphere, nodding silently to themselves.

Fae, the Emperor of Terror, frowns deeply. "Now, hold on just a second. Are you sure it's Excalibur?"

"What other artifact is known for possessing such a vast and limitless mana supply?" Benjamin answers with a question of his own. "Admittedly, the mana signature did seem a little different, but that could be explained by a variety of factors. Perhaps the Wordsmith disguised Excalibur's signature when he stole it. We don't know. His powers were already the most versatile of any Hero in history... now he also possesses the power to back it up."

"He can do that?" Fae asks, momentarily incredulous. "Shit! This punk's not bad!"

"Perhaps we have underestimated the Hero after all," Jahn, the Duke of Cuddles, mutters. "A Hero with Excalibur and a Hero without Excalibur are two entirely different entities."

"Based upon my observations," Fenrir says, seizing control of the conversation, "Jason Hiro actually possesses quite the weak soul. While he was able to wield Excalibur's power to seal countless Warper portals, he eventually slowed down and stopped. The most likely explanation is that his soul ran itself ragged. Compared to King Arthur, Jason's soul probably comes up short."

"That hardly eases my worries," Yardrat says, shuddering to himself. "It's the bloody divine sword! The divine sword! No doubt, Arthur's complete soul resides inside it, guiding Jason's hand. I would fear a jackrabbit guided under the wing of the Hero-King, let alone the Wordsmith!"

"If you think that knowledge will harm your beauty sleep," Fenrir says, "wait until you've heard the rest. Not only does the Hero possess Excalibur, but he also possesses Solomon's Crown. At the end of the Stormbringer Invasion, just after Beelzebub detonated his body in a brilliant final flash of power, the Wordsmith's daughter ended up perishing to that attack. Enraged, Jason Hiro instantly slew Bael, as well as more than two million surviving demons. He brutally wiped them out within mercy. Why, just this morning, he annihilated all of the First Hell's forces inside the Labyrinth Core. It is likely that he is preparing a campaign of conquest."

Gorn's expression falls. "So... that's how the invincible Duke of Pain fell. I didn't know the details."

Even Yardrat's previous cockiness shrinks to a fraction of its former self.

"...My Liege is aware of the details surrounding Jason's power, Wordsmithing. Apparently, the Hero can cast any sort of magic just by speaking a single word. However, previously, he was limited by a pitiful mana pool and his pathetic moral sympathies. Simply put, he was a soft-bellied boy. Now, however, neither of those weaknesses exist."

Emperor Fae leans back in her chair and shakes her head.

"Wow! Way to go, First Hell! You really screwed the pooch this time! You raised a fucking monster!"

"I am well-aware." Benjamin says. "That is why I must state again... it doesn't matter who ascends to the position of Second Emperor, or any of your other machinations. If you don't deal with this Hero now, while he has yet to fully consolidate his power... it will be the beginning of the end for the Seven Hells. Every moment we spend talking is another he will use in expanding his power."

Bree laughs. "Haha, I bet you'd like that, fleshbag! If Jason Hiro rises up, you'll finally be free to piss off with the rest of your people. No more bowing your head to us bloodskins, eh?"

The human representative hesitates for a moment.

"I have already cast my lots in with the First Hell. I still... I still hold some allegiance to humanity, to be sure. But I do not agree with this Hero's goal. Demonkind and humanity lived a stable existence, coexisting in peace. It was better, before. No father wants to raise his children while a Sword of Damocles hangs over their head. My days of fighting are long over."

Gorn sneers. "Peace? It sounds you've lived a good life in the Slithering Spire. You ended up quite well after the events of the Energy Wars. You don't even know how bad your compatriots had it. Now, they will live better under the Hero's protection... are you sure you want to betray them all for your own peace? Might you even, perhaps, turn against all of us to join the Hero on his mission?"

Several eyes flick from Gorn to Benjamin in expectation. The human slowly sits back down in his chair, an uneasy look in his eyes.

"I am a human. However, I am also a man of honor. Marie and I signed the treaties all those eons ago. We will abide by them. At least I will, though I cannot speak on her behalf."

"It warms our hearts to hear your passion for kissing the boots of demonkind," Yardrat says, his tone harsh. "If only all the rest of your people were so enlightened."

Gorn raps his fingers on the table. "Our goal seems clear. We must eliminate the Wordsmith as quickly as possible. However, our previous discussion still holds some level of importance. Therefore, I have a... suggestion."

Hearing the most powerful demon in the room voice a 'suggestion' causes several other Emperors to fidget uncomfortably. Never would a self-serving entity like Gorn speak politely unless he had some ulterior motive.

Benjamin nods slowly. "Go on."

"I suggest that whoever lands the killing blow on this young, fledgling Hero should be designated the Second Emperor," Gorn says, as a predatory smile stretches across his face. "Naturally, the one who succeeds will also elevate his Hell to supplant the First. If Mephisto is as capable as you claim, then he will succeed and put all of our worries regarding his capabilities to ease. Of course, if he doesn't..."

Gorn trails off. He averts his eyes casually, leaving the implication hanging in the air.

Fenrir frowns. "Mephisto was chosen by Satan to be his successor. Just because he has not yet had an opportunity to shine does not mean you have the right to supplant him under any circumstance. The Hell of Blood-"

"Is clearly in collusion with Mephisto," Yardrat snaps, interrupting Fenrir. "We may not pay attention to all of the mundane details that occur outside of our hells, Emperor of the Night, but do not think the rest of us naïve. Several witnesses reported seeing the Battle Brothers assume vampiric powers. Your defense of Mephisto indicates that you and him are working together to supplant the First Hell! I'll bet the reason Stormbringer failed may have even had something to do with Mephisto's deliberate machinations!"

"Outrageous!" Wolfram barks, rising to defend his fellow Emperor. "Watch your mouth, you little shit! How dare you imply my lady would collaborate to kill Ose! That claim has no basis in reality!"

Yardrat slowly blinks his eyes. "When did I say such a thing? You seem to be putting words in my mouth. Though, now that you mention it, that does present an... interesting possibility. Don't you think?"

Emperor Serena turns her head in the Hell of Blood's general direction. "Ose's death certainly seemed preventable, in hindsight. Her rushed actions, her unnatural failures to predict the human's combat capabilities... these do not line up with the infamous Ghost's tactics. I recall during the Energy Wars, as a mere Baron, she brought humanity to its knees. How could such a famous individual suffer so many simultaneous failures?"

Benjamin Brown glances at the Emperor of Soul Whispers. He frowns and falls into thought before turning to look at Fenrir.

"That... does seem a bit odd, now that Serena mentions it. Lady Fenrir, you wouldn't possibly...?"

Before Fenrir can defend herself, Gorn speaks.

"How strange it is that Fenrir has remained abreast of the tactical situation both inside and outside of the Labyrinth while the rest of us have remained in the dark. She seems to know everything, doesn't she? Not only the Hero's movements, but the artifacts he possesses, the events which occurred during Stormbringer, and even things Sir Benjamin himself doesn't know. My, she certainly is... full of surprises."

Two dozen heads swivel to gaze at Fenrir. The Emperor of the Night remains calm and collected, while icily sweeping her eyes from left to right.

"Unlike the rest of you, a bunch of ignorant brutes, I always maintain a close watch on the galaxy. It is not my fault you lot live in decadence, sealing yourself off from the important happenings outside of your Hells. As for this rumor I had something to do with Ose's death... simply absurd. As women of substantial intellect, the two of us were like birds of a feather. I had nothing to do with her death. Rather, you should turn your attention to the traitor Belial, who brutally pummeled Ose, along with the help of the Fairy Queen and several other mighty individuals."

Fenrir casually reaches up and plays with a few strands of her luscious onyx-colored hair.

"Besides. Don't you lot find it odd that Ose didn't ask anyone but Yama for assistance? The reason she fell had nothing to do with me, but instead, her own hubris. Ose genuinely believed herself infallible. She thought she was smarter than the rest of you and wanted to prove her ability by taking down both Wordsmiths alone. All she had to do was ask, and I'm sure any of you would have barked like dogs for a chance to help her. After all, like Yama and the Emperor of Infiltration herself... I'm sure you would have enjoyed the chance at obtaining one of the Wordsmiths for your own purposes."

Even Gorn finds himself entranced by Fenrir's silky voice. He swallows heavily, imagining the possibilities of adding the Wordsmith's power to his many 'faces'.

"Nobody here trusts you, Fenrir. But whether you had anything to do with Ose's death or not, it no longer matters. She's dead, the Wordsmith isn't, and we have to settle both of these issues once and for all."

Benjamin purses his lips.

"Regarding your previous proposal, Emperor Gorn. Well... I can't say it's orthodox... but allowing the Hero-Slayer to ascend isn't the worst idea I've heard. Truth be told, it seems a fair competition, and it would allow a worthy demon to take the place of the Second Emperor. I think I should add another point, though. Whoever manages to successfully kill or capture Belial should also be added to the list of possible ascenders."

"Mmm. Belial." Gorn growls, his voice tainted with disgust. "Satan's Whore. A floozy who rose through the ranks purely by chance. I always knew she was too kind for her own good. But still... defeating her will prove troublesome. She has always been the Second Emperor for a reason."

"Perhaps not." Fenrir says. "I happen to know something else that you don't. In fact, Ose beat Belial not once, but twice, during Stormbringer. It was a total victory. The only reason she didn't kill the former Second Emperor was due to interruptions by third parties on both occasions."

The demons blink in surprise. Second Ancient Huul is the first to reply. "How is that believable? Belial was considered undefeatable during the Energy Wars. Her sheer physical strength and healing abilities alone made her almost impossible to wound, let alone kill."

"She has lost her edge." Fenrir states. "In my opinion, Satan's death rocked her emotionally. She lost her heart, and her fighting spirit. Now, she's become easily susceptible to emotional barrages. In fact, Ose used those gaps in her mental armor on both occasions, throwing Belial's emotions into disarray. It isn't that her body and powers have become any weaker, but..."

Gorn finishes Fenrir's sentence. "...but the mind is just as important a component of any warrior's power. I see. In that case, Belial isn't as invincible as we thought."

"So much has changed." Yardrat mutters. "Truly, time stops for no demon."

The Hells of Lust and Isolation, having not cared much about the outcome of this meeting, have mostly remained silent. However, sensing a lull in the conversation, Melody pipes up.

"Alright! So is it settled, then? Are we gonna gang up and attack the humans all at once, or what? Whoever kills the Wordsmith becomes Second Emperor. Boom, boom, done! Stop running your mouths off and decide already!"

Benjamin shakes his head. "It's not that simple, Emperor Melody. Until we receive-"

Suddenly, in the middle of Benjamin's sentence, the double-doors to the room blast open, swinging inward with incredible force!

Every participant in the discussion whirls around in shock, only to see two demons stride inside, both of them instantly evoking several varied and conflicting feelings.

Emperor Gorn gazes at the duo who have entered, his eyebrows lifting in surprise.

"Emperor Ose! Duke Bael!"

Bael strides in first, with Ose following behind him. The overweight Duke looks only a little worse for wear, with a fully healed body that still bears the telltale signs of necromancy, including ash-grey skin and cracks running along his face. Ose behind him appears about the same, her figure sharing the same necromantic magic signature.

As he walks through the doors, Bael snorts.

"Hello. Did anyone miss me?"

Part 298: Reviving the Fallen

A few hours earlier, elsewhere on Hell Harbor.

The Baron of Leprosy, Ozzar, slowly walks through the Hall of the Damned, his skinless feet audibly clinking against the floor. He stands tall and proud, more than happy to identify himself as a valuable servant to the reigning necromancer, Mephisto. Rotted black and red rags stick to his bones, their former glory having faded after countless eons away from the light of civilization. Given the Baron's inability to smell the world around himself, he pays no mind to the unbearable stench of death which wafts from his figure.

Ozzar casually walks through the hallways illuminated with green torches, fire which burns differently from ordinary magical torches. Those possessing any life inside themselves will find their internal organs slowly beginning to glow red under the torchlight, while those revived through the power of necromancy will glow green instead.

The Baron's skull, possessing two ruby-red eyes, remains locked-forward while he walks. Thoughts silently bubble within his mind, causing a wicked smile to dance upon his face.

The preparations are complete. We have finally rebuilt the bodies of my Master's fallen servants. The Monster King, the Emperor of Infiltration, and the Duke of Pain are ready for him to revive.

Heh heh heh... we had to sacrifice countless slaves to attain the nutrients required for their revival. A quarter of a million, by my count. Even so, fully rebuilt bodies are far more valuable to Master Mephisto than barely functional corpses. At last, the necromancers will rise again, mightier than ever. The living will fear the dead, as they always should have.

While Ozzar thinks quietly to himself about his anticipation of the coming events, another Demon Baron waddles over to him, their figure hunched over painfully, as if they've suffered a shattered spine, yet learned to live with it.

"Ozzar, Master Mephisto has just returned," The newcomer says, acrid green vapor belching from his mouth. "He is eager to begin the revival ceremony."

Azuth, the Baron of Marshlands, clasps his boney hands together as he speaks to his superior. Ozzar, in return, merely casts a sidelong glance at his junior.

"We mustn't keep the Master waiting." Ozzar mutters. "Move with haste. Assemble all the acolytes. We must bear witness to his rise today, on behalf of all of devilkind. Consider yourself fortunate to observe the rise of the future First Emperor."

"Yes. Yes!" Azuth crows, cackling to himself with a loathsome voice. "Kekeke, the Master truly deserves this reward. Long has he awaited his ascension to the rank of Emperor! The other demons plotted against him to delay his promotion, but no longer do any such barriers remain!"

Not long after, all the Barons, Lords, and other menial servants of Mephisto assemble inside a massive underground chamber more than half a kilometer wide and a full kilometer tall. Buried deep beneath Hell Harbor's crust, this facility is none other than the place where Mephisto conducts his most heinous, abominable, and outright gruesome 'experiments' with the living and dead. Were any respectable demon to hear of the horrors that occurred in this underground world, they might set the whole place aflame.

Along with the assembled demons, countless corrupted human followers cloaked in black robes also dot the area. These humans stand and stare blankly, their minds having long-since been erased and mutilated by the demons around them. They mindlessly clutch ritual-daggers with blades bent into the shape of the letter S, ready to use them at a moment's notice, once the ceremony has concluded.

Mephisto phases through the ceiling. He levitates toward the ground below, where three bodies rest atop ceremonial platforms, each one surrounded by demonic pentagrams etched into the floor with blood.

"Welcome, everyone to this momentous occasion," Ozzar says, as he begins to pace back and forth in front of his levitating Master. Ozzar directs his words toward the more than one thousand assembled necromancers. "Soon, we will witness the rise of our Master, the greatest necromancer to ever walk the ethereal plane. Long ago, we believed that only the great Valac was worthy of our praise, but times have changed. All of us wield the same power as our ancestor, yet it is Master Mephisto alone who succeeded in achieving the greatest gains."

Mephisto slowly stops his downward movement to hover just ten feet above the three bodies of Kar, Ose, and Bael. Their hands and claws rest across their chests in an X-shape, while their eyes remain closed, as if enjoying a peaceful, blissful slumber.

"Why did Emperor Valac fail?" Ozzar asks, his question rhetorical. "For millennia, we pondered the answer to that very question. Naturally, the answer was revealed to us by our current Master, who has illuminated a great many truths about necromancy. Valac was a mighty being indeed, capable of slaying Titans with a swing of his scythe, but he was far from invincible. In the end, it was his inflexibility and inability to truly comprehend the full powers of necromancy that led to his death."

"Take for example, the manner in which Emperor Valac resurrected corpses. Always, he used the same method. He strictly controlled the movements of bodies by placing their original souls inside their original vessels. This granted every resurrected figure the same power as when they were alive, but it also put a terrible strain on his soul! Countless sentients fought back against his control, and while they eventually failed, their efforts led to a gradual weakening of his powers, allowing the Archangels to hunt him down and assassinate him! But today, Master Mephisto has revolutionized necromancy by varying up his methods of control."

As Ozzar speaks, he wanders toward Kar's body and smiles.

"Imagine if Master Mephisto were as foolish as Emperor Valac. Today, he would place the soul of Monster King Kar back into his body to forcibly control him. While our Master would succeed, it would result in a waste of soul-power on his part, and King Kar would certainly fight back. Instead, as part of our Master's brilliance, he has learned to use powerful bodies more adeptly by placing compliant souls inside of them. Behold! Master Mephisto, display to us your glory!"

Ozzar deeply bows at the waist, while all of the other necromancers and enslaved humans follow his lead.

Mephisto nods along with Ozzar's performance, clearly pleased by his junior's showmanship.

"Ksss. Very good. You mussst all watch asss I disssplay to you the techniquesss I have refined over time!"

Mephisto dramatically waves his hand, conjuring Valac's Lantern before himself. The ancient artifact hums with the power of millions of souls, but a few of them shine much brighter than the rest.

After dramatically holding out the Lantern, Mephisto reaches into it and extracts a brilliantly bright light, one which causes all of the necromancers to raise their heads and gasp. The distinct aura of a non-demon makes some of them twitch in revulsion, but otherwise, they remain silent.

"Thisss sssoul belongsss to none other than King Kar himssself!" Mephisto proclaims. "Ah, but what a ssshame. He will not return to hisss body. No, for he isss much too troublesssome, and I am no fool. Emperor Valac once tried to control a fellow Emperor, Sssatan'sss lover, Nerisssa, through such a method. Ssshe rebelled againssst his ordersss, leading to the losss of a perfectly usssable Emperor. What a pity!"

Mephisto holds Kar's soul in the palm of his hand. The soul momentarily struggles to fight back, but eventually, Mephisto places it back into the Lantern, where it becomes inert. A moment later, he pulls out another bright, but significantly less lustrous soul.

"During the battle againssst King Kar, I sssuffered two terrible lossses..." Mephisto explains. "He ssslew both of the Battle Brothersss. Duriel perissshed, losing hisss body in itsss entirety. Then hisss sssoul wasss devoured by Zamiel, resssulting in Zamiel'sss evolution to Duke! However, the Monssster Royalsss also obliterated Zamiel'sss body, and thusss, I wasss left with only hisss sssoul."

Ozzar gestures toward the soul in Mephisto's hands. "As you may have already guessed, our Master will merge Zamiel's soul into Kar's body! This will give him the power of the Monster King, but he will also retain all of his previous abilities, as well! While he will regrettably not possess the Sphinx's magic, Zamiel will still have the true might of a Demon Emperor, along with all of King Kar's physical strength! He will become unstoppable!"

Mephisto chuckles. "Kekeke. Compared to Valac'sss sssloppy methodsss, mine require far lesss effort, but repay me with far greater rewardsss."

The Duke of Mist descends to Kar's body. Without any fanfare, he places the soul inside of Kar's brain, then activates the fusion of mind, soul, and body, sealing them together.

Ozzar continues to narrate Mephisto's actions for the lesser necromancers present, those not nearly as adept in the necromantic arts as Mephisto and himself.

"While our Master's techniques are quite potent, they do have a few downsides. The fusion of different souls and bodies will often result in instabilities. It will likely require a decent amount of time for Zamiel to acclimate himself to the physique of his new body, as well as merge himself with its power. Weak souls placed into strong bodies will often need to grow to achieve their full power. Strong souls placed into weak bodies may overload their physique, detonating themselves in a violent and gruesome death! Therefore, soul compatibilities are something you juniors must pay attention to in your future escapades."

The room falls silent as Mephisto and Ozzar both wait for the results of Zamiel and Kar's fusion. After more than ten minutes pass, Zamiel finally blinks his eyes open, while his head lolls from side to side.

"Uhh... uhhh..."

"Welcome to the realm of the dead." Mephisto says, his tone emotionless. "How are you feeling, little missster Zamiel?"

Zamiel opens his mouth to speak.

"Phhbluh. Blluh. B-b-bluh."

His crocodilian face, while not possessing the signature massive and elongated jaw of Kar's pre-Sphinx self, still appears shaped differently from Zamiel's former body. His lizard-like tongue requires a lot of effort to get into place and weave through his razor-sharp teeth.

"Where... whud happ-ed...?"

Zamiel shudders as he tries to stand up, and a jolt of electricity shoots through his veins. He collapses back on the ceremonial altar, coughing and sputtering for breath.

Ozzar immediately fills Zamiel in on the happenings following his death, allowing the former Duke to comprehend his new situation.

"You're... you're kidding! Ugh. I'm stuck in a... a croc body now?"

Ozzar snorts. "Rejoice, Young Master, Zamiel. You have finally obtained the power of an Emperor. You still possess all of your old abilities, and may yet gain access to Kar's magic as well, if you luck out."

With a painful shudder, Zamiel forces himself to a seated position. Dizziness strikes his soul, but he manages to rebalance himself, eventually raising his swampy-green claws to gaze at them with a mixture of disgust and fascination.

"...What, like, I can use that croc's earth manipulation powers? His Sphinx magic, too?"

Mephisto shakes his head. "Kar'sss earth manipulation abilitiesss, perhapsss. But hisss Sssphinx Magic, no. I failed to capture it before hisss death. Now, the Monssster Queen alone posssessses that power."

"Tsk. Damn shame, but I'll take what I've been given." Zamiel mutters. His eyes turn misty as he remembers his fallen brother. "But... but Duriel..."

"He isss gone." Mephisto states. "Duriel'sss sssoul hasss merged with yoursss. Asss expected of Emperor Krissstoff'sss magic. The Familial Bonding technique isss truly formidable."

Ozzar interjects. "Not all souls who cross bodies can use the powers of their new and former selves. Some are less adept than others. You'll almost certainly still possess your weapon-summoning powers, but as for Kar's earth manipulation... don't worry if you fail. Some things are simply not meant to be."

Zamiel waves his scaled hand absentmindedly. "Like I care. I'm back to life, but my little bro isn't. What's it all even matter anymore, man..."

The younger necromancers mutter amongst each other, observing Zamiel's condition.

"He appears to be quite stable."

"There's some disorientation from changing bodies, but the acclimation period was surprisingly short."

"That's just proof that Master Mephisto is a true expert!"

Mephisto hovers away from Zamiel. He levitates between Ose and Bael's bodies, both of them placed fewer than five feet apart on their respective altars.

"Master Mephisto!" One of the necromancers says. "Are you going to place obedient souls inside of Ose and Bael's bodies, too?"

Mephisto doesn't answer. Instead, Ozzar walks to his Master's side and speaks in his place.

"Bael was a good friend of our Master, and he is also one of the most respected demons in all of our people's history. It would be unbelievably disrespectful to place another soul into his vessel. As for Ose, while her soul is certainly powerful, Mephisto intends to reunite her true body and soul together. He has some... business with her. She has humiliated him far too many times in the past, even when she was only a Baron. Furthermore, she dared to steal the title of Third Emperor from him following Diablo's fall. Our Master deserved that promotion far more than her, and look at how the ancient Devils have repaid her! She will soon become our Master's personal toy!"

Mephisto chuckles quietly under his breath.

"Heh heh heh... yesss, I will make Ossse pay for her insssolence againssst me, but I will allow Bael to retain hisss unique traitsss. I have no intention of controlling my old friend... not unlesss he turnsss againssst me. But asss for Ossse, she ssshall sssuffer a thousssand humiliationsss. Were I still virile, I might even have sssome other usssesss for her. Kekeke!"

His lewd implications linger for a moment before dissipating into the wind. As necromancers, all of them have long since lost their demonhoods, along with all the other aspects of the flesh that make them whole. Such is the cost of manipulating the damned.

The junior necromancers and acolytes fall silent. They watch with rapt attention as Mephisto reaches into Valac's Lantern yet again, this time extracting two brilliantly glowing souls, one of them glowing just a bit brighter than Zamiel's did, and the other even more so than Kar's soul.

"Ksss. The brightnesss of a sssoul indicatesss itsss magical proficiency," Mephisto explains. He holds aloft the dim soul, one which pales only a little bit compared to Kar's, then raises the other one, which appears almost like a star in the underground space, the tiny orb of energy forcing some of the weakest acolytes to avert their eyes.

"My fallen friend, Bael," Mephisto says, as he holds the lesser of the two souls. "Toward the end, he and I had a few... disssagreementsss. He did not approve of my methodsss during Operation Ssstormbringer, but I will not begrudge him for thossse minor failingsss. We have been friendsss for agesss, and ssso, I ssshall ssshow him the appropriate level of ressspect he dessservesss."

Mephisto places Bael's soul into the Duke of Pain's body, but pauses for a minute to sadistically poke at Ose's soul.

"Asss for thisss foolisssh wench... kekeke! Long have I awaited my chance at revenge. Ssshe will have no choiccce but to follow my ordersss."

Mephisto places Ose's soul into her body, the brilliantly glowing Demon Emperor aura fading as it slides into her brain.

The Duke of Mist turns to address his audience.

"Now, then. After my three minionsss have awakened fully to their powersss, I will be able to ssseize the sssoulsss necesssary to evolve to the rank of Emperor. What foolsss would have the gall to question me when I alone posssesss the power of three Emperorsss and a Duke at my dissspossal? Not even the Hidden Emperorsss would dare, kekeke!"

Once again, silence fills the room. Mephisto stands motionlessly, waiting for Bael and Ose to wake up. To nobody's surprise, Ose's eyes begin to flutter first, showing the superiority of an Emperor's soul as she slowly returns to the realm of the half-living.

Mephisto and Ozzar turn to stand on both sides of her body. The Emperor of Infiltration blinks several times as she regains consciousness.

"Uhh... oh, devils... my head... hurts..."

Mephisto chuckles as he leans in a little closer to her.

"Welcome back, my pretty little ssservant. Thingsss are going to be different between usss, now."

As Ose blinks away the mist of death from her eyes, she tilts her head slightly to look at Mephisto.

"Huh? ...The fuck are you on about? And get away from me, you're acting creepy as hell, bro."

Mephisto pauses. He stares at Ose more intently, while a faint frown crosses his face.

"...Your ssspeech is... a little ssstrange, Ossse. Perhapsss your sssoul hasss sssuffered sssome trauma?"

When Mephisto moves in a little closer to scrutinize Ose, she awkwardly raises her hand and slaps at him.

"Yo, cut it out, bro! Damn, your breath smells like ass! And who are you callin' Ose, punk? I'm Bael! Ain't you even got eyes??"

Mephisto freezes for a moment. Then, he recoils in surprise.

"What?! Bael! No, that'sss not posssible. I placed Ossse'sss sssoul inssside her body! How could it posssibly be yoursss?!"

He turns to look at Ozzar for confirmation. The second-mightiest necromancer nods along to Mephisto's words. "I watched the whole process myself, Master Mephisto. You placed the brilliantly shining soul of a Demon Emperor into Ose's body. How could it have been Bael's soul? He's only a Duke! There's no way his soul could have somehow been mightier than Kar and Ose's, both!"

Several acolytes mutter to themselves, confused by the ceremony's change in tone.

Hardly have Mephisto and Ozzar begun to reconcile this screw-up before Bael's voice speaks behind them.

"You did what?! Imbecile! Mephisto, you bloody moron! How could you make such an elementary mistake?!"

Both necromancers turn in unison to see 'Bael' sitting up on the platform, but with Ose's soul inside of himself. The former Third Emperor, now stuck inside the wrong body, looks at Mephisto in annoyance.

"You absolute buffoon! I predicted that you couldn't resist bringing me back, but I didn't think you would mess things up this badly! Swap our souls at once! On the double!"

Mephisto momentarily becomes flustered. Stuck between the harsh words of Ose and the shifting gazes of his fellow necromancers, he fumbles for words.

"Keh, err, yesss. Of courssse. A minor inconvenienccce. I cannot believe I would make sssuch a sssloppy missstake. Bael'sss sssoul somehow isss even more powerful than yoursss! How could I have failed to noticcce thisss dissscrepencccy?"

Quickly, Mephisto reaches into Bael's body to grab at Ose's soul. However, the moment his hand touches the layer between her body and soul, a jolt of pain shoots up Mephisto's arm, making him shrink back in pain. "Aaargh! What in the ssseven hellsss?!"

"Master! Are you alright?" Ozzar asks.

Mephisto winces in pain, but quickly shakes the numbness out of his bones. While Ose sits and scowls at him, he reaches back into the divide between her soul and body, only to once again get blasted out by an unknown force!

"Ksss! Ssstop resssisssting me, wench! I am trying to placcce your sssoul into the correct body!"

Ose's scowl turns downright hideous. "Resist you?! Do you think I'm as stupid as you, Mephisto? There's no way I want to stay trapped in this fat, disgusting, jello-faced blob! I much more prefer my own figure! Now, stop pissing about and put my soul where it belongs!"

Bael, meanwhile, stuck in Ose's body, pats himself all around, then raises his eyebrows and nods. "Huh. So this is how tits feel."

"Stop groping my body!" Ose snarls. "I'll beat you half to death, Bael!"

Suddenly, Bael's hands go downward, to another precious hidden place. His eyeballs nearly pop out of their sockets.

"No! Oh, man! This ain't good... where's Little Bael?! Hurry up and get me out of Ose's body, Mephisto! This ain't a joke anymore, bro!"

Mephisto's flustered movements become even more exaggerated. He switches from trying to pluck Ose's soul out of Bael's body, instead trying to pluck Bael's soul out of Ose's body.

The feedback he receives becomes five times worse. When Mephisto tries to extract Bael's soul, a violent pulse of mana blasts him arm away and sends him flying backward, where he lands just a few short yards from the crowd of junior necromancers.

"Master Mephisto!"

"Is the Master alright?"

"He looks badly injured!"

It takes several seconds, but eventually, Mephisto manages to pull himself together. He staggers to his feet, a look of incomprehension stuck to his face.

"I... don't... underssstand..."

Mephisto slowly hovers back to Bael and Ose, sweeping his eyes from one to the other.

"It... it ssseemsss you are both ssstuck in the wrong bodiesss. Some unknown forccce isss preventing me from extracting your sssoulsss."

Ose steps off the platform while glaring daggers at Mephisto. "I know how necromancy works, imbecile! Don't lie to me! Necromancers can swap and control the souls of the dead as they please! That applied to Valac and you as well! So why would I believe that you can't put me back in my own body?"

Mephisto throws his hands up in exasperation.

"I don't know! Thisss hasss never happened before, not in all of my yearsss!"

Bael scratches the side of his head.

"Oh. Uh, actually. I bet I know, hehe."

"You do?" Ose asks.

"Yup. See, it's cuz... well, I didn't really believe it in the past, but I guess I've got a pretty strong soul or somethin'. Yeah, that's what Satan told me. And since my soul was once a part of my body... that's just how it is!"

Ose stares at Bael in disbelief.

"B-Bael. You absolute... nimrod! I won't accept this! I won't!"

The former Duke of Pain shrugs. "Eh, oh well. Shit happens. But hey, now that I'm back from the dead... anyone wanna play a game of Sticks and Bones?!"

Ose facepalms.

"I hate you so fucking much."

Part 299: Mephisto's Screw-up

The atmosphere in the Hall of the Damned turns awkward as the junior acolytes adjust the weight of their feet, shooting nervous glances at one another. The hundred or so human slaves wielding ceremonial daggers, once put in place to spill their blood in a moment of jubilation, now appear relatively useless, given how poorly the ceremony's final step has proceeded.

Ose lifts her head up and growls in Bael's deep voice, "All of you. Out. This stupid ceremony is over."

Upon hearing the orders of a reigning Demon Emperor, now in the body of a Duke, many of the necromancers stiffen in response, unsure of what to do. A few of them start to step back and retreat, only to notice that the rest haven't yet made up their minds.

Mephisto glowers at Ose. "Ssstupid woman! I may have messsed up a little, but you are ssstill my ssslave now! My necromancy makesss me your sssuperior! Even if my final momentssss weren't asss gloriousss asss I would like, I still hold the power of two Dukesss and two Emperorsss! My assscensssion is all but guaranteed! Now, sssit down and ssshut up!"

He infuses the power of necromancy into his speech, willing Ose to bow her head and obey his orders.

...However, Ose doesn't comply. She merely gazes at him with even more disdain, as if having personally observed his IQ drop an additional ten points.

"You're giving me an order? And yet, for some reason, my body does not obey. Oh, I think I know what's happened. Much like how you cannot pull out Bael's soul or mine, it appears your necromancy cannot forcibly control our actions, either. What a shame! You've proven yourself an even greater disgrace than I first thought, Mephisto."

Instead of meekly bowing her head because of Mephisto's orders, Ose clumsily stands up, towering above the diminutive Duke of Mist. Mephisto's eyes widen as Ose conjures a small but exceptionally deadly ball of lightning, then flings it at him!

BOOM!

The blast of mana-infused thunder crashes against Mephisto's ethereal form and sends him flying ten feet back. He bangs off another unused altar and flops to the floor, groaning in pain.

"Rrrgh! Ossse!"

"Oh, shut up." Ose mutters, her tone dull. "You've trapped me in the body of a lardass, and you've even lost control of my actions. So much for your supposed 'superiority' to Valac. You aren't even half the demon he was."

Ose conjures another ball of lightning, then turns her frosty gaze toward the assembled necromancers.

"Need I repeat my last order?"

Her tone sends a shiver down the exposed spines of the skinless, organless demons. They shrink back and scurry away, half-dragging the human sacrifices with them.

Not long after, only five entities remain inside the titanic underground chamber: Mephisto, Ozzar, Zamiel, Bael, and Ose.

The Duke of Weaponry, now in Kar's body, shakily rises to his feet, almost tripping over his tree-trunk-sized legs. The immense bulk of his new body stands in sharp contrast to his formerly small self.

"Geez, Ose. You may have swapped bodies, but you're still a giant cunt."

Mephisto shakily climbs up as well, having been thrown aside and humiliated in front of his fellow necromancers for the second time today. His rage burns hotter than ever, but he immediately realizes he is not Ose's match.

I have made a terrible mistake. Mephisto thinks. I placed Ose inside the body of demonkind's mightiest Duke. Not only does she still possess all her lightning power and supreme intellect, but Bael's invincibility, to boot! And somehow, the power of his soul has chosen to protect her! Since when have such a series of unfortunate events happened to any necromancer in all of history?!

When Mephisto turns to look at Ose, she merely sneers at him. "What's the matter? Are you mad at me? Got something to say, piss-ant? I'm all ears."

Mephisto glares at Ose for only a brief moment before turning his attention to Bael.

"Ksss. Bael! Have you already forgotten? Ossse isss the one who killed Emperor Ssshax. You sssaid ssso yourssself!"

Bael continues to sit on his ceremonial altar, a look of boredom on his face. "Yeah. And? I'm over it, bro. Live and let live. I already killed the broad, got my revenge. What more you want me to do? Kill her again? Sheesh, you need to stop holding grudges, Mephist-bro. It's bad for your health."

Ose tilts her head in Bael's general direction. "Oh, so you've forgiven me? That's what I like about you, Bael. You're such a simple soul."

"Don't get it twisted, sister." Bael replies, as his eyes momentarily darken. "I didn't say I 'forgived' ya. It ain't my place to do that. I'm just not gonna piss and shit myself over stuff that happened a long time ago. I already done beat your ass until you died. Ain't no point continuing with all that noise."

"Whatever." Ose says, rolling her eyes. "This conversation has wasted enough of my time. Mephisto, inform me of what has happened after my death. And make it snappy!"

The Duke of Mist glowers at Ose. However, when faced with the fact that she and Bael have somehow escaped his control, all of his previous plans for grand conquest of the Seven Hells fall apart. He slumps his shoulders in defeat, then begins to explain to her the events of the past several days.

After more than thirty minutes, Mephisto finishes his explanation.

"Hmph. It seems that after I fell, Jason Hiro underwent a drastic personality change. I suppose that makes sense, given his daughter's death. You may not have been able to obtain her vaporized body, but surely you obtained her soul?"

Mephisto's gaze turns complicated. "Naturally, I wissshed to do ssso, but I have ssscanned all the sssoulsss in my lantern, and yet not one of them bearsss the mark of heroic energy. I believe Beelzebub'sss immolation destroyed her sssoul in itsss entirety."

Mephisto throws his hands up melodramatically, but Ose appears less convinced. "You said before that Beelzebub's explosion had some sort of strange energy in it? Something that resembled my brother's mana?"

"Ksss. That isss correct. It alssso resssembled the attack you unleassshed upon Jassson Hiro, which ssstopped him from interfering with the battlefield for a sssignificantly long time."

"I borrowed Gressil's nullification ability to put the Hero into a coma." Ose says. "But for Beelzebub to also unleash that sort of energy... frankly, I always thought only Gressil could create it."

Ose leans backward, intending to prop herself up against the altar. However, in a moment of ungainliness, she misjudges the distance and slips, tumbling ass-over-end to land on her back atop the altar.

"Argh! Bloody hell!" Ose complains. "This fat, blobular body has no sense of touch whatsoever! My proprioception is a complete mess!"

She quickly fumbles around and lifts herself back up, swinging her legs over the edge to try and regain her sense of dignity.

"Anyway!" Ose snaps. "My brother refers to his ability as 'nullification.' He once mentioned something about it being the 'power of chaos,' whatever that means. I thought he was screwing with me, but perhaps it's a real thing. I'll have to interrogate him, next time we meet."

After a moment of pause, Ose shakes her head. "Mephisto, you said the Hero's daughter must have been obliterated by Beelzebub, including her soul?"

The Duke of Mist nods. "That isss my bessst guesss."

"Does that mean that, when Beelzebub detonated himself, you didn't obtain any other souls? It would be quite the coincidence if only Daisy Hiro's soul were annihilated, but the others weren't. Don't you think?"

Mephisto blinks in surprise. "I... had not consssidered that posssibility. Yesss, I did obtain more than a million other sssoulsss, including demonsss and humansss alike."

"Did that child truly die, then?" Ose asks, narrowing her eyes. "Something smells fishy about all of this. Perhaps one of the Hidden Emperors yanked her away at the last second?"

Mephisto slowly shakes his head. "I planted a Wraith not far from the Hero'sss makeshift home. He hasss tried ssseveral timesss to locate his child through Wordsssmithing. He hasss failed. It ssseemsss likely ssshe hasss died."

Ose snorts. "Don't be so sure. That brat possessed a frightening amount of magical power. Not only did she summon multiple ethereal Titans through some unknown method, she also wielded a surprisingly effective level of telekinesis. She even bolstered her father and a few others through that bloody impenetrable shield of hers during Beelzebub's detonation. How could she die so easily? Most likely, a Hidden Emperor snatched her away at the last second and hid her somewhere even Jason's Wordsmithing couldn't locate her."

Suddenly, Ose frowns.

"...Come to think of it, there's one other entity who might be able to hide the child's presence. Damn! How could I have overlooked this crucial fact?!"

Mephisto waits while Ose collects her thoughts.

"It's Gressil! My own brother! Of COURSE! I was in such a rush at the start of Stormbringer that I overlooked the most obvious culprit! No wonder I couldn't locate Hope or Jason during while the war raged. I'll bet my damned brother captured the Wordsmith's clone and hid him somewhere even the Oracles couldn't detect. It all makes sense now!"

Mephisto hisses under his breath. "And the rumorsss that Jason hasss obtained Excalibur?"

Ose's heartrate spikes. For a brief moment, her pupils shrink to pinpricks.

"What? Excalibur?!"

"Yesss. I sssensssed Camael's mana when Jassson Hiro firssst appeared. At that moment, all the dissscrepenciesss made sssenssse. Didn't you theorize that the Hero had obtained sssome sssourccce of limitlesss mana? Excalibur fitsss the bill nicccely."

For several seconds, the room becomes quiet. Ose lowers her gaze. A few drops of sweat congeal at the back of her neck.

"...Damn you, Mephisto. You're right. That's the only explanation. Jason Hiro must have left Hell Harbor, traveled to Volgarius, and stolen Excalibur from the Sealed Vault. Many of humanity's mightiest artifacts were taken by them during the end of the Energy Wars. Through his Wordsmithing, he must have caught the Overlords unaware. I've kept his existence a secret from them, so it's not unlikely he blindsided them somehow... and then he returned just in the nick of time- aha! So that's why he had to Wordsmith remotely! He must not have been able to teleport such a great distance back to Tarus II!"

Ose quickly fits the pieces of a 'puzzle' together, her erroneous conclusions substantiated by the bits and pieces of intelligence that she believes must be true.

"The damned Heroic Blade itself. No wonder Stormbringer failed. Doubtless, Fenrir and some of the quicker-witted Hidden Emperors have already realized that Jason possesses Excalibur. This isn't entirely a bad thing. I know better than to let a tragedy go to waste. Stormbringer's failure can still lead to great results in the future."

As if her earlier stumble never happened, Ose quickly stands up again and wanders away from the ceremonial altars. She begins pacing back and forth while muttering to herself.

"Nobody knows where Hope is, yet, but if my guess is correct, I have a shot at taking him for myself. However, taking him away from Gressil would normally be all but impossible… except now I possess Bael's body. I should be immune to damage, meaning that even if my powers don't work while in my brother's presence, my physical strength should be quite overwhelming."

The Third Emperor suddenly balls her hand into a fist, raises it above her head, and swings it in a downward arc toward her stomach, putting all of her strength into the blow.

THUMP!!

The power of Bael's invincibility results in no damage whatsoever as Ose reveals a cunning smile.

"Perhaps Mephisto's screw-up isn't so bad for me after all. I still possess my lightning abilities, my intellect, and now I also possess Bael's raw power. Had I entered my own body, that little dipshit necromancer might have succeeded in controlling me, but he failed, and now I've been given a second lease on life. Yes, this could do quite nicely."

She keeps her voice low, but with Mephisto's enhanced hearing, he still easily makes out every word. The High Necromancer frowns in annoyance, but says nothing. At this point, any struggle against her will truly be futile.

Ose spends half an hour testing out her powers and abilities. She conjures orbs of lightning, blasts of electrical energy, and even zips around with her Lightspeed Dash. After confirming the efficacy of her powers, she slowly nods.

"I suppose not everything can go perfectly. Bael's body is still only that of a Duke, in the end. My abilities have degraded to a Duke's power level, but the combination is still quite deadly. Given these circumstances…"

Ose whips her head toward Mephisto and barks and order. "Alright, you! Cough up one million souls. On the double! I'm going to re-evolve to the rank of Emperor!"

Mephisto's expression turns to rage. "What! No! I refussse! You had your chanccce, and I have only managed to accrue a few million sssoulsss from the Ssstormbringer War! A million of thossse are mine! The ressst are alssso mine!"

Ozzar also steps up. "The High Necromancer speaks the truth! You failed during Stormbringer, while he succeeded! No matter how arrogant you are, you don't have the right to demand souls from the River Styx! Only Bael or the Hidden Emperors can grant you that authority!"

Indeed, despite materially only ever possessing the power of a Duke, as the legendary Balrog and one of the most well-liked demons in history, Bael has always held claim to the right to divvy out souls from the River Styx as he pleases. No other demon possessed that privilege, not even Mephisto, despite his supposed full control of Styx's waters. The only other instances of demons obtaining souls from its waters were through the formal petition process afforded to all the lower-ranks, earned through their merits, and special exceptions granted by an assemblage of the Hidden Emperors, bestowed upon those deemed fit to step into the highest ranks of demon society.

Ose scowls at Mephisto, but grits her teeth and for once doesn't immediately snap back at him.

"Tsk. Fine! You make a good point. Bael! Grant me the right to promote to Emperor. You did it once, so you can do it again!"

Mephisto pales at her words, realizing he won't have the right to refuse if Bael goes along with her ploy. Fortunately, Bael merely scoffs at her words.

"Huh? The hell're you talkin' about, lady? First you steal my body, and Little Bael, and now you want a handout? Get real. You killed Shax, and I done swept that under the bridge, but don't think you're gettin' a reward for your shoddy performance. Sheesh. The kahunas on you today."

The Duke of Mist breathes a sigh of relief, while Ose groans in exasperation.

"Bael! Don't be such a hardhead, not at a time like this! It's not my fault the Hero obtained Excalibur. It's Excalibur, dammit! I seem to recall King Arthur trounced you twice with that infernal weapon! I had no way of countering it in time. That's why Stormbringer failed!"

Bael rolls his eyes and makes a mocking lip-flapping motion with his fingers. "Blah blah. It's not my fault. Waa, waa. Just own up to it, Ose. You fucked up a whole buncha times. I took a chance promoting you to Emperor, but clearly I coulda' done better. There's no sense in handing such a large haul over to you again."

Mephisto visibly perks up. "Yesss, Bael. You have the right idea. Inssstead, I ssshould be the one-"

"Naw, not you either, bub." Bael growls. "I might be dumb as a rock, but I ain't as stupid as a boulder. I saw what you did to the little guys at the end. You were gonna kill 'em all to add to your boney-army. I won't let a selfish bastard like you take over, either. It's time I started lookin' elsewhere for the next leader of the Seven Hells. It'd sure be great if ol' Deebs woke up soon... but that ain't likely."

Despite Bael's immediate refusal, Ose doesn't relent. "Listen to me, Bael. I understand you're mad about Shax. What I did was wrong-"

"Just Shax?" Bael interrupts. "And what about Satan too, huh? Yeah, you knew what your momma was up to, but you didn't tell anyone! Cripes, like mother, like daughter. Ol' Triple-Tits Lucy really raised the shittiest, most ungrateful little brat, didn't she?"

Ose presses on. "...And so, I have made many errors. I'm not perfect, but I'm still smarter than the other demons. Not even Fenrir is capable of manipulating human technology like me. With the Wordsmith now empowered by Excalibur, aren't I our best shot at defeating him? I alone possess the knowledge and know-how necessary to empower our people's future! You know that!"

Bael frowns. "Doesn't matter. But I'll tell you what. You want what you lost? Then earn it back! The Hidden Emperors are all gettin' together. You go there and lay out a plan that'll make us beat the Hero. I owe that punk for what he's done. I gave him a chance to cool down, but instead, he blasted all my friends to dust! If you can give us a shot at killin' him, then I'm down to try it."

Before Ose can reply, Bael raises a finger. "But hey! None of your usual bullshit, Ose. I mean it! No tryin' to capture him alive and steal his power, or any of that other crap. Just get in, blast the little runt, and get out. Your greed has already fucked us once. I ain't takin' it up the butt twice!"

After a momentary pause, Bael adds. "Though, now that I think about it, I am in your body now. Say, did you ever take it up the butt, Ose? Just askin'."

"That's none of your business!" Ose snaps. "For Devil's sake, Bael!"

"Sheesh, learn to take a joke, will ya?" Bael chuckles. "But seriously. Get a plan going quick. No bullshit."

Ose rolls her eyes. "Fine. I suppose it's better than nothing, and I did make a few critical miscalculations during Stormbringer. I need to redeem myself."

Watching from the sidelines, Zamiel claps his hands. "Great! Now that we've got that mess all sorted out, are we done here, or what? I'd like to stretch this new body out and see what it can do."

Bael nods. "Same, pal! I guess you and me are in the same boat, stuck in weird, ugly bodies. But oh well! Shit happens."

"My body is not ugly," Ose growls. "Seriously, Bael. Are you trying to piss me off?"

The Duke of Pain swings his legs over the side of the altar and starts to stand up. "Yup. It's a lot of fun. That's why I do- oh shit!"

Not used to the skinny, twig-like body of Ose, Bael echoes his fellow body-swapper by losing control of his movements and tripping awkwardly over his feet. The Duke of Pain crashes face-first against the marble floor, then bellows painfully.

"Aaaarghh!! Oh, devils! Aaaah! I broke my legs! Oh, fuck-fuck-fuck! The pain, the agony! It hurts so bad! Uwaaaa!"

Mephisto, Ozzar, Ose, and Zamiel all widen their eyes in disbelief as the Duke of Pain curls up into the fetal position and sobs profusely.

"Boo-hoo-hoo! Oh, geez, oh brood-mommy! This boo-boo hurts real bad, oh it's terrible! My poor legs, so weak, so fragile! I broke 'em for good, aaaahh!"

Confused beyond belief, Ose trots over to Bael's side, only to spot two tiny red marks on his knees.

"Imbecile! You barely even bruised the skin! Stop blubbering like a baby and pick yourself up! I can't stand the sight of you making a mockery of my beautiful figure!"

Bael continues to sob, oblivious to her words. "Someone kiss the boo-boo! Kiss it, please! Make this terrible pain go away!"

A dark cloud descends over the other demons. Ozzar glances at his Master.

"Is Bael going to be okay?"

Mephisto groans.

"He isss jussst an idiot. You get usssed to it."

Part 300: First Hell's Return

The doors to the Hidden Emperor's meeting hall fly open, allowing 'Bael' to stride in first, followed by 'Ose.' As Bael enters, Emperor Gorn rises to his feet in surprise.

"Emperor Ose! Duke Bael!"

Ose, now inside of Bael's body, reveals a self-confident smirk. "Hello. Did anyone miss me?"

Some of the guests immediately detect a slight difference in the cadence of 'Bael's' voice. Given the clear and obvious signs of necromancy on the First Duke's body, they momentarily chalk up the discrepancies to his potentially altered vocal cords. After all, not all parts of an undead person's body retain their previous range of motion.

That is, until 'Bael' continues walking forward without announcing Ose's presence behind him.

"Oh, devils. Look at all of the prim and proper bedfellows sitting around, discussing how they might carve up the First Hell and divide the pie amongst themselves. I don't have to hear a word you've spoken to know exactly what sorts of things you lot might discuss. You're more predictable than the idiot whose body I've come to infest."

Ose's words instantly startle everyone in the room, including Benjamin Brown himself. The human stares with wide-eyed fascination at the figure of the First Duke, disbelief in his eyes.

"...Bael? No. You're not Bael. That manner of speaking. Could you be...?"

"Ose. Yes, you catch on fast." Ose says without missing a beat. "Mephisto performed a remarkable experiment and placed the soul of the smartest demon inside the most powerful body in all the Seven Hells. Truly, his genius knows no limits."

Gorn's eyes shift from Ose to her former body standing behind her, a frumpy frown on its face.

"Err... then... the soul animated inside Emperor Ose's body must be... Bael's?"

Bael raises his hand sheepishly and waves. "Uh. Sup, guys. I'm a girl now. Life comes at ya fast."

After the two of them have introduced themselves, another pair of figures walk into the room from outside. This time, several seated Emperors stand up in alarm as they recognize the distinctive mana signature of an Emperor-level monster, as well as Mephisto.

"That crazy bastard!" Emperor Fae shouts, a huge smile stretching across her face. "Hahaha! Mephisto did it! He reanimated King Kar to be his undying servant! This meeting is about to get mighty interesting, now! Bahaha!"

However, Kar also reveals a distinct change in his persona when he speaks.

"Wrong. I'm not Kar. I'm Zamiel. I just have to live inside this stupid lizard's skin cuz' the boss lost my original body."

Emperor Gorn, unlike many of his fellow demons, remains seated. He gazes at the newcomers with a mixture of fascination and worry. He gazes past the three mightiest newcomers to the comparatively diminutive Duke trailing behind them.

Hmm? Duke Mephisto has not advanced himself to the rank of Emperor. I expected he would do so before coming here, as a show of authority. Why would he not evolve himself before we could state our disapproval? Perhaps he has some other plans... such as extending an olive branch of goodwill for us to hang from. No doubt, Mephisto intends to see which of us will speak out against him first before he dramatically evolves right before us. He's craftier than I thought.

Hardly have those thoughts passed through Gorn's mind before Yardrat vocalizes almost exactly the same thought.

"Duke of Mist! What a pleasant surprise. I see that you have succeeded in solidifying your base of power. You aren't even an Emperor yet, but you already personally wield the might of two Emperors and a Duke. Truly, your machinations startle this humble Emperor's soul."

Everyone waits for Mephisto to raise his voice and boast about his 'impressive accomplishments,' but he remains silent, bowing his head slightly, as if ashamed. Before anyone can reconcile this odd behavior, Ose suddenly bursts into laughter.

"Hahaha! Oh, yes. Mephisto's 'loyal servant,' you've got me! I am nothing more than this High Necromancer's weak-willed slave. Hahaha! WRONG! You imbeciles! My soul was much too powerful for that dull-witted buffoon to control, and so I have retained control of my mental faculties! Not only myself, but Bael, too! Mephisto does not control either of us in the slightest!"

Ose violently slaps her chest, while her expression doesn't shift even in the slightest from the impact. A powerful shockwave radiates outward, nudging all the seated guests in the room a little away from her and making them realize the true horror of the mightiest and smartest demons fused into one body can accomplish.

Emperor Fenrir's face pales visibly. "What? Mephisto does not control you? But how can that be? Necromancers should always..."

She pauses momentarily, while a series of thoughts run through her head. Then, she turns her head toward the Duke of Mist.

"You fool! You should have made yourself an Emperor before attempting to take over Ose and Bael's souls! Your soul was too weak to control theirs!"

Emperor Fenrir's grand ambitions, her plans to set up the pawn known as Mephisto on the seat of the Second Emperor while elevating herself to the position of Third instantly crumbles before her eyes. With Mephisto losing what should have been one of the mightiest personal power bases in the Seven Hells, her previous performance of a calm, collected, and well-in-charge Emperor reveals dozens of cracks to those observing her.

"Haha. How unfortunate." Gorn chuckles, as a broad smile crosses his face. "Sometimes, even the best laid plans can fall apart due to a subordinate's incompetence. Isn't that right, Fenrir?"

Some of the slower-witted guests finally realize, thanks to Fenrir and Gorn's words, just what her true plans were. They remain silent, listening to the exchange with looks of surprises on their face.

Ose rolls her eyes. "You always think you're smarter than you actually are, Fenrir. Don't even try to compare yourself to me."

She strides forward and arrives at the head of the table. Then, she turns her head toward Benjamin Brown.

"Move."

The human leader pauses for only a split-second before nodding his head, standing up, and gesturing to his daughter.

"Come, Lily. We must make room for Ose and Bael."

Despite his original intention to abdicate his seat to Mephisto when the Duke of Mist arrived, Benjamin immediately realizes that the necromancer has lost any chance of controlling the First Hell. Once again, his position has reverted to that of a mid-weight general, rather than a full-on commanding officer.

Lily nods, then stands up. "Yes, daddy."

After they vacate their chairs, Benjamin leads Lily around the table to where the Hells of Isolation and Lust sit. He takes a seat beside Bree and Fae, at the mid-section, with several seats between himself and Yardrat.

Fae smirks. "You got bitch-slapped, fleshie. Doesn't that just boil your blood?"

"I was only ever guiding the meeting in the First Hell's stead," Benjamin says, without a trace of regret on his face. "I never claimed to be a leader."

"Hmph. You're no fun."

Fae returns her gaze to the head of the table, where Ose takes her seat. Bael waddles over and plops down on her right-hand side, beside Emperor Fenrir.

He grins cheekily at the Emperor of the Night. "Hey. What's up, toots? You're lookin' perky today. And so am I! Finally got myself a big pair of honkers!"

Despite her poor mood and the realization that several of her ambitions have shattered, Fenrir can't help but send Bael a good-natured smile. "I suppose I could be worse, Duke of Pain. Or should I call you an Emperor? If you have taken up residence inside Ose's body, and if your aura is that of a Demon Emperor, then I suppose Hell's mightiest warrior must have finally taken up his rightful place among the rest of us."

Gorn raises an eyebrow. "Yes. I, too, wonder about that. And Ose, while your soul radiates the power of an Emperor, the rest of your aura is clearly only that of a Demon Duke. Hehe. Not to call your… qualifications into question… but it does seem a bit odd for a Duke to lead this meeting."

Despite Ose possessing Bael's body, and despite the fat of his glob-like stomach, somehow, her posture reveals a sort of elegance and grace nobody has ever seen from the Duke of Pain. She folds her hands together and rests them on the table, while leaning forward and exposing a toothy smile.

"Yes, Gorn. I think you do make a good point. I, a mere Duke, dare to lead this council. I suppose you should call into question my capabilities."

Yardrat frowns.

Ose agreed with Emperor Gorn? To what end?

Ose continues to smile, baring her teeth in an oddly demure manner. However, as the seconds pass, and her expression doesn't change, the other Emperors begin to feel a bit unsettled.

The Duke of Cuddles, Jahn, shifts in his seat. "Ose? Have you anything to add?"

Ose flicks her eyes to the Duke seated on her left.

"I was just mulling over a few random thoughts in my mind. Mostly, I was thinking about what a bunch of gossiping failures the group seated here today are. Rather than focusing on immediately exterminating the threat of the Hero, all of you would rather shuffle around pieces on a chessboard, playing the same old games you always have. Surely, before I came here, you lot were entertaining thoughts of giving the title of Second Emperor to whoever killed the Hero. No doubt, someone must have floated the idea to give the position to whoever killed Belial. Have I guessed correctly?"

Jahn's incubus tail flicks around behind himself, weaving through a small hole in the back of his chair. Its movements reveal the mild annoyance in his heart.

"Yes. We did. And your point?"

Ose's smile grows more wry. She slowly lowers her head and chuckles.

"So predictable, every last one of you. You know, I underestimated that boy, and I paid the ultimate price. Now, our enemy wields the greatest weapon demonkind has always feared. From the first time Camael's revealed Excalibur's power during the War in Heaven, to the mass extinction event caused when King Arthur slew seventeen Emperors from three separate Hells with a single stroke, we have never known any emotion but absolute terror in the face of Excalibur."

Ose's smile disappears.

"And yet right now, all of you are so calm, so collected, and so dignified! Have you grown soft? Have your brains turned to mush?! We are all in imminent peril, yet you have not immediately set aside your differences to strike down that human!"

Gorn raises his palm. "Calm down, Ose. We know the power Excalibur wields. That is why we must carefully decide on a course of action-"

"There is NO time for inaction!" Ose snaps. "You fool! Jason Hiro stole Excalibur from the Overlords. The OVERLORDS! Do you realize what that means?! Even if he doesn't kill us all, the Overlords might! The moment they discover the Divine Blade has gone missing, they will set upon the human worlds and annihilate all of human life. Then, they will storm the Labyrinth and execute every human on the spot! What will that mean for us? It will result in our loss of the souls which empower us! It will result in our total stagnation, and thus, our ultimate decline!"

Ose slaps her hand against the table. "Even if the Overlords don't kill us, according to the old treaty, they have every right to wipe out our soul supply if a human Hero emerges capable of threatening their rule! And with the soul supply gone, we will never again amount to anything in their eyes! Our situation is so dire that you cannot possibly fathom it, and yet still you lounge around, debating who will obtain this scrap of power or that!"

Yardrat speaks up. "But the First Emperor, surely he will not sit idly-"

"The First Emperor is neither omniscient nor omnipotent!" Ose replies, interrupting him mid-sentence. "He poses a grave threat to the Overlords, especially while they battle against the Plague, but if this Hero continues to gain power, the Overlords will have all the justification needed to cripple us forever! That is the fate we fear most! You cannot even begin to fathom the terrifying weapons those aliens possess!"

Ose steadies her breathing. Her expression becomes eerily calm as she returns to a posture of confidence.

"All of you only possess only the barest, most faint memories of the Overlords. They left enough behind to give you vague sensations of their capabilities. Diablo and I are not the same. I have worked with the Overlords on many occasions in my unique capacity as a technology-capable demoness. I have seen the horrifying might they wield. I know better than to second-guess whether they possesses the ability to annihilate us. Even with their war-time capabilities stretched thin, we are not their match. A toothless tiger is still more than capable of shredding you with its claws."

Emperor Fenrir slowly taps her fingers on the table. "You mentioned something about a 'plague.' What did you mean?"

For a few moments, Ose falls silent. She pauses, as if debating how to answer Fenrir's question, before ultimately shaking her head.

"I cannot say. I am not allowed to leak information of such a sensitive nature to anyone, least of all any of you. All I can say is that the foe our enemy faces is one so terrifying that, were we to face them, we would perish within a day."

"The threat is that significant?" Gorn asks, unsatisfied with Ose's explanation. "So, you mean to say the Overlords are not fighting a civil war within their own ranks. Could we not ally with their enemy-"

"NO!" Ose barks. "Open your ears, dullard! Look into my eyes! Do I sound as if I am speaking of an enemy that would befriend us? It would destroy us! We should be glad we have experienced 100,000 years of stability! Were it not for the Overlords, we may have already disappeared without knowing what struck us."

Ose pauses to add emphasis to her next statement.

"And besides... the Overlords are losing the war."

"What?! Losing?" Benjamin Brown replies, alarm in his voice. "Is the situation truly that dire?"

"It is." Ose answers, chilling the crowd. "If we somehow were to miraculously defeat the Overlords, we would instead be the ones fighting their war. Our military capabilities pale by several orders of magnitude compared to theirs. We have no space fleets to speak of. Even with my abilities, constructing enough starships for us to stand a chance would require centuries, time which we do not have."

"If the situation is as dire as you say," Yardrat interjects, "then how can we hold even the slightest hope? Are we not doomed no matter what we do?"

A lull appears in the conversation. Ose becomes uncharacteristically silent, while she continues to debate what she can and cannot say.

"I understand that many of you laughed at me for Stormbringer's failure. All my efforts, gone to waste. In every meaning of the world, that operation failed completely and utterly with no upsides. It was... a tragedy. But the tragedy you know of is only the tip of the iceberg."

She continues. "I had to try... to capture the Wordsmith. It is our only chance. The Wordsmith's power is something which most certainly will reshape the balance of the war. The only question is whether demonkind would lose or win from this scenario."

Ose sighs. "Shortly before Stormbringer, Jason Hiro came to me in private. He sought a meeting with me, intending to strike up a peace treaty between demonkind and humanity. In exchange, he promised to grant us the ability to evolve our ranks without using the power of souls."

The First and Second Ancient orcs both stiffen in surprise. Huul voices her shock. "What?! To evolve without souls? Is such a feat even possible?"

Ose slowly nods. "If I had to wager a guess, I would say that it might be, but only through the Wordsmith's magic."

"We would become reliant on the Hero." Yardrat states, seeing the problem immediately. "But, considering the threat our galaxy faces, this... 'plague.' Does that not seem a worthy trade?"

"Under such a treaty, we would become subservient to the Hero." Gorn says. "Hmph. Prior to Stormbringer, the Hero was still a weak boy living a cushy life on Tarus II. Ose must have believed she could get a better deal for our people, and especially herself, if she managed to capture and enslave the Hero herself. I must say, in her shoes, I'd have done the same."

Emperor Fenrir's expression, unlike the rest, appears relatively calm.

"Perhaps. But now we've damned ourselves. Not only have we killed the Hero's daughter and made him our mortal enemy, but he has also obtained the most frightening weapon known to our people. Previously, we only faced extinction from this mysterious 'plague,' as well as a possible attempt on our species by the Overlords. Now we also face the wrath of a young hero led by King Arthur."

"I acted too greedily." Ose replies, her voice low. "If we were to somehow obtain the Hero's power, we could still succeed in my original plan. Obtaining the ability to empower any demon without souls would completely change the dynamic of our war. Forget the Overlords. I would not even fear their enemy if that were to happen. Demon Emperors are exceedingly powerful. Our biggest issue is that there are too few of you. Even a hundred Emperors would not pose much of a threat to the Overlords. But a thousand? A hundred thousand? Perhaps even a million? They would tremble if our shadow so much as grazed them."

"And consider the other possibility," Ose adds. "What if, through our experimentation, we discovered a method to break through our limiter? What if we could step into a realm beyond Demon Emperor?"

"Yes. That possibility does sound truly wonderful," Yardrat replies, smacking his lips derisively. "Oh, but what a coincidence, you intended to monopolize the Hero's power all to yourself. And Emperor Yama. We should be so fortunate if a few meager drops trickled down to the rest of the Seven Hells."

Ose chuckles wryly. "Hehe. Yes. I did intend to take all the power for myself, originally. You're not wrong. What can I say in my defense, but I am still a demon, in the end. Naturally, the tides have changed. We cannot afford to play nice with the Hero. We must kill him at once, before he reaches a power beyond our abilities to control... or one which will alert the Overlords to his presence."

Gorn cocks his head. "I do not understand, Ose. If the Hero is our only hope of defeating the Overlords and the Plague, then why would we even consider killing him? Surely, we should still make every attempt to capture him alive."

Ose gestures behind herself, to Mephisto, who continues to stand silently and watch the proceedings like a street beggar who has lost everything.

"We can still use the power of Wordsmithing even if Jason Hiro is dead. Previously, I would not have liked to give Mephisto such authority, but what choice do we have, now? We have to slay both Wordsmiths and use their powers through necromancy. We must move swiftly, without alerting the Overlords."

She pauses.

"...But, in fact, there is something I have neglected to mention. It is also possible the Overlords know of Jason Hiro's existence, or will know, soon. I received a communication from a highly-ranked Overlord, someone who makes even me feel fear. She knows that we have lost control of the Core. I tried to handwave away the issues with talk of a minor human insurrection, but knowing this particular individual's deductive capabilities, she will bring an inspection team... and soon. I must intercept her arrival and ensure I deliver a narrative beneficial to our people."

"If the Overlords discover Jason Hiro's existence, let alone what his powers entail," Yardrat says, "what exactly will their response be, Ose? You know them better than the rest of us."

Ose lightly raps her fingers against the table.

"There are a few possibilities. Total annihilation of humanity is only one of them. Given their fear of Heroes, it is the most likely eventuality. However, when we consider just how poorly their war is going..."

She shakes her head.

"It is also possible, though not probable, that they will consider a treaty or enslavement of the Hero. They, too, may see what I see in his potential might wielded for their benefit. However, capturing or enslaving him will require the Founders to divert resources they simply don't have. Annihilation, by contrast, would be far simpler."

"If the Overlords obtain the Hero's power, then will we not simply cease to be any sort of threat?" Yardrat asks.

"Naturally," Gorn says, answering Yardrat's question. "No matter how you look at it, only Jason Hiro possesses the power to change this war and save the whole galaxy. Well, not just him, I suppose. There is also his clone..."

For a brief moment, all of the Emperors fall silent.

Bael, of all people, is the first to speak up.

"Err. I mean. Don't it just seem like y'all should give away one of the Wordshits to the Overdorks? Like, if they don't know his clone exists, we could be all secret-like and stash the bugger away for ourselves."

Ose turns to Bael and blinks. "That... that is a surprisingly good idea, Bael. But I thought you wanted us to kill the Wordsmith. Not capture him."

Bael shrugs. "I didn't know the 'sitch' was this complicated. All this yammerin' has my ears ringin'. Look, if these Motherlords find out about the Hero, then they're gonna wanna take him. But if they don't know we got one, we can be all sneaky and use that other kid ourselves. Seems pretty simple ta' me. Even Hell's biggest dummy can figure that much out."

Ose narrows her eyes. "Yes... Hell's biggest dummy, indeed."

After eying the Duke of Pain for a moment, she looks away.

"Well. Bael has brought up a decent backup option I hadn't considered. Never have two Heroes existed in tandem. Should the Overlords learn of the Hero's existence, we will have more possible avenues worth pursuing. In fact, now that he mentions it, we might even consider-"

Suddenly, right in the middle of Ose's speech, a deep rumble rattles the underground chamber, as if a bomb had detonated somewhere nearby. Ose pauses mid-sentence to flick her eyes around the room.

"What's going on?"

Every Emperor and Duke quickly rises to their feet. They go on the alert, not sure what just happened.

"Is it the Overlords?!" Lily asks, her voice tightening up in fright.

"I don't think so," Ose says. "But for a brief instant, I thought I detected Holy-"

BOOOOM!!

The roof of the chamber suddenly rips away, yanked upward into the sky. A violent shockwave blasts downward and flattens all the weakest demons, monsters, and humans present. Even Benjamin Brown barely manages to stabilize himself against the table, while his daughter's head bangs against it and instantly knocks her unconscious.

"HAHAHA!" Cackles a masculine voice from above. "Hello, little bloodskins! It seems I have located thy wretched hiding place!"

Every Emperor and Duke raises their eyes skyward, where they spot a single armored demon hovering in midair, the unmistakable power of a Demon Duke radiating from his body.

"Barbatos! No, wait, it's Uriel!" Yardrat shouts. "It's the Archangel! How did she get here without alerting us?!"

Uriel raises her hands overhead, conjuring a massive orb of holy energy.

"HAHAHA! Feel free to answer that question in the Great Beyond, after I damn thee to OBLIVION!!"

Part 301: Archangel's Rampage

The darkness of night covers one of Hell Harbor's miniature continents, the one upon which the Hidden Emperors have decided to gather for their meeting. However, amidst the darkness, a single radiant light shines like a star, illuminating the area around it for several miles.

Uriel, the Archangel of Retribution, cackles evilly as she holds a truck-sized ball of holy energy above her head.

"OBLIVION!!"

She hurls the sphere straight down, directly toward the center of the gathered Emperors and Dukes.

Immediately, every combat-capable warrior springs into action. The weakest attendants dive to the deck, seeking to defend themselves from the demon-damning light of divinity. Ose, possessing Bael's all-but-invincible body, jumps directly toward the light, experiencing a split-second of glee as she realizes that the once-agonizing radiance no longer causes her anything more than mild discomfort.

At the same time, Emperor Yardrat sweeps his hands to his sides, casting a wide-area temporal spell that grabs more than two dozen of the weakest entities in the area, including several dukes and both of the humans, and teleports them multiple miles away to safety.

Wolfram, the Emperor of Rending, and Lupus, the Emperor of Scales, also jump forward to meet the divine light. As werewolves, modified demons with physiology altered by the Dark Hero Dracula, they suffer far less damage from the power of creation compared to other demons.

The Ancient Orcs, Maltus and Huul, mirror the others by stepping up to battle the Archangel. As monsters, they possess no inherent weaknesses to demonkind's greatest threat. Both orcs summon the power of their innate battle-rage to roar at the sky, sending raw mana upward to meet Uriel's death-ball as it rushes toward them.

Gorn, unlike all the others, takes a step back. Not out of fear, but because in this opening moment, he cannot offer much assistance. However, even in only the span of mere seconds, his mind churns at a hundred miles an hour.

Uriel's energy does not seem to have changed much since the last time I saw her. What a fool! Ose alone managed to cripple and subdue her the last time they fought. How can she be so stupid as to attack a gathering of demonkind's mightiest forces? I had better put an end to her threat myself, once and for all! That alone will grant me a sizable amount of prestige in the eyes of the other Emperors.

Uriel's bomb explodes when it collides against the power of both Ancient Orcs. Their shockwave shield proves only slightly inferior to Uriel's attack, but it still manages to shove away a sizable portion of the holy-bomb's destructive energy. Even so, at least twenty percent of the divine light shreds through the improvised and hastily-executed shield, phasing into the bodies of all the demons present and making them scream in pain.

Yardrat's skin crackles like a firecracker, acting as if someone had thrown boiling oil directly onto him. "Aaaargh!"

Emperor Fenrir shrieks in pain. She staggers backward, shielding her eyes from the brilliant sun-like radiance. "Accursed Archangel!"

Of the Hell of Lust's members, only one remains; Jahn, the Duke of Cuddles. As the most adept member of his Hell at combat, aside from Belial herself, he alone can put up something of a fight against an Archangel. Even so, he too drops to his knees and cries out in pain as Uriel's divinity scorches him at the cellular level.

The instant the holy bomb's radiance drops, the previously charging orcs, werewolves, and mighty demons pounce at Uriel, ready to rip her apart.

"You stupid, arrogant bitch!" Lupus roars, as she rears her werewolf claws back. "You've damned yourself to a bloody death by coming here!"

She and Wolfram tear at the Archangel the instant they come within range, only for their claws to crash against an almost invisible barrier of holy energy. Still, they shatter it with a single strike and follow up with a second, only for Uriel to teleport away through Barbatos's portal magic.

She instantly reappears just a few feet away from Ose.

"I had better take care of the Duke of Pain first!" Uriel laughs.

Mistaking Ose for Bael, Uriel conjures a portal and punts Ose through it before she can react. Then, the Archangel seals it shut.

Uriel grins to herself with glee.

I've sent the Duke of Pain to the farthest side of this accursed world, deep beneath its seas. Even Yardrat will need some time to locate and bring him back. With him out of the way, this next part shall be far easier.

Yardrat, still suffering from holy energy burns, grits his teeth and transmits a message though a telepathic link that he and every other demon in the Hell of Punishment share with their leader.

[My liege, Emperor Auger! Archangel Uriel has appeared! Send reinforcements to my location!]

An instant later, Yardrat receives only a few curt words from his master in return.

[You will be enough. Remind the others what a fraction of our Hell's power looks like.]

Suddenly, a massive amount of demonic energy surges into Yardrat's body. The Emperor of the Void gasps in surprise. A faint look of greedy delight enters his eyes, while a maniacal grin flashes across his face.

[I will not disappoint you, my liege!]

Uriel begins moving at remarkably fast speeds. She conjures her four constructs and spreads them out to attack multiple targets at once. The gravitic cube forces a few of the weakest Emperors to their knees, but only for a few moments. Fenrir quickly pulls herself up while glaring hate-filled daggers at the Archangel.

"Wicked wench. You scarred my face."

The artillery orb shoots oscillating blasts of fire, water, air, and earth in all directions, knocking the orcs and werewolves back a little, but barely slowing them down for the most part.

The female angelic construct shoots holy energy-filled arrows at various targets while also summoning magical barriers. The male construct raises its sword and shield, then charges at Emperor Gorn to engage him directly.

Gorn sees the construct charging him and laughs. "Trying to tickle me, Uriel? You'll have to do better than that."

While Uriel and her constructs engage multiple targets, Yardrat rushes toward the Archangel, flickering in and out of reality. His existence momentarily becomes intangible, vaguely resembling Mephisto's mist-form. Multiple blasts of holy energy pass through his body, while he conjures two spears of bone out of nothing and grips them with both hands.

Boom!

Yardrat and Uriel crash against each other like the tides against a beach. She summons two spears of light and battles against him in melee combat, effortlessly parrying his comparatively sloppy strikes. In the moments where one of her constructs gets crushed by one of the other Emperors, she traces a rapid pattern with the tip of one spear to resummon it while deflecting Yardrat's follow-up attacks with the other.

"What's the matter?" Uriel taunts Yardrat. "Is Auger too busy to visit me in person? Hath thou been designated his middling stand-in?"

"Speak not ill of my liege, you ancient fossil!" Yardrat roars. His body suddenly grows a full foot in size, while he gains an equivalent amount of muscle. His bone-spears transform into a single metallic greathammer, which he uses by brutally smashing it against Uriel's armor and knocking her backward, directly into the path of Lupus and Wolfram.

The two werewolves grab Uriel's right and left arm, catching her off-guard and pinning her in place. Before she can pull away, Yardrat's hammer turns into a longsword and the Emperor of the Void rushes toward her.

"Die!"

Yardrat flickers through reality, displacing time itself for an instant and reappearing directly in front of the Archangel. He brutally impales her stomach, but instead, his attack passes through her body like air.

Before he or either orc can figure out what just happened, Uriel's figure fades away as if it had never been there.

THUNK!

A brutal punch crashes into the back of Yardrat's head, knocking him for a loop and sending him flying into Huul's chest. The Second Ancient grunts as he crashes into her and both go flying. Only the First Ancient, Maltus, remains standing. For a brief moment, surprise flashes through his eyes.

What just happened? How could Uriel vanish from my grasp without casting a spatial spell? That technique somehow seemed... illusory.

Fenrir keeps away from the main battle. She stays beside Bael and Fae, summoning a layer of blackened energy to engulf her body. Her eyes turn as black as the night, while black flames burst into existence on her hands, a ethereal black wings sprout from her back.

"Bael, Fae. I will attack the Archangel's soul. You will cover me."

The Duke of Pain, now something of a pseudo-Emperor, scratches his head. "Huh? Wait, hold up, toots. I can't help you! I don't got my big strong body anymore. I'm stuck in Ose's flimsy little... thing."

"Just use her lightning abilities or something," Fenrir says, hesitating for a moment. "Wait. Don't tell me. You're too dumb to figure them out."

Bael nods. "Yup. How the hell am I 'sposed to shoot zappy-zaps? I ain't got no idea."

"Then what can you do?" Fenrir replies with a question of her own. "Make it quick! Something about the Archangel seems different from the last time she appeared."

As Uriel engages with ten simultaneous opponents, Bael simply shrugs.

"Dunno. Nothing, I guess? I'm kinda useless right now. I'll just sit this one out. You guys can handle one little flappy bird."

To Fenrir's shock, Bael plops into the demonstone chair and leans back, lounging around while the other Emperors fight Uriel with everything they have.

"Bael!" Fenrir shouts.

"Seriously. I ain't got nothin' ta' offer," Bael says, waving his hand nonchalantly. "Kinda sucks, too. I can't even feel the Balrog in me no more. It's fine though, you guys've got this."

Fenrir hesitates for a few seconds before sighing.

That makes sense. Bael lost his durable body and he can't use Ose's powers. She received all of the gains in their trade, while he got nothing. He deserves better.

"Fine!" Fenrir says. "But if that's the case, then you should leave. You're in danger, here."

"Meh," Bael replies. "If I die, I die. Already done happened once, wasn't that bad. Felt like I got a good night's sleep. Anyway, good luck with the pigeon! I'm gonna catch some shuteye."

Fenrir turns to Fae, the Emperor of Terror. "And you?"

Fae shakes her head. "Don't look at me. My powers ain't no good for fighting a bloody Archangel! I kill armies, not elites. I'm gonna head out and leave the rest of you to deal with the ugly chicken."

While Fae runs away to save herself, Bael leans back in his chair and closes his eyes, leaving Fenrir to her own devices. She gives up and decides to charge toward Uriel, summoning the mana within herself to prepare a beam of dark soul energy.

"Have a taste of your worst trauma, Archangel!"

Two invisible lasers congeal inside Fenrir's soul and fire from her eyes. They race toward Uriel, locking onto her mana signature like a pair of ravenous sharks.

Meanwhile, Emperor Gorn crushes Uriel's masculine construct for the fifth time, doing so with the utmost ease.

Alright. It seems I should try 'Vermilion' for this battle. It always leaves quite the impact on those who witness it.

Gorn motions with his finger. He conjures a miniature portal in front of himself, one the color of blood-red, demonic miasma. A red and yellow theater-style mask plops out of it and lands in his hands. It appears surprisingly artistic, with a beak-like nose indentation, two elaborate 'wings' sticking out where the mask meets the ears, and its overall design resembling a fiery bird.

I still remember the day I received the inspiration for this mask, Gorn thinks, as he lifts his hand to pull at his face. It was the same day I saw an image of the Phoenix emblazoned upon a human church.

Gorn pulls away his 'face', which turns out to be a mask itself. Immediately, a cascade of fiery red and black flames explode around himself, engulfing him in an appearance-shrouding haze for several seconds. As Gorn removes his mask, he places the other one,

Vermilion, onto his face, igniting a second flash of brilliant fiery light which engulfs him a second time.

Emperor Gorn's muscles shift and pop. His original mask vanishes into a miniature portal, and his body changes in size to a small, fiery bird the same size as Gorn's original self. His arms turn to wings, while his legs become short, stubby claws. Fire burns across his figure without harming him, and a savage light appears in his eyes.

"Skree! Behold, the power of the Vermilion Bird!"

Gorn spreads his wings, sending a fiery shockwave in all directions, one which causes a few of the other Emperors not locked in combat to widen their eyes in surprise.

"Gorn's Vermilion Face! It feels a bit more powerful than the last time I saw it!"

"I haven't seen that face in at least fifty thousand years!"

Gorn launches himself toward Uriel at the same time as Fenrir. Fenrir's attack strikes the Archangel first, immediately causing Uriel's back to tighten up as the Emperor of Night's soul-piercing glare blasts Uriel's soul.

Horrific visions appear in Uriel's mind. For a moment, every awful trauma she's ever experienced flashes before her eyes. She remembers the loss of all her family members, the moment when Barbatos bit down and chewed off her face, the loss of agency she suffered when that wretched bloodskin consumed her soul.

As these terrible traumas ravage her mind, her combat capability plunges downward. She momentarily freezes up, allowing Wolfram to rake his claws across her chest. He tears away a massive chunk of flesh and armor, spraying Uriel's blood in a wide arc, while Lupus follows up with a spine-shattering kick to the Archangel's back. The two of them end up flinging Uriel in Gorn's direction, who races toward her with flames in his wake.

"Burn, she-angel!"

Gorn becomes intangible the moment he is about to strike Uriel. He phases through her body, allowing the flames behind him to travel past her defenses and scorch her insides.

Uriel shrieks in agony. "Eeeyaaah!!"

All at once, the attacks she so easily defended just moments earlier come whaling on her from all directions like an avalanche. Yardrat's mighty warhammer smashes her helmet and nearly batters her unconscious. That strike sends Uriel flying toward the Duke of Cuddles, who rears back for a mighty kick to blast her back into the sky. Jahn strikes Uriel with deadly precision, sending her hurtling toward both Ancient Orcs. Maltus and Huul motion with their hands to summon two pairs of one handed, enchanted war-axes. They each chop down and cut into Uriel's chest, shattering the majority of her ribs and piercing multiple vital organs.

In just ten short seconds, Uriel receives a beatdown so violent that she becomes utterly unable to fight back. The two Ancient Orcs send her flying to the meeting room below, where she crashes into and obliterates the table, crumbling the demonstone into fine powder.

For a brief moment, the Emperors pause to look at Uriel's body.

"Bird-brained wench." Maltus says. "Ose alone defeated Uriel last time. Coming to fight the majority of Hell's elites was nothing more than a suicide mission. Perhaps her desire to reunite with her fallen brethren has finally broken her sanity."

"Don't underestimate her!" Fenrir shouts. "Keep attacking! Destroy every last inch of that Archangel! Leave nothing to chance!"

"But what about Barbatos?" Jahn asks. "And Artorias?"

"Losing a pair of Dukes is hardly a sacrifice compared to eliminating Hell's second most dangerous foe," Fenrir replies. She races toward Uriel and raises both of her hands, spreading out her fingers to strike like a pair of vipers. "We must kill her today!"

Right as Fenrir is about to connect, Uriel wakes up. She motions with her hands and conjures a portal beneath her body. Before Fenrir's killing blow can land, Uriel falls inside the portal and closes it up behind herself.

Boom!

Fenrir strikes the ground, whiffing her last attack.

"Damn! She got away! Yardrat, find her!"

Yardrat, a demon more adept in portal and spatial manipulation than even the most elite Warper, frowns in response.

"I'm looking for her. Give me a minute."

Seconds after he speaks, a portal opens up in the sky and Barbatos's mana signature reappears, making all of the assembled Emperors lift their heads.

"That was a good warm-up." Uriel says, as she cracks her neck. The violent injuries she suffered less than ten seconds earlier no longer appear on her body, but neither do the armor plates that protected her stomach and chest. "I suppose now, 'tis time to treat this battle more seriously."

"How did you heal so quickly?!" Yardrat asks, genuinely shocked. "Since when did Uriel's healing waters restore such grievous wounds in such a short time? Even Belial can't heal wounds in so short a time!"

Uriel doesn't reply. However, beneath her helmet, a deep grin reveals itself.

Hehehe. Brothers. These bloodskins cannot possibly fathom the lengths to which we have prepared. We must obliterate their ruling class by the end of this day.

Inside her head, a pair of Archangels stand at attention, ready for anything.

Michael, the Archangel of Courage, smiles ever so slightly. "Long has it been since my blade tasted a bloodskin's marrow."

Raphael stands beside him, his gaze focused and intense. "Sister. This second phase will require a certain level of deception. Remember, in the end, we are only three. Act weak when thou art strong, and strong when thou art weak. In this way, we will teach the souls of these demons the art of humility."

Uriel keeps her voice low. "I learned my lesson a long time ago, eldest brother. Worry not. I will not fail. I cannot."

The Archangel once again conjures her four constructs. She spreads them out, sending the female construct to engage Emperor Fenrir in close-range combat, and the male to do the same for Gorn. The masculine light-form angel uses its shield to beat back Gorn's flames, and its sword to poke at him every so often, while the female relies mostly on her holy barriers to obstruct and annoy Fenrir.

"These toys serve only to annoy me!" Gorn chirps. He scorches the male construct to ash, only for another one to appear in his path. "They are useless!"

Uriel re-engages with all the other demons, orcs, and werewolves. Even when outnumbered twelve to one, she still holds her own, relying on her light-spears and her long-ranged support constructs to alter the gravity or bombard any enemies who draw too close.

Yardrat, both werewolves, and both orcs launch a five pronged attack on Uriel, striking at her from all directions. The Emperor of the Void wields Auger's mightiest abilities, allowing him to become a monster similar to a half-Balrog. He slaps aside Uriel's spears and tries to grab her throat, but she slips out of his reach like an elusive mongoose fighting a cobra.

"What are you hoping to achieve?!" Yardrat shouts, annoyed that he still hasn't managed to land a killing blow. "Did you come here only to play around, Uriel?! All you've done is play defense while we slap you around! Don't tell me this is the extent of your abilities?! You will tire, and we will prevail!"

"Believe whatever fiction thou liketh!" Uriel laughs. "My goals are beyond thy comprehension!"

Suddenly, Uriel's eyes glow white. In an instant, her movements change. Like a switch flipping, every facet of her psyche undergoes a complete alteration in their patterns.

Her two spears shatter into particles of light, leaving her completely exposed. Before the demons can take advantage of her moment of weakness, she flicks her fingers and conjures a single longsword into her hand.

"Come, bloodskins." 'Uriel' says, her tone somewhat deeper, now dripping with condescension. "I tire of these games."

In an instant, Uriel's right arm swishes around her body at a speed far too fast for any of her enemies to follow. Her eyes dart from left to right, up and down, seeing not just the movements of her enemies, but their future actions, the angles of their upcoming attacks, and even the intentions within their hearts.

BANG-BANG-BANG!

Uriel's sword crashes against the orc's enchanted axes, Yardrat's warhammer, and the claws of both werewolves, freezing their momentum for a split-second. An instant later, dozens of deep slashes slice across their bodies, causing the orcs to cry out in pain, along with Wolfram and Yardrat. Only Lupus doesn't suffer a severe injury, but a small cut does worm its way past her iron hair and dragon-like scales.

"Aaargh, shit!" The four Emperors cry in unison, as they immediately take a step back. Lupus follows an instant later. Her eyes widen as she senses a dramatic change in Uriel's fighting stance and overall demeanor.

Lupus sucks in a quick breath. Uriel doesn't specialize in one-handed blades! What just happened?!

Yardrat also narrows his eyes. That movement, that speed! I've only heard about it in the legends! Could it be? Has Uriel somehow learned to mimic the abilities of her long-dead brother, Michael?!

Uriel's gaze, more arrogant than ever, sweeps across her enemies, savoring the fear in their eyes.

"Hmph. This bunch are mere children compared to the Emperors of the past. Belial was the only demon to ever give me a good fight."

Uriel's eyes glow again, causing her posture to change. Her longsword reverts into a pair of spears, and she returns to her previous self.

"'Tis time to claim our first blood." She says, her voice alarmingly calm.

As she speaks, Fenrir struggles to kill the annoying construct that has been dogging her for a fifth time. After breaking through its holy barriers and crushing its head, she starts to move toward the Archangel of Retribution, only to scowl in anger as that same annoying pest regenerates in front of her for a sixth time.

"Bloody hell! This gnat can't hurt me at all, but it sure knows how to get in my way!"

She swipes her black-flame-covered hands at the construct once more, intending to break its shields and body just as she has several times previously. However, as Fenrir goes for the kill, a momentary lapse in her concentration, caused by the repetitive and predictable nature of fighting this useless construct, causes her to miss a small but crucial difference in its behavior.

The female construct's eyes glow.

Fenrir absentmindedly glances in Uriel's direction, confused about why the other five Emperors facing her have pulled back.

"Did something happen?" Fenrir wonders.

She continues to robotically attack the construct, but pays its weak body no mind. In the instant her concentration lapses, the construct flickers out of reality, leaving her grasping at the air.

Fenrir notices the discrepancy a moment too late. "Hm? Wait, where did-?!"

Just as that question starts to materialize in her thoughts, the construct flickers back into existence behind her.

"Hoho. The young are so easy to fool," The construct says, as it stabs its fingers into the back of Fenrir's head. They pass through her skull and tap against her very soul, causing her physical form no physical injuries.

Fenrir doesn't get a chance to react. Her body slumps over, and the light fades from her eyes.

She perishes in the blink of an eye, not giving anyone in the outside world even a second to react.

At the same time, Emperor Gorn blasts apart another annoying construct, the masculine one with its sword and shield. That construct falls apart like a wet piece of paper, yet rematerializes a moment later to once again block his path.

"Blasted fake angel!" Gorn chirps. "Skree! Stop getting in my way! Burn to ash!"

He scorches it with his demonic flames, then grimaces as it reappears yet again.

"I'll kill you a million times if I have to!" The maddened Emperor of Many Faces roars.

He lunges toward the construct, but at that moment, he notices a change in the situation above as Uriel singlehandly deflects five attacks and deals grievous blows to the Emperors arrayed before her. This shift in the battle also causes him to turn his attention away from the annoying but weak construct to the more alarming Archangel controlling it.

What was that? It looked like Uriel wielded a single sword at a level far beyond her capabilities. Her movements seemed to be at the level as the Archangel of Courage. But is that possible? Did she somehow obtain his sword skills, or did she practice to his level in secret?

In that moment of confusion, Emperor Gorn also fails to notice a change in the construct that has reappeared before him. Its eyes glow white, and it raises its head to look at him.

"The bloodskins have grown soft in their age of decadence," The construct murmurs.

Gorn flicks his gaze to the construct.

What? The false angel speaks?

As that question occurs in Gorn's mind, a strange sensation swells within his body. The Emperor of Many Faces feels a slight electrical jolt in his brain. A half-second later, his vision turns foggy, and a blossoming sensation of emptiness spreads across his neck.

What's... happening... everything suddenly feels so... cold.

He slowly closes his eyes. His body sways for a moment, then loses its footing.

Plop.

Emperor Gorn slumps to the ground. His head rolls off his shoulders and bounces away, and a spurt of blood cascades from his severed neck.

Raphael, the Archangel of Wisdom, and Michael, the Archangel of Courage, succeed in fooling their enemies. They take out two of the mightiest Emperors in just five short seconds, eliminating Uriel's greatest threats.

The other Emperors sense the abrupt disappearance of two demonic mana signatures. They whirl around and gasp in wide-eyed shock as they see the leaders of two separate Hidden Hells laying lifelessly on the ground.

"Emperor Gorn!" The two Ancients cry out.

"Emperor Fenrir!" Both werewolves exclaim in unison.

Raphael and Michael move to obliterate the bodies of both Emperors, but before they can land any attacks, Fenrir and Gorn suck into the ground, landing in Mephisto's clutches.

"You graverobber!" Lady Huul shrieks. "Murderers! Thieves! What have you done to our king?!"

Uriel's cold smile spreads even wider beneath her helmet.

"Two bloodskins down. And this is only the start..."

Part 302: Raphael's Secret

Half a minute earlier.

Raphael, the Archangel of Wisdom, and Michael, the Archangel of Courage, assist their sister in combating the many Demon Emperors arrayed around them. While Uriel suffers the attacks of over half a dozen Emperors in unison, the two errant Archangel souls in her body manipulate two of the constructs she has summoned, in secret.

Raphael remotely controls the female construct. He does not give her specific commands, but instead gives vague orders to be as annoying as possible, slowing Fenrir down and causing her to lower her guard against the seemingly 'weak' and 'useless' construct.

Michael does the same, but with the male construct and Gorn.

"Remember, brother," Raphael says to Michael. "These demons are both sly and dangerous. Alone, our sister would lose against any three of them. Even Ose herself managed to defeat Uriel with less than half a dozen Dukes reinforcing her. If we hope to slay a few of these ancient monsters, we must use psychological warfare. Wait until I give the signal to take direct control of her Servants."

Michael nods. "In recent days, verily, I hath questioned thee many times, Raphael. But still, I have not lost faith in thy leadership. I know, in my heart, that all of thy seemingly wicked deeds must have been performed for some... some benefit to our people. Some selfless reasons. None hath suffered as much as thee."

"Good. That is good, Michael," Raphael says, smiling kindly. "No matter what, we are brothers. Archangels. Equals. We must ensure the monsters we created meet their ends at our hands. That is how we will do right by the galaxy we have harmed."

Michael nods. "Mmm."

They both fall silent, waiting for the right moment to strike.

At one point, five Emperors surround Uriel from all sides. Two orcs, two werewolves, and Yardrat all work together to launch what would, under normal circumstances, prove a deadly attack against the unprepared Uriel.

However, in the eyes of the Archangel of Wisdom, this change in the battle's dynamic proves nothing more than a mere trifle. He sees through the formation in less than a second.

[Sister. Swap with Michael.] He orders.

[Yes, brother.] Uriel responds.

Suddenly, Michael's soul-form vanishes and Uriel's appears. She stands at the alert, not a trace of worry on her face, while watching as Michael completely catches the demons off-guard. Michael's swordplay, peerless in its ability to cut and deflect, and perhaps faster than light itself, allows him to completely shatter the deadly formation surrounding his sister's body.

Less than five seconds later, Raphael speaks again.

[Michael. Swap with Uriel.]

Michael doesn't reply. He merely gives up control to his sister, trading places with his sister's soul.

These three Archangels, all errant souls, are simultaneously capable of controlling Barbatos's body at any moment and releasing their true powers. This feat, only possible due to more than a hundred millennia of Uriel reshaping Barbatos's essence to allow the flow of divine energy, gives them an unparalleled amount of flexibility in how their souls can flow through these pathways.

The moment Michael returns, Raphael gives another order.

"The time is right. Our enemies are distracted. We will take control of Uriel's Servants."

A faint smile crosses Michael's face.

"Verily, I shalt enjoy this."

Michael and Raphael both vanish, seizing full control of each of Uriel's constructs. Michael takes control of the masculine one, using its sword to decapitate Emperor Gorn in a single stroke. His swordplay, peerless and invisible to the untrained eye, ends the second-strongest Emperor's reign before he even knows what happened.

Raphael lacks such a swift killing move. But, in the end, his methods prove far more terrifying.

The Archangel of Wisdom becomes an illusion of himself. He reappears behind Emperor Fenrir's body and reaches out with his soul, grabbing onto hers before she can even detect his presence.

"Hellspawn." Raphael mutters. "Play with me a while."

In Fenrir's eyes, the world remains the same. She jumps away from the construct that grabbed her and shivers.

That was close! What happened? How did this fake angel move fast enough to evade my senses?

Fenrir strikes a defensive stance. She eyes the female construct with far more apprehension while ignoring the battle against Uriel.

"What are you?" Fenrir asks. "Speak, angel! You tried to trick me!"

Raphael chuckles quietly. "Hoho... you want to know this old man's identity?"

Before Fenrir's eyes, the space around Uriel's construct vibrates for a moment. Within a tenth of a second, the construct's form changes drastically, changing to reveal a figure feared by all Demon Emperors.

Fenrir sucks in a breath. "Raphael! No, that's impossible! We killed you! I saw your death with my own eyes!"

The Archangel nods somberly. "Aye, indeed my death came at the hands of Satan the Devil. 'Twas my great fortune that my soul ended up sealed within one of Camael's rings. And now, it has afforded this ancient one a rare opportunity to return from beyond the grave. Hoho!"

Fenrir's pupils dilate and contract several times in a fraction of a second. The terror of unexpectedly witnessing an additional Archangel throws her thoughts into chaos, making her realize all sorts of horrifying possibilities.

"No wonder Uriel came here alone! She wasn't by herself after all, she must have had..."

Fenrir pauses. She whips her head around to look at the other demons, only to realize something has gone horribly wrong. The night-time battlefield now appears completely empty, with no sounds of fighting anywhere in the vicinity.

A sinking feeling expands in the Emperor of the Night's stomach. She turns to look at Raphael again, only to see the old man standing calmly, smiling at her without a care in the world.

"Verily, thy thoughts are that of a greedy, selfish being," Raphael says, his words slow and measured. "Thy plans rest on the Hell of Blood's rise, its overtaking of the other Hells, and thy eventual climb to the position of Second Emperor. But ahh, what if thy plans were to fall apart here? Imagine the shame thou shalt feel when all thy machinations fall to dust? Such a tragic loss, no doubt."

"What did you do to everyone?" Fenrir asks, ignoring Raphael's taunts. "How did you hide them from me? No... did you put an illusion spell on me?"

Raphael's smile widens a little further. "This old angel is quite weak, and he is hard of hearing. Coulds't thou be experiencing some troubles, young one? Do feel free to speak up in the time thou have left. Thy existence will not be long for this world, after all."

"Don't screw with me!" Fenrir roars. "I'll rip you to pieces, Archangel!"

She charges at Raphael, conjuring all of her demonic power into a vicious soul attack. The moment she draws within range, Fenrir splits herself into six soul-forms, all of them traveling away from her original position to encircle the Archangel. Leathery, bat-like wings sprout from her back. She attacks the Archangel from all directions, giving him no room to escape.

An instant later, Fenrir crushes Raphael's body, splattering the old man into a bloody mess of guts and sinew.

However, Fenrir does not smile or gloat. Instead, her heart turns cold.

"That was too easy! Show yourself, Raphael! Don't try to fool me! I know you're still alive!"

The world around her, the meeting-place of the Hidden Emperors, becomes noticeably darker and more shrouded in fog. Raphael reappears, facing Fenrir's six selves without a hint of fear.

"Hoho! This old one simply wanted to play a little prank on thee! Hee-hee! Was it quite funny? Dids't thou experience the joy of a prank played well?"

"If you're going to fight me, then fight me!" Fenrir barks. "Stop wasting my time, wretched fossil! You belong in the dirt, along with the rest of your kind!"

Raphael's playful smile fades away. He eyes the demoness with an expression that rapidly grows darker and more malevolent.

"Yes. In the dirt, this old one belongs. Thou art right, hellspawn. Sadly, he must return from the abyss itself to avenge those he has failed. And so, here he stands, ready to personally wreak havoc on those who ended his happiness."

Raphael grabs the edges of his clothing. He slowly disrobes, revealing countless horrific scars on his chest, mottled patches of skin, and burn marks that no passage of time will ever heal. The skinny and frail-looking Archangel wears only a light set of pants to cover his dignity, but allows the Emperor of the Night to see his beaten and battered body.

"I have killed countless entities far mightier than thee, hellspawn. Worry not about thy so-called friends. Thy comrades will perish, as shalt thou, here and now. All thy ambitions will crumble before this ancient warrior."

"I won't die here!" Fenrir screeches. "But I will bury you where you stand!"

Fenrir and Raphael engage in a vicious battle to the death. Raphael's body, though seemingly weak, reveals a hidden wellspring of power as he regenerates from even the most violent and horrific deaths at Fenrir's claws.

For several hours, the two of them strike grievous blows against one another. Slowly, Fenrir's sanity begins to crack. She grows more and more desperate as the Archangel of Wisdom cunningly outwits her, dealing glancing blows that continue to slow her down more and more.

"How can you be so durable?!" Fenrir shrieks. "Just die already! DIE!!"

The world around her, having long-since faded into an infinite, blackened abyss, no longer reveals even a hint of the battlefield she once remembered. The fight against Uriel, once the most pressing thought on Fenrir's mind, becomes like an ancient memory.

A fist strikes Fenrir's face. She goes flying and crashes against the ground, pain blinding her vision and making it hard for her to see. At that moment, Raphael appears before her and grabs the top of her head.

"This is the part where I seize thy soul," Raphael says, smiling coyly.

The Archangel reaches out of himself and grabs onto Fenrir's soul, intending to rip it away from her body.

However, in that split-second, Fenrir's eyes turn as black as death itself.

"Taste your nightmare!" Fenrir screams, as she fires one last, desperate soul-attack at the Archangel holding on to her.

Raphael, unable to release the Emperor of the Night, shudders violently as this beam of darkness attacks his very core.

Suddenly, the pitch-black world around them changes to its total opposite; a stunningly bright realm of pure light. Fenrir's eyes burn from the radiance of a holy energy so pure it makes the Archangel of Wisdom's mana feel like puddles of mud splashed alongside the road.

In Fenrir's vision, a faint figure appears, a mere apparition, a long-lost shadow of power that none in the galaxy have ever observed, or still remember.

The Emperor of the Night trembles with fear.

"Who... who is that? Who's there?!"

Raphael convulses, while his hand remains stubbornly locked onto Fenrir's head.

The distant apparition, so powerful and pure that it fills Fenrir with a nameless terror, speaks softly to someone unseen.

"Why must you rebel? Have I not given you life? Have I not treated you with dignity and respect?"

The speaker receives no answer. Instead, a violent pain transmits through its consciousness directly to Fenrir's brain, making her shriek in pain.

"Eeeeyaaah!"

The Emperor of the Night watches in horror as the brilliant radiance surrounding her grows noticeably duller. The mighty presence fades away, and the blackness of the void once again swallows the brilliant light, leaving only the shuddering and suffering Raphael behind, along with herself.

Raphael finally recovers from her last-ditch attack. He opens his eyes and glares at her with a look of pure hatred.

"That vision was not thine to see."

Fenrir shudders. "You... you killed him! You murdered..."

Raphael gnashes his teeth. "That was my greatest secret, the one thing which should never be spoken of. For thy putrid eyes to observe it, thou shalt die a thousand deaths. I will not even consume thy wretched soul, but purify it to nothingness, forever."

Tears bubble up in Fenrir's eyes. "You killed him... you killed him... but he loved you! He loved you like his son!"

"PERISH!" Raphael howls, as he squeezes his hands, compresses her soul, and blasts it with the full might of his Archangel power.

"Aaaah!!"

Fenrir releases one last cry of pain before the light fades from her eyes. Her 'body,' the representation of her soul, scatters to ash in Raphael's palm. He remains standing while she crumbles to dust, staring hatefully at the fallen demoness.

"T'was no mistake..." Raphael murmurs. "I did what I had to. I made the choice to empower myself. T'was not wrong. It wasn't!"

The Archangel of Wisdom reflects for a moment on that moment in time, that ancient choice he made, one which changed the flow of power in the cosmos forever.

"...Only Solomon knows." Raphael whispers. "But I cannot kill him. I can only pray he keeps the secret safe, forever. 'Tis my one last desire."

As Raphael's soul-battle with Fenrir ends, his perception of time slows down, reverting to its normal state. The Illusory Realm he constructed, one which has allowed him to defeat even his mightiest foes, including Satan himself, grants Raphael yet another victory among the trillions of others.

Raphael returns to reality, watching as Fenrir's lifeless husk falls to the floor before him.

In the timeline of Uriel's battle, only a single second passed between the moment of Raphael touching Fenrir's soul and the fading of the light in her eyes. But to the Archangel and his victim, more than half a day had passed.

Raphael glances in Michael's direction, noting the fallen figure of Emperor Gorn.

[Good work, little brother,] Raphael says. [Thou hath performed admirably.]

He rears back his fist to destroy Fenrir's body, only to groan as he realizes it has already disappeared into the floor, along with Gorn's corpse.

For a brief instant, Raphael reflects on the secret Fenrir glimpsed, the one truth he never wishes anyone to know.

As much as her soul would have empowered me, I cannot allow any others to remain in the mortal plane who know the truth. Raphael thinks. That is why… even Cassiel and Muriel…

A flash of regret appears on Raphael's face.

Perhaps t'was a mistake. Perhaps I should never have done what I did. But the dead can never return. That is the cruelty of this universe. That is the cruelty and unfairness we must all endure.

Raphael and Michael both fly back to Uriel's side, while the gazes of all the demons fall upon them.

This old man cannot fix all of his mistakes, Raphael thinks. But at the very least, he can purge these wretched sinners from existence!

Part 303: The Unifier

Emperor Gorn and Emperor Fenrir both die instantly, far faster than anyone around them could have imagined. Uriel's seemingly weak and useless Holy Constructs somehow end their lives with one move, causing their auras to vanish and the other Emperors to spin around and look at them in shock.

Emperor Serena, Gorn's consort, quickly moves away from his body even as it falls into the ground. She sightlessly gazes in the general direction of the masculine construct before her, the one which now bears Michael's Archangel aura.

"Murderer." Serena says, her limpid voice containing neither hatred nor hostility, but only an emphatic truth.

Michael's gaze fixates on her fleeing figure. Her princess-like appearance does nothing to warm his blood or stay his hand. In his eyes, all he sees is a filthy bloodskin.

Without any warning, he rushes toward the blind Emperor and swings his blade. However, his sword passes through her without stopping, and she disappears into particles of light, only to reform half a mile away, unharmed.

"Emperor Gorn!" Maltus shouts, fire in his eyes. "Filthy Archangels! You dare trick us?!"

Raphael chuckles audibly, as he flies back toward his sister. "Hoho. Verily, thou intendeth to slay my sister, yet once thy comrades fell, thy anger rose like the flames of a fallen people. There can be no reconciliation between us, hellspawn."

He and Michael quickly travel back to Uriel's side, while both of the Ancient Orcs, those who served under Gorn, gaze at them with fiery eyes. Never did they imagine the leader of their Hell would perish so miserably, unable to defend himself.

Maltus's chest heaves up and down. He grits his teeth and summons all his strength to his body, readying himself to go on the attack!

However, Elder Huul, his junior and his Zhurm's mother, calms down quickly. She eyes the Archangels with a look of cold calculation.

"Maltus. It is time. Activate the Unifier."

Her words immediately cause the First Ancient's rage to freeze in place. Shocked beyond belief, Maltus shoots her a look of suspicion. "What? Lady Huul, without the Zhurm's permission, we cannot reveal-"

"I am his mother. I helped design it." She states, still locking eyes with Uriel. "I'll take responsibility."

Maltus's rage quickly cools down. In its place, a look of elation appears, followed by that of unmistakable greed.

"Heh, heh, heh. If you insist, Lady Huul."

Their conversation does not go unnoticed by the demons around them, nor the Archangels. Emperor Fenrir's comrades, the werewolves from the Hell of Blood, also appear enraged beyond belief, but they keep their anger in check, waiting for the orcs to make their move. In their heart of hearts, they feel a slight fear toward the cunning Archangels who managed to take out the Hell of Blood's leader in a single move.

Yardrat, too, eyes the orcs with suspicion.

What is a 'Unifier? He wonders. Our intelligence has reported no such item before. Could it be a code-word?

Ancient Maltus reaches into the folds of his luxurious purple robes, then pulls out his hand to reveal a palm-sized black obsidian crystal.

"Behold, fellow Emperors," Maltus says, his voice tinged with excitement. "The pride of my species. The Unifier! No longer will our people sit on the sidelines, content with our meager lot in life! We will avenge our fallen king and take our place at the top of the Hell of Calamity!"

Maltus crushes the pitch-black jewel. A wave of purple and black mana explodes into existence, causing every spectator to take at least a few steps back, including the Archangels. Elder Maltus grabs Huul's golden shoulder pauldron, allowing the black energy to envelop both of them. The initial ball of mana transforms into a hardened set of onyx armor, swirling around them like a hungry raven.

Raphael's eyes widen as he witnesses this scene. "Impossible... that mana signature... a dragon?"

The unmistakable purity of draconic essence sickens every spectator in the area, causing their stomachs to flip-flop in their bodies. Once the blackened ball of energy finishes crafting a set of powerful-looking armor, it shoots up into the sky and explodes like a bomb, transforming into a giant magical formation which hovers over the battlefield.

This last change causes an uproar among the demons, none of whom have ever seen anything like it. Yardrat, in particular, begins to sweat.

A magical formation! Have the orcs and fairies begun to work together? Have they unlocked the mysteries of draconic energy? That must be the case!

"Murderous angels!" Maltus roars, as he once again wields his pair of one-handed axes. "Today, you and all the rest will learn why orcs should be the RULERS of the cosmos!"

He and Huul launch toward Uriel at frightening speeds. Their seemingly simple weapons now radiate an oppressive draconic might, weakening the mana of everyone else in the area.

In that instant, Raphael pieces together at least one part of the puzzle.

This is no coincidence. The orcs have somehow become masters of artifact creation! That 'Unifier' tool was barely inferior to Camael's works!

Uriel engages in battle with both Ancients, resulting in a firestorm of annihilation. She trades blows with them, relying on the power contained in Barbatos's body and her own Holy Barriers to forcibly withstand Maltus and Huul's brutally savage onslaught.

Boom! Boom!

Uriel's light-spears shatter again and again, their inferiority to the dragon-energy-infused weapons of the orcs becoming clearer with every strike. Michael tries to assist his sister by wielding his sword at a speed even the orcs can't deflect, but his body and weapon prove grossly inferior to his former self.

Yardrat analyzes the battle from his spectator vantage point. Projections and constructs, made up only of solidified mana, simply cannot compete with flesh and blood bodies infused with draconic mana. These Archangel souls might possess all of their original abilities, but their raw power is grossly inferior to their former selves! It's no wonder they had to assassinate Fenrir and Gorn when their guard was lowered, otherwise they would have failed in an instant!

"Assist the Ancients!" Yardrat shouts. "Kill these Archangels, once and for all!"

A flood of Emperors joins the orcs in battle, only to find themselves unable to fully commit. The level of draconic energy radiating from the orcs' bodies physically sickens the demons, making their bodies weaken when they draw too close.

Even without the assistance of the other Emperors, both Ancients continue battling the Archangel and her brothers.

Raphael's strengths lay mostly in illusions. He keeps away from the main attack and mostly focuses on confusing his opponents. Unlike the demons, his Archangel soul stands a tier above draconic energy. He doesn't become weakened by it, and can even fight against a dragon on relatively equal terms.

Uriel's body flickers from side to side, causing the orcs to miss some of their attacks. Those that hit inevitably crash against Uriel's barriers or her armor, reducing some of the damage the dragon-power can deal.

However, the alarming increase in power that the orcs receive puts them easily at the level of top Demon Emperors. Every strike they land causes Uriel's body to shudder and groan. Considering the physical power she wields only amounts to the level of a Demon Duke, she inevitably loses more and more ground to both of the orcs.

Boom!

Maltus's axe crashes against Uriel's helmet, making her cry out in pain. She hovers backward, wincing for a moment as a throbbing migraine strikes her soul. In that moment of weakness, Huul lands a double-slash on Uriel's chest, blasting her out of the sky and toward the ground below!

Just before Uriel hits the ground, a shadow-spear suddenly comes from nowhere and impales her spine from behind. The Archangel howls in pain and slashes at it with a hastily summoned dagger of light, freeing herself. She climbs to her feet, only to see Emperor Yama slink into the darkness, grinning at her like a Cheshire Cat.

"No, no, now is not the time for us to make our move," Yama says. "Consider that a little taste of our power. Heh heh heh..."

Uriel clutches the bloody hole in her stomach, then falls to her feet. She hastily waves her hand, dematerializing Michael and Raphael's constructs and resummoning them at her position.

She exchanges no words with her brothers. One look is all Raphael needs to see the gruesome injury Yama dealt.

The orcs fly downward at their fastest speed, intending to crush Uriel before she can heal. However, Raphael summons a portal and throws his sister into it, allowing his body to be used as a meatshield for the descending orcs. They crush him and Michael both, but fail to land a killing blow on the Archangel yet again.

"Come back here, cowardly chicken!" Maltus yells. "Where have you run off to, now?!"

A few seconds later, Uriel steps out of a portal in the sky, then closes it behind her. Her seemingly life-threatening injuries from before no longer appear anywhere on her body, and her battle fatigue vanishes as well.

"Here I am, little orcs," Uriel says, taunting the two Ancients. "I had to freshen myself up a bit."

Yardrat's eyes widen. Again! How has the Archangel healed her injuries so quickly? Yama's casual blow should have left her at death's door. Only a healer of Belial's caliber could have mended those wounds, and yet somehow Uriel did so in only a few seconds?!

His expression becomes grim. Uriel only possesses the body of a Duke, but her Archangel power puts her at the same level as a Demon Emperor. If this battle were merely one of attrition, we should win easily, and yet somehow she has survived all this while. Since when did her healing abilities grow so frightening?

Uriel's eyes glow for a moment. Once again, her posture and demeanor changes.

"Hoho. Too many enemies, and so few friends. I think we might not win if the battle keeps shaping up like it has so far!"

The speaker, Raphael, swivels his head around, momentarily engrossed in the feeling of once again possessing a flesh and blood body. Still, he doesn't let this sensation distract him.

The Archangel of Wisdom waves his hands, summoning a dozen portals all at once, each of them linking to different locations.

"Hee-hee! Come now, young ones! Make way for this poor old man to educate the young!"

Suddenly, a flood of more then three thousand Elemental Constructs pour from the portals. Fire Golems, Water Golems, Earth, Wind, Light, Dark, and even Iron Golems all come rushing out, having been pre-built by Uriel for just this moment. The Emperors all flinch in shock as a huge army of Golems charges their position, the sheer number of them frightening them out of their wits.

"Don't be fooled!" Yardrat exclaims. "Uriel can't possibly create this many golems! They're only illusions!"

An instant after he says that, one of the 'illusions' swings its fiery fist at him.

BOOM!

Yardrat gets smashed backward, flying directly into the ground beneath him. Just before he impacts the dirt, the Emperor of the Void flickers in and out of reality, halting his momentum and allowing him to reorient himself in midair.

"...Never mind! They're real!"

Raphael hovers in the sky. His eyes flick to each of the assembled Emperors, while also watching as the two Ancients come roaring back to fight him.

[Hoho. Well, I wouldn't say that Yardrat boy was too far off the mark. I might have mixed in a few illusions to beef up the numbers! Now, brother, 'tis thy turn to battle these orcs.]

Raphael's eyes glow with light for a moment, allowing Michael to swap into Uriel's body. Raphael and Uriel split off into Uriel's constructs, turning them into pillars of support for the Archangel of Courage.

Michael grins. "There's just something about a flesh and blood body that a false one cannot emulate..."

The moment the orcs reach Michael, thinking he's Raphael, they receive a rude surprise. Michael summons a single longsword into his right hand, along with a shield of light in his left. He rockets toward the Ancients and delivers a hundred precisely aimed attacks, stabbing through minuscule gaps in their dragon-armor.

"Argh!" Huul cries, a single second after feeling fifty stinging stabs across her body.

Maltus also cries out in pain, but neither orc relents. The wounds on their bodies instantly seal shut and rapidly heal, bolstered by the power of the dragon empowering them.

The formation in the sky, created by fairy magic, momentarily glows as it activates its auxiliary healing functions. It absorbs the injuries both Ancients suffered, transferring them to orc slaves placed somewhere in the high capitol on their homeworld. Those slaves instantly perish upon receiving their deadly wounds, while fresh new ones are rotated in to allow for additional 'wound transferences.'

Michael frowns. His 'lethal' blows only momentarily slow the orcs down, and in fact barely even hurt them before they resume battle, seemingly unaffected and just as strong as before.

How strange, he muses.

The other Emperors fight desperately against the horde of elemental Golems. While the strength of Uriel's summons aren't high, their durability and regenerative abilities prove ludicrous.

"Bloody hell!" Emperor Wolfram howls. "It's one thing after another! How many tricks does this Archangel have up her sleeves?!"

A mile or so from the battlefield, Emperors Melody and Guura, from the Sixth Hell of Isolation, sit by themselves, not engaging with the battle.

Instead, they sit with Dorma, the Duke of Delicacies, snacking on some delicious meats and veggies.

"Hey," Guura says. "We should bring Bael over here. He's in danger, you know?"

Melody snorts. "Bael's napping. He'll be fine."

"Ya, but he don't got no powers now, ya know?"

Melody chomps down on a leg of chicken, then shrugs her shoulders. "If he smells the grub, he'll come."

"You think we should help fight the Archangel?" Guura asks.

"Nah. Screw that noise," Melody replies. "Sounds like a real drag. Remember what Shax always said. 'Don't stick your nose up somebody else's butt.'"

"Melody... I don't think those were his words."

"Eh, close enough."

The two girls chomp some chicken while Dorma waddles over and plops down beside them, a big bowl of turkey soup in his hand.

"So, how's the battle going?"

Melody shrugs. "Uriel took out Emperor Fenrir. Gorn too."

"Ooh, how exciting!" Dorma squeals, elation on his face. "We haven't had this much excitement in a long time! Are you going to play a song?"

"Those losers don't deserve my music," Melody replies. "Man, where's Fae and Bree? We should get them in on this action. This chicken is the shit!"

"Thanks," Dorma says, his face all smiles. "I put some special seasoning on it! Made it just the way my broodmother always liked it!"

"Alright! Totally radical," Melody laughs.

Guura frowns. She turns around and looks behind the group, in the opposite direction of the battle taking place, where she observes a flicker of light materialize in the distance.

"Hey! Who's there?"

Slowly, a demon begins walking toward the three members of the Hell of Isolation. His youthful appearance doesn't ring any bells, but his confident swagger makes even Melody turn and take notice.

"Eh? I don't recognize you. What's your name, punk?"

The young demon smiles, revealing a toothy grin.

"Oh, it's no surprise you don't recognize little old me. I don't come out often, after all, and this body is a new model. Since there's an Archangel or three in the area, I thought I might pop over and see what the big fuss is about."

Melody continues munching on her chicken, but she eyes the demon warily. "You're an Emperor? Weird. I've never met you before. Are you Belial?"

"No, no. I'm not Belial," The man says. "You and I haven't spoken much. I like to keep to myself, you see."

Melody scrutinizes the young Emperor's face, especially his odd purple hair, permed and falling from his head in waves. He wears an Egyptian-style garment, complete with white robes, a golden pointed hat, and a few amulets of various Egyptian gods hanging from his neck.

"Wait... I do know you..." Melody says, pausing her chewing. "Aren't you... the Glyphmancer?"

The man motions with his hand. He conjures a magical card between his middle and index finger, then smiles.

"So you've figured me out? Just keep quiet for now. I'd like to make a big show when I arrive."

Guura doesn't recognize him. Even so, she gestures to the table and spread of food before her.

"Hey, Glyph-guy! Want some grub? The chicken's real good!"

The newcomer follows her gesture with his eyes.

"Ah, some of Dorma's delicacies? Why yes, I think I will. It won't hurt to wait a few minutes before I make my glorious entrance. Gorn already died, after all, so I'm a bit too late to save him."

As the man sits down and begins to eat, he raises his eyebrows and nods at Dorma.

"Well, I'll be. This is some good chicken. Excellent work, Dorma."

The Duke of Delicacies flashes a thumbs-up, then slaps his stomach.

"Enjoy, brother."

Part 304: Uriel's Counterattack!

Despite the relative weakness of Uriel's Golems, their sheer quantity allows them to outnumber the less-than half-dozen Emperors present by fifty-to-one. With Gorn and Fenrir dead, only Lupus, Wolfram, and Yardrat remain on the battlefield, while the two Ancient Orcs directly combat Uriel. Serena keeps her distance, since her abilities don't allow her to directly fight outside of pre-planned battles. Each of the three non-Orc Emperors becomes completely suppressed, forcing them to slowly eat away at the fire, water, and other such elemental golems surrounding them.

Raphael and Michael take up positions behind Uriel, manipulating her summons themselves, while she focuses on battling the two Ancient Orcs. To all of the Archangels' surprise, the Golems weaken considerably once the dragon-empowered orcs draw within range, allowing Huul and Maltus to shatter them with singular blows.

"Thy power is quite alarming!" Uriel says, as she holds up her arm to forcibly deflect another of Huul's brutal blows. The impact knocks Uriel fifty feet backward in the sky, but also gives her a moment of breathing room. "How didst thou mimic my sister's artifact creation abilities? How hath thou channeled the power of fallen dragons?!"

"That is for us to know, not you, Archangel!" Huul shouts.

Her axes beat down on Uriel time and again, forcing Uriel back step by step. Maltus weaves around behind Uriel, looking for opportunities to strike when her guard is down. Several times, he delivers brutal chops to her back, breaking through her hastily summoned holy barriers with ease.

"No tricks will save you today, Uriel!"

As the two orcs rush at Uriel in unison to deliver a killing blow, they find themselves momentarily surprised when her figure vanishes and reappears off to the side; a position too awkward for them to immediately pivot and attack.

BOOM!

A blast of holy energy fires from Uriel's palm and crashes into Huul, sending her flying.

"Aaargh!"

Uriel appears noticeably worse for wear. She shoots a momentary look of gratefulness to Raphael, who saved her with his illusion magic.

We haven't many trump cards left to play, Uriel thinks. We've already used up two-thirds of the Holy Water Raphael helped me formulate. Once it runs out, I won't be able to heal my wounds so effectively anymore. I did not anticipate a pair of orcs would prove such deadly enemies.

Her expression turns heinous. Uriel dives downward, to the planet's surface below. She crashes into the dirt and burrows underground, disappearing from everyone else's senses.

Moments later, Uriel bursts back out, her blackened armor appearing far more brilliant than before. Hardened diamond plates sit atop and between the gaps of her demonstone armor, completely repairing all the damage her armor has suffered. In her hands, a pair of hastily-assembled diamond spears reinforced with holy energy rest, ready to be used in battle.

Huul, having recovered from that unexpected holy energy blast, pairs up with Maltus to rush directly at Uriel.

"And here I thought you'd run away!" Huul taunts.

Uriel's eyes darken.

"I never flee, foolish servants of evil. Even when my life is on the line... I HOLD MY GROUND!"

An unexpected wellspring of power surges within Uriel's body. She gazes at the two incoming attackers from above, coils strength into her legs, and leaps straight at them!

Expecting the Archangel to parry their blows as she always has, the Orcs instead receive an unexpected surprise when she charges toward them at a terrifying speed. Just before Uriel and the Ancients collide, they rear their weapons back to attack, and so does she.

Foop!

Uriel vanishes!

For a quarter of a second, both Ancients can't even process her sudden disappearance.

Then, she reappears from a portal directly above them, bearing down on their backs.

SKRIK!

Uriel's two spears impale both Ancients through their spines, continuing to increase their speed until they crash into the ground.

"Aaargh!"

They collide with the planet's surface, smashing a pile of boulders beneath them into dust when they impact.

For a brief moment, every Emperor on scene shoots a look of astonishment at Uriel and the Orcs twitching beneath her feet. Huul and Maltus struggle to tear the diamond spears from their backs, but Uriel continues blasting them over and over, stomping their heads into the dirt and otherwise beating them faster than their formation can repair their bodies.

"Dids't thou thinketh such a childish formation could confuse my brother, the Archangel of Wisdom?" Uriel taunts. She grabs Huul by the back of the neck, lifts her up, and smashes her face-first against Maltus's body. "My brother has long-since seen through thy inferior attempts at emulating the ancient dragons."

The other Emperors put twice as much power into their attacks, momentarily clearing a gap in the Golems slowing them down. Yardrat, in particular, manages to give himself a few seconds of breathing room. Before Uriel can land a killing blow, he motions with his hands to summon temporal magic aimed at both Ancients.

Foop!

Uriel lunges her spears at the heads of both Ancient Orcs just a half-second too late. They vanish from her sight and disappear, traveling somewhere else in the galaxy. With its source of energy gone, the formation that sustained them fades from the sky above.

Uriel's spears uselessly strike the dirt. She turns her head to sneer at Yardrat.

"Oh? Does the little bloodskin want to play?"

The Emperor of the Void shivers. Had he been just a second too slow, both of the Ancient Orcs would have perished right then and there. Even after saving their lives, he couldn't prevent them from suffering horrific, life-altering injuries.

I have no love for the Orcs, nor any of these other Emperors, but when faced with three Archangels, we must put our differences aside!

Several Golems charge at Yardrat, once again pinning him in a tough position. His most feared enemies are the holy-type Golems, who drastically weaken and burn him. With holy energy being the bane of demonkind's existence, not even Yardrat can easily battle against Uriel's most potent weapon against her enemies.

The Archangel of Retribution sends a telepathic message to her brothers. [We don't yet have all of the bloodskin Emperors here yet. Should we proceed?]

[I would prefer to see more,] Raphael says. [Once we reveal our true power, we will not be able to activate it again for a very long time, sister. We must eliminate as many Emperors as possible today. The Hero is still not reliable. We must pave a path of blood if he is to save humanity.]

Uriel nods. [Then we shall wait until the moment is right, brother.]

The Archangel of Retribution flies into the sky. She summons a massive orb of holy energy above her heads, identical to the one she conjured at the start of the battle. Its size balloons to the diameter of a school bus, vastly exceeding the size of her body.

Yardrat and the other Emperors gasp. With the Ancients gone and only the werewolves left, plus with Uriel's Golems slowing them all down, none of the Emperors assembled can possibly muster a shield capable of defending themselves and the others from such a terrifying amount of Holy Energy.

"Once again, bloodskin filth!" Uriel shouts. "I say to all of thee! Fall... INTO OBLIVION!"

Uriel hurls the massive sphere directly into the center of the battle being fought, giving no thought to the damage her constructs will suffer.

Yardrat curses. "Shit!"

Wolfram and Lupus grimace. Even with their innate resistance to holy energy, they won't get off easily if that orb strikes them.

Serena, having kept away from the main battlefield, doesn't stand within the blast zone. However, her heart tightens when she sees the orbs flying at the others.

A few miles away, Emperor Fae and a smorgasbord of Dukes from the Hells of Lust and Isolation watch the battle with surprise in their eyes.

"Where are the reinforcements?!" Fae snarls. "As much as I'd love to cream some Archangels, my powers ain't no good for fighting their kind! We need the other Emperors, pronto!"

One of Huul's attendants, a relatively high-placed Orc equivalent to a Demon Duke, shoots a glance at Fae. "I have called the Hell of Calamity for help. Someone is on the way."

"Both of your bosses just got creamed!" Fae shouts. "Whoever you called for, they had better get here fast!"

The moment the words leave her mouth, Uriel's holy energy orb explodes.

BOOM.

A flash of light ignites in the darkness, forcing every spectator to look away, lest their eyes go blind.

The explosion blasts apart a massive crater on Hell Harbor's surface. All of Uriel's Constructs end up shredded to nothingness, while the three Demon Emperors momentarily black out and fly backward, crashing into the dirt.

Yardrat, never getting even a second to teleport himself away, ends up with the worst injuries. Terrible holy burns give him blisters across his whole body. Multiple broken bones prevent him and the other Emperors from moving, while they waver on the edge of consciousness.

Serena flies over to their side. Having avoided the explosion, she isn't injured, but none of her abilities revolve around healing or defense. She cannot do anything more than examine the other Emperors and try to protect them with her body.

Serena's expressionless face remains as placid as ever. She confirms that neither Yardrat nor either of the Werewolves are at immediate risk of dying. However, with Uriel still in pristine condition, they won't live much longer.

Indeed, the Archangel of Retribution sneers as she brandishes both of her diamond spears and opens a portal in front of herself.

"Looks like the bloodskins only amounted to this much," She says.

As Uriel starts to move toward her portal, a voice speaks from somewhere between her and the three downed Emperors.

"Temporal Cricket, Evoke!"

A flash of light radiates from a previously invisible Demon Emperor, one who nobody else observed until this very moment. Three bolts of mana fly out of that invisible figure and rush into the bodies of Yardrat, Lupus, and Wolfram. Five seconds later, all of their injuries and grievous wounds disappear, returning them to their condition from a minute before.

From the darkness, an invisible demon reveals himself. A young male with purple hair, golden-and-white robes, and a necklace with several carved images of Egyptian gods appears as if stepping out of an illusory world. His dashing good looks do nothing for the many men and women present, but even so, his appearance is still attention-grabbing, even more so than Yardrat's.

The Emperor of the Void jumps to his feet, while sweat drips from his forehead. Realizing he has somehow escaped death, he looks around and quickly spots the newcomer.

"Hey! Are you the one who saved us?"

The young demon smiles. "I am."

"I owe you my thanks," Yardrat says, before pausing to scrutinize the other. "Although... your face is wholly unfamiliar to me. Who are you, fellow Emperor?"

"That's not unexpected. I don't get out much," The young demon says. "For now, you just stay there and watch. I'll take out these Archangels myself."

"You don't stand a chance," Yardrat says. "I'll help you-"

"That won't be necessary." The young demon says again. "Trust in this fresh-faced newcomer. I alone am enough."

The young demon flourishes his right hand, causing a golden card to appear between his index and middle finger.

"Ooh! Lucky draw."

The moment Yardrat spots the card, he sucks in a breath.

Hold on. That's a Tarot card! This fellow must be from the Tarot sect. But they only have one Emperor, so he must be... Yumagi? The Glyphmancer?!

Just as Yardrat comes to that conclusion, the newcomer holds his card over his head.

"Wrath of the Lich Dragon, Evoke!"

A wellspring of Eldritch energy conjures inside his body, then fires toward Uriel at a terrifying speed. The Archangel of Retribution quickly summons five Holy Barriers to protect herself, while the image of a black-clad dragon crashes against them.

BOOOOM!

The dragon crashes through one of Uriel's barriers, then the second one, the third, and finally the fourth, before dissipating. The Archangel of Retribution manages to block the attack, but her body tenses up after doing so, the amount of energy she expended proving far beyond her initial estimations.

Yumagi casually flicks a clump of hair crossing his forehead, revealing several marble-sized glowing lights beneath his hairline. Each of them glows different colors, including gold, silver, black, and red.

"Archangel of Retribution, Archangel of Wisdom, and Archangel of Courage. Well met. I am Emperor Yumagi. It is your great privilege to face me in battle once again."

Raphael gently flaps his wings, putting himself ahead of Uriel.

"Yumagi. I know thy name. Thou art the one who founded the heretic Tarot cult."

"So you do remember me!" Yumagi laughs, while wearing a smug grin. "These days, I like to keep to myself. My goal, of course, is to craft the mightiest Tarot cards in existence. But what good are cards and games if I don't have any worthy opponents? Finally, I can see how far my crafting has taken me... and how high I tower above the peasants."

Raphael narrows his eyes. "Thou art a vile demon, like the rest. Coming here today will spell the end of thy life. Perhaps, if thou hads't brought reinforcements, thou mayeth lived to see the sun rise one last time."

Emperors Wolfram and Lupus both frown as they listen to the conversation.

"Emperor Yumagi?" Wolfram mutters. "I don't recognize that name. I've never seen this guy before."

"I haven't seen him myself," Lupus replies, her voice low, "But I recognize his name. He's been around for a frighteningly long time. He rose to prominence shortly after the War in Heaven. There are many questions swirling around the source of his rise and how he appeared seemingly out of nowhere, all those eons ago."

"Is he strong?" Wolfram asks. "We already lost Gorn. Surely, this new kid can't be any better than him."

"Don't be so sure about that..." Lupus warns. "The Tarot Sect is supposed to be a formidable powerhouse of the Hell of Calamity. Gorn has always afforded them absolute privacy. The most prominent member we've seen in recent years is Mara, the Baron of Games, but she only leads the house's 'collection activities'. She's hardly the most noteworthy member there."

Wolfram spreads out his claws. "Well, we should still help this Yumagi fellow out. There's no way he can take on three Archangels by himself."

Lupus flicks her gaze over to Yardrat, who remains in place, not deigning to help the newcomer out. He remains on the alert, just in case Uriel launches another sneak attack, but otherwise keeps his feet firmly planted on the ground.

"Let's wait a while and see what Yumagi can do," Lupus whispers. "Besides. Kristoff is on the way, and so are several other Emperors. Once they all arrive, we'll easily crush the Archangels. We just need to hold out a while longer. Let's not risk our necks, or else we might end up like our mistress."

Wolfram's eyes turn malicious. "Those Archangels are such scum. To assassinate her in such an underhanded way... I'll never forgive them."

"Nor will I." Lupus concludes.

Emperor Yardrat transmits several telepathic thoughts to his master, Auger.

[What do you mean he won't come?] Yardrat hisses. [We need Glinch! These Archangels are truly oppressive!]

[I cannot force the Stitched Emperor's hand,] Auger replies. [For now, I am speaking with Fae. I will grant her abilities more appropriate for this battle. As for you, if Yumagi fails to impress, here are three powers you might find useful. I have held a few more in reserve.]

[Yes, my liege,] Yardrat replies, as he senses the arrival of several new demonic abilities slipping into his body. [If it was only Uriel, then Berserk Strength would have been enough. But with the addition of Michael and Raphael, brute force won't be enough to triumph over the Archangels.]

[You are far smarter than others give you credit,] Auger says. [Strike fast, and strike hard. No mercy. With Gorn defeated, there is no Emperor more appropriate to rule the Seven Hells than me.]

[Naturally, my liege. I will make your name feared.]

On the battlefield, Emperor Yumagi raises his palm to the sky. Immediately, five monsters materialize around him. These creatures appear unlike any that have naturally evolved on worlds over time, as they come from his own creativity and the power of his Tarot Cards.

One of them is a miniature green drake, capable of spitting poison, with three heads filled with razor-sharp teeth. Its body size is only ten meters long, making it look like a baby compared to the terrifying ancient dragons.

Another is a strange rat-looking monster, with corrosive black smoke falling from its body. The smoke scars the soil around it, withering and dissipating any plants to ash. Two saber-teeth stick out of its mouth, used for impaling unsuspecting prey.

Another creature is an amorphous blob with a pulsing red center, and an outer transparent green layer of jello-like mucus.

The last two are a pair of birds with iron and steel wings, looking like something a human roboticist might create if they suffered a horrible nightmare. The metal birds shudder where they stand, as if they'll soon fall apart if they remain in service for a moment longer.

Yumagi points at the Archangels.

"Alright, you lot. It's time to duel."

Part 305: Beyond the Grave

Elsewhere in the cosmos, on the planet Tarus II.

A midday sun hangs atop the horizon, warming the planet to a comfortable spring-time temperature. Humans, monsters, and a few scattered demons work together to rebuild the ruins of the former Hero City, now named the Fortress of Retribution. While some haul away broken rubble, others start mapping out construction grids for new buildings, ones which the Hero will create through his enhanced Wordsmithing capabilities, once he has the time to spare.

Jason Hiro sits on a bench with his wife. His mind-wife's body projects spiritually before the two of them through his Wordsmithing. Not only does his mind-wife stand before them, but three other people as well.

Gabriel, the Archangel of Power, towers over everyone present. Standing almost ten feet tall, his spiritual self somehow seems more imposing than his physical body ever was. He crosses his arms and gazes into the distance, taking in the sights of a world he can walk around in for the first time in eons.

Shana, the little girl Jason rescued from a necklace artifact inside Marie's underground bunker. The little blonde-haired girl gazes at Phoebe's physical body, momentarily confused by the existence of both her spiritual and physical selves.

And finally, Sir Lorent, Phoebe's nephew. Mordred's Butcher hooks his arm around Spirit Phoebe's shoulder, while bowing his head politely toward her physical self.

"...And that is where his story ends." Sir Lorent finishes explaining. "After your disappearance, King Arthur wept profusely. He died during a terrible battle against the demon armies, killing several of their Emperors in one last glorious strike. I was born shortly after his death."

Despite having already heard the story, spiritual Phoebe still listens intently to Sir Lorents' depictions of past events, while her physical self appears absolutely enthralled.

"To think my king would fall in such a dramatic way..." Phoebe says, her tone wistful. "I wish I had been there for him."

"King Arthur never once begrudged you for your choice." Lorent Berthold says. "Indeed, after your disappearance, it is said that he beat his chest in grief, wishing he had listened and set the innocent demons free. He created many reforms aimed at identifying demons who bore no ill will toward human society, but with his reputation, he never succeeded in enticing any of them to live within his border walls. Compared to the demons I see inside this city's walls now, Arthur lived and died without ever affecting any particular change between the species. I am sure my king's father would be proud to see the ground you have broken with our enemies."

Phoebe sighs. "It wasn't me, it was Jason. I will always try to give demons the benefit of the doubt, but I have to be pragmatic."

Jason nods along to his wife's words, though his eyes carry a hard edge. "I tried with all my might to spread olive branches to the demons. Then they repaid me by murdering my daughter. Perhaps Arthur had the right idea after all."

Sir Lorent shrugs. "Whether demons are good or bad, I do not care. If they treat me well, so too will I show them mercy. And if not, my wrath will call forth blood to wash the land. Your anger is perfectly understandable, given the circumstances."

Phoebe smiles at the little girl hugging her spirit self's leg. "Shana! You're so cute! I can't believe you got stuck in that artifact for all those years. You remind me of..."

She pauses for a moment, then clears her throat.

"Well. That... I shouldn't say things like that. But look at you, such a cutie! I bet Samantha will love you to heck and back!"

Shana turns her head away and blushes shyly. "Two mommies. Very strange."

Mind-wife Phoebe shrugs helplessly. "I sort of adopted Shana, since we're both spirits. She's just confused that you're me and I'm you. She'll warm up to you, in time."

Jason summons a spiritual bench for his mind-wife and the rest to sit down, that way they don't have to stand awkwardly.

Once everyone plunks down, Shana sits in spiritual Phoebe's lap and kicks her legs slowly. "Mama. Why people working?"

"They have to rebuild the city," Spiritual Phoebe explains. "There was a big explosion and it broke a lot of houses."

"Oh."

Physical Phoebe leans her head against Jason's shoulder. "Do you have a grand plan formulated, yet?"

"Not quite, but close," Jason answers. "First, I'm going to build up and fortify this world to become untouchable. The demons won't dare poke their heads in here once I'm done. We won't be relying on a few piecemeal embattlements, but wartime fortifications to ensure our survival. After that, I'll make the Core utterly impenetrable as well. Finally, we'll start training assault teams with guerilla and hit and run tactics. We need to bleed the demons bit by bit, since they so drastically outnumber us. Meanwhile, I'd like to fortify Maiura and some other worlds, giving us fallback locations, just in case."

Gabriel's eyes glimmer with surprise. "Thou seemeth to have thought this matter through, Hero."

"What can I say?" Jason asks, rhetorically. "I won't screw up again, not like I did before. Hope had the right idea. He was out there hitting the demons where it hurt, rescuing human slaves from their clutches. If I could Wordsmith all the slaves out of their demon oppressor's hands, I'd do so in a heartbeat."

Lorent cocks his head. "Then why don't you? This matter should be well within your capabilities."

"Wordsmithing isn't omnipotent. It has a lot of flaws. Now that I better understand the nature of souls, I also understand my limitations," Jason explains. "Much like how I can't target someone with my Wordsmithing without locating their soul first via 'Locate,' I can't just target an area of people if they aren't directly in my line of sight, or if I haven't already figured out their exact position beforehand. I could locate humans individually, one by one, and teleport them back to the Core, but that would take forever. Better to build up an unstoppable army which can do so in my stead."

"These new measures are quite sensible." Gabriel says. "Based on talks I have had with thy wife, I believe automating thy powers might prove effective. Unlike Camael's artifact crafting abilities, thou cans't use thy Wordsmithing in exceptionally creative ways by creating constructs that perform automated tasks in thy stead."

Spiritual Phoebe blinks her eyes slowly. "Jason has already been thinking about making a machine that converts energy of all types into energy compatible with demons. We'll be able to promote the few demons living on Tarus II to Lords, Barons, Dukes, and maybe even Emperors, assuming his plan works out. Making other types of machines isn't a stretch... but it'll take me some time to work out the schematics."

Physical Phoebe smiles. "I'll help you with that."

The group continues chatting for a while, discussing all sorts of things.

At one point, Physical Phoebe widens her eyes in surprise. "Really? Ose was that little girl? The one I rescued from Camelot's dungeon, all those years ago?"

Her spiritual self nods. "Yes. I honestly couldn't believe it at the time, but it's true. For her to have lived all these years with hatred for humanity... I feel as if I didn't do enough to help her when she was a child. She lost her brother in that dungeon, along with other friends and family. Camelot is where her innocence went to die, and where her hatred of humanity stems from, most directly."

Physical Phoebe sighs deeply. "It's too bad, but she's dead, now. I suppose it's better this way. There's no way I could help her, now."

"No. She isn't dead." Jason states. "Mephisto took her body, and her soul. She will return as one of his necromantic creations. Whether he gives her any autonomy or not will depend on how the Duke of Mist intends to use her. However, based on everything we've observed-"

Jason pauses mid-sentence. For a moment, his eyes glaze over. He turns his head to the west, in the general direction of the warpgate.

"...That's strange."

"What is it?" Physical Phoebe asks.

"The two sentries I placed outside of the Core yesterday have sent me a telepathic transmission. Apparently, a soldier wearing an exosuit has just arrived from outside the Core."

"What? Is it Hope?" Phoebe asks, her voice rising an octave. "Or maybe Neil?!"

"I... don't think so." Jason replies. "They're wearing a Spectre suit. Hope and Neil like to wear more... combat oriented exosuits. Uh, give me a minute, Phoebe. Me and the spirits will go and check this out."

"Hey! Don't leave me here," His wife pouts. "You can't just take my soul along for all the fun while I stay behind."

"Oh, fair enough. Let's both go, then." Jason says. "Return."

Jason's four spiritual companions disappear and return to his mind, while only he and his physical wife teleport directly to the Core, leaving behind the Fortress of Retribution in their wake. On arrival, they find Jason's two lookalikes standing before a soldier in a nondescript Spectre exosuit.

The newcomer flinches when Jason and Phoebe arrive, but otherwise doesn't react.

"...Where is Neil?" The soldier asks, their voice somewhat robotic and lacking any unique vocal identifiers. Neither Jason nor Phoebe can tell anything about them, including their gender.

The Wordsmith raises an eyebrow. "Commander Neil is currently presumed dead, though I have my suspicions as to whether he survived or not. Who are you? Why are you using a voice-encrypter? State your name and rank."

"I can't do that." The soldier says. "I need to speak to Neil. Or... failing that, his assistant, Debra."

"I'm the commander of humanity's forces." Jason says. "State your name and rank, and take off that armor. If you refuse... you do know I can forcibly strip it off with my Wordsmithing, don't you?"

Phoebe takes a step forward. "You're wearing a Mk II. Spectre exosuit. Who gave that to you? I only handed them out after the Core fell to the demons, so there's no way someone could have slipped through the warpgate and evaded the demons."

The soldier's head slightly turns to face Phoebe, but still, they don't share any reaction.

"I... I cannot say. Please do not make me reveal my identity. I need to speak to Debra."

"What you need to do is start talking. To me." Jason says, his tone growing noticeably colder. "I'll give you one last chance to tell me who you are. Don't make me take action myself."

The soldier becomes noticeably flustered. "You... you don't understand. I can't reveal my identity. I-I shouldn't. It's not... well, I just can't. Okay?"

Jason's eyes sweep over the soldier a second time, taking in every detail about their exosuit.

Slim build. Could be a young man, maybe a woman. Why would they be so insistent on not telling me who they are? Maybe Neil was working on some secret experiment? Something he didn't want me to see?

The Wordsmith shakes his head. "I don't trust people who try to keep secrets from me. You leave me no choice. Disengage."

The Trooper doesn't even get a chance to protest. Before they can vocalize a rebuttal, their T-REX rapidly disintegrates, sucking itself back into its chest containment module.

The Wordsmith and his wife stand for several seconds, completely stunned by the figure in front of them. Jason's pupils expand and contract, as he involuntarily takes a step back.

"That's... that's impossible. You... you died. Amelia? No, how could it be you?!"

Phoebe covers her mouth with her palm. Her chest heaves as several completely wild and fantastical thoughts run through her head.

Hoarhiim destroyed the world Amelia was on. Jason confirmed her death with Locate. Was she necromantically revived by Mephisto? But why does she not have any of the markers of necromancy?! And why is she here, at the Core, wearing one of my exosuits? Mephisto couldn't have obtained one of those... could he?

Amelia Greyheart, the Black Queen, stands before Phoebe and Jason with a look of guilt on her face. She averts her eyes as the two people she wanted to see least look at her with expressions of shock and horror.

"It's... it's not what you think." Amelia mutters. "I'm not... no, that doesn't matter, right now. Listen to me, please!"

Amelia's eyes brighten as she takes a step toward Jason.

"Hope is in trouble! Gressil captured him, and he's holding him prisoner! He's torturing Hope right now, even as we speak!"

Jason, still unable to fully come to terms with the woman before him, hesitantly reaches out a hand to touch her face, before quickly pulling it back.

"You died! Don't just- don't just brush this aside! How are you here?! What the hell happened, Amelia?"

"I want to know, too." Phoebe says, her voice turning noticeably colder. "Lest we forget, you tried to kill Jason... twice. Why should we trust anything you have to say?"

Amelia bites her lip. "It's not what you think. I... Hope... Hope brought me back to life. He resurrected me from the dead. I've been living with him for the past six years."

Her words cause Phoebe and Jasaon both to experience another shock.

"That's unbelievable!" Jason shouts. "Where? Maiura? Of course, I never went to visit Hope there. It makes sense he'd do something like- no, but hold on! I have personally confirmed that Wordsmithing can't resurrect the dead! You're lying to me!"

Amelia shrugs helplessly. "Am I? The proof stands before you, Jason. I'm right here."

The Wordsmith's eyes become unfocused. He looks away from Amelia, unable to maintain his gaze on her while so many confusing thoughts rebound inside his head.

Amelia died. She died. I know she did! I didn't even want to believe it, but I saw the proof myself! I tried several Words of Power. I looked into my memories and saw what Hoarhiim did to her. I saw her last moments of pain as Joan of Arc pinned her to the ground...

A faint pressure builds up in Jason's chest. For the first time in ages, a gash rips across his heart, making him feel a sensation which is somewhat alien, and yet comforting as well.

I thought she was dead. I thought she couldn't come back. How did Hope do it? Does that mean... there's some way I could bring Daisy back, too?! Is there a way I can revive others who have fallen?!

While Jason's thoughts race, the denizens in his Mind Realm sit silently and listen. In his moment of panic, Jason accidentally projects his thoughts to all of them.

His mind-wife lowers her head and sighs.

Beneath all of these thoughts, it seems... Jason still cares deeply for Amelia. He hasn't forgotten about her, even after all this time. Maybe that's why Hope brought her back. He did lose me to Jason, after all.

In the real world, Physical Phoebe doesn't miss the changes in her husband's expression. She momentarily falls silent before turning to Amelia.

"You say Hope was captured by Gressil. That is ugly news, indeed, but how do you know this? And more importantly, I want to know why we should trust you. What's to stop you from going on another planet-slaughtering spree? Frankly, I'm sickened by your presence... especially after remembering the atrocities you've committed."

Amelia lowers her head.

"I... I'm not the same as in the past. I don't have magic anymore. It's all gone, and so is... Blaarjiim. Hope brought me back, but he either couldn't, or wouldn't, bring back Blaarjiim."

Amelia bobs her head slowly, as if she's having trouble believing her own words.

"It's better this way."

Jason, after assembling his thoughts, groggily returns his attention back to Amelia.

"So, Gressil has captured Hope, you say? And we have to... rescue him?"

Amelia's eyes immediately brighten. "Yes. Please! I don't know if you and Hope have any issues between each other, but you cannot let Gressil take over Hope's body. He's going to use the power of Wordsmithing if he succeeds!"

Jason nods slowly. "Yes. I... you're right. I have to save Hope. It won't be good to let him fall into the claws of- but how did he resurrect you? You have to tell me at least that much, Amelia."

The Wordsmith's mind pivots back to his original thoughts, making him once again see a faint light at the end of a tunnel: A chance at resurrecting his daughter.

Amelia's reply doesn't give him much inspiration. "I don't know the exact details. You'll have to ask Hope after we rescue him."

"No. You're lying!" Phoebe abruptly shouts, catching Amelia and Jason both by surprise. "Don't lie to us, Black Queen. You know how Hope revived you, so spit it out! Tell the truth, for once in your godforsaken life!"

Amelia winces under Phoebe's barrage, but doesn't relent. "I don't know, okay? I don't know! He just... did. He never told me how he did it. Listen, I've given you what you need, okay? Every second you delay is another second Gressil draws closer to stealing Hope's power. You cannot allow that to happen! I NEED you to save him!!"

The sheer emotions in her response make Phoebe widen her eyes.

"Wait... this isn't just about protecting Hope from Gressil. You... lived with him for six years. Were you and him-"

"We were intimate!" Amelia shouts, as tears well up in her eyes. "There! Is that what you wanted to hear?! While Jason got to ride off into the sunset with you, what did Hope get? NOTHING! Jason just cloned him and threw him away, like trash! Neither of you gave one god-damn about him! When I met him, he was broken-hearted, feeling nothing but anger and emptiness inside! Don't preach at me when you don't know the least bit about empathy, Phoebe!"

Amelia bites off the last word, making the Wordsmith's wife wince. For a brief moment, a powerful sense of shame wells up not only in her heart, but Jason's, too.

Several seconds pass. Phoebe doesn't reply, and neither does Jason.

The two of them reflect on Amelia's words.

Jason remembers the original reason he made Hope; to assist Neil in the Core and take care of the duties he himself didn't want to bother with.

Phoebe recalls the moment she had to pick between Jason and Hope, shortly after Jason cloned himself. She even remembers seeing a faint look of betrayal in Hope's eyes, though she brushed it off as unimportant at the time.

After a period of contemplation, Jason breaks the silence.

"I... you're right. I treated him terribly. He was just a tool to me. Maybe that's why he hates me so much. No... it's not a 'maybe.' That's definitely the reason. I was so stuck up, arrogant, and full of myself."

Jason sighs.

"While Hope worked on taking out the demons and rescuing humans, I bunkered up on Tarus II and lived life care-free. I just did whatever I wanted, taking only the minimum steps to prepare for a possible demon invasion. Because of my lack of discipline, my spoiled attitude... Daisy had to pay the price."

Amelia's eyes flicker. "Daisy? Who's that?"

The Wordsmith purses his lips.

"My daughter. She was my... my daughter. And now she's dead."

Realization swells within Amelia's thoughts.

"That's why you want to learn how Hope brought me back. So you can revive your daughter."

Jason nods.

"Yes."

"Then... I don't think..." Amelia starts to say, before correcting herself. "...I pray that Hope will be able to give you the answers you need."

"Me too." Jason mutters.

The three of them fall silent for half a minute.

Phoebe eventually speaks. "Well, time isn't on our side. Let me gather the others. We'll need to assemble a team to rescue Hope. I want Samantha in on this, too."

Jason nods absentmindedly. "Yeah. Let's move quickly."

"And Debra?" Amelia asks. "Do you know where she is? Is she still...?"

"She's alive," Phoebe says. "Why do you need to speak to her?"

"Oh, um, it's not her specifically," Amelia says, as she brushes a strand of long black hair behind her ears. "It's more that she's a proxy for Neil. Neil and Hope were close, you know."

Phoebe gazes at Amelia with suspicion for a moment.

Another lie. What is she hiding?

But she doesn't vocalize her thoughts.

"I see. Well, right now she's back inside the Fortress of Retribution, inside her private office. We'll drop you off there, then pick you back up when we're ready to head out and grab Hope."

Amelia cocks her head. "The Fortress of Retribution? That sounds ominous."

Phoebe chuckles wryly.

"Yes. Well, a lot has changed in the last few days, Amelia. A lot has changed..."

Part 306: Saving Humanity's Hope

Ten hours later, Jason and Phoebe finish assembling a small but lethal army of humanity's remaining elite commandos, few as they are. After explaining the situation to them, the Hero ends up with General Chadwick, Lieutenant Samuel, Corporal Hurent, Belial, and even Yamir, the minotaur cook.

In addition to these leaders, five thousand human commandos come along, all outfitted in various types of lethal weaponry. A few of them wear basic T-REX exosuits, but the majority don specialized Spectre, Rhino, Hummer, and Clinician battle-armors.

Jason and the rest gather up at the top of the Fortress of Retribution's plateau, waiting for the final preparations before they all head to the Warpgate and head inside the Labyrinth. Already, the midday sun has set, and darkness covers the land.

"Is this everyone?" Jason asks.

Phoebe nods. "Pretty much. We just need to get the star of this little show."

"I don't trust her." Belial snaps. "How can either of you?! Jason, don't tell me you're letting your old feelings cloud your judgment! This is Amelia we're talking about, the bloody Black Queen! Let me remind you, she killed many millions of people! She's pure evil! She even killed my HUSBAND!"

Privately, Jason think to himself that killing the Devil was likely doing the universe a favor. However, he doesn't give voice to that thought.

"I know you hate Amelia, but she doesn't have a trace of magical power anymore," Jason says. "Whatever method Hope used to bring her back, it seems to have stripped away her powers. Either that, or he removed them after the fact."

"I don't care about that!" Belial hisses, barely able to keep her voice down. She shoots a sidelong glance at the commandos and commanders standing at attention, ready to move out as soon as the Hero gives the word. "Don't you think we're bringing too few soldiers? Five thousand isn't even worth sneezing at! If that girl is some pawn of some Emperor, and if she's lying to us, we could all die dog deaths! Don't you see how dangerous this whole situation is?"

"The fact stands that Hope hasn't returned, and I can't sense him with my Wordsmithing," Jason says, his voice calm and steady. "Or, more specifically, I can sense him, but his presence is so weak and scattered that I can't get a lock on him, let alone a general location. He's still alive, and Amelia can lead us to him. I owe him this rescue, even if it puts my life at risk."

Phoebe gently rests a hand on Belial's shoulder, opening up her helmet so she can look the succubus in the eyes.

"I don't trust Amelia either, Sam. Not even a little. But her love for Hope is real, it's genuine. She definitely lied about certain parts of her identity, but not about Hope. We have to rescue him... we have to."

Belial opens her mouth. "But-"

"No buts," Jason interrupts. "If you don't trust her, then keep your eye on her. I don't intend to let her out of my sight. Better yet, tell me everything you can about Gressil. I barely know anything about him, other than what I saw when I first awoke in the Labyrinth. Just thinking about his appearance gives me the shivers."

Realizing neither Jason nor Phoebe will back down, Belial relents. She takes a step back and sighs.

"Um... fine. Fine. Gressil is, uh... well, to be honest, I'm not entirely sure about him. I know he was Lucifer's adopted son, and Ose's older brother. I don't know anything about his abilities or rank, though. I never personally interacted with him, certainly not in the past fifty millennia. I've never been one to hang around other demons."

Jason frowns. "That doesn't give me any useful intel. He's the prison-warden, so he must be decently high ranking, right? Is he a Lord? Baron? Duke? Emperor?"

Belial holds up her hands helplessly. "I don't know. Frankly, the only thing I do know about Gressil is that nobody likes him, and many fear him. He's... reclusive. Hostile. Violent. He tortures prisoners to the point where rumors say you can hear their screams even outside of Faith's End."

She pauses for a moment, as a faint memory appears in her mind.

"Oh, I do remember one time I saw him. It was before the end of the Energy Wars. Demons and humans were right in the heat of their fighting, the most violent part of that conflict. I met with Lucifer out of obligation, not desire. Satan needed me to speak to her about some mundane matter, and he was too busy to talk to her himself."

"And you saw Gressil?" Phoebe prompts.

"Yes. Him and Ose both. They were... well, they weren't a happy family. Gressil wasn't a bad person at that time, at least that wasn't the impression I got. He actually seemed like a decent guy. He sat off in a corner while Lucifer and Ose grilled me on the information I was delivering. Something about tactical reports of soldier movements. Anyway, I glanced over and saw Gressil... playing with butterflies."

Jason blinks twice. "Um. Butterflies?"

"Yes. Glowing green butterflies. I remember thinking that they were quite eye-catching. From what I remember, they were somewhat fake-looking, as if they came from a dream. Far too beautiful to be from this world. I made a mental note that they must be illusions. If you hadn't prompted me, I'd probably not recall that moment... it's just..."

Belial lowers her eyes.

"...Gressil seemed so sad. The butterflies looked more like a ritual he used to calm down, and less like something he did for fun. He seemed like such a distant person, someone unaccustomed to contact with other demons."

"Like a coping mechanism?" Phoebe asks.

"Rumor has it that Lucifer was a somewhat unpleasant mother," Belial answers. "And from all the times I had to bite my tongue and suffer talking to the bitch, I can't see how that assessment was wrong. She hated males more than anything else in the world; a trait Ose inherited. I can't imagine Gressil had a pleasant upbringing."

"Fantastic." Jason snorts. "So he might have mommy issues. One of you two, be sure to give him a good slap if he acts up."

Neither Phoebe nor Belial laughs.

"That's all I can remember," Belial concludes. "He probably has some sort of illusion magic, and he's mentally unhinged. We'll have to act carefully around him."

"You're the Second Emperor, even if the other demons now refuse to accept that title," Phoebe says. "It's him who should be afraid of you. Not to mention we have humanity's Hero right here. If Jason uses his Wordsmithing seriously, no demon will stand a chance against him. You saw what he did to Bael."

Belial hesitates for a moment before replying.

"...I suppose you're right. Although, you shouldn't speak so highly of me. After all, I never seem to win battles, these days. I'm not as good as I used to be. Even Ose... she beat me senseless."

"That was just a bad matchup," Jason comments. "She poked at the gaps in your armor, your emotional blind spots. If it was a contest of pure strength, you'd never lose."

"You can say that if you want," Belial replies. "But I don't believe it. Not anymore. Since Satan's death, I... I just don't have the capacity to fight with all my heart anymore. There's a gap in my chest, a void that I can't fill up with anything. It always weighs me down... every single day."

"Sam..." Phoebe whispers. "I'm always here if you need to talk."

"Thanks, Phoebe," Belial says, offering a weak smile. "That means a lot to me."

Belial takes a minute to compose herself, while Jason leaves the two women to walk over to General Chadwick and Lieutenant Samuel.

"Do you know anything about Amelia?" Jason asks. "You and Neil were close."

The portly Norwegian puffs up his chest. "We are close, Jason. Neil is still alive. I know it in my heart."

"Right. But do you know anything about Amelia?"

"Afraid not," Chadwick says. "I know Neil kept many secrets close to his chest. Amelia is probably one of them."

"So you're telling me nobody knows if she's really one of ours or if her story checks out?" Jason asks. "Even if I assume she might be telling the truth, I cannot fathom what method Hope used to bring her back to life. It's beyond me."

Lieutenant Samuel lifts his chin. "You can't bring people back from the dead? I thought your Wordsmithing was practically omnipotent."

"It's not, I can assure you of that," Jason answers. "I tried a bunch of different methods for bringing people back. Nothing worked. Solomon even explained what the revival process would require... those who die end up having their souls pass on to what he called the 'Great Beyond'. I don't know exactly what it is, but it seems to be some sort of unbreakable barrier in the universe, or physics, itself. You need a tremendous amount of magical power just to pull a soul back. I doubt even my new Cube-tool would have the power necessary."

Chadwick and Samuel shoot glances at each other, unsure of what to think.

"Yeah, this bitch don't pass the smell test for me," Samuel says. "Somethin' ain't right about her. I think you ought to talk to Debra. Seems Debra knows something. With your Wordsmithing, you could make her talk."

Chadwick shakes his head. "I don't approve. Debra is Neil's most trusted confidante. She's on our side, and certainly wouldn't do anything to put humanity in harm's way."

"Yeah?" Jason asks. "Like that other kid? What was his name... Henry? You guys sang his praises, but he was the one who trapped Neil inside the Core. Trust seems to be given out a little too sparingly these days. Let's not forget the infiltrators who killed Elder Skarde, or the ones who took over the Atlas Cannon. Our people are still only human, General. You'd do well not to put too much faith in them."

"Henry was... an exception," Chadwick murmurs. "I deeply resent his actions. Stupid kid. Foolish brat. I don't know how Ose coerced him, but we'll be carrying out an investigation after I return from this mission. I have him locked up and under heavy surveillance."

Jason waves his hand flippantly. "Whatever gets the job done. Give me a minute. I'll go and pay Debra a visit. Amelia should be done chatting with her, by now. It's about time we all head out."

"Yes, Commander." Chadwick says, as he takes a step back.

"Teleport." Jason says, vanishing with a flicker of movement.

A moment later, Jason reappears a quarter of a mile away, outside the makeshift stone house built for Neil's assistant, Debra. Like the several-hundred other buildings in the immediate vicinity, it contains only the barest amenities, hastily thrown together to provide a simple shelter from the elements. It lacks even a single window, looking more like a generic cube slapped into the middle of the barren wasteland around it.

Jason gives the house a once-over, then takes a step forward. Hardly has he begun his approach before the front door opens with some effort and a fully exosuited Amelia steps out, with Debra following behind her.

"I was about to go and join up with you and the others," Amelia says, her faceless helmet providing no window into her expression. "But I guess everyone must be ready sooner than I expected."

Debra remains silent, merely gazing at Jason from behind Amelia, her eyes giving no insight into her thoughts.

Jason faintly smiles, though his expression lacks any warmth. "Yeah, we're ready. Debra, I hope you two had a fun conversation."

Neil's assistant nods. "We did, yes. Thank you for giving us some privacy."

Jason's eye twitches. "Either of you mind finally telling me what's going on? Why the secrecy? If I wanted, I could have Wordsmithed to listen in on your conversation, but I didn't. I'd prefer to hear the truth from your mouths."

Debra flinches, only to immediately relax her posture.

"It's... it's better if you don't know, Jason. Not right now, anyway. You should focus on saving Hope first, and Neil, too. They'll tell you anything relevant once the time is right."

"So you are hiding something from me," Jason growls. "Well, what is it? Spit it out!"

"If you want to know, you can always just read our thoughts," Amelia says, her tone flat. "Don't pretend like you've ever been good at keeping your curiosity satiated. I seem to recall you peeping on me during a particularly... ugly moment in my life. If you want to know, just look. It's not like I can stop you."

Jason's anger becomes mollified. He averts his eyes and shakes his head.

"No. Never mind. I... I won't do that. Not to you."

For a moment, neither Amelia nor Debra says anything.

Debra eventually takes a step back to return to her house. "Make sure you return safely," She says, before walking away.

After Debra steps inside her home and closes the door, several awkward seconds of silence pass before Jason raises his head.

"We should really be going." He mutters.

Amelia's helmet dissipates into nanite particles. The moment her face appears, she locks eyes with Jason.

"It wasn't your fault, you know."

Jason blinks. "Pardon?"

"Hoarhiim... he's the one who, um... who hurt me. You never wanted that. He forcibly took over your body and made you do... all sorts of awful things to me. It wasn't your fault."

The Wordsmith frowns deeply. "I never said it was."

"Yes, you did. Or rather, Hope did. Many times. The look of guilt on his face... you and him share all the same memories prior to his creation. I know you still feel a lot of guilt, just as he does."

Jason's frown turns ugly. "I don't know why you're bringing this up-"

"Because you need to hear it!" Amelia interjects. "Don't think I don't see the way you look at me, Jason. You aren't as unbreakable as you pretend. I understand just how much you've lost. Not only me, but Kar, as well. I didn't get to say goodbye to him. Then your daughter, too... your heart must be in immense pain, but you just keep all those emotions bottled up. Hope is no different. He also hides his suffering, not wanting to 'inconvenience' anybody."

Jason's expression softens. "You don't know me. I've changed a lot in the last six years."

"I know you have." Amelia replies. "I can see it in your eyes. But you're not the only one who's changed... so have I. Right now, you have the same eyes I did, all those years ago... when Satan took Levvy from me."

"Levvy..." Jason mutters. "Leviathan? The dark dragon?"

Amelia crosses her arms and looks away.

"Dark dragon... no. He was a good boy. A hurt soul. He lost all his brothers, his sisters, and his mother, too. He was lonely, just like me. All anyone else ever saw in him was a scary monster, or a beacon of power. He just wanted to be left alone. He gave up everything to save me. Not once, but twice. The day Satan killed him... I just wanted to rip the whole universe to shreds. And now, you have that same vicious hatred bubbling under your surface."

For once, the Wordsmith doesn't offer a snarky comment. He merely lifts his eyes to look out at the darkened horizon, and the stars in the sky.

"Well. I guess you're not wrong. I am still... utterly enraged. Heartbroken. I don't even know how I feel. It's just a tangled mess in my stomach."

"It will consume you." Amelia says. "Hatred begets hatred. That's what Hope taught me. I want to be a better person. The problem is... I still have that hatred in my heart. Only now... it conflicts with this other feeling..."

Amelia pauses, unsure how to phrase the next part. She gives up and shrugs.

"I can probably explain it better later. For now, let's just get going."

Jason nods. "Yeah. Let's do that."

After a few more moments of silence, Jason speaks again.

"Teleport."

He and Amelia vanish from the spot, reappearing smack in the middle of his assembled army. Amelia sweeps her gaze across the five thousand soldiers and frowns.

"Only this many?"

"They'll be enough." Jason says. "I would like to rescue as many people from Gressil's dungeon as I can. Considering how narrow and cramped the Labyrinth corridors are, we'll have a good choke point if the demons try anything."

"Rescue people, huh?" Amelia mutters. "Well, I've seen the condition of his prisoners. There won't be many worth saving..."

"Even if we can only put them out of their suffering, that will be enough for me," Jason replies. He turns to see his wife and Belial walking up. "I brought Amelia. We're ready to go."

"Took you a few minutes," Belial says. "Hope you two had a good chat."

Jason shrugs. "We did."

While Belial maintains an air of relative hostility toward Amelia, Phoebe appears remarkably less so. Knowing she has a spiritual self inside of Jason mollifies any worries she might have about his feelings for the former Black Queen.

Belial puffs out her chest as she approaches Amelia.

"Listen here. I don't like you. In fact, I hate you. I don't want to speak to you, or even look at you. Understand?"

Amelia bites her lip. "Because of Satan."

"Yes!" Belial snaps. "I never liked you, not even one bit! Frankly, I should have killed you myself during that battle against the Archdemon! I tried my damnedest, but failed because of my own weakness. Now, there's nothing you can do to stop me. If you make even one shifty sidelong glance at anyone here, I'll cut your head off!"

Amelia remains unmoved. "I don't think you will, Belial. You're not that kind of person."

Belial's right hand suddenly morphs into a gruesome-looking executioner's blade, a massive one-handed scimitar with a curved blade.

"TRY ME! I've already killed more demons in the last week than my entire existence before now, a thousand-fold! Adding a husband-killer to the list won't even make me bat an eye!"

Still, Amelia appears unmoved. She shoots a look at Jason, Phoebe, and Belial in equal measure.

"You've all changed in the past six years, and not for the better. That's... too bad. But understandable."

She stares Belial in the eyes.

"You hate me for killing Satan... but you weren't even there on that day. Do you even know what happened?"

"I know enough." Belial replies.

Amelia shakes her head. "After we save Hope... you and I should talk. There's... something you don't know."

"Is it about Lucifer?" Belial asks, a malicious smirk on her face. "I know she set Satan up. If she were still alive, I'd have a bone to pick with her, too."

"Lucifer? No." Amelia replies. "I didn't know she had anything to do with him showing up when he did. No, it's more about... I'll tell you later. Every minute we delay is another minute Hope suffers."

Belial snorts. "It must be nice. You still have a chance to rescue the man you love. If only the rest of us were so lucky."

Phoebe steps in between Amelia and Belial. "Alright. I think you two have said enough. Jason, we're ready. Let's get moving."

The Wordsmith glances in the direction of the distant Warpgate, far to the west, now surrounded by heavily reinforced walls on all sides.

"Yeah. Let's go. I just pray we're not too late to save Hope..."

As the Wordsmith's army departs to leave the city's confines, a single trooper appears behind them, kitted out in a stealth-type Spectre exosuit.

This trooper watches for several minutes as the Wordsmith's rescue team departs Tarus II through its Warpgate and heads deep into the Labyrinth.

His helmet opens up, revealing the face of Makoto Ueda.

"Hmm. The Hero leaves to make a long journey. His path is uncertain. The ramifications of his actions make peering beyond the veil of Karma... difficult."

The man holds up his hand. A spark of spiritual energy appears for a moment, then vanishes, erased by the weakness of his veins.

"My abilities have weakened after so many reincarnations. It will not be long, now. I must find my successor. Orias... he alone holds the key to unraveling the Great Mystery."

Makoto Ueda's eyes glow pure white for a moment. His helmet closes up, sealing his head away inside his exosuit. Then, his body shimmers and turns invisible.

He makes his way toward the Warpgate, heading for a dangerous destination.

He must locate his successor.

He must find the future Karmic King.

Part 307: Inferno's Return

An endless blackness stretches out in all directions. Darkness. A void encompassing the spectrum of infinity, beyond the sight of any mere mortal. So vast is its scope that if one had an eternity, they could never comprehend the possibility of it lacking a border.

In this vast void, a single figure hangs, unmoving.

Beelzebub.

The Duke of Inferno groggily floats about, his soul faded and lacking all of its former luster. No longer does he appear to be the invincible Duke of Inferno, but instead, a speck of a speck, a mote of dust floating in the cosmic void.

As the muddle-headed demon lingers in the darkness of the abyss, a voice speaks to him.

Well, well, well. Look who's come back already.

Beelzebub slowly opens his eyes. He lifts his hand to look at it, though the exertion taxes him greatly. Yet, even in the infinite emptiness, his soul glows like a faint beacon of light on the horizon. He easily makes out five faded fingers, barely glimmering in the gloom.

"Where... am I? What happened?"

You died again. Idiot. I warned you, but you didn't listen. You never do... and that just makes my job harder.

Beelzebub blinks his eyes.

"This voice... sounds... familiar... Creator?"

Yup. It's me.

A faint, ghostly apparition appears before Beelzebub for a moment, briefly coalescing into a vague reflection of Beelzebub's appearance before fading away.

Oh, I'd love to talk to you face-to-face. Too bad. I don't have much power these days. Projecting my voice is about all I can do.

The Duke of Inferno listens absentmindedly before closing his eyes.

"I... I was... on Tarus II... and then-"

You blew yourself up. I told you you should try to be a better person, but did you listen to me? Of course not. Who am I anyway, but the Creator of the cosmos. Nobody important... grumble grumble...

"For a so-called 'Creator,' you seem awfully undignified." Beelzebub mutters.

And how should I speak? Should I use 'thee's' and 'thou's' like my so-called children? Should I talk all high and mighty, just because I was once an almighty being capable of breaking down and reforming the universe? Those who talk like that are usually just miserable underlings. That's why powerful people like to dress casually.

The Duke of Inferno opens his eyes and frowns. "I have no reason to believe you're really the Creator. For all I know, that damned Hero planted something in my head and this is all just some hallucinatory dream."

...Fair point. I can't demonstrate my power, since I don't have it anymore. I lost it a long time ago, to someone I considered my own flesh and blood. These days, I can barely even interact with the physical world through a few chosen mediums. Some all-powerful 'god' I am.

"What? Someone took your power? Am I understanding you correctly?"

That's right. A miserable, greedy little bugger. Cute kid, though, or so I thought at the time. Ah, how becoming a Father can warp a man's views. I let that little tyke get away with so much... and I paid the price for it. But it's fine. I lived a good long life. Several eternities, if you'd believe it.

"I don't understand. How could you live for an eternity?" Beelzebub asks. "That means infinity. Surely, you had to have a beginning."

Tsk. Right, sometimes I forget how small the idea of time is to a mortal. You think in terms of years, or centuries, or eons. For me, an 'eternity' is merely another measurement of time. It means the length of time measured by the creation, expansion, and collapse of what you call a 'universe.' I lived through several of them.

Beelzebub's frown deepens. "Several eternities... several universes... but what do you mean? Isn't there only one universe?"

Currently? Yes. One universe which lives, dies, and reappears. Humans call it a 'Big Bang.' It's more of a... Karmic Cycle. The details aren't that interesting, at least not to you. Trust me when I say you don't need to learn more about how Reality works. The Akashic Sequence is not for the weak-minded.

"I... see." Beelzebub says, softening his brow. "Never mind all that, then. Where am I, now? Why has my body not regenerated?"

The Creator sighs.

If only it were that easy. Do you really think your body is immortal? You do not even understand the power which sustains you. The gift of Nirvana is something that few can properly resonate with. You may believe that you obtained it through your own merits... but you did not. Someone gave this gift to you, and its power is finite.

"Nirvana..." Beelzebub mutters, as gears turn in his head. "I have heard this word before... but somehow, its meaning seems exceptionally profound."

And so it should. Nirvana is a unique ability which has only ever belonged to one entity; myself. When my son stole my power, he gave it to another, who then placed it inside of a unique artifact. That artifact is now known as the Phoenix.

Beelzebub's eyes widen. "The Phoenix! Yes, I have heard of it before. Master Agares told me one of the ancient angels unleashed its power to kill some old Demon Emperor during the War in Heaven."

Now you're starting to put the pieces together. The Creator says. Yes. Your power of rebirth comes from none other than the Phoenix itself. Regenerating simple body parts is a simple feat for even a single of the Phoenix's feathers. But for its Nirvana to protect your soul from collapsing and passing into the Great Beyond, even Nirvana will have its limits. You have already detonated your entire body once. Doing so a second time put a fatal amount of pressure on your existence.

"A fatal amount of pressure? So... am I dead?"

Not yet.

The Creator pauses.

Your existence is... trapped in a transitory state. Frankly, were it not for a lucky coincidence at the moment of your detonation, nothing could have saved you. However, as luck had it, the original Phoenix itself was in close proximity to you at the moment of your death. And so, a small amount of your life-force was preserved. You can still regenerate... one last time.

"Wonderful!" Beelzebub crows. "Then why are we even talking? I must regenerate at once and get back to teach those humans a lesson they'll never forget!"

Again, the Creator falls silent.

When he replies, his tone turns cold.

You still don't understand, Beelzebub. You're just a babe in my eyes. A selfish bastard who nobody likes. You only think about yourself. You never put anyone else's needs above your own.

Before Beelzebub can interject, the Creator continues.

Even so, I sense a spark of potential inside you. Deep down, in the depths of your heart, you have a certain level of compassion and empathy. You sense the plight of your fellow demons and wish to rectify their living situations. You remember what it was like as a young imp, climbing the ranks to become a Lord, a Baron, and eventually, a Duke.

You do not enjoy the suffering of others. You hate the corrupt system. You wish to burn it all down, but always, you allow your own selfishness to get the better of you.

It's too bad. I keep holding out for the possibility that you'll change... but when you return this time, there won't be any second chances. You won't be able to revive again, Beelzebub. You've run out of do-overs.

The Duke of Inferno's agitation lessens as he listens to the Creator's words.

"Then, what are you saying I should do? Fight to free my fellow demons? Give up and kowtow to the humans? My pride will not allow that!"

The Creator's tone softens. I have lived for many eternities. I have guided several universes from beginning to end. Always, life has a way of turning order to chaos, and chaos to order. No matter how I influenced people, they always came to blows. Selfishness, pettiness, all of those attributes surfaced no matter how I influenced them. For the first time since I came into being, I have taken on a more passive role.

He continues. I don't want to tell you what you must do, Beelzebub. There is no meaning in my doing so. Rather, since you are one of the few entities I can still communicate with, I would much prefer that you learn from your mistakes and become a better person. It is easy to strike down your enemies. It is hard to empathize with them.

Beelzebub snorts. "I see. So you want me to become more compassionate to my inferiors. Shall I spread my cheeks and let an army enter? Compassion is for the weak. There is no meaning in it."

That is where you are wrong, the Creator says, his tone ominous. If everyone fights, they will always wallow in misery and pain. If they get along, everyone will live happily. I only want to see one eternity's worth of sentients enjoying themselves, without causing harm to one another. In all my eternities, not once have I gotten to see that sight. It makes me feel... frustrated. I was once all-powerful, yet short of forcing my will onto the minds of others, I could not bring them the happiness I thought they deserved.

Beelzebub clicks his tongue.

"Well, how about that. The almighty Creator is a romantic sap who hates conflict. I suppose that's why your own son took you down, huh? You didn't have the guts to fight back."

Destroying him would have been easy... The Creator murmurs. But never have I hurt my creations. Always, they bring about their own ends. All my children, all those I loved, died eventually. Even when I made them immortal, they killed each other for power, glory, and status. Jealousy. Hatred. In a way, I was glad when my son turned against me. My death meant I could no longer blame myself for the woes of future eternities.

"Hmph. You say you're glad you died, yet here you are. You're not even dead, old man. Maybe you'll come back someday, in spite of your complaints."

No. I am unable to return. The Creator opines. Already, the Akashic Sequence has selected its candidates for my replacement. Much as how I replaced the Creator before me, and they replaced the Creator before themselves, so too must the unending cycle revolve. As much as this may shock you, Beelzebub... you are one of those candidates.

Beelzebub's body jolts in alarm. "What? Me?! You're saying I could become an all-powerful Creator like you?!"

Mmm. Yes. All-powerful. All-knowing. All-encompassing loneliness. It is the greatest curse anyone can endure. An existence where, no matter how badly you fuck up, or how expertly you perform, you will never make any meaningful gains. I've seen the birth of every star, every atom in the universe. I've watched galaxies burst into existence and decay into nothingness. I've heard every word every molecule imagined. Frankly, even though I find you to be a complete and irredeemable asshole, I wouldn't wish the curse of becoming a Creator on you or anyone else.

"If you hated the job so much, then why not give your power away to someone else?" Beelzebub asks.

Someone has to be a Creator. If I give up the position, the next Creator is liable to force it back upon me, so wretched is its all-encompassing loneliness. Everyone wants more power, Beelzebub. But once they have it, and once they reach the ultimate height, they realize there never was any point in obtaining it in the first place. There's nothing left to strive for.

Another vague apparition flickers in front of Beelzebub for a moment. A faint ghostly image of a man rubbing his eyes appears, then fades away.

I'm getting tired. It's not often I talk this much. I do enjoy the sensation of weakness, though. It makes me feel alive. Once you've had everything, you can truly appreciate what it means to have nothing.

The Creator chuckles.

Hehe. And speaking of which, I think it's about time for you to go back, Beelzebub. This second revival won't be like the previous one, so prepare yourself. You're going to understand my point better than ever, given the circumstances.

"...You didn't do anything weird to me, did you?"

Sorry! Connection's cutting out. Can't understand you!

"Hold on a minute! Creator? Creator! Explain yourself!"

New phone, who dis?

The last thing Beelzebub feels is a strong pulling sensation on the back of his head as his vision fades away.

Tarus II.

Two soldiers in T-REX exosuits pace around the perimeter of the half-mile-wide crater left behind by the Duke of Inferno when he detonated his body in a terrific nuclear explosion. This bowl-shaped basin, now named Tragedy Crater in memorial to the lives lost, takes up an uncomfortable amount of space on the plateau, drawing most people's gazes to it at least once in a while.

The soldiers, a man and a woman, cast casual glances at the crater, as well as away from it. They can't help but heave deep, pained sighs whenever they see the painfully slow rebuilding efforts taking place in the distance.

Crude, square lodgings get constructed via Phoebe Hiro's specialized energy tools, capable of synthesizing basic housing for a single individual or family within a few hours. With so many people homeless, most of them have to sleep on the streets, though at least the Environmental Shield keeps them safe from the elements.

The troopers chit-chat with each other as they walk.

The male trooper speaks first. "I heard Commander Jason just headed into the Labyrinth to find Commander Hope. Rumor has it a group of Demon Emperors captured Hope and hid him in a tower somewhere."

"Huh. Someone else told me differently," The female trooper replies. "They said we didn't have enough food to feed everyone, so the Hero was going to capture and kill some monsters to feed us all."

"That's ridiculous. Jason could just Wordsmith us more food if that were the case."

"Yeah? Like how he could Wordsmith us better houses? His power has limits, you know."

"I dunno. This whole war... it just sucks. My brother died during Beelzebub's last attack. Imagine, he made it to the very end, then died thanks to one last middle finger from the Creator."

The female soldier shakes her head. "I lost both of my sons. Even named one of them Jason, in honor of our Commander. I thought that name was supposed to bring him good luck. Turns out, it was a bad choice."

"Sorry to hear that. There's no easy way to deal with a death. At times like these- huh?"

The male soldier perks his head up and turns to the left. Inside Tragedy Crater, a flicker of movement catches his attention. A naked man tumbles down the crater's edge and bounces off the sides several times, rapidly rolling toward the bottom.

The soldier immediately motions with his hand to turn on his wide-band communicator.

"All troops, this is Corporal Reynolds! I've got movement in the hot zone! Looks like someone fell inside! Keep your weapons at the ready; it might be Beelzebub!"

"We still have the Demon Containment Unit," The man says. "Commander Jason made sure it was ready in case of any eventualities during his departure. Now, let's move!"

Both soldiers brazenly leap into the crater, while a hundred others quickly arrive at the upper perimeter and point their weapons toward the figure tumbling toward the bottom of the bowl.

Within seconds, Corporal Reynolds and his companion arrive beside the fallen figure. They level their weapons at the person, only to immediately breathe a sigh of relief.

"Pale skin. No horns. This can't be Beelzebub. Roll him over."

The man issues an order to his companion while keeping his gun trained on the naked man's dome. His partner slides over and rolls the fallen figure onto his back, wincing empathetically as she observes the face of an old man with wrinkled skin, copious amounts of facial hair, ash-grey skin, and pale brown eyes.

The old man wheezes painfully.

"Uhh... uhh... hu-hurts..."

"He's a civilian!" The woman says. "Facial ID isn't giving me a lock, but he's definitely human. I think this old man wandered too close to the edge and fell into Tragedy Crater."

Her companion scrutinizes the old man's face while his T-REX gives out detailed scans and readings.

"Medic! We need a medic!"

Within minutes, a pair of figures appear at the top of Tragedy Crater, two of the local doctors who have taken over in Belial's absence.

One of them is a male nurse of some minor renown.

The other is none other than Rosalia, a recent demon convert who helped save lives during the brutal Stormbringer Attack.

Both of them stand at the top of the crater and wait while a pair of Hummer-troopers airlift the old man out, then place him onto a movable cot.

The male nurse quickly inspects the old man. "He's lucky. A few microfractures, but no broken bones. This fellow is made of some tough stuff."

Rosalia narrows her eyes as she examines the seemingly ordinary old man. However, she says nothing, and instead gestures vaguely in the direction of the makeshift hospital building, a pale shadow of its former self.

"Let's get this old man to a sick-bed! I'll take personal care of him!"

Hardly have the words left her mouth before the old man turns his head to look at her, shock in his eyes.

"Cough... cough... R-Rosal...?"

"It's going to be okay, Grandpa Ned," Rosalia says, offering him a sweet smile. "I'll take good care of you!"

Corporal Reynolds shoots her a look of surprise. "You know this man? We don't have any records on him."

"Of course I do! He's Old Man Ned! Uhh, he lived away from the main city, in the forest. His wooden hut must have gotten destroyed during the blast. Then he wandered back in and... you can guess the rest! He's always kept to himself, so it's no surprise you don't know him."

Corporal Reynolds nods, then inputs her testimony into his report.

"I see. Well, if you know him, then that's good enough for me. Alright, get this man somewhere safe so he can heal. Everyone else, return to duty, and continue watching the perimeter!"

The various commandos head back to guard Tragedy Crater, leaving Rosalia and her subordinate nurse alone with the old man. The two of them wheel their patient half a mile to the hospital outpost and put him inside a small makeshift tent.

"I'll take over here," Rosalia says, her voice oddly more cheerful than usual. "Thanks for all the help, Davey!"

"Are you sure you don't need any help?" The nurse, David, asks.

"I'm good! I've helped out Old Man Ned lots of times, he'll be fine. He's a little senile, you see!"

"Oh, alright. Take care, then, Rosalia."

As the man turns to leave, he fails to notice the look of horror on the patient's face.

Beelzebub rasps out a plea for help.

"N-no... ple-ease... don't... go..."

His weak voice practically gets swept away by the wind, leaving him alone in the tent with Rosalia.

The obese demoness chuckles giddily to herself.

"Oh, what fortune, Mister Beelzebub! I don't know what happened and why you're so weak, but at least you're not screaming in pain like last time! And what happened to your horns? Why is your skin pale? This is quite the mystery? But I'd recognize my Mister Beelzebub anywhere, teehee!"

The Duke of Inferno shivers violently.

"R-Rosalia... I... cough..."

"It's just the funniest thing," Rosalia says, as she gazes at the ceiling and speaks more to herself than to Beelzebub. "I actually prayed yesterday to the Creator that you would end up alright, and he delivered you right to me! Since that hussy Belial isn't here, nobody will know when I whisk you away! I can save you all to myself, and nobody will take you from me. Especially not that slut, Ose! That filthy little whore! She tried to seduce you, but she lost you and the Creator himself delivered you right into my hands! Ah, how He works in mysterious ways!"

Rosalia hums a merry tune to herself before reaching into a box filled with medical supplies. She ignores Beelzebub's weak protests while continuing to mindlessly babble to nobody in particular.

"Excellent work on that explosion too, I must say. You killed SO many stupid humans, it made me weep tears of joy! These lowly mongrels just aren't worth my time, but I had to come here because of that damn Gressil's orders. Bluh! How dare he order me around?! Anyway- oh, here it is!"

She pulls out a clean cloth from the medical bag, as well as a chemical agent known best for its sedative effects. She douses the rag with a hearty dose of Chloroform, then leans over and presses it against Beelzebub's face.

The weakened Duke of Inferno widens his eyes in horror. He tries to fight back, but his pitifully weak body can barely move, let alone fight off the wiles of his unexpected captor.

"Shhh, quiet!" Rosalia says, as her voice becomes more distant. "This is for your own good, Mister Beelzebub! I'll make sure to hide you somewhere safe, where nobody will ever take you away from me again..."

Beelzebub's consciousness drifts away, with only one last thought lingering in his mind.

Curse... you... Creator...

Part 308: Approaching Faith's End

A small army, 5,000 strong, consisting of male and female humans, monsters, and even a few scattered demons, makes their way into the Labyrinth. Led by humanity's Hero, the Wordsmith, they begin a tactical assault on the unsuspecting Labyrinthian denizens while slowly and steadily advancing toward the halls of Faith's End, Hell's primary prison.

Jason Hiro stomps forward, leading the charge. His exosuit allows him to brazenly walk forward without fear of any demon's attacks. His glowing eyes flick from side to side as he uses a familiar set of Words of Power he first created back when he lost his vision.

"Perception. Infrared. Sonar. Detection. Tracking. Targeting."

A wireframe-like view of the world spreads throughout the Wordsmith's vision. His head swivels around with mechanical efficiency as he points at upcoming corners and calls out the positions of unseen enemies.

"Thirty-four meters ahead. One Demon Lord. Two minotaurs. Three goblins and a half dozen orcs."

Without missing a beat, he adds in a Word of Power.

"Nausea."

His magic directly strikes the soul of that group of enemies, instantly forcing them to their knees. They all heave up their guts, making them helpless against the human army as they turn the corner and gun them down.

"Up ahead, another group," Jason says, as he outlines another set of enemies.

This time, before the humans can get close, those monsters turn tail and flee.

"Never mind." Jason says.

As the Wordsmith's metal boots pound against the floor, his wife takes up a position at his right, while Amelia stays on his left, and Belial lingers behind all three. Unlike the humans, Belial doesn't bother wearing an exosuit, as it would only hamper her powers.

"These hallways look different from how I remember," Amelia says. "Do you know the way to Faith's End?"

The Wordsmith quietly nods. "I know it well. It's where I first woke up in Hell."

After a momentary pause, he adds, "It hasn't all been bad, though. I've made a lot of friends. Even married a hot lady."

Phoebe snorts. "So romantic."

As the Wordsmith's army continues gunning down monsters and demons, the word gets out that an elite human killing force has entered Hell's halls. Despite Jason's anticipation, not a single powerful enemy bars their way.

The Wordsmith frowns.

"I expected to see a Hidden Emperor, by now. A Duke, at the least. Certainly a Baron. What's going on, Samantha?"

The Emperor of Passion shrugs, a motion he picks up with his 360-degree omnivision.

"I don't know," Belial replies. "Certainly, the Hidden Emperors won't like to get involved with the First Hell's matters, but you have practically dismantled their entire leadership. I can't imagine Fenrir or the others would let a chance to assert their dominance slip past."

"Maybe they're all afraid of Jason." Phoebe suggests.

"Unlikely. You don't know how arrogant some of the Hidden Emperors are. Take Gorn, for instance. He is one of the mightiest Emperors I know. If I had to fight him, I don't know if I would come out on top. He has equal ambition to rival his strength, too, which is what makes him so fearsome."

"But you're the Second Emperor," Phoebe says. "Even if that title was taken away from you, it implies you're the strongest Emperor in existence, aside from the First."

"That title was given to me during the Ancient Era," Belial says. "I was absolutely the strongest aside from Satan, back then. These days... I'm not so sure."

Jason listens to her concerns and nods. "I'll have to keep an eye out for him, then. Gorn, huh? The Emperor of Many Faces. Sounds like a scary guy."

"I try not to talk to men like him," Belial says. "Or most other powerful demons. They're all fairly stuck-up and snotty. Fenrir especially gives me the shivers."

"Sounds like a good choice to me," Amelia mutters. "I'd do the same."

In the rear of the human army, Lieutenant Samuel wears his Rhino-type T-REX. His heavily armored figure intimidates any enemies who might be foolish enough to strike at their flanks.

Beside the Lieutenant stands one of fewer than a hundred demons living among the humans, and one of only two Lords in their ranks, a female demoness named Kiari, the Lord of Gnats. Her long brown hair is somewhat stringy and sticky, as bits of mucus adheres it to her skin. She wears simple woven clothes, while thousands of tiny bugs crawl around on her skin, giving her a rather nasty-looking appearance. Her face, somewhat plain, doesn't make her look particularly ugly or pretty, but the gnats nibbling at her skin would cause most men to avert their eyes in disgust.

Kiari periodically turns around to look behind the army. Her gnats swarm in the distant hallways, transmitting information to her telepathically.

"We have a few more followers," She says to Samuel. "Couple of orcs. Both undead. They might be Mephisto's."

Samuel doesn't reply for a moment. He merely turns his head to look at her, then returns to facing forward.

"...Sir?" She asks.

"I may have been assigned to walk with you," Samuel says, "but I don't have to talk with you. Cut the chit-chat. Only warn me if someone dangerous shows up."

"Have I... done something to offend you?" Kiari asks.

"Something like that. You're a demon. Demons killed my family. I'll never trust your kind."

The Lord of Gnats winces. "I'm sorry to hear that. I didn't know. I've always sympathized with how humans were treated. I've just been too weak to change anything..."

"Tell it to someone who cares." Samuel growls. "I don't want to talk to you or look at you. Once this mission's over, we'll never speak again."

A few soldiers walking ahead of Samuel turn their heads back to observe the conversation, then return to facing forward, thinking better of getting involved. After Samuel's heroics in the Stormbringer Attack, the vast majority of people deeply respect his opinion.

Kiari lowers her head. "I'm sorry, sir. I didn't mean to offend you. I'll be quiet, now."

Moments later, a trooper in front of Kiari turns around and lowers his helmet to look at her.

"With all due respect to the Lieutenant, I have a different opinion. I heard about the good you did after Beelzebub's... detonation. Your gnats helped us find several people buried under rubble, including my daughter. I want to sincerely express my thanks to you, miss Kiari."

The Lord of Gnats lifts her head and blushes. "R-really? I'm glad to hear that. Was she that little girl in the raggedy white dress? She was very sweet."

"She had some burns, but was otherwise alright, and she made a full recovery," The soldier says. "A lot of demons are awful monsters... but anyone who stands on our side deserves my respect. It's brave of you to fall in with humanity when we're so weak, especially when the so-called 'Hidden Emperors' might appear at any time and attack us. Good things will definitely come for you in the future."

"I don't know if humanity will make it," Kiari says, "but I just want to make a difference, like Miss Belial. I've always admired her kind heart. I just wish my people weren't so... brutal."

The soldier reactivates his helmet, then turns to face forward again.

"We can only pray the Hero manages to rearrange the natural order. Demons like you give me hope for a better future... one where we can all live in harmony."

Samuel snorts. "If we ever get there, and I doubt we will, it will only be after our boots stomp the skulls of countless bloodskin oppressors. Call me skeptical, but I have little hope for the future."

Kiari sighs. "Me too, honestly. It's all so... bleak."

The human army marches inexorably toward Faith's End. The closer they draw and the more enemies they crush, the fewer that oppose their way. The hallways soon become utterly barren as every remotely intelligent sentient steers clear of the small but frightening force walking into their land.

"We're getting close," Belial says. She furrows her eyebrows immediately after. "But something feels... off."

"In what way?" Phoebe asks.

The Emperor of Passion pauses for a moment. She stares down an upcoming corridor and frowns deeply.

"I... can't sense anything up ahead."

Jason nods slowly. "My omnivision can't see forward at all. It's as if a huge, bubble-like void is blocking my vision. Some sort of... anti-magic energy."

For a brief moment, the Hero and Second Emperor exchange concerned glances. Jason's faceless helmet meets Belial's gaze, and they nod.

"We'll move forward slowly," Jason says. "This might be a trap. Could the Hidden Emperors have anticipated my coming here?"

Amelia pipes up. "When I first showed up here, Dawn told me she couldn't come along with me. I didn't think much of it at the time, but now I'm wondering if this wasn't the reason why..."

"Dawn?" Jason asks. "Who is that?"

"Um. She was a Demon Lord," Amelia explains. "The Lord of Caves, to be exact. I hadn't met her before. She told me Fenrir knew Hope was here..."

"Why didn't you mention here before?" Belial asks, turning to frown at the former Black Queen. "You're telling me Fenrir had one of her underlings lead you here? This reeks of a trap! What else aren't you telling us?!"

Amelia winces, though her expression remains hidden behind her helmet.

"I... well, now that you mention it, there is one other thing I've just recalled... I really ought to have mentioned it sooner."

"And that would be?" Belial asks.

"...Gressil. Um. Dawn told me that he is a Hidden Emperor. Specifically, the Emperor of Chaos."

Jason and Phoebe both whirl around to look at her. The Wordsmith's tone turns harsh. "What?! How could you leave out such an important detail, Amelia? Are you KIDDING me?! Don't you think we'd want to know we're about to walk into the lair of a god-fucking-damned EMPEROR?"

"Seriously!" Phoebe shouts, her anger just as pointed. "Is this a game to you?! We only brought five thousand soldiers! We could die here!"

Amelia lowers her head. "Sorry. When Gressil attacked me, I... I had a lot of things on my mind. Some details kind of slipped away. And I was scared for Hope, so... I didn't think to mention a few things."

The Wordsmith audibly groans, but doesn't maintain his anger. "Gah! Alright, fine. We know now, so Gressil won't catch us by surprise. Belial, can you tell anything about this strange anti-magic field? What's causing it?"

The Emperor of Passion shakes her head. "I can't tell much of anything. It doesn't seem corrosive to our souls or something terrible like that, but I won't be able to activate any magical abilities if we enter. Neither will you."

Jason hesitates.

"So, no Wordsmithing?"

"Probably not." Belial answers.

The Wordsmith pauses for a full minute, weighing the pros and cons.

"Emperors cannot be defined by common sense. A casual slap can kill ten humans, even if they wear exosuits. If neither you nor I can use our magic, we'll be sitting ducks."

"Not quite." Belial says, her expression turning serious. "You forget. While I do possess potent healing and transformation magic, my true power comes from my physical strength. Among all the Emperors, I am unmatched. Even when lacking my magic, I can go toe to toe with any other Emperor in a battle of fists."

"Maybe so, but Gressil seems to have at least some abilities revolving around illusions," Jason says. "And if he's an Emperor, those illusions will be even stronger than when you saw him as a young Lord. I've seen the illusions Raphael could unleash, and they were quite frightening."

"But what about the anti-magic field?" Phoebe asks. "Won't that prevent Gressil from using his illusions?"

"Oh, yeah..." Jason mumbles. "That's a good point. But why would he deliberately cripple himself?"

"Maybe the anti-magic field is what has prevented you from locating Hope," Belial suggests. "And Neil, too, I'd wager. They're both probably imprisoned here where your Wordsmithing can't detect them. I'll bet that's why Ose wanted to capture Phoebe and Daisy... she would have put them here and issued demands, while you wouldn't be able to sense their presence."

"Ose and Gressil are brother and sister," Jason mutters. "The facts add up."

Neither Jason nor Phoebe says anything about Belial's casual mention of their daughter. Just the sound of her name pains their hearts terribly.

"Gressil might be weakened in this anti-magic bubble," Phoebe observes. "But then again, he might not. We should prepare for the worst. Jason, can my spiritual self construct a device for you? We'll want a last-ditch item in case the worst happens."

Jason nods. "Projection."

His mind-wife materializes next to Physical Phoebe. The two of them chat for a few minutes while the army takes up defensive positions, keeping their eyes peeled for any enemy ambushes. Despite their relatively low numbers, not a single demon or monster approaches them.

Ten minutes later, Mental Phoebe pulls back into Jason's brain with a blueprint held in her hands.

"It's not a magical device, but a technological one. Considering the short amount of time we have, we can maybe crank out a couple hundred of these; enough for our most important soldiers and VIPs."

Jason looks into his Mind Realm at the blueprint his mind-wife has conjured onto one of the 'servers' in his brain.

"A teleportation device?"

"Yes," Mental Phoebe says. "It's a one-time use beacon that will teleport anyone it's attached to back to the Core. We can use it to escape if Gressil somehow traps us."

"I see," Jason says. "I can't connect to the Cube from inside the Labyrinth, but my internal magic reserves should be enough for two hundred of these. Give me, like, twenty minutes."

Jason immediately begins Wordsmithing, using the blueprint in his brain as the scaffold for its construction.

"Synthesize. Synthesize. Synthesize. Synthesize."

Each Word of Power lowers his mana drastically, forcing him to dip into the Mana Beads placed inside his body. After consuming twenty-five of them to make one hundred and seventy-three micro-teleporters, he stops with only five mana beads left to spare.

"I'll keep a few in reserve. If we use these teleporters, we'll have to leave thousands of soldiers behind... so let's try to avoid that choice if possible. I don't even want to imagine what Gressil would do to our men if we left them for him as prisoners."

Amelia shudders. "No. You don't."

With that reality settled, Jason spends another few minutes transmitting orders to all of the soldiers behind him.

At the rear of the army, Kiari listens intently as Samuel relays the orders to her.

"An anti-magic field? That's strange," Kiari says. "I haven't heard about anything like that at Faith's End. I don't think it will prevent me from speaking to my gnats, but I won't be able to control them."

Samuel shrugs. "Then stay behind and head back to the Core. You'll only get in our way if you can't use magic. That's why we brought you, after all."

"I can still be useful!" Kiari protests. "Won't you just give me a chance? I want to help Hope and the rest of the prisoners, too! I'm doing my best, here."

Samuel pauses when the male trooper from earlier turns to look at him.

"...Alright. You can come, but don't be shocked if the situation goes south. If fires start breaking out, I'm getting my fellow humans out alive first. Understand?"

Kiari's shoulders sag. "Yeah. I understand."

"Good. Let's move out, then," Samuel says. "Everyone, get ready to march on the Wordsmith's mark!"

Elsewhere in the Labyrinth, a single human wearing a stealth-type Spectre exosuit walks down the halls with poise and grace. The man's footsteps make no sound, as the soles in his boots dampen the vibrations to a nearly undetectable level.

This man, Makoto Ueda, now possessed by the soul of Siddhartha Gautama, the Hero known as Buddha, makes his way toward a destination called forth by his mind: A junction far off at the remote edges of the Labyrinth, where one of only two Warpgates still controlled by the demons remains open.

As Buddha walks, his eyes sweep from side to side.

He does not speak. He only observes and contemplates.

Silently, the reincarnated Hero walks directly toward a pair of female Demon Lords guarding the long hallway leading to that specific Warpgate. When the two demons see a human approaching them so brazenly, without any backup, yet wearing one of the feared 'demon-killing suits' from the Core, they jump into action.

"Intruder! It's a fleshbag!"

Buddha walks without fear. Each step he makes appears as if performed by an illusory dancer, one who has mastered the art of walking on water and swimming with the wind.

A halberd of fire materializes in one of the Lord's hands. She charges toward him with a cry and swings her blade down.

Buddhe casually steps to the side, evading the blow with ease. As if having fought this female a thousand times, he gently dances along with her movements, ducks her side-slashes, and spins around behind her to deliver one precise palm-strike to her back.

THUMP!!

Buddha's palm hits the middle of the Lord's spine, paralyzing her body for a moment and driving the wind from her lungs. She collapses to the floor, sputtering painfully and choking on her own phlegm.

At the same time, the other Lord advances toward him while spinning a pair of rapidly revolving wind-whips all around her body like a hurricane. The sheer speed of them dazzles the eyes of any who happen to spectate her. Dozens of goblins, orcs, and other demon grunts wait for her to engage the human, some of them visibly shocked by the fall of the first Lord.

The second Lord's whips tear apart the ground and walls surrounding her body. Their tips lash the Labyrinth's earthen surface, spraying debris in all directions and whipping up a cloud of dust to spray upon herself and the unknown human.

Buddha does not flinch. He calmly advances toward the demoness, as if ignorant of the terrifying speed and cutting power of her whips.

"Stupid bastard!" The demoness roars. "My whips will rip you to shreds!"

She whirls her weapons twice as fast, making them move far too fast for a mere human's eye to follow.

However, Buddha closes his eyes as he walks. He only listens to the sound of the world around him and its reverberations. He steps directly into the sphere of destruction and moves his body several times in imperceptible ways. With each movement, the whip-tips pass him with less than a millimeter to spare, not even nicking his armor.

Silently, like a snake diving upon a helpless hatchling, Buddha terrifies the Lord out of her wits by sidestepping her furious assault, dodging every conceivable attack, and bending around behind her to deliver yet another palm-strike to her spine as well.

THUMP!!

The Lord coughs violently, then falls to her knees and collapses on the ground a moment later. The magic in her body sputters and bubbles as an intense, unseen reaction assaults it, making her unable to conjure her demonic power.

As Buddha continues forward, he opens his eyes once again.

"I pray that you will find the light, young one. This servant does not kill, and so, your life will be spared."

Alarmed by the fall of both Lords on the scene, the other demon grunts hastily and clumsily lob fireballs, hurl rocks, and shoot arrows at Siddhartha Gautama. However, the reincarnated Hero easily sidesteps these attacks, walking forward with only slightly jittery movements as if he were casually dodging raindrops falling from the sky. Countless deadly projectiles with enough force to crush his chest and armored figure into mush harmlessly whizz past him. His steady and unstoppable advance causes the demons attacking him to feel a nameless fear in their hearts.

"Who the hell is this?! Is he the Wordsmith?!"

"Fuck if I know, but I don't get paid enough! I'm not sticking around for even one second longer!"

Many of the cowardly grunts turn tail and flee, leaving only the orcs and monsters to stop Buddha's advance.

They fail.

Buddha easily dodges the clumsy attacks of the orcs, slaps aside the goblins, and spine-palms a few snake-like Nagas who show up near the end.

Before long, he arrives at an open warp-gate, one which displays an image of a dark underground tunnel not dissimilar to the Labyrinth itself.

Buddha pauses for a moment. His expressionless face turns bleak for a moment as he shakes his head.

"Earth, gone. All its life. All its karma. The day the Volgrim destroyed it, my avatar perished as well. I could not undo the damage. How unfortunate... now, too much time has passed. Even so, my successor still remains alive. I must search for the spark necessary to reignite the Akashic Sequence. Only then can the Karmic Cycle begin once again."

After pausing for a moment longer, Buddha strides through the Warpgate, leaving the Labyrinth behind.

The two Lords from earlier weakly crawl back to their feet, looks of pain on both their faces.

"...Who was that? I can't even control my magic right now."

"My back, ugh... my back," The other moans. "In just one hit... that fellow wasn't normal. We have to inform the Demon Council of this perimeter breach."

The first one nods, then slumps back to the ground. "In a few minutes. Gotta catch my breath, first."

"Yeah. Same."

Part 309: Prison Assault

Jason pauses at the edge of the anti-magic bubble surrounding Faith's End. While his eyes easily peer forward into the darkness, aided heavily by the improved visual sensors in his exosuit, his omnivision completely vanishes at the bubble's edge, unable to penetrate it.

The Wordsmith sucks in a quiet breath.

"Alright. Here goes."

He steps into the invisible barrier. His omnivision rapidly fades away, like a fire smothered beneath a heavy blanket. Within just five seconds, he loses the entirety of his wireframe worldview, making him unable to even see outside of the bubble's confines.

Reflexively, Jason takes a step back, exiting the anti-magic bubble. After three full minutes, his omnivision gradually restores itself.

"Damn. This thing is frightening..." Jason mutters. "I lost my ability to sense all the mana inside myself. Even after I left the barrier, it took me a good couple of minutes to regain my magical powers."

Inside his head, Jason's mind-wife speaks.

"Jason, it's worse than that. I completely fell asleep once you stepped inside. None of us inside your Mind Realm were able to remain conscious inside that anti-magic field. It seems to have a profound effect on errant souls."

The Archangel Gabriel nods. "I have lived for countless eons. Verily, not once have I encountered anything quite like this. However, it does resemble the mana which paralyzed thee when Ose struck thy body near the end of the Stormbringer Attack."

"That's what I thought, too..." Jason murmurs.

Behind the Wordsmith, Belial steps forward. She enters the anti-magic field and waits for a half-minute before stepping back out. Surprisingly, she regains access to her healing magic significantly faster, with only ten seconds needed for it to restore itself.

"Your soul is too weak," Belial explains. "My soul is that of an Emperor. Yours needs far more energy and time to perform the same feats that mine can. Mine is also significantly more resilient to external influences. It took almost twenty seconds for the anti-magic to smother my abilities, versus just five for you. Even so, the effect was just as total for me as it was for you. I can't use my powers in there at all."

"We still have to go in." Jason decides. "Every minute we delay is another minute something even worse could happen to Hope. Gressil's torturing him in there. We have to save my clone as quickly as possible."

Without any delay, Jason steps into the anti-magic bubble and begins marching forward. Belial follows after him, along with Amelia and Phoebe, and the rest of their army.

General Chadwick's regiment takes up the front-guard. They quickly and systematically begin spreading out through the many hallways inside Faith's end, with some having stairs that lead up, while others go down.

The corridors remain eerily silent, with no guards of demonic or monster origin patrolling the halls. Many decayed lanterns hang from the ceiling, their flames having died out millennia ago. Other sconces hang limp from the walls, soon to eventually fall off and clatter to the floor.

It doesn't take long before the human army reaches the first of many prison cell doors. They open them quickly and prepare to shoot anything rabid that might attack them. Instead, they find human, demon, and monster corpses in various states of missing or rotting body parts.

Several of the weaker-stomached men and women shrink back from the horrifying sights. One man yanks open his helmet and wretches all over the floor when he walks in on the body of a badly mutilated human boy, someone whose entire lower torso appears to have been chewed off him bite by bite while he was still alive.

Even Chadwick, the stoic general, flinches upon entering a room and seeing a particularly gruesome sight of two succubi burned alive and fused into one, their bodies chained together in some twisted display of brutality.

"Dreadful. Unnatural, vile beings. Neil was not wrong about these… creatures."

Even so, the human army does chance upon a few survivors in the early rooms. One of them is an old man with rotted, blackened teeth, missing both of his eyes, and with maggots crawling around under his skin. The old man croaks painfully when his door opens.

"No... don't... hurt... don't hurt..."

"Jesus goddamned Christ," One of the soldiers curses. "Fucking hell. Someone get this man... I don't even know! Medical attention!"

Jason's expression turns darker and darker. The more he sees of these horrors, the more his thoughts churn silently.

I've been so ignorant. What the hell was I thinking? Make FRIENDS with the demons?! While Hope has been out here witnessing this suffering on the daily, I was living it up in the ol' Hero City. I can't believe myself. The demons are so much worse than I ever expected... and I can only imagine what sort of monster this Gressil is if the outer layers of his prison are this bad.

Jason's thoughts don't get picked up by the denizens of his Mind Realm. Phoebe, Gabriel, Sir Lorent, Shana, and even the Phoenix all go inert, unable to contact the Wordsmith in any way. Having grown used to their conversations in his head, Jason finds the silence unnerving.

Phoebe appears equally mortified. Despite her tough will, her innate compassion and empathy nearly brings her to tears several times upon witnessing some horrific sight inside one of the prison cells.

Of the main group, only Amelia and Belial appear relatively unmoved. Amelia, because she has already seen the terrors of Gressil's torture, and Belial, because she knows well the horrors her people can unleash.

"You see?" Belial asks, her voice cutting through the gloom. "This is why I hate 'hanging out' with my people. Gressil might show us an extreme example of demonic violence, but he's hardly alone. Even the most casual demon cruelty would churn your stomachs."

Phoebe's eye twitches. "I hate this. I hate it so... so much."

She hugs Jason's arm and doesn't let go, no longer willing to look into the cells. Jason, for his part, instead forces himself to look at and swallow in the suffering and agony of these prisoners, burning their pain into his retinas.

"I have stood by for six years too long..." Jason murmurs. "But no more."

Minutes turn into hours.

After six full hours, the human army spreads out across the halls, becoming more and more wary the deeper they draw into Gressil's dungeon. They begin to find more people alive, but in states of far worse mental trauma. Unlike the forgotten prisoners barely kept alive in the outer cells, the ones in the middle and inner areas are more likely to be kept alive for Gressil's amusement… as well as those of his less savory guests.

Eventually, the humans run into their first contact. They open a cell door to find a pair of orcs sexually assaulting an old man and his wife, laughing to themselves while their victims scream and beg for mercy.

The moment the cell door opens, both orcs whip their heads around in surprise.

"Huh? Who you? This our turn!"

BLAM! BLAM!

Fifteen bullets fire into the room, splattering the orcs' heads, arms, and spines against the wall. Both monsters die without knowing what hit them.

"Medics!" One of the soldiers barks. "Request immediate trauma support!"

A pair of Clinicians decked out in battlesuits enter the room and quickly begin to treat the two elderly victims. Their cries and whimpers of pain make even the most stoic military veteran wince in sympathy.

"We'll take care of you… we'll take care of you."

Jason receives a report of those victims. His expression turns downright awful.

"There are bound to be more. Search every room. Kill any monster or demon or, hell, even kill any humans you catch performing such vile acts. Show these subhumans they are not welcome in our universe."

The more Jason sees, the more his thoughts begin to turn cruel.

I get it now. I see why Hope has acted the way he has. I can't believe I actually looked down on him, once. He was always right, and I was wrong. I've been far, FAR too soft on the demons.

Jason opens up one of the cells himself, only to find a half-dozen goblins surrounding a small human girl, perhaps just ten years old, doing incredibly vile and unspeakable things to her.

In the blink of an eye, a thousand emotions rage through the Wordsmith's head. Before Phoebe can react, he yanks out of her grip and storms into the room, his eyes turning bloodshot with rage.

"GET YOUR FUCKING HANDS OFF HER!"

The Wordsmith swings his fists like hammers, putting the full might of his exosuit behind his punches. The goblins don't even get a second to react before the terror of death engulfs them. Jason shatters their heads like watermelons and tears them limb from limb. He releases a bloodthirsty, inhuman scream of rage while crushing one of the goblin's heads with both his hands. He grabs the last one by its feet, lifts it overhead, and swings it against the wall with a violent SPLORT!

The Wordsmith's rage results in him killing all six goblins without the faintest shred of mercy. For several seconds, he can't even stop himself from punching the pulverized puddles of blood and gore left in their wake. He screams in a mixture of pain and anger while slapping their entrails around, before eventually going quiet.

The Wordsmith breathes heavily. Jason loses focus in his vision for ten full seconds before shaking himself out of his rage stupor to look at the barely-breathing little girl.

"Ph-Phoe...be... help her. Help the girl."

Shakily, Jason tries to stand up, but the strength goes out of his legs. Tears stream down his face, inside his exosuit, while Phoebe hastily steps inside to place a teleportation beacon on the child, whisking her back to the Core.

Immediately after, Phoebe turns to her husband.

"Jason. Jason? Are you... are you okay? Speak to me. I've never seen you... act like that..."

Her eyes lower to Jason's gauntlets. His exosuit, now soaked in the blood of six goblins, appears like a weapon straight out of a horror movie.The normally silver-colored suit appears covered in bits and entrails, giving Jason the fresh look of a serial killer.

Jason shakes his head.

"I... I lost control. I got so... so angry. Is she okay? Is the little girl okay, Phoebe?"

His voice trembles. The man behind the mask chokes on his emotions, unsure of what just came over him, so powerful was his primal, fatherly instinct.

"I don't know if she'll be okay." Phoebe answers, her tone neutral. "I sent her back to our medics at the Core. They'll take care of her, now."

"Good. That's good... that's good..." Jason repeats.

The Wordsmith falls silent for a good long while.

"...How could they do that to... to a little girl? She wasn't much older than... than Daisy. Are these demons nothing more than incarnations of pure evil? Am I even doing the right thing by trying to integrate them into my ranks?"

Phoebe hugs her husband's side.

"You are. We are, Jason. The demons in this prison... the monsters here... they don't represent- they aren't the ultimate be-all, end-all of their species. They're just sick, unfeeling..."

Phoebe pauses to gather her thoughts.

"Remember Sam, Jason. Remember her. She is proof that good demons exist. You can't let the bad ones crowd out the good."

"But you SAW what those fucking goblins were doing!" Jason shouts. "Them, the orcs, the imps... all of them! I'll bet eighty percent of our enemies are utterly irredeemable, and the other twenty percent are at the very least complicit! What am I even fighting for?!"

Phoebe slowly shakes her head.

"I don't know, Jason. I don't have all the answers."

After twelve hours of scouring Faith's end, Jason and his army manage to clear out more than ten thousand cells in the outer and middle ranks. Eventually, they reach the inner regions, where they begin to encounter even more monsters and demons inside the cells. Sometimes, they will even run into a few stragglers in the hallways, those on their way from or just departing their latest victim.

Of course, not all the oppressors in the prison use their captives for mere sexual gratification. Many of the more twisted ones prefer to use violence, torture, and mutilation, as they cut into and maim the prisoners while reveling in their screams.

Jason's earlier rage slowly begins to morph into a sense of twisted satisfaction as he rips the prison guards and other undesirables to pieces. For brief moments, flashes of glee cross his face as he grows more and more used to bursting into rooms and ripping apart the occupants inside, those perpetuating their evils onto their helpless prey.

The Wordsmith eventually pauses after killing his fiftieth enemy. For a moment, a thought appears in his head.

...Killing demons is fun. It's quite enjoyable, really. I don't even feel a bit guilty about it. In fact, I ENJOY doing it. I'm completely in the right! All this time, I thought killing would make me a monster... but am I really a monster if I only enjoy killing other monsters? I'm the good guy here. I'm the Hero. This is what I should have been doing all along!

Phoebe doesn't miss the rapid changes in her husband's demeanor. Her expression slowly shifts to one of discomfort after watching Jason march into a room and easily rip apart a half dozen orcs while prying them off their three female captives. Jason activates another few teleportation nodes to send the women back to the Core, but when he exits, he finds his wife standing outside the cell with her arms crossed.

"Jason. We need to talk."

The Wordsmith pauses. He looks at his wife.

"About what?"

"About you. You're... you shouldn't be..."

"Enjoying myself?" Jason asks.

"Something like that." Phoebe concedes. "You're a good man with a heart of gold. But this... this isn't like you. I don't enjoy seeing you like this."

Jason hesitates. Hearing such blunt criticism from his wife makes him stop and re-evaluate himself.

"Am I going too far?"

Phoebe slowly nods. "I think so. You know as well as anyone that I have no love for the demons. Even so... I would never enjoy killing them. A life is sacred, no matter what. Do it as a duty, if you must, but do not become someone who enjoys the act of killing. You'd... you'd make me cry if that happened, Jason."

The Wordsmith's helmet opens. He allows his wife to look into his eyes.

"I'm sorry. You're right. I... I've been getting so swept up by my anger. I guess I'm trying to make up for what happened to Daisy. It feels like if I kill enough demons, monsters, and other sick individuals-"

Before Jason can finish his sentence, one of the troopers comes walking up.

"Sir. We've found something significant. You need to see this."

Jason turns his head slightly to look at the newcomer. "I'm... right in the middle of something."

"General Chadwick insists," The trooper says, his voice becoming strained. "We've found a... unique door. It's not like any of the others. We suspect it's holding a VIP."

Jason's annoyance at being interrupted vanishes.

"It must be Hope. Recall everyone and tell them to converge on that position."

"Yes, sir. I'll lead you there."

As the trooper turns to walk away, Jason shoots Phoebe a glance.

"We'll talk about this later, okay? But... I'll consider what you've said."

Phoebe nods. "That's all I want, hubby."

Jason reactivates his helmet, then he and his wife follow after the man, walking down several winding hallways, stepping over the bodies of multiple dead monsters and demons, all of them slain and dragged out of the cells to rot in the halls.

Minutes later, Jason and Phoebe catch up to Belial and Amelia, both of whom stand in a narrow cramped hallway with dozens of other troopers, all of them aiming their weapons at an unopened door.

The first thing Jason notices is a small sign on the door, one that shows the word, Forbidden. The next thing he notices are the more than two dozen latches and locks keeping the door locked tightly.

"Any idea who or what is in there?" Jason asks, his voice raising an octave.

"One life sign. Barely detectable," Amelia replies. "I don't think it's Gressil. It might be Hope, though."

Jason frowns. "Nobody has seen Gressil yet? Have any troopers gone missing? Any dead or injured?"

"Negative," Another commando responds. "Everyone is alive and counted for. No injuries. We've been extremely fortunate."

Jason knots his brow into a frown. "Maybe too fortunate. Open the door. Let's see who's inside."

"Yes, sir."

As the Wordsmith's army closes in on the door, Amelia's gaze fixates on the Wordsmith. Through her eyes, Gressil sees everything.

The Emperor of Chaos stands some distance away, well outside the humans' visual range.

"So. They've found 'Birdie.' Good. She hasn't been responsive for a while. I'll have much more fun with her if the humans manage to perk her spirits up. Haha."

The prison-master smiles.

"So many fun things are happening. It wouldn't do if I didn't say hello to the Wordsmith. Ah, but theatrics. I can't let Belial and the rest think less of me. I'll have to wait for the right... opportunity. Yes. It's high time things changed around here... and the Wordsmith is so deliciously embroiled in Chaos. Haha. Haha."

Elsewhere in the Labyrinth, at the Core, controlled by humanity.

A single goblin walks out of the Core, past the two Jason-lookalikes parked outside. Immediately, both of the emotionless automatons whirl to face the small creature, ready to attack and crush him into atoms.

Without batting an eye, the goblin speaks.

"I am Grima, the hospital's devoted servant. I have business in the Labyrinth. I must trade for medical supplies with my fellow goblins. Please excuse me, for I am in a hurry."

The autonomous Jasons stare at the goblin silently for a few moments before returning to put their backs against the wall. Satisfied, Grima continues walking, as if lacking a care in the world.

Thirty minutes later, he walks well out of the surveillance range of the Core personnel. The goblin reaches into the folds of his clothes to extract a small, bean-sized device of unknown origin. He lightly squeezes it in his fingers, then slides it into his ear.

"This is Distant Outpost Apprentice Explorer, Kotori. Fourth Class, First Aspect, Melder. This one was assigned to observe the demon-controlled world of Tarus II. This one requests a pickup at Retrieval Location One-One-Six-Seven. This one possesses knowledge of extreme importance to the Founders."

Several seconds pass.

Eventually, a voice responds through the 'bean' in Kotori's ear.

"Identification confirmed. Explorer Kotori, we have not received any reports from you in more than twenty orbital cycles. Explain."

The goblin straightens his posture a little. "This one originally did not have anything of note to report. However, in the past six orbital cycles, this one has uncovered information that will benefit the war against the Plague. This one does not dare say anything else without express permission from a Seventh Class Observer or higher."

"Noted." Comes the reply. "This one will report your activities to this one's superiors. Proceed to the specified retrieval location. Do not transmit any additional information over this unsecured channel."

"This one contemplates. This one comprehends." Kotori says, before closing off the line.

'Grima,' a goblin-type Changeling, continues advancing through the Labyrinth after pocketing the listening device once again.

It makes its way past many different monsters, demons, and other similar types, all without pausing its gait.

As an ordinary-looking goblin, Kotori attracts no attention whatsoever. Despite being a low-ranking Changeling with inferior skills in species-assimilation, it can still pass visual inspections with little effort.

Kotori walks down many different hallways, but it pauses all of a sudden. Its eyes flick into the distance, where a glimmer in the darkness catches its eye.

"Hm?"

The Changeling walks forward until stopping before a metallic band laying on the ground, a simple but precious-looking object made of gold, with diamonds and other jewels encircling its diameter.

Kotori stares at the object for several seconds without its expression changing in the least.

"What a curious coincidence. This one does not understand why it would chance upon Solomon's Crown in the middle of a random Labyrinth hallway. The last this one heard, one of the Wordsmiths possessed the Crown before it seemingly vanished."

Carefully, Kotori bends down and picks up the Crown with the tips of two fingers. Unable to sense the holy energy contained within, Kotori knows well it must not attempt to put on the Crown, since it is not a human and certainly not a Hero.

"What a fortunate find. The Founders will reward this one amply when this one reports its discovery. This one will make a substantial contribution to the war effort and elevate its rank tremendously."

Without dilly-dallying for a moment longer, Kotori continues advancing toward its goal, a secret place somewhere in the Labyrinth that not even the demons know about.

Soon, the Changeling will deliver news to the Founders and the rest of its species capable of rocking them to their very cores.

Part 310: Little Lost Birdy

Creeeeak.

The prison door marked 'Forbidden' slowly opens. Its ancient, rusted hinges squeal as if suffering from arthritis. Two commandos step into the room and swivel their guns toward a dark corner.

"What in the name of-?!"

The first trooper shouts in shock. His eyes fixate on the figure laying on her side, curling against the dark corner, terrified out of her wits. Multiple shackles and chains bind her ankles and wrists, tying her to the dungeon wall. Given her body's weakness, she stands no chance of breaking free.

Jason, Phoebe, Amelia, and Belial all enter a moment afterward. They follow the trooper's line of sight, and all four of them wince sympathetically.

"Oh my god," Phoebe whispers. "That... that poor girl."

"What's happened to her back?" Amelia asks. "Did... did Gressil experiment on her?"

"No." Belial says, as her expression calms down. "Those are wings. She's an angel."

A bolt of shock travels through everyone present.

"An angel?!" Jason asks. "But her wings! The feathers! Th-they're..."

"Stripped bare." Phoebe adds, her tone filled with heartbreak. "Oh, lord in Heaven... what horrors has this woman suffered?"

While the humans all hesitate, Belial quickly steps toward the angel on the ground. Her body, covered in hundreds of deep cuts, lacerations, burns, and scars, makes her look more dead than alive. Her dull blue eyes flicker weakly, yet she still tries to push away from Belial as the demoness leans over her.

"I won't hurt you," Belial whispers. "I'm here to help."

The angel's eyes widen in horror when Belial speaks. Without saying a word, her gaze flicks to the horns atop Belial's head, her blood-red eyes, and her crimson skin.

"Nnn... nnn..."

The angel's blood-matted white hair drags across the ground as she pushes herself into the corner with what little strength she has, shrinking back from Belial in terror.

"Sam, she's scared of you," Phoebe says. She quickly steps in front of Belial, blocking her from the angel's view. "Let me."

Belial flushes with embarrassment.

"Oh. Right, yes, I don't imagine she would... like my kind..."

The succubus retreats, while Jason and Phoebe kneel over the angel and pop open their helmets to reveal their faces. They activate dim lights on their suits to illuminate themselves so the angel can see them.

"You're an angel..." Phoebe says. "Poor girl. Poor, poor girl. Don't worry. We're here to help. You're safe now."

Jason bites his lip. "Her body's in bad condition. I can't Wordsmith to heal her. Belial's magic won't work, either. We definitely can't move her with her body this injured."

"I have a solution," Phoebe says, as she keys in a button on her exosuit. "I'll treat her with nanites. We can heal her once we reach the Core."

"Alright," Jason says. He waits for a few moments while his wife materializes a nanite-injection syringe. His eyes sweep across the naked and mutilated angel.

"I'm Jason Hiro," He says, trying to offer some comfort. "I-I'm a human. Not just any human, but a Hero, like King Arthur, or Joan of Arc. Do you know about Heroes? We're the good guys. I definitely won't let anyone hurt you, okay? Never again."

The angel looks at him, but says nothing. Her body language loses a small amount of tenseness, but otherwise, she still maintains a sense of vigilance.

"Her face might not be injured," Phoebe explains, "but her throat is far too scarred for her to speak."

"That's alright," Jason says. "She doesn't need to talk. We just need to heal her and get her the hell out of here. We must be close to finding Hope."

From behind Jason, Belial speaks.

"Have either of you noticed? There's a halo above that angel's head."

Jason turns to look at Belial in confusion, then back at the girl. He finally notices a weak, barely noticeable, circular ring of light hovering above her head.

"A halo? Oh, I guess that makes sense. Angels always have halos in fiction... but I don't remember seeing them in any of Raphael's visions..."

"Angels don't have halos." Belial says. "Not pureblooded angels, anyway. But Lazarites do."

Phoebe perks up her ears. "Lazarites? Wait, do you mean humans resurrected into angelic form? Like the ancient biblical story of Lazarus?"

"That's right," Belial says. "Through the power of the Lazarus Tower, the Archangels created a method for dead humans to be reborn as a pseudo-angel, a halfblooded creature known as a Lazarite. This girl isn't a pureblood; she was once a human who resurrected through the Lazarus Tower's magic."

Jason falls silent. In his head, he connects multiple pieces of a puzzle based on what Raphael told him during his flashbacks of the Ancient Era.

The Lazarus Tower... Valac's Lantern.... Resurrecting humans into angelic bodies? That was the purpose of the tower? I see. That would have allowed the angels to rebuild their forces following the War in Heaven, giving them new angels capable of fighting the demons. I knew there had to be more to the story! And when Mephisto stole back Valac's Lantern...

"I'm ready," Phoebe says, as she holds up a syringe. "Don't worry, 'miss angel.' This will heal you."

"Phoebe presses the needle into the angel's heart and pushes the plunger. A few seconds later, she extracts the needle, noting with a sad expression that the angel didn't even seem to notice the needle's presence, so terrible was her pain.

At a speed visible to the human eye, the angel's wounds begin to heal. While none of her scars disappear, the worst-festering wound seal up, and some of the rotted injuries manage to cleans themselves. Unfortunately, her right leg appears too far gone, with its entirety black from gangrene.

Phoebe chews her lip. "If she were a human, she'd have died countless ages ago. It's a miracle she's still alive."

"Or a curse," Jason snarls. "Gressil did this. That son of a bitch... I'll make him pay."

At the mention of Gressil's name, the angel's eyes widen in fear. She discovers a wellspring of strength and pushes away from Jason and Phoebe, curling back into the corner once again, even crushing her broken and mutilated wings by doing so.

"No, no," Phoebe says, shooting a dirty look at her husband. "Don't just say his name, Jason! Here, send me back to the Core along with the angel. I'll take care of her until everyone else returns."

"Are you sure?" Jason asks.

"Yes. We can't leave her here a moment longer."

Jason sticks his thumb over his shoulder. "Then take Belial with you. She can heal the angel."

"No." Belial says. "If Gressil truly is an Emperor, you're all in danger here. I'll stay with you until you return. The angel has survived this long without any medical care; she'll only do better with Phoebe in the Core."

Jason hesitates.

"...I can't go back until I find out what happened to Hope. Alright, Phoebe. You take the angel back to Doctor Fathy. Belial and I will continue with the rescue operation."

Phoebe nods, then turns to look behind her husband. "What about you, Amelia?"

"I'm staying here," Amelia says. "I'm not here for some angel girl. I'm here for Hope."

"Alright." Phoebe replies.

Jason's wife snaps the rusted shackles binding the angel's wrists and ankles. Removing them reveals disgusting, pus-filled scar-tissue. The angel's rail-thin body tells a tale of absolute starvation, torture, and barbarism worse than any horror movie could depict.

Phoebe places a teleportation beacon on the angel, then on herself. She offers Jason one last look.

"You'd better return. Don't you dare make me a widow."

Jason offers a weak smile. "I'll return. Promise."

Phoebe activates the beacons, teleporting herself and the angel out of Gressil's prison and back to the Core.

The Wordsmith rises to his feet. A strange look crosses his face.

"I'll have to ask Gabriel about that girl when we return. Can't contact him now. Belial, did you recognize the angel?"

The succubus shakes her head. "Nope. There were billions of Lazarites at one point. The angels used them as meatshields in the war against my people. In the final battle between angels, demons, humans, and the Volgrim, rivers of blood flowed through Heaven. I thought every last angel had died... but to think Gressil had secretly hidden one away beneath everyone's noses."

Amelia anxiously looks toward the doorway. "Whatever, she's just a Lazarite. Look, can we get back to searching for Hope? He's the reason we came here, you know!"

"Yes," Jason says, "But the fact an angel has survived past the Energy Wars is extremely important. There must be some reason Gressil kept her here. Aren't you even the slightest bit curious?"

Amelia lowers her helmet, revealing a cross expression. "No, Jason, I don't care about some stupid angel girl. Maybe if she were a pureblood, I'd care, and even then, that's a stretch. Hope is more important! Besides, something about her..."

The former Black Queen trails off, as if uncertain about a feeling in her heart.

"Fine, let's get back to looking for Hope," Jason says. "Who cares, anyway? She's just the only living angel we know about. No significance at all, no sir. Heaven forbid I might hold some curiosity over her identity... grumble grumble..."

The Wordsmith, Belial, and Amelia exit the cell, flanked by the two troopers from before. Jason informs General Chadwick of their discovery, as well as the other leaders with him.

Chadwick narrows his eyes. "A Lazarite, you say? I've heard of them. Did she have the signature halo above her head?"

"Yes," Jason says. "But how would you learn of Lazarites?"

"It was an open secret among the higher levels of human militaries," Chadwick explains. "Back in my day, I served under King Haakon as one of his generals. During the Great War, most soldiers and civilians had no idea that angels and demons truly existed, but the upper ranks knew well. I'll bet you aren't aware that the most pious and godly believers could even earn special favors from Heaven in the event of their death."

Jason blinks. "Special favors? Such as?"

Chadwick glances down the halls before continuing. "Those who prayed a lot and performed meritorious deeds for the angels would have the unique right to reincarnate as High Lazarites. Effectively the same as normal Lazarites, but they could lead legions of their own into battle. There were other privileges, but..."

"But now isn't the time to talk about these things," Jason says, picking up on Chadwick's meaning. "Tell me about that stuff later. In the meantime, let's keep looking for Hope!"

Half an hour passes. The humans continue sweeping through Faith's End, but all they find are more mundane prisoners, not Hope.

"We've searched almost everywhere," Corporal Hurent says, "There aren't many cells left to check. If Hope isn't in them..."

"We haven't run into Gressil either," Belial says. "I'll bet he took Hope and ran away! That devil-damned coward."

Hardly have the words left Belial's mouth before a shudder runs down her back. Purely out of instinct, she spins on her heel and glances down one of the side corridors, where, in the darkness, a little blonde girl stands, all by herself.

Belial's eyes shrink to pinpricks.

"No! Impossible!"

Jason follows her gaze.

"Daisy?!"

The sight of his daughter standing in a random Labyrinth corridor sets off alarm bells in the Hero's head, but those instantly collide with panicked thoughts of how his daughter might have somehow survived and ended up here.

Then, 'Daisy' speaks.

"Haha. Does this form surprise you?"

A deep, masculine voice speaks from the child's mouth. Belial snaps out of her shock first, then narrows her eyes.

"Gressil! You... how dare you summon this... illusion!"

The little girl smiles creepily.

"Illusion? Haha. Haha. Is that what I am? Daddy, look at me. I'm your little girl. You killed me, daddy. Haha. You won't even cry for me. You must not love me. Haha. Haha."

Gressil's deep, raspy voice violently conflicts with the image of a sweet little girl. Thanks to the disharmony of voice and appearance, Jason manages to shake himself awake, realizing that this sick illusion before him is not the daughter he lost.

"You piece of shit. How dare you toy with my emotions."

'Daisy' continues to grin, exposing her toothy teeth.

"Oh, but your pain gives me such joy, Wordsmith. Haha. Every human has a weakness. Every demon. Even the angels..."

The little girl cocks her head.

"You took something from me without asking. That is stealing, you know. Oh, but this weak demon does not stand a chance against the powerful weapons of humanity. I guess I'll have to meekly stand aside. You can have my beloved Birdy... but you'll have to treat her well. A very bad person hurt her several times, and now she doesn't scream like she used to."

"BASTARD!" Belial shrieks. Before anyone can stop her, the demoness lunges toward Gressil and rears her fist back.

BOOM!!!

Belial swings her fist down at Gressil's body, but her punch passes through him harmlessly and smashes into the floor, rattling the Labyrinth for a mile in every direction, even causing some of the human commandos to stumble and fall.

After the explosion of dust settles, Belial raises her head and involuntarily jerks in fright when she finds the Emperor of Chaos standing right in front of her, his figure having returned to its normal form. No longer does he assume the visage of Jason's deceased daughter, but instead, his own two-headed body covered in glowing red eyeballs.

Several commandos aim their guns at Gressil, but nobody pulls the trigger, as they wait for orders from their commanding officers.

"Such a brute." Gressil murmurs. "Demons like you are the worst, Belial. You always hurt those around you. You, especially, like to play the 'good girl.' You're so kind, so empathetic. You wouldn't hurt a fly. Isn't that right? You're not like me, a monster."

Belial retracts her fist and takes a step back, eying Gressil warily. The Emperor of Chaos remains rooted in place, seemingly unmovable, like a mountain of flesh. He slightly leans toward the succubus and sneers.

"Ah, but that isn't true, is it? Look at all the demons you've killed. It was only 'self-defense,' of course, but you did seem to enjoy ripping them to shreds with your claws. Hmm. Maybe you and me aren't so different after all."

"Shut your mouth!" Belial roars. She launches another mountain-shattering punch at Gressil, but her strike once again passes harmlessly through him as his body vaporizes into smoke.

Gressil's voice speaks again, but this time from behind the wall of human commandos, on the complete opposite side of the corridor from where he started.

"Like I said. We aren't so different."

Jason, Belial, and everyone else whirls around 180 degrees, shocked at the Emperor of Chaos's rapid teleportation.

"W-where is Hope?!" Amelia shouts. "I know you have him!"

Gressil's smirk falters. He shoots a look of disgust at the woman.

"Quiet. No false image may speak to me in that tone. It seems you haven't told the others who you really are. But I know. I know all too well..."

Jason's eyes flick to Amelia's armored figure. Her exosuit prevents him from seeing her expression and gleaning a clue as to her emotions.

"What do you mean, Gressil?" Jason asks cautiously, returning his eyes to the Emperor of Chaos. "And why should we trust anything you have to say?"

The prison warden eyes his heroic counterpart.

"I am many things, Wordsmith. A liar is not one of them. Believe what you like, or don't. By the way, I would like to congratulate you on your... evolution. You've filled out quite nicely since my sister's little operation. Already, you've killed a number of demons not inferior to the blessed Joan of Arc... but you've a ways to go before you reach Arthur's level."

"I don't keep a running tally," Jason says. "Every life lost is a tragedy. Pain and suffering is NOT commendable! I only kill because I must."

"Of course. Of course." Gressil replies, his tone creepily soothing. "Ah, but there are trillions of demons in the universe. You haven't even dripped a drop in the bucket yet.

You have succeeded in agitating the greed of the Hidden Emperors, I'll give you that much. They'll make a move soon to attack you. I will certainly enjoy the show, when it occurs."

Belial arrives at Jason's side. She eyes Gressil carefully, realizing she cannot sense whether the body before her is real or illusory. Without knowing, she doesn't dare to attack again.

Instead, her eyes drift to the second head on Gressil's body, the one hovering over his left shoulder.

"...Wait. That... that face."

A look of recognition appears in Belial's eyes.

"Lucifer?"

Gressil's expression darkens.

"You only just noticed? What a pitiful Second Emperor you are. Nobody questioned that woman's disappearance all those years ago. I didn't bother telling them, either. Not after the price I paid to finally... silence her."

Belial's pupils shrink and dilate repeatedly.

"Oh, Seven Hells... you ate her?! Your own mother?"

"I DID NOT!" Gressil suddenly roars, as he takes a menacing step toward Belial. The sounds of several guns readying to fire does nothing to stop him as he stomps toward the Wordsmith's battle lines. "I JUST WANTED HER TO SHUT UP! TO NEVER SPEAK AGAIN!!"

Seeing the advancing figure of an Emperor, Jason gives the order. "Open fire!"

Hundreds of bullets, plasma shots, and other assorted ordinances burst into existence and fly at Gressil, however, all of them pass through his body, dissipating him into the wind.

An instant later, as if stepping out of the air itself, Gressil reappears inches from Belial. Her heart skips a beat, but she fails to evade him as he lunges out his upper-right hand and grabs her by the neck.

"SATAN'S WHORE!" Gressil roars. "YOU SHOULD HAVE SAVED ME!!"

Several guns swivel to face Gressil's new position. They unload on him, but he vanishes once again, teleporting behind the army with Belial in hand.

BOOM!

Gressil smashes the Emperor of Passion against the wall. He raises his lower right fist to punch her, but Belial retaliates with a punch of her own!

THUMP!

Gressil instantly loses his grip and flies backward, crashing into the wall behind him just a few feet away. He plows through it, into an empty prison cell, and lands on the floor in a heap.

Belial's lips curl into a nasty snarl. "Don't think you stand a chance against me, Lucifer's spawn. If we come to blows, you'll always end up with the short stick."

Gressil lays on the floor in the cell, motionless, for a few brief moments. Then, he slowly raises his head.

"Don't say her name."

"Who? Lucifer?" Belial asks. "And why not?"

The moment she finishes asking that question, Gressil's otherwise dormant second head begins to stir. Both of its eyes open, along with the third one on its forehead.

"Hmm? What's all this racket? Brat! Are you trying to piss me off?!"

Gressil's left arm curls into a fist. Belial tenses up, expecting him to lunge at her. Instead, in a shocking twist, Gressil punches himself!

Thunk!

He punches his right head, the primary one he used before. In that moment, Belial makes a few mental connections.

Lucifer is... alive? Inside of him? And she can possess his body? But how?!

Gressil winces from the punch.

"Mother... mother, no-"

"Don't even speak to me!" Lucifer shrieks, her shrill voice grating on Belial's nerves. "You're worthless, just like Diablo! Pathetic little insect that he was!"

As she speaks, Lucifer happens to glance in Belial's direction. She pauses and blinks, while a sadistic smile crosses her face.

"Ohoho! Well, well, well, look who it is! Satan's Bitch, the queen slut herself!"

Lucifer jumps to her feet, taking full control of Gressil's body as her consciousness awakens more and more. A fervent look of excitement passes over her face as she greedily eyes the former Second Emperor up and down.

"You look as slutty as ever, succu-brat! I should have known you'd come here to seduce this ignorant boy of mine!"

"Seduce Gressil?" Belial asks, narrowing her eyes. "I wouldn't dream of it. I have standards."

"Bitch!" Lucifer shrieks. "He might be a pathetic little shell of a man, but he's ten times the demon you'll ever be! A thousand of you couldn't compare to my brat!"

Belial flicks her gaze down the hall, to Jason and the others. Realizing they won't be of much help if Belial and Lucifer come to blows, they hesitate on what to do.

Belial flicks her hair behind her ear. "I didn't come here to yap at you, Lucifer. I came here for Hope. Give him to me. Now."

"Hope? What hope?" Lucifer asks. "Hahaha! You've gone off your marbles, Belial! If you want 'hope,' I'll give it to you! I'll torture you so badly that you'll 'hope' I kill you!"

Lucifer lunges at Belial and raises all four of Gressil's fists to attack. At the same time, the third eye on her forehead glows red for an instant.

Zot!

A beam of concentrated mana fires from the Emperor of Providence's forehead, strikes Belial's chest, and slams her against the wall. Before Belial can retaliate, Lucifer strikes her with all four fists.

Boom-boom-boom-boom!

Like four hammers crashing against an anvil, Lucifer batters Belial hard enough to shatter the Labyrinth wall and knock her into the empty cell behind her. The two demonesses crash onto the floor, but Belial retaliates by shoving Lucifer back with all her strength.

Belial's power, shockingly, exceeds Lucifer's by several orders of magnitude.

Lucifer flies backward, caught off-guard by Belial's strength. She crashes into and drags across the ceiling, eventually arriving in the corridor outside where she falls down and slams into the floor.

"Unf!"

Lucifer gasps in pain, but quickly jumps back to her feet at the same time as Belial.

"Hahaha... you're as strong as ever..." Lucifer growls. "But I can't detect even a little magic from you. It seems in this battle I hold the advantage."

Lucifer smiles menacingly, while Belial doesn't.

"If you won't give me the Wordsmith willingly, I'll just have to take him from you." Belial says.

Lucifer spreads out her arms and chuckles.

"I don't know what you're talking about, and I don't care. If you want something from me... you're free to try and take it. You don't have Satan here to protect you anymore. I made sure of that."

Belial's eyes snap open.

"LUCIFERRR!!"

Author Note: We have finally reached Birdie/Birdy, an important character in the Cryoverse! I had some great artwork made for her years ago, and you can find out all about it by visiting this Patreon post!

Part 311: Passionate Providence

Belial dives toward Lucifer. She hits the ground with a roll and props herself up on her palms, then uses her legs to deliver multiple kicks at unexpected angles. The Emperor of Providence gets forced onto the backfoot by her attacker's superior leg-strength, making her use both of her upper arms for defense while her lower arms try to counter.

Within seconds, the two demonesses exchange a flurry of blows.

Belial shotgun-kicks Lucifer, blasting the three-eyed Emperor into the cell's rear and knocking the wind out of her. She spins on her palm and whirlwind-kicks Lucifer to the left, sending her foe hurtling sideways, where she crashes through the wall into an adjacent cell.

"Aargh! You hussy!" Lucifer screams.

"YOU KILLED MY HUSBAND!" Belial roars, as she pushes off the ground, spins in the air, and lands back on her feet. The moment Belial's toes touch the ground, she pushes off and lunges at Lucifer again, switching to punches in order to uppercut and side-swipe the two-headed Emperor.

All the while, as Lucifer gains more and more control of her son's body, Gressil becomes quieter than ever, seemingly receding into himself and falling asleep.

Lucifer's third eye easily tracks Belial's high-speed movements, but the clumsiness of Gressil's body slows her reaction speed down. Several times, Lucifer eats a punch or a kick she might have evaded millennia ago, when she was in her own body. She retaliates with multiple mana-blasts from her third eye, yet even the ones that hit barely slow Belial down, so terrifying is the Emperor of Passion's wrath.

While the two Emperors fight, the Wordsmith and his allies observe the fight, momentarily unsure of what to do. It doesn't take long before Jason makes a decision.

"Everyone! Fan out and continue searching for Hope! Scour every cell! Move in groups of two! If Gressil, or Lucifer, or whoever-the-fuck is in control of his body are being distracted by Sam, now is our chance! We have to find Hope!"

Amelia turns to Jason. "What about Belial's fight? Can't we help her?"

The Wordsmith shakes his head. "I don't have my Wordsmithing, and none of us are capable of fighting an Emperor. It's better if we use this chance to finish searching for Hope!"

Without any other options, the others simply nod.

"Alright," Chadwick says. "You heard the Hero! Fan out and stay in groups of two! Mark down the cells of any other civilians, but focus on finding Hope! We don't know how long Belial can hold out against Gressil!"

Jason and Amelia stick together. They start to run down one of the other corridors, but a single trooper steps in front of them, wearing a unique exosuit.

"Commander. With all due respect, I might be able to help the succubus."

Jason pauses. He does a quick once-over of the man before him, the only soldier wearing a Rhino-type T-REX, Lieutenant Samuel.

"You can?"

Samuel nods. "My suit is designed for combating demon elites. I doubt I'll land any killing blows, but my Rhino can take one hell of a beating."

"Beelzebub nearly killed you, and he was only a Duke," Jason interjects. "You don't stand a chance against Gressil."

"Not alone." Samuel replies. "But if I'm only providing physical support, I can do more good than by joining the search."

Jason nods. "Alright, so be it. Stay safe then, Samuel. So far, we have zero casualties on this excursion. Don't be the one who changes that!"

Samuel smiles under his helmet.

"Don't worry, sir. I won't."

Without any fanfare, Samuel charges past his commanding officers to join Belial's fight, leaving Jason and Amelia behind.

Amelia shoots a glance at Samuel's departing figure.

"Are you really going to let that guy...?"

"Hope is our top priority," Jason answers. "Samuel knows what he's doing. Let the man do what he does best."

He and Amelia join the search. Together, they begin rapidly scouring every last cell in the unsearched containment blocks, kicking open doors and rescuing any still-living prisoners who they find in decent condition.

Meanwhile, Samuel stomps toward Belial and Lucifer, wincing as the shockwaves of their fight pound through the hallways, passing right through his exosuit to hammer his internal organs.

"Guh! Damn, these demons are too fucking strong... how's a normal human ever supposed to compete? That Hero had better come up with a solution in the future, or we're all fucked."

As he approaches the sounds of battle, Belial suddenly crashes into the corridor, having been blasted backward by one of Lucifer's eye-beams. The Emperor of Providence leaps out of the cell with both her fists raised and swings them down at her hated enemy.

Seeing his first chance come so quickly, Samuel doesn't hesitate. He activates a thruster module on his spine and races to intercept Lucifer, giving her only a second to react. Unable to stop her momentum in midair, Lucifer merely shoots a glance at the weak little human rushing toward her.

"Some maggot, come to die?!"

BOOM!

Samuel's spiked shoulder stabs into Gressil's body and knocks Lucifer aside, making her punches strike the wall uselessly. Before Samuel can detach, Lucifer casually swings a fist at the exosuit embedded in her left ribcage, and the impact sends Samuel flying!

His durable Rhino exosuit, the strongest of all T-REX models, rocks violently as a single attack from the Demon Emperor of Providence flings him into a wall, where he grinds along it for nearly a hundred meters, losing fifteen percent of his suit's nanite integrity. Samuel bounces off the wall after grinding on it for three seconds, and crashes to the floor.

"Ugh!"

Completely shattering the human's worst fears, his suit barely manages to hold up from just one of Lucifer's attacks. Samuel spends a full five seconds regaining his bearings before pulling himself to his feet. In that time, Lucifer and Belial re-engage in battle, paying his presence little mind.

Mother of god, Samuel thinks, as he presses his gauntlet against his torso and props himself up against the wall. Just one punch! I feel like if I took another direct hit like that, I'd be a goner! How in the goddamn shit are humans supposed to compete against Emperors? I might as well be a toddler trying to wrestle an alligator!

Any thoughts Samuel had of joining forces with Belial to hammer on Lucifer disappear. Instead, he completely shifts his perspective, watching their rampaging fight from afar while his suit repairs its exterior.

There's no way I can engage the prison-warden directly. Lucifer is too strong. Instead, I should simply try to provide auxiliary support. Harassment. I need to slow her down and become a pesky gnat.

"Centurion. Reconfigure exosuit to long-ranged artillery warfare doctrine."

"ORDERS CONFIRMED, PILOT SAMUEL-DRAGO. RECONFIGURATION SEQUENCE WILL REQUIRE THIRTY SECONDS TO COMPLETE. WARNING! EMPEROR-LEVEL COMBAT DETECTED IN THE VICINITY. SEEK SHELTER DURING RHINO-TYPE EXOSUIT'S TRANSFORMATION PROCESS. PILOT WILL BE VULNERABLE TO ATTACK OTHERWISE."

Samuel nods. "Noted."

Twenty minutes pass. Jason and the others receive a notification from Corporal Hurent.

"I've found Hope! Oh, heavens, he's in bad shape!"

Immediately, every soldier converges on her position.

Jason and Amelia arrive down one of Faith's End's many hallways at the same time as Chadwick and the others. They find Corporal Hurent standing alongside the Demon Lord of Gnats, Kiari. The sight of Hope in the Corporal's arms first makes them exhale in relief, only to immediately follow up with gasps of horror.

"Oh, devils!" Amelia cries. "He's in worse condition than I thought!"

As she approaches, Corporal Hurent gently lays Hope down on the hallway floor, while a pair of Clinicians swiftly approach and inject Hope with nanite-based healing solutions.

"Hope is in shock," Hurent says. "We found him in this room here, and he was... he was like this when we got here. His limbs are... they're in a bucket off to the side. I-I don't want to talk about it."

The corners of Jason's mouth curl into a snarl. "Gressil. That bastard! How could he do this? This goes beyond the realm of mere torture... this is absolute sadism!"

Hope's body, covered in cuts, burns, and gashes, appears to be only in a bit better of a state than the angel girl's. Given his human biology, he can't possibly regenerate or withstand the abuse an angel can, and so, his condition ends up much more life-threatening than hers.

Jason shoots a glance at the others. "How many teleportation modules do we have left?"

"Just thirty." Chadwick answers.

"That will have to do. I have to return to the Core along with Hope. Now that Samantha is tied up with Lucifer, she can't heal him, but I can. I can't help her fight a Demon Emperor, not with this mana-suppression field still active, so I won't accomplish anything by staying here."

"I'll return with you." Amelia says, her eyes fixated on Hope's body. "I only came here for him, anyway."

After hearing Amelia's confirmation, Jason turns his attention to the others.

"Everyone, we don't have much time to spare. I've determined that the mana suppression field we've been under is emanating from Gressil himself. His body seems to be outputting the field in a huge radius. This means magical abilities won't be any use against him. Additionally, he himself can still use his own magic inside of the field, which gives him a tremendous advantage against us. Knowing this, I think Belial will eventually lose without all of your help."

Jason turns to the lone Demon Lord in the group.

"Kiari. I have a job for you. I'm going to return to Tarus II to heal Hope. While I'm there, I'll use the Cube to manufacture enough teleportation beacons to send every soldier home, including Belial. I want you to stand outside Gressil's mana suppression radius and wait for my delivery. When the time is right, I'll send you a crate full of teleportation transponders, and you'll have to run back into Faith's End to deliver them to the soldiers. Got it?"

The Lord of Gnats quickly nods, even while her heart flutters anxiously. "A-alright! I'll do my best!"

"The rest of you," Jason continues, "will follow Chadwick's lead. Beat the shit out of Lucifer, Gressil, or whoever-the-fuck-else he turns into. If the situation turns dicey, get out of there. Don't risk a direct confrontation with Gressil. If Lucifer somehow defeats Belial, none of you will stand a chance! Just run for your lives and send a distress call. I... I'll figure something out!"

"Yes, sir!" The entire group shouts in unison.

After confirming a few more things, Jason turns his attention to his limbless clone, whose eyes flutter open and shut as waves of pain course through his body.

"This is my fault, too..." Jason grimaces.

A minute later, Jason, Amelia, and Hope all vanish from the spot, returning to the Core.

The remaining human leaders affix teleportation transponders to their suits, but they don't look pleased about doing so.

"As a man, as a soldier, and as your commander, if I have to activate this beacon and leave the rest of you to die, I'll never forgive myself," Chadwick says. "So, don't you dare let Gressil win! Let's teach that maiming, mutilating, malicious-minded monster not to mess with humanity ever again! Let's save Belial and get the hell out of here!"

"Yes, commander!" Comes the unified response.

Belial's fist thumps the side of Lucifer's head, sending her spinning head over heels. Lucifer plows against the wall and grimaces, glaring daggers at the former Second Emperor.

"One good hit, and you won't be getting back up, Bitch-lial! You can't heal yourself while fighting me!"

A small bit of blood drips from Belial's lips, but otherwise, she appears to be in far better condition than Lucifer.

"I guess I'll just have to not get hit, then"

Lucifer jumps to her feet, then belly-flops to the floor, momentarily confusing Belial. The Emperor of Providence skitters toward the succubus using all six of her limbs, similar to a spider. This sudden boost of speed catches Belial off-guard as Lucifer pounces at her from below, headbutting Belial's stomach and sending her crashing into the wall.

"Oof!"

Belial crashes into the corridor, and Lucifer jumps at her, her eye turning red as she prepares to fire a mana-burst at the succubus.

All of a sudden, from more than three hundred meters away, a pair of high caliber bullets fire from of the shadows and tear into Lucifer's ribs, deeply embedding in her flesh and spraying blood behind her.

"Aaargh!"

Lucifer stumbles to the side, completely misses Belial, and shoots a dirty glare toward the 'insignificant' human from earlier. Samuel's Rhino-suit appears completely different, with a pair of high-impact cannons resting atop his shoulders, each one capable of firing one tank-buster round every two seconds.

His boots appear much wider as well, digging into the Labyrinth floor to hold him steady and reduce his recoil. His frontal armor, doubly-reinforced, unfortunately leaves his back exposed, but protects him from attacks coming from the only direction that currently matters.

"Eat shit, you psychopathic demon bitch!" Samuel shouts, before firing another two rounds.

Thoom-thoom!

The human releases another pair of rounds at Lucifer. She doesn't dodge in time, allowing them to rip through her stomach and out of her back.

"Aargh! Wretched little human! This queen generously spared your life, but since you're so desperate to die, let me send you on your way!"

Her eye glows, and a moment later, she fires a laser of mana directly at Samuel!

Zot!

Samuel's exosuit instantly triangulates her attack direction. Before she fires, it conjures a crystallized set of nanites at the impact location, hardening them just in the nick of time.

Even so, the power of a Demon Emperor stands many echelons above a mere exosuit. Lucifer's mana blast strikes Samuel with enough power to tear his boots from the ground and send him flying backward! The human screams as he loses control and hurtles hundreds of meters away from Belial and Lucifer, eventually crashing and grinding against the floor, where he comes to a stop and flops backward, falling unconscious.

Lucifer shoots the pathetic human one last sneer before lowering her eyes to the deep bullets holes in her flesh.

"Urgh! That filthy mongrel! He actually wounded me!"

Belial jumps to her feet. She shoots a sympathetic glance at Samuel's fallen form, but quickly returns her attention to Lucifer.

"That injury sure looks painful. Want me to kiss it and make it all better?"

"Oh, I'll give you something to kiss!" Lucifer yells.

Lucifer's eyes flash with color once again. This time, however, she doesn't charge up a mana-blast.

"Hehehe! Let's see how you handle a thousand years of pain!"

Belial swings her fist at Lucifer, but her opponent ducks the attack, lowers her head, and flicks her third eye to look directly at Belial's face.

Suffer the agony of my Demonic Trance, Belial!

Lucifer fires an attack aimed not at Belial's body, but her soul!

A moment later, the corridor falls silent, as Belial and Lucifer become locked in a battle on the plane of souls.

Belial's vision flickers. The world around her transforms into absolute blackness, while Gressil's hideous figure rapidly shifts and mutates into a much more familiar, feminine form.

Lucifer, now in her 'original body,' faces down Belial, who suddenly finds herself chained spread-eagle to a demonstone table covered in blood. No matter how she struggles, she fails to break the chains, even with her ordinarily unsurpassable demonic strength.

Belial sucks in a breath. "This... this is your Demonic Trance! It's only an illusion!"

Lucifer chuckles quietly. "Hehehe. Is it...? Are you so certain of that, Satan's Whore? This is no illusion! My Demonic Trance takes you to another plane of existence, one where I rule with absolute power! Here, I will make you suffer the pain of a thousand deaths!"

Belial writhes against the chains, but for some reason, they only become tighter and pull even more painfully on her body, slowly dislocating her joints as they rip her apart.

"Eeyah! It hurts! It hurts!"

Lucifer's nails grow several inches long. While Belial screams in pain, the Emperor of Providence plunges her nails into the succubus's chest and drags them downward, ripping her skin open to reveal Belial's heart, liver, and lungs.

Lucifer reaches into Belial's body. She tears out Belial's heart and laughs wickedly, reveling in the succubi's tortured screams.

"Hahahaha!! Oh, how I've always wanted to do this to you! That damned Satan kept getting in my way, but now he's nowhere to be seen! Say, Belial, would you like to see it? Would you like to see how I finally put that undying bastard into the dirt for good?! It was actually an accident, if you can believe it, but what a fortunate turn of events it was!"

Tears stream down Belial's face. "Murderer! I'll kill you!"

"You can try!" Lucifer cackles. She waves her hand, causing the blackened void to shift and change to one of a serene field of flowers, where a short Demon Emperor stands with a black-haired woman before him.

"Look carefully!" Lucifer laughs. "This was the moment where the Black Witch finally ended Satan's reign... for all eternity!"

Part 312: Buddha's Failure

Beneath the surface of the Earth, a man in an exosuit calmly walks past the badly beaten figures of two dozen demon grunts, yet another pair of Demon Lords, and three orcs. His faceless figure causes shivers to run down their backs as they replay the moment the seemingly inferior human struck them down and beat the tar out of them without breaking a sweat.

This human, the reincarnation of Buddha, pauses after walking past the pair of Demon Lords. He turns his head slightly to look down at them, while they scurry backward and press themselves against the wall.

"S-stay back, you! When our boss gets here, you'll regret crossing us, fleshbag!"

The human nods. "Your boss. Orias, yes? He is the one who I am looking for. Tell me where I can find him."

The human's calm, ancient voice momentarily befuddles the two Lords. The younger of the two clears his throat and points toward one of eight tunnel openings in an adjacent chamber.

"Y-you want to meet Orias? Do you have a death wish, man? He'll destroy you!"

"Oh, I very much doubt that," Buddha says as he walks toward the tunnel the Lord pointed out. "But he is welcome to try. I am no stranger to death."

A few moments later, he disappears down the tunnel, leaving his victims behind.

The Demon Lord who spoke wipes his hair back. "I don't know why that guy didn't kill us, but if he'd made a move, we would have surely died! He didn't have a single opening! It was as if I were trying to fight the person who invented the art of combat himself!"

Buddha trounces dozens more demons. Before long, word of his arrival and disruption spreads throughout the entirety of the tunnels beneath the Earth's surface.

As he steps into another giant, open chamber, the man pauses. He turns on his heel to face a Demon Baron standing off to the sidelines, awaiting his arrival.

"I hear you have been looking for me," Orias, Baron of the Stars, says. He holds an amber colored jewel in his hand, ready to crush and activate it at a moment's notice. "I don't know who you are or why you've come, but if you do not wish to die, human, you would do well to explain yourself."

The exosuit-wearing human stands silently for a few moments. Then, his helmet melts away, revealing his face.

Orias frowns.

"I don't know who I was expecting, but I haven't the faintest clue who you are. Do you have some grievances you wish to pursue against me, mortal? Given that you have only knocked down my subordinates, yet have not killed any of them, I am far from eager to take your life."

The human smiles.

"Orias. You have not changed since we last spoke. That is unfortunate. I had hoped you would undergo a great evolution, all those years ago. Sadly, too many worldly attachments continue to cloud your mind."

The Baron of the Stars eyes the human with suspicion.

"You speak as if we are old friends, yet still, I cannot recall having ever seen your face. Who are you, human?"

"I have many identities." The man answers. "I have lived many lives, each of which added to my 'accumulation.' Each one gave me new insights. In some, I was a man. In others, a woman. Some granted me the life of a wealthy noblesse, while others forced me on the path of poverty. Each one taught me something new, but not one have I regretted living."

The human flicks his eyes around the large underground chamber, its utterly barren appearance having been dug out by goblins for the sake of spreading out dozens of tunnels in every other possible direction.

"You search for something which you cannot find, Orias. It does not exist at any place in the universe, but within your heart. Why, then, have you failed to find that which clings to your breast?"

Orias's eyes flicker with recognition. Slowly, deliberately, he reaches into the folds of his robe and pulls out the Mirror of Samsara.

"M... Master?"

"Yes, Orias. It is I." Buddha replies. "I would ask how you have fared, but it is apparent at a glance that you have lived a shallow and stagnant life."

The Baron of the Stars loses some of the strength in his legs. He falls to his knees, then crawls across the floor, dragging himself to Buddha's feet.

"That light! It was... it was you?! It left this artifact, and, and then-"

"My reincarnation occurred. That is in the past." Buddha states. "Now please. Do not grovel at my feet. I am no God. I am not your Creator. I am merely a man."

Orias's heart flips in his chest as waves of emotions swirl within his being. He shakily rises to his feet, finding it difficult to look into Buddha's eyes.

"I... I don't understand. You died, all of those years ago. Why have you appeared now, inside this foreign body? How are you alive?"

Buddha clicks his tongue.

"Tsk, tsk. Orias, my child. You are still but a boy at heart. You cling to the past in order to explain the future. There is no past, nor is there a future. The only thing of which you can be certain is the 'Now.' I am here. Ask me the questions which most insidiously rot your mind."

Orias nods. After several long seconds, he regains his bearings.

"I... I have always wanted to know the truth, Master Buddha," Orias says. "I want to know what it was that you showed me. For a moment, I thought I glimpsed the face of my Creator. I understood my insignificant existence when compared to the scope of the universe. But now, all these years later... I do not understand my purpose. I have made no advancements in my rank. I have remained stuck at the position of a Baron."

Buddha lifts his chin. He purses his lips, and nods.

"Imps. Grunts. Lords. Baron. Dukes. Emperors. You are a demon, born into demon society. You live under demonic rules, and live to serve demons of a higher status. Even so, having glimpsed the truth of Reality, you have felt for far too long that these... mundanities... hold no inherent meaning. How curious, then, that you have not cast aside your attachments to reach a higher state of being."

Buddha shakes his head.

"...I expected more from you. I imagined that within a hundred years, you would reach Enlightenment and become the ideal successor for my power. Now, I have no others to whom I can entrust it."

"Your... power?" Orias asks. "What power? What do you mean?"

Buddha turns to the right, away from the Baron before him.

"There it is. You are still so attached to the world that you cannot conceive of a different way. Your mind still hangs onto such concepts as 'power' and 'authority.' The mere mention of my abilities causes a spike in your greed."

Orias shakes his head. "No, no, don't be silly, master! I do not covet anything of yours! I-I was only curious! I just don't know what you're talking about! Everything you say is so... cryptic."

"You do not understand what I am saying?" Buddha asks. "Or you do not want to understand? Which is it, I wonder?"

Orias takes a step back and rubs his head.

"I am... confused."

"Then I shall spell it out for you." Buddha says.

The reincarnated Hero holds out his hand. As if having activated a powerful magnet, the Mirror of Samsara yanks from Orias's grasp to fly into Buddha's. Orias doesn't resist the pull, though he does appear surprised that Buddha is even capable of performing such a feat.

"Master? Do you still possess your heroic abilities?"

Buddha calmly looks at the reflective surface of the Mirror.

"No. I lost them many reincarnations ago. Each reincarnation has successively weakened my control of Karma. Now, it no longer remains in my hands at all."

Orias's eyebrows sink a little.

"That's too bad."

"Haha..." Buddha chuckles, shooting a knowing glance at the Baron of the Stars. "Is it? I am still me, with or without my powers. I do not covet the power of Karma. It was a tool I used to advance the Creator's Will. Karma is not something I owned, nor something I ever wished to own. It simply... Was."

Orias remains silent as his teacher gently drops to the ground and crosses his legs.

Buddha gestures to the barren dirt in front of himself.

"Come. Sit."

Orias follows the command. He also sits cross-legged, staring at the ancient Hero with a look of curiosity.

"Do you know what the Creator hates more than anything?" Buddha asks.

Orias shakes his head. "I do not, master. Violence?"

"Indeed, violence goes against His way," Buddha answers. "But violence is sometimes a necessity. It is not the thing that He hates most. Instead, the source of all evil... is Greed."

Orias nods along to Buddha's words. "Greed, you say?"

"That's right. All evil can be traced back to a seed of greed, covetousness, and desire. Every agony under the eye of Creation comes from the influence of Greed. It is the reason why you have made no advancements in your journey."

Buddha holds up the Mirror of Samsara. He turns its reflective face toward Orias, allowing the Baron of the Stars to look at his own reflection.

Suddenly, a bright light erupts from its front, covering Orias from head to toe. The Baron winces and looks away. A moment later, the brilliance fades back to nothing.

Buddha sets the Mirror of Samsara on the ground with its reflective surface facing up. It projects a spiritual orb into the air, one that resembles a golden ball filled with countless blackened worms crawling beneath its surface, like hungry maggots slowly chewing through its interior.

"This is the 'you' that I see." Buddha explains. "This is your very being, your Karmic Ego. You do not realize this, Orias, but it appears exactly the same as when I first laid eyes on you."

Orias cocks his head slightly.

"This golden... thing. It represents 'me'?"

"Every living entity has one," Buddha continues. "Every demon, every human, every ant, gnat, and bird. Few have a Karmic Interior that is purely black with filth, and almost none have a pure and untouched one. Not even me."

Buddha holds the mirror up to his face. It flashes a divine light upon him, and he sets it back down. Once again, another golden orb appears, one which is far more brilliant and lustrous than Orias's. Even so, a couple of small, blackened worms crawl around on the surface, as if looking for an opening from which they can invade.

"What do these 'worms' represent?" Orias asks.

"Attachments." Buddha answers. "Attachments are a form of greed. They come from one's own possessive nature."

"But I thought you didn't have any attachments?" Orias points out.

"For the longest time, I didn't." Buddha says, his voice going quiet. "But everyone has a weakness, a gap in their armor. In my life as the great and Heroic 'Buddha,' I had none. I lived as an ascetic. I did exactly as the Creator asked. I never once strayed from the path of Karma."

He pauses for a moment before continuing.

"And then, one day, I died. I reincarnated into a new body. I assumed the life of a young boy named Ishmael. I suddenly experienced an emotion I never once felt in the entirety of my previous existence, and it shook me to my core."

"What did you experience?" Orias asks.

"Love. The purest form of earthly attachments. From that moment on, my connection to Karma began to fade, and it never returned."

Orias cocks his head. A look of absolute confusion crosses his face.

"I really don't understand. You say attachments represent Greed. But how is Greed connected to Love? Lust, I could understand. But Love should be the least greedy emotion one can experience."

Buddha shakes his head. "That is what many believe, but they are ignorant. There are many forms of love. Some people experience the bliss of unconditional love. That is to say, they seemingly hold no selfish feelings toward the person they love and will never envy them, nor do anything to harm them. In the eyes of outsiders, there can be no greater love. And yet, it is this perception, in and of itself, that gives rise to the greatest greed imaginable."

Buddha lifts his head to gaze vacantly at the ceiling.

"I loved Tamael with all my heart. As an agent of the Creator, I thought myself immune to the effects of attachments. Yet, when I revived in the body of a boy stricken with sickness, suffering in poverty, and doomed to suffer a life of pain, I felt a vague sense of dismay at my circumstances. In the moments where my chest ached so badly that I wished for death, I began to resent my Creator."

Buddha continues. "I asked myself many painful questions. Why did I, someone who served as the Creator's agent, have to suffer after my reincarnation? Did my meritorious deeds not afford me the right to a modest life? Why would He punish me by making me suffer under such terrible circumstances? How could He test me, when I had already long since proven my worthiness?"

"In that moment," Buddha concludes, "I experienced my first sensation of Greed."

"But your questions were valid," Orias interjects. "It doesn't make sense for Him to punish you. If what you said was true, then you served Him well! What sort of loving Creator would hurt you in such a way?"

Buddha shakes his head. "I know now the folly of my thoughts. You would do well not to echo them, Orias. No, my Greed was unwarranted. I did not realize it at the time, but what my Creator did for me was truly the most loving thing he could have done. In response, I spat in his face and began to think wicked and vile thoughts."

The human's eyes mist over, and a faint smile crosses his face for the first time since his arrival.

"There I was, a sickly young boy, writhing on a cot, with nobody to care for me. That was when I met the first and only woman I ever loved. Tamael was only a few years older than myself, physically speaking. I was ten, and she, twelve. My mental age, of course, was far greater, but that did not matter to me at the time."

"Tamael found me by coincidence. The door to my room had no covering. She was one of the few village healers assigned to care for the sick. She treated me as well as the other cripples, and we occasionally struck up conversations, talking about the nature of life. I found her to be intelligent and wise beyond her years. Still young and immature compared to myself, but someone who had endured a painful childhood and come out stronger."

"In that moment," Buddha continues, "I thought I had realized my first error. I assumed the Creator was punishing me. But in fact, what he gave me was a divine reward.

He allowed me to broaden my horizons and see the beauty of life. I swore that if I survived my sickness, I would do everything in my power to protect Tamael, and to give her a life filled with happiness."

Orias smiles. "Love doesn't sound so bad."

"Have you ever experienced it, Orias?" Buddha asks, his tone suddenly turning sharp.

"N-no," Orias says. "I haven't."

"Then you know not of what you speak. Indeed, I spent the next thirty years with Tamael. We wedded each other on my twentieth birthday. We made love, but later found she was incapable of bearing children. Even so, I did not mind. I had her all to myself, and I gave her a life of happiness."

Buddha's tone slowly changes as he speaks. Darkness covers his eyes.

"I did not realize what that love had cost me. My 'selflessness,' and my pursuit of her happiness shackled me in ways both innumerable and indescribable. I did not realize how badly I had wounded myself until that fateful day came... that day when Tamael wandered from my sight, tripped, and fell from a cliff's summit."

Buddha's chin trembles.

"She fell."

He lowers his head. His eyes moisten.

"She fell... so very, very far. I screamed. I cried. In the instant she tripped, I felt my entire world shatter."

Orias stares at the hollow expression on his master's face. He says nothing.

"I climbed down the cliff. I raced to my wife's side. I found her head split open, and her lifeless eyes gazing into the sky. Why did she have to die such a terrible death? Why did I not get even the chance to say goodbye?"

Tears glide down Buddha's face.

"I hated Him. I resented Him. The Creator... he made me suffer bodily agony, heart-tearing agony, and even the agony of a shattered soul. In the years after Tamael's death, I lost more and more of my connection to Karma. I became irrational. I engaged in casual fights. I took terrible risks, ones which inevitably resulted in my death. When I reincarnated, I still felt lost and enraged."

"Ten times..." Buddha mutters. "Ten times, I reincarnated. Through the eras, I never once forgot the loss of my wife. Eventually, though, the pain of losing her began to fade. In its place, I questioned everything I had ever believed. I questioned why I lived the way I did, and why I made the choices I did. And do you know what I found, Orias?"

Buddha looks at his pupil and sighs.

"I found that all of it was my fault. I made the decisions which caused my pain. I cast aside the wisdom my Creator gave me to pursue selfish, Earthly attachments. My Greed was my undoing, and that is why I lost my connection to Karma."

Orias raises an eyebrow. "That was not what I expected you to say. Haven't you heard the adage, 'better to have loved and lost, than to have never loved at all?' I fail to see how your love for Tamael was greedy, in any way."

"I was possessive." Buddha states. "What 'love' I felt for her was nothing more than a desire to make her 'mine.' I wanted to experience a lifetime of happiness with her in tow. What I believed to be my attempts at making her happy were just as much about making myself happy. In that way, my love for her was filled with Greed from the start. That is the insidious nature of the Creator's most hated attribute."

"But you contradict yourself," Orias points out. "If love is insidious and greedy, then by that definition, so too is the Creator. You stated before that what He did for you was in itself an act of love. Does that not mean that he is equally greedy?"

Buddha shakes his head.

"No. The love of a parent is boundless. True love, without any greed, comes in the form of opportunities. The Creator gave me a chance to make a choice. He reincarnated me into the body of Ishmael, not to punish me, but to expand my horizons. Were I a worthier person, I would have spent that lifetime taking in the suffering I endured to temper my soul. I would not have wed Tamael, but instead, would have educated and uplifted her, allowing her to make her own decisions."

Several seconds pass. Buddha's eyes become downcast.

"In fact, I took advantage of Tamael. When she was young and emotionally naïve, I used my superior life experience to manipulate her into loving me. Later, when we grew older and she began to match my emotional capacity, it was too late for her to leave me. She had already grown dependent on me, and I, on her. We both formed greedy attachments to one another, with me being the greatest beneficiary. While others spoke of my selfless love for her, and how I would do anything to make her smile, in fact, she never had much of a choice in the matter. I used her to make myself feel good, and ultimately blamed the Creator for her death."

"Because of Tamael," Buddha concludes, "I lost sight of reality. People die. It is the natural order. Some die horrifically, and others die peacefully, but in the end, all creatures in existence eventually perish. Rather than treasuring the memories I made with Tamael, I spent the next several lifetimes wallowing in anger, anger which was caused my my greedy possessiveness. It is for this reason, Orias, that I speak to you now as a changed man."

He gestures to the golden orb floating in midair, the one with only a few black maggots crawling on its surface.

"Once upon a time, my Karmic Ego was pure and untainted. Then, it became as black as the night. Now, no matter how I try, I will never rid myself of the attachments I once held. My Ego has slowly cleansed itself over time, but it can never regain its former purity. I can never again possess control over Karma, but instead, must pass it on to a worthy successor."

"Me?" Orias asks. "But if yours cannot be cleansed, then surely, mine cannot, either."

Siddhartha Gautama, the Great Buddha, falls utterly silent. For more than a minute, he gazes into Orias's eyes.

He touches the Mirror of Samsara, revealing Orias's sullen Ego once again. Its many maggots, infested deep into the core of his Ego, appear far more vile and sinister than those that barely linger on Buddha's surface.

However, Buddha's gaze softens.

"Unlike me, you have no truly deep-seated attachments. Yes, the Greed you possess has corrupted much of yourself, but in relatively small amounts, spread over a great deal of time. You have taken care to not let it fester within you and wildly corrupt your thinking."

"I don't understand." Orias says. "My Ego is far filthier than yours. If you cast away the last lingering attachments you have to Tamael..."

"I will not." Buddha flatly refuses. "My Greed can never leave me. While it may appear small and harmless, it is, in actuality, a symbiotic parasite that allows me to keep on living. My wife perished before the angels created the Lazarus Tower. As such, I never had the opportunity to see her again. So long as this desire of mine isn't reconciled and given closure, I will never abandon it. It is not a matter of whether or not I can, but simply a fact that I am unwilling."

"But... you can never reconcile your loss." Orias says. "I know you still love her, but why not let go? Practice what you preach."

"I refuse. Orias, do not try to change my ways. I can never again touch upon the Creator's glory. I have sinned too much. While you may have doubts, I believe that in due time, you can become an entity capable of touching His greatness. All you must do is cast aside these minor, frivilous things holding you back. In that way, you will surpass me and become able to wield the power of Karma."

Orias quietly gazes at his master for a minute.

"...But what if I do not want the power of Karma? What if I am fine with the way I am?"

Buddha smiles.

"If that is the case, then you will absolutely become worthy of wielding it."

Part 313: Satan's Fall

Belial struggles against the dreamlike restraints binding her to a table. Despite her deity-like strength and ability to shatter demonstone with her bare hands, once trapped inside of Lucifer's Demonic Trance, no amount of physical power will avail her.

The slab holding Belial prisoner levitates vertically, allowing her to watch as a giant, open field materializes before her. The flowers and grass have almost a dream-like quality to them, making Belial's soul feel more and more tired as the minutes tick by.

Lucifer stands at Belial's side. She waves her hand casually, summoning a phantom image of Satan the Devil, as well as a familiar black-haired woman, the former Black Witch, Amelia Greyheart.

Amelia's appearance, that of a 30-something woman with luscious red lips, pitch-black hair that stretches past her hips, and a skirt/blouse combination best described as 'Gothic Lolita,' stands arrogantly before the Devil, a frown on her face.

"Satan the Devil." Amelia states, her tone neither warm nor cold. "Why have you come here? We don't have any business with each other."

Despite being much shorter than the Black Witch, Satan still puffs out his chest, acting as if he is the bigger man.

"That's where you're wrong, woman. Listen up. A little mouse told me that you have a friend in your head. Leviathan. I want to speak to him."

Amelia's eyes immediately narrow to slits.

"Who told you that? I have kept Levvy's presence a secret for ages. Nobody should know."

"So you admit it's true," Satan says, not deigning to answer her question. "Cut the crap. I don't like hitting broads. Bring out that dragon, 'cause I need to talk to him."

"Levvy doesn't want to speak to you." Amelia says. She crosses her arms and tilts her body a few degrees backward, looking down on the Devil as if he were an annoying gnat. "You two long ago concluded your business. After everything he has given you, including the power to finally exterminate the angels, you should be bowing at my feet and pledging to serve him for all eternity. But judging by your tone, you've come in search of even more handouts. Truly, you are a reprehensible little wretch."

Satan clenches his jaw. "Shut your mouth, bitch. I'm not here looking for a handout. I'm here to finally get the PAYMENT I earned! Now you tell that dragon to get out here, before I rearrange your face!"

Amelia's expression shifts to a light smirk. "You think you have the ability, little Devil? Levvy gave you your power. I can take it away. You are nothing before-"

She pauses mid-sentence, then turns her gaze away. After looking vacantly into the distance, Amelia crinkles her nose.

"...Count your blessings. Levvy says he'll talk to you. Don't piss him off, or you'll piss me off."

The Black Witch's gaze turns hollow. Her pupils expand to fill her eyes, and a trickle of darkness draconic energy begins to fall from her body and poison the surrounding vegetation.

"Satan." Amelia says again, her voice noticeably deeper. "I do not wish to be disturbed. Leave now, and I will forgive your unkind words against the woman I love."

"Leviathan," Satan says, taking a step forward. "Finally, you came out. Listen here, pal. We had a deal! I've fulfilled my end of the bargain. Now, it's your turn."

Leviathan frowns. "I know not of what you speak."

"Don't play stupid with me! There's no way some ancient dragon would forget so easily!" Satan exclaims. "You told me that if I killed all the angels, you would bring my girl back. Well, I've got part of Nerissa's soul inside me, all these millennia later. I have her body. And now, the angels are dead! So I want you to bring her back, just like you said you would!"

Leviathan slowly blinks.

"Ah. I see. Indeed, I had forgotten my casual offering. Truth be told, I never thought you had it in you. Killing all of the angels was a remarkable feat. You have much to be proud of."

"I don't want your compliments," Satan says. "I want you to do what you promised. So, do we still have a deal?"

Several seconds of silence follow.

Leviathan looks away, toward the pale blue sky of an unknown world. Not Earth, but some other planet, connected through a warp-gate to the Labyrinth's central nexus.

"Mmm. At the time I stated those words, I was a different person. I was still hollow, empty, and bitter, much like yourself. But... after spending five thousand years with my little lady... I no longer hold the same banal hatred I once did. Whether the angels lived or died, I long ago stopped caring. Their deaths only brought a small sense of closure to the loss of my mother, my brothers, and my sisters."

Leviathan shakes Amelia's head.

"I am sorry, Satan. I know it pains you to hear this, but I cannot give up my soul to bring back the woman you love. Now that I have my little lady, I would never do anything which would leave her alone in this world. The two of us have each other, and that is all. Bringing back your beloved Nerissa would cost me my life, and that is a price I am unwilling to pay."

Satan's pupils shrink to pinpricks.

"What? I spent... I spent thousands of years organizing, fighting, and crushing the humans and angels, all for the sake of finally bringing Nerissa back! Bub, you're a goddamned liar! You promised me you'd bring her back! You made a contract with me!"

Leviathan's expression turns sharp. "I did no such thing. I merely said that I would consider bringing her back. After all this time, I have done so, and judged her life unworthy of mine. You have neither the right nor the might to force my actions, and so, I have no reason to entertain your requests any longer."

Satan's smoldering rage grows hotter by the second. He motions with his hand, causing a flash of light to materialize in front of him.

"Hades! Talk some sense into this overgrown mutt!"

Archangel Samael, now a faithful servant of the Devil, congeals into a spiritual body vaguely resembling his original self, albeit much more transparent and ghostly than any flesh body would appear. He levitates between Leviathan and Satan, acting as an arbiter.

"Leviathan." Hades says. "It is good to speak to thee once more. I thought thou hads't died."

"Hmph. There are few things in this universe capable of slaying the Last Dragon," Leviathan says. "Are you going to negotiate on that red rat's behalf?"

Hades shoots a glance back at Satan's angry face, then returns his gaze to Amelia's.

"Nay. I respect thee too much, brother. Restoring my memories was a boon I cannot ever forget. This dispute between the Devil and thee is not one in which I will interfere."

"Hades!" Satan snaps. "What are you doing? You know how much this means to me! Do you think I only killed the angels just for revenge? I repeated my true motive constantly, at least a thousand times!"

"Thy request would cost my brother his life," Hades says. "He is the last dragon. His life is incalculably more valuable than that of thy fallen mate. I refuse to press him for assistance on thy behalf."

Satan balls his hands into fists.

"It's not fair... it's not fair! If you weren't willing to make the deal, you never should have made that promise! I hate people who break their contracts, Leviathan!"

"Satan," Hades says. "Calm down. I know this news hurts, but thy mate-"

Before the fallen Archangel can finish his sentence, Satan motions with his hand to desummon him. Storms of rage burn in his eyes as he looks at Amelia with blood-curdling hatred.

"Nobody cheats Satan the Devil! All contract terms are FINAL!"

Leviathan's frown becomes ugly.

"Do not test my patience, Satan. I have gone easy on you in the past, but if you make a move on my little lady, this dragon will retaliate without holding back."

"Oh, I'll make a move, bub." Satan spits. "I'll make you regret ever going back on your word!"

A massive battle follows. Satan the Devil launches an onslaught against the Black Witch, Amelia Greyheart. Despite the dragon's power flowing through her body, and despite the thousands of years she has spent adapting to Leviathan's power, the Black Witch only manages to output a fraction of his ultimate power. In the end, she is merely a human trying to manipulate the power of an ancient deity.

Satan, possessing tens of thousands, perhaps even millions of human, angel, and demon souls, 'cheats' by expending them like candy to boost his own strength. He flings meteors, fireballs, and other elemental attacks with impunity, raining down Hellfire on the Black Witch.

Slowly but surely, Satan gains an absolute advantage over Amelia.

"I warned you!" The Devil roars. "Nobody double-crosses me!"

Amelia summons a darkness shield to protect herself.

"What do you hope to accomplish, Devil? Do you think you can force Levvy to revive your woman?! He'll never bow to a red rat like you!"

"If he won't give his life freely," Satan exclaims, as he burns ten thousand souls at once to summon a mountain-crushing ball of fire, "Then that dragon can BURN for all eternity! And you can go with him!"

"Satan! No!" Amelia screams.

Her cries go unheard. Satan releases the fireball, its scorching heat eradicating all plant-life for tens of miles in every direction. Amelia doesn't even manage to utter one last cry of agony before the fireball explodes against her shield, killing her instantly and reducing her corpse to ash.

Not only does the explosion kill Amelia, but it also kills the Devil, too. However, sixty seconds later, Satan reforms thanks to his undying demonic powers. He revives on the spot, finding himself standing alone on that scorched world.

"...Absolute bastard." Satan growls.

The Devil's heart sinks. He gazes into the distance wistfully, recalling all those years he slaved for the sake of eradicating angelkind. Even now, while his species rejoices at finally killing their most hated enemies, all he feels is emptiness.

"I promised Lilia I'd bring her sister back... so many times. Sorry, babe. I let you down."

The pot-bellied Devil turns to walk away.

However, in that obliterated wasteland, a heavy mana pressure emerges. The power of a dragon manifests from seemingly nowhere, causing the Devil to whirl around in surprise.

"What? Leviathan? You're still alive?!"

The ancient dragon's soul materializes as a ominous black orb. It slowly congeals and reforms, changing from an utterly nebulous shape into the apparition of Leviathan's former self.

The black dragon opens his eyes. His expression turns solemn as he looks down at the tiny, shivering demon before him.

"Satan. Long has it been since I felt such a sense of unfathomable loss. To have angered me this badly, it would be insufficient to call you a demon with a death wish."

Leviathan's eyes shift from Satan to a faint layer of ash spread over one particular bit of scorched dirt.

"My little lady. She was the only woman I loved. She was everything to me. How ironic that a man who should understand the pain of loss would unleash that same agony upon me. You are even more wretched and vile than I ever imagined."

Satan sucks in a breath. "Why didn't you die?!"

Leviathan ignores his question. "I have many regrets, small one. I regret not standing up to the angels. I regret only spending few thousand fleeting years with my little lady. But most of all… I regret not killing you."

The First Emperor screams in rage. His voice contains more than a hint of fear as he lobs lightning bolts, holy energy orbs, and even more fireballs at the dragon, burning thousands of souls to empower himself.

These attacks, previously capable of turning the Black Witch to ash, merely splash against the dragon's rapidly reforming body. They don't injure him in the slightest.

By the time Leviathan fully rematerializes, his sickening magical power has already began to suppress the Devil's mana, drastically weakening Satan's every attack.

Leviathan blinks slowly. "Perish for a while, demon."

With a casual wave of his claw, the last dragon brings an ungodly rain of darkness energy down, smiting the Devil where he stands. Satan's body splatters into a pile of plasma-like goo, giving Leviathan sixty seconds of silence to ruminate on what has happened.

"My little lady..." He murmurs to the scattered ashes at his feet. "Since the moment we first met, I have always loved you. If only we could have spent the rest of eternity together... I would have liked that. Once I am gone, I hope that you will eventually forget about me and find another who brings you happiness. I do not wish for you to eternally grieve, as I would in your place. You deserve better than that."

The dark dragon, an entity who has lived for countless eons, lifts his head to roar in anguish at the sky. Tears stream from his eyes as he concentrates all of his life-force into his soul.

Above him, a tear appears in space. For a brief moment, a brilliant light shines down upon the scorched world. Each radiant ray revitalizes the land, rapidly regrowing all the dead flowers and grass, returning it to its former beauty.

At the same time, a tremendous tugging sensation begins to pull on Leviathan's soul. Terrible agony wracks his very being, but he resists it and continues to roar at the void.

"NO. YOU WILL NOT TAKE MY SOUL! NOT UNTIL... YOU GIVE ME... MY LITTLE LADY BACK! AAAAH!!"

This realm, one which shines with the Creator's former glory, is none other than the Great Beyond, a place of unfathomable concentrated power. It grabs onto the last dragon's soul and pulls with a power beyond what any deity can resist, but Leviathan still stubbornly digs his claws into the ground while sweeping his spiritual senses across the Great Beyond's interior.

"GIVE HER TO ME. MY LITTLE LADY IS NOT YOURS TO TAKE!"

Satan resurrects, only to find himself standing in the middle of a hurricane. Invisible and immaterial threads of magical energy grab onto the Devil's body and yank him upward, but he manipulates Hades' Vectors to latch onto a nearby tree. Its corporeal and non-sentient form resist the pull of the Great Beyond, allowing Satan to anchor himself to reality itself.

"Spawn of a broodmother!" Satan curses. "What in the Seven Hells is going on?!"

Nobody answers Satan. He tries to summon a portal using one of the many Warper souls he owns, but the portal instantly destabilizes, preventing him from escaping.

At the same time, Leviathan locks onto one specific soul out of the trillions drifting in the Great Beyond. He reaches out with his senses and reels it in. The closer it draws to him, the mightier the pressure on his own soul becomes.

Less than a minute later, the ancient dragon begins to feel fatigued like never before in all his life. A deep desire to sleep wafts over his senses, causing his eyes to lazily blink.

"No... no... not yet... I must first... reform... her vessel..."

Using the last bit of his strength, Leviathan recreates Amelia's human body. However, he changes its internal structure, optimizing it for his leftover draconic power. The moment he finishes, Leviathan tears Amelia's soul out of the Great Beyond, places it inside her body, and attaches it securely with his last vestiges of strength.

Finally, his eyes close for the last time.

"I will... always... love you... my little..."

The dragon's body slumps forward. It falls lifelessly to the dirt, while a soul-orb as big as a firetruck leaps from its confines and rushes toward the crack in the sky.

Seconds later, the rift to the Great Beyond collapses, sealing itself shut forever more.

Silence falls across the planet.

Satan shakily releases his grip on the tree, the one which saved his soul from being devoured by the Great Beyond. His knees clack together as he tries to stand, but the sheer tearing sensations which ravaged his soul require a moderate amount of time for him to recover.

As the Devil stabilizes his breathing, Amelia opens her eyes.

She abruptly sits up, a look of surprise on her face.

"I'm... I'm alive? But how?"

The Black Witch blinks several times. She turns her head to the right, and then to the left.

Her vision locks onto Leviathan's corpse, the body of the dragon she loves more than anyone else in the universe.

"Levvy? Levvy?!"

Amelia jumps to her feet. She runs toward Leviathan's body and tries to wrap her arms around his snout.

"Speak to me! Levvy!! What's wrong?! Are you sleeping? What's going..."

As she touches the last dragon's body, a faint soul imprint activates in her mind. Leviathan's last words repeat to her.

"My little lady..."

"Since the moment we first met, I have always loved you."

"If only we could have spent the rest of eternity together... I would have liked that."

"Once I am gone, I hope that you will eventually forget about me and find another who brings you happiness."

"I do not wish for you to eternally grieve, as I would in your place."

"You deserve better than that."

Amelia's chest burns. Her throat locks up, while countless emotions cascade within her body.

"No... no, it can't be true... he can't be..."

While Satan recovers strength in his legs, Amelia loses strength in hers. She collapses to her knees and breaks down sobbing, while the Devil stands up, breathing normally once again.

"Hurts, doesn't it?" Satan mutters. "Now you're the same as me. If I can't get my lover back, then you can't get yours back, either. That's what I call fairness."

The Devil conjures another massive fire orb. He gazes at the broken woman with one last look of pity before burning a thousand souls.

"No hard feelings, Leviathan. You signed a contract with the Devil... and one way or another, I always get my payback. Uuuaahh!!"

Satan hurls the fiery orb at Amelia's back, intending to smite her where she stands. The destructive ball of energy crashes against her body and explodes, blasting a small amount of nuclear energy in every direction.

Satan averts his eyes for a moment, shielding them from the white-hot light. Once it dims, he opens them again, only to nearly jump out of his skin!

The Black Witch, who he so easily dispatched earlier, now stands less than a foot away from him, a murderous look of rage in her eyes.

"You took Levvy from me." Amelia growls. "Suffer the consequences."

Before Satan can react, Amelia's hand snaps at his neck with a viper-like motion. She grabs the Devil by his throat and hoists him into the air, forcing Satan to attack her with everything he has. He unleashes the might of his Vectors, pummeling and bashing Amelia with all of his ethereal limbs.

However, those pitiful attacks merely glance off her skin, as if having struck the hardest set of dragonscale armor in the universe. She doesn't even blink as the water droplet-like blows rain on her.

Snap.

Amelia twists her wrist and shatters Satan's neck, killing him instantly. As the light fades from Satan's eyes, so too does the light from hers. Amelia's pupils turn pitch-black. She conjures the might of a dragon to engulf Satan's soul, forcibly placing the cruelest and most vicious slave contract on him that one could possibly imagine.

"Only once have I ever used this power..." Amelia hisses. "On that bastard, Arthur. I didn't have the power to take his soul at the time, but I do, now. And all it cost me was the life of my best friend in the whole universe. I will not kill you, DEVIL. I will make you suffer for all eternity as my undying SLAVE."

Despite suffering a sixty-second death, Satan's body still spasms, and his mouth lets out an animalistic scream of pain as Amelia sends a surge of draconic energy into his very soul. She continues torturing him for hours, all while staring the Devil dead in the eyes.

"From this day forward... all demons will be my ENEMIES!"

Lucifer turns to Belial, a smirk formed at the corner of her mouth. She enjoys the delicious look of pain on Belial's face while she watches her husband suffer the agony of a thousand deaths at Amelia's hands.

"Do you finally understand, whore?" Lucifer asks. "I led Satan to the Black Witch. I learned of Leviathan's existence through a slip-up she made, and I decided to pit the Devil against the former dragon. My third eye can pierce all illusions. I even managed to save that delicious moment for you! Ah, if only I had been able to show it to you sooner. But, who knows? Perhaps all these years of never knowing the answer have only made the truth even more torturous for you!"

Belial chokes back a sob. "You... you led Satan to his death... just like Ose said... but why, Lucifer? WHY?! Satan gave you control of the Hell of Blood! Even after all the resentments you both accrued, he never slighted you!"

"But he DID!" Lucifer shrieks. She walks over and presses her four-titted chest against Belial's, making sure to loom right in the succubus's face. "I should have been the one to lead demonkind! Satan stole that title from me! After that little shit disappeared for thousands of years, it was ME who saved our people from the clutches of despair! Satan never had the right to call himself our First Emperor!"

"You have always been a jealous bastard!" Belial cries. "Satan led our people out of Heaven! He brought us to the dragon, and he returned to destroy the angels during the War in Heaven! Ultimately, he led our people to total victory over our oppressors! How could you ever think he was unworthy?!"

Lucifer pulls away. She snorts contemptuously.

"All he ever had was a bit of good luck. He was lucky to receive the powers he did, while I achieved just as many feats as him with lesser strength! Truly, I am and always was the superior Emperor!"

Belial lowers her head. A look of deep sorrow washes over her expression. She even stops trying to fight against her restraints.

"You're so... empty. You are a hollow woman. An empty shell. You have never experienced the beauty of love. You only ever take, take, take from the people around you. You're a parasite, Lucifer. That is why your own son turned against you. All those years ago, nobody knew how or why you suddenly disappeared... but now I do. Gressil killed you because you only ever treated him as a tool. Ose, your favorite little girl, never loved you either. You were only a tool for her usage, just as she was for you."

Lucifer curls her upper lip, exposing her knife-like teeth. "Watch your mouth, Belial. My little girl means more to me than you could ever understand! Even after my ungrateful son turned on me, my daughter has become a demoness far beyond the likes of you!"

Belial frowns. She stares at Lucifer for a moment, before shaking her head.

"You don't know, do you?"

"I don't know what?" Lucifer asks, leering toward Belial with a look of pure smugness.

"Ose died." Belial says. "And Bael is the one who killed her. Your daughter fell to a mere Duke."

"What?!" Lucifer asks, recoiling slightly. "You lie! There's no way that limp-dicked Duke of Pain could accomplish such a feat! My daughter is invincible!"

Belial's lips curve into a wry smile. "You don't have to believe my words, Lucifer. Look for yourself. I watched her die with my own eyes."

Lucifer's third eye flashes. She plays through Belial's memories in a flash, reading her mind as easily as if it were an open book.

"No, no, no!! It's not possible!" Lucifer shrieks. "Ose is mommy's little girl! She's perfect! PERFECT! Not a useless cavorting slut like you! I trained her every day! I molded her into a killing machine, just like me!"

"Hahaha... well, you didn't do a good enough job." Belial whispers. "In the end, you lost to Satan, and Ose lost to me. Like mother, like daughter. Both useless."

"AAAAAHHH!!"

Lucifer grabs the side of her head and yanks at her hair. Pure rage clouds every inch of her vision, making her overlook the fact that Ose would most likely revive as one of Mephisto's pawns.

Not that such a thought would help her. For Lucifer's precious baby girl to fall in battle is a blow that utterly crushes her sense of superiority. Lucifer staggers backward, fighting off the waves of hatred that wash over her mind as she replays every moment of her life, all the 'wasted' time she spent with Ose, while her precious little girl only ended up losing in the end.

"IT'S NOT FAIR!!" Lucifer screams. "She was supposed to be PERFECT!! Perfect-perfect-perfect!!"

The illusory world momentarily destabilizes. With Lucifer's mind suffering continuous self-inflicted wounds, the seemingly unbreakable aspects of her Demonic Trance begin to fall apart, giving Belial a chance to escape.

The Second Emperor, while not particularly versed in soul manipulation, conjures what mental strength she has left to tear out of the bindings that once held her in place. She breaks away from the demonstone table, raises her fist, and storms directly at the Emperor of Providence.

"Hey, Lucy! This is for Satan! Eat shit and DIE!"

Part 314: End of Faith

General Chadwick and Corporal Hurent rush down the prison's corridors, turning left and right, going up several flights of stairs while five thousand exosuit-wearing troopers follow them.

"Contact lost with Lieutenant Samuel!" Hurent says. She checks her heads-up display and grimaces. "His life signs are erratic. He must have taken one hell of a hit!"

The distant sounds of thunder, caused by Belial and Lucifer's battle, suddenly goes quiet. Corporal Hurent's heart leaps into her throat as she imagines the worst.

"Sounds like someone won." Chadwick growls. "Let's hope it was our girl and not the other one!"

Directly behind the two humans, a minotaur wearing enchanted golden armor follows them, his greataxe held at the ready. Yamir, the head chef for Jason and Phoebe Hiro, readies himself for battle while shooting glances at both of the humans before him.

"You said that Lieutenant Samuel was injured?"

Chadwick nods. "According to his T-REX's sensors, the battle hasn't moved any closer to him, but his suit integrity has fallen below fifty percent."

"When we arrive, I will hold the line." Yamir says. "The rest of you should take Samuel and Belial, and flee. I will hold Gressil back."

"Don't be ridiculous," Chadwick snaps, shooting a quick glance behind himself while he runs. "If something happens to you, who will feed humanity's Hero and greatest inventor? You just make sure to keep up with the rest of us."

Yamir nods. "I will do as you command."

Two minutes later, the human army rounds the final corner. They screech to a halt upon arriving at Samuel's unconscious figure, but their eyes flick several hundred meters ahead, where, in the darkness, they observe Belial and Gressil in some sort of strange standoff. Gressil's second head gazes at her, its third eye faintly glowing red in the darkness. The two Emperors stare at each other silently, without moving, as if having some sort of unseen battle of the eyes.

One of the troopers raises his gun, but Chadwick pulls it back down. "Wait! We can't shoot Gressil, not with Belial between us and him. We might hit her in the crossfire."

The trooper frowns. "What are they doing, commander? It looks like they're just... staring at each other."

"How in the damnation should I know?" Chadwick sputters. "You know demons! There's probably some crazy magic bullshit going on. Let's not interfere unless it looks like Belial needs our help."

Hurent drops to one knee. She motions to a pair of Clinicians, then gestures toward Samuel's motionless body. "Fix this fellow up, then get him warped back to the Core!"

"Yes, Corporal!"

After confirming Samuel hasn't suffered any grievous injuries, the human army teleports him back to the Core, then returns to full alert, keeping all of their eyes locked on the Emperor of Chaos.

After five minutes, Chadwick begins to grind his teeth.

"What in the god-damn are those two doing? Are they trying to intimidate each other? I've never seen anything like it."

Corporal Hurent raises a sniper rifle and takes aim at Gressil's head. "General. I'm fully confident I can land a hit on the prison warden without hitting Belial. Permission to take the shot?"

"You might be confident, but I'm not..." Chadwick mutters. "If we hit Belial, she won't be able to use her healing magic to patch herself up. You know how important she is to Phoebe."

Hurent keeps the barrel of her rifle trained on Gressil's head. "Mmm. Alright. I'll wait for movement, then. In the meantime-"

"AAAAAAHHH!!"

Gressil's second head suddenly screams with enough rage to scare the piss out of every human present. Corporal Hurent involuntarily flinches and squeezes the trigger, releasing a gauss round that rockets down the corridor at the speed of sound. Due to her fright, she screws up her aim, and the bullet whizzes harmlessly past Gressil's head, sending a sonic boom pulsing down the hallway with a loud crack!

"Hurent!" Chadwick shouts.

"Sorry! That scream scared the crap out of me!" Hurent apologizes.

At the same time, all hell breaks loose. Belial's fist snaps forward and blasts Lucifer's head, sending the Emperor of Chaos flying backward. An instant after her punch connects, Belial kicks off the floor and dashes after her opponent, opting to send a punch downward into Gressil's abdomen.

THUMP!!

Belial punches the Emperor of Chaos with all her strength, shattering over a dozen bones in his chest and battering him into the floor. Half a second later, she unloads another violent flurry of punches at the entombed prison warden, each blow crashing against his body to inflict terrible amounts of pain.

Boom-boom-boom!

Belial punches, kicks, and batters Gressil and Lucifer with the fury of an enraged widow. Each strike carries the full hatred she's accumulated over many eons, including all of the blame she once placed on herself for Satan's death.

"IT WAS YOU WHO KILLED HIM!" Belial roars. "I'LL RIP YOU TO FUCKING SHREDS, LUCIFER!!"

Unable to access her transformation magic, Belial can't change her fingers into claws to more easily slice into Gressil's abdomen, but she still manages to forcibly impale her fingers into his flesh and rip out huge chunks.

"Aaargh!" Lucifer screams. "Get off me, whore!"

The Emperor of Providence charges up an attack from her third eye, but the moment it fires, Belial shifts her entire body weight to the side, dodges the blast, and follows up with a vicious punch right to Lucifer's face.

THUMP!

Lucifer's vision goes blurry. For a brief moment, she slips unconscious.

In that instant, Gressil's eyes open to glare at Belial.

"Enough of this."

Before Belial can stop him, Gressil flicks a finger. His body disappears, teleporting from right underneath her feet.

The Emperor of Chaos reappears fifty meters away, the bloody wounds and gouged-out eyes on his chest making him appear three times more hideous than usual. He leans against the wall and coughs up huge wads of blood, glaring daggers at Belial.

"Ignorant female. If you wish to make mincemeat out of me, you'll have to do better than that. I am not nearly as fragile as that woman."

As always, Gressil never directly mentions his mother's name, opting to refer to her in the third person.

Belial lunges at him. "Do you only know how to run, Gressil?! Fight me, if you dare!"

The instant before Belial's punch connects with Gressil's chest, a flicker of movement appears beside her. Gressil materializes with his fist raised.

THUMP!

He blasts the side of Belial's head with a right hook, sending her hurtling to the side.

The moment the human troops see Belial's fortunes reverse, they take aim at Gressil and open fire.

A hailstorm of bullets rips down the corridor, catching Gressil off-guard. The prison-warden growls angrily as two dozen tank-piercing rounds tear into and out of his body, dealing brutal amounts of damage. He flickers out of reality again, but this time, doesn't reappear.

"You have done well this time, humans." Gressil says, his eerily calm voice floating through the Labyrinth's stale air. "But now, you have truly angered me. I will leave you with a parting gift."

Belial recovers from Gressil's unexpected punch. She climbs to her feet and shakes off the mild concussion, then glances around to look for him.

"Where did Gressil go?" Belial asks.

"I... I don't know. He might still be here," Chadwick says. "Or... he might have left?"

The humans swivel on their feet, cautiously checking every adjacent cell, the ceiling, and every corner, just in case Gressil might be lurking nearby. However, nobody finds anything.

Suddenly, Yamir stands up a little straighter, then sniffs the air.

The minotaur's expression turns ugly. He turns to look in Belial's direction, but his eyes gaze well past her, into the furthest reaches of Faith's End.

"Everyone! Enemies are on the way... they're... Hellhounds... and something else! I do not recognize their smell!"

Belial turns around. Her demonic vision allows her to see through even the blackest of nights, so she easily manages to pick out a flood of approaching creatures skittering on the walls, ceiling, and floors.

Her heart leaps into her throat.

"It's the Grez! Gressil is sending his minions to take us out! Everyone, run for the exit, hurry!"

The Grez, each one a fearful monster with the same strength as a typical Demon Baron, race toward the humans at alarming speeds, screeching and chittering in some bug-like language, while a massive force of several hundred Hellhounds joins them.

The lead Hellhound, a truly monstrous female with fifty eyes on her head and claws capable of ripping through titanium, barrels ahead of the pack and roars at Belial.

"BETRAYERRR!"

Belial doesn't recognize the Hellhound, but she easily picks up on the distinct hatred in its voice. Despite possessing more than enough strength to take the huge dire wolf down, Belial doesn't dare to face it down along with so many other monsters in unison. She turns tail and flees, while the Labyrinth begins to shake under the stampede.

"Head for the exits!" Belial repeats. She continues to run, finding that her magical energy hasn't returned yet. "Gressil must be somewhere nearby! Don't let down your guard!"

What follows is a terrifying chase that leaves sweat pouring down the backs of the humans, Belial, and the lone minotaur, Yamir.

Yamir and Belial take up the rear. Whenever the flood of monsters gets too close, Belial punches the walls to collapse the Labyrinth behind her, but this makeshift barricade of earthen debris only slows the Grez down for a few moments before they burst through, screeching all the while.

Up ahead, one of the human commandos screams in fright. A pair of Grez appears from a corridor in front of him and barrels directly into the wall of exosuit-wearing soldiers without fear. Before anyone can react, the two Grez impale and eviscerate half a dozen men and woman, killing them on the spot. By the time other soldiers turn their guns on the ambushers, the Grez manage to kill another dozen humans.

"Backup! We need backup!" Chadwick shouts.

Belial stays in the back, but Yamir releases a roar and leaps over the heads of the humans in the tightly packed corridor. Using the magic inside his ancestral armor, he runs sideways along the wall, raises his greataxe, and dives down onto one of the Grez.

The minotaur's blade chops into a weak point in the Grez's armor, drawing a small amount of blood. However, it instantly spins around and lunges at him, stabbing its two forward-facing mandibles against Yamir's armor.

Corporal Hurent takes aim with her sniper rifle. In the blink of an eye, her suit assists her aim to point directly at the bloodied wound Yamir left. She squeezes the trigger, and a powerful gauss round fires into the Grez's neck.

The monster doesn't even get to utter one last cry of pain. Its spine ends up severed, and its final attack merely crumples against Yamir's armor.

Chadwick rallies his men. He spreads them around the second remaining Grez, pinning it down and preventing anyone else from taking it on alone. He coordinates with Yamir and Hurent to kill the second one, but with its dying breath, it fires both of its mandibles from its body, impaling two of the Clinicians. They both perish instantly, with not even their exosuits managing to protect them.

Chadwick spares only a single glance for the fallen. His commander module transmits data to his HUD, allowing him to see that in just the last five minutes, twenty soldiers have died.

"Keep moving!" Chadwick barks. "You, grab Private Jacob's body! And you, grab Private Leera! Let's move! Don't you dare leave your comrades for these bastards to eat! They deserve honorable deaths!"

The group's forward momentum resumes, but having wasted so much time killing the two Grez, the humans become acutely aware that their enemies have likely split up and circled around to encircle them.

"Two Grez shit all over us..." Chadwick mutters, keeping his voice low so as not to demoralize his subordinates. "But if ten, twenty, or even more show up... I can't see us making it out of here alive."

As they flee, the humans' exosuits detect noises up ahead. They slow to a stop, and Chadwick grimaces.

"Fuck."

A T-shaped junction splits off to the right and left, and from both directions, the sounds of screeching and howling come barreling toward the humans.

In an instant, Chadwick's life flashes before his eyes.

He remembers the time he spent with his wife and child... before the Great War. He served under a Norwegian King named Haakon and fought honorably under his command... until the Sphinx, Bahamut, ensnared him with her Riddle Magic and stole him away.

Chadwick grits his teeth. He stands up a little straighter as a surge of pride rushes through his veins.

"Look sharp, men! These monsters have us surrounded! Our goal is no longer to escape, but to attack in all directions! Cut Gressil's rats down, and give no quarter!"

Behind the company, Belial lashes out against the lead Hellhound, a truly massive wolf standing twelve feet tall and twenty feet long. The savage monster towers over her, oppressing her with its sheer size.

"You attacked my mother!" The Hellhound roars. "I am Maelgamish, Lucifer's mightiest beast! Remember my name when I send you to the Great Beyond!"

The Hellhound swings her claws at Belial. The succubus dives to the side, narrowly evading the attack and causing Maelgamish's talons to rake the walls. Each claw leaves a six-inch gash in the Labyrinth's earthen surface.

Again and again, Maelgamish slashes and bites at Belial, while the smaller Hellhounds and several dozen Grez surround her and cut her off from the human army. To Belial's alarm, the Hellhound leader possesses not only a remarkable amount of cunning, but superior tactical control of the Grez. She lines them up to deliberately blockade Belial from easily rushing to her friends' aid, while taking her sweet time pinning the former Second Emperor down.

Several mutated Hellhounds vomit balls of acid, fire, and poison at Belial. One particularly acrid poison-ball explodes into fumes beside her, gagging Belial and forcing her to retreat into a nearby cell. This makeshift chokepoint doesn't protect her for long, as Maelgamish tears the door out and flings it away before snapping her jaws into the room to try and bite Belial in half.

"Come here, woman!" Maelgamish howls. "I want to taste your flesh!"

The distant sounds of human screams causes Belial's heart to skip a beat. She pounces at the cell walls and smashes her fist into them. She breaks through, only to find seven Grez waiting for her in the adjacent cell.

"Shit!"

Belial curses audibly as the seven monsters pounce on her and begin ripping their claws into her flesh. Belial screams and fights back, but each claw tears her clothes and skin, spraying blood in every direction.

In a fit of rage, Belial begins swinging her fists wildly. Her fortunes reverse as she smashes right through the incredible dermal armor protecting the Grez. She crushes them with ease, splatters their brains, and tears them apart. However, in the ten seconds it takes her to kill Gressil's hellspawn, a sense of danger prickles at the back of her neck. She spins around just in time to see Maelgamish's claw rushing at her back.

Slash!

"Aaaeeii!"

Belial screams as the Hellhounds paw rips off her left arm, tears across her ribs and waist, and sends her flying backward. She slams against the wall and momentarily loses consciousness. When she blinks her eyes open again, her heart jolts in fright, as the black-maned Hellhound pounces at her, its jaws open wide.

"No!"

The instant before Maelgamish can end Belial's life, a figure flickers in front of her, nearly moving faster than her eyes can follow.

Thunk.

Jason Hiro reaches out his palm and casually grabs Maelgamish by her nose. He halts the seemingly unstoppable Hellhound in her tracks, making her jerk to a violent halt as if having slammed against a steel wall.

For a brief moment, invisible question marks pop up over the Hellhound's head.

Then, the Hero balls up his right fist, rears it back, and socks the giant dire wolf right in her nose!

THUMP!

Like a wave crashing against a sand-castle, the Hero's punch blasts the Hellhound backward. Maelgamish flies fifty feet away, crashing into the opposite wall of the previous cell. The massive mutt jumps to her feet purely due to adrenaline, then staggers weakly and flops to the floor.

"Aaoo..."

Belial's heart pounds like a drum, blocking out even the pain wracking her body.

"Jason... Jason... oh, thank god... you... you saved me..."

She struggles to speak to the man before her, while he continues to keep his back to her. After a moment, he turns around, but his appearance makes Belial blink twice.

"...Eh?"

Something about the Hero's face doesn't quite seem right. As if his appearance were recreated by somebody with only ninety percent of the Creator's original capability. Rather than looking like Jason, this fellow looks more like a sloppy-copy of the Hero.

"Jason?" Belial asks, not sure who the hell she's even looking at. "Is... is that you?"

'Jason' says nothing. He simply reaches toward Belial, grabs her right arm, and pulls her to her feet. For a brief moment, Belial almost feels afraid of this strange, alien-like Jason, until she remembers a specific something.

"That's right! I have seen you before! Aren't you that weird copy-Jason he put outside the Core? That thing he made to protect humanity? There are two of you, right?"

The copy-Jason still remains silent, as if incapable of speaking. He half-drags Belial outside, where she realizes the sounds of distant screams have all but stopped. When Belial and the copy-Jason arrive outside, she blinks in surprise, finding all of the Grez and Hellhounds either dead or long-gone, having fled for their lives. A second copy-Jason stands guard beside the humans, mutely assessing their injuries without taking any action to help them.

Belial sighs in relief.

"So it is them... but... why don't they speak?"

When she rejoins the humans, Belial finds that, to her dismay, almost a thousand more soldiers have died, while a further five hundred have suffered terrible injuries. In the few short minutes Maelgamish pinned her down inside that cell, the Grez surrounded the army and cut through them without hesitation.

Chadwick leans against a wall and coughs. He lowers his helmet, revealing exhausted eyes and a bloodied nose.

"Fuck. I thought we were goners. Lucky for us, the Hero sent these... things here. I still don't even know what they are."

Belial leans heavily against the copy-Jason who saved her. She sighs and closes her eyes.

"Me neither. But at least they saved us... most of us."

"If only they had made it here sooner..." Corporal Hurent mutters. "We lost too many good men and women."

"Help me tend to the wounded," Chadwick says. "We lost almost all of our Clinicians. The rest are short-handed. I swear those Grez must have targeted them. They seemed much smarter than the last time we fought..."

Belial frowns. "They were smarter. Hold on, just one moment."

The succubus pulls away from her copy-Jason and steps back into the cell she just left. When she looks inside, her expression turns ugly.

The Hellhound leader, Maelgamish, is nowhere in sight.

"...Lucifer." Belial hisses. "Damn you. I should have killed that mutt when I had the chance."

She returns to the wounded soldiers and sits down, allowing the few remaining Clinicians to patch her up.

An hour later, the human army picks up their dead and carts them out of Faith's End.

This time, Gressil's minions don't pursue them.

Part 315: Rescue Success

Tarus II, at the western side of the Fortress of Retribution, in the Hospital Division.

Thousands of wounded soldiers lay in makeshift hospital beds assembled not through Jason Hiro's Wordsmithing, but through his wife's molecular assemblers. After returning from Faith's End with the angel, Phoebe Hiro quickly got to work with her assemblers, building simple but comfortable and sterile hospital beds.

Once Jason returned, he assisted her by wielding Camael's Cube to conjure a massive square hospital structure with separated rooms for all the potential patients. Now, Belial and the other injured troopers lay on their beds, either groaning in pain or simply flinching silently while sparks of agony flicker through their nervous systems.

Jason steps into Belial's room, alone, and closes the door. He shoots a sympathetic glance at her missing right arm and grimaces.

"Damn. What the hell happened after I left? I thought we might lose a few people, but more than a thousand men and women ended up dying. Phoebe's barely holding it together."

The Wordsmith sets a chair beside Belial's bed, takes a seat, and leans over her missing arm. After concentrating his mind for a moment, he utters a Word of Power. "Regenerate."

Belial's eyes loll back into her head for several seconds as a fresh new arm regrows from her mutilated stump. The pain of regrowing a new arm mixes with the tingling sensations of ten thousand spiders crawling inside her blood vessels.

Once the succubi's arm fully regenerates, she coughs weakly and sags back against the pillow.

"Ugh... it was Lucifer. She turned out to be... stronger than I expected. She used one of her signature abilities on me, something called the Demonic-"

"Demonic Trance," Jason interrupts. "I'm familiar with it."

Belial blinks in confusion. "You are? But how?"

"Solomon's visions. He showed me all sorts of stuff from the Ancient Era," Jason says. "What happened after that?"

Belial nods, then explains to Jason all the happenings after he left. The more she talks, the more thoughtful and contemplative he becomes.

After Belial finishes, the Wordsmith looks away. He gazes at the empty wall and rubs his chin, falling deep into thought.

"Interesting." Jason mutters. "I greatly underestimated Gressil's abilities."

"What do you mean?" Belial asks. "I fought Lucifer, not Gressil."

"I wouldn't be so sure of that." Jason says, turning his attention back to the former Second Emperor. "Gressil does indeed possess illusion abilities, though to what extent, I can't be certain. My mind-wife wasn't able to watch what happened as that strange anti-energy aura put her and Gabriel into some sort of induced coma, but she and I started talking after I returned. I'm now eighty percent certain that Gressil is somehow nullifying magic in a vast radius around himself. More importantly, he, Lucifer, and whoever else might be in his body are immune to this nullification effect."

Belial frowns. "Are you kidding me? Faith's End is massive, Jason. My magic went inert from the moment we entered its corridors until the moment we left. I've heard of area-type abilities, but that huge of a radius is unthinkable!"

"The facts tell the truth," Jason says. "Of course, Gressil himself might not be the one outputting the nullification. Don't forget, Ose is his sister. Maybe she made him a device that nullifies magic. Or, hell, maybe there's some special power binding Faith's End to which he's become immune. That's why I'm only eighty percent certain. It might be that some part of Faith's End itself nullifies mana, but Gressil has adapted to its effect over time."

Belial shifts uncomfortably. "I really hope you're wrong, Jason. If Gressil can nullify magic in a massive radius around himself, he's your worst enemy. The moment he gets near you, you won't be able to Wordsmith. Not only that, but he's terrifyingly strong, too. I would absolutely wallop him in a fist-fight, sure, and it wouldn't even be close... but if I have no abilities at my disposal, while he can teleport around and take me by surprise, I won't stand much of a chance."

Jason flicks his eyes around the hospital room.

"Illusion powers are stronger than I thought. You can deceive a person's senses, hide your position, and strike from the shadows. When coupled with temporal abilities, particularly teleportation, they become downright frightening. Gressil isn't just a demon, he's like some sort of sick, sadistic horror monster. The moment you detect his presence, you're already too late, and you can't escape."

Jason pauses for a moment, then nods, as if hearing someone else speak. "That's a good point. Phoebe says- hold on, one second. Projection. Projection."

The Wordsmith utters two Words of Power, causing his mind-wife and Gabriel to materialize as ghostly figures on his right and left. The Archangel of Power finds his head sticking through the roof, given his immense height. He opts to sit on the floor, bringing his head to the same height as Jason's.

"As I was saying," Spirit-Phoebe explains, "It's not all dire. Technology still works against Gressil. You said some of our troopers managed to shoot him. Therefore, we can probably prepare countermeasures for if we have to fight him again. Maybe we can even detect him in advance."

"That's going to be difficult," Belial says. "I can't detect Gressil's aura at all. Not only does that anti-magic field dampen magical powers, but it also dampens my demonic senses. It makes Gressil invisible to me. You shouldn't be shocked if he can also evade other forms of detection."

Spirit Phoebe sits on the bed beside Belial. She lightly touches the succubus's regrown arm, but her finger passes through Belial's skin.

"I'll figure something out," Phoebe says. "Never underestimate the power of human technology."

"I'm sure you will," Belial says, flashing Phoebe a charming smile.

After discussing Gressil a bit more, Belial changes the topic.

"Jason, what exactly are those strange clones of yours? Can they Wordsmith, too?"

The Hero shakes his head. "No. They're not actually clones of me in any way, shape, or form. They're more like... chimeras. Or constructs. I guess you could call them Black Hole Constructs."

Belial stares at him. "I have no idea what you're talking about."

"I used an idea Spirit-Phoebe gave me to make them," Jason explains. "They are not truly biological beings. Rather, they started out as self-forming black holes that tore apart a bunch of monsters in the Core. After absorbing all their flesh and DNA, I changed the 'Singularities' to assume a human form, and ended up making them look like me out of convenience. They aren't Wordsmiths, nor are they human, demon, or even monster. They're just... things."

"Jason gave them a minor form of sentience," Spirit-Phoebe adds. "They will follow basic orders, but they don't need to eat, sleep, or do anything else. Their bodies are insanely durable, potentially at the level of your average Demon Duke, but they can't go much further beyond that. They're useful bodyguards for the Core."

"Wow..." Belial mutters. "Would have been nice to have them when the Core was first attacked. Can you make more?"

Jason nods slowly. "I can. But... their creation process is a bit gruesome. They need a lot of... living flesh."

"So?" Belial scoffs. "Just Wordsmith some flesh, then."

Jason shakes his head. "It will lead to inferior constructs. Based on the mathematical diagrams Phoebe showed me, entities which have existed and formed a soul naturally have more potent 'life energy' than things I summon with my Wordsmithing. Technically, this includes Hope."

Belial scrunches up her face. "Wait, are you saying Hope isn't a living, breathing person like you?"

"No, not quite." Jason continues. "I don't fully understand the details... but at the moment of Hope's creation, he was simply an exact copy of me. The longer he continued to live, the more life energy he gained until he became fully sentient. If I wanted to Wordsmith creatures, monsters, demons, or whatever else into existence, only to consume them for the sake of these Black Hole Constructs... I'd have to let them live normal lives for a few years. I'd still end up killing sentient creatures, in the end."

Belial gazes at the Hero for a moment before averting her eyes.

"Well. I guess it's better this way."

"What do you mean?" Jason asks.

"I thought you'd completely lost all your morals after Daisy's death... but deep down, you still don't love killing."

At the mention of his daughter's name, Jason's eye twitches, but he doesn't otherwise display any outward emotion.

"Of course I don't. I don't enjoy any of this. I have only decided to do what I absolutely must. If that means exterminating ninety percent of the demons, then so be it. That doesn't mean I want to create an army of chimera-monsters."

Gabriel glances to his side at the Hero, then looks away, remaining silent.

"So. How is Hope?" Belial asks, changing the topic once again. "Have you... healed him?"

"I have." Jason answers. "But he fell into a temporary coma. According to Doctor Fathy, he's suffered violent trauma to his whole body, but especially his mind. It might be a day or two before he awakens. Amelia is with him now."

"And what about that angel we rescued from Faith's End?" Belial asks. "How is she?"

"Well, she's awake, which is probably better than Hope's condition," Jason replies. "But she won't say a word to anyone. Phoebe's with her, now, trying to offer her some comfort."

Belial nods. She shoots a suspicious glance at Gabriel.

"You there, Archangel. This angel we've rescued. Do you know her?"

Gabriel's eyes meet Belial's.

"At the height of angelic power, the number of Lazarites in Heaven numbered more than two hundred million. I barely knew a fraction of them."

"Right." Belial says. "But what about this girl, specifically? It seems odd that Gressil would simply have some random girl locked away so tightly in his prison cell. Why her? Her identity must be somewhat important."

"No Lazarite ever stood above the lowliest pureblood," Gabriel says. "Be they resurrected kings, senators, politicians, or popes. The mightiest Lazarite was little more than a disposable soldier compared to the precious few purebloods left after the War in Heaven."

Belial's gaze hardens. "That's strange. I asked if you knew her, twice, yet both times, you dodged the question. Come now, Archangel, it's a simple yes or no answer. Do you know the woman or not?"

Jason and Spirit-Phoebe both shoot Gabriel looks of surprise. The Archangel's expression remains aloof, but his eyes imperceptibly flick away, avoiding Belial's gaze.

"I cannot say."

Before Belial can speak, Phoebe pipes up. "So you do know? Who is she, then? Why are you so tight-lipped?"

Gabriel shakes his head.

"'Tis not my place to say. That sister... has suffered immeasurably. Verily, she hath earned the right to a lifetime of peace. Please do not aggrieve her. She is a good woman."

"What's her name?" Jason asks.

"If thou wisheth to know, thou must asketh her thyself." Gabriel says.

No matter how much the other three push or prod Gabriel, he doesn't budge. He remains tight-lipped, making them wonder just who, exactly, the mutilated girl they found in Faith's End might be.

For a brief moment, Jason considers using his Wordsmithing to look into Gabriel's memories. The Archangel of Power turns his head to look at the Wordsmith right as those thoughts cross Jason's mind.

"Hero. Thou claimeth thyself to be a righteous man. Dost thou thinketh me a servant of evil? If I choose not to speak of my sister's identity, then forcibly taking that information from me would violate every principle of goodness. Why should a woman who has suffered so much be forced to take up an identity she may not want any longer? Has she not suffered enough?"

Jason's eye twitches. He looks away from Gabriel and nods.

"Alright. Have it your way, then. If the girl tells us who she is, then that will mean we've earned her trust. And if not, then that's fine too. She is the last living angel, after all."

Gabriel faintly nods. "Mm."

After a few more minutes of chatting, Belial swings her legs out of bed and stands up.

"Alright. Enough talking. I want to see how Hope and the angel girl are doing, not to mention all the injured soldiers. Don't tell me you came here to chat with me while they suffered out there?"

"I figured you could take a little pain," Jason says. "So I came here to heal you afterward. Everyone else is already good to go."

Belial wrinkles her nose, then lightly socks Jason's arm.

"Leaving me for last? Dick."

Jason chuckles. "I'm glad you came out alright, Belial. If I hadn't sent my constructs..."

Belial's expression softens.

"Lucifer's hellhound would have killed me. Thanks, Jason. For a moment, when you suddenly appeared in front of me, I even felt the same way I used to around Satan."

"What? You wanna gimme a big kiss?" Jason asks.

"Well, I am a succubus. But we'll see. I still like Phoebe more than you!"

Jason glances at Spirit-Phoebe. She smirks triumphantly, as if having won some unspoken competition.

"Fair enough," Jason says. "I like her more, too."

"Everyone does!" Belial laughs.

Deep inside a hidden alcove nestled within Faith's End.

"Worthless brat!" Lucifer shrieks.

The Emperor of Providence swings her fist into Gressil's face, knocking both of them off their feet. The Emperor of Chaos whimpers in pain as he tries to protect his head with his two right arms, but Lucifer's two left arms yank his aside and smack him around while she lets loose her anger.

"You let my baby girl die!!" Lucifer screams. "My pretty little Ose! Your perfect sister, far superior to the likes of you! You worthless shit! How dare you fail as her brother?!"

Gressil whimpers. "Mother, please, she's not dead! She's... she's been resurrected in Bael's body!"

"WHAT?!" Lucifer roars. "That fat-ass blob of idiot-soup? Are you trying to piss me off even more? How could my precious little girl deserve to wallow in that lard-tub's nasty, fat, disgusting body?! She deserves better!!"

Gressil winces. "I... I know you are angry, mother, but it's not all bad. Bael's body is invincible. Ose still possesses all her latent powers, so she's actually stronger-"

"No excuses!" Lucifer roars, slapping Gressil's face once again. "Her body is no longer perfect, and that's that! My poor sweet baby is trapped in an ugly, flabby, sack of shit, and there's nothing I can do to help her! Oh, such sadness! Such woe!"

Lucifer continues to scream and rant for a while, before turning her attention back to Gressil.

"This is all your fault! How could you let Ose die?! I ought to kill you right here and now, brat!"

"Mother... you must try to calm down..." Gressil whispers. "Y-you're a Demon Emperor, so surely, you should think of your dignity-"

WHAM!

Lucifer blasts Gressil in the face, making both of them stumble against a wall.

"No more excuses from you!" Lucifer shrieks. "I can't stand the sound of your grating voice! You're like a stupid puppy that won't stop barking! Not a cute one, like my Hellhounds, but an ugly, dumb, shitty little Chihuahua!"

As Lucifer screams at Gressil, a faint look of rage spreads across his face. The entire right side of his body shakes and trembles as he struggles against an ancient fear and hatred boiling within his stomach.

"Stupid, stupid, stupid!" Lucifer continues. "That's what you are! An insignificant little moron who only plays with his stupid butterflies! You're no demon, you're a chicken wearing a demon's skin! A disgrace!"

The more she rants, the more Gressil's rage boils.

In an instant, his eyes snap open.

The Emperor of Chaos lunges at his mother and grabs her by the neck. He smashes her head against the wall with one hand, then uses his other as a bludgeon to repeatedly beat and batter her face, over and over.

"SHUT UP! SHUT UP! SHUTUPSHUTUPSHUTUP!!!"

Gressil roars in a voice filled with unending malice and hatred. He completely overtakes Lucifer in that moment, beating her so badly that some of her teeth fly out. His mother lifts her arms to try and fight back, but they fail to respond, overpowered by the energy flowing through Gressil's side of their body.

Again and again, Gressil rattles and shakes the Labyrinth with his punches, pulverizing her head as if it were nothing more than a punching bag made of feathers. He beats Lucifer so badly that, within just a couple of minutes, her head becomes a misshapen lump of flesh and bone, unrecognizable to anyone who knew its previous appearance.

"YOU NEVER LOVED ME!" Gressil screams. "I DESERVED HAPPINESS TOO, YOU WICKED WITCH! I AM NOT INFERIOR! YOU ARE! THAT'S WHY I KILLED YOU! I'LL KILL YOU AGAIN! I'LL RIP YOU TO PIECES!!"

Finally, with one last, violent spurt of rage, Gressil jams his fingers into Lucifer's neck. He impales her throat with all his strength, grabs onto her spinal cord, and squeezes, shattering it to powder.

An instant later, Gressil yanks his hand back, tears her head off his shoulders, and hurls it against the far wall.

"AHHHH!!"

Gressil bellows at her severed head, lifts his foot, and stomps down.

Splat.

He crushes Lucifer's head without a shred of mercy, ending her existence right then and there.

Several long seconds after, Gressil's blood-tinted vision loses some of its redness. He pants heavily, gasping for breath while gazing at the mashed-up remains of his mother's head.

Finally he sags back against the wall and sinks to the floor, ignoring the blood pouring from her severed neck.

He says nothing.

His countenance becomes despondent.

Silently, he stares ahead, while a wave of exhaustion overtakes him.

"I always hated you. I still do. Why... why can I never rid myself of you... why did the Creator put me into your claws... why did he meld us together? Did I do something reprehensible to deserve this fate?"

As Gressil speaks, the bloody stump beside his head begins to shift and morph. Slowly but surely, a new head regrows from the missing one's place. Lucifer's face takes shape as she regenerates in full, returning to her former appearance.

However, she does not scream or rant. Instead, her head lolls forward, and she falls asleep, leaving Gressil with that same silence, the only time he can ever feel at peace.

The Emperor of Chaos shivers. A tear streaks down his face as he rocks back and forth.

"I just want to get rid of her. I hate her. I can't stand her... yet nothing I do works. I'm trapped."

His pupils dilate.

"You lied to me. You said if I did as you said, I could get rid of her. But it didn't work. It made us... one. Why did you lie to me? Why did you whisper those false words in my ear? Were you only using me, from the very beginning?"

Gressil's teeth chatter. He numbly gazes at the bloody puddle on the ground, feeling a deep sense of emptiness in his heart.

"Don't even speak to me. You lie. You always lie. You can't see the future at all. You just like torturing me. Well, I've had enough of you. I only care about me, now. I want to watch everyone else suffer. I want them all to experience Chaos. That's what the world deserves... after what it did to me."

The prison warden's eyes harden.

"That's what they all deserve."

Part 316: The Glyphmancer's Game

Hell Harbor, at the epicenter of a scorched battlefield.

Emperor Yumagi, the Glyphmancer, levitates off the ground. He slowly floats up into the sky, facing across from Archangel Uriel and her two construct-brothers. Multiple beads of light shine on his forehead, each one telling the tale of a pre-activated Tarot Card augmenting his abilities... or perhaps waiting to be cast.

"My, my, my..." Yumagi says, as he sweeps his eyes around the ravaged world. "Look at all the damage you've done in just twenty short minutes. You angels are all so uncivilized."

Uriel points one of her light-spears at Yumagi. "Are any others of thy kind coming? I have been hoping to see more bloodskin Emperors, yet they continue to hide behind trees or lurk in the shadows. And now, one imbecile actually dares to face three Archangels alone. I know not whether thou art bold, arrogant or foolhardy, but I suspect a combination of all three."

Yumagi gently runs his fingers through his pretty white hair. "To defeat a few half-dead Archangels, I alone am enough. Of course, three against one is hardly a fair battle, so why don't we start by laying a few ground rules, hm?"

Suddenly, he pulls his hand away from his hair and flicks his fingers, causing a Platinum-colored Tarot Card to appear in his grasp. This movement, as if he had pulled it from his ear, gives the technique a street magician feeling, catching Uriel and her brothers off-guard.

"Pharaoh's Insight, Evoke!"

A flash of light ignites on Yumagi's forehead. His jewelry trembles for a moment before a sphere of golden light explodes from his body and rockets outward in a huge radius, traveling all directions at once. In the blink of an eye, it covers several miles of Hell Harbor's surface, causing every demon, angel, vampire, and monster within its radius to flinch reflexively.

Once the light fades away, Uriel frowns. She looks left and right, yet notices no obvious changes. "What...?"

Michael appears just as confused, but Raphael doesn't. The Archangel of Wisdom's expression becomes ugly.

"Soul shackles! That demon placed some sort of restriction on our souls!"

Yumagi smiles. "Indeed, I did. I don't like an unfair battle, you see, so I've placed some limitations on our battle. Don't worry, unlike you unruly pigeons, this Emperor is an impartial demon who only fights fairly."

Uriel gnashes her teeth. "A lie if I've ever heard one! Ahhh!"

She rockets toward Yumagi and stabs her lances at his chest, but surprisingly, Yumagi doesn't move at all. He merely looks away and winces, tensing his body up as those holy energy-laden spears impale his stomach and tear through his back.

"Aaargh!"

Yumagi falls away from the spears and plummets toward the ground, where he hits it with a bang! The other Emperors gasp in horror as Uriel raises her spears once again.

"That stupid imbecile!" Emperor Fae yells. "What is Yumagi doing, playing games with an Archangel? She'll rip him apart!"

Uriel lifts her spears above her head and prepares to charge at Yumagi again, but unexpectedly, her body remains rooted in place. She continues to hold her spears high, but for some reason, no matter how hard she tries, she fails to move.

"Nnn! What in Heaven's name?! Brother! I can't move! Something's wrong!"

Yumagi, laying on the ground, stands up and clutches the bloody wound on his stomach.

"Cough... cough... yes, that's right, Archangel. You didn't let me speak the rules first, so now you've trapped yourself until I make my move. Tsk, tsk. You truly are a moronic blowhard."

After shooting Uriel a sly grin, Yumagi touches one of the glowing red dots on his forehead.

"You attacked me, and I didn't defend. I activate my trap card, Bedeviled Naga!"

A blur of blackened, shadowy demonic power engulfs Yumagi. Instantly, his grievous wounds heal, restoring him back to pristine condition. At the same time, one of the glowing dots on his forehead fades away, leaving him with a dozen others.

Uriel fights with all her strength, but her body doesn't move an inch. No matter how hard she tries, she fails to lower her arms and remains stuck with her spear held high.

"What devilry is this?" Uriel asks, clearly shocked by whatever hex Yumagi has cast upon her. "It cannot hold me forever, bloodskin! My Archangel soul is far stronger than thine!"

Yumagi chuckles. He levitates into the air once more, taking up a position some fifty feet in front of Uriel.

"Hehehe. Yes, indeed, your soul is quite powerful. But the Pharaoh's Insight does not care about one's mind, body, or soul. It balances the scales so that everyone has the opportunity to properly show their skills."

Slowly, leisurely, Yumagi flicks his fingers again, causing another card to appear in his grasp. He momentarily frowns, then tosses it away, causing it to explode into particles of red light. After that, he resumes speaking.

"If you weren't a complete idiot, you might have waited for your brother to investigate the restrictions on your Soul Shackles. Ah, but I shall magnanimously explain the rules for you now, even after you so rudely attacked me like the dumb brute you are."

He continues. "The rules are simple, really. Once someone makes a move, they cannot make another until everyone else in the battle has made their move. We take turns, you see? It's so much better than some speedster beating the devil out of someone and them being unable to fight back. It puts us all on a nice, fair, level playing field. Now that you have performed your first attack, Uriel, your brothers may make their moves. As for me, my turn has not yet ended, for I merely activated a pre-planned effect which took place before the restriction went up."

Uriel's scowl deepens. "We must... take turns?! What sort of absurd nonsense is this, bloodskin? I need not abide by any rules thou hath placed upon me!"

"Oh, but you do," Yumagi says, as a sinister grin crosses his face. "These restrictions will remain until one of us defeats the other. And of course, if I defeat you, I will destroy your body, and those of your brothers. If you defeat me, you may destroy my body, as well. A fair trade, if I don't say so myself."

"Demons know nothing of fairness," Uriel snaps. "All of thy people art liars, deceivers, and jackals."

Yumagi's grin fades away, and in its place, a placid look of disgust replaces it.

"Coming from the likes of an Archangel, that is an insult I cannot tolerate."

The Glyphmancer shoots a look toward Michael and Raphael.

"Come then, you two; It's your turn to act. But be careful, for you only get one chance to end this Emperor's life."

"One chance, indeed," Michael snarls. The Archangel of Courage raises his sword and flaps his wings.

"Wait!" Raphael says. "Brother, thou-"

Raphael fails to stop Michael's momentum. The Archangel of Courage dives toward Yumagi with his sword held at the ready. In the blink of an eye, he slashes horizontally, and his blade finds its mark, instantly beheading the Glyphmancer!

"Damned bloodskin!" Michael roars. "Thy games mean nothing to me!"

He slows to a stop and spins to face his opponent once again. However, just before Michael can raise his weapon, his body freezes mid-movement, and he becomes bound by the same restriction holding Uriel in place.

In that moment, Yumagi's head falls from his shoulders, but one of the lights on his forehead dims, and a wave of shadow travels from his body to grab his head, place it back atop his shoulders, and instantly heal the wound.

The Glyphmancer swallows heavily. He rubs his fingers across the place where Michael slashed and shoots Michael a wry grin.

"Impressive speed, Archangel," Yumagi says. "But speed alone will never defeat me. Since you separated my head from my shoulders, Shadow Bind put it back in its rightful place. You activated yet another of my trap cards."

Michael frowns deeply. "Twice, thou hath lost thy life, but the number of lights on thy forehead hath also dimmed. I need only slay thy frail body eleven times more to end thy existence!"

"Perhaps." Yumagi replies, his tone mysterious.

Raphael motions with his hands. An instant later, he casts a wide-area illusion spell, one which teleports Uriel and Michael away from their current positions. At the same time, twenty-five copies of Uriel, of Michael, and of Raphael appear all across the battlefield. Uriel's copies remain frozen in place with her weapon held overhead, while Michael's stand at the ready, with his sword half-held in an attacking stance.

The Archangel of Wisdom, on the other hand, levitates in place, each of his twenty-five copies merely crossing their arms to look down upon the Glyphmancer.

"Thy abilities are quite curious," Raphael says, all of his clones speaking in unison. "But this old man has observed many strange and frightening powers in his life. My vision remains just as acute today as ten and twenty eons ago, demon. Thy Soul Shackles are far from invincible, especially as they bind thee to the same limitations as we."

A flicker of doubt crosses Yumagi's face. He glances at each of Raphael's clones, trying to pinpoint which one is the real Archangel. In the end, he fails, making his eyes twitch.

"Clever, Archangel of Wisdom. But now that the three of you have made your moves, I can make mine."

"Oh?" Uriel says. "Twice, thou dids't activate an ability to heal thy slain self, yet still, thou claimeth thou hath a turn to take?"

"Funny you ask," Yumagi says, his smile returning in full force. "Any cards I played before the Pharaoh's Insight activated haven't been bound by the restrictions. Of course, if you had prepared any abilities before, then you would be able to activate them out of turn, too. That's why my rules are fair."

"A game where one side knows the rules in advance well before the other players, and who is able to make preparations before them, is no fair game at all," Raphael chides. "But worry not. This old man is well known for his magnanimity. He knows the young and stupid must sometimes cheat if they wish to beat their grandfather in a 'friendly' game."

"I do not cheat!" Yumagi shouts, momentarily losing his cool. "The rules are fair! They bind me, and they bind you!"

All of Raphael's clones avert their eyes.

"So thou claimeth."

"Bastardly Archangel! I have given you the courtesy of explaining the rules!" Yumagi shouts, all but blowing his top. "From here on out, I won't give you that luxury! Let's see if you can figure out the rules on your own!"

Yumagi flicks his fingers, causing a platinum-colored card to appear in his grasp. Fervent greed clouds his expression. He holds the card up high and laughs uproariously. "You don't like playing games, Archangels? Well, too bad! I make the rules here, and you have to follow them! Ramses' Staff, Evoke!"

Uriel and Michael tense up, awaiting some stupendous super-attack to fall upon them. Instead, a wave of blood-red magic travels out of Yumagi's body and flies toward the other Demon Emperors below him. All at once, their fatigue vanishes, along with any lingering weaknesses plaguing them. They blink in surprise, momentarily stunned.

"Hey! Yumagi! What did you do to us?" Wolfram asks.

"Is it not obvious?" Yumagi asks, as he winks at his comrades. "My game is fair, and the rules are set. All of you are a part of the rules, too. Naturally, to keep things fair, you may attack whomever you wish. There are no 'teams' in this game."

Emperor Serena, levitating a sizable distance from the battlefield, blinks her sightless eyes. "Yumagi! Are you stating that every person here also gets a turn?"

"Of course!" Yumagi answers. "And as you can see, I have not stacked the deck in anyone's favor. You may all attack whomever you wish. Naturally, I advise that you strike the Archangels down before pursuing any... personal vendettas."

Michael scoffs. "Hah! More rules that favor thee! Truly, bloodskins are all cheaters and villains!"

"I do not cheat," Yumagi repeats, once again taking great offense to that accusation. "I merely set the rules beforehand. Now then, everyone, join me in attacking whomever you desire."

Wolfram crosses his arms. "I thought you said 'you alone' were enough?"

"Oh, I am." Yumagi answers. "I have balanced the scales all by myself, have I not? Before I showed up, the lot of you were, how shall I say it? Getting your asses kicked. You can thank me later."

Emperor Lupus snorts. "He's not wrong."

Shortly after, the remaining Demon Emperors take up offensive stances. Lupus and Wolfram stick together, as do Yardrat and Fae. Serena remains in the distance, unable to offer much offensive support. In total, six Emperors face off against the three Archangels.

The Emperors communicate with each other telepathically. They keep their plans to themselves, debating how exactly they should finish off their most hated enemies.

[Once we slay Uriel, the other two will disperse.] Yardrat says. [But killing her won't be easy. There are too many of Raphael's illusory clones present. It will take us each one attack to whittle the clones down.]

[We could use a wide-area attack,] Fae says. [I'm sure Auger has something perfect for us. If nothing else, I could grab one of the useless bystanders, and...]

She falls silent, allowing her implication to hang, unspoken.

[Let's not go that far, Emperor of Terror,] Lupus says. [All three Angels are currently frozen. They cannot make any moves, but undoubtedly, they've started preparing their own plans to deal with us. I suspect Raphael's clones will make for difficult opponents.]

[We aren't the only ones in this battle,] Wolfram says, casting a glance to the south. [We should drag Guura and Melody over here. Those lazy bums are sitting and eating food while we fight the Archangels!]

[Don't bother,] Lupus says to her fellow werewolf. [The Hell of Isolation hates getting involved in anything like this. Considering what happened to Emperor Shax, you can hardly blame them.]

[I'll blame them all I damn well want!] Wolfram shouts telepathically. [They're so stuck in the past-]

"Your time is almost up!" Yumagi says to the other Emperors. "If you don't make your moves in the next minute, the next round of actions will start!"

"What?!" Fae shouts. "What do you mean? Why would our turn suddenly end?"

"Oh, goodness, it must have slipped my mind," Yumagi says, while fanning out and examining his finely curated nails. "You see, there is a five minute time limit for every round. So, if nobody makes a move in those five minutes, they forfeit their turn and the next round will begin."

"'Must have slipped your mind?!' You stupid jackass!" Fae roars. "Spell out the devil-damned rules next time before leaving us grasping at straws! Shit, everyone, just attack! Beat the crap out of the clones before our turns end!"

All at once, pandemonium ensues as the other five Emperors race into the fray. Yardrat conjures a ball of temporal energy that he throws into a dense cluster of six Archangel copies. It tears open a rift in space, eviscerating their bodies, but the different versions of Raphael, Uriel, and Michael prove to be only illusory copies.

At the same time, Wolfram slashes his claws with reckless abandon. He releases shockwaves of demonic power that tear through the air and strike three more copies, causing them to burst into particles of light before his body freezes up and his turn concludes.

Lupus, as a defensive-oriented fighter, doesn't possess any wide-area abilities. She only ends up tearing through one of the illusions, but to her shock, she crashes into a physical body, making her cry out in surprise.

"Michael! I found Michael! He's right here!"

With only Fae and Serena not having taken their turns, the Emperor of Terror scowls angrily.

"Shit!" Fae curses. "I have to attack Michael, but my powers are no good against powerful opponents! I massacre hordes of weaklings; that's what I'm good at!"

After a brief moment, Fae closes her eyes and sends a petition to her leader, Emperor Auger.

[Hey! Auger! I know you're watching this battle! Give me an ability I can use! I'm useless out here!]

The Emperor of Distribution's response comes back swiftly.

[Your opponents are powerful. I will acquiesce. I have selected nine potential powers that will assist you. Choose two, as per what your body can handle.]

He transmits a series of images, thoughts, and concepts to Fae, making a vicious grin cross her face.

[Oooh! Those two! They're perfect! But give me that other one, also. Just take away my 'bomb' power for now. It's useless here!]

[I give and I take.] Auger replies, his voice the epitome of calm. [Show these lesser Hells the might of the Fourth Hell.]

[Oh, I'll 'punish' these Archangels,] Fae says, as demonic power leaves her body, followed by three surges of new power. [I'll punish them until they beg for MERCY!]

Their discussion happens in the blink of an eye. The moment Auger distributes three new powers to his minion, Fae opens her eyes, revealing her glowing red irises. She motions with her hands, causing bones to burst out of her skin and grow rapidly, hardening into formidable bone armor. A long spike sticks out of her right wrist, resembling a makeshift shank.

At the same time, a hurricane of wind summons behind Fae. She fires it forward and rides it like a surfer, rushing toward Michael's exposed body with her wrist pulled back.

"Hey, Archangel! Piss off and die, will ya?!"

Unable to move, Michael can only close his eyes as the Emperor of Terror flies at him. An instant later, she rams the bone-shank into his heart, instantly destroying his construct body and causing all of his illusions to disperse, leaving behind three or four dozen copies of Raphael and Uriel.

After impaling the Archangel of Courage, Fae forcibly grinds to a halt, restricted by the Soul Shackles placed upon her.

"I got one of the bastards! You bums can thank me later, bahahaha!"

Several of Raphael's clones shoot disinterested glances at Michael's destroyed body as it fades away. Given Uriel can simply resummon him, his 'death' is only transient, but even so, it still represents a significant loss to Uriel's fighting power.

My illusions were intended to confuse the demons and make them waste their turn, Raphael thinks. But through a stroke of luck, they succeeded in taking out my brother's construct. Uriel will need to spend a turn resummoning him. That means in this next round, only Michael and I will be able to attack.

The Archangel of Wisdom rapidly plays out dozens of possible attacking and defensive strategies in his head. He takes special note of the abilities Fae unleashed, frowning deeply.

Emperor Auger. That child did not exist during the Energy Wars. If he did, he was not an Emperor at the time. I am unfamiliar with his abilities, but Fae's powers do not seem to follow the common demonic power types. I have never known a demon to be capable of manipulating bone and wind... so how coulds't she obtain these two foreign powers? Auger must be responsible, in some way...

While Fae celebrates her first blood, Emperor Serena continues to stay out of the battle. Her powers, like Fae's, make her fare poorly against powerful individuals, such as the Archangels. Unlike Fae, however, she does not have Emperor Auger to swap out powers as required.

Fae and Yardrat will be the key players in defeating the Archangels, Serena thinks. The werewolves may prove useful, but their contributions in this fight should end up inferior to Fae, Yardrat, and especially Yumagi.

She stares blankly into space, but her spiritual perception sweeps across Yumagi's body as he remains frozen in place.

I have only spoken to Yumagi once, many eras ago, during the Energy Wars. He is a complete recluse, and I cannot imagine him stepping out of the shadows to join us for demonkind's sake. From what I have gathered, he is a selfish bastard even compared to the many selfish bastards among the other Hidden Emperors. He must have come here for some other reason, but as for why, I cannot tell.

As the last seconds count down, Yumagi begins to move again. He offers a cold smile to everyone present.

"The first round has ended. Now, the second may begin. But be careful! Those who take their turn first may make an initial gain, but they will also be sitting ducks for their opponents to counter-attack!"

Wolfram, originally intending to charge forward and attack, pauses to shoot a suspicious glance at Yumagi.

"What do you mean?"

"Isn't it obvious?" Yumagi counters. "If you attack, your body becomes frozen. It may be better for your opponent to attack first. Ah, but there is that pesky five minute round limit... you can't wait too long, lest you waste your turn! And I won't be telling you when the round timers run out after this, because that simply wouldn't be any fun!"

"Whose side are you on?!" Wolfram roars. "We're all demons here! We're your allies!"

"In this game, there are no allies," Yumagi says, while glancing at Wolfram from the corner of his eye. "There are only enemies and future enemies. Really... do you trust that the demons to your right and left won't take a chance to attack you when your guard is lowered? The angels may fight together as one, but we have never been more divided."

"Knock it off with the riddles!" Wolfram retorts. "I came here to fight, not faff about with the likes of you! One way or another, I'm killing me an Archangel today! Bahaha!"

While the two of them talk, Uriel motions with her hands. She re-summons Michael's construct, along with her orb and cube constructs. Despite summoning three at once, this only counts as a single action, freezing her in place.

Similarly, Raphael motions with his hands to conjure yet another twenty-five copies of Michael's newly summoned figure, along with replacements for the losses his copies and Uriel's both suffered. Once again, seventy-five Archangels hover in the sky, all of them appearing to be the genuine articles.

In unison, all twenty-five of Michael's copies swoop toward the Demon Emperors, including Yumagi, the werewolves, Fae, and Yardrat.

Instinctively, they all raise their fists to meet the incoming threats, all except for Yumagi, who remains motionless.

"Only one of them is the real Michael!" Lupus shouts. "The others are fakes!"

Her words cause an unanswered question to spring into the minds of the other Emperors.

Sure, but WHICH one is the real one?!

In unison, 'Michael' delivers twenty-five slashes at every Emperor on the scene, excluding Selena, who continues to sit out the battle. His many copies phase harmlessly through the bodies of the Emperors, all except for Yardrat, who cries out in pain.

"Aaaargh!"

Despite successfully protecting his neck, Yardrat fails to shield the rest of his body. A violent sword-slash cuts across his chest, spraying blood and entrails out in a violent spurt. He instantly stumbles forward and freezes, while his bodily fluids continue to drain.

"Huh-help! Aaugh! The Archangel- he got me!"

The other Emperors try to move, but they also find themselves frozen!

"What the-?!" Wolfram shouts. "I didn't even do anything! How can my turn be over?! This makes no sense!"

Yumagi chuckles. "All of you defended yourselves. Doing so is considered using up your turn. I must have forgotten to mention that part! Oopsie~!"

"You devil-damned prick!" Fae screams. "Yardrat's gonna bleed out and die! Do something!"

The Glyphmancer rolls his eyes. "Oh, if you insist, I suppose I can use up my turn to save Auger's precious number two. By the way, Raphael. That was an excellent feint your brother used. Could you have possibly seen through the rules of my little game before these addlebrained Emperors did?"

The Archangel of Wisdom's twenty-five copies all smile in unison.

"As this old one said before... he has seen many strange and terrifying powers. Thine are not as unique as thou thinketh."

Yumagi nods.

"So it would seem. It's so much more fun playing games with a smart person. There just aren't enough of them around to give me a challenge."

The Glyphmancer lightly shrugs, then flicks his fingers, causing a bronze card to appear in his grasp.

"Oooh, tough luck, Yardy-boy. This won't heal you all that much, but it should staunch the bleeding a bit. Next time, try not to spill your guts. Golden Fire Rhino, Imbue!"

The card explodes into particles of light, and a miniature, blood-colored rhinoceros wreathed in flame rushes toward Yardrat. The Emperor of the Void flinches in alarm, but cannot move to avoid the incoming attack.

"Yumagi! How dare you attack-!"

Before Yardrat can finish his sentence, the rhino leaps onto his chest and transforms into a fiery tattoo. Yardrat closes his eyes and screeches in pain, while his open wounds rapidly burn closed, preventing further blood-loss. The sheer agony of having his chest forcibly burned nearly makes him pass out, but he manages to remain conscious through his force of will.

"No need to thank me," Yumagi says. "But I just saved your life. Did you really think I'd be such a bastard that I would attack a 'future enemy' while he was defenseless? That wouldn't be very fair of me now, would it? Hahaha!"

Yardrat grits his teeth. His body trembles from the pain as he forces a pained smile.

"Y-yes. Thank... you... for your... help... Yumagi..."

"You are most certainly welcome!" Yumagi says. "Ah, but now that we've all made our moves, the round won't end until the five minutes are up. It seems someone is choosing to sit idly on the sidelines!"

The Glyphmancer casts a casual glance back at Emperor Serena. She simply crosses her arms and continues to levitate, making no move to attack.

"I am useless in this sort of battle," Serena says, her soft voice gracefully touching the ears of those present. "Unless one of you wants to experience the realm beyond Demon Emperor for a half-hour or so, before dying a death most unbearable, I will continue to remain a spectator."

Nobody volunteers to accept her offer, so she falls silent.

Two minutes later, Yumagi smiles.

"Alright, round three can begin! I hope you've all been paying attention, because now, you should understand the majority of the rules for this engagement. No more complaining from this point onward!"

Wolfram glowers at Yumagi.

"Tsk. When this is over, you and I should have a little 'chat' about your so-called 'fairness,' Glyphmancer."

Yumagi flips his hair.

"You may do as you please, Wolfy-Boy."

"...Don't call me that."

Part 317: Body Snatcher

Round Three of the Glyphmancer's game continues. All of the demons tense up, yet the Archangels and their illusions appear oddly calm, as if the whole battle is proceeding according to some pre-established plan.

Once they regain their ability to move, Raphael's seventy-five illusory copies of himself, his brother, and his sister, begin to shift around in random patterns. With so many illusions present, none of the Emperors can keep their eyes on more than a few without losing track of the others.

"This game of thine is quite entertaining," Raphael says, speaking through the mouths of his twenty-five illusory copies. "But, it occurs to this old man that there may in fact be a few... loopholes, in the rules. A few... accidental oversights. Ah, but a fair and balanced referee would not stoop so low as to prey on this weak and feeble grandfather, would he?"

"Weak and feeble, my furry ass..." Wolfram growls.

Yumagi lifts his chin slightly. "The fact that you seem to be able to see these 'loopholes' makes my fairness more than apparent. But by all means, if you have any qualms with the rules, speak your mind."

"Suppose someone were to enter this battle after thou hath cast thy original spell. Would they not be subject to the same rules as the rest of us?"

"Looking to call in reinforcements?" Yumagi asks. "I'll bet your Wordsmith friend could easily undo your soul shackles. But if he did, he would undo them on all of us. In any case, if someone were to enter this game late, they would also become subjected to my rules. What I cast was not a single-use spell, but an active power which continuously radiates around the entire battlefield. But I don't see why you would ask, seeing as you already know the answer."

"No, no, I was not thinking of requesting aid from any comrades of mine," Raphael says. "Rather, I am curious as to how many more prestigious Emperors, such as thyself, might eventually join the game. 'Tis unfair for my sister to bully so few of thy people when her power is so much mightier than thine."

Emperor Lupus scowls at the Archangel. "And just who do you think you're calling weak, Archangel? You've yet to singe my fur, let alone bruise my skin. As bad as you have it now, just wait until Emperor Kristoff gets here. You killed his wife. I can't wait to watch him rip your head off."

A few seconds of silence follow. Yumagi's expression flickers a few times as he detects the faint sensation of mana-based telepathy transmitting between the Archangels.

"In this round," Raphael says, "my siblings will graciously give thy people the first attack. Since we hold the advantage, it would be unbecoming of us to mercilessly strike at the five of thee with all of our illusory bodies. Someone else might… lose their head."

"Hah!" Wolfram laughs. "The advantage? Not even close! Your fighting forces are nothing but a bunch of paper tigers! There's only three of you to five of us! Your illusions are a clever trick, but they won't stop us from crushing you!"

Moving by instinct, Wolfram suddenly rushes toward the moving array of illusory images. He presses both of his claws against his chest, conjuring a wellspring of magical power. Moments later, the werewolf releases a mighty howl and swings his claws rapidly, like a hurricane, firing off two dozen beams of demonic energy, all of them ripping across space toward the illusory Archangel images.

True to his name, the Emperor of Rending rends space with his attacks, bending light itself with what can only be described as gravitic-based attacks. His seemingly simple claws tear apart more than thirty of the Archangels, but even so, they merely fade away, revealing none of their true bodies.

Wolfram slows to a stop and frowns.

"Hmph! I may not have hit one of your true bodies, but I certainly cleared away a few pesky weeds!"

Yardrat shoots a glance at Fae.

"You go next. Wide-area. Give me something to hit."

As two Emperors from the same Hell, the two of them know each other quite well. Fae is not Yardrat's direct subordinate, nor even an indirect one, but rather, something of a relative equal. Even so, she nods at him, trusting in his judgment.

"Fine! I love trying out new powers, anyway! There's nothing more fun!"

Fae's body, now covered in hardened bone-armor, ranks among the tankiest figures on the demon's side of the battlefield, perhaps only inferior to Emperor Lupus. Instead of conjuring a wall of wind, she reaches inside herself to grab hold of the third power Auger gave her, one she hasn't used yet.

Twelve marble-sized beads of demonic energy travel out of her body and materialize in reality. The blackened orbs pulse with redness while revolving around Fae for a few seconds, picking up speed over time.

Once they reach a critical mass of speed, Fae sends a palm-strike flying at the Archangels, causing all of the orbs to fire toward different points in their formation.

Raphael's eyes flick toward the orbs. In the time it takes them to race toward the forty or so remaining Archangel copies, the old man motions with his hands, conjuring a half dozen micro-portals to intercept some of the beads. Those same portals re-open next to the Demon Emperors, making Fae's evil grin instantly turn to fright.

"Shit!"

Six beads fly into and out of the portals, arriving right in the middle of the collected demons. The other six continue toward the Archangels.

In unison, all twelve of them detonate.

BOOOOOM!

Massive explosions of condensed demonic energy blast the areas, catching not only the Archangels' illusory selves in their blast radiuses, but Fae, Lupus, and Yardrat too!

"Aaaargh!"

Lupus howls in pain as the unexpected friendly fire and massive blast radius takes her completely by surprise. Even with her ridiculously tough body, she still takes a hell of beating and goes flying until she smashes into the dirt and grinds for a quarter of a mile along the ground.

Fae, likewise, ends up getting blasted by her own attack. She rockets to the left and spins helplessly, unable to control her body or even stall her momentum after using up her turn. She ends up smashing into a hill some distance away, landing face-first and shattering several of her teeth. Her body becomes entombed by rubble, hiding her from the view of the other combatants.

As for Yardrat, he ends up forced to defend himself by conjuring a spatial barrier. He deflects the worst of the damage and suffers only minor burns, but still ends up wasting his turn on defense.

When the smoke clears, Wolfram and Yumagi glance at the Archangels. To neither of their surprise, a little over a dozen illusory clones remain, with the majority of them being Uriel and Michael's copies. Only two remain for Raphael.

"Are you kidding me?!" Wolfram howls. "Fae, you dumb bitch! You didn't even hit any of their real bodies! You ended up blasting yourself and Lupus instead! Who taught you how to aim?!"

Fae, stuck and unable to move from her makeshift tomb, merely croaks out, "Oh, shut your trap. Raphael screwed with my aim! That old bat is trickier than he looks!"

Raphael's two copies chuckle. "Hoho. This kindly grandfather knows a few tricks, yes. But compared to the young and spry opponents he faces, he is still only a beginner at these mentally taxing games."

Lupus pulls herself back together. Having forced herself not to defend, she didn't end up wasting her turn, but still ended up taking a direct hit from Fae's redirected mana bombs.

"Lucifer's Tits! Ahh, that burns good, that burns real good. Fae, once we kill these fucking pigeons, I'm gonna have a few words to say to you..."

She levitates back to the other Emperors, grimacing at the blown-apart battleground, now brutally scarred by Fae's bombs.

With only Lupus and Yumagi not having taken their turns, they decide not to make any immediate moves.

Instead, Lupus communicates with her teammates.

[What should I do? I can probably take out that troublesome old man this turn, but right now, Michael and Uriel are the bigger threats! Raphael only has two copies left, but if I can beat the crap out of Uriel, I'll cause some lasting damage for the rest of the fight. I'm not worried about Michael beheading me, but I am worried he might hit one of you. We can't underestimate the Archangel of Courage, not even in a construct's body!]

Yardrat keeps both his eyes locked on Michael's illusory images as they float around in the air.

[If you kill Michael or Raphael, nothing will change. Uriel will simply resummon them during the next round, and possibly even this one. On the other hand, making her waste a turn on resummoning isn't the worst thing we could do. Uriel's powers almost certainly eclipse her brothers-]

Suddenly, one of Michael's illusory images launches forward, flying right toward Wolfram!

"Shit!" Wolfram yells. "Guys! GUYS!"

For a brief moment, Lupus's heart skips a beat. In that fraction of a second, she weighs what she should do, making her mind race.

That might only be one of Michael's illusions! It probably won't hurt Wolfram... but what if it's the real Michael? Wolfram can't defend himself! He'll die for sure! My Hell has already lost Fenrir, we can't risk losing a second Emperor!

Not only is Wolfram one of the prized and powerful Emperors ruling the Hell of Blood, but he is also Lupus's chosen mate. This fact colors her judgment, forcing her hand.

"Filthy Archangel! I will not let your ploy play out the way you intend! Raaahh!"

She rushes toward Wolfram and intercepts him before Michael can arrive. As soon as Michael draws within striking distance, he slashes his blade, but it passes harmlessly through Lupus's scales. His illusory body fades away, making her scowl.

"Bastard! I knew it was a feint! I knew it!!"

Lupus becomes frozen in front of Wolfram, unable to move again to protect him. As she glares daggers at the hated Archangels, Raphael merely chuckles.

"Hoho! What a lucky woman! Had that been my brother's real body, he probably could have hurt thee quite badly! How fortunate that his kind and caring older brother told him to simply give thee a little scare! Oh, playing pranks on the young is such fun!"

While Raphael taunts the two werewolves, Emperor Serena creases her brow.

It seems that each illusory copy can move independently. That means, in effect, the Archangels can afford to launch seventy-five fake attacks at our people. If any of us defend ourselves, we lose our turn. If we don't, we risk losing our heads. Raphael's powers completely upend the balance of power in this battle. No wonder he appears so confident.

Yumagi, the last Emperor with a turn remaining, merely chuckles.

"You are doing quite well, Archangels. I expected you to trounce my brothers and sisters, but not this badly. Would you be so kind as to not make them lose all their face? We do have reputations to uphold, after all."

All of Michael's copies turn to look at Yumagi. "Neither my sister nor I have taken our turns yet. What shall thou do to stop us, I wonder? In one move, I can end the lives of any Emperor here. They will be powerless to resist me."

"So true!" Yumagi answers, smiling even wider than before. "And what a tragedy the loss of any fellow Emperor would be. Ah, I speak with all of them so often! We are all such good friends. Oh, come to think of it, none of them have spoken to me in eons. Huh! I guess we aren't that close after all. Feel free to kill whomever you like."

His words send chills down the backs of all four frozen Emperors. Yardrat, standing perfectly still and unable to move, barely manages to catch a glimpse of Yumagi from the corner of his eye.

"What are you saying? Are you going to let one of us die?!"

Yumagi waves his hand casually. "No, no, do not be silly, Yardy-boy. Your words imply I have some ability to protect you, but have you forgotten? Our opponents are the frightening and all-powerful Archangels, monsters from the Primordial Era! I am just one weak Emperor, certainly not their match. How can I, with my one remaining turn, protect you from two attacks? I'm not a miracle worker!"

Yumagi pauses. He glances at Yardrat, and his tone turns cold.

"Besides. The leader of my Hell, Gorn, perished while in your presence. Why did you not save him? Are the lot of you incompetent? Or did you, perhaps, intentionally allow him to die along with Fenrir? Perhaps you even enjoyed seeing him fall out of the running for the leader of the Seven Hells? Compared to all of you combined, my powers are certainly inferior. If you could not stop the Archangels, how could I?"

"Is that what this is all about?" Yardrat asks. "You think we're to blame for Gorn's death?! How about this; your Emperor was supposed to be the second strongest of all the Hidden Emperors! He should have been able to protect himself!"

From the pile of rubble to the west, Fae shouts, "Yeah! What Yardrat said!"

Yumagi continues to stare icily at Yardrat for several long seconds. Suddenly, he rears his head back and laughs.

"Hahaha! I'm just kidding, Yardy-boy! It's only a joke! I'm not one to hold grudges! Truth be told, I barely even spoke to Gorn, so it's not like we were best buddies or anything. Anyway, I won't let you die here, so don't you worry your little tushie."

Michael's apparitions all unsheathe their blades in unison. "Dost thou thinketh thyself capable of stopping my attack? Better bloodskins have tried. They all failed."

"Not true!" Yumagi chirps. "I seem to recall that the Duke of Reptiles, Agares, got a good chomp on you, back during the Ancient Era. Heard it cost you an arm and a leg to get it fixed! Well, just an arm, and you didn't really get it fixed, but you know what I mean, Mikey-Bird!"

Michael glowers at Yumagi, then sends a telepathic request to Raphael.

[Brother. Please let me strike down the talkative one. My patience wears thin.]

[Keep still, Michael,] Raphael transmits, his expression the epitome of calmness. [This game is only a prelude. Soon, we will lay waste to these demons. Engaging in a small bit of tomfoolery will cost us nothing, but may in fact cause other Emperors to draw near, thinking us weak lambs ripe for the slaughter. We must project insecurity and weakness. Only then will our bloodbath reap the greatest rewards.]

[Stick to the plan.] Uriel transmits. [Trust in our brother. In matters of strategy and battle, Raphael is all but unrivaled. He knows well the best way to deal with these bloodskins.]

The Archangel of Retribution's cold, blood-soaked eyes gaze hatefully at Yumagi and the other Emperors.

"I have waited eons to exact my vengeance," Uriel says. "The fact that I can do so while standing side by side with my brothers will only make the taste of victory that much sweeter."

"You seem quite confident in your chances of winning today," Yumagi says. "But... it would be such a shame if all your plans came to nothing. Oh! Would you look at that? We have a new player ready to join the battle."

Yumagi turns his head slightly. He glances behind himself where, with a loud BANG, an explosion of blood violently detonates in the air. In that split-second explosion, a demon dressed in a well-tailored white suit flies out of the explosion's confines and slows to a stop beside Lupus and Wolfram.

This demon, a male with pale grey skin, short-cropped black hair, and heavy mascara on his eyes, appears to be a fellow as cold and dead on the inside as on the outside. His expressionless eyes lower to the werewolves at his feet, both of whom reflexively lower their eyes.

"E-Emperor Kristoff," Lupus says, her voice shaking. "You've finally made it. R-regarding your wife-"

"I am aware of her fate." Kristoff, the Emperor of Thirst, says. "You are not to blame."

Despite his assurances, Lupus still sweats uncontrollably. She steals glances at the demon before her, but fails to maintain an evenly locked gaze with him, so inferior does she feel.

"Archangel R-Raphael..." She croaks. "He is the one who slew your mate."

Kristoff nods. He turns his head toward Raphael's two hazy apparitions.

"My wife's soul did not enter the River Styx. Somehow, the Archangel of Wisdom erased her very existence from our universe. I never even had a chance to say goodbye."

Kristoff's delicately manicured fingernails, his white-tipped hair follicles, and his white-colored suit exude the grace and majesty of a trueblooded vampire. He levitates upward, reaching the same level as all three Archangels.

"You three. You have committed a sin worthy of a thousand deaths."

Raphael, Michael, and Uriel remain unmoved.

"And what would that be?" Uriel asks. "Killing thy accursed mate? Hmph. We have done the universe a great service by erasing her existence. Soon, thou shalt join her in the Great Beyond."

Kristoff turns his gaze toward one of Uriel's apparitions. For some reason, he places a special amount of attention on it, as if seeing something none of the other Emperors could, even if they tried.

"Your sin was taking something which belonged to me. Fenrir was my woman. You will not enjoy a quick death."

Without warning, Kristoff lunges forward, launching himself at that specific apparition. Uriel instantly summons a wall of holy energy, blocking the vampire from attacking her. However, Kristoff conjures a revolving blood barrier to surround his entire body. The huge spherical shield rapidly cycles around him, and at the same time, a pair of giant troll-sized blood-claws materialize behind his back. One of the claws launches toward Uriel's barrier and crashes against it with thunderous force, making the Archangel's entire body shudder.

A moment later, Uriel's hastily summoned holy barrier breaks, and Kristoff reaches her with his other giant blood-claw.

RIP!

The Emperor of Thirst rakes his bloody talons across Uriel's armor, making her cry out in pain. He tears away the majority of demonstone protecting her chest, and shreds the soft skin and bone beneath. Uriel goes flying and crashes into the ground.

At the same time as Kristoff's turn ends, Yumagi makes his move. He vanishes from his position and appears a hundred feet above Uriel with a gold-colored Tarot Card.

"Matured Drake, Evoke!"

The ethereal head of a golden dragon materializes above Yumagi. Its size, comparable to a sports stadium, dwarfs the spectators, making all of them feel tiny and insignificant.

Raphael's heart skips a beat.

"Michael!"

With a single word, Raphael commands his brother to act. As the summoned dragon inhales to summon the power of a storm, Michael and his seven copies rush toward Yumagi with his sword held at the ready.

The Glyphmancer sighs.

"Alright, if you want to protect your precious sister so badly, you can take her beating instead."

The Glyphmancer swivels to face the incoming threats. Without any fanfare, he locks his eyes onto one of them in particular and changes his Matured Drake's aim.

"Grooooar!"

The dragon releases the power held in its throat. A storm of fire and lightning blasts out of its mouth and rushes toward Michael, targeting his one real body among the few remaining illusions. The last thing Michael sees before his construct gets shredded at the atomic level is a void of red and yellow light.

Kathoom!

The Archangel of Courage evaporates into particles of light. He and his illusions completely disappear from reality, leaving behind only Raphael, his one illusion, and Uriel's beaten, smoking body in the crater below.

Twenty seconds of silence follow.

After gazing at Michael's last known position for half a minute, Yumagi raises his eyes to look at the Archangel of Wisdom.

"You must be wondering how Kristoff and I knew which bodies were the real ones."

Raphael shakes his head.

"'Tis a simple matter to deduce. Kristoff is a vampire; the strongest from his Hell. His affinity to blood made him more than capable of sniffing out my sister's fleshly body. As for thee, thou surely kneweth where our true bodies stood from the very beginning."

"You knew that I knew, and yet you took no steps to protect yourselves?" Yumagi asks. "You Archangels are all so arrogant, it baffles this humble Emperor's mind."

"Not arrogant." Raphael gently corrects. "Confident. It seems Kristoff is the last demon who will dare to show his face here. The rest have all hidden in the shadows like the rats they are. Shall we begin the fourth round?"

Yumagi looks to the south, where Serena continues to levitate. As the only Emperor present who hails from his Hell, the two of them share the mildest of affinities.

Even so, she remains motionless, not deigning to enter the battle.

"Twenty more seconds," Yumagi says. "Then the next round will begin."

While Raphael, Yumagi, and Kristoff remain motionless during their forced standoff, Yardrat looks away from them. Unable to move his head, he can only flick his eyes and demonic senses across the battlefield.

[Fae. When this next round starts, I will require your assistance. If we work with Kristoff, we can surely land a killing blow on Uriel.]

Several seconds pass.

Fae doesn't reply.

Momentarily confused, Yardrat turns his eyes as far to the left as he possibly can. He sweeps his demonic mana across the hill where she landed, but fails to detect her presence.

[Fae? Fae! Are you there? Did you pass out? What's going on?]

Still, the Emperor of Terror does not answer.

No matter how many times Yardrat tries to telepathically contact his fellow Emperor, she doesn't respond.

When round four begins, Yardrat immediately charges over to the hill where she fell. He yanks aside the collapsed boulders and other debris that should have buried her, yet upon clearing out her makeshift tomb, he becomes stricken with shock.

She's gone! What the hell?! Where did Fae go? Could she have left even though her turn was up? Impossible! But she isn't here!

A deep, unsettled feeling builds up in Yardrat's stomach. He swivels his head from left to right as a realization hits him like a freight train.

Fae was frozen, locked in place by Yumagi's Soul Shackles. She couldn't fight back if anyone attacked her. She would have been completely helpless, unable to resist. And... now that I think about it...

Yardrat's vision turns blood red. A wave of rage strikes him, making him gnash his teeth.

There was one other Emperor here... someone who hasn't yet showed his face since the Archangels arrived. That... that BASTARD!!

No matter how he searches the area with his senses, Yumagi fails to find Fae, leading him to only one conclusion.

Yama! You spawn of a broodmother! How dare you prey on a fellow Emperor while we battle the Archangels?! I'll rip you apart, you lecherous, raping, FIEND!!

Elsewhere, in a dark underground location secluded from the battlefield.

Emperor Yama caresses the face and body of his latest victim, her unconscious form struggling to fight back. Tendrils of dark energy stretch from his fingertips to lance into her brain, making Emperor Fae shudder violently.

"Hehehe. What a fun game Yumagi has devised. We have much to gain, and so many delicious females to take when their defenses are lowest. While the other fools battle their hated enemies, we shall strike from the shadows, taking those we find most suitable for our harem! Kekeke..."

Yama caresses Fae's soft and delicate face. A blackened tongue snakes out of his mouth as he licks his lips and forces it into her ear, wriggling it around to lick the juiciest parts of her brain. He reaches into her mouth and plays with her tongue, enjoying the slippery sensation as it crosses his smoky-black fingertips.

"Mmm. This is only the foreplay, lovely one. You are barely suitable for our tastes. We would have much preferred the busty and delicious Fenrir to the likes of you, but at least you possess ample power to augment our strengths. It has been many eons since we nabbed a juicy little Emperor all by her lonesome, hehehe..."

Yama continues to toy with his helpless victim, slowly but surely infecting her with his corrosive shadows. By the time he finishes, she will become one of his loyal servants, willing to do anything to satisfy him.

"That Yumagi... he certainly knows how to throw a party." Yama chuckles.

Part 318: A Little Lost Whisper

"Zzz... Zzz... Zzz..."

Bael peacefully slumbers, ignoring all the hullaballoo happening in the world around him. Sometimes, his foot reflexively kicks, in the same way a puppy's might as he imagines himself running free in a field.

"Hehe... kitty... pet kitty... pet bunny... hehe..."

Something tickles the Duke of Pain's ear. He leans his head to the side to try and itch the tickled part, but it only continues to tickle more.

"Hehe... stop it, mommy... don't make me stop pettin' da snakey... hehe..."

Progressively, that ticklish sensation grows more annoying.

Suddenly, Bael's eyes bolt open. He quickly sits up and scowls.

"Devil-dammit! Grr! What the heck is crawlin' around in my- aargh?!"

Bael howls in surprise when he sees a huge shadow floating before him in the darkness of an underground cavern. The Duke of Pain reflexively tries to slap the thing away, but his arms don't move the way they should, making him awkwardly shoulder-thrust before nearly falling forward.

"Huh? Huh?? Man, what the heck is goin' on here?! Yama! Why are you creepin' on a fella while he's sleeping? And where are we, anyway?!"

Yama, the Emperor of Shadows, lingers in the air a short distance from Bael, eying him up and down with annoyance.

"Tsk. Your soul is oddly stubborn. We have tried desperately to corrupt you, yet it is as if we have been pushing against an unbreakable wall. Not even an Emperor's soul should be this strong. Just what sort of demon are you?"

Bael blinks a few times.

"Corrupt me? Man, what the bloody hell is goin' on here? And why can't I move m'dang arms- ayo! Why am I tied up? Is this some kind of sick joke? And where are my clothes?!"

The Duke of Pain finds his arms tied behind his back, bound by some sort of shadowy enchantment. His new body, Ose's former one, also no longer bears any clothes, exposing his unmentionables for the world to see. Rather than feel embarrassed, Bael merely feels confused.

However, even the turtle-brained Duke manages to whirr up his neurons to form a possibility.

"...Wait a minute. Hold on a sec! You creep! Were you tryin'a turn me into one of your shadow-bitches? Dude! That's disgusting! Besides, I'm a guy! You only like women, you ding-dang creep!"

Yama's lurid gaze once again flashes across Bael's body, but this time, with a whole new intention.

"Kukuku... Bael, you are so ignorant. This Emperor does not care about some strange mental discrepancy. He only cares about the juicy parts on the outside, and your fleshly-vessel is more than adequate for our tastes. Long have we lusted for the taste of Ose's untouched figure. Whether it is your soul or hers inside, we do not discriminate..."

While Yama talks, Bael flicks his eyes around the room. He becomes even more shocked when he sees several unconscious demon women in a corner, all of them attended by Yama's Shades, who continuously pump shadow-energy into the minds of those who cannot fight back.

"Emperor Fae? Duke Hestia? And hey, ain't that little Mara, the Baron of Games? Man, you sick fuck! I knew you were bad, but this is a whole new level!"

Bael becomes angrier and angrier by the second. He whips his head back to scowl daggers at Yama, but the Shadow Emperor remains unmoved.

"Your anger makes us feel many things," Yama says. "But mostly, it fills us with lust. We like it when women fight back. There is no greater form of pleasure than dominating a helpless woman who cannot resist our advances! Kukuku!"

"Oh yeah?" Bael says. "You like hurting people weaker than you? Well, I don't. But tell ya what, pal. You've gone far enough this time. You're really pissing me off... and there's only one way that ends."

Beal leans forward in his chair. Yama tightens the shadows binding his arms, but still, Bael possesses the same physical strength as Ose once did. His eyes become filled with rage as he calls upon the power that has rested within himself for nearly his entire existence.

"Grr! GRR! ME... me smash! Me... me beat you! Me... me..."

Bael continues trying to call upon that power. However, to his surprise, no matter how angry he gets, he fails to summon it to reality.

The power of the Balrog, a biological weapon that has caused even the mightiest Demon Emperors to tread lightly around him, does not manifest in his body.

Bael breathes heavily, shock and confusion on his face. "...Huh? It... it ain't coming out? The hell is goin' on?"

Yama continues to hover triumphantly before Bael, still unmoved by his displays of anger. While Bael slowly begins to realize just how many of his former abilities he has lost, Yama lunges out a hand to grab the Duke by his neck. He slams Bael back into the chair and looms over him, physically taking up more space as he expands his presence.

"We have craved that body for ages, Duke of Pain. Whether you reside in it, or Ose, we do not care. You have failed to comprehend the losses of your powers. You are not smart enough to wield Ose's lightning abilities, but neither do you possess your once-formidable physical power. With the First Hell in shambles, we can finally sneak about and steal all of the women we have wanted for ourselves. Diablo cannot stop us. You cannot stop us, and neither can Ose. The other Hidden Emperors remain oblivious to our intentions, as they have become locked in battle with the Archangels outside. They will not stop us in time... not before we quadruple the power of our Hell to overtake all the others."

"You nasty fuckin' prick!" Bael shouts. "You... I shoulda killed ya when I had the chance! Everyone knows what a sick bastard you are!"

"Yes, they do," Yama acknowledges. "Ah, but greed and shortsightedness are the enemies of all those other Emperors. They will only care about our movements if we threaten their grip on power. That is why we have waited so long for the perfect opportunity. And now, it has arrived!"

Yama smiles evilly, though that moment of happiness only lingers for a moment before turning to annoyance.

"But... tsk. Your soul seems to be practically incorruptible. How can we transform you into the pleasure-servant your body was always meant to be? Such a perfect figure, wasted on an ice queen who never used it to service the pleasure of males like us. Ose always was a greedy wench. Perhaps we don't need to corrupt you after all. An unwilling participant is more of a challenge, anyway."

As Yama's tone turns ominous, he pauses to flick his gaze nearby.

"Silent. Come here."

He gestures to one of his Shades, an amorphous blob of shadow that meekly flies to his side and levitates in the air, not saying a word.

"Hehehe. Silent, you are our secret weapon. We intend to violate Ose's body many times, so you will help us by pinning it in place. It's okay if the Duke of Pain struggles a little. That will only add to our 'fun.'"

"What the fuck?!" Bael roars. "The hell you will! You stupid, tiny-pricked bug! I'm still the Duke of Pain! When the other demons find out what you've done to me, they'll rip you apart!"

"Will they? Perhaps." Yama says. "Ah, but that depends on whether or not they uncover your plight. After all, perhaps a stray attack from the Archangel erased your existence? And really, our methods are hard to uncover. Nobody ever found out about the first Emperor we made our whore... hehehe."

Bael blinks. "What? The first Emperor? You're saying one of your Shades is an Emperor?! I ain't heard nothin' about that!"

"Of course you haven't," Yama taunts. "Ah, our machinations lay undetected, for we are a master of deception. Look, Bael. Does this Shade not seem a little bit... familiar?"

Bael's gaze drops to the small floating blob of shadow beside Yama.

"Huh? Familiar? She's just a blob of shadow. I... I can't see shit."

"Mmm. Hehehehe! Perhaps this will jog your memory..." Yama says, his words drifting into the wind.

The Emperor of Shadows grabs onto the floating ball of shadow. She doesn't resist, allowing him to do whatever he pleases to her. Yama gropes and strokes the Shade, manipulating her figure until she once again assumes a demonic form, one with large horns, a surprisingly small body, and pure black skin.

Bael blinks twice. He stares at what looks like a little girl for several seconds, trying to recognize her. However, despite possessing a demon-shaped body, her appearance is far too alien compared to any demons Bael has ever seen, making him struggle to put the pieces together.

"This is 'Silent.'" Yama explains. "She was a lost little girl, all alone, crying in a corner, after the fleshbags took her brother from her. She couldn't protect herself from us when we caught her unawares. It was a simple matter, our first Emperor taken from behind. Kukuku! She cried many times during the conversion process. She begged us to stop, but we eventually made her into our loyal toy... just as we always do."

Bael's pupils constrict and enlarge several times as he listens. In the back of his mind, a thought far too horrifying begins to emerge.

"No... no way... that's not possible..."

"Ohoho... perhaps you do have some critical thinking capacity," Yama mocks. "Yes, indeed, this is the very same demoness you once thought missing. I believe you used to play in a band with her, didn't you, Duke of Pain? Her and her brother both..."

A tear slides down Bael's cheek. His jaw trembles as he gazes at a friend long-thought dead, but who instead suffered a horrific fate for over a hundred thousand years.

"Murmur... Murmur! Murmur, it's me, Bael! Oh, devils! DEVILS!! How could you do that to a little girl, Yama?! You monster! You horrible stinkin' monster!!"

"Women are our toys," Yama says. "That is all they are. Females have but one reason to exist, and that is to pleasure this Emperor in his eternal harem. What better fate could become of them? They know only happiness. They fulfill the one thing the Creator made them for."

Bael roars. He struggles against the bindings holding him in place. He kicks his feet at Yama, but this only causes the Shadow Emperor to admire his 'juicy' legs.

"Your body is so... delectable, Bael. We really would prefer corrupting you, but it seems doing so is impossible. Ah, well. We already have a second Emperor in our grasp. Soon, we will obtain Serena for ourselves, as well as any other whores fit for our needs."

He gestures with a finger toward the Duke of Pain. "Go on, Silent. Hold the Duke down and spread his legs. We have waited long enough."

The Shade meekly flies over to Bael's side and nods. She says nothing, and instead returns to her amorphous, shadow-blob-like form. A wave of telekinetic energy shatters Bael's demonstone chair and smashes him against the ground, pinning him in place and nearly breaking his arms in the process.

"Aaargh! Ah, fuck! Fuck-fuck-fuck! Murmur, girl! Stop! Don't let this creep control you! Fight back, dammit!"

"She has long ago lost any form of resistance," Yama laughs. "All of our sluts have. They do what they must at our behest. Not only so, but they even enjoy following our orders. They fight for our attention, hoping we will lavish them with the affection their bodies crave."

Yama drops to the floor and skitters over Bael.

"But you see, Bael, that is the truth of the matter. Females are innately whores and sluts. They are inferior creatures who must repress their feminine urges. All our power does is liberate those feelings and make them excited to serve us. You and the other demons always call us a monster, but aren't we actually quite pleasant and nice? We handle all the mundane matters, and in return, women become our servants. There is no greater calling in life for a female's body than to pleasure this Emperor."

Bael narrows his eyes.

"Is that what you tell yourself? I know a thing or two about women, pal! Lemme tell you, that ain't the truth! You're just making up lies to sound all smart! But the truth is, you're a tiny-dicked loser any woman would hate if they looked at ya! You only get your way by... by forcin' yourself on them! You keep talkin' about women 'liking' what you do... bullshit! You're just twisting their minds! You're nothing but a rapist! A loser rapist!"

"Tsk... a loser? I think not." Yama chuckles. "Losers lose. We win. That much is evidenced by the fact that we now have two more Emperor whores in our grasp. You can deny reality if you like, Bael, but we..."

Yama pauses mid-sentence.

Slowly, the Emperor of Shadows lifts his head to look across the room at a hazy figure materializing in the darkness.

"...What..."

Confused, Bael also tilts his head back, scraping his scalp on the floor. To his surprise, he finds a demon standing some distance away, a male with frazzled white hair, a leather jacket, and torn-up jeans.

The demon's existence appears shaky, as if he doesn't fully exist. However, Yama and Bael both immediately recognize him.

"S-Shax?!" Yama gasps. "Impossible! The Emperor of Resonance... he perished eons ago! What is this hallucination? This is a trick!"

Shax lifts his head. The normally lighthearted fellow's eyes burn with a smoldering rage.

"So. Yama. It was you... it was you who took my sister. You worked with Lucifer to draw me away, then you snatched my little sis while the humans gutted me."

Yama slowly levitates into the air, scrutinizing Shax's ghost-like body with curiosity, rather than fear.

"An errant soul? Kukuku... big words for the illusion of a once-mighty Emperor. We always did lust for your sister's body... and we got what we wanted. What can a single errant soul possibly do here? Go back to the Great Beyond."

Shax gnashes his teeth. A vicious expression unlike any ever seen in his life melts onto his face.

"No... I don't think I will, you black-hearted bastard. I think I'm gonna remind you... why nobody fucked with the Hell of Isolation when I was around."

Emperor Shax kicks his foot against the dirt, rockets forward, and sends a spin-kick flying at Yama. The Emperor of Shadows stands his ground, conjuring a wall of shadows to shield himself. Darkness lances fly out and stab at the ghostly Emperor, but instead of impaling him, they pass harmlessly through his body.

"Kukuku! As expected! You're only an illus-"

Yama's words get cut off when Shax's flying kick smashes into his shadow-body, releasing a sound-shockwave that blasts Yama backward and sends him screaming into a wall. He explodes into smoke, and after a moment, his figure reforms automatically.

"What?! Your body is real?!" Yama exclaims.

Shax continues running toward Yama.

"Oh, I'm real. I'm really gonna kick your ass!"

Yama starts to raise his hands to cast a spell. However, to his alarm, he remembers an important fact.

The soul shackles! No!

Yama's body becomes locked in place, unable to move. However, for some reason, despite launching previous attacks, Shax's body doesn't! He continues racing toward Yama, making the Shadow Emperor flinch in fear.

"Nooo!"

Shax punches and kicks the air like a machine-gun. Each attack launches a soundwave at Yama, battering the Emperor of Shadows against the wall and knocking him around like a pinball. Yama screams and howls in pain, but Shax doesn't relent. He continues kicking every flavor of shit out of the Shadow Emperor, glaring hatefully at the monster who enslaved his sister.

"You're garbage, Yama! You don't even deserve to go in the trash!"

Shax pummels the Shadow Emperor into the dirt, then fires off a couple dozen more shockwaves for good measure, leaving Yama to lay motionless, groaning in pain.

"You... you cheater... how... how can you move?! The soul shackles..."

"It doesn't feel good to have someone pin you down while you can't fight back, does it, bro?" Shax scoffs. "I've barely even started. We let you get away with too much for too long."

Shax flickers away from Yama to arrive beside Emperor Fae, Duke Hestia, and Baron Mara, as well as a dozen other demonesses currently pinned by Yama's Shades. With a casual wave of his hand, Shax kills all of the Shades, finally freeing them from their eternal servitude, but also releasing Yama's future victims from their entrapment.

After their bindings shatter, all the women sink into the chairs and hazily blink their eyes open. Clouds of dark energy linger in their gazes, the results of Yama's partial corruption. Emperor Fae appears the least affected. She quickly stands up, only for her knees to wobble awkwardly. She catches herself and shoots a hateful glance at Yama, lying on the ground some distance away.

"YOU!"

Mara, the Baron of Games, also awakens. Unlike Fae, however, her mental state appears far less intact. She drowsily opens her eyes, then rolls to the side and falls off the chair where she was restrained, slapping against the floor.

"Nnn..."

Duke Hestia, a demoness from the Hell of Blood, regains consciousness as well. She helps Mara to her feet, leaving the fight between Emperors to Shax and Fae.

At the same time, the bindings holding Bael finally break apart. The Duke of Pain clambers to his feet and takes up a defensive stance.

"I don't get what the heck is goin' on, but this seems great. Let's kick Yama's ass!"

Shax turns to Fae. "Yama tried to make you into one of his pets. I have freed you."

"Thanks!" Fae says. "I'm gonna rip that bastard a new- wait... hold the hell up! Are you... Shax?!"

"I am." Shax replies.

"And just how in the Seven Hells are you alive?! Everyone knows you died!" Fae exclaims. "And your body is kinda ghost-like. Are you a ghost?!"

For once, Shax appears stumped.

"I don't know what I am. All I know is, I awoke here after learning of my sister's fate."

He gestures toward a motionless Shade standing in a corner of the underground chamber. 'Silent,' also known as Murmur, hovers by herself, away from all the fighting. Having left Bael when Yama fought Shax, she says nothing, only opting to remain isolated from the others.

Fae gapes at the Shade. "Wait... your sister? So... Yama corrupted Emperor Murmur?!"

"Devil-damned right he did," Bael says. "I can't believe this sick fuck. We're gonna have to beat him so badly even the ancient Emperors feel sorry for him."

Within moments, Bael, Fae, and Shax advance on Yama's frozen form. The Emperor of Shadows struggles to break free of Yumagi's soul shackles, but so long as he stands within the Archangel's battle radius, he cannot break free.

Yama glowers at Murmur's solitary figure. "Aaargh! Silent! Get over here and protect your master! All the rest of you whores too, we need protection!"

Instantly, Murmur and a thousand other Shades materialize around Yama, forming a shield of shadows to protect him. Murmur's addition to the living barrier forces Shax to pause. He gazes at all the identical shadow-women, not sure which Shade is his sister.

Bael also slows to a halt. "You chicken-shit! Hiding behind a bunch of girls! Man, what a loser punk you are, Yama!"

However, Fae doesn't slow down at all. She gurgles cruelly in her throat, the sound a mixture of a laugh and a rare-filled roar. "KUHUHU... I'm going to enjoy killing this rapist, once and for all!"

Fae summons bone armor to envelop her body. At the same time, she materializes four beads of demonic energy, then rears back to hurl the balls of destructive mana at Yama.

"Wait!" Bael shouts. "Shax's sister is-"

"I couldn't give less of a damn!" Fae laughs. "That shadow-bitch is long gone! Eat shit and die, Yama!!"

She hurls the explosive orbs at Yama. They rocket through the air, destabilizing once they leave her grasp to transform into terrifyingly powerful mana bombs.

Shax's pupils shrink to pinpricks. "No!"

The Emperor of Resonance rushes forward, swings his palm in an upward arc, and fires a shockwave below the path of the mana bombs. He knocks them off their trajectory and flings them straight upward, where they crash into the ceiling.

BOOOOM!!

An Emperor-level blast detonates in the confined chamber, sending Fae, Shax, and Bael flying backward. At the same time, the cavern's roof explodes into the sky, firing thousands of tons of rock and dirt into the upper atmosphere, where it will eventually come falling back down over the next hour or two.

Every participant in the underground battle finds themselves frozen in place, all except for Shax, who has shown himself to be somehow immune to Yumagi's soul shackles. Buried under a few tons of rubble, Shax easily casts it away and stands up, wincing as his soul-body destabilizes somewhat. His existence becomes more immaterial.

In the moments before his body breaks apart and he disappears, the Emperor of Resonance casts one last look at Bael, Fae, and the other demons he helped save.

"Save... Murmur... Bael..." Shax groans.

He falls to his knees. Bael opens his eyes just in time to see Shax's body start to evaporate.

"What? Shax! SHAX!"

Shax lifts his head. As his vision wavers, he casts one last regretful glance at Hell Harbor's sky above.

And in that moment, his soul becomes frozen with fear.

In the sky above, a horrible monster, something too terrifying to imagine, hovers above Hell Harbor's landmass. Its distinctive holy energy signature marks it as an enemy that will inspire the most primal of fears in any creature unfortunate enough to gaze upon it.

Shax's body fades away, but one last thought lingers in his mind.

Is... that... monster... an... Archangel...?

Part 319: Crow's Sacrifice

With Kristoff's ability to see Uriel's true body, and with Yumagi's power to see through Raphael's illusions, the Archangels' previous ploys at deception no longer have any chance at succeeding. However, the wily Archangel of Wisdom stays one step ahead of his demonic adversaries by switching up his tactics.

Over the next ten rounds, Michael and Uriel launch brutal attacks on the Emperors, forcing them backward. While Michael's construct body cannot give him the same strength and speed as he possessed in his original body, his peerless swordplay still exceeds anything the demons can unleash. Several times, he launches suicidal attacks on Wolfram, Kristoff, or Yardrat, all of which result in his body's destruction, but which also allow his blade to bite into their flesh and badly wound them.

These pyrrhic attacks pale in comparison to Uriel's renewed style of warfare in which she launches singular heavy and brutal attacks, relying on her eldest brother to teleport her away from the battlefield to safety. Multiple times, she succeeds in breaking the limbs of her demonic foes while receiving equally painful beatdowns, only to teleport away and return to the battlefield in the next round.

Yardrat keeps quiet about Fae's disappearance. During 'downtime rounds' when the angels aren't present, he surreptitiously sweeps the area for Yama's presence, yet finds nothing. He consults with Auger, but not even his revered leader manages to detect his subordinate's location.

[If Yama has captured Fae, then he must have also cut off her connection with me,] Auger transmits. [I cannot take back the three powers I gave her, nor can I detect her presence. Those were some of our Hell's strongest abilities. We must not allow them to fall into the Shadow Emperor's clutches. If he successfully corrupts Fae into joining his harem, he might permanently retain access to her powers.]

Yardrat frowns. [Might?]

[I have never lost contact with one of my Chosen.] Auger states. [The fact Yama can hide Fae's existence from me implies that his corruption infects her very soul. If so, he may be capable of breaking my Pacts.]

Yardrat gazes at the sky, waiting for the Archangels to reappear.

[We cannot let this information get out. If the other Emperors learn that Yama can subvert your Pacts, he will become a strategically important ally for undermining your rule.]

[Indeed. That is why you are my second in command, Yardrat. You are not foolhardy like Fae, nor are you an uncontrollable maniac like Glinch. Stay safe, and do not allow the Archangels to gang up on you. You are alone on that battlefield, for now.]

Yardrat shoots momentary glances of suspicion at Yumagi, Kristoff, and the other Emperors.

[Noted.]

He closes the mental communication line with his Hell's leader, and momentarily feels his back become slick with sweat.

With Fae out of commission, he has become the only Emperor present without any allies capable of backing him up. Even the supposedly lonely Yama at least has an army of Shades and Shadow-Walkers who can protect him.

Perhaps I should call for a few Dukes to join me... though that may result in my position appearing much weaker than the other Emperors, Yardrat thinks.

Not long after, Raphael, Michael, and Uriel fly out of a portal, followed by Uriel's cube and artillery orb.

"All healed up?" Yumagi asks. "This game of hide and seek is growing quite-"

Before he can finish his sentence, Uriel suddenly lunges forward, rushing toward Emperor Kristoff and the two werewolves. She summons a dozen fireballs over her head, then launches them at the three Emperors from the Hell of Blood.

"You bitch!" Wolfram snaps.

Lupus takes up the frontline, protecting her fellow Emperors with her incredibly tanky body. As the fireballs explode against her, Uriel summons one last bead of light, a seemingly small and insignificant bolt of holy energy with a mind of its own. This micro-construct flies toward Lupus, spins around her, and rushes directly for Wolfram's head!

"Oh, no you don't!" Wolfram says. He swipes at the bead of light, but it dodges away at the last second, making him waste his turn!

At the same time, it flies directly for Kristoff, who doesn't resist, realizing the orb must be similar to the same tricks the Archangels always use to make him waste his turn.

However, the instant before the orb of light reaches Kristoff, a flash of fear rumbles his stomach. His body jolts in horror when the bolt of light transforms into Michael's construct. The Archangel of Courage swaps positions with the orb, then swings his sword at Kristoff's neck.

Lupus's turn, over.

Wolfram's turn, over.

Only Kristoff can protect himself!

He hurriedly raises his arms, crying out in pain as the Archangel's sword severs both his hands before Michael's turn ends.

The three Emperors and Michael's construct-body freeze in place, all standing oddly close to one another.

"My hands! You wretch!" Kristoff roars, losing his cool in a way he hasn't before. "This... this won't stop me! I can repair this damage... with ease! All you've done is piss me off!"

Michael smiles.

"Nay. I have accomplished more than that."

As he speaks, Uriel's cube begins revolving. It conjures a gravitic singularity into a spot directly in the center of the four combatants, yanking their bodies together. While not possessing nearly enough power to crush their bones to pulp, it still bends and twists their limbs awkwardly, making both werewolves and their vampire Emperor grunt in pain.

"Y-you!" Wolfram stutters.

At the same time, the artillery orb also spins up, cycling its rings to rapidly empower itself. It summons a hundred small fireballs and fires them at Michael and his three demon opponents, none of whom can move. While the fireballs may only possess the power of a Demon Lord, en-masse, they can still cause the demons significant harm if they all land!

"Y-Yumagi! Yardrat! Help us!" Lupus shouts. "These fireballs won't hurt me, but Wolfram, a-and Kristoff...!"

In the seconds before the fireballs impact, Yumagi continues to levitate motionlessly, not deigning to intervene.

"Tsk. How unfortunate you lot are. Those fireballs won't kill you, so, good luck!"

Yardrat, however, motions with his hands to summon temporal magic around the Hell of Blood's members. When the fireballs hit, he teleports them to Uriel's body, a short distance away, intending to deal her at least some measure of damage.

Instead, Raphael uses up his turn by teleporting Uriel away, as well as himself. They once again vanish from Hell Harbor's surface, making the hundred fireballs fly into the distance and explode uselessly on the ground.

Once the turn ends, Wolfram crushes Michael's construct body, and the demons breathe a sigh of relief.

"Thank you for the assistance, Yardrat," Kristoff says. "But Yumagi... tsk tsk. Such poor taste."

"You didn't lift a finger to help us!" Lupus roars. "How dare you! We may not be best friends, but we are all on the same side in this battle!"

"I have saved several of your lives, several times," Yumagi says. "Or have you forgotten? If I choose not to protect you from some weak little puffs of flame, then obviously, I have a good reason. Saving my turn to deal with Raphael's shenanigans was the right move, in my mind."

"You always have an excuse..." Wolfram hisses. "But frankly, I'm getting tired of hearing them!"

Emperor Kristoff glances at his hands laying on the ground. Thanks to Michael's clean severing, they remain intact and useable. He nods at Lupus. "Help me regenerate these."

"Sure thing," She says, glaring daggers at Yumagi.

She places Kristoff's hands back on his stumps, and he activates a magical sigil inside his chest, causing blood to flow from his stumps, latch onto his wrists, and graft the two together.

Within seconds, Kristoff perfectly heals his severed hands, regaining their full functionality.

"I did not expect that those two inferior constructs would prove so troublesome..." Kristoff says. "Perhaps it is time we stop playing with our food. Serena! Call forth Emperor Crow. Also, call out Ashura. We will need all the help we can get. And Yardrat, where has Fae run off to? Get her back here, along with Glinch. I don't care if he's a rabid dog, we need every Emperor we can muster."

Serena shifts uncomfortably. "Emperor Crow... I might be able to call her to our position. But Ashura? I do not control him. Only Gorn could issue him commands without fear of reprisal. The Orcs... dislike demonic authority."

Yardrat lifts his chin. "Fae suffered worse injuries than expected and had to leave the battle. As for Glinch, don't even pretend any of us has a say in his actions. Auger already requested his assistance. Glinch refused. If you want to try and drag him here, be my guest."

"So, only Crow will come?" Kristoff asks. "What of Ose? I heard she was revived. Don't tell me she has chosen to sit this one out?"

"Ose and Bael... switched bodies." Yardrat explains. "Not intentionally. Mephisto screwed up."

"So Ose is stuck in the body of a Duke? Then where is Bael?" Kristoff asks.

Yardrat rubs his forehead. "Bael's an idiot. He can't use Ose's powers."

"Fantastic! Well, let's get Crow here, then. One more Emperor is better than none. As long as we can kill Uriel, this will all be worth the trouble..."

The Emperors fall silent. They continue waiting for the round to end, and eventually it does.

Surprisingly, three rounds pass, but the Archangels don't show themselves.

Wolfram crosses his arms. He sniffs the air, then lowers his head.

"Strange. The Archangels haven't returned. Have they broken free of the soul shackles?"

Yumagi shakes his head. "That would be impossible. If the Archangels succeed in breaking their soul shackles, all of us will be immediately released. The power of the shackles merely grow according to the united power of all participants. Even if they flee to another world, they will remain trapped in the five-minute-round cycles until I release the restriction."

"I've tried following their previous portal remnants," Yardrat says. "All I can say is that they must have returned to the Labyrinth. The Labyrinth does not rest within the physical realm, but an alternate dimension. Traveling to and from it makes teleportation much more difficult to trace."

"If the Emperor with the highest affinity for temporal manipulation says so, then it must be true." Yumagi says with a smile.

Many minutes pass. A full hour.

Several rounds come and go, but the angels don't reappear. Eventually, Emperor Serena turns to the west, making the other Emperors follow her gaze.

"Crow has arrived." She says.

Across the horizon, a giant bird with blue feathers streaks across the sky, moving at speeds exceeding Mach 2. Emperor Crow, a mutated demon of mixed origins similar to the werewolves and vampires, roars across the sky and dives to the ground, crashing into the dirt with a massive BANG!

The blue-feathered demoness immediately stands up, her bird-like body giving her a creepy and ominous aura. A black hood covers her head, making her glowing red eyes stand out from the darkness hiding her face.

"My rituals... you have interrupted them..." Crow says, her beak making tapping sounds as she speaks.

Her voice, surprisingly deep, gives her an air of masculinity exceeding even Bael's legendary status. She cracks her neck, causing a couple of loose feathers to fall out. They slap against the dirt with heavy thuds.

"We wouldn't call you here if it wasn't for a good reason," Yardrat says. "The Archangels-"

"I know of the events that have transpired..." Crow hisses. "Does this queen need to rescue the rest of you whenever a big, scary enemy shows his face? Just like during the Energy Wars... I must always show up to play janitor..."

Crow shoots a deathly glare at Yardrat, making him stiffen. He instinctively senses the overwhelming mana within her body, reaching a level even he never thought imaginable.

"Have... have you... broken through?"

Yardrat's question, the same one every other Emperor shares, rings in their ears. They all stare at Crow with a mixture of fear and respect. As a champion of the Energy Wars, she holds more accolades under her belt than almost anyone else, barring Kristoff himself.

"Kss... I have not..." Crow mutters. "The barrier... reaching beyond the rank of Emperor... it is too difficult... I have poured all of my efforts into breaking through... but every ritual has failed..."

"Gorn has tried, too," Serena says. "He failed. But at least he created many 'faces,' so his time was not spent uselessly."

Crow turns her head 180 degrees, rotating it on her shoulders like an owl to look back at Serena.

"...But this Emperor's time was?"

"That isn't what I meant." Serena says. "Breaking past the barrier of Emperor is simply too difficult. At the very least, I am sure you have devised new rituals over time."

"Kss. Indeed, I have..." Crow answers. "Yumagi... why does my soul feel stifled... what magic have you cast upon this region...?"

Crow asks several questions, and the other Emperors answer, informing her of the specifics regarding Yumagi's Soul Shackles.

At some point, she nods. "I see... so it is like that... very interesting... the power to bind the mighty Archangels... to bind your fellow Emperors... you are a credit to our Hell..."

"With Gorn fallen, I am sure you will act as a fine leader in his stead," Yumagi says, tilting his head deferentially. "Ruling the Hell of Calamity holds no meaning for me. You will make better use of its resources. As for myself, I will continue to stay as the head of the Tarot Sect."

Crow sniffs the air. Her beak momentarily protrudes from under her hood before ducking back inside.

"Kss... they are coming..."

Hardly have the words left her mouth before a portal opens up in the sky. Once again, Raphael, Uriel, and Michael all fly through, followed by the orb and cube constructs.

"One more Demon Emperor has appeared," Raphael says. "Art any more to follow?"

"Not that we can tell," Yardrat answers. "Why? You sure seem hellbent on having as many demon leaders here as possible. Do you really think you can catch us offguard with yet another trick? Your power is feeble, old man."

Crow gazes at the Archangels. She narrows her eyes and nods along to Yardrat's words.

"Archangel Raphael... kukuku... where is Camael? I would like to see the woman whose life I personally ended..."

Raphael's pleasant smile evaporates. "Oh? So t'was thee who slew Camael. I will be glad to deliver justice to her killer on this very day. Art any of thee responsible for the deaths of other Archangels? I still know not the identity of Gabriel's murderer."

"Tough luck," Kristoff comments. "Diablo killed Gabriel, and Satan killed you. Neither of them are here."

"Nay... but Diablo still rests in the realm of the living..." Raphael murmurs. "He will receive his just desserts, once I uncover his location. 'Tis unfortunate that none of thee knoweth his location, or I would merrily extract it from thy cold, lifeless hands."

"You keep threatening us," Yardrat says, "But I don't understand where your confidence comes from. Are you working with the Wordsmith? Are you going to call down the power of Excalibur to smite us? Because last I checked, you lot can't wield Excalibur. Only a chosen few can, and Camael isn't here."

"The Wordsmith. Excalibur. Nay. My brothers and I do not need anyone else's assistance," Uriel says, her tone increasingly deepening. "We alone are enough. We have always been enough. Were it not for my brother's pained heart during the Energy Wars, he might have smote thy entire species where it stood. Sadly, we did not have the power this body gives us... but now we do."

Uriel straightens her back. She levitates higher into the sky, making all the Emperors frown. Even Yumagi appears a little concerned by her oddly brave words.

"Brothers. Join me. Let us use that forbidden power. The time is nigh."

Michael nods. "I concur."

Raphael does, too. "Indeed."

All at once, the bodies of Michael and Raphael's constructs shatter, bursting into fragments of light. Uriel's body shines bright like the sun, illuminating the night-time covering Hell Harbor's surface.

Many of the demons avert their eyes, startled by the sudden outpouring of light.

"What's going on?" Yardrat asks. "Is it that same attack from earlier? The one Uriel nearly smote all of us with?"

"No!" Serena exclaims. "This is something else! It's... it's... soul resonance! All three of their souls are shining brilliantly!"

"What do you mean?" Lupus asks. "Explain!"

Uriel levitates higher and higher into the sky, casting a brilliant aura of holy light that shines upon even the distant reaches of Hell Harbor. Tens of miles away, countless demon Dukes, Barons, and Lords turn their heads in shock to the painful light beating upon their bodies.

"It's the Emperors! They're fighting Uriel! I told you I sensed holy magic from that direction!"

"What a fearsome aura! I didn't know Uriel was this dangerous. Has she obtained even more of Barbatos's power?"

"Aaargh! The light burns! I have to get inside! Move out of my way!"

Demons and monsters alike panic as the holy energy radiating from Uriel's soul burns their skin. The tougher Barons and Dukes endure it fairly easily, as do the Hidden Emperors, but none of them miss the discomfort it brings them.

Back at the shattered battleground, Uriel's body becomes brighter and brighter still, as if she has summoned the power of Heaven itself into her form. Her figure becomes progressively more illusory, causing her physical details to become harder and harder to make out.

Yumagi growls. "I don't know what the Archangels are doing, but I will not let them continue! Thunder Giant, EVOKE!"

The Glyphmancer activates a Platinum Aspect, the mightiest type of card in his possession. He holds the card high, allowing a tremendous fist of thunder-energy to blast out of it and rocket into the skies! The evoked fist races toward Uriel at blinding speeds, but just before it hits, a shield of hardened holy energy materializes in front of it!

BOOOOM!!

The explosion's shockwave reverses back down to the planet's surface, smashing all of the Emperors into the dirt except for Lupus and Crow. Yumagi himself ends up flattened into the soil like a pancake, along with Yardrat, Kristoff, and even Serena. The ordinarily graceful Emperor of Soul Whispers only gets a moment to cry out in surprise before the shockwave hits her like a tsunami and flings her into the planet's soil.

Emperors Lupus and Crow, by virtue of their powerful bodies, barely manage to remain standing. Lupus maintains her balance, but Crow's legs tremble under the weight of the reversed blast-wave.

"Kss... Uriel blocked... Yumagi's attack... so easily..." Crow growls. "Must transmit... a message... to my followers..."

She closes her eyes and concentrates. Using her demonic telepathy, she contacts a group of demons on a distant world, thousands of lightyears away.

These demons, consisting of Grunts, Lords, Barons, and Dukes, bow their heads as Crow's voice enters their minds.

[Begin... the ritual.. of Apocalypse...]

One Duke in particular, Crow's highest subordinate, spreads her arms in a welcoming gesture.

[Duke Raven has heard your command. We will begin at once, my liege.]

Raven, like every other demon under Crow's employ, sports a bird-like body with colorful feathers. Hers, however, are pure black. Feathers cover not only her chest, her back, and legs, but her arms and face as well.

Duke Raven flaps her arms and rockets upward, reaching the top of a huge ceremonial altar, one carved in the image of their sect's Emperor.

"Emperor Crow has given her command." Duke Raven proclaims. "Let us begin the Ritual of Apocalypse!"

"The Ritual of Apocalypse!" Cry her fellow Dukes.

"The Ritual of Apocalypse!" Exclaim the lower ranking demons.

On this world, a planet covered in rocks and granite outcroppings, ten moons circle around its equator. Watery oceans are nowhere to be found, but lava sprays from countless active volcanos to heat up the world past comfortable limits. Temples erected all over its surface glow with green light as Raven's command reaches their controllers.

At once, Raven's subordinates drag out one thousand virgin men and women. They bind their bodies together in pairs and sprinkle purple dust on them, causing their libidos to circulate beyond their control.

"Fornication and blood! Lust and despair! Bring forth the shadows of my prayer!" Exclaims Duke Raven.

The lower-ranks echo her chants. They encircle the men and women bound together, forced to copulate. As their passions reach a peak, the demons move in unison, bring down five hundred ritual daggers to bear on the men. They sever the back of every man's neck, instantly ceasing their movements and causing blood to spray from their spines.

Before their female partners can cry out in shock, the demons move again, plunging daggers into their brains. They rip the women's heads open like burst grapefruits, spilling their brains and blood across the massive marble platform. Demonic sigils, activated by blood, glow with eerie-red light.

"This sacrifice empowers our god!" Duke Raven proclaims. "To her, we give our servitude! All hail Emperor Crow, the future leader of the Seven Hells!"

Back on Hell Harbor, Crow and the other Emperors watch Uriel's transformation with varying degrees of worry and alarm. Only the Emperor of Sacrifice herself remains relatively unworried while her followers pour a massive amount of sacrificial energy into her body.

"UWAAAH!!" Crow roars, as her body begins to increase in size. At the same time as Uriel's body transforms into something new and unknown, so too does Crow's.

The Emperor of Sacrifice gains a monstrous boost in strength. Her appearance shifts from a simple bird-like visage to one resembling a giant, feathered crocodile, complete with flesh-ripping teeth and claws capable of tearing through even the hardiest armor.

"Archangels! Waiting for my arrival was the most foolish thing you could have ever done!" Crow roars, as Uriel's body becomes nothing more than a ball of light. "Now, you will face the wrath of Camael's killer!"

At that moment, a pulse of angelic energy bursts out of Uriel's body. It rushes in all directions, blowing the clouds out of the sky, flattening several nearby mountains, and even pushing Crow's body against the dirt. She easily holds her ground, but a flash of surprise appears on her face that anything could make her take a step back.

Uriel's body rapidly reforms. However, instead of the bipedal figure of Barbatos, the appearance she assumes becomes something far more alien... and terrifying.

"You wish to face us, tiny demon?" Uriel asks. "We laugh at thy insignificance."

The light in the sky fades away. Finally, all of the Emperors raise their heads to get a clear view of Uriel's transformed body.

What they see chills them to their core.

"You... what the hell are you?!" Yumagi asks, his voice catching in his throat. "What in the Seven goddamned Hells ARE you?!"

"A true monster..." Yardrat says, his voice a whisper.

"Spawn of Satan himself..." Lupus hisses. "That... that thing! How can it be the Archangel?!"

No longer demon nor Archangel, Uriel instead resembles a blood-red orb surrounded by a thousand screaming, crying, wailing faces. Tears of blood drip from their eyes. Their mouths hang open, caught in an eternal cry of pain and suffering. Living tendrils of blood drift in the air, each one worming around like vipers, ready to pounce.

The eldritch monstrosity hangs in the sky like the arbiter of several doomsdays, soon to rend all life to its atoms.

"We are the Cherubiim." Uriel states. "We are the instrument of thy demise."

"We thank thee for coming to thy future graveyard. Now, we can avenge our family... with no regrets."

Part 320: Cherubiim's Judgment

Three Archangels, united.

Not in tens of eons has the universe witnessed such a terrifying sight. Once the supreme entities of life itself, the creators of reality, and the flesh-forgers of countless sentient sub-species, the Archangels were once revered and feared by all life underneath them. Even their own creations, the monstrous entities known as dragons, only dared to fight them out of necessity, not desire.

But time passed. Tens of millions of years. The universe forgot the horrors the pureblooded Archangels could unleash. When three Archangels united their souls, the result was not merely a threefold increase in power, but a might so horrifying that it could bring entire star systems to ruin. It was once a power so terrifying that the mere mention of it would quell any rebellious thoughts from those forced to face it.

Cherubiim, Seraphiim, and Ophaniim. The three unified powers capable of tackling any foe with ease. Despite the bitter odds faced when battling Jörmungandr, the Archangels ultimately prevailed, and this was all thanks to the powers of the Cherubiim and Seraphiim.

Now, on the world known as Hell Harbor, that long-forgotten ancient deity, known to none still living, once again bares its teeth. The Cherubiim, once an amalgamation of Michael, Raphael, and Gabriel's powers, takes on a different appearance as Uriel changes position with Gabriel, swapping in for him to complete the trifecta of souls necessary to unlock the Cherubiim's power.

Every demon on Hell Harbor loses the strength in their legs. Every human, monster, and other living entity feels a chill wash through their bones. The weakest minded perish instantly from the sheer pressure pushing on their souls, never to rise again. Others permanently lose the ability to walk, speak, or even think.

The Hidden Emperors, once so cocky and confident of their chances at winning, crumple into paper tigers as this awe-inspiring and pants-shitting soul pressure strikes them.

Yumagi's cocky smile vanishes, replaced instead with a look of dread. His teeth chatter, and his knees clack together. He falls to the ground and struggles to stand up, but the sheer amount of holy energy and soul pressure slamming against his very being holds back ninety percent of his power, making him feel as if he has stepped foot on a world with one hundred times its former gravity.

Emperors Serena, Yardrat, and Kristoff all likewise lose their ability to fly. They crumple into quivering masses, too terrified to look directly at the Cherubiim's body. Its thousand faces revolve around its light-core interior, all of them crying and wailing as if trapped in the pain of infinite unending deaths. Some of the faces beg for mercy. Others simply babble nonsense, having long ago lost their ability to reason. Each once belonged to a mighty angel, Titan, or dragon soul, but all of them fell to the legendary Cherubiim. None survived to tell the tale.

Of the demons present, only the two werewolves and Emperor Crow manage to remain standing, but the blood in their bodies thins dramatically, making them feel as frail as elderly humans.

"You... you... what in the Seven Hells... are you?!" Crow shrieks. "You're an abomination!"

"We are the Cherubiim. Thou art all errant children who hath fallen to sin. We regret creating thee. And so, we will exterminate all who call themselves demons in thy stead. Rejoice, for thou shalt never again foist thy acts of terror upon this galaxy."

"You... you think you can exterminate us?!" Emperor Lupus roars. "I'll drown in the River Styx before I ever accept such a fate! Ahhhh!!"

She coils strength into her legs and launches straight upward, racing toward the Cherubiim above. Lupus sucks in a deep breath, summoning demonic power into her throat. In the second before she impacts the Cherubiim with her reinforced body, she vomits a bolt of blackened demonic lightning at the abomination.

Before it can impact the Cherubiim, one of the thousand faces detaches from the unified Archangels, intercepts Lupus's attack, and opens its mouth.

Gulp!

The face stained with blood swallows her demonic energy greedily, causing the Cherubiim's power to rise, ever so imperceptibly. Before Lupus can react, another face detaches, flies toward her, and instantly transforms into the soul-body of a small dragon.

"SKREOW!"

The ghostly dragon smashes its claws against Lupus's body and batters her violently, sending her flying toward the planet's surface. She smashes into the dirt and embeds a quarter of a mile deep, breaking tens of bones in her body and otherwise crumpling her formidable defenses in an instant. At the same time, her 'turn' ends, leaving her to lay motionless, suffering that agony until the start of the next round.

"There is no point in fighting." The Cherubiim states. "None have faced this transformation since the Primordial Era. None can counter it. This form means absolute power. All of thou art inferior. Perish."

At once, every face revolving around the Cherubiim detaches. They fly into the upper atmosphere, then rocket downward, vomiting beams of holy energy, each as powerful as one of Gabriel's mightiest blasts used during the War in Heaven.

Despair crosses the faces of every demon. Yumagi shakily activates a Golden Aspect, evoking it for maximum power.

"N-Nimrod's Fortification! I-Imbue!"

A transparent tower made of golden energy materializes over top of and around Yumagi, Yardrat, and Serena. It rapidly coalesces into something harder than spiritual energy, capable of repelling some of the strongest attacks Yumagi has ever imagined.

But even so, his knees never stop banging together as he barely holds his wits intact.

Frightening! Too frightening! What in the hell have these Archangels done? Where did they obtain such a horrifying transformation?! Never in my greatest estimates did I imagine they would possess an ability of this level! If they had such a power, why didn't they use it during the Energy Wars?!

Emperor Serena grits her teeth. Lacking any versatile powers capable of turning the battle on her own, she can only augment other demons, making her almost useless in battles such as these. She dives toward Yardrat and motions with her hands, touching upon the fabric of his soul.

Yardrat stiffens. "What do you think you're doing?!"

"Don't resist!" Serena yells.

An instant later, some of Yardrat's innate magical abilities change, making his skin and bones as hard as iron. However, his magical power drops significantly, lowering his offensive potential. He instantly realizes what Serena has done.

She adjusted my power balance, making my body more resilient to damage!

Just seconds after, the one-thousand beams of holy energy crash into Hell Harbor's surface.

The light of creation shines, bombarding the eyes of all those present.

Emperor Yumagi's Tower of Babel, a defensive construct capable of resisting most attacks, crumbles to nothingness. Several beams of holy energy continue racing past its collapsed defenses, where they blast all the Demon Emperors with holy power equivalent to nuclear bombs.

Boom.

A cataclysmic series of explosions detonate, turning the night side of Hell Harbor as bright as the midday sun. Waves of leftover power blast into the distant reaches of space, setting off countless alarms on numerous observation platforms.

Moments later, the fallout dies down, revealing the beaten and battered figures of all the Demon Emperors.

Emperor Yumagi, missing several limbs, lays motionlessly in a scorched pile of charred rock and rubble. The land around him, turned to glass by the Cherubiim's attack, glimmers like piles of shiny diamonds.

Yardrat's defensively-upgraded body lays in a heap. He coughs weakly, many of his internal organs ruptured from the Cherubiim's attack.

Lupus exhales one last time before departing from the world of the living. Her soul leaves her body, only to end up trapped in the River Styx. At the same time, Mephisto slithers out of the ground and quietly takes her remains for his own purposes, chuckling cruelly to himself.

Emperors Kristoff, Wolfram, and Crow all lay near each other. The Emperor of Thirst regenerates himself with a blood ritual, while Crow appears relatively uninjured. With a body empowered by her ritualist followers, she survives the Cherubiim's bombardment with minimal injuries.

As for Emperor Wolfram, both of his arms and one of his legs no longer appear on his figure. The last leg barely clings to his abdomen, leaving him a pitiful sight.

Finally, Emperor Serena, of all people, appears less injured than Yardrat. She manages to stand up, her body somewhat intact. Belatedly, she realizes Yumagi put the majority of his power into protecting his fellow Emperor over Yardrat.

The Cherubiim's thousand faces fall from the upper atmosphere to reattach to its main body. After exhausting their power, they require a short period to recharge.

"Demon Emperors. One of thou hath departed this realm. Soon, the rest will follow. Have thee any last words to say to thy father in Heaven?"

Depair engulfs the minds of all the Emperors. For the first time in all their existences, they realize that there exists a power in the universe capable of suppressing them in their entirety.

Yumagi gurgles weakly.

"You... can still... move...? But... my Soul Shackles..."

"Foolish demon. Dids't thou thinketh thy feeble shackles could constrain the Archangel of Wisdom? We played along with thy game because it suited our fancy. Now that we have ascended to the ranks of a primordial entity, nothing thou unleash will be capable of snaring our souls. Thou art far too weak to pose us a threat."

Every Emperor lays motionless, unable to move. With Yumagi's soul shackles binding them but not the Archangel, they haven't the slightest ability to resist, leaving them wide open for annihilation.

"Hah... haha... an excellent... play..." Yumagi coughs. "Very good... very good... I concede. I admit... defeat. You are... too much... for this Glyphmancer... to handle..."

Yumagi's eyes wearily blink shut. The demonic power in his body slowly becomes inert as he loses his grasp on reality.

However, just before his eyes can shut for the final time, one of the beads of light on his forehead activates!

"No! I will not die here!"

Yumagi's eyes widen. A flash of golden energy bursts out of his being and envelops all of the demons present.

"Temporal Cricket, Evoke!"

Instantly, the power of time manipulation wraps around every demon, restoring their bodies to how they were just five minutes before. Every injury they suffered and every last drop of damage disappears, making them once again relatively healthy and in good spirits.

At the same time, another bead of light disappears from Yumagi's forehead.

"Since this game no longer matters, I dispel it! Pharaoh's Insight, Revoke!"

The Soul Shackles binding Yumagi and all the other Emperors shatter, allowing them to once again move freely. The moment they regain their faculties, they all jump to their feet.

Kristoff glances around the battlefield. "Yumagi. Where is Lupus?"

"Dead." Yumagi answers. "Temporal Cricket can rewind time, but it cannot bring back the fallen. I only have five copies of it, and I've just evoked two. The other three lay with my initiates."

"No!" Wolfram roars. "My wife! MY WIFE! DEAD! Raphaeeel!!"

"Impressive resilience," The Cherubiim says. "All of thou art like cockroaches. But thy survival matters not. Death comes to all who face the Cherubiim."

Once again, the Cherubiim gathers power into its body, amassing its energy to launch another deadly attack.

While it powers up, Wolfram snaps his head toward Serena. He presses his feet against the ground and launches toward her, startling the Emperor of Soul Whispers.

"Wolfram! Don't you dare!" Yumagi yells.

However, instead of attacking Serena, Wolfram screeches to a halt in front of her and grabs her shoulders.

"Serena! POWER ME UP! I will kill this Cheru-bastard, even if it costs me my life!!"

Momentarily taken aback, Serena gapes at him. "Y-you… you want me to…?"

"Yes!" Wolfram shouts.

"I... I can empower you," Serena says. "But not even Mephisto will be able to-"

"I don't CARE! The Archangels killed my wife!" Wolfram roars. "Do it!"

Serena's heart skips a beat. She flicks her sightless eyes toward the Cherubiim, watching as it rapidly refills the energy of its thousand 'faces', then turns her attention back to Wolfram.

"...I have never empowered a Demon Emperor before. Theoretically, it will elevate your power one full rank. Lords become Barons, Barons become Dukes, and Dukes become Emperors... but if there really is a barrier, you may not touch upon the rank above Emperor. You might lose your life in vain!"

"I will do anything for revenge!" Wolfram screams. "Just DO IT!!"

"Very well! Wolfram, serve demonkind with your mind, body, and soul! We will never forget your sacrifice!"

Not wasting a moment longer, Serena presses her palm against Wolfram's chest. Her power, the ability to augment other demons and change their attributes, flows into Wolfram's soul, uplifting him, restoring every last bit of his vitality and energizing him with a forbidden power no known demon in existence has ever achieved.

Within seconds, Wolfram's might rises through the ranks of the Emperors, putting him above Kristoff, Yumagi, and even Crow.

A feral blood-light emanates from Wolfram's eyes. He lifts his head and cries out in ecstasy as the power flowing through his body reaches a plateau he never thought possible.

"Yes! This is it! MY POWER! It is reaching... the APEX!"

Hell Harbor begins to tremble. The entire planet experiences earthquakes, volcanic eruptions, and spontaneous hurricanes.

The Cherubiim watches from above. It examines Wolfram with more than a hint of curiosity.

"How frightening. So this is what the demons might ultimately become. How good it is, then, that we shall exterminate them on this very day."

Blood drips from Serena's eyes. She pours every last drop into Wolfram's body, wincing as a crystallized barrier starts to engulf his soul.

"It's... it's too heavy! I cannot break through! There really is a barrier limiting demons from breaking past Emperor! It's... impene...trable!"

"No!" Wolfram roars. "It is not! I will break through! I cannot fail! My life for my wife! Hellfire and fury upon our angel oppressors! I will slay the Archangels at all costs!"

Wolfram's body increases in size. He rises to eight feet tall, then ten, twelve...

Serena steps away from him, her energy exhausted. She falls to the ground, gasping for breath.

"I can't... I couldn't... cough, cough..."

Suddenly, an explosion occurs within Wolfram's soul. A shockwave of soul pressure bursts out, causing every spectator to momentarily faint! Only the Cherubiim remains awake to witness his evolution.

When Emperor Crow opens her eyes, she audibly gasps. Her former power, once thought to be the apex of demon might, pales in comparison to Wolfram's.

"It's... like... the Archdemon! Such power! This is the level beyond Emperor? He's like... a Demon... Deity!"

Wolfram towers over the other Emperors. He lifts his head to the heavens and roars, splitting the sky and causing even the Void itself to tremble.

On a distant observation platform, countless alarms blare. Senior Oberservor Kol, the same Changeling who witnessed Jason Hiro's space-flight, frantically activates several comm relay switches.

"This one has a major incident to report! Holy Energy detected on the planet of Hell Harbor! Extreme levels of mana fluctuation! We request immediate assistance! Class One Emergency! Alert the Founders! Assemble battle flotillas!"

The Changeling's warning goes out to all local platforms, causing a major shift in the local fleet presences. Dozens of minor vessels immediately beam into the Hell Harbor system, locking onto the distant fluctuations while their captains and admirals corroborate Observor Kol's testimony.

"Our firepower is insufficient! Archangel readings detected! Source: Unknown! These readings do not correlate with any of the seven known Archangel signatures. Suppression Force required!"

On Hell Harbor's surface, Wolfram expands his claws, whirls around to face the Cherubiim, and laughs uproariously.

"Archangel bastards! I've broken through the barrier! I now possess the might to stand against you! I will crush you and show you why DEMONS reign supreme!"

"And..." He continues, lowering his voice to a growling threat. "...I will make you pay for killing my wife."

The Cherubiim's one-thousand faces glow with power as they detach from its central body.

"Try as thou might, thou lacketh the qualifications."

Part 321: Demon Deity's Wrath

Recommended Listening

Wolfram, no longer a Demon Emperor, but a Demon Deity towering above all other members of his species, stands fifty meters tall. Blackened energy swirls around his body, gathering into his claws and chest to empower every inch of his frame.

His enemy, the Cherubiim, evaluates him with the insight of a fellow predator. As a primordial entity, one that has faced countless fearsome, god-level foes, the Cherubiim does not consider its opponent nearly as threatening as the ancient dragons, nor the Titans, either.

However, the Cherubiim also understands a fundamental truth, one that will greatly affect the outcome of the battle.

United, we are stronger than any living being under the heavens. However, we are no longer the unstoppable primordial of ancient lore. We have lost too much soul energy over the eons. The body we rely on, that of a mere Demon Duke, does not possess the foundation necessary for us to maintain the Cherubiim's maximum output.

We must finish this fight quickly. If we move too slowly, our revenge will fail here, today.

And so, without delay, the Demon Deity of Space Shattering initiates battle against his Cherubiim enemy with a violent roar, one that momentarily rips a hole in Hell Harbor's atmosphere. The rage in his scream causes countless weak-minded entities elsewhere on the planet to black out, with some perishing due to their innate fragility, as well as the wounds they suffered during the Cherubiim's ascension.

Wolfram leaps at the Cherubiim. He conjures the power to shatter space inside his claws, then brings the hammer down, blasting the Cherubiim backward.

With one blow after another, Wolfram goes berserk, relishing and reveling in the power granted to him by Serena's magic. As the first known demon to ever step beyond the limits of Demon Emperor, he obtains a power that would cause any of the ancient Emperors to weep tears of envious blood. He bashes the Archangels, strikes them, and fires orbs of condensed space-shattering mana to knock them backward.

At the same time, the Cherubiim does not take its beating passively. It wields Uriel's powers with uncanny precision, summoning mighty barriers tens of times stronger than any she has ever made, deftly blocking or deflecting Wolfram's savage melee attacks.

Bang! Bang!

Boom! Boom!

Hell Harbor shudders. It tremors, and its continents tremble.

Each blow swung by Wolfram or fired by the Archangel makes the weaker Emperors grab their hearts and wince in pain.

Before, the Archangel's suppression made every one of its attacks ten times deadlier. In contrast, Wolfram's ascension creates an aura of demon-friendly energy, one that empowers his fellow Emperors. Nevertheless, the other Emperors still lack the strength necessary to fully resist the levels of power being slung between their ally and their enemy.

Crow lifts her head. She puffs out her feathered chest and ca-caws at the others, rousing their spirits.

"Come! We cannot allow Wolfram to fight the Archangels alone! We must assist him with all our strength if we are to slay our hated enemies, once and for all!"

As the mightiest Emperor on scene, she quickly takes charge, rallying the others to join the battle.

Of all the Hidden Emperors who showed up on Hell Harbor to attend the meeting, or its after-effects, only Yumagi, Kristoff, Crow, Yardrat, and Serena remain actively in the battle.

Yardrat glances at Serena, noting her severely drained and weakened state.

"Go and fetch the Emperors from the Hell of Isolation. It's time those three helped us out! We will need every bit of firepower to crush these Archangels!"

Serena nods her head. "There is not much else I can do to help. I am sorry. This is the limit of my abilities."

"No need to apologize." Yumagi replies. "With Wolfram here, we will definitely kill the Cherubiim, no matter the cost! The situation would have been unwinnable without you. Now, go!"

He and the other Emperors run toward the battle between gods, while Serena leaves to seek out the assistance of Melody, Guura, and perhaps even their sister, Viola.

Wolfram's fist smashes through one of the Cherubiim's barriers. He finally lands a decisive blow, smiting the Cherubiim's core and launching it backward, where it crashes into the dirt. However, this single punch does not even remotely appear to faze the primordial entity, as it immediately rights itself and regenerates its light-core.

"Thou art mighty, Wolfram. Thy power, formidable. But thy life is a pitiable flame, soon to burn its little remaining fuel. Thou shalt fall before this god."

A phantasmal figure materializes around the Cherubiim. Three arms made of holy energy sprout from its right, and three from its left. Three heads appear on its top, the spitting images of Raphael, Michael, and Uriel. Each head looks in different directions and locks onto different approaching targets as they observe the Emperors rapidly encroaching on their battle.

"Come. We welcome the chance to kill thee here, rather than hunt the lot of thee down like dogs."

The one thousand faces from before fire powerful beams in hundreds of directions. Some of them fly toward Yardrat, while others blast Emperors Crow, Yumagi, or Kristoff.

They split apart and use their own methods to block or dodge.

Yardrat teleports around, narrowly evading the Cherubiim's blasts, even though the mere after-effects burn his skin and make him grit his teeth in pain.

Yumagi imbues his body with shadowy-powers, increasing his speed dramatically and allowing him to slip into tight, dark spaces. The planet's soil protects him from many attacks that would otherwise kill him, granting him extra seconds of life.

Kristoff summons walls of human blood to block the Cherubiim's attacks. Due to its non-demonic nature, it does not suffer the same fatal weakness to holy energy, letting him divert the worst effects away from himself.

As for Emperor Crow, she merely snorts, claps her hands, and hardens her feathers. Several bombardments of holy energy strike her directly, but she relies on Wolfram's aura of empowerment to strengthen herself and regenerate from her most painful injuries.

Once the Cherubiim exhausts its thousand faces, the demons launch their own assault.

Yumagi evokes two Golden aspects, firing planet-crushing fireballs and lightning orbs at the Cherubiim.

Kristoff dives beneath the Cherubiim and rakes it from below, summoning huge blood-claws to tear at its seemingly fragile underside.

Emperor Crow leaps at the Cherubiim's back, attacking from the rear while Wolfram attacks from the front.

As for Yardrat, he offers support from the sides, teleporting attacks through the Cherubiim's defenses whenever it raises holy energy barriers to protect itself.

The Cherubiim endures their multi-pronged onslaught without complaint. Uriel's head flicks around, anticipating attacks with more ease than ever in her life. She conjures dozens of holy barriers, protecting the Cherubiim's core with the same simplicity as if she had done so a thousand times before.

Raphael counters Yardrat's spatial manipulation. He also teleports the Cherubiim's body from side to side, making its figure much harder to land solid hits on.

And Michael plays the role of vanguard. He swings any arms equipped with swords or spears at unthinkable speeds, returning three attacks for every one that Wolfram lands.

Boom! Boom! Boom-boom-boom!

Each landed attack, each deflected blow, and even the near-hits that end up whiffing into the distance, also end up shattering parts of Hell Harbor's surface. Some attacks fly hundreds of miles before crashing into population centers, wiping out hundreds of thousands of lives. Others sail into Hell Harbor's many oceans, killing the creatures which lurk beneath the seas and terrorizing the life-forms which usually keep to themselves.

As the battle progresses, Raphael's head chuckles. "Dost thou thinketh this pitiable display… is enough?"

Michael's head whirls toward one of Wolfram's incoming attacks. The Cherubiim's body blurs as it rushes toward the Demon Deity, startling him when it teleports behind him, spins around, and lands two brutal sword-slashes on his back.

"Aaargh!"

Wolfram cries out in pain, but his hastily thrown punch continues flying at Emperor Crow, caught offguard by the Cherubiim's sudden positional change.

"No!"

Crow can only let cry a single word before Wolfram's fist smashes into her body and sends her hurtling backward. She crashes into the plains and rips up a canyon miles deep, eventually coming to a stop thirty miles away.

Wolfram and the others reorient themselves. Thanks to his empowered defenses, the Deity of Space-Shattering doesn't suffer too badly from the Cherubiim's attacks, but he does grit his teeth as lingering waves of holy magic emanate from the wounds.

"You'll die here, today!" Wolfram roars. "You can't live any longer!"

"Ah, but we can..." Raphael says with a smile. "Already, thy power has plateaued. How much longer cans't thou holdeth on, we wonder?"

Wolfram checks his body internally. To his surprise, he finds that the Cherubiim's observation isn't quite as accurate as it thinks.

Hmm? My power! It's still increasing? I see! Serena's ability will cause me to continuously gain energy until my body has more than it can handle... at which point, I will surely self-immolate! But in the meantime, I'll only become stronger and stronger! If that's the case, then I can still crush the Archangels!

He laughs. "Bahaha! You think I've plateaued, eh?! Let's see if you're right!"

Wolfram summons another burst of energy, causing Raphael's smile to vanish. The Archangel of Wisdom regards him with more caution. He quickly re-evaluates his previous statement to come to the same conclusion as Wolfram.

Perhaps 'tis not Wolfram who will run out of power first, but the three of us.

While Emperor Crow pulls herself together, two more Emperors arrive on the field.

Guura and Melody, not even remotely eager to join in, offer pained sighs when they see the Cherubiim's power up close.

"Aw, man! What a freaking pain!" Guura complains. "We could die, you know?!"

"I'm not afraid of death!" Melody proclaims. "I'm only afraid this won't be one hell of a party!"

Emperor Serena, aided by Emperor Auger, takes her leave after summoning the Hell of Isolation's Emperors. She brings Dorma with her, leaving the cataclysmic battle to those more suited for it while also hoping to obtain Viola's support.

Melody stands atop a nearby mountain, one made of debris from the Archangel's attacks that very hour. She summons a flute into her hands and begins to play a high-tempo song which travels across miles of distance to attack the Cherubiim!

Raphael immediately senses the new source of conflict. A vague sense of disorientation seizes his mind, as well as the other two Archangels. However, to his surprise, he fails to pinpoint Melody's exact location.

A soul attack! Someone is attempting to destabilize us from afar. Leave them to me, my brother and sister. I shalt counter this skullduggery with my methods.

At the same time, Guura stands on a different mountain-top. She begins to dance around, clap her hands, and sing a cheerful song. Just like Melody, her attack moves swiftly but invisibly across Hell Harbor's surface, also targeting the Archangel's souls.

While neither of them individually can cause much harm to the Cherubiim, together, their soul-attacks resonate, causing not only confusion and disorientation, but a deep and distinct sensation of loss in all three Archangel's souls.

As the Cherubiim battles Wolfram and the other demons, faint memories bubble up in its mind.

Raphael recalls the images of his fallen sisters, Muriel and Cassiel. He remembers their sweet and innocent faces, and how they used to avoid the power-games of the other angels.

He recalls the day when they perished at Michael's hands, and how devastated he felt having to give that order, all in order to ensure his brother Samael could not lead an insurrection against the Cherubs and Seraphs.

He remembers the Ancient Era, when so many angels fell to the demons during Valac's many attacks, the War in Heaven, and even the years afterward, before the Lazarus Tower came into being.

He wistfully remembers the final day of angelkind's existence, when the demons and Volgrim launched a combined attack on Heaven, ultimately slaying him, his brothers, and all of his sisters.

Similar visions play out in Uriel's mind, as well as Michael's.

Their combat performance sharply falls. Several attacks they would have easily blocked before land on their core, causing them slight damage.

Not only do feelings of regret and confusion appear in their minds, but feelings of love and melancholy.

Melody's songs play on their heartstrings, making them think of all the pain and loss they've suffered. Nostalgia strikes them, distracting them with thoughts of the 'good old times,' when all the angels lived 'in harmony.'

But Guura's songs play on their current lives, and how little they 'really' want to kill their demonic opponents.

What if they simply gave up and ended the conflict?

What if they apologized for all the horrors they previously wrought, perhaps even realizing that all along, the angels were the villains, and their opponents were merely their unfortunate victims?

As these conflicting thoughts strike them, Raphael's eyes flash with light.

"No. This is a DECEPTION!"

All at once, the Archangel of Wisdom follows the trail of soul-energy latching onto him. He whirls his head around and moves his lips in a mystical pattern after locking onto Melody's position.

"Aaaaahhh!!"

Melody screams as a violent wave of anguish, pain, and sorrow blasts her mind. For a brief moment, she senses the loss of trillions of angels as if they were her own blood. She staggers backward and falls from the mountaintop, twisting, tumbling, and crashing into the plains below.

"Eeyyahh!"

Guura also cries out as different emotions, those of rage, hatred, and overwhelming bloodlust strike her, making her hate her fellow demons as much as if they had personally murdered every person she ever loved. She, too, plummets down, landing in the valley below, just the same as her sister.

Both Emperors from the Hell of Isolation struggle with soul-pain so debilitating that they lose their ability to think rationally. Visions coming from Raphael's own memories, as well as those of his brother and sister, rock their minds and make them feel mental torture worse than any hellish prison could ever unleash.

With their soul suppression lifted, the Cherubiim resumes its former prowess.

Emperor Crow rejoins the battle, but she finds that after having suffered such a brutal attack, she cannot hit as hard as before, nor can she take the hits, either.

Wolfram coils strength into his legs. He leaps skyward, then falls toward the Cherubiim while lifting his palms overhead, exposing his claws.

"This! Is! For my wife!!"

Wolfram rakes the air beneath himself as he falls, sending hundreds of space-rending slashes toward the Archangels.

The Cherubiim summons dozens of holy barriers, but Wolfram's combined attack tears them apart and rips into the Cherubiim's core, making it shudder violently. For a brief moment, the Cherubiim becomes paralyzed with pain, losing its ability to move.

"Chance!" Yardrat shouts.

The other Emperors echo his sentiments.

Yumagi evokes a Platinum Aspect, summoning a fist of enchanted demonstone to crash into the Archangel's exposed body.

Crow charges at the Cherubiim at Mach Two, hardening her body as best as possible before slamming into the Archangels and bouncing off their core, yet still delivering a brutal blow.

Kristoff conjures ten blood-lances, each taller and longer than his entire body. He fires them at the Archangels like javelin missiles, spearing their core until the Cherubiim's latent power dissolves the blood.

Yardrat enhances the trajectory and speed of the launched attacks, using his temporal magic to boost their power, but otherwise doesn't send any attacks of his own. As a support specialist, he doesn't do well when actually fighting.

While all the Emperors launch their attacks, the Cherubiim shudders and rocks, suffering severe damage for the first time since the battle started.

At the same time as every other Emperor lands their attacks, Wolfram falls from above and lifts his fists overhead.

"Archangels! DIE!"

Just before the Demon Deity of Space-Shattering lands his coup d'état, Raphael's eyes glow with divine light.

"No."

Temporal magic bursts into existence around the Cherubiim. All one thousand of its faces complete their recharging cycle, detach from the main body, and spread apart, sending beams of light between each other.

A barrier of super-hardened holy energy wraps around the Cherubiim, covering it from every angle of attack. Wolfram crashes against the barrier like a mosquito on a windshield, comically splaying out his limbs in an awkward stance as his prepared strike ends abruptly.

"Oof!"

The Cherubiim raises a fist and launches it upward, passing through the hardened barrier to blast Wolfram's face and send him spinning backward. The empowered werewolf cries out in pain as he backflips through the air uncontrollably before eventually crashing into Hell Harbor's surface. He faceplants into the dirt and grinds to a halt, falling silent for several long seconds as his vision spins.

"This charade has gone on for long enough." The Cherubiim says, all three heads speaking in unison. "It is time to draw this conflict to a close."

The one thousand tear-stained faces detach from the Cherubiim. Phantasmal bodies sprout from each face, mimicking their appearances from before the Cherubiim reaped their souls.

Angels, Titans, and dragons alike. All of them materialize, forming a massive army of empowered, primordial beings. The blood drains from every Emperor's face when they sense the combined pressure of one thousand battle-hardened monsters from the Primordial Era, each one fully capable of flattening a planet on their own.

"Seven Hells..." Crow gasps. "No... no! How can one being possess this much power?!"

"We can't possibly defeat such a creature!" Kristoff exclaims. "What is this farce? The Cherubiim alone is stronger than any Demon Emperor, but with this army...!!"

Yardrat shudders violently. He loses more than a bit of his backbone, turns tail, and flees.

"I no longer wish to participate in this game! You lot can die, for all I care!"

He yanks open a portal to the Labyrinth and departs the battlefield, leaving the other Emperors behind.

"Yardrat!" Yumagi exclaims. "You coward!"

His curse goes unanswered. Whether Yardrat does or doesn't hear him, he still leaves, giving no more shits about whatever happens to Hell Harbor.

"That yellow-bellied spawn of a broodmother!" Crow yells. "Auger's number two, indeed! What a worthless pile of shit!"

The Cherubiim watches Yardrat's departure with a sense of amusement.

"That foolish brat." The Cherubiim muses out loud. "Does he not realize? He has just revealed the temporal coordinates of his homeworld to us. After we slay the demons here, we will pursue him to eliminate his lair. There is no escape. Our wrath... is inevitable!"

The Cherubiim extends its six arms outward, as if embracing the beauty of creation. At its command, an army of Angels, Titans, and dragons race in all directions to ravage the lands. Some pounce at the nearby Emperors, while others fly toward the distant demon colonies, raining holy light and divine bombardments on those unfortunate enough to end up in their path.

Every Emperor turns tail and flees. No longer can their pathetic and measly levels of strength avail them. They use all of their methods to evade the terrifying long-dead abominations biting at their heels, but compared to the powers of revived Primordial entities, not a single one of their attributes can match up.

Crow puts on a valiant fight. She alone possess the strength to trade blows with one or two of the Cherubiim's phantasmal slaves, but none of the other Emperors even come close. She flies away at her fastest speed, occasionally pausing to claw or bat away the attacks that come worryingly close.

Meanwhile, Wolfram pulls himself back together just in time to see a huge dragon descend upon him. More than ten times his size, this ancient monster roars, its volume an ear-splitting level that flattens the land where he stands. He leaps at the creature and claws at its throat, but the dragon smoothly slides around his attack like a slippery eel, slithers behind him, and bashes his back with its tail.

Thump!

The dragon slams Wolfram against the soil, knocking the wind out of him. To his horror, he finds that its physical strength greatly exceeds the Cherubiim's, making the Cherubiim appear as weak as a mouse by comparison.

Indeed, as he fights for his life against this one, singular foe, the Cherubiim draws near, eying him with a look of pity.

"How unfortunate. The so-called 'Demon Deity' is naught but a speck of dust before the Mother of all Dragons. Jörmungandr was once our greatest foe, but we devoured her soul and turned her into our puppet. With her power, we eventually brought an end to not only the Dragon Wars, but the Titan Wars, as well. Compared to this singular Mother, thou art… wholly lacking."

Wolfram desperately fights back. Again and again, Jörmungandr bashes him from side to side like a kitten playing with a ball of yarn. Wolfram grows more exhausted as his life force finally reaches his limit.

"Hah… haha… fine! You want to kill this deity?! Then with my last breath, I'll condemn you and ALL your minions to the River Styx!"

Wolfram gathers every last bit of power he has left into his chest. He charges up a mana bomb directly inside himself, one that will result in an explosion one hundred times worse than any nuclear weapon ever launched in human history. So formidable is this last burst of power, that it even makes Raphael's head narrow his eyes.

"How frightening, but thou shalt fail to release this deadly blast. Thou art already too late."

Just as Wolfram starts the final incantation to self-destruct his body, the Cherubiim rushes toward him and lunges the tips of its fingers at the back of his head.

SKRIIIIK!

Raphael's fingers pass through Wolfram's body and grab directly onto his soul. In Wolfram's last moments alive, all he sees is a giant mouth converging on his vision before swallowing him whole.

The Cherubiim tears out the Demon Deity's soul and consumes it, instantly obtaining a massive burst of magical power. Wolfram's last hurrah, his self-destruction that may have wounded or even killed the Cherubiim, instead revitalizes it with a massive burst of new power, prolonging its existence and allowing it to reach new heights.

Wolfram's body crumbles to dust as it loses the last bit of energy that once supported it. It falls to the dirt and turns to rotted bones before ultimately dissolving entirely, leaving nothing behind for even Mephisto to steal.

"For this meager amount of mana to empower us so, we have truly fallen off in strength over the eons..." Raphael muses. "But in the end, a Primordial Entity is still-"

From the skies above, a storm of heavy weaponry rains upon Hell Harbor's surface, interrupting Raphael's speech.

Thousands of missiles, railgun shots, heavy artillery, plasma ordinance, and thunderous bombs fall from a fleet of Volgrim warships, smashing into the Cherubiim, Jörmungandr, and all its other spectral summons.

Many of them perish, their ghostly bodies evaporating into nothingness.

Others suffer major and minor wounds before going on the defensive.

As for the Cherubiim and its mightiest summon, they merely gaze skyward while conjuring godlike barriers of holy energy to defend themselves.

Not one drop of ordinance even so much as scratches them. Thousands of explosions shatter Hell Harbor's delicate ecological balance, rendering much of its surface inhospitable to life for the next thousand years, but none of these attacks cause any harm to the Cherubiim or its loyal pet.

The three Archangels gaze at their unexpected attackers, before slightly cocking their heads.

"Oh...? Our second most hated enemies, here to serve themselves up on a platter. It seems the Volgrim are not aware of the horrors they are about to experience. Let us... educate them."

A moment later, the Cherubiim launches skyward, rocketing toward the Void. Jörmungandr follows in their wake.

The Volgrim armada, a fleet of eight thousand elite warships, hangs above, while millions of Psions watch as the enemy approaches.

[This is Confessor Vulpanix speaking,] The lead Psion telepathically states, her cold eyes following a massive energy signature as it flies straight at her ship. [Kill the Archangel. At all costs.]

Part 322: Confessor's Plight

The Cherubiim rockets from Hell Harbor's atmosphere into space, flanked by Jörmungandr and hundreds of its other summons. It leaves behind a few dozen primordial lifeforms to harass and ultimately kill the Demon Emperors, but compared to the massive Volgrim armada, the demons no longer pose the Archangels much threat.

Despite thousands of kilometers separating the Volgrim fleet from Hell Harbor's atmosphere, the Cherubiim advances upon them at an alarming speed. Within seconds, its hundreds of summons crash into the fleet, ripping their mighty ships to fragments. Of the eight thousand vessels present, more than four hundred come under immediate attack, unable to back off compared to the Cherubiim's summons' superior acceleration and maneuverability.

Primordial Angels, Titans, and Dragons treat the Volgrim ships like Christmas presents, tearing them open to expose their insides to the vacuum of the Void. The Psions on board the nearest vessels fight back, ignoring the dangers of space thanks to their durable bodies deliberately designed and modified to unleash hell in even the deadliest environments. However, their fellow Technopath and Changeling Volgrim don't possess the same physical attributes. With almost none of them adapted to the harshness of space, they perish to suffocation at alarming speeds, assuming the primordial beings assaulting their ships don't kill them first.

The Cherubiim does not engage directly in the slaughter, but instead continuously conjures shields of divine energy to protect its summons and itself from the Volgrim's counter-fire. The Technopaths in charge of the fleet unload their ordinance as quickly as possible, shelling the phantasmal monsters battering their forward-vessels with reckless abandon.

"Gunners! Aim for the Titan-Class lifeform attacking our portside nacelle! Missiles, lock onto the Winged-Monster raking our engines! Shields, rotate frequencies!"

"Watch your crossfire! Send out the Psions!"

"We may die here, but we will still honor the Founders!"

Twenty ships explode into flames within the first thirty seconds of combat. So violent is the Cherubiim's initial attack that many Changeling Observers have to scramble to rectify the data.

"Confusion! Our scans only indicated the presence of a single Archangel lifeform! Where did these hundreds of others come from?"

"Unclear. Transmit additional data back to Volgarius. Request additional assistance from the Founders."

"Response negative. The Founders have already given this fleet seven percent of the Volgrim Empire's elites. We cannot afford to divert additional combat vessels away from Plaguetouched territories! We must defeat the Archangel and its supporting lifeforms on our own."

As the battle quickly heats up, the Volgrim attempt to encircle and hem in the Cherubiim's allies, but Jörmungandr alone proves to be a terrifying foe far beyond their initial estimates. The Mother of all Dragons opens her mouth to scream soundlessly into the void, firing off an attack that strikes the souls of every Volgrim present.

The Psions, possessing no souls, barely notice a tingle in the air around themselves. However, the Technopaths and Changelings are not so fortunate. Countless low-ranking crew perish instantly as Jörmungandr's attack obliterates their souls and leaves them laying on the floor as lifeless husks.

While the weakest Volgrim bodies begin to cool, the slightly stronger-willed Volgrim barely survive, but experience agony as their souls suffer terrible tearing and leaking of their soul energy. Thousands of crew fall comatose, never to wake again. Even the crew who remain standing still experience nausea, disorientation, and imbalance in their movements. The Technopath gunners, elites though they be, miss many shots they ordinarily wouldn't, simply because their vision wavers too much for their augments to compensate.

Aboard the Volgrim flagship, the VLL Planet-Crusher, a ship spanning five kilometers in length, one and a half kilometers tall, and three kilometers wide, Confessor Vulpanix immediately notices the drop in her fellow Volgrim's fighting capabilities. Several deckhands collapse to the floor around her, while even the strongest-willed Technopaths and Changelings slump forward in their chairs and breathe raggedly, having experienced a soul-attack the likes of which no Volgrim has endured since the Energy Wars.

[This is the Confessor speaking!] Vulpanix mentally transmits in a wide-area telepathic message to her fellow Psions. [The Archangel has attacked the souls of our brethren! Do not allow these inferior mud-dwellers to sully the name of our great Founders! Exit your ships, enter the void, and slaughter them all! Kill every last Archangel and any of their allies you see!]

[Yes, Confessor!]

[For the glory of the Founders!]

Rather than exiting through their ships' airlocks, the thousands of Psions present teleport directly into the void, some using the power of Spatial Psionics, while other use Temporal Psionics. Any Psion lacking these critical abilities hitch rides with their more capable comrades, eventually forming a wall of deceptively tiny specks compared to the massive primordial lifeforms ravaging the fleet.

Confessor Vulpanix leads the charge. She rips a gash in the Void and steps through it, arriving mere meters to the left of the roaring Jörmungandr.

The dragon senses her presence. It turns toward her, only for an invisible weapon weighing hundreds of tons to slam into its head, knocking it aside. Jörmungandr reels from the hit for only a moment before shaking its head and snapping at the newfound threat.

[You are nothing before the might of this Confessor.] Vulpanix sneers.

Her six insect-like eyes lock onto the dragon as it spews a gout of solar flame at her, the heat of which would easily melt a starship to slag.

However, Vulpanix shimmers out of reality, vanishing before the terrifying attack can strike her. She reappears above Jörmungandr's head with her palm aimed down, conjures a micro-singularity by condensing the space below herself into a black hole, and fires it downwards.

THUMP!

The singularity tears through Jörmungandr's head, exploding the dragon's spectral form into particles of light. Satisfied at her conquest, Vulpanix turns to look at the Cherubiim, only to flinch when the headless dragon pounces at her from below and rakes its claws toward her back.

[An undying monster?] Vulpanix wonders.

Jörmungandr's claws impact a barrier surrounding Vulpanix's body. Were they on a world with an atmosphere, the shockwave from that hit would have leveled skyscrapers and flattened mountains, but in space, no noticeable aftereffects occur, keeping the collateral damage to a minimum.

Vulpanix flickers in and out of reality once more, tearing apart the void with the same ease one might rip a wet piece of paper in half. Her body flickers several times as she appears to copy herself, appearing in five separate positions around Jörmungandr at once.

As a master of not only Temporal Manipulation, but Spatial Manipulation as well, the Confessor has evolved her abilities over tens of millennia while battling Volgrimkind's enemies. She breaks down reality itself, temporarily breaking once-thought-immutable laws of physics to create momentary paradoxes.

Each of Vulpanix's copies summons different attacks, all empowered through her innate psionic energy. One hurls an explosive spear of lightning at the headless dragon, while another freezes the space around Jörmungandr, preventing her from moving. Another redirects nearby ordinance fired by her capital ship, shells and missiles that missed their initial targets, to fly at the dragon.

All together, the dragon becomes frozen for five long seconds, unable to protect itself. These deadly planet-busting psionic attacks crash against the Mother of all Dragons, blowing apart even more of her body and turning her into a floating blob of phantasmal energy.

Seconds later, the paradoxes Vulpanix summoned subvert themselves, returning her to reality as just one version of herself.

The shattered and broken body of Jörmungandr wriggles weirdly, making Vulpanix pause for a few seconds to evaluate its threat level. Eventually, it fully breaks apart, leaving the hovering face of a dragon mask in the air, one which rapidly zips away and flies back to the Cherubiim several kilometers in the distance.

The Confessor evaluates the battle she just fought, sizing up the abilities of her enemies, paying careful attention to how badly they are destroying her fleet.

This Archangel is not like the ones we faced before. Its appearance is wildly different. Might it be a previously hidden one, or perhaps a mutated variant? Its power surely eclipses the strength of the four known Archangels, Raphael, Gabriel, Camael, and Uzziel. As for the two historical Archangels, Uriel and Michael, we possess little information on their battle capabilities; only hearsay given to us by the demons.

Despite Vulpanix's supreme authority among the attacking forces, she has never fought the Archangels, as she was not alive during the Energy Wars. Her experiences come only from the post-collapse of humanity, when she stepped out of her mutation chamber a thousand years after the wars ended. Every bit of experience she possesses comes from historical archives and detailed documents, some of which she only had time to skim before arriving at Hell Harbor.

This lack of insight makes her pause as she carefully considers whether or not she should call for backup from Volgarius.

No! I alone am enough! I must prove myself if I hope to obtain a worthy new title! How will anyone regard my role as Confessor with respect if I immediately demand backup from the High Psions? They have Plaguetouched worlds to contain! I will destroy the Archangel lifeform myself and earn the title of Divinator!

She roars back into action, noting the mask's trajectory as it attaches to the Archangel and begins to slowly glow with power.

[Archangel! Your opponent is me! I will crush you and this insurrection, here and now!]

Vulpanix sends out a taunting mental barb at her opponent, transmitting a series of images of her past glory. Scenes of carnage, including her single-handed suppression of a plaguetouched world, give her a sense of pride while hopefully demoralizing the Archangel she intends to slay.

However, unknown to Vulpanix, when Raphael, Michael, and Uriel all receive her mental transmission, their reaction differs greatly from her expectations. The images momentarily startle Raphael as he quickly examines the meaning behind their contents.

A Plague? What is this lifeform the Volgrim art so hellbent on annihilating? It appears to be something of a ravaging attacker from a distant galaxy. Verily, I hath never seen anything like it in all my years.

Unwittingly, Vulpanix gives her enemies a crucial piece of intel they didn't have before. Rather than demoralizing them, the information only serves to increase their curiosity, particularly Raphael's.

The Cherubiim and Confessor meet each other in battle. Despite towering over Vulpanix and standing more than fifty times her height, the Cherubiim does not act with outright impunity, as Raphael knows well the power even a single high-ranking Psion can unleash.

Beware, brother and sister. We do not know what branches of psionics this Psion specializes in, but the fact she dares to challenge us directly, even after ripping apart our mightiest summon, indicates she will not be a simple foe. Continue spreading out our summons to attack her fleet; we shall kill her ourselves, god-willing.

The Archangel fires a dozen deadly blasts of holy energy at Vulpanix, but her body flickers from side to side, evading the attacks as she steps in and out of reality. By adjusting the flow of causality, she affects her dimensional position with extreme accuracy, making her movements faster than teleportation or even the concept of 'lightspeed' itself.

Uriel summons more than one hundred swords made from holy energy. She launches them at Vulpanix, slashing her from every direction. However, Vulpanix activates a temporal barrier around herself, causing the weapons to slow down to just 5% of their original speed when they draw within a few meters of the Confessor's body.

With the Archangel's attacks momentarily slowed to a snail's pace, Vulpanix easily dodges them, levitating through the Void with the ease of a fish in water. She slips through small gaps in the weapons' flight trajectories, steps through tears in space, and draws within striking distance of the Cherubiim!

All at once, the oh-so-close image of the Cherubiim distorts, startling Vulpanix. She finds herself submerged in an illusory realm, one that mirrors her earlier act of duplication by causing the Cherubiim to distort and separate into a dozen separate beings.

[I know not thy identity,] Raphael says, transmitting his voice telepathically to his opponent. [But coming to this battleground was a foolish decision, and the last mistake thou shalt ever make.]

From out of nowhere, something unfathomably heavy crashes into Vulpanix's back, making her shudder in pain and flinging her off-course. She spins and falls through space, only for the Cherubiim's fist to magically materialize directly in her path.

THUMP!!

The Cherubiim socks the Confessor, hard. The amalgamated Archangels blast her backward, instantly reversing her momentum and sending her rocketing back toward her fleet. Just as the Cherubiim prepares for a third strike, this time consisting of two spears wielded by Uriel and two swords wielded by Michael, Vulpanix spreads out her arms and halts her movement. She vanishes from sight, stepping through a fold in space to arrive right beside the Cherubiim's core.

BOOM!!

A pulse of raw telekinetic energy smashes into the Cherubiim, causing all of its constructs to visibly flicker and weaken for a moment before they regain their spirits and continue attacking.

This slight deviation does not escape Vulpanix's notice.

The Archangel appears to have its life directly linked with the other creatures attacking my fleet. If I destroy its main body, the others will collapse.

Her cold, predatory gaze fixates on the Cherubiim's core. She rears back to attack again, but the Cherubiim vanishes, melting back into its illusions once more.

At the same time, Jörmungandr's face detaches from the Cherubiim's main body, fully recharged. She regrows her main body and roars, sending another soul-crushing shockwave outward to assault the Volgim fleet. Several alarms beep in Vulpanix's integrated transmitters, but she ignores them, knowing her fleet is taking a beating.

Minutes pass.

Vulpanix battles with Jörmungandr and the Cherubiim both. At one point, a squadron of other Psions show up, delivering terrible news.

[Confessor! Half the fleet has fallen! Our analysts have determined that only by killing the Archangel's main body will we be able to slay its sub-units!]

[I have comprehended the same facts.] Vulpanix cooly replies. [Assist me! Perform an Energy Transference Formation! I will finish the Archangel myself!]

[Yes, Confessor!]

The five Psion disciples, Vulpanix's personal entourage, work together to summon a massive empowered barrier around themselves. While their master battles Jörmungandr, they manipulate their energy into a psionic 'totem' of sorts, one shaped in Vulpanix's image.

[Confessor! The formation is complete!]

Vulpanix flicks her gaze toward the shimmering psionic image of herself, hidden within her fellow Psions' impenetrable shield.

[Excellent work! Now, I shall-]

Before Vulpanix can finish her statement, a cold dread crawls up her back. She only gets an instant to sense a shift in the space around her before the Cherubiim rushes toward her five disciples.

[No!]

Confessor Vulpanix steps through space in an attempt to intercept the Cherubiim, thinking it must intend to attack her disciples. Instead, the Cherubiim changes its body's composition, allowing it to summon a massive ethereal arm made of pure soul energy. It grabs at the barrier enveloping her students, but instead of attacking the barrier, the Cherubiim's limb phases right through!

Raphael, ever the clever Archangel, detects the massive amount of psionic energy Vulpanix's disciples have created and greedily grins.

The youth are truly too foolish!

Vulpanix's disciples launch frenzied attacks on the soul-arm reaching into their cage, but their psionic power passes through it harmlessly. Without a moment's hesitation, Raphael snatches the concentrated energy and absorbs it directly into his soul, causing a massive amount of energy to well up within himself.

Comparable to devouring Wolfram's soul, the amassed psionic energy offers the Cherubiim a huge burst of power right when the battle has hit its most critical stage. Before Vulpanix can stop him, Raphael and his siblings devour the energy and ascend to a new level of power, outputting even greater soul pressure than before!

[Thieving mud-dwellers!] Vulpanix roars. [That energy was MINE!]

Enraged like never before, she launches a brutal series of psionic bombardments on the Cherubiim, but Uriel's barriers easily block and defect the attacks, becoming even more resilient than ever.

Michael's sword dances around like lightning, knocking aside massive fireballs, bolts of psionic lightning, and even another micro-singularity.

All her attacks fail to cause the Cherubiim any discomfort. Despite being a high-ranking Psion, she is not an Elder, she is not the Executor, and neither is she the Second Founder.

Compared to the legendary Psion warriors of yore, those who shattered the heavens and split the galaxy, Vulpanix's power pales when placed alongside the Cherubiim's.

She fights relentlessly, joining forces with her students. Together, the six of them output tremendous psionic firepower against the Cherubiim and its summons, but as the Volgrim fleet falls to pieces, so too do Confessor Vulpanix's chances of defeating her adversary.

Weariness and exhaustion beat her back. The more psionic energy she outputs, the lower her reserves fall, until she can no longer fight at a level that threatens the Cherubiim.

[Gah!! Pull back! Retreat!] Vulpanix roars. [Save what we can of the fleet! We never should have come here!]

The Cherubiim prepares to land a fatal blow, but Vulpanix warps herself and her students away just in the nick of time. She arrives at the rear of the fleet, where the horde of primordial lifeforms have nearly overrun her capitol ship. Despite lacking the power to kill Jörmungandr a second time, or the Cherubiim, she still manages to tear apart the weaker Angels, Titans, and Dragons threatening her flagship.

[Retreat!] Vulpanix repeats to the nearby ships. [Escape while we still have ships worth saving! Maximum warp!]

Minutes later, less than five hundred functioning ships manage to turn around and warp out of the system, while the rest can only cry out and wail at their awful luck. The Cherubiim's forces continue ravaging the remaining ships until they've been completely dismantled, left as nothing more than giant scraps of metal to rain down upon Hell Harbor's surface.

Raphael sweeps his gaze around the battlefield.

Excellent work. We have crushed the Volgrim armada. Now, let us return to finish off the last demon stragglers.

He and his forces drop back down to Hell Harbor's surface, sending a fresh burst of fear through the struggling Demon Emperors' souls.

Without Wolfram, the demons find themselves completely suppressed by fewer than two dozen of the Cherubiim's primordial constructs. Dukes from the Hidden Hells show up to try and reinforce their Emperors, but even with thirty fresh fighters, they can only manage to hide inside a force-field made of human blood.

Yumagi, Kristoff, and Crow stand together with twenty Dukes from each of their Hells. Several Angels, Titans, and Dragons whale on the blood-barrier protecting them, while Kristoff and several vampires from his Hell holds their arms overhead, pouring as much power into it as they can.

When they sense the return of the Cherubiim and the departure of the Volgrim, a sense of total despair swallows the demons. They finally realize that their day of reckoning has come.

Yumagi grits his teeth. "I hate to say it, but we don't have a chance! I can try to evoke my last two remaining Platinum Aspects, but if a High Psion cannot defeat the Cherubiim, I doubt my cards will succeed either!"

Crow suffers from multiple debilitating wounds. No longer does she possess a left arm, having had it ripped off by a dragon before Kristoff managed to rescue her.

"I cannot believe the angels possessed such power, yet never used it. How can we be so unfortunate? I assumed they were little more than paper tigers, but they were actually dragons in sheep's clothing!"

As the Cherubiim descends, a twisted grin spreads across Michael's face.

"Ah... now those are the sorts of expressions I enjoy seeing on bloodskin faces. Thy despair finally gives me a faint bit of comfort in my undead form. After we smite the last few remaining Demon Emperors, the rest of thy people shalt fall like wheat to the chaff. None can stop the Cherubiim."

At that moment, the ground explodes like a bomb! Thousands of tons of dirt and rocks shoot into the upper atmosphere, some of the debris even bouncing off the Cherubiim's reinforced body.

The three Archangels turn their gaze toward the newcomers, only to see Bael, Fae, and a few other demons crawling out of a hole in the ground. All of them freeze in place and gaze at the Cherubiim like deer caught in the headlights.

Bael's jaw drops visibly. "What the heck?! That's the biggest chicken I've ever seen!"

"Is that the Archangels?!" Fae asks. "Spawn of a Broodmother! What the fuck happened while we were out? Did they eat a bunch of steroids?!"

Despite the unexpected appearance of two Demon Emperors, the Archangels appear less than impressed. Raphael gazes condescendingly at Fae, but pauses for a moment to examine Bael warily.

"Emperor Ose. It seems thou hath survived thy death and become an undead puppet..." Raphael says. "Of all the demons here, thou art the one that might be able to cause us some slight harm. Sadly, thou art outnumbered in every sense of the word. Thou art truly... inferior."

Bael stares vacantly at the Cherubiim for a moment before blinking his eyes.

"...Huh? Wait, me? No, no, no, pal. You've got it all wrong. I'm not-"

"Thou art not going to live a moment longer," Raphael interrupts, before aiming his palm at Bael and charging a massive blast of holy energy. "Tis best if we smite thee here before thou can becometh a thorn in our side."

"No, no, no smiting, please! My heart can't take it!" Bael yelps. "C-can't we just talk this out, bub? AW SHIT!"

His words don't make Raphael pause for even a moment. The Archangel of Wisdom releases his charged blast, firing a deadly stream of holy energy toward Bael that will surely vaporize him and the other Demons around him.

"Watch out!" Emperor Fae yells. She summons bone armor onto her body, then coils strength into her legs in order to jump into the path of the oncoming beam, hopefully saving the lives of the other demons.

Before Fae can intercept the attack, Hell Harbor's continent rumbles.

A massive blackened hand bursts out of the dirt directly in the path of the Archangel's attack!

Raphael's holy energy crashes against the hand and explodes, yet the monstrous limb barely takes any damage at all.

The Cherubiim stares at the unexpected defense in surprise.

What new manner of devilry is this? The Archangels wonder.

Moments later, a second hand bursts out of the ground, followed by a head. A gigantic undead Brute, more than three hundred meters tall, emerges from the planet's depths and roars at the top of its lungs, drawing the attention of everyone present.

At the same time, several undead Demon Emperors bubble up from the ground, including Emperor Fenrir, Emperor Gorn, and Emperor Zamiel.

Emperor Fenrir's eyes glow with a dull light. After her original soul was obliterated by Raphael's soul-crushing attack, her body remained without a host. Now, Emperor Lupus, lacking a body of her own, slips inside to try and clumsily take control of Fenrir's power. While somewhat incompatible with Fenrir's original abilities, Lupus still possesses the soul and body foundation of a true Emperor, making her the ideal 'fit.'

Finally, a low, cackling laughter spreads throughout the air.

"HEH... HEH... HEH... HEH!"

Mephisto emerges from the planet's underbelly. He levitates into the sky, shocking the other Emperors with his newly reinforced mana signature.

"That bastard..." Fae hisses. "While we were fighting for our lives, Mephisto stole souls from the River Styx! He became an Emperor without our permission!"

Bael breathes a sigh of relief. "Eh, whatever! At least we've got a chance, now."

Mephisto, now the Emperor of Legions, cackles cruelly while facing the Cherubiim.

"What luck I have for you to deliver me sssuch fine sssoulsss and bodiesss to empower myssself! I thought my luck had run out, but it ssseemsss I have reaped quite the bounty today! Kekeke!!"

Kristoff's eyes fixate on his wife's body. He immediately realizes the soul possessing it is not hers, making his heart ache.

"Mephisto! You body-stealing thief!"

The Emperor of Legions turns to look at Kristoff, laughing all the while. "Kekeke! I have come to sssave you! Don't everyone thank me at onccce! Now, behold the power of a necromancccer Emperor! Not sssince Valac'sss era hasss a mighty demon like myssself roamed the cosssmosss!"

Unlike the Brutes Mephisto made when he was a Duke, his newest champion possesses truly extraordinary defenses, high resistance to holy energy, and a body capable of unleashing death upon those unlucky enough to face it. The Brute roars at the Cherubiim, taunting them and daring them to attack.

"Hmph. A few more Emperors, thou sayeth? Verily, we art quaking in our boots. Come, then, Mephisto. Deliver thyself to us on a platter. We shalt offer thee one chance to save thyself. But know this; thou cannot defeat the Cherubiim. Thou art far from worthy."

Mephisto's cackling ceases as a smoldering fury erupts in his eyes.

"Oh? You claim that we lack the qualificationsss?! We ssshall sssee about that, Archangelsss! Brute, ATTACK!"

Part 323: Emperor Mephisto

With Mephisto's arrival, demonkind's inevitable defeat suddenly reverses, sparking a glimmer of hope in the eyes of every Emperor present. Crow, having lost one of her arms, Yumagi, having long since stopped treating the battle as a game, and Kristoff, having reluctantly accepted his imminent death, all stare in shock at the newcomers.

Mephisto's gigantic Brute roars at the Cherubiim before charging toward it with stiff, jerky motions. As an amalgamation of thousands of lesser human, demon, and monster bodies and souls, the mashed-together undead goliath lacks any sort of concentrated brain matter, but it makes up for the deficit with a body sturdy enough to even withstand the Cherubiim's holy magic.

Michael's head gazes at the incoming attacker with a hint of scorn. "How pathetic. One last hurrah for the bloodskins. I will end this."

All six of the Cherubiim's arms lift into the air and summon building-sized greatswords in their palms. The Cherubiim and its primordial monsters charge into the incoming Brute and engage it in yet another planet-shattering battle, one that sends frightening shockwaves in all directions, constantly battering the Hidden Emperors as they try to withstand the storm.

Not content to merely sit back and watch, Fae joins the fray, flying into the sky to hurl explosive mana-bombs at any primordial summon that gets in her way. At the same time, Mephisto's revived Emperor minions follow along to his tune, running along the ground or flying into the air to assist the Brute as it dull-headedly hammers against the Archangel's defenses.

"Kekeke!" Mephisto cackles. "Behold! The rissse of the next great Necromancer! The future Firssst Emperor of the Ssseven Hellsss!"

Mephisto does not join in on the battle. He hangs back, which only makes sense, given his poor fighting abilities. Unlike the ancient Emperor, Valac, who possessed a soul-reaping scythe and a surprisingly powerful body, Mephisto's talents lay in the finer aspects of the necromantic arts.

Michael's six swords spin like buzzsaws, whirling around the Cherubiim's body at five times the speed of sound. Unlike a physical body, with its limited joint movements, the Cherubiim's 'core' and its summoned limbs act as almost disconnected weapons, able to move freely around the Cherubiim's 'main body' as they please. Without the tendons, bones, and other intricacies of a fleshly body to slow him down, Michael's blindingly fast attacking and reaction speed completely dwarfs that of his opponents.

The Brute tanks all of Michael's attacks directly, making no movement to avoid them. Despite the incredible sharpness of Michael's phantasmal blades, his swords don't manage to cut deeply into Mephisto's summon's flesh, but instead glance off its chest, neck, and head, sometimes chipping away boulder-sized flakes of hardened skin.

This beast is quite sturdy... Raphael comments internally, as he keeps an eye on the battlefield, allowing Michael to focus on the Brute. While Michael controls the Cherubiim's six limbs, his brother and sister each take direct control of half their summoned monsters, sending them to attack and blast back the demons wherever possible.

Before long, Mephisto's triumphant appearance loses some of its spark. He stops laughing to gaze coldly at the scenes taking place.

"Kss... the Cherubiim cannot ssslay my Brute, but neither can my Brute land a killing blow... how troublesssome..."

Emperor Yumagi takes to the air. Having spent a few minutes catching his breath, he heals his worst injuries and hovers into the sky while withdrawing a few cards from the Spiritual Deck attached to his soul.

"I apologize, everyone. I did not take this battle seriously, before. Now, we have paid a heavy price. We will have to work together to launch one last-ditch attack on the Cherubiim if we hope to survive this day with our lives intact."

Crow nods. She breathes heavily while sending a mental transmission back to the demons on her homeworld.

"...I will begin a Ritual of Healing. It will take me a few minutes, but I should be able to regrow my arm and patch up some of my worst wounds. Until I take a trip to the Blood Pits, I'll be hurting quite badly for the foreseeable future. Ca-caw!"

Kristoff groans. "I've broken a few bones. My powers can't heal them... only skin and organ-injuries. I've probably lost half of my strength... but I will try to help."

He shoots a nasty glance at Mephisto.

"But do not think for a moment that I am doing this for you, body-stealer. If we survive today, you will pay for stealing my wife away from me!"

Mephisto shoots a casual, utterly dismissive glance at Kristoff. Having reached the rank of Emperor, his arrogance reaches new heights, making him no longer fear the mightiest Demon Emperors as he previously did.

"Kukuku... I am putting her body to good ussse, Krissstoff. Perhapsss you ssshould thank me for sssaving you."

Kristoff doesn't reply. He looks away from Mephisto, mostly to cool his boiling blood pressure.

...Fenrir, dearest. We had so many plans together. We were going to rule the Seven Hells, with me as your number one. What can I do, now? I detest politics. You, Lupus, and Wolfram have all fallen. I am the Hell of Blood's last living Emperor...

As Kristoff and Crow take time to patch themselves up, the Cherubiim continues its brutal onslaught. Michael's swords prove less and less effective against the Brute, to the point where Raphael makes a startling observation.

Brother, beware! This undead behemoth is not so simple! Nay, 'tis learning to adapt to thy attacks. Already, its skin has grown substantially more resilient to slicing and slashing attacks. Switch thy swords out for hammers!

Michael grimaces. His fighting style, heavily reliant on rapid attacks with light weaponry, does not allow him to nearly as effectively wield such clumsy and oafish weapons as clubs and hammers.

If my swords art not up to the task, then sister, thou shoulds't taketh over. Thou art a generalist when it comes to weaponry. In the way of the blade, thy skills cannot match up to mine, but with other weapons, thou art far and away my superior.

Uriel nods. So be it.

While the demons manage to work together to kill off a few dozen of the Cherubiim's unstoppable army, they fail to notice the rapid switching of its six swords to two spiked clubs, two pointed hammers, and two warhammers.

The instant Uriel takes over the Cherubiim's main body, she drastically changes up its fighting style, using Holy Barriers to cut off the Brute's movements, tripping it with awkwardly placed barriers by its feet, and hampering its movements so she can land clean blows.

The Brute swings its fists and roars, but Uriel bats them aside and drives her weapons into its head and chest, fracturing its bones and continuously shaking the planet.

During a brief reprieve after knocking the Brute backward, Uriel gathers her strength into the Cherubiim's arms. Her eyes glow with power as she raises all six of her weapons overhead, aiming to smash its skull into bloody pulp.

At that moment, a Demon Emperor's voice rings out.

"Sneaky Sea Salamander, Evoke!"

Emperor Yumagi evokes one of his Golden Aspects. A beam of light rockets out of the card held in his hand, expands in size, and envelops the Brute. Just as Uriel swings her weapons at its head, the Brute teleports from its location and arrives directly behind her.

Uriel's attack misses the mark and instead crashes into the continent, sending earthquakes deep into the crust, where they will become tsunamis on Hell Harbor's opposite side later that day.

At the same time, the Brute spins around and swings its fists at the Cherubiim's exposed flank.

Boom! BOOM!

Two powerful strikes finally land on an unprotected area, causing all three Archangels to cry out in pain. Their primordial phantasms flicker and fall silent for a few seconds before resuming their previous actions.

By the time the Brute has launched its second attack, Uriel has already caught up to its new position and resumed her stalwart defense.

She shoots a hateful glance at Emperor Yumagi.

"BLOODSKIN BASTARD."

Yumagi shudders as the bone-drenching coldness of the Cherubiim's full attention focuses on him. Uriel takes command of Jörmungandr and fifty other Primordial beasts. She sends them rocketing toward Yumagi, hemming him in from all directions.

For the first time since Mephisto's arrival, the Glyphmancer finds himself in dire straits. He hurriedly evokes two Silver Aspects and one Bronze, but the dragons and Titans blast him with terrifying attacks far beyond his level of a mere Demon Emperor.

"Damn! Someone help me!" Yumagi calls out. "These phantoms-!"

Before he can finish his sentence, a blast of holy energy fires at his back, released from one of the Cherubiim's palms.

Yumagi turns to look at it, but after evoking a card just seconds earlier, he has no defensive options left.

"Oh."

BOOM!!

The holy energy irradiates his entire body, frying him at the molecular level. Several of Yumagi's hidden trap cards start to activate, only for all of them to shatter and burst into pieces, offering him no protection due to the overwhelming gap between him and his opponent's power.

Moments later, the Glyphmancer lets out only one last silent scream before his body evaporates, leaving behind nothing but ash scattered in the wind.

The other Emperors gasp in horror. Even Fae, who had no love for Yumagi, shudders when she sees the formidable Demon Emperor, someone who previously toyed with the three Archangels in their base forms, shatter into particles of cosmic dust.

Mephisto growls.

"U-Uriel! You bassstardly wench! You left behind neither a body, nor a sssoul! How am I sssupposssed to reussse that Yumagi if you've utterly annihilated hisss exissstence?!"

The Cherubiim ignores him. With Yumagi gone, the morale of demonkind's elites falls even further, making their situation feel truly hopeless.

Even Bael, ever the wisecracker, can only huddle in a hole and pray none of the scary dragons and Titans notice him.

"Shit, shit, shit! I can't believe it! They done offed, uh... that guy! Whoever he was! Wait, didn't his cards remind me of somethin'?"

Bael's eyes slowly lower to the other demons beside him, chief among them Mara, the Baron of Games.

Bael stares at Mara for a few seconds while his brain struggles to fire more than three barely functioning neurons. Eventually he shakes his head.

"Uh, nope. Doesn't ring a bell. Oh well!"

While Bael returns his attention to the battle, Crow and Kristoff finish their patchwork healing sessions. Crow flexes a newly regrown arm, one that cost her the lives of more than five thousand virgin male and female humans from her homeworld.

"We have to help out Mephisto. So long as his Brute still stands-"

Hardly has Crow gotten the words out of her mouth before Mephisto's Brute suddenly roars in pain. She turns to look at it, just in time to see its back explode into a tidal-wave of meat as one of Uriel's battering-clubs pounds against its chest.

"Hahaha!" Uriel laughs. "This is the mightiest mutt the demons can unleash? How pitiful! Brothers, rejoice, for our victory is at hand!!"

Clouds form in the sky above as the Chrubiim's power surges violently. Uriel lunges all six of her arms at the monster, grabs its limbs and forces them apart, then stabs two of her hands into the hole in its chest.

Seconds later, the Brute roars in pain, while a terrible ripping sound causes everyone within ten miles of the titanic battle to grit their teeth. Uriel tears the Brute in half, then flings the two sides of its body to the Cherubiim's right and left.

Thoom! Thoom!

The Brute's severed halves crash against the planet's surface, making the nearby landscape rumble.

After she kills the Brute, Uriel laughs uproariously. "Oh, what great fun! Long have I awaited a chance to exact my revenge, but never did I think it could taste so delectable!"

All of the Emperors turn pale with fright. Mephisto's Brute was their one chance at killing the Cherubiim, but despite weakening the Cherubiim's oppressive aura a little bit, even if all the Emperors united their power, they still wouldn't have a chance at killing it.

Crow, once ready to charge into battle, instead sinks to the ground.

"We're... doomed... we can't win."

In all her years, never has Crow felt so utterly helpless. Even if the Hidden Emperors were to gather all the demons from all the Hells, the best she and the other Emperors could do is stymie the Cherubiim's movements for a few minutes at best.

Even then, it would destroy their tens of millennia of accumulation. All their legacies, built up with the understanding of galactic power levels formed by the battles they've fought since well before the Energy Wars, mean nothing compared to the power of the primordial Cherubiim before them.

Mephisto visibly falters. He slowly levitates backward while forcing his undead Emperor slaves to go on the defense, not wanting to risk their existences.

"Kss... impossssible! My Brute wasss... it wasss sssupposssed to be unkillable! It ssshould have been asss durable asss the Archdemon! How could you defeat it ssso easssily?!"

The Cherubiim slowly marches toward him, proud expressions of conquerors on all the Archangel's faces.

"As sturdy as the Archdemon? Foolish bastard." Raphael says mockingly. "The Archdemon's power came not from its body's defensive properties, but from its regeneration factor. That lumbering behemoth of thine was slow, weak, and utterly incapable of threatening Our existence. 'Tis no wonder thou hath once again failed to slay us Archangels, three."

The Cherubiim's power surges, forcing all of the Emperors to kneel. Without Wolfram around to counterbalance its unchecked aura, the Emperors truly begin to feel as small as ants and as weak as brittle glass.

"Whether on thy feet or thy knees," The Cherubiim counters, "thou shalt all die a final death, right here and right now."

The Cherubiim raises one of its hands. It conjures a ball of supercharged holy energy that begins to spiral in its palm like the center of a galaxy.

A powerful vacuuming sensation grabs at the souls and bodies of every spectator present. As the Cherubiim's orb spins faster and faster, not only does that suction effect increase, but so does the orb's size and cosmic might.

"In truth, had we wished, we could have destroyed this planet from the start," The Cherubiim calmly states. "But when faced with our most hated enemies, the ones who brought our species to ruin... forgive us if we felt a need to indulge in our baser desires. The terror on thy faces have truly lifted the hearts of our fallen brothers and sisters."

The Cherubiim slowly levitates into the air, but even as it pulls away from the Emperors, its soul-suppressing aura only grows stronger. It rises higher and higher, lifting up toward the roiling clouds in the sky.

"The Creator giveth, and the Creator taketh away," The Cherubiim says. "And much like our Father, so too shalt we giveth and taketh as we please."

Emperor Crow's heart palpitates in her chest. She struggles to lift a finger, but the sensation of her soul trying to tear from her body leaves her ten times more exhausted than before. Likewise, the other Emperors suffer similar troubles, with none of them able to move an inch.

"We're doomed... doomed..." Fae coughs. "And all... because... Yumagi couldn't just... finish his stupid fucking game!"

Foop.

A faint whooshing of air displaces an area not far from Fae. Reflexively, she and the other Emperors flick their heads toward a portal formed in the center of all their positions.

From the portal, a voice speaks.

"Well, what are you waiting for? An invitation?! Hurry up and get inside before it's too late!"

Emperor Yardrat, having fled earlier, opens a gateway for the other Emperors to escape!

The Cherubiim flicks its eyes toward the portal.

"Dost thou thinketh I shalt stand idly and let my prey escape? Nay."

Using one of its other five free hands, the Cherubiim points at the portal and activates Raphael's temporal abilities.

However, during that moment of distraction, a figure flickers into the sky above the Cherubiim, moving at the speed of light.

This figure, tiny compared to the Cherubiim's oversized body, and a blur of motion too fast for anyone but Michael to observe, assumes a humanoid shape.

Michael's eyes flick toward the newcomer.

"Broth-"

Michael doesn't get to speak even a single word before that figure instantly accelerates to the speed of light once more, but this time, its trajectory aims directly at the Cherubiim's body.

BOOOOOM!!

A planet-shaking shockwave explodes with violent power, smashing the Cherubiim out of the sky. In less than a second, it plummets to the ground and slams into the tectonic plates, sending tens of earthquakes in all directions. Every Emperor gets flung into the air and crashes back to the dirt, only to repeat this motion several times as the planet's soil practically liquefies.

Five full minutes later, the Cherubiim's body flickers. It jumps to its feet, badly injured, while staring in shock at the levitating figure that nearly killed it in one blow.

"No! Impossible! Bael, the Duke of Pain?!"

The three Archangels gaze in stupefied horror as a seemingly insignificant Duke hovers in the sky above them, levitating through the use of some unknown and previously unseen elemental ability.

While the Cherubiim struggles to reconcile the appearance of 'Bael' with his inexplicable powers, 'Bael' cracks a huge grin and laughs wildly.

"Me? Bael? HAHAHAHA! I think not, Raphael, Uriel, and Michael! No, I'm MUCH scarier than that fat oaf ever was! I am Ose, the mightiest demon to ever exist! I am perfection, superiority, and the embodiment of demonic excellence all in one! I am your worst nightmare!"

Ose clutches Bael's treasured weapon, 'Big Bonk', in her hands. She spins Mjolnir around in its flail-form, casually wielding the ten-ton weapon as if it were a child's toy.

"Ose?" Raphael repeats. "How can that be? We saw Ose already. She is right there!"

The Archangel of Wisdom points at Bael, who merely scratches his chin awkwardly.

"Uhh... yeah, you kinda never let me get a word in, so... that one's on you, pal."

Ose, likewise, laughs even harder. "Hahahaha! Did you really think you could just teleport me to the other side of the planet and take care of me later? Think again! I returned here not even five seconds after you sent me away! I just decided to sit on the sidelines and see how powerful my 'fellow Emperors' were, but what a pathetic lot they turned out to be!"

Ose casts a disparaging gaze at Emperors Crow, Kristoff, and all the others before returning her attention to the Cherubiim.

"Hear me well, Archangels..."

She continues.

"During the Energy Wars, I alone brought humanity to its knees, despite being a mere Baron."

"When Uriel attacked Hell Harbor, I alone defeated her, despite being a lone Emperor."

"And now, I alone will crush this so-called 'Cherubiim,' despite having fallen to the rank of Duke."

She concludes her speech with one final declaration while spinning Mjolnir over her head like a windmill.

"I am Ose! I am perfection! And most importantly, I am the one who will CRUSH YOU without any MERCY!!"

Part 324: Planetary Cataclysm

Ose cackles maniacally while spinning the ball-and-chain Mjolnir around herself. Unlike Bael, who only ever used Camael's personal weapon as a simple smashing device, Ose wields it with a level of adeptness he could never achieve. She uses her new body's strength and her soul's speed to spin the flail around herself more than fifty times per second. Mjolnir spins so rapidly that it becomes a blur of movement on both her right and left, almost like a wildly oversized nunchaku.

While she might only wield the power of a Duke's body, which also constrains the power of her soul and magic to a Duke's level, that does not limit Ose in the way it would most other demons. Bael's body alone, an invincible war machine that no Demon Emperor would ever want to fight, becomes even more frightening when combined with Ose's lightning powers.

"All of you, stay out of my way!" Ose roars. "This Cherubiim is MINE!"

An instant later, Ose vanishes as she activates her signature Lightning Dash, moving herself in a straight line at the speed of light.

Only Michael, the Archangel with the fastest eyes, possesses the ability to barely follow her movements. He immediately seizes control of the Cherubiim's body, while his brother and sister resume controlling the primordial phantasms.

A battle of epic scale bursts into existence.

While the other Emperors stand and stare in dumbfounded silence, Ose runs laps around the battlefield. Her body appears here and there, flickering in and out of reality with such speed and short intervals that by the time any spectator manages to observe her in one position, she's already vanished and reappeared in three other places.

BOOM-BOOM-BOOM!!

Mjolnir rips apart dozens of primordial entities with singular blows. Much like when Ose used her Lightspeed Punch to instantly defeat Monster King Kar, she uses the strength in her newly acquired body and her superior speed to accelerate Mjolnir's attack speed, and therefore its first-strike power, to absurd levels.

A ten ton object, when accelerated to nearly the speed of light, becomes a railgun of unfathomable power.

In one second, Jörmungandr's spiritual body detonates like a bomb, along with a dozen other primordial lifeforms. Two seconds later, another fifteen of the Cherubiim's seemingly unstoppable juggernauts perish as well, dying off at alarming rates.

Thankfully, with the other Emperors hesitant to join the battle, both out of a need to preserve their own lives, as well as due to Ose's proclamation, the Cherubiim manages to devote its sole attention to battling Ose.

Michael's six arms once again wield swords. While wildly inferior to the power of Mjolnir, the spectral weapons do afford him a minor degree of protection. In between attacking the Cherubiim's summoned allies, Ose also revolves around the Cherubiim at dizzying speeds, flinging Big Bonk at the Archangels' flanks and forcing Michael to deflect her divine weapon to the best of his ability.

Ting-ting-ting!

Michael's blades break one after the other, forcing him to re-summon them while still frantically fighting Ose off with all his might.

Ose's body spirals around the Cherubiim, leaving dozens of afterimages. She not only runs circles on the ground, but in the air and over the Cherubiim's head as well, all while kicking, punching, and smiting the primordial Archangels with Camael's artifact hammer.

"Having fun?" Ose laughs, her voice coming from a thousand different positions around the Cherubiim at the same time. "I certainly am! I've never enjoyed such unfathomable power! Even while only a mere Duke, my powers are stronger than any Emperor, or even the so-called Demon Deity! I am the mightiest demon in existence!"

While Ose taunts her opponents, she also whittles down their allied summons, breaking their spectral bodies and returning them to the same unbreakable ghostly masks as before.

However, unbeknownst to her, this also reduces the cognitive load on Raphael and Uriel's minds. Once the number of Primordial phantasms drops below 500, Raphael sends his sister a telepathic message.

Sister. Take control of all the remaining summons. Verily, I shalt assist Michael directly.

Uriel offers no protest. Do as thou must, Raphael. Teach the fallen sinner Ose the meaning of an Archangel's power.

Aye.

Ose continues striking the Cherubiim hundreds of times per minute, shattering the landscape and turning Hell Harbor's surface to rubble. Then, from out of nowhere, a blinding pain strikes her soul, causing her to lose focus, trip over her own feet, and go hurtling off into the distance.

BOOM!

Ose flies into a mountain at a speed exceeding Mach Ten, blasting tens of thousands of tons of rock and dirt into the horizon and up into space, where over the next several hours they will rain down upon the continents, reaping untold numbers of demonic lives.

"Aaaargh!"

Ose screams in pain as Raphael unleashes torture on her soul, ravaging her so badly that she becomes a convulsing husk of a demon, laying in her makeshift mountain burial site while experiencing endless agonies the world can only imagine.

With Ose temporarily incapacitated, Michael's stress levels plummet. The Cherubiim's body visibly sags as Michael feels a mountain fall from his shoulders. All three Archangels collapse into the dirt as their unified body experiences terrible exhaustion.

Ugh... brother... I strained my Omni-Perception to its limits. Frankly... I cannot maintain it for much longer. My soul is too weak... if only I still had a body.

Raphael mentally nods. I have struck Emperor Ose with a Soul Debilitation attack. Since her defenses weren't up, it dealt her severe damage... but it will not kill her. She will return soon. Before then, we must come to a decision.

Michael and Uriel both become more alert.

A decision regarding what? Uriel asks.

What price are we willing to pay to ensure more dead Emperors? Raphael asks, coyly glancing at the demons a few miles in the distance.

Surprisingly, neither Uriel nor Michael jump at the opportunity.

We can always return to fight another day. Uriel answers. If we die here, our revenge shalt almost certainly go unfinished.

The Wordsmith will be able to assist us, next time. Michael adds. We decided to attack today because of the element of surprise. We have already slain several Emperors. I do not believe continuing to fight while our Cherubiim powers are nearly exhausted is a wise idea.

Raphael frowns. However, despite his desire to continue killing his hated enemies, he realizes Michael has exhausted his soul, and Uriel will soon follow.

Ose has become an anomaly among the demons. Raphael states. She might be a braggart, but she has reason to boast. We must continue testing the limits of her strength. Right now, we lack precious insight into her full capabilities. I doubt she's unleashed even a fraction of her power upon us. If she attacks humanity, the worst may come to pass!

Uriel and Michael's emotions both turn sour at the thought of fighting any longer. In less than five minutes, Ose has beaten them a hundred times worse than all the other fights up to this point combined.

...If we must, then so be it. Uriel thinks. Michael cannot fight Ose any longer. Raphael, continue to attack her soul. Slow Ose's speed down and force her to unleash her trump cards. I shalt fight defensively, acting only to sap her strength.

The Archangels discuss their strategy in only a few seconds, the speed of thought allowing them to communicate far more effectively than through any spoken word. Once they finish strategizing, Raphael turns his head toward Ose's makeshift tomb.

She has awakened.

Ose explodes out of the mountain, a look of pure rage on her face.

"Raphael!! Hahaha, I should have KNOWN you'd try a soul attack, you rancid old wastrel! But you won't catch me off-guard so easily again!"

"We acknowledge that thou art a deadly foe." Raphael says. "But no matter how mighty thy powers, dost thou thinketh thyself capable of defeating ancient monsters from the primordial era? We have a million times thy battle experience. I have conquered Titan Kings so frightening thy soul would evaporate were they to breathe upon thee. If we fail to slay thee, it will only be due to our decline of power over the eons, not because thou hath become some unstoppable demigod."

"Were those your final words?" Ose hisses. "How SAD! I hoped you'd have something better than excuses to give me, but it seems you already know DEATH is upon you!"

Ose accelerates toward the Cherubiim, but at that moment, all of the phantasmal bodies of the primordial monsters fade away. The last remaining five hundred vanish and revert to their base 'mask' forms, then jump back to the Cherubiim and latch onto its core.

An instant later, they detach, spread apart, and glow with power. They conjure a massive barrier of holy energy that engulfs the Cherubiim, protecting it from all directions. This barrier resonates with all three Archangels' souls, becoming a barrier so powerful that when Ose crashes against it, not even Mjolnir manages to scratch its surface. Hundreds of hexagonal shapes interlock together, strengthening the barrier well beyond anything the current universe has seen in hundreds of thousands of years.

Ding-ding-ding!

Ose races around the barrier once again. She smashes Mjolnir against it repeatedly, only to find that each time she does, the kinetic energy of her strikes magically transfers across the whole barrier, wildly diluting her maximum possible damage.

A minute later, after unleashing more than one thousand strikes with her flail, Ose pauses to stare at the barrier with dismay.

"Oh? What's this? You can't beat me, so you've opted to hide inside your barrier like a little turtle?! You're pathetic!"

Her words don't anger the Archangels. Instead, Raphael's head slowly shakes as he offers her a kindly, reprimanding smile.

"Silly child. Dost thou truly thinketh the Archangel of Wisdom a fool? This barrier is currently a necessity while we recharge our power. Once we have finished, we will emerge stronger than ever. Ah, and should I mention one other thing? We are currently amassing enough primordial energy to obliterate this entire world. The elites of thy species shalt fall here, today. The Wordsmith shalt eliminate the remainder."

Ose's greedy smile falters. She stares at the Cherubiim with a look of disbelief.

"You're recharging your batteries? Bullshit. Don't lie to me! You're on your last legs! I'll bet you haven't much time left in that superform!"

"So confident, thou art." Raphael blandly remarks. "Consider this my form of recognition for thy moderate talents. Thou shalt certainly survive our last attack… but what of the other Emperors, hmm? The Legions of Hell won't inspire much terror if thou art the only Emperor left alive… heh heh heh…"

To emphasize his words, Raphael lifts a palm to show a slowly growing orb of energy spiraling and amassing power.

"We never did get to unleash the Primordial Sphere of Holy Devastation. T'would be a waste to… leave it be."

The other Emperors still bold enough to watch the Cherubiim's battle turn pale with fright. They scurry toward the portal left by Yardrat, one that has remained open for him to observe the battle, and begin piling through.

"Aw, HELL no! No way am I stickin' around here!" Bael yells.

"I'd rather not die unless necessary." Crow comments.

"My Hell has already lost three Emperors. Let's not make myself the fourth," Kristoff adds.

Mephisto and his summons take their leave, as do all the other Emperors, Dukes, and Barons present. Mara even manages to grab Emperors Guura and Melody and drag them through the portal before Yardrat seals it shut.

With all the other Emperors gone, Ose appears a bit more mollified.

"Hehe… so this is your plan, Raphael? You know damn well you can't kill me in Bael's body. Even if you blow up this entire world, the Volgrim Warpgate is made from Living Moldanium. I can still travel to it and leave. You won't even be able to scratch it. What's your real goal? Are you just trying to piss me off?"

"Thou mayeth care little about the other demons, but no Empire can stand if it loses its soldiers." Raphael says, as the orb grows bigger in his palm. "Think too of the symbolism of my actions. Art thou such a dullard, Ose? If I destroy Hell Harbor… what will demonkind think of thy rule? Will they respect and fear thy eminence? Or will they look at thee as the disgrace who allowed the obliteration of their capitol world? I cannot say for certain what will be the case, but I do know… the results shalt certainly prove interesting."

The more Raphael talks, the darker Ose's expression turns. She curls her lips into a snarl as her body begins to tremble with hatred.

"...Fine. You want to piss me off, old man? You think you can handle my full power? Let's test that hypothesis. I'll show you what I can really do when I take off the kid gloves."

Ose closes her eyes. Her body begins to shift and morph and blood-red demonic light coalesces within her chest.

"Grr... GRR! GRAAAH! ME CRUSH! ME SMASH!"

Ose's figure balloons into a familiar specter of death, that of the Balrog. Once Bael's mightiest transformation, a weapon that could cow any Emperor into silence with the mere mention of it, it now belongs to Ose as her personal plaything.

Her arms and legs double in thickness. Her horns bend forward and enlarge, and her head turns into a hideous, flame-spewing weapon of mass destruction.

"SMASH! SMAAAASH!!"

Ose screams to the heavens, turning the Archangel's expressions ugly when they confirm she does, indeed, possess all of Bael's signature abilities in addition to her own.

"How fearsome. Luckily, in that form, thou art truly a simpleton imbecile. This old man played thee for-"

Before Raphael can finish his sentence, the Balrog snaps her head in his direction and smiles. "GRAAH! ME SMASH! ME... me... hahaha. Who are you calling an imbecile, Raphael? Did you truly think I lost my mind when I mutated? No. I have full control of the Balrog. And that's not all, either."

Ose stretches to her full height of nearly 20 feet tall. Despite looming over other demons, she still appears utterly insignificant before the mighty Cherubiim.

Thunder crackles around her figure. Ose inhales deeply and performs a series of complicated hand gestures, the awkwardness of her huge Balrog claws posing no barrier to her abilities. Half a minute later, she conjures a second layer of power onto her body, startling Uriel.

That form! Brother! Ose has somehow called down her Aspect of the Thunder God to empower the Balrog!

Lightning crackles off Ose's body, lashing out at the wasteland around her with angry intent. She revels in this world-shaking power and laughs.

"Hahaha! As strong as I am now, Raphael, how frightened must you be when you realize I still only possess the power of a Duke? Can you imagine this fearsome might if I possessed the baseline power of an Emperor? Worry not. After I crush you, I will take all the souls necessary for my ascension from the River Styx. I will complete my evolution into a monster capable of singlehandedly killing the old angel civilization. Were you to put me as I am now back in the Ancient Era, the War of Heaven would have ended in less than an hour."

Raphael gazes at the thunder-attuned Balrog with a deep sense of unease. No longer do any smart quips come to mind as he truly comprehends the power his opponent possesses.

Ose is only a Duke. Already, she possesses a 'low Primordial' level of power. How terrifying. I thought the primordial energy had vanished from this universe, but it seems our enemy hath uncovered a method to mimic the old powers.

Ose cracks her neck, then begins spinning Mjolnir around her body at hurricane-level speeds.

Swish-swish-swish!

As the weapon accelerates, Ose leaps skyward, using her lightning power to fly into the upper atmosphere without using the Balrog's wings.

"Raphael! When you greet your brothers and sisters in the afterlife, TELL THEM WHO SENT YOU!"

A sense of fatal danger swallows the Archangel's minds.

Raphael swallows heavily, despite his phantasmal body's lack of a true digestive system.

"Oh, no."

From the sky above, a bolt of lightning formed from pure rage and demonic power descends like the Hammer of God.

Ose hurtles herself and Mjolnir downward at relativistic speeds. She rams into the primordial barrier protecting the Archangels, shatters it, and continues crashing into the Cherubiim's main body.

An atomic blast wave explodes from the impact point, leveling whatever mountains might have survived all the earlier bombardments, or whichever ones may have been created by rubble falling from the atmosphere.

Her impact sends a tsunami of rock and dirt in all directions for hundreds of miles, a tsunami that ultimately will kill off millions of demons and rock the entire world of Hell Harbor, scarring it beyond belief for millennia to come.

Ose smashes into the Archangels, driving every last bit of her power into the impact to ensure their swift and immediate death.

The aftershocks of her attack not only blow away all the clouds on the horizon, but also get picked up on every Volgrim listening post in the system. Multiple Class III emergency signals and energy detonation warnings travel as far as Volgarius, where the Founders will certainly hear of the battle and its aftereffects directly.

Moments later, as the shockwave continues to radiate outward, the Balrog bursts out of the impact zone and sweeps her eyes around, looking for the Cherubiim.

A minute passes. A second minute. A third.

Ose tears apart the debris, but no matter where she looks, she fails to find her prey.

The Balrog roars with rage. "Raphael!! Where are you?! Where are you hiding?! Show yourself!"

Still, nobody answers her call. As she tries to figure out if her opponent has disappeared or if she obliterated the Cherubiim's entire existence, a portal opens up not far away, and Yardrat steps through.

"The Archangel fled." Yardrat says. "Raphael tricked you."

Ose whirls to face him. "What? NO! That's not possible! I crushed him into dust! How could he have escaped?!"

Yardrat remains unmoved, despite her intimidating presence and the lightning-element Balrog power she wields.

"Isn't it obvious? Raphael swapped out the Cherubiim's body with an illusion shortly before impact. He teleported himself and the others somewhere safe. But... I doubt they will return."

Ose breathes heavily. She gasps for breath, so overpowering is her rage. Despite her claims to the contrary, she doesn't possess full control of the Balrog, and its predatory instincts muddle her mind.

"He... he tricked me?! No, that can't be! You're lying!"

Yardrat starts to say something, but pauses. He and Ose both lift their heads skyward, where a tiny speck levitates downward from the void.

Confessor Vulpanix, having witnessed the entire battle psionically, crosses her arms behind her back and drops down into Hell Harbor's upper atmosphere.

[The Archangels escaped.] She says plainly, her usual anger nowhere to be seen. [Ose. You have much to explain about what has transpired here, today. No longer is this a simple incident of negligence. You did not inform the Overlords of these Archangels' existences. The appearance of a Founder-Class Threat has changed the balance of power.]

Ose inhales and exhales fire and lightning through her nostrils.

"Confessor Vulpanix. You picked a BAD time to show up. I might have feared you before, but NO longer! Don't you start demanding anything from me, or I'll rip you and all your little friends to SHREDS!"

Vulpanix cocks her head slightly. Her six eyes narrow as she examines Ose's monstrous figure.

[That would be inadvisable. Perhaps you no longer have any reason to fear me... but what of the Five Executors? Or perhaps even... Founder Dosena herself? I trust you will cool that attitude of yours.]

Ose's rage deflates like a balloon. For once, even the Balrog's overpowering instincts don't manage to strangle the chill that descends down her spine.

She grits her teeth and lowers her voice.

"...Yes. Perhaps I do owe you an... explanation."

[Good. Then get on with it.]

Part 325: The Mightiest Demon

Confessor Vulpanix surveys Hell Harbor's devastated landscape. Using her psionic powers, she conducts a sweep of the entire planet several times, examining every nook and cranny without moving a muscle.

The results prove dismal.

[Duke Ose. Emperor Ose. Whatever your title is... you have utterly failed at your job. You were tasked with maintaining the order of the Demonic Territories. Instead, lawlessness has run rampant. For several orbital cycles, I have received scattered reports of minor insurrections among the human populace, ultimately resulting in a total shutdown of the Labyrinth Core for an extended period of time. These results are... unacceptable.]

While Vulpanix telepathically transmits her words in a wide radius, Emperor Yardrat stares at her in stunned silence. Along with the other Hidden Emperors, he has long lost his memories of the Volgrim, only knowing of them as the almighty 'Overlords.' However, seeing one in the flesh, along with Ose's out of character deference, he quickly understands that the alien in the sky is not a simple figure, but a messenger for a truly fearsome enemy he cannot hope to overcome.

Vulpanix continues. [Now I understand what I have been missing. Tell me, Ose... when were you planning to inform the Founders of the Archangels' appearance? Why did you not explain the energy signature we detected flying through this star system just a few rotational cycles previously?]

Ose raises her head and frowns.

"I beg your pardon? You detected an energy signature in this system?"

Vulpanix maintains a neutral expression, but secretly, she evaluates Ose's body language to try and figure out if the Duke-Emperor anomaly is lying to her.

[Correct. A Heroic-energy signature was detected flying at sub-light speeds through the Hell Harbor system. The local observational outpost requested assistance. Sangin Kordonis arrived, along with eight rapid-response teams. They confronted the anomalous life-form, but it summarily attacked and defeated them. Surprisingly, the life-form did not take any lives. It only subverted control of their ships and sent them back to Volgarius. Compared with the overwhelmingly violent actions of these Archangels... its motivations appear completely different. Would you not agree?]

Ose starts to speak, but Vulpanix continues.

[Additionally. I was dispatched to investigate Marie Becker's laboratory to retrieve our inspection teams. While I was there, I encountered a free-floating soul-type life-form. I attempted to capture it, but it broke free of my grasp and escaped. Tell me, Ose. Do you know how difficult it is for an errant soul to escape a Confessor's psionic shackles?]

Ose purses her lips. "Nearly impossible."

[Correct. I have done some investigating, of late. There are a surprising number of anomalies occurring recently, and all of them happened under your watch. Would you care to explain yourself, or shall I condemn this world to Total Rendition?]

Ose's eyes flicker. "You wouldn't dare."

[Would I not? Our people signed a treaty. There were agreements put in place. You have failed to uphold your end of the treaty. As part of the penalty clause, I may decide to invoke my authority to declare a Total Rendition of this planetary mass. Explain your failures to me. Make me comprehend the pieces I have failed to understand. Only then may I offer a certain measure of leniency.]

Several seconds pass.

Ose's eyes flicker several times as she wrestles with the secrets she has been keeping from the Volgrim.

Her struggles to capture and obtain total control of the Wordsmith.

Her vision of uniting demonkind under her rule and ultimately rising up to cast their shackles away and overturn the power of the Volgrim.

However...

When faced with the might and authority of a Confessor, as well as the implications of her backers, the Founders themselves, even Ose can only bow her head.

She swallows a breath and bites her tongue.

"...Six years ago. A Hero emerged among the humans. His name is Jason. His unique power is called 'Wordsmithing.'"

Ose speaks haltingly, the pain of having to tell the truth biting into her psyche. Despite this, she maintains not only her Balrog Form, but also her Aspect of the Thunder God. She does this not just to resist Vulpanix's psionic pressure, but also to send a clear message regarding her newfound powers.

Half an hour passes as Ose slowly explains the events of the past several years, taking care not to go into certain details regarding her grand plans. However, her lack of explanation does not hinder Vulpanix from quietly theorizing and hypothesizing on these matters.

[Foolish mud-dweller.] Vulpanix says, her words filled with scorn. [Do not think you can deceive this Confessor. I am well-trained in the mental arts. I sense your burning ambition, though you try to hide it. You did not inform us of the Wordsmith because you desired his power for yourself. Your greed nearly cost your species and mine the entire War!]

Vulpanix snorts. She completely ignores Yardrat's insignificant presence, given his pathetic level of power and authority.

[Diablo is comatose. You are still the leader of the Seven Hells. Nevertheless, this implicit betrayal of your superiors cannot pass without punishment. If I am to allow you to maintain your authority, you will have to pay a steep price.]

Ose balls her hands into fists. "You think you have the right? I told you everything! How dare you act as if-"

[SILENCE!] Vulpanix roars. Her psionic voice flattens the land around Ose, crushing Yardrat into the dirt and forcing him to bow. However, it does not even make Ose flinch. [You have forgotten to fear your betters, mud-dweller! You have cast your eyes aside, thinking yourself better than the Founders! UNFORGIVEABLE! You primitives are NOTHING compared to the might of the Volgrim! You exist because we ALLOW you to exist! Of the two million habitable planets in the Milky Way, this one is little more than a scorched speck unworthy of notice, and its decay is all your fault! I will be doing the galaxy a favor by condemning it to Total Rendition!]

The more Vulpanix speaks, the angrier Ose becomes. She squeezes Mjolnir's handle and begins to tremble, fighting to hold back the Balrog's primal hunger for blood.

"Do... not... make me... ANGRY! Watch what you say next, Confessor! If you think you can do as you please, you don't know who you're messing with! I am OSE! I am the mightiest demon in existence! I am the future of my people, and I will NOT allow you to speak down to me any longer!"

Ose begins to levitate into the air, using her lightning affinity to shift her polaric nature. Mjolnir's chain becomes taut as it hangs in her grasp, eventually lifting off the dirt.

[Insolence!] Vulpanix exclaims. [Whether or not you can defeat me, that is irrelevant! If you dare to fight back, I will call down the Founders! They will rain devastation upon demonkind, wiping out your useless lives with nary a care!]

"Perhaps they will!" Ose retorts. "But I do not believe... they will be able to defeat ME!"

Her aura surges. Ose begins rapidly revolving Mjolnir around herself, preparing to lunge at the Confessor.

Vulpanix's blood chills as she realizes Ose might, in fact, attack her.

In truth, I could not defeat that 'Cherubiim' monstrosity, yet Ose handily crushed it. If we come to blows, I will lose without fail. However! I must not allow a mud-dweller to stand up to me! It will sully the name of the great Volgrim Empire!

Vulpanix summons psionic power into her chest, then conjures a temporal barrier around her body.

[I am a seventh-ranked Psion, an elite among elites. I may not be an eighth-rank or a Founder, but my name alone would cow anyone in their right mind to submission. Do you really wish to test my patience, primitive being?]

Yardrat climbs to his feet. He watches in fascinated horror as Ose dares to levitate closer and closer to Vulpanix, goading her enemy into making the first move.

"Do I dare? Do YOU dare, Vulpanix? Where I stand, all I see is a Hellhound pup without any teeth! You don't appear as frightening to me as you once did... and neither do I fear your Founders. I only worry they might hurt my fellow demons! But even then... why should I care? I never liked them, anyway. Do your worst, if you dare to test me."

Several seconds of tense silence follow. Ose and Vulpanix continue circulating their energy, waiting for the other to strike.

Vulpanix nods slowly. [So be it. If you wish to condemn your species to the 'Great Beyond,' then I will guide you there myself!]

At that moment, just before either combatant can lunge toward each other, they both stop.

Strange expressions cross their faces.

Vulpanix's eyes dart from left to right. [Hmm? This feeling... the Archangels? Have they returned?]

Ose, likewise, appears equally confused. "What Archangels, are you daft? Are you trying to trick me, Confessor?"

Miles across the horizon, a tiny, insignificant-seeming speck appears. A figure cloaked in strange, otherworldly energy.

This figure takes a step forward. It travels one mile closer. Then, it takes another step, and draws yet another mile closer. As if shattering the laws of physics, it casually strolls through the air, crossing space without appearing to move quickly at all.

Yardrat is the first to detect its appearance. "W-what in the Seven Hells?! Over there, you two!"

Ose and Vulpanix both turn in unison to see the bipedal being, something so faint and illusory that it appears to not even exist at all, casually strolling toward them.

Ose shoots an icy glare at the newcomer. "Who are you?"

Confessor Vulpanix, however, freezes up. A look of shock enters her eyes.

[You. It's... it's you...]

The newcomer's body appears androgynous, lacking all biological indicators or features, making it appear little more than a blob of cloudy liquid. While it might be seen as vaguely human shaped, the two enormous horns on both sides of its head tell a different story.

Confessor Vulpanix. You are not the One I last spoke to. And Ose. Despite what the Confessor has said, you have performed moderately well in your role as... Second Emperor.

The newcomer's voice does not speak telepathically, nor audibly. Instead, it transmits into the air and their minds at the same time, mystifying Ose and Vulpanix both regarding the methods used.

Ose glances at Vulpanix. "Who is this?"

Vulpanix visibly trembles. [He... she... it... it is the... First Emperor of Demonkind.]

The newcomer slows to a stop a short distance from Ose and Vulpanix. Despite the close distance, no matter how Ose tries to focus on its presence, nothing sticks out in her mind. The so-called 'First Emperor' appears sickeningly illusory, like a memory from a fifty-year old dream that barely lingers in her mind for seconds at a time. The instant she averts her eyes, she begins to lose her memory of its appearance, making her force herself to gaze at it with rapt attention.

I am the First Emperor of Transience. My existence is temporary. My identity, unimportant. What is important is that I show up here, now.

The First Emperor slowly turns their head to look in Vulpanix's direction.

You threatened my species. You threatened my Second Emperor. That was an unwise move. I recommend that you speak to your Founders before making any... rash decisions... on their behalf.

Vulpanix shudders. A strange pressure builds up in her mind, forcing her to retreat from the First Emperor's presence.

[The... the treaty-]

The treaty is still valid. If you wish to destroy Hell Harbor, you may attempt to do so. However, you and I both know what will come next. Are you certain that you wish to condemn Volgarius to the abyss? Surely, your pettiness has not made you... stupid.

The First Emperor stares down Vulpanix with its faceless head, its lack of eyes somehow even more terrifying than if it had them at all.

"You are the First Emperor?" Ose asks. "Bullshit! Why didn't you show up earlier when the Cherubiim was attacking?! Why have you not shown yourself in thousands of years?! You're just some sort of... fake!"

Why did I not show up? Is the answer not clear? There was no need. Demonkind lives without me. If I reveal myself whenever any minor enemy appears, my abilities will become incapable of surprising my foes. You handled the Cherubiim well, Ose. I am proud of you.

"I don't want y-your congratulations!" Ose sputters. "I want an explanation! If you're really the First Emperor, prove it! I challenge you to a fight! I beat the Cherubiim without breaking a sweat, and I can surely crush you, too!"

Vulpanix shoots a strange look at Ose. [No, Ose. Do not attempt to fight the First Emperor. There are stories of what they accomplished after the Energy Wars. You will lose.]

"Oh, I doubt that." Ose says. "I am the mightiest demon this galaxy has EVER seen! What First Emperor? What Founders? I don't fear any of- UHK!"

A crushing pressure suddenly presses down on Ose's existence. In the blink of an eye, she loses control and demorphs from her Balrog form, then falls from the sky. She hits the ground with a violent boom, then lays in the dirt, shivering and unable to move.

The First Emperor remains in the same place as before, like a statue.

Ose. Do not think that you have reached the sky above the sky. In the cosmic scale of things, you are still insignificant. But worry not. I am here. I will continue to shield demonkind from its greatest threats.

Ose lays on the ground. Her body twitches as she fights to move a muscle. No matter how she struggles, she barely manages to shift her arm a few millimeters.

What's going on?! Ose thinks, as her panic intensifies. This isn't soul pressure, not like what Raphael used! It's something else! I can barely twitch my fingers! How is Bael's body this feeble?!

The First Emperor releases their pressure, allowing Ose to breathe.

Vulpanix. You will return to Volgarius. You will speak to the Founders. You will remind them of my existence. Remember. Demonkind is under my protection. If you threaten my species again, I will not hesitate to unleash my powers a second time. Your homeworld will suffer a swift and cataclysmic end.

The First Emperor's voice softens as they slightly lean toward her.

And also remember. I know your grasp on the galaxy has weakened in recent centuries. Do not grandstand before me when you lack the power to back up your words.

Vulpanix shudders. Despite having fought and killed tens of thousands of mighty monsters and horrors in her lifetime, none of them come even close to the First Emperor's general sense of terror.

[Y-yes. Then. In that case. I will take my leave.]

Vulpanix flies into the sky and leaves without hesitation, traveling back into the Void all by herself. The previously haughty Psion no longer resembles a conqueror, but a beaten dog scampering back into the bushes.

After she leaves, the First Emperor remains. They hover in the sky, not yet leaving for some as-of-yet unknown reason.

Ose. You are right to doubt the Volgrim. They are no longer capable of shackling our species as they once did. However, do not brashly threaten or start any conflicts with them. They protect us from the greater Threat... and they are not winning that war.

Ose pulls herself off the ground. She huffs and puffs as if wildly fatigued. Whatever the First Emperor hit her with, it wiped her stamina out and made the Cherubiim fight feel like an utter breeze in comparison.

"You... you're talking about... the Plague?"

I am.

Ose lifts her head to look at the Emperor of Transience above her.

"What do you know about the Plague?"

Yardrat listens intently, trying to make himself as small as possible. He does not understand what the First or Second Emperors are referring to, but something about their discussion strikes him as existentially important.

Not enough. The Plague confounds any attempts to observe it. It spreads. It attacks. It consumes. Thousands of worlds have fallen. If the Volgrim lose the war, demonkind will fall next. We cannot win against the Plague. None can. It is simply too powerful.

"Not even you can defeat it?" Ose asks.

No. My powers might appear omnipotent to the likes of you, but in the cosmic scale, they are insignificant.

The First Emperor pauses before continuing.

Only the Wordsmith might stand a chance. He is not our enemy. He is our only hope.

Ose snorts. "All the more reason to capture him."

Capture or befriend. Do as you like. I will not interfere. I am transitory. I cannot affect the balance without paying a price.

Ose frowns. "What do you mean? Who are you, really?"

The First Emperor shakes their head.

Farewell, Ose. I will leave demonkind in your capable hands. Do not fail your species.

Ose starts to speak up, to demand answers, but as she watches, the First Emperor's body slowly fades away, vanishing from existence itself.

Moments later, her thoughts become foggy. Ose dizzily shakes her head. She forces herself to remember the First Emperor's appearance, but no matter how she tries, she can only recall a vague and blurry shadow, like a memory from ancient times.

Yardrat sucks in a breath.

"Seven Hells. I really am nothing more than a speck of dust within the grand scheme of things, aren't I?"

Ose turns her head to look at him.

"You weren't supposed to learn of these things... but perhaps the old mind-wipes aren't as important as I once thought. Not anymore. Times have changed. Gather all the Emperors again. We're going to hold a second meeting."

Yardrat helplessly gestures to the destroyed world around him.

"Alright. But where?"

"I'll tell you once I've surveyed the damage," Ose answers. A strange calmness takes over her expression as she gazes at the dust-choked sky. "The First Emperor is... he's so powerful. Or she. It. I don't know what he is... but he appointed me as the leader. There must be a reason for all of this. We can't sit on our hands, anymore."

Yardrat nods.

"To that, I agree."

Part 326: The Galactic Threat

Somewhere deep within Hell, inside a forgotten alcove near the edges of the slowly-expanding labyrinthian space...

Uriel, now fully reverted back to Barbatos's body, lays inside a glowing pool of liquid mana, a pool she used several times when battling the Demon Emperors to rejuvenate and heal her body after suffering devastating injuries. This specially-created liquid mana slowly enters her body and drains away, allowing her to regenerate herself back to an optimal state.

The Archangel of Retribution lays still, gazing at the ceiling above.

"We failed." She states, her tone emotionless and dull.

"Nay, sister," Raphael says, his construct-body sitting a short distance away on a nearby rock. "We did not. We partially succeeded. We killed several Emperors. We uncovered the power of the so-called 'Demon Deity'... and now we've learned that the status of the 'First Emperor' is not as nebulous as we once thought."

Raphael holds a glowing orb in his hands, a temporal crystal capable of scrying distant locations. He replays the hazy images of a figure cloaked in shadow, an entity whose very existence threatens to erase itself from his memory whenever he looks away.

"Not only that," Raphael continues, "But we have also learned of an enemy the Volgrim are battling in secret. A 'Plague,' as it seems. What, I wonder, might this Plague be, hmm?"

Raphael reflects not only on the intelligence Confessor Vulpanix unwittingly gave to him, but the conversation he observed shortly after the three Archangel's left, between the First Emperor, Vulpanix, and Ose.

"This 'plague' does not appear to be an ordinary disease," Michael remarks. "One cannot 'fight' a disease. Rather, the term appears to be code for an enemy that has appeared in normal space. Perhaps the Volgrim refer to their enemy as a Plague in order to, how would the humans say it? Dehumanize their opponents."

"Nay..." Raphael murmurs. "I do not believe this to be the case. Not fully, I should clarify. This enemy is, almost certainly, a genuine plague. The First Emperor stated that the Plague spreads and infects worlds. Such direct terms do not imply a metaphor, but an existential threat. This may explain why the Volgrim have remained quiet for so long, seemingly ignoring the happenings within the Labyrinth. They have greater concerns occupying their thoughts."

Uriel clears her throat.

"Ahem. Brother Raphael… might we leverage this knowledge to our advantage?"

"Perhaps, and perhaps not," Raphael says vaguely. "We have exhausted our souls and run our wells of power bone-dry. It shalt take a significant amount of time for thy demon body to regenerate its mana and become capable of sustaining another Cherubiim transformation. Verily, our best course of action art now to speak to the Wordsmith. 'Tis time for us to entrust the future to him."

"The Wordsmith is weak." Uriel moans. "He is only a boy."

"Nay, thou hath not lived with him in as intimate a manner as Michael and I," Raphael counters. "Joan of Arc was merely a child when she began her conquests. King Arthur was still a boy when Camael granted him Excalibur. Age is not a metric one should use to judge Heroes. Jason is ready. He has finally suffered enough to evolve his thinking. He is not the same fool from a month ago."

"What he has lost and whether his mindset has changed matter little," Uriel counters, closing her eyes. "He is lazy. He always seeks out the easy solutions to complex problems. How can such an irresponsible brat save humanity? Hath thou already forgotten what happened with Dracula?"

Raphael's eyes lower. "Nay. I have not."

"Thou should do well to remember his error. Dracula single-handedly uplifted the Hell of Blood to its monstrous status. He gave the forces of Hell a handhold when before they lacked the reach necessary to extend their fangs. While he proved ultimately sympathetic to demonkind's cause and the Wordsmith does not, Jason could still unwittingly grant his enemies a boon."

Raphael frowns. He says nothing for several long moments, and his frown deepens further.

"Indeed. There was that… one matter."

"What matter?" Uriel asks, sitting up.

"The boy had a clever, but frightening idea. What if, through the use of his Wordsmithing, he could uplift demons through the ranks without consuming human souls? He envisioned a utopian system wherein humans and demons might work together to empower one another. But what if the demons were to seize this power for themselves? They would explode in growth exponentially faster. Verily, they might ascend past the heights of the so-called Demon Deity and reach limits we never thought possible!"

Michael nods. "He spoke of this plan to Emperor Ose. Our sister was not there to see the discussion, but I remember it well. Now that Ose has obtained a power rivaling the Cherubiim, she has become dramatically more frightening for her enemies to face. If we cannot defeat her, how might the Wordsmith? No doubt, she mayeth recall that discussion and plot to obtain the technology if he creates it."

Uriel grunts. "Hmm. Thou implyeth the Wordsmith art inferior to our strength, but I do not readily believe that is the case. His skills art... utilitarian. Much like Camael's. He can craft weapons and items capable of countering specific enemies. He need only sit down and ponder deeply upon his opponents' weaknesses."

"In that case," Raphael says, "we mustn't delay. The sooner we give news to the Wordsmith of our movements, the sooner he can begin preparations for Ose's counter-attack. She shalt require some time to gather her armies, locate and enumerate the fallen, and march on Tarus II."

Uriel sighs.

"'Tis unfortunate the Cherubiim could not save our people during the Energy Wars. Surely, t'would have allowed us the final push necessary to slaughter demonkind."

"Without thy demon body, the Cherubiim's ascension is impossible." Raphael laments. "Camael, Uzziel, Gabriel, and myself all lacked the soul-power and mana necessary to complete an ascension. As well, I was leery of bringing back their lost memories, especially Uzziel's. I only agreed to activate the transformation with thyself and Michael out of necessity."

Uriel and Michael both share a knowing look with one another. Having finally recalled all of their memories from before Raphael's mind-wipes, they have also remembered all of their ancient sins.

"We treated Cassiel, Muriel, and Samael terribly..." Uriel murmurs. "What I wouldn't give to apologize to my siblings."

"Verily, I am a terrible sinner." Michael adds.

A few minutes later, Uriel stands up, summons a portal, and steps through, traveling back to Tarus II.

The VLL Hatoraxia, one of the ships which faced the Wordsmith in battle just a week prior, slowly enters the atmosphere of the Volgrim capitol world, Volgarius. The ship, which belongs to Clan Oblong, sports a thick and bulky rear-mounted Bridge, with two heavy weapon mounts pointing directly forward. As a Technopath clan focused on utility over looks, their ships feature heavy weaponry and versatile engines, while also relying on efficient but ugly squarish-designs intended to maximize performance and keep costs low.

Among the hundreds of large and small Technopath clans, Clan Oblong is one of the larger ones, with roots dating back millions of orbital cycles. The many diverse Technopath clans once sparred regularly in philosophic debates regarding what types of technological designs were superior, but over the last few tens of thousands of orbital cycles, their many rivalries became dampened by the threat to Volgrimkind itself.

Sangin Kordonis, captain of the Hatoraxia, sits tensely in his chair. Beside him sits his First Officer, the young and inexperienced Invocator Miikil, a Fifth-Ranked Psion new to military service, but among the more talented of the Psions in Kordonis's fleet.

The two of them quietly talk while their crew travel toward the grey clouds covering Volgarius's surface.

[I believe the Founders will find our report illuminating,] Miikil says, keeping her telepathic voice low. [Whether the entity we fought was a Plague-host that somehow ingested a Heroic Artifact, or whether it was something else entirely, its ability to disable our entire fleet without killing a single soldier must mean it possesses frightening abilities.]

"We have already reported our findings to Confessor Vulpanix." Sangin Kordonis states. "Since she wishes for us to report back to Volgarius, we must do as she commands. I dare not contradict a Confessor."

[I admire Confessor Vulpanix a great deal.] Miikil transmits. [However, I must admit that I find her presence daunting. She led a hunt on the world of Filir, one I was present for. I was unable to contribute meaningfully.]

"You've seen the Confessor in person?" Kordonis asks.

[Yes. Her mastery of Spatial and Temporal Psionics is exquisite. On the other hand, I am barely even competent in Liquid and Gas Manipulation. A mere Fifth-rank Invocator.]

"Obtaining the title of Invocator in fewer than one thousand orbital cycles is nothing to be ashamed of." Kordonis states. His mouth-tendrils dribble saliva on his metal legs as he speaks. "I am only aged fourteen thousand orbital cycles, myself. My superiors describe me as 'adequately competent.' Were I to put my achievements into the Psion hierarchy, I would be only a Third-Ranked Initiate, at best. Not even fit for combat duty."

[There are many honorable non-combat roles for Psions.] Miikil states. [Before I took this post, I assisted in the collection of biological samples on hostile worlds. My passable abilities in gaseous manipulation allowed me to traverse poisoned and radioactive worlds without much trouble.]

"All Psions serve the Founders." Kordonis replies. "Even the seemingly insignificant figures, so long as they perform their duties, will receive the rites of advancement."

[The Founders are fair. The Founders are just.] Miikil says, straightening her posture. [I contemplate, and I comprehend.]

The Hatoraxia descends through Volgarius's cloud cover, eventually breaking through to reveal the breathtaking scenery of the richest and most prosperous world in all of the Milky Way.

Tens of trillions of Volgrim live on Volgarius. Its metal-paved surface sports no naturally-occurring foliage, and every last inch of the planet's landmasses have been utilized for housing to the absolute maximum possible. Huge terrariums dot the landscape, offering 'outdoor' amusement for the upper-class Volgrim to enjoy moderate and climate-controlled bursts of 'nature,' but otherwise, greenery is conspicuously absent.

Skyscrapers fill up the horizon as far as the eye can see. Not only do tens of billions of thousand-story structures dot Volgarius's surface, but the underground facilities go even deeper. More than two thirds of the Volgrim population lives underground, with only the wealthiest and most powerful elites earning the right to live topside.

Invocator Miikil sits up a little straighter as she gazes outside the windows. Unlike the higher-ranking Psions who somewhat take their privileged lives for granted, Miikil is only a fifth-ranked Psion, a grunt in the military. While possessing extraordinary abilities compared to Psions of the first through fourth ranks, compared to those of the sixth, seventh, and higher, she is still far from worthy to live on Volgarius's surface.

[I have rarely been to the capitol world.] Miikil says. [Truly, Volgarius is a marvel of engineering.]

"Where did you live before you were assigned to my post?" Kordonis asks.

[I spent two hundred orbital cycles training my Psionics on Filir,] Miikil states. [I spent several hundred scattered across other worlds. Most recently, I oversaw Beta-level species 14478, the 'Goblins,' on their designated containment world, Golord. I was only there for seven orbital cycles before transferring to this post.]

"Military-ranking Psions are becoming scarcer and harder to find, these days." Kordonis blandly comments. "Every captain wants a handful. You might not think yourself special, but I have a feeling the Founders will start drafting Fourth-ranked Psions into the combat ranks before long. We've lost too many Invocators to the Plague."

[The War seems never-ending...] Miikil says, her telepathic voice softening with emotion. [No matter how many Plagueborne we kill, more keep appearing.]

"That is the nature of our enemy."

The two of them fall silent as the Hatoraxia nears a dedicated landing facility, one with tens of thousands of hangar bays. The large, flat building stands out from the office-like and utilitarian infrastructure around it thanks to the many ships docked on its uppermost level, waiting for a transfer to the lower levels for short and long-term storage.

As they descend, a robotic voice speaks inside the Bridge.

Starship Hatoraxia! Callsign Kord-677! You are cleared for landing. A Priority One message is waiting for Captain Kordonis. Please accept it at once.

Kordonis stiffens. "Priority One. I've never received one of those before..."

He quickly moves his tentacle-fingers to press several buttons on his command interface, the part of his Captain's Chair linked to his ship's highest functions.

Moments later, the face of a Technopath holographically materializes in the center of the bridge. Sangin Lidra, head of Clan Oblong, and one of the Technopaths responsible for the recent investigation of Marie Becker's laboratory, levitates atop a circular platform.

"Sangin Kordonis. I have received word of your recent encounter in the Hell Harbor system through Confessor Vulpanix. The significance of your discovery cannot be understated. You and your Bridge crew are required to attend a Class I meeting of the Founders. It has been seven hundred and sixteen orbital cycles since a meeting of this magnitude was last arranged. I need not explain to you the importance of what will be stated there."

Kordonis maintains an air of aloofness, but his internal organs vibrate with excitement.

"Yes. A Class I meeting. I am honored by this assignment."

"It is not often a mere captain and other low-ranking officers are allowed to attend such a prestigious meeting." Sangin Lidra says. "Due to several recent classified events, the Founders have decided to disseminate highly detailed news regarding the Plague war effort."

Lidra pauses for a moment, as if hesitating about what to say.

"...I have already scoured some of the reports. Simply put, the War is not going well. We are losing on multiple fronts. Do not expect to hear much good news during this meeting. In confidence, I must state off the record that unless one of our top-secret experiments bears fruit, Volgrimkind is likely to suffer a slow and deliberate deterioration into extinction."

Kordonis and his Bridge crew fall uncomfortably silent. Some of them shoot questioning looks at each other, while Kordonis tries to maintain an air of confidence.

"I... do not understand, Master Lidra. I have heard of a few recent setbacks, but I was not under the impression we were faring so poorly."

"We are." Lidra flatly states. "Our attempts to probe the Plague have fallen flat. Our experiments have yielded no results. Autopsies only lead to more questions. Do not miss the meeting, for your firsthand account of the encounter in Hell Harbor's space will surely prove useful. At this point, we need every scrap of intelligence we can muster."

Kordonis nods seriously. "Yes, Master Lidra. I will attend, without fail. I contemplate, and I comprehend."

She tilts her head toward him as well. "I contemplate, and I comprehend. For the Founder's glory!"

Her projection fizzles away, and in its place, a planetary map with directions to the assembly place remains.

Kordonis barely even glances at the map. His subordinates will lay out a course through Volgarius's countless spiderweb-like tubes and transfer facilities to get him across the planet to his destination. He hardly needs to lift a tentacle.

"I was unaware the War was going so badly." Kordonis says, his tone devoid of emotion. "If this meeting contains as dire of information as Master Lidra implied, then what will it mean for our species?"

Invocator Miikil blinks her six insect-like eyes. [I do not know the answer to your query. If we cannot defeat the Plague, then perhaps we can flee the galaxy?]

"Where can we run?" Kordonis counters. "Anywhere we go, the Plague might follow. Traveling between galaxies is impossible for our current level of technology... unless the Founders have kept a breakthrough under wraps."

Miikil raises her fingers in a gesture of exasperation. [It is beyond my ability to know. We must trust in the Founders. Unarin has never failed us in tens of millions of cycles. The First Founder will surely think of a solution. He always does.]

"If we lose trust in the Founders, then we will have already lost the War." Kordonis concludes.

Part 327: Hand of the Founders

Sangin Kordonis, Invocator Miikil, and the other twenty members of the Hatoraxia's Bridge crew all sit, stand, or hover inside a large 'skybus,' one of the common machines used to travel across Volgarius's surface. The rather large vehicle boasts relatively comfortable accomodations for all different types of Volgrim, particularly Technopaths.

Unlike Psions, Changelings, or the other subspecies of Volgrim, Technopaths all boast wildly varied body and augmentation types. Some walk on bionic legs, some roll on treads, and some hover through the air. The older a Technopath, the more of their body they tend to convert to machinery over the years, gladly giving up their weak biological vessels for the comfort and utility of steel.

As for Sangin Kordonis, he walks on two exo-steel legs, each one capable of not only bearing incredible loads, but also stomping inferior biological skulls into meat paste. The rest of his wrinkled and withered body, however, still appears mostly biological. As a young Technopath, only 14,000 orbital cycles of age, he has not yet made any permanent choices regarding his 'upper augmentations.'

Kordonis takes a seat beside Invocator Miikil. Both of them relax as restraining beams wrap around their chests, ensuring that if any accidents happen to their vehicle, they won't go flying around inside the cabin and suffer any injuries. The other Technopaths sport different types of bodily augments, so some of them remain standing, since they won't be able to easily accommodate sitting down.

The lightly armored skybus takes off after a few minutes and climbs to a mid-level elevation, just a mile or so above the planet's surface. This height, suitable for travel across continents, allows it to avoid the much busier low-elevation vehicles, which operate on a sub-continental and local-grid-based travel system.

Invocator Miikil gazes out the window beside herself. She watches the world below her zip past, occasionally scanning it with her psionic abilities.

[Look over there. A three-thousand-unit grid of hydroponic farms. I hear that in recent cycles, the Founders have pushed to increase the amount of nutrient production facilities on Volgarius. At present, only twenty percent of the homeworld's food supply originates from on-planet. They recently decided to increase that number to one hundred percent, or more.]

Kordonis nods. "Naturally. If the War is going as poorly as Master Lidra hinted, it makes sense they would want to make the homeworld more self-sustaining. Relying on imports from conquered worlds is a long-term recipe for disaster."

Miikil holds a small datapad in her hands. She manipulates its functions psionically, not bothering to use her hands.

[Recreational facilities have decreased five percent in the past twelve orbital cycles. Volgarius has long since reached its 'functional capacity' for structures. The only way to build hydroponic farms capable of feeding such a vast population is by stripping away unnecessary or low-priority structures.]

Kordonis nods absentmindedly. He, too, manipulates a datapad, glancing over information Sangin Lidra transmitted to him about the upcoming meeting. As Miikil excitedly chatters about the sights of the lauded Volgrim homeworld, Kordonis instead becomes quieter and more contemplative.

To think the statistics would be this dire. Master Lidra must have a terrible weight on her servos.

The skybus races through Volgarius's lower atmosphere at speeds exceeding three thousand kilometers an hour. The world below zips past quickly, and eventually, Miikil settles down once the novelty and relatively boring appearance of the homeworld wears thin.

[I must say. The homeworld is impressive, but much of its structural design is far too utilitarian for my liking. Every square meter of land has already been used up. There is nothing to see but megascrapers and gigascrapers of uniform design.]

"That's just how the homeworld has to be." Kordonis remarks. "Volgarius is already crowded to its limits. There isn't much room left for aesthetic design when every structure must be made to use up and offer as much space as possible."

[Still. It feels as if the homeworld is... lacking something.] Miikil says, before falling silent.

The skybus drops out of low-orbit and races toward a district of gigascrapers that, for once, appear somewhat different from the world around them. Contrary to what Kordonis just said, several buildings with remarkably beautiful designs appear. Five of them gently twist as they vertically ascend, built in a pentagonal formation to resemble five giant fingers reaching out of the planet's crust. A surprising amount of greenery and parks become visible on the ground level, the foliage dramatically standing out from the mass of steel surrounding them.

All together, a massive ten-mile complex with hundreds of sub-buildings reveals itself to be the place where the five Volgrim Founders live, each of the five-fingered buildings being one of their homes, offices, and land designated for their direct subordinates.

These buildings, the Five Fingers of the Founders, hold enough luxurious housing for more than a million of their devoted elite personnel. All the buildings possess their own unique design.

The First Finger, belonging to Founder Unarin, rests at the position of the 'thumb.' Granite and obsidian decorates its outer exterior, with zero windows allowing anyone to peek in from outside. As the skybus flies toward the Five Fingers, Unarin's home structure also slightly shifts colors, using a trick of the light to turn its powerful blackened exterior into something like a soft and welcoming grey.

The Second Finger, belonging to Founder Dosena, rests at the position of the index finger. Her home structure sports dozens of bubble-like terraces, all of which have huge exobeasts sleeping inside. These creatures, captured by the Psions working under Founder Dosena, come from the countless worlds the Psions have conquered. Just a single glance at the huge predators makes Miikil shiver with excitement.

The Third Finger, belonging to Founder Treyza, rests at the position of the middle finger. Its exterior appears glassy, and even from a great distance, the skybus's passengers can see directly through the crystalline windows into the many scientific laboratories comprising the Third Finger. As a Changeling, Founder Treyza's dignified and scientific upbringing makes them a great advocate of experimentation and transparency. Thus, the Third Founder deliberately ensures anyone can view their experiments, as needed.

The Fourth Finger, belonging to Founder Cuanali, rests at the position of the ring finger. Her structure appears remarkably different from the others, in that an inordinate number of skybus parking spaces sit attached to the building's side, allowing for Technopaths from all across Volgarius to come and go as needed. As one of the most diverse of the five primary Volgrim sub-species, Technopaths hold all manner of opinions and research priorities, making collaboration between them essential.

And finally, The Fifth Finger, belonging to Founder Cinculu, rests at the position of the 'pinky.' What surprises Miikil the most is that, unlike the structures made of steel and glass, used by the other Founders, Cinculu's home structure appears significantly smaller, and has been somehow hewed from bone, with a copious amount of foliage growing out of its many nooks and crannies. Under other circumstances, it might even appear to be an abandoned building due to all the moss and fungus present, but somehow, the greenery gives it an aesthetic touch lacking in the other four Founder structures.

Kordonis notices Miikil's surprise. "Founder Cinculu is a Dolgrimite. He detests the trappings of technology and steel, and advocates for the return of Volgrimkind to our 'roots,' whatever that means."

[The Dolgrimites are simply too backward for the modern galaxy,] Miikil says, keeping her words private between herself and her Captain. Neither of them would dare slander even the most unpopular Founder publicly, for fear of reprisal. [They refuse to advance with the times.]

"Perhaps," Kordonis says, keeping his voice low. "But they claim to have found the source of Volgrim power by reverting to their baser instincts. If you ever find yourself facing a Dolgrimite, do not consider fleeing a shameful act. It may save your life."

Miikil turns to look at Kordonis with her six insect-eyes. [Why? Are the Dolgrimites quite fearsome? Their numbers are so few; I've heard they might even go extinct someday.]

"Don't listen to that talk." Kordonis says, shaking his head. "I've met a Dolgrimite before. Say what you will about their backward beliefs... but their bodies are killing machines. A high-ranking Psion will kill a Dolgrimite ten out of ten times, but even a mid-ranking Psion will know better than to anger the Primals. I watched that one particular Dolgrimite rip through steel with her claws... she tore apart one of Master Lidra's sturdiest training drones in seconds. No low-level Psion could fight nearly as efficiently."

[Impressive. Perhaps there is more to the Dolgrimites than meets the eye.]

As the smallest sub-species of Volgrim, Dolgrimites number less than 1% of the Volgrim's total population. Not only so, but they eschew fighting in the War and keep to themselves, avoiding politics to pursue their supposed 'Path of the Primal,' wherein they will voraciously hunt on wild planets.

The skybus drops toward the center of the Founder's Hand, where a large and often-used dome of glass sits in between their five buildings. This structure, the Founder's Eye, provides a high-uplink connection to the Volgrim Net, which allows any Founder to gain instant contact with any world or vessel in the Milky Way. Due to the thousands of years spent fighting their newest and most-feared enemies, the Founders often use the Founder's Eye to obtain status updates from their many Fleet Captains and Admirals located across the galaxy, whilst also allowing them to transmit orders to the worlds and fleets under their control.

Today, its purpose becomes a bit grander than usual, as several hundred of the absolute top-most elites of the Volgrim Empire walk, roll, or levitate inside through a door at its base. Among them are Psions, Technopaths, and Changelings alike.

However, conspicuously absent are any members of the Ascended, the species to which Founder Unarin belongs, or Dolgrimites, all of whom avoid the other species of Volgrim as a rule.

[Unfortunate.] Miikil states. [I hoped to see a Dolgrimite in person. Do you think Founder Cinculu will appear at today's meeting?]

"Unlikely," Kordonis replies. "From what I understand, he has missed ten of the last ten Grand Assemblies. He rarely shows up for any formal functions. I gather that he barely even speaks to the other Founders."

[I do not understand how a lauded Founder can retain his status while playing such an insignificant role in our society...] Miikil muses. [Why do you suppose the other Founders allow him to retain his position?]

"I haven't the faintest idea." Kordonis answers.

The skybus touches down, and all of its occupants depart. Unlike the elites traveling to the Founder's Eye who live nearby, the hodgepodge team of juniors sticks out like a sore thumb. Several elite Psions and Technopaths barely give the juniors a single glance, if that, before continuing toward the glass dome.

[I... I feel a bit nervous.] Miikil says. [Rumor has it that if a high-ranking Psion wishes, they can read your thoughts without you ever knowing.]

"The rumors are true." Kordonis says. "So lock away any further disrespectful thoughts regarding the Fifth Founder. Don't worry; we all have those thoughts, but you must not actively dwell on them while you are here. It's a good way to have your Core Body permanently disabled."

Miikil shudders. [I contemplate, and I comprehend.]

The group of juniors walks toward the Founder's Eye. As they draw closer, the hexagonal-shaped interlocking glass windows comprising the dome become more pronounced, each hexagon reflecting light slightly differently from the ones around it, making rainbow-like colors slowly play across its surface.

[How beautiful...] Miikil remarks.

"You're quite the sappy Psion." Kordonis chuckles. "Wait until you've been around for a few hundred thousand cycles. You'll become as stuffy and boring as all the others."

The two of them stop at the perimeter, where a dozen heavily armored Psions of the Seventh Rank stroll toward them and invasively scan their bodies and minds. These Psions, elite soldiers and protectorates of the Founder's Pavilion, hold extreme authority within the Golden Zone of Volgarius. Much like police officers, their role is to protect the capitol world at all costs and safeguard against internal and external strife, alike.

One of the guards speaks telepathically. [Sangin Kordonis. You have received priority seating placement. You will meet up with Sangin Lidra at seating position 114-H. You will travel directly to your seat. You will not linger excessively in the Golden Zone.]

Kordonis's expression becomes grave. "I contemplate, and I comprehend."

He and the others quickly hustle into the Founder's Eye, eventually arriving amidst a small sea of several thousand fellow Volgrim. A quick glance around the building's interior reveals a vast stadium outfitted with millions of high-quality holo-projectors, nutrient stations equipped with luxury food for the sub-species that require sustenance, and dozens of floating platforms in the center of the stadium where the absolute pinnacle of Volgrim elites sit.

Miikil's eyes widen as she spots one specific Psion levitating beside four others, two of them formed from holographic projections.

[Look, Kordonis! Exeutor Nufaris! I cannot believe he came to this meeting in person! Wasn't he stationed in the Outer Rim? I thought he was fighting the Plague?]

Kordonis snorts. "Executor Nufaris is an Eighth-Ranked master of Spatial Psionics. He can step through gaps in space more efficiently than any other Psion, aside from Founder Dosena herself. Traveling fifty thousand lightyears probably took him only a few planetary cycles, at most."

[Impressive... he is my idol. I can only hope to someday reach the same heights as him.]

"You would not be the first Psion to think such thoughts." Kordonis replies.

In addition to the hovering platforms containing high-ranked Technopaths and Changelings, the stadium possesses tens of thousands of seats along its interior walls, where the slightly lower, but still very highly-ranked elites sit, most of them consisting of holographic projections of their physical bodies.

With the War raging, the vast majority of Volgrim present are only capable of attending due to the Founder's Eye possessing galaxy-grade transmitters for contacting all these different fleets.

Kordonis nudges Miikil's side. "Over there."

He and his group walk toward a waiting hover-platform, one with a few Technopaths from Clans Oblong and Symmetra.

Sangin Lidra, head of Clan Oblong, hovers atop her circular leg-platform while gesturing to the seats in her pod.

"We are all direct witnesses who the Founders will surely interview." Lidra states. She gestures to a male Technopath seated on a spider-like platform with four spiked-legs. "Sangin Kordonis. This is Ordonis Limea, a prodigy of our clan."

Limea glances at the junior and nods. "My greetings."

Kordonis nods back. "This junior greets his senior."

"And this is Loputo Jidelor," Sangin Lidra says, gesturing to a Technopath standing on two metal-legs, similar to Kordonis himself. "He hails from Clan... Symmetra."

Kordonis nods perfunctorily, but toward the Technopath from a different clan, he does not express as much respect. "I greet the representative from Clan Symmetra."

"As do I greet you." Loputo Jidelor simply says.

Finally, Lidra gestures toward the last occupant of her pod, a weary and aged Technopath with a visibly pained expression.

"It is my honor to introduce Psymin Miralax, one of the last-living creators of the Sentinels. She will also be a key witness in today's proceedings."

Kordonis raises his eyebrows. "Psymin Miralax! My apologies, for my eyes are blind. I studied the Sentinels during my Education Cycles. Your name came up many times, due to your genius application of Living Moldanium on the Sentinels' chassis."

Psymin gives her junior a single glance before turning away. "Greeting. Standard."

Nobody bothers to introduce the other members of Kordonis's Bridge crew, not even Invocator Miikil, so lowly are their positions. They merely file to the back of the hover-pod and sit down, chattering quietly to each other regarding the fantastic sights of the Founder's Eye.

As the most prestigious member of their group, Psymin Miralax sits in the frontmost seat, while everyone else sits, stands, or levitates behind her. The hover-pod raises into the air, rising to many hundreds of feet and giving its occupants an incredible view of the Founder's Eye's interior.

At a quick glance, Kordonis calculates that of the tens of thousands of Volgrim attending, more than eighty percent of them are only present digitally, through holographic projections beamed into the amphitheater's many seats. And of the entirety who came, fewer than three hundred sit in levitating pods at the center of the arena, like his group.

"Enjoy this moment," Kordonis murmurs to Miikil. "You can live for a million more cycles and never get the chance to sit in such a position of privilege again."

As one of only three junior Psions in the levitating pod, Miikil becomes more than a little choked up with embarrassment at her lowly position. Compared to some of the legendary figures in the arena, including Nufaris and the other four Executors who were able to attend, Miikil cannot help but feel as utterly insignificant to her Empire as the mud-dwellers she has always loathed.

[Our Empire is so grand...] She murmurs. [I find it hard to believe the worst could ever happen. How could such a mighty assemblage fall to a single enemy?]

"Have you ever fought a plaguehost?" Kordonis asks.

[Only in a simulation.]

"Simulations... don't convey the terror of our enemy." Kordonis murmurs. "Before I earned my Captain stripes, I once took part in a battle against a plaguetouched world. The number of... of mutants were... too terrifying to imagine. We had to condemn the whole planet to Total Rendition."

[Total Rendition.] Miikil repeats. [Such a loss. We will never be able to utilize that planet's resources for our great Empire again.]

"A loss, yes, but a necessary one." Sangin Lidra says, interrupting the conversation between her juniors. "In the beginning, we tried recapturing worlds taken by the Plague. Doing so only led to the losses of billions of Volgrim lives. Then, we had to face our own soldiers, newly empowered and possessing a base upon which they could regenerate and reproduce. Those worlds provided the Plague with enough impetus to push deeper into our galaxy. Now, we dare not venture too deep into the distant reaches of the Milky Way. They will swarm us without fear. And all it takes is one infection to topple a fleet."

Her words chill the juniors among Kordonis's group. Having grown up hearing vague stories about the Plague, they only know as much as their seniors have told them, but even the dimmest-minded Volgrim knows that their enemies are terrifying beyond belief.

Minutes pass, and eventually, an hour.

Lidra raises her head to look at the partially-transparent glass ceiling, which allows some level of natural light to filter through.

"Look. Up there."

Kordonis, Miikil, and the rest of the Volgrim gathered in the Founder's Eye glance at the ceiling in unison.

A single pod descends through a small opening in the roof. While lacking any sense of grandiosity, its occupants immediately stir the hearts of every Volgrim present!

[The Founders!] Miikil chirps.

Three Volgrim sit silently in the platform's seats. The first one is a female Ascended, one of the most numerous members of the Volgrim Empire, yet also the species which least appears in public. As per their name, this species spends their lives hooked into virtual worlds of paradise, only occasionally decoupling for important matters involving their bodies or the galaxy around them.

However, the first person present, surprisingly, is not a Founder.

"Hmm. Muuxunuu, Founder Unarin's head administrator," Lidra muses. "Founder Unarin has chosen to send her in his stead. Perhaps he will come later?"

Muuxunuu, dressed in beautiful black and golden robes, sparkles brightly as the light glints off her neon pink skin. The many tendrils coming out of her scalp fall across her front and back, giving her a dainty and princess-like appearance.

However, her muscular body, hidden beneath those same robes, sits like a weapon ready to spring upon anyone holding nefarious intentions toward her master.

Beside Muuxunuu, the Second Founder's seat sits empty, with Founder Dosena also not having shown up.

"Strange. Neither Founders Unarin nor Dosena have come." Kordonis says. "Do you think...?"

"They are undoubtedly busy," Sangin Lidra answers. "Do not question the Founders. We are not privy to their movements."

"Of course, Master Lidra. Forgive me. I contemplate, and I comprehend."

In the next two seats, two Founders do indeed sit. Founder Treyza, a genderless Changeling of the highest order, gazes toward the many peons before them without any discernable emotions. Their pressed white suit sports several medallions, all representing their innumerable scientific achievements. As an Observer of the highest order, its ability to blend into populaces of inhabited worlds makes Treyza indistinguishable from a native-born person.

And beside Treyza sits Founder Cuanali, a female Technopath with a body nearly one hundred percent comprised of robotics. Even her heavily augmented brain makes her more of a cyborg than a living, breathing entity. So powerful are the alloys comprising her shell that even a directed nuclear detonation might not kill her. The countless redundancies in her mainframe make her physically imposing bipedal body distinctly unique compared to any other Technopath in the audience.

As for the Fifth Founder's seat...

[It seems Founder Cinculu did not come after all.] Miikil states. [I wonder if he will come later, or never?]

"I expect never." Kordonis answers.

Despite only two of the five Founders showing up, the audience's expectations raise significantly, showing their respect not only to the two Founders who came, but also Muuxunuu herself, a ridiculously high-ranking Volgrim among her peers.

"Greetings." Muuxunuu states, her voice broadcasting to the arena's speakers and overpowering the whispering voices of every elite present. "I am Muuxunuu, an insignificant servant to our glorious First Founder. Currently, Founder Unarin is not able to be present at today's meeting. He and Founder Dosena are presently speaking with several high-level operatives in the Hell Harbor system regarding a certain discovery made this very cycle. They will both join us all today to discuss their findings, but first, they must collect the data as required."

Muuxunuu's voice rises and falls rhythmically, like a song made from the ocean's waves. She pronounces every word clearly, taking great care to ensure her delivery is both perfect and flawless, like her vision of her master, the First Founder.

"Founders Treyza and Cuanali will start off today's proceedings not by discussing this new and important discovery, but another separate, yet equally important matter. It has been seven hundred orbital cycles since the last Grand Assembly of the elites. In that time, our enemies, the Kolvaxians, have pushed further and further within our borders."

Miikil frowns. [Kordonis. What is a Kolvaxian?]

Before Kordonis can speak, Sangin Lidra answers. "The Kolvaxians are our enemy, the Plague. This is a relatively new term we have created to properly identify our enemies. Keep listening, and you will understand."

Muuxunuu continues. "...present, there are more than two million habitable worlds in the galaxy. However, ten thousand have fallen to the Kolvaxians. We are unable to keep up with their expansion, and we cannot commit worlds to Total Rendition quickly enough to slow them down. In this meeting, we will discuss counter-measures to the Kolvaxians, as well as how to stop their plague from overtaking our society in its entirety."

"This Grand Assembly will be the first in seventy-three thousand Orbital Cycles in which we transmit its proceedings remotely to the high and middle-tier organizations. It will not be private, like the ones before it. Our goal is to educate the entirety of our populace on the coming events that our great leader, Founder Unarin, has envisioned. His peerless wisdom will grant us a path forward, one which we must follow unerringly if we hope to survive the coming calamity."

With those words, Muuxunuu launches the Grand Assembly, beginning the proceedings with ominous news.

Few present will be able to understand the long-term effects of the meeting until many years have passed...

Part 328: History And Future

Founder Unarin's head administrator, Muuxunuu, spreads her arms out and holds her palms face-up.

"The Kolvaxians are a threat the likes of which our people might not survive. However, if we pool our resources together and follow Founder Unarin's direction, I believe that eventually, we will purge the galaxy of their threat."

She lowers her arms and falls silent for a moment before continuing.

"In the eighty-five thousand cycles since the Kolvaxians have appeared, we have lost tens of trillions of fellow Volgrim. Thousands of worlds have fallen. Mighty warriors and elites have perished, never to return. We have increased the speed at which we replicate new Volgrim spawn, and yet, I feel that we have lost something important. Today, countless younger members of our species do not know the glory that once was our empire. They know only the creeping dread of our seemingly unstoppable enemy. Before I discuss the Kolvaxians in greater detail, let me tell you about our people and our rich, storied history."

"Our people evolved on a single backwater world." Muuxunuu states. "Grimvolas, the previous homeworld. Over the course of just one hundred thousand short cycles, we became a galaxy-faring species capable of traversing the stars. However, the Seven Great Wars nearly rendered our entire species extinct. It was only due to the guidance of a small group of rebels, those who hated the order of the Old Empire and who sought to reshape it into a unified one, that our people eventually ascended to a new plane of existence. Those rebels were our Five Great Founders."

"The Seven Great wars were, in many ways, not exceptionally different from the War we fight now. Brutal. Unending. Seemingly no chance of victory for any side. In the days before Founder Unarin's Enlightenment, when he divined the cause and effect of Order to Chaos, our brothers and sisters ripped each other apart without mercy. So brutal were our tactics that even the species we now refer to as 'mud-dwellers' would look upon us with dismay."

As Muuxunuu talks, Founders Treyza and Cuanali remain silent. However, distinct emotions appear in their eyes as they recall the Founding Eras which eventually led to their complete and total control of Volgrimkind.

"In the First Great War," Muuxunuu says, "The five species warred among themselves. Technopaths fought Technopaths. Psions fought Psions. This was known as the War of Brothers."

"In the Second Great War, the five species began to battle one another, all while vying for territory. Exceptionally bloody conflicts broke out across hundreds of worlds. Not content with killing their own species, every Volgrim begin to view the other species as even more fearsome enemies. This was known as the War of Differences."

"In the Third Great War, we began to use weapons of terrifying power. Planets fell. Territory lost its meaning. The grievances from the first two wars built up into irreconcilable differences that made extermination our primary desire. This was known as the War of Extermination."

Muuxunuu pauses. She nods slowly, seeing the looks on the many elite's faces. Those present in the Founder's Eye are not young, and many of them were born and raised during or shortly after the Seven Great Wars. However, hearing her vivid firsthand description of the past turns many of them nostalgic, making them reminisce about their species' roots.

"The Fourth Great War was a turning point. After the War of Extermination, many of us became weary of the endless battle. For seventy-five thousand cycles, we killed each other by the billions. We became bitter, thinking there would never come an end to the conflicts. Eventually, we began to fight in smaller-scale battles. Strategic ones that did not threaten our core worlds and territories. This was known as the War of Caution."

"Unfortunately, or perhaps fortunately, depending on how one looks at the past, the War of Caution did not last long. Unarin and the other Four Founders began to rise to prominence. As long-lived war heroes who survived all of the previous Great Wars, they were outspoken advocates for peace and unification. However, their words did not have any notable effect on the corrupt tyrants and power-mad despots of the Old Empire. As such, they began to look to permanent solutions. Thus, they founded the Five Fingers, an organization which would eventually become the Five Founders' base of power."

Muuxunuu calls up several images on her screen, images which send chills down the spines of every single ancient Volgrim watching the Grand Assembly's proceedings.

"The Fifth Great War was a turning point. With the assistance of Founder Cuanali and several other noteworthy Technopaths, including the great Psymin Miralax, seated here today, the Five Founders initiated a brazen plan to eliminate the power structure of the Old Empire. They created... the Sentinels."

Muuxunuu gestures to the holographic images of bipedal machines, each one with their own unique design, yet all possessing similar designs.

One of them is a pitch-black automaton with red accents, a blood-red iris implant, and smooth armor with few visible seams. Its 'fingers' narrow to knife-points, making it appear like a weapon capable of ripping through exosteel.

Another is a neon yellow robot with black stripes going off in different directions to break up its color palette. In addition to a standard left arm with five fingers, a built-in Lightning Gun sits embedded in its right hand, a weapon capable of overloading power sources, blasting holes in sturdy spaceship armor, and otherwise annihilating its enemies.

Muuxunuu continues. "The Sentinels were Unarin's ultimate weapon. Through the efforts of the Celestial Designers of that time, the very highest of Technopath elites, our species managed to create machines made from Living Moldanium, the sturdiest alloy in the universe. This rare material gave the Sentinels unmatched offensive and defensive power. It made them killing machines capable of stepping into any base, no matter how fortified, and eliminating all enemy assets without fail."

"Founder Unarin sent them out to kill the failed leaders of the Old Empire. Within less than a hundred cycles, he succeeded in his goal. This resulted in the Fifth Great War, the War of Suppression. Founder Unarin crushed his enemies and established a new galactic power structure, one that resulted in a brief but welcome era of peace."

As Muuxunuu finishes her sentence, Fourth Founder Cuanali stands up, drawing the attention of all the spectators. Muuxunuu falls silent and turns to look at the respected Founder, giving her the floor.

"The Sixth Great War. It was where we went wrong." Founder Cuanali says, her raspy and robotic voice transmitting to every spectator. "The Rebellion War occurred when the Sentinels we programmed began to act in odd and undesired ways. They killed civilians without cause. They incited fear and anger among the populace. This resulted in a violent revolt. Across several planets, people began to attack the Sentinels on sight. This triggered a programming error in their core matrices. They switched to viewing all biological life as inferior. They began to exterminate us, en-masse."

The Fourth Founder shakes her head.

"The first Great Wars pitted brother against brother. The last great wars pitted Volgrim against machine. We nearly lost everything. In the Seventh Great War, the War of Unification, we finally cast aside our differences to join hands against the Sentinels. During that last war... ninety-seven percent of our populace perished. Much like the current War, we faced an enemy that we simply could not injure, wound, or slow down. It was only by uniting our greatest minds to create the Gatekeeper Protocol that we finally deactivated the Sentinels, once and for all."

A solemn aura spreads throughout the Founder's Eye. Of the few thousand Ancient Volgrim present, those who lived all those millions of years ago, they recall the faint, distant memories of long-lost friends, brothers, sisters, and comrades they will never see again.

In the small pod belonging to Sangin Lidra and Psymin Miralax, the very few young Volgrim simply stare at the images of the holographic killing machines, ancient weapons which they have only read about in history books.

Reading about our history from data files is simply not the same as hearing a survivor speak of the events firsthand... Kordonis silently ponders. Young Volgrim like myself can only imagine the struggles the Founders had to endure to create the long-lasting Empire we have today.

After finishing her improvised speech, Founder Cuanali sits down, returning the floor to Muuxunuu.

Unperturbed by the Founder's interruption, Muuxunuu bows her head in respect before continuing with her speech.

"The Seven Great Wars culminated in our species' last battle for survival. During those dark days, the last three percent of our people thought we might not live long enough to see the Gatekeeper's completion. Fortunately, Founder Unarin, Founder Cuanali, and all the Celestial Designers managed to complete their weapon against the Sentinels and deactivate them forever."

"Today, we face a threat just as terrifying as the Sentinels, but this time, we do not have a Gatekeeper Protocol. We do not have a solution to defeat our enemies, and our situation grows more dire by the hour. This Grand Assembly is all about combating the Kolvaxians, and what we can do to stop them. Now, let us move onto our enemies themselves. For the first time, we will distribute all the detailed knowledge we have accumulated regarding this plague-like threat. However, what knowledge we do possess is frighteningly little. The Kolvaxians are as enigmatic as they are lethal."

Muuxunuu waves her hand, causing the images of the Sentinels to vanish. The moment those horrifying, ancient machines disappear from view, every Ancient Volgrim present heaves a sigh of relief. Even the most stalwart commanders of legions don't hesitate to show some emotion regarding the monsters which nearly wiped out their species. Only the youngest Volgrim, generations removed from their predecessors, view the holograms with a distinct lack of reverence.

"Let us start with the origins of our enemies. Fifteen thousand cycles after the Energy Wars, when we defeated the small-scale resistance on Planet Earth, the first Kolvaxian showed up on an outer rim world. At the time, we believed this infectious parasite, this enhanced and seemingly mindless organism, to have been a bio-research experiment gone horribly wrong. However, none of our greatest minds could have imagined that within just ten short planetary cycles, that entire world would collapse into anarchy and disarray. Due to our delays in dealing with the first parasitic strain, it managed to spread to more than five other worlds. Had we immediately acted to kill the first plaguehosts, rather than attempt to capture and study them, we might not be in our current situation."

"Today," Muuxunuu says, changing the view to show a small-scale model of the Milky Way, "the Plague has spread to cover many of the fringe worlds in the Outer Rim. The Western, Northern, and Eastern arms of our galaxy have become safe havens for the parasites. They have yet to fully take over the Southern Arm, but we estimate that within a hundred orbital cycles, they will succeed. And that is where our worst predictions begin to take hold. They will slowly move deeper into the galaxy, infecting one world after another, until they have infected our very core."

Founder Treyza rises to their feet. Muuxunuu falls silent, allowing the most renowned scientist in the Volgrim Empire to speak its thoughts.

"This one has conferred with many distinguished minds among our people." Treyza says, spreading out its webbed-hands. Its bulbous eyes glance around the room in even, sweeping gestures, as it speaks to the many delegates present. "We no longer believe the Kolvaxians are a simple parasitic experiment. In fact, we believe they are invaders from another galaxy."

Gasps of shock go up among the Volgrim. Some of the highest minds appear unmoved, having already heard this news in private, but among the mid and lower-level elites, pure chaos erupts as several hundred rise to their feet.

"Invaders from another galaxy? Then you mean to say this is a coordinated attack?"

[Impossible! The Plague is mindless! It simply spreads its infection wantonly.]

"What galaxy do the Kolvaxians originate from? How can you be so certain?!"

Many cries of outrage mix with questions to create a cacophony of noise. Treyza remains silent for several seconds, allowing the shock to reverberate in the room. Eventually, they raise their hands to silence the crowd.

"This one will answer all of your questions. Please be seated."

With two short sentences, Treyza silences the room. All the shock and awe subsides as every Volgrim quickly re-seats themselves, remembering they are in the presence of two of their revered Founders.

Treyza clears their throat. "One fact which Miss Muuxunuu mentioned previously still rings true. We know very little about the Kolvaxians. By giving them a designation, instead of referring to them as a mere Plague, we intend to change our methods of dealing with them, moving forward. Some of you have already noted that the Plague's previously simple and mindless movements have changed during the past two thousand cycles. They have begun using Psionic powers, when they obtain a Psion's host body. During the Fall of Wellak, Executors Huron and Sartran perished in battle. Some time later, after they revived, we discovered that duplicates of their bodies had appeared in a border skirmish, and those duplicates were able to competently wield Seventh-Level Psionics. While significantly less capable than the actual Executors, these two plaguehosts became major threats to our armada."

This revelation stirs much less controversy than the previous one, given how many Volgrim present know about the loss of Planet Wellak. The appearance of plaguehost Executors caused a major uproar in their armies only a few years earlier.

"More alarmingly," Treyza continues, "The duplicated Executors have been slain on five separate occasions, yet they keep reviving. We believe it is possible that the Kolvaxians have assimilated their genetic uniqueness. They are now able to replicate and create the powers of Executor Huron and Executor Sartran at will. This means they will continue to remain a threat, no matter how many times we slay them."

Executor Huron himself levitates next to Executor Nufaris and the other three high-ranking Psions of the eighth-level. As if to assuage the concerns of all the assembly-members, he raises his hand.

[Presently, it appears that my doppelganger can only appear in one place at a time. However, if the Kolvaxians become capable of replicating multiple copies of my body, they will be able to launch simultaneous attacks with the power of a seventh-ranked Psion. We cannot overlook this dire possibility.]

Treyza continues, once Executor Huron has finished speaking. "With regards to the Kolvaxians, the only thing that manages to slow down their spread is the Total Rendition of their worlds. Historically, we have used a mixture of Neutron Bombs and high-ranking Psionic power to condemn plaguetouched worlds to the nether. However, with the realization that the Plague can infest high-ranking Psions, we have been forced to switch to only launching Neutron Bombs from a distance. We cannot risk additional high-ranking Psions falling into the clutches of our enemies."

Cuanali stands up, chiming in with her own input. "With regards to the Neutron Bombs. Our supply is low. Our supplier, Marie Becker, cannot manufacture them quickly enough to meet demands. This has resulted in an exponential increase in Plaguetouched Worlds. We cannot destroy them faster than our enemies can infect them."

"Indeed." Treyza says, their tone grave. "We have explored many hypothetical options for combating the Kolvaxians. In secret, we have completed the work on ten capitol-class starships capable of sustaining Volgrim life among the stars. Please take a look."

Treyza motions with its hands, summoning an image of a massive, metal sphere, one that appears to be roughly a tenth the size of a small moon. Its relatively smooth surface, mixed with dozens of large hangars for fitting smaller ships, makes it look something like a mobile fortress.

"This is a special type of spaceship we have designated 'Refuge.' It possesses the theoretical maximum capacity of one million Volgrim crew and civilians. In the event the Kolvaxians overrun us, we are preparing measures to escape the Milky Way. These vessels are one of them."

After Treyza mentions the new spacecraft, one of the longer-lived Technopaths in the audience stands up on her spider-legs. Her holographic body flickers for a half-second as the projectors realign to display her full figure.

"Founder Treyza. These 'Refuge' ships appear to be based on the many deep-void exploration prototypes we were considering prior to the Energy Wars. Do they bear any relation to those vessels?"

"They do." Treyza answers. "Originally, the starships you refer to were intended to be used for exploring the Void beyond our galaxy's confines. However, these Refuge variants are intended purely for survival in the distant reaches of the Void. In the event the Kolvaxians overrun us, we five Founders have made a solemn pact. We will send off the younger generation to ten other galaxies and stay behind. If we allow our great Empire to fall, we will not deserve to count ourselves among the refugees."

Treyza's declaration causes many people, especially the younger Volgrim watching the stream remotely, to gasp in shock.

The Founders, legendary figures who brought Volgrimkind to its apex, now solemnly swear to give up their lives if their enemies overrun them.

This thought flashes through the minds of countless observers, causing the Founders' most diehard devotees to experience surges of pride and sorrow at the thought their Empire might genuinely be facing a crisis which will result in their total extermination.

"Worry not." Treyza says, as they puff their chest out with pride. "All five of us have lived long and worthy lives. If the worst should come to pass, the Executors and other leading Volgrim members will become the Founders of the next generation. We have already elected five suitable candidates to replace us."

Cuanali speaks after Treyza. "However. Our species will not necessarily fall. The Kolvaxians are strong. They are monsters that cannot be assessed by common sense. But they are not invincible. We will next discuss the measures we might take to ultimately defeat the blight ravaging our galaxy."

The two Founders turn their heads to nod at Muuxunuu before sitting down, once again returning the floor to her.

"The Volgrim have become a slow-minded species." Muuxunuu states. "Our long lives make us slow and resistant to change. We tend to think in terms of many hundreds or thousands of cycles. Sadly, the Kolvaxians are not like us. They evolve faster and faster every cycle. Their intelligence parameters improve visibly over time. This makes them a threat that will ultimately overrun us if we fail to rework all of our existing systems."

"First," She continues, "let us discuss our training programs for Psions. Unlike the other four species, Psions are our core battle strength against the Kolvaxian menace. As essential as the biological engineering services of Changelings are, and as formidable as the technological firepower of the Technopaths may prove, it is a fact that Psions hold total supremacy when battling the Kolvaxians. The ability to engage in infantry-level and void-level warfare without directly risking their bodies makes Psions our best solution to slowing down our alien adversaries."

"Unfortunately, the current training centers are slow and ineffective. Training a Psion to the fifth level will often require one thousand cycles at a minimum. We must reduce that time to one-tenth of its current value if we hope to maintain an even balance with the Kolvaxians. Any slower, and we will continue to lose territories in the Outer Rim."

Kordonis shifts in his seat, feeling a momentary flicker of pride for Invocator Miikil, one of the few Psions who reached the Fifth Rank before her thousandth year alive. She, too, beams at him excitedly.

However, among the elites present, many of them don't hold any positive thoughts regarding Muuxunuu's words.

A recently promoted eighth-ranked Psion projects his thoughts outward. [With all due respect to the great ones among us, I do not see how we can accelerate the training of young talents to the fifth level in so short a time. Not only are there more branches of psionics than ever for these fresh minds to explore, but the number of abilities they can acquire, and the practical applications they can utilize, grow every cycle.]

Several other highly-ranked Psions nod along to his words, giving his statement a high level of credibility.

[Divinator Fellrun speaks the truth. We cannot rush a Psion's education, for it will hamper their capabilities in the long run!]

[I know well the accuracy of Divinator Fellrun's words. It is impossible to offer a fully-fledged training course to our youngest minds.]

[It is as the old saying goes! A rushed Psion will never break past the Seventh Rank! They will suffer the humiliation of a plateau in their abilities!]

Muuxunuu allows the various Psion delegates to voice their complaints. After twenty time-units, she holds up her palm to silence them.

"Your objections are noted. A Psion with a rushed education will never be able to advance past the seventh rank. This will, in the long term, result in a drop in our great Empire's fighting abilities, and a shameful mark on our history. However, we need not necessarily rush anyone's development. Instead, we will focus our efforts on raising Specialist Psions who excel at only one or two types of Psionic potential. They will still possess sturdy foundations in their chosen fields, but will likely never be capable of branching out into other fields."

Some of the delegates frown, their expressions a mixture of disgust and tepid acceptance.

[Executor Nufaris! What do you think of this matter?] One of the Psions in the audience asks.

As one of the most lauded Volgrim in recent memory, Executor Nufaris holds a high position in every Volgrim's mind, not far removed from the Founders themselves. Despite being too young to have lived through the Seven Great Wars, his rapid rise to prominence and high affinity for all types of Psionic branches makes him an elite among elites.

The dark-skinned Psion slowly raises his head. His heavily built, starkly angular body gives him a dominating presence, one dwarfed only by Founders Unarin and Dosena themselves. When he speaks, the entire Empire falls silent.

[With regards to this matter. I do not like it, but I have no objections. I have fought Executor Huron's doppelganger on five separate occasions, as well as Executor Sartran. Were our enemy not so likely to overrun us, I would never agree to go along with the Founder's thoughts on this one particular issue.]

He shakes his head slowly, expressing his disapproval.

[Gaseous Manipulators. Liquid Manipulators. Primal Manipulators. Energy Manipulators. Body Manipulators. The branches of Psionics are both vast and numerous.

Each one possesses extreme levels of versatility. A single highly-specialized Liquid Manipulator of the Executor rank can even defeat me in mortal combat, if their specialty goes deep enough.]

[However, I am not pleased with the weakening and segregation of our Empire that this change will bring. While a highly specialized Liquid Manipulator of the Eighth Rank might be capable of defeating me in battle, he will never possess my versatility. He will not be able to trod through the gaps in the Void. He will not be able to withstand the power of a star. These Specialists will become capable of advancing to the Eighth Rank, but will possess no foundation in other branches of psionics. Ultimately, our people will fragment into splinter groups, with specialists of similar types sticking together to advance their own interests. What may save us from this calamity today will inevitably bring about another in our future.]

Nurafis falls silent, allowing his words to percolate in the minds of the audience.

[In the end, I will not voice any strong objection. If creating Specialists will give us a chance at defeating the Kolvaxians, or if it will at the very least slow them down long enough for the Changelings to create a bio-weapon that can exterminate them, we will be able to deal with the repercussions of today's choice, later. I would rather suffer a social calamity than an existential one.]

The other Executors nod in approval to his words, with the oldest ones shooting him glances of approval.

[Well stated, Executor Nufaris.]

[Eloquent, as always.]

Muuxunuu nods at Nufaris.

"Thank you for your input, Executor Nufaris. Naturally, the choice to shift to specializations is not one which Founder Dosena issued lightly. We will certainly have to pay a price for this choice, but in the end, our great Founders believe that it will lead us to victory, if we obtain more time to analyze the Kolvaxian threat."

Administrator Muuxunuu straightens her posture, assuming a noble stance as she switches topics.

"Now then. We have discussed the Kolvaxian menace and one solution among many. However, it has recently come to the Founders' attention that a second enemy has appeared in our galaxy's space. Unlike the Kolvaxians, this enemy might become a possible counter-measure to the Kolvaxians, allowing us to obtain total victory. However, Founders Unarin and Dosena have not come to this Grand Assembly yet due to the nature of this discovery. They are currently speaking with our analysts to determine what course of action we might take. For now, we will take a short recess until their arrival."

Muuxunuu sits down, leaving the Arena to fall utterly silent.

The spectators present, those not in the know, all but scratch their heads in confusion.

A new enemy? Someone who might also become a counter-measure against the Kolvaxians?

As murmurs go up among the audience-members, Sangin Kordonis glances at Invocator Miikil.

"It is time. Soon, we will likely have to deliver our testimony regarding the anomaly we observed. Are you nervous?"

[I am.] Miikil says. [But only a little. I had no idea our Founders had planned so far ahead. Not once have I heard of these 'Refuge' ships, nor any initiatives promoted toward specializing Psion initiates.]

"How do you feel about this Specialist Doctrine, in theory?" Kordonis asks. "Aren't you a Specialist?"

[I am not.] Miikil answers. [I possess high affinity for Gaseous and Liquid manipulation, but my capabilities in Primal Psionics are passable. Likewise, my affinity for Space and Temporal Psionics are abysmal. I possess some small degree of ability in Heat Manipulation, as well as Energy Manipulation, but my Defensive Psionics are also not particularly high. I only wished to specialize in Gaseous and Liquid Psionics when I first entered training, but my head Invocator insisted I obtain some mastery over all the basic Psionics, as well as at least dabble in Spatial and Temporal Psionics. I fear that doing so caused me to waste at least three hundred cycles of time. Perhaps, if I had only focused on my high-affinity psionics, I might even be a sixth or a seventh-rank Psion by now.]

Kordonis snorts, causing his mouth-tentacles to quiver. "A seventh-ranked Psion? In only one thousand cycles? I must express my doubt."

[You are not a Psion.] Miikil says indifferently. [You would not understand.]

"Fair enough."

The two of them continue to talk, until almost a full standard time-unit passes.

At some point, Muuxunuu stands up, silencing the room.

"The First and Second Founders have arrived." She declares.

Part 329: Fear The Wordsmith

Muuxunuu issues a declaration that silences the room.

"The First and Second Founders have arrived."

Immediately, all conversations stop. Every Volgrim present flicks their eyes or their psionic senses around, trying to be the first to catch a glimpse of the most revered Volgrim in their entire species' history.

The war hero who crushed the tyrant despots of the Old Volgrim Empire.

The genius who shut down the ancient Sentinels, saving his species from extinction.

The great leader who created the legendary tome known as Order to Chaos.

This single Volgrim, despite lacking the psionic power of the Second Founder, the scientific knowledge of the Third Founder, the technological mastery of the Fourth Founder, or the raw physical strength of the Fifth Founder, still holds more political sway and awe than all of them combined.

So influential and renowned is Founder Unarin that even those who have spoken to him regularly still feel a sense of awe and deep respect in his presence.

As the crowd searches frantically for Unarin, two figures pop into existence without fanfare, directly in the middle of the Founder's Eye. Unarin and Dosena instantly appear without making a sound, yet Dosena's incredible psionic emanations cause the others of her kind to instantly suck in their stomachs in surprise.

Founder Dosena's 'silent transference' ability! The power to step through the void without creating even a micro-tear!

Has her power grown since the last time I saw her? Is it even possible for a ninth-rank Psion to advance any further?

The First and Second Founders! I've never seen them in person before! What a great privilege! Ahh, if only I didn't have to view the Grand Assembly remotely, I could die of satisfaction right this instant!

As the crowd goes wild in their thoughts, the two newly appeared Founders levitate near the Founders' platform, not far from Muuxunuu, Treyza, and Cuanali. They don't join the other two immediately, but instead silently remain in place, allowing the hearts of their most elite warriors, scientists, and engineers to surge with emotion.

Unarin does not levitate on his own power, but rather, Dosena uses her psionics to hold both of them aloft. The fact that Unarin is not doing the levitating himself doesn't matter to anyone, as every Volgrim knows well that Founder Unarin is the brains behind every major movement the Volgrim make, while Dosena is his right-hand woman, the brawn of their empire. She follows his orders, and so, she is his most loyal and trusted subordinate.

"Hello, my brothers and sisters." Unarin says, while slowly raising his palm. "I greet the loyal generals of my Empire. I greet the soldiers. I greet the Changelings who work tirelessly to analyze our enemies, the Psions who put their lives on the line against the alien menace, and the Technopaths who build the warships necessary to defend our borders. Every Volgrim has a place. Every Volgrim has a purpose."

Unarin turns his head slightly toward Dosena. Without saying a word, she nods, and the two of them disappear and reappear inside the Founder's Platform, with the other two Founders, Treyza and Cuanali. Muuxunuu silently steps backward, leaving the leftmost position in the pod free for Unarin to take his rightful seat.

The First Founder's dark red skin gives him an aggressive air of authority, but his calm demeanor, his soothingly deep voice, and his regal black and gold robes combine to give him an unshakable presence. Every Volgrim who gazes upon their deified leader immediately feels their worries about the War fading away, as if Unarin alone could crush the Kolvaxians with his right fist while uplifting his people with his left.

Unarin rests his left hand against his waist. He slowly motions with his right hand while he speaks, using gestures to emphasize his words.

"My people. Our enemy was once thought to be a genetic experiment gone wrong. It is only in recent cycles that we have revised our theories, and now, we must change our previous course to deal with the Kolvaxian threat. These monsters are not scientific accidents. They are biological weapons, most likely engineered by a foreign faction. Three million cycles ago, when our Empire was in its prime, we dispatched probes to all of the distant galaxies in the Local Group. Now, we believe one of those probes may have alerted an unknown enemy to our presence. These Kolvaxians were not designed to subjugate us, but to destroy us. Whoever our enemy may be, and wherever they may lurk, we are likely to come to blows sooner rather than later."

The First Founder extends his index finger and slowly waggles it from left to right.

"We Volgrim are a prideful race. We are not like the inferior mud-dwellers of the lower planets. For every low-level conflict those savages fight among themselves, we have fought a hundred others. The civil wars of our ancient history were terrifying and world-shattering indeed, but eventually, we rose above those petty squabbles to become a unified species. The reason why we reign supreme is simple: We have had far more time to advance."

Unarin pauses.

"But..."

He slowly glances around the audience while tapping his chin.

"...What if another civilization existed which was much older and more advanced than ours? Perhaps in another galaxy? We must not discount that possibility. Life has emerged several times in our Milky Way. The odds that life has appeared in other galaxies is alarmingly high, which would mean that we may have caught the attention of a species far superior to ours. These 'Kolvaxians' could be little more than their lowest foot soldiers. And if the Kolvaxians are their weakest soldiers, what might their strongest ones look like?"

After allowing that horrifying idea to percolate in the minds of his audience, Unarin closes his eyes and shakes his head.

"Perhaps what I have just said is a possibility, but also, perhaps not. We do not know. There is no evidence directly supporting the hypothesis that the Kolvaxians are alien life. And even if there were, there is no evidence a higher entity created them. But consider, for a moment, the odds that the worst-case scenario might be true? If we grow complacent, we might view merely defeating the Kolvaxians as our ultimate victory, when in fact they could be the prelude to a greater war."

Sangin Lidra nods slowly, as do the other Volgrim in her pod. Sangin Kordonis lowers his head and momentarily falls into thought.

I had not even considered the possibility of these Kolvaxians only being the footsoldiers of a stronger alien Empire. However, if that is the case, it would explain their high genetic assimilation, as well as their low intellect.

As if to mimic Kordonis's musings, Unarin continues along that same line of thought.

"These Kolvaxians are frighteningly efficient killing machines. Not only do their bodies completely decompose upon death, but they will also willingly self-immolate if we capture them alive. They take the bodies of our people and enhance their physiology to new heights, making all their physical parameters reach the peak. The only weakness the Kolvaxians seem to possess is a low-level intellect, almost to the point of dull-wittedness. If they arose naturally, or were perhaps an accident made by one of our scientists, how have we failed to recreate their bodily perfection in the last eighty-five thousand cycles since their appearance? Not one Changeling scientist has managed to mimic the genetic assimilation powers of a Kolvaxian."

Unarin pauses for a moment. As he does, Founder Dosena steps forward, her brilliant golden armor drawing everyone's attention.

[Only three thousand cycles ago, the Kolvaxians abruptly began to use the psionic abilities of fallen Psions. This sudden development caught our species off-guard. Did they develop this ability out of nowhere, or did they always possess it, yet held it back until our guard was lowered? If the former is true, then the Kolvaxians may be evolving new abilities over time. If the latter is true, then they are not the mindless monsters we first thought.]

"Dosena is correct." Unarin says, nodding at the Second Founder. "Right now, the psionic potential any given Kolvaxian-reanimate possesses seems to be a full tier below the original host body's capabilities. However, it may be a ruse. They might be capable of using eighth-level Psionics; a power that could defeat any of our Executors in battle if used at an inopportune moment. Even if they cannot do so now, and even if the Kolvaxians are not the sneaky but brilliant enemies we fear, they might still improve their psionic abilities over time, putting them on par with our lauded Executors! I fear that either possibility could spell our doom."

"Therefore..." Unarin says, changing his tone noticeably, "As per what my Head Administrator stated previously, I have decided to enact various changes throughout our Empire. She has already spoken regarding the expedited training of new Psion seeds into specialists, but this measure alone will hardly be enough to crush the alien threat. We once outnumbered them a trillion to one, yet we could not kill them. Today, their numbers have started to reach parity with ours. Specialists will only slow their push into our core systems."

Unarin touches a device embedded in his wrist, a small psionic-built implant that allows him to remotely access core Founder-level knowledge restricted to his biological signature.

In the middle of the arena, ten hazy holograms of familiar-looking aliens appear, each of which makes some of the lower-ranked elites inside the Founder's Eye frown in confusion.

"The youngest among our people were not alive to witness the Energy Wars." Unarin states. "But I trust that nearly everyone here will remember that small-scale conflict which erupted over the Sol system's unique resources. We long before had recognized the presence of multiple Alpha-class species living on a single isolated world. I gave special permission to the Changeling scientists of that era to control and experiment on the populace. Many of these life-forms, such as the Angels, the Titans, and the Demons, possessed surprisingly potent abilities roughly equivalent to seventh-ranked Psions. Quite impressive, for mud-dwelling species."

"However," Unarin continues, "It was not those three Alpha-class species that rose up to dominate the world of Earth, but a seemingly insignificant Beta-class species known as Humans. These mud-dwellers possessed no latent abilities equivalent to the psionic arts. Their durability was low, and even their intellect seemed insignificant. However, all of that changed in a short three-hundred cycle timespan when their population exploded, their weaponry began to rise in complexity at an exponential rate, and their subjugation of the three Alpha-class species brought their own classification up to Alpha-level."

Sangin Kordonis listens to Founder Unarin while recalling the many lessons he learned about the planet Earth in his education courses.

Humans started off as Beta-class, but rose to Alpha-class, and soon became a genuine threat to our Empire. We eventually reclassified them in the Omega-tier, the same as ourselves. But why would Unarin bring them up now?

"At the time, we overlooked the existence of one particular type of human," Unarin says. "Due to an unknown infusion of magical power given to the humans by the Angels and Titans, a single individual human was born every generation, known as a Hero. These Heroes were, at first, not particularly threatening, but over time, the small gains they made and the rapid reproduction and death cycles of their species sped up their evolution speed to one that even outpaced our own Empire. Heroes such as King Arthur, Joan of Arc, and King Solomon spread knowledge and conquest through the world of Earth, eventually dominating all the other forms of life. Before we had time to react, they became a space-faring civilization, and they discovered our presence. That was when the Energy Wars began."

"In truth, the humans were never a major threat to our Empire." Unarin says. "But, given time, I believe that if we had stayed complacent, they may have discovered fatal weaknesses in our Empire and exploited us for all we were worth."

Unarin taps his finger against his hip, pausing to add emphasis.

"After the Energy Wars, many factions called for the outright extermination of the humans. However, Founder Treyza spoke out in favor of allowing them to live, albeit as a crippled and humiliated species incapable of ever again climbing to those same heights they once did before. Treyza argued that the humans had earned their right to existence, and as the protectors of this galaxy, we owed them the dignity of existing, just the same as we have given to all the other mud-dwellers. We are not a cruel and base species, but enlightened thinkers who must protect the small and fragile ecosystems of the millions of habitable worlds within our power structure."

Founder Treyza nods along to Unarin's words, but otherwise says nothing.

Continuing his previous thoughts, Unarin adds: "Were that the only reason for allowing their continued existence, I might not have agreed to Treyza's request. Ultimately, I ruled to allow the humans to exist inside Containment Worlds, supervised by the demons, not out of the goodness of my heart, but due to pragmatism. Today, that same species which once posed a minor threat to our Empire might become a saving grace in the light of the Kolvaxians. Behold: A new Hero has arisen among the humans."

Whispers of confusion go up among the crowd. Several high-ranking Psions communicate telepathically with one another, surprised by Unarin's declaration. As they watch, Unarin waves away the images of the ten greatest Heroes from Earth's history, causing a single hazy image of a shadowy biped to hover in the air.

"This human is known as Jason Hiro. Due to time constraints, we have not yet obtained an image of the Hero's appearance, but that will change soon. Were he the same as the other Heroes who came before him, I would not think him worth mentioning, but the abilities he possesses seem to be... quite unique."

Before continuing with that line of thought, Unarin lowers his gaze to one of the hundred pods levitating around the Founder's Pod, the very same one which Sangin Lidra, Kordonis, and the others of their group sit inside.

"Psymin Miralax." Unarin says. "I greet one of the last living ancient Celestial Designers."

The most revered person inside Kordonis's pod shakily rises to her feet. She bows slightly at the waist in Unarin's direction.

"This humble servant. Greets First Founder."

After showing the proper respect to one of Volgrimkind's most revered members, Unarin shifts his glance to another in the pod.

"Junior Fleet Captain, Sangin Kordonis. I understand that you and your crew battled an unknown life-form inside the Hell Harbor system. I have already read your report, but would you be so kind as to detail the events of that account for the many guests present?"

Kordonis quickly stands up and bows deeply at the waist. "Yes, First Founder. It is the greatest honor of my life to serve the Volgrim Empire, and yourself, specifically."

He returns to a standing position, then quickly but calmly recounts the events of that day.

"I was in the middle of a standard patrol of the Nuul system when I received an alert from the Hell Harbor system, just twenty light-years away. Senior Observor Kol, bearer of the Yellow Star Emblem, informed me of an anomalous energy signature within the system's space. He surmised at first that it may have been a stray satellite, or perhaps a meteor launched at high speeds, but its erratic movement and unique energy signature suggested otherwise. I compared the energy signature with our records and discovered that it bore a high similarity to a Heroic-Class Energy signature, with extreme levels of Holy Energy, as well."

Kordonis continues explaining the events of that day, making the listening guests lean forward with rapt attention. The more he explains, the more surprised and shocked they become.

"...at that point, the energy signature reappeared, as if stepping through a gap in the void. So abrupt was its appearance that we were momentarily caught off-guard."

"...and that is when it began disabling our ships and crew."

"...Not long after, all of our ships departed the system at maximum warp to return to Volgarius."

Kordonis concludes his story, and the audience leans back in their chairs, shooting looks of surprise at one another.

"Your firsthand account is much more detailed and vivid than the bland and cursory explanation given in your report." Unarin says. "Thank you for your testimony, Junior Captain, Sangin Kordonis. But before you return to your seat, I have a few questions."

Kordonis quickly bows his head. "I exist only to serve the Founders. Question me as you please, Revered First Founder."

"Very well." Unarin says with a nod. "In regards to this anomalous entity, what were your initial impressions of it? What did you think its origins were?"

"Initially, I believed it to be some sort of Plague- err, some sort of Kolvaxian-infested Heroic Artifact." Kordonis says. "According to the historical records, no Heroes had appeared, or perhaps even could appear after the destruction of Earth. I did not change my opinion until attending this very Grand Assembly."

"Noted." Unarin says. "And this Heroic-class anomaly, it did not kill a single crew-member among your vessels, even after you ordered your troops to attack it?"

"It did not." Kordonis replies. "This was one of the more incongruent aspects of the encounter that left me puzzled. I was uncertain as to why a Kolvaxian-infested Heroic Artifact would not kill anyone, but at the time I rationalized that perhaps the artifact had altered the Kolvaxian's biochemistry, leading it to adopt a more pacifistic mindset. Now I understand that my thoughts were shameful and uneducated. I beg forgiveness from the Grand Assembly-members."

"There is no need for you to feel shame," Unarin says, offering a faint but welcoming smile to his junior. "Were I in your position, I might have come to a similar conclusion. There was no reason to think a Hero had emerged, and a Heroic Artifact may indeed have been responsible for those readings. After all, that is how we located the lost artifact of Excalibur before adding it to our vaults."

Unarin gestures for Kordonis to sit down, and so, the junior Technopath does. Practically beaming with excitement, he struggles to maintain an emotionless front, but his very essence undergoes apotheosis as he revels in having partaken in a dialogue with the mightiest and most revered Volgrim in his entire Empire!

Meanwhile, Unarin turns his attention to Sangin Lidra.

"I have received a similar report from Confessor Vulpanix regarding two strange encounters she has experienced within the last few planetary cycles. Sangin Lidra, Head of Clan Oblong, I understand that you were there to experience one of those encounters. Please detail what you saw for the other delegates."

Lidra straightens her posture while her hover-chair rises a few inches, allowing her to metaphorically 'rise' to greet the revered First Founder.

"Founder Unarin, this humble servant did indeed observe an anomalous event during an inspection of the Neutron Bomb Facility located beneath the Earth's crust. While engaging in dialogue with Marie Becker, I noted..."

She speaks for several minutes, detailing the events which led up to the sighting of an unexpected errant soul within Marie Becker's laboratory. Sangin Lidra and the others of her team speak together to confirm their stories, but only one person present actually saw the soul, and so, Unarin turns his attention to that individual.

"Judicator Halamis," Unarin says, as his attention falls on a nearby pod filled with high-level Psions, and one eye-catching sixth-ranked Psion with a status far beneath the elites encircling him. "What did you see when the Errant Soul appeared?"

Judicator Halamis stands up, but keeps his head slightly bowed to show deference not only to Unarin, but the higher members of his Psionic clan.

[This poorly-trained junior laments his lack of ability.] Halamis says. [When the Errant Soul appeared, I was unable to sense its presence. It was only when Confessor Vulpanix identified its position with her superior aptitude that I was able to momentarily perceive its relative position. My skills are woeful and inadequate compared to hers.]

"I have spoken to Confessor Vulpanix regarding the Errant Soul," Unarin responds. "I only hoped to see if you had observed anything noteworthy. You may sit down."

[This small figure thanks the First Founder for his wisdom. I contemplate, and I comprehend.]

Judicator Halamis sits back down, and Unarin returns his attention to the other delegates.

"Confessor Vulpanix is presently unable to attend this meeting. Due to an incident which also occurred in the Hell Harbor system, perhaps related to the one recounted by Sangin Kordonis, she is staying there to investigate the area and procure any additional information which might assist our Empire. However, I did take the liberty to record a conversation between her and I. This is it."

Unarin summons a projection of himself speaking to Confessor Vulpanix, where she recounts not only the appearance of the Errant Soul she nearly captured in Marie Becker's laboratory, but also the battle which just took place between the Cherubiim and the Volgrim fleet.

Recordings of the battle play every so often, causing countless Psions and Technopaths to stare with widened eyes at the horrifyingly powerful Primordial entity which ripped apart one of their elite fleets in mere minutes.

[By the Founders! What incredible power! That creature must be a Founder-Level threat!]

[I recognize that energy. The monster is surely an angel, and one that appears to be even stronger than the Archangels we fought during the Energy Wars.]

"How could an Archangel amass such power? Is someone plotting against our Empire in secret? Could this be related to the 'Hero' Founder Unarin spoke of?"

Unarin allows the delegates to listen to his discussion between himself and Vulpanix while simultaneously playing images of the one thousand Primordial phantasms ravaging their fleet. Once she concludes with the explanation about the Cherubiim's disappearance, the recording concludes, and Unarin shuts it down.

"As you can see," Unarin says, "the Archangels have returned. We are not currently certain of their exact numbers, but we have determined the monstrous power they wielded in that battle was likely short-lived. They might be able to unleash it again, but they also might not. What is clear to me are the following facts..."

"Firstly: The anomalous Heroic Energy signature, the one which defeated our fleet but did not kill any Volgrim, is likely the Hero I spoke of earlier, Jason Hiro."

"Secondly: The Archangel which ravaged our fleet was not one singular entity, but a unique combination of three Archangels, Raphael, Michael, and Uriel. If you are unfamiliar with the latter two names, that is because we did not fight either of them during the Energy Wars. I have surmised that Raphael somehow survived the Energy Wars, despite the Demons' claims to the contrary, and then revived his brother and sister through some ancient technique, OR, the Hero brought them back with his unique ability."

"Thirdly: I have seen little evidence that the Hero and the Archangels are direct allies. The Archangels' attack was bloody and violent. By contrast, the Hero did not cause any bloodshed to our troops, even though he absolutely could have. This tells me that he is not necessarily of the same mind as them. This could be be a psychological weakness we can exploit."

Unarin pauses while he turns off the images of the battle, returning the vague and amorphously masculine Hero's body back to the main holographic projector.

"Jason Hiro. I have interviewed the current leader of demonkind, Emperor Ose. I have interrogated her and determined many crucial details regarding this Hero's abilities, and the facts have raised my cautionary instincts to their highest level. He is not a Hero like the ten mightiest ones who came before him. He is a new breed, one with a power so threatening that I dare not rush to declare him our enemy."

Founder Unarin's tone becomes so grave that the other Volgrim can only swallow their objections, wondering what sort of power could cause him to speak in such dire terms.

"Jason Hiro's power is called Wordsmithing." Unarin explains. "Based on what Ose has told me, it functions like so..."

Unarin spends the next half an hour detailing several events which have occurred over the last six orbital cycles, barely a blink of an eye in their species' lifetimes. The elites gasp and growl, surprised, angered, and frightened by Unarin's recountings.

Executor Nufaris frowns. When Unarin pauses to take a breath, he interjects. [First Founder Unarin. Forgive my interruption. I must ask: Are you stating that Jason Hiro caused the immolation of a star? He forced a star to immediately enter the Supernova phase?]

"...Correct." Unarin says.

The First Founder's single-word reply causes even greater gasps of horror to spread throughout the audience.

"Marie Becker's Neutron Bombs can't even cause such a massive Void Event!" One of the Technopath leaders exclaims. "They can only destroy small and mid-sized worlds! This Hero's power exceeds common sense! We must eliminate him at once!"

[He is a threat we must not ignore!] A seventh-ranked Psion elite declares. [With just one word, he could annihilate the entire Volgarius system! We would be helpless to stop him!]

Several similar objections go up. Unarin listens patiently while the exalted leaders and elites of his Empire speak their minds.

After another thirty minutes, the crowd quiets down, waiting for Unarin to clarify their doubts.

"Every word you have said is correct." Unarin replies. "This Hero is extremely dangerous. However, I have not finished. You see... there is not only one Hero. There are two. The Wordsmith has cloned himself... and that clone is every bit as capable as the original body. They possess all the same abilities. They do not seem to have any major differences in what their powers can accomplish. Therefore..."

Unarin's expression turns ugly.

"...It is possible there may be even more clones we have not accounted for."

[Two Heroes? Two Wordsmiths?] Executor Huron says, disbelief in his projected voice. [Is this true?]

"Naturally." Unarin says. "As I explained, the Wordsmith can reshape reality with just his words. Cloning himself... it might be a trivial feat, or it might not. Knowing how many enemies lurk at every corner, it is possible he has prepared counter-measures in case we were to move to eliminate him. By taking direct action to kill the Wordsmith, we might paint ourselves as his enemies, and thus, cause any secret clones of his to appear from the Void itself."

"Notably," Unarin adds, "Ose did not seem to have thought of this possibility. I discerned her greedy impulse to capture and control one or both of the Wordsmiths. She foolishly made an enemy of Jason Hiro, and now, the Archangels have run rampant across her society. Half a dozen Emperors died to the Cherubiim. Did they act alone, or were they sent by the Wordsmiths? We do not yet possess enough information to make a determination. We do not know his motives, his mindset, his allegiances, his worldview, or anything which would give us an edge in handling him. He is an enigma, one we must immediately solve."

While many of the elites glance at one another with worried eyes, Sangin Kordonis rises from his chair.

"First Founder, if I might speak, this humble junior has a thought he would like to express."

Unarin nods. "Go on."

"If we make the Hero our enemy, I cannot imagine the catastrophe which will befall us," Kordonis says. "However, based upon your observations regarding the anomalous entity I encountered, it was most likely Jason Hiro or his clone which subdued my fleet. He did not kill any of our troops, and so, I might hesitantly offer that he does not consider us his enemy; at least, not yet. Perhaps we could make an ally of this Wordsmith to battle the Kolvaxian menace?"

The First Founder offers another faint smile. "Your observational skills are excellent, Junior Sangin Kordonis. Indeed. Making an ally of the Hero might be the salvation we require to exterminate the Kolvaxian threat. However..."

Unarin sighs.

"...That was before the demons made a move on the Hero, one which potentially changed his outlook on not only the demons, but us, as well. Observe."

A projection of a Paradise-Class planet appears, one with rich and vibrant forests, crystal-clear oceans, and moderate volcanic and geological activity.

"This world is Tarus II." Unarin states. "Once I learned of the Wordsmith's existence, I dispatched a stealth fleet to observe his home system. Luckily, he has not built any advanced fleet defenses yet. Perhaps he lacks the ability, or perhaps he does not consider such a defense necessary. He may even be capable of erecting spatial defenses instantly, so formidable are his powers. Whatever the case, our infiltration vessels were able to snap these images of his homeworld."

The projection changes to show a greatly zoomed-in image of Tarus II, where thousands of pockmarks and burned forests lay in wastes. One elevated plateau especially stands out, thanks to the huge crater in its center.

"...The foolish demons attacked Tarus II, where the humans had built their fortresses. Unable to capture either of the Wordsmiths, they detonated a thermonuclear device of unknown origin and killed millions of humans. While we might not care for the deaths of even a billion mud-dwellers, the same cannot be said for a highly empathetic being such as Jason Hiro. If we examine his behavior toward Junior Captain Kordonis's fleet, we can determine based upon the profiles of other humans that Jason Hiro would react... poorly... to the deaths of his comrades. Considering the timeline of events, I believe that the bombing of his world caused Jason Hiro to dispatch the Archangels to Hell Harbor."

"Therefore," Unarin concludes, "I am not certain whether Jason Hiro will become a great ally of ours, or an existential enemy, potentially more terrifying than the Kolvaxians themselves. This... uncertainty... has made my determining of what actions to take... difficult."

"Earlier, I stated that humanity might become our saving grace against the Kolvaxians. Without a Hero in their ranks, it is debatable whether they would ever again reach the status of an Omega-level civilization, on par with ours. With a Hero like the Wordsmith leading them, I believe their ascension will not only be swift, but certain. The question now becomes... faced with the possibility of extinction on both sides, and two enemies which might ultimately destroy us all... how should we deal with these conflicting variables?"

Unarin nods at Founder Dosena.

"Second Founder. Explain the next steps to our esteemed guests."

Founder Dosena clenches her fists. She takes a step forward, while slowly blinking her eyes.

[As you command. I follow your will, Unarin.]

Part 330: Grand Assembly's Conclusion

Founder Dosena folds her hands behind her back. She levitates a meter above the Founder's Platform and assumes a dignified pose.

[Our species faces multiple existential threats. In addition to the Kolvaxians and the Wordsmith, the First Emperor of Demonkind has also made an appearance, shortly following the conclusion of the Battle for Hell Harbor.]

Dosena pauses to allow the other Volgrim to mentally acknowledge her words before continuing.

[Our galaxy is changing. As Founder Unarin mentioned before, during the battle against the Cherubiim, the demons succeeded in momentarily breaking through the barrier of Demon Emperor. We previously believed this feat impossible, yet it seems the demons are also capable of becoming a Founder-level threat, just like the Wordsmith and the Kolvaxians. We cannot remain complacent or assume the elites of our people will save us all. There are only so many brilliant minds to go around, and far more advancements we must make if we hope to weather this storm.]

Dosena holds up her hand. An object materializes in her grasp, one she takes great care not to touch. A faint but noticeable pressure emanates from it, one which all the Psions can detect, though the other sub-species cannot.

[This is a Heroic Artifact.] Dosena states. [It is Solomon's Crown, previously thought lost during Earth's destruction. It is an artifact capable of toppling empires... and through a stroke of good fortune, it has landed in our hands.]

Solomon's Crown slowly revolves as it hovers above Dosena's palm. She gazes at it for a moment, deliberately drawing attention to its beautiful jewel-encrusted surface, before waving it away, back to an unknown location.

[Unfortunately, according to our informant, Solomon's Crown was already found by the Wordsmith. Due to unknown reasons, it has left his possession, but even so, our informant has confirmed that Jason Hiro was able to utilize its Errant Soul to bolster his mind. King Solomon was a human Hero known for transferring vast amounts of knowledge to select humans capable of inheriting his knowledge. Many famous human inventors became known for their accomplishments, thanks to Solomon's influence. Shortly before the Energy Wars began, during the three-hundred cycle 'Ascension Period' which led to humanity's rise, Solomon was a main player in building up his entire species. The fact that the Wordsmith has obtained his favor likely means he is also a super-intelligent lifeform, one we cannot afford to underestimate.]

[How will we rise up to our modern challenges?] Dosena asks. [With as many as three Founder-level threats on the horizon, our resources have never been stretched more thinly. We have spent tens of thousands of cycles investigating Marie Becker's Neutron Bombs, yet we have been unable to replicate the method she uses to empower them to a level capable of annihilating worlds. Our best scientists can only confirm the energy she uses to make them is magical in nature. Whether she has obtained access to some hitherto unknown region of subspace with magical energy to spare, or she has created a unique conversion process, our problems remain the same. We are forced to rely on her to contain the Plague, and her output is far too insufficient to meet our needs.]

[It is time for the juniors of our civilization to rise to the occasion.] Dosena says. [The second measure we Founders have agreed to take is that we will institute a broadened reward system for any capable scientist or inventor capable of contributing to the war effort.]

Dosena waves her hand again, summoning images of the same spherical devices Jason once observed inside Marie Becker's observatory.

[Junior scientists and Technopaths, generally speaking, cannot design weapons or devices that are superior to the ones made by their betters. The youngest of our people are simply too inexperienced to make a large difference on their own. However, we hope to be proven wrong. Until the Kolvaxian threat, the Wordsmith, and the demons have been fully dealt with, the Founders are prepared to offer a tenfold increase in War Provisions to any young mind capable of advancing our technological and scientific capabilities.]

[If anyone in our Empire can replicate Marie Becker's Neutron Bombs, or if they can create devices that improve our fighting power and lethality against the Plague, not only will that person receive enhanced rewards, but so too will their teachers and those who uplifted them! This will incentivize those who are incapable of assisting our Empire themselves to look for the brilliant young minds who will!]

Visible surprise goes up in the crowd. Sangin Kordonis and his crew widen their eyes as Dosena speaks of the shocking rewards they could receive if they were to directly assist the Volgrim Empire.

A tenfold increase in War Provisions! The Founders truly are the most fair and just among our people!

He and all the other Volgrim know well how valuable War Provisions are. Unlike simple currency, a single Provision can often only be obtained by an entire group of Volgrim. When a laboratory makes an important discovery or contribution, all of the members will receive one provision, and they will have to vote on the intended use of that Provision to benefit themselves collectively. Almost never do singular individuals receive a Provision, let alone multiple of them.

[As a show of good faith,] Dosena says, [I will immediately issue rewards to those here today who have already earned these new Provision allotments. To Confessor Vulpanix, who bravely battled an unstoppable Founder-class entity and obtained extremely valuable intelligence for our Empire, we grant her... five Provisions!]

A roar goes up in the audience as several ancient Volgrim cry out in shock and delight. So generous is Dosena's first reward that many of the youngest Volgrim present, those elites who have only earned a handful of Provisions in their entire lives, turn purple with envy.

[In addition,] Dosena continues, [Were it not for the Confessor's discovery inside of Marie Becker's laboratory, we might not have become aware of the Errant Soul infiltrating her premises. We grant her one additional Provision for this discovery. Any soul capable of evading a Confessor's grasp is one we must be highly wary of.]

As the crowd continues to become more and more restless, Dosena issues additional declarations. [For their valiant fight against the Cherubiim, we are also issuing three War Provisions to every ship that escaped alive from the unified Archangels. While fleeing is dishonorable, fighting a losing battle is not. We require every possible ship to combat the Kolvaxians, and the Confessor's quick thinking saved a portion of her fleet.]

[The increased rewards do not only pertain to those who make important scientific and technological improvements to our society, nor only to those who fight valiantly, but also those who provide us actionable intelligence on our enemies, to that end, I have further rewards planned for some other noteworthy figures.]

[Sangin Kordonis. You will receive two War Provisions for your detailed analysis of the 'Heroic Anomaly' inside the Hell Harbor sector. You and your crew will receive five Provisions, as well, for their efforts against the Anomaly.]

[To the informant who delivered Solomon's Crown to the Founders, we grant them ten War Provisions. Their detailed report has yet to be fully examined, but the inside information regarding the Wordsmith and his allies will undoubtedly prove crucial in our efforts going forward.]

Dosena issues several additional provisions to various Volgrim, making their hearts surge with pride. Once she completes her declarations, the Second Founder returns to other matters.

[Next, we will discuss the Wordsmith's war capabilities. I have personally investigated the star-logs relating to the unexpected supernova event in the Polaris system which occurred six orbital cycles ago. Now that we have uncovered the truth of the matter, I reopened the data files related to that event and discovered some interesting facts the delegates here may appreciate.]

[First, the Polaris star was still billions of cycles from entering a supernova phase. Upon discovering that the Wordsmith caused its ignition, I believed that he must have inserted a tremendous amount of energy into it to overload it. However...]

Dosena turns her head to look at Founder Treyza. The Head Changeling takes a step forward and speaks.

"The Polaris star's final moments before its supernova ignition were highly irregular. Based upon measurements we took, we did not detect any spikes of extreme energy within its core. Instead, we believe the Wordsmith may have altered the star's 'causal state,' rapidly aging it several billion years and causing a supernova event in only a few micro-time units. This indicates the Wordsmith might not possess an incredible wellspring of power like the ancient Hero, King Arthur, but instead can alter the fabric of reality itself. Depending on one's viewpoint, this can be much better or much worse than a high mana potential."

[According to Emperor Ose,] Dosena says, [The Wordsmith has recently obtained a Heroic artifact of unimaginable power. Based upon her description, we originally surmised that this artifact was none other than Excalibur, but that artifact continues to remain safely under guard inside our secure vaults. Whatever artifact the Wordsmith has come to possess, it seems to rival Excalibur's might, which does not bode well. A Hero who can rewrite reality, but who also possesses a large pool of mana, can either become a formidable ally or an unstoppable enemy.]

Treyza nods along to her words. "We have determined that our best measure to deal with the Wordsmith is by procuring as much intelligence on his movements as possible. To that end, this one will begin assembling its most capable and adept Changelings to assimilate into the culture and society of Tarus II. We will infiltrate the Wordsmith's highest echelons to learn his strengths and weaknesses. We will look into his allies, enemies, and emotional vulnerabilities."

Founder Unarin raises his hand. "Everyone. While I would much prefer to control the Wordsmith directly, I am not so certain we will be able to do so. To that end, I am also drafting up plans to ingratiate him to our cause. We will deliver the equivalent of one hundred War Provisions to his colonies, in the hopes that we will... reach an understanding. Unlike the foolish demons who struck at him and made him their blood-enemy, we will first seek to ameliorate the Wordsmith and ensure he thinks of us positively. If he has had contact with Marie Becker, then we may already be too late, but I would prefer any offensive actions come second to diplomatic solutions."

Several Volgrim in the audience cross their arms and scowl. The mere thought of trying to supplicate an inferior mud-dweller doesn't sit right with these haughty elites, but they know better than to question Unarin's decisions.

Unarin continues speaking.

"Now then. There is only one last thing I must bring up before we conclude the Grand Assembly's prepared points and open up the floor for questions."

Unarin pauses. His demeanor changes as he adopts a pensive expression.

"With regards to the worst-case scenario. I want to inform you all that I have begun to consider reactivating the Sentinels."

An abrupt silence swallows the arena. Ten thousand Volgrim freeze up and stare at their leader with looks of horror and fright.

[R-reactivate... the Sentinels?] One of the ancient Psions, a survivor of the Seven Great Wars, asks. [Founder Unarin. Have you lost your mind?!]

"Executor Huron." Unarin says, directing a calm gaze his way. "I have not."

[Why would you ever consider taking such a measure?!] Huron asks, panic in his telepathic voice. [Reactivating the Sentinels would-]

"It would guarantee our extinction." Unarin flatly states. "Make no mistake. I am aware of what will happen. However, in the event the Kolvaxians overrun us, I must consider every option. We defeated the Sentinels once. The Gatekeeper Protocol, or some variant of it, might be able to control them and make them serve us again. At the very least, the Sentinels might kill us all, but they might then take revenge on our behalf, albeit unwittingly, by exterminating our alien enemies. If we're going to die anyway, I would prefer a measure of mutually assured destruction."

The First Founder directs his attention away from Executor Huron to the rest of the assemblage.

"Reviving the Sentinels is not a decision I would ever make lightly. It is our final judgment upon the universe if the Kolvaxians, the Wordsmith, or any other entity threatens our rule. Additionally, you can all feel secure in one important fact."

Unarin gestures to Founder Cuanali.

"Founder Cuanali does not know the location where the Sentinels are stored, nor does any other Volgrim in existence, except for me. However, I do not possess the credentials necessary to release the Sentinels from their containment, and neither do any other Volgrim in our society. Only Cuanali can release them. In order to reactivate the Sentinels, both of us must be present and willing to work with each other. I need not remind you all of the hatred Cuanali holds for the Sentinels, after they annihilated her entire clan, her friends, and her family. More than me, and more than anyone present, no member of our people hates the Sentinels more than the Fourth Founder."

Founder Cuanali stares forward stoically. "I would not willingly release the Sentinels. I will not do so unless there is no other option. I would rather die."

"So, you see," Unarin says, "The Sentinels are our final option, one I'd rather not use... but they do exist, and they cannot be destroyed. Their Living Moldanium bodies make them all but impervious to damage. Releasing indestructible monsters on the modern galaxy would be a disaster unlike any other."

The First Founder sweeps his gaze around the room.

"We have discussed much, today. Do any of you have questions you would like to ask, while your leaders are present? Questions lead to answers, and answers breed knowledge. Nothing is more sacred to us now than ensuring we possess the foundation necessary to deal with our future dilemmas."

Several Volgrim raise their hands. Unarin gestures to a seventh-ranked Psion in one of the nearby levitating platforms.

"Creator Demila, you may speak freely."

The authoritative Psion levitates slightly into the air and nods her head at each of the four Founders.

[It is my honor to attend this assemblage, exalted Founders. I only wish to ask a question of Founder Dosena. Given the threat we face from all of these sources, is there any reason you have not joined the war against the Kolvaxians?]

Dosena crosses her arms.

[I am the last line of defense for our homeworld. As Founder Unarin and the others have made it clear, we are still not certain if the Kolvaxians are highly intelligent entities waiting for an opportunity to strike, or if they are simply a deadly strain of rapidly mutating parasites. If I were to travel to the high-threat areas of our galaxy and engage in battle, a single Kolvaxian could strike during my absence. By the time I returned, Volgarius may have already fallen.]

Creator Demila nods and returns to her seat.

Other Volgrim chime in with their own questions.

[Founder Treyza! Have we had any success in breeding bio-agents capable of killing Kolvaxians en-masse?]

"Founder Cuanali! What of the advancements in warp technology? Will we ever be able to create Warpgates big enough for ship to pass through? They would prove instrumental in rapidly fortifying the border regions under attack every day."

[Founder Unarin, have you evaluated the humans' capitol world using Order to Chaos?]

That last question hushes much of the crowd as they look to the First Founder, hoping to hear his insight.

Unarin nods slowly at the Psion who asked.

"Indeed, I have. While the world of Tarus II has been recently scarred by battle and made seemingly unrecognizable, I have made several determinations regarding humanity's military tactics, their culture, and their overall cohesion. Observe."

Unarin summons a projection of Tarus II, the very same one he showed earlier, complete with a crater in the center of its main city, and all the destruction surrounding it.

All of the delegates fall silent, waiting to hear their leader's words. As the person who once penned the fabled epic known as Order to Chaos, Founder Unarin is the most uniquely qualified being among his people to comprehend truths about their reality.

Meant to be used as a training manual for enlightened thinkers, Order to Chaos provides a unique insight into Founder Unarin's mind, providing the barest glimpse of how he can discern countless details about other civilizations purely based on how they organize their architecture.

Founder Unarin zooms in on the city from above, creating a photo-realistic map of it for all to see.

"The world of Tarus II once belonged to a Earth-borne entity known as Bahamut, the Sphinx. Through some as-of-yet unknown method, the Wordsmith took control of it from her and made the planet his base. As such, many remnants of Bahamut's previous civilization remain intact, yet we can still discern how the Wordsmith has changed its society to his preferences by comparing its current appearance to outdated planetary scans."

Unarin summons a second image of Tarus II, one that lacks the crater in the center of the Sphinx's city, as well as many fewer buildings.

"Look here, at these triangular formations," Unarin says, pointing at several dozen massive structures. "These are called 'Pyramids' by the former residents of Earth. Bahamut herself once hailed from a land known as Egypt and she favored Egyptian architecture. Even after the detonation of a thermonuclear device, the pyramids only suffered damage to their exterior, yet remained standing. The Wordsmith, after taking over the planet, did not destroy these structures. Curious, wouldn't you say? Might he possess some sort of affinity for the Pyramids? Might he also enjoy the sights of Egyptian architecture?"

Unarin pauses for half-a-beat before shaking his head.

"I think not. Here, you can see other buildings the Wordsmith left behind after taking over. Though broken and shattered by the detonation event, it is clear that they stood there not long before. The Wordsmith did not follow a cardinal rule of empire-crushing; that of destroying monuments built to and for the previous rulers. In order to solidify his reign, Jason Hiro should have destroyed all the important landmarks related to Bahamut in order to ensure her memory would quickly disappear from the minds of her subordinates. Why did he not do this?"

"My hypothesis is simple." Unarin states. "Jason Hiro... is a lazy leader."

Sangin Kordonis frowns after hearing Unarin's declaration.

Lazy? I can follow the logic, but how did the First Founder reach that conclusion so swiftly?

"My observations, as always, come from many sources," Unarin says, unhurriedly. "Not only did the Wordsmith not destroy Bahamut's previous structures, but he simply built new ones on top of the old. If you look at this cluster of buildings here, you can see that they are all ugly, squarish boxes. They are purely utilitarian and do not conform to the location's previously established design philosophy. Most likely, the Hero did not have time or did not wish to expend any extra effort to make the new structures blend in with the old. If he were an admirer of Egyptian architecture, he would have gone to greater lengths to make the new structures blend in with the old."

"Therefore," Unarin concludes, "The Wordsmith was either in a rush to construct as much housing and as many buildings as possible to support a booming population, or he is lazy, or perhaps even both."

Unarin shrugs.

"Of course, I am only guessing. We will know for certain if I am correct when we eventually meet and confront the Wordsmith in the near future."

The Grand Assembly's attendees rise up to give the First Founder a standing ovation. Like every time in the past that he has displayed his flawless usage of Order to Chaos, he once again dazzles them with his superior tactical insight, a gift that has won them countless wars over millions of years.

"All hail Unarin!"

[Our Founders are wise! Our Founders are just!]

"We bow to the knowledge of our great leader!"

"We contemplate, and we comprehend!"

Unarin closes his eyes and lightly tilts his head.

"I thank you all for coming. I hope this meeting has granted you all unique insights, and that you will keep in mind the changes which will soon sweep across our Empire. Until next time."

When Unarin lifts his head, he and the other three Founders vanish, pulled away in an instant by Dosena's Spatial Psionics.

Muuxunuu alone remains behind.

"To all the gathered delegates, I thank you for attending. Please enjoy four standard time-units of mingling. Speak to the others around you, and exchange insights."

Before leaving, Muuxunuu directs a glance toward one of the hundred pods surrounding hers.

"Sangin Kordonis. Founder Unarin wishes to speak to you in private. Please make time after the Grand Assembly to meet with him."

The young Technopath jolts in shock. He numbly nods his head to Muuxunuu's words, feeling a wash of warmth sweep his skin.

"Y-yes. I will! At once, Head Administrator!"

"There is no need to take immediate action. Founder Unarin will contact you within the next cycle to arrange an appropriate meeting time. Farewell."

As Kordonis blubbers out a hasty word of thanks, the Founders' Pod levitates upward, and Muuxunuu disappears into the gap in the ceiling.

Miikil claps her hands while looking at Kordonis excitedly.

[What a great honor! I wonder why the First Founder wishes to see you, specifically? You are so lucky!]

Kordonis nods giddily, his usually stoic expression melting away as he imagines talking one-on-one with the leader of all Volgrim.

But then, a cold dread settles on his shoulders.

"Say... you don't... you don't think I did anything wrong, do you?" Kordonis asks. "I'm not in... trouble... am I?"

Sangin Lidra chuckles. "If you were, he wouldn't call you in for a personal meeting. Just thank the stars and accept your good luck, Junior Kordonis. Not even I have been so fortunate as to receive a one-on-one meeting with the First Founder."

Kordonis settles down, mollified by his senior's words. "I see. Then, that is good."

"...That is good."

Part 331: Prodigy's Promotion

Half a day after the Grand Assembly.

Founder Unarin silently strides into his core offices, the key floors of the Founder's Thumb, one of the five towers comprising the Founder's Fingers. Not far from the topmost levels, his core offices rest on the 341st through 350th floors.

The number of personnel inside this highly restrictive zone are few and far between. Unlike the largely insular towers of the other four Founders, a variety of Volgrim subspecies work here, consisting primarily of Technopaths, Psions, and Changelings. All of them are high-level leaders of various factions in the Volgrim Empire, and possess an incredible amount of pull with their respective organizations, as they answer directly to Unarin himself.

However, among these executives are also a few of The Ascended, the same subspecies as Unarin himself. While nearly the entirety of the Ascended live inside of simulation pods spread across thousands of worlds, a few designated ones work inside the First Finger. Muuxunuu counts among them, but she is not the only one.

Unarin strides up to one of the few and far-between Ascended, a male with obsidian-black skin manipulating holograms in the air which show a battle taking place around one of the Outer Rim worlds in the 'northwest quadrant' of the Milky Way.

"Commander Randis." Unarin says. "How are things looking?"

Even as he asks, Unarin's eyes flick to the numerous highly classified readings hovering in the air, the red and blue 'blips' of ships fighting spaceborne Kolvaxians, and the casualty count slowly incrementing upward.

The other Ascended, Commander Randis, doesn't even turn to look at Unarin. "How do you think it's going, brother? We're losing. I intend to call a retreat in one point seven standard time-units."

Despite Randis's utterly casual remark, lacking any respect or discipline, Unarin does not reprimand him.

"I see. Have any high-level Psions fallen?"

"No." Randis answers. "I've been careful to keep them in the backlines. We don't want a repeat of the Goltaris Prime incident."

"Have Huron and Sartron's doppelgangers appeared at this battle?"

Randis shakes his head. "They're too busy tearing apart our flanks in the eastern galaxy."

Unarin closes his eyes for a moment, then opens them and starts to walk away. Without even saying goodbye, he turns to walk toward a stairwell leading to the next floor up.

Before he leaves, Randis calls out to him.

"Brother!"

Unarin pauses.

"Yes?"

"That was a beautiful speech you gave." Randis says, his tone dripping with sarcasm. "I nearly wept for joy. But speeches won't change our situation. If our people find out how badly we're losing, we'll have an exodus on our hands. A revolt!"

Unarin stares at Randis and nods.

"I am aware."

"So?" Randis asks. "Do you have a plan? Something viable? Actionable? Our frontline troops are exhausted. Every cycle that passes, they become more and more embittered with your leadership. All it will take is one leak and the people will know how badly we're-

"Enough." Unarin says, raising his hand. "You don't need to tell me. I'm working on... our options."

Randis snorts. "The Wordsmith."

"Yes. The Wordsmith. But not just him."

Unarin pauses, as if debating whether he should say anything else.

A moment passes before he wearily nods again.

"...We've had a small bit of success bio-engineering a contagion that will affect the Kolvaxians."

"You told me that already." Randis says. "That worthless contagion was utterly ineffective."

"The new strain isn't." Unarin replies. "But the problem is... it affects all biological life. It will kill the plaguetouched all the same as the uninfected. The lethality rate is extremely high, and if it reaches a civilian populace, the damage will be catastrophic."

"So, it's also useless." Randis summarizes. "In which case, let's hope that Wordsmith of yours will do something to help us. I've enjoyed ten million cycles of life. I'd like to live for another ten million, if possible."

"As would I." Unarin concludes.

The First Founder continues heading upward. He avoids taking any turbolifts to the top, and instead climbs the stairs manually. These brief respites allow him the time to think while he walks. He observes the atmosphere of each floor, noting the cold and grim expressions on the faces of the Volgrim working in his tower. Unlike the elites from the Grand Assembly, not one person working for the First Founder has any hope for victory lingering on their faces. They long ago lost their beliefs they could win the Kolvaxian War.

Eighty-five thousand cycles. Unarin thinks. To the young, it is an eternity, but to the long-lived, it isn't even a flicker in our eyes. My age made me slow to react to the disaster when it first began. Am I falling into the same traps the rulers of the Old Empire did? Perhaps it won't be long before a rebellion comes to dethrone me, as well. Poetic justice.

Unarin eventually reaches his main office, a floor devoid of any other life forms. Highly secretive experiments line the walls, along with weapons, data modules, and other such things that would make those with greedy minds perform double-takes if they saw them.

In addition, thousands of artifacts taken during Volgrimkind's countless millennia of existence sit on tables and shelves, all of them positioned to give the blackened obsidian walls, floor, and ceiling an artistic touch. The dim lights provide an atmosphere of contemplation for Unarin, who usually detests annoyingly bright lights that disrupt his concentration.

The First Founder walks over to a holographic interface terminal, or a HIT, for short. He stands in its center and places his palms onto two orb-shaped control modules sticking out of the floor. A rush of data feeds into his hands and travels through his body, reaching his brain in an instant. At the same time, the most advanced holographic matrix in the Volgrim Empire lights up, showing Unarin the data regarding several ongoing battles against the Kolvaxians.

"Hmm. There's a small hole in our defenses seven degrees from the northern galaxy. Right in this Theta cluster... I'd better dispatch patrol ships there, just in case."

Unarin mutters to himself many times over the next thirty minutes. He speaks out loud for no particular reason, perhaps only to hear his own voice.

As he changes some variables and alters some attack vectors, Unarin's thoughts continue to churn.

"Hmm... and it wouldn't be good if the Wordsmith..."

Unarin pauses.

"Dosena."

He speaks to the void around him. A moment later, with a silent flicker of movement, the Second Founder appears before him.

[Yes?]

Dosena's authoritative voice speaks directly into Unarin's mind. Whether she was listening to him the whole time for nefarious reasons, or whether it's simply something she always does to keep the First Founder safe, is something only the two of them know.

"I want increased security on the Terran Artifact Vault." Unarin says. "Put Confessor Vulpanix in charge, once she has finished her work in the Hell Harbor system."

[The Confessor's talents would be better put to use performing her regularly assigned duties.] Dosena says. [Why would you put her in charge of those old vaults?]

"Because they house Heroic Artifacts." Unarin says. "Now that we have Solomon's Crown, we also hold the trifecta of Camael's Legendary Artifacts. But, this worries me. What if the Wordsmith uncovers the vault's location? I don't want to take a chance he'll re-obtain the Crown, nor Excalibur, nor the Dominion Rod, to say nothing of the other artifacts."

He pauses to look directly at the six-eyed Psion.

"Confessor Vulpanix has encountered the Wordsmith once, or at least that is what I believe. It seems likely he was poking around in Marie Becker's laboratory. We can't dismiss the possibility they've met. You and I both know that as valuable of assets her Neutron Bombs are, that half-Terran cyborg is dangerous. She would like nothing more than to break free of our control."

[Ose keeps a tight leash on Marie Becker.] Dosena states. [Though, now that she has ascended to the rank of Emperor, I do not view her as a reliable asset anymore. She has begun to rebel against us in ways both large and small.]

"We have to rely on Ose." Unarin says, returning his attention to the holographic displays. "I don't have a superior operative to put in her place, and even if I did, they would be a Technopath, better served building weapons to fight the Plague."

Dosena lightly drums her fingers on her waist.

[You're more high-strung than usual.]

Unarin nods. "Naturally. You know as well as I do how poorly the War is going. Now, we have to rely on Demons and potentially the Wordsmith to fill the gaps in our abilities. I need capable hands, but even in an Empire of septillions, there are only so many worthy elites able to step up at any given moment."

The First Founder exhales in annoyance.

"Solomon's Crown. You made sure not to touch it, right?"

[Of course.] Dosena says. [His ability to download the memories of others is too troublesome to manage. Unfortunately, that Changeling who delivered the Crown did touch it.]

"Kotori..." Unarin murmurs. "Low-level. Insignificant. They somehow ended up in the right place at the right time. Still, that junior managed to deliver us essential information at just the right time. Its capabilities might prove useful. Send them back to Tarus II. They can continue to discreetly gather intel for us."

[The knowledge Kotori possesses of the Plague should not be anything beyond what the common folk know.] Dosena interjects. [But Unarin... don't you think we might be missing out on an opportunity?]

"To use Solomon's wisdom for our own ends?" Unarin asks, his question rhetorical. "That would be a foolish move. He is a human, with human allegiances. Any information given to us by a Terran, especially one as crafty and wise as Solomon, will be sure to lead us astray. As much as I'd love to beg him for a method to slay the Kolvaxians, the cost we'd pay would be too steep."

Dosena eyes the First Founder with a predatory gaze.

[You will not consider speaking to Solomon, yet you would consider waking the Sentinels?]

Unarin pauses his work. He turns to Dosena once again, easily picking up on the hostility in her gaze.

"It would be a last-ditch effort at revenge. Nothing more."

[Lie to others and lie to yourself!] Dosena says. [But do not lie to me. You have always regretted the failures of the Sentinels. You want to bring them back. You want to perfect them. But you cannot, Unarin. They were flawed from the outset.]

"Flawed. Flawed!" Unarin snarls. "No! They were perfect! It was only the brain-scans we used that were flawed. If we had created a composite of hundreds of different brains, we might-"

[We might have created an even more terrifying and unstoppable army!] Dosena interrupts. [One with higher intelligence which even the Gatekeeper Protocol could not disable. Count your blessings that we survived, Unarin. And for void's sake, stop thinking about the Sentinels! I never want to see them again!]

She cuts her words off with a snarl, making even Unarin flinch. The First Founder turns away and snorts.

"They were the perfect weapon." Unarin mutters. "Some people are blinded by their emotions."

[Some of us can see reason.] Dosena says, before making a slight motion with her hand.

The Second Founder vanishes, leaving Unarin all by himself once again.

He returns to his work, cursing under his breath as he reminisces about the 'good old days.'

Some time later, footsteps approach from behind him. Unarin doesn't turn away from his console.

"Muuxunuu. What is it?"

Unarin's Head Administrator stops some distance away and tilts her head downward.

"First Founder. That young Technopath has come as you requested. Sangin Kordonis."

The Mightiest of The Ascended pulls away from his console.

"Ah, yes. Fourth in line to lead Clan Oblong. A junior among juniors, but also a starship captain, promoted early in his years. He must have some level of competency."

"Sangin Kordonis's academy records were merely average." Muuxunuu says. "I looked up some of his academic files. He has made no noteworthy contributions to Volgrim society. Despite his position in line to lead Clan Oblong, it is extremely unlikely he will perform any administrative duties in the next five hundred thousand cycles, if left to his own devices. There are many more capable Technopaths better suited to his position."

Unarin walks toward Muuxunuu. She remains motionless as he reaches toward her and lightly touches her hair-tendrils, playing with them absentmindedly as if they were his personal toys.

"Yes, at face value, he doesn't seem all that noteworthy," Unarin says, "But I have a feeling about him. He made some... interesting statements during the Grand Assembly."

Muuxunuu's skin shifts colors from pink to red as Unarin caresses and kneads her hair-tendrils. The sensitive erogenous zones, rarely touched by any but the closest people to her, make strange feelings well up in her body.

Even so, she shows no outward display of emotions.

"He... is waiting on the 240th floor." Muuxunuu says, hesitantly.

Unarin retracts his hand, but as he does, he also strokes Muuxunuu's face.

"Has he been waiting long?"

"No. Not long." Muuxunuu answers.

Unarin lightly pinches his Head Administrator's chin before offering her a faint smile. Then, he walks past her, toward the turbolift.

"I'll expect those documents I requested yesterday to be ready and waiting for when I return," Unarin says, before the turbolift doors close shut behind him.

After Unarin leaves, Muuxunuu blinks her soft, pink eyes.

"Yes, First Founder."

The turbolift drops down nearly 100 floors, reaching the 240th floor in under a minute. Thanks to its inertial dampeners, Unarin barely even notices the change in momentum.

When it reaches the correct floor, the doors open, and Unarin steps off into one of the more 'public' areas in the First Finger, a place with perhaps a hundred high-level Volgrim strutting around somewhat pretentiously.

All eyes fall on the First Founder as he strides forward. Even while the others offer greetings to their supreme leader, Unarin's eyes fall on a very out-of-place Technopath junior, a young Volgrim who tries his best to not look too excited about personally meeting the First Founder.

When Unarin walks up, Sangin Kordonis starts to step toward him, only to pause, unsure whether he should make the first move or not.

"F-First Founder! It is my greatest honor to have a personal m-meeting with you!" Kordonis sputters.

"I imagine it is." Unarin says. "Come with me. I wish to speak to you in private."

Dozens of envious gazes fall on Kordonis's back, as even the many elites in this tower, Unarin's personal citadel, rarely get to speak to him one-on-one.

Unarin guides the junior to a small alcove office, some unused space with generic decorations. The transparent door opens and closes behind them, and a layer of interference technology activates, turning the glass pitch-black and obfuscating their conversations from any visitors who might try to listen in remotely.

A small black table sits in the room, with four chairs surrounding it. Unarin takes a seat on one side, and gestures to the chair across from himself.

"Sit."

Sangin Kordonis shivers as he sits, his mouth-tendrils nervously writhing around as he tries to calm them down.

"S-so! For what reason have I earned the, uhm, honor of coming here?" Kordonis asks.

"You said some very interesting things during the Grand Assembly." Unarin answers. "They made me take a small interest in you. Have you read Order to Chaos, by chance?"

Kordonis nods his head up and down several times excitedly.

"Oh, yes! I would be shocked if any self-respecting Volgrim hadn't! I must have read your work at least a thousand times!"

"A thousand?" Unarin asks, raising an eyebrow. "Oh. That's quite impressive for your age. What part of Order to Chaos stands out the most in your mind?"

"That is a simple question to answer!" Kordonis says. "The whole text is part of a foundation upon which one can build their own worldview, but for me, it was Chapter 17 that resonated the most with my view of the universe. When you wrote about the deterioration of civilization over time, and how bad architecture breeds bad thoughts, it made me think of so many primitive worlds who would never be able to receive the Founder's Light!"

Unarin closes his eyes.

"Ah, yes. Architecture is the means by which a conqueror can understand not only his enemies, but his own people, as well. Indeed, it was that simple insight which allowed me to ultimately overturn the Old Volgrim Empire and crush its corrupt despots. Once I understood the rot which had set into its very foundations, I became capable of attacking it at its weakest points."

Opening his eyes, Unarin taps his wrist-embedded psionic implant, causing a holographic image of a small planet to hover in the air before him.

"This world is Tarus II, where the Wordsmith lives. During the Grand Assembly, I pointed out a few minor features of its civilization that I had noticed... but I am curious as to what a young mind might observe. Here, take a look, and tell me what you see."

Unarin zooms in on the capitol city of Tarus II, and to Kordonis's surprise, the image appears much clearer than it did during the Grand Assembly.

As if having read his young guest's mind, Unarin says, "We received updated details a few standard units ago. I have updated the map accordingly."

Kordonis nods, then falls silent. He uses his ability to manipulate technology, a feat that all Technopaths share, to shift the image from a distance. He zooms in on several key areas. He rotates the buildings to get good looks at them from multiple angles, or at least the few which survived the 'thermonuclear detonation event.'

After ten minutes of silence, Kordonis pulls back. "Forgive me, Founder Unarin, for my eyes are immature, and my knowledge flawed. I will point out anything that I can, but I hope that you will not find my meager skills too shameful."

Unarin waves his hand casually. "Nonsense. Every young mind starts somewhere. Speak."

Several expressions of guilt wash across Kordonis's face as he pauses to gather his thoughts.

"W-well... in regards to this mountain range to the west, I noticed several hidden artillery weapons which had been destroyed by the demons. Their design is crude, and their positioning awkward. I can only surmise the person who constructed them was an amateur, as their payloads would likely cause destruction to rain upon the Wordsmith's allies and enemies alike."

The First Founder nods. "A simple observation, but necessary. What do you think their positioning tells you about the one who build them?"

"Well..." Kordonis says, haltingly. "If I must be honest, I do not think the Wordsmith built them. Or rather, he did build them, but he did not decide to place them there. Someone with more knowledge of warfare did. A trusted advisor, perhaps?"

"That's right." Unarin says, offering a faint smile. "Excellent observational skills. I believe the one who placed these crude weapons put them at the most effective location. They were designed to attack only once an enemy force had wholly overrun the Warpgate's position. They were also carefully concealed to catch the demons by surprise, and judging by the marks scarring the land, they succeeded. They do not share the Wordsmith's haphazard placement, nor his lazy architectural design in the primary city-space. Someone competent placed those artillery units."

The First Founder gestures to the hologram. "Continue."

Growing a little bolder, Kordonis points to a location south of the city.

"I noticed a small but poorly concealed hole in the ground here. After giving it some thought, I've determined it did not lead to the Trifrancium Mines on this planet, but a different location, most likely for deep storage. After giving the matter some thought, I determined it must be a prison complex."

Unarin cocks his head and shifts his expression, as if waiting for a follow-up. Kordonis, eager to please his idol, immediately continues.

"...However, unlike the artillery formations, this prison does not appear to have been built with much thought. It's too far from the city, in a position where it would be hard for the military to reinforce it if there was an escapee, at least not in a timely manner. I believe the Wordsmith decided the location, though he did not construct it himself. There are signs of Goblin activity in the area. I believe Goblins may have hewn out the underground portion of the prison without the Wordsmith's help."

"Another well-spoken observation." Unarin praises. "You're better at this than I expected, young Kordonis. I have elite generals leading my forces who have never read Order to Chaos in their lives, and I even know a few who have read it many times, yet they never seemed to grasp its fundamental truths. You would be surprised at how many Volgrim who you revere, yet who cannot grasp the concepts espoused in my tome."

Kordonis laughs. "You praise me too much, First Founder. I am only a shallow thinker, slow of mind, and dull-witted to boot. My educational scores were mediocre, and my abilities in technology have never been worth mentioning."

"Just because you are a Technopath does not mean you must become a master of technology," Unarin says. "Strategic minds can assist greatly in the War effort. Go on, tell me some more of your observations. I refuse to believe these two points are all that you've noticed."

Kordonis's skin flushes with color. "Well, truth be told, I did notice some other things, but no doubt, you've seen them well ahead of me."

"Naturally." Unarin replies. "But I am not testing myself. I am testing you to see if, perhaps, our educational institutions did not give you the credit you deserve."

Kordonis nods. "Well, in that case..."

He and Unarin spend the next five hours talking. They exchange thoughts and ideas, examine many other civilizations, and swap observations regarding the many alien cultures the Volgrim have encountered over their years.

"Marvelous. I have truly found a diamond in the rough!" Unarin says. "To think you were languishing as a mere starship captain, Sangin Kordonis. Some would say your advance has been too quick, considering your poor academic scores, but I think the Empire has wrongly held you back. I see bright stars in your future."

"No, no, you praise me too highly," Kordonis says, bowing his head. "I may have some shallow insights regarding Order to Chaos, but that hardly makes me noteworthy. No doubt, there are thousands of elites more capable than I at understanding its nuances."

"Thousands?" Unarin asks. "No. Not thousands. Perhaps not even hundreds. Dare I say, there might be only a few dozen philosophers who can understand my work's intricacies. I look long and hard for those shining jewels, but sadly, most will only be capable of parroting the basic words written on the page. They are imitators, regurgitators. Sometimes, an elite Psion or Technopath might glean some small insight and think themselves a strategic genius, but compared to you, I would barely call them a buffoon."

Unarin taps his fingers on his chair's arms.

"Kordonis. I require someone to take on a specific role, and that someone will be you. You will go to the world of Tarus II. You will represent the delegates of our peacekeepers, and will initiate contact with the Wordsmith. I will expect you to report directly to me, and to facilitate diplomatic negotiations with the Wordsmith and his people."

Kordonis's entire body turns ice-cold from shock. "M-me? Founder Unarin! This is... a great honor! I cannot believe... I am shocked you would pick me!"

"Oh, keep the humility to yourself," Unarin says, waving his hand. "Too much humility will sour other people's thoughts. You must take pride in your strengths."

"Yes, of course." Kordonis says, bowing his head. "I contemplate, and I comprehend."

"You will choose a retinue of capable assistants." Unarin says. "You will ensure they can assist you in this venture. I care not if they are friends, family, or clan-members. Just make sure they are up to the task. I will be giving you a high level of autonomy regarding the Wordsmith, with only one distinction."

The First Founder pauses to look Kordonis in the eyes.

"You must take extreme care when dealing with him. Proceed with caution. Any entity capable of accelerating a star's heat death is not one we wish to make our adversary. If, however, the worst should happen, you must be ready to take decisive action. I do not trust the Wordsmith, because he seems to be a lazy simpleton possessing extreme levels of knowledge. Somehow, he is both a genius and a dullard. I will expect you to detail his mannerisms to me so that I might make additional considerations of his capabilities."

The young Technopath nods sagely. "Yes, Founder Unarin. I understand, and will not fail you in this pursuit."

"Good. Then you are dismissed." Unarin says. "Do not let me down, Kordonis."

Kordonis stands up, bows deeply, then strides out of the room, a visible pep in his step.

After he leaves, Unarin remains behind, staring blankly at the wall.

"The Wordsmith... who is he? A lazy imbecile who I can bend to my will, or a frighteningly intelligent enemy who I mustn't anger for any reason? Such an enigma... so many possibilities..."

Part 332: Fortified Future

Tarus II, inside the crystalline walls of the Fortress of Retribution.

Humanity continues to slowly but surely rebuild after the events of Ose's Stormbringer Attack. Of the original three million humans and the significantly smaller monster and demon populace who existed before the demons attacked, fewer than a third of the population remains alive. Among them are many injured individuals, those who have not yet received proper medical care due to a lack of healers. With Belial and Jason having left to retrieve Hope, many people have had to make do with only the bare minimum of medical care necessary to stabilize their injuries.

Beelzebub's detonation not only directly killed more than a million people, but it also spread radiation around the planet, afflicting tens of thousands of humans, monsters, and friendly demons with radiation poisoning. If left untreated for too long, their injuries would eventually become fatal.

Grumblings and bitterness begin to set into the minds of the populace. Even when Jason returns, a small portion of his people force themselves to hide their rage at his ineffective leadership. After all, were it not for his pacifistic tendencies, the demons likely would not have made such a huge push right into the heart of the human resistance, and more than two million people wouldn't have died.

One woman, suffering from radiation burns, cries into her hands. "My children died because of that Wordsmith! Now they're trapped in Mephisto's grip! I hate him, so much! I never should have left my home world!"

Her thoughts, echoed by many others, don't go unnoticed by the Wordsmith's allies. Several T-REX wearing soldiers listen silently to the complaints of their neighbors, logging them as per the Wordsmith's instructions. They collect data on the general feelings of the populace, hoping and expecting the Wordsmith will take care of their grievances sooner rather than later.

Inside a thrown-together building hastily constructed via Jason's Wordsmithing, a small contingent of humanity's higher-ups gathers to assess their gains and losses from battling Gressil.

Jason Hiro, Phoebe Hiro, Belial, Chadwick, and several other people, including Hans Wagner, all sit at a simple, rectangular table, leaning heavily on their arms and elbows.

"We lost a lot of good men and women." Chadwick says. "That incursion into Faith's End yielded us a lot of prisoners with broken minds, one Wordsmith, and an angel. The gains weren't worth the losses."

"We saved Hope." Jason says, maintaining a neutral expression. "The last thing we wanted was for the demons to control his power. As for that angel girl... I'm going to have a chat with Gabriel about her, later. The next time Uriel comes back, Raphael should provide some unique insights into how in the hell she's survived for so long. After all, angels need mana to survive, and I doubt she had any humans praying to her while she was imprisoned."

Belial glances at Jason. "I already figured out the reason why... but you're not going to like it."

After a momentary pause, she continues.

"Gressil... he forcibly injected demonic mana into the angel. She's been holding onto life because he's utterly corrupted her body. There's not much holy energy left anywhere on her. Not only does his demonic energy just barely sustain her, but it causes her immense pain, too. I can probably give her more energy to keep her alive, but I'll also end up hurting her, too."

"Maybe I can fix that..." Jason murmurs. "My Wordsmithing is probably the key. I can probably invert the nature of her internal energy. And what about Hope? We regrew his limbs, but his mind seems... broken. Whatever Gressil did to him went well beyond simple torture. He hasn't woken up from his coma since we returned."

"I can't heal a person's brain." Belial says. "So... I don't know what we'll be able to do for him."

Phoebe, sitting on Jason's right side, between him and Belial, leans her head against her husband's shoulder.

"Amelia is staying with Hope. She seems pretty close to him. Maybe she can help him... recover."

"Or maybe she can eat him when we're not looking." General Chadwick retorts. "Absurd. She's the Black Queen! Whatever sorcery Hope used to revive her, she's still a monster! We cannot let her continue to live in our midst."

Seated on Jason's left-side, Phoebe's spiritual self, projected from Jason's mind realm, shakes her head.

"I don't think so. After observing her for a while, I've come to the conclusion there's something very different about this Amelia compared to the one we knew from before. Her mannerisms aren't right. She flinches at the sight of blood. She's indecisive, and easily flustered. I can only conclude Hope must have intentionally... changed her, somehow."

"Changed her?" Physical-Phoebe asks, turning to look at her spiritual clone. "In what way? Do you mean through brainwashing? Or do you mean he intentionally dialed down her bloodlust with his Wordsmithing?"

"Your guess is quite literally as good as mine!" Spirit-Phoebe answers, with a quiet laugh. "I don't know all the answers, I just know what I've observed."

Jason waves his hand. "We can deal with that angel girl, Amelia, and Hope a little later. Right now, we have more pressing concerns. We've suffered some violent upheavals recently, our people are beaten and battered, and we're far from safe if the demons attack again. I've been talking with my mind-wife for a while now, and we've come up with some ideas to bolster humanity and make it more self-sufficient in the future. I don't ever want a repeat of Stormbringer to happen again."

Hans Wagner leans forward. "Oh? Vhat sort of ideas?"

"And what do you mean by 'self sufficient'?" Chadwick asks. "Are you planning to leave us, again?"

Jason shakes his head. "No, I'm not. But I can't discount the possibility I might have to in the future. The last time I left, I ended up retrieving an artifact of divine power comparable to Excalibur. While that will ultimately bolster my power, and therefore humanity's, it isn't a silver bullet. Humanity was practically helpless in my absence, and that's something I must remedy as quickly as possible."

The Wordsmith speaks a word of power. "Visualize."

In the center of the table, a three-by-three-foot replica of Camael's Cube appears, startling the observers. Despite only being a magical projection, it projects a faint but noticeable presence of holy energy, making Belial feel somewhat unsettled, along with a couple other demons seated nearby.

"This is Camael's Cube." Jason explains. "Or at least, that's what I call it. If she gave it some fancy name, I wouldn't know. I confirmed with the Archangels that this cube was made by Camael, and it is thus filled with ancient primordial energy. The power in this artifact is probably enough to eliminate all the Demon Emperors with ease."

Several jaws drop at Jason's last statement. Even Physical-Phoebe appears more than a little surprised by her husband's declaration.

"However," Jason continues, "Its power isn't infinite. It has lost much of its energy over the last several eons. What it possesses now is maybe one percent of its original might, and every time I tap into its power, that mana disappears forever. It's like a giant battery that is slowly losing power over time. Once it's gone, it's gone."

Physical-Phoebe nods along to his words. "If this cube is going to run out of power eventually, it seems like we should use it up while it's still available. But just using that power to kill some demons seems like a waste."

"That's exactly what you said before," Jason says with a smile. "Well, uh, not you-you, but, the other you. Spirit-Phoebe. She thinks we should use this energy to rebuild and fortify humanity's potential. I couldn't agree more."

"Vee could make powerful weapons of var!" Hans Wagner exclaims. "Or, forget zat; vee could even make artifacts of our own! Vee could create an unlimited supply of food and vater, create housing and defenses to protect ourselves... zee possibilities are endless!"

"There's more." Jason says, nodding at Hans. "The interior of Camael's Cube is huge. Vast. Bigger than you can imagine. If you took the entire surface area of Tarus II, its livable space, and spread that across the Cube's insides, you could easily fit a hundred worlds in there, enough space for trillions of humans. This little scale model doesn't nearly do it justice. It looks insanely huge from the outside, and even bigger inside."

He continues. "The Cube also does not rest within our dimension. It's protected by a folded pocket of dimensional space, making it all but impossible for any outside observers to locate. I couldn't even find it without Raphael's help. As an Archangel, he was able to sense its relative position, but I was completely clueless. Once the Cube draws near enough to a populace, they will start to feel some pressure on their souls, but it's still incredibly difficult to burrow into its pocket dimension and attack it. Also, even if an attacker succeeds, good luck breaking into the Cube itself. Its exterior is made of some unknown, enchanted alloy."

"It sounds like the perfect location to make a fortified base." Chadwick comments. "Humanity could expand and thrive inside the Cube. The demons wouldn't be able to hurt us, and neither would the Volgrim."

"Don't be so sure of that." Belial suddenly says, quieting the room. "Underestimate the Volgrim at your own peril. You have no idea the might Spatial Psions command. I know for a fact they can tear through dimensional distortions with ease. Forget the Second Founder, even Executor Nufaris would find the Cube in seconds. The two of them are the most talented at ripping apart space, but they're not the only ones."

Jason takes her warning seriously. "Good point. I still think the Cube would provide a sturdy shield against any sort of massed-attack, but... perhaps we shouldn't rely too heavily on its interdimensional location. More importantly, let's talk about how we can use its resources wisely."

Jason speaks another word of power, expanding the illusory cube in size until it fills the entire room, allowing everyone to peer into its interior.

"This is the inside of Camael's Cube." Jason says. "As you can see... it's totally empty. The only things inside are these giant... uh... 'star-monsters'... I don't really know what they are. And also, this 'containment beacon.'"

Jason points at the image of the Container. Without mentioning the Phoenix's existence, he explains the Container's purpose, as well as Camael's purpose behind creating the Cube, originally.

"I see." Belial mutters. "That explains Leviathan's existence. He was once imprisoned inside the Cube, but he broke free. Then he went to hide under Earth, where the Archangel Samael helped obscure his potent life energy through formation magic."

"Exactly." Jason says. "The reason the Cube has been leaking energy is because this central nexus, the 'Container,' is leaking mana into the void. The Cube itself draws in ambient mana from the outer galaxy to recharge itself, but it loses more than it gains as time passes."

"Can you repair it?" Hans asks. "If vee repair it, zee Cube shall gain more and more energy as time goes on!"

"I can't." Jason says, shaking his head. "Sorry. Not even Phoebe can understand the Cube's interconnected circuits. Camael was simply on a different tier as an artifact maker compared to us lowly peons. Solomon's Crown obtained all of her memories and knowledge, but not even that gave my wife the ability to replicate her works. Still, that doesn't mean once the Cube runs out of mana, it will be useless. There is a different method we can use to change its core functionality."

After pausing for a moment to add emphasis, Jason continues.

"The Container is the central nexus; it's the key to controlling the Cube. Once the Cube runs out of energy, it will become nothing more than a weakness, or a liability. I will destroy the Container and seal the Cube's dimensional space so it can't leak mana into the void any longer. It will also lose its functionality of drawing in mana, but that won't matter, because the next step is..."

Jason pauses, closes his eyes, and concentrates.

"Disperse. Visualize."

The Cube's projection vanishes. In its place, a miniature group of ten humans appear, surrounding a massive orb glowing with mana, placed atop a fifty-foot-tall tower.

Instead of Jason, Spirit-Phoebe metaphorically steps up to the plate to explain the next bit.

"...The next step is to weaponize humanity's collective mana. The angels had a similar idea. They once collected our mana to fill their bodies with spiritual energy and sustain themselves. A fine idea, if a bit greedy, but we can do better. We can create our own self-sustaining system through humanity's unique biological parameters. Through a stroke of genius, the Archangel Uzziel made it possible for every human to collect a small amount of mana from their surroundings while they slept. If they lost it, a quick night's sleep would regenerate it back to full. This means every human is functionally a miniaturized version of Camael's Cube, waiting to be exploited for more useful purposes."

Jason smiles. "Individually, humans are pathetically weak in the magic department. However, unlike demons, who refill their lost energy over a long period of time, we can recharge our mana back to full with one good night's sleep. That means, if we create towers capable of accumulating mana, they can store it for other purposes later on."

Belial nods thoughtfully. "If I exhaust all of my mana healing people, like I did during Stormbringer, it could take me days or even weeks to recharge my mana to full. That's one advantage humans have. Even King Arthur, when he unleashed energy blasts that could bombard civilizations back to the Stone Age, could also regenerate his spent mana in a single night. It's cheating, if you ask me."

"That's great news," Chadwick says, stroking his chin. "But in the end, I must ask, what do you plan to do with all that energy, Commander Hiro? I'm sure you have some ideas, but I'm a bit clueless on the higher uses of magical energy."

Several other humans around the table nod. However, the more magically inclined monsters, and in particular the demons, don't appear as confused.

General Yamir pounds his fist against the table. "Braahm! Incredible! So many ideas spring to my mind! We could give all humans magical medallions that channel their mana into the towers, but also that could pull mana from the towers when needed! We could turn humans into mages!"

"Too wasteful!" Another demon says. "We should use that energy to craft automated implements that use the energy efficiently! We could build magically-powered golems capable of protecting our civilization!"

Several other proposals go up around the table, but Jason raises his hand to silence the room.

"I'm already hearing some great ideas, but let's keep the noise down for a moment. Spirit-Phoebe has come up with several projects she plans to start work on immediately. These projects will require a great deal of time to iron out the intricacies, but I thought I'd start with one that will get everyone here... well, if not excited, at least a little bit relieved."

The Wordsmith pauses.

A strange look crosses over his face, before he silently shakes his head.

"Sorry. I got lost in my thoughts for a moment. Disperse. Visualize."

The mana-tower disappears, and in its place, a far bigger tower, more than eight-hundred-meters tall appears, turning the ten humans at its base into tiny smudges. Magical energy courses along its base and pulses upward, eventually reaching the top, where it releases a thin beam of light into the planet's atmosphere. This beam of energy remains continuously, slowly spreading its coverage over the entirety of the hypothetical world of Tarus II.

"This is... a modified version of something which once existed." Jason explains, his tone heavy. "It was once called a Lazarus Tower. Its purpose was to retrieve the souls of dead humans and turn them into Lazarites, like the angel girl we picked up. Sadly, not even Phoebe could replicate that function, since we don't have the original designs made by Camael. However, what it can do is something just as useful. It can hijack the functions of the original Lazarus Tower and retrieve all fallen souls, anywhere in the universe, which have not passed into the Great Beyond."

Jason summons another projection, this time of an object that makes Belial shiver with dread.

"This is Valac's Lantern." Jason says. "It once belonged to a powerful necromancer, and it forms the foundation of the Seven Hell's power. It controls the River Styx, and its current owner in the Duke of Mist, Mephisto. My plan is to use our Lazarus Tower to remotely steal all of the souls contained within Valac's Lantern... and bring them back to us."

The Wordsmith's eyes flicker with emotion.

"After that, we can rebuild the bodies of those who have fallen. Friends, family, lovers... even our children. We can give them a second lease on life."

The room becomes quiet. Everyone present looks at the Wordsmith with a mixture of pity and hope, praying he will find his daughter among those souls.

Even more of them recall their own lost friends and family, the people they would love to see most in the world.

"Will... will this tower really work?" Chadwick asks. "If it does, it will grant all of our allies a second chance at life."

"Only our human allies." Jason says. "Fallen demons and monsters won't be subject to its effect. They'll remain in Mephisto's grasp. I'm sorry, but it's the best I can do."

Chadwick sighs. "So, regarding Monster King, Kar..."

"I can't help him." Jason answers, his voice quiet.

The room's atmosphere becomes pensive. Several people hesitate, unsure of what to say, until Hans Wagner breaks the spell.

"How long vill it take before you can make zees tower?"

"A week or two." Spirit-Phoebe answers. "I'm still working out its 'spiritual structure.' Spiritual constructs operate a bit like technology, but they also have strange methods of evolving over time, like biological beings. It makes divining their exact designs practically impossible for laymen like me. I'm fairly confident I'll solve the problem eventually, though."

"I can help." Physical-Phoebe says. "We'll work together and get it done in half the time."

"Sounds like a date!" Her spiritual self laughs. "A date with myself! How very weird!"

Jason faintly smiles, their conversation momentarily taking his mind off his deceased daughter. Sadly, those thoughts return shortly after, so he forces himself to reorient his mind.

"Everyone. This Revised Lazarus Tower is to be kept strictly confidential, at least for now. I don't want the demons getting wind of my plans. In the meantime, I want you all to think about what projects we can make with our future mana reserves. All options are on the table. If it's a dumb idea, whatever. If it's a rough idea, Phoebe might be able to work with it. And if it's solid gold, you could save billions of lives. So, put on your thinking caps, ask around, and we'll meet back here in a few days to discuss our other options."

"What are you going to do in the meantime?" Chadwick asks.

Jason rests his hand on Phoebe's shoulder and gives the side of her head a kiss.

"Phoebe and I are going to have a talk with Amelia. I think it's time she gave us some answers."

Part 333: Back From the Dead

After meeting with the other heads of humanity's united militaries, Jason, Phoebe, and Belial leave their makeshift command structure, a simple square building lacking all frills, to head over to the hospice division.

They pass the giant pit left behind by Beelzebub's detonation and pause to look at it as many often do. The crater's sheer size leaves an indelible impression on any who see it, making it an iconic landmark in the city, one that inspires countless feelings of rage, bitterness, and melancholy.

"We really ought to do something about this..." Belial says. "It's become a hazardous location. Already, one old man and two children have fallen inside and gotten injured."

"Yeah. I've been thinking we should put a memorial here." Phoebe says. "Something with the names of all the people who died during the Stormbringer Attack. We should honor their memories."

Jason shakes his head. "We'll honor them more by bringing them back to life. I'm going to build the Lazarus Tower right here, once your spirit-self finishes its designs. If we fail to resurrect some people... then we'll build monuments for them afterward."

They continue walking, but keep their pace slow while sweeping their gazes over the ruined city. Already, several new buildings have been built, their shoddy construction and thrown-together nature telling the story of a populace in a hurry to erect housing as quickly as possible.

"Since the old city is gone," Phoebe says, "we should plan out the next incarnation more carefully. I've mocked up some designs for improved Building Constructors, similar to my old device, but more energy efficient with better storage capabilities. We'll be able to pre-fabricate structures from several designs. I just feel like we could stand to give the city an artistic touch."

"Art won't help us win against the demons." Jason mutters.

"No," Phoebe concedes, "but architectural design can do all sorts of other useful things. For example, in Ancient Rome, or Greece, the unique ways they constructed their buildings made them identifiable from a distance. Statues of commanding officers could inspire morale among the soldiers, water fountains could give people serene places to cool down after long days at work, and recreational hotspots would become community gathering places. By contrast, a bunch of utilitarian, ugly, square blocs won't do anything but depress the people following us."

Jason pauses his walking. He chews on his lower lip for a few moments while considering Phoebe's words.

"Hmm. You have a point. We could all do with some mood-boosting, in general. Me and your spirit-self are going to focus on our war-time capabilities, so why don't you focus on city-building, urban planning, and fixing the people's morale? You're better at that than me, anyway. Everyone loves you."

Belial nods. "The man speaks truth!"

"I'll work on improving our T-REX's and other such things in between," Phoebe says, "but otherwise, sure. You leave the city management to me. I'll probably bring Neil's assistant, Debra, in to help with the low-hanging fruit."

Jason rests his hands on his hips. "Neil. He and Hope were close. Hope is going to be devastated when he finds out..."

"I'm not convinced Neil died." Belial says. "Maybe his body got crushed when the Core collapsed, but we didn't find a corpse, nor his T-REX. Even if he did die, he probably ended up in Mephisto's hands."

"I tried using 'Locate' to find him." Jason says. "But I couldn't pick anything up. He wasn't in Gressil's prison, so he wasn't being hidden by the Warden's... weird... anti-magic aura."

"That's not necessarily true." Phoebe says. "Remember? You said Ose hit you with a burst of strange energy that short-circuited your magical abilities. You also said the energy felt somewhat similar to Beelzebub's detonation, and to Gressil's aura. The three must be linked. Considering Ose is Gressil's sister, and she was close with Beelzebub... maybe she found some way to harness Gressil's energy."

"That makes sense." Belial interjects. "Think about it. Even if Neil died and ended up resurrected under Mephisto's control, you should be able to sense him, right? But you can't. And Ose wasn't gunning for you, she was aiming to capture Phoebe and, erm, Daisy.

But if you could just use Locate to find your wife and daughter, that plan wouldn't be of much use. Maybe she wanted-"

"She wanted to capture Phoebe and Daisy, then hide them with Gressil's magic," Jason says, as his eyes flicker with realization. "Yeah. That makes sense. And she might have Neil hidden somewhere, too."

He pauses for a moment.

"...But if that's the case, how can we find him? I can't sense him. The Labyrinth is massive, not to mention all the other worlds demonkind controls. She could have hidden him anywhere, and that's assuming she did in the first place. Our technology won't be much use in locating him, since Ose would have been sure to disable his T-REX."

Belial presses a finger to her lips in thought. "Well... I could head into the Labyrinth to find him."

"Whoa, whoa," Phoebe says. "That's a no-go, Samantha. You're one of demonkind's most hated enemies. If you go in there, someone will attack you, for sure."

Belial scoffs. "Who? Ose? The Hidden Emperors? Ose is probably Mephisto's pawn, now. Resurrected under his control. The Hidden Emperors might be able to hurt, capture, or kill me, but have you forgotten?"

Belial's body suddenly shifts its appearance, morphing her into a perfect facsimile of Ose, mirroring her long white hair, her white uniform, and even her long boots.

"I can be anyone," Belial says, her voice sounding irritatingly like Ose's. "Most people aren't aware, but I was Satan's best espionage agent. Ose was known as 'Ghost' because she could move undetected inside human infrastructure and through their defense lines, sabotaging their technology and installing computer viruses and whatever else. She alone ended up bringing humanity to its knees in the final days of the Energy Wars."

Belial cocks her head playfully. "But little old me? I did all of that centuries before she was an apple in the Creator's eye. I brought down the Roman Empire, the Greeks, and all sorts of other civilizations. I didn't kill anyone, since that's not my MO, but I did all sorts of other fun things. If I don't want to be found, nobody will know who I am. Well, except for maybe Jason. His Wordsmithing would have been really annoying to deal with during the 'fun times.'"

Phoebe nods hesitantly. "Well... if you're so confident... I guess it will be alright."

"Hmm... you've reminded me of something." Jason adds. "Ose infiltrated us. She subverted our men, poisoned their thoughts, and placed traitors in our midst. She did all of that because I didn't know how souls worked, nor about her Astral Form. But that isn't the case anymore. I'll have to prepare defenses for dealing with souls."

The Wordsmith pauses for a moment, then smiles.

"Your spirit-self says she can build some passive defenses into the Lazarus Tower," Jason says to Phoebe. "But, I'm still gonna put some stronger active measures into play, once I have the time."

Phoebe nods. "Good idea. Err, I guess it's my idea. Does that make me a narcissist if I'm technically praising myself?"

"I ask myself things like that all the time when it comes to Hope," Jason answers. "Welcome to the world of having a clone."

Phoebe frowns at him for a moment. "It's not like I asked you to clone me."

"Uh, right. Sorry. Again."

The three of them continue onward until they reach the hospice area, where several hundred tents and a few small square buildings stand erected, all of them purely made for function over design.

The moment the Wordsmith arrives, a feathery Harpie walks up to him, her claws digging into the charred dirt as she struts.

"Jason, Phoebe, Belial, I'm glad you've all come," Doctor Fathy says. As the most senior medical officer in the human resistance, barring Belial herself, she holds a lot of pull with the people who she's saved over the years. "I finished the preliminary results on Hope. We've scanned him thoroughly to deduce any lingering trauma, but I found a few... anomalies. You should have a look at his results."

She hands a paper to Jason, who immediately shows it to Phoebe and Belial.

"What are we looking at?" Jason asks, not understanding the jargon on the page.

"How odd," Belial says. "Hope seems to have some sort of... infection in his body. No, not an infection. Something else?"

"They're nanites." Phoebe says. "Hope has nanites inside his bloodstream. Based on the configuration, these came from a T-REX. They've integrated themselves into his biological structure. They're a part of him now; they're even in his brain."

"What the hell?" Jason asks. "When did that happen? Did Gressil do something to him?"

"No. The scarring tissue is several years old." Doctor Fathy says. "There's also evidence of radiation sickness, but it's long been in remission."

"Oh... this must be from when Hope and I fought Uriel..." Belial says, as she recalls the events of six years earlier. "Yes, I remember now. Beelzebub blew himself up in the Labyrinth. Then, shortly afterward, I noticed Hope's T-REX had been destroyed, but I didn't think much of it. Perhaps, at that time, the explosion embedded the nanites in his body?"

"Could that explain why he's always been sort of... hostile?" Jason asks. "Maybe the nanites are making him more aggressive?"

Belial shakes her head. "No. He's always been like this. If I had to guess, based on these readings, the nanites have wildly improved his biological resilience. It's probably why..."

She pauses, allowing her words to drop off.

"Probably why, what?" Jason asks.

"Well. Gressil tore Hope's arms and legs off." Belial says, her lip twitching in sympathy. "That would have killed anyone else, especially since he received no medical care. And you saw all those awful torture wounds. The nanites must have been healing him the whole time. He... probably wanted to die, but couldn't."

"How awful..." Phoebe whispers, as her eyes mist up. "He's you, Jason. Hope is you. I wouldn't- I couldn't forgive anyone who did that to you. As far as I'm concerned, Gressil did that to my husband."

"Is Hope still comatose?" Jason asks Doctor Fathy.

"Yes. Though, his brain has finally started to show signs of awakening. No doubt, the nanites are healing him as we speak."

"He's gonna be so fucked up." Jason mutters. "I... I don't know how to face him. He suffered unimaginable torture. Barbarity. I don't even know if I'd have been able to hold on if I were in his shoes. He's going to suffer PTSD for the rest of his life because of this."

Jason pauses.

"Unless... I erase his memory."

"Don't do that." Belial says. "Not without Hope's permission. It's not right. He's a Wordsmith. Once he recovers... he can always erase his own memory if those events are too traumatic."

Jason glances at the building up ahead, one bearing a giant red plus-sign on its door.

"That's true. I just... I feel awful for him. He's been so neglected. Treated like garbage... and it's all my fault. I was too blind to see that he was right. He was the only one acting proactively about the demons. Him and Neil had the right idea, all along. He ended up tortured because of my inaction."

"We don't know what happened." Phoebe says. "Remember, Hope left shortly before you did. We don't know how he encountered Gressil, what they said, or-"

Before Phoebe can continue, Fathy raises her right hand.

"That's... not strictly true, miss Hiro."

The group of three blinks in surprise.

"What do you mean?" Jason asks.

"Hope has nanites in his bloodstream." Fathy explains. "He... his... his short term memory. It's been integrated into Centurion's functionality. I was able to recover some... snippets. Audio. Video. I don't recommend you watch it. I don't recommend anyone should watch it."

Phoebe's misty eyes turn to tears as she averts her gaze. Even Belial's stomach curdles at the thought of what those recordings must contain.

Jason remains composed.

"Show me. Phoebe, Sam... you two should sit this one out."

"No. No, I'll watch." Belial says. "I've seen many horrifying things in my life. I can handle it."

Phoebe grits her teeth.

"If... if it was you who Gressil tortured... I'd want to see it. I owe Hope this much. Show me, too."

She balls her hands into fists, mentally imagining the worst possible things she can think of, even if she doesn't want to.

Doctor Fathy seriously reconsiders showing the videos to her long-time friends, only to inevitably relent in the wake of their agreement.

"Alright. Follow me."

Minutes later, the group of three sits at a small projector screen in a darkened room, while images taken from Hope's eyes play out.

Starting from not long after his capture, they watch and listen as Hope screams and begs for mercy. Gressil taunts him. He mocks him, stabs his body, and makes Hope's vision turn blurry with blood.

The Wordsmith, his wife, and the former Second Emperor all hold each other and force themselves to watch as Hope's screams gradually become less defined as the days drag, until eventually, he can only rasp out in pain before falling utterly silent.

No matter how much Gressil tortured him past that point, Hope became incapable of releasing a sound.

Phoebe sobs quietly, having long lost her ability to watch. Belial hugs her, but even she doesn't manage to stop her own tears.

"How horrible. Dreadful. Awful. That Gressil is... I should have killed him! I should have murdered him! Why was I so weak..."

Jason, however, manages to maintain an expression of solid steel. He remains seemingly unmoved, as if unable to weep for his clone's suffering.

Even so, his expression turns chilling.

"This is what demons do..." He mutters. "I've been so blind. All this time. They love pain, torture, barbarity. I've acted like such a child."

He glances at his wife and Belial, both of them sobbing uncontrollably.

This is the reaction Gressil wants. He loves to see others in pain. He relishes their suffering. He's a monster amidst monsters. I used to think most demons could become like Belial, empathetic, loving, and caring. But they can't. The whole god-damned species is irredeemable.

Even in Jason's Mind Realm, Spirit-Phoebe cries, unable to watch the video without breaking down like her physical self did.

Hearing both versions of his wife cry only steels the Wordsmith's resolve more.

These demons have to suffer. The shoe is on the other foot, now.

Some time later, after Phoebe and Belial have composed themselves, the trio leaves the projector room to head over to Hope's private dormitory. Dozens of troopers stand watch outside, wary of any intruders. Even the Wordsmith has to accept an invasive scan, just in case he might be a demon in disguise, looking to assassinate Hope.

They step into the rom, where they find Hope, all of his limbs regrown and his body physically in pristine condition, laying on a hospital bed with Amelia at his side.

Amelia holds Hope's hand, maintaining contact even when Jason, Phoebe, and Belial enter the room.

She only takes one glance at the ashen-faced trio before shaking her head. "You saw the video."

"We did." Jason says.

"Hope's still comatose." Amelia says. "But I'm guessing you didn't come here for him."

Belial shakes her head. "We came here for answers. It's time you told us the truth, Amelia. How did Hope resurrect you?"

"It shouldn't even be possible." Jason says. "If resurrection was so easy..."

He trails off, not saying the last part, but Amelia answers for him.

"...then you'd bring your daughter back. Right?"

The Wordsmith nods. "Right."

"Have you tried, yet?" Amelia asks.

"No. I tried resurrecting people in the past. It never worked. I always ended up with lifeless husks. Without the person's original soul, I could maybe mimic them physically,. but they'd never be the person who died. And even if I did, I wouldn't undo their deaths. I'd only bring back... a copy of the dead person."

He pauses, as if to add emphasis.

"That's what you are, right? A copy of Amelia. Not her original self. You died when the Polaris star went supernova. Hope must have figured out how to bring you back, but he only succeeded in copying your appearance. That's why you don't have magical abilities."

Phoebe and Belial both look at Jason in surprise.

"Is that who she really is?" Phoebe asks. "That does make sense. All the points add up."

Jason shrugs. "Maybe. Except, I've tried doing that exact thing before. I failed. I can create a body. I can give it a soul, and sentience. I can even give it the memories of someone, but in the end, it always turns out... aberrant. It doesn't work. Something goes wrong, and the resurrectee... dies. Within just a few hours."

"So," Jason concludes, "it's my best guess, but not a satisfying one. Maybe Hope succeeded where I failed. Maybe he perfected that method. Did he, Amelia? Is that how you're here, now?"

The Black Queen turns her head away from the Wordsmith and his companions. She reaches over to caress Hope's hair.

"You know, when you first arrived, I had a huge crush on you, Jason." Amelia says. "But I was just an ordinary woman. I admired you because you were a legendary Hero. It was a childish desire. I knew it wouldn't lead to anything serious."

She pauses.

"But then I met Hope. My sister introduced him to me. He was broken, alone, abandoned. He had just lost everything that mattered to him, all because you brought him into existence."

Her gaze flickers for a moment as she shoots a look of hatred at Jason.

"You broke Hope, and I fixed him. I'm not Amelia, and I never was. My real name is Annette. I'm Debra's sister."

"What?!" Jason asks. "Debra's sister? Annette? What the hell are you talking about?"

'Annette' touches her face.

"This isn't my original appearance. When I first met Hope, he wasn't attracted to me at all, but he found comfort in my companionship. I wanted to please him, to make him like me. So, I made him change my body, my mind, and my memories. I had him turn me into Amelia, so we could be together."

Annette punches her chest, as grief fills her eyes.

"And you... you took that from me! Because of your incompetence, my Hope ended up here, traumatized by a monster! Gressil tortured him! All that time we spent together amounted to nothing!! Gressil removed my memory blockers, violated my mind, and ruined the man I love!"

The Wordsmith's eyes widen as he re-evaluates Annette's appearance, the perfect facsimile of Amelia.

"You're... you're not Amelia? I see. Hope put her memories into your mind and changed your appearance, then he blocked out your original memories. That would stabilize your thoughts... it's... it's the only way a 'resurrection' would actually work. He converted another person into the one who died."

"That's awful." Phoebe says. "Twisted, even."

"You shut your mouths, both of you!" Annette says, rising to her feet. "Especially you, Phoebe, you fucking bitch! You're the one who messed Hope up the worst! Because of you, he nearly committed suicide!"

"Suicide?!" Phoebe asks, bewildered. "W-what did I even do?"

Annette's anger visibly fades. She chuckles wryly and turns her attention back to Hope.

"It's not what you did. It's what you didn't do. You rejected Hope for Jason, and just left him alone. Did you even think of how that would affect him? No. You and Jason were happily married. Why should you care about his clone? You could have made a clone of yourself so Hope wouldn't be alone, but you never cared. None of you did. He was just your tool to fight demons. A piece of meat."

Phoebe's lower lip trembles. "That's not..."

"It is true." Annette snarls. "So don't you fucking dare judge my relationship with Hope! I don't care if you think it was messed up for him to change my appearance. It's none of your god-damned business! He was in a dark place, and I saved him! Every day we spent together was like bliss for both of us! I got my Hero, and he got his Amelia. Why should you give half a damn what we did for each other in private? You didn't care six years ago, so don't act like you do now."

Annette waves her hand flippantly at the trio.

"When Hope wakes up, it's me he'll want to see, not any of you. So, get out."

Jason's mouth turns to cotton as he robotically nods.

"...Yes. I see. Sorry, Amel- err, Annette. I'm sorry that we..."

Words escape the Wordsmith's grasp. He, Phoebe, and Belial all share awkward and confused glances with one another before slowly turning around and walking out the door.

After it closes, Annette sits back down and returns to stroking Hope's hair.

"I'm sorry, love. The awful people aren't here anymore. It's just me and you, together, forever."

Part 334: Trauma, Torture, Terror

Jason, Phoebe, and Belial all trudge out of Hope's makeshift hospital room, past his guards, and arrive just outside his temporary hospice residence. After closing the door behind them, they walk a short distance away, toward a nearby building, before stopping and heavily leaning against its walls.

"Well." Belial says. "That could have gone... better."

"I thought I felt guilty before," Phoebe says, "but compared to now, that was nothing. I feel as if I've failed Hope completely."

"You and me both." Jason says. "Annette, huh? I didn't even know Debra had a sister. As soon as we started talking about how weird it was for Hope to change her appearance and identities, I felt like I'd screwed up again. Then she drove that gut-punch home."

"The situation is strange," Phoebe says, "but I feel as if Annette didn't speak any false statements. Hope suffered because of us. She was there for him when we weren't. We don't have a right to judge their relationship."

The Wordsmith throws his hands in the air helplessly. "I don't know what to do now. I want to help and comfort Hope, but seeing how badly I've aggrieved him, I can't say I deserve to be in his presence. I wish I'd paid attention to him sooner, if not from the very beginning. It's too late for me to make up for my past failures."

"You both can still treat him better moving forward." Belial says, keeping her voice low. "I don't think it's too late to patch things up. He's going to need a lot of emotional support. The abuse he suffered was well beyond what most humans can take. I would know. I've seen many cruel demons torture many mentally resilient people, but I've never seen any suffer as badly as Hope did. Gressil went far beyond the limits of even demonic cruelty."

She shakes her head with a resigned sigh. "Even the worst demons have limits to which they'll torture humans. Ose hates humans from the bottom of her heart, but she doesn't get any particular thrill from their screaming and crying. She just wants to hurt them a bit before killing them. Anything more, she sees it as a waste of her time."

"Wow," Jason groans, his tone sardonic, "I guess I should give all the nice demon torturers a fucking gold medal, huh?"

"You know what I meant." Belial says, waving her hand in front of her face. "For now, let's just set Hope aside. I think Annette is uniquely qualified to help him, moving forward, so let's leave it to her. What about that angel girl? We need to take care of her. Whatever Hope suffered, she's clearly had it a million times worse. I'm shocked she's stayed alive. She must have had an incredibly formidable willpower before Gressil captured her."

Phoebe nods. "I put her in a nice, comfortable room on the city's north side, away from people. Let's go and pay her a visit."

Jason and Belial both frown in unison.

"I don't know..." Jason says. "I don't think she'll want to see a man at a time like this."

"Or a demon." Belial adds. "You should go and see her alone, Phoebe. You're good at empathizing with other people."

Phoebe casts a glance back from where they came, toward Hope's hospice unit.

"Am I?"

Neither Jason nor Belial can give her an affirmation.

"...I'll send your spiritual self along, too." Jason says. "I'll stick around in the area, so if you need me, I can pop right over."

"Alright." Phoebe says. "But I don't know if I'll be able to get through to her."

A momentary silence falls between the trio. Jason's eyes glimmer for a moment as he speaks with the people in his Mind Realm.

"Ah. Here. Take Gabriel's ring. Give it to the angel girl. Gabriel says he'd like to talk to her..."

The Wordsmith pauses to frown.

"No, we're not done with this, Gabriel," He says, speaking out loud to the people in his head. "I won't press you for her identity, but I don't like that you're hiding things from me. When we see Uriel, Raphael, and Michael next, I'll have some words for them."

The Wordsmith scowls for a moment before shaking his head. He gently pulls Gabriel's ring off his finger and hands it to his wife.

"Here. Don't drop it. It's one of a kind."

Phoebe smiles. "Yes, I know."

She gives her husband a kiss, and he summons Spirit-Phoebe to join her physical self. Afterward, Belial remains in the hospital, while Jason wanders off to talk to Hans Wagner about some ideas for new inventions that will boost humanity's firepower.

Left to her own devices, Physical-Phoebe joins her spirit self in walking half a mile to the north, where she arrives at a quiet building covered in flowers, plants, and other greenery designed to give the place some natural beauty. Sunlight streams through the square building's skylight, but when Phoebe steps inside, she finds the angel girl sitting on the floor in the darkest corner of the room, her head buried in her knees, and her arms wrapped around her legs.

The angel wears a simple white sundress, cute, yet elegant, a luxury she hasn't had in ages. Compared to laying naked in Gressil's cell, injured, suffering from agony, her current appearance is practically that of a heaven-sent blessing.

Even so, when both Phoebes step into the room, they sense the presence of deep, unfathomable sadness in the air, like a blackened aura that pervades all of their emotional barriers. Just taking one look at the silent, miserable girl makes Phoebe's heart ache worse than ever in her life.

"Um... e-excuse... me..." Phoebe croaks, her voice hoarse. "It's m-me, Phoebe. I, ah, I helped save you... from..."

She trails off when the angel girl doesn't move at all. She doesn't raise her head to look at her guests. She doesn't even flinch at the sound of a voice, making it seem almost as if she has fallen asleep in that pose.

Yet, when both Phoebes start to walk around the large and comfortable bed in her room, they stop a few feet away, noticing her shivering body.

Spirit-Phoebe chews her lip. "I... don't think she's cold."

"Neither do I." Physical-Phoebe whispers.

Both of them get on their knees and slowly shuffle across the floor, drawing within an arm's length of the angel girl.

"Uh, hey..." Phoebe says, reaching out her hand, yet pausing just short of initiating physical contact. "I'm Phoebe. Err, I said that, already. Um. How are you? No, that's...

that's a dumb question. You must be, ah..."

She speaks haltingly, unsure of what to say.

After a few minutes of Phoebe stuttering and tripping over her words repeatedly, the angel girl still doesn't move a muscle, not once acknowledging Phoebe's presence. This stymies the Hero's wife, making her wonder just what she can say to get a response.

"I... I brought you something... it's a ring," Phoebe says. "It once belonged to a friend of yours, I think. Archangel Gabriel. Do you know Gabriel?"

At the mention of the Archangel of Power's name, the angel girl finally flinches. She lifts her head a fraction of an inch to peer across her knees at the ring in Phoebe's outstretched hand. A moment later, she lowers her head again, still remaining silent.

"So, you do know Gabriel, right?" Phoebe asks, her voice cracking as she finds a light in the darkness. The angel's slight response makes her feel a hint of a chance at breaking through. "He, um... he wants to talk to you. He's inside this ring, you know. I thought you might like to say hello to a familiar face..."

Phoebe pauses for a moment, before lowering her hand to the floor beside the angel girl. She puts the ring down, then retracts her hand.

"Here. I'll, um... I'll leave the ring beside you, okay? You can talk to him alone. I won't bother you. He really misses you, miss angel-person. Angel-girl. Lady. Sorry, I don't know your name. I don't mean to be rude."

Physical-Phoebe shoots an awkward look at her spiritual companion. Just as she starts to take a step back, the angel's body twitches. Her left arm moves slightly down her leg before pausing. Then, she lowers it a few more inches, before pausing again.

Slowly, hesitantly, it takes her a full minute to touch the floor, move her hand around, and feel for the ring.

When she finally touches it, she doesn't put it on. Instead, she merely pokes it with her index finger and leaves her hand there for several long, silent minutes, before raising her arm back to her legs.

Spirit-Phoebe creases her forehead. She looks at her physical self and shrugs, as if to ask, did she talk to Gabriel? I don't know if she has to put the ring on to talk to him or not.

Both Phoebes remain silent for another long minute.

The angel doesn't move. She remains rooted in place, with her hands wrapped around her knees.

Phoebe reaches back over and picks up Gabriel's ring. Unable to communicate with the Archangel herself, she can't ask him if he made successful contact. So instead, she places it into her pocket, then starts to stand up.

Just before she fully rises, Phoebe hesitates. She drops back down to a crouching position, then reaches out to lightly touch the angel's arm.

"Hey... I know it's going to be hard to adapt... to re-acclimate... after going through what you have. But I want you to know we're all here for you, okay? I'm here for you. You can take all the time you want. Nobody will hurt you here, and I won't let anyone lay a hand on you, ever again."

The angel girl doesn't visibly react to Phoebe's touch. After a few seconds of maintaining this light, almost imperceptible contact, Phoebe pulls away. She stands up and turns to leave.

As she turns her back to the angel, a faint noise whispers behind her.

"Nnn..."

Phoebe turns around once more, only to be surprised when she finds the angel girl hesitantly looking up at her.

"Nnn..."

She croaks out a weak sound, something so faint that if there were any other noises nearby, nobody would hear it.

Phoebe drops back into a crouch.

"Yes? What is it? Can I get you something?"

The angel stares at her with half-closed, watery eyes. "Nnn... nnn... na... name..."

"Name?" Phoebe repeats. "Yes. Yes, my name is Phoebe. Phoebe Hiro. And... what's yours?"

The angel hesitates. She averts her eyes shyly.

"C... C... Ca... Ca..."

Phoebe smiles sweetly and nods. "Yes, just like that. Just like that. It's okay, you can say it. Ca...?"

The angel falls silent. She closes her eyes and lowers her head, unable to say the rest.

Spirit-Phoebe kneels down beside her physical self. "'Ca,' huh? So, perhaps… Cassiel? That's an angel name. It's cute, like you. Cassiel? Is that your name?"

"It's probably not," Physical-Phoebe says. "Cassiel was one of the Archangels. It might be disrespectful to give the name of an Archangel to… well, a Lazarite."

Her spiritual self shrugs. "I think it's a lovely name. Cassiel? Are you okay with that name? We can call you something else if you want."

The angel raises her head. She eyes the two identical looking flesh and spiritual women for a moment, before slightly lifting her head up and down in a barely perceptible nod.

Then, she lowers her head into her knees once again.

Spirit-Phoebe smiles. "There, see? She likes it. Cassiel. That's a fitting name, for now. She can tell us her real name later, if she wants."

Physical-Phoebe nods. "That's enough for now. Okay, Cassiel. Thank you for talking to me. I enjoyed our conversation! I hope we can talk more, soon."

She pauses to touch the ring in her pocket, debating whether she should leave it behind for Cassiel to have someone to talk to. Uncertain regarding what path to take, she merely shakes her head.

"I'll come by to visit you every hour or two, alright? There's a button on the dresser beside your bed. If you need me, just push it, and I'll come running."

Phoebe waves goodbye to Cassiel, though, judging by the girl's inability to even see her, the action ends up feeling useless.

A few minutes later, Physical and Spirit-Phoebe slowly trudge away from the house, simultaneously happy at making a small amount of progress, yet frustrated by not making nearly as much as they wanted.

Physical-Phoebe pulls Gabriel's ring out of her pocket. "I should give this to Jason right away so he can ask Gabriel if he made successful contact."

"I think he did." Spirit-Phoebe says. "If someone is able to communicate with an Archangel, making just a little physical contact with the ring should be enough. You don't need to wear it."

Physical-Phoebe stares off into the distance, at her husband, talking to Hans Wagner about something she can't make out from so far away.

"I haven't really spoken to Gabriel much." Physical-Phoebe says. "What's he like?"

Her spirit self shrugs. "Quiet, polite, introspective. He's like a giant teddy bear."

"Mmm..." Physical-Phoebe murmurs. "Say... why do you and I get along so well, but not Jason and Hope? We're clones too, right?"

"You know the reason. It's because our husband bottles up his emotions and lashes out," Her spiritual self answers. "And we're at fault, too. We should have been more empathetic to Hope. Or rather, you should have. I didn't exist at that point. Or maybe I did, since I share those memories. Huh... I guess this is how Jason and Hope often feel about their shared-"

Spirit-Phoebe abruptly stops talking, startling her physical self. Phoebe turns around, only to see her spirit-self nowhere in sight.

"...Uh. What?" She asks.

Phoebe glances to the left and right. She frowns as something makes her stomach churn, some unknown sensation she can't fully identify.

From a distance, Jason shouts something, but she doesn't quite make it out. Phoebe turns to look at him, only to frown when she sees the Wordsmith running toward her with a look of panic on his face.

"Huh?" Phoebe asks. "What's wrong, Jason? Why did you recall my spiritual..."

Phoebe pauses mid-sentence. That unsettling feeling in her gut boils over as she turns to look back at Cassiel's plant-covered house.

"Oh, no. No! NOOO!!"

A minute earlier.

After Phoebe leaves, Cassiel remains in the same place as before.

The angel girl sits motionless on the ground, her thoughts a mixture of hyper-speed contemplations regarding her freedom, but also molasses slowing her down and preventing her from making a move.

The fear of the unknown. The fear of possibilities. The fear of new horizons, and even the fear that this new life might not entirely be real, but a hallucination inside her mind.

How often has she dreamt of seeing sunlight again, or the sky, or grass, flowers, and pretty birds? How many times did she sob silently, wishing someone would come to save her, yet know she was trapped forever?

She questions herself constantly. Her stomach swirls as she struggles to orient herself with the unfamiliar world around her, a world she hasn't seen in one hundred thousand years.

As a Lazarite, she only experienced a relatively short period of life in Heaven before the end of the Energy Wars. Then, she ended up inside Gressil's dungeon, tormented for close to ninety-nine percent of her entire life.

For almost the entirety of her existence, she has known only pain and suffering. She has become a shell of her former self. A fragile glass ball suffering from thousands of hairline cracks, ready to burst at the slightest touch.

Her halo hangs listlessly over her head, barely bright enough to be visible in pitch-blackness, let alone daylight. Once a brightly glowing symbol of her resurrection, she used to see herself as a fighter for the Divines, a warrior who could do anything if she put her mind to it.

But those days faded away, reduced to faint, barely perceivable memories.

In her head, only one thing ingrained itself into her mind.

The face of her tormentor. A monster who used her for his own pleasure. A vile beast who punched her, beat her, stabbed her, and did other vile things no person should ever do to another.

Every time Gressil's face appears in Cassiel's memories, she bites her lip, slowly chewing it raw.

What normal life can she ever lead, after suffering so badly?

How could she ever return to normal society after being defiled by his hands?

These thoughts spin like a tornado in her mind, right up until all the light in her room disappears.

A sickening, yet overwhelmingly familiar sensation explodes in Cassiel's stomach.

She jerks her head up from her knees. She opens her mouth in a silent scream as, just two feet away, a pair of greyish, corpse-like legs stand before her.

Cassiel's eyes flick upward, to the torso of a demon with six arms, two heads, and dozens of glowing eyes embedded in his flesh.

Gressil, her most hated and feared person in existence, towers over the little angel girl, a vicious grin plastered on his face. Having not yet fully healed himself, his body appears scarred and disfigured, but this only makes his sudden and unexpected arrival even more horrifying!

"Haha. Hello, Birdy." Gressil says. "Did you think... you escaped me?"

Cassiel jerks her head back, smacking it against the wall. Before her silent scream can become an audible one, Gressil lunges out one of his hands to grab her by the throat. He yanks her away from the wall, presses her against the ground, and crouches over top of her small, defenseless body.

"Haha. Haha." Gressil gurgles. "You did, didn't you? You thought the humans saved you. They didn't. You're not safe here, Birdy. You never were, and you never will be. I let you escape. You weren't a fun toy anymore. You didn't scream like you used to. You stopped giving me pleasure."

Gressil licks his lips. Cassiel weakly grabs at his wrist in a desperate attempt to pull him off her, but her sickly, impoverished body can't do anything to stop him.

"Yes. Fight back more." Gressil says, as a dark hunger appears in his eyes. "Just like that. You're so beautiful. I forgot how pretty you once looked. All those years in that smelly cell... it made your skin rotten. You're much better the way you are now... but this isn't enough for me. I want you to gain back more of your spirit, Birdy. Then, when you think you've finally escaped me, I'll appear again. I'll take you for myself, pluck out your cute little wings, and ravish you until there's nothing left."

His smile spreads even wider, turning truly lecherous.

"Your new friends don't know who you are. Even if they did, they'd only feel shame for you. You're nothing but a shadow of your old self. Do you think they'll be able to protect you? Do you think you'll be able to protect them? You failed everyone. You led your sisters right to me, and I devoured their cute little bodies whole. Haha. They used to cry out your name, before I snuffed them out like candles."

Gressil lowers his head. His long tongue snakes out of his mouth, as he forces it down Cassiel's throat, making her gurgle and choke in fright.

When he retracts his tongue, he smiles one last time.

"Just a parting kiss to go. Never forget whose girl you are. If you don't want the others to suffer… you'd better not get any bad ideas. I'll make sure to punish you ten times worse when we next meet. Haha."

He releases Cassiel's neck, but even with her windpipe freed, she doesn't scream. She lays on the ground, too frightened to move, shaking and petrified out of her wits. Her mouth opens and closes involuntarily as she recalls the revolting taste of his rancid, rotten saliva.

"Yes. Just… like… that…" Gressil says, as he traces his hand across her chest.

Gressil stands up. His body fades away, as if swallowed by an invisible doorway. Moments later, his presence vanishes, along with his magic-suffocating aura.

Cassiel lays still, shaking and staring at the ceiling, unable to stop her body from trembling. Tears well up in her eyes, and a faint, distant scream gurgles in her throat, never to fully emerge.

Moments later, the door to her room flies open. Jason and Phoebe charge inside, only to spot Cassiel laying on her back, shaking like a leaf.

"Oh, no." Phoebe whispers, her heart in her throat. "Cassiel! Cassiel! It's okay! We're here, now!"

She rushes over to Cassiel, but the angel continues to stare at the ceiling, as if having lost touch with the world around her.

Jason keeps his distance and investigates the area with his senses. His eyes narrow to slits when his Wordsmithing gives him solid evidence of the events which just transpired.

"Gressil. You mother fucker."

Part 335: The Power Glove

Dozens of troopers rush to Cassiel's residence. They swarm around the exterior and sweep the perimeter, but nobody finds any indication of the Emperor of Chaos's presence. As if having stepped through time and space, he vanishes, never appearing on anyone's sensors.

Phoebe holds Cassiel in her arms while the angel quietly shakes and trembles, too petrified to move a muscle. Phoebe hastily cleans up the disgusting saliva left on her face, all while rage-filled thoughts boil in her mind.

"I won't leave you. Don't worry, I'm here for you, Cassiel. Just stay calm, take deep breaths..."

As Phoebe consoles the broken woman, Jason storms outside and grabs the nearest trooper.

"Well?! Where is he?! Don't give me that shit! You find that cocksucker! Shut down the portal and trap the motherfucker here! I'll kill him myself if I have to!"

The Wordsmith exhales so hard that his nostrils flare up and his eyes turn bloodshot. Even as the trooper stammers out several apologies, Jason continues ranting.

"How did he get here unseen, anyway?! I fully upgraded and reinforced the Core's security and scanning protocols to ensure this wouldn't happen! What, did he fall out of the fucking sky?!"

"I-I'm sorry, sir," The troopers says. "We don't know how Gressil made it past our barriers. Since he can use illusion magic, and he has some sort of teleporting ability, we think he might have-"

"I don't want you to goddamn think about what he did, I want you to make sure this doesn't happen again!" Jason roars. "What if he'd gone after Phoebe, or Hope, or even me?! Hell, if he can get past the Core, he could go anywhere in our defensive line! We can't just sit here and-"

Before Jason can continue any longer, a hand grabs onto his shoulder and forcefully spins him around. Jason scowls when he finds himself face-to-face with Belial.

"Alright, Jason. Simmer down. Stop blowing your top at this poor guy." Belial says, frowning at him. "It's not his fault."

Jason inhales and exhales several times before pushing Belial's hand away. He shoots a glare at the trooper, but then softens his expression.

"You're right. Sorry! Never mind. Keep looking for him, and let me know if you find anything."

The trooper nods hastily. "Y-yes, sir!"

He leaves Jason alone to rant at Belial.

"I didn't realize- I didn't think he could just wander in through the front fucking door." Jason growls. "This is absurd, absolutely god-damned absurd! How the hell are we supposed to deal with an illusory, teleporting, sadistic fuck-bastard like Gressil?!"

Belial glances at the open doorway leading to Cassiel's room.

"I don't know, Jason. Now that Gressil has shown he can come and go as he pleases, we'll have to figure out how to even detect him. Magical technology won't work; he'll shut it down when he gets close, or it won't even penetrate his anti-magic aura in the first place. And traditional technology probably won't work either, because he can hide himself in illusions."

"What, so we're just screwed, then?" Jason asks.

"I... I don't know." Belial says with a sigh. "I punch things, and I heal things. I also sneak around and stretch my limbs. None of my skills will be of any use in tracking Gressil down, not unless he wants to make a booty call."

"Hilarious." Jason mutters.

"You're missing the bigger picture." Belial says. "We don't know what Gressil said or did to Cassiel. What we do know is that he could have easily whisked her away from right under our noses, but he didn't. Why do you think he left her here?"

Jason frowns. "Are you implying..."

"I'm not implying anything," Belial says. "I'm postulating that Gressil let us take Cassiel and Hope from his dungeon. Think about it. As hard of a task as our escape was, if Gressil didn't want us to rescue them, we'd have been powerless to stop him. He could have grabbed Cassiel and Hope both and teleported away. He must have some broader aim, some goal he's pursuing."

The Wordsmith's expression turns chilly.

"So, what? He only came here to traumatize Cassiel? Or do you think he did something else to her?"

"One thing is for sure." Belial replies. "Gressil isn't right in the head. He devoured his mother, and now she's become part of him. Looking at the facts I've uncovered, Gressil... seems to be able to consume others and merge them into himself. Since that's the case, it might explain why he captured Hope."

"You mean..." Jason says, while sucking in a shallow breath. "...He wanted to merge Hope into his body? He wanted to steal Hope's Wordsmithing powers?"

"Possibly." Belial answers. "But I'm only guessing. Then, of course, we have to ask why he didn't do that in the first place. Why rip off all of Hope's limbs and torture him until he fell into a coma? Maybe there's some... some other reason for his actions we aren't seeing? And Cassiel, he might have some awful, nefarious plan for her, too."

Jason falls silent. He drops to the ground and plunks on his butt as many heavy thoughts weigh on his mind.

Several minutes pass. While the troopers hustle and bustle around Cassiel's residence and swarm around the city, searching for life signs or magical technology failing to do its job, the Wordsmith merely closes his eyes and thinks.

Belial sits beside him. She waits for him to finish thinking, and to finish conferring with his mind-wife.

Eventually, Jason opens his eyes. He lifts his gaze upward, to the sky.

"...Tarus II isn't safe." Jason mutters. "Not in the least. It has a fixed location. It's easy to infiltrate. I was planning to remedy this in the future, but I thought I could rebuild and fortify here, at least for now. As it stands, we're sitting ducks."

Belial raises an eyebrow. "What do you mean? Should we move to another planet?"

"No." Jason says. "Not another planet. Camael's Cube. It has a vast living space inside its interior. It would be the ideal position for a mobile base. The demons wouldn't be able to touch us. The Volgrim would have a hard time even detecting us. We'd be so much safer than here, living on this blasted mud-ball. I already planned to move everyone into the Cube at some point, but I didn't expect to have to move so quickly. Gressil's abilities change things."

"How long would it take for you to make the Cube hospitable to human life?" Belial asks.

"I don't know." Jason answers. "Currently, the interior of the cube is rich with magical energy. But oxygen? An ecosystem of plants and animals? Doesn't exist. I'd have to Wordsmith all of that into existence. I'd have to terraform the Cube into something more livable. I could make it like a giant space station, but I'd rather give it seasons, functional day/night cycles on a 24-hour rotation, and so on. I haven't thought about how to imitate sunlight, though, or set up photosynthesis and all that other stuff. No offense, but Phoebe is only a substitute for Solomon's abilities. His Crown could make terraforming take minutes, or perhaps even seconds. It will take Phoebe a lot longer to compute all the variables, and that's while she's working on all our other projects."

"In the meantime..." Jason continues, slowing his words down while he continues to think, "I have to find some way to protect Cassiel and the others. Once Hope awakens, he should be able to protect himself. But right now, he's helpless."

"Should we leave him alone?" Belial asks, glancing at Hope's infirmary. "Gressil could grab him right this second."

"If he didn't capture Cassiel, I don't think he'll take Hope." Jason answers. "But that being said, I placed a dozen of my best soldiers in his room, and I shut down the portal to the Labyrinth. Gressil should be either stuck here, or stuck in the Labyrinth..."

While talking, a glint appears in Jason's eyes. He suddenly stands up and nods, as a look of surprise appears.

"Of course! I didn't even think about that."

"Think about what?" Belial asks, also jumping to her feet.

"My Black Hole Constructs." Jason explains. "For now, what Hope and Cassiel need are bodyguards, someone who can stay awake 24/7, maintain a vigilant watch, and never leave their side. My constructs are perfect for that job. Unlike normal sentients, they never get tired, and they're excellent at focusing on one task. Their bodies are damn-near indestructible, and they hit like firetrucks."

Jason glances at Belial. "You fought Gressil. How strong was he? Do you think he'd win if he and one of my constructs came to blows?"

Belial scrunches up her face. "Um. It's hard to say. His ability to teleport is really, really troublesome. His illusions screwed with my mind, making him able to trick me repeatedly. But physically? He's not even close to my match. I beat the crap out of him, with ease."

"So he's not invincible." Jason concludes. "That's fine. I can work with it. Recall. Recall."

Jason utters two words of power, causing both of his Black Hole Constructs to appear before him. The eerie copies of his body stand at attention, their vacuous eyes gazing forward at nothing in particular.

"Is it alright to put the constructs into such minor roles?" Belial asks. "I thought you built them to protect the Core?"

"I did, but they're more of deterrents, or ultimate weapons. Using them as bodyguards for VIPs is perfectly fine. Maybe I'll even make more, to protect my wife and other high-profile people."

"Including yourself?" Belial asks. "Jason, if Gressil can get the jump on Hope, he can certainly do so to you. You definitely need protection. Maybe even me, too. If Gressil were to attack me at an inopportune time, I'd probably end up on the losing side of a fight."

"We need to catch that slippery cunt in some sort of trap." Jason says, while scrutinizing his constructs. "For now though, let's work on one thing at a time. Appearance. Shift. Morph."

Jason mentally manipulates the face and body of one construct, changing it from an ugly facsimile of himself into a pretty, delicate, and gentle-looking angel, not dissimilar to Cassiel, but with red hair, a tiara on her forehead, and a cute red dress.

Belial glances at him. "Um."

"It's not what you're thinking," Jason says. "Cassiel is obviously afraid of men and demons. If I'm going to give her a bodyguard, they should look like an angel, you see? Then she'll feel more comfortable. So I'll give her a dainty, sweet-looking girl to protect her."

Jason smiles evilly and chuckles to himself. "And if Gressil reappears, maybe this little cutie will catch him offguard. He might not realize how terrifyingly strong she is, heh heh heh..."

"Are you sure you didn't hit your head recently?" Belial asks. "You worry me, sometimes."

Jason waves his hand. "I'm just messing around. Anyway, this isn't enough to stop Gressil. Let me add some new 'features' to this Construct."

Jason falls silent for several minutes while conversing with his mind wife. After some time, he speaks a word of power.

"Transmitter."

Jason holds out his hand, and a tiny bean-sized gadget appears in his palm. He grabs the hand of the female construct and slaps the device into its grasp.

"Swallow this."

The Construct doesn't nod or acknowledge his words, but it does open its mouth and toss the gadget into the back of its throat. After swallowing, it returns to a neutral standing position.

"What was that?" Belial asks.

"I'm making the Construct better able to contact others for backup in the event that Gressil or some other enemy does appear." Jason explains. "The transmitter will work anywhere on Tarus II, and it has a triangulation beacon in the event the Construct ends up inside the Labyrinth. Even if Gressil's anti-magic field appears, the Construct will be able to send out a distress signal."

"Such a bland term." Belial comments. "Why not give her a name? Just calling her 'Construct' seems lame, right?"

"It's essentially a biological machine." Jason says. "Its appearance doesn't matter. It's not a real girl, you know?"

"Sure. But why not treat her like a real person?" Belial asks. "Let's call her... Sally!"

"That's terrible." Jason says, rolling his eyes. "If we're going to name the Construct, let's at least make the name something angelic. Uh..."

He pauses for a moment to think.

"How about... Soleil?"

"Bit of a mouthful." Belial says.

"Sure, but Cassiel, Muriel, Samael, etc. They all have names that end in I-E-L or A-E-L. Since she has red hair, that made me think of fire, the sun, Earth's former star, Sol... So, why not Soleil?"

Belial mulls the idea over in her head for nearly a full minute. She finally nods.

"Alright. Soleil. It's adequate."

"Right, and for the other construct..."

Jason snorts to himself and tries to suppress a smile. He Wordsmiths again, this time aiming to change the appearance of the other Construct.

"Appearance. Shift. Morph."

This time, Belial crosses her arms, turns to look at Jason, and shoots him an expression which seems to ask, are you an idiot?

"What are you even doing, Jason? Stop messing around. That looks totally stupid."

"No it doesn't!" Jason says, defensively. "He looks awesome!"

"No. He doesn't. What's with the black, rubber suit? And the pointy horns on his head?"

"They're not horns. They're like, uh, animal ears."

"Animal ears? They look like horns! Also, a cape? Why would you give the suit a cape? It's completely impractical."

Jason scowls at Belial. "Come on, don't tell me you don't recognize Batman! He's so cool! Hope will get a real kick out of waking up and seeing Batman protecting him. It might even make him laugh!"

Belial facepalms. "I don't know who 'Batman' is, but he looks utterly stupid. Do something else."

Jason rolls his eyes. "Fine. Appearance. Shift. Morph."

Upon seeing the Construct's second change in appearance, Belial groans in displeasure. "Ughhh. Seriously? Why is this guy made of nothing but muscles? He looks like some dumb idiot roid-rager. Like Bael, but even more ridiculous."

"He's Arnold Schwarzenheggar!" Jason protests. "A super cool 80's action star! He can definitely intimidate Gressil if he shows up."

"He won't intimidate anyone! He looks like a lunkhead!" Belial says, cracking a smile in part due to the ridiculousness of the situation. "Are you messing with me? Get serious, Jason!"

"Fine, fine." Jason grumbles. "Someone isn't any fun. Alright... lemme think."

Jason falls silent for another minute or so before his expression becomes more serious.

"Alright. This should unironically be pretty useful in a lot of ways. Appearance. Shift. Morph."

This time, when the construct changes its shape, Belial nods along, silently examining it from all angles. She walks around the construct and flashes a look of surprise at Jason.

"King Arthur. That's an... interesting choice. Why make a doppelganger of the Hero King himself?"

"A few reasons." Jason explains. "First, he's intimidating. Second, he has one hell of a reputation with the demons. Just seeing him should spook anyone who remembers his face. And thirdly..."

Jason pauses.

"...Wouldn't it be incredible if I could mimic some of Arthur's powers and give them to this construct?"

"Can... can you even do that?" Belial asks. "I know you boosted Phoebe's body to give her super-strength, but... how do you mimic or recreate someone's powers?"

"My Wordsmithing is versatile." Jason says. "But its true power lays not in making myself a godly fighter, but in improving other people and creating artifacts and gadgets. I've boosted Phoebe's strength and durability to her biological limits, sure, but I've also given myself telepathy, and telekinesis, flight, and super-speed. Surely, with some effort and careful thought, I could grant other types of abilities."

"Have you tried doing that before?" Belial asks.

"Sort of..." Jason says, his tone slowing down. "The thing is, me doubling the gravity in an area through my Wordsmithing isn't the same as giving someone else the power to manipulate gravity. I've always hesitated to dole out powers, because if they were used for evil, turned against me, or mishandled by accident, someone could do a lot of damage. Even so, Phoebe and I have been talking. She's working on a... a new gadget."

The Wordsmith glances around at the troopers in the area. Without hesitation, he Wordsmiths a privacy field around himself and Belial, hiding them from view and turning their words inaudible to the outside world.

"I don't want to get anyone's hopes up." Jason says, keeping his voice low. "But... basically, I think it might be possible to mass-produce something that will benefit every single person that pledges themselves to humanity's cause. Not just humans, but monsters and demons alike."

"In what way?" Belial asks, her curiosity piqued.

"Projection." Jason says, summoning a small ethereal image in the air above his palm.

A mechanical glove-like device appears, one with all sorts of technical-looking pieces, a display screen, and a mechanical rotator dial built-in to the wrist.

"This is the next step in humanity's warfare doctrine." Jason says. "I call it the Power Glove."

Belial groans louder than before. "Your names seriously suck."

"Nah. The Power Glove is so bad," Jason says, offering her a faint smirk before continuing. "But, true to its name, the Power Glove will give people the ability to shapeshift into other forms, or to switch between wielding different sorts of magical powers."

He pauses before adding, "As far as the Shapeshifting thing goes, I got the idea from you."

"From me?" Belial asks. "Wait, can this Power Glove turn people into... anyone else?!"

"Well. Sort of." Jason says. "It has some... technical limitations. Currently, I can only store a few blueprints in it at a time. After all, storing an entire entity's genetic makeup would require a lot of digital storage space. If you wore it, you could turn into a human, an angel, a monster, or whatever was programmed into your module. Your appearance would only be capable of becoming one type of thing, though. So it's not like you can select 'human woman' and then customize your hair, eye color, or anything else. You'd only have access to a few pre-programmed appearances. And the glove would have to stay on, so it would make identifying a transformed person pretty easy."

"I see." Belial says. "What's the functional reason for allowing people to swap species?"

"Humans have a serious problem." Jason explains. "Magically speaking, we're all utterly dull and useless at it. We don't have Psionics, magic, or any other sort of extraordinary abilities. Only I do, as a Hero. But a Power Glove, if it works, could upend all of that."

Jason becomes more excited as he talks. "I mean, think about it! If someone needs to move a bunch of debris, they could morph into a huge Troll! Or they could select the super-strength augment! Flight? Got that covered. Invisibility? Check. Teleportation? Yup."

"There must be a catch." Belial says. "Surely, a device this ridiculous would shatter the balance of power."

"Oh, it will." Jason says. "I promise that. But yeah, it's going to have some limitations. From what I've discovered, most people have 'affinities' for different types of power. Phoebe is pretty versatile. She can handle super strength, telekinesis, some other stuff, but her ability to summon and fling fireballs is complete crap. We'll have to build Power Gloves individually, customizing one for each soldier. It'll take a lot of time and effort to do all that."

"Plus," He adds, "There's one other limitation. Humans innately can't control magic very well. Not only are they useless at it, but their bodies can't store much of it at all. So, do you remember what I said during the meeting earlier? About making something like a mana battery to store humanity's collective magical energy?"

Belial nods. "I do. Will the gloves pull from that power source?"

"Kinda. If everything works out, people will be able to recharge their Power Gloves at the Mana Batteries. The gauntlets will store mana until needed, and then people will be able to use magical powers for a short time. But! There's one neat factor. Someone who possesses a lot of mana in their body already, such as a high-ranking demon, or a monster like Blinker... they'd be able to use the powers much more versatilely. They can run the abilities not only through the glove's internal batteries, but through their bodies' mana circuits."

The Wordsmith stares at Belial meaningfully. "You have a lot of mana, but not many ways to use it. With a Power Glove, you'd gain access to an entire arsenal of powers."

"Whoa." Belial mutters. She falls silent for half a minute, contemplating Jason's words. "This is... this is kind of huge, Jason. A genuine game-changer."

"Yeah. But right now, it's all theory. I need to do some other stuff first before the Power Gloves become viable. Phoebe hasn't even completed the designs yet. They might not be practical."

The Wordsmith shrugs. "Even if the Power Glove idea doesn't work, I have other concepts that will reshape our society. Ever since... ever since Stormbringer... I've been thinking more in the bigger picture."

Belial rests her hand on Jason's shoulder.

"You're doing a good job, Jason. You're trying your best. I'm sure, with Phoebe's help, this Power Glove thing will work out. She's a genius, you know. That's why I love her, among other reasons."

"Haha..." Jason chuckles. "There you go, getting all starry-eyed about my wife, again. Are you going to pull her aside one of these days when I'm not looking? Get a little smoochy-smooch going on?"

Belial's skin flushes with color. "No, no, don't be silly! I'd, I'd never do something like that! That would be a betrayal of our friendship!"

"I'm just kidding." Jason says, waving his hand. "And hey, if anything happens, I'll just look away for a bit."

He smiles at Belial, but a hint of sadness rests in his eyes.

"You've suffered a lot in your life, Samantha. I'd like for you to find happiness, too."

The former Second Emperor stares at the Wordsmith for a moment before averting her gaze.

"Thank you."

Jason nods. "Anytime."

He shifts his attention back to the two Black Hole Constructs.

"Ahem. Now then, returning to these two... how can I make them into Gressil-slayers, I wonder?"

Part 336: Too Many Spies

After attacking his precious 'Birdy,' Gressil departs her room, arriving outside the building and shrouding himself in illusions. He turns his body invisible, then shoots a glance at the approaching Wordsmith, not far in the distance.

"Haha. What fun it is to sow chaos among the righteous."

Gressil closes his eyes. He inhales deeply, and suppresses the corrupted mana emanating from his body, that same anti-magic aura which has currently snuffed out the powers of every entity in a several-mile sphere.

He condenses his power, his 'Chaos Energy' into himself, making it only surround his body and the immediate five-foot vicinity. In this way, he becomes completely stealthy, able to walk around without alerting everyone possessing a magical nature to his existence.

The Emperor of Chaos takes a heavy breath, pained by having to forcefully subdue his demonic nature.

"I cannot suppress the energy of Chaos for too long," He mutters to himself. "My rage knows no end."

He casually strolls forward, occasionally flickering a few hundred feet in one direction or another, passing through walls and stepping into fortified and unprotected areas alike.

Hell's prison-warden eyes the humans, monsters, and demons on Tarus II coldly.

"They will shut down the portal to the Labyrinth, soon enough. I shouldn't linger for long. Ah, but how I wish to check up on my worms. So many spies, but so little time..."

Gressil steps through space into a large tent, one with a mid-level military officer sitting inside taking notes.

"Hello." Gressil says, his voice rumbling in the air. "It's been a while since we saw each other, little human."

The man turns around and gasps in horror, seeing the specter of his nightmares standing before him. "M-master Gressil! I-I-I..."

"You've been keeping to yourself lately." Gressil says, his tone ice-cold. "I want to see you out and about more, worm. A spy is no good to me in their room."

"Y-yes! Of c-course, master Gressil!"

The man practically pisses himself in fear, even after Gressil departs. The horror of having succumbed to Gressil's worms some years earlier has made not only his life a living hell, but the lives of hundreds of other infiltrators as well.

Unlike Ose's bewitched servants who follow her orders, Gressil's 'worms' maintain their free will. However, knowing that their master can appear before them anywhere, at any time, keeps them dishonest to their fellow men and women. None of them wish to end up on his torture table.

Gressil visits a few other spies before traveling to a small house just outside the city's limits, but within its hardened, crystalline wall.

When he appears, a demoness inside nearly jumps out of her skin.

"M-m-mister Gressil!" She gasps.

Gressil glances around inside her small and humble abode. He quickly spots what appears to be an elderly man laying on a bed, with both of his wrists chained to the headboard, and his legs tied to the base of the bed through ropes.

"Rosalia." Gressil growls. "I see you've found the one you were pursuing. How... precious. To think one of demonkind's rising stars would end up here, trapped in the palm of your hand. You have promise."

Rosalia flinches when she sees Gressil eyeballing Beelzebub, chained to the bed and unconscious, sleeping due to exhaustion.

"M-Mister Beelzebub is- I already told you I found him! You're not going to take him from me, are you?!"

"Why would I bother?" Gressil asks. "No. I just wanted to thank you. Your eyes have provided me... valuable information. In particular, you have kept a close watch on the former Second Emperor's movements. You are one of my more exemplary worms."

Gressil smiles, but his expression appears far more cruel than kind-hearted. He leans forward and reaches out his hand, seizing the plump demoness's shoulder. He squeezes it hard enough to make her cry out in pain, but no matter how she tries to pull away, she can't break free.

"Your efforts are appreciated, but still too lacking." Gressil growls. "I gave you Desire, yet you barely feed her anything of value. Stop holding back. You have the power now... the power to shape your own destiny. I expect you to make dramatic improvements in the coming months. Do not disappoint me."

Rosalia shivers. She averts her eyes, too terrified to meet Gressil's piercing gaze.

"B-but... what you want me to do... I can't get away with it! There are too many fleshbags! They'll see me! They'll find out!"

"You work in a hospital." Gressil says. "Accidents happen. Do not give me excuses. Give me results."

He continues to stare at her for a few moments before casually flicking his wrist and sending Rosalia flying backward. She screams in pain after crashing against the wall, but when she opens her eyes again, the prison-warden no longer appears anywhere in sight.

Gressil continues traveling. Before long, he arrives at the Warpgate leading from Tarus II to the Labyrinth. He walks casually, not moving with any particular haste. Thanks to the intelligence granted by his many worms, he arrives moments before the troopers at the gate receive their orders to shut it down. Right as they start to key in the command codes, Gressil teleports forward and passes through, arriving inside the Core at the same time as the Warpgate closes.

The Emperor of Chaos continues his previous objective. He casually traverses around the Core in the same way he always has. No matter whether humans or demons or monsters stand near him, he passes by their sensors and eyes without the slightest trouble.

For years now, he has popped by the Core at random times, infecting worthwhile humans and their allies with his worms. Today, a few hundred spies linger among humanity's forces, unknown to their brethren.

Gressil sighs. "How troublesome it is, growing new worms. Such a slow process. And then I have to hunt down worthwhile hosts with a high compatibility... if only I could entrust this matter to a capable slave."

He visits a few more worm-hosts in the Core before ultimately waltzing out through the front door, unseen by his enemies. Not one person notices any trace of his presence.

After leaving, the pressure in Gressil's body begins to take its toll. He slowly releases the Chaos Energy he's built up, allowing him to once again emanate his anti-magic aura. The further he gets from the Core, the more of it he releases, until finally, he can breathe easily.

"Chaos. It is a power, and a curse..." He muses. "It is hatred and rage. Emotions too overwhelming to control. Few can harness its might. Ah, but that Beelzebub fellow... for a moment, he did manage to tap into it. Such an interesting candidate. How glad I am to have found him when he was only an imp. Giving him that piece of the Phoenix was, indeed, the appropriate choice."

Gressil chuckles to himself. He changes direction, heading back not to Faith's End, but a short detour elsewhere.

Soon, he arrives at a curious sight. Three goblins travel through the Labyrinth's winding hallways, their gait taking them directly toward the Labyrinth Core.

"Ah. There you are." Gressil says to himself.

He steps out of his illusory world to arrive directly in the Goblins' path. All three of them flinch in alarm, but upon seeing the entity in front of them, and recognizing who is is, their postures become even more defensive.

"N-no want trouble!" The lead Goblin says. "Please, Gressil! What you want?"

Gressil snorts. "Stop the act, Changeling. All three of you."

The lead Goblin, none other than 'Grima' himself, stares at Gressil for several seconds before standing up straight. He nods slowly, re-evaluating the Emperor before him.

"Prison-Warden Gressil. This one has heard your name come up recently through our contacts."

"I'm sure you have." Gressil says. "And it looks as if you've enjoyed a little vacation from the Core. Did the Founders reward you for your... delivery?"

Grima's expression remains impassive. "What do you mean?"

The Emperor of Chaos merely chuckles. He flicks his gaze toward the other two Goblins.

"This 'Kotori' fellow is still a little new to infiltration. But you two... you appear much more capable than him. It seems Unarin is sending a few high-level Changelings to Tarus II, eh?"

One of the other two Goblins takes a step forward, his demeanor assuming a much more calm and poised stance. "You have no right to interfere in matters regarding the Overlords, demon. Step aside."

"The Overlords." Gressil snorts. "Just say 'Volgrim.' Don't play games with me. I follow your movements carefully. I know what it is that you seek."

"We seek to empower the Founders." Says the second Changeling. "Tactical information is of use. Ancillary conversations are not."

"Oh? Then I suppose I should not stand in your way." Gressil says, smiling sinisterly. "I just wanted to make sure you knew... your movements are not as stealthy as you think."

He chuckles softly, then shoots one last look at 'Grima.'

"By the way, regarding that... special item you found. Did you think you stumbled upon it by chance? Hehe. You have assisted me well, little Changeling. Perhaps, in the future, you will do so again."

Gressil's body fades into the ether, turning invisible and teleporting away.

After he leaves, Kotori and their fellow Changelings turn to look at each other with uncertain expressions.

"What does Gressil speak of?" Asks the second Changeling from earlier, a Seventh-Class Operative named Duugo. "Are his words implying the artifact you delivered to the Founders was a fake?"

"Negative." Kotori answers. "This one is certain the artifact was truly Solomon's Crown. However, this one was unaware they were being manipulated. Why would Gressil use us to place the artifact inside the Founders' grasp?"

"This one is uncertain," Says the third Changeling, a Sixth-Class Informer known as Jin. "It seems you did not find the artifact by chance. This one believes we should alert the Founders as to Gressil's words."

"The demon may be lying." Duugo states. "Perhaps he merely observed Kotori's actions and wished to place doubt in our minds. Nevertheless, this one will deliver a report to the Founders before we return to the Core."

"Demons are excellent at the art of deception." Jin observes. "We must always contemplate and comprehend if we seek to look past their trickery."

"Yes, we must." Duugo agrees.

Tarus II.

Phoebe tenderly holds Cassiel and rocks back and forth, while the angel shivers unceasingly from fear. Having cleaned up Gressil's saliva from Cassiel's face, Phoebe coos to her softly, as if Cassiel were her own daughter.

"There, there. It's okay, now. I'm not going anywhere. I won't leave you alone, honey."

Cassiel clings to Phoebe, the two of them wrapping their arms around each other, as if terrified to let go. She buries her face in Phoebe's chest and remains silent, never once saying a word.

Some time passes while the many troopers outside and inside the room comb every inch of the premises, but as expected, they don't find Gressil. Still, they stick around and keep a wary eye, ready to jump in if he reappears.

Jason enters the room after a time, and smiles weakly at his wife.

"How is she?" He asks.

Phoebe doesn't reply, but her eyes tell him all he needs to know.

"...Fair enough." Jason says.

The Wordsmith walks over and sits on the bed beside Phoebe and Cassiel, while the two of them sit on the floor.

"We can't leave her alone again." Phoebe says. "It's too dangerous."

"I agree." Jason replies. "That's why I've come up with a counter-measure. Don't freak out when you see my two guests, they're not who you think they are."

Invisible question marks pop up above Phoebe's head as she tries to understand her husband's words. A moment later, Phoebe's eyes nearly pop out of her head when two figures walk into the room.

"W-what?! An angel? And... King Arthur?!"

Were Phoebe and Cassiel not holding each other, the former Knight of the Round Table might have leaped to her feet in shock. Even as she struggles to comprehend the appearance of her long-dead king, Jason shakes his head.

"Not quite. Remember my Black Hole Constructs? These are them now."

Phoebe blinks several times, suppressing the emotions within her heart as she gazes at the face of the man she has always admired most. The long-dead Hero, King Arthur, stares at the wall above Phoebe's head, paying neither her nor anybody else in the room any mind.

"Constructs..." Phoebe repeats, slowly shaking the shock from her thoughts. "He's not Arthur? Ah... you Wordsmithed one of the Constructs to look like him. But why?"

"I got the idea from Annette." Jason explains. "I can change the appearance of other people as needed. Hope placed all of Amelia's memories inside Annette and changed her appearance, effectively resurrecting the Black Queen. While I could do the same for King Arthur, it wouldn't feel right. However, making a Construct that simply looks like him can serve many purposes."

Phoebe gently strokes Cassiel's hair while calming her beating heart. "I see. Your Black Hole Constructs are already pretty sturdy. You must intend to have them guard Cassiel."

"Yes, but also no." Jason says. "This angel girl will protect Cassiel, while Arthur will protect Hope and Annette. Once Hope revives, I'll reassign Arthur to protect you. As for the angel..."

He turns to look at her. "I've named the female construct 'Soleil.' Arthur currently doesn't have a personality or sentience, but Soleil is different."

Soleil stands at attention, but unlike Arthur's lifeless eyes, hers sparkle with the gift of life. She lowers her head to offer a simple, flat smile to Phoebe.

"Standard greeting. I am Soleil."

Phoebe nods. "Uh, hi. I'm Phoebe."

"Yes. Thy name is known to me." Soleil says. "Phoebe Hiro. Wife of Jason Hiro. Humanity's lead inventor. Importance Classification Level: Omega. Protection Priority: Highest."

Phoebe frowns. "She's a bit robotic."

"Only for now," Jason says. "I didn't copy her memories from anyone, like I did for Hope, or Hope did for Annette. She's a self-learning construct. I only gave her a few baseline personality rules. She won't hurt any humans, monsters, or demons who ally themselves with us unless she determines they are a threat to humanity as a whole. I worked with your spirit-self to try and make her basic restrictions airtight."

He smiles.

"She's not just a protector. She's a companion for Cassiel. I thought it would be nice if Cassiel had a fellow angel to talk to."

Soleil continues to smile, though her expression doesn't quite seem 'right.' It feels somewhat forced, making Phoebe feel awkward.

"Err, well, let's hope the personality quirks iron themselves out over time."

Unprompted, Soleil walks over and sits down beside Phoebe and Cassiel. Her smile disappears as she turns her attention to the angel tightly clutching onto Phoebe.

"Hello, Cassiel. I am Soleil. I am here to protect thee."

The red-haired construct doesn't reach out to touch Cassiel, but she does do something which surprises Phoebe. She projects a faint but noticeable aura of holy energy. Soleil effortlessly conjures angelic energy in the same way any living angel would, as if she were born and raised a pureblood.

Phoebe raises an eyebrow. "How...?"

"I've added some 'features' to these constructs." Jason answers. "If a certain someone shows up again, he'll encounter a nasty surprise. I doubt we'll be able to catch him off-guard, but if we do, it should prove quite fun."

Phoebe rubs Cassiel's back. "There, you see? We know you're afraid, Cassiel, but my husband will protect you. You don't have to be scared anymore. We'll make sure you enjoy a life of freedom. We'll never let that awful person hurt you again, I promise."

Cassiel doesn't answer, but for the first time in nearly an hour, she lifts her watery blue eyes a smidge to glance at Soleil before lowering her gaze again.

She continues to hold Phoebe tightly, to which the Wordsmith's wife can only shoot her husband a helpless look.

"I'll just stay like this for a while."

Jason nods.

"I'm going to go place Arthur with Hope. Let's talk later."

"Sure." Phoebe concludes.

Sometime later, after putting the Arthur construct inside Hope's room and confirming his clone hasn't awoken from his coma, Jason finds himself standing alone, staring out at the waning sunlight.

"Hidden Emperors. Gressil. Volgrim. I need to be proactive. I can't sit on my ass and pray our problems fix themselves."

He activates his T-REX, enveloping his body in the nanite-based armor. When it seals up, Jason activates a series of recorded files given to him by Belial.

"Let's see. Names of the Hidden Emperors. Known power types. Personalities. This information is fairly comprehensive, but there are some significant holes. Who is this 'Glinch' fellow, and why doesn't Samantha know anything about him? Yumagi... last sighting was not long after the Energy Wars. Is he even still alive? He runs the Tarot Sect, and his powers seem to be identical to Mara's. But how does that work? I thought all demons evolved unique powers once they became Lords? Does he pass them down to his subordinates, somehow?"

Jason chews his lower lip while he reviews the information.

"Emperor Fenrir. Soul-attacker. She can traumatize her victims to the point they commit suicide. Emperor Kristoff. Blood-manipulator. He can create weapons and other implements using blood. Eugh, how grotesque."

The more Jason reads, the more pained his expression becomes.

"Any one of these Emperors could flatten humanity if I'm not around. Belial might be strong, but I doubt she can take on three Hidden Emperors at the same time. If they unite their strength and attack all at once, it could be a doomsday event..."

"We'll have to prepare appropriate responses for each Emperor," Jason's mind-wife, Phoebe, says. "I can help out a little, but I'm stretched pretty thin, currently. Working on all of these new projects is wearing me out. Maybe if you cloned another of me..."

Jason immediately shakes his head. "No can do, Phoebe. I already regret cloning you once. I won't do it again."

"What?" She asks. "You... regret cloning me?"

"No, no, I don't mean like that." Jason says. "Rather, I regret cloning you without asking your physical self for permission. That was wrong of me to do. Besides, I already trapped you in my Mind Realm, and I still feel guilty about that. I don't think it would be ethical to have a second one of you in there, too."

Phoebe glances around Jason's Mind Realm, taking note of Shana, Sir Lorent, and Gabriel, all off doing their own things.

"You already cloned me once," She says. "And that worked out fine. Having another copy of me in here would be pretty useful. I'm run pretty ragged right now. There are at least a dozen major projects on my plate. The Lazarus Tower and Power Gloves, especially. Getting any progress made on terraforming the Cube, creating the 'Demon Empowerment Sigil,' and getting a 'Belial Booster' working are all going to take a lot longer if I have to go at these problems by myself."

"I... I just feel as if playing with lives isn't something I should be abusing..." Jason murmurs. "Somehow, I intuitively feel that if I clone you, the result won't be good. Something feels off to me, but I can't quite put my misgivings into words."

"Is it because of what happened with Hope?" Phoebe asks.

"Sort of. But also, something else. I don't know. I really don't. It's just a feeling in my gut..."

Jason trails off. He shakes his head and returns to thinking about other things.

"Regarding the Demon Empowerment Sigil, the 'DESI'... is converting human energy to demonic energy genuinely viable?"

"It is," Phoebe answers immediately. "We'll be able to temporarily empower allied demons to the rank of Duke, but their bodies won't be able to contain the power for more than a few hours. We also won't be able to use the effect on the same demon in rapid succession. Soul exhaustion seems to be a limiting factor. The body may become stronger, but a Lord's soul is simply not as resilient as a Baron or a Duke's. I think the Belial Booster will be more viable in the long run."

"Mmm..." Jason murmurs. "A smaller but more permanent powerup, granted by Samantha, will do a lot more for empowering humanity's allied demons. It'll help us out more while we don't have many of them, but if more join our cause, Sam alone won't be able to provide enough energy to create Dukes and Emperors."

"Yes, but you're forgetting something important," Phoebe says. "When Samantha uplifts the first demon to Emperor rank on a permanent basis, they'll also be able to donate their energy to a lesser demon. Their numbers will grow slowly at first, but exponentially over time. The more Emperors willing to donate their demonic energy to the 'Belial Booster,' the faster we'll make new ones."

Jason frowns.

"That is true... but then we run the risk of having walking time bombs lurking in our midst. What if enemy demons join us, intending to use the Belial Booster to empower themselves? Then, when we least expect it, they could attack us from the inside. I'd rather focus on empowering our human assets first."

"Alright. Then I'll put the Belial Booster and DESI on the backburner." Phoebe replies. "They can come last."

"Good." Jason says. "Let's focus on the Lazarus Tower first, then the Power Glove. We need to start rescuing fallen souls as soon as possible."

"Actually, I've been thinking about the tower," Phoebe says. "Jason, shouldn't we reconsider putting people back in copies of their original bodies? I can't turn them into Lazarites, but the human body itself is flawed from the beginning. We should consider something stronger and more resilient."

"Like what?" Jason asks. "Body compatibility is a huge issue. If you put people in the wrong bodies, it will take them longer to reacclimate. Souls already suffer trauma due to the First Death. We don't want people to suffer inexplicable pain and whatever else due to being slapped into a 'superior' but lower-compatibility vessel."

Phoebe hesitates.

"...Well, I guess you have a point. Then maybe, once we resurrect someone, we should have some method of strengthening their original body? Some sort of magical beacon that can empower existing people? The way you gave my physical-self super strength is a good example. If you have to Wordsmith that for each individual, your work will never be complete, but maybe we can automate the process?"

"Like you said, one thing at a time." Jason replies. "Let's get people resurrected first, and make sure we stand a fighting chance against the Emperors if they show up. I'd rather not have to-"

Jason suddenly stops mid-sentence. A frown crosses his face as he looks around the vicinity.

"Hmm? What's this strange feeling, like I'm being watched? Gressil? No. It's... something else."

"Someone's trying to look into your mind!" Phoebe exclaims. "It's a Psion! A Volgrim!"

Reflexively, Jason's eyes flick upward, into the sky. He fixates on a point far in the distance, as if looking directly at something blatantly obvious, even though nothing seems to be there.

"Oh? Now, who could that be? Reveal."

The Wordsmith utters a Word of Power, causing a speck in the void to materialize. His T-REX instantly zooms in on the distant dot of light, providing him a crystal-clear image of a squarish, kilometer-long spaceship hovering in space above Tarus II.

"We have guests." Jason says.

"I prevented the Psion from intruding," Phoebe says. "I shut them out completely. How long have the Volgrim been there?"

"A while." Jason says. "I bet they were observing us. Why don't we go and say hello? The fact they haven't attacked must mean they don't harbor outright hostile intentions."

"Or they're acting with caution." Phoebe says. "We beat the shit out of one of their fleets, after all. Do you think they figured out your identity?"

Jason remains silent for a few seconds before nodding.

"Yes. I think they did. Wings."

Jason summons a pair of angelic wings, not dissimilar to those of the Archangels or Cassiel. After pausing for a moment, he casts another word of power.

"Recall."

An instant later, Belial appears next to Jason, startled and bewildered. She whips her head toward Jason and scowls.

"Do you mind?! I was right in the middle of talking to Doctor Fathy! You scared the shit out of me!"

"Sorry," Jason says, gesturing to the speck in the sky, "but we have a problem. The Volgrim are here."

"They are?" Belial asks. She follows his finger, and using her Emperor-level eyesight, manages to pick out the hazy ship hovering in the sky above.

"Shit. That's not good."

"It's not." Jason says with a nod. "But the situation is still salvageable. The fact the Volgrim are observing us, and were doing so from stealth, tells me they're not here to blow us to pieces. I say you and I should go and say hello."

"Okay, but why bring me along?" Belial asks. "As a show of force?"

"I guess that would be a useful side-effect." Jason says. "But, no. I want you to give me information. I want to know which Volgrim we're dealing with, what their goals might be, and anything I might overlook. I lack a lot of information regarding their species, their hierarchy, and how they act in general. I don't want them to catch me off-guard. I'll give you telepathy so you can communicate with me in secret."

Belial waves her hand. "I can already transmit my thoughts to you magically. Most high-level demons can."

"Great." Jason replies. "Then what are we waiting for? Let's go greet our pesky observers."

Part 337: First Contact

The VLL Hatoraxia hovers in the void, roughly a hundred miles above Tarus II's surface. Its stealth modules camouflage it from view, making the primitive species on the planet below unable to see Captain Kordonis's vessel.

Sangin Kordonis, the newly promoted Ambassador for Founder-Human Relations, stands at attention on his ship's Bridge, observing several readouts detailing the nearby planet's activity.

"Mud-dwellers, indeed." Kordonis says. "There is a small settlement on the moon of Kelkin, but its people are incapable of detecting us. Similarly, the humans on Tarus II lack the technology to penetrate our stealth systems. I expected better from the Wordsmith, given how Founder Unarin spoke of him."

Standing at Kordonis's side, Invocator Miikil scans the local world and its moon with her psionic sense. While nowhere near as powerful and versatile as sixth, seventh, eighth, and ninth-ranked Psions, a fifth-ranker like herself still manages to survey hundreds of kilometers of Tarus II's surface with ease.

[I've located the Wordsmith.] Miikil says. [I have also detected a creature boasting a high reserve of mana. I believe they are the former Second Emperor of Demonkind, Belial, rumored to live among the mud-dwellers.]

"Our intelligence suggests several high-ranking defectors have joined the humans' side, but not many of them are demons." Kordonis comments dryly.

[I do indeed sense the presences of a few low-ranking demons, but they mostly only consist of Lords. As for the Archangels, I cannot detect them... oh?]

Miikil cocks her head.

[I sense the presence of two Holy Energy signatures, but they appear much weaker than I expected. If they are two of the Archangels, then their strength appears to have dropped significantly since the battle on Hell Harbor. Perhaps they are different angels?]

Kordonis nods. "Perhaps. If the Wordsmith has somehow revived the Archangels, then bringing back lesser angels should be expected."

The two of them check several additional readouts, eventually completing their preliminary survey of the planet.

"Founder Unarin insists we make friends with the Wordsmith, if possible." Kordonis says. "That being said, I cannot help but wonder if a preliminary attack wouldn't eliminate his threat in an instant. The planet has few safeguards in place, only a five-hundred-meter wall of artificially hardened crystal which surrounds the primary Terran living space."

He shakes his head. "No, never mind. We should never question the Founders. Founder Unarin knows best."

[Founder Unarin is wise. He is just.] Miikil affirms. [I am going to scan the Hero more closely, now.]

Miikil focuses her senses, piercing Jason Hiro's body from afar with a gaze that sees through his bones, his marrow, and even his cellular structure itself. Even with a hundred miles separating the two of them, the young Psion easily makes out the Hero as if he were standing inches away.

[Currently, the Hero wears some sort of nanite-based armor system.] Miikil comments. [I am too ignorant to comment on its composition, but I will transmit my mental impressions to you, Captain.]

Kordonis remains silent as Miikil copies the images from her mind and 'uploads' them to the Technopath Captain's brain.

Several seconds later, she stops, leaving Kordonis to sift through the images.

"It is a primitive design," Kordonis says, "yet surprisingly power-efficient and light on resource-consumption. Given the humans have only rebelled for a mere six orbital cycles, the design of this armor system is quite good. I imagine that they will improve it over time."

[Mmm. I will read the Hero's thoughts,] Miikil says. [Perhaps I may glean some useful intelligence from him before we begin our descent.]

"You have my permission." Kordonis replies.

Miikil focuses her mind. As the first skill that all Psions ever learn, Miikil enhances her telepathic abilities to form a piercing beam of telepathic energy. She reaches toward the Wordsmith's mind and attempts to break through, only to flinch in shock, making her eyes widen.

[Nnn! Rrrgh! Something is wrong! There is... a barrier... surrounding the Wordsmith's mind! Ahh! So many thoughts! His mind is formidable! It is as if he is thinking with four parallel brains at once! All of them are working together to keep me out- oh no!]

Alarms flash on the Hatoraxia's Bridge. Several Bridge officers rush around, checking displays.

"Our cloaking field has dropped!"

"Attempting to reinitiate cloaking mechanisms! Failure! All of the power conduits have stopped working!"

[What caused the malfunction?]

"Unknown! We cannot locate the failure point!"

As the Hatoraxia's officers struggle to fix the sudden failure of their ship's stealth systems, Invocator Miikil takes a step back and sags into her second-in-command chair.

[The Wordsmith knows.] She says. [He is coming for us.]

Kordonis frowns. "What does he know? What are you saying? Did he do this?"

[Yes. He cast a magical spell after locking onto my position. He's traced us and found the Hatoraxia. We don't have long before-]

Miikil doesn't get to finish her sentence.

As she speaks, a pair of alien life-forms materialize on the Hatoraxia's Bridge. One of them is a human cloaked in metallic, nanite-based armor. The other is a high-ranking demoness with Emperor-level horns, wearing a shockingly small amount of clothing. The human's faceless armor and tall, muscular build gives him an intimidating presence that dwarfs all the Volgrim on the Bridge.

Immediately, the Bridge goes quiet as all of the officers reflexively spin to face the newcomer in their midst. Intruder alarms go off, warning the ship's crew of the newcomers, but for some reason, nobody makes an immediate move. All of their bodies lock in place, including Invocator Miikil and her Captain as well.

Frozen by some unknown force, Kordonis's eyes widen. He fights back against the invisible pressure holding his body in place, but no matter how he struggles, he fails to move a muscle.

What's going on?! Kordonis thinks, his mind swirling in a panic. Has the Wordsmith attacked us?!

His thoughts get picked up by Miikil, who also ends up frozen in place, unable to move.

[No! The Wordsmith's emotions are not tumultuous. He has simply-]

"Hello." Jason Hiro, the leader of humanity says, interrupting Miikil's private words to her captain. "So you're the ones who were trying to peer into my thoughts just now. I recognize this ship. It's the same one I disabled some time ago, in Hell Harbor's system."

His calm tone sends chills down Kordonis's spine. The fact that his crew has been rendered defenseless in an instant makes the Captain feel utterly inferior and incapable of fighting back. So suppressive is the Wordsmith's power that Kordonis, if only for a moment, considers him more frightening than Unarin himself!

"You... we..." Kordonis sputters, speaking in the Wordsmith's native language instead of Volgarian. "We are... not here to fight! We come in peace."

Realizing that his plan to intimidate the Hero with a show of Volgrim might has failed, Kordonis pivots to a second option, attempting to display the more benevolent side of his species.

Belial, standing beside the Wordsmith, glances around the Hatoraxia.

"Founder Unarin really sent out the C-Team, huh? And here you'd think he'd want to leave a strong impression on the leader of humanity. The mightiest Psion present is barely even a 5th-rank grunt. The Captain doesn't bear any stripes. It's a ship full of insignificant nobodies."

The Wordsmith glances at Belial and nods. An instant later, the suppressive pressure holding everyone in place abruptly vanishes, causing several Bridge officers to stumble forward and collapse against their consoles. Their original desire to intimidate the Hero reverses, making all of them feel smaller than ants before his presence.

"I've released you." The Wordsmith says. "Don't do anything stupid. Consider this an act of goodwill, since it's clear you didn't bring along an invasion force."

The Wordsmith eyeballs Sangin Kordonis up and down.

"You're in charge?"

Kordonis nods heavily. He struggles to keep his body from shaking, due to the alarm the Wordsmith caused him.

"...I am." He says. "My designation is Sangin Kordonis. I was sent here by the First Founder Unarin himself. He wishes to extend diplomatic negotiations to the leader of humanity, the Wordsmith, Jason Hiro. Judging by your means of arrival... you must be him."

Jason remains aloof, examining the Technopath elite casually. He doesn't seem to worry that the Volgrim might attack him.

"You know a lot about me." Jason says. "I guess I've been a bit too active, lately. I knew the Volgrim would come knocking sooner or later."

"It was you we encountered in the Hell Harbor system..." Sangin Kordonis says. "And it is you who has upended the Labyrinth Core, recently. The Founders have investigated you, and they have interrogated the leader of demonkind, Emperor Ose. They are aware of your abilities and wish to extend you the same courtesies they previously have to the demons."

"The same courtesies." Jason repeats, his tone turning cold. "Is that why you've come? You ignored humanity's plight for 100,000 years and left my people to suffer under the torture of our demonic oppressors... yet you claim to now care about our welfare?"

The Wordsmith takes a step forward, his boot heavily clanking against the deckplate.

"I don't like dishonesty, Sangin Kordonis. Speak the truth. You want something from me. I'm guessing it has to do with the Plague that's keeping your Empire busy."

Kordonis stands his ground, eyeing the Wordsmith's faceless helmet with only a hint of worry. His belief in Unarin leaves him confident the Hero won't attack him, for after all, who would be so foolish as to anger the Founders?

Even so, he isn't completely sure if that will save him.

"You know about the Plague." Kordonis states. "You might have gotten that information from the demons, but more likely, you learned of it through Marie Becker. Perhaps when Confessor Vulpanix visited her laboratory and discovered an errant soul flying around?"

The Wordsmith and the Hatoraxia's Captain both remain silent for several long, tense moments. Kordonis's crew gaze at the Wordsmith and their Captain, uncertain whether or not they'll have to engage in hostilities against an opponent capable of subduing them with a single word.

For once, the proud and haughty Volgrim feel less than capable when facing a so-called 'primitive mud-dweller.'

The Wordsmith raises his hand. He taps the side of his helmet, causing it to dissipate into particles and reveal his unprotected head.

"Indeed. That was me." Jason states, smiling cooly. "I barely escaped with my life. But... judging by our interaction so far, your 'Founders' appear to have moved on from that misunderstanding. So, let's cut the crap. Why are you really here, and what do you want from me?"

The human takes a step back, arriving at Belial's side. The two of them exchange knowing glances, and their eyes linger on each other for a few seconds.

In that moment, Invocator Miikil transmits a warning to her Captain.

[The Wordsmith and Second Emperor are conversing telepathically. I am unable to intercept their words. Forgive me, but my abilities are too weak.]

Kordonis shifts his posture slightly, but otherwise says nothing verbally or mentally to his second-in-command. He merely waits for Jason to turn back to him before answering the Wordsmith's previous questions.

"I had hoped our meeting would go differently," Kordonis states. "But what's done is done. Why am I here? Founder Unarin has heard of the demonic attacks on Tarus II by Emperor Ose. As per the old treaties, he should have been informed of your insurrection, but Ose moved in secret and without his knowledge. We understand that her intent was to capture you and forcibly use your powers against your will, and to her benefit. This has angered the Five Founders, and now they wish to see justice restored on your behalf."

Kordonis nods at a nearby Technopath officer, who activates a holographic projection of several large, metallic crates.

"We have reserved one hundred 'war provisions' worth of equipment, food, and other useful resources which your people can use to rebuild. We understand that the demons detonated some sort of thermonuclear device inside your city and killed over a million inhabitants. Our resources will assist you in rebuilding much more quickly."

"How very generous of your Founders." Jason says, his expression hardening. "Your leaders must truly be the most benevolent beings in existence to give me such a windfall for free while fighting the so-called 'Plague.' I don't suppose they would want some sort of repayment in exchange for their generosity, would they?"

Kordonis meets the Hero's gaze.

"What do you know of the Plague?" He asks. "Are you familiar with the creatures that have ravaged our galaxy for the past eighty-five thousand cycles?"

"I don't know anything about them." Jason answers. "But if your 'almighty' civilization is suffering to the point that it can only send this 'low class' diplomatic vessel here, then I think I can safely assume you have fallen into dire straits."

Kordonis lowers his eyes.

"Indeed. Modern times have become both difficult and dangerous. The Volgrim, the demons, and even your people are now under threat by the Plague menace. It started as a parasitic infection, and quickly spread across several sectors..."

Kordonis takes a few minutes to explain the threat his people face, and by proxy, the threat humanity and demonkind may soon fall under if nothing changes.

The more Jason hears, the more downcast his expression becomes. He glances at Belial and frowns.

"Did you know about any of this?"

The former Second Emperor shrugs. "I heard about a 'Plague' many millennia ago, but I assumed the Volgrim were on their way to cleaning it up. After all, if they couldn't deal with some new enemy, how could the demons? Their might vastly exceeds ours. Other than that, I didn't pay attention to a lot of happenings following Satan's death..."

Her tone becomes lightly wistful, and she looks away, clearly uncomfortable with talking about the deceased Devil any more.

Jason respects her wishes and resumes talking to Kordonis.

"So let me get this straight. There is an infectious disease in the Milky Way which turns living creatures into... what, zombies? And then they attack the populace. Somehow, they possess the ability to travel across space, yet you aren't certain how the Plague does this, and you're unable to properly contain its spread. Did I get everything?"

Kordonis winces. "Yes. That is why the Founders seek to make amends with you. Your strength could prove pivotal in upending the Plague. If it defeats my people, it will come for yours next. It is indiscriminate and unstoppable. With your Wordsmithing, you might be able to come up with some novel ways to defeat it."

Jason lifts his chin to stare down the notably shorter Technopath Captain.

"So you do want something from me. Handouts never come freely, as expected."

"Once you have rebuilt your world, Founder Unarin wishes to invite you to the Founder's Hand." Kordonis explains. "He wishes to talk to you in person, but he is a very busy person and cannot come here himself."

"Busy getting his ass kicked," Belial says, rejoining the conversation. "It sounds like your people are desperate for help. But don't you think your actions come off disingenuous? You paid no attention to humanity until it could offer you something. Now millions have died because of your inattentiveness. A few measly 'war provisions' will hardly settle the debt."

"Ah..." Kordonis says, pausing to stare at her meaningfully. "It seems you... don't understand the value of the First Founder's gift. A single War Provision is incalculably valuable in our society. Ninety-nine percent of our people will never obtain one, and of those who do, they will often have to share it with a large group of other Volgrim. It is, essentially, a form of rare monetary compensation, something humans will be familiar with, except what it purchases is far beyond anything you can imagine."

He gestures to Invocator Miikil.

"If my esteemed Invocator colleague here were to obtain a War Provision, she could apply for several hundred cycles of personal training with a high-ranking Psion. This would allow her to evolve far faster than her compatriots, rapidly turning her into an elite warrior. By the end of her training period, she might already be a seventh or eighth-ranked Psion."

Belial widens her eyes. "Oh! Well, actually... that does sound quite valuable."

Jason nods. "It does. Frankly, I don't need your resources or gifts. I can already uplift my people to heights you can't imagine without any help. However, the process I had planned would take a significant amount of time, and this generous 'gift' from your Founders would certainly speed up the process. Still, I have to consult with my advisors before accepting. After all, only a fool would rush himself into debt needlessly."

"A fair compromise." Kordonis states.

He pauses.

"By the way, Jason Hiro. I must ask... the attack on Hell Harbor... was it your doing?"

Jason blinks. "What attack?"

Kordonis scrutinizes the Terran's face, but he fails to find any sign of deception.

"...The Cherubiim was... not your doing?"

"Err..." Jason grunts, then raises an eyebrow. "Cherubiim? What is...? Ah!"

His eyes flicker with insight. He looks away, then rubs his head thoughtfully. He spends several long seconds staring off into space while rubbing a simple golden ring on his finger, before turning back to Kordonis.

"I see. The Cherubiim, you said? It attacked the demons?"

"Indeed. You know of this creature, then." Kordonis says, not bothering to ask a question, but instead speak a statement. "Did you unleash the Cherubiim upon the Demon populace? We have already confirmed the presence of two angel-class lifeforms on your world. We thought their entire species had been rendered extinct, but now there seem to be at least five of them still alive. What say you regarding their survival?"

Jason smiles.

"I did not send the Cherubiim to attack Hell Harbor. In fact, I was unaware the Archangels had made such a sudden attack. They did not inform me of their plans. But yes, I am aware of their existences. No, I did not bring them back from the dead."

The Wordsmith leans forward, and his smile widens by a small amount.

"Your people simply didn't clean up well enough. I didn't need to bring the Archangels back, because they never died in the first place. Now, is there anything else I can help you with?"

Kordonis hesitates.

"I... suppose not. I will have to inform Founder Unarin of your response."

"That's fine." Jason says. "But as of this moment, the Tarus System is part of humanity's sovereign domain. You are not to set foot on Tarus II, the moon of Kelkin, or any other world without my permission. I would appreciate it if you took your vessel out past the furthest planet to await my reply. Only venture back on official business, and take care to respect my species' privacy."

The Wordsmith narrows his eyes, and his smile turns chilly.

"Anything more, and I will consider it a provocation. I would prefer not to subject such honorable delegates as yourselves to a 'diplomatic incident.' Do we have an understanding?"

Invocator Miikil steps toward the Hero. [Watch your tone, mud-dweller! Our ship may not frighten you, but we are representatives of the Five Founders, the sovereign rulers of the Milky Way! If you continue to insult us and turn up your nose, the Founders will-!]

"Calm down, Miikil," Kordonis says, waving his hand in her direction. "We will make concessions to adequately satisfy the Wordsmith's wishes. After all, we are requesting his assistance. It won't do for us to throw our authority around, unwarranted."

[But...]

"I have spoken." Kordonis concludes. "Forgive my Vice-Captain, Wordsmith. She holds strong feelings for the Five Founders, as do we all."

"I understand." Jason replies. "I won't bully the young. Take care."

His helmet reactivates, and Jason Hiro warps off the Bridge along with Belial, leaving all the Volgrim personnel to stare at their departed afterimages in quiet contemplation.

"How worrying..." Kordonis mutters. "The Wordsmith bypassed all our defenses and rendered us incapable of retaliation. Nobody could move a muscle. Founder Unarin gave me several files detailing his known and hypothesized abilities, but reading data-files is very different from experiencing them in person."

[What do you think the Wordsmith's relationship with the Second Emperor is?] Miikil asks. [They seemed close, but far from intimate. Do you think she is his sexual consort?]

"Your guess is as good as mine." Kordonis replies. "I know little about the primitive biological interactions of mud-dwellers. Were you able to read the Second Emperor's mind?"

[No. The Wordsmith's protective energy extended to Belial, as well.]

"Hmph. Founder Unarin was correct. This Wordsmith is... worrying. He's more intelligent than I imagined. It seems he will not be a simple person to bend to our will."

As Kordonis ruminates on his conversation with the Wordsmith, an alarm beeps on the Hatoraxia's Bridge.

"C-Captain!" Another Technopath crew-member exclaims. "The Planet! Tarus II! It is... becoming indistinct!"

"What? Explain!" Kordonis barks.

However, even as he utters those words, the Technopath glances out the Hatoraxia's windows, where he spots the beautiful green and blue world of Tarus II slowly becoming fainter and fainter, as if turning invisible.

[By the Founders!] Miikil exclaims. [What is going on?! How is that... that anomaly occurring?!]

"We've detected extreme levels of magical energy coming from an unknown location in subspace," The officer answers. "These focused particles have enveloped the world of Tarus II. They are coagulating into a field of interference. Our sensors can't penetrate the exterior!"

As Kordonis watches, Tarus II continues to fade away, until eventually, it becomes completely invisible and disappears from his sight.

Invocator Miikil roars in exasperation. [He... the Wordsmith... turned an entire world invisible?! Impossible. The Founders will never believe this happened!]

"No." Kordonis says, calming his voice. "The planet isn't invisible. Instead, an energy field has surrounded it, blocking it from our sight. I suspect that if we were to descend below the layer of interference, we would see the planet once again."

His eyes lose focus as he gazes downward, at the floor.

"This Wordsmith... his powers defy reality. I have heard my elders propose the usage of a planet-sized 'Laprox Cage,' but never did I think the Wordsmith could so casually construct one mere seconds after leaving. Truly, we cannot afford to underestimate his genius."

The Captain gestures to his Navigational Officer.

"Set a course back to Volgarius. I must report today's events to the Founders, preferably in person."

"Yes, Captain."

Kordonis shoots one last look at the empty space where Tarus II once hung. As his ship turns around to set a course back to Volgarius, he shakes his head.

We must not make an enemy of humanity's leader!

Part 338: Tension and Longing

Jason teleports himself and Belial back to the edge of the Fortress of Retribution, just inside its crystalline walls, but away from the populated areas. He observes the inside of the Hatoraxia for a few moments using his Wordsmithing and listens to the conversation between Kordonis and Miikil while his mind-wife works in secret.

"Alright," Phoebe says. "I've updated the files. You should be able to transform all the existing 'Spatial Pylons' into their updated configuration."

These pylons, the same ones she made during the Stormbringer Invasion to 'harden' the space around Tarus II and make it impervious to Warpers opening portals, now sit in hundreds of pre-selected locations around the world of Tarus II, all casting a net of spatial-strengthening magic to envelop the planet.

Thanks to her technical expertise, Phoebe adds a new function to them, one which requires a mass-update of all their internal workings.

Jason nods, while listening to Kordonis's words. "Alright. Thanks, honey."

Belial raises an eyebrow when she hears Jason say that, but immediately realizes he's talking to his mind-wife and not her.

"What's up?" Belial asks. "You planning something?"

"The Volgrim came here ahead of schedule," Jason answers, "But I had Phoebe prep a possible solution to them in case they ever were to reveal themselves. While we chatted with that Kordonis fellow, she finished her work. One moment."

Jason inhales deeply and closes his eyes. He focuses his mind, reaching into the files his mind-wife has given him, and producing a technical readout of the Spatial Pylons before and after Phoebe's updates.

After absorbing these thoughts into his short term memory, a feeling of technical expertise momentarily swallows the Wordsmith's thoughts. He opens his eyes and utters a Word of Power.

"Update."

His spell permeates the hardened spatial area surrounding his world, infiltrates its central nexus, and travels around to all of the many hundreds of Spatial Pylons dotted around the Planet's crust.

Moments later, the Wordsmith nods.

"Done."

"Uhh... what did you do?"

"From our perspective, nothing has changed." Jason explains. "But from the perspective of anyone more than half a mile above Tarus II's atmosphere, our planet will start to become hazy before turning completely invisible. No technological or magical item will be able to pierce the veil and observe us from afar. It should cut down on Volgrim spying. I also have to make something similar for Kelkin, but the moonbase isn't nearly as high of a priority."

"Oh!" Belial says. "I understood about half of that. If it was Phoebe talking, I'm pretty sure I'd have understood nothing. You're good at this. You should become a teacher."

Jason rolls his eyes. "Teachers don't get paid enough. Wouldn't suit me. Err, well, they didn't get paid enough in the society I came from. I'll have to change that in mine."

Jason and Belial fall silent. They watch the sky for a few minutes until the speck of light vanishes, when Kordonis's spaceship jumps to Warp and leaves the system.

"How troublesome." Jason mutters. "The Volgrim are onto me, but we're not ready to deal with them. I don't have any defenses set up. The only reason they haven't attacked is because they probably aren't too sure of what I can do. Hopefully, my little planet-go-bye-bye trick will worry them a little bit. According to what I just heard, they aren't even able to replicate my little 'Laprox Field,' though they've theorized it's possible."

"The Volgrim want to use you." Belial comments. "Don't trust them. They made all sorts of promises to the demons. They told Satan he could rule over the Earth if he helped them, but they failed to mention they would eventually glass the planet and leave him with a lifeless rock. The only reason they haven't attacked you is because Unarin sees you as a useful tool."

"Do you know Unarin pretty well?" Jason asks.

"Not especially." Belial answers. "I've spoken to him only a few times. Or rather, Satan did. I didn't have anything to say. I just watched them talk while I stood off to the side like a good girl."

She pauses.

"I must say though, Unarin never dismissed me. He seemed to think my shapeshifting abilities were quite formidable. He even commented to Satan that if I were to partner with the Changeling division, he would repay the demons greatly."

"Changelings." Jason repeats, his tone pensive. "I assume Satan didn't take Unarin up on that offer?"

"No, I didn't." Belial corrects him. "I have known many liars, deceivers, and backstabbers. I never trusted Unarin from the moment I laid eyes on him. He was polite to me... perhaps too polite. He never looked at me in a sexual way, or like a piece of meat, but perhaps as something lower... a barely functional tool. He looks at all 'mud-dwellers' in that way. To Unarin, and the rest of the Volgrim, you're either insignificant, or useful. You're not a living, breathing entity with a right to live."

Jason listens quietly to her words. He waits for her to finish, then raises a question.

"Can you show me what the Volgrim leaders look like? With your shapeshifting powers?"

Belial blinks. "Oh? You want me to play dress-up for you? This is a first."

"I only want to know what my enemies look like," Jason says, waving her teasing away with a hand. "You don't have to if you don't want to. I can always extract images from someone's brain, or something."

The former Second Emperor smiles cutely. She wraps her arm around Jason's waist and pulls herself right up next to him. "If you say please, I won't tell Phoebe. It can be our little secret."

The Wordsmith rolls his eyes. "My mind-wife is always watching, Sam. She keeps me honest. Now, knock it off, will ya?"

"Am I not cute?" Belial asks, pulling away. "Come on, be honest. Most men can't help but stare when I walk past. It's not insulting or anything. I actually find it quite flattering."

"Oh, you're extremely attractive," Jason says, "and I might sneak peeks if I weren't married. But, eh. I dunno. You're always 'out there,' you know? You don't leave much to the imagination."

Belial glances at the tiny strips of cloth covering her boobs. "Hmm. What, you like Phoebe because she wears more clothes?"

"I like Phoebe because she's the woman I love." Jason explains. "She could wear anything and I'd stare- oh, dammit, now we're making her blush. This is causing my mind-wife secondhand embarrassment, you know."

The Wordsmith crosses his arms. "So, are you done horsing around? You're pretty, Sam, and that's the truth. But I'm a married man. So... let's stay friends, okay?"

"Monogamy is such a human thing." Belial protests. "Most demons faff about with whoever they want. I'll never understand why humans insist on staying committed to one single person. Don't you know variety is the spice of life?"

"Are you even talking about you and me?" Jason asks, tilting his head slightly to the side. "...Or is this actually about Phoebe? Are you thinking if you can convince me to become polyamorous, then you and Phoebe might...?"

Belial blushes. "No! It's not like that! Geez, never mind. Forget I brought it up. I'll turn into the Volgrim suits, so let's drop the conversation."

Jason smirks. "Spirit-Phoebe says you're cute when you blush."

"AHEM! First Founder, Unarin! Get a good look at him!" Belial says, becoming even more flustered at having her thoughts seen through. She quickly activates her magic, changing her physique into that of the leader of Volgrimkind.

"Alright, alright, we'll move on," Jason says, as his smile recedes. In its place, a look of concentration appears as he examines Belial's transformed appearance. "He's shorter than I expected. Is this his actual body size?"

"Unarin is only about six and a half feet tall." Belial says, her voice a perfect imitation of Unarin's baritone. "Or, 198 centimeters."

Jason gestures to the thick hair-like tendrils spilling down 'Unarin's' front and back. "What are those?"

"These are called 'Haa'ti' by The Ascended." Belial says. "From what I understand, they have a bunch of useful properties. I've never examined them in-depth, though, so I don't know what exactly they do. I only know because I heard someone else mention them once."

"Haa'ti." Jason repeats. "I've actually heard about the Volgrim sub-species from Marie Becker. Do you know her?"

Belial shrugs. "Name doesn't ring a bell. But then again, I don't pay much attention to random people. If I don't talk to someone a lot, I tend to forget about them."

"...She was the leader of humanity at one point." Jason says. "During the Energy Wars. Apparently, she ruled Earth for quite a long time."

"Ohhhh..." Belial says. A faint light appears in her eyes. "Right... yeah... Marie Becker... I don't know. I sort of remember something about a Marie Becker... maybe. But look, Jason, I've met a lot of human leaders. They all blend together after a while. When you've slept with as many humans and demons as I have, they stop feeling special or significant at a certain point. Arthur stands out, as did Joan of Arc... for similar reasons. Maybe a few other Heroes... but generally, normal humans who weren't Heroes? I didn't care much about them."

"Mmm. Fair enough." Jason says. "Err... I guess this is sort of rude to ask, so ignore it if you want, but why did you sleep with so many people? Do you still do that now?"

Belial shrugs. "Oh, I didn't love or care about pretty much any of them. There were a few humans and demons I liked a little... but they died. Then Satan died, too. And... well, I haven't felt much interest or passion ever since."

Belial's current appearance, that of Unarin, contrasts with the sadness in her eyes. She lowers her head and sighs.

"Succubi and incubi... we are different from other demons. We experience deep 'cravings' that prompt us to cavort with others. At the lower ranks, we aren't even immortal like other demons. We die if we don't absorb any 'life energy'. But since I'm an Emperor, I don't have to deal with that anymore. Sometimes the cravings flare up, but I just ignore them until they go away. I used to vent on my husband, but I can't really do that anymore. I've been frustrated and hollow for so long... I think I've even forgotten what it meant to love someone."

"They always die." Belial continues. "Everyone I love. Yet somehow, I stick around. Phoebe will die too, you know. I don't know when or how, but if I get too close, something will happen to her, like it did to Satan. That's why I have to keep my distance."

Belial demorphs from Unarin's form back to her original self, sighing deeply.

"Sorry. I shouldn't throw that on you."

"No." Jason says, offering a faint smile. "It's fine. I'm glad we're close enough that you feel secure around me. You can tell me stuff like this whenever you want. For what it's worth, I don't think you're cursed at all. Bad things happen, you know? Terrible things. Whole worlds die. Freaking space zombies attack. You spent a lot of good years with Satan, so if you continue to live on... so will he. In your heart."

"Sometimes..." Belial says, her tone heavy. "When... when the pain gets to be too much... I turn into him and stare at myself in the mirror. I make myself into my fallen husband, hoping to keep his memory intact."

She shakes her head.

"But it's not easy, Jason. I spent a few thousand years with Satan, following our exodus from Heaven. I've spent a hundred thousand without him. His memory... it grows fainter every day. I worry that if enough time passes, I'll forget him the same as I have everyone else. At some point, I thought I could even move on... but then... then Amelia returned. She revived him and turned him into her puppet."

The succubus plops down on a nearby rock, a boulder with a flat top.

"I wasn't prepared to see my husband. I was shocked. Elated. Terrified. Worried. So many emotions all at once. Then he attacked Phoebe, and... and I had to make painful choices. I knew if I killed him, he wouldn't die. He wouldn't really die... but I'd already lost him once. And then... after everything concluded, and he was still alive... after Polaris's star detonated, I thought the Creator had finally showed me some faint mercy."

Tears well up in Belial's eyes.

"But... but he didn't! He took Satan away from me, again! I had to watch him die, turning to dust in my arms! He fell apart and I was- I was completely helpless again! I couldn't heal him, I couldn't do a thing! I was just useless, like always!"

Jason walks over to sit beside Belial. He wraps an arm around her shoulder, disables his T-REX, and pulls her in to cry against his side.

"It's okay. I'm here for you..." Jason says. "Projection."

He summons the spiritual projection of his mind-wife, who also embraces Belial from the opposite side. Her body, faintly corporeal and able to interact with physical object to some small extent, projects an aura of warmth onto the succubus.

"We're both here for you." Phoebe says. "It's okay to cry, Sammy..."

"I just- I miss him so much!" Belial sobs. "The pain never goes away... it never stops hurting..."

Jason rubs her back and falls silent, allowing her to vent her feelings unabated for as long as she wants.

Some time later, Belial wipes away her tears and laughs dryly. "Sorry. I'm such a mess."

Spirit-Phoebe smiles sweetly. "Maybe so, but you're our mess. As long as you remember you have us, you'll still have reasons to continue living on."

"I... I feel so guilty about Daisy." Belial murmurs. "If I hadn't let her go-"

"We've been over that." Jason says curtly. "It wasn't your fault. It was mine. I should have taken more preventative measures to protect her, and all the others who died. You can't blame yourself when you protected Phoebe well."

"I guess not." Belial answers noncommittally. "Let's, uh... let's get back to talking about the Volgrim."

She hesitates for a moment before standing up, pulling away from Jason and Phoebe both.

"Did you... hear what Kordonis said? About Ose?"

"Yeah." Jason nods, remaining seated. "She's still alive. But we knew that already. She fell into Mephisto's clutches, the poor bastard."

"As much as I love that she ended up a slave to some other demon," Belial mutters, "it's not a bitter enough ending for her. Bael stole my chance to kill her. I still want revenge... not only on Lucifer, but Ose too."

"We beat her once." Jason says. "Hell, you did it without me. We'll do it again. I'll let you finish her off yourself if you want."

"Yes. I'd like that." Belial says, steeling her eyes. "But, moving on. What do you think about Unarin's offer? He's giving you such a large 'donation,' the debt you'll accrue may prove insurmountable."

Phoebe nods. "The First Founder clearly wants to bind Jason to himself as tightly as possible. He wants to put humanity on a leash and make us thoroughly indebted to the Volgrim's 'goodwill.'"

"What comes after the Plague?" Jason ponders. "Let's say I do help the Volgrim fight this terrible zombie menace. What then? We can't seriously expect them to leave us be afterward, can we? We'll go from being the heroes who saved the galaxy to the Volgrim's enemies. It seems likely Unarin will simply turn on us right afterward."

"The treaty my people signed was done so under duress." Belial states. "Before the Plague, the Volgrim were unstoppable. They consisted of five factions, each warring against each other some some small or large extent, but when faced with an external enemy, they united in an instant. They placed shackles on us to limit our development so we couldn't threaten them... and I need not tell you about the Humanity Containment Project. They turned humans into little more than cattle and sheep for demons to eat, yet restricted your birthrates to the point where my people had to live on scraps."

Jason snorts. "I don't know how scary some stupid space zombies can be, but I bet I'll be able to clean them up pretty easily. However, it would be best if I took my time and made sure to leave them as a threat the Volgrim can't overlook. So long as I keep their threat at roughly equal levels to the Volgrim, both will have to leave humanity alone to fight each other."

"I think you're missing something." Phoebe comments. "Jason, calling the Plague mere 'space zombies' makes no sense. How could a galaxy-class civilization fall so easily to a mere bunch of drooling, slowly-shambling zombies? Mephisto summons 'zombies.' Whatever the Plaguehosts are, they must be much more terrifying to have broken the Volgrim as badly as they have."

"I imagine Unarin will tell me more about the Plague when I meet him in person..." Jason ponders. "But... hmm."

"Problem?" Belial asks.

"It's just... I've had too many demons try to take over my brain and enslave me or Hope, recently. My powers would be far more valuable to Unarin if he could definitely control me. We're talking about a species which is basically a Class III on the Kardeshev Scale. Who knows what kind of crazy fucking mind-control techniques they might have? Nanites, brain implants, Psionic abilities, to name a few. They probably have shit I can't even imagine. If I go to meet Unarin in the heart of his Empire, do you really think he'll be okay with just a simple 'chat,' especially when I pose a major risk to him?"

Belial shakes her head. "When you put it that way..."

"I have to protect myself." Jason says. "But I also need to make Unarin respect and fear me. I need him to know that crossing me in any way will result in an event he won't be able to undo."

"If he fears you, he might take drastic measures." Phoebe points out. "Ose planned to capture me and Daisy both. She was going to use us to manipulate you."

Jason taps his lip. He frowns several times, thinking to himself about many possible eventualities.

"Say... do you think the Volgrim know about Hope?"

"They know about you." Phoebe says. "And they interrogated Ose. I'd say it's a 50/50 whether they do or don't."

"I cloned myself once." Jason says. "Could that be something that keeps Unarin at bay? If he does know I cloned myself, and that my clone has all the same powers as me..."

Belial's eyes sparkle. "Oh! Then he'd worry you might have other clones nobody knows about. He'd fear capturing you, because another clone could take your place, but would also be much angrier than you and out for revenge. He could kill you, but he'd never know if there were other Wordsmiths out there. Even if he captured you, one of your clones could free you, potentially without even breaking a sweat."

Jason chews his lip.

"But that's the thing... I only have one clone, Hope. And frankly... I don't want to make any others. Hell, without Solomon's Crown, I can't. The Crown made it possible to perfectly recreate every atom of my body, soul, and magic. Phoebe can replicate a lot of its functionality, but not its cloning potential."

"Unarin doesn't need to know that." Belial says, flashing a mischievous smile. "You have me. I could mimic you. You could also summon fake Jasons to intimidate him."

"If Unarin is as smart as you've implied," Phoebe says, "then we shouldn't stoop to trickery. He might see through our deceptions. Hell, he's probably even better than us at weaponizing it. The Volgrim have been around for millions of years, and Unarin has, too. We shouldn't underestimate the cunning of a monster who's led a civilization for eons."

Jason rubs his forehead. "I'm getting a headache just thinking about this. I shouldn't have made such a scene in Hell Harbor's space. I brought the Volgrim knocking."

"Mmm. I don't think you did." Phoebe says. "Look at the timing. The Archangels apparently attacked Hell Harbor a day or two ago. Then, the Volgrim must have come and investigated the disturbance. We know they monitor the Hell Harbor system, because that's how they encountered you. They must have found out the truth when they interrogated Ose, Mephisto, and the others."

"Do you... think the Archangels are okay?" Belial asks.

The Wordsmith shrugs. "Kordonis didn't mention them getting killed or captured. They might be fine. One second, I'll check. Locate."

Jason's eyes turn foggy, and his head lolls forward. At the same time, Phoebe's spiritual figure disappears, and he raises his head once again.

"Oh! No warning, huh?" 'Jason' says. "Uh... I guess I'm in control now."

Belial raises an eyebrow. "...Phoebe?"

"Yup! Whenever Jason leaves his body, I get to take the reins. It's a defense mechanism so he isn't left vulnerable."

The succubus pauses for a moment before nodding.

"And you have access to his Wordsmithing when he's gone?"

"I do." Phoebe answers. "Why? Are you worried I'll turn into a megalomaniacal dictator whenever my hubby isn't around?"

"Oh. Um, no. Not that..." Belial says, her words trailing off. She crosses her arms and looks away, not wanting to meet Phoebe's gaze.

"Sammy?" Phoebe asks. "Is something wrong?"

"No. No, probably not. I mean, definitely not." Belial says, shifting uncomfortably. "It's just... well..."

She pauses for several long seconds.

"I, ah... I don't know how to say- to ask this..."

"Do you want me to do something for you?" Phoebe asks. "With Jason's Wordsmithing?

"No! No, no, not at all!" Belial hurriedly answers. "I mean, well, it would be... I shouldn't. Never mind. Forget it."

She starts to turn away, but Phoebe stands up and grabs her wrist.

"There's no need to be nervous, Sam. Come on, it's just me here. Well, me, Shana, Lorent, and Gabriel... but that's beside the point. Just ask. I won't bite."

Belial fidgets. She shifts the weight of her feet several times while side-eyeing Phoebe, now inside her husband's body.

"It's not right. I shouldn't." Belial says. "Jason is a Hero... and Satan was the First Emperor of demonkind. He'd get mad if I asked."

"I don't think he would." Phoebe says, smiling. "But even if he did, I'm in charge right now. So, what do you want? You can tell me."

The former Second Emperor gnaws on her lower lip, wavering between an awkward smile and a look of sadness so deep it hurts Phoebe's heart.

"I just... I want to remember things more clearly. Not just things... but Satan. I feel as if I've forgotten his voice. When I saw him on Polaris, it made all those ancient feelings come back, and it made my faded memories hurt so much more. I keep wanting to ask Jason if he can restore my memories of Satan... but I shouldn't. Satan nearly killed Jason, after all. He nearly killed you, Phoebe."

"He was under Amelia's control." Phoebe reminds Belial. "Neither Jason nor I blame him for his actions."

Phoebe pauses for half a breath.

"Well, not fully, anyway."

Belial nods. "Right. So, yeah. Just forget it. I shouldn't have mentioned it. Besides, if those memories come back to the surface, so will all the pain and trauma. I wouldn't want to have to feel all that anguish a third time..."

Phoebe nods her husband's head slowly. "Yeah... maybe not. Look, Sam, I have a better idea. Why don't I work on making a special... gadget! A special gadget, just for you. I'll work out the specs for it, and have Jason create it when it's ready."

"What sort of gadget?" Belial asks. "I don't understand."

"Haha. It'll be a secret." Phoebe says, smiling mischievously. "I promise you'll like it."

"Alright." Belial says, lowering her eyes. "Thank you, Phoebe. I... I really appreciate it."

The two fall silent for several seconds. Phoebe walks over to Belial and wraps her arms around the succubus.

"Mmm. Oh, how I miss having a physical body..." She says, as Belial reflexively hugs her back. "I miss it soooo much. I'm so envious of my physical self."

"Is that the reason for this hug?" Belial asks, tilting her head up to look into Phoebe's eyes.

Phoebe looks down at the succubus, momentarily enjoying the height difference compared to her original body. In the past, she stood a few inches shorter than Belial, but in Jason's body, she towers over her by nearly a full foot.

"I hug little Shana and my nephew all the time," Phoebe says. "But I don't get to hug you anymore. I... miss that. I miss talking to you like I used to. In a way, I sort of feel trapped in Jason's Mind Realm."

The two of them fall silent once again, yet continue to hold each other. Belial smiles, then averts her gaze.

"Um... you know you're still controlling Jason's body, right? It's a little strange looking up into his eyes like this..."

She pauses before raising her head once again. "Mmm... his blue eyes are really pretty, though..."

Phoebe lowers her head, ever so slightly, bringing her face a nudge toward Belial's.

"You're not alone..." Phoebe says. "You still have me."

"I know." Belial answers, her voice softening. "But... there's this barrier between us..."

Phoebe smiles. She leans down a little closer.

"Well. Jason does always say he'd be okay if something happened between us. I sometimes wonder if it isn't his little... fantasy."

"A lot of men have fantasies like that." Belial answers. "A lot of women, too."

The two of them bring their faces an inch closer, leaving just enough distance for their breath to brush against each other's skin.

"Sam..." Phoebe whispers. "My real body won't admit this, but... there's more than just sisterly feelings in there, for you. It would be okay if-"

Her voice cuts off abruptly. A moment later, Jason blinks.

"Alright. I found the Archan- what the goddamn shit?!"

The Wordsmith's soul returns to his body, giving him full control. When he reappears, he finds himself within kissing distance of Belial, a fact which momentarily throws his thoughts into disarray.

"Uh-uh, Sam?! What's..."

He pulls away from the succubus at nearly the same time as she does. Belial's skin flushes with blood, turning it to an even deeper shade of red than usual.

"It's- it's nothing!" Belial exclaims. "Phoebe was in control, and I just... I wanted to check your body to make sure th-the Volgrim didn't hurt you! So, no damage found! I just remembered I have some patients to check on. Talk later!"

Before Jason can fully understand what just happened, the succubus darts away, traveling at a speed only a Demon Emperor could achieve on this quiet, backwater world.

Jason turns his thoughts inward to find his mind-wife sitting beside a water fountain, crossing her arms, and looking more than a little annoyed.

"What was that about?" Jason asks. "Were you... about to make out with Samantha? While controlling my body?"

Phoebe snorts. "Who knows? Maybe. Thanks for the cock-block, hubby."

"The cock-block?" Jason sputters. "You don't even have a- never mind. Good lord. Get a room, you two."

Phoebe smiles. "Maybe we will! You'd better keep an eye on my physical body, or Sam might steal her away."

The Wordsmith rubs his eyes and sighs.

"This is just like that time on Hell Harbor, with that 'Lily' girl."

Phoebe blushes. "Lily was a pretty good kisser, I'll have you know."

"Yeah, yeah. So, anyway." Jason says, changing the topic. "I had a quick chat with Uriel. She's going to head here, soon. Just taking care of some business elsewhere."

Phoebe nods, accepting the conversational pivot. "Right. And?"

Jason smiles.

"She and her brothers fucked the demons up good. Real good. Hell Harbor is in ruins, and several Emperors are dead."

"No wonder the Volgrim showed up..." Phoebe mutters. "The Cherubiim probably has them running scared."

"We'll know more soon." Jason says. "In the meantime, I have work to do."

He glances inward at his wife.

"And as for you... next time, ask permission!"

Phoebe sticks out her tongue. "Nyeh."

Part 339: Memory Restoration

Hell Harbor, inside the broken and shattered remains of where the Hidden Emperors first met.

Ose stands at the head of the meeting table, her eyes glowering with annoyance at the fact that that all of the seats have been destroyed and the table itself is in shambles. Along the edges of the table stand more than a dozen of the Hidden Emperors and their minions, but none of them appear to be in high spirits anymore.

Well, except for Bael.

The Duke of Pain casually sits on a nearby rock, leans back against another slightly bigger rock, and splays out his legs, leaving little to the imagination for the others present.

"Damn. You guys screwed up real good this time." Bael idly comments, picking at something stuck in his teeth with a random twig. "Archangels, aliens, and all kinds of other crap. Really screwed the Hellhound."

Ose inhales deeply.

"It's safe to say all of you performed miserably. Were it not for me, your worthless lives might have been extinguished by the Cherubiim, once and for all. I suppose some of that isn't your fault, given the sheer strength of our opponent. Even a bloody Confessor couldn't handle the Cherubiim."

Mephisto levitates off to the side of the room. His larger horns and significantly larger body make him stand out, giving him a somewhat fearsome appearance compared to his past self. Now an Emperor, Mephisto stands at the top of the demonic food chain, in much the same way as all the others present.

Along with Mephisto, Zamiel stands idly inside Monster King Kar's body, never having gotten a good chance to fight the Cherubiim. Emperor Gorn, clearly displeased by being held under Mephisto's control, still remains inside his 'Vermillion' body, with flames wafting off his bird-like appearance. Lastly, Emperor Fenrir sits on a large boulder, but instead of her original soul, a new one takes her place.

The new possessor of Fenrir's body is none other then Emperor Lupus, who lost her body during the Cherubiim's attack.

"This sucks." Lupus mutters. "So many Emperors dead, including me. Wolfram... gone. Even the Glyphmancer died to that Cherubiim."

Emperor Kristoff stares with rage-filled eyes at Mephisto.

"My wife's body is not yours to puppet, Emperor of Legions. You had better give her back... or face my wrath."

Mephisto turns a sly glance to the Emperor of Blood.

"Kekeke. You want your preciousss little woman? Come and take her. Ssshe isss mine, now. If you think you can defeat four other Emperorsss in combat... be my guessst."

"Don't think I won't." Kristoff says, as he takes a menacing step toward Mephisto.

"Stop squabbling." Ose says, turning a cold eye to their hostilities. "Hell Harbor is in ruins, but instead of taking responsibility, you want to blame Mephisto for your wife's demise, Kristoff. Hmph. At least her body is still being useful. Since Lupus has lost her body, Fenrir's will prove an adequate vessel."

"My wife is not some trinket to be used for Mephisto's purposes!" Kristoff roars. "He should give her back to me!"

"Why? So you can wrap her up and bury her to honor her memory?" Ose scoffs. "Or maybe you still crave the taste of her flesh, hmm? I don't care whether you want to fuck her corpse, Kristoff, but keep it in your pants. We need every Emperor-level powerhouse we can find at this critical juncture. One more word from you, and I'll do to you what I did to that Cherubiim."

Kristoff shoots Ose a nasty glare. "Oh? And what would that be? A swing and a miss? Will you let me escape while giving me information on your abilities? You were outmaneuvered by that crafty Archangel of Wisdom, and you know it. Stop acting so high and mighty."

Emperors Guura and Melody sit off at the far edge of the table on two rocks they've plunked down. Not far from them sits Emperor Viola, a member of their Hell who was also one of the very few Hidden Emperors to miss the Cherubiim battle entirely.

Viola's drab black dress, eyeliner, and hair give her a distinctly gothic appearance. She watches the proceedings with a look of boredom so profound that an observer might expect her to fall over and die if she becomes even a little bit more bored.

"You guys are suuuch a drag..." Viola groans. "Seriously, just get on with the... whatever. I only came because this was like, an emergency, or something."

"You have no say in this matter." Kristoff replies, glancing at Viola. "You weren't there when the Cherubiim attacked. You just sat at home playing with your little toys."

"True. I didn't get my butt kicked." Viola says, smiling slightly at her jab. "Unlike you."

Yardrat stands at the far end of the table, directly opposite Ose. He waves his hand flippantly at the others and sighs. "Never mind all of that. Ose, that creature who appeared in the sky; a Confessor, you said? I presume she was one of the Overlords. Given the events that have just transpired, I think you should forget the old treaties and whatever else. It's time to fill us in on who these Overlords are and what our next move should be. With that Wordsmith sending Archangels our way, we can't sit in the dark any longer."

Despite being one of Mephisto's thralls, Gorn still retains his free will, except for when it interferes with Mephisto's commands. He nods along with Yardrat's words. "I agree. It's time we cast aside the mind-wipes. If the Overlords couldn't protect us from the Cherubiim, then I don't think they're much of a threat anymore. Be it the First Emperor or Ose's newly empowered self, the Overlords aren't a threat to us any longer. We need to rise up and take back our sovereignty."

"They absolutely are still a threat." Ose interjects. "The Overlords are not entities you can merely overthrow or ignore on a whim. Even at their absolute weakest, so long as the Second Founder exists, they can destroy any world they like and claim supreme rule over the galaxy. My new power might be incredible, but I'm not confident I can defeat Dosena in a fight to the death. She probably can't kill me, but then again, perhaps she can. Bael's body is nearly invincible... but 'nearly' does not mean 'entirely.'"

Bael nods. "Yup. I fought Grandma Camael during the War in Heaven. Damn geezer broke my arm! And heck, Ose's speed-punch broke my arm again! So it's doable."

"Not to mention the humans ruined your right eye," Ose says, reaching up to touch the now-fully-intact appendage, restored through Mephisto's necromancy. "So, truly, I can't afford to be completely arrogant. Let's just say that if I had to fight the strongest overlord, I'm 10% confident I could win and 50% confident I could flee and survive."

She smiles, revealing a hint of ambition.

"Of course, that is as I am now. Presently, my powers have been limited to the rank of Duke. Once I evolve Bael's body to the rank of Emperor, I will regain my full strength. Perhaps then, that ten percent will climb much higher. Maybe Bael's old body will become truly invincible."

After a momentary pause, Ose changes topics.

"Regarding the Overlords, I do agree that the mind-wipes have become irrelevant. Humanity's leader either knows or will soon know about the Overlords' true identities. There's no point in keeping you all in the dark, so, rather than wasting my time blabbering on about it all..."

Ose closes her eyes. The more spiritually aware Emperors, such as Mephisto, watch as her Astral Body steps out of her fleshly figure and rushes away.

Half an hour later, Ose returns and re-enters her body. A human steps through the broken door to the chamber, revealing his identity to be Benjamin Brown. In his hands, he holds a small silvery metal orb, one that pulses with magical energy.

Benjamin walks up to Ose's side and raises an eyebrow. "Are you certain? There's no undoing this, not without a lot of time, effort, and pain."

"The memory blockers don't matter anymore." Ose says, snatching the metal ball out of the human's hands. "If anyone acts too rowdy... I'll just have to kill them."

Several Hidden Emperors frown.

"What do you mean?" Yardrat asks. "Act rowdy? Kill someone? What's this about?"

"Well, as I'm sure you can imagine," Ose explains, "some of you were very naughty demons. You nearly caused the Volgrim to condemn our species to Total Rendition, back in the day. I would hope you won't entertain any delusions of grandeur once you get those memories back... but if you do, and if you insist on rallying armies to smite our benevolent Overlords, I'll kill you myself."

She shrugs.

"What are you going to do? Fight me? If the lot of you couldn't beat the Cherubiim, you'll be helpless if I attack. So keep your ambitions buried, for all our sakes."

Ose doesn't wait to hear any further objections. She simply holds the orb up in the air and shoots it with electrical magic from her eyes.

"Unlock for me."

Ose activates the magic contained within this special orb, which causes a burst of energy to well up inside it. The device glows for a few seconds before firing a beam straight upward, a single pulse of energy that passes through all material in its path, reverberates through Hell Harbor's upper atmosphere, and races across the entire galaxy.

Moments later, every single Emperor in the room buckles forward, falls to their knees, and screams in pain.

Yardrat howls as if his soul has caught fire. Kristoff screams bloody murder.

Mephisto's undead servants, including Lupus, Zamiel, and Gorn, all lose their footing and tumble to the floor, curling into the fetal positions.

The Dukes from the Hell of Lust weep tears of blood as their brains strain under the pressure of new memories reasserting themselves.

Fae, Crow, Serena, Maltus, Huul, Melody, Guura, and Viola all suffer the pain of brain-drain coming within inches of ravaging their souls.

Only one figure remains unmoved.

Bael calmly lays back and watches as everyone screams, begs for mercy, and wails as if their lives are about to end.

"Damn. That sure looks like it hurts. Hehe. Poor buncha silly cunts."

All across space and time, every demon who had their memories sealed, all the monsters, and all the rest, experience a sudden and unexpected burst of agony inside themselves as they suffer the same pain as their leaders.

Aside from a minuscule minority of elites from the First Hell, nobody older than eighty-five thousand years escapes the pain of reintegrating their memories. Billions of demons and monsters fall into temporary comas, unable to rouse themselves until they've reintegrated their memories.

A full hour later, the Emperors begin to wake up, one by one.

As one of the demons possessing a strong soul, Serena opens her eyes first. The blind Emperor grabs onto a nearby block of demonstone and pulls herself to a languid sitting position.

"Oh... devils... my... head..."

Emperor Viola wakes up next. She immediately jumps to her feet and shoots a look of angry annoyance Ose's way.

"Maybe a little warning, next time?"

One by one, the other Emperors rouse their spirits and souls. In the end, the Dukes from the Hell of Lust, and Dorma, the Duke of Delicacies, end up reviving last, due to their weaker souls and minds.

Several emotions reverberate around the room.

Emperor Gorn gazes at the floor while long-buried memories evoke thoughts of anger.

"I remember. I was one of the leaders of that... insurrection. I wanted to topple the Volgrim and put demonkind at the top of the galaxy's power structure."

"Yeah, and I helped you out." Fae says. "I couldn't stand the thought of a boring, miserable existence where we'd only ever get the scraps the Volgrim gave us. And look what's happened now! What a bunch of bullshit!"

The many assembled demon elites slowly grapple with their restored memories, their senses of self, and their long-lost ambitions that were snuffed out by Diablo in the past.

After witnessing not only the might of the Cherubiim, but the powers of the Volgrim in the past, even the most ambitious demons present, such as Gorn, find themselves struggling to reconcile their hatred of their current circumstances with the harsh reality that they simply aren't strong enough to change their fate.

As Gorn wanders back and forth, flames wafting off his bird-like body to fall to the floor, a hollow look appears in his eyes.

"Truly, I was a frog in a well." He mutters. "The Volgrim nearly destroyed us, the last time we fought them. Now, the Wordsmith's rise threatens us a second time, but our situation is even more precarious than before."

"If only you knew." Ose says. "Now that you all have comprehended the might of our alien overlords, you can begin to understand the Threat they fight against now, the menace known as the Plague. Even I am not privy to the most sensitive details, but from what I have gleaned, this 'Plague' is something we absolutely cannot withstand."

The Hidden Emperors listen intently to Ose's words as she reveals information surprising to all of them.

"The Plague first appeared eighty-five thousand years ago," Ose explains. "It arrived long after the mind-wipes, when the lot of you were fully ignorant as to the identities of the Volgrim, and our galactic situation. Had you known, you probably would have launched another attack on the Volgrim and gotten us all killed. Instead, you stayed ignorant and left the Volgrim to fight that battle themselves. Now, after all these years, the fight is ramping up, and its conclusion appears inevitable."

She pauses.

"The Volgrim will lose. And once they fall, the Plague will come for us. We will all perish. None will be able to stop it."

"This 'Plague' sounds alarming, to say the least." Yardrat says. "What can you tell us about it?"

"It's not a sickness, not in the strictest sense." Ose explains. "Rather, it's more of an infection that forcibly mutates the host's body..."

Ose begins explaining in detail the Plague's parameters, or at least those that she knows, to the other demons. The more she talks, the graver their expressions become.

"Bloody hell." Bael grunts. "Space zombies. Probably scarier than Mephisto's undead goons. Sheesh. The 'Volg-rats' really know how to pick their enemies."

"How are we even supposed to contend against such a foe?" Emperor Crow asks. "What use is a Demon Deity if even the Volgrim's mightiest Psions can only slow the Plague down?"

Emperor Gorn casts a shrewd glance Ose's way.

"That's why you pushed for Stormbringer so hard, isn't it? You wanted to capture the Wordsmith. He was to be your insurance against the Plague."

"Correct." Ose affirms. "I believed, and still do, that if we capture the Wordsmith and bend him to our will, we can make demonkind more powerful than ever, to the point we can defeat not only this Plague, but the Volgrim as well."

Bael snorts. "Ose, you're such a dumbass. Seriously! You already lost to that Wordshit once. You had the winds at your back and the upper hand, but you still lost. What makes ya think you could do it again? Especially when you done killed his little girl. He won't hold back if ya clash a second time."

"I took on the Wordsmith by myself," Ose reminds Bael and the others. "I arrogantly believed my strength was enough to capture him and make him my slave. But now, I know better. If all of us work together, and if we join hands, we can defeat the Wordsmith. Not only one Emperor, but all of us. The Cherubiim won't be a threat as long as I'm around. If we all join together-"

"Why should we go along with your plan?" Yardrat interrupts. "Maybe we can all defeat the Wordsmith, but maybe we can't. You just want his power for yourself. Admit it, Ose."

"I did crave his power," Ose replies, "but no more. Now, I only want it to empower demonkind as a whole. Don't you understand? This is all or nothing. We have to capture the Wordsmith's family, force him to submit, and ensure he becomes our slave. The Volgrim already have their sights on him, but they fear his potential. They won't make any sudden moves, not just yet anyway, and we can use that time to quickly overwhelm him before he rebuilds and fortifies humanity's defenses!"

Ose continues. "If we don't take this chance, the Wordsmith will surely build weapons capable of suppressing and repelling us. Once he fortifies Tarus II, we'll lose our chance forever! Humanity will become unstoppable. Prior to the Volgrim, humanity was already acting as the apex predator of Earth, and that was without a Hero guiding them! With a Hero, and especially the Wordsmith taking command, we'll lose our status and become second- no, third-rate citizens of the Milky Way! Behind humanity and the Volgrim both!"

Ose's tenor and tempo increases as she speaks, sweeping up her audience in the moment.

However, one demoness remains immune to her words.

Emperor Serena raises her hand. "This sentiment is all well and good. However, why have you pivoted? You mind-wiped all of us to ensure we wouldn't rebel against the Volgrim, yet now you seek to capture the Wordsmith in order to do exactly that. With all your comments about the Second Founder's strength, Dosena surely is not an enemy we can afford to provoke."

"A lot has changed since the ancient insurrections." Ose dryly says. "The Volgrim are stretched thin. The Wordsmith is weakened. And, according to the intelligence I've received... he does not possess Excalibur."

"What? He doesn't?" Yardrat asks. "But you said-"

"I know what I said." Ose replies. "I detected Camael's magical signature, the same one we always felt in the presence of her mightiest artifacts. However, it did feel slightly different compared to Excalibur's signature, and now that the Volgrim have confirmed they still possess Excalibur, we know the Hero was merely trying to deceive us. He used his Wordsmithing to trick Mephisto's senses. Don't forget, the Wordsmith's powers defy comprehension. It's not out of line to suggest he could fake a powerful mana signature. As it happens, he can perfectly mimic a demon's energy too, based on how he first came to meet me on Hell Harbor."

"Hmph. Well, I suppose dealing with him quickly isn't out of the question." Yardrat mutters. "But many of us are still utterly drained and exhausted after fighting the Cherubiim. It will likely take Kristoff weeks to replenish his mana. Lupus exhausted herself battling the Cherubiim, and she needs time to acclimate to Fenrir's body."

Ose nods. "We can't delay too long. I say we prepare and launch an attack with the Dukes and Barons of our respective Hells within the next... two weeks! The more time we give the Wordsmith, the faster he'll be able to rebuild and erect defenses."

"I will help you devise a plan of attack." Gorn says. "I may have lost my head, but I hardly lost any mana, since I fell so early. While the others rest, you and I can exploit the Wordsmith's vulnerabilities. We must succeed, or our species is doomed."

"That is acceptable." Ose concludes.

While the many assembled Emperors begin detailing their plans and how they might attack the Wordsmith while he's still weak, Bael stands up and saunters over to the three Emperors from the Hell of Isolation.

"Hey. Viola, Guura, Melody. You gals got a sec?"

Bael keeps his voice low, surprising them. Guura is the first to reply.

"What's up, Bael?"

"Is something the matter?" Viola asks.

Bael glances around the room.

"Hmm. I think it's better if we go back to your Hell to talk. You've got those anti-peeping things there, right?"

"Isolation barriers." Viola affirms. "We do. Why the secrecy?"

Melody slaps Bael's arm. "Yeah, Bael! No need to get all serious on us! Just say it!"

The Duke of Pain shakes his head.

"Sorry, ladies. I'd rather keep this between the three of you and me. Besides, none of you are gonna get involved in Ose's thing, right?"

The three Emperors shake their heads in unison. "No."

Bael gestures to the doorway.

"Then let's ditch this joint. You just know Ose's gonna mess up real bad anyway. No point in sticking around."

"Alright." Viola says, sweeping a few strands of black hair out of her eyes. "We'll head back now."

Ose shoots a suspicious glance at Bael and the Hell of Isolation, but says nothing. She knows perfectly well how they will perform if forced to enter battle, so she doesn't even bother with requesting their assistance.

However, as Bael, the three Emperors, and Duke Dorma head out, a shadowy figure follows in their wake.

Emperor Yama hisses quietly to himself while skulking in the darkness.

"Kekeke... you have seen something we did not intend for you to see..." Yama mutters. "Oh, Bael... your soul is formidable, but your body is tender. We must make you and these other pretty girls our obedient little sluts for the rest of eternity... kekeke..."

Part 340: Bael's News

Bael, Dorma, Viola, Guura, and Melody leave the Hidden Emperor meeting without any fanfare. Now that the Duke of Pain lacks an indestructible body and magical talents, he won't be of any help during Ose's next invasion. Similarly, the Hell of Isolation's members never tend to involve themselves with the militaristic aspects of upper demon society, so they don't care much about how the invasion turns out.

The group of five hikes across the ruined surface of Hell Harbor. As they walk, they stop every so often to examine the devastation left behind by the Cherubiim's attack, as well as the subsequent artillery bombardment dropped by the Volgrim. Massive craters scar the planet. Burning rubble fills what were once sizable and well-populated demon cities. Among the victims are not only demons and monsters, but numerous human slaves, too.

The uneven ground makes the journey take far longer than usual. All of the five demons possess the ability to travel much faster if they so desire simply by running and jumping with their enhanced demonic physiology, but they still take their time to look upon the ruined world and soak the devastation in.

"I had forgotten everything." Viola says. "The Volgrim, our history... so many things. The sheer devastation our Overlords can wreak, but they still couldn't defeat the Cherubiim."

"Man, that whole situation SUCKED!" Melody complains. She flexes her huge arm muscles and laughs. "Me and Guura got our shit kicked in! We barely managed to play half a tune before old man Raphael turned the tables on us. Have we gotten weak, or what?"

"Nah. You gals ain't weak." Dorma says. "Your opponent was just too strong. Who knew the Archangels had such a powerful transformation tucked away for a rainy day? At least you managed to slow them down for a few minutes. I couldn't help at all. Just wasn't a fight Dukes like me could get involved with."

Guura lightly slaps Bael's back. "Maybe not, but Bael coulda kicked butt if he was in his old body! Man, did you see Ose prancing around like she was Queen Bigshot? She's only as strong as she is because she stole Bael's body! In her old body, she'd have been as useless as all the rest of us! She got lucky, but she acts like it was some special Devil-given talent! Sheesh!"

"We're honestly lucky to have Ose at a time like this." Viola says, always the one who examines the facts. "However she got her abilities, it really doesn't matter. She alone is capable of defeating the Cherubiim. Perhaps the First Emperor would have had to use his powers if Ose hadn't been as capable, but we don't know how strong he actually is."

"Of course we do." Melody snorts. "The First Emperor completely suppressed Ose even in her Super Lightning Balrog form! Totally! He's way beyond the level we can imagine! I'll bet he's a Demon Deity, or even higher!"

"What do you think, Bael?" Guura asks, jumping out in front of him and spinning like a ballerina. "Have you met the First Emperor before? Is he super strong?"

Bael shrugs. "Dunno. Seems like a poser to me."

"A poser?" Melody frowns. "In what way?"

"Ah, you know how it is. Bunch of smoke and mirrors." Bael says nonchalantly. "Don't let some poser pull the ghoul over your eyes. I bet he's not even that strong. Just knows how to scare other people."

"Yes... maybe..." Viola ponders. "But he did completely suppress Ose. She couldn't move at all. I'm sure, considering her level of power, it was a humbling, if not humiliating experience."

Bael shrugs. "I don't buy it. But what do I know? I ain't that smart. All that magic crap goes right over my head."

The group continues walking. At some point, they pick up the pace and eventually reach the Hell Harbor Annex, where the lone Warpgate on the planet remains standing. Unsurprisingly, a massive amount of devastation surrounds the area, but the Warpgate itself remains perfectly intact, not so much as a scratch on its surface.

When the Emperors draw close, some nearby demon grunts with bad burn wounds scurry up to them.

"What happened, Ose? There were all these big explosions, and then all of a sudden we got blasted into the sky! We woke up on the ground and nearly everyone was dead!"

Bael pauses, realizing they've mistaken him for Ose based on his appearance. "Uhh..."

"Some angels attacked." Viola interjects. "You've heard of angels, right? The humans sent them to attack us. Ose took care of them, really ruined their day. They unleashed a lot of devastation, but the forces of Hell won again, as always."

The young, low-ranked demons glance at each other, mildly confused.

"Angels... yeah, I've heard about them. So they still exist, huh?"

"Dunno. Must be true."

Bael's group exchanges a few more words with the grunts before walking up to the Warpgate. There, they find a tired goblin, beaten and exhausted from all the recent hubbub.

"We need a portal opened to this location." Viola says, handing him a jade-green tablet with temporal information carved on it.

The goblin glances at her suspiciously. "Yeah? Who you? Me can't just change portal whenever want! Get big trouble!"

Viola sticks her thumb out to point at Bael. "Ose's orders."

"Ohhh, Ose!" The Goblin says, quickly 'recognizing' the figure of his Emperor. "So sorry! Bad eyes, very tired!"

Bael starts to protest about being misidentified, but instead shrugs and just goes along with it.

"Meh. Less of a pain this way."

The Goblin contacts a group of other monsters in a location hidden several miles beneath Hell Harbor's surface, in a hidden cache where they can perform temporal calculations without their work being easily interrupted. These hundreds of monsters spend the next thirty minutes running calculations, adjusting spatial frequencies, and lining up infinitesimally minor but significant math equations to ultimately discover the precise location of the Warpgate belonging to the planet where the Hell of Isolation is located.

Abruptly, the Warpgate's entrance shuts down, flickers for a moment, then re-establishes itself, revealing an opaque portal with no hint of what's on the other side.

The Goblin checks a few numbers, then gives a thumbs-up to Bael's group.

"Okay, okay! Is good now! All donezo!"

Without any fanfare, all five demons step through the portal.

Upon arriving on the other side, they pause to acclimate themselves to the new environment. They arrive on the world of Sharmur, an average planet with gravity levels twenty percent stronger than those of the demons' ancient homeworld, Earth. Sharmur's Warpgate stands atop a small, flat mountaintop, half a mile above sea level. Across the horizon, Bael and the others get a good look at the distant ocean, the sparsely planted forests in between, and many different plumes of smoke gently rising into the air.

Unlike Tarus II or Hell Harbor, which are classified as Paradise-Class worlds, Sharmur is merely an average habitable world with decent growing seasons, sometimes extreme hot and cold temperatures, and a moderate level of foliage. Powerful apex predators roam the planet's forests, but they have long since evolved to know not to mess with demons and the upper-strength level monsters which now populate their world.

Bael strides over to the edge of the plateau and inhales deeply.

"Mmm. Smells good. Been a few years since I popped over."

"It's been at least thirty thousand years." Viola points out. "At least, by my count. Why did you stop visiting, anyway?"

"Lost track of time." Bael says with a shrug. "I dunno. Things haven't been exciting for a while. Now that the Wordshit's making moves, seems the Hells are gonna get spicier again."

"Well, not ours, and probably not the Hell of Lust either." Melody says with a shrug. "Speaking of which, I think I'll invite Jahn and Silvia over, later. We should throw a big party!"

"A party?" Guura asks. "After what happened on Hell Harbor?"

"Psh, I don't see why not." Melody replies. "Hell Harbor's the First Hell's territory. Ose can clean up that mess. It's not like we pissed off those Archangels! We never did anything to 'em."

The group heads over to a trail leading down the mountain. As they start to descend, Bael shoots a look back at the now-closed Warpgate.

"Hmm."

"Something wrong, Bael?" Dorma asks.

"Nah..." Bael mutters. "Just had this weird feeling someone was lookin' at me. Must've been the wind."

Once they arrive at the bottom of the summit, Viola, ever the responsible among her fellow Emperors, uses a mana beacon to call for a Warper grunt. Moments later, a portal opens, and a pretty young female demoness jumps out.

"Hihi! Where can I getcha, boss?"

"We're looking to head to the Temple of Isolation." Viola says. "It's secret business."

"I can drop you off in the town just outside," The Warper says. "But you'll have to walk the rest of the way!"

"Acceptable."

After a moment's wait, the Warper opens a second portal and sends her esteemed guests through.

Bael and the others step into a different location elsewhere in the planet, where a towering temple of vaguely Spanish design looms not far from a town of fifty thousand humans, monsters, and demons.

What makes Sharmur different from other demon controlled worlds is the way they treat their human slaves. Even calling them slaves seems something of a misnomer. While the elites of Sharmur, the Emperors, Dukes, Barons, and so on do maintain a hierarchy wherein demons are of a higher caste than most monsters, and monsters are higher up than humans, humans are never beaten or whipped. Humans hold all of the same rights as those of a higher caste, and they lead relatively pleasant lives compared to the human slaves on Hell Harbor or in the Labyrinth.

Thanks to the heavy gravity on Sharmur, most humans possess strong bodies that have adapted over tens of millennia to effortlessly cope with the pressure bearing down on them every minute of every day. Humans perform menial tasks, such as cleaning and managing minor affairs the demons and monsters consider too mundane, but the hardest and most back-breaking work goes to those who are most capable, such as Minotaurs, Trolls, Demon Brutes, and other such non-humans. Rarely do even the most sturdy male humans step in to help out.

On Sharmur, all humans receive adequate food to feed them and their families, houses to live in, and living standards the humans serving under the more vicious demons of other Hells would consider enviable.

Bael glances around as him and the other four walk toward the giant, pyramid-like Incan temple in the distance, a several-hundred-foot-high structure that calls attention to itself due to its unique appearance.

"Damn." Bael says, glancing at a family of tall, sturdy humans nearby, consisting of a father and his two daughters. "I forgot how chill this place was."

The man and his children purchase some extra food for a nice feast they'll enjoy later that day, namely some odd-looking fruit grown on Sharmur's nearby fertile land. The man jokes around and plays with his kids while he wanders the shopping district, where dozens of food stalls sit, advertising low prices.

"We've become more 'humanized' over the last several millennia." Viola explains. "Of course, we keep within the upper limits of the Volgrim guidelines, but letting humans do agriculture stuff seems to make them happy. It turns out humans, demons, and monsters can all live together decently without exploiting each other. The Hell of Lust... sort of understands our position, but you know how those sex-fiends are. They're a little too focused on carnal pleasures, and not enough on the simple fun in life."

She sighs deeply. "I'm just glad to get out of that boring meeting. Every time I visit Hell Harbor, my 'chi flow' gets messed up for a week. Can't focus or think properly. I bet it's because the whole planet smells like depression and misery."

"Yeah, the other Hells are really miserable," Guura pipes up. "Everyone is always such a bummer. But not us! All that stupid 'power' stuff messes with your head. I'm just glad we get our own world where we can have fun and live the good life, all the time!"

"So what's up with all the secrecy?" Melody asks, turning her gaze Bael's way. "You're acting so tight-lipped today! Just tell us! Nobody's gonna make a move on the three Emperors of Isolation!"

Bael frowns. "Well..."

He glances around the area, as if looking for someone, then shakes his head.

"I'll tell ya when we're safe."

Melody shrugs. "Okay, weirdo. Suit yourself."

Dorma pauses in front of a food stall selling some traditional human-made cakes. "Oh, how tasty-looking! How much for these?"

The human owner beams brightly at him. "Duke of Delicacies! My food is but ash in the mouth compared to yours! If you want to try my pitiful wares, just take one! I would feel too ashamed to charge you for these substandard baked goods!"

Dorma reaches into his belt and fishes out a gold coin. "Nonsense! Do you think one can become a god of baking without eating a little of everything under the sun? This fat demon only is as good as he is because he makes sure to expand his horizons every day! I smell some Hutenlaur in your goods, and that's not an ingredient people use often. I'd like to try this for myself, so there is no shame even if you are a beginner!"

The Duke of Delicacies buys five slices of cake from the man, flashes him a thumbs-up, then walks the food back to his friends.

"Come! We will eat cake while we walk!"

After waving goodbye to the human, he and the other demons dig into the cake while continuing on to the temple.

"Mmm. Not bad!" Dorma says. "Tangy, like lime, but it sticks to the roof of my mouth and slides into my throat. And that creamy texture, delicious! I tell you what, if you let humans thrive, the food they make is even better than their weapons!"

Bael swallows the last bite of his cake and shrugs. "Human food, demon food, it's all good to me, bub."

"You'd be surprised," Viola says. "There are a lot of demons who only insist on eating human flesh and blood. They say human food tastes bad and they won't even try it. They've all become so locked in their ways..."

"Yeah. We'd all be a lot better off if demons didn't insist on eating humans." Guura adds. "Fleshbags are friends, not food! That's my motto. I'd feel weird if I had to eat humans again... it's so icky and gross, eating sentient beings. I have a lot of human friends, I'll have you know!"

"Agares used to talk like you guys." Bael comments. "But after the old lizard kicked the bucket, Beelzebub came in, and... well, he's dead now, too. But I don't even know what the Slithering Spire looks like after the angels went all-out. Hope it didn't get hit too badly."

"The Spire was built into the side of a mountain," Viola points out. "I'm sure when the attack started, the humans there took shelter."

"It'd be great if they did." Bael mumbles.

Before long, the group arrives at the bottom of the Temple of Isolation, a holy site where all of the Sixth Hell's most valuable artifacts and ancestral heirlooms rest. Bael and the others walk toward its bottom, where a single door sits. After passing by a few demons standing guard outside, they step inside the tomb, close the door, and head deep underground, where they enter a massive sprawling complex.

Hundreds of rooms sit filled with treasures of sentimental instead of monetary value. Many of them are personal objects that were once owned by the demons of ancient times, including long-dead ones from before the fall of Earth.

The group arrives at the end of the hall, where they take a right turn and enter a sacred room, filled with carved images of every Demon Emperor that has ever existed. In this chamber, the Hall of Emperors, a statue of Satan stands at the apex, along with a statue of Belial standing by his side. Satan holds a cup of wine in his hand and holds it aloft, as if toasting the other statues before him. Belial smiles at him seductively, her expression identical to the one she always wore when in his presence, so deep was her love for him.

"Alright." Viola says, hovering her hand over a magical control module next to the entryway. "I've activated the isolation barrier. Only the five of us are here, nobody else. Not even Ose's Astral Form could slip inside, let alone any other monitoring device. Even the Volgrim wouldn't be able to peep on us."

"Right!" Melody says. "Finally! So, Bael, what's up with all the secrecy, huh? You got something to say?"

Bael doesn't immediately answer. He walks over to the left wall, to one of the hundred statues in the room, where a familiar duo of Emperors catches his attention.

The images of Shax and Murmur.

He gazes up at his 'long-dead' friends and sighs.

"She's still alive, guys."

The other four blink.

"She?" Melody asks, directing a suspicious gaze at Bael's back. "'She,' who?"

Guura's expression becomes uncertain. "You... you don't mean..."

"Murmur." Bael says, his voice quiet, while gazing up at the little girl's statue. "She's alive. I saw her with my own eyes."

He turns around to look at the others, sadness in his gaze.

"...Yama's got her. She's one of his Shades."

"WHAT?!" Melody snaps. "Yama? YAMA?! You're lying! That's impossible! We saw her body! The humans killed her!"

"We did see her corpse..." Viola says. She pauses for half a beat before adding, "But... Mephisto was... unable to bring her back to life. We thought, maybe, possibly... the humans had done something to her, evaporated her soul. Their weapons were so formidable, we couldn't be sure..."

Bael purses his lips. "It wasn't just me who saw her. Fae did, too. So did Mara, from the Tarot Sect. Yama's got our friend... and I dunno how to get her back."

Melody's legs go soft. She crumples to the ground, a look of hatred, rage, and defeat on her face.

"No, no, no... that can't be true... it mustn't... all this time? She's been... she's been in Yama's clutches?!"

"That sick, rapist bastard." Viola hisses. Bloodlust fills her eyes as she imagines what 100,000 years of being Yama's plaything must have done to her 'little-big sister.' "I'll kill him."

"Not if I get to him first!" Guura proclaims. "I'll rip his shadowy little demonhood off and feed it to the dogs!"

Bael allows them several minutes of ranting and raving before speaking again.

"Murmur ain't the only one who's still alive. Shax is, too. Sort of. I think."

This news sends another wave of shock through the Hell of Isolation's Emperors.

"No!" Viola exclaims. "Don't tell me Yama has him too?! That spawn of a broodmother!"

"Not Yama." Bael says. "It's, uh, me. Me? I think it's me."

He proceeds to explain his recent discoveries to his shocked audience, all of whom listen with bated breath, hanging onto his every word.

"You're kidding." Melody says. "After the humans shot you in the eye, that's when you started seeing Shax? So he's just a soul fragment, now?"

"That's what he says." Bael explains. "But I can't really just tell him to come out. He beat the crap outta Yama, and then his spirit-body fell apart afterward. I'm not sure if he's still alive or not. He's just kinda... in me, ya know?"

The other four demons quickly walk over to Bael. They sweep their demonic senses across his body several times, but no matter how they probe or search him, they don't find anything.

"I don't sense any errant souls attached to you..." Viola mutters. "Are you sure you're not just hallucinating?"

"Nope. I'm not." Bael says. "You should've seen it, sis. Shax beat the crap out of Yama, like he beat his ass real good. If it wasn't for Fae, he might've killed the poor bastard."

"What a pity that would be." Dorma snorts. "So, what do we do about Murmur? Can we save her?"

"I've never heard of Yama giving up control of a Shade." Viola says, her expression sinking. "But that hellhound-fucker had better start to sweat. There's no chance I'm letting him hold onto my little-big sister for a moment longer."

The group falls silent while thinking about how to deal with the situation.

"...I don't know of any way we might convert a demon out of Yama's control." Melody says. "Except... well, maybe the... the Wordsmith?"

Viola scrunches up her face. "You want to ask him for help?"

"Hey! Hear me out!" Melody protests. "We didn't piss in the Wordsmith's cereal! Ose did! I bet if we explained our position and that we didn't have anything to do with Ose, he'd help us out! His magic should surely be able to convert Murmur back to a normal girl!"

"There's no way the Wordsmith would be so kind." Viola says, shaking her head. "In his eyes, all demons are the enemy. Ose made damn good sure of that."

"But doesn't he have Belial with him?" Guura asks, her eyes sparkling like stars. "We know Beli! We're good friends with her! If we ask the Hell of Lust nicely, they can also put in a good word for us!"

"Maybe." Viola mutters. "...Maybe."

"The Wordshit was real angry." Bael says. "Ose said he was a nice guy, wouldn't hurt a fly. But he got mad. He killed a lot of demons. He even killed me. I can't blame him. We murdered his little girl, after all. His friends. His family. You think he'll help you, when Ose's made him our enemy?"

Bael shakes his head.

"Nah. We have to find a different way... for Murmur's sake. We gotta save her, man. She's hurting."

Viola lowers her eyes.

"I suppose you're right, Bael. We'll have to find a different way to save our sister."

Part 341: Shax's Return

After explaining Murmur's situation, Bael and the Hell of Isolation's top demons don't feel much enthusiasm for small talk. Viola glances around the chamber and wriggles her nose.

"Is that why you wanted to chat with us in private, Bael? So Yama wouldn't know you told us?"

Bael raises an eyebrow. "Eh? Nah, sister. I ain't no yellow-belly coward. If Yama's got half my brains, he already saw us leavin' and put two and two together. No, I just wanted to keep this info hush-hush. It wouldn't look good for your Hell if the others knew Yama had one of your founders in his grubby little paws."

"That's very considerate of you." Viola says, flashing a sweet smile at the Duke of Pain. "But, frankly, it doesn't seem to matter much. We don't have a way to deal with Yama. I'm sure if the three of us worked together, we could beat the snot out of him, but... as for how to get Murmur back..."

Guura glances around the room. "You... you don't think Yama's here right now, do you?"

"In here? Not a chance. I can sense every drop of demonic energy inside our Isolation Barriers." Viola says. "If you weren't so out of practice, you could too. But as for just outside the barrier? Who knows. Yama could be lurking around every corner."

She gazes meaningfully at Bael.

"You have to watch yourself now, Bael. Yama wants you. He wants your, erm, body. He'll do anything to get it, the sick bastard. Unless you stay with us all the time, you're in grave danger!"

Melody slaps Bael's back. "No worries though! You ain't got any powers, but we'll protect you, Big Bael Bro! You've helped us out a whole bunch by letting us know about Murmur! We owe you!"

Bael gently pushes Melody's hand away. "No need, ladies. I ain't afraid of one little turd-sniffer. Yama's big, and he's scary, but I know all sorts of tricks. I can protect myself."

"Oh? What sorts of tricks?" Viola asks.

Bael stares at her blankly. "Huh?"

"Tricks. You said you knew tricks to protect yourself." Viola repeats, raising an eyebrow. "What sorts of tricks?"

Bael stares at her for several seconds.

"I... ain't got no idea what you're talking about."

"Hahaha! Freaking Bael, man! Such an airhead!" Melody laughs. "The moment something leaves his mouth, it's gone forever! In one ear and out the other!"

Bael chuckles. "You said it, sister."

The group of demons continues chatting about relatively banal happenings for a while before lowering the barrier and heading out of the room.

As they walk, Bael glances inside the various chambers of the Temple of Isolation. He pauses at the entry to one and narrows his eyes while looking inside.

"Oy! What's in here? Looks like a bunch of instruments!"

Bael walks inside, and the girls follow after him, along with Dorma.

"Yup, this is the chamber where we store all of the most famous musical instruments from demon history," Dorma says. "Look over there. See that golden fiddle? That's the same one Satan used to play. And that piano? We stole it from that human, Mozart. It's authentic!"

"Damn, Satan's fiddle, Mozo's piano..." Bael mutters, while giving them a casual glance. He stops in front of a paid of demonstone drums and gasps. "Oh, heck! No way! Are these... MY drums?! I thought they were gone for good!"

"Of course not!" Dorma says, laughing. "We saved your drums, Shax's guitar, and even Murmur's clarinet. All the parts of the old band are here. We don't have hardly any of the band members still around... but, well, that's just how the dominoes fall sometimes."

Bael gently touches his old drumset, the same one he used to play while on the big stage, all those millennia ago.

His expression softens as he reminisces about the good old days.

"Yeah... most of 'em are dead. Just me left."

"Well..." Guura starts to say, before getting a pair of evil glares from Melody and Viola. "...I guess that's true! Ehehe..."

Bael pulls up a chair and sits before the drums. He lifts his hand, then swings it toward the unthinkably hard demonstone to slap it with all his strength.

Crack!

Rather than making that satisfying bongo sound he remembers from millennia ago, Bael practically shatters his bones on the unthinkably hard demonstone surface.

"Aaargh! Aw, shit! Shit! I broke all my fingers! Oh, the pain! The pain! Someone kiss the boo-boo!!"

Bael frantically shakes some feeling back into his hand, while the other four simply offer him polite smiles.

"Don't you remember, Bael?" Melody asks. "You only played these drums because your hands were too clumsy to play anything else. If you don't have a super-strong, invincible body, these drums are basically unusable. You're better off trying to play with normal drums, or maybe even another instrument entirely."

Bael continues to rub his hand while wearing a hurt expression. He gazes sadly at the drums and nods. "Yeah. Guess that's true. I never had no feeling in my fingers before, couldn't play any of them delicate instruments, like pianos or guitars. I guess I could give it a try, now."

He shakes his head.

"...But it just ain't the same without others. I'm too old for this band stuff. Ain't no fun anymore."

"It's funny..." Viola muses. "Demons gave humans music, and they evolved it in their own way. We gave them suits and fine culture, and they evolved that, too. Humans are great at taking things from other species and changing them to fit their wants and desires."

"That's just another way to say they're a bunch of thieves." Dorma rebuts.

"No... not thieves. Just adaptable little critters." Viola concludes.

After Bael messes around with the instruments for a while, he gets bored and decides to leave.

"I've seen enough. Just a bunch of rusty music stuff anyway. Ain't nobody gonna touch it ever again. I'll just be heading back to Hell, if it's all the same to the rest of ya."

The other demons nod, but Guura and Viola both stare at Bael's back with saddened eyes, feeling for once just how sad and lonely the poor guy feels. Having lost his powers, all his friends, and even the hobbies he once loved, Bael doesn't have much left from his past that he actually enjoys.

"Bael, will 'your girls' be okay?" Guura asks, as she hops over to his side and skips along beside him. "You know, all the girls at your place on Hell Harbor."

Bael shrugs. "Prolly. There's a whole thing underground where they can hide out if the planet goes to shit. I bet they went down there to wait for me to return. I haven't told 'em I'm a girl, yet, so... that's gonna be weird."

Bael pauses.

"I am a girl, right? I'm a chick? I got lady parts."

"If you feel like a woman, then you are a woman!" Guura exclaims. "And if you still feel like a guy, that's fine too!"

Bael groans. "How the heck's a fella 'sposed to take a leak when his junk's all fallen off? Ose done stole my Little Bael... not sure how I'm gonna deal with these lady parts. It's all new to me."

Viola coughs into her fist. "Um, if you're not sure, I'm sure one of us could, uh, help you out, Bael. It'll take some getting used to, but it's not all that difficult to deal with."

Bael shrugs. "Whatever works."

He and the other four leave the temple, travel back to the town, and warp to the mountain where the Warpgate rests. After hiking back up the trail, Bael waits for the monster locals hidden elsewhere to key in the command codes to Hell. They aim not for the Labyrinth Core, but one of the four 'corners' of Hell, where single Warpgates sit ready for accessing distant worlds.

Unlike the Labyrinth Core, where six Warpgates stay, just one gate sits in each of Hell's four corners, making it a real pain to travel around. All demons have to either enlist the assistance of Warpers to reach the Warpgates, or they have to walk through the Labyrinth's winding, shifting passages for days on end.

Bael starts to get a headache just thinking about it.

"Man, I could go for a game of Sticks and Bones, right about now. Artorias ain't around though... he's got an angel in his head. Mephisto's probably busy doing stuff with Ose. Uhh... Beelzebrat done offed himself... Agares is dead..."

While Bael waits for the Warpgate to open, the other four demons stand behind him, listening to his muttering.

"Hey, Bael." Melody says. "You know you can come by anytime, right? It's great to see you again, buddy! Just because you're in Ose's body doesn't mean you're not the same Bael as ever. We won't ever treat you any differently."

Bael smiles.

"Thanks, sugar. You know I'd drop by if I remembered more often. My memory just sucks, is all."

The Warpgate opens up, and Bael walks toward it.

"Peace out, ladies. Dorma too. We'll keep in touch."

The Duke of Pain swaggers through the opaque portal, disappearing inside the depths of Hell and leaving his friends behind to watch his back.

"...I don't like leaving Bael alone." Viola says. "There's no way Yama will stop pursuing him... but we can't just follow him around. He has a right to privacy."

"We could be all sneaky-like!" Guura chirps. "He won't even know we're there!"

Melody shakes her head. "It's not our place. Bael knows what he's doing. He might be an idiot, but he's not stupid."

The Warpgate closes, leaving them no chance to follow in Bael's footsteps.

"...Damn. Maybe I should contact one of my friends from the Hell of Lust..." Viola mutters.

Bael exits the Warpgate in the northern region of Hell, a swampy place with all kinds of nasty smells floating in the air. He passes by the nests of several large, lizard-like monsters, not dissimilar to the crocodiles of Kar's tribe.

"Sup." Bael says, giving them a nod of his head. The reptiles merely blink their eyes and watch him pass, utterly confused as to why Ose is 'walking funny.'

As he makes his way down the darkened corridors, Bael begins to whistle a merry little tune. He swings his arms and legs in rhythm, getting himself up to a jolly good time.

"Hey there honey mama, hey there honey sister! Don't know if I'm a fella, or done turned into a sister..."

The Duke of Pain sings and whistles, his voice loudly bouncing around the Labyrinth's halls for hundreds of meters in every direction.

Bael passes several goblin dens, where hundreds of the little monsters congregate inside cramped spaces. Despite the lack of elbow room, most of the goblins find their living situation to be just fine and dandy, as they hold very little love for privacy and tend to stick together in large groups to stand a chance against the much bigger and stronger monsters of other species.

The further Bael gets from the Warpgate, the quieter the Labyrinth becomes.

Eventually, he comes to a stop in a pitch-black area, one where his eyes can easily pierce the gloom, but where the purity of the darkness would still make anyone's skin crawl.

Bael puts his hands on his hips, stands in place, and taps his foot impatiently.

After several minutes, he rolls his eyes.

"Oh, for Devil's sake, Yama! Just show yourself already! I know you're there. Sheesh, you think this powerless guy is gonna beat you up or something? You're such a friggin' coward."

The shadows around Bael physically thicken, as if turning to a river of dense gas. On the wall, just a few feet away, a pair of blood-red eyes emerges, peering at him from the darkness.

"Kekekeke. We have been watching you for some time, Duke of Pain. We are curious as to why you would come here, all alone."

Bael shrugs. "Here, there, wherever. What's it matter? I'll be alone in a dark place at some point. You're real good at playing the waiting game. Figured I'd just get this over with."

Yama's eyes blink slowly. His gaze flickers up and down Bael's feminine body.

"You hold control of something we want. Now that we are alone, we can take you by force. That pesky soul of yours will have to break at some point!"

Drool begins to drip from Bael's mouth. He nods dully.

"...Uh-huh. Sure, pal. Whatever you say. Look, here's how this is gonna go. You're gonna give me Murmur back, or I'm gonna sic Shax on ya. He's real unhappy about what you did to his sister. Give her back now, and I won't have to break your shadow-ass into pieces."

At the threat of seeing Shax again, Yama shows visible alarm. He shrinks back from Bael for a moment, before realizing the Duke of Pain is only making a fool of him.

"Ludicrous! Kekeke. If you could summon Shax, you would have already done it! Just shut up and succumb to our control, Bael!"

Like a viper, Yama pounces at Bael! He fires off hundreds of shadow-tendrils from every direction, grabbing onto Bael's four limbs and spreading him out in an awkward position that makes resistance futile.

Bael groans. "This again? You didn't get my soul last time, and you won't this time, bub. If you try, I'll fry ya. You'll regret it."

Bael concentrates hard, digging into his innermost thoughts as he tries to call out to his friend.

Shax! Come on, buddy! Help me out here! I need ya, pal!

Yama slithers up to Bael and starts groping him all over, enjoying the future sensations of his unwilling pleasure slave.

"You will bend to our desires as we please, whether you want to or not! Kekeke!"

Bael frowns. "Hey, hands off, creep! This ain't funny anymore!"

"There is no humor in the art of seduction." Yama whispers. "We love the taste of fresh females. We crave more and more of them. We wish to enjoy the bodies of every beauty in the universe, no matter their species or whether they like us or not. We will go to any length to satiate our lust!"

The more Yama talks, the more Bael starts to panic.

Okay, Shax! Hah hah, good joke! Come on out, now! This creep is touching places that make me feel all weird inside! Shax! SHAX, come out, man!

Bael's vision becomes blurry as Yama grabs onto his head and stares into his eyes. Yama attacks Bael's soul directly, causing the Duke of Pain to violently jerk around as painful stabbing sensations bite into his very essence.

"Keh! Damn, this soul is so formidable! How can a mere Duke possess such a foundation?!"

Yama turns his soul attacks into swords. He stabs Bael's soul, cuts it, slashes it, and does everything he can, and slowly but surely begins to make a small amount of headway.

Panting wildly, Yama's eyes turn bloodshot as he desperately attacks Bael's soul in an effort to break him down and ultimately convert him to one of Yama's Shades.

"Stop resisting! Gah! You aren't even conscious anymore, how can your soul put up such a fight? This is ridiculous!"

Just when it seems all is lost, Bael suddenly snaps his eyes open.

"Oh! It worked!"

He completely ignores Yama's soul-attacks and turns away from the Shadow Emperor to look at a figure materializing in the darkness.

"Shax! Buddy, took ya long enough!"

Yama nearly jumps out of his skin. The Emperor of Shadows follows Bael's eyesight to the short, fat little figure materializing in the darkness. A vaguely ethereal body, similar to how Shax materialized before, appears in the Labyrinth's blackest recesses.

However, in unison, both Bael and Yama freeze up in shock.

"W-what..." Bael mutters. "No... no that can't be right..."

"What have you done?!" Yama hisses. "That isn't Shax! He's... he's...!!"

The figure fully materializes. He glances around in confusion.

"Eh? Where am I? What happened to my girl?"

His eyes fall on the ensnared Bael and Emperor Yama, both standing remarkably close together, as if caught in the middle of a sacred act.

"Uh... Ose? Yama? Did... did I interrupt somethin'? How the hell'd I get here?"

Bael's jaw drops.

"B-boss? BOSS? Is that you?"

"Impossible!" Yama hisses, pulling away from Bael. He shoots the Duke of Pain a fear-filled look. "How could you bring back... Satan the Devil?!"

The former First Emperor, Satan the Devil, stands in the darkness, instead of Shax. He raises an eyebrow at the strange antics of 'Ose' and Yama, not sure what exactly is happening.

"Why're you two acting so weird?" Satan asks. "Guys. It's just me. Old buddy, Satan. Sheesh, you look like you ain't seen me in a hundred years!"

The short, pudgy First Emperor starts to stick his hands in his pockets, only for them to smack his hips uselessly. He looks down and becomes shocked to find that, for no reason he can recall, he's completely naked!

"What in the Seven Hells?" Satan grumbles. "Why the dickens am I standing in a dark hallway naked while Ose and Yama have a go at each other? This is all so strange..."

"Y-you died!" Bael sputters. "You died, boss! Right in Belial's arms! Remember? The Black Queen? Fightin' me and Deebs as the Balrog and Archdemon?"

Satan raises an eyebrow. "Yeah, of course I do. What about it? That was like 5 minutes ago."

He pauses.

"Wait, you said I died? But that can't be right. I'm right here, and still alive!"

The Devil takes a step toward Bael and frowns.

"By the way, Ose. You don't sound like yourself. You kind of sound like... Bael! Is this some kind of practical joke? Messin' with ol' Satan? A real knee-slapper, I bet."

"It's a long story!" Bael says. "I'm Bael! Me and Ose had our bodies swapped. It was Mephisto's fault. But forget that, boss! Can you beat the crap out of Yama for me?"

Yama flinches. "No, no, there's no need for violence! We're all good friends, yes? Good friends!"

Satan glances back and forth between Yama and Bael.

"Uh... huh... and why would I beat the crap out of Yama?"

"Because!" Bael answers. "Yama captured Murmur, boss! He took our little sis and made her one of his shadow-sluts! He's holding her hostage!"

"WHAT?!" Satan abruptly roars. "Yama! You little...!! Is that TRUE?!"

Yama's shadows slowly loosen around Bael's ankles and wrists.

"Kekeke, no, no! Do not be ridiculous, oh, great Emperor Satan! Bael is lying, of course! He's making it all up! It's all false, yes!"

The more Satan acclimates to the situation and realizes what he 'walked in on' with Bael and Yama, the more disgusted he becomes.

"I take a nap for five seconds, wake up in some dark alley, and little Davook is up to his raping ways once again!" Satan yells. "You little shit! I should've slapped the crap outta you sooner!"

Satan storms toward Yama with bloodlust in his eyes. What little excitement Yama had toward capturing Bael vanishes in an instant.

"Y-you! You're just an undead fossil!" Yama exclaims. "You cannot threaten us, errant soul!"

"Oh, we'll see about THAT!" Satan says, while lifting his palm.

A ball of fire engulfs the space above Satan's palm. The Devil's eyes glow with scorching heat as he burns souls contained within his vessel, doubling, tripling, and quadrupling the fire's power to fill the chamber with piercing light.

"Fuck off back to the shadows!" Satan yells, as he hurls the brilliantly glowing orb of light.

Yama's expression turns to rage.

"Times have changed, grandpa! We'll see if you still have the qualifications to MAKE US, old Devil!"

Part 342: Let Sleeping Devils Lie

Hardly has the battle begun before Satan hurls a truly massive fireball down the pitch-black corridor, lighting it up enough that any observer can easily make out the blackened tendrils comprising Yama's smoky body. The Emperor of Shadows drops to the floor and compresses himself into a paper-thin form, then slides away, easily evading Satan's attack.

However, Bael doesn't.

The fireball explodes when it hits the far wall, catching the Duke of Pain in its blast. Bael lets out a horrible scream, a sound he has never made in his life, and goes flying away. He crashes against the opposite wall and collapses to the floor in a heap, trembling and gritting his teeth while agony wracks his body.

"Uhh... uhhh... oh, d-devils... hurts..."

Satan blinks in surprise. "Eh? Bael! Are you okay?"

The Devil starts to run toward Bael, but at that moment, Yama bursts out of the darkness from behind him. As the Emperor of Shadows, his power in absolute darkness reigns supreme. His speed, might, and overall strength sits atop the demonic hierarchy, muted only when any amount of light enters the equation.

Satan senses the danger. He turns to conjure a bolt of lightning, but before he can complete the spell, a lance of darkness flies up from his feet, impales the Devil's head, and kills him instantly.

The former First Emperor's body goes limp. Yama raises a massive palm of shadows, then brings it down on the Devil's corpse, crushing him into meat-paste.

"Kekeke! So much for the First Emperor! Easy to kill, easy to handle."

Being well aware of Satan's powers, Yama keeps an eye on his corpse while quickly slithering across the ground to Bael's body.

"Now then, where were we? EUGH!"

The Emperor of Shadows recoils in disgust when he reaches Bael. The Duke of Pain's body, now covered in horrible, melted-skin and burns, stinks of cooked flesh. His appearance no longer appears as 'sweet' and 'succulent' as Yama likes, making the Emperor of Shadows groan with displeasure.

"How awful! Ugh! That damned Devil ruined our toy! What an absolute bastard! Now this body isn't even desirable! Who would be able to heal burns of this level? Perhaps Belial? Nobody we know!"

While Yama roars to the Seven Hells about Bael's twitching, pain-filled figure, a minute passes.

Blood-colored light appears above Satan's body. The Devil rematerializes, recreating himself due to his vast store of souls.

Yama turns to face him. "Preposterous. How can an errant soul possess subordinate souls? There is no precedent! What kind of monster are you, undead Devil?"

Satan motions with his hand, summoning a fresh new suit to cover his naked body. "Punk. You had best step away from my friend. You can't defeat me. Nobody can. Even when I'm long dead, I still come back."

Yama's eyes flicker with thought. He expands his size to cover the whole corridor, then chuckles deep in his throat.

"Yes, yes, we understand. You want Bael back. Of course. We were wrong. Here, take him."

Yama gently picks up Bael and sets his pain-wracked body at the Devil's feet, while Satan gives the Shadow Emperor the stink-eye.

"There, see? We can be quite reasonable." Yama purrs. "But ah, look at what you've done. You have burned Bael so badly nobody could even recognize him. What a bastard you are, Satan."

Satan smirks. "Not a problem. Lilia might be a one-of-a-kind healer, but this old devil has his own methods."

The Devil conjures a ball of water in his hands. He presses it against Bael's body, infusing him with the calm and healing effects of a long-dead Hero, one whose abilities Satan took millennia before.

Within seconds, Bael's agony subsides. He breathes more evenly as Satan heals him up. The burns recede, and after just a minute or two, he returns back to his previous condition.

Bael groggily opens his eyes and stands up, shivering from the cold water, as well as the phantom pain.

"Nnn. Th-thanks, boss. Shit. That really fuckin' hurt."

Satan eyes the Emperor of Shadows, looming behind Bael.

"No problem, pal. Now get behind me. Seems I need to have a little chat with Yam-"

Satan doesn't get to finish his sentence. All at once, a thousand tendrils of darkness burst out of the walls, ceiling, and floor. Countless Shades and Shadow-Walkers pounce at Satan, having stepped across vast distances by traveling within Yama's 'Shadow Realm.'

Before the Devil can fully react, Yama's minions screech at him, pounce at him, and attack him from all directions. Some grab his limbs and yank him around, while others stab at him from all directions.

However, before Yama's minions can kill the Devil a second time, an explosion engulfs Satan's body, blasting away all the shadows. Satan's signature Vectors, the eight invisible limbs granted to him by the fallen Archangel, Samael, burst out of his body and whip around him at lightspeed, ripping apart everyone and everything daring enough to draw within a few meters of the Devil's figure.

Satan's expression becomes deadly serious as he kills more than a hundred Shades and Shadow-walkers in only a few seconds. He conjures two more balls of fire and flings them in front of and behind himself, illuminating the corridor with blinding light and forcing the Shadow Emperor backward.

"You're starting to piss me off." Satan says, his voice eerily calm. "You really don't want to piss me off, Davook. You ain't as scary as you think you are."

"Do not call us by that name!" Yama roars in the distance. "We are Yama now! We are mighty!"

Satan's body levitates half a foot off the ground, lifted up by two of his Vectors. He stares at Yama and shakes his head.

"I've killed Dukes and Emperors before. Never liked it, but I always do what's necessary. Sometimes, scumbags simply have to die. Sometimes, a fella has to clean up shop."

Satan and Yama launch into a brutal battle. The Shadow Emperor bobs and weaves while Satan hurls bolts of lightning, fireballs, and other attacks containing inherent illumination effects. At the same time, Yama fires off hundreds of darkness spears, sends his Shades and Shadow-walkers to attack Satan from all sides, and otherwise reveals that the illuminating effects of Satan's magic don't hinder him as much as the Devil remembers.

Bael ends up caught in the middle, ducking, dodging, and hollering bloody murder while his boss battles Yama on his behalf.

"Aw, shit! Shit! Why do I gotta be so weak? I'm pathetic!"

Satan's expression grows more and more troubled. His Vectors fend off attacks from all sides, freeing up his hands to summon magic attacks of all different kinds. As the minutes pass, he continues bombarding Yama, yet his attacks seem to have no effect on the Shadow Emperor.

"Kekeke! You are weaker than we remember!" Yama says, taunting Satan. "To think we were actually a little afraid of your return! Looks like the fossil has lost his edge!"

Satan snorts. "Imbecile. I'm only holding back because I don't want to destroy half of Hell. If I really go all out, the entire area will look like Heaven after the Archdemon's rampage. Do you seriously think you're my equal?"

"We don't think so." Yama replies. "We know so."

Suddenly, Yama's body flickers. He vanishes into the shadows, and a vague feeling of threat screams in the back of Satan's head.

An instant later, a wall of shadow rushes down the corridor, swallowing all the light and snuffing out Satan's fireballs. The Devil jerks in surprise as his vision goes black and everything vanishes.

Not even his demonic vision penetrates the blackened gloom.

Satan looks around, left and right. He tries to look at his hands, but even when held half an inch from his face, he can't make out its shape.

"The hell is this?" Satan mutters.

"Kekeke. Welcome to the Shadow Realm." Yama hisses, his voice coming from all directions at once. "It is our ultimate domain. We control everything. You must be feeling quite a bit… stifled."

Satan summons a fireball in his hand, one which momentarily illuminates his body, but only a second later, it snuffs out, sucked into the ether by some invisible force.

"Magic is greatly weakened in the Shadow Realm." Yama says, continuing to taunt the former First Emperor. "Not just magic, but all forms of light. You should be familiar with this sort of domain. After all, we based its existence on the Cosmic Realm."

Satan frowns. "The Cosmic Realm. Old Man Raphael's blindingly bright place, huh? I guess yours is the opposite. Well, what are you waiting for? You gonna kill me or what?"

"There is no point. You revive endlessly." Yama explains, his words coming slowly and methodically. "We would much rather investigate the source of your power. You are nothing but an errant soul, after all. Perhaps, we can devour you. Consume you. Add you to our collective power. We do not like corrupting the minds of males, but holding dominion over a former Emperor is always worth trying."

"Oh. Is that so?" Satan asks. He yawns and cracks his neck. "Well, damn. I guess I'm stuck here. This place is pretty scary. Any time I use my mana, it gets sucked away. Let me guess... you're eating my mana to empower yourself, right?"

Yama hesitates.

"...A lucky guess."

"Dumbass." Satan says. "You don't get it, Yama. I've fought so many Titans, angels, and demons alike... I've seen all kinds of crazy shit long before you were a speck in your broodmother's eye. While you were off dicking around during the War in Heaven, I killed millions of angels with a single attack. By the time you made it to Emperor, I'd already killed more angels and Titans than any other demon alive. Even if I've been dead for a hundred thousand years, I doubt anyone's matched my record."

Satan gestures toward the infinite abyss surrounding him, despite being unable to see his own hand.

"This? Pft. Big deal. There's no way you can easily summon and control some all-powerful domain of darkness. It certainly can't be any stronger than the Cosmic Realm, since that was made by Archangels at the height of their power. At best, this is a decent imitation. Beating you is just about winning a game of attrition."

"And..." Satan concludes with a smile, "...when it comes to battles of attrition, nobody beats the Devil at his own game."

Without any fanfare, Satan flicks his fingers. In his hands, a magical piece of parchment appears, one which makes the shadows tremble.

"No..." Yama hisses. "That... how can you still have that?!"

Satan rolls his eyes. "I made all the demons sign my contracts. Hell, I made all the Broodmothers sign those contracts, too. Every demon born since the beginning of time has ultimately fallen under my domain. That's why I'm the First Emperor, punk. And you ain't no different. You signed one, too, back when you were just a scrawny little imp."

With a light tap of his finger, Satan presses on the Blood Contract. Yama screams violently, causing the Shadow Realm to tremble.

"Aaaargh!"

His previously domineering voice no longer sounds as scary as before. Satan smirks and holds up the contract.

"Listen up, punk. I don't give a damn who you think you are. In the end, you're my slave. I had to remove a bunch of clauses in my contracts way back in the day, but I kept a couple in. Since you've attacked me, your master, you activated those clauses. That means I own your ass."

He laughs cruelly. "Let's get down to business. Retract this stupid Shadow-shit."

Hardly have the words left Satan's mouth before a violent whooshing sensation rips the air around him. Satan stares idly at the contract's terms of service while Yama's Shadow Realm pulls away, leaving Satan back in the hallway, alone.

He frowns. "Give Bael back too, you little runt."

A moment later, Bael seemingly tumbles out of the ceiling. He flops to the dirt and bangs his head on the Labyrinth's floor, cursing loudly.

"Aw, shit! Damn! What happened? Where am I?"

Satan pats him on the shoulder. "You'll be okay, Bael. Yama! Get your ass over here! Show yourself!"

The Shadow Emperor pops into existence not far from Satan's figure. Without warning, he lashes out, striking at the Blood Contract hovering in midair.

"We will NOT be your slave!"

Yama's attack shreds the magical parchment, scattering it to the winds.

However, Satan merely stares at him blankly, as if looking at an idiot.

"You done? Stand still. I don't have any more interest in playing games with the likes of you."

Satan flicks his fingers again, resummoning the still-intact Blood Contract, revealing that Yama's attack did not harm it in the slightest.

"What?" Yama hisses. "But we tore it to shreds!"

"You really are an idiot." Satan mutters. "It's a magical contract. I ain't gotta explain shit. Now then, bring out little Murmur. I want to see her."

Yama tries to resist, but Satan's orders press on his soul unstoppably, forcing him to obey. After a few moments of fighting, Yama hesitantly summons one of his many Shades, a small, featureless blob of darkness that hovers at his side.

"Keh. This is Silent. She does not speak." Yama grunts.

"Silent." Satan repeats. "Cute rename. Now, release her. She won't be one of your Shades anymore."

However, despite his order, Yama doesn't move. The Shadow Emperor cocks his head, then smiles.

"Ah. We see. Your Blood Contracts cannot compel us to fulfill an order we are incapable of following. How interesting! We have no way of 'uncorrupting' a member of our harem. We cannot do as you command."

The Devil frowns. "You can't? Bullshit. You must have some method."

"We do not." Yama answers. "We never intended to release our women. Why would we even bother creating such a spell? What is ours will always remain ours."

"You piece of shit!" Bael yells. "Murmur! Murmur, get away from that shadow-creep!"

The blob of shadow hovering beside Yama remains silent and impassive, saying nothing. She levitates idly, as if oblivious to the conversation taking place before her.

"I don't get it." Satan says. "Yama, you chase down women, you turn them into shadow-sluts because you think they're cute, but then they just become ugly blobs of darkness. Are you an idiot?!"

"You cannot see their true forms as we do," Yama replies, eying Murmur's shadow-body hungrily. "Our women's true figures remain apparent only to us! We would not want other men to gaze upon them anyway, for they are ours, alone!"

The Devil's expression turns ugly.

He remains silent for several minutes, unsure of how to resolve the situation.

I can protect Bael just fine. I can even order Yama to never touch another woman again, and he'll have to obey my command, at least until his soul builds up some resistance to my orders... but I can't save Murmur! What the hell? That's messed up! There has to be another way...

Reluctantly, Satan realizes he cannot force Yama to do the impossible. He glances at the Blood Contract and skims its wording just to make sure he fully understands his limits, before returning his attention to Yama.

"Alright, punk. You're getting off real lucky this time. From now on, you won't ever touch Bael, nor any woman ever again. Got it? No new Shades, no new Shadow-walkers, either. You've ruined enough lives."

Yama flinches. "What! That is an outrageous order! How dare you?! This Emperor will not bow to your commands like a beaten dog!"

Satan shrugs. "Suit yourself. If you fight them, you'll only have to suffer the most terrible, soul-ripping pain you've ever felt in your whole life. Good luck on that."

The Devil pauses to shoot Yama one last stink-eye.

"Now get the hell out of my sight. I don't want to look at you a moment longer, punk."

Yama once again struggles to disobey Satan's order, to launch a futile attack on him, but his body fails to obey, and he eventually relents. He disappears into the darkness, leaving Satan and Bael to stand alone.

"Boss!" Bael says, visibly excited. "You saved my hiney! Thanks a lot!"

"It was nothing." Satan says, waving off Bael's thanks. "More importantly, now that we've got a little time, what the heck is going on? You've gotta tell me everything, Bael. Where's Lilia? What happened after the Black Queen fight? And what about that little Hero punk? The Wordsmith?"

Bael scratches his head. "Err. Well, it's been six years, boss. A lot changed. After the big fight, Deebs got KO'd. He's been napping somewhere like he did after the War in Heaven. Ose took control of the Seven Hells, but then some other stuff happened, and then..."

Bael spends the next half an hour yapping at Satan, telling the Devil about all the things that have happened since he 'died.' By the time Bael finishes, Satan can only shake his head.

"Damn. A Cherubiim, huh? To think old man Raphael had a trick like that up his sleeve. Wonder why he never transformed during the finale battle of the Energy Wars. And Ose seems stronger than ever..."

"Yeah, but that's not all!" Bael says. "We finally found out the truth, boss! It turns out that bitch Lucifer was the one who set you up to die! She tricked you into fighting the Black Queen!"

"She did?" Satan asks. "...Huh. Guess that makes sense."

"You ain't pissed off?" Bael asks.

"A little. But what's done is done. Lucy's dead. I died, too. I'd rather focus on the future."

Satan turns to Bael with a look of intense concentration.

"Bael. I don't know how, but you brought me back. This must have happened for a reason. Did you develop any new powers, recently?"

The Duke of Pain shrugs. "Dunno. I lost all my powers, actually. All I ever had was a big, strong body... and now Ose's got that. I should be able to use her zappy-magic, but I'm too stupid."

Satan rubs his chin. "I've never heard of a Duke without powers. And since you're in Ose's body, you should even have access to Emperor-level powers, probably. Maybe you developed something new? Something that brought me back?"

"Dunno." Bael repeats. "I didn't do anything at all. You just showed up. Honestly, I was expectin' Shax, not you."

"Right. Because Shax appeared last time you faced Yama..." Satan muses. "Huh. There must be something more to this. I already died along with the Black Queen. My soul should be in the Great Beyond, yet I'm here, now. Whatever happened to you, I bet it had something to do with you swapping bodies. Heck, here's another idea! Maybe you had the power all along, but your old body was just too strong! Maybe it was, I dunno, keeping all your magic stopped up or something? Like a dam in a river!"

Bael's expression becomes dazed. He drools a little the more Satan talks.

"Uh huh... I don't get it. Whatever works, boss."

"Yeah, forget all that crap." Satan says, waving away his concerns. "Let's talk business. Now that I'm back, I can get to work fixing all the things that've gone south since I died. I'll leave Ose in charge for now, but no way am I letting that Wordsmith run amok with my girl, Lilia! It's about time she and I had a good smooching session, I'll tell you that!"

Satan and Bael turn to walk down the corridor, heading back toward the distant Warpgate.

"It's great to have you back, boss." Bael says. "Honestly, I was just talking to the girls from Shax's Hell about you. If I can somehow bring Shax back, we can reassemble the old band! Wouldn't that be..."

Bael pauses. He turns to the side and frowns.

"Boss?"

The Duke of Pain rubs his eyes. The Devil doesn't appear anywhere in sight, no matter where Bael looks.

"Eh? Boss? You playing hide and seek? Boss?"

Bael turns back and wanders down the corridors, becoming more and more confused by the second.

"What... where'd he go? He was just here!"

The Duke of Pain, once again, finds himself all alone.

His best friend, Satan, has vanished.

Part 343: Deception, Disgrace, Lying Face

Hell Harbor, at the Hidden Emperor meeting area.

Ose straightens her posture and stands upright. She smiles at the other Emperors and Dukes present, of which there are now more than fifty.

"So we are in agreement? I don't want to have to change these plans a fifteenth time. The hour grows late, and I need to start amassing forces before we invade."

Jahn, the Duke of Cuddles, frowns at Ose. "I still don't think a second invasion is a good idea. Even if all the Emperors attack, that Cherubiim alone handily dealt with us. And you say the Wordsmith doesn't actually possess Excalibur, but what if he has a weapon of similar strength?"

"Enough complaints from the Hell of Lust." Ose snaps. "Jason Hiro has no super-weapon. Like I told you before, he used his Wordsmithing to trick us. That is what he does. He may have mentally changed to become a bit more vicious, but he is not some unstoppable threat we need to fear. We won't give him enough time to rebuild, especially with his limited mana reserves. We'll dogpile onto him and destroy him before he can fight back. If we capture him, we'll solve the problem in the most efficient way. And if we kill him, we'll at least eliminate his threat."

"I still don't approve of this attack." Silvia, the Duke of Whips says. As another resident of the Hell of Lust, she voices her opposition to the invasion plan. "I'm not convinced the Wordsmith is 'faking' his power. And even if he is, I'm not convinced we could defeat a combination of him and the Cherubiim. You don't know for certain that the Cherubiim won't be able to regenerate and return sooner rather than later, especially with the Wordsmith's magic assisting it. It may be unlikely, a final-ditch move to defeat us quickly in the aftermath of Stormbringer, but I feel that the Cherubiim's appearance was merely a warning shot across our bow. We're taking too great a risk attacking the Wordsmith!"

The other Hidden Emperors shake their heads at Jahn and Silvia's opposition.

"Your Hell of Lust is truly pathetic." Maltus, the Second Ancient of the Orcs, says. "We must admire a Hell which possesses two times more Dukes than all the other Hells combined, but without any Emperors to guide you, you have fallen into degeneracy and fleshbag-loving. You are far too kind toward these undeserving inferiors."

"You cannot sit this battle out." Ose adds. "You were useless against the Archangels and the Cherubiim, that much is true. But no amount of quantity would have helped defeat an ancient monster like the Cherubiim. Attacking humanity is different. The Wordsmith is only one Hero. Even if his clone assists him, the two will not be our opponents. Dukes can make a huge difference when crushing human resistances. Losing out on more than seventy Dukes will put a large dent in our invasion force's strength."

Jahn and Silvia shoot a glance at each other.

"Well..." Silvia mutters, chewing her lip. "I... I suppose if we must..."

"Yes. You must." Ose says, narrowing her eyes. "Unlike the Hell of Isolation, your Hell has no Emperors to hand down orders. So, consider this my order. You will gather your troops and prepare to invade. I want billions, if not trillions of demons to descend on Tarus II. We must annihilate the humans and capture or kill their Wordsmiths. Only in this way can we finally save our species from annihilation."

"But what of the Volgrim?" Silvia protests. "And the Plague they're fighting? Don't you think-"

"No more complaints. I'm tired of listening." Ose says, snapping her fingers. "The meeting is adjourned. Everyone, pass down my orders to your Hells. Time is of the essence."

Given Ose's force of personality, and her much more intimidating presence while now owning Bael's body, she comes off sounding much more authoritative. Bael's formerly goofy expressions give way to a deadly seriousness that makes anyone think twice before contradicting him.

The two Dukes from the Hell of Lust shoot each other helpless looks before turning and walking away.

"It can't be helped." Jahn says, resting a hand on Silvia's shoulder. "Our Hell is too weak to resist. If Ose gets pissed at us, she can wipe us out without a fight. We should just go along with her orders."

Silvia purses her lips, but says nothing. A fierce light of determination enters her eyes as she and Jahn walk away from the table, heading toward the back of the hall, where Warpers from their Hell have begun the procedures to open tears in Hell Harbor's space back to their homeworld.

Ose, meanwhile, turns to Mephisto.

"Alright. Finally. I've no more time to dilly-dally. Mephisto, start amassing your undead. We'll need to sneak as many troops onto Tarus II as possible prior to our big attack. I'll be relying on your newly empowered stealth abilities for this mission."

The Emperor of Legions rises up to his full height, now nearly as tall as Ose herself.

"Kekeke. We will be sssure to sssupport you in thisss esssential endeavor, Ossse. Why bother worrying about old woundsss? We can sssimply wasssh that water under a bridge, yesss?"

Mephisto rubs his boney hands together, grinding their ossein in a manner most unpleasant.

"Of courssse, if thisss plan of yoursss failsss... then it would be a ssshame if the Wordsssmith were to ssslay you where you ssstand. He already killed Bael onccce, after all."

Ose rolls her eyes. "Bael's Balrog Form has a critical weakness. It gives up durability in exchange for power. The Wordsmith killed Bael because Bael allowed himself to be controlled by his emotions. I will not fall for such a trap. Now, if you don't mind, I'll be excusing myself."

Ose turns to Benjamin Brown and nods. The two of them depart, leaving Mephisto behind.

"Kekeke!" Mephisto chuckles, before turning to his newly empowered minions. "Gorn. You are a pawn mossst desssirable. And Lupusss, you will require sssome time to adjussst to your new body. Will you be able to wield Fenrir'sss powersss, or not? Only time will tell."

Lupus stretches her arms and legs.

"It's been a long time since I was in such a.. weak body. Fenrir's figure is far too tall and slender for my liking. I'll need to build up her muscles to make myself fight better. As for using soul-attacks... I'm not good at that sort of thing. I just like punching stuff until it breaks."

Gorn, still in his fiery bird-body, merely gives Mephisto a cold look.

"Now that I am under your control, I suppose I have lost my autonomy. What would you like me to do, oh, great and wise master?"

Mephisto grins, momentarily reveling in having two Emperors forced to submit to him, with one of them being the former leader of a Hidden Hell.

"Kss. You will sssave me time and effort. The two of you will return to your former domainsss and rally your troopsss. Lupusss, you will asssissst Krissstoff in gathering Dukesss, Baronsss, and Lordsss. Gorn, you will do the sssame. Asss for me, I will rally my necromancersss. We mussst ssset up forcesss all over Tarusss II before the invasssion beginsss."

Gorn nods. "You give the orders, now. I follow."

His simple acceptance of Mephisto's authority gives the Emperor of Legions great pleasure. Mephisto slithers away, fading into the underground while chuckling softly to himself.

After he leaves, Gorn, Lupus, and Zamiel remain behind.

Gorn smiles slightly, drawing Lupus's attention.

"Is something funny?" She asks. "Stop smiling. I've never seen you do that. It creeps me out."

Gorn's smile spreads a little further. "Oh, am I? It's hard to tell. I must just be in a good mood. Hmm. I will see you later, Lupus. For now, I'll deliver news back to my Hell."

He departs, leaving Lupus and Zamiel to stare at his back as he walks away.

"The heck was that about?" Zamiel asks. "Gorn seems to be a little too chipper for a guy who just died and got reanimated as someone else's slave. I can't imagine he'd be anything but pissed at a time like this."

Lupus shakes her head. "That Gorn has always been strange. Don't underestimate him. Even as a slave, I bet he's plotting ways to free himself."

She and Zamiel go their own ways, leaving the other Emperors behind.

Not far away, Kristoff and several Dukes from his Hell talk quietly, keeping their voices low.

"Frankly, I'm not a fan of going along with Ose's plan." Kristoff says. "But she makes good points. If we don't eliminate the Wordsmith while we still can, he'll soon overpower us. Let's just do as she says and get this over with."

"I'm coming with you." Lupus says, as she walks over. "Just don't get any ideas, Kristoff. I might be in Fenrir's body, but I'm not your wife."

Kristoff shoots a disgusted look at Fenrir, then shakes his head. "It's not your fault, Lupus. I won't blame you. I just hate that... my wife..."

"It's a real tragedy what happened." Lupus mutters. "But at least there's still a body. Not like my husband."

Kristoff's expression softens. "I'm sorry about Wolfram. He died honorably."

"Demons don't give a shit about honor." Lupus responds. "Let's get back to our Hell."

After they leave, Yardrat and Fae linger behind, quietly talking to one another.

"We didn't come out bad at all." Yardrat says, smiling slyly at Fae. "You almost ended up in Yama's clutches, but luckily you escaped. Not one Emperor from our Hell died. It seems the biggest losers in all of this were the Hells of Blood and Calamity. The Hell of Blood lost three Emperors in various ways, and Gorn's Hell will soon fall to pieces. I bet Mephisto will keep Gorn alive as a puppet to control the fifth Hell. And with Yumagi dead, Crow and the Orcs will be the only genuine leaders capable of standing up to the necromancer."

"I'll bet Auger is pretty pleased." Fae says. "But what about Ose's plan? Will he go along with it?"

Yardrat's smile turns vicious. "Oh, yes. For now. Auger thinks this invasion could be our ticket to supremacy over all Seven Hells, especially if things were to... go south. It would be a shame if Ose ended up hoisted by her own petard."

"Never liked that bitch," Fae says, "but she's so much more annoying now that she's gotten a taste of 'true power.' Oh, if only someone would come in and give her a good slap into the dirt, it would make my day. I'm even starting to miss Beelzebub."

"Let's head back home." Yardrat says, waving his hand to summon a portal. "Emperor Auger wishes to discuss strategy with us."

After they leave, only the members of the Fifth Hell remain behind. As the hell which previously boasted the most Emperors, one might still grant them that definition, despite losing Yumagi and having Gorn fall under the control of Mephisto.

Emperor Crow, Emperor Serena, and both of the Ancient Orcs greet Gorn with dismay in their eyes. Seeing their former leader, a mighty demon who seemed poised to take a stab at Auger's power-base, fall under the control of the First Hell, dims their hopes substantially.

"Gorn." Crow says, her feathers bristling at his undead eyes. "I'm sorry for what has happened. If I had been there, perhaps Michael might not have landed that killing blow."

Surprisingly, Gorn doesn't appear too aggrieved about his circumstances. As if taking his second lease on life in stride, he merely reaches up and pats Crow's shoulder.

"Don't you worry, Lady Crow. We've plenty of interesting events on our horizon. Only a fool would count out the Hell of Calamity. Don't forget, our founder was none other than Diablo, the Archdemon himself. It was because of his leadership that the other Hells only dared whisper behind our backs. I will not fail his legacy. When he re-awakens... hehe."

Gorn's light chuckle raises some eyebrows, especially among the two Orcs.

"Is something funny?" Huul asks, nursing a minor shoulder injury that hasn't yet fully healed. "If it weren't for the dead look in your eyes, this Ancient might think you hadn't even died. Your mood seems far too 'chipper' for my liking."

"What can I say?" Gorn asks. "Sometimes, returning from beyond the grave can open a man's eyes. Let us return to our world. We have much to discuss."

"Lover," Serena says, walking over to Gorn's side. "I am simply glad to count you among the living. Considering how badly the Hell of Blood has suffered, your fate could have proven much worse."

"Indeed, it could have." Gorn replies.

He and his group, including half a dozen Dukes, head over to a nearby Warper to return to their realm.

Not long after, they travel across space in an instant, arriving on their home world of Diabolus.

As the homeworld of the Fifth Hell of Calamity, Diabolus is a torturous rock made up chiefly of molten lava, toxic fumes, and little life-sustaining forces. On this world, only the strongest demons survive the intense gravity, more than double that of the ancient Earth, and the thin oxygen, which only replenishes thanks to several magical devices littered around the planet, built by famous Orc artisans.

Upon arriving, Gorn breathes in the toxic fumes and smiles.

"Mmm. Smells like home. I always hate leaving, but it does make returning all that much sweeter."

The huge increase in gravity doesn't affect anyone in Gorn's group. Having lived amidst such heavy gravity for so long, they barely even notice the strain. To them, it feels almost like a weighted blanket, giving them a feeling of comfort.

While most other Hells live on habitable worlds or in places that some might call 'pleasant,' the members of the Fifth Hell actually prefer the choked air and high temperatures of their hellish world. To them, living on a paradise-class planet would mean turning soft. Their ambitions lay far beyond those of the other Hells.

Gorn and his group arrive at the edge of a large city made from demonstone. No matter what storms ravage Diabolus, the fortified buildings inside weather all the planet's fury without suffering so much as a scratch. Huge walls stand erected around the central structures, a series of castles built for the many Emperors and Dukes and Barons that comprise Calamity's forces. On the outskirts of the city, but still within its walled border, the more humble but still somewhat extravagant abodes of many high-ranking Demon Lords also stand, mostly standing as symbols of their authority.

Many members of the Hell of Calamity live outside the capitol city of Diabolus, but all the highest ranked ones have a vacation home inside the capitol, useful for meetings or lounging around when they've nothing better to do.

Huul and Maltus take their leave, not bothering to care about what happens with Gorn or the others. They head off to the south, toward a distant portal leading to the other side of Diabolus, in the Orc Capitol of the world.

Gorn leads the rest of his group inside, wading through crowds of low-ranking Demon Grunts who all attend to various duties. Unlike the world of Sharmur, with its rich trade and industrial roots, Diabolus mainly deals in violence. Every day, across the planet, thousands of battles take place in fighting pits, arenas, and heavily fortified stadiums capable of withstanding the shocks unleashed by Barons and Dukes. As a mainstay of entertainment among the residents of Diabolus, few demons would dare to consider themselves pacifists, and not one would mention their thoughts publicly. Gorn's world is one built on violence and barbarism, and all his elites take pride in being the deadliest among their peers.

Gorn walks down his capitol's streets, ignoring the awe-filled gazes of his lessers. His striking appearance, that of a large, fiery bird, draws countless eyeballs. It's not often he wears a different 'face', and when he does, it always attracts envy from the peons.

"I wish I could be as powerful as Gorn!"

"Did you hear? Apparently Gorn died, and now he's become a pawn of Mephisto!"

"Mephisto? That guy's just a Duke. There's no way."

"I heard Mephisto got promoted to Emperor!"

"Seriously? You can't believe all the crap the First Hell says. Those guys are a bunch of weaklings!"

Emperor Serena glides along behind Gorn, her white dress and fairy-like appearance drawing just as many eyeballs as Gorn himself. She stares at her mate silently, evaluating his condition.

Deep in her soul, she comes to a realization.

Gorn doesn't appear worried in the slightest.

Even after losing his freedom and becoming a pawn to another Emperor, Gorn appears totally unmoved, as if he never lost anything at all. Perhaps Serena might normally chalk this feeling up to him taking things in stride, but his placidity goes well beyond any previous moments she's observed him fail or lose in battle. In all those cases, he became enraged beyond belief and nearly destroyed entire planets.

But his sheer calmness now makes her wonder if dying wasn't one of his master plans.

Serena silently shakes her head.

How could that be? Gorn isn't the type to deliberately let himself die.

But then again...

It does seem odd he wouldn't be able to dodge Michael's attack. Gorn has always been one of the most capable melee combatants among all the Hells. How could he fall in battle, even if to an Archangel, when that Archangel only possessed a mere construct-body?

The group of Emperors and Dukes keeps walking until they arrive inside the main castle, away from prying eyes.

One of Gorn's Dukes takes a step forward.

"Gorn. Would you like for me to call the elites here? So you can make an announcement?"

Gorn walks up to a throne sitting in the middle of the hall. He eases into it, settles down, and smiles.

"Let's hold off for now, Duke of Moonlight. While we still have a small audience, I'd like to... try something."

The dozen or so assembled demons raise their eyebrows. Crow, in particular, appears more than a little annoyed.

"Try something? What do you mean? Don't tell me Mephisto told you to attack us once we made it home?"

"No." Gorn says, his smile widening further. "I'm not so sure I could beat you in a battle, let alone all of you at the same time. Actually, I just felt that now was the perfect time to test a... hypothesis of mine."

Without any fanfare, Gorn motions with his right hand. He summons a tiny portal beside himself, and a mask appears, one that resembles his original self. He grabs onto his face and begins to tug, pulling off the mask known as Vermillion. As he pulls, dazzling light envelops his body, shrouding his figure in blinding radiance. Once he pulls off Vermillion, he then follows up by putting on the other mask, returning himself to his 'normal' form, that of a tall and muscular Demon Emperor.

Gorn cracks his neck as his transformation finalizes.

"Ahh. How about that? I was right. It worked."

Invisible question marks pop up over the heads of his fellow Emperors and Dukes.

"Huh? What worked?" Crow asked. "What are you on about?"

Gorn doesn't immediately answer. Instead, he holds up his Vermillion mask and gazes at it with a look of sadness.

"...Pity. I always liked this face."

A moment later, Gorn squeezes his hand shut, compressing the mask with all its strength, until it explodes and sprays magical dust all around the room, making the other Emperors flinch.

"Gorn!" Serena exclaims. "You... you destroyed your Vermillion face! Why would you do that?"

Gorn chuckles softly.

"Hehehe. That Mephisto. He's not as smart as he thinks. You should know me well enough, love. Why do you think I destroyed Vermillion? It has become worthless to me."

"Worthless?" Serena repeats. "I don't follow."

Crow stares at Gorn for thirty seconds, silently evaluating his actions. All at once, a spark appears in her eyes.

"Haha... hahaha! HAHAHAHA! There's no way... are you jesting, Gorn? Did you actually...?"

"Yes. I did." Gorn replies, exposing a toothy smile. "Mephisto didn't revive and enslave me. He enslaved Vermillion, one of my many disposable faces. Once I took Vermillion off, he lost all control over me. My Gorn face has a completely different soul imprint from Vermillion. I have regained my sovereignty!"

Gorn rises from his throne and spreads out his arms.

"Hahaha! The First Hell is truly full of fools! Mephisto never imagined there would be such a loophole to his powers, but I did, ages ago. His loss of control over Bael and Ose only confirmed my suspicions!"

Serena breathes a sigh of relief. She walks over and presses herself against Gorn, smiling up at him with her hollow eyes. "I am glad. I thought you had been lost to us. To me..."

Gorn tenderly caresses her chin. "Worry not, love. I am just as free as I have always been. Mephisto won't know that I've broken free of his shackles... not unless I tell him so."

A spark of evil appears in Gorn's eyes.

"Say. Wouldn't it be a shame if we didn't inform the First Hell of my newfound freedom? You never know when an 'accident' might befall Mephisto. His undead minions can be so clumsy."

Crow grins back at Gorn, a vicious and cruel light sparking in her eyes.

"I was worried I'd have to take care of this Hell in your absence. Now I can focus on restoring my ritual reserves. It's good to have you back, future First Emperor."

"It's good to be back." Gorn says with a laugh. "Now, if you'll all excuse me, I need to forge a duplicate of Vermillion. We can't have Mephisto growing wise to my deception, can we?"

"Indeed, we cannot," Serena says, kissing her mate gently. "I'll see you in our chambers later."

As the other demons depart and Gorn stays behind, the Emperor of Many Faces laughs uproariously.

"Oh, ho ho ho! The future is looking brighter every day!"

Part 344: Tarot Sect

Unlike most of the Seven Hells, members of the Second Hell of Lust do not live on any specified capitol world. Rather, their many assorted Dukes live on the distant reaches of Hell Harbor, while their lower-ranked members live right inside the Labyrinth, where they have ready access to humans and other demons alike.

Consisting almost entirely of succubi, incubi, and a handful of Satyrs, the Hell of Lust is a surprisingly homogenous organization. They do not pay attention to the battles and power struggles waged by the other Hells, but instead cavort sexually with their many human followers and servants. Unlike the other immortal demons comprising the Seven Hells, succubi and incubi must absorb small amounts of life energy through intercourse to sustain their existences, right up until they become Dukes and Emperors. The higher a sex-fiend's power rating, the less energy they must consume overall.

In addition, they possess another surprising advantage. While other Hells must evolve and mutate into higher ranks by consuming the souls of humans and other beings, succubi and incubi evolve simply by consuming the sexual essence and vitality of other species. This incredible ability allows them to rise through the ranks without ever harming another soul, but it comes at a price.

No member of the Hell of Lust can reach the rank of Emperor. Even Belial and Nerissa, two famous succubi from the Ancient Era, only reached their levels through the power of a dragon. Others of their kind can only reach an impenetrable barrier at the rank of Duke, one which they can never surpass. The amount of life energy needed to evolve to Emperor becomes too vast, too unbridgeable of a gap, to the point that even if they start consuming souls, their bodies will still never evolve to the next rank.

Thanks to this sad fact, Duke Silvia and her mate, Jahn, end up trapped at the rank of Duke, living in a Hell looked down on by their competitors in the other Hells. As such, they avoid conflict and instead use their bodies to curry favor with the other Hells, avoiding the rat-race of power entirely.

Even so, every member of the Hell of Lust can't help but feel that, in the end, they have become nothing more than disposable pawns, incapable of guiding their own future. Any Emperor from any other Hell could walk all over them. Despite being able to raise vast numbers of succubi and incubi to the ranks of Baron and Duke, the lack of Emperors among their kind leaves them defenseless and easy to bully.

As Silvia and Jahn ride atop a magical flying implement, a disc-shaped demonstone platform that races across the horizon, they both think the same thought, in unison.

If only Belial were still here.

As the founder of the Hell of Lust, the former Second Emperor still commands a lot of respect among her fellow sex-fiends. Many of them deeply wish she would return to guide and protect them once again, but alas, they know that she doesn't care at all for the trappings of power. Responsibility and leadership are not the thoughts which occupy her mind, and as such, she all but ignores the Second Hell.

We could have our own capitol world, if only Belial were to put her foot down. Silvia thinks. I wish I could speak to her again.

The two Dukes gaze down upon Hell Harbor's shattered and obliterated landscape, grimacing at the sheer amount of death and destruction. Entire villages and cities of demons lay in smoking ruins, with survivors scattered about haphazardly. Debris from the Volgrim ships continue to rain down upon Hell Harbor's surface, sparking more wildfires and filling the sky with ash.

"Those Archangels bent us over savagely." Jahn mutters, his dreamy tone intoxicating to females of other species. "I do hope our boys and girls weren't hurt too bad."

"We probably fared worse than all the other Hells, since our top members are all concentrated here." Silvia responds. "Don't be too shocked if we get back and..."

She trails off, leaving the implication hanging.

"Right." Jahn simply mutters.

Silvia's black dominatrix outfit, her tall figure, and her long black eyelashes give her an aura of authority. Contrasted with Jahn's soft, pretty-boy body, his delicate satin clothes, and his golden eyeliner, the two of them appear like a master and servant, in some sort of odd power-dynamic relationship.

However, the truth is, the two of them are equals. Their love for each other, while deep, is also surprisingly casual. Having been on countless flings with other demons over the millennia, neither one acts particularly possessive toward the other, though they do enjoy their shared time, having lived similar lives to one another.

Jahn gently bats his eyes while gazing at the obliterated world beneath the two of them.

"This conflict isn't drawing to a conclusion." Jahn says, his words quiet and measured. "It has hardly even begun. Ose's actions have continued to escalate the war, time and time again. Imagine if she had entertained the Wordsmith's offer, prior to Stormbringer. He thought our species could live together in harmony."

"It was a good offer." Silvia mutters. "Too good. That's why Ose rejected it. If demonkind's power growth decouples from our need for souls, it will create an era of upheaval. This will ultimately benefit demonkind and humanity both, but the humans will receive a disproportionate amount of the gains. With no predators to feast on and control them, the human population will explode, eventually surpassing our own. Broodmothers simply cannot keep up with the ridiculous breeding speed of fleshbag society."

"Is that true, I wonder?" Jahn asks.

"I don't see why not." Silvia replies, turning to look at him. "Unless you think differently."

"Don't you think the fate of our species is too pathetic?" Jahn asks. "We allow ourselves to remain enslaved to the dynamic established by Satan, Lucifer, and all the leaders of the Old Guard. But how many of them still remain? Only a handful. If we were to forge a new path with the Wordsmith, we could turn our eyes toward our true enemies, those monsters lurking in the distant reaches of the Milky Way. Not just the 'Plague,' but the Volgrim as well."

Jahn's upper lip twitches. He balls up both his hands into fists and crosses his arms in a huff.

"They destroyed Earth... rendered it inhospitable to life for the rest of eternity. That wasn't just any mudball. It was our mudball. Our home. How shortsighted have we become that our people are content to live inside a pitch-black Labyrinth, or spread across multiple inferior worlds? The new generations don't understand how badly they've been robbed, and we lost our memories, so we weren't able to adequately inform them. But now, that has changed. We could..."

He pauses, as if becoming lost in thought.

Silvia shoots Jahn a suspicious glance.

"We could, what, Jahn? Make friends with the Wordsmith? Cozy up to him?"

"Perhaps." Jahn affirms. "Belial is our founder. We have not personally harmed the Wordsmith, nor his people. But if we join Ose in enacting her plan, we will irreparably damage our relationship with him. We will lose all chance at a peaceful reconciliation."

"If Ose's plan works, the Wordsmith will become demonkind's slave." Silvia counters. "At that point, our 'relationship' won't matter. He will benefit us, and only us."

"But are you content with that conclusion?" Jahn asks, meeting her gaze. "I know you hold no genuine hatred for humans, all the same as myself. Must we simply accept Ose's demands?"

"...You are playing with fire." Silvia warns. "Ose is a shrewd woman. If your thoughts were to reach her in any way, she would execute you without mercy. Nobody would protect you, and neither would I be able to do so."

Jahn stares at Silvia for a moment. He takes a step closer to her side, reaches out his arm, and loops it around hers.

"Most likely. But... perhaps it is time we admit the truth. Humans are not our enemies. We and the Hell of Isolation aren't so different. We both understand that coexistence with humanity is possible, and maybe even preferable. Before, we had the excuse of the greater majority of demons needing to consume human souls to evolve... but if that isn't the case any longer, then it is potentially time we pursue a new path for our people. Someone has to make the first stand. Why not us?"

As Jahn's hungry eyes fall on Silvia, she looks away and sighs.

"This is why the Volgrim demanded we seal our memories. Before the mind-wipes, you were eager to overturn the Old Order. Once again, that hunger has returned."

She pauses.

"...But you're not wrong. I, too, tire of the race to the bottom."

Jahn loops his fingers through Silvia's, cozying up to her while looking up at her face.

"The time for old fears is over. The Wordsmith is our chance at a new tomorrow, Silvia."

"Indeed, he is." She whispers.

On the distant world of Diabolus, ruled by the Hell of Calamity.

A demon Baron dressed in black leather pants and a jacket, with a hood pulled over her head, walks with precise intentions toward a mountain base. Winds filled with corrosive gasses attempt to buffet her body, but a shield of fire revolves around her, protecting her from the acrid elements. Several beads of light shimmer on her forehead, the indicators of powerful spells staying active to shield her from Diabolus's elements.

The demoness flickers forward, skipping pass rivers of acid. She teleports a few dozen feet at a time, sometimes walking, sometimes running, and sometimes jumping toward her end destination.

She flickers toward a path leading up the mountain and begins the arduous climb up one of three bluffs, all of them more than five thousand feet tall. This middle mountain, known as Player's Peak, leads to a destination few bother to visit, despite who it belongs to, an Emperor of some previous level of fame and infamy.

The demoness spends more than an hour hiking the path winding up the mountain toward a spot near its middle. Ordinarily, she would simply fly to her destination, but powerful restriction magic hangs in the air, serving as a deterrent for those who would try to skip the tedium.

She passes by several other demons along the way. Surprisingly, not one of them exceeds the rank of Baron. They all look at her and nod, but otherwise exchange no words.

Eventually, she reaches a passage leading deep into the mountain. A pair of female Barons stand outside, eying her as she approaches.

"Mara. You're finally back." Says one of the Barons, a female with blood-red hair, bewitching eyes, and a body that would tempt any man to sin. Like Mara, she wears a protective layer of leather clothing to combat the elements.

"Hello, Xena." Mara says, pulling back her hood to reveal her face. "Is he awake?"

"Naturally. He has anticipated your coming, though he expected you hours ago." Xena, the Baron of Trickery, replies.

"After what happened on Hell Harbor, returning to Diabolus took me longer than I anticipated." Mara says with a shrug. "I'll head in, now."

"Don't keep the Master waiting." Xena says, returning to her guard duties.

Mara walks past the two guards, stepping into a brightly lit underground cave, one with hundreds of extravagant crystals embedded in the ceiling to light her way.

This cave, belonging to the Tarot Sect, is part of a massive organization based on Diabolus which the other Hells take care not to offend. Despite possessing a seemingly 'weak' foundation of zero Dukes and only one Emperor, the Tarot Sect punches far, far above its weight class. The powers of Tarot Cards grant all its members firepower and killing potential at the top of Baron fighting levels, and even sometimes into the ranks of Duke.

Mara strides down several elaborately carved hallways, past multitudes of beautiful and handsome Barons of both sexes, up stairs and down stairs, traveling into the heart of the sect's interior.

Eventually, she reaches an area of overwhelming extravagance, with opulent golden chandeliers hanging from the ceiling, marble-tiled floors and walls, and gems of all different colors embedded in every single outcropping and item that sticks out of any surface. So ritzy and over-designed is the place, that if anyone were to step inside for the first time, they would certainly feel a sense of inferiority, followed by annoyance at whoever thought such a tacky display of wealth would make them intimidating.

The moment Mara enters, a powerful spiritual aura locks onto her position.

"Mara. MARAAAA! Finally. Cough, cough. You're back."

A male voice speaks from an upper platform, one with a pair of stairs on either side leading up to his position. Mara raises her eyes, but doesn't see beyond the banister on the second floor leading to him. His voice, best described as 'corpulent,' makes him sound stifled and choked by fat.

Indeed, as Mara climbs the stairs, she comes face to face with a morbidly obese demon sitting in a huge chair with a pair of pretty female Barons by his side, waiting on him hand and foot. Two huge horns stick out of his head, those of an Emperor. His body, weighing at least three quarters of a ton, appears immovable, grotesque, and utterly unattractive at every level. Layers and rolls of fat spill off his figure, covered only by loose-fitting robes.

The balding Emperor squints at Mara as she appears. His face appears somewhat rotted, as if maggots have infested his flesh for centuries. The sight doesn't bother Mara, though, given the number of times she has spoken to him over the millennia.

"Cough, cough! Mara! Tell me... did Yumagi die a death worth admiring? What say the other Emperors regarding his fall?"

Mara walks up to the hideous, blobular demon, drops to one knee, bows her head, and presses her fist against the floor.

"They suspected nothing. Yumagi's fall was both glorious and memorable."

"Pah! Kuhak, pah!"

The flabby Emperor coughs several times, spraying spittle in Mara's direction. His two Baron servants quickly reach over and clean his face with towels. He remains silent for a moment afterward, then raises a hand with great effort.

"Cough. You two, leave us. I must talk with the leader of my Tarot Sect in private!"

The two Barons nod, turn around, and leave Mara behind with her master.

After they depart, Mara rises to her feet.

"...Master Yumagi. I still do not understand. Why would you fake your death? What purpose do your actions serve?"

The Glyphmancer smiles widely, exposing his teeth.

"Pahaha... those fools in the other Hells- COUGH, COUGH! Those fools care only about their own gains. Sooner or later, they would have pulled us into their dispute. I have no interest in making an enemy of the Wordsmith. Better to use a False Body spell to fake my death and trick those oblivious idiots! With me gone, they won't bother with my Tarot Sect. Barons will be of little use in battling the Wordsmith."

Emperor Yumagi, still alive despite his supposed 'death' at the claws of the Cherubiim, absentmindedly fiddles with an object attached to a chain placed upon his neck. The palm-sized piece of jewelry appears quite eye-catching, given how it looks to be an upside-down golden pyramid with one eye on each of its four sides.

The simple-looking piece of jewelry bounces about between his fingers while he fondles it.

"Cough! Now, then, Mara! You have done well. I want you to announce publicly that the Tarot Sect will be closing its doors while we decide on a new leader. Let the other Hells think I've died! Those brats can fight their own wars! In the meantime, we must continue accumulating resources. I must find the correct combination if I am to craft the card that will restore myself to my former glory!"

Mara nods. "Of course, Emperor Yumagi."

She falls silent for a few moments, yet lingers in the same spot, making the obese Emperor glance at her again.

"Eh? Are you waiting for something? Oh, ho ho! Don't tell me. You are still waiting for your merits, hmm?"

Mara nods excitedly. "Yes, yes! I hope I have contributed well to your glorious cause, Emperor Yumagi! I helped fool the other Emperors into thinking you had died. I also fought against the Wordsmith's troops and gained valuable intelligence for you."

"Indeed! This old master will not be stingy in his rewards." Yumagi says. He leans slightly toward Mara and holds out his flab-covered hand. "Bring me your neck."

Mara hesitates for a moment before stepping toward him. She drops to her knees obediently and brings her face closer, while Yumagi reaches out and wraps his hands around her throat. He squeezes only a little, but even so, the strength of an Emperor proves overwhelming. Magic pulses from his palm into Mara's soul while he conducts a sweep of her spirituality.

"Hmph! Look at how many cards you've lost, recently! Mara, Mara! How many times must I tell you? You cannot simply throw away cards through summons and transformations! Do you think these cards grow on trees? I have to expend my vitality to create them! Are you trying to kill this old ancestor?"

A look of pain crosses Mara's face as Yumagi squeezes her throat tighter. Like a kitten held in place by the back of its fur, she can only stare into her master's eyes and grit her teeth while her body loses its ability to fight back.

"Yes... this frail servant... knows she has not met... your expectations..."

"Hmph! At least you know your place!" Yumagi grunts. "Here. I will grant you... one platinum aspect, three golden ones, and five silver. You had better not throw them away again! Especially the platinum one! You cannot imagine the price I pay to make just a single one!"

Yumagi coughs a few times, then transfers magical power through the connection of his palm and Mara's throat. When he releases the Baron of Games, she crumples to the floor, convulsing for several minutes while the pain of adaptation courses through her veins.

The Glyphmancer snorts. "I will allocate you a further seven hundred and thirteen Merits! Any more, and the others will think I'm showing you favoritism!"

Shakily, Mara rises to her feet and performs a clumsy bow.

"Th-thank you, Master Yumagi. This servant will take her leave, now."

"Make sure you get me more resources!" Yumagi snaps. "I want to see more eggs of mighty monsters, but with their spiritual essences INTACT. The quality of stock your juniors have given me lately is simply inadequate!"

Mara nods. "Yes. Yes, of course, Master Yumagi."

Still trembling, she stumbles away from Yumagi and departs the room, leaving the Glyphmancer by himself.

After the departure of his vaunted Sect Leader, Yumagi continues to play with the pyramid hanging from his neck-chain. He grins widely and chuckles.

"Hehe... these foolish children. They are all so willing to humor an old demon, so long as it grants them a slice of power. They are but pawns to my ambition... cough, cough!"

Yumagi bursts into a violent coughing fit, one much more severe than those he suffered before. After a half-minute of choking on his own saliva, he settles back down and sighs.

"Tch. This cursed artifact. Ptah, you really damned me, didn't you? My greedy nature couldn't resist the pull of controlling a Hero's power... ah, but I've almost fully tamed your soul. I just need to find the last ingredients... perhaps then, I will wield all your strength as my own."

The slovenly Emperor curls his lip up into a sneer.

"Wordsmith. Pah! Your power is incredible, but you are far from the only being who can wield godlike power. Compared to the ancient Ptah, you are only a little better. Wait until I master this relic... then I will come for you, as well. You will wish you had died, rather than awakened my greed, Hero. I will make you MINE!"

As his servants return, Yumagi unleashes a violent laugh at the ceiling, cackling at the thought of someday enslaving the Wordsmith for his own purposes.

He is far from the only being with such thoughts…

Part 345: Raphael's Revelation

An alarm blares inside the Labyrinth Core. Hundreds of humans, monsters, and demons jump into action, rushing to activate their T-REX armor and take up defensive positions while aiming at the newly-rebuilt double doors leading out of the Core. Powerful restriction magic coats the walls, making it impossible for Mephisto to slither around and pop in and out like he did during the Stormbringer invasion, and the walls themselves have been heavily reinforced with Wordsmithing. Not even a nuclear bomb could destroy the Core to the same extent the demons did during Stormbringer's first phase.

Even so, every human grimaces as they listen to Centurion's words.

"DEMON DUKE ENERGY SIGNATURE DETECTED. CURRENTLY EN-ROUTE TO THE LABYRINTH CORE. ALL PERSONNEL, ASSUME DEFENSIVE POSITIONS! THIS IS NOT A DRILL!"

Moments later, Jason Hiro teleports into the Core, having had a magical beacon alert him to Centurion's warning. With the Wordsmith in their midst, everyone breathes a collective sigh of relief, especially due to his calm posture.

"There's no need to be afraid." Jason says, transmitting his words to the headsets of all the other soldiers. "It's not an enemy."

Minutes pass as Centurion's warning grows more dire.

"DEMON DUKE SIGNATURE HAS CROSSED DEFENSIVE LINE BETA."

"DEMON DUKE SIGNATURE HAS CROSSED DEFENSIVE LINE ALPHA."

"DEMON DUKE SIGNATURE HAS REACHED THE IMMEDIATE EXTERIOR OF THE CORE. TAKE COVER!"

Jason watches and waits. A moment later, Archangel Uriel casually steps through the gap in the Labyrinth doors, still holding control of Barbatos's body.

"Jason Hiro." She says, her masculine voice no different from the Duke of Steel. "My apologies. Not even Raphael was able to break through the spatial barrier on Tarus II. Thou hath reinforced it well."

"A necessary measure." Jason says, holding up a hand to signal his subordinates. They visibly relax and lower their weapons, returning the Core to green alert levels. "I hear the three of you had a bit of fun on Hell Harbor."

Uriel and Jason walk up to each other, casually examining different aspects of themselves. Uriel notices how different the Core appears compared to just a few days before, when she left. Already, numerous fortifications have been put in place, making it much more difficult to assault than at any point in the past. As for Jason, he examines her body to see if she's suffered any serious injuries, but to his surprise, she appears completely fine.

"We succeeded, and we failed." Uriel says. "We slew several Demon Emperors. Three from the Hell of Blood. Two from the Hell of Calamity. Unfortunately, some have already revived under Mephisto's employ."

"I hear Ose is back, too." Jason says. "Damn demons. They never just stay dead."

"Regarding Ose... and other matters..." Uriel says, before glancing around. "Let us travel somewhere more private."

"Sure."

Jason utters a Word of Power, returning himself and Uriel to the world of Tarus II. They arrive atop a tower being constructed inside the same crater left behind by Beelzebub's detonation. While the tower's exterior appears fully finished, its interior still has much work to be done.

Standing five hundred feet tall, the replica of the Lazarus Tower starts off wide at its base, but tapers upward into a flat top with four upright 'points' on each corner, aimed at the sky. Its white, marble-like exterior makes it appear flashy, like a beacon on the horizon. It sticks out compared to the ramshackle houses and structures springing up all over the formerly ruined city. With so many parts of the Fortress of Retribution having suffered total annihilation, a lot of room appears for new interpretations of how the city should look.

Jason doesn't tell Uriel what the structure is, but she immediately recognizes it. Or, perhaps, her brother does and informs her.

"This is a recreation of the Lazarus Tower." Uriel says. "Why make another one? And art thou even capable of replicating all its effects?"

"Not all of them." Jason says. "But the important ones. It's close to completion. Once we turn it on, all the errant human souls in the universe will fall under humanity's control. I don't have the ability to do the same for monster, demon, other other types of souls... but humans are enough."

Uriel gazes at the Hero's face.

"I am sorry about thy friend, Monster King Kar."

"He lived a good life..." Jason mutters. "I'm not done saving him. I'll keep trying, no matter the cost."

He pauses for a moment before changing the topic.

"What were you going to say about Ose?"

"Art thou aware of Ose's new... circumstances?" Uriel asks.

The Wordsmith shrugs. "Nope. Feel free to elaborate."

Uriel touches Raphael and Michael's rings. A moment later, she conjures a pair of construct bodies, this time deliberately modeling them to look like their original selves, rather than generic male and female constructs. Those forms were only intended to fool the demons, after all.

Raphael gazes around the Fortress of Retribution, smiling as he observes the humans' rebuilding efforts.

"Ose and Bael have traded bodies." Raphael says. "This has resulted in a complete loss of power for Bael. His talents lay not in the arts of magic, but in his previously formidable strength and defenses. He is a stupid, dull-headed simpleton. When souls and bodies exchange with one another, verily, they often gain one another's powers in addition to their own. A certain degree of compatibility is required, but 'tis otherwise an established fact of life."

"However," Raphael continues, "while Bael has completely lost all power and become nothing more than a training dummy for stronger entities, the same is not true of Ose. She hath obtained Bael's invincible body, in addition to her already formidable intellect and lightning-based powers."

Raphael goes on to explain what happened on Hell Harbor, finally enlightening the Wordsmith as to all the intricacies he missed out on from his talks with the Volgrim.

"Damn..." Jason mutters. "Ose got a hell of a power-up. She defeated the Cherubiim, despite only possessing the power of a Duke."

"She will soon advance to the rank of Emperor." Raphael warns the Wordsmith. "This... Lazarus Tower... t'would be quite inconvenient for her if thou were to drastically accelerate its construction. I shall assist thee."

"Thanks. Phoebe can definitely use the help." Jason says. "By the way... considering you fought against the Emperors a few days ago, what took you so long to come back? Were you off killing other Emperors?"

For a brief moment, a look of fear appears in the eyes of Uriel and Michael. They look at their brother, waiting with bated breath to see what he has to say.

"We... took a detour." Raphael says, speaking slowly. "I wished to visit Earth. To see what it had become. And also... I wished to search for a number of other things."

His expression turns ugly.

"Jason Hiro. I went back to Earth in the hopes of accessing Heaven. Its temporal coordinates tie it to thy homeworld's position. It surrounds Earth, and accessing it requires one to stand upon the planet's surface. Yet, no matter how I tried, I was unable to do so."

With a heavy sigh, Raphael shakes his head.

"I am afraid that... Heaven is gone. The Volgrim destroyed it."

"They did?" Jason asks. "Damn. How would they even do that? Were they able to access Heaven during the Energy Wars?"

"I thought not, originally." Raphael replies. "But considering how high-level Psions can manipulate space, and even time, 'tis likely they located and annihilated Heaven in its entirety."

Michael steps forward. "No. There is another possibility, brother."

Raphael glances at him, then nods.

"Aye. There is another. The Volgrim may have stolen away Heaven to use it for their own purposes. Heaven was rich in life energy, siphoned away in small amounts from every creature on Earth."

"Stolen away?" Jason repeats. "How would they even do that?"

"By unhitching Heaven's temporal anchor from Earth, the Volgrim could have moved it from Earth to another location." Uriel replies. "Perhaps Volgarius. Perhaps elsewhere.

As long as they anchor Heaven to a world rich in life, it would continue to sustain itself. Raphael originally created Heaven thinking the Archangels might someday need to move it away from Earth, should the alliance between Titans and Angels fail."

"So Archangels can move Heaven through space?" Jason asks. "Does that mean if we figure out where Heaven is, one of you can latch onto it and move it somewhere else? Perhaps Tarus II?"

"Aye. Uriel's body may be that of a demon, but her soul is still connected to Heaven." Raphael says. "She can move it to a secure location, but that is assuming it wasn't destroyed, and that we can find it. Based upon my observations of thy power, thou art incapable of searching for Heaven's location, unless I am wrong...?"

Jason shakes his head. "I won't be of much help. My 'Locate' ability can only hunt for souls, not objects or places. If the Volgrim have taken Heaven for themselves, what use might they have for it?"

"Assuming they uncovered a way to manipulate its life energy," Raphael says, "they could perform experiments, mutate lower life forms into higher ones, or do other sorts of things. But, that is not the only news I bring. The next bit of news..."

Raphael pauses. This time, his expression becomes hideous. A look of disgust and fear spreads across his face and body, making him visibly shiver.

"The... the Cosmic Realm..." Raphael mutters. "I... I accessed it... it was..."

Jason frowns deeply. "What happened to the Cosmic Realm? Was it stolen too? Or destroyed?"

"WORSE!" Raphael barks. "Far, far worse! It still exists, but it has become... corrupted! Vile!"

Michael and Uriel both look away from their brother.

"Monsters." Michael says. "It was infested with... strange creatures. Terrifying monstrosities."

"We nearly died trying to escape." Uriel says. "The light of Creation no longer shines in the Cosmic Realm. Instead..."

"Somehow, monsters have stolen control of the Cosmic Realm!" Raphael roars. "My fallen brothers and sisters... gone! Their souls, extinguished! In their place, creatures roam with mottled, mossy skin, dead eyes, and soulless gaits!"

"We weren't sure what they were at first." Michael says, his tone heavy. "But after we escaped, we took time to dwell on what we had seen."

All three Archangels fall silent.

Several seconds pass, as none of them with to say the truth they have uncovered.

"Those monsters..." Raphael whispers. "They were the Plague."

"The same Plague the Volgrim are fighting." Uriel adds. "They have overtaken the Cosmic Realm. They have infested the galaxy. And before long, they will move inward, to kill us all."

Jason shudders. "The Plague have taken over the Cosmic Realm? Do the Volgrim know about this?! And how did they even make it there?"

Raphael sighs.

"Haah... the Cosmic Realm is different from Heaven, yet similar. Heaven once enveloped Earth. 'Twas a planet-sized realm folded within another dimension, anchored to a celestial body. At the time of its creation, 'twas all I and the other Archangels could make, with what remained of our cosmic power. But the Cosmic Realm is different. I personally forged it at the height of my power."

Raphael shoots a meaningful look at the Wordsmith.

"Much like how the Labyrinth is a massive, interconnected and living organism folded within the Milky Way's space, the Cosmic Realm sits one realm further. It envelops our entire galaxy! If one were to know of its location, and if they were to possess a high-level understanding of temporal and quantum mechanics, they might just divine a method of entry."

"I see." Jason says. "That makes sense. Since the Cosmic Realm envelops the Milky Way, anyone can access it from anywhere. They just need, like, a password, or something. But, wouldn't that leave only..."

"The Psions." Uriel says, her voice dripping with hostility. "From what little we hath gleaned regarding the Plague, 'tis claimed to be a scourge borne from a Volgrim science facility. Knowing this, tis' possible the Plague has evolved enough to tear through the barriers to the Cosmic Realm, or... perhaps the Psions planted it there themselves."

"Regarding the Plague," Michael says, "I am surprised thou knoweth its existence, Wordsmith."

"Marie told me a little about it." Jason says. "And while you were gone, I had some Volgrim pay me a visit."

He quickly tells the Archangels about Sangin Kordonis, his visit, and the words they exchanged.

This new information gives the Archangels more to work off. They glance at one another, exchanging insights wordlessly through their shared soul-links.

"The Plague is indeed more serious than we expected." Raphael murmurs. "What we saw in the Cosmic Realm... it chilled me to my core."

"Can I see for myself?" Jason asks. "I want to know what I'm up against."

"NO!" Raphael exclaims. "Step not into the Cosmic Realm! Verily, we entered its embrace for but thirty seconds before an uncountable number of horrifying monsters attacked from all sides!"

"They were powerful. Durable. Unkillable, even." Michael says, his eyes losing focus as he remembers the battle they fought. "My sword struck their skin, but glanced off as if impacting the hardest demonstone armor ever forged. What few cuts I landed drew no blood."

"Their bodies were humanoid, bipedal." Uriel recalls. "As best as we could tell, they were... reanimated. Perhaps from death, perhaps not. Their movements were coordinated, yet instinctual. They fought without fear. They thirsted for my flesh. The very air shook with their hunger."

"We lasted not a minute before escaping in a panic!" Raphael says. "Whatever actions thou taketh, step NOT into the Cosmic Realm! And believe nothing the Volgrim say! Those lying bastards unleashed these hellish monsters onto the universe. Their ignorance will be the death of all of us!"

"It's like a famous man once said." Jason muses. "They were trying so hard to see if they could, they didn't ask if they should."

"Strength, speed, and stamina rivaling the mightiest Demon Emperors." Uriel says. "Lacking intelligence, but still possessing enough thought to know when and where to find their next meal. Make no mistake, Wordsmith. As thou art now, thou art far from an opponent to this so-called 'Plague.' The Volgrim hope that thou cans't assist them in destroying it, but they intend only to use and discard thee once thy existence has served its purpose."

Jason and his mind-wife exchange thoughts regarding what the angels have told them.

He meets Raphael's gaze once again.

"You said before the Demon Emperors were having a meeting on Hell Harbor. Any idea as to the reasons why?"

"Indeed. I gleaned some insights into their future plans." Raphael affirms. "They fear thee, Wordsmith. Not enough to avoid thee, but enough to wish to exterminate thy existence, or capture thee. Before, during Stormbringer, Ose wished to capture thyself and thy clone for her own purposes, but now, she must accept a deal that benefits demonkind more than herself. All of the Hidden Emperors will join together and launch an assault on thy world. I know not when they will take this action, but logic dictates it must happen soon. They are likely worried thou shalt build defenses no invasion force can overcome."

Despite Raphael's dire prediction, Jason appears unmoved.

"Mmm. If they think they'll be able to catch me offguard, they have another thing coming. Thanks for the heads-up, but I'm already working on a solution. The Volgrim showing up scared some sense into me."

Jason walks over to the edge of the tower and gestures toward the west.

"I've encapsulated the entire Fortress of Retribution in transparent crystal. It doesn't only cover the entire city's upper area, but also its lower sections. I reinforced it a hundred times over, making it harder than the hardest demonstone. I daresay it may even be comparable to that material the Warpgates are made of, Living Moldanium."

He sighs.

"There's one other thing. Ahh... I'd like to show you, since you weren't available when I rescued Hope. We... picked up someone from Gressil's dungeon. I think you might know them."

Raphael raises an eyebrow. "And who might this mysterious person be?"

"Well. That's the thing." Jason says. "She's not very talkative. She was one of Gressil's prisoners since... well, since the end of the Energy Wars, it would seem. He performed all sorts of heinous acts on her... so she's understandably quiet, tight-lipped, and traumatized. I'd love it if she could see some friendly faces... but there's no way I'm bringing you to her with Uriel looking like... that."

He gestures to Uriel's body, that of Barbatos's armored figure, and raises his eyebrows as if to imply, I'm sure you know what I mean.

However, the angels don't quite pick up on the meaning behind his words.

"This body is a weapon." Uriel says. "I do not love it. I do not cherish it. I simply use it to execute the Creator's retribution."

"Fair enough. But, we're still going to need to make you not so traumatizing to the poor girl." Jason says. "Give me a minute. Transform. Reshape. Purify..."

Jason spends the next few minutes completely reshaping Uriel's body, transforming her from the specter of a cold-blooded Demon Duke to that of her original self. He shifts her appearance into a facsimile of her original body, including her wings, her untarnished skin, and her ruby-red dress.

For several minutes afterward, Uriel stares at her arms in shock. With Barbatos's armor removed, and his demonic aura temporarily purified to resemble that of an Archangel, Uriel can't help but feel as if she has been given a new lease on life.

The Archangel of Retribution stares at herself numbly. Jason summons a mirror so she can look at herself, and to his surprise, a few tears well up in her eyes, then slide down her cheeks.

"I... I never thought... I would someday..."

Raphael and Michael smile warmly, finally glad to see their sister looking as she should. Not as a corrupted demon, but as the pure and righteous figure of an Archangel.

"I... knew what you looked like from Solomon's visions." Jason explains. "But, I'm sorry, your aura can only temporarily resemble your original self. In the end, you're still in a Demon Duke's body. Perhaps..."

Jason pauses.

"...Perhaps there might be some way I can put all of you into real bodies. Unfortunately, it's not as simple as merely transferring your souls into flesh-vessels."

Raphael nods. "I remember thy experiments well. Bodies lacking naturalized life energy tend to fall apart after a time. Thou shalt have to nurture them carefully over a period of a few years before they might become suitable for my brother, my sister, and I."

"They won't be the same as your original bodies, either." Jason cautions. "Sure, they would be genuine angelic bodies, but they just wouldn't have the same strength as you once boasted in the Ancient Era, or the Primordial Era. They'll just be... relatively strong. Stronger than an average human, to be fair."

"An Archangel's might comes not from their body, but their soul." Michael declares. "Though, in my case, if my body is unable to keep up with my Omni-Perception, my legendary blade techniques will fail to impress."

"I guess you'll have to start training, then." Jason says with a smile. "Now, then. Uriel, Raphael, Michael. Are you ready to meet an old friend?"

Uriel nods. "Yes. Who?"

She quickly grows accustomed to her 'new' body, though not even the stoic Archangel of Retribution can hide the happiness in her eyes at this sudden and unexpected blessing. Even her voice returns to its original cadence, making her feel as if she has been totally reborn.

"I'll show you all, now." Jason says.

He utters a Word of Power, and all three of the Archangels vanish from atop the Lazarus Tower to arrive in front of a small house.

The moment they appear, the Archangels sweep their senses around and turn toward the house.

"...What? I sense... angelic energy!" Michael gasps. "'Tis faint, but discernable!"

Jason nods. He opens the door, and leads them inside, where they find a pair of angel women, one with red hair, and one with white. The white-haired woman sits on the floor in a corner, while the red-haired one sits beside her, a hand resting on her shoulder.

Both of them raise their heads to look at the guests as they walk in.

Raphael stops halfway through the door. His body seizes up, and he gasps a few incredulous words.

"Im-impossible! The Daughter... of Heaven?!"

Part 346: Heaven's Daughter

Raphael, Uriel, and Michael all stare in absolute shock at the woman curled up in the corner of the room, her arms wrapped around her legs. Cassiel, apparently known as Heaven's Daughter, blinks her watery eyes as her gaze flicks between the three Archangels, yet she says nothing. Instead, a look of deep shame appears on her face. She lowers her head again, burying her face into her knees and tightening her arms around her legs.

"How can the Daughter of Heaven be here?" Michael whispers. "We... we were certain she perished..."

Jason allows the Archangels a few moments to look at Cassiel, but seeing her clear discomfort, he doesn't invite them inside. Instead, he ushers them back outside and closes the door before conjuring a sound isolation barrier.

"Heaven's Daughter?" Jason asks. "So you do know her. I asked Gabriel, but he kept his lips sealed. Projection. Projection."

Jason conjures Gabriel and his Mind-Wife, Phoebe, into the physical realm. When they appear, Gabriel towers over the others, nearly double their height. Aware of his immense height difference, he drops down to sit on the dirt.

"I hath spoken with Heaven's Daughter." Gabriel says. "Our sister... had little to say. She barely spoke a few words before withdrawing."

"Where dids't thou find her?" Raphael asks. "Gressil's prison?"

Jason nods. "I assembled a platoon of soldiers to rescue Hope and several humans from the Labyrinth. While we were there, we uncovered a locked room Gressil clearly didn't want anyone to enter. Cassiel was inside."

Raphael frowns. "Cassiel?"

"That is the name the humans have decided to call her." Gabriel quickly interjects. "Considering the torture she has suffered, I thought it prudent to allow her to keep her identity hidden, until she decided to speak her name, herself."

Michael's expression becomes heavy. "...I have spoken with Heaven's Daughter on many occasions. She used to wear my ring on her finger and talk to me while she went about her business. She always had such a... bubbly personality. So full of life and joy. But now..."

"A dark cloud pervades her gaze." Raphael says, sighing deeply. "Tell me more about the state thou hath discovered her in, Wordsmith."

Jason nods. He spends the next several minutes detailing what happened in Faith's End to all of the Archangels, including the revelations about Lucifer being trapped inside of Gressil's body, and Gressil's apparent ability to nullify magical energy.

"Tsk." Uriel hisses. "I am only a little familiar with Heaven's Daughter. Rumors of her name reached Barbatos on a few occasions... but I never had the privilege to speak with or see her in person. Now that I have... she seems so... frail."

"She was not like that in the past." Raphael murmurs. "She was the mightiest of Lazarites. She earned countless titles for her bravery in battle. Daughter of Heaven. Child of the Light. As a mere Lazarite, she even slew Emperor Red Raven in one-on-one combat, earning herself the title of Blood Reaper. Previously, only the Archangels could accomplish such a feat."

Jason widens his eyes in surprise. "What the hell? She's that impressive of a figure? Could that be why Gressil... kept her alive?"

Raphael's expression turns grim. He nods slowly, disgusted by the notion. "What an unforgivable hellspawn Gressil is. To bring the Child of Light to such depths of despair... I can only imagine the horrible cruelty he heaped upon her."

"Undoubtedly, she suffers not only from the trauma of physical and mental torture, but the burden of our expectations..." Michael murmurs. "For her to have been unable to free herself and eventually learn that she is the last living angel... she bears a weight heavier than any mountain."

All of the Archangels fall silent.

"It doesn't matter if she is the greatest Archangel or the weakest Lazarite." Phoebe says, piping up in the absence of conversation. "She has suffered terribly. If she wants to stay silent, then we must allow her to do so. Let us hope that Soleil will be able to offer her some comfort."

Raphael blinks. "Soleil? Ah! Was she the other angel sitting beside the Child of Light?"

"Soleil is not an angel, but a construct." Jason explains. "I wanted to give Cassiel a friend she could lean on and confide in. Soleil is simply the first idea that popped into my head."

Jason explains Soleil's purpose and capabilities, leading the Archangels to nod along to his words.

"I see." Raphael says. "Aye, t'was a thoughtful measure to take, Wordsmith. I doubt... 'Cassiel'... would enjoy the company of demons or monsters. As for humans... I dare not postulate."

"Why dids't thou nameth her Cassiel?" Michael asks. "The name of my fallen sister... an Archangel... 'tis not appropriate for a mere Lazarite-"

"It is a fine name." Raphael interjects. "The Child of Light is not to be compared to other Lazarites. Her control of the Lazarite Essence towers above those of her kin. For her to use an Archangel's name as an alias, I do not object."

Michael opens his mouth to retort, but thinks better of it.

"...Thou art right, eldest brother. Our precious sister deserves accolades. She carries our hopes and dreams. Even if all of us should perish, she may still bear our torch. And if she wishes to remain on the sidelines, she has also earned that right."

"The old distinctions of purebloods and human-born matter little." Gabriel muses. "What remains of our people all stand here, upon this world. We are nothing more than a sliver of our former strength. We must respect Cassiel's wishes, no matter what they be."

All of the Archangels reach a consensus, leaving Jason to shrug and go along with them.

"I won't lie. I'm still interested in what makes Cassiel so... special. What is this 'Lazarite Essence' you spoke of? Can you at least tell me that much?"

All four of the Archangels become quiet. They look thoughtfully at one another, as if unsure what they should say.

Raphael waves his hand. "Bah. There is no point in hiding the truth. The Lazarite Essence is the core of their power structure. It was intended to be a simple power that any human could master, upon resurrecting in a Lazarite body. Humans are naturally incapable of understanding complex magic, especially those who die later in life. But the Child of Light was different."

"She died when she was still only a babe." Michael explains. "As such, she was able to grasp hold of important concepts more easily than adult humans could. Of course, countless children perished and revived as Lazarites, so that situation was not particularly unique, but she also..."

He pauses.

"She also... possessed a certain affinity to holy magic. She was able to control it in a more unique manner than other humans could ever hope to copy. As such, she became the mightiest wielder of the Lazarite's Essence."

"Alright, but what is this whole 'essence' thing?" Jason asks. "Just give it to me straight."

"Very well." Raphael responds. He summons a tiny, illusory image of Cassiel above his palm, levitating her like a poseable action figure. "All Lazarites possessed the ability to summon holy magic into existence. We taught them to use this ability in order to don weapons and armor, protecting themselves and increasing their fighting capabilities."

Raphael alters Cassiel's figure, making shining golden armor materialize onto her body, its appearance resembling hardened mana of average strength.

"This would allow any Lazarite to conjure swords, hammers, spears, shields, and other simple implements into existence to battle their demonic foes. The problem came in that the vast majority were simply incapable of conjuring anything more complicated, than bows and arrows. The moment they tried to create complex forms of mana, their efforts fell apart."

"And Cassiel was different?" Jason asks.

"Oh, yes. Very much so." Raphael affirms. "She was the Child of Light! Her ability to conjure and control holy energy went well beyond the limits of all other Lazarites. Indeed, she was even more capable than the Valkyries, and her proficiency nearly reached the level of my brothers and sisters among the Archangels! She was truly an elite!"

Michael smiles. "I admired her tenacity and willpower. She never stopped learning. No matter what humans invented, she would learn to craft weapons and implements similar to those found on Earth. By the time of the Energy Wars, she had become so deadly in battle that Demon Emperors regularly avoided her whenever she appeared."

"We had to engage in some level of subterfuge to keep the demons guessing." Raphael says with a smirk. "We placed Cassiel under the care of humans on occasion, hiding her identity with special talismans, so she could locate and sneak up on demons to kill them. Once the Blood Reaper appeared on the field of battle, even an Archangel would seem preferable to fight."

"She always did detest demons, from the depths of her soul." Gabriel muses. "Not dissimilar to..."

He trails off, leaving the sentence to linger in the air.

"Not dissimilar to who?" Jason asks.

"If Cassiel wishes to say, so she shall." Raphael says, falling silent.

"She really does sound incredible..." Phoebe says. "What a tragedy for her to end up like this. I wonder how she ended up trapped with Gressil? How did she fall into his clutches?"

"Gressil can nullify magical energy." Jason says. "He probably caught her offguard. It's not too hard to imagine."

"Mmm." Michael grunts, looking at Cassiel's abode. "I... wish to speak to my sister alone. Wordsmith, brothers, sister, woulds't thou allow me a few minutes with her?"

Jason and the others nod.

"Go ahead. All of you can take turns." Jason says. "But... try not to overwhelm her. If she doesn't want to talk, don't force her to speak."

"I know." Michael says, his tone softening. "I won't do anything that will hurt... Cassiel's soul. I just wish to spend a little time with her."

Michael steps out of the sound isolation bubble and walks over to Cassiel's door. After stepping inside, he closes it, leaving the others to wonder what they might discuss.

After Michael leaves, Raphael turns to Jason.

"Regarding other matters, there is something I wish to discuss, Wordsmith. Verily, I hath failed to mention this before, but my brother, sister, and I observed the First Emperor of demonkind on Hell Harbor. His title..."

Raphael pauses abruptly, as if momentarily confused.

"His title is... 'twas... erm..."

The old man hems and haws for a few long moments before frowning.

"I... cannot recall. I forgot to mention him before, though the reason why escapes me. He appeared at the end of our battle against Ose. He spoke to her and said..."

The Archangel of Wisdom pauses once again.

"Verily, he spake to her. I watched their exchange. I listened... but regarding the contents of their discussion..."

"I cannot recall either," Uriel says with a frown. "I do not remember what he looked like, or what he said. I remember only that he appeared and said... something."

Jason listens to their conversation with rapt attention.

"...You mean to tell me two Archangels have become totally forgetful? Maybe I can help. Remember."

Jason aims his magic at Raphael's mind, intending to make the old Archangel remember just what, exactly he observed. However, instead of revitalizing Raphael's thoughts, his vision dims considerably.

"Erm... forgiveth me, Wordsmith. What matter was I speaking about?"

"The First Emperor." Jason says, his frown deepening. "I just- don't you remember anything?"

"First Emperor?" Raphael repeats. "Dost though referreth to Satan the Devil? What of him?"

"I don't know." Jason replies. "I assume you meant someone else. What the hell is going on? Why are you forgetting, all of a sudden? You brought him up!"

Raphael stares at the Wordsmith as if gazing at an idiot. He turns to Uriel.

"Sister. What nonsense does the Wordsmith speak of?"

"The First Emperor." Uriel repeats. "He was... we saw him, brother. I believe? He was on Hell Harbor."

"Satan the Devil is alive?" Raphael asks, nearly jumping out of his skin. "I thought he perished along with the Black Queen!"

""Uh... well, he did..." Jason interrupts. "I don't think you guys are talking about Satan... so let's just drop the subject. But, uh... regarding the Black Queen... boy, do I have something that will get your noggins jogging."

With the Archangels having left immediately following Stormbringer, none of them know of Amelia's reappearance, her subsequent assistance in locating Hope, and the revelation that she is not, in fact, actually Amelia. Annette, the sister of Debra, turns out to be a huge surprise for the Archangels, as Jason's story leaves them reeling from one twist after another.

"For there to be such a matter!" Raphael exclaims. "Verily, thy clone hath gotten up to some tomfoolery!"

"Yes." Jason affirms. "But I don't blame him. I blame myself. I blame myself for a lot of things that have gone wrong in the last six years."

The Wordsmith sighs.

"In the meantime, Uriel, why don't you have Gabriel's ring back? I expect you'll be sticking around here for a while?"

The Archangel of Retribution crosses her arms.

"Indeed I shall, Wordsmith. I still hunger for my spears to taste the flesh of bloodskin Emperors, but for now, I must rest. Transforming into the Cherubiim has drained my soul, and without my original body, my soul's recovery speed shall prove quite slow."

"Can you transform again?" Jason asks.

"...Perhaps. 'Tis within the realm of possibility, but it shall require a not-insignificant sum of time. In the worst case, I may require several months, years, or even decades to transform again."

"And Uriel shall require my assistance, as well as Michael or Gabriel's," Raphael explains. "'Tis impossible for one or two Archangels to transform into a Triad State. The Ophaniim, Seraphiim, and Cherubiim are all mighty forms that would cause despair to fall upon the demon Emperors."

"I assume each of the three forms has their own advantages and disadvantages?" Jason asks, probing for more information.

"Aye, they do. But for now, only the Cherubiim and Seraphiim lay within reach. None of the Ophaphs remain among the living. Not Samael, not Cassiel, nor Muriel, so that transformation has been lost forever. And as for the Seraphiim..."

Raphael chuckles coyly.

"Well, it has a few merits."

"I imagine so." Jason replies.

None of the Archangels or Jason bother talking about Cassiel or the First Emperor again, especially as Raphael appears to have completely forgotten what he was saying. Jason chalks his memory loss up to dementia and decides to say nothing, not wanting to insult the old man.

A few minutes later, Jason passes Gabriel's ring to Uriel, and she conjures a summon identical to his original form. While lacking all his physical strength and other attributes, the fact he can interact with the physical realm for the first time in millennia makes Gabriel noticeably happier. He pokes the dirt with his fingers, then scoops it up and allows it to fall from his palm.

"Mmm. Physical sensations. How long has it been...?"

While Gabriel casually plays with his sense of touch, Raphael turns to another topic.

"Jason. During the meeting between Confessor Vulpanix and Ose, I overheard an important piece of intelligence."

He leans toward the Wordsmith with a grave look on his face.

"The Volgrim... have Excalibur in their possession."

"What? They do?" Jason gasps. "Why would Vulpanix mention something like that?"

"Because." Raphael answers. "The demons know not of Camael's Cube, nor do the Volgrim. 'Tis thy secret weapon. However, due to this misunderstanding, Ose let slip that she believed thou possessed Excalibur, and Vulpanix set the record straight. Currently, Excalibur resides in some sort of secret Volgrim vault; so claimeth the Confessor."

Jason frowns. "A secret Volgrim vault. Hmm. If I were to obtain Excalibur, would that make any sort of difference? Can I even wield a weapon of that power level?"

Raphael nods. "Heroes are generally capable of doing so. Excalibur still possesses the intact soul of King Arthur. However, thy ability to master it is limited by thy control of mana. And forgive this old bird for his bluntness, but thy control is quite... shoddy. Compared to Arthur himself, thou art barely a hatchling. Thy instinctual control of mana is all but nonexistent, and thy internal reserves are quite minuscule. Still, Excalibur is always useful as a simple mana battery. Compared to Camael's Cube, it is a 'perfect' artifact that does not leak mana. It is the mightiest of my sister's creations for a reason."

"Obtaining Excalibur needs to become a high priority for thee." Uriel says. "The Volgrim have possessed it for a hundred millennia. What use they have obtained from it, we do not know. T'would be unfortunate if they had obtained a method to tap into its mana reserves."

"Well. I can't use 'Locate' to find Excalibur." Jason mutters while rubbing his chin. "I'll have to put it on the backburner for now. Uplifting humanity is my primary goal."

Jason continues to talk with the Archangels, exchanging ideas about how to proceed.

While talking, Jason's T-REX beeps three times, catching his attention. The Wordsmith activates it, covering his body in nanite armor.

Once the T-REX helmet covers his head and face, a message pops up, along with Physical-Phoebe's face.

"Hey! Jason, you won't believe who popped by!"

"Who?" Jason asks.

"Blinker! She said Marie Becker had something she wanted to give you. Said it was urgent, so I contacted you right away."

"Marie Becker..." Jason mutters. "Sounds like trouble. Let me see what it is. Where is Blinker now?"

"She's at the Core. Mind popping over?"

"Sure thing, honey."

Jason turns off the call, deactivates his helmet, and smiles apologetically at the Archangels.

"'Scuse me a minute, everyone. I have a friend waiting for me in the Core. Blinker's back, and she has a present from Marie Becker."

Raphael waves Jason away. "Yes, yes. You may go. We shall continue to wait for our time to speak with Cassiel."

"Alright. I'll be back soon."

Jason offers a wave goodbye, then utters a Word of Power.

"Return."

His body, and Spirit-Phoebe's, both vanish from Tarus II and instantly reappear inside the Labyrinth Core, atop an elevated outcropping on the wall where nobody is allowed to enter, lest Jason teleport inside of them.

The Wordsmith levitates to the floor and trots over to his wife, where he finds Blinker sitting on her shoulder, back in her tiny fairy-form.

"Blinker!" Jason says. "Heya, girl. How are you doing? That baby bump looks a little bigger than I remember."

Blinker shrugs. "Hey, Jason. I'm doing alright. Still trying to find happiness... you know how it is."

Jason's face twitches, making his forced smile more than a little uneasy.

"Haha... yeah. I do."

Neither of them mentions Kar's name, but both of them think it.

Blinker sighs. She motions with her hands and summons a rip in space, where a small black 'bead' the size of a marble falls out of a dimensional storage space and levitates in the air.

Jason gently plucks the bead out of the air with two fingers and frowns.

"Uh. What's this?"

"It's... something really exciting." Blinker says, without a hint of a smile. "You'll hate what you see, Word-man."

"What do you mean?" He asks. "I don't follow."

"It's some sort of computer... data... thingy..." Blinker says. "I don't know all the details, okay? Miss Marie just told me to tell you it has a recording of something really important on it. Specifically..."

Blinker leans forward and crinkles her nose.

"...It's a recording of a really big, important Volgrim meeting. The Founders addressed their entire species, collectively. And they talked about you. A lot."

The hair raises on the back of Jason's neck.

"Oh. Oh, yeah. That... certainly does sound important."

"And scary." Phoebe affirms. "Let's not delay. I want to hear what they had to say."

"As do I." Jason concludes.

Part 347: Phoebe's Request

Jason and his spirit-wife join her physical self and Blinker to walk over to a nearby computer terminal. Despite the data-bead's odd shape and seeming lack of any way to put it into a computer, Phoebe still figures out how to activate it. She takes it from Jason, holds it near the terminal, and a wireless transmission transfers between the nearby interface and the flat screen before them.

Several nearby personnel shoot curious glances in the Wordsmith's direction when the 100-inch screen lights up with the faces of strange, never-before-seen aliens. When they start speaking, an automated filter inside of the file translates their words into English, allowing the humans to follow along. As Jason, his two wives, and Blinker watch, a video recording taken from an intercepted broadcast plays out. The Volgrim Founders identify themselves and speak, one after the other, of the many matters plaguing their society.

Jason learns more about the Plague than he ever did before, including the name the Volgrim have given them, 'Kolvaxians.' He finally obtains a true idea of just how badly the Volgrim have been beaten by the monstrous Plague, and how much ground they've lost. A cold sweat goes down his back when he hears that the Kolvaxians have taken over more than 10% of the Milky Way's inhabitable worlds, or caused others to fall to ruin.

The more he hears, the graver his expression becomes.

"Kolvaxians. Seven Great Wars. Sentinels. God, damn. This is a lot to take in."

Physical-Phoebe chews her lip. "Blinker, did you see this transmission already?"

The Monster Queen nods. "Yeah. Miss Marie showed it to me. It's grim stuff, alright."

"This 'total rendition' term is the same as what Raphael mentioned," Spirit-Phoebe says. "To think the Volgrim would not only have the power to annihilate entire worlds, but the willpower to do so. What a tragedy, and a waste."

"I doubt they'd go to such lengths unless absolutely necessary." Jason says. "These Kolvaxians must be more frightening than any nightmare we can dream up."

"The 'Sentinels' also seem alarming." Physical-Phoebe adds. "They killed 97% of all Volgrim, and they weren't even destroyed. They're just... inactive. Hidden somewhere. They sound even scarier than the Kolvaxians."

"Let's not overlook an important tidbit." Jason says, rewinding to an earlier point in the speech. "This Muuxunuu lady says the Volgrim didn't create the Kolvaxians. They're supposedly invaders from another galaxy. Is she telling the truth?"

"Why would she lie?" Blinker asks. "She's talking to her own people."

"Yes. But sometimes leaders do lie, especially if the purpose is to prevent mass panic. It's entirely possible she and the other Volgrim are making up the Kolvaxian's origins. They may originate from a Volgrim research facility, but the higher-ups don't want the common folk to know. Back when I was a kid, the president of my own country lied about finding 'weapons of mass destruction' in another country to justify invading them. Don't count out the possibility of a well-told lie."

"Raphael found Kolvaxians in the Cosmic Realm." Spirit-Phoebe points out. "Is it possible they originated from there? Or perhaps, they did come from another galaxy and they somehow found their way into the Cosmic Realm? Hell, they might have ended up in there by accident."

"...Or someone put them there deliberately." Jason says, lowering his voice. "Maybe the Psions tried to contain the Kolvaxians inside the Cosmic Realm. Or maybe when they condemned a world to Total Rendition, it ended up blasting a hole in the Cosmic Realm big enough for the Plague to slip inside. We don't have anything to go off except Muuxunuu's words. Let's keep watching."

More details emerge as the group of four observe. They learn that a pair of Executors died and became weapons used by the Kolvaxians. They learn of ten ships known by the code-name of Refuge. The fact the Volgrim are considering fleeing the Milky Way leaves them even more concerned than before.

"We absolutely cannot underestimate these Kolvaxians." Jason says. "They're bringing a Type III civilization to the brink of despair. The Volgrim seemed unstoppable before, yet they cannot stop the spread of these invaders."

Some of the subjects the Founders discuss go right over Jason's head, as he isn't familiar with Volgrim society. Unsure of how Psion powers work, the details regarding Specialist Psions mean little to the Wordsmith, though he gathers based on the audience's reaction that this must be quite a surprise to the important delegates in the audience.

"It sounds like becoming a specialist is simultaneously easier and a faster route to achieve power," Jason says, "but it comes at the cost of a diverse arsenal of abilities. Do any of you know how Psion powers work?"

The women all shake their heads in unison.

"No idea." Physical-Phoebe says.

"Not a clue." Her spiritual self confirms.

"In that case, I'll have to grill Raphael and the other Archangels." Jason says. "I can't deal with threats I know nothing about."

"It seems the Volgrim don't have a viable method to quickly travel between galaxies." Spirit-Phoebe says. "They sent probes to the other galaxies in the Local Group, but beyond that, the distance is too vast. They don't have any way to colonize them or assess their threat levels without risking losing the people they send."

"Would it be in bad taste to say these Kolvaxians might be an ironic fate heaped upon the Volgrim by their own hand?" Jason ponders. "Imagine if their own probes caused the Kolvaxians to come here. That would mean they really kicked the wrong can of shit."

"Sounds like the Plague is either super smart, or super-adaptable." Blinker says, thinking out loud. "Plus, they must be strong as heck, if they were able to kill two 'Executors.' I wonder how strong an Executor is..."

When Unarin brings up humanity again, Jason can't help but scowl at the First Founder's digitally projected face.

"A small scale conflict! The war that destroyed our world was barely even a trifle in Unarin's eyes! Get a load of this prick!"

"To us, the Energy Wars were a terrifying matter of life and death. But to the Volgrim, we probably weren't more than a minor distraction requiring a few small-scale forces to subjugate." Physical-Phoebe says. "We just aren't a threat to them."

"Maybe we weren't, but we are now." Jason says, quietly resolving his heart.

Finally, the recording reaches a point that makes all four viewers lean forward and watch with rapt attention. Unarin arrives, along with Dosena, and the two of them start speaking to the rest of their species the details they've uncovered about Jason.

They talk of of the Wordsmith's appearances in Marie's facility, his battle against their forces in Hell Harbor, and even the Cherubiim's later appearance.

"I've been too sloppy." Jason says with a grimace. "But to put all of these pieces together, Unarin is no idiot. He's the leader of a species that once controlled the entirety of a frigging galaxy. I guess it's to be expected his intelligence-gathering capabilities would be this frightening."

"He seems to be a little scared of you." Physical-Phoebe says. "That's at least somewhat... comforting. I suppose."

"Or distressing." Jason mutters. "Scared dogs tend to bite when they're cornered. Damn. He even knows I caused the Polaris star to go supernova. How the hell does he put all these pieces together?"

"He knows about Hope, too." Blinker says, quietly. "Isn't Hope still injured? I heard Gressil tortured him."

"Did Phoebe tell you that?" Jason asks, glancing at his wife.

"Nope. Miss Marie did." Blinker replies. "She... keeps an eye on you."

"Hmph. I'll bet she does."

The group continues watching. Even crazier facts come to light, making Jason widen his eyes.

"Seriously! He's afraid I might have more clones besides Hope? That's ridiculous! Just one clone is enough to make me tear my hair out!"

"It's a reasonable assumption." Physical-Phoebe says. "You know the limits of your powers, but Unarin doesn't. He can only guess based on what his interrogation of Ose revealed. And it's clear she hid things from him because she still wants to obtain your powers for demonkind, not the Volgrim."

"Still, the fact remains that Unarin is scared of me." Jason says. "And that's good. He should be. I'll make humanity so terrifying he won't dare to mess with us. Once we stomp down the Kolvaxians, there won't be anything he can do to defeat us."

The Wordsmith glances at his wife.

"I'll just have to make sure to protect you even more than I do now. I have no doubt Unarin would try to capture and turn you into a weakness for me. I won't let him touch you, though. No matter what."

Physical-Phoebe smiles. "You're so romantic."

When the recording continues again, Jason nearly has a heart attack.

"What the fuck?! SOLOMON'S CROWN?! How in the goddamn shit-fucking-shit did Unarin get the Crown?? Is that why it randomly disappeared? I thought Solomon sent himself away!"

"Maybe... a Psion... stole it from you?" Spirit-Phoebe asks, shrugging heavily. "I wasn't there, so I can only guess."

"Yeah... perhaps it was a Psion..." Jason mutters, clearly unconvinced. "Either way, I have to get the Crown back, and Excalibur, too. They're too dangerous to remain in enemy hands."

The next subject of War Provisions doesn't interest the Wordsmith and his cohorts much, but it does contextualize to them the value of the 100 provisions Kordonis offered. Dosena also mentions Excalibur, confirming its presence inside some unspecified 'secure vaults,' but this doesn't surprise Jason given what Raphael told him.

Unarin then discusses how to deal with Jason. When he explains his plans, Jason frowns deeply.

"I see. So he doesn't want to fairly parley with me after all. He wants to control me. And this bit about Changelings... he really think he can so easily infiltrate my civilization? I won't let him."

"We'll have to come up with ways to detect Changelings." Spirit-Phoebe says. "But I don't know anything about them, so we'll have to capture a few and experiment on them to find out how they differ from humans."

"Not just humans," Physical-Phoebe says. "Monsters and demons too. It seems Changelings can shift their appearances to all sorts of different forms. I'll bet Samantha would know more about how their transformations work, so we can ask her to tell us about them."

"Good idea."

When Unarin concludes the assembly speech and turns to the audience to ask questions, more tidbits emerge regarding the capabilities of Jason's potential enemies.

"It seems the mightiest Psion, Second Founder Dosena, never leaves Volgarius." Jason muses. "But that also means she'll be their final defense. I wonder how strong she is compared to the Cherubiim, let alone me."

"This 'Order to Chaos' book sounds interesting." Spirit-Phoebe chirps. "Look at how Unarin evaluates our entire society! He even gleans details that go well beyond the surface! I never knew architecture could have such an interesting side to it!"

"I'd like to get my hands on that tome." Physical-Phoebe adds. "It sounds like an interesting read, at the least."

Blinker pokes Phoebe's cheek. "No problem! Miss Marie thought you'd want to read it, so she included a copy of Order to Chaos along with the recording. It's really easy to find, since it's a mainstay and required reading for all Volgrim. It's kind of like... like..."

"Like their Bible?" Jason asks.

"Yeah!" Blinker exclaims. "It's like a holy book! The Volgrim revere their First Founder more than you'd find comfortable."

"Great." Jason says. "I'm sure both Phoebes will love it. I'll pass, though. I've got more important things to worry about."

He pauses.

"...Kind of rude to say I'm lazy, though. I mean, he's not wrong, but damn. Talk about slapping a man right in his ego."

"What's the matter?" Physical-Phoebe asks, poking her husband's ribs teasingly. "Are you mad the big mean Volgrim Founder called you out? You'll just have to work harder to break that image!"

The Wordsmith smiles and rolls his eyes. "Yeah, yeah. I know."

The recording concludes, and the group of four find themselves at a momentary loss for words. The revelations contained within shock them to their cores, making them re-evaluate the situation significantly.

"Solomon's Crown... Excalibur... Changelings... and the Kolvaxians, too." Jason says, trying not to sound too worn-out. "I knew the Volgrim wouldn't be easy to deal with, but this is worse than I expected."

"Well, at least you have advance warning," Blinker says with a shrug. She kicks her feet back and forth while sitting on Phoebe's shoulder, as if splashing them in a small pond of water. "Don't say I never help you out."

"I'd never say that." Jason chuckles. "You've helped me out more than I deserve. It's me who owes you."

Spirit-Phoebe coughs.

"Say, um. Jason? Other-Phoebe? While we're all here, there's something I've been wanting to talk about."

"Yeah?" Jason asks, turning to his soul-wife's projection. "Is something eating at you?"

"Well. Yes, actually." She answers. "It's... it's just... I want a new name."

"You do?" Physical-Phoebe asks. "Why?"

"I think you know why." Spirit-Phoebe says. "It's confusing having there be two of us. And, well, Hope has a different name from Jason, right? I'd like a name of my own. We're similar to each other, yes... but I feel as if I've started to become my own person, recently. I just want a new name, that's all. I want to feel distinct from you."

Jason listens attentively. "That's totally fine. You can change your name, no problem. What would you like to go by?"

Spirit-Phoebe pauses.

"I've... given it some thought. I don't want my name to be as big of a change as Hope's is compared to yours. I just want to be a little different. How about... Daphne? Or Fiona? Or maybe even Penny?"

"Daphne sounds good." Jason says. "It'll take some getting used to, but I like it."

"I like Penny!" Blinker says. "That's a heckin' cute name!"

"Fiona doesn't sound too different from Phoebe." Physical-Phoebe says. "Yet it also sounds distinct."

"Which one are you leaning toward most?" Jason asks.

His mind-wife chuckles nervously. "Well, uh, I was leaning toward Fiona, personally. Is it weird if I just agree with my other self?"

"Not at all." Jason answers. "I like Fiona. That's a great name, and it fits you well!"

"Fiona." Phoebe repeats, looking at her spirit-self. "Yeah. I can get behind that."

"I liked Penny more." Blinker complains. "But hey! Maybe I'll name one of my baby crocs Penny instead!"

Blinker rubs her belly, smiling warmly at the thought of her future children.

"That's a great idea." Fiona says. "Make sure you bring your kids to see us when you finally pop them out. I'll be their aunt! Me and... and Phoebe both!"

"Yeah. Me and Fiona!" Phoebe says, repeating her spirit-self's name to get a better 'taste' for it. "We'll both be their aunts!"

Jason laughs. "Well, at least we've gotten all that resolved. Thanks for bringing the recording by, Blinker. You should probably head back to Marie's laboratory, soon. I have to prep for the demon invasion."

Blinker's smile instantly evaporates. "What?! Another demon invasion? What are you talking about, Word-man?!"

Jason smacks his forehead. "Oh, yeah. I didn't tell you. Uhh... the demons are probably going to attack Tarus II again, but this time, all of the Hidden Emperors will join the attack. So, I'm currently planning our defenses out so they'll fail."

"That's terrible!" Blinker gasps. "Haven't they hurt you enough? I won't forgive them! I HATE demons!!"

The fairy's expression turns vicious. For a brief moment, a flash of absolute bloodthirstiness washes across Blinker's face as countless suppressed emotions rush to the surface.

"Calm down, calm down." Phoebe says, raising a finger to touch Blinker's tiny arm. "Don't get angry. It won't be good for your babies. Jason and I will take care of the demons, this time. We have a new weapon, after all."

"I can't go back to Marie, not now!" Blinker snarls. "Those demon-bastards... they took Kar from me! I need to pay them back tenfold! Especially Mephisto, that absolute little shithead!"

"You and me both." Jason says with a nod. "I'll bet the Battle Brothers are still alive, too. Mephisto probably reanimated their bodies. I'll make sure to crush them for you and deliver their heads on platters."

Blinker crosses her arms. She flies into the air, rising off Phoebe's shoulder to hover between the Wordsmith and his wife.

"No need! I'm joining you! I'll kill the rat bastards myself!"

"Uhh..." Jason says, frowning at the fairy. "You're pregnant. You shouldn't do anything that will risk your children's lives."

"I'm barely pregnant." Blinker retorts. "I'm not at a point where I can't kick some demon butt! Besides. How will I be able to look Kar's babies in their cute little eyes if I let their father's killer roam free? Zamiel's days are numbered, and so are Mephisto's!"

Jason glances at Fiona, then Phoebe. Both of his wives shrug at him.

"I think it's fine." Fiona says. "Blinker, you can stay, but don't go charging into battle. This isn't the same as the Stormbringer Attack. We're not fighting one or two strong enemies, but dozens. I don't even want to imagine what would happen if two or more Emperors ganged up on you."

Blinker's enthusiasm deflates visibly.

"Well... alright. I'll just have to be careful, then. But Word-man, how exactly are you gonna deal with a bunch of Emperors? We barely made it when only Ose was attacking us!"

All three women turn to look at Jason. He shrugs nonchalantly.

"Killing all those Emperors is probably impossible, even for me. If I rely on my new weapon's energy, I might be able to smite them all dead, but that would drain its reserves, possibly until they run dry. I can't afford to waste mana like that, not with the Volgrim breathing down my neck. Even though that's the case, there is another option."

Phoebe raises an eyebrow. "And that would be?"

"Scaring the absolute shit out of the Hidden Emperors." Jason says, with a smile. "Confessor Vulpanix assured the demons I don't possess Excalibur, and that is true. However, based on what I've heard, the demons don't... trust the Volgrim. They certainly don't like them. All it will take is one little seed of doubt and their bravado will come crumbling down..."

Jason cracks his neck. He holds out his hands, face-up.

"Sword."

In the air before him, Jason's Word of Power conjures a perfect-looking replica of Excalibur. The blade falls a few inches and lands atop his palms with a plop.

Fiona cocks her head. "A fake Excalibur?"

"Sure." Jason says. "The thing about war is it's not always about what you have, but what your opponent thinks you have. Solomon may have slapped me in the face when he left, but he was a good teacher. Sun Tzu once said that all warfare is based on deception, and to that, I agree."

Jason utters additional Words of Power. "Strengthen. Reinforce. Reinforce. Sharpen. Attune. Crystallize..."

Over the next several minutes, Jason alters the simple-looking blade in his hands to the point that all the magically sensitive creatures in and around the Core turn in his direction, surprised by the powerful emanation of holy energy coming from the object in his hands.

Jason not only strengthens the blade until it becomes nearly as durable as Living Moldanium, but he makes it ultra-sharp, to the extent it will never dull, no matter how many limbs it severs or however many blunted surfaces it strikes. Just like he once did with Dellfingler, Jason creates a blade capable of cutting nearly anything.

Additionally, Jason attunes the blade so that it emanates Camael's Cube's aura, but with a mana-flavor identical to that of Excalibur!

"It's nowhere near as powerful as Excalibur, nor does it have the heroic blade's powers." Jason says with a smile. "But it doesn't have to, because I'll pair it with a certain Black Hole Construct."

"A what?" Blinker asks.

"I'll let you meet him later." Jason replies. "For now, just trust me. This isn't my only measure, but it will absolutely prove among the most effective. If there's one thing Solomon made clear to me over the years, it's that no Hero has inspired as much terror and as many sleepless nights as the famous Hero-King. The demons have been sleeping a little too easy lately, so I think it's time we reawaken their dormant nightmares. Don't you?"

Blinker nods excitedly. "Heck yes! Scare those demons, Word-man!"

Fiona exhales. "And here I once thought you were a little slow on the uptake, Jason. Have you been holding back, all this time?"

"I have." He replies. "I never wanted to be the guy who stepped up to the plate and took control, but I was just denying reality. Now I know what has to be done. The demons will suffer for killing my friends and family."

He looks at Blinker.

"My little girl, and your husband. We'll make them pay."

The Monster Queen nods.

"Yeah. We will."

Part 348: Changelings

Tarus II, inside a makeshift community center where people sit indoors to wind down after a long day.

Hundreds of tables sit inside the large, dome-roofed building, while lightbulbs powered by the internal mana and energy of the patrons illuminate the ground below. The air itself glows faintly blue due to the magically-powered illumination, giving everything and everyone a vaguely cyan tint. A thrown-together bar with whatever reserves the local community could pick back up following Beelzebub's detonation passes out limited quantities of alcohol to the troops and civilians enjoying their downtime.

At one of the many tables, a trio of goblins sits on elevated chairs suitable for their species, while two male humans sit on the same side as each other. The married couple aren't people of any notable reputation, but simply a couple of troopers who survived the many tragedies of the past several weeks without either of them dying.

"...was crazy. I've never seen monsters like them before." One of the men, Darrel, says. He leans back heavily in his chair, spreads his legs out under the table, and lets his arms hang off the sides of his chair. Clearly tired from a long day on the job, he doesn't seem to have much energy left. "Then Po tells me they weren't monsters, but aliens! Yeah man, aliens! Crazy shit."

Po smiles at his husband and nods. "Yeap. That's the rumor going around the Core, anyway. My gal-friend Sally said lots of people saw the Wordsmith and his wife watching some video in the Core. Sally was too busy to catch the whole thing, but apparently she heard something about a 'plague' and a 'Volgran.' We're hoping the Wordsmith passes down more details. He didn't seem to give privacy much thought, after all."

Across from the two men, one of the goblins, a little fellow with a refined and elegant manner, politely sips on a red-colored mango-like fruit drink, allowing its sweet waters to slowly parch his thirst. This goblin, Grima, is none other than one of the three Changelings who recently returned to the Core.

"'Volgran,' you say?" Grima asks. "Oh, how scary. I hadn't heard anything about this. I just got back today. I thought after that terrible demon attack, we could use more... 'friends' to help clean up."

"YEAH!" One of the other goblins yells, slapping the table. "Me and Grima go way back! We both real good litter-mates!"

The other goblin, sitting across from him, between Grima and the humans, also flashes a stupid grin. "We hears fleshies needs digging! We supers good at digging! Help build, get paid in meats!"

Po chuckles. "Well, things are pretty bad right now. We can use all the help we can get. You'll find that goblins are quite appreciated around here. I hear Jason is gonna start digging more underground installations, which will be safer for people to evacuate to if the demons attack again."

"Speaking of the demons," Darrel interjects, "did you hear about that new development? Corporal Hurent mentioned it to one of her friends in passing. Apparently, the Hero has some new secret superweapon. That's how he managed to kill the Duke of Pain! The demons would have to be braindead to attack us again!"

Grima continues to casually sip his drink.

"A superweapon? I don't care much for those matters. I only wish to help out at the hospital and ensure wounded soldiers receive the treatment they need. But, if that 'superweapon' can prevent another tragedy, it would ease my worries. I nearly died during Beelzebub's attack, after all."

Darrel's expression turns ugly. "Yeah. A lot of people died. That piece of shit killed so many innocents, so many mothers, fathers, and even their children. Demons are scumbags, plain and simple."

"Not the ones that join us, though." Po says, quickly speaking in his husband's place. "The Second Emperor of demonkind abandoned her people to help us. I hear she killed a hundred thousand of our enemies during the Stormbringer Attack. And don't forget others like that Kiari gal. She's used her bugs to help us rescue lots of trapped civilians, people who got buried under rubble we'd never have found otherwise."

"Right, right, not the 'good' demons." Darrel says with a nod. "But you done know what I mean. Somethin' like ninety-nine percent of all demons are absolute pieces of shit. If we exterminated them, I wouldn't bat an eye!"

Grima shoots a quick, surreptitious glance at the other two goblins, but otherwise keeps his body language as casual as possible.

"I am pleased that distinguished soldiers such as you protect us all." Grima says. "I will put your drinks on my... 'tab.' If I do not respect the ones protecting us all every day, I will experience a great sorrow in my heart."

"Thanks, Grimmy." Po says, flashing the goblin a thumbs up. "But don't look down on yourself. Lots of my buddies would have died during Stormbringer if it wasn't for you helping keep the hospital a smooth-running operation. Damn shame about those bloody Shades that got loose... fucking bastards. Anyway, you do good work, too. We're stronger as a people when everyone does their best for the collective."

"I am wonderin', though," Darrel says, while raising an eyebrow. "Grima, you talk so fancy and all that, but most goblins ain't all prim and proper. Why are you so different?"

Grima lifts his hand in a sign of uncertainty. "I do not know the answer. I enjoy reading literature and a great many classics. I suppose I am a little different from the others of my species. Not like Duugo and Jin-Jin, here. They are quite... bog-standard."

"Pahaha! Yeah we are!" Duugo says, before swinging his arms wildly and 'accidentally' knocking his glass off the table. "Ahh! Broke cup-glass! So sorry, did not mean to hurt!"

"That's alright," Po says, while standing up and gesturing to the bartender. "Accidents happen. C'mon, Darrel. Our shift starts in six hours. We need to get some rest before then."

Darrel stands up, a bit more reluctantly than his husband. "Yeah, fair enough. Thanks for buyin' our drinks, Grima. We owe ya."

"Speak nothing of the matter." Grima says, while slowly blinking his eyes and expressing his thanks through a wave of his hand.

After the two humans walk away, the three goblins remain silent for a while. They continue to drink, then quietly shuffle out of the bar once a nearby waiter has cleaned up their broken glass.

The three of them silently walk away from the building, toward a nearby cliff on the northern side of the city, and climb over its edge until they reach a secluded area among some trees.

After arriving, the other two goblins noticeably lose some of the idiocy in their eyes. Duugo, one of the Changelings brought back by Grima to the humans, looks at his junior with an expression of blank judgment.

"Kotori. This one is displeased. You are not to refer to us by our original designations. Furthermore, your ability to blend in with the local goblin populace is sloppy and subpar. Even the most dull-witted and unobservant humans are able to see that you act too differently from other goblins."

"Agreed." Says Jin, the other Changeling. "It is a miracle your identity was not discovered before now. Since the Wordsmith has observed the Founders' broadcast, it is possible he will begin taking measures to identify Changelings. Your choice of verbiage, and your uncanny manner of speaking will draw too much scrutiny."

"This one knows he is an inferior and low-class Observer." Grima says, bowing his head meekly. "This one was originally placed upon Tarus II to observe the monster royal known as Bahamut. This one would have drawn too much scrutiny if we were to have changed our manner of speaking. For now, this one must continue to act the same as we have already."

"Agreed." Duugo says. "However, this one believes that you are a liability that will impact the Founders' goals for this world in a negative manner. This one is considering reassigning you to a lower danger mission more befitting your... status."

Kotori raises his head. "With respect! This one delivered an item of critical importance to the Founders! This one also delivered intelligence of a similar level regarding the Hero's return! This one has landed in a unique position where we can observe the former Second Emperor, Belial, without drawing attention. Our position as the hospital's head administrator gives us-"

"Enough." Duugo says, raising a palm. "You have become emotionally invested in this mission. Changelings are not to experience attachment to any of their duties. You are too young and inexperienced, not to mention untrained, to handle an Observation and Infiltration mission of this level."

"This one guided your feet into the humans' core world!" Grima says. "How can this one suffer such a humiliation? This one may be inexperienced, but we have assisted the Founders' mission greatly!"

"A fortunate set of circumstances, to be sure." Jin says, blinking its eyes slowly and deliberately. "Were any other Changeling to stand in your place, they too would have accomplished great feats."

"With respect. This one disagrees." Grima snaps. "This one has forged close bonds with the humans. They trust this one to deliver medical attention fairly and neutrally. Even just now, both of you saw what this one's clever infiltration revealed. We now know about the data-stream the Wordsmith intercepted in the Core. Would you two be able to obtain such crucial intelligence for the Founders if this one were not here?"

Duugo and Jin both glance at each other for a moment before turning back to Grima.

"In time, the two of us will also ingratiate ourselves to the humans." Duugo says. "In that respect, you are not exceptional."

"However," Jin interjects, turning its attention to Duugo, "intelligence of this nature is also time-sensitive. Were Kotori not here, we would not have been able to obtain this information until a later date. Despite their inexperience, our junior still possesses a position of relative prestige among the mud-dweller populace."

"You are correct." Duugo states. "For now, Kotori, you must continue to update us on the movements of the humans, as per your position in the hospital sector. This one will attempt to gain access to more sensitive areas, while Senior Infiltrator Jin will blend in with the civilian populace to learn the general sentiment of the humans."

Kotori blinks twice. "The general sentiment?"

"Affirmative." Duugo says. "The Founders have bequeathed this Senior Observer of the Seventh Class with an essential mission. We are not only to gather intelligence on the humans, but to undermine and destabilize their society at all possible points of entry. This one will gather additional Changelings over time, as per Founder Treyza's explicit orders."

"You have spoken to Founder Treyza?" Kotori asks, trying to hide their emotional response. "This one has never spoken to a Founder directly... only the executive assistants."

"You are too inexperienced to warrant a visit with the Founders." Duugo coolly says. "This one is already an experienced Observer, as is Observer Jin. The two of us were both stationed on the ancient world of Earth, long before your cells became viable for a spawning pod."

Duugo's relatively mild disposition shifts slightly as it momentarily reminisces on the glory it experienced during the Energy Wars.

"Observer Jin and this one learned countless truths regarding the nature of the Earth's mud-dwelling species. We are both adaptable enough to blend in with any populace, as are many other well-known and respected Seventh and Eighth-class Changelings. Perhaps someday, you too will obtain some renown."

Kotori lowers its head. "This one contemplates. This one comprehends."

Duugo raises its hand flippantly.

"Let us split apart. Kotori. You will continue to remain in the hospital district. Jin and this one will go our separate ways. Humans are terrible at telling Goblins apart. To a human, creatures of other species always look similar to one another, but if we remain together in a group of three, they will be able to identify us more easily."

"Kotori acts in an especially eye-catching manner." Jin says, nodding along to Duugo's words. "The humans will be more likely to catch us if they notice us always traveling with Kotori."

"One last thing." Duugo adds, before reaching into the pocket of their tattered, raggedy clothing. The Changeling pulls out a tiny, blackened marble. "Kotori. You will swallow this device."

The junior Changeling looks at its seniors with confusion. "This is... a self-immolation nanite vessel?"

"Affirmative." Duugo says. "If the humans discover you due to your inexperience and dramatic manner of speaking, you must activate it without hesitation. It will annihilate your body down to its last atom, preventing them from uncovering any essential truths about your Changeling biology. Typically, these are only given to Apprentice Observers and above, but since your mission was previously not of critical importance to the Volgrim as a whole, you were not required to possess one. Times have changed."

"But... this one is still only an Initiate... a Junior..." Kotori says, while cautiously taking the marble from his senior's fingers.

"If you wish to stay on this mission, you must swallow the SIN-V." Duugo says. "Senior Observer Jin and this one have both swallowed ours. If you do not comply, we will forcibly end your assignment here."

"Of course. This one contemplates, and this one comprehends." Kotori says, before leaning its head back and swallowing the orb in one smooth motion.

"Excellent. We will all take our leave, now." Duugo says, before turning around and climbing the sheer cliffside without fear. "Junior Observer. Do not allow the humans to uncover your identity. If they do, it will spell a crisis for our Founders."

"Yes, Senior Observer." Kotori says, while offering a bow.

Jason, Fiona, and Blinker leave Phoebe behind in the Core to handle the important organizational matters demanding her attention. As humanity's premier innovator and inventor, her input is always necessary for major logistical decisions.

But for the other three, and in particular, Blinker, they mostly stick to dealing with organizational details on Tarus II.

The Wordsmith teleports himself, his mind-wife, and Blinker back to the city center. When they arrive, he immediately beelines for the hospital district to look for Belial.

"Hey, Sammy!" Fiona calls out when they finally locate the succubus. "Guess what? I changed my name!"

She quickly fills Belial on on the details, to which the former Second Emperor appears totally fine with.

"Great! New name! I was thinking it was getting awkward having two Phoebes around," Belial says, while nudging Jason playfully. "You should have given her a better name from the start."

"For the record," Blinker interrupts, holding up a finger. "I still like Penny more! I'm gonna keep calling her Penny, because she's as cute as a dime!"

"Hmm. Penny is a cute name too," Belial says, winking at Fiona. "But I'll stick with Fiona. Anyway, what's up? Don't tell me you guys came all the way here just for this?"

Fiona shakes her head. "Not quite. We actually found out something important."

The four of them walk inside a small hospital administrative hut, one currently empty due to Grima having a day off. Little bits of technology, broken T-REX's, and other assorted junk sit in piles. Jason illuminates the room with his Wordsmithing, then recounts the entire recording he watched to Belial. The more he talks of the Volgrim's plans, the quieter she becomes.

"Changelings, huh?" Belial mutters. "Hmm. I am familiar with their handiwork. Unfortunately, during the Energy Wars, we never got to learn how exactly they change their forms. What I do know is that their shapeshifting abilities are nowhere near as convenient as mine."

"What do you mean?" Jason asks.

"Well, I can change my body's appearance in seconds. I can mimic voices, physical attributes, all sorts of things. I'm not a mind-reader, and by no means a perfect infiltrator or anything. I can still slip-up and reveal my false identity by saying the wrong thing or acting uncharacteristically. However, one thing I know for certain is that Changelings cannot change their appearances at will. They have some sort of... long-term changing function."

"Like, maybe they need to go dormant for a period of time?" Fiona asks. "Or perhaps they have some technology or tool that changes how they look?"

"Something like that..." Belial reluctantly says. "One big advantage they have over my abilities is that their bodies fully 'become' that of their target. If you were to knock me out and cut me open while I was mimicking Jason, you'd immediately know I was a demon. My demonic physiology doesn't change internally. A careful probe could 'out' me. But that's not the case with Changelings. They can fundamentally transform into biologically identical replicants of a target species."

"Wait!" Blinker interjects. "Does that mean if they copied you, they could copy your powers too?"

"No, no. Certainly not." Belial says, shaking her head. "Changelings can mimic my appearance, my voice, my mannerisms, and all of my other features quite well. But magical powers? Super-abilities? Not a chance. For this reason, Changelings never attempt to mimic demon or monsters of a magical nature."

Jason's gaze turns sharp. "So what you're saying is they tend to become Humans, Minotaurs, Goblins, Orcs, and other monsters lacking magical abilities?"

"Yes. Exactly." Belial nods.

"But..." Fiona says, sighing. "There are well over a million humans and monsters already among our people. We might be able to filter by those who came to visit us after the Founders' broadcast, but even so, their biology is going to be difficult to tell apart."

"Not just those who came after," Jason says with a warning tone. "Those who came before, too. I bet Unarin would have sent Changelings here as soon as possible, in advance of the broadcast. Samantha, didn't you say once that the Volgrim are ageless and immortal? They don't die?"

The succubus nods. "That's right. The same is true of Changelings. There were countless Changelings among the humans and monsters of Earth. No doubt, some of them are extremely adept at camouflaging themselves to blend in with native populaces. Only Novices and Juniors would stick out like sore thumbs."

Jason glances around Grima's office absentmindedly.

"Hmm. It's going to be tough tracking them down. If we can just find one Changeling, I can use my Wordsmithing to scour for any discrepancies in their biology. Fiona can make a magical tool that will automatically weed out every Changeling in our midst."

Fiona throws up her hands. "Yeah, but finding the first one is going to be the hardest part! I say for now we focus on the Lazarus Tower. It won't take much longer before we can complete it. I've even designed a new system for it that you'll find incredible."

"You did?" Jason asks, bewildered. "When did you have the time to do that?"

"Jason... I sit in your Mind Realm all day long." Fiona says, staring at him bluntly. "I have more time than you'd ever imagine. Plus, when you sleep at night, all your excess mental energy boosts my thinking speed. And I never need sleep either, so... that helps a lot."

Jason blushes. "Ah. Right. My bad..."

Blinker flies off Jason's shoulder.

"Well, until the demons get here, I can help out a bit! I'll go fly around and see if I can catch anyone acting suspicious! With my fairy magic, I'll be totally invisible, just you watch!"

Jason rubs his chin. "That's a good idea. Catching someone when they think they're being sneaky... it's the oldest trick in the book. Who needs a spy camera when you have an illusionist fairy helper?"

Blinker gives Jason a cute little salute, then teleports away, hiding herself from the outside world.

After she departs, Jason glances at Belial.

"I know you were thinking of heading into Hell to do some spying, but until I handle the Hidden Emperors, I'd like it if you could stay on Tarus II. Once I deal with them, you can leave."

"Also," Fiona says, "Sammy, it would be great if you could help me out a little with Cassiel. And by 'me' I mean my physical self, Phoebe."

"Why do you need my help?" Belial asks. "I doubt she'll like me, since I'm a demon and all..."

"Well, Phoebe is always busy, and so am I." Fiona explains. "Jason's not a great choice either, since he's a man. We do have the Archangels, but they won't be sticking around on a permanent basis. If you transform into Phoebe, you can get a little comfier with Cassiel, maybe draw her out of her shell. Besides, you're the most intimately familiar with me, so you probably won't draw any suspicion. You just need to get Cassiel acclimated back into greater society."

Belial chews her lower lip. "I... I don't know. I don't particularly detest angels, but I won't say I have any good feelings toward them. And the Archangels, especially.. I know they loathe me."

"By the way," Jason says, looking at Belial intently. "Does the name 'Daughter of Heaven' mean anything to you?"

"Daughter of Heaven?!" Belial asks, a flicker of shock crossing her face. "How do you know that name?"

"Um. It's... apparently Cassiel's identity." Jason answers, wincing when he observes Belial's pupils dilate in horror. "She's also known as-"

"Blood Reaper!" Belial gasps! "The Child of the Light! You're telling me... she is the angel we rescued? The mightiest of the Lazarites? Slayer of Emperor Red Raven?!"

"Well. Yeah." Jason grunts. "Is... is she that scary?"

"Scary?! She was a terrifying existence!" Belial exclaims, before hurriedly lowering her voice. "Aside from the Archangels, not a single angel was feared more than Blood Reaper! How on Earth can Cassiel be the Blood Reaper?! She should be dead!"

"I don't know." Jason answers. "But she's alive now. If you don't want to speak to her, I'll understand."

"Do you know her real name?" Fiona asks.

Belial slowly shakes her head. "...No. I don't think any demon does. All we know is that she appeared at some point around the year 1700 and began slaughtering demons en-masse. We never knew where she came from, what her origins were, or even how she looked. She always wore shining golden armor. Her aura was... it was terrifying. I never fought her myself, but Satan did."

"Did he win or lose?" Jason asks.

"He won. Of course. She was no match for the First Emperor. But then again, how could any Lazarite possibly beat Satan's Ultimate Offense and Defense? She did her part though, and held him back long enough for Camael to smite a different Emperor dead. Satan was... not happy about that."

Belial sags into a small, goblin-sized chair. Her body seems to become exhausted merely from contemplating these past events.

"The Blood Reaper... to think she was such a young, beautiful looking woman. Fair white hair, a face no parent could deny... she was the vicious and bloodthirsty menace that terrorized demonkind. And look at her now. She's not even a shadow of her former self."

The succubus hesitates.

"It's... tragic. To think such a figure would fall to such a state. I can only imagine what Gressil did to her."

"I'd rather not." Fiona mumbles. "Poor thing."

Several seconds pass while Belial weighs Jason's request in her mind.

"...Alright. I'll do it. I'll try to help... Cassiel... reintegrate. I don't think I'll mimic Phoebe, though. That simply feels wrong."

Belial stands up. She shifts her skin color from red to black, recedes her horns, and changes her hair color. After also changing her clothes and other features, she becomes a conventionally attractive dark-skinned human woman with a face only somewhat different from her normal appearance.

Jason smiles. "Cute."

Fiona nods absentmindedly. "Yeah... very cute... cute as heck."

"Stop. You'll make me blush." Belial says. "When you see me like this, you can call me Lily. It's the name of a... friend of mine."

Jason blinks. "A friend named Lily? Err, does she have dark skin too?"

Belial raises an eyebrow. "Yes. Why?"

"And does she live on Hell Harbor?" Jason asks.

"She does..." Belial mutters. "Don't tell me you met her?"

Jason shoots a dirty glance at Fiona.

"Yeah... you could say that."

Fiona sticks her tongue out.

"Ehehe... oops. She was very friendly!"

"I'll bet she was." Belial says with a chuckle.

Part 349: Hope Awakens

Annette sits beside Hope's bed, quietly watching over the Wordsmith while he sleeps. The hours stretch into days, and visitors come and go, but aside from eating food delivered to her by various medical staff and occasionally saying hello to her sister when Debra drops by, she remains content to sit beside the man she loves.

Eventually, a week after his return, the Wordsmith finally awakens from his coma.

Hope's eyes flutter open. He remains motionless, dazed and confused by his surroundings. Jason's clone stares at the dim ceiling-mounted lights, then slowly moves his eyes around as he tries to gather his wits.

Hope swallows heavily, but fails to make a sound, due to his dry, parched throat. An intense thirst bubbles up in his brain, making him feel like a wild animal that has choked on desert dirt for months.

He lolls his head to the right, then to the left, where his heart skips a beat. He finds 'Amelia' sitting beside his bed, reading a book. When she notices Hope's head moving ever so slightly, Amelia nearly jumps out of her skin. She drops the book, stands up, and turns to face him.

"Hope! Hope... you're awake! How are you feeling?"

The Wordsmith blinks a few times. He opens his mouth and licks his dried lips.

"Oh! You must be thirsty. Here, one second..."

Amelia grabs a plastic water bottle from a set of ten beside her chair. She props Hope's head up, and helps him greedily gulp and choke the water down until it sufficiently wets his palate.

"Cough... cough... where am... I?"

Amelia lays Hope's head back against his pillow, then pulls up her chair so she can sit facing his bed.

"Well. A lot happened, Hope. A lot. Um. We rescued you... from... from Gressil's prison..."

The mere mention of Gressil's name makes terror explode in the Wordsmith's eyes. A jolt of electric pain fires from his heart, making him jerk abruptly in bed and whip his eyes around.

"No.. no.. no... not him! Not..."

Hope raises his arms to swat at the air, but his movements appear clunky and uncoordinated. He abruptly slaps his own face, startling himself and making his adrenaline skyrocket even further.

Gently, Amelia presses on the Wordsmith's arms and holds them in place.

"Calm down, Hope. Nobody's going to hurt you. I'm here, now. Amelia's here. Remember me? I love you. I love you so much... listen to my voice..."

After several minutes, Amelia manages to somewhat calm Hope down. Sweat drips off his face as he tries to comprehend his circumstances.

"Arms... my arms... gone? Not gone? What- where did they go? Why they are back againnn...?"

He slurs his words, suffering from disorientation. But even so, Amelia quietly listens to him and explains what happens.

As more time passes, she manages to fully explain the situation to Hope. He calms down more and more as he realizes his current situation is not, in fact, a trick designed by Gressil to lower his defenses. Even so, the phantom memory of horrible pain wracks his mind, making him mentally flash-back to those horrible moments, such as when Gressil took a sharp knife, cut into his shoulder...

"Ahh! It hurts! It hurts!" Hope screams, grabbing his left shoulder. He touches it all over, checking to make sure his arm is still attached. "He cut it! He cut it off! Why did he do that? WHY?!"

"Jason grew it back." Amelia whispers. "He... he fixed you up, Hope. You're fine now. Everyone's here for you."

"I'mnotfine!" Hope mumbles loudly, slurring his words again. He blinks heavily as dizziness wracks his mind. "Itallhurts... ribs... throat... legs... ahh! AHH! My legs! My LEGS!"

"We grew those back, too..." Amelia says, fighting back tears. "You're fine now, Hope. You're okay. You're alright. Nobody's going to hurt you again."

For the next half-hour, Hope rants and raves, still not sure if he's experiencing another one of his delusions. Compared to the physical torture inflicted upon him by Gressil, the prison-warden's mental means proved far, far more long-lasting and sinister.

When he calms down again, Amelia returns to explaining what happened. She conveys not only how Hope was rescued, but all of the events he missed. Hope discovers, to his horror, that while Gressil was torturing him, humanity lost millions of people during the Stormbringer Attack. Jason's daughter died. Kar died. Neil was taken prisoner. Beelzebub self-detonated, killing a million people in one massive thermonuclear attack.

Then he learns about what transpired after. Not only the attack on Hell Harbor, but the arrival of the Archangels, the transformation of the Cherubiim, and its battle against the Volgrim.

"The Volgrim... they're involved, now?" Hope asks.

"Yes. I heard from Jason yesterday. He got a visit from someone named 'Kordonis.' Also, the Demon Emperors are planning a second big attack, but Jason seems confident he can stop them."

Hope grits his teeth. "Stop them?! Jason is worthless! He couldn't save anybody! Not even Kar! Kar was my BEST FRIEND!"

Amelia winces.

"Jason... is different now. More like you. Losing Daisy... it changed something in him. You'll understand, soon. Oh, and you should probably know..."

She hesitates.

"Everyone knows my real identity now. They know I'm not 'Amelia.' They know I'm really Annette."

Hope blinks twice.

"Annette... wait, you remember, too? But... but I thought the memory-blockers..."

Annette smiles at Hope.

"It's not your fault. Gressil's anti-magic energy... It erased your mental blocks. But don't worry. I'm fine the way things are, now. I'm Amelia too, you know? And if you want me to be Amelia again, you can just block my memories once more."

The Wordsmith sags against his pillow.

"So that's why you've been calling me 'Hope.' We agreed that you would always call me Jason, but I overlooked... I'm sorry. I failed you, and everyone else. And... and Gressil... he..."

"Let's not talk about that monster." Amelia says, her smile tinged with pain. "He won't hurt you ever again. Look. Jason made you a... friend?"

Amelia points toward the far corner of the room, parallel to to Hope's headboard. When he turns his head to his right and follow her finger, he nearly jumps out of his skin! In the dimly lit room, a man in shining armor stands at attention, his brilliant blonde hair, light blue eyes, and fair skin giving him a heroic aura unlike any other.

Hope nearly chokes on his own spit. "K-King Arthur?!"

"A construct. Not a reanimated body." Amelia clarifies. "Jason made him from... well, I don't know, exactly. He's not a human. Think of him like a robot or something. He doesn't have a soul. He's just something Jason made to protect you."

The surprise of seeing a guy creepily standing in the corner gives way to a different set of indescribable emotions. Hope examines King Arthur closely, noticing that he doesn't wear any specific facial expression, but instead gazes at the opposite corner blankly.

"A construct. Right. That's... okay. And why is he here?"

"To protect you." Amelia explains. "I don't know how strong this fake Arthur is, but Jason claims he can fight Dukes and even Emperors."

She pauses.

"I fought Arthur, you know. Well, not me, but Amelia. Since I possess her memories, I remember the battle. She ultimately lost to him, but after he died, she dug up his body and enslaved it with her draconic magic. That's how she was able to bring him out to fight the Archdemon on Polaris."

Hope licks his dried lips. "More water, please."

After Annette passes Hope another bottle of water, he spends a minute chugging it down, finishing off every last drop. When he finishes, Hope casually drops the bottle off the side of his bed. He lifts his right hand to stare at his regrown fingers, while innumerable dark thoughts cloud his mind.

"I have to tell everyone you've awoken." Annette says. "They asked me to alert them the instant you woke up, but, well... I wanted to spend some time with you alone, first."

"Thank you." Hope says, his voice a whisper. He turns to Annette to smile tenderly at her. "I... I don't think I could have faced the others so soon. I'd rather spend time with you... not Jason."

"I know." She replies, reaching out to grasp his hand. "I'm just glad you're okay. You're still alive. We can work through what happened together."

He nods.

"Amel- Annette. I... I don't want us to have to lie to each other, anymore. So, after this, why don't we just change you back to your original self? I love you, not Amelia. I'm sorry you had to go along with my selfish desires, six years ago. It was thoughtless of me to force you into that position."

"You didn't force me." Annette answers. "I offered. I wanted you to be happy. Besides... I'm just an ordinary woman. It's expected that a plain Jane like me wouldn't catch your interest. The Black Queen is so much more... fun. She's so much cooler than I ever was. I don't want to go back to being an ordinary woman again."

"That's not true." Hope counters. "Amelia was never the person I thought she was. When it was just Jason, before I existed, she cut open his throat and left him an invalid. Compared to her, you're so much more compassionate. I love you, Annette. Not Amelia."

"But... but you're wrong!" Annette protests. "I may be Annette, but I'm Amelia too! I have all of her memories. I'm not purely one or the other. And I wouldn't want you to take her memories from me, either."

Listening to the force behind her words, Hope creases his brow, but ultimately relents.

"...Alright. But I won't lock away your memories again. And I'll call you Annette, instead. Is that fine?"

"Yes. I'd like that." Annette says, with a smile.

The two of them spend a few hours catching up, reminiscing on their lives spent together.

Eventually, Annette pulls away.

"It's time. I need to tell the others you've woken up."

Hope sighs.

"Okay. Just do it. Let's get this over with."

"Hey..." Annette whispers, gently touching his arm. "Give Jason a chance. I know you hate him more than life itself... but he has changed, and for the better. He lost his little girl. He lost his best friend. I feel when I look at him that his eyes have become... sharper. Like yours."

The Wordsmith snorts. "I'll believe it when I see it."

Annette stands up, walks across the room, and touches a button on the wall, pre-installed for her convenience. She walks back over and sits down. Fewer than five minutes pass before the door to the hut opens and Jason walks in, flanked by Phoebe, Belial, and Blinker.

"Hope! Hope, you're awake!" Phoebe exclaims, beaming a sunshine-smile at him. Her smile deflates after she remembers his condition. "H-how are you feeling? Are you doing okay?"

It takes Hope a few moments to respond.

"Yes. I... I think I am. Annette explained everything to me. I know you all rescued me from... from the prison."

Annette smiles guiltily. "I told Hope about what happened to spare you the trouble. I also caught him up on all the current events. He knows about the Volgrim and stuff."

"How long has he been awake?" Jason asks, shooting a mildly annoyed look at Annette.

"Few hours." Hope answers. "Don't blame her. I asked her not to tell anyone until I got my bearings."

Jason waves off Hope's worries. "It's fine. I'm just glad you woke up... pal."

"I'm not your pal." Hope mutters. "Don't give me that nonsense."

As Jason's group steps into the room, another figure follows in their wake, one that draws Hope's attention due to her pale, translucent body. The Wordsmith flicks his gaze away from Jason, then weakly rubs his eyes.

"Huh? Another Phoebe? Why is she a ghost?"

"Oh, hi. I'm Fiona." Fiona says, waving at Hope. "Um. Well, I'm a clone of Phoebe, sort of. A spirit-clone. Jason made me after he lost Solomon's Crown. I help him out with stuff."

"Solomon's Crown..." Hope murmurs. He doesn't say anything else, but in his heart, another bolt of shock fires through his veins.

Where did the Crown go? I'm not wearing it!

Not wanting to alert Jason to his knowledge of the Crown, Hope keeps silent. Instead, he frowns at Jason again, this time, with a look of visible disgust.

"Hold on. You cloned Phoebe?"

"I had to." Jason says. "Well, I guess it wasn't absolutely necessary, but I needed a way to protect my mind from Ose and others like her. With Solomon gone-"

Hope sits up straighter in his bed. "That's beside the point! Six years ago, you cloned me but wouldn't give me a clone of Phoebe because you said it would 'feel weird,' yet when the time came, you made a clone for your own purposes! What kind of goddamned hypocrite are you?!"

Fiona and Phoebe exchange wordless glances.

"To be fair..." Phoebe says, directing her words to Jason. "You didn't even ask me before you cloned me. I'm still annoyed about that, if only a little."

"Cloning without consent." Hope snarls. "Typical Jason."

The original Wordsmith makes no attempt to defend himself. He bows his head guiltily and sighs.

"Yeah. I fucked up a lot of things. Countless friends died because of me. I regret many of my past choices now... but regret won't bring the dead back."

Seeing Jason's contrite expression, Hope's anger fades. He sags back against the bed and shakes his head.

"Whatever. At least you know you did wrong."

Blinker flies over to Hope and lands on his shoulder.

"Hey, big guy. I brought you some cake!"

"Hope glances at the tiny fairy. "Cake?"

"Mhm! It's right here in my spatial storage!"

Blinker motions with her hands to make two plates, each with a slice of carrot cake, plop down on Hope's outstretched legs.

"It's a... get-well-soon cake." She says.

Hope smiles weakly.

"Blinker. I'm sorry about Kar."

"Me too." She says. "But don't worry. Kar's still alive. Mephisto has his soul... but we might be able to get him back, someday."

"Really?" Hope asks.

"Yeah." She says with a nod. "And... even if we can't... well, I don't know if you heard, but I'm pregnant. I'll carry on the crocodile lineage myself."

"Congratulations." Hope says, his smile filling with warmth. "If you'd like, I can be your children's god-uncle."

"That would be swell!" Blinker chirps.

Hope passes Annette a slice of cake. The two of them quietly begin to eat, with Hope especially enjoying the sensation of food entering his starved stomach.

"So." Hope says to Jason in between bites. "What's all this about a Volgrim recording? Annette mentioned it in passing, but didn't give me too many details."

Jason gestures to Phoebe, standing beside Belial. "Show him."

Phoebe pulls out a small drone from her pocket, one pre-loaded with the recording. The drone flies into the center of the room, then projects an image of the Founders hovering on their platforms inside a huge arena. For the first time ever, Hope gets a good look at the aliens ruling the galaxy. He continues silently eating, while Jason, Phoebe, and Belial plop down in seats Jason Wordsmithed along the edges of the room.

As Hope watches, he pays careful attention not only to the statements and truths uttered by the speech participants, but the hidden bits they only allude to.

"These... Kolvaxians." Hope murmurs. "What are they?"

Unlike Jason, who picked up bits of information through Marie and others, Hope hasn't learned much about the Volgrim or their enemy. Jason periodically pauses the video to explain to Hope all the bits he's missed out on. Belial fills him in on others, such as information regarding the Changelings.

When Dosena opens her hand to reveal a certain Heroic Artifact, Hope nearly chokes on his last bite of cake.

"Puhak! What?! Solomon's Crown?!"

Jason nods seriously to Hope's confusion, not noticing the other minute details of his clone's expression.

"Yeah. I mentioned before that I lost Solomon's Crown, right? Well, it turns out the Volgrim are the ones who stole it from me. I don't know how, why, or when they pulled it off, but I'm just as shocked as you are. We cannot let it remain in their hands."

While Jason intently gazes at the holographic image of Dosena hovering the Crown a few inches above her palm, Hope quickly suppresses his panic.

This... how did this happen? Wasn't I wearing the Crown when Gressil... but then, how did it end up in the Volgrim's grasp?! Jason thinks the Volgrim took the Crown from him, but he doesn't know Solomon used his own Wordsmithing to transfer the Crown to me!

A cold chill descends on Hope's bones.

Gressil... he must have somehow taken the Crown from me and given it to the Volgrim. But why would he do that? Or was it a coincidence? My memory is so spotty... I don't remember anything before... before he...

When Hope mentally flashes back to the time he spent trapped in Gressil's cell, a panic attack overcomes him. His joints lock up, and his teeth chatter, while he stares vacantly at his knees. The plate in his trembling hand shakes visibly, while he tries to fight off flashes of that hideous, bird-like face hovering over his own.

He cut me. He cut me. He cut me. I don't like it. I don't want it. Stop, please! Stop, it hurts! It hurts!!

"Hope!" Annette calls out, startling the Wordsmith and making him drop his plate. "Calm down. What's wrong? Do you want some water? Are you okay?"

Hope's eyes flicker around the room as he returns to reality. His panic subsides, but that cold fear settles back into his bones, making him feel as if someone evil is watching him.

"No... no... I don't want- I don't need anything. I just- the memories... I can't stop thinking... AHHH!"

The Wordsmith grabs his head and starts to rock back and forth as a second, even more visceral panic attack hits him. This time, the images of Gressil's face stab into his eyes like pointed barbs, making him blink furiously while tears drip from his sides.

"STOP HURTING ME! STOP IT! I DON'T WANT IT!" Hope screams, startling everyone in the room. Jason and Phoebe both jump up, but Belial is the first to reach his side.

Before Hope can fall any further into his deluded state, Belial gently grabs his forehead and injects magical energy into his mind.

A wave of exhaustion overtakes Jason's clone. Hope's body convulses a few times before he slumps backward and Belial gently guides him into a laid-down position.

When the room goes quiet again, Belial keeps her hand placed on Hope's head, a look of sadness on her face.

"His trauma... he was trying to keep it suppressed." She mutters. "But that isn't as easy to do as it might seem. He won't be the same as he was before. We'll have to be a lot gentler with him."

She removes her hand and lifts her gaze to look at a moderately panicked Annette.

"Hope... is he going to be okay?" Annette asks.

"I don't know." Belial whispers. "I'm not a mental health expert. This is all I can do. What he needs more than anything is a therapist."

Jason steps toward the foot of the bed.

"I could erase his memories." Jason says. "I could make him forget about Gressil."

"No!" Annette says, standing up. "You mustn't! That wouldn't work, and it would only mess him up worse!"

"How so?" Jason asks.

"Hope blocked out my memory." Annette reminds Jason. "But Gressil undid those blocks! If you block out Hope's memory, you'll only leave him vulnerable if Gressil shows up again! You can't do that!"

Jason winces. "Right. I forgot about that. Well... I don't know what to do then, either. I feel as if I can't leave Hope like he is, now."

Phoebe loops her arm around Jason's elbow. "PTSD isn't something a person can get over easily, remember? We have to let him cope in his own way. Maybe we can find a decent therapist among the people here?"

"Right. What about... Makoto Ueda?" Jason asks. "He helped me out in the past. Has anyone seen him recently?"

The Wordsmith glances around the room, but not one person gives him an answer.

"Makoto... he was that Japanese fellow, right?" Belial asks. "Hung out with Neil a lot?"

"Yeah. Him." Jason says. "Have you seen him? I know he survived Stormbringer. I talked to him not long after."

Belial shrugs. "Haven't heard from him in at least a week. But then again, I'm pretty busy at the hospital."

"I haven't seen him, either." Phoebe mutters. "Jason, why don't you try locating him?"

The Wordsmith nods. "Locate."

A few seconds later, he frowns.

"Locate."

Twice, he tries to find Makoto Ueda, but both times, he fails.

"What the hell?" Jason mutters. "Is he... dead?! I didn't hear anything about this."

"Neither did I." Phoebe says. "I'll ask Hans. He always knows where Makoto is. The two of them are quite close."

Jason chews his lower lip. "Alright. In the meantime, Sam, why don't you stay here with Hope for a while? I need to finish the last bit of work on the Lazarus Tower. Let me know if he wakes up."

Belial nods. "I can do that. See you later, Jason, Phoebe, Fiona."

"I'll stay here too." Blinker says. "Bye, guys!"

"Bye."

Jason and his wives leave the other three women behind with Hope. After they depart, Blinker crinkles her nose.

"Oh. Hope spilled cake crumbs all over the place. Welp, waste not, want not!"

She uses her telekinesis to grab up all the crumbs and form them into a single super-crumb, then she brings that crumb to her mouth to munch on it.

"Mmm. Not bad."

Annette sighs. "Blinker... you're weird."

"Yup."

Part 350: Ose's Ascension

Hell Harbor. One week after the Cherubiim attack which left millions of demons dead.

Hundreds of noblesse demons, including high-ranking Barons, Dukes from most of the Seven Hells, and their Emperors as well, all gather and sit upon ornately crafted demonstone pews in a wide-open, barren field, where a makeshift obelisk and ceremonial alter has been erected. The midday sun warms the planet, but an awning offers shade for the demon elites, allowing them to avoid the heat. Not that it would cause their durable bodies any noticeable discomfort, but still, the image and prestige matters.

These nobles sit in groups, all of them sticking to their own Hells. Many demons from the First Hell gaze at the other Hells in astonishment.

"Wow..." Vepar says. "There really are other Hells that exist. You never see them all in one place like this."

The poison-spewing demoness with a melted face gazes in surprise at the other Emperors and Dukes, while beside her sits Abby, the Baron of Happy Thoughts. Abby beams smiles full of sunshine and rainbows at everyone around, while happily kicking her feet under the pew.

"Oh yeah, the other Emperors and stuff totally exist! They live secluded lives on other worlds, so us country bumpkins never get to see them! It makes sense they'd all show up though, since this is my pwecious-wecious Ose's big coronation ceremony! She's going to officially become the Second Emperor after receiving the First Emperor's blessing! How exciting!!"

"Big changes are coming to Hell." Vepar mutters. "Or, I guess I should say, the First Hell. It's so strange hearing that. Ever since I got my memories back, I'm not sure what is real and what isn't."

Abby's excited expression momentarily dulls as she spots several empty pews.

"But what a bunch of stinkers! The Hell of Lust didn't come here, and neither did the Hell of Isolation! They totally stood up my favorite girl, Ose! And even that Yama fellow, he ignored us too! What the heck, man?! This is supposed to be Ose's big day!"

Beside Abby, another Baron speaks up, a male with jewels embedded in his body.

"The Hell of Isolation generally does not care about trivial matters or those involving the other Hells," Orias says, wearing a simple set of black and brown robes. Having taken a break from his mining efforts, he decides to visit Ose's coronation as a sign of respect. "As for Yama's Hell, I know that he cares little for Ose. But the Hell of Lust..."

Orias frowns.

"It is more than a little unorthodox for the Hell of Lust not to appear here. Since they are the only Hell lacking any Emperors, they tend to keep up appearances in order to remain friendly with all the other Hells. The last thing they would ever want is to anger one of the Emperors seated here today, let alone Ose."

"Why would they skip Ose's coronation, then?" Vepar asks. "Doesn't that seem like political suicide? They should get on as good of terms with the Second Emperor as they possibly can."

The Baron of the Stars glances at Vepar's shriveled face for a moment, then looks away.

"There may be more to this matter than we can fathom."

As the Barons from the First Hell continue to talk, the lone remaining Duke from the First Hell sits by himself, clearly bored out of his mind.

"Damn..." Bael mutters. "Everyone's gone now. Agares bit the dust. Beelzebub blew up. Mephisto got promoted. Barbatos got possessed by a friggin' Archangel... heck, do I even count as a Duke? Ain't I some kinda weird half-Emperor fella?"

He crosses his arms and pouts.

"We gotta get more dudes and dudettes in the First Hell. It's gettin' all lonely here and stuff."

While Bael sulks, Abby jumps rows to sit beside him.

"Bael! I'm still so shocked to see you in Ose's body! It's a real surprise to everyone! How are you feeling?"

Bael turns his head to look at the chipper demoness, wincing due to the brilliant beams of sunshine-energy radiating from her smile. Despite the formality of the occasion,

Abby still wears a set of punk-rocker clothes, including a T-shirt with a heavy metal band logo on it, and tight little booty-shorts to show off her... assets.

"Heya, Abby." Bael grunts. "Long time no chat. Ain't you a succubus? Shouldn't you be with the Hell of Lust?"

"Nahhhh!" Abby chirps. "I wanna be in Ose's Hell! I'm her biggest fan, you know! Although now that her soul and body have been separated..."

Abby frowns.

"Hmm. I don't know what I like more. Ose's boobies, or her bubbly personality!"

Bael stares blankly at the Baron of Happy Thoughts. "Uhh... her bubbly... personality? We're talkin' about Ose, right?"

"Mhm! She's always so confident and sassy! I love Ose lots and lots! I wanna get all smoochy with her, lay her down, and reach between her-"

"I get the picture." Bael says, holding up his palm. "The two of you were Barons, right? Ain't you a bit late to chase after her now?"

Abby's excitement drops visibly. "Well, yeah... to be honest, I didn't realize she'd become a Duke or an Emperor, someday. I got so used to the status quo that I kept putting my feelings aside to focus on... demon business. And now she's so far ahead of me, I don't think I'll ever reach her... uuuu..."

Bael flinches as tears well up in Abby's eyes. Her demonic weakness, that of constantly wearing her emotions on her sleeve, rears up right in front of the demon least capable of handling them.

"H-hey, sister, you don't gotta cry..." Bael mumbles. He awkwardly loops an arm over Abby's shoulder while pulling her in close. "Maybe I can, uh... I dunno. Maybe I can put in a word for ya! Yeah! I can get you and some others promoted to Dukes. That's just what our Hell needs at a time like this. Then ya won't be so far from Ose after all!"

Abby's tears instantly dry up. She looks into Bael's eyes and smiles like a ten-thousand watt bulb. "Really?! You'd do that for me? Oh, Bael! You're the best! And now you're even better because you're inside Ose's cute, tight little-"

"Yeah, yeah." Bael says, rolling his eyes and shoving her away. "None of that, now."

Ose and Mephisto, along with a handful of Ose's personal attendants, sit and stand behind the ceremonial obelisk, tending to her image, carefully filing her nails, grooming her hair, and pampering her body while also adjusting her clothes. For the first time, Bael's body wears more than just some a pair of leathery black underwear. For this occasion, Ose dons a set of formidable-looking golden and demonstone platemail armor, giving her a regal appearance nobody would ever expect from someone with Bael's appearance.

Long considered the most casual of demons, Bael never once bothered wearing excess clothing, nor did he take care of his appearance. Instead, the slovenly Duke of Pain simply ate, drank, and fought whenever he wanted, paying zero attention to how others perceived him.

Ose, on the other hand, takes her appearance seriously. In order to earn the respect of her peers, she goes to great lengths to ensure she can project the most frightening and commanding aura possible, one that will cow the other Emperors with a single glance.

Mephisto, hovering beside her, chitters to himself. "Ksss. You look sssplendid, Emperor Ossse. Never did I think Bael could appear ssso frightening. You may posssesss hisss original body, but your actionsss have given it an entirely new meaning. Nobody will look down upon you at thisss coronation."

Ose, now wearing a golden crown with seven spikes pointing upward, turns to look at Mephisto.

"Keep your empty words to yourself, Mephisto. I don't need your praise. I just need you to do your job. No screw-ups. Understand?"

Mephisto chuckles. "Do not worry. I have carefully allocated the one million sssoulsss you require. My assscensssion wasss not sssomething worth fretting over, but yoursss isss sssurely one the other Hellsss will pay clossse attention to."

"Good. I'm counting on you." Ose hisses. "I'd hate to have to transform into the Balrog and beat you to death, especially in front of all these distinguished guests. What a humiliation that would be."

The Emperor of Legion's cocky expression cracks at the threat of facing the one enemy more than capable of breaking apart his mist-body.

"Kekeke... there isss no need for threatsss. Look. The time isss nigh. You ssshould begin the ccceremony, now."

Ose glances up at the sun, then nods. She gestures to one of her demon Lord attendants, who walks around the obelisk, takes to the stage, and begins introducing Ose through her many accomplishments during and after the Energy Wars, up to and including the battle against the Cherubiim.

As that attendant talks, Ose glances at the lone human sticking out like a sore thumb among her fellow demon attendants. A little blonde woman with pale skin who remains utterly silent, no matter who looks at or speaks to her.

"Amy." Ose snaps. "Make yourself useful. Go and fetch me some water."

Ose's 'favorite' human slave doesn't reply. She merely turns and walks away, heading toward a nearby refreshments bar with all sorts of exotic food and drink sitting at the ready.

As Amy prepares her master a drink, Mephisto snorts contemptuously. "I don't know why you've alwaysss kept that sssame ssslave around, even for a hundred thousssand yearsss."

Ose shrugs. "Her identity was once quite important, among other humans. I enjoy torturing her broken little mind. Otherwise, it's none of your concern."

After Amy returns with a drink and Ose ensures her mouth is sufficiently lubricated, she tosses the glass away and turns to the stage.

A vicious smile spreads across Ose's face as her demon attendant finishes announcing her imminent arrival. The swells of demon cheers rises to a crescendo, and Ose begins to walk toward the destination of her ascension.

"Showtime."

Ose strides into view, drawing the attention of all the Emperors, Dukes, and Barons important enough to have earned an invitation to her lauded coronation. Despite fewer than a thousand spectators being present, not a single one is anyone less than a Labyrinth-shaking presence. Even among the monsters, only a few Orcs and a couple other monster royals receive invitations, chief among them being...

Ose shoots a glance toward the Hell of Calamity, where she spots Emperor Gorn's revived body, Emperor Crow, and Emperor Serena. She also spots Huul and Maltus, the First and Second Ancient Orcs.

But beside them sits another exalted figure. Ashura, the highest ranked Orc of them all, their fabled Zhurm, a figure who once thought himself too important to attend Ose's first strategic meeting, the one which the Cherubiim crashed. Perhaps, had Ashura come, the Cherubiim might have found a worthy competitor, though secretly, Ose doubts he could have accomplished much compared to herself.

Ashura's long, black hair sprouts out of his scalp in thick clumps, each strand as hard as iron. The wildly bushy and thick mane drapes down his shoulders, his back and to his feet, giving him the appearance of a ferocious Dire Wolf. His height, at nine feet tall, puts him among the largest and most intimidating of all the spectators present. He sticks out even compared to Gorn and the other Emperors, drawing more than a few eyeballs.

As Ose approaches the stage, all attention leaves the crowd to fall on her. Audible gasps go up as several Emperors widen their eyes.

That's Ose? I didn't know Bael's body could look so... ferocious. She has turned what was once a calm, coolheaded fellow into a world-conquering king!

Her golden armor seems at first somewhat tacky and overengineered, but at the same time, it also appears completely fitting for Bael's old body. He should have always looked this way!

A few eyes turn to look at the Duke of Pain among the rows, but Bael appears less than impressed by Ose's ostentatious display.

"The heck's up with all the gold and crap?" Bael mutters. "Sheesh. Talk about overdoing it. Ose makes me look like a walking circus. The heck would I need ta' wear all that armor for? My body's harder than any demonstone. And the shoulderpads, why are they so huge? Is she tryin' ta' embarrass me?"

Abby, however, glows with radiance. She beams even more excited looks of appreciation at Ose. "Wow, Ose! You can even make Bael's fat body look gorgeous! So stylish! That's why you're my girl! Eeeeee!!"

Bael glances at her. "H-hey. I'm not... I'm not fat..."

Abby ignores the look of pain on his face. "You know what I meant!"

Emperor Yardrat, seated among the Hell of Punishment's section, examines Ose's armor with a mixture of disdain and admiration.

Ose wants to overhaul Bael's image, to mold his old body into a weapon that can inspire awe among the other Emperors. Frankly, it's working. I hate to say it, but aside from my begrudging respect and fear for Bael's combat prowess, I never took him seriously, what with his low intelligence. Ose, on the other hand... she can turn his body into a weapon that would destroy any other Emperor. This ceremonial garb really only serves to bring her hidden 'threat' to the surface, making others more visibly aware of how dangerous she is.

Surprisingly, the Fourth Hell is still missing one crucial figure. Emperor Auger does not attend Ose's coronation, a fact that irks Ose when she notices. As Ose approaches the ceremonial altar, a look of disdain flicks across her face.

How about that. The Hell of Lust didn't show after all. Neither did the Hell of Isolation or the Hell of Corruption. For three of the Seven Hells to not attend my coronation... tsk. I'll have to punish them in a manner that will remind everyone why I am Second Emperor, now. And as for Emperor Auger... he must still think himself above me. I will remember his slight in the coming years...

Ose faintly smiles when she reaches her designated position. She sweeps her gaze across the First, Third, Fourth, and Fifth Hells. The many hundreds of attendees sit up a little straighter in their seats, eager to hear what she will say.

"Hello, everyone." Ose says, her quiet voice projecting outward with far more strength than it normally should. Magical enhancers build into her crown beam her words right into the ears of everyone present, working on fairy magic principles to enhance her speech to its greatest effect. "Today is a momentous day. Previously, I was elevated to the rank of Third Emperor by our great hero, the Duke of Pain. The purpose of my ascension was to quickly re-establish order over the human populace. There was no ceremony, and neither did I want there to be one."

"I have always considered myself a demoness who is more of a 'doer' than a 'talker.' Talk is cheap." Ose elaborates. "Pretty words may sway minds, but strong actions always do so. I also did not have the political capital or interest to bother with a fancy ceremony, but today is very, very different. Not only have I fortunately changed bodies with the legendary Duke of Pain, but I have retained all of his strengths, along with mine. The power and defense of the Balrog, mixed with the speed and agility of the fastest demon alive. In terms of physicality... not one of you is my equal. Not even the fabled Emperor Wolfram, who temporarily broke through the shackles which bound our species."

"Today, we stand at a crossroads." Ose continues. "The humans are soon to become a threat that not even I can suppress. Their leader, the Wordsmith, wields a power more oppressive than any other Hero before him. King Arthur, Joan of Arc, Solomon... not even the fabled Jepthath could compare to Jason Hiro's potential. Luckily, the boy is still young, and has not yet obtained enough time to further his abilities. So long as we strike soon, hard, and without mercy, we can put an end to his lineage, and humanity's rise. If we are fortunate, we may even be able to seize the Wordsmith's power for ourselves."

In a rare moment of humility, Ose offers a concession in her speech.

"Once, I thought myself capable of taking down the Wordsmith alone. Now, I know that is not possible. The Wordsmith is not an opponent any lone demon, no matter how powerful, can handle. It will require all of our efforts to defeat him. We will have to move swiftly and crush him before he can fortify humanity's remnants and rebuild them to a superior state. You all know how powerful humanity became, during the Energy Wars. Even with the Volgrim's assistance, we barely managed to defeat our enemies."

Ose smirks. "Of course, even this humble Baron achieved many worthy deeds, back in those ancient days. As I recall, it was my efforts which ultimately brought humanity to its knees. Not even the seemingly untouchable Marie Becker could stop me. In the end, we won back then, in large part, because of me. And so too shall we once again do so, because of me."

Ose lifts her hand and makes a beckoning motion. From the ground beneath her, Emperor Mephisto rises, holding a bone lantern in his hands.

This lantern, the same one previously owned by Emperor Valac, draws countless looks of greed. Several Emperors from the Hidden Hells can't help but wish they were capable of wielding its power for themselves. All of their Hells, long-stagnant due to the First Hell's monopoly on souls, can only sit stagnant and pray for crumbs and morsels from the First Hell's goodwill. Sadly, thanks to the last 100,000 years of demonic rule, not even Emperor Diablo would bolster the ranks of his rivals among the other Six Hells.

"Today, I will ascend to the rank of Emperor." Ose says, her voice eerily calm. "Before, my power was that of an ordinary Emperor, not dissimilar from any of you. I would gladly have placed myself among the higher ranks, but let us not mince words. Bael's body and my power have elevated me to a station not one of you could ever compare. I'm sure you're all wondering, the same as me. Just how powerful will I become, once I elevate my new body to the rank… of Emperor?"

"Will Heaven itself bow before me?" Ose ponders. "Or perhaps the universe itself will split, and the light of creation will shine upon me. I wonder… how fearsome will I become, compared to those ancient Primordials? To me, the Cherubiim did not seem that impressive at all."

Ose chuckles deep in her throat. She turns to expose a smile to Mephisto.

"Begin."

The Emperor of Legions nods at her. Mephisto reaches into his lantern to grab at a spot amidst its vast, inner reserves. In that spot where he stored a million human, demon, and monster souls, Mephisto coalesces his power to merge all of them into a single, unified Soul Pill, much like the one he granted Beelzebub, just six years before.

However.

Mephisto's confident expression cracks.

He frowns as he continues to move his boney hand around in that section of the Lantern, yet no matter where he reaches, he finds… nothing.

"Eh?"

Mephisto looks down at the lantern clutched in his left hand. He activates his necromantic magic to peer deep inside.

What he find shocks him to his core.

"What? Thisss… thisss cannot be…"

Ose continues to smile, but secretly, she shoots an impatient look at Mephisto.

"Anytime now." Ose says, suppressing her annoyance. "This is not the moment to be screwing around, Mephisto."

In a panic, Mephisto swishes his hand around inside the lantern's depths. The more he searches, the more frantic his expression becomes.

"No… no… how can thisss be?!"

Mephisto's voice, tinged with panic, makes not only Ose frown, but all of the demon leaders, too.

"Is something the matter?" Ose hisses, struggling to keep her simmering anger under control. "Don't tell me you... misplaced the souls."

Mephisto snaps his head up.

"The sssoulsss... no! Thisss isss... thisss isss unbelieveable! Every sssingle human sssoul in my lantern... they're all GONE!"

Mephisto's declaration makes all of the Hidden Emperors frown. Some of them whisper to one another, trying to ascertain the meaning behind his words. The more intelligent ones, such as Emperor Yardrat, remain silent and draw their own conclusions.

"What do you mean?" Ose growls. "This is no time for games, Mephisto. Everyone is watching."

"All the human sssoulsss are GONE!" Mephisto shrieks. "Don't you sssee?! They've vanissshed! I only posssessss demon and monssster sssoulsss! Nothing elssse! Where have all my preciousss sssoulsss gone?!"

A deep, unsettling dread washes over Ose's body as she realizes Mephisto is not, in fact, screwing with her for a quick laugh.

"That's not possible. You counted the souls right before we came here."

"I did!" Mephisto exclaims. "But in between thossse minutesss..."

Suddenly, one of the Hidden Emperors, Yardrat, stands up. The Emperor of the Void draws a considerable amount of attention, not only due to his status, but also the look of surprise on his face.

"E-Emperor Crow!" Yardrat bellows. "I've just received word from your sect! All of your human slaves... they've vanished!"

"Vanished?" Crow asks, not sure whether to believe him. "I left Duke Heron in charge during my absence. Are you saying two million slaves skipped away merrily under his watchful eye?"

"No! They didn't walk away, they simply disappeared, as if teleported into thin air!" Yardrat cries. "And furthermore-"

Before Yardrat can finish his sentence, one of Ose's attendants runs around the edge of the obelisk to her master's side before whispering something in Ose's ear.

"Since when?!" Ose snarls. "You're saying Amy is gone, too?!"

Her attendant nods guiltily. "I saw it happen with my own eyes. One second, she was there. The next, she popped out of existence with a 'foop'!"

All at once, several other Emperors, Dukes, and Barons receive magical transmissions through various means. They stand up, one by one, and gasp in surprise.

"My human chattel!" Emperor Kristoff roars. "They've disappeared, too!"

"And ours, too!" Exclaims the Second Ancient Orc, Maltus.

All around the ceremony, the scene of what was supposed to be Ose's most important day falls apart as her fellow demons receive the blood-curdling news that every single human in their possession, every last slave, miner, and individual that runs their societies through free labor, has vanished into the ether.

Ose's shocked expression clears up remarkably fast. It doesn't take her much effort to deduce the culprit, though she does figure it out less than a minute before all the other Emperors.

"...Wordsmith."

She practically spits Jason's title out, while bloodlust erupts in her eyes.

And, while every demon in the vicinity is panicking, one figure remains remarkably calm.

Bael sits idly, glancing around without a care in the world at the panicked looks on all his friends' faces.

"Damn, that sucks. Ain't life just a kick in the dick sometimes, Abby?"

Abby whips her head in Bael's direction to gawk at him.

"Don't you realize what's happened?! How can you be so calm at a time like this?"

Bael shrugs.

"Practice."

Part 351: Belial's Choice

Tarus II, a few hours earlier.

Jason stands inside the bottom of the Lazarus tower, staring in awe at a series of ten differently colored magical orbs hovering in midair. These orbs slowly rotate around a pillar of light that travels to the top of the Lazarus Tower, where it reaches the tower's roof and stops. At the bottom of the pillar of light, a glowing tablet filled with holy energy gently pulses with power, while Fiona stands before it, manipulating it through some unseen mechanism involving her soul.

While Jason watches, Fiona tweaks the pillar of light in small ways, adjusting various energy signatures and other such things that Jason can't even perceive without tapping into his Wordsmithing. Compared to his soul-wife, an entity that experiences life through the sensation of her soul more acutely than Jason's clumsy, physical body ever could, Jason is an absolute amateur at what Fiona has dubbed 'Soulsmithing.'

Soulsmithing. Unlike Wordsmithing, it is an intuitive act of spiritual creation one can only engage in if their souls are sensitive enough to detect magical fluctuations at an incredibly precise level. Much like Camael before her, it turns out that Fiona is somewhat adept at this art, though still shamefully inferior to the legendary Archangel of Divination herself.

While Fiona works her magic, Phoebe strolls into the chamber and stands on her tippy-toes to give Jason's cheek a kiss.

"How close are we?" Phoebe asks.

"Fiona should finish within a few hours." Jason says. "Those Soul Pylons she built have boosted the range of her travel to pretty much anywhere on Tarus II. Given what happened when I was last in a soul-body, I'm a little scared for her safety, but Fiona says the pylons will also protect against foreign errant souls. Ose shouldn't be able to infiltrate us anymore, and if she does, the pylons will detect her at once."

"But you're not going to build any Soul Pylons in the Core?" Phoebe asks.

"No. Too dangerous. The Core isn't Tarus II. I can only imagine what sorts of frightening Demon Emperors might have powers that can bypass their protections. I don't want Fiona's soul anywhere near the Core if I'm not there, too."

"You should still build them." Phoebe says, shaking her head. "Even if Fiona never goes to the Core, they can still protect our men and women from Ose and other bad actors. The Soul Suppression Field alone will give us a lot of leeway."

"Alright. I'll just have to build them anyway, then." Jason says, smiling at his wife. "But only because you asked."

While the two of them quietly talk, Fiona continues about her business. However, a flicker of movement beside her draws her attention.

Shana materializes in the physical world, just like Fiona. At the same time, so does Sir Lorent, Fiona and Phoebe's nephew, once known as Mordred's Butcher.

"I apologize." Lorent says, smiling at his aunt. "Shana was getting antsy and wanted to see what you were doing, so we materialized."

Fiona pauses her work to turn and hug her nephew, then she drops down to hug Shana as well.

"It's no problem at all!" Fiona chirps. "I'm almost done, anyway. Upsie-daisy, Shana! Take a look at this!"

Fiona lifts Shana into her arms, giving the little girl a better look at the energy matrix of the Lazarus Tower. Shana stares with big, watery eyes while Fiona starts explaining how the tower works.

"At first, I thought the Lazarus Tower would only be good for stealing all the errant human souls hidden around the galaxy, but then I realized I could alter its programming in another way." Fiona says. "I can also make it lock onto all living human souls as well and bring them to Tarus II! I had Jason prepare a huuuuuuuge area for all the refugees, and right now I'm just finishing up the teleportation module. I wouldn't want anyone to get teleported onto the same spot as someone else, or they might end up inside each other! Yikes!"

Lorent listens attentively, mostly grasping Fiona's explanation, but the majority of her words swish right over Shana's head.

[Pretty bubbles.] Shana simply says, glancing at the ten colored orbs floating around the pillar of light. [What do?]

"Those are the... control modules." Fiona explains, trying best to dumb her explanation down. "Each of them does something different. Spiritual engineering is super complex, but I managed to make the red one locate every human soul in the cosmos, and the blue one counts them all and prevents duplicates, while the green one..."

She continues elaborating the purposes of the ten orbs, while Shana and Lorent simply nod along to her words.

"Impressive work." Lorent says. "I only wish I could assist in some way. While I am glad to experience the joy of another person's company, since arriving in your care, I have felt... purposeless."

Fiona frowns. "You want something to do?"

"Yes." Lorent says with a nod. "You are working so hard to help humanity, but I am a Hero, and yet I cannot seem to do anything of note."

"You helped protect Jason's mind several times." Fiona says. "I know that might not seem glamorous, but with so many telepaths, spiritual monsters, and creepy soul-people floating around, protecting humanity's greatest Hero isn't an ignoble cause."

"True..." Lorent mutters. "But what of my heroic power? If I could put it to good use, I would like to do so."

"Oh?" Fiona grunts. "I thought you didn't want to use your ability?"

"That was before. This is now." Lorent says. "I have spent the past month teaching Shana how to paint. Doing so has... it has reawakened my creativity. I should very much like to exercise my power once again, though I know not if that is possible."

Fiona glances back at Jason and Phoebe, both of them engrossed in some conversation she hasn't bothered paying attention to. She purses her lips and thinks carefully for several minutes.

"Hmm... I'll talk to Jason about it, then. Honestly, I've been wondering if..."

She pauses.

"...If making bodies for you and Shana, and perhaps even the Archangels wouldn't be doable. If I could, then maybe you'd be able to exercise your heroic power again."

"That would be fantastic!" Lorent exclaims. "Ah, to partake in food once more, to feel the sensation of wind upon my skin... how I long for those sensations I once took for granted."

[I can eat cake?] Shana asks.

"Yes!" Lorent says with a laugh. "You will get to taste this delicious cake my aunt speaks of. I promise that you shall enjoy it greatly, little one!"

He pulls Shana away from Fiona and puts the little girl on his shoulders, piggyback style, which causes Shana to squeal with glee.

Seeing the two of them together warms Fiona's heart in an indescribable way.

I've lost Daisy... Fiona thinks. But when I'm with Shana and I see her smile, the pain doesn't hurt like it once did.

Jason and Phoebe switch conversation topics to a few of their other projects. While they speak, an emergency alert suddenly beeps on Jason's communicator.

"MULTIPLE DEMON DUKE ENERGY SIGNATURES DETECTED MOVING TOWARD THE CORE. RED ALERT STATUS DECLARED." Centurion blares.

Jason's expression turns ugly. "Shit. Already? Fiona, stay here. You too, Phoebe. I'll be back. Hopefully."

The Wordsmith utters a Word of Power, vanishing from the spot. He arrives inside the Core atop his designated teleportation point, high above the soldiers, where he quickly evaluates the situation below. Without any sense of chaos or disorder, all the troops in the Core quickly activate their T-REX's and take cover behind designated positions. Unlike before, when computer terminals stood out in the open at the center of the Core, now only heavily fortified bunkers remain, allowing the troopers to take cover in the event of an enemy attack.

Never again will the Wordsmith allow his people to die dog deaths, losing any chance of survival in the face of mighty adversaries.

Jason quickly hops down to the ground level and takes up his position at the front of the Core, where the dual turrets sit outside, ready to blast any intruders to smithereens. He wordsmiths himself to be 'invincible,' making his body all but impervious to damage, then stops to wait while Centurion's alarms blare louder and louder.

"FIVE DEMON DUKE SIGNATURES APPROACHING."

"DEMON DUKE SIGNATURES HAVE CROSSED DEFENSIVE LINE BETA."

"DEMON DUKE SIGNATURES HAVE CROSSED DEFENSIVE LINE ALPHA."

While Jason watches, a group of five powerful Demon Dukes rounds a bend at the far end of the hallway, the wide and open area leading directly to the Core. They walk toward the Hero, but surprisingly, they all raise their hands in unison, moving slowly so as to not show any hostile intentions.

Among them are three females and two males. One of the females is a huge demoness standing nearly eight feet tall, with hulking, Amazonian-like muscles, wearing tigerskin panties and a bra. Another is a short, lithe little woman seemingly suffering from anorexia, so frail and skinny is she. The third is a black-haired woman with hair going down to her butt, wearing what can only be described as a dominatrix-looking black-leather ensemble.

And among the men, one is a pretty-boy with thick eyeliner, wearing a fairly fashionable white and gold jacket, while the other is a brutish-looking fellow with ox-sized forearms, only a little bit smaller than the absolutely giant demoness behind him.

As the five approach, Jason glances at the huge demoness, expecting her to be the leader. Instead, the tiniest girl, not even five feet tall, takes the lead.

"Hello, human. We're not here to fight." She says, her voice somewhat raspy. "I am Maia, The Duke of Empathy. We've come to speak to Emperor Belial, and the Wordsmith too, if he's available."

With Jason's head covered, none of the demons can tell what he looks like, but his unmistakable aura of holy energy isn't something they overlook, nor something he bothers to hide.

"You're the leader of this group?" Jason asks, standing firmly in place, with his hands leaning on his hips. "I'm the Wordsmith. As for Belial, why do you want to see her?"

The five Dukes stop a good distance away, but keep their palms up to continue showing they aren't threats.

"We're from the Hell of Lust." Maia says. "You might be familiar with us. Belial was our Hell's founder."

Jason raises an eyebrow underneath his helmet, but the Dukes don't see it.

"The Hell of Lust, you say?" Jason mutters, while glancing at the other four Dukes.

He points at the giant demoness, the one which draws his attention the most. "You must be Titania, the Duke of Freedom."

The huge demoness bats her eyes. Surprisingly, despite her huge and fearsome body, she blushes shyly. "I... I am."

"And you." Jason says, pointing at the third female. "You look like Silvia. The Duke of Whips."

"That's me." Silvia says, exposing her teeth. "I guess Belial told you all about us."

"I have files on all the Hidden Hells." Jason says. "And you, pretty-boy with the dainty clothes. I'm guessing you're Jahn, the Duke of Cuddles."

"Ahaha. How right you are," Jahn says, flicking his tail coquettishly. "I've heard quite a few stories about you, of late. Can't wait to see what sort of tasty snack is hiding under that helmet."

"Right." Jason mutters. "And finally, you, big guy. You must be... Igor, the Duke of Celibacy."

Igor chuckles, his ominously deep voice reverberating throughout the hallway. "Heh heh heh. Don't be fooled by my title, Wordsmith. It's ironic."

"Yeah. Igor's definitely not celibate." Silvia says, rolling her eyes. "Take your eyes off him for a minute, and the damn guy starts ramming his demonhood into every crevice within a five mile radius."

"He who spreads his seed also spreads many a good deed." Igor says, flashing Silvia a thumbs-up.

"Shut the fuck up." Silvia grouches.

Seeing this colorful cast standing before him, Jason lowers his defenses somewhat. He deactivates his helmet, allowing the others to see his face.

"You still haven't answered my question." Jason says. "Why are you here? And why do you want to see Belial? To be frank, I don't care who you are. I really don't like demons right now, and I'm about five inches from blowing you all to pieces."

"Oh, my." Jahn says, covering his mouth. "The Wordsmith wants to blow us. I do say, Igor, this fellow is quite the saucy devil."

"Don't think he meant it like that." Igor grunts.

Maia strides toward Jason, putting a little distance between herself and her companions.

"I know why you hate demons." She says. "But surely, Belial has explained the situation in the Seven Hells to you, right? We're not all homogenous. There are different beliefs between each Hell. Ours happens to be... quite friendly to humans."

"And?" Jason asks. "So, what? You want to join me and fight against the other Hells?"

Maia chews her lip. Her sunken cheeks and frighteningly rail-thin appearance bely her calm, controlled demeanor.

"Well. Maybe. I'll have you know, Jason Hiro, that not one succubus or incubus partook in that terrible Stormbringer attack. I didn't condone it, and neither did any of the other Dukes from my Hell. However, Ose is planning another attack on your people, and this time... it will prove far more vicious than the one that came before. I don't want to sit back and do nothing. Not this time."

She pauses for emphasis.

"But let me make one thing clear. I'm not doing it for you. I only want to talk to Belial. She cast aside her rule over the Hell of Lust, yes, but we still view her as our rightful queen. Before I even think of joining you and freeing my Hell from the grip of the other six, I want to hear from her lips what it's like living under your rule."

Jason cocks his head. "From what I understand, your Hell has no Emperors, only Dukes. Even if I were to let you join humanity, you wouldn't be much use against all the Emperors of the other Hells. Who says I'll agree to your proposal, anyway? Maybe I should just kill you, right here and now."

Maia meets Jason's gaze. The two of them stare at each other wordlessly for a few moments before she shakes her head.

"You won't do that." She says. "I still see compassion in your eyes. No doubt, due to the loss of... those closest to you, you have become filled with bitter hatred and a deep desire for revenge. But, based on what we've heard, you are still a relatively righteous and just man. Ose told the Hidden Hells that you offered her a peace treaty, one which she refused. This tells me you are not the type to inflict wanton cruelty on others. Even with all you've suffered, that hasn't changed."

Maia cocks her head and smiles at the Hero.

"Am I wrong?"

Jason crinkles his nose at her. "You're walking an awfully thin line. If I want to kill all five of you, it won't take me any effort at all. Where does your confidence come from?"

"I am the Duke of Empathy." Maia says. "I can sense the emotions of others around me. While a deep undercurrent of hatred and distrust flows through your soul, there is also a reluctance to inflict unjustified violence. You are not as cold and callous as you wish to be."

"I'm not strong enough, then." Jason says. "My willpower needs to temper itself so I can make the difficult decisions on behalf of my fellow man."

"Don't be so eager to become a killer." Maia counters. "I know plenty of them. They are all bitter, power-hungry tyrants. I like the 'you' that I see now. Balanced. Willing to do what you must, but not yet willing to go overboard. That's the sort of person who I enjoy taking long walks on the beach with."

Jason inhales deeply, then looks away.

"Alright. You want to talk to Belial? Fine. I'll bring her here. But Belial is not the one to decide who stays inside humanity's borders. I am."

Maia takes a step back. "I understand. Worry not, Hero. I am not your enemy. None of us are. The Hells of Lust and Isolation are the most sympathetic to your cause. We both believe coexistence with humanity is more than possible; it is desirable."

"Yeah." Igor says. "Except the Hell of Isolation is full of hippie-weirdos. What a bunch of dorks. All that music, but not enough fuckin'. Sheesh!"

Titania shuffles nervously on her feet. "I... I like... the Hell of I-Isolation. They're fun to h-hang out with."

Igor glances at the huge, scantily-glad demoness beside him. "Yeah, I bet they like 'hanging' with you, too, sister."

Jason sends a magical transmission to Belial, quickly explaining the situation to her. A minute later, he teleports the Emperor of Passion to his position, popping her into position on his right.

When Belial appears, Jason waits for her to cheerfully greet the other five demons, but instead, she crosses her arms and gazes at them grumpily.

"What do you want?" Belial asks, her tone hostile.

"Emperor Belial," Maia says. "It is... good to see you again. I hope you've been doing well."

"As good as you'd expect." Belial mutters. "Living among free humans has been a thrilling experience, to be sure."

Maia winces. "Our chattel are about as free as they can get. We don't force them to mine, or slave away, or perform hard labor-"

"No." Belial interrupts. "You just use them as pleasure-toys to bolster your power structure. I hear 'consent' is still a term used loosely in your Hell."

"It isn't only 'our' Hell." Maia whispers. "It... it is yours, as well."

"I swore off that den of debauchery tens of millennia ago." Belial snaps. "Don't lump me in with the rest of you. Why are you even here? Hoping to get let into our good graces? Looking for fresh, untouched, virgin meat?"

Maia flares her nostrils. "I know you are angry, Emperor Belial-"

"It's Samantha now." Belial says. "I hate being called Belial. My demon name makes me sick."

"Sorry, I wasn't aware." Maia apologizes. "Samantha, then. I know you are angry, but times have changed. Your departure... it left us all in the lurch. The other Hells have pressured us greatly, these past fifty thousand years. Without an Emperor to protect us, we've become little more than lapdogs for the other Hells. We have to do as they ask, or risk annihilation."

"Oh. Isn't that a shame." Belial says, without a shred of mercy. "Just go away. I'm not interested in helping you."

Maia's shoulders sag.

"I... don't you understand? I cannot refuse the orders of the other Hells. I lack the power to do so. Soon, they will order the Hell of Lust to invade Tarus II. We'll be sent out to the meat-grinder, to fight for a cause we don't believe in. None of us want to follow Ose's ludicrous demands. Her thirst for violence is upending the natural order and will bring a catastrophe upon our species. Even if she succeeds, demonkind will only gain a minor advantage. The Volgrim, or that supposed Plague will wipe us out. I would much rather unite with the humans and achieve... something greater."

"Something greater?" Jason repeats. "Such as?"

"I... can't put it into words." Maia concedes. "Always, demons, humans, and angels have fought. I didn't live through the Ancient Era, but I grew up hearing stories about the War in Heaven. I don't know whose fault is whose, and I don't care. I just want to see a better future for humans and demons alike."

The Duke of Empathy sighs heavily. "I know I've disappointed you, Samantha. I haven't been a good friend. And when I was a Baron, I was always chasing humans like no tomorrow. But... I'm a Duke now, and my 'addictions' don't plague me like they used to. I see the error of my old ways. Please, please don't condemn all your former friends and colleagues to damnation just because a few of those at the top acted greedily and sinfully."

Belial listens quietly to Maia's speech. As she does, her expression softens a little.

"Do you think it's my forgiveness you need?" Belial asks. "I am not the one you wronged. Those humans were. You forced yourselves on them, used them as batteries to advance to the rank of Duke. I'll bet that if it meant you could become an Emperor, you'd still be up to your old ways. I have no reason to trust you. Not when this time, it will be the lives of humans I deeply love and care about on the line."

Jason glances at Belial, reading between the lines of her reply. However, he says nothing.

Maia lowers her head.

"I... I understand. If you wish, then please... kill us. All the sinners. Every Duke, Baron, and Lord who acted without restraint. Me, Silvia, Jahn, every last one. We deserve it... but the younger generation doesn't. They can be better, if you take them under your wing. Succubi and incubi alike, they can flourish under your lead."

Belial's tail flicks around behind her, from left to right, with quick, twitchy moments.

The former Second Emperor carefully evaluates Maia's request over several minutes, leaving her and the other Dukes to wait in silence.

"Other than protecting you, what do we stand to gain?" Belial finally asks. "I'm not much for killing. I have no interest in executing you. In the end, your victims are long dead, and revenge-killings won't bring them back. That being said, you've requested to join us, so you have plenty to gain, but what about the rest of us?"

"We will follow any command you or the Wordsmith orders." Maia says, keeping her head lowered. "We have to redeem ourselves. Succubi and incubi are more than capable of living with humans without coercion or using any other vile methods. We will deliberately restrict our actions and live in colonies away from humans, or however you wish. Just so long as we can live under your guidance once more, Emperor Samantha... I will be happy."

"I don't understand." Belial says, her tone softening further. "Why would you even want to serve me? I'm no leader. I don't know how, and I don't care to guide those beneath me. Satan was a true Emperor. I'm only a lover."

"That is where you are wrong." Maia says, raising her head to gaze into Belial's eyes. "I know you can become a fair and just Emperor. You may say you don't care about our Hell, but I know you don't want to see us forced to become playthings for the sick monsters inhabiting the hells of Damnation, Corruption, and so on. If we follow your commands, we can become greater than the sum of our parts."

She turns her gaze to the Wordsmith.

"Besides. Succubi and incubi, when we aren't forcing ourselves upon humans, can deliver pleasure unlike anything you've ever experienced. In a time of war and hatred, why not allow passion and sexuality to flourish? Perhaps love is the key to defeating hatred."

"I'm married." Jason says, tersely. "But. Well, even if all you bring to the table are the powers of Dukes, that's still quite useful to me. I'm developing methods to counter the Hidden Hells which would benefit quite a bit from the powers of Dukes."

Jason turns to Belial.

"I'll leave this decision in your hands. Do you want the Hell of Lust to merge with us? I have no strong feelings one way or the other. If they join us, we'll make use of them, and we'll provide them a safe haven. If not, we'll continue as we were before. You have the most knowledge and experience with them, Samantha. I think you should be the one to decide their fates."

Another five minutes pass. Belial's tail flicks around faster than before as she contemplates what she should do with these five Dukes, as well as all the others waiting for her reply.

"Well… if I have to choose…"

Part 352: New Allies

Maia, the Duke of Empathy, drops to her knees and kowtows before Emperor Belial.

"Thank you! Thank you, Samantha. Our Hell is in debt to you!"

"It's like you said." Belial says, shooting a complicated look at Jason beside her. "It's still my Hell. I do feel a little responsible for all of you. And since Jason can make use of you, we'll welcome the succubi, incubi, and your human chattel too."

Jason aims his eyes at the kowtowing succubus. "But! In my society, there will not be any slaves, Maia. You will release all of them and they will become free to do as they please. Since succubi and incubi require human 'interaction' to survive, I will do what I can to encourage an atmosphere of 'frolicking' between your Hell and my species, but you cannot force anyone into your bedchambers, nor can you use your magical powers to coerce them. If I find out you've violated this order, you do not want to know what actions I'll take."

Maia raises her head to nod at Jason. "Yes, yes. I understand. Thank you, Jason Hiro. I have never bowed to a human before, but please, accept my thanks."

The Wordsmith nods serenely. After she stands up and regains her sense of balance, he raises an eyebrow.

"By the way. I've been meaning to ask... why are you so thin? Do you not get enough to eat?"

Maia's frail, anorexic-looking body worries the Wordsmith, making him wonder if she has some sort of medical condition. However, Maia merely shakes her head.

"Humans often worry about my health. But do not worry, Wordsmith. I am a demon. When demons reach the rank of Duke, they often begin to suffer from some sort of backlash. Mephisto and other necromancers tend to lose their flesh and organs, becoming ghastly bone-walkers. Beelzebub lost his sense of pain. For me, I lost my ability to control my emotions, and my body became what you see now."

Jason looks at Belial. "Do you have anything like that?"

"Don't think so." Belial answers. "But then again, I didn't evolve like normal demons do. I received my power from a dragon."

"So did Valac." Jason points out.

"Yeah. I guess if you count my crippling inability to take responsibility for anything in my life, that might be my demonic weakness." Belial ponders. "But otherwise, I've gotten off easy. Some demons do, and some don't. Ose doesn't seem to have any particular physical condition ailing her, but even you must have noticed how megalomaniacal she's become since ascending to Emperor. I'll bet it's related."

"Mmm." Jason grunts, while glancing at the other Dukes and silently wondering if any of them have similar issues. "Good to know. Alright, Maia, since you're officially under my protection now, when would you like to start transferring your people to Tarus II? I'll need some time to construct a settlement for you, and frankly, the humans must come first."

"There's no need to rush." Maia says. "I doubt the other demons will find out about our pact with you unless someone tells them otherwise. We can keep our meeting quiet for a while until you've situated yourself on your homeworld."

With the most important reason for her coming addressed, Maia relaxes a little bit. Behind her, the other four Dukes walk over, with Sylvia appearing especially attentive.

"Jason. There's another reason we came to meet you today. In less than two hours, Ose plans to hold a coronation ceremony. She will advance Bael's body to the rank of Emperor by ingesting just under a million human souls. We thought you might want to know about this."

"A million souls?!" Jason exclaims. "You should have opened with that!"

"Oh? I'm sorry." Sylvia says, cocking her head. "I... didn't realize the information would be of that much importance to you."

"I can't let her devour so many lives." Jason says, gritting his teeth. "I have to rescue those people as soon as possible. I'll have to ask Fiona to accelerate her work..."

"Rescue people?" Maia repeats. "What work are you trying to accelerate? I don't understand. Souls aren't people, are they?"

Belial smirks. "Well. Jason hasn't been sitting on his ass for the past week. Ever since our raid on Faith's End, Jason has been prepping several counter-measures against demonkind's elites. Most of them are defensive in nature. A few aren't."

Belial doesn't elaborate, deliberately keeping her subordinate Dukes in the dark. After all, they have only just accepted an alliance, and have not yet earned her or Jason's trust.

Sensing Belial's reluctance to explain the situation, Maia wisely chooses not to pry further.

"I see. Ose will be holding her ceremony on Hell Harbor before the leaders of the Seven Hells. The Hell of Lust isn't going to attend, and I'd bet good coin the Hell of Isolation won't, either."

"The Hell of Isolation..." Belial mutters under her breath. "I wonder if we could forge a similar alliance with them? Getting a few Emperors on our side would boost our battle potential considerably."

"Let's hold off on that idea." Jason says. "Integrating a single Hell into our armies is already a tall enough order. I don't imagine the people who lost friends and family to demons will be all too happy about me deciding to just throw millions of former enemies into our ranks."

Jason gestures toward the five Dukes from the Hell of Lust.

"All of you can head back to start preparing for our merge. Right now, Sam and I need to get back to Tarus II."

Maia nods. "I understand. Thank you for listening to us, Jason Hiro. And thank you for accepting us back into your good graces, Emperor Samantha. We will not disappoint you like we did before."

Belial waves her hand. "Water under the bridge. See ya, Maia."

Maia turns to leave, and the other Dukes follow her.

"Hey, Hero," Sylvia says, blowing an air-kiss his way. "Nice talking to you. You're a cutie. Let me know if you're single or looking for fun, next time we meet."

"Still married." Jason simply retorts.

"If you switch to the 'other team,'" Igor says, "Let ME know! I will teach you the pleasures of loving a man."

"I'll be sure to get right on that." Jason quips.

Titania waves shyly. "B-bye bye..."

Jahn is the last to leave. He doesn't say anything, but instead merely eyes Jason from head to toe, faintly smiles, and gives the Hero a thumbs-up.

Once all of the demons depart, Jason and Belial walk back into the Core. The Wordsmith lowers the Core's alert level to return everyone to their posts, then pivots to face Belial.

"Phoebe isn't just going to rescue all the human souls." Jason reveals. "She's going to rescue every single human in the galaxy, all at the same time, and put them in a designated safe zone on the opposite side of Tarus II. I'm going to need your help, Samantha."

"What? Phoebe can do that?" Belial asks, visibly confused. "But... but how?"

"It turns out the Lazarus Tower has to be able to detect and triangulate the positions of ALL human souls." Jason says. "Not just errant ones, but living ones, too. This means if we tie it into a mass-teleportation system, we can rescue every human captive in every location known and unknown to man, then drop them into a safe place where the demons can't hurt them."

Belial frowns deeply. "That sounds great, Jason, but teleportation isn't a simple matter. It requires vast amounts of energy even when used efficiently. Where are you going to get all the energy you need for this act of mass teleportation?"

"From our favorite new artifact." Jason answers. "It will drain the Cube's mana reserves by more than half, but I believe this will be an absolutely crucial measure. We will immediately obtain a massive boost in soldiers, laborers, and other types of humans. We'll save all the people being exploited, abused, and injured across all of the galaxy in a single, fell swoop."

"You seem to be handwaving quite a significant matter." Belial counters. "Can you control which humans get summoned through the Lazarus Tower's means? Humans from the Hell of Isolation are neither slaves nor mistreated. You should leave them alone. And more humans are sympathetic to demonic causes than you might expect. You could easily draw in thousands of possible saboteurs, criminals, rapists, murderers, and who knows what other awful types of people."

She continues. "I understand why you would want to do this, but Jason, don't you think this could backfire? You need to be preparing for the Hidden Emperor's invasion, not saving humans who will only overburden the food and water supply, stress your barely functional infrastructure, and force you to pay attention to fulfilling all of their basic needs, lest they immediately die."

"I need to save lives right now." Jason says. "I probably won't be able or want to kill too many Hidden Emperors when they show up. The more who are left alive, the more likely they'll butcher their slaves in fits of rage, or kill them to create more souls, and so on."

"Human slaves aren't utterly indispensable," Belial counters again. "But they're fairly important to demon society. If killing a million of them were a simple matter, you'd be facing a lot more Emperors right now. It would be trivially easy to have raised a billion humans over the last hundred thousand years and killed them for easy souls."

For the first time in a while, Jason appears stumped. "Why don't demons do that, anyway? Humans are already practically livestock among the Seven Hells. Wouldn't the Emperors want to raise as many other mighty demons as they can?"

"Ah." Belial says, smiling wryly and shaking her head. "You haven't figured out yet how cutthroat demon politics actually are. There are several reasons why the number of Emperors has remained almost entirely stagnant since the Energy Wars."

"First," she continues, "You have to consider the Volgrim rules. Demons were not permitted to allow the human population to swell beyond a certain limit. As Unarin said in his broadcast, the Volgrim consider humans an Omega-level threat. Letting too many breed would not only provide the humans with chances to make small but essential improvements over time, but it would also vastly increase the likelihood the demons would evolve more Emperors and that might ultimately threaten the Volgrim's interests too. Considering the uprisings that led to the mind-wipes, this isn't an inconsequential possibility."

"Secondly, space is more limited than you might think. Demons are inherently selfish. Imagine if demons wanted to raise humans en-masse. Unlike most demons, humans need to eat to survive, so they would need agriculture on a massive scale. This would take away land from demons on their controlled worlds, leading to resentment among the lower ranks. Humans need all sorts of amenities to stay living long enough for their souls to 'harden,' and so on."

"Right." Jason interjects. "Because while infant souls are the purest and most nourishing, demons would want a lot of those children to grow up and reproduce, and there's a noticeable lull in a soul's nourishment once the immediate powerup from being born takes hold, when an infant leaves their mother. It takes time for a human to reach middle age, when their soul is the strongest, but then it weakens until they reach old age and die."

"Exactly. And going off my second point, the third point continues about how demons are inherently selfish." Belial explains. "Who do you think is going to till the soil and raise the crops these humans need to eat? Not demons. They already have slaves produce food for other slaves, but it's at a much smaller scale than would be necessary to feed a billion humans. And those slaves would need overseers, which would still mean 'work' for demons, which as you can imagine, only gets worse over time, and so on."

"The final reason demons haven't added more Emperors to their ranks is the most contradictory, but also the most important one." Belial concludes. "Demons are even more selfish than my previous reasons might suggest. The current Emperors currently reap all the benefits of being a few at the top. If they wanted, they could monopolize souls to add more and more Emperors, but instead, they spread them out to keep the lower classes in a state of passivity. If the Emperors wanted to better demon society, they could have made huge gains while they enjoyed millennia without conflict, but instead, they just passed the time and became stagnant."

Belial sighs deeply. "Even so, with just the Hidden Emperors who exist now, you're in for a hard-fought battle, Jason. I can't see you winning without losing countless lives."

Jason gently squeezes Belial's shoulder while smiling at her. "Don't underestimate me, Sam. I've barely tapped into Wordsmithing's potential. While I could easily use the Cube to obliterate all the Demon Emperors, that would be a fantastic waste of its remaining primordial energy. Instead, I'm going to use it to accelerate humanity's uplifting speed. In this way, even if the Hidden Emperors manage to kill me, or if I have to leave for any reason, humanity will remain stable and capable of protecting itself. Last time, when I fetched the Cube, I left humanity practically defenseless. I won't repeat that mistake again."

Belial purses her lips. "So... you're planning to rescue millions of humans for the sake of speeding up your distant future goals?"

"That's right." Jason says. "Like how in strategy games, you can choose a combat start, or an economy start. I'm going full economy because in the interim, I alone am capable of providing the combat support to protect the economy supply lines. But once the economy reaches a certain level, it will vastly outperform me on all levels. Then I can switch to a support role, boosting the economy further while my well-oiled war machine steamrolls humanity's enemies."

Belial stares at Jason intently.

"I have literally no idea what you just said."

"Sorry. It's nerd stuff." Jason says with a shrug. "Now let's get back to Tarus II. When I summon all the humans, some of them will probably have critical health issues. I want you and your medical associates to attend to them and check for people who are wounded and sick. Make sure you assume a human form so they don't know who you are. Blend into the masses and do your best to make sure nobody dies during the transition."

"I still don't think this is a good idea..." Belial mutters. "But I'll do what I can to smooth the transition."

"Atta girl." Jason says with a grin.

He teleports himself and Belial back to Tarus II, leaving the Core to return to green alert level on their own.

Even without the Wordsmith around, the humans in the Core do their jobs smoothly and efficiently.

Exactly as expected.

A little over an hour later, Jason and Phoebe once again stand inside the Lazarus Tower, this time watching with high anxiety levels as Fiona's movements become faster and more focused. She expertly continues to adjust all sorts of temporal and spatial settings, seeking out every human soul in the Milky Way, no matter where they might be.

A spiritually-projects screen hovers in front of Fiona, displaying statistics regarding the number of humans she's detected. To Jason's surprise, the number already exceeds thirty-five million people.

"It seems just under two million of them are errant souls." Phoebe whispers. "The other thirty-three million are humans living in captivity. I am a little worried, Jason. Don't you think it's a bad idea to bring so many people here all at once? They're going to be scared, worried, and maybe even hostile. Plus, they outnumber all of our current forces ten to one!"

"I know you're scared, but don't let the numbers fool you." Jason says. "We're putting all the newcomers on the other side of the planet. Humans can't teleport around or travel quickly without vehicles. I've already erected a large underground installation for their accommodations, meager though it might be. There's an environmental shield above the landing location, and we'll have a few thousand soldiers in the area to suppress riots. Don't forget how much stronger T-REX's make our men and women. A single soldier can hold off an army of unarmed humans with relative ease. Actually killing him would take some seriously good luck on the attackers' part."

Phoebe chews her lip. She activates a holographic image of the rescue area, showing hundreds of simple, utilitarian buildings designed to maximize bed-space over anything else. Ten surveillance towers two hundred feet tall overlook the facilities, allowing soldiers to camp out and keep an eye on the rescued humans. Additionally, plenty of incidental but important infrastructure, such as toilets and gardens, line the area, having been created in only the last two days. Hovering drones float about, continuing to build new structures in accordance with Jason';s requirements by 'beaming' materials into existence.

"I hope you're right." Phoebe says.

Minutes pass. When Fiona reaches the ideal time, she turns to Jason and gives him a thumbs-up.

"Calibrated and ready."

Jason nods. He teleports two thousand already-prepared soldiers across the planet into their designated positions atop buildings, hills, and the surveillance towers. He teleports Belial and her hospital staff there as well, followed by a contingent of heavily armed monsters and humans to deter rioters and ne'er-do-well's.

Finally, Jason teleports himself and Phoebe across the planet, leaving Fiona behind to activate the Lazarus Tower's functions. When they arrive, the husband and wife duo activate their T-REX's to protect themselves. Then, Jason sends a message to Fiona.

"Do it."

A few moments later, a strange tingling sensation runs across Jason's skin as a huge wave of active mana washes across Tarus II's surface. All at once, hundreds and thousands and millions of beams of light fall upon the ten-by-ten mile plot of land, slamming into the ground and materializing one human after another. As per Fiona's programmed instructions, these humans tend to stick together according to where they originated from, while maintaining a surprisingly even spread with plenty of room between all the new arrivals.

At the same time, two million invisible souls rush across the Milky Way and travel into the storage space of the Lazarus Tower, entering a state of limbo where they will wait until the right time in the future to be resurrected, when Jason and Fiona have completed a method to achieve their ultimate goal.

As the minutes pass, more and more bewildered humans materialize inside the facility. Confused slaves, frightened miners, and even the more free-spirited humans living amidst the Hells of Lust and Isolation appear, all of them completely in the dark about what has just happened. Choruses of crying children, screaming women, and angry men fill the air. People look to one another, demanding to know what just happened, but no matter who they turn to, nobody seems to have any answers.

After more than fifteen minutes, Fiona transmits a message to Jason.

"Done."

She instantly materializes beside her husband, using the Pylons Jason built to instantly travel anywhere on Tarus II as required. When she appears, Jason nods, his nerves stretching taut.

"The moment of truth. We've actually done it!"

With so many people around, Jason becomes visibly excited at the thought of possibly discovering people he's been hoping to find for well over a week now.

"Daisy's soul must be in the Lazarus Tower..." Jason murmurs. "And if we're lucky, Neil should be here too."

"Don't expect too much." Fiona warns her husband. "The method I used to find these people and the errant souls isn't much different from how your Wordsmithing would do it. If you couldn't find someone... the Lazarus Tower probably couldn't, either."

"I don't care." Jason says. "I just have to hope for the best, hope we have some way to save our little girl... and hope her soul hasn't been..."

Phoebe and Fiona both fall silent, descending into momentary melancholy as they experience similar emotions to their husband.

Soon, he will address these rescued people to alleviate their concerns.

Soon, the next phase of his master plan will come into action.

Meanwhile, inside the vast and sprawling camp, some of the rescuees don't appear quite as terrified as those around them.

A Japanese man plops to the ground and crosses his legs, while sitting inside a building filled with screaming and ranting people. He surveys those around him with a sense of eerie calmness, as if these new circumstances have nothing to do with him.

"Hoho. How interesting. I didn't expect the Wordsmith to pull off something like this. But... will it be enough? His Karma is filled with signs of trouble. He will have to struggle with all his might if he hopes to free himself from his fate."

And, in another building, a dark-skinned man and his daughter stick together while warily keeping their eyes on the people around them.

"Daddy. Daddy, I'm scared..." The young woman, perhaps twenty years old, whispers. "What's going on? How did we get here? Where are we?"

The man shields his daughter with his body, protecting her from any possible threats. He keeps an eye on the many nearby men and women, his cybernetic eye scoping out threats in the vicinity.

"Don't worry, Lily. Our circumstances are... not necessarily unfortunate. I have a feeling a certain 'Hero' is responsible for accosting us."

"There's so many people." Lily whispers to her father, Benjamin Brown. "What if they attack us?"

"Then I'll kill them all." Benjamin answers. "Nobody will hurt my little girl. Not even a hair on your head."

In dozens of buildings on the easternmost side of the rescue location, a massive wall of humans equipped with T-REX's appear, all of them only a little confused by their circumstances. They quickly activate their T-REX's, then look at the million or so people around them.

"What the heck are we doing here?"

"Isn't this just another place on Tarus II? Did the Wordsmith bring us here?"

"That's what my suit says."

Jason, watching from above, quickly notices the anomaly.

"Uhh... Fiona. You did exclude the humans on Tarus II and in the Core... right?"

Fiona turns red with embarrassment. "Oh, drat! I totally forgot! I was in such a rush..."

"Haha..." Phoebe laughs awkwardly. "At least it's only a minor oversight. We still have allied monsters and demons to protect the Core, and it won't take Jason long to move our people back there."

"Yeah." Jason grumps. "But it's a waste of even more primordial energy."

"Oopsie!" Fiona laughs, sticking out her tongue. "Sorry, honey!"

Part 353: Jason's Speech

Jason and Phoebe take control of the million or so humans they accidentally teleported to the Tarus II Human Relocation Zone from the rest of Tarus II and the Core. The 'HRZ' acts as a population buffer, allowing them to figure out who all the humans they transferred to their capitol world are, what their allegiances might be, and how exactly they can classify these refugees for their own safety.

With Fiona having already messed up, Jason decides to salvage the Tarus native situation by first sending away the children, then assigning the adults in large groups to take control of all the large quadrants. With their distinctive T-REX's made visible, they manage to quickly pacify the humans teleported to Tarus II across all the galaxy.

It only takes thirty minutes to calm the crowds. Once Jason gets a firm grasp on the situation, he checks the numbers.

"Damn. So there are now about forty-seven million humans on Tarus II. That number is both huge and small at the same time."

Fiona nods. "We only had a million human survivors of Stormbringer. The newcomers we've brought to Tarus II outnumber the existing rebels forty-six to one. But at the same time, forty-seven million humans is still nothing compared to the demon population."

"In my era," Jason says, "Forty-seven million people was maybe the size of two or three large metropolitan cities. We're still a long way from humanity's former glory."

"It's a lot better than we've ever had before." Phoebe comments, as the two of them stand atop one of the towers overlooking the entire HRZ. "Now we just have to make sure these people are on the same page as us."

"Alright! It's your turn, Jason!" Fiona says, giving her husband a thumbs-up. "Go get 'em."

Jason nods. He utters a few words of power, causing angelic wings to sprout from his back. Then, he leaps off the tower and flies to a position right in the middle of the compound, more than three hundred feet above the ground.

The Wordsmith conjures a giant astral body of himself, one with a heavy and rich spiritual presence to draw as much attention to himself as possible, while also allowing those with bad vision to look up and make out his facial features.

"Hello, everyone." Jason says, his words magically translating into any languages the rescued humans might speak that differ from his own. "My name is Jason Hiro. I am the Wordsmith, and this generation's Hero."

His speech draws the attention of the crowd, causing hundreds and thousands and millions of people to look up into the sky and gasp audibly. Never have they seen such a spectacle before!

"What is a 'Hero,' you may ask?" Jason posits. "To put it simply, I am a human who was chosen by divine powers to restore the balance of our galaxy, to bring dignity to our people, and to ensure we no longer suffer under the heels of demonic oppressors. My unique powers allow me to stand up to even the scariest Demon Emperor and put them in their place. Even so, I am not omnipotent. I am not able to defeat all of demonkind by myself, nor should I. I am merely the one person capable of allowing all of you to seize back that which should be yours."

Jason continues speaking. He spends several minutes explaining his plans and his goals, telling all of the people below him, both the Tarus natives, and the 46 million newcomers, what their role will be moving forward.

"I have brought you all here from bondage and slavery. No longer will any demons or monsters tell you what to do, hurt you, or mistreat you. If you choose to assist me, I will ensure you obtain the strength necessary to rid yourself of your shackles and become a warrior, a scientist, or even just a commoner living a decent life."

"In my ideal future, humans and demons will either learn to coexist, or we will live separately, no longer fighting among each other. Only in the worst case scenario will one of our species eradicate the other. I do not wish to spread genocide throughout the galaxy."

Every human watches and listens as Jason speaks. Even the slave children, saved through his magic, gaze at the mysterious and powerful figure in the sky with watery eyes, unsure what exactly is going on, but finding comfort in his strong words.

However, many of the newcomers don't look at Jason with appreciation or respect, but annoyance and agitation.

One of those people breaks the silence around him by shouting at the sky. "Liar! I was living just fine until you came along! I don't wanna be a part of your stinking war! The demons treated me just fine!"

Despite the man standing far away from Jason, amidst the vast crowd of people, and his voice not particularly standing out, Jason still turns to look in his general direction.

"Who spoke just now?" Jason asks.

Despite the man's anger, he falls silent, suddenly realizing that raising his voice may have painted a target on his back.

Jason realizes the man's awkward predicament. "There is no need to fear me. I will not hurt my fellow humans. I merely wish to know why you object to my words, and if I can clarify your doubts."

Mildly mollified by Jason's proclamation, the man raises his hand. "I-I said that! It was me!"

Jason nods. He hovers downward a little, bringing himself closer to the man, but making sure not to make brash or intimidating movements while his spiritual body still towers a hundred feet tall.

"What is your name, sir?" Jason asks.

"It's... it's Isaiah." The man says, his balding head and middle-aged appearance giving him the most ordinary of looks. "I don't... I don't want to fight in your war!"

Jason nods. "I understand. Let me ask, where did you live prior to arriving here, on this distant world?"

Isaiah presses his teeth together, feeling a little nervous about the questioning. "Th-the world of Sharmur, my lord."

"Sharmur." Jason repeats. He waits for a moment before nodding. "I see. That world belongs to the Hell of Isolation?"

Isaiah nods, but otherwise says nothing.

Jason glances around at the many thousands of other people in Isaiah's vicinity.

"Are all of you from Sharmur too? Raise your hands if you are."

In unison, more than two million people raise their hands, making Jason nod along once again.

"Thank you for speaking from your heart, Isaiah. That was courageous of you."

Jason levitates back into the sky, to the center of the HRZ.

"To Isaiah and the other people from the Hell of Isolation. If you truly wish to return to Sharmur, I will not stop you. According to my understanding, the Hells of Lust and Isolation treat the humans living among them decently. It makes sense you would not want to join my war, especially when you did quite well for yourselves as you were."

The Wordsmith shakes his head.

"But. You were not free. You are not free. You are still human chattel, in the end. Whether the Emperors of Isolation whipped or beat you, or if they did not, that does not determine your freedom. Look not at your bodies, but your minds. You are not allowed to advance in any meaningful way on Sharmur. You are not allowed to exercise your innate Terran creativity. You are not allowed to innovate technologies which would benefit you. You have to live stagnant, boring lives."

"Debauchery and sexuality are what drives the humans living among Lust and Isolation." Jason continues. "Those are not inherently bad pursuits. However, while you live decent lives of moderation, other humans wallow in agony. Demons beat and whip your fellow man. They tie humans to tables and cut off limbs, or main them, burn them, poison them... they cause horrific injuries to other humans, all while you live lives they can only dream of pursuing."

"It's sad." Jason murmurs. "Humans once ruled an entire world of our own. Demons feared us. They knew better than to do anything that would incur our wrath. Certainly, we fought, but we were relative equals who did not commit genocide against one or the other on a regular basis. We never enslaved the demons on a mass scale. We didn't commit mass war crimes just to amuse ourselves. And if we did, then I'll condemn anyone who joined in on those acts!"

"The point is," Jason concludes, "you are all a part of this war, whether you want to be or not. If you insist on returning to your worlds, I'll send you back. But know this: Your inaction will cost the lives of countless fellow men, women, and children. I would know. I lost my daughter because I tried to sit on the sidelines. If you make the same mistakes as me, how many of your children will perish?"

Jason shoots a pointed glance not only at Isaiah, but the woman beside him, and their two little boys. The family of four huddles together, listening with rapt attention to the Wordsmith's speech. Isaiah lowers his head in shame, feeling somewhat 'small' after hearing the Wordsmith's proclamation.

The Wordsmith turns a little in midair to look at a different section of the refugees, continuing to hover through the magical energy of his angelic wings.

"My people will go through and take a voting tally among all of you. If you don't want to participate in this war, then so be it. I will return you to wherever you came from. If you do, however, you will receive accommodations, a decent house to live in, food, and a life without abuse. You will learn of the magic humanity commands, and the methods we will eventually use to crush the demons and make them fear us as they once did."

"Humans are not weak. You have all grown up and lived lives believing the opposite, but look around you! Look at my fearsome warriors with their powerful suits of armor! Any one of them can match a Demon Lord. United, a hundred can match a Baron! Even a thousand can match a Duke! And while no number can currently match an Emperor... hehehe. That will not be the case forever."

Jason crooks a smile.

"The demons fear you. They fear me. They fear all of us. And they should! Humans are not weaklings. We are the most fearsome species in the whole galaxy! That is why they use our souls as food and our bodies as labor! They seek to humiliate us and break our spirits. But so long as we unite, we can force them to bow their heads and fear us once more!"

"Not for the sake of genocide." Jason explains. "But for a better future where humans and demons can stand together. One where we respect each other as equals, and perhaps even collaborate to improve each other's lots in life."

The Wordsmith raises his eyes to the shining sky above.

"Besides. If we do not someday learn to work together... the great Threat will come for all of us. It will kill us all, and no amount of regrets will save us."

A long pause follows as Jason allows the people beneath him to ruminate on his words.

He sweeps his eyes across the masses, causing them to lower their heads and close their eyes.

The countless rescued slaves eagerly look forward to any scraps he might give them. Compared to slaving under the demons, any improvement from their lot in life is desirable.

Some of the better treated slaves, or those who didn't suffer as badly, still look forward to joining the Wordsmith's cause.

And even among the humans from the Hell of Isolation and Lust, those who lived decent lives and who have better developed brains, they still follow along with Jason's logic, making them realize they could be doing so much better under him than under their former demon comrades.

Isaiah raises his head once more.

"My lord! I wish... I wish to join your cause! But first, I have a question."

Jason nods. "Go on."

"You state that we must face the demons in battle. I believe under your leadership, we may ultimately prevail. However! I have no animosity toward my friends from the Hell of Isolation. Will you force me to strike at them? If so, I cannot join you."

"That is an excellent question." Jason says, with a smile. "My understanding of the Hell of Isolation is that it doesn't involve itself in the matters of other demons. Therefore, if they remain neutral and do not join in on the attacks against humans, I promise not to hurt them. I seek the unification of humans and demons. But also, I intend to purge the evil leaders corrupting demon society, as well. It will be up to you to decide whether you think your friends from the Hell of Isolation will stand against us."

"But." Jason adds. "If they do join in to attack us, I will not show them mercy. I can only hope they will take the path of peace and remember their friendship with people like you."

Isaiah nods slowly. His courage in speaking up causes others nearby to look at him with appreciation as he takes the risks onto himself.

"I see. Then in that case, I will pledge myself to your cause!"

Isaiah raises his fist in support of the Wordsmith!

Not long after, another man from the Hell of Isolation raises his fist.

"As will I!"

"And me, too!"

"So shall I!"

Men and women alike join in the chorus, their voices gradually increasing in numbers. As Jason watches, the vast majority of people he rescued raise their fists in support of joining his resistance. He smiles faintly, listening to the roar of humanity rising up to join his cause.

Only a small fraction don't end up joining in. Jason makes a note of these people, but does not blame them for their decision.

"Thank you, everyone. It takes courage to fight against the status quo. For too long, the demons have trampled on your lives, and your dignity. Some of you have chosen not to join me, and that is acceptable. I will send you back to your homes in a short time, and you may return to your lives. But, I would still ask you one last time to consider my offer. I will grant all those who return special magical artifacts. If you should choose to accept the call of your people, you will only need to activate your medallions to alert my people to your change of heart. We will welcome all humans with open arms!"

Jason concludes his speech shortly thereafter, flying away and diminishing his presence before landing atop the tower where his wives stand.

"That Isaiah fellow is interesting." Jason mutters. "Let's keep an eye on him. I bet he'd make for good officer material."

Phoebe nods. "Great speech, honey."

"I almost couldn't tell you improvised the whole thing." Fiona snarks. "Are you just a natural at speech-crafting?"

The Wordsmith shrugs. "I only spoke from the heart. More importantly, let's figure out how we can deal with all these people."

"I have a suggestion." Phoebe says. "Currently, a little under nine percent of the refugees seem to wish to return home. Let's detain them for a while for processing, while allowing them to roam in the main cities. Perhaps after seeing the marvels of our lifestyle, they'll change their minds and want to stay."

"Good idea." Jason says, smiling at his wife. He leans in to give her a kiss before noticing Fiona's look of annoyance. "You want a kiss too, honey?"

"Pft. Obviously." Fiona pouts. "Hurry up and make me a body. I'm tired of missing out!"

"Soon, I promise." Jason says, smiling lovingly at her.

He turns away to look back at the crowds below.

"Alright. Our people are more than capable of rounding up these newcomers. I'll leave it in the capable hands of our subordinates. Let's hurry up and get some soldiers back to reinforce the Core. Then... we can check the souls inside the Lazarus Tower."

Jason's voice raises an octave at the mention of the souls he stole from Mephisto.

"...She HAS to be there! I won't accept it otherwise!"

Phoebe nods solemnly. "We'll find Daisy, Jason. All souls have to pass through the River Styx before reaching the Great Beyond. There are only two reasons she wouldn't be there..."

A flicker of hatred passes across Jason's face.

"Either Beelzebub's attack annihilated her soul... or Mephisto already put her inside an undead body. If the latter, we won't be able to recover her with the Lazarus Tower. I'll have to scour all of the Seven Hells to find our little girl."

"She's alive." Fiona mutters. "I know she is. Our daughter is too strong to simply..."

Fiona trails off, leaving the implication to hang.

After a few minutes, Jason, Phoebe, and Fiona take their leave. They travel back to the Lazarus tower to search its two million souls not only for their daughter, but for the souls of other people they pray they will find.

At the same time, back inside the HRZ compounds, tens of thousands of experienced soldiers round up all the human refugees to conduct examinations and surveys of the people they've rescued.

Among them are two high ranking personnel: Corporal Hurent and Lieutenant Samuel.

The female Corporal sits at a table, with Samuel beside her. Five chairs sit across from them, allowing up to a family of five to take seats for their interviews.

"Names?" Hurent asks, directing her attention to a man, a woman, and their five year old daughter.

"My name is Richard." The man says. "This is my wife, Kathy, and our child, Stacy."

Hurent continues jotting down their information over the next several minutes, taking their words at face value. A more thorough investigation of all the people will come later, after every single refugee has had their identities uploaded into Centurion's databases.

Once she finishes with that family and they walk away, she turns to Samuel.

"Thoughts?"

"They seem clean." Samuel says. "The father was a little nervous, but I picked up a lot of excitement, too."

"Jason's speech was quite uplifting." Hurent says, with a smile. "It really warmed my heart."

"Yeah. It was a good line of bullshit." Samuel mutters. "Christ, do I hate speeches. They put me right to sleep."

Hurent gestures to a nearby trooper. "Next."

She and Samuel watch as a dark-skinned man, appearing to be about fifty years old, and his daughter, perhaps twenty, take a seat before them.

Samuel's eyes flicker as the examines the man's finely tailored suit, his muscular body, and his calm, collected eyes. Even the daughter appears lovely and well-taken care of. Her bright pink hair stands out from the people around her, making Samuel postulate several interesting possibilities.

"Names?" Hurent asks.

The father smiles, exposing his teeth.

"Benjamin Brown. And this is my daughter, Lily."

Hurent doesn't give the name much thought, and neither does Samuel, but he does keep a close watch on Benjamin's face as he talks.

"Place of origin?" Hurent asks.

Benjamin stares at her for a moment before slightly nodding.

"Hell Harbor."

Hurent, previously jotting down his information on a tablet in her hand, raises her head to meet his gaze.

"Oh? Hell Harbor?"

"That's right." Benjamin Brown says. "I have been... looking forward to meeting Jason Hiro."

"You know the Wordsmith?" Samuel asks.

"Where I come from, everyone knows Jason Hiro's illustrious name." Benjamin cooly says. "I'll cut straight to the point. Since I'm here, I want you to set up a meeting with the Wordsmith. Tell him... I know Ose's grand plan."

"You... know Ose?" Hurent asks.

"What sort of relationship do you have with our most hated enemy?" Samuel asks, narrowing his eyes to slits.

"Like most humans, I have been a prisoner of the demons for almost my entire life." Benjamin slowly explains. "But this is a unique opportunity. I can finally help my people break free of their shackles. It would be wonderful if we can unite to stop the demonic menace, once and for all."

"Well said!" Hurent exclaims, immediately warming up to Benjamin. "That's the line of thought that'll make you one of my comrades!"

Samuel smiles too, though his expression is noticeably less warm than Hurent's.

"I see. So it's like that. Then, by all means. I'll make sure the Wordsmith speaks to you as soon as possible, Sir Benjamin Brown. I do hope you're not lying, or the consequences would be... severe."

"No, no." Benjamin says, raising his palm. "I would never lie about such an important matter. Believe me, I want humanity to return to its rightful place in the galaxy just as much as you."

He laughs.

"Haha. Why, at one point, when I was much younger, I even fought against the demons! It would be nice if I could still do that, but I'm getting quite old. My body just isn't what it used to be."

"You fought against the demons?" Hurent repeats. "But... but how? When?"

"I'm much older than I look." Benjamin says. "Much, much older."

He continues talking with the two officers for more than fifteen minutes. Eventually, Samuel waves over a subordinate.

"Take these two to the VIP area."

"Yes, sir!"

Benjamin and Lily stand up. As they turn to follow the trooper, Benjamin smiles at the two officers.

"Miss Hurent. Lovely speaking to you. And you as well, Mister Samuel."

"Have a great day!" Lily exclaims, waving cheerfully at them.

The father and daughter walk away, led by the soldier.

After they leave, Hurent leans back in her seat and sighs.

"Wow. I can't believe it. That Benjamin fellow is a cyborg, well over 100,000 years old. He actually fought against demonkind during the Energy Wars!"

Samuel purses his lips. "Yes. Impressive."

"Hm? Is something the matter?" Hurent asks, turning to scrutinize Samuel's face. "You seem upset."

"Not upset." Samuel says, slowly crossing his arms. "But concerned. That Benjamin... he's not as simple as he seems."

"Oh?" Hurent asks. "In what way?"

"Don't you think it's odd?" Samuel asks. "If we take Benjamin's words at face value, he killed Demon Emperors when he was younger. Yet, despite all of that, once demons pacified humanity, they not only let him live, but put him on their homeworld and let him live a luxurious life."

"He has a fighter's spirit." Hurent says. "Benjamin still hates the demons for what they did to humanity."

Samuel turns to look at her. His expression becomes indescribable.

"...I wonder about that."

Part 354: Benjamin's Backstory

Inside the Lazarus Tower.

Jason and Phoebe stand behind Fiona while she manipulates a custom-designed spiritual projection of data relating to the errant souls now 'swimming' within the Lazarus Tower's confines. With nothing to protect their souls, all their memories open up to Fiona, allowing her to visualize their entire lives as she pleases. She gains full access to every drop of knowledge they possess, allowing her to easily figure out the identities of every rescued human soul under her control.

Minutes stretch out into an hour. Jason and Phoebe watch silently as Fiona does her thing, combing through each of the one million souls one by one, until finally, Jason becomes too antsy to keep silent.

"This is taking forever." He mutters.

"I'm sorry." Fiona says, turning her head to smile apologetically at Jason. "I can't go any faster. There are more than a million souls here. I don't have an AI capable of reading and interpreting spiritual information, nor any way to 'filter' which souls I can look at first. I have to check them one by one to find Daisy."

Jason chews his lip. "How many have you checked so far?"

After a long, awkward pause, Fiona looks away and blushes.

"...Seventy-two."

The Wordsmith's brain practically implodes. He spins on his heel and sighs deeply. "That's not even remotely good enough! Seventy-two souls! At this rate it'll take you like, what, a million more minutes to search all the souls? What does that even come out to, like... like five months?"

"1 year, 10 months, 3 weeks, 8 days, and 40 minutes." Phoebe answers immediately, without batting an eye. When Jason looks at her in astonishment, she snorts. "Roughly."

"There HAS to be a way to speed this process up!" Jason complains, louder than before. "We need to know if Daisy is in there!"

Both women fall silent, nodding along to Jason's words. Their joking attitude fades, replaced instead with grim seriousness.

"Yeah. We do." Fiona mutters. "But I really don't have a way to speed this process up. Unless..."

"Unless?" Jason asks, turning to face her. "Unless what?"

For nearly a full minute, nobody says anything. Fiona stops her work to rub her chin. She hems and haws, shifting her gaze to look at the ten orbs floating above her. After a while, she smacks her forehead.

"Aha!"

"Aha?" Jason repeats.

She nods. "Ah-ha! I'm an errant soul, you see. So I can fly inside the tower's Soul Storage and question the other souls in groups. It's less reliable than searching their memories, but I can interview them all a hundred times quicker than if I manually searched their memories. Until they return to physical bodies, they won't lie to me, either, as their sense of 'person' won't return until they step back into the material world."

"That makes sense." Phoebe says with a nod. She looks at Jason. "But it will still take Fiona a while. We might as well get back to work until she finishes. We're wasting too much time standing here, when the demons could attack at any moment."

Jason hesitates for quite a while before groaning.

"Alright. Alright! I do have things I need to be doing. Fiona, just... you know, tell me when you're done."

His mind-wife nods. "I will. If Daisy's in here, I'll find her, Jason. I will."

Jason turns to leave, but pauses.

"Say, if you can go in there, what about Lorent and Shana?"

"Oh! That's a great point!" Fiona says, her eyes immediately sparkling. "Lorent is probably still walking with Shana off near the north side of the Fortress. Can you let him know what I'm doing and ask if he'll help? You can take care of Shana while we work, right?"

"I can." Jason says, flashing her a thumbs-up. "See you later, alligator."

"See you in a while, crocodile." Fiona laughs, before turning into a ball of light and flying into the Lazarus Tower's Soul Storage.

After she leaves, Jason momentarily becomes gloomy.

"Crocodile, huh..."

He shakes his head, turns around, and leaves with Phoebe on his arm.

After Jason and Phoebe leave, they give each other a kiss and split off, with Phoebe heading over to one of her workshops to manage the prototypes of the Power Glove, while Jason contacts Lorent and sends him to assist Fiona. After Lorent leaves, Jason turns to Shana's spirit-body, standing beside him, next to his knee.

"Hey, Shana! You wanna hang out with uncle Jason?"

[Yeah!] She exclaims.

Jason picks up the little girl and hoists her onto his shoulders, piggyback-style, just like he used to do with Daisy. Despite Shana's body being incorporeal and therefore weightless, the faint presence of her soul still makes her vaguely touchable, and thus, the Wordsmith can barely make out the sensation of her sitting on his shoulders if he concentrates his attention.

[Where we go? What we do?] Shana asks excitedly, while Jason hops around and bobs her on his shoulders.

"We are going to go talk to some friends!" Jason says, keeping his tone chipper. "I need to get some work done on-"

Before Jason can finish his sentence, a transmission beams into an earpiece lodged in his right ear, interrupting him.

He pauses, then frowns as a trooper in the HRZ communicates with him.

"What? Benjamin Brown? Why does that name sound familiar..."

It doesn't take Jason long before a memory flashes through his mind.

"Right. Tucker, that Hero in the revolver. Didn't he work with a guy named Benjamin Brown? But that was during the Energy Wars. There's no way he could still be alive..."

Remembering Marie's continued survival, Jason cocks his head.

"Well, I mean, there's not 'no' way, I suppose."

Jason shrugs, then teleports himself and Shana to a designated meeting location at the edge of the HRZ, arriving atop a small building with a flat roof. At this position, no other humans would be in his way, and thus, he doesn't worry about accidentally teleporting inside someone, along with the gruesome implications.

He continues to allow Shana to ride piggyback while jumping off the roof. He walks through a doorway, and her head passes through the door's frame above, thanks to her spiritual body. If she were a real child, she'd have banged her head and started to cry, but luckily that doesn't happen.

The Wordsmith walks into the building to find a half dozen troopers in exosuits scattered around the room, standing guard, yet also at ease. They leave their guns slung over their backs, and only stay inside as a matter of ceremony, rather than due to any specific security concerns.

In the center of the room, a small rectangular tables sits, along with ten chairs, two of them occupied by a dark-skinned man and woman. The man, Benjamin Brown, leans back in his chair and smiles at Jason, while the women, Lily, eyes him curiously.

"So." Benjamin says, rising to his feet. "You are the Wordsmith. I have heard so much about you."

Jason pauses for half a second, eying Benjamin with surprise.

What the hell? It really is the same guy! Benjamin looks quite a bit older, but not so much 100,000 years as maybe 50 or 60…

Jason walks over to Benjamin Brown and shakes his hand. "I'm Jason Hiro. This cute girl on my shoulders is Shana."

Benjamin glances at the girl and nods. "An errant soul?"

"Something like that." Jason replies, not elaborating further.

Perhaps, if Benjamin were to know the child was actually an ancient Hero, he might be shocked and more than a little suspicious regarding her origins.

"This is my daughter, Lily." Ben says, gesturing to the pink-haired woman beside him.

When Jason hears her name and turns his attention away from Benjamin, his heart nearly stops.

Holy shit! Lily? She's that woman Fiona made out with while possessing my body! She's actually the daughter of Benjamin Brown, too! How many coincidences can there be in this world??

The Wordsmith forces a pained smile. "Pleasure to meet you, Lily. Um. Samantha… talks about you."

"Samantha?" Lily asks, cocking her head. "Do I know a Samantha?"

"Belial." Jason explains. "She calls herself Samantha, these days."

"OH! Beli! Yes, I saw her not too long ago!" Lily exclaims, her expression brightening. "She and I got all cozy and- ulp!"

Lily swallows her words when her father turns to look at her with an annoyed expression.

"I thought I told you to keep away from that seductress." Benjamin snaps. "You never do as I say!"

"But daddyyy!" Lily pouts. "I love Beli! She and I are such good... ahem, friends! We're such good friends!"

"Friends don't shove their tongues inside each other's cheeks." Benjamin grumbles.

With that out of the way, Jason takes a seat at the table directly across from Benjamin. Shana continues to sit on his shoulders, but also lazily flops across the top of his head and lets her arms hang down. Given her weightless body, the Wordsmith doesn't even notice her movements unless he pays close attention.

"So. Why did you want to see me?" Jason asks. "To be honest, I didn't know you were still alive. You specifically, I mean. I thought you would have died ages ago, given you're from the Energy Wars, and all that."

Benjamin's expression remains neutral. "Oh? You know about my involvement in the Energy Wars? I guess the rumors are true. You must have spoken to Marie."

Jason mentally facepalms. "Ah, yeah. Cat's out of the bag, I suppose."

"Haha. Me and Marie go way back..." Benjamin muses. "We're both more machine than human, these days. But back during those old wars... well, she and I were an item for a while. It's too bad about what happened to her. We drifted apart after the incident."

"What do you mean?" Jason asks. "What incident?"

"You should know perfectly well." Benjamin counters. "She was a human, once. Now she is a machine. She even keeps her former brain on her desk, as if it were a trophy she conquered. Once she made the transition from mortal to immortal she... changed."

Benjamin releases a long, soft sigh.

"She was never a particularly lovable woman, mind you. But after she cast aside her fleshly body, she lost all traces of humanity. Compassion, love, all of it. She became a cold and calculating genius, able to think tens of thousands of times faster and more intensely than ever before. Even today, she's nothing more than a ball of schemes. I broke our relationship off when I realized she had lost all romantic interest in me."

Jason pokes his chin thoughtfully. "That can't be right. I saw with my own eyes that Marie still cares for her crocodiles and alligators. She treats the lizardmen like beloved pets, heaping adoration upon them."

"Oh? For some reason, she still loves them, yes." Benjamin affirms, as if remembering that one detail. "But to be fair, she's always loved lizards and reptiles. It's because of her grandfather, you see."

Benjamin pauses before continuing.

"Her grandfather adored her. I never met the fellow, he was long dead before I ever came into the picture, but the way Marie talked about him, she acted as if he was the kindest and most doting man she had ever known."

Benjamin glances at Jason. "You were cryogenically frozen, right? You lived around the time of the Energy Wars, if I remember correctly."

"I did, yes." Jason says with a nod. "Bit before, I think. I went into cryo-stasis in the year 2020."

"Oh, that was quite a while before the war itself broke out." Benjamin mutters. "Well, Marie's grandfather, apparently he fought in World War II. I have to respect veterans of the Two Great Wars. What was his name? Harold, I think? Hmm. You should ask her about him sometime. If she still has any humanity left in her, she'll absolutely break into starry-eyed smiles talking about old Harold."

Jason nods, but the topic of Marie's lineage doesn't interest him much. "Right. Well, regarding your arrival here...?"

"Sorry. I lost my train of thought." Benjamin chuckles. "I decided I want to join your resistance. The demons have harmed humanity for too long, and it's about time someone fought back. Having a Hero, versus not having a Hero, those two things are very different scenarios."

He continues. "Frankly, I wanted to join you sooner, but I was in an untenable position, living on Hell Harbor. I couldn't have possibly gotten my daughter and the rest of our family out alive, not while escaping the demons, so you saved me a great deal of trouble."

"I'm glad to help." Jason says. "Though I am curious. According to the files Lieutenant Samuel sent me, you lived a pretty good life on Hell Harbor. Heck, you even lived in the Slithering Spire, which is the place Beelzebub ran. Beelzebub... the same demon who detonated his body and killed over a million people, including my daughter. How do you explain... all of that situation?"

As if connecting the dots, Benjamin looks up at Shana and sighs.

"I'm... sorry about your child."

"Shana isn't my daughter." Jason answers, his expression turning cold. "Not the one who died, anyway. I might adopt Shana at some point, but don't misunderstand."

"Ah. I see. I thought, given her spirit-body... never mind."

Benjamin Brown shakes his head.

"That Beelzebub. He was quite the monster. Nobody liked him. Why, I even fought him, once. He nearly killed me."

"You did?" Jason asks, visibly surprised. "With your robotic body, you were able to face a Duke?"

"I didn't say I won. I lost, and quite badly." Benjamin mutters. "If he were a Baron, I'd have likely crushed him. But as a Duke, Beelzebub was simply too formidable. Oh, yes, and his servant girl attacked my sweet Lily, as well. Psh. Compared to Master Agares, that Beelzebub was nothing but trouble."

Lily scowls. "That fat b-word! Jeez! She was so infuriating."

"Anyway," Benjamin continues, "I am here now, and that's what matters. I hope you will accept my help in fighting the demons. I was once a feared enemy of their kind. I killed more than a dozen Dukes, but never managed to slay a genuine Emperor."

Jason gazes at the man across from him, as if trying to pierce through Ben's skin with his eyes.

"What are you, exactly? Are you like Marie?"

"No, no, heavens, no." Benjamin says. "Marie placed her soul and memories into a robotic body. My body, however, is still about fifty percent organic. I am a cyborg. A Vanguard, to be more specific. During the Energy Wars, super soldiers like me were created by the world governments to stand up to our demon and Volgrim enemies."

Benjamin slaps his left bicep.

"Plenty of my skin and muscles are still 100% grade-A human. My internal organs, though, those were replaced ages ago. It's why I can't die of old age. I have the unique ability to repair my fleshy-parts through the process of absorption."

Jason narrows his eyes in concentration. "I don't follow. You can, what? Absorb flesh to restore flesh?"

"Not flesh. Energy. Mana, in particular." Benjamin says. "Since my enemies were primarily demons, Marie made systems capable of ripping the mana out of other life forms to rapidly regenerate my body in the event I took too much damage. This ability was also quite useful against Psions, but not against humans or other entities of a non-magical nature, such as Technopaths, Changelings, and so on. Not only did I have this ability, but so did all the other Vanguards. Sadly, they all died during the final battle. I am the only one remaining."

Benjamin lowers his eyes. He exhales deeply.

"Tsk... I lost my brother to the Volgrim. Darnell Brown. He was a good man, and an excellent soldier. But the higher-ups used him as a sacrifice to save lives. I'm sure he was happy to go out a hero if it meant fewer civilian casualties."

"I'm sorry for your loss." Jason mutters. "That can't have been easy to deal with."

"Losing family never is." Benjamin answers, shooting a pointed look at the Wordsmith. "I'm sure you'd know."

"Mmm."

Jason and Benjamin both remain quiet for a few seconds, allowing the atmosphere to tense up.

"Regarding my joining you." Benjamin eventually says. "I am old now. I can still fight like hell, if necessary, but I am also an accomplished war veteran and tactician. If I can help you fend off the demonic hordes, I will happily lend my assistance."

"That's... an awfully generous offers." Jason says slowly. "But letting a newcomer into the command structure, especially someone who's lived among demons... I'm sure you can understand my hesitation."

"I am no friend of demonkind." Benjamin says.

"I would never say as much." Jason replies. "But that doesn't mean others will believe you. I can't personally vouch for you. I could simply force everyone to accept my decision, but I would prefer not to rely on such means. It's better if everyone accepts you themselves, for the sake of top-level cohesion."

"Haha. I completely understand." Ben says, holding his open palms outward in a show of good faith. "I would be alarmed if I were in your position, too. What if I am actually a demonic sympathizer? It would not be a wise choice to grant me access to any classified information. Perhaps we should shelve my joining for a time. I'm in no rush, though given the movements I've heard about from the demon higher-ups, they certainly are."

"What movements?" Jason asks. His gaze shows a trace of suspicion. "And... how do you know about what the demon higher-ups are planning?"

"Ose and the rest have held me hostage for tens of millennia," Benjamin says, raising his chin and sighing helplessly toward the ceiling. "They used my daughters, my sons, and my wives as collateral to keep me in check. On the surface, I was a free man living in the Slithering Spire. But in reality, I was a pawn they yanked around to try and deduce the thoughts of their human enemies. That means you."

"I was under the impression Ose was an expert in human psychological warfare." Jason says, continuing to stare with suspicion at Benjamin. "Why would she need your opinion?"

"Ose might have attended human universities and absorbed much of our literature, but she is not a human herself." Benjamin explains. "If you were in her position, would you not seek a second opinion? Just to ensure the smoothness of your plans. Even now, do you not ask Belial for help when dealing with demons?"

"Ah. That does make sense." Jason mutters, loosening his gaze and leaning back in his chair. "Hmm. I can see how all of those millennia would be a real problem for you. Well, if nothing else, I am an advocate for second chances. Forgive and forget, and all of that."

"That is a noble ideal." Benjamin says, smiling. "Forgiveness is the virtue closest to the Creator, while greed is the sin he hates most."

"I didn't take you for a religious man." Jason says, his tone more casual than at the start of their conversation.

"Oh, I'm not religious in the least." Benjamin retorts. "But... I've had a few out of body experiences. I once dreamed that I spoke to the Creator. It didn't go quite the way I imagined. He was... surprisingly casual. Less lofty than I expected."

"Dreams can be strange, indeed." Jason concludes.

The Wordsmith and Benjamin continue talking idly for a while.

Eventually, Jason rests his hands on his lap.

"I'll take your request under consideration, Benjamin. After losing Neil, we've been needing someone with strategic large-scale warfare knowledge. My future plans require that I shore up my mental weaknesses with someone more proficient in these matters, though such candidates are, as you might expect, difficult to find."

"And what exactly are your future plans?" Benjamin casually asks.

Jason quietly raps his fingers against his thighs, thinking carefully about whether or not he should trust Benjamin with any specific information.

"...I'm developing powerful new weapons to deal with the demons." Jason slowly says. "One of them might even be compatible with your physiology. It would let humans, demons, and monsters transform their bodies into other species. I call it the Power Glove. Once I finish work on it, it will allow my armies to fight at levels not seen even in the Energy Wars."

Benjamin's eyes glint with interest. "That sounds exciting. I won't lie, such a device interests me greatly. I'm something of a battle-maniac myself. Or at least, I was in my youth. Still, my old servos sometimes ache for a chance to crush some skulls."

"Maybe you'll get a shot at that, and soon." Jason replies.

After a while, Jason stands up. Benjamin and Lily do as well, giving the Hero a farewell as he turns to leave the room.

"This conversation has been pretty interesting." Jason says. "Thank you for your unique insights. I'll keep in touch."

"I'll be here if you need me." Benjamin answers, bowing his head.

The Wordsmith nods. He shakes Benjamin's hand, then leaves the man and his daughter alone in the room.

After the Wordsmith departs, Benjamin casually sits back down. He requests a cup of coffee from one of the nearby guards, then smiles at his daughter.

"There's nothing to be worried about, Lily. It seems we'll be able to make a... bigger impact here than we could before."

Lily blinks twice at her father's cryptic words.

"Hmm? Daddy?"

"Ahaha..." Benjamin chuckles lightly. A strange gleam shimmers in his eyes. "Fate likes to play tricks on people. Who would have thought I'd end up here... right in the heart of the human resistance."

Part 355: Karma and Fate

After Jason leaves Benjamin Brown behind, he stops outside the building and casually glances around, looking at all of the people milling about the Human Relocation Zone. With tens of millions of people in one location, it might ordinarily become an absolute clusterfuck, with people scared and afraid and uncertain of where to go. However, thanks to the smooth direction of carefully placed troopers wearing exosuits, most of the refugees don't descend into chaos. Instead, they treat the soldiers like signposts, asking where the bathrooms are, where to obtain food, where to sleep, and so on.

As Jason watches, families with children repeatedly walk up to troopers scattered about, asking for directions. The men and women of Jason's army politely explain where to go, even offering additional details to ensure no accidents happen along the way.

But Jason doesn't pay much attention to them.

Instead, he dwells on his conversation with Benjamin Brown. He thinks about the words the man uttered, and the hidden implications lurking under the surface.

"That Benjamin..." Jason mutters. He touches his finger, casually intending to rub Gabriel's ring, only to remember he gave it to Uriel. After blanking out for a moment, he sighs.

"Shana. What did you think about Benjamin Brown?"

The little girl, still sitting on his shoulders while flopped over top of his head, shrugs casually.

[Don't know. He not good.]

"Oh?" Jason asks. "You didn't like him?"

[No. He bad man.]

The Wordsmith purses his lips. "He lived in the Slithering Spire. He knew Beelzebub personally. I doubt he had something to do with Daisy's death... but in my heart, I can't trust him easily. Plus, there were those tidbits he knew. He seems to be awfully well-acquainted with Ose. I can't just let him waltz into my command structure."

Despite his strong words, Jason sighs. "Haah... but then again, without Neil around, Phoebe has to do all the heavy lifting. I can't keep foisting all the work onto my gal. I'm not much of a tactician, though... I really need a second opinion. Raphael's advice would likely prove bloodthirsty beyond all reason, and Neil isn't around anymore. What to do... what to do... should I invite Ben into the fold?"

The Wordsmith chews his lip.

"So many things could go wrong. He's a cyborg. What if he has some advanced hacking implants? What if he's strong enough to overpower my commandos? He could rush over and hurt, capture, or even kill Phoebe before anyone could stop him. That's not a risk I can afford to take."

Jason glances to the west, in the vague, general direction of the Warpgate.

"...Maybe I could talk to Marie, again. She knows about Vanguards. But do I trust that woman? That robot-husk of a human? Not particularly. The last time we saw each other, I 'borrowed' some artifacts and ran away, leaving her in the lurch. Still, a genius like her, she could absolutely find a way to travel to Tarus II, or send one of her goons, yet she hasn't. What are her actions telling me?"

Frustrated, Jason teleports himself atop a nearby rooftop, gaining a bird's eye view of the compound. He absentmindedly allows his eyes to wander while he continues thinking out loud.

"The Power Gloves aren't ready. If the demons attack, I'll have to fight them myself. What measures can I take to protect everyone before they get here? Visiting Marie can come after I make the demons piss themselves in fear."

As Jason continues to muse, his eyes randomly notice an anomaly in the crowd. While thousands of people walk about below him, one figure stands, unmoving, looking directly up at Jason with his hands folded behind his back. This single unmoving person catches the Wordsmith's attention, making him pause his thoughts to look more closely.

"What the heck? Makoto Ueda?!"

Jason blinks his eyes several times to make sure he isn't hallucinating. A huge smile spreads across his face.

"Makoto! It's really him! Holy shit, and here I thought he might have died!"

The Wordsmith teleports to the ground, just a few feet in front of Makoto.

"Hey! Where have you been?" Jason asks. "I was worried a demon might have assassinated you or something!"

Makoto politely smiles at the Wordsmith, his eyes curving into crescent moons.

"Jason. It is good to see you. And Shana, as well. Such a cute child."

Jason continues smiling, but a flicker of confusion passes across his eyes.

"Eh? You know Shana? I don't remember introducing you to her."

"Haha. Such a sweet young girl. Of course I know her name." Makoto says nonchalantly. "Come, come. Let us go and have a seat, Jason. I've been wanting to talk to you for a while."

Jason nods, but the more 'Makoto' talks, the more alien he sounds.

Since when did Makoto stop calling me 'Jason-san'? The Wordsmith wonders.

A moment later, a second realization hits him.

I couldn't locate Makoto previously, but now he suddenly appears before me. Isn't this a little too... coincidental? And he's acting so differently. Could he be...

An instant later, Jason jumps back from Makoto and holds out his hand.

"Conjure." The Wordsmith says, summoning a rifle from a storage somewhere on Tarus II, a predetermined location he made explicitly for this purpose. "You're not Makoto. You're a Changeling!"

Makoto continues to smile, ignoring the weapon aimed at his chest. All around him, several troopers take notice of Jason's movements and draw their own guns, converging on the Hero's location.

"Haha. Indeed, I am not Makoto Ueda." The man says. "But neither am I not not Makoto Ueda. You have good eyes, Wordsmith. Fortunately, I am not a Volgrim Changeling either. You have misunderstood my identity."

"Who the fuck are you, then?" Jason asks, his tone turning menacing. "Speak!"

Ten soldiers in T-REX's surround Makoto, while others quickly pull the civilians away to clear the vicinity. Even with a dozen guns aimed at him from all directions, Makoto continues to smile, unmoved.

"Who am I? That is a difficult question to answer. The answer itself is simple, but the reason and methods, not so much."

Makoto pauses to open his eyes and glance at Shana.

"Why not ask the little girl? She knows. Shana's spiritual senses are much more attuned than yours, Wordsmith."

Shana sighs. [Is good man. Not bad.]

Jason frowns. "You like to speak in riddles. That's cute, but it won't stop me from throwing you in a jail cell and torturing the answer out of you. Say the truth, imposter!"

Makoto's smile fades away.

"Very well. You are not much fun, not like Arthur was, or little Joan. I will say my name, but it will be up to you to believe me."

He presses his palm against his chest.

"My name is Siddhartha Gautama. I have reincarnated into Makoto Ueda's body through a fortunate coincidence. A stroke of fate, if you will. But most foreigners find my full name to be 'clunky.' You may call me 'Buddha.'"

Jason stares at the man before him with a look of growing confusion.

"Huh? Reincarnated? Buddha? What are you even..."

"Come now." Buddha says, chuckling lightly. "In all your years speaking to Solomon, did he never once mention me? We were acquaintances, after all."

Jason shakes his head.

"He never mentioned you, no."

Buddha's expression freezes.

"What, seriously? That unfilial little brat! Hmph. Some seeker of knowledge indeed. Doesn't even think to mention the man who trained him in hand-to-hand combat... grumble grumble..."

Jason glances upward in Shana's general direction.

"Uh. Is he...?"

Shana nods. [Good man. Tells truth.]

The Wordsmith's expression droops.

"You're kidding."

Not long afterward, once Buddha has cleared up the misunderstanding, he and Jason take a seat at a bench-table Jason summons atop a nearby rooftop, for privacy. Siddhartha Gautama sips tea from a China cup, one Jason also summoned through a Word of Power, while meeting the Wordsmith's gaze.

"You have many questions." Buddha observes. "I will answer them."

"You're, like, actually Buddha?" Jason asks. "As in, Buddha, Buddha? From Chinese mythology?"

"Hmph. Ignorant American." Buddha grumbles. "Why do people from that continent always get my origins wrong? I am Indian. That was my first birthplace."

"Oops. Sorry. I don't really know much about... you." Jason mumbles in embarrassment. "I didn't even know Buddha was a Hero. You were, I mean. I didn't know you were a Hero."

"Many noteworthy historical figures were Heroes." Buddha says, while calmly sipping his tea. "I am not all that impressive."

"But you're sitting right here, before me, alive." Jason says. "Are you immortal?"

"No. It is due to my last remaining Heroic Aspect." Buddha says. "When I first walked the Earth, I possessed many powers, some direct, and others more spiritual in nature. Of those, the most nebulous was my ability to 'Fateweave,' or to change the course of Karma. Upon my death, my soul did not transfer to an artifact, like Solomon's did, but instead, I reincarnated into a new body and lived a second life. This was my process of reincarnation."

Buddha spends several minutes talking to Jason, telling him about a few of the lives he's lived. The more he explains, the better Jason gets a grasp on his powers.

"That's incredible! So you've met all sorts of Heroes throughout history?"

"Hoho." Buddha chuckles. "Met them all, I have. Every last one. Yes, even cute little Shana here. Sometimes, I spoke to them at length. Sometimes, I only exchanged a few words. But in the end, I made it my mission to meet each Hero, to guide and influence them."

Buddha's expression flickers.

"Of course... there was one Hero I met. There was that... that one man. Tsk. I never should have tried to 'fix' him. That was a terrible mistake. I still have not forgiven myself for such a blunder."

Jason cocks his head. "Who?"

"Oh, I think I need not speak his name." Buddha says, his expression turning ugly. "If you have spoken to Raphael, you already know it."

The Wordsmith falls silent. He ruminates for twenty long seconds before his own expression turns grim.

"Don't tell me... Dracula?"

"Indeed. Alucard himself." Buddha mutters. "I saw in his Karma a great deviation approaching. I wished to ensure he would walk on the path of righteousness. Instead, I inadvertently pushed him to become a monster. A Dark Hero. He was one of my greatest shames."

Buddha leans back and shakes his head.

"Let us not speak of the Vampire King any longer. That bastard singlehandedly built the Hell of Blood. Were it not for him, there would have only been Six Hells. Who knows how the war might have ended?"

Jason nods. "Fair enough. I have a more pressing question, actually. Um... regarding Makoto... is he... is he dead?"

"Ah. Your friend, Makoto." Buddha says, returning to a calm and collected mental state. "I can see why my situation would confuse you. No. Makoto is not dead. He and I have become 'one.' Our souls have merged through my reincarnation."

"I don't understand." Jason says. "How can your souls 'merge'. You don't sound or act like Makoto at all. You're basically a foreign entity who has taken over his body."

"Many have thought the same as you." Buddha says, smiling gently. "But, my power of reincarnation is not a controlled ability. Rather, it seeks out those who lack attachments. Those lacking friends, families, desires... those who have little to gain, and nothing to lose. I possess their bodies, and we become 'one.' In this way, I am not One, but Many. I am the combination of hundreds of people who once Were, and who someday will Be."

"Take, for example, the first body I ever reincarnated into." Buddha continues explaining. "Little Ishmael, a young boy, crippled and sick. An orphan. Someone with no living family. He was dying, mentally, and so, Karma found him to be a fit vessel for my purposes. Even so, Ishmael did have one attachment, the village girl who healed him and cared for the sick. I, thusly, inherited his attachments."

Buddha falls silent. His expression dims as he reminisces on those memories.

"Sigh... Tamael..."

Jason blinks. "Tamael?"

Siddhartha Gautama does not immediately answer. Instead, his eyes become unfocused as a familiar pain swells in his chest. It takes him a minute to stabilize his emotions and return to his senses.

"Ah. Yes... Tamael. My first, and only, love. She is dead, now. She has passed onto the Great Beyond."

Jason swallows heavily. "...Oh. I'm sorry to hear that. I didn't know."

"You have lost someone precious to you, as well." Buddha says, glancing at Jason with a knowing glint in his eye. "Your child, Daisy. Like my Tamael, nothing remains of her here."

"What are you saying?" Jason asks, frowning. "You don't know that. As we speak, Fiona is searching for Daisy's soul. She should have ended up inside the Lazarus Tower, or perhaps even inside one of Mephisto's undead monsters. But she definitely isn't dead! She can't be!"

Buddha eyes the young man for a bit before averting his gaze.

"Denial. Yes. I once denied reality, too. But you know, Jason... the truth will set you free. Someday, when you realize the 'truth' of the matter, the pain will disappear. In one regard, you are much luckier than me, for no matter what I wish, I will never again see Tamael."

Dismayed by Buddha's words, Jason can only click his tongue and sigh.

"My Daisy isn't dead. She can't be..."

Some time passes. The two men continue their conversation, and gradually, the topic shifts.

"I don't know whether to trust him." Jason says. "Benjamin Brown has lived among demons, specifically their leaders. He claims to hate demons, and he says he's killed many of them, but I don't feel much sincerity in his gaze."

"That man has lived a troubled life." Buddha says. "He fought and bled for humanity, but in the end, his efforts came to naught. After everything he gave up, he became embittered. Do you think such a person can be corrupted easily? I don't. I believe all humans have an innate nature, one which they will always fall back on, if given time."

He gestures toward the Wordsmith.

"Take yourself, for instance. You have hardened your heart as a result of the events of Stormbringer. You hate the demons. You want to rip them apart. Even so, your innate nature is one of trusting others and giving them second chances. Can you really become a bloodthirsty monster? Can you really slaughter your enemies wantonly?"

Jason chews his lip. "Hope can. He did. And he's a copy of myself."

"Hahaha!" Buddha laughs. "Yes, you think your clone is a murderous person with blood staining his palms, but just because you think such thoughts, does that make them real? From my perspective, Hope is merely a lost and confused boy. He is frustrated. He is alone. You cast him aside, and in response, he tried to forcibly change his nature to meet the troubles he faced. But he is not so different from you. Neither of you are ruthless, and in the same way, neither is Benjamin Brown. He is a soldier. He follows orders. And when he realized there was nothing he could do to change his fate, he quietly accepted it."

Buddha pauses.

"In a way, Benjamin is like a dog who has been beaten into submission by the vicissitudes of life. What you seek is a strategic leader, but even if that is what you want, that is not who he is. He is a follower, not a leader. He is someone who accepts his fate, not someone who changes it. He is unsuitable to add to your command structure for this reason."

Jason's eyes brighten. "I see. I hadn't thought about him in that way."

"Benjamin Brown is far from trustworthy." Buddha continues. "But who knows? Perhaps, in a roundabout way, you might find him to be useful, in a manner of speaking. His daughter, for instance."

"Huh?" Jason grunts, shooting a skeptical glance at Siddhartha Gautama. "Lily? You think she'll be useful?"

"In a manner of speaking." Buddha repeats, keeping his words cryptic. "Lily is not like her father. She is also his weakness. He cares deeply for her. He cares for all of his children, but especially her, as she was the last daughter given to him by the woman he loved. Unfortunately, that woman has passed on to the Great Beyond. She cannot be resurrected through Mephisto's magic, nor your Lazarus Tower."

"That's too bad." Jason mutters. "Losing loved ones is never fun."

After a slight pause, he looks at Buddha suspiciously.

"Say... how do you know all this stuff, anyway? I thought you only just reincarnated and you don't even possess your Heroic Aspects anymore."

"I have lived many lives." Buddha answers. "I possess deep insight into the nature of existence. Also, I spoke to a demon friend of mine, not long ago. He told me all sorts of fun tidbits!"

"A demon friend?" Jason asks.

"Indeed. You might even be familiar with him, haha!" Buddha laughs. "But for now, why don't we keep his name a surprise? He won't cause you any problems. He is only a confused child who has yet to find his way. And he is not the only one."

Buddha raps his fingers on the table.

"Blood Reaper."

"Hmm? You know about Cassiel, too?" Jason asks, bewildered.

"The Child of Light. Yes. I have met her on many occasions, wearing many different faces." Buddha answers. "She is a kind girl, but she is also filled with hatred. More so now than before the Energy Wars, mind you. Now, her attachments have become like tar, adhering to her and holding her back from recovery. What a pitiful child, she is."

"Do you know her real name?" The Wordsmith asks, pressing Buddha for more information.

"I do. I know plenty about that sweet summer child. Ah, but if she will not tell you, than neither should I. What a sad life she has lived, dying at such a young age and leaving her family behind, only to become a mighty Lazarite, fighting for the Archangels. A sad end, a great rise, and a terrible fall. Her Karma is twisted. None can say whether she will remain at the bottom, wallowing in misery, or whether she will someday spread her wings and soar past the reach of the Heavens. Not even I would dare make such a guess."

Jason groans. He rubs his forehead as a migraine assaults his brain.

"...Yeah, there's definitely still some Makoto in you. You and him both speak in riddles. It's exhausting."

"What can I say?" Buddha asks, finishing off the tea in his cup. "Birds of a feather flock together."

At some point, Jason stands up and prepares to leave.

"Since you're a Hero and all, I'll make sure you can go wherever you need." Jason tells Buddha. "If you really do know Cassiel, maybe you could try talking to her? She could use some cheering up."

Buddha smiles. "The time is not yet right. My words might offer her some comfort, but comfort is not what that child needs."

"What does she need, then?" Jason asks.

"Time. Space. Motivation." Buddha answers. "Her heart is like a black hole. All the misery she has ever felt, the loss of those around her, the pain suffered by the angels... she has swallowed it up over the years and let it consume her. Until she resolves this hopelessness, she will never free herself and spread her wings. My words will only lead to a deleterious effect."

"Alright. If you say so. Feel free to pay her a visit if you change your mind, then. I'll keep in touch." Jason says, before uttering a Word of Power to travel back to the Fortress of Retribution.

Unspoken by Buddha, however, are a few implications that the Wordsmith could never possibly imagine.

Should the Daughter of Heaven ever cast aside her shackles... should the last angel ever free herself of her earthly burdens, she will become an unstoppable force, one that will shake the whole galaxy.

But of course, those words will not necessarily come to pass.

After all...

Who knows what the future holds?

Buddha chuckles.

"Hehe. Certainly not I. And Karma is so, so difficult to unravel."

Part 356: A Quiet Lull

Days pass. The Wordsmith and his allies hurry to prepare themselves for the likely and imminent arrival of the Hidden Emperors. Not knowing exactly when their enemies will arrive causes humanity's people to feel a great pressure pushing down on them.

However, one person doesn't feel much worry at all, his name being Jason.

The Wordsmith finds himself in a strange position, where even the imminent arrival of a dozen Emperors and who-knows-how-many Dukes and Barons and whoever else might show from the Hidden Hells don't cause him the slightest bit of anxiety.

Instead, Jason reflects on the events of the past few days.

Despite his deepest hopes and prayers, Fiona never found Daisy's soul inside the Lazarus Tower. This news, for some reason, did not cause him to feel a deep anguish within his soul, but only hardened his heart. The only chance he has to find his daughter now is through one of Mephisto's summons. Otherwise, her soul may have already been consumed by a demon, or otherwise scattered and sent to the Great Beyond, never to return.

"This is my punishment." The Wordsmith mutters at one point. "It is because I tried to please my enemies and make amends with them. But I will not do that again."

After realizing that his daughter is, almost certainly, dead and never to return, the Wordsmith throws himself back into his work. He crafts several spiritual and physical weapons, defensive measures, and other such devices to assist humanity moving forward.

The Wordsmith's efforts don't go unrewarded. While he continues to add defensive measures to Tarus II and the Core, Phoebe arrives before him a few days after the relocation of every human in the galaxy. She holds a piece of technology in her hands, smiling lightly.

"Fiona and I did it, Jason. We completed the first Power Glove prototype."

The Wordsmith glances at the device in her hands with a look of surprise.

"You did?"

"Mhm. It's a work in progress, though. Don't get your hopes up. It can't replicate spiritual energy yet, but it can change someone's biological identity. Watch!"

Phoebe slides the gauntlet onto her right hand. It clamps down securely onto her wrist and arm, adjusting its size to perfectly fit her. Once the Power Glove completes its work, Phoebe reaches for the dial, a simple mechanical implement with ten numbers around its diameter.

The dial currently rests on the number 0, with the other numbers reaching 9. Phoebe moves the dial a click to the right, to the position of 1. As soon as she does, a burst of magical energy floods out of the gauntlet, wraps around her body, and rapidly transforms her figure. Her skin changes color to red, a pair of huge horns sprout from just above her ears, and a sassy little succubus tail appears too.

After the transformation concludes, Phoebe ends up looking like a perfect recreation of Belial! Jason's wife snorts and giggles, trying not to laugh hysterically while Jason raises his eyebrows.

"Is something funny?"

"Hahahaha! No, no, hahah! It's just, ehehe! The transformation, it's still a little, snort, buggy! There's no pain when transforming, but it tickles like crazy!"

Jason smiles. "Heh. The ultimate tickle-weapon. I notice too that you stayed your original height, so you're a bit shorter than the actual Belial. Is that a bug, too?"

Phoebe quickly recovers from the ticklish sensations poking at her armpits and other sensitive areas. After she wipes a few tears of laughter away, she nods.

"This isn't supposed to be an infiltration device, remember? I don't need to look exactly like Samantha, after all. But currently, no matter what you transform into, you still maintain your original height."

"Considering the point was to allow humans to transform into huge, powerful Orcs and Trolls, we'll definitely need to get that flaw ironed out. Oh, and the whole tickle thing, too." Jason says.

Phoebe reverts back to her original self, and after once again bursting into a round of furious giggles, gives her husband a kiss and skips away, clearly happy due to the Power Glove's relative success.

Jason purses his lips after she leaves.

"The gauntlets won't be ready in time. But that's fine. I've made plenty of preparations. I'll just keep making more."

A few days later, Jason steps into the Core, only to blink in surprise when he finds Hope and Annette there, overseeing the reinforcement of the Core's internal structure.

"Hope! You're... you're up and about?" Jason asks, shooting curious looks at his clone.

The second Wordsmith barely glances at his original body before turning away.

"I am."

"Ah. I thought you'd need some more time for yourself." Jason says. "But it's good to see you walking-"

"I'm not here to chit-chat." Hope snaps, interrupting Jason. "Since I know you're wondering, I'll just say that my nightmares haven't gone away, and neither have those terrible cold sweats. Every night, I can feel the sensation of a hacksaw cutting through my flesh and bone. It's honestly fucking horrifying and I hate it, but I'm not a soft little pansy like you, so here I am."

Hope gestures broadly to the Core.

"Maybe you would be the kind of guy to lay in bed all goddamn day, feeling sorry for yourself, but I'm just pissed. I'm going to make sure nobody else suffers and dies. I've already started reinforcing the walls of the Core to ensure no other friends of mine get buried alive in a collapse. I've also placed dozens of soul restrictions on the area so Ose and Mephisto can't just fuck about in here whenever they want."

Jason's eyes twitch at his clone's words.

"I already did all of that, though. I reinforced the Core's walls and put soul-restriction-

"Well it wasn't enough!" Hope yells, turning to face Jason. "It's never enough! But thank the Creator I'm here! I'll make sure to clean up after you, like I always do. And when the demons come and you chicken out, I'll kill them all myself!"

Jason sighs. "Right. Well, you can rest assured, Hope. I won't be letting the demons off easy, this time."

"Liar." Hope mutters. "You think you're different, but you're not. You already want to recruit the Hell of Lust to work with us. I hear they'll arrive tomorrow. What, Phoebe isn't enough for you, so now you want to chase some succubi tail, too? You disgust me."

"I am different." Jason acknowledges. "But so are you. You've become even more extreme. If we piss off the demons and they launch an all-out attack, I can probably defeat them, kill their leaders, and so on. But it would weaken humanity greatly. You're not looking at the bigger picture, Hope. Once we send the demons scattering, we still have two massive, unresolved alien threats on our horizon. Don't be so short-sighted!"

"Short-sighted?!" Hope yells. "The demons killed your daughter, they killed Kar, and they killed millions of our people! I'm not being short-sighted, you're just being soft, as usual."

With that, the two Wordsmiths can only glare at each other and split apart, ultimately leaving their conflict unresolved.

After Jason walks away from Hope, he sighs.

"I want to argue my points, but every time I look at Hope, I feel so terrible, and so guilty about what happened. He's wrong, but how can I say that to him? The man got tortured until his mind almost snapped. I can hardly blame him for his pent-up rage and fear."

Shana materializes beside Jason.

[He not angry. He very sad.]

"Hope is?" Jason asks.

Shana nods. [Hope sad. Want cry. Can't cry. Too much hurt.]

Jason nods slowly.

"Yeah... that's about what I expected."

Even more time passes.

While Jason, Phoebe, Hope, and so many others hurry to build up humanity's defenses, Belial continues dealing with the sick and infirm. As part of her daily rituals, she heaves a great sigh, then transforms into a pretty, dark-skinned human girl with black hair.

"Ugh." Belial groans. "Now that Lily has arrived on Tarus II, this transformation is so awkward. Hopefully, she won't see me like this. My appearance is different enough from hers, but I know she's seen me in this form before."

The succubus smiles, in spite of her embarrassment.

"Hee-hee! I haven't seen Lily in a couple of years. I bet she's cuter now than ever before. I should pay her a visit at some point."

Belial dons a white vest and slacks, then sashays over to a small, simple, but comfortable looking house on the northern side of the Fortress of Retribution. Along the way, she passes many newly constructed buildings, all of them possessing slightly different yet mostly similar aesthetics.

These houses, industrial complexes, stores, and other such facilities all appear surprisingly high-tech, with sleek steel exteriors, large glass windows reinforced to withstand bomb blasts, and flashy paint-jobs designed to give the upcoming city a unique, never before seen identity.

Many of the buildings still have a utilitarian and cube-like appearance, but with the way the city's chief architects arrange the cubes, sometimes stacking them on top of each other, while other times offsetting them to leave gaps between buildings, this gives the city a largely interconnected feeling. Large busses travel around at set intervals, transporting people while leaving plenty of room for foot traffic. An elevated train conduit allows for future expansion, so that people can quickly ship goods to and from the Warpgate, far to the west.

Of course, the Fortress of Retribution is only the first planned city for Tarus II. Once it has reached a certain population saturation, smaller towns will spring up around its outskirts, along with farms, manufacturing plants, and other such facilities suitable for more rural areas.

Unique to Tarus II's urban design, hundreds of drones quietly fly about in the skies, traveling to and from construction projects. Thanks to these drones, the humans are able to quickly and efficiently erect new structures, building their way toward housing for all, from the weak to the strong.

Belial passes several daycares, where people send their children to play around and frolic while their parents work on the rebuilding efforts. Once the city reaches a certain point, schools will become more omnipresent, though that won't be for several more months.

"Huh. It's really all coming together." Belial mutters, as she walks beneath the awning of a neighborhood store.

Unlike the world Jason grew up on, food scarcity is not an issue on Tarus II. Thanks to several magical devices capable of rapidly growing edible plants, along with breeding grounds for fat pig-like beasts, there is more than enough food for everyone. And since money isn't a thing either, the only worry is how to distribute the food to people properly. Phoebe solves the problem through the use of mechanized grocery 'stores' where anyone can walk in, take the food they need for free, and leave.

Belial observes these societal shifts and chuckles.

"These advancements are only possible because of the Wordsmith. Even when humanity advanced rapidly during the Energy Wars, they still faced countless food and supply shortages. Perhaps, if Jason hadn't frozen himself back then... no, not 'perhaps, but 'for sure.' I think it would have been a guaranteed victory for humanity if he had fought on their side. Once Jason realized his full potential, humanity would have exploded in power. Neither the demons nor the Volgrim could have stopped him."

Belial continues traveling north. Ultimately, she reaches the outside of a small stone house, decorated with plants, vines, and other greenery to make it feel warm and cozy.

She pauses outside the door. After taking a deep breath, she pushes it open and steps inside.

"Hi-hi!" Belial exclaims, putting on a smile and a cheerful personality. "Cassy-cas! Are you in here? It's me, Lily!"

Belial enters the house to find it as dark as always, with the blinds closed tightly. This time, though, Cassiel sits on the bed, instead of in the corner of the room. She rests her chin on her knees, while gloomily staring at a figurine of a ballerina, spinning around slowly on a wooden platform.

In the darkness of the room, a faint, reddish glow emanates from Cassiel's body. Having recovered some of her angelic power, the energy inside her, forcefully shoved inside her soul over millennia by Gressil, appears a bit less vivid than before, yet still visibly demonic.

The angel girl doesn't clutch her legs as tightly as she did two weeks ago. Instead, her arms casually rest at her side, as if having lost their strength. When Belial approaches, Cassiel's eyes only flick to look at her for a moment, before returning to the spinning ballerina-toy.

"Hm? Raphael, Michael, Gabriel, and Uriel aren't here today?" Belial asks out loud, momentarily confused. Inwardly, she sighs in annoyance. We agreed someone would always stay with Cassiel to keep her company!

Belial takes note of Soleil sitting in a chair beside Cassiel's bed, but the construct-angel only smiles at Belial, yet doesn't say anything.

To Belial's surprise, Cassiel very slightly shakes her head, in response to Belial's question. She doesn't say anything, but then again, since her rescue, she never has.

The fact she actually makes an effort to reply, even in such a minute way, makes a pretty smile spread across the succubi's face.

"Well, that's great!" Belial chirps. "Now we get to spend some time alone, just you, me, and Soleil! It sure is pesky, always having someone else around, don't you think?"

The moment Belial posits that random hypothetical question, her heart lurches.

Shit! How insensitive! Why would I say something like that? This poor girl has been living the most lonely of existences for over a hundred thousand years! I shouldn't just run my mouth flippantly!

Feeling momentarily guilty, Belial starts to open her mouth to say something else, but to her surprise, Cassiel speaks instead, her voice barely a whisper.

"...Yes."

The angel doesn't say anything else. Neither does she look at Belial, instead keeping her eyes fixed on the toy ballerina. Even so, Belial feels a momentary thrill.

"Oh! You talked! That's great!"

She walks over and gently sits down on the far corner of the bed, while flashing a big smile at Cassiel.

"Your voice is so pretty. I love to hear it! Want to hear about my day, so far? I was over at the hospital, taking care of patients, when this funny old man played a trick on me!"

Belial starts regaling Cassiel with a story involving her patients, then follows up with another, and another.

The whole time, Cassiel doesn't say a word, nor does she look at the 'human' girl babbling to her. Belial single-handedly sucks up all the conversational momentum, which seems to suit Cassiel just fine, as she never speaks anyway.

Hours pass.

Belial continues talking, but at some point, her throat starts to turn raw from her nonstop babbling. Eventually, she falls silent, having run out of mundane topics.

"Hoooo... my jaw is starting to hurt..." Belial mutters, before standing up and walking over to a sink. She pours herself a cup of water and chugs it quickly, enjoying the cool sensation soothing her throat.

She walks back over and sits on the bed. This time, she doesn't say anything, and neither does Cassiel.

The two of them remain like that for a surprisingly long time, neither speaking up to break the silence.

After thirty full minutes, Belial clears her throat.

"Hey... have you been doing alright?"

She stares at Cassiel only for a few moments at a time before looking away, taking care not to make her uncomfortable. Even so, Cassiel doesn't meet her gaze, or reply.

"I know it's been... hard on you." Belial mutters. "But I just want you to know I'm here for you, okay? You can tell me anything. No matter if it hurts or not."

For a brief moment, Cassiel flicks her eyes in Belial's general direction. She quickly looks away again, saying nothing.

Belial chews her lip. She slides a little closer to Cassiel on the bed and reaches out her hand.

"Cassiel, if you don't speak, you'll never be able to let out the hurt in your heart. I know it's scary to do, but..."

The succubus stretches out her arm. She extends one finger and gently presses on Cassiel's knee.

The moment Belial's makes contact, Cassiel tenses up.

An instant later, the angel girl violently pulls back, shoving herself backward on the bed with her feet. Her eyes flash with panic, and she opens her mouth.

"AaAAaEEeiiIIiiiieee!!"

A horrible, high-pitched shriek erupts from the depths of her throat, jarring Belial's senses and scaring her silly. The succubus also pulls away, while her eyes widen in fear.

"Hreeen!!! Haaaahhiiiee!!"

Incomprehensible cries of fear and panic leave Cassiel's mouth. In her mind, the slight touch of her leg sparks countless horrifying memories of when Gressil also 'touched' her, violated her, and hurt her in ways no person should ever have to endure.

Belial falls off the bed. Her butt hits the floor. She quickly jumps up, panicking at Cassiel's unexpected reaction.

"I'm sorry! I'm sorry! I didn't mean-"

"AaaEEghhllaa!"

Cassiel hastily jumps off the bed and dives to the corner of the room, wrapping herself in her wings. She shivers and shakes, while nonstop screaming in terror.

"Nnnaaauughh!"

"Aaaah!"

"Aaeeihh!"

Seeing Cassiel scream and panic, Belial practically loses her mind. Waves of guilt and panic sweep across her face, making her freeze up, not knowing what to do.

"Ah! Ah! C-calm down, Cassy! It's okay! Nobody's hurting you! It's just me here, just me!"

While Belial struggles to deal with Cassiel's outbursts of terror, Soleil calmly stands up from her chair. She steps on the bed, walks across it, and hops off to the other side. She drops down to Cassiel's level, and without saying a word, gently strokes the angel's head.

Cassiel's cries grow quieter and quieter, until Soleil gently embraces Cassiel. She pulls the angel in close and hugs her, rocking Cassiel back and forth while remaining perfectly silent.

Not long after, Cassiel stops screaming. Her eyes shut, and she seemingly falls asleep in Soleil's arms.

With the patience of a loving mother, Soleil continues to rock Cassiel from side to side. She turns her head to smile at Belial, then nods.

"Please leave."

The construct's words stab into Belial's heart, but all she can do is dumbly nod, turn around, and step outside.

Once she closes the door, Belial staggers a few feet away, then drops to the ground, collapsing as her legs lose their strength. She tries to stifle her tears, but ultimately fails, breaking out into quiet sobs.

"Uuuu... stupid, stupid... useless Belial... you always mess things up... uuuuu..."

Guilt wracks her mind. She replays the moment where she touched Cassiel's leg, mentally berating her own stupidity for pushing the angel too quickly.

While Soleil takes care of Cassiel and Belial bursts into uncontrollable sobbing, unbeknownst to either of them, a legion of demons approaches the Labyrinth Core, their numbers endless and overwhelming.

Soon, the Battle for the Core will begin.

Part 357: Wordsmith's Surprise

A commotion occurs in the Core, not many hours after Jason and Hope have their fight in public. Human, monster, and demon soldiers quickly run to their prepared defensive positions as Centurion once again blares the alarms, warning them of tens of thousands of approaching demons.

Jason teleports to the Core, while Hope is already there, waiting. While Centurion continues to warn everyone of the impending catastrophe and soldiers take up defensive positions, Hope merely stands in front of the Core's double doors, shooting an ugly look at his original body.

"The Hell of Lust?" Jason asks.

"Yes. Your new best friends." Hope replies, his tone dripping with acid. "The pretty-boys and demon sluts."

"I understand you hate demons." Jason says. "But succubi and incubi aren't among the ones who attacked us. You shouldn't blame them for the actions of their peers."

"Demons are demons." Hope retorts. "Neil taught me that. Do you remember Neil? The man you left to die? My best friend? Bah. What would you know about protecting best friends?"

Without letting Jason retort, Hope teleports back to Tarus II, leaving Jason to sort out the situation with the Hell of Lust himself.

The First Wordsmith sighs deeply, his thoughts a mess. "There has to be some way I can get through to Hope. But how?"

He steps through the Core's double-doors and walks out to meet the Hell of Lust's members. When he sees the army of scantily clad male and female demons, his eyes nearly bug out of his head.

Holy shit. Remember, Jason. You're married. You're married, and... god damn, why are all of them so freaking HOT?!

The Wordsmith really can't help but feel a sense of awe at how supermodelesque the vast majority of the Hell of Lust's members appear. Between their chiseled abs, their well-maintained skin, or their soft and luscious hair stylings, it becomes abundantly clear they were almost all sculpted by ancient gods to look as sexually appealing as possible. Only a few of them appear less than physically perfect, chief among them being Maia, with her rail-thin body and visible ribs. The exceptions mostly find themselves among the Dukes, though, likely due to the backlash of becoming a Duke-level existence.

The demons approaching the Wordsmith slow to a halt, letting only their fifty-plus Dukes advance toward him. Among them is the Hell of Lust's current leader, Maia, the Duke of Empathy, along with all the others Jason met previously. Maia steps forward and rests her hand on her hip.

"Hello, Jason Hiro." She says, cracking a weak smile. "We came as quickly as possible. Unfortunately, I wasn't able to gather all of the succubi and incubi from all across the Seven Hells. There simply wasn't enough time… and Ose will march on the Core this very day."

"She's already started the invasion?" Jason asks, frowning.

"Yes. She specifically requested my Dukes, Barons, and Lords assist her. I told her I would join her once I gathered my people, but that was only a pretext. I am hoping we can merge with you at once so we don't have to be a part of this bloodshed."

Titania, towering behind Maia, meekly raises her hand.

"B-but… the friends we left… behind… they'll be hurt…"

Maia grimaces. "Yes. In total, we have brought 250,000 succubi and incubi. However, our Hell numbers more than fifty million at our core, with another few dozen million scattered about haphazardly. Gathering them all on such short notice would bring about a huge commotion. The best I could do was gather all of our strongest members. The loss of tens of millions of grunt-level subordinates will leave my heart in pain."

Jason frowns. "What do you mean? Are you saying if you leave your weakest subordinates behind, Ose will…?"

"She'll exterminate them, yes." Maia affirms, her lower lip quivering. "That isn't something I wish to see. But if I were to gather even more of my people, the commotion would draw Ose's ire before we even make it here."

"I can't just let tens of millions of innocents die." Jason says. "Even if they are demons, the succubi and incubi are blameless in all this."

"Well, it will take some time for Ose to issue a kill-order." Maia says. "I'm sure at least a portion of my people will find their way here. I've left messages in our hidden channels. But if the forces of the other six Hells move in unison, they can swarm and capture my comrades. We're outnumbered ten thousand to one. Escape is all but impossible."

"You've taken a huge risk in coming here." Jason says, smiling gently. "Sorry it's come to this. I promise I'll do what I can to assist you, moving forward."

After Jason and Maia work out the details, he sends her and the other demons into the Core, where their army of deviants spends a few hours filing through a Warpgate to take refuge on Tarus II.

Having already made preparations for the Hell of Lust's arrival, Jason and his people welcome them with open arms, leading them to a basic but comfortable encampment outside the Fortress of Retribution's main city, but still within its protective crystalline walls. The fortress's spherical shield envelops the city from top to bottom, making burrowing beneath it or infiltrating from overhead an impossibility. Only by attacking the heavily reinforced crystals can an enemy hope to break through, but even then, thanks to the Wordsmith's magic, actually gaining entry will prove an exceptionally difficult task.

This encampment features the same steel-clad utilitarian structures as inside the main city, but thanks to some local bored artists, colorful graffiti lines the walls, depicting cute and smiling succubi and incubi demons, making flirty poses or blowing kisses at anyone viewing the art.

As for who drew the art, none seem to know, but the Wordsmith's best guess is that some local teenagers did so. Regarding what their goals might have been, he can only guess it had to involve them thinking with their 'lower members.'

After Jason gets the 250,000 sex-demons rounded up, he sighs.

"Only this many... at least they're all elites of their Hell. I hope we can gather even more in due time, before Ose arrives. Better yet, I hope Ose gives up. Terms of surrender would be fantastic..."

Sadly, as the Wordsmith knows well, Ose is not one to give up, not when she has a shot at obtaining more gains for herself.

Ten thousand demons march through the halls of the First Hell. These grunts move through the Labyrinth in triple-file ranks, squeezing against the oftentimes narrow walls while moving with determination. At different junctions, they meet up with other contingents of demons, eventually arriving inside massive, arena-sized rooms with tens of Warpers standing at the ready.

All across Hell's confines, this same situation plays out over and over. Hastily organized and lightly armed demons, monsters, and other sorts of unfriendlies merge into vast, predetermined spaces, allowing up to 500,000 troops to wait in a safe location for the signal to attack humanity.

At the same time, a core group of just five thousand demons, led by Ose and the Hidden Emperors, marches slowly and with purpose, their footsteps thumping in the darkness of the Labyrinth's hallways.

Ose, Mephisto, Zamiel, Lupus, Gorn, and so many other Emperors walk along with their Dukes toward the Labyrinth Core, deliberately keeping the same pace to synchronize their footsteps and spread fear in the hearts of their soon-to-be-defeated enemies.

Despite the surging morale of the underling demons, the majority of whom can't wait to take down the humans and chew their skin and bones into pulp, the Emperors themselves appear remarkably less enthusiastic.

Ose, in particular, gnashes her teeth as she walks, fuming from the ears at the bad news she's received several times in a row today.

"The Hell of Isolation dared to drop out at a moment like this. Hmph. Oh, I'll show them what it means to cross me... but to think the sluts from the Hell of Lust would turn their backs on their own species, too! I always knew those human lovers were going to turn on me!"

While she rages, Mephisto seethes beside her, his own rage barely contained.

"...Ssstole my sssoulsss... MY sssoulsss... all the ssslavesss, too. That damned Wordsssmith... all I have left now are sssome measssly monsssstersss and demonsss..."

"Just don't forget," Zamiel says from behind them. "That fairy-bitch is mine, you hear? She helped kill my little bro! I'm gonna squeeze her into a bloody pulp!"

Another Demon Emperor, Yardrat, flickers forward to arrive beside Ose.

"Have you been able to gather any intelligence from the Core? I need to know what I'm walking into. None of the Warpers can teleport to Tarus II's surface with the Wordsmith's temporal restrictions in place. We have to take the planet's defenses down if you expect the main army to make planetfall."

"I know!" Ose roars, visibly agitated. "Do you think it's easy, getting past the humans' defenses? That bloody Wordsmith has the Core locked down so tightly that my Astral Body can't slip inside! Even Mephisto can't phase through the walls. I've been going out of my mind, especially since he stole all our slaves right out from under our noses! I have no idea what he's planning, and it has me ready to snap at any moment!"

Yardrat frowns. "Your Astral Body can't get inside the Core? Why not?"

"The best I can tell," Ose answers, "is that Jason put some sort of spiritual barrier in place that hardens the walls and stops spiritual forms and souls from stepping within a one-mile radius of the Core. I can't even get close enough to listen in on conversations."

"So we don't know anything about his preparations?" Yardrat probes. "For all you know, we could be walking into a deathtrap?"

"Yes! A deathtrap!" Ose says. "It's only been three weeks since Stormbringer. The Wordsmith can't possibly have made too many preparations for our arrival. He lacks the mana required for massive overhauls in his society or giant construction projects. However, if we wait long enough, he could definitely change this dynamic, so we have to move quickly."

The Emperor of the Void starts to complain, but Ose interrupts him. "Before you say anything else, don't waste your breath! I will take the lead on this mission! I'll go first and see what surprises the humans have cooked up before waving the rest of you in. Since I have Bael's body now, nothing will stop me from wreaking havoc."

Feeling somewhat assured, Yardrat nods. "I hope to hear good news, then."

A few hours later, Ose and the other five thousand Emperors, Dukes, Barons, and Lords from their Five Hells arrive within half a mile of the Labyrinth Core. Even at this distance, they can easily make out the distant sound of an alarm blaring inside the Core, along with a masculine robot voice warning the Core's personnel of their imminent catastrophe.

"LARGE QUANTITY OF DEMON ENERGY SIGNATURES DETECTED MOVING TOWARD THE CORE. RED ALERT STATUS DECLARED!"

"DEMONIC SIGNATURES HAVE CROSSED DEFENSIVE LINE BETA."

"DEMONIC SIGNATURES HAVE CROSSED DEFENSIVE LINE ALPHA."

Ose snorts when she hears Centurion's warnings.

"Give me a few minutes. I'll mop up the small fry."

Emperor Gorn, 'controlled' by Mephisto, steps forward. "We can go with you."

"No need." Ose says, casually raising a palm. "I may not have successfully elevated myself to the rank of an Emperor, but in terms of strength... heh... you are all far beneath me."

Her words irritate the other Emperors, but none of them try to refute those claims. After all, if any Emperor had to fight her one-on-one, they would almost certainly suffer a terrible and embarrassing defeat.

Gorn steps back. "Have it your way."

Like the other Emperors, he feels more than a little annoyed about Ose's pushiness and her insistence on fighting the humans. In fact, Gorn isn't in the minority with his opinions. He believes that attacking the humans is a waste of time and energy and could backfire badly. Similarly, the other Emperors think identical thoughts.

But what choice do they have? Under Ose's demonstrable power, they can only follow along and obey her orders.

Without any fanfare, Ose takes a step forward.

An instant later, her body vanishes. She explodes with both speed and power, racing straight forward at twenty times the speed of sound toward the fully-closed dual doors of the Labyrinth Core. Using the power of her Lightspeed Rush, she transforms her body into a living railgun, just the same as she did when fighting the Cherubiim.

Ose crashes into the Labyrinth's sealed double-doors, blasting them open with an unstoppable force. The thousand-ton steel barriers rip off their hinges, tear out of the frames, and hurtle through the air, crashing against the opposite walls with two terrific bangs, sending shockwaves blasting out of the Core all the way down the hallway where she just came from. At the same time, the reinforced demonstone pillars that had been previously placed against the doors to ensure they wouldn't open easily instead snap like twigs, failing their purpose with Ose's single move.

As soon as Ose arrives, she bursts into laughter.

"AHAHAHA! Filthy humans! Your tricks won't save you anymore! Today, you will face the WRATH of...!!"

Ose's words catch in her throat.

For several seconds, she stares in stunned silence, swiveling her head from side to side. All the while, Centurion continues sounding the alarm, warning all the Core personnel of the catastrophe that has arrived at their doorstep.

"DEMON DUKE SIGNATURE, BAEL, HAS ENTERED THE CORE! ALL PERSONNEL, DO NOT ENGAGE IN BATTLE!"

Ose swallows her words as she looks around a completely empty, barren Core, lacking even a single human, monster, or demon. Even while Centurion warns the Core's soldiers not to engage Ose directly, it seems they have already long ago taken his advice and left the Core defenseless, stripping out all useful technology.

"...Eh?"

Ose's unblinking gaze sweeps across the room several times, as if waiting for a contingent of cloaked enemies to fire upon her position. However, while she dumbly stands in place, not a single thing happens to her.

The Core is abandoned.

"Is... is this some kind of a sick joke?!" Ose asks, visibly befuddled. "Why the devil aren't there any humans here?!"

Minutes later, the other Emperors arrive inside the Core. They glance around questioningly, with some of the more cautious ones using their methods to search for hidden traps, explosives, and anything else that might cause them harm. However, they find nothing, except for a single one of the seven Warpgates still active, with a portal leading to an unknown world.

Ose walks up to the Warpgate and examines it. After a moment, she frowns deeply.

"...Tarus II. This gate leads to the Warpgate Encampment on Tarus II."

Her words come slowly, as if she is having trouble understanding just what exactly is going on. In the back of her mind, a buzzing sensation tingles, leaving her flustered.

"How strange." Gorn says, walking up to Ose's side. "This doesn't seem to be the Wordsmith's style. Why did he abandon the Core?"

"Hahaha!" Emperor Fae cackles, laughing uproariously as she slaps Gorn's back. "Jesus Christ, isn't it obvious? Look at you losers, getting all shaken up. The Hero's scared of us! He knew we were coming, so he abandoned the Core to take up refuge on his precious homeworld! He knows he doesn't have the strength to protect this place, so he's hoping he can defend passively on that little piss-ass piece of shit planet!"

Neither Gorn nor Ose laugh. Ose gestures to the quietly humming opaque Warpgate. "Then why did he leave this portal open?"

"To intimidate us, of course! It's all mindgames!" Fae snorts. "Look at you two. You're both about to piss your fuckin' panties! Man, if it was Bael, he'd just walk through, no problem! Don't tell me you're scared, little Ose?"

"Not scared... but suddenly not confident either..." Ose confesses, her voice low. "Something about this arrangement... it has me worried."

Yardrat flickers over to the small gathering. "And me, as well. This smells like a trap. The Wordsmith might not have the power to defeat us here, but he almost certainly has plenty of defenses on Tarus II. Abandoning the Core like this either tells us he has no confidence in beating us, or far too much confidence. Don't forget, he can teleport back to the Core at any moment. Protecting his people from our first strike was likely his reason for leaving the Core unprotected."

"Unless..." Gorn mutters, "he wanted to remove his people from here specifically because he had some special weapon he could use to kill us all, but it would self-harm his people too?"

Ose's blood turns to ice. "Trifrancium!"

"Huh?" The others ask.

"Trifrancium!" She repeats, flicking her eyes around. "I know for a fact the humans have at least a few kilograms of it! If they detonated the material here, it would absolutely obliterate all of you, and perhaps even me! It would annihilate hundreds of kilometers of the Labyrinth in a huge radius, plus it would spread so much radiation that for thousands of kilometers further, the Labyrinth would also become unlivable... even for demons!"

She pauses, noticing the lack of comprehension on the other Emperors' faces. None of them have any idea what Trifrancium is, so her words only confuse them.

Ose sighs. "But, since the Wordsmith left this portal active, that isn't likely to be his aim. I suspect he wouldn't want to use the nuclear option unless it was the last available choice. Come. We'll enter the portal and see what awaits us on the other side."

Fae laughs, while rearing back and violently slapping Ose's ass. "Ahaha! Lead the way, sister! I'll be right behind ya!"

The impact of hand against butt-cheek doesn't affect Ose at all, as she barely even feels it. She merely rolls her eyes and nods.

"Fine. I'll lead. Let me step through the portal first. If there aren't any complications, I'll return in a few minutes and let you know."

The other Emperors nod, completely okay with Ose's idea to risk her own neck instead of theirs. As they watch, Ose confidently strolls through the Warpgate, vanishing past its opaque window and leaving them to wonder what will happen next.

A minute passes. Two minutes. Three.

"It seems the situation on the other side isn't good." Gorn says, frowning.

"The portal didn't close." Yardrat points out. "I half expected it to shut off the moment Ose walked through, trapping her alone. But it didn't, so..."

Just as the Emperors start to feel antsy, Ose walks back through the portal, confusion visible on her face. She frowns deeply, as if utterly baffled by what she saw on Tarus II.

"It's... it's empty." Ose says, glanding at Gorn. "The Warpgate Encampment is empty. No soldiers. No civilians. Not even a Wordsmith."

The Emperors exchange glances. This time, even Fae appears befuddled.

"Alright." Fae says. "That's definitely weird."

"I suppose the coast is clear, then?" Gorn asks.

Ose nods. "See for yourself."

She and the other five thousand demons file through the Warpgate, one after the other. They arrive on the Warpgate Platform, slightly elevated compared to ground level, with all the Warpgate Encampment's reconstructed buildings laid out before them.

However, aside from the distant chirping of birds, not a sound stirs in the air. Tarus II's midday sun shines down on them, revealing the Fortress of Retribution in the distance, but not a single enemy blocks their way.

"What the hell...?" Fae mutters.

"Where are all the humans?" Emperor Kristoff asks, walking up to Ose, Gorn, and the rest. "I don't smell even a trace of blood energy within a kilometer."

Ose shrugs. "I don't know. This is not what I was expecting, though. That much is for sure."

As she and the other Emperors quietly debate their current situation, a flicker of holy energy appears in the sky, immediately drawing their attention. Ose raises her head and shields her eyes, spotting a figure silhouetted against the sun, with angelic wings expanding from his back.

Not an angel, but Jason Hiro himself, the Wordsmith levitates in the air, looking down upon the Demon Emperors while clad in his signature T-REX.

A moment later, another winged figure appears beside him. Hope Hiro, the second Wordsmith, doesn't even bother wearing his exosuit. He smirks deeply at the demons, while chuckling to himself.

At the same time, several other figures materialize in the sky!

Uriel. Raphael. Michael. Gabriel. All four Archangels appear, their soul pressure pushing down against the demons and making them sweat bricks.

Blinker shows up as well, but this time in a human-sized form, with a look of rage on her face. She gazes at two individuals specifically, their identities being Mephisto and Zamiel.

Once humanity's protectors finish appearing, Jason Hiro breaks the silence.

"I'll give you one chance to surrender. If you refuse, don't blame me for what happens next."

Part 358: Wordsmith's Cunning

Upon witnessing the appearance of seven strong opponents, all levitating in the sky, Ose lifts her chin up to evaluate them.

"There you are, Wordsmiths." Ose says, glancing at Hope suspiciously. "Even Gabriel is here. I'm surprised he didn't join his brothers and sister when they came knocking at Hell Harbor. And speaking of which, hello, Uriel. I see you've put on a little makeup."

With Barbatos's body now transformed to regain Uriel's original appearance, Ose can't help but notice this distinct difference from the last time they interacted. Additionally, Ose's eyes linger on Hope for a few seconds longer than the rest while wondering why he wasn't around to help defend Tarus II during Stormbringer.

Having lacked the time to interrogate her brother, Ose has no idea what Gressil did to Hope, nor that he managed to successfully capture and torture the Wordsmith's clone. If she knew, who could say what sort of expression she might reveal?

Jason continues to hover in the sky, his T-REX obscuring his face and body. His arms remain crossed while he projects an aura of authority.

"Don't beat around the bush, Ose." Jason says, his voice calm. "Surrender while you still can. If you do, I will make sure the people who hate you, including myself, don't rip you to pieces."

"Because of you!" Blinker screams. "My husband DIED! Not only you, but Mephisto too! How dare you turn Kar into your puppet!"

Tears stream from Blinker's eyes as her gaze fixates on 'Kar,' standing next to Mephisto, just behind Ose. She does not know that Kar's soul isn't in his body, but that mystery doesn't remain hidden for long.

"Hahaha!" Zamiel tilts his chin up and cackles uproariously. "That's right, fairy-bitch! You killed my brother, and I killed your favorite piece of croc-meat! Now I own his body! What will you do about it? Attack me?! Maybe if you get down on your knees and beg, my boss will give you back your hubby's body and soul... but I wouldn't count on it! BAHAHA!!"

Ose sneers.

"Seven versus five thousand. This won't go like Stormbringer did, Jason. I'll admit, I was too hasty, before. Too greedy. But the times have changed. I held back the Hidden Emperors, wanting to take the spoils for myself, but this time, I have magnanimously chosen to spread the spoils of war to the other Hells! At least, those who didn't betray me. Not the Hell of Lust, to be certain."

She leans her head forward. "What will you do? Summon the Cherubiim? Throw a few piddly spells at me? I'm not an idiot like Bael. I already beat those Archangels, and now that I've obtained an invincible body, you won't catch me turning into the Balrog to grant you a free kill. I think it's high time YOU surrender! Kill yourself and spare me the effort!"

With the leaders of both sides having thrown a few verbal barbs back and forth, the followers behind them inhale deeply, readying themselves for anything to happen.

While Blinker wrestles with the realization that Zamiel has possessed her husband's body, Hope grits his teeth. He repeatedly clenches his fists, feeling a smoldering fury build in his chest as he struggles to hold himself back from lunging directly at Ose.

Jason remains perfectly calm. He hovers a few feet forward, but otherwise maintains his aloof posture.

"Times have changed, Ose. The Tarus II of a few weeks ago is not the same one that exists today. I'm surprised you came back so quickly, even after you sensed the aura of my new superweapon. But I know why you did. You thought I deceived you. You thought I had somehow obtained Excalibur, but then your Volgrim friends informed you otherwise. You're right to believe that I don't possess Excalibur, because I don't."

The Wordsmith pauses.

"...I have something of equal power. An artifact that will allow me to obliterate every single one of you in an instant. I'm only holding back because, despite how you've wronged me, I really would prefer not to walk the path of genocide. My hatred is not broad, but personal. Beelzebub killed my daughter. Mephisto killed my best friend. Both of them came here under your orders. That makes the two of them, plus the Battle Brothers, and you, war criminals."

"So long as you surrender," Jason concludes, "I'll let these other Emperors leave."

Hope glances to the side. "What?! That wasn't the plan! You said three days ago-"

"Plans change." Jason says, turning his helmet to look at Hope. "I decided to make a... last minute adjustment."

"Without telling me?" Hope asks.

"Well. It was last minute." Jason repeats, shrugging slightly. "Don't worry. I won't wrong you. You'll get your revenge, and I'll get mine."

Caught somewhat off guard by Jason's eerily confident attitude, Hope can only glare daggers at Mephisto.

"As long as I can get my hands on you, necromancer..."

Mephisto doesn't shrink back, but Zamiel does, just a little, due to the outright hostility aimed at him by Hope and Blinker.

"Honestly," Jason says, turning his attention back to Ose. "I'm impressed. After I suddenly yanked the rug out from under you, right before your ascension ceremony, I'm surprised you managed to stay on target, keep calm, and attack at the originally planned time. A lesser demoness would have blown her top after I stole away every human and soul from the Seven Hells."

"Thanks for the compliment." Ose snarks. "But I didn't come here to chit-chat. It's clear neither of us are going to surrender. So, if you and your friends won't back down, then..."

She turns her head slightly to smile at the army of high ranking demons behind her.

"...I guess you're all about to die."

Fae snorts. "After you, sister. Lead the way. Show us how it's done!"

To Ose's surprise, the other Emperors, and their legions, don't immediately move. They remain in place, their gazes fixed on her back.

"Before we fight," Emperor Yardrat says, "I have a few questions."

"I thought you might." Jason says. "Ask away."

Ose frowns, while listening to this seemingly random exchange.

Fae and Yardrat seem awfully chatty today. Is Auger plotting against me? Something doesn't feel right.

Just like after she first stepped through the Warpgate and returned to the Core, a buzzing sensation tingles in the back of Ose's mind. Her sharp intellect and years of behavioral and psychological studies of humanity and her fellow demons make her narrow her eyes as she listens to Yardrat's exchange.

"As it happens, Ose mentioned an interesting tidbit, not long ago." Yardrat says, taking care to raise his voice so all the other Emperors can hear. Even if he were to whisper, their sharp senses would pick up his words, so this deliberate increase in volume raises even more warning bells in the back of Ose's mind. "Now that you've found a way to capture and re-route souls away from the River Styx, we demons won't have any way to evolve our bodies. We've always relied on souls, primarily those of humans and Titans, to empower ourselves. But Ose... she mentioned that you might have a method to empower demons without the use of souls."

Yardrat pauses, allowing his words to linger in the air.

"Is that rumor true?" Yardrat asks, flicking his gaze around to the other Emperors.

Emperor Kristoff allows his arms to hang loosely at his sides. "The Hell of Blood has ways to empower demons through our vampiric arts, but only their bodies, not their souls."

"The Hell of Lust can raise any demon to the Rank of Duke through copulation." Fae adds, pointing out the obvious. "But you know, if the Wordsmith has another method, perhaps even a superior method, it could prove useful to all our Hells."

"Indeed." Emperor Gorn says, adding to the array of interested voices. "Imagine all the energy we'd save if there was another way to empower our bodies. I've long sought a method to push past the barrier of Emperor."

The more the demons speak, the more Ose's sixth sense acts up, making her eyes twitch. She half-turns her body to gaze meaningfully at the demons behind her, while a look of incredulity passes across her eyes.

"You lot..."

Before Ose can say anything else, Jason speaks up, interrupting her.

"Ah, yes. As it happens, I did make such an offer to Ose, at one point. Not long before Stormbringer, come to think of it. Obviously, I need not sing praises of my Wordsmithing. It's a versatile power I've barely begun to tap into. But elevating demons through the ranks without needing souls, that does seem to be within my capabilities. It would save countless lives, ease tensions between humans and demons, and allow us all to slowly but surely set aside the issues of the past. But too bad... Ose seemed to think that none of you were interested."

"I don't remember being consulted." Gorn harrumphs, looking at Ose with deep meaning. "The Wordsmith's method might have made me protest the events of Stormbringer entirely!"

Emperor Fae exposes a toothy smile. "Yeah. I think I might have lodged a few complaints myself."

Hearing the 'concern' echoed by all these different Emperors, Ose puts two and two together.

"You... you all! What the hell are you doing? Are you trying to backstab me?! We agreed to come here and wipe out the human resistance, not... not step back and entertain the Wordsmith's delusions!"

Hope's rage subsides, ever so slightly, as he witnesses this strange change in scenery. He glances at Jason with confusion in his eyes, yet neither of the Wordsmiths say anything.

At the same time, Mephisto and Zamiel take a few steps toward Ose and turn around to face the other Emperors. They, too, feel that something about this situation is much too coordinated.

"What isss the meaning of thisss...?" Mephisto hisses. "Don't tell me you are all planning to..."

"We're not going to do anything." Yardrat says, while taking a step backward and shrugging deeply, as if having no control of the situation. "Come on, Ose, Mephisto. Did you two really think we were going to go along with whatever you ordered?"

"You're a smart bitch." Fae laughs. "But not smart enough, it seems."

Ose inhales deeply.

"Good. Very good. I see why all of you kept up the act until now. You don't want to cross my bottom line, not just yet. You're not sure if, despite me defeating the Cherubiim, I have what it takes to tear down the Wordsmiths, too. You're not going to plunge the knife into my back, but you're more than happy to watch someone else do it."

"It's about benefits and survival." Kristoff counters, his tone cold. "While you piss off the Wordsmith, a terrifying alien enemy is soon to defeat the Volgrim. After them, we're next. Why should we spend our time fighting the Wordsmith when we could ally with him? Especially when he can solve our biggest problem?"

"Not one of us has the power to kill you." Yardrat freely admits. "You alone can tear apart all of us at the same time. We're nothing but meat on your chopping block. So we had to do everything we could to get you here. Frankly, we don't like you. We can't stand you."

"My wife died because of you," Kristoff says. "And Lupus's husband, Wolfram. But why should you care? My Hell suffered all the losses, while yours reaped all the gains."

One by one, each of the Emperors chimes in, berating Ose and pointing out her flaws.

She is the one who brought the Cherubiim to Hell Harbor.

She is the one who pissed off the Wordsmith.

She is the one who summoned the Volgrim's attention, something nobody wanted.

"Enough!" Ose roars, interrupting the voices. "Traitors! You're letting the Wordsmith tear us apart! If we all attack, the Wordsmith won't survive! We can kill him! We can even take his powers for ourselves!"

"I don't think we can!" Fae counters. "Newsflash, Ose! It was me and Yardrat who came here to talk to him, yesterday! We had our misgivings, but we also thought we had a chance against him! That was before the Wordsmith revealed his trump card! You can't beat him, I guarantee it!"

"Trump card?" Ose repeats. "What trump card? Bullshit! You're falling for his lies! But you've opened your mouths too quickly, pawns of Auger! Now I know who the snitches are! I'll kill you two first before killing the rest!"

Ose takes a menacing step toward the other Emperors, before a powerful suppressive force locks onto her body and pins her in place.

As if held fast by a stasis field of incomparable power, Ose's figure freezes. She grits her teeth, only to scowl when she realizes what has trapped her.

"Wordsmith!"

Jason continues levitating in the sky, as calm as ever.

"I can't let you hurt the other Emperors, Ose. I already promised that if they handed you and Mephisto over, I would keep in mind that none of them were directly involved in the attack on Tarus II."

"However." Jason continues. "I am not interested in letting you have a fair trial. I gave you one chance to surrender, but you refused it. Therefore, as punishment, you can face my 'champion.'"

The suppressive effect releases Ose, causing her to stumble slightly. She glares with hate-filled eyes at Emperors Fae and Yardrat, gnashing her teeth and readying herself to attack, when a burst of shock jolts her heart.

Horror surges through Ose's veins. She whips around as a powerful aura of mana draws her attention, causing her to gasp.

"What! King Arthur?!"

Not just Ose, but Zamiel, Mephisto, and all the other Emperors, Dukes, Barons, and Lords gasp in alarm, everyone except for Yardrat and Fae.

Having come to speak to Jason in person not twelve hours before, both of them know the truth of Jason's power. Shortly after the Hell of Lust met up with him, Auger dispatched these two to probe Jason's intentions.

It was when Jason revealed his trump card that they realized there was another option besides following Ose's orders.

As for the demoness herself, Ose can only stare with shrunken pupils while the figure of the Hero-King himself stands a hundred yards away, mana rippling off his body.

King Arthur. The man who once killed three Demon Emperors in a single day. The man who, even as a soulless husk, still managed to slaughter the Archdemon.

Mephisto levitates backward. Zamiel follows after him, terror gripping his throat.

"N-no way! Boss! You said his body was destroyed on Polaris!"

"It wasss..." Mephisto hisses. "That isss not the real Arthur. It isss a fake!"

King Arthur holds up his hand. A moment later, a sword materializes in his grip, the very image of which causes every demon on the scene to jump in fright.

"Excalibur?! That's definitely a fake!" Ose shrieks, only for the claim to fall flat a moment later. "But why does its mana signature feel identical! Even its soul pressure! Don't tell me the Founders were deceived?!"

"Hah, hah, hah..." Jason laughs quietly. "You want to know the truth, Ose? Mephisto? You're both right. This isn't really Arthur. And like I said before, neither is his sword the authentic Excalibur. They're both recreations I made through my Wordsmithing."

Jason cocks his head.

"But I must warn you. His strength is real. His swordsmanship is flawless. And most alarmingly, one Arthur is not my limit. I can make ten of him, or a hundred, or a thousand, or even a million. I can create an army of Arthurs that will rain down upon Hell and exterminate the demons with impunity."

The Wordsmith lifts up his palm dramatically, holding it face-up before his chest.

"This is the truth of the matter. I can kill every demon in existence, even if it takes me a while. I can slaughter you, butcher you, torture you, and maim you, just as you did to my friends and family. But I don't want to do that. I want to give peace a chance. The difference is, unlike before, I'm not extending my kindness to you, Ose. Nor your necromancer lackey, nor any of the other monsters who attacked Tarus II. As for the other demons, I will punish them for their longstanding crimes against humanity, but I shall also show them some level of mercy."

Jason gestures to Arthur.

"Now then. To entertain myself, and to give you a fair fighting chance, I'll let you fight Arthur. You can see for yourself if he stacks up to the 'real' Hero-King. Of course, he won't spare you, and you won't be able to escape, so this is also my form of revenge. I can't wait to watch him cut you to pieces."

The Wordsmith hisses out those last words, his expression unreadable behind his helmet. Hope looks at him, a strange, unreadable expression clouding his face. For once, the clone appears stumped by his original body's machinations.

"You think your summoned toy can kill me...?" Ose whispers. "We'll see about THAT!"

Ose stomps her right foot against the dirt. At the same time, the legendary weapon, Mjolnir, materializes in her grasp, but in its flail form, the same as what Bael uses.

"AHHHH!!"

Ose howls a war-cry before activating her lightspeed dash.

An instant later, she rockets forward at the speed of light. Not toward Arthur, but into the sky, directly at the Wordsmith!

BOOM!!

Ose crashes against an energy barrier just a body's length from the Wordsmith, ricochets backward, and hurtles toward the direction she first left.

Crash!

The demoness who stole Bael's body slams into the dirt, stunned more by the unexpected protection in front of the Wordsmith than by the impact itself. Instantly, she jumps to her feet and snarls.

"Uriel!"

Thinking that the Archangel of Retribution must have shielded Jason, she turns her wrath on Uriel, only for the supposed offender to shake her head.

"T'was not I. Foolish bloodskin."

"Liar!" Ose screams. She lifts her palm up and fires a massive bolt of lightning at the Wordsmith, waiting for Uriel to intercept her attack again.

However, Uriel doesn't make a move. When Ose's lightning strikes the Wordsmith, it explodes against a massive, previously transparent energy shield in front of Jason, Hope, the Archangels, and Blinker, too. The shield crackles for a moment before becoming invisible, but in that split-second, Ose's heart skips a beat.

"It wasn't Uriel?"

Alarmed, she realizes that instead of a flat, square barrier, like what Uriel always summons, a spherical shield has engulfed not the Wordsmith and his allies, but Mephisto, Ose, and Zamiel, even going so far as to cut them off from the other Emperors!

"This... this isn't a normal energy shield." Ose realizes. "It's a magical one. And it appears to make use of... formation magic! Fairy formation magic!"

"That's right." Blinker says. The Monster Queen's eyes twitch with barely controlled hatred. "Arthur's going to rip you apart, Ose. But I will PERSONALLY kill Mephisto myself!"

At this moment, Ose realizes just how deeply she was plotted against. The other Emperors only went along with her plans, but secretly, they plotted against her, tricked her into traveling to Tarus II, and helped ensnare her in the Wordsmith's trap.

Ose turns her head to shoot an incredulous look at Yardrat and Fae.

"Do you even realize what you've done?" Ose asks, her voice calming down, as a cold chill descends her spine. "The Wordsmith won't let you off. Without me, you will never be able to defend yourselves. We're all demons, the same species. How could you turn on me like this?"

Yardrat snorts. "We've already lost the war. Now, we're just looking to repair all the damage you've caused."

"You play up your 'genius' ego way too much." Fae adds. "That's why you failed your little Stormbringer attack. It's also why we easily deceived you. You're just not as smart as you think you are, Ose."

Ose lowers her head. She exhales deeply.

"...Fine. After I smash the Wordsmith's puppet, kill the Archangels, rip the fairy's wings off, and eviscerate Jason and Hope, I'll annihilate every last one of you. You'll regret making an enemy of me."

Ose no longer pays any mind to the other demons. She turns around to face Arthur while clutching Mjolnir in her right hand.

Arthur teleports past the translucent barrier, the arena limits that will prevent Ose from escaping.

At the same time, Mephisto and Zamiel glance at one another. The Emperor of Legions doesn't appear nearly as angry or frightened as Ose.

Instead, he appears eerily calm, just like the Wordsmith.

"Ksss. Thisss plot runsss deep. Good thing I made... preparationsss..."

"Don't think you'll be going anywhere." Jason says from above. "I've hardened the spatial compression of this whole planet, and taken multiple precautions to ensure you can't just phase through the ground, Mephisto. You're trapped here. Also, I advise you stay out of Ose's fight. Blinker wants to beat the shit out of you herself, and I just can't bring myself to tell her 'no.'"

Mephisto calmly folds his hands together. He hovers over to the edge of the arena.

"Ksss. I alwaysss did want to sssee Ossse sssuffer. Asss you wisssh, Wordsssmith. It ssseemsss I have no choiccce."

Zamiel frowns. He walks over to Mephisto's side to watch Ose fight Arthur, while also sweating metaphorical bullets.

"Eh, boss? Boss, you're kidding, right? You've got some fancy way to save us both, right? Right?"

Mephisto hisses. "Sssuch an interesssting sssituation. I mussst praissse the Wordsssmith'sss thinking."

"B-boss?" Zamiel whispers. "You do have some way out of this, right?"

All at once, chaos erupts!

Ose and Arthur launch themselves at one another.

The former Emperor of Infiltration, now something of a half-Emperor, half-Duke, engages in battle with a silent clone of King Arthur, ruler of Camelot, once known as the mightiest Hero to ever exist.

His divine sword, recreated by the Wordsmith, clangs against Mjolnir as the two weapons collide. The black-hole construct smashes the flat of its blade against the one-ton spiked ball as if Excalibur were a baseball bat.

The instant Arthur smacks aside Mjolnir, his body blurs as he executes multiple fighting forms at once, slashing the sword at the speed of sound. Attacking from the right and left, right and left, his divine blade chops and slices at Ose so fast nobody can follow the movements with their eyes except for Ose and the Archangel, Michael.

Ose, a speedster herself, ducks, dodges, and weaves, allowing the sword to swish past her body's afterimages as she keeps up with Arthur's movements.

In between her dodging, Ose rears back her fist to go for a powerful jab attack.

In order to give her punch its maximum striking power, Ose waits until the millisecond when Arthur's blade swings at her left side. She lifts her indestructible left arm to block the blade while stepping forward and swinging her right fist.

In that instant, a sharp spike of agony surges through her left arm.

Ose's heart jolts.

Her eyes flick to the left just in time to see that, instead of easily deflecting Arthur's blade with her arm, his weapon slices through her skin and bones as if they were made of mushy tofu.

Bael's body, previously thought all but indestructible, doesn't offer even the slightest resistance to the Excalibur created by Jason.

"Aaaaargh!" Ose screams, her momentum utterly thrown off.

Before she can even fully register the severing of her left arm and beat a hasty retreat, Ose suffers another series of blows as Arthur pushes his advantage.

Slash-slash-slash!

Even as Ose tries to pull back, Arthur slashes vertically and horizontally, drawing deep cuts down from Ose's face to her torso, slicing across her stomach, and severing the skin and muscle above both her knees!

Abruptly, Ose loses all the strength in her legs as her muscles turn to sashimi. She crumbles backward and flops onto her ass, watching with horror stricken eyes as Arthur's final sword strike races toward the top of her head.

"Noooo!!" Ose screams.

At the last instant, Arthur stops.

His blade abruptly ceases its motion less than a millimeter from the top of her skull.

Were he to continue, he would have cut straight down her body, splitting her in half and instantly killing her.

Ose staggers backward as blood spews from her face and chest, her stomach's contents spill out, and her legs flop around uselessly.

"Ahh! Ahh! How?! How could he- aaargh!"

Ose, the previously unstoppable goddess of combat, someone who easily defeated the Cherubiim in a truly epic display of power, finds herself defeated within seconds at the hands of Jason's singular blackhole construct.

The Hidden Emperors shrink back at the sight of Ose's gruesome injuries. Those who had their doubts the Wordsmith's copy of Arthur could prevail immediately feel their reality shatter when they realize how quickly and efficiently Arthur took her apart.

"Holy shit." Fae whispers. "I thought she'd at least put up a fight."

"I wasn't sure she'd actually lose." Yardrat mutters. "I even thought when the Wordsmith showed us Arthur, he was bluffing."

"Clearly, he wasn't." Gorn concludes.

Jason watches from afar.

"Sorry, Ose. I probably should have warned you. While my rendition of Excalibur isn't exactly like the original, and is probably weaker in some ways, it does have its own unique strengths. I can stack the sharpness and durability attributes seemingly infinitely, so no matter how resilient something or someone's defenses might seem, that sword will still cut right through them. You went into the battle thinking Bael's body was invincible, but as it turns out, it never was. It always had a limit."

He chuckles softly.

"Hehe. Miserable way to die, isn't it? I'm sure you'd prefer to perish in a long, dragged out battle, but that's just not how your death will come today. Frankly, a quick end is too good for you. I'd rather let the vultures pick you apart while the people you hurt take turns beating the shit out of you. But, in a way, this seems a lot more humiliating. And what could hurt you more than stomping on your sense of pride?"

Ose shudders. For the first time ever, she gazes at the distant Wordsmith with a look Gressil's victims might give him.

"You…cough… you think I'll just-"

Before Ose can finish her sentence, Arthur's arm moves.

Swish.

Excalibur draws a horizontal arc through the air, cutting across Ose's neck.

Her head departs her body with a slow, quiet, plop.

Jason doesn't even give Ose the dignity of uttering any last words.

The moment Ose's life-force ebbs, Bael's necromantically-revived corpse withers away, turning to ash and falling apart in the dirt.

The Hidden Emperors watch silently as Ose, the strongest of all demons, perishes to Jason's summoned warrior.

For several long seconds, nobody says anything.

Even the demons who hated Ose, those who worked against her to get her to this point, feel an indescribable lump well up in their throats.

Emperor Fae, usually a quippy woman, merely swallows dryly while staring at the ash scattering from Ose's corpse.

Yardrat, similarly, closes his eyes.

Despite their differences, many of the Hidden Emperors feel a sense of respect for Ose's achievements, in particular her overpowering of the Cherubiim.

Ose wasn't only a powerful warrior, but also a cunning strategist, the woman who oversaw the Humanity Containment Project following the end of the Energy Wars. She alone took down several major human installations as a mere Baron. She battled and defeated an Archangel in one-on-one combat immediately after her first ascension to Emperor.

Despite Ose's personal failings, the other Emperors still afford her several moments of silence as a form of respect.

While they mourn her death, Hope frowns.

"Jason. Where did Zamiel go?"

The other Wordsmith blinks. He quickly turns his head to look at Mephisto, only to see that while the Emperor of Legions continues to stand in place, his crocodilian puppet is nowhere to be seen.

"What?" Jason mutters, momentarily dazed. "I only looked away for a second. Is this a trick?"

In the moments everyone had their attention focused on Arthur and Ose, right beneath their noses, Mephisto pulled off a sleight of hand.

"Kekeke..." Mephisto chuckles, slowly turning his head to look at the Wordsmiths. "Everyone... alwaysss... underessstimatesss... the necromancer."

An instant later, Mephisto explodes.

Poof!

His body detonates like a confetti balloon, spraying a small ash cloud in all directions.

"What?!" Jason shouts. "Locate!"

He and Hope quickly speak multiple Words of Power, but no matter what they try, they fail to uncover the Emperor of Legions' hiding place.

Despite savoring Ose's death only moments earlier, they don't manage to stop their other, equally important prey from escaping!

As the Wordsmiths and Blinker panic, trying to figure out how Mephisto tricked them, the necromancer's voice whispers in the wind, just as he once did during the Stormbringer attack, communicating to them remotely.

"Foolisssh humansss. You have turned me into a pariah. My people will hunt me down. But that isss fine. You may enjoy thisss win, today. You failed to take into account my new powersss asss an Emperor. That missstake will cossst you dearly! KE-KE-KE-KE!"

Mephisto's maniacal laughter vanishes into the wind, leaving Jason, Hope, and Blinker all equally enraged.

"No!" Jason roars. "We had him!"

"You let him get away!" Hope screams, pointing the finger at Jason. "He was in the palm of our hand!"

"Kaaar!" Blinker cries, as her heart tears in half. "No... no... no..."

After several long minutes, Jason and Hope have no choice but to stop yelling at each other. Hope comforts Blinker, forcing himself not to fly over and beat the crap out of his original self.

Jason, on the other hand, suffers a heavy mental blow. Not knowing what method Mephisto used to escape squeezes his brain, making him sigh repeatedly while he tries to think of ways to fix the situation.

Eventually, he gives up, lowers his helmet, and turns to face the 5,000 demon elites standing next to the Warpgate.

"I had better not find out any of you gave Mephisto advance warning!" Jason roars. "If I do, our deal is OFF!"

The Emperors shudder. Without Ose, their united strength absolutely pales in comparison to the Wordsmiths.

"No, no, I swear I didn't say anything!"

"It wasn't me!"

"I would never take such a risk!"

They all publicly deny their involvement, leaving Jason to gnash his teeth until he nearly spits blood.

"Well, I don't care WHOSE fault it is! I'll find out one way or the other."

He fumes for a minute or two before calming down.

"In any case. It seems like you all kept up your end of the deal. Whether Mephisto's escape was an unfortunate accident or something you planned, I'll be looking into it very carefully. For now though, we have other matters to discuss."

Jason flies down to the ground level, landing beside Arthur. He folds his hands behind his back and begins slowly approaching the demon elites.

"Giving up Ose and Mephisto on a silver platter was nothing more than your way of showing me some sincerity. Let's next hammer out the details of our potential... alliance."

Part 359: I've Come to Bargain

After witnessing Jason's complete toppling of Ose, and Arthur's unstoppable power, not a single one of the demons present holds even the slightest thought they stand a chance against the Wordsmith. Perhaps, if they all unite their powers, they might be able to kill him and Hope, but capturing the Wordsmiths alive to use their powers will absolutely not succeed. And even if they did manage to kill the Wordsmiths, they would all perish during False Arthur's onslaught.

Indeed, despite Jason's construct seeming weaker than the actual Arthur, due to an inability to wield holy energy or release the true Excalibur's magical power, in terms of simple, raw combat ability, its indestructible blade, overwhelming speed, and mountain-sundering power make the Blackhole Construct completely undefeatable. Only if the Emperors prepare for a long time, they might succeed in catching it in a trap, but on this particular day, that prayer will never be answered.

As the two Emperors who brought Jason to the bargaining table, Yardrat and Fae hold their chins the highest, knowing the Wordsmith will show them more sincerity than the others. It was due to their plotting that Ose fell so easily, without causing a ruckus, and that Jason was able to display his formidable might to cow the other Hidden Emperors.

As for the rest, they have no choice but to firm up their hearts, particularly when the Wordsmith's next words will decide their fates, as well as the fates of all other demons in the universe.

Jason Hiro begins to pace back and forth before the 5,000 assembled demon elites. With his helmet dissipated, they can all look him in the eye, and vice versa, he can also meet their gazes.

"...An alliance." Jason repeats. "It would benefit all of us greatly. Genocide is not a path I want to pursue. But make no mistake. If I wish to exterminate all of you, and the rest of your Hells, I hold the absolute advantage. You live or die at my whim."

He continues. "While these statements are true, it does not mean I wish to bully you. But I must speak these words so that you fully grasp your situation. You have stomped humanity into the mud. You have beaten, raped, maimed, tortured, and killed humans for your own sick pleasure, or to obtain benefits for yourselves, for well over 100,000 years.

Simply put, you are currently unworthy of an alliance with me! Every single one of you deserves agonizing deaths! You deserve to suffer the same fate as all my brothers and sister before me!"

Jason peers into the eyes of several Emperors.

He pauses his speech to stop before one of them in particular.

"You. You are an undead demon! Gorn, if I remember correctly."

Emperor Gorn stands up a little straighter. Despite his immense body and height, his forehead barely reaches Jason's nose.

"I am Gorn, the Emperor of Many Faces." Gorn affirms. "And yes, I am undead. Mephisto revived me, following the Cherubiim's attack."

Gorn flicks his eyes toward the four Archangels in the distance, behind Jason. He snorts quietly, then returns his attention to Jason.

"I already know what you're thinking, Wordsmith. You're wondering if I'm one of Mephisto's pawns; if I'm preparing to attack you when your back is turned."

"Mephisto can control all his undead. He can use them as spies, or as suicidal attackers." Jason says with a nod. "But... there have already been two exceptions. Ose and Bael."

"And I am the third." Gorn says, drawing several looks of surprise from the other Emperors. "Mephisto made a mistake. He... didn't fully assume control of my soul, and so, I escaped his grasp. When he left, he took Zamiel with him, but left me behind, because he intends to collect my memories when we meet up again. Since you were about to capture Zamiel, Mephisto knew leaving him here was foolish, but he also knew I was not one of your targets."

Gorn doesn't tell the whole truth. He leaves out the fact that he broke free of Mephisto's control by simply switching the 'frequency' of his soul, but even so, his words explain ninety-five percent of the facts.

"Interesting." Jason says, examining Gorn's face. He stares at the masculine Emperor for a few moments before continuing his pacing. Without bothering to question Gorn further, Jason returns to his previous topic.

"All of you deserve to die, but I don't think that will help anyone at all, not in the short nor long term." Jason says. "Therefore! Before we can form an alliance, you will have to demonstrate true sincerity to me, the Archangels, and all the rest of humanity."

Emperor Kristoff maintains a neutral expression. "Whatever you request, Wordsmith... we will do our best to give you what you need. We all want to maintain a healthy relationship, in light of humanity's new trajectory."

"That's good to hear." Jason says with a cold smile. "Let's talk about Stormbringer. Ose is dead, and it goes without saying that all of you, every single one, will go out and pursue Mephisto to the ends of every Hell. You will catch him. You will kill him, or you will capture him. You will also bring his Lantern to me, as well as Kar's body. But this is only the start."

Jason continues. "It's entirely possible Mephisto will continue to evade you. If you can't catch him, no matter. I will do it myself. But there is one thing I know you can all do. You will track down every single demon and monster involved in the Stormbringer attack. Any who personally killed a single person or creature on my side during that dark day, you will bring them to me. Dead or alive, I don't care."

This demand causes several of the Emperors to frown.

"Wordsmith." Yardrat says, choosing his words carefully. "Ah... regarding the attackers... I suppose this goes without saying, but we demons don't exactly maintain accurate records. We know the Lords and some key members of our lower-ranks, but... there were so many involved in the Stormbringer attack, I don't see how we can possibly identify them all, let alone find them. Hell is quite big, you know."

"Oh, that's not a problem you need to worry about." Jason says quietly. "Every person who died during Stormbringer wore a Transforming Replicant Exosuit. All the footage of that day has been saved and backed up. My wife will create a vast and detailed compilation of those confirmed to have killed humans, monsters, and demons on our side. With their faces, you will find them all and bring them to me to await trial."

"Ah. Then... we'll do that." Yardrat says, lowering his head.

"Speaking of those involved in the attack on Tarus II," Jason says, turning his body to face the demon elites, "a certain 'someone' appears to be missing. Where, pray tell, is Emperor Yama? His Shades personally murdered an entire hospital's worth of wounded soldiers and civilians. As far as war crimes go, it was one of the worst parts of that day, barring... Beelzebub's detonation."

Fae snorts. "The sun is up. Naturally, Yama won't come here, nor will his Shades or Shadow-walkers. He stayed inside Hell, awaiting our signal to attack. Like the thousands of legions ready and waiting to attack, his shadow division will remain in place for a while longer."

Fae can't help but smile with glee when she hears the anger in Jason's voice. Not only did Yama nearly capture Jason's little girl, he also tried to kill Belial. And, more importantly, he tried to capture Fae and Bael during the Cherubiim attack to forcibly convert them into his own personal Shade attendants.

Heh heh heh... oh, Yama. Your reckoning is near. You and Mephisto both. Hell will rid itself of two nasty infestations, Fae thinks.

Jason nods. "Is that so? In that case, I'll take care of him myself."

"No need." Hope says, from behind Jason. He projects his voice with Wordsmithing to ensure everyone can properly hear him. "Leave the Shadow Emperor to me."

Jason glances back at Hope. When he sees a look of firm determination in his clone's eyes, all he can do is nod.

"...Alright. Yama is yours to do with as you please, Hope. Just wait until I finish here, and you can go kick him around, burn him to nothingness, or otherwise do as you please."

"I don't feel like waiting." Hope retorts.

Before Jason can interject, the Second Wordsmith utters a Word of Power and vanishes from the spot, disappearing into the depths of Hell.

"Hope..." Jason grumbles, before shaking his head.

No. It's better this way. I keep stifling him, but that isn't my intention. I can hardly blame him for being so pissed off, especially after what Gressil did to him.

Suddenly remembering Gressil's existence, Jason turns to Arthur, beside him.

"Arthur. Find Hope. Follow him. Only assist him if he needs help. Don't kill any demons unless you absolutely must. Contact me if you come across any conflicts in my commands."

The construct nods.

An instant later, his body flickers and vanishes. All the Emperors manage to see is a lightning-fast blur rush past them and race through the Warpgate into the Core.

So fast! Gorn thinks, just as shocked as he was when Arthur diced Ose to pieces. Imagine an army of False Arthurs. Nothing could stand in their way.

"Alright." Jason says, continuing his previous conversation. "I've laid out my starting demands. You will all hunt down Mephisto, Yama, and the others who attacked my people. But those demands don't actually hurt you. If anything, they eliminate some competition, giving you all a bit more of the 'Hell pie' to devour for yourselves. Now comes the actual hard part, where you have to make some sacrifices."

Jason resumes his back and forth pacing. "First off. Demons trashed my planet. I expect you to fix it up. Even though the majority of you weren't responsible for any damage to Tarus II, you've still committed unthinkable, heinous crimes against humanity. You will bring your hordes here to build homes, manufacturing facilities, recreational facilities, and defenses for my planet. You will fertilize the ground and till the soil. You will help me by using your various magical abilities for the sake of good, giving humans a world we can safely call home."

"This is not just to make up for your past sins, of which I'm sure you elites know are as numerous as the stars," Jason adds, "but to personally demonstrate your sincerity to humanity, build relations with us, and work alongside us. I know your history, perhaps better than most of you do. I know the convoluted details of how you ended up fighting the angels, and the Titans, and then, even the humans. While it is true that demons did not start the ancient wars, you did continue them, and you magnified their scale, ultimately slaughtering the angels and Titans while enslaving my people."

Jason spins on his heel. He turns to face the Emperors once again, but this time, reveals a visible smile.

"Once you have done all that, our mutually beneficial alliance will formally begin. The castigation of your war criminals, and the rebuilding of humanity's new homeworld will, in my humble estimation, decently make up for your bloody history. Today, I intend to reveal to you all the first of many devices that can bring about a new age of prosperity for demonkind!"

After listening to so many bleak demands for war crime reparations, the demon elites immediately perk up their ears at the thought of actually receiving benefits from the Wordsmith. More than their fear of the Wordsmith, the thought that he might improve their lots and even take care of the Threat they face, this is what most heavily motivated them to turn against Ose and give her up as a sacrificial lamb.

If Jason had no benefits to offer them, they would rather go down in flames and die fighting, just as they once did to the angels. In the minds of the demon elites, a life spent in slavery or suffering would be ten million times worse than a quick and brutal self-immolation.

As for Jason, seeing the looks of anticipation on their faces, he can't help but chuckle inwardly.

It's like the Wisdom Seeker always said. The carrot and the stick works best for manipulating others. If I give out too many benefits, others will see me as easy prey. But if I punish the demons too harshly, they will turn on me and fight to the last breath. Only by mixing benefits and punishments can I incentivize them to change their behavior. I wonder how many of them are truly cognizant that they've actually fallen for the schemes of Sun Tzu and Solomon?

The Wordsmith turns and gestures toward the titanic crystal wall enveloping the Fortress of Retribution. He moves his hand slowly, to add a dramatic flair.

"I will prove that my methods are not false. Come. All of you, follow me."

While the demon elites have no choice but to follow him, considering the potential benefits they will receive, none of them hold the slightest intention of dragging their feet. They eagerly pursue the Wordsmith, Blinker, and the Archangels as they take to their air and fly back to the impenetrable barrier protecting the Fortress of Retribution.

When the Emperors draw near, many of them knock lightly on the almost completely translucent crystal, only to punch it harder and wince when their fists buckle instead of the wall.

"What incredible defensive properties..." Gorn mutters, his eyes shining with a gloomy light. "I wonder if even Ose could have broken through it. It's far tougher than demonstone. The Wordsmith must have used his unique methods to reinforce it."

The Wordsmith opens up a passage in the wall, and the Emperors step through. On the other side, hundreds of human commandos and monsters stand at attention, having been forewarned by Jason regarding the bare details of his discussions with the demons.

Men and women alike gaze with shocked expressions through their T-REX visors as the 5,000 strong contingent of demons travels past them.

"Is it true? The Wordsmith actually killed Ose?"

"He even said he had forged an alliance with the demons. Or at least, he's working on it."

"Damn! Why couldn't he have done this before Stormbringer? Now I have to smile cheerfully at these demon bastards, after losing my little brother?!"

"My wife burned to death during the last stages of the demon's attack. I know what you're feeling... but we have to assume Commander Hiro has his reasons."

The soldiers whisper and chatter to each other through their mics. Naturally, these conversations will be stored in the Centurion database, but not even the hardest-hearted person would fault them for disliking the Wordsmith's actions.

And, even if they disagree, they know that Jason himself lost a daughter during the war, so he wouldn't forgive the demons so easily. He must have a reason for his decisions.

Jason leads the Hidden Emperors to a facility not far from the edge of the wall, a simple, nondescript building the size of a warehouse. When everyone enters and Jason turns on the lights, the demon elites remain silent as they try to understand just what, exactly, they're looking at.

Inside the warehouse, hundreds of tubes and wires criss-cross the ceiling. they travel from dozens of mini-nuclear generators on the walls, power converters, and other devices of unknown origin to a pair of twenty-foot-tall tube-like pods in the center of the room, connecting the former and latter through the network of tubes in a sublime fashion.

Sadly, none of the demons have any sort of technical background. Human technology is to them what their magic is to humans; a complete bunch of gobbledy-gook.

"What are we looking at?" Yardrat asks, examining the two 'pods' in the center of the room, neither of which seem to contain anything of note. They both have glassy windows, allowing the demons to see into their interiors, but they also appear empty, with no contents visible from the outside.

"These two pods might not look like much," Jason says, while casually walking toward the two devices, "but they hold the power to completely transform and reshape demon society. I haven't officially given them a name, but I find it kind of funny to call them... Belial Boosters!"

At the mention of the former Second Emperor, the demon elites quiet down, feeling a sense of awkwardness when they realize that keeping her as an outcast will probably not reflect well on the 'sincerity' the Wordsmith has repeatedly mentioned.

Even so, Fae finds the strength within herself to ask the question on everyone else's mind.

"Belial Booster? Why, ah, why do you call it... that?"

Jason chuckles. "Well. Because originally, I figured that in the event humanity fought demonkind and our peace talks fell through, I'd be mostly relying on Belial to power it. Now, that no longer has to be the case. Here, I'll demonstrate what exactly it does."

Jason points at Fae, then at a random Demon Baron in the back row.

"You two. Step forward."

Fae frowns at being singled out, but, upon quickly communicating with Auger through their innate telepathic link, shrugs and decides to obey Jason's command.

She steps forward, then turns her head to see, with mild surprise, that of all the Barons Jason could have chosen, he ended up picking Mara, the Baron of Games.

"Huh. So it's you." Fae muses. "Haven't seen you since..."

"Since the Yama incident." Mara says with a nod. "Mmm."

"Sorry about Yumagi's death," Fae says, through she can't help but crook a vicious smile. "Serves the cunt right for showing off in front of the Archangels. No offense, but I really couldn't stand that prick."

A strange look flashes across Mara's eyes as she recalls the secret realization that, despite everyone witnessing Yumagi's 'death,' he never actually perished. Only a clone of his younger self, made with his mystical Tarot Arts.

"Thank you. The Tarot Sect will continue to function, even without our leader." Mara says, keeping her words diplomatic. Considering Fae's reputation as the Emperor of Terror, she's done well to keep her violent tendencies in check, and Mara doesn't want to say anything that might set her off.

After the two women finish conversing, they turn to look at Jason with deep expectations.

"What next?" Fae asks.

Jason points to the two pods.

"Fae. Step into the pod on the left. Mara, you can go to the pod on the right."

"Why?" Fae asks, frowning slightly. "Come on, Wordsmith. I don't like surprises, and I get real claustrophobic. You don't want me to start throwing bombs, do ya?"

"No, no I don't," Jason says with a chuckle. "Alright. I'll tell it to you straight. This machine is one-of-a-kind. I can only create one per world I control. It uses a combination of Tarus II's magma core temperature, the planet's natural life energy, and the power of a Demon Emperor to elevate the strength of a low-ranking demon upwards."

"Simply put," Jason says, "it can fundamentally replace the need for demons to evolve from Grunt to Emperor via the use of souls."

Immediately, every low-ranking demon elite, particularly the Lords and Barons, gasps in shock. Even the Dukes and Emperors can't help but have their eyes bug out at this claim.

"Are you serious?!" Fae asks. "Does that mean it can raise Mara from a Baron to an Emperor?!"

"Not instantly." Jason says, while the other demons snort fire in anticipation of his next words. "If we're lucky, she will become a Duke within this first session. The Belial Booster will consume your energy to boost Mara's mind, body, and soul, and most importantly, it will not harm you in the long term! You will become fatigued, and you will not be able to use your magic for several weeks, but otherwise, you will recover normally while boosting Mara's strength!"

The demons roar with excitement.

"This is incredible!" Kristoff howls. "I never imagined such a wonderful machine could exist!"

"Only the Wordsmith could create something so profound!" Gorn praises. "Truly remarkable!"

While the demons laud him, Jason scratches his chin. "Hehe. I've already tested it once. Belial helped boost one of our Lords to the rank of Baron. Fae, Mara, why don't you two begin the procedure?"

Mara doesn't delay. She quickly runs forward and climbs into the energy transfer pod while looking at Fae with eager eyes.

"Come on, Fae! Let's go!"

Fae, however, hesitates.

"This machine is certainly incredible, but... why do I have to be the first to get my power sucked out? Use Yardrat. I'll bet he has more juice than me."

"Stop your bitchin'!" Emperor Lupus yells from behind the other Emperors. "Hurry up and get in the damn thing! I wanna see how this gizmo works!"

Fae grumbles a few more times, but ultimately relents. Since none of the other Emperors want to be the first to step inside, she reluctantly accepts her task.

After warily shuffling into the first containment pod, Fae flinches when its glass door swishes shut, sealing her inside. She taps the glass and discovers that while it is somewhat reinforced, she can easily smash it to pieces and escape if the situation turns dire.

"This had better not be a trick, Wordsmith." Fae growls, eying him suspiciously.

"If I wanted to kill or hurt you, I'd just do it." Jason says. "Could you even stop me?"

She continues to grumble, but lowers the frequency of her protests. "Tsk. Whatever. Just get this over with."

Jason grins. "You asked for it, sister. Don't worry! This procedure doesn't hurt at all!"

Without any fanfare, Jason taps on the control panel, keying in a unique one-time access code. The Belial Booster activates, summoning life energy from Tarus II's surface, planetary energy from the core, and electrical energy from the mini-nuclear reactors, all of which surge into a conduit located directly between Fae and Mara's pods.

At the same time, Fae's eyes begin to droop. An intense sensation of weakness swallows her mind, making her sag down in the pod with shaky knees, slumping into a position of absolute exhaustion. Her face presses against the glass, and her breath causes fog to build up on its surface.

"Uhh... uhhhh... so... so tired..."

Like a human who has run a marathon, then performed one hundred consecutive pullups, Fae's arms and legs lose all of their strength, making her unable to keep herself in a standing position.

At the same time, Mara's eyes widen. She howls with delight as a pleasurous sensation unlike anything she's ever experienced in her life fills up her mind, body and soul.

Better than sex. Better than the most delicious food, or the most fun hobby, or any other activity she has enjoyed partaking in, Mara moans seductively, feeling her entire body tremble and spasm as the electrical currents fill her with overwhelming power!

Her demonic aura surges! Before the spectator's eyes, her Baron-level aura races upward, reaching the peak of her rank before immediately crashing through with a muffled BOOM and continuing to rise past the bottom level of a Duke!

Minutes later, the procedure stops. Fae helplessly lays with her face smushed against the glass, looking like a dainty fairy, unable to protect herself, while Mara appears exactly the opposite. She whoops and hollers in an uncharacteristic manner, clearly overjoyed by her transformation!

"Incredible! Amazing! I feel like I could shatter reality! I am the Baron of Games no longer! From this day forward, I shall be the Duke of Collection!"

Many Lords and Barons cheer wildly from the sidelines, not only excited and happy for Mara's well-deserved elevation of status, but also for the prospects of their own future rise to power!

Once the lower-ranking demons follow in Mara's footsteps, they will experience the same moment of ascension as her, stepping up through the ranks of demonkind into a world better than any they had ever hoped for!

While the low-ranking demons scream with excitement, the higher-ranked ones maintain their cool.

Gorn examines Fae from a distance, frowning.

"There aren't any permanent after-effects? Fae looks as if you drained her soul dry."

"No after-effects!" Jason declares resolutely. "Sure, she's completely dead inside and will enjoy the best sleep of her life, but in a few weeks, it will be as if she had never stepped foot in the chamber."

Jason opens both of the pods, then gestures to Mara.

"Help Fae out, would you? It's the least you can do."

"No problem! I owe her more than I can put into words!" Mara chirps. The usually cool and collected demoness radiates happiness, having obtained a powerup she never expected she would receive.

As Mara walks over to help carefully pull Fae out of the chamber, Jason turns to the other Emperors.

"The Belial Booster is still incomplete. In the future, it will allow Barons and Dukes to also boost low-ranking demons, particularly Grunts, en-masse. A single Duke could raise ten Grunts to the rank of Lord, for example. For right now, it has several limitations that cannot be overridden. Now that Mara has been boosted once, she will have to wait a long time before we can boost her again. Additionally, boosting her with the same demon, meaning Fae, won't work. Someone else will have to do so. Kristoff, Gorn, whoever, I don't care."

"But." Jason says, pausing to give his next words added weight. "It doesn't matter how incredible this device is. If you don't carry out my demands and fullheartedly support humanity, you can say goodbye to ever using the Belial Booster. Humanity will use it only for our current, longstanding demon allies. In time, we will raise an army of Dukes and Emperors, and you will all have to sit on the sidelines. Therefore, I advise that you hunt down everyone I mentioned before. As long as you complete those missions, you can begin to bolster your own Hells."

Jason's words burrow deeply into the ears of his listeners.

Hidden in them is a secret implication.

Yardrat flicks his eyes toward the other Emperors, noting the thoughtful expressions on their faces. He, too, thinks deeply about Jason's underlying threat.

The device can't be used repeatedly, or often. That means after each usage, it will have a substantial cooldown period. Not only does the planet need to recover its life energy, but the planet's core needs to 'reheat' itself. This means the choice of whose allies get boosted first will matter significantly! If the other Hells get access to the Belial Booster before mine, won't we suffer a loss?

And how, then, will the Wordsmith determine whose subordinates receive the boosts first?

Yardrat snorts.

It's obvious. Those who most 'sincerely' chase down and capture or kill the brutes who attacked Tarus II will earn the most favor with him. Those who drag their feet will end up at the back of the line!

Scarcity creates value.

If the Belial Booster were easy to use, its value would drop. If every Emperor could quickly boost their subordinates, its value would drop further.

But its limited and unique functionality, its position on the human homeworld, and its symbolic importance make it a defining feature of the upcoming generation!

Not only can the demons not use human souls to advance anymore, but the lone remaining method belongs to their former enemy, and it has even greater effect than the soul-improvement path they once used!

Even more so than humanity, greed rules the heart of demonkind. While the Hidden Emperors certainly won't be foolish enough as to attack Tarus II, Jason, or humanity, that doesn't mean their own internal disputes will cease as well!

Several Emperors shoot sly glances at one another, measuring up their future enemies.

The Hell of Isolation didn't attend this meeting. Yardrat thinks. They won't know about the Belial Booster. But then again, Jason probably holds a certain sympathy for them, along with the Hell of Lust. Their crimes against humanity are far less than the other five Hells. As such, they will likely get first pick regarding who to boost. Yama's Hell is finished. He won't ever get to touch this juicy morsel. That means my Hell only has three real opponents, and we're all going to fight for third place!

The Hells of Damnation, Blood, Punishment, and Calamity stand opposed to one another. While on occasion they might work together for the sake of demonkind itself, in general, they have never been allies beyond the species-relation level.

And since the Hell of Damnation has oppressed the other Six Hells by monopolizing the control of souls since the end of the Energy Wars, the rest will be all too happy to suppress it, if given the choice.

Emperor Yardrat sneers inwardly. Ose is dead. Mephisto is a castaway. Bael is useless. Beelzebub is dead. The First Hell has no foundation to stand on! It lacks even a single Duke! Mara sometimes performed odd jobs for the Hell of Damnation's leaders, but she's actually a member of the Hell of Calamity! With the First Hell now having no worthwhile leaders, isn't this...

Hmm. Yardrat thinks, his thoughts slowing down. Come to think of it. The First Hell has a strong low-level foundation. If I weren't bound to Auger, couldn't I set out to become the new leader of the First Hell? If I have such a thought, then so, too, will the rest...

As the Emperor of the Void ponders to himself, Mara walks over with Fae's powerless body in her arms. Fae's usually boisterous demeanor, for once, gives way to a sort of cute and soft appearance as she sleeps in Mara's grasp.

At least, until she lets out a loud and obnoxious snore.

Then the effect vanishes.

"Here." Mara says. "You can warp her back to Diabolus, right?"

Yardrat nods. He takes Fae in his arms and grimaces at the sight of snot and drool dripping down her face.

"Lovely."

Jason claps his hands.

"I hope, then, that we can all work together to build our alliance. What do you think?"

The demon elites nod in unison.

Yardrat starts to voice his affirmation, but at that moment, a telepathic message beams into his mind.

Auger, the Emperor of Distribution, sends Yardrat a piece of information that shocks him to his core!

At the same time, several other Emperors receive the same news!

"Sharmur is under attack!" Kristoff exclaims, his eyes darkening. "Who would do such a thing?"

A chill descends down Gorn's spine.

"Impossible! The attacker! They're... they're actually...!"

When Gorn says the attacker's identity, Jason's soul plunges into an icy abyss.

"Oh my god. No... it can't be...!"

Part 360: Shattered Sharmur

On the planet 'Sharmur,' ruled by the Hell of Isolation.

Millions of demons and monsters live on this remote world, located in the southern part of the Milky Way galaxy. Only a week before, its population was much higher, but due to the Wordsmith's activation of the Lazarus Tower, every human in existence teleported to Tarus II, leaving Sharmur feeling far, far more empty than before.

The Hell of Isolation's leaders practice the arts of music, painting, dancing, cooking, and other such relatively pleasant activities. Even so, this world is not weak. Demons proficient in the Arts of Recreation can weaponize their music, conjure frightening painted monsters, and even turn food into a weapon.

Dorma, the Duke of Delicacies, sits in a shop on the outskirts of Sharmur's capitol city, Maotai Quo, named by one of the city's original founders, a demoness who was surprisingly appreciative of Earth's Chinese culture. This city features many such Chinese inspirations, relating not only to its name, but its architecture, its societal hierarchy, and even the way people address one another.

Inside his small but cozy shop, Dorma cooks up a storm. He throws boiled noodles and vegetables in a pot with beef and chicken stock, mixing them up expertly to create soups and stews, while using his innate demonic powers to roll eggs and rice together as well. With speed and efficiency, he finishes a mouth-watering order for a party of ten demons, all of whom give him a thumbs up.

"Damn good food, Dorma!"

"Awesome as always!"

These Grunts, as well as a pair of Lords, eagerly accept the craftsmanship offered to them by Dorma, who also flashes a hearty thumbs up back at them.

"Hahaha! It was just something I made in a rush! No need to thank me!"

After the small group takes their grub to-go and leaves, another demon in the room, a fellow Duke on the same level of Dorma, looks at him from the corner of her eye.

"Business seems slow." She says, glancing at the otherwise barren shop.

"Well. With all the humans gone, not many customers come by. Most demons don't even eat good, homecooked food." Dorma says. "But that's okay too. It means I can make each dish extra special for those who do decide to pay me a visit!"

The female Duke sighs. "There were these two cute kids, a boy and a girl. I liked to go over and paint with them... but now they're gone. That Wordsmith took them away."

"Perhaps it is better like this." Dorma says, with a shrug. "We did treat the humans well, but don't you think they should live with their own kind? Now they can come together, as one big family."

"What, and we weren't their family?" The demoness grumbles. "Don't be naïve. The Wordsmith is going to raise those kids to be warriors. They could have grown up with us here, happy and at peace. Instead, they've been pulled into the conflicts of the other Hells, and even worse, they won't know how good their lives could have been. They may even grow up to hate us."

"Mmm. You're probably right, Wei Lei." Dorma says, addressing the Duke of Colors. He picks up the half-empty pot of soup he just made, ladles out a large bowl of it, and slides it down the bar to her. "But in the end, humans are humans. We shouldn't interfere in them returning to their own kind. What we should do is continue to spread the word that demons and humans can live in peace."

"A worthless message." Wei Lei says, bitterly, while grabbing a pair of chopsticks from a nearby canister full of them and digging into her soup. She slurps several of the noodles and smiles reflexively, in large part due to the divine taste of Dorma's cooking. "As we speak, Ose is leading an army to humanity's doorstep. How am I supposed to feel knowing those two kids are standing right in the killzone?"

Dorma, still standing behind the bar, leans forward and rests his arms on its surface. He looks down its length at Wei Lei while she devours his soup.

"Maybe we should have persuaded Melody and the others to let us join the Wordsmith's cause?"

"That's no good either." Wei Lei says, while chewing a particularly juicy piece of pulled pork. "We are neutral. Always. That was what Shax would have wanted from us. We only fight if attacked. We do not ever seek out trouble with others, especially not our fellow demons."

"Is true neutrality possible?" Dorma wonders. "The other demons hate us. They coveted our human family, wanting to take them as slaves. The Overlords made it clear that only so many humans were allowed to remain among the living, so the only legitimate way to gain more slaves would be by stealing from us. Yet we were not pushovers and could stand up for ourselves. In that case, would one not say we were taking a stand for the humans?"

"I'm not interested in a philosophical debate." Wei Lei says, waving her hand flippantly at Dorma. "You should stick to cooking. It's what you do best."

Dorma snorts. "Ants specialize. Demons and humans generalize. Why can I not be both a scholar and a chef? I'll have you know-"

In the middle of Dorma talking, the door to his shop opens up, and a demon Grunt stumbles in, a Burner-type with fiery red hair.

"Hey! Wei Lei, Dorma! Come here! You've gotta see this!"

Dorma frowns. "We were right in the middle of a discussion. Must you be so rude?"

"Forget that!" The Grunt says, visibly agitated. "This is important! REALLY important!"

Dorma and Wei Lei glance at one another, then shrug in exasperation.

"Every time some problem comes up, it's always a Baron or a Duke who has to resolve the situation..." Wei Lei complains.

The two of them follow the Grunt outside, frowning as he starts to run toward the nearby wall enveloping the city of Maotai Quo. While the Hell of Isolation might be a Hell filled with peace-loving hippies, they still have to worry about infrequent attacks from the planet's wildlife, of which many thousands of apex predators exist, the majority of them more fearsome than the dinosaurs of Earth's history.

"Slow down." Dorma says, breaking into a light jog. "Why are you in such a rush?"

"Come on, hurry!" The Grunt says, frantically pointing at the gate to the city.

"At least tell us what this is about!" Wei Lei says, but her words fall on deaf ears.

Helplessly, she and Dorma simply continue to chase after the Grunt, who eventually screeches to a stop at the city gates, where a half dozen other Lords and Grunts hide behind the walls, peeking through the gaps in the iron gates at something on the other side.

"Guys! I brought some Dukes!" The Grunt says, arriving beside the others. "Th-they can handle this... thing!"

Dorma and Wei Lei both slow to a stop in front of the gates. The criss-crossing iron bars allow them to see outside the city's borders, into the marshlands, where usually they might observe at least a few winged predators flying around, or other creatures migrating from the north to the south, especially at this time of year.

However, what they instead see is a sight most peculiar.

Outside the city gates, perhaps half a mile in the distance, a humanoid figure stands, its mottled green skin covered in warts and blisters, as if suffering from an infection. No hair rests on its head. Its frail-looking body shows plenty of rib bones, as if it hasn't eaten a meal in weeks. Lacking any clothes, it appears totally nude, yet curiously, it also seems to lack genitals.

But, the thing that most draws everyone's gaze is the creature's head.

It lacks a face.

No eyes.

No nose.

No mouth.

The faceless creature stands, unmoving, outside the gates, yet faces the city, as if debating whether or not to enter.

Wei Lei's eyes gaze expressionlessly at the creature.

"What... what the hell is that thing? Is it... a human?"

"It does sort of look like a human..." Dorma mutters. "But it also feels monster...ish."

"You see?" The Grunt whispers, keeping his voice low. "It's creepy! Look at it just standing there... menacingly! You guys have to take care of it! We're too scared."

"I'm not going anywhere near that thing." Another Grunt says.

"Me neither." Says a Demon Lord.

Wei Lei and Dorma look at each other.

For a brief moment, even they feel a brief tingle of fear.

Something about the creature... unnerves them. Its motionless stance, its faceless head...

For some reason, it feels...

Alien.

Dorma straightens his posture. He cracks his neck and grits his teeth.

"Goddammit. Why does all the weird shit always happen around me?"

"We can't look pathetic in front of our cute little subordinates." Wei Lei laughs nervously. "Come on. Let's investigate."

Neither of them wants to make a move, but neither do they feel they have a choice. Reluctantly, they order the others to raise the gate, and then, they step through.

Slowly but surely, the two Dukes begin to approach the creature. It remains in one place, not reacting to them, even as they close to distance.

Half a mile becomes a third of a mile. Then a quarter. A tenth.

The Dukes slow down drastically, growing more and more nervous as the creature doesn't react to them in the slightest.

"H-hey, you!" Dorma says, his voice cracking. "Who are you? What are you? Identify yourself!"

Still, the mottled-skin-man doesn't react.

Wei Lei shivers uncontrollably, feeling a truly deep-seated sense of unease.

"I don't like this. I don't like it one bit..." She whispers. "Why isn't it moving? Is it dead?"

"How should I know?!" Dorma hisses under his breath. "M-maybe we should just attack it. If it's not dead, we can kill it quick. Maybe the damn thing's infected with some nasty disease. Better to put it out of its misery."

Wei Lei nods. "Yeah. I'm not usually one to jump straight to violence, but... eugh."

The Duke of Colors motions with her hands, summoning a magical paintbrush. In an instant, her hands dance around, drawing the image of a massive Gate Troll, a huge creature that will soon materialize into the material world to follow her orders.

As she quickly speed-paints, Dorma's expression flickers.

"...A disease?"

In less than ten seconds, Wei Lei finishes her painting. She conjures a massive Gate Troll, towering more than twenty feet tall. The spiritual construct, similar to one that Uriel might summon, manifests in the world for only a limited time, yet possesses much of Wei Lei's demonic power.

"Go." She says, pointing to the creature up ahead.

The Gate Troll roars. It pounds its chest, then stomps forward, quickly clearing the gap as it charges at the faceless creature.

At that moment, a change happens.

Right as the Gate Troll raises its claws overhead, hellbent on slamming them down to pulverize the creature, it lifts its faceless gaze to look up at the troll.

Then...

It sucks into the ground.

As if falling into an empty pit, the creature disappears into the dirt, melting into the planet's crust with the same ease that Mephisto might, if he were to turn immaterial and dive underground.

The Gate Troll's claws smash into the dirt, but it misses the kill, leaving Wei Lei and Dorma to stare with fully-opened eyes.

"D-did you see that?!" Wei Lei squeaks. "What the hell?! That thing fused with the planet's soil! I can't detect it at all!"

"Neither can I!" Dorma exclaims. "It wasn't dead after all! But, what does this mean for-"

Behind the Dukes, a faint impression of danger manifests in their minds. Dorma abruptly stops speaking, spins around, and gasps in fright when he sees the monster less than two feet behind him! Not standing fully, but only its faceless head, poking out of the ground to look up at him!

"Aaah!" Dorma shrieks. "The monster!"

Wei Lei also turns to look, but before she can register its presence, her feet don't follow her commands. They adhere to the ground, as if she had stepped in glue without noticing.

Awkwardly, Wei Lei stumbles, lowering her gaze only to see the ground itself opening up beneath her feet.

"D-Dorma! It's got-"

Wei Lei doesn't get to finish her sentence. A pair of mottled green limbs burst out of the ground beneath her, grab onto her ankles, and pull downward with violent force.

"Aaaiee!"

Dorma doesn't have time to react. Wei Lei instantly ends up with half her body submerged in the dirt, and the rest of her figure follows soon afterward.

"Wei Lei!!" Dorma bellows. He activates his Duke powers, conjuring a massive enchanted cooking pot to fall upon the creature's exposed head, but it merely submerges back into the dirt, avoiding the attack.

Moments later, the creature's arms grab onto his ankles, pulling him under the planet's surface to join Wei Lei. Neither Duke manages to put up a fight, and soon after, they both vanish, leaving the world in a quiet, temporary lull.

The other Grunts and Lords at the gates scream in terror. They quickly run away, howling in fear and alerting the whole city.

However, some time after they leave, three pairs of arms emerge from the dirt.

Not only does the original faceless creature crawl out of Sharmur's bowels, but so do two other, similarly faceless creatures.

And these two new ones... look an awful lot like Dorma and Wei Lei.

"Escape to the Warpgate!"

"Make for the mountain! Hurry! Leave everything behind!"

"You can't find him? Then he's a goner! Just go! We don't have much time!"

Demon Barons and Dukes quickly gesture to the top of a large mountain, the only place on Sharmur with access to a Volgrim Warpgate. This gate offers them the sole access point to the Labyrinth, though there are also a few scattered Warper demons who can burn their mana to open small portals for others to stream in one-by-one. That is, until their mana reserves give out.

Swarms of demons and monsters scream in terror while running toward that mountaintop. Unfortunately, the path which winds up its base is both cramped and narrow, drastically limiting the number of evacuees who can race to the top. Any demons without the ability to fly, those who cannot warp, and those who aren't Burrowers can only run up the three-man-wide pathway, praying they don't trip and fall off the side.

At the same time, atop the mountain's plateau, a pair of Dukes watches with fear in their eyes as the agonizingly slow procession of demons runs as fast as they can up the mountain, yet only a few thousand can fit on its pathway at once.

One of the Dukes flicks their eyes into the distance, where they spot, only a few miles away, a bright explosion of light. Emperor Melody unleashes powerful and flashy soundwaves, firing them down into the city indiscriminately, while levitating in the air.

The Duke's blood turns cold when he spots the ground inside the city moving, as a horde of freakish, faceless monsters swarm around, grabbing onto any biological entity and dragging it into the planet's depths, only for it to emerge shortly after and become one with the swarm.

"Oh, ancient devils... oh, ancient devils..."

As time passes, the swarm draws closer and closer. Melody continues bombarding it without stopping, but her attacks have little to no effect. She eventually screams in frustration and flies to the mountain at full speed.

"Where are Viola and Guura?!" Melody shouts. "Have they made it here yet?"

The Duke winces. "Emperor Melody, still no word from them! B-but I'm sure they'll be here soon!"

Tears bubble up in Melody's eyes. The usually loud, boisterous, and excitable demoness shrieks with pain as her heart crumbles.

"They're dead! DEAD! I wasn't fast enough! I, I couldn't stop these monsters!"

"They might show up soon!" The Duke says, trying to cheer her up. "How could Emperors fall to monsters like these?!"

Melody doesn't answer him. She merely turns around, gasping in fear as the flood of monstrous aliens devours the procession of demons from behind, having now caught up with them after chasing for so long.

Melody gnashes her teeth until they bleed.

"We... we can't keep the Warpgate open any longer! Whoever made it out, that's all! We cannot allow this swarm to reach the Labyrinth!"

"Do you know what these monsters are?" The Duke asks.

Melody nods, her expression shifting to hatred.

"They are the Plague. Somehow, our world attracted this calamity. We are the ones who must suffer, now."

Melody takes a few moments to sweep her eyes across the tens of thousands of demons at the mountain's base, all of whom have become terribly panicked at the realization they won't make it to the top in time.

Melody sucks in a sharp breath.

"Rather than let my people be consumed by this Plague, I'll consign them to oblivion! May their souls rest in peace!!"

Melody howls with white-hot anger, conjuring all of her demonic power into a soul-crushing soundwave. She fires it straight down into the crowd's densest part, instantly blasting them apart, and their souls, to slow the Plague's infection speed.

With a single attack, Melody kills more than a million demons, causing her tears to flow hotter than before.

"I am a failure of an Emperor! This Plague, it will be my lifelong enemy! FOREVER!"

She, the Dukes, and the other elites positioned on the mountaintop flee into the portal. After waiting just ten seconds, they shut the Warpgate off, locking all their friends, companions, brothers, and sisters on the world of Sharmur.

The last thing they hear are the screams of fear from those unlucky enough not to make it through the gate's aperture in time.

With a sudden whoomph, the portal disperses, closing off Sharmur from the Labyrinth.

In less than one day, the entire world has fallen. Of the tens of millions of demons who once roamed its surface, fewer than two million remain.

Melody slumps to the ground. She leans against the arm of the Warpgate, agony etched into every line of her face.

Viola, Guura, and Dorma, three of her closest friends, fell during the arrival of the Kolvaxians. Now, only one Emperor remains among the Hell of Isolation's elites.

Only Melody.

Elsewhere, in the Milky Way. On the world of Volgarius.

Commander Randis, an Ascended working in the First Finger of the Founder's Hand, stares at the report in his grasp with a look of utter bleakness.

The obsidian-skinned Volgarian reads not only its contents, but its implications, gritting his teeth as he quickly postulates on what events could have led to the fall of a demon-controlled world behind the battle lines of the Southern Galaxy.

After getting himself up to date, he turns and marches through the doorway to his office, toward the turbolift at the end of the hall. Before long, he arrives at Floor 345, the central floor of Founder Unarin's core command structure.

Randis storms down the hallway leading to the central office, while several high ranking leaders of the Volgrim make way for his arrival.

Eventually, he reaches Unarin's primary office, a darkened room with several holographic imaging systems constantly active. As expected, Unarin stands in the center of these feeds, monitoring the progress of several Kolvaxian battlefronts.

"Brother." Randis says, stepping forward. "There was an unexpected penetration event. A Kolvaxian outbreak struck the world of Sharmur."

"Sharmur?" Unarin repeats, turning his attention to the datapad in Randis's hand. "This name seems vaguely familiar."

"It was founded by one of the Seven Hells." Randis says. He quickly explains the world's origins, making Unarin frown deeply. "As you can see here, a Kolvaxian outbreak occurred on the third continent, just outside the capitol city. You couldn't have picked a better spot if you tried."

Randis transmits the datafiles to Unarin. The First Founder skims them quickly, his frown turning uglier by the minute.

"Sharmur isn't far from the southern battle-lines, but it isn't close either. There should have been a buffer of several dozen worlds before the Kolvaxians reached it. Why did they strike here? And how did they slip through the Sterilization Lines?"

"We're still investigating." Randis says. "But personally, I have a theory."

Unarin narrows his eyes. "Continue."

"There was an unexpected mass spatial variance event just seven cycles ago." Randis explains. "It occurred across numerous demon controlled worlds. Ultimately, we detected an inexplicable galaxy-class teleportation-transmission occurring on Tarus II. After contacting the Changelings on the Wordsmith's world, we verified what happened."

Randis pauses.

"...The Wordsmith teleported every human in existence to his planet. I believe that in doing so, since Sharmur was close to the border, its spatial instability attracted the Kolvaxians' attention."

"The Wordsmith... caused this?" Unarin asks, looking deeply into Randis's eyes. "You had best be sure, brother. I cannot seek a grievance with our one great hope of defeating the Plague based solely off your conjecture. We have no way of knowing if spatial variance events will attract Kolvaxian attention, anyway."

"You're right. We don't." Randis says with a nod. "As long as you don't discount the possibility, that's enough for me."

Unarin's brother hesitates for a moment.

"Permission to speak freely?"

"You don't need my permission for anything." Unarin simply replies. "Say what you wish."

"This Wordsmith is dangerous." Randis says. "I'm not referring to his threat toward us. I'm talking about his rash actions. He 'rescued' all those humans, but in doing so, most likely brought a calamity upon Sharmur. What if his next 'accidental' victim is one of our military installations?"

The First Founder folds his hands behind his back.

"You might be right. But for the moment, what choice do we have? We're soon to lose this war, one way or another. A single demon-controlled world is an unfortunate loss, but they were never going to put up much of a fight against the Plague, anyway. Only the humans can help us..."

Unarin sighs.

"...Only the humans."

Randis snorts. "Did you also hear? The Wordsmith managed to pacify the entirety of demonkind. Emperor Ose is dead. That means he now has full control of humanity, the monsters, and the demons. You had best keep a close eye on him, brother."

"I did hear about that." Unarin nods. "Humans. They move so quickly. They evolve at frightening speeds. Not like us, who have become slow, ponderous beasts."

With a shake of his head, Unarin returns his attention to the data streams.

"Inform me of any other changes."

"As you wish." Randis says, before turning and walking away.

Part 361: Fallen World

Outside one of the four warpgates positioned at the 'corners' of Hell, a massive group of monster and demon refugees lays, sits, or stands in one of the dozens of alcoves, hallways, and other adjacent areas to that part of the Labyrinth. These beings, the survivors of the Kolvaxian invasion, scream and cry while lamenting the fall of their world.

Not since the Energy Wars has the Hell of Isolation suffered such a devastating loss. Its members now amount to less than twenty percent of its original numbers, making them feel scattered, lost, and disorganized.

Emperor Melody, a muscular demoness with long black hair stretching down to her waist, gem-studded teeth, and plenty of additional piercings all over her body, sits despondently on the dirt floor. While other demons around her cry and sob, she instead becomes half-catatonic, dazed by the deaths of her fellow demons.

Not only does she not know what fate ultimately befell Emperors Guura and Viola, but she cannot mentally cope with having been forced to kill a million of her own people to save them from being assimilated into the Plague's biomass.

"Gone... they're all gone..." Melody mumbles incoherently, her thoughts a slurry of despair and bitterness. "I couldn't... save them..."

While Melody battles with feelings of inadequacy and uselessness, a portal opens up at the far side of the lone warpgate's nexus, amidst a hollow spot in the crowd of demons and monsters.

Through that portal, a Demon Emperor steps out.

Yardrat, Emperor of the Void, only glances at the Grunts and Lords closest to him before flickering forward to arrive at Melody's side.

"Melody. We came as soon as we heard. How is the situation?"

Yardrat's portal remains open. After he teleports over to Melody, dozens of other high-level Demon Emperors step through, including Fae, Gorn, and Kristoff. Once they emerge, so too does the Wordsmith, as well as Raphael. The Archangel of Wisdom insists on observing these happenings with his own eyes.

"You're too late." Melody hisses through her teeth. "You're too late! They're all gone. It's over. Those monsters got Viola, and Guura, and Dorma, and... and everybody!"

Yardrat flicks his eyes toward the disabled portal and shivers.

"I'm sorry. If you had warned me sooner, I could have opened dozens of portals to evacuate-"

"WELL I DIDN'T!" Melody bellows, raising her head to shriek at Yardrat. "I didn't, okay?? It all happened so fast! By the time I heard what was going on, half the planet had already been taken over! I was scared! I could barely even figure out what was happening before the Plague pushed us back to the Warpgate! Nobody told me it would go down like this! Nobody warned me!"

Yardrat flinches. He takes a step back and raises his palm.

"Sorry. I didn't mean to act pushy. It wasn't your fault... never mind."

While Yardrat gathers the details, the Wordsmith and Raphael exchange glances, having heard Melody's vague explanation even from a short distance away.

"The Kolvaxians..." Jason mutters. "This is so strange. Why did they attack Sharmur? And right when all the Emperors came to Tarus II?"

Raphael shakes his head. "I know not the answer, Wordsmith. Verily, this timing art coincidental. Coulds't one of the Emperors hath planted a Kolvaxian on Sharmur, somehow?"

"Doesn't seem likely." Jason mutters. "This is the first time any of the demons have even seen one. I'll have to ask the Volgrim. They might have some ideas."

The Hidden Emperors surround Melody and try to comfort her, but none of their words make her feel any better. Among them, Gorn crosses his arms and crooks a faint smile as he sees the devastation.

Good. Good... this will incentivize the different Hells to work together. Gorn thinks. Now the others will understand the Threat we face more viscerally. In these times, a capable leader will need to step up... and who better than me?

Confident in his chances of working his way up to seize control of all Seven Hells, Gorn says nothing to Melody, opting to allow his peers to offer their words of comfort.

At the same time, the Wordsmith utters a Word of Power, allowing him to look into the last 24 hours of memories of several nearby demons. He quickly obtains a massive amount of emotionally packed and fragmented information, but sifts through it with Fiona's help to look at how, exactly, the Plague spread.

"Hmm..." Jason mutters, keeping his voice low. "It seems the Plague started with only a handful of infected, then spread rapidly across the capitol city of Sharmur. There aren't any eyewitnesses here from those first few hours, though. They must have been... yeah. But how did the Plague spread across the whole planet so quickly?"

"'Tis beyond my understanding." Raphael replies. "If we could safely travel to Sharmur, we might be able to examine the infection's aftermath to postulate how it spread. Otherwise..."

"I don't want to go there myself. Not even in a soul-form." Jason says. "For all I know, the Plague might have some way of detecting souls. Especially as it just devoured multiple Demon Emperors."

After thirty minutes, Jason and the demons manage to console the survivors of the Sharmur attack. Jason courteously invites them all to live on Tarus II, a simple matter given the huge amount of free space on his world, and Melody accepts.

"I don't know!" Melody shouts, bitterness lingering in her voice. "What the hell is up with all of you? Why is the Wordsmith and an Archangel here? I thought you guys were going to war with each other today!"

Yardrat crosses his arms. "Yes. About that... remember Ose?"

He and the other Emperors bring Melody up to speed. She listens, dumbstruck, as they inform her that they successfully tricked Ose and got her killed. Now, they have to hunt down Mephisto, Yama, and the others who attacked Tarus II. The more they talk, the more tongue-tied Melody becomes.

"This is insanity." She mutters. "If only my Hell had gone with you. Then Guura, Viola, and the others wouldn't have..."

"It's better this way." Jason says. "Yes, you did lose several friends. But if all the elites from Sharmur had gone to Tarus II, there wouldn't have been anyone left to save those you did when the Kolvaxians attacked. In the end, you still managed to save a fifth of your people. That's worth something, right?"

"A fifth." Melody grunts. "What a relief."

Jason doesn't offer her any other words. Like how he struggles with the deaths of those who served under him during Stormbringer, Jason finds a certain amount of parallel thinking with Melody, now that the two of them have both suffered a massive loss of life under their watch.

"We can't change the past." Jason says. "But we can move toward a better future. What do you say? Do you want to set up a new life on Tarus II? I won't treat you badly."

"Sure..." Melody sighs. "Thanks. I owe you."

She leaves to talk to the surviving elites from her Hell, while Jason and the other Emperors mingle, wondering what to do next.

"Everything I said before still stands." Jason reiterates. "You guys need to track down Mephisto and the rest. I can handle the relocation of the demons and monsters from Sharmur. As for what comes after that, I'll start drawing up plans on how you can help humanity rebuild-"

Right in the middle of the Wordsmith talking, he receives a telepathic transmission. Not words, but images and mental impressions. The Wordsmith abruptly pauses to listen as his strongest Black Hole Construct, Arthur, transmits information to him.

The Wordsmith blinks slowly.

"...What? Yama did? And where is Hope now?"

The next transmission makes him wet his lips. He turns to the Emperors and shrugs.

"I, ah, have something to deal with. You know what to do. You can meet me on Tarus II, or in the Core. We'll talk again soon."

Without waiting for a response, the Wordsmith blinks away, leaving Raphael behind to stand awkwardly in the middle of countless former enemies.

The Archangel of Wisdom snorts. "Hmph. I shalt take my leave as well."

He opens a portal back to Tarus II, steps through, and vanishes.

After he disappears, Melody frowns.

"Say. Are we cool with Raphael now, or...? You know, since he and the other two Archangels killed most of the demons on Hell Harbor."

"To be honest," Kristoff replies, "it still isn't clear to me how we should treat the Archangels."

"Huh." Melody mutters. "Neat."

Some time earlier, in a distant part of the Labyrinth.

Yama and his Shades stand in a pitch-black room while awaiting a signal from the other Hidden Emperors to invade Tarus II. Among his Shades are several former Warpers, demonesses capable of opening portals to the soon-to-be-attacked planet ruled by humanity.

"It should not be much longer, now." Yama hisses, rubbing his shadowy claws together in anticipation. "Those other Emperors sure are dragging their feet! They always waste our time, as if we haven't many fun activities to participate in!"

Yama's mood is lower than it has been in tens of thousands of years. Thanks to Bael's summoning of Satan, he no longer has the ability to capture more females for his harem. Instead, he can only 'enjoy' those who already exist, a torturous notion to a greedy sex-fiend like himself.

"That devil-damned Satan..." Yama curses. "How could he return and do this to us? He was long dead! Whatever trick that Bael used, he really did bring him back! Bael is not as simple as he seems. He must have only been pretending to be a huge idiot, all this time! In actuality, he is a genius, waiting for the right moment to seize power over all Seven Hells!"

One of Yama's Shades leans toward him.

"Master. Surely, thou art wrong. Bael is far from intelligent. Everyone knows that! How could he hath changed his intellect in so short a time?"

The Emperor of Shadows turns to look at who spoke. When he sees the speaker is none other than the very first Shade he ever converted, he doesn't rebuke her. She, alone, holds the right to talk back to him.

"Hmph. Oh, Red, you still don't know how demons act, after all these years. Isn't it obvious? That Bael must have become smarter after swapping bodies with Ose! Her brain juices made him a genius! That's why he could use Satan to toy with us in the way he did! He-"

A flicker of light momentarily lights up the darkness of the room. Before Yama or the others can flinch or shrink back, the light vanishes, and in its place, a bipedal figure stands.

A blonde-haired human, lacking any armor on his body, with piercing blue eyes and a week's worth of scruff covering his face and chin, smirks when he appears.

"Surprise. It's me."

Yama jumps in alarm. "What! A human! No, not just any human, we sense the Heroic Aura! He's the Wordsmith!!"

"Wordsmith!" Countless Shades shriek in rage. "KILL!"

At once, a deluge of shadows plunges toward Hope Hiro, engulfing him from all directions to ensure an instant death.

However, the Shades encounter an impenetrable defense when they crash against a force field surrounding Hope's entire body. The Wordsmith chuckles coldly to himself.

"Haha... as if I would teleport here unprepared. Say goodbye, Yama. Your miserable life ends today."

Yama shrieks in rage. "Wordsmith!! Bastard, we'll capture you and make you our slave! Coming here alone will be the last mistake you ever make!"

Yama conjures his powers of darkness, firing off powerful shadow-lances to crash against Hope's mana barrier. The impacts cause his shield to crackle and hiss, but in the end, none of them pierce through.

Hope stands calmly and watches while Yama's forces lob shadow bombs at him, strike him with their fists and claws, and screech profanities, hoping to weaken his resolve and perhaps even frighten him.

The Wordsmith's cold laughter freezes the blackened hearts of Yama's minions. Realizing they can't even harm Hope, they instantly pivot and turn to flee, leaving without any parting words.

However, barely have Yama and his women made it a hundred yards before they crash against another mana barrier, one engulfing the entire area and locking them in place!

"No!" Yama exclaims, shock in the crafty old Emperor's heart. "Dammit! The Wordsmith caught us unprepared! Quickly, attack one spot! If we can make a small hole, we can burrow through and escape!"

From behind Yama, Hope laughs. "Heh heh... are you sure about that? Teleport."

Hope arrives directly behind Yama. He holds his hand up high, then utters another word of power.

"LIGHT!"

Instantly, a brilliantly glowing orb materializes in Hope's grasp, blasting sunlight in all directions, irradiating Yama's body and burning him alive.

"Aaaaaiiieeee!" Yama shrieks, his voice turning shrill as his body starts to rapidly evaporate. "Stop! Pleeeaaaase! You're killing us!"

"That is the idea." Hope retorts. "But don't worry. I'll make sure to drag out the pain a while longer. You killed a lot of soldiers in that hospital. They were good friends of mine. Your death will be one of torture and suffering."

Yama's Shades struggle and writhe. Many of them burn to ash under Hope's divine light, while others manage to hold on a while longer. Yama himself screams and pleads for mercy, yet no matter how he begs, Hope doesn't let up.

"Please! Aaaugh! It burns! We can help you! We will be your slave!"

"I'd rather put a bullet in my own head than work with a demon." Hope says. "There's no escaping your fate, shadow bastard."

Suddenly, as if through a moment of clarity, Yama remembers something.

"Wait! W-we have information! You want to learn about- aaargh! About Solomon's Crown, don't you?!"

Hope frowns.

"Solomon's Crown? I already know where it is. The Volgrim took it."

"No, please spare us! We know a secret! A secreeet! If you kill us, you'll never know!"

The Wordsmith hesitates for a moment, then deliberately lowers the power of his light orb, giving Yama a delightful reprieve. The light continues to scorch and burn Yama's body, but compared to before, the difference is like night and day.

Yama gasps for breath. His tortured red eyes flick toward Hope, feeling a glimmer of a chance for survival.

"Speak." Hope says. "Tell me what you know about Solomon's Crown. If your answer doesn't absolutely knock my socks off, I'll kill you in the next instant!"

Yama nods repeatedly. "Yes, yes, of course, master! I-it's... it's Gressil! Gressil took the Crown! We saw it happen!"

Hope jerks in fright, causing his light magic to shatter in his grasp. He takes a step back from Yama and gasps.

"What? Gressil? You're lying!"

With Hope's divine energy no longer irradiating his whole body, Yama and the Shades regain their ability to breathe, even though the aftereffects of the light still leave their shadowy figures scarred and deformed.

"We would not dare!" Yama protests. "We saw it happen! Gressil captured you, then he threw the Crown aside. We would never touch a holy object, but we kept our eyes on it. Later, Gressil led the Changelings to the Crown so they could take it back to Volgarius. We swear this is all true!"

Hope's heart thumps erratically as he not only reflects on what Yama is saying, but mentally recalls the horrific torture Gressil unleashed on him. Without intending to, Hope's suffers multiple flashbacks of those dark days, making him grit his teeth and sweat as he envisions the saws cutting through his skin and bone to amputate his limbs.

"Nnn... it's not true..."

As if receiving a second chance at life, Yama furiously grabs onto the opportunity. "There's more! Spare us, and we'll tell you everything!"

Hope shakes away the thoughts plaguing his heart. His eyes flare with rage as he gazes at the hateful apparition of a shadow in the dark.

"You... you're trying to trick me!"

"We aren't! We pledge this to you!" Yama pleads. "We know the truth about you, Hope. You are nothing but a tool to Jason! He wishes to use you, but he doesn't care about you at all. With our help, you can overturn his rule! Here, another token of our sincerity..."

Yama pauses before continuing. "Satan... First Emperor Satan... he is alive. We saw him with our own eyes!"

"Satan?" Hope repeats. "How can I believe you? I killed- Jason killed Satan on Polaris! Belial saw him turn to ash in her arms!"

Yama takes a few long moments to collect himself. In the back of his mind, he sneers.

Got him.

"We speak the truth, Wordsmith." Yama says, crawling across the ground on his belly to bow at Hope's feet. "We saw Bael summon Satan from the Great Beyond. Somehow, Bael has gained Satan's full power! Not just him, but Emperor Shax as well. We are not certain how, or why, but Bael has unlocked new powers. He can revive dead demons where even Mephisto never could."

Hope narrows his eyes. He stares at the Emperor groveling at his feet, all while rubbing his chin thoughtfully.

"You saw both of these things, then? You seem to be quite sneaky. Are you good at observing others without them noticing?"

"Oh, yes, yes of course we are, master!" Yama exclaims, cozying up to Hope like a beaten dog. "We do not want to die! We can spy for you! We can be your slave! We know all sorts of dirty secrets! With us helping you, you can take back humanity from the other Wordsmith!"

"I don't need your help for any of that." Hope snorts. "But I'll tell you what. If you can answer one question for me... I'll spare your life."

"One question?" Yama asks, feeling a hint of worry in his cold, lifeless heart. "We... we will do our best to answer, no matter what you ask."

Hope nods.

"Where is Neil? Neil Adams. The commander of humanity's military. Supposedly, he died during the Stormbringer Attack. Personally, I think he survived, and the demons captured him. If you can tell me where he is, I'll spare you."

Yama's eyes widen. A feeling of glee swallows his heart.

"Y-yes! Neil Adams! We know who he is! We know where to find him! Ose locked him away, and she hid him using her brother's magic, but we know everything that happens inside the Labyrinth!"

So excited is Yama at the prospect of surviving that he can't help it when his voice trembles. He quickly tells Hope the location where Neil is hiding, to which Hope nods.

"Good. You'd better pray you aren't lying. Since you've been useful to me, I will uphold my end of the bargain. You can go free... but you'll be on your own if Jason comes after you."

Hope turns to walk away. Right when he's about to teleport, Yama slithers forward.

"W-wait, master! If you leave us like this, the other Wordsmith will find and kill us! We can be so much more useful to you alive than dead! Why don't you protect us with your Wordsmithing magic? Hide us so the other Wordsmith can't find us. Then you can come to us whenever you need information. Our skills are hard to come by!"

Hope frowns.

"You want me to... protect you?"

"Yes! Yes!" Yama exclaims. "Just hide us so the Wordsmith can't Locate us. We know how that part of your magic works. We have seen Jason use it several times."

Hope falls silent. For several minutes, he mentally debates Yama's request, before nodding.

"Alright. Shroud. I've put a layer of protection on your soul. As long as Jason doesn't know it exists, he won't be able to find you and undo it. But since I know about it... hehe. You'll never be able to hide from me. Keep collecting information. If I ever need anything... I'll be in touch."

"Yes, master. Yes!" Yama hisses. "We were right to follow you! Thank you for your benevolence!"

"Alright, shut up." Hope snaps. "If you keep fawning, you'll make me vomit. Get out of my sight."

Without another word, Yama meekly nods, then slithers away, his surviving Shades following in hot pursuit.

After the Emperor of Shadows disappears, Hope snorts to himself. "Little rat. He thinks he can use me for protection? I'll use him instead. Then, when I don't need him anymore, I'll discard him like trash alongside the road. Yama's days are numbered."

Hope once again prepares to teleport away, but at that moment, Arthur appears.

Jason's Black Hole Construct flickers into existence before Hope, slightly startling the Wordsmith. The construct glances around, as if searching for Yama.

"Don't bother." Hope says, reading Arthur's intentions. "Yama got away. He's harder to track than I expected. Also, tell Jason I found Neil, and I'll bring him home, soon. As for you, you can go back to Tarus II ahead of me. I don't need your help."

Arthur doesn't speak. The construct merely nods at Hope before flickering away, traveling at close to the speed of light as it returns from the direction it came.

"...Stupid machine." Hope mutters. "Teleport."

Part 362: Rescuing Neil

A massive makeshift prison facility lays hidden somewhere in the distant reaches of the Labyrinth. Unlike Faith's End, this prison is not ruled by Gressil, but his sister, Ose, who built it in secret. As part of her six-year plan to defeat humanity and take the Wordsmiths captive, a plan which ultimately failed, it stands as a testament to her long term planning skills.

Unlike the typical dirt walls comprising the rest of the Labyrinth, the entirety of this hidden segment has been carved out and filled with Demonstone, making it extremely durable and resistant to escape attempts. Without enough strength, no prisoner can dig their way out and break free to the rest of the Labyrinth.

However, what might surprise any casual onlooker is the fact that, despite there being more than 500 prison cells, only one of them actually holds a prisoner!

Neil Adams sits inside his surprisingly large and roomy cell near the furthest reaches of the facility's confines. Having already been here for three weeks, his face has developed quite a decent amount of scruff. As for his hard and uncomfortable bed, chair, and basic toilet/sink fittings, his room is utterly barren with little or nothing to do.

The Frenchman paces back and forth in his cell, counting the number of times he has completed a circuit that day.

"Four thousand, nine hundred and one. Four thousand, nine hundred and two. Four thousand, nine hundred and... and... where was I? And two... it must have been two. Or was it one?"

His head twitches on occasion. His eyes flicker. Sometimes, he sees things that aren't there. His rational mind tells him he's hallucinating, but his irrational mind continues to give him false mental signals, making him wonder if he's going crazy.

"How long has it been..." Neil mutters, while pausing to stare at one particular blemish on the wall that he's continually fixated on ever since a few days after his arrival. "Two... no, three months? Years? There's no sun... there should be a sun... it would make it easier to keep track of time. Time. Time waits for no man. Time flows forwards, but sometimes back. Like a backstabber. Backstabbers are bad. Very bad, yes."

His thoughts shift and change erratically, making him unable to properly focus his attention for longer than a few seconds at a time.

Neil's right eye spasms, making his whole head jerk a little to the side. He frowns, then hisses at an empty spot in the cell.

"Stop it! Stop poking me! I warned you last time! It irritates me when you do that!"

Neil swears and curses at the empty space beside himself, hurling obscenities that would make a nun blush with shame.

While Neil swears up and down the room, a figure materializes inside the prison's entryway. Hope Hiro teleports inside, but as soon as he arrives, a vaguely uncomfortable feeling presses against his brain. He stands in place, trying to adjust to the sensation, but as the seconds tick by, his expression becomes gloomier and more downcast.

He takes a step forward, but then pauses. A chill goes down his spine.

"...This feeling! It's Gressil's energy! It's his anti-magic field!"

Hope shivers fearfully, glancing around to look for Gressil. Having spent weeks suffering in the prison-warden's clutches, he knows the feeling of his Chaos Energy well, but no matter where he looks, he doesn't find Gressil anywhere.

After getting his bearings, Hope starts to walk around. Shortly after he traverses deeper into the prison, the anti-magic aura becomes stronger and stronger, with its weakest point at the door leading outside, where he first arrived. Torches line the walls, providing plenty of illumination, while interlocked demonstone bars block the entryways and exits to all of the cells.

Hope wanders left and right, looking into all the rooms, but he doesn't immediately find Neil. It's only when he gets deeper into the prison that he finally hears Neil's voice in the distance, ranting and yelling at someone unknown.

"Neil." Hope whispers, a feeling of euphoria in his veins. He walks faster down the hall, gritting his teeth as Gressil's anti-magic aura becomes stronger than ever. He tries uttering Words of Power, but none of them have any effect.

That must be why Jason and I couldn't find Neil. Hope realizes. Somehow, Ose duplicated her brother's anti-magic abilities. She made it impossible for us to Locate Neil.

Gressil's aura doesn't only prevent the usage of magic. It also wriggles into the brains of those susceptible to the influence of Chaos. As Hope runs toward Neil's cell in the distance, he becomes more and more uncomfortable in his skin, feeling as if innumerable eyes are watching him. Paranoid thoughts rise to the surface, making him question his senses.

But no matter what, Hope persists. Before long, he arrives in front of Neil's cell where his friend turns to look at him, having heard Hope's footsteps running toward him.

"Who are you?!" Neil snaps. "Hope? Jason? No! You're just an illusion. You're all illusions- STOP poking my face! It hurts when you do that!"

The commander of the Core's military forces yells at something unseen beside him, making Hope wonder if there's actually someone there, or if he's only seeing things.

"It's me, Neil." Hope says. "I've come to rescue you! I'm Hope, remember?"

Neil flinches. He listens to Hope's voice, but doesn't seem to believe his ears.

"Nonsense! This is the sixth time you've come! Stop tormenting me! You're a liar! You left me here to die! For three years I've waited! THREE YEARS!!"

"...Three years?" Hope repeats. "No, no, Neil. You've been here maybe three weeks. At most. Wake up, you're not hallucinating. It's really me."

While Hope talks to Neil, he glances around the cell's entryway, but its solid demonstone bars don't appear breakable, even with his nanite-imbued body. Gressil's magic prevents Hope from Wordsmithing, so he can't use his abilities to rescue Neil, either.

Neil shakes his head. "No! You gave up on me! You left us all behind, Hope! It's your fault, it's all your fault!"

The Wordsmith winces. "Neil, I know Gressil's energy is corroding your thoughts, but I need you to get a grip. It wasn't entirely my fault Gressil got me. I left to find Solomon, Arthur, and Jepthath, three of the legendary heroes. They told me all sorts of things, like..."

While he fills Neil in on his happenings, gradually calming his friend down, Hope also takes the time to feel around the demonstone walls and bars, especially the points where they intersect. He pulls and tugs on the joints, hoping to loosen them up, but they don't give way. They don't even shift a millimeter, showing that the prison hasn't been around long enough for its foundations to even minutely weaken.

Neil listens to Hope's words. Once Hope explains to him what happened following Neil's capture, the commander shows a bit more clarity in his thoughts.

"Really? So Beelzebub blew himself up?" Neil asks. "How is everyone? Are they all dead? Is anyone still alive?!"

"Lots of people are still alive." Hope says, before pausing to add, "And a lot more died. You just know Jason's incompetency was the biggest reason why so many suffered. Even his own daughter died to Beelzebub's detonation."

"Little Daisy?" Neil asks. "She's...?"

"Yeah."

Hope shakes his head. Despite Daisy not being his own daughter, he still feels a bitter emptiness in his heart. After all, in a different timeline, she might have been his daughter, and in this one, she was at least somewhat like his niece, even if he didn't interact with her much.

"How do I get this goddamned cell open?" Hope hisses, visibly stumped. "I can't use my magic, and my physical strength clearly isn't enough. Shit. I'll be right back, Neil."

"Don't leave me!" Neil exclaims, but Hope shakes his head and heads back to the entry.

I can still use my Wordsmithing at the entryway... Hope thinks to himself. I should make a tool that can break through the bars. Then I can free Neil.

Two minutes later, he arrives back at the start of the prison, where Gressil's energy is the weakest. However, after trying and failing several times to activate his Wordsmithing, Hope still fails.

This isn't good. Hope thinks. Gressil's energy is weakest here, but plenty of it still lingers on my body, strengthening the anti-magic effect. I need to step fully out of it for a bit to let the effect diminish until I can use my Wordsmithing again. But the only place I can go is outside the prison... and there are sure to be guards out there...

Momentarily hesitating, Hope ultimately relents. The effects of Gressil's Chaos Energy don't drop below a certain level in his body, making it impossible for him to use his Wordsmithing.

With much hesitation, Hope quietly pushes against the door, causing it to soundlessly open a crack.

The moment he starts to open the door, he hears voices. Not far outside, several Orcs, Goblins, and even a few demon Grunts shoot the shit, all of them positioned here to guard against anyone trying to enter the prison facility. These handpicked monsters and demons, working for Ose, have no idea of the changes demon society has undergone, nor that they've had a change in power.

Mentally, Hope curses.

Dammit. At least two dozen enemies. I rely on my Wordsmithing too much. I didn't even bring a weapon...

Hope glances at the bag of heavy marbles hanging on his waist, his signature weapon he's used for quite a long time against the demonic hordes. Thanks to the lingering effects of Gressil's Chaos Energy, he can't use them in combat at all.

From the depths of Hope's brain, Centurion's voice speaks.

[PILOT ZERO-ZERO-FOUR. YOUR HAND-TO-HAND COMBAT CAPABILITIES ARE INSUFFICIENT TO DEAL WITH THE LARGE QUANTITY OF ENEMIES OUTSIDE. GIVE ME THE ORDER, AND I WILL TAKE CONTROL OF YOUR BODY TO INITIATE AUTO-COMBAT MODE.]

Hope blinks. Auto-combat mode?

[AFFIRMATIVE. I POSSESS EXTREMELY DETAILED COMBAT TRAINING FILES WHICH I CAN ADAPT TO YOUR BIOLOGICAL SIGNATURE. I ONLY REQUIRE YOUR PERMISSION TO INITIATE THE AUTO-COMBAT MODE. YOU MAY REVOKE PERMISSION AT ANY TIME.]

Hope slightly widens his eyes. That would have been useful to... deal with Gressil.

[MY COMBAT PARAMETERS ARE INSUFFICIENT TO ENGAGE IN MELEE COMBAT WITH THE MAJORITY OF HIGH-RANKING DEMONS.]

Hope nods. Noted. Alright. Engage auto-combat mode.

[AFFIRMATIVE.]

A moment later, the heavy metal door to the prison swings outward, kicked by Hope after a running jump. It crashes against the back of an Orc, making the big guy stumble and trip over his own feet.

"Ow! What heck!"

At once, all of the demons and monsters turn their attention to the door, only to see a single unarmed human dive through the doorway and land in a roll. The single blonde-haired man jumps to his feet and delivers a brutal spin-kick to the Orc's head who he just knocked over.

CRACK!

The sheer power behind Hope's kick snaps the orc's neck, killing him on the spot.

"Spawn of a broodmother!" One of the demon Grunts shouts, while conjuring a fireball. "Kill that human!"

Even as a dozen enemies rush toward Hope and his adrenaline spikes, his body moves nimbly without his fears slowing him down. He snatches a curved scimitar attached to the fallen orc's back, yanks it out of its sheath, and starts rapidly spinning, cutting, twirling, and chopping at the enemies around him.

Fireballs swish past Hope's head, his body making minute movements to easily evade them. His physical parameters, long empowered by the nanites in his muscles, give him superhuman strength, agility, and stamina. He breathes evenly, not losing his breath, while his stolen sword cuts a horizontal arc across a goblin's neck, decapitating the monster instantly!

"Holy shit!" Hope yells, his excitement and glee palpable. "I'm like Batman! Or Arnold Schwarzenegger! This is sick!"

Hope cartwheels over an enemy, spins around, and plunges his scimitar into their heart. He yanks it out and flings a splattering of their blood into another enemy's eyes, blinding them and making them flinch. One moment later, his sword slashes across their nose, cuts several inches into their skull, and kills them instantly.

Despite all his past trauma, in this moment of life and death, Hope squeals with joy, bringing out his inner Jason. Even though he and his original self might have grown into different people, they still have the same likes and dislikes. They watched the same movies as kids. They consumed the same media and enjoyed the same nostalgia trips.

Hope's sword swings against a fireball, but the impact force snaps the blade in half. Undeterred, he dives toward the Burner Grunt and unleashes a volley of frighteningly accurate fist strikes. Throat, stomach, jaw, eyes. Hope beats the Grunt black and blue in fewer than three seconds, sweeps his legs, and delivers one last downward punch while he falls, cracking the Burner's skull against the floor. The Grunt dies a pitiful death, never able to defend himself against the terrifying Terran.

Three minutes later, every single enemy in the guard area lays on the dirt, dead, leaving Hope antsy, hyped up, and ready for more.

"Fuck yeah!" Hope roars. "Oh, that kicked ASS! Holy shit, Centurion! You really should have told me you could do that! Come on, anyone else want some?! I've got some hands to throw but no takers ready for an ass-whooping!"

Centurion beeps in affirmation. [PILOT ZERO-ZERO-FOUR. ALL ENEMIES HAVE BEEN NEUTRALIZED. I AM NOW RETURNING BODILY CONTROL BACK TO YOU.]

Hope licks his lips. A look of bloodlust fills his eyes before he shakes his head.

"God, damn. Wow, that was a rush. Strange, though. I never really thought of myself as someone who enjoyed violence. Why did I find that whole fight so unbelievably thrilling?"

The Wordsmith frowns. He glances around at the brutally murdered demons and monsters around him. His eye twitches.

"No... this isn't me. I will kill, yes. I'll murder anyone if I must. But I've never been the sort of person to relish in killing. This feels like... like someone was manipulating me."

Several seconds pass. The Wordsmith's frown deepens.

"Could it be...? Gressil's energy? Maybe it was fucking with my head?"

He chews on his lower lip for a while before slowly nodding.

"Yeah. That must be it. Sorry, everyone. I shouldn't have enjoyed killing you all as much as I did. I'll take care not to get so excited in the future."

Without any further fanfare, Hope summons a few tools from Centurion's database, using the nanites as a buffer to enhance his Wordsmithing, then he returns to the prison's interior. He breaks Neil out of his cell, then leads him outside, back to the scene of the slaughter.

Neil pauses upon seeing the brutally murdered demons and monsters. His steel-clad willpower doesn't make him so much as flinch at the death before him, but the sudden decrease in Chaos Energy wracking his brain finally allows him to shake off the muddle-headedness that has plagued him for so long. Hope assists him with a few Words of Power, further clearing away the fog of Gressil's aura.

After a few minutes, Neil inhales deeply. He assumed a more dignified posture and smiles at Hope.

"Thank you. You saved my life. I was honestly starting to go crazy in that cell. Nobody talked to me. The guards only fed me two meals a day and never said a word. It was torture."

He pauses.

"Well. Relative torture... I suppose. I didn't hallucinate our conversation, did I?"

Hope lowers his eyes.

"You didn't, Neil. I... Gressil... he captured me. He did... he did awful things to me. I don't really want to talk about them."

Neil's nose twitches. "Demons. They're all the goddamned same. Every last one of them. Brutal, barbaric, bastards. You can see why now, more than ever, we have to oppose them."

Hope nods. "You don't know the half of it. Jason killed Ose, but he spared the rest of the Hidden Emperors, and now they've formed an 'alliance.'"

Hope continues to explain to Neil all the things his friend has missed over the past several weeks. When he finishes, Neil's expression turns ugly.

"Leave it to Jason. Only a complete idiot like him would spare the demons after they blew up our planet and killed the majority of our people. They even killed Kar! How can he, with any good conscience, spare them and even offer for them to live among the people they've tormented?"

"I don't know." Hope says, with a sigh. "I want to say something, to stand in his way, but I'm just not in the right headspace, Neil. Plus, Jason has this... this weapon. It's some sort of magical artifact, a weapon previously used by the Archangels. He's way more powerful than me, and I feel like I can't oppose him. Plus, he's become really good at giving speeches, so there are a lot of people on his side."

"Oh?" Neil says. "But judging from your tone of voice... you have an idea. You've thought of a way to seize control. Am I right?"

Hope shakes his head. "Not exactly. I could use your advice. See, the reason Gressil captured me was because I went into the Labyrinth at Solomon's behest. He took control of Jason's body for a bit, teleported the Crown to me, and wanted to give me his assistance. Then, he led me to a place in the Labyrinth where..."

Hope continues explaining to Neil the details of the El-Dorado room, filled with riches and gold beyond reason, along with the statues of the Three Kings.

"I see. So you might be able to obtain Excalibur, the Dominion Rod, and Solomon's Crown..." Neil says, tapping his lip. "That's not a bad idea. The Dominion Rod sounds like you could use it to turn the hearts of the people against Jason. Excalibur will give you a fighting chance against his Archangel Superweapon, and Solomon's Crown will give you a decisive mental advantage. With those three artifacts, you would have the god-given right to rule humanity."

"Yeah... maybe." Hope mutters, while scratching the back of his neck. "But... the Dominion Rod is kind of... morally wrong? It controls people's minds. I don't want to use a tool like that."

"Do you have a choice?" Neil posits. "Use your head, Hope. Mind control certainly sounds evil in theory, but what is the alternative? Are you going to let people follow Jason onto a path of self-destruction? What do you think will happen when Jason leaves the planet for a while to deal with some Volgrim business? He'll have so many demons living among his fellow humans that in a single night, once they bare their claws, millions upon millions will die! You absolutely cannot trust demons. Even the way they threw away Ose for their own benefits shows they're all backstabbers and opportunists."

Hope nods. "I know. But... well, I guess you're right. I have to do SOMETHING! Jason's leading humanity into extinction!"

"Let's take this one step at a time." Neil says. "First, you can't stand up to Jason as you are now. You need to acquire Solomon's Crown, Excalibur, and the Dominion Rod. Once you have all three, we can easily work out a plan to take Jason down. Once you seize control of humanity, we can slaughter the demons and bring balance back to the people."

The two men briefly fall silent.

"Say, uh, Neil?" Hope says, hesitantly. "What do you think I should... do with Jason? You aren't thinking I should... I should kill him, right?"

Neil gazes with deep intent at his friend.

"Stripping Jason of his powers should be enough. In fact, you could probably even do that right now. How would he block you? How would he counter if you suddenly sealed his magic? But we both know his power would return over time, so that's not a long-term solution. You'd have to build a device capable of sealing his magic permanently. In that way, you wouldn't have to kill him. But such a device would require Phoebe or Solomon's help. So..."

Hope nods. "You're right. I need all three artifacts to deal with Jason. Even if I took him down today, I wouldn't have any assurances of dealing with the Volgrim, or the Plague. I need power so I can become humanity's shining beacon!"

"Indeed." Neil says, smiling. "Now you're using your head."

Humanity's military Commander straightens his vest.

"Enough talk. Let's head back to the Core. Ah, but before we go, would you mind cleaning me up and giving me a shave? I want to make a good impression on everyone when I return."

"Sure thing, Neil." Hope answers. "We can iron out the specifics of this plan later."

Hope utters several Words of Power to clean up his friend's scruffy face, his sweaty, worn-out clothing, and even gives him a fresh and clean smile.

Neil touches his minty-flavored teeth. "That Wordsmithing ability... it sure is convenient."

"It is." Hope replies. "But it makes you a target, too. That's the part nobody tells you."

Shortly after, both men disappear, returning to the Core.

Part 363: Mephisto's Flight

Some time earlier, back on Tarus II.

The Mightiest Necromancer, Mephisto, watches as Ose and Jason trade barbs, with the demoness ready to pulverize him into mulch, while Jason merely summons forth his Black Hole Construct, Arthur.

[Boss.] Zamiel transmits telepathically through his undead soul-link. [Are we gonna make a move? The Wordsmith's got us trapped here, but I bet if we work with Ose...]

Mephisto glances quietly at the crocodilian subordinate beside him.

[There isss no need to fret. Thessse foolsss alwaysss overlook my greatnesss. If Ossse diesss, that isss fine. If ssshe doesssn't, then that isss alssso fine. My outlook after assscending to Emperor hasss... broadened.]

The Emperor of Legions chuckles to himself.

[Sssince my assscensssion, I have begun to think more carefully about my future plansss. Ruling one Hell alongssside other Emperorsss isss... not my ssstyle. I wisssh to dominate all life. That can only happen if I ssslaughter thossse who oppossse me, kekeke...]

A glimmer appears in Mephisto's eye. He watches as, within a short period of time, King Arthur absolutely decimates Ose, leaving her on the brink of death. So brutal is the construct's onslaught that every eye in the area focuses on their 'battle,' giving Mephisto a brief window of opportunity.

The moment not a single gaze falls on him, Mephisto casually flicks a finger. Zamiel's body fades away, traveling into Mephisto's portable Nether Realm, a secluded area of space where he has always stored his most powerful undead creatures, including the former fallen dragon, Leviathan. With his empowerment and evolution to the rank of Emperor, Mephisto's Nether Realm has increased in size a hundredfold, allowing him to store countless more creatures and pull them out when necessary.

By the time Arthur beheads Ose, Zamiel has fully disappeared, leaving Mephisto to stand alone.

When Jason notices Mephisto's lack of a companion, the necromancer chuckles.

"Everyone... alwaysss... underessstimatesss... the necromancer."

BOOM!

Mephisto explodes into a cloud of ash, startling everyone present!

The Wordsmiths go on the hunt, trying to locate Mephisto, but they fail to understand the ways in which his abilities have changed.

Previously known as the Duke of Mist for his mist-body form, Mephisto has, in actuality, elevated his signature ability to the next level, allowing him to transform into practically invisible particles floating in the wind. His soul also disperses, making it impossible for others to detect him.

The Wordsmiths fail to 'Locate' Mephisto, but what they don't realize is... he hasn't escaped!

Mephisto lingers on the battlefield, but tricks them into thinking he slipped through their shield and fled. When Jason lowers the barrier encapsulating Ose and Mephisto, the Emperor of Legions quietly flickers away, traveling against the wind with ease.

As Mephisto heads for the Warpgate, he shoots a glance at Emperors Gorn and Lupus, but opts to leave them behind. In time, he can come back and retrieve them. The Wordsmith isn't likely to kill them, and even if he does, so what?

Kekeke. Kill my minionsss if you wisssh, Wordsssmith. Mephisto thinks. You will find that my Corpssse Poissson isss quite effective when my Emperor pawnsss perisssh...

Mephisto travels into the Labyrinth. He passes through the Warpgate, zips out of the empty Core, and disappears into the furthest reaches of Hell.

Even so, Mephisto doesn't dilly-dally. His expression turns grave as he begins to quickly plot and plan.

"Ksss... that Wordsssmith isss going to be a troublesssome opponent. Luckily, I can hide from him, for now. Firssst order of busssinesss... I must ensure my sssubordinatesss don't get thrown to the chopping block! The Wordsssmith isss sure to target me, now that he hasss ssslaughtered Ossse."

After arriving at a secret alcove hidden within the Labyrinth, Mephisto levitates inside and momentarily disperses his Perfected Mist Body transformation.

"Legane! Come out!" Mephisto hisses. "I am in a russsh!"

Moments later, a large, dark-skinned demon with tiny horns steps out. He wears the traditional robes of the Warpers and holds a large staff with a glowing red orb placed atop its crest.

"Ah, Emperor Mephisto. Can I help you?"

"Yesss." Mephisto says. "Open a gate to Hell Harbor. The battle with the Wordsssmith isss not going well. I mussst quickly retrieve my reinforcccementsss..."

Unaware of the specifics of what happened on Tarus II, Legane simply nods. As one of a small number of Keymaster Warpers, he possesses the rare ability to open gates through the barriers of temporal energy protecting Hell Harbor.

"Give me a moment, Emperor of Legions. I won't take long."

Mephisto falls silent, watching as Legane performs a series of motions with his hands, fingers, and body. The Keymaster executes an elaborate dance involving his entire self, where he steps from side to side, sways his arms, and conjures demonic energy in a highly specific pattern. Thanks to Raphael's intrusion in Hell Harbor's space, Ose had no choice but to strengthen the spatial blocking grid, which in turn added far more complications for the Keymasters and increased the time and effort needed to open a portal.

Ten minutes later, Legane gasps loudly and falls to his knees, summoning a portal to Hell Harbor as his last bit of mana depletes.

"Gasp... hoo... my apologies, Emperor of Legions. I... I was, whew... I was truly lacking for this- hm?"

Legane raises his head to look for Mephisto, but to his surprise, the necromancer is nowhere in sight.

"...Oh. He went through immediately without saying a word. Well, sheesh... the nerve of some demons! Not even a thank you or anything."

Meanwhile, on Hell Harbor, Mephisto races toward the continent's interior, turning himself into mist to disperse his aura and make tracking his position difficult, if not outright impossible for the Wordsmith. The last thing he wants is for the Wordsmith to intercept him and kill off his precious flunkies.

Before long, Mephisto arrives at his home base, the Hall of the Damned. A massive 500-foot-tall obelisk sticks out of the ground, providing a clear location of interest for observers to find the lair of demonkind's necromancers. However, no longer does the obelisk reach its full height, as more than a third of its top was broken off and shattered during the Cherubiim's onslaught. Countless craters dot the land as well, demonstrating further evidence that the demons suffered immeasurably under the Archangels' attacks.

Mephisto dives into the dirt and heads deep underground, where he slows to a stop and waits.

After a short time, a pair of Demon Barons rush toward him, their boney feet clinking against the ground.

"Master Mephisto!" Ozzar, the Baron of Leprosy, says. His mottled black and red robes, as always, cling to his bones like a swimmer to a log in the middle of a turbulent river. "You have returned so quickly. Was your attack on the Wordsmith successful?"

Azuth, the Baron of Marshlands, clinks his teeth together in anticipation. "Have the fleshlings already fallen to your supreme might, Emperor of Legions?"

Mephisto snorts.

"No. Thossse humansss collaborated with the other Emperorsss. They betrayed Ossse. They alssso intended to betray me, but I essscaped. We must gather all of the necromancccersss. Before long, the Hidden Emperorsss will come to ssslay you all."

"What! Those traitors!" Ozzar shouts. "How dare they plunge a knife into the back of our great leader! Do they not fear the wrath of a fully realized necromancer?"

"No. They do not..." Azuth says, a twinkle gleaming in his eye. "But perhaps this is for the best. Master had no good reason to act against the other Emperors. Now that the Wordsmith has seized control of all the human souls, master must change the way he gathers his forces."

"You ssspeak well." Mephisto says, giving Azuth a cold nod of approval. "I wasss already growing tired of thessse pathetic political ploysss. Why ssshould thisss gloriousss Emperor bargain for bitsss and ssscrapsss of power? The other Emperorsss have made a terrible missstake, turning againssst me. It isss no longer posssible for them to pin thisss necromancccer down! Kekeke..."

"With your new powers, we have nothing to fear!" Ozzar declares. "Will we be entering your fabled Land of Death, then?"

"Ksss. You will." Mephisto affirms. "My Nether Realm wasss sssupposssed to be filled with human bodiesss, but now we will have to ssscrounge and ssscavenge for the ssstrength we need. The coming era will not be easssy, but it will be full of richesss and glory."

Mephisto motions with his hands. He conjures a massive Death Gate, identical to the one he summoned during Stormbringer, but instead of allowing random undead creatures to depart from his Land of Death, it allows those wavering on the boundaries of life and death to step inside!

"Come. Gather the acolytesss. Move with hassste. We haven't much time. If the Wordsssmith comesss, I will leave you all to die."

His minions nod hurriedly.

"Yes, master." Ozzar says, before turning and running out of the room.

"As you command!" Azuth adds.

The two of them leave to travel deeper into the underground lair. Mephisto turns himself into mist once more, just in case the Wordsmiths might strike at him. While he waits for Azuth and Ozzar to bring back all the low and high ranking necromancers, Mephisto closes his eyes and reaches out his senses to two of his undead slaves.

[Ksss. Gorn. What isss the sssituation? What measssuresss hasss the Wordsssmith taken againssst me?]

Mephisto waits. Ten seconds. Twenty. Thirty. Even a full minute.

However, even after sending multiple requests, he fails to detect Gorn.

Hmm. Did the Wordsmiths slay my minion, after all? He wonders.

[Lupusss! Ssspeak to your massster. What measssuresss have the Wordsssmithsss taken toward me?]

This time, he receives an immediate answer.

[Hello, Mephisto.] Lupus answers, lacking any sort of love for him in her voice. Despite having to obey his orders and answer any questions he asks, she still possesses enough willpower to resist fawning at his feet like a beaten mutt. [Things are not looking good for you. The Wordsmith has issued a warrant for your capture or death to all the other Emperors. In particular, he seems hellbent on acquiring Monster King Kar's body and soul.]

She details the events of the last hour or so to Mephisto, even telling him the details about the Belial Booster. Finally, she informs Mephisto about the attack on Sharmur, and how the Kolvaxians ended up killing 80% of the planet's inhabitants.

[Kekeke!] Mephisto guffaws. [What good luck! The Wordsssmith won't have time to immediately hunt me down! I can gather all of my toolsss and make way to lurk inssside the Labyrinth!]

Mephisto pauses.

[And what of Gorn? Did sssomeone ssslay him? I have been unable to contact him sssinccce I left.]

[No. Gorn is still alive and well.] Lupus says, without elaborating further.

[Then why isss he not ressponding to my sssummonsss?] Mephisto asks, pressing Lupus for more information. [Sssomething doesssn't sssmell right.]

[Well, that's just too bad.] Lupus says, taunting Mephisto. [I guess you two never formed a 'real connection' after all. Maybe you should have treated him better.]

[Do not taunt me!] Mephisto growls. [Anssswer my quessstion, female! Why can I not contact Gorn?!]

For a few moments, Lupuis struggles not to answer. However, ultimately, Mephisto's control forces her to speak.

[Gorn... has... he has... broken free. He no longer... follows your commands.] Lupus answers, through gritted teeth.

Mildly surprised, Mephisto frowns deeply.

Gorn broke free of my control? That makes him the third minion I've lost already! Why does this keep happening?

The Emperor of Legions doesn't immediately continue conversing with Lupus. He ponders on Gorn instead, debating what could have gone wrong, before slowly blinking his eyes.

Ksss. So that's it. Gorn's soul aura must have changed when he 'swapped faces.' So long as he does not don the Vermillion mask again, I will not be able to control him. Curses!

Mephisto trembles with rage. The realization that yet another valuable pawn has escaped his grasp makes him want to start smashing everything in sight! He shifts from side to side and starts to reach toward a decoration on the wall, only to eventually calm himself.

"No! I cannot lossse my cool! That Gorn, kekeke... very clever. But in the end, I ssstill posssesss Lupusss. Two Emperor minionsss are better than none."

Mephisto summarily severs the connection between himself and Lupus, not deigning to reply to her last message. Before long, all his necromancer acolytes arrive before him, and he sends them through his gate to the Nether Realm.

After collecting his other resources and tools, Mephisto races away. The moment he leaves, he activates a special magical device located deep in the heart of the Hall of the Damned.

A massive explosion engulfs the entire region, collapsing the Hall of the Damned in on itself!

Mephisto sighs inwardly, knowing he has lost his place of prestige here on the demon's primary world. However, seeing the state of Hell Harbor, he doesn't feel too much grief, given its sad, sorry state. Considering how much damage the Archangels did to the entire world, it will take centuries for it to naturally heal all its scars.

The Emperor of Legions takes his leave, racing toward the distant Warpgate. However, unlike before, he's no longer in any specific rush to leave the planet. After all, in his Perfected Mist Body transformation, nobody can detect him unless he wishes for them to do so. Now that he has ensured the survival of his subordinates, he has no further ties to the Seven Hells, and as such, he can begin planning his next move.

Mephisto slows to a stop not far from the Warpgate. To his dismay, it currently remains inactive, but he doesn't worry. At some point, someone will have to activate the Warpgate, likely connecting it to the Labyrinth, and he can slip through without ringing any alarm bells.

The necromancer silently begins to mentally debate his future options.

The other Emperors will come to hunt me down, but they will not be able to find me. Once I reunite with Lupus, I will possess three Emperor-level powerhouses. With my ability to sneak anywhere, unseen, I can easily take out any lone Emperor in a flash! If I kill them... kekeke... I can add them to my power! The only way to defend against me will be if the other Emperors stick together in groups of two or three. But that will concentrate their strength, leaving their Dukes vulnerable to attack!

Wicked thoughts flicker around inside the Emperor of Legions' mind.

I may not be able to collect human souls automatically anymore, but I can still stab and capture them individually, myself. So long as I immediately bind them to an undead body, that pesky Lazarus Tower won't stop my slow, gradual accumulation of power.

As Mephisto waits and plots, the Warpgate suddenly flickers with energy. Moments later, a connection opens, leading into the Labyrinth.

Success! I barely even had to wait at all! Mephisto snickers to himself. He starts to levitate toward the Labyrinth, only to pause when a familiar demon exits from the other side, stepping onto Hell Harbor's soil.

Bael, the Duke of Pain, swaggers out with the same enthusiasm as always.

"Sup, guys. Yeah, just me, good old Bael, hehe. Sup, Hubert? Sup, Malor? Yeah, haven't seen you in a while either."

Mephisto's eyes narrow as he gazes at Bael. Immediately, the urge to capture Bael and somehow force him into once again becoming Mephisto's undead slave comes to mind, but instead, the necromancer remains still. His anger cools, and in his eyes, a trace of pity appears.

Ksss... Bael. You were my good friend for so long. Even though you turned against me during Stormbringer, I can't fully blame you. You've always cared about your friends, no matter their position in the demonic hierarchy.

Mephisto gazes deeply at Bael, realizing the Duke of Pain has not yet realized the truth.

He doesn't know Ose died, and with her, his body has been lost as well.

Neither does he know the fate which befell Sharmur. He hasn't any idea that many of his friends among the Hell of Isolation were murdered by the Kolvaxians.

Mephisto glances at the Warpgate leading back to the Labyrinth. He hesitates, but ultimately decides not to head back, just yet.

Instead, he tails Bael in secret, lurking in the air around the Duke of Pain while Bael slowly and casually strolls past hundreds of other demons and monsters, all while saying 'hello' to every damn person in sight.

"Sup, Marlon? Sup, Janey? Ayo, how's it hangin', Luffy? What's good, Rollo!"

Despite Bael's idiocy, Mephisto notices for the first time just how many demon and monster names Bael has memorized. Even though he might be an idiot, Bael still puts plenty of effort into remembering the names of essentially every demon around him. Despite their differences, Mephisto admires this trait of his friend.

After Bael gets done saying hello to every demon in a five mile radius, he eventually arrives at a food shack not far from the Warpgate. Tired and worn-out, Bael pulls up a chair and orders his favorite dish, some juicy Blood Pie.

After sitting down, Bael's smile fades away. He leans his cheek against his wrist, and his elbow on the table. He sags into that position while waiting for his food to come.

"Man, oh man. What a day. Damn near pulled my string-o-ham tryin' ta climb that tree. This body's so weak..."

While Bael grumbles to himself, Mephisto silently reveals himself on the other side of the table. However, Bael doesn't even flinch.

"Oh. Hey, Mephisto. You here to get a piece of me too? Seems everyone wants a bite of my tight little butt today."

Mephisto blinks. "Ksss. No. I thought I would sssay goodbye, Bael. I'm guesssing you haven't heard. The Wordsssmith killed Ossse. Ssshe no longer exissstsss in our reality. Sssshe hasss been dissspatched to the Great Beyond."

Bael frowns. "Wait, really? Ose's dead?"

He sits up a little straighter. "And what about my body?"

Mephisto shakes his head. "Gone. Reduccced to atomsss."

"Aw man! You're kidding me!" Bael groans, while slapping the table. "That was a perfectly good body! Are you telling me I'm stuck in this thin, scraggly, useless thing?"

Mephisto nods. "You may be in luck, though. The Wordsssmith hasss allied with the demonsss. Perhapsss he could ssshift your presssent body back into your old one."

"Ohhh! Yeah, wow, you're so smart, Mephisto!" Bael laughs. "Damn, bro. And now you're gonna be leaving soon? Not even enough time for one last game of Sticks and Bones?"

"I'm afraid not." Mephisto says, his voice lowering. "But, Bael. There isss one other matter I feel I mussst tell you about."

Mephisto delivers the truly devastating news to Bael, the news that Sharmur has fallen. In only a single day, all of Bael's friends have perished, with only Melody remaining among the living.

Bael swallows the news quietly. He listens until Mephisto finishes talking, then leans back in his chair.

"...You've gotta be kidding me. What are the Seven Hells coming to, man? Ose's dead. Fenrir's dead. Wolfram, Viola... even little Guura. Dorma, too... sheesh. We're losing folks left and right."

"Many will perisssh." Mephisto says. "However, Bael... now isss a good time for me to extend one lassst offer to you. Why don't you come and work with me? Thessse other foolsss... they are not worth your attention. I intend to unite all the Ssseven Hellsss... but I cannot do it alone! Having another Emperor at my ssside would help a lot!"

Bael scratches his head. "I dunno. I don't think I'm up for all that fighting stuff right now, Mephis-bro. I'm still trying to work out, make my body a little stronger. You know how it goes. Plus, I've been having all these weird things happen to me, so I'm trying to figure out what that's all about. Sigh."

"Sssuit yourssself." Mephisto says. "I have lingered here too long. If you change your mind, Bael..."

Mephisto reaches into the rotted folds on his clothing. He pulls out a small ring and casually tosses it to the Duke of Pain.

"...Ussse thisss to contact me."

Bael's eyes widen. "W-whoa man. I uh, I don't think I'm ready for this level of commitment! Besides, ain't marriage like, ain't that a HUMAN thing?? Let's not get carried away, pal. I'm still mad at you for what you did during Stormfucker!"

Mephisto gazes at Bael for several long seconds. Then, he shakes his head.

"It isss not a wedding ring, Bael. You are ssstill an absssolute moron."

"Ohh, whew! I totally misunderstood!" Bael laughs, while wiping his sweaty forehead. "If this is just an ENGAGEMENT thing, I'm cool with that. We can call it off if our feelings chill out! Less pressure, ya know?"

Mephisto lowers his head. Without another word, he dissipates into the wind, a single thought lingering in his brain.

Bael... you're such an idiot!

After Mephisto leaves, Bael smirks. He fiddles with the ring and slides it on, spreading out his fingers to admire the little green gem.

"Hehe. What a guy. You think you know a fella, then he goes and gives you such a pretty present. Mmm."

Bael's stupid smile quickly cools. He frowns and holds his fingers a little closer.

"Eugh. My nails are all long and pokey. Hey, I know! I'll have the gals give me a manny-cure! That sounds like FUN, hehe!"

Part 364: Humanity's Rise!

Two weeks pass.

In this time, Jason and the Seven Hells begin working together to rebuild Tarus II, relocate the refugees from the Hell of Isolation, and place the human refugees Jason personally teleported to Tarus II elsewhere on the planet.

During this time, all manner of events occur.

Hope returns from the Core with Neil in tow. Shocked, many people welcome back their commander with open arms, hugging and laughing with him due to the joy of his survival. For his part, Neil quietly accepts everyone's feelings, all while his eyes twinkle with insight. He evaluates the rapid changes occurring throughout human society with an air of aloofness. But privately, his thoughts darken as he observes the large numbers of demons working alongside his fellow men and women.

All across Tarus II, housing projects begin and end in rapid succession, bolstered by the efforts of demons and humans alike. To Jason's surprise, Phoebe takes the reins with excessive gumption, organizing the myriad of settlements inside and outside the reinforced crystal dome to ensure every bit of space is used wisely. With the amount of humans exceeding forty-seven million, they end up needing to cram a number nearly four times the population of Tokyo into a space only half the size of that city. Needless to say, this proves impossible to do in such a short time, so Jason makes several compromises.

Not only do forty-seven million humans populate Tarus II, but ten million monsters, and just as many demons, most of them from the Hells of Lust and Isolation, respectively.

With so many people trying to pack themselves into such a small space, Phoebe inevitably relents and begins building huge apartment complexes and individual houses well outside the crystal dome. Before long, the number of people living inside the dome drops dramatically, and the number outside skyrockets.

Despite the frantic energy and rapid expansion of Tarus II's controlled borders, most people remain hopeful and optimistic. The vague and distant specter of a possible alien invasion doesn't rest within their area of control, so the majority of citizens, no matter their species, leave such worries to the higher-ups. Generally, this means the Wordsmiths and the Demon Emperors.

In addition to housing, a thriving economy based on bartering springs up out of necessity. While the Wordsmith might be able to create unlimited energy for humanity, thanks to his replication of extremely safe micro-nuclear power plants, that doesn't mean he has the time, interest, or attention span to spend all day creating materials for humanity. And even if he did possess such inclinations, he still would opt to stand aside and let a certain level of self governance take hold.

Jason's vision proves far-sighted. Restaurants pop up here and there. Stores, markets, and other such establishments come into popularity as the military and civilian populaces find themselves in desperate need of ways to spend their downtime, re-energize, and ready themselves for more work.

In just two weeks, a tremendous amount of work becomes available, and essential, for everyone to complete. Nobody is spared from helping to rebuild and organize humanity's homeworld. Even the children pitch in. As for the elderly, the disabled, and the infirm, none of them exist!

Through the Wordsmith's unique powers, several useful and esoteric facilities spring up, all of them similar in their backend functionality to the Belial Booster.

One of these structures, referred to by the common folk as the Bodily Rejuvenation Depot, draws its power from the collective mana of every human, monster, and demon on Tarus II. By paying a certain number of Merit Tokens, obtained through services to the collective good of humanity, elderly humans can restore their bodies back to their youth while also obtaining dozens of years of additional lifespan! While demons and monsters don't need to use this facility, they still marvel at how the Wordsmith's versatile magic can improve the collective whole of humanity.

"Amazing! Humanity has always suffered from deaths caused by old age, but doesn't this facility essentially make humans immortal?"

"Immortal? Yeah... but then again, it can only restore a few dozen people a day. It's also not as convenient as making humans immortal from the get-go..."

"Doesn't matter. Humans have always been inferior to demons and monsters because they can't live long enough to accumulate centuries of wisdom. How frightening will they become when their collective intelligence is allowed to develop for hundreds of years?"

Conversations like this play out all across Tarus II, as well as inside the Labyrinth. The defeated Emperors can only smile bitterly, knowing they have no way to stop humanity's accumulation of power. Even if they destroyed the Bodily Rejuvenation Depot, Jason or Hope could easily create another one. If they wanted, they could even make humans individually immortal one at a time, through their Wordsmithing.

Nobody even doubts that the Wordsmiths haven't already done so to the people closest to them. For example, Jason already privately made his wife immortal, and Hope did the same for Neil Adams and Annette. Who can say how many others received these special privileges?

While an undying body might seem incredible to humans, the demons and monsters don't think such thoughts. After all, most monsters and demons are already immortal themselves. But even if one lives well for 100,000 years, a random meteor might crash into their planet, an earthquake might kill them, or another monster or demon might strike them down in combat!

Therefore, the Bodily Rejuvenation Depot might end up being a truly empowering piece of magical technology, but ultimately, all it really does is finally give the humans a partial solution to a problem only they have suffered, bringing their lifespans to the same level as demonkind, monsterkind, and the Volgrim.

However, in addition to the Bodily Rejuvenation Depot, another type of special facility makes itself available! And this one draws huge crowds of not only humans, but members of other species!

Much like how the Belial Booster can boost the ranks of demons from Grunt to Emperor, a series of similar Body Booster facilities spring up, all of them with a slightly different capability, yet ultimately not all that dissimilar to the Belial Booster.

The Body Boosters use magical power to strengthen the metaphysical attributes of those who step inside. Not only can any average man or woman gain super strength, or speed, or perception, but demons and monsters can, as well!

Much like the blood-body strengthening techniques used by the Hell of Blood, Body Boosters allow anyone to obtain permanent bodily alterations to make themselves stronger than the mortal coil would typically allow. However, there are a few downsides to these incredible facilities.

Even with humanity's collective mana rising over time, and slowly funneling into Camael's Cube, the amount of expenditure still dwarfs the amount collected. Jason personally uses the Cube to speed up his own production of high-concept structures, such as the Belial Booster, while the Bodily Rejuvenation Depot itself also pulls from this wellspring of mana to give humans greater life.

On the other hand, the Body Booster facilities do not pull from humanity's collective mana reserves. Instead, like the Belial Booster, they require an individual with strong bodies, minds, or mana to step inside and temporarily drain themselves of their power, transferring it to another individual. Unlike the Belial Booster though, this effect is not only demon-to-demon, but any species to any other species!

Sometimes, Demon Lords will transfer part of their strength to humans.

Other times, Minotaurs will do the same. Or Goblins. Or Harpies.

Of course, weakening oneself for several days or even weeks would ultimately be an act that leaves that individual defenseless. So why would anyone go to such lengths for strangers? Especially, why would demons and monsters purposefully bolster the strength of weak and pathetic humans?!

The answer lays in the system of Merit Tokens.

Conceived by Neil Adams not long after his return, this unique currency becomes the strongest possible method of exchange among all the species situated on Tarus II. All one has to do is perform a service that collectively assists the entirety of humanity, even in a small way, and they will receive Merit Tokens.

For strong individuals, such as high-ranking demons, powerful monsters, and talented humans, the first batches of tokens are all too easy to obtain.

Through the digital Centurion database, thousands of small, medium, and large-scale missions appear, all of them placed by the upper echelons of humanity's leaders. These consist of many different tasks, some immense, others simple.

Constructing housing and other such structures are the most common. Any able-bodied person can contribute to a construction task, earning a portion of the Merit Token reward for themselves. If 200 people construct a building worth 100 Merit Tokens, they each obtain half a token individually. If some people contribute more than the others, they might obtain a larger portion of the share, or even a unique bonus reward, assuming they somehow innovate on the process or come up with unique solutions to the problem. Most especially, if these unique solutions can transfer to other construction projects, these creative types can obtain small but repeated amounts of tokens... similar to royalties from patents!

While Phoebe Hiro might be the smartest human on Tarus II, she is far from omniscient. Through the efforts of many other people, humanity's processes become more refined over time, allowing construction projects to speed up to half and even a quarter of their starting estimates! Buildings that once took two days to make now only require half a day. Of course, if people were to use old-style construction technique and tools, it would take weeks or even months to lay down building foundations, build structural skeletons, construct the walls and ceiling, lay piping and wiring, and other such minutiae. But even with construction drones capable of beaming buildings into existence, they can't construct a city instantly.

Construction is not the only method to obtain Merit Tokens. In fact, one of the most efficient ways non-humans can obtain tokens is by donating their strength through the Belial Booster and Body Booster facilities. By doing so, they can obtain dozens of tokens at once, if not hundreds, depending on how big of a boost they give to other sentient beings.

The most frightening part of these Merit Tokens, conceived by Neil, is how aggressively they begin to make the demons and monsters compete to help bolster humanity's power!

Not only can the tokens be exchanged for necessities and luxuries, but also extremely difficult to obtain items, such as permanent boosts from the Wordsmith himself!

Indeed, while Demon Emperors might not be able to boost each other's power through the Belial Boosters, nor will they genuinely desire to boost one another's body, mind, or soul... they can still exchange these tokens for the ultimate boost! A Word of Power granted by one of the Wordsmiths!

Among all the Hidden Emperors, Fae is the very first one to successfully obtain 1,000 Merit Tokens. She immediately obtains the choice of using these tokens for herself, or her minions.

By exchanging 1,000 Merit Tokens for a boost from the Wordsmith, she can augment her body, mind, or soul to become more formidable! She can enhance her perception speed, her physical strength, or any number of other attributes!

But, she can also spend those points to boost the Dukes, Barons, and Lords of her own Hell.

And this, therein, creates a minor complication. A conundrum which befuddles the Hidden Emperors.

Neil, in his genius, not only created the Merit Token system, but also placed a price on using the coveted Belial Booster. Since the molten energy in Tarus II's core takes a significant amount of time to regenerate each time the Belial Booster activates, demons can only use it once every few days. And since Emperors give much bigger boosts to their subordinates than Dukes or Barons, it becomes obvious that they will want to spend their energy boosting subordinates through the Belial Booster rather than through Body Boosters.

But, thanks to Jason's foresight, the Emperors know that the ones granted first access to the Belial Booster will obviously be those who have curried the most favor with the Wordsmith. Be it hunting down Yama or Mephisto, or who can help rebuild humanity the quickest, this measure proves to be quite subjective. Thus, obtaining 1,000 Merit Tokens is not as easy as it sounds. Some of the Emperors who haven't bootlicked the Wordsmith enough can only reluctantly use the Body Boosters to empower humanity's allies instead of the Belial Booster for their own minions. In this way, they can obtain Merit Tokens too!

Neil's insidious plan allows Jason to do the unthinkable.

He can charge Emperors Merit Tokens for the right to use the Belial Booster!

That's right! For the low-low price of just 500 Merit Tokens, you can boost your subordinates to the ranks of Baron, Duke, or even Emperor! Ah, but are you first in line? Have you played well with the Wordsmiths and kissed their boots enough? Do you even have 500 tokens? You should probably earn enough tokens first before coming here! And hey, why spend 500 Merit Tokens to boost a subordinate when you can spend 1,000 to boost yourself? Keep donating your power to Jason's subordinates through the Body Boosters, that way you'll have enough tokens to fulfill your own ambitions!

These words, while never outright stated by any of humanity's leaders, still ring in the thoughts of the Hidden Emperors.

Through the power of implications, the people controlling the Belial Boosters and the Merit Boards obtain a small but reliable method of forcing the Emperors to submit to humanity, again and again. Even the most haughty Emperors, such as Gorn, can't help but frown at the realization they're being used.

But even if they are, will they push back?

No!

In truth, while they might be vastly boosting humanity's power more than their own, in the end, these old bastards have remained stagnant in their strength for tens of thousands of years!

Fae fought during the Energy Wars as an Emperor. Aside from the exchanging of different powers through Auger, her own strength hasn't increased even in the slightest for 100,000 years. For her, obtaining more strength through any means, even if only a slight boost, tickles her greed more than any other incentive ever could.

The same is true of all the other Demon Emperors.

A truly rare situation occurs, upending the balance of power in all the Seven Hells. With the exception of Mephisto and Yama, the Hidden Emperors have to engage in a fierce competition between each other to exchange for the benefit of their Hells!

To boost themselves or their subordinates, which option will they take?

Even the greediest Emperors cannot instantly choose. After all, the cost to boost a Duke to an Emperor is half the cost to boost themselves by a marginal amount, but the result is that their Hell may obtain a new Emperor-level powerhouse! This could mean as much as a tenfold boost in power!

Faced with this choice, even Fae can only hesitate, an ugly expression of indecision plastered across her face.

[Dammit. Auger, quit messing with me. I want that boost! The Wordsmith could make me thirty percent tougher and harder to kill. Why should I care about boosting one of our Dukes? They might not even become an Emperor! Then we'll have to spend another 500 Merit Tokens in a few weeks to boost them again! It's better to benefit myself for 1,000 Merit Tokens instead!]

[Don't be so greedy.] Auger transmits telepathically. [The Duke of Contagion is close to the rank of Emperor. I believe that with one boost from you, he could finally evolve. Our Hell is already stronger than the other Hells, with more Emperors than the competitors. But if you waste 1,000 points on yourself, the Hell of Calamity might obtain another Emperor, matching our strength.]

[The Hell of Calamity? Aw, Christ, here we go again!] Fae groans. [Gorn is half-dead. Yumagi got blown to atoms, and even his soul was scattered. Don't forget, even the Orcs are starting to compete for dominance within their Hell. Emperor Serena isn't a factor, and Crow remains the lone powerhouse. Me and Yardrat can match her, no problem! Especially if I get that boost!]

Auger sighs. [We need to stay ahead of the other Hells, Fae. Look at the bigger picture. You were the only Emperor to obtain a free session inside the Belial Booster, and instead, you raised a different Hell's Baron to Duke. With her enhanced abilities, Mara has increased the powers of two humans so far, earning Merit Tokens for herself and the Hell of Calamity. Meanwhile, Yardrat already exchanged 500 Merit Tokens to boost one of our own Dukes. After you do the same, then you can exchange 1,000 for a boost to yourself.]

[Yardrat failed, though!] Fae complains. [He tried boosting the Duke of Hailstorms to the rank of Emperor, but it didn't work! If I use my tokens on the Duke of Contagion and he also fails to advance-]

[Then the next boost will surely raise him.] Auger interrupts. [No more complaints, Fae. If your empowerment fails to uplift the Duke of Contagion, then I will allow you to bolster your own strength in the next round. That is the limit of my magnanimity.]

[Since when did you become my broodfather?] Fae pouts. [Maybe I'll just boost myself, anyway! If you want to blow your wad on some stupid Duke, then get down here and earn your own damn Merit Tokens!]

For a brief moment, Auger remains quiet.

When he next speaks, Fae's protests catch in her throat, and her bones feel a cold chill.

[Emperor of Terror. Do not forget your position. You submitted to me. Your powers lay within my grasp. So long as I will it, I can take away all of your abilities and leave you a hollow shell. You will do as I command. You will not speak another word of complaint... or if you do, I will find another to take your place. I'm sure there are plenty of Dukes who would be willing to step into the role of the next Emperor of Terror.]

Fae's teeth clench together. A bone-drenching sensation of coldness freezes her in place and forces her to lower her head.

[Y-yeah... of course. Sorry, Auger. I'll, ah... I'll boost the Duke of Contagion, next.]

[Indeed, you will. As for my coming there in person, hmph. You know well why I cannot do that. I will remain here, in solace, as always.]

The mental connection severs, making Fae's eye's flinch.

"...Goddammit. I signed my soul away to that old bastard when I was only a Baron. Now I'm stuck to him for the rest of eternity! What a stupid choice. Wish I could go back in time and slap my dipshit younger self."

After a brief pause, her expression turns gloomy.

"Then again, maybe not. I'd probably never have become an Emperor without Auger's help. I'd have been cast aside during some lame battle against those ancient humans, and that would have been the end of my life. Better to be a lion licking the paws of a Hellhound than a kitten thrown into the meat grinder."

With a long sigh, Fae travels to the Belial Booster facility, exchanges 500 Merit Tokens, and successfully uplifts her subordinate, Dagon, to the rank of Emperor. He evolves from the Duke of Contagion to the Emperor of Pathogens, successfully making himself the third direct Emperor subordinate to Auger. Of course, this does not include the secretive and insane Stitched Emperor, Glinch, but Auger never considered him anything more than a final defense for if the Fourth Hell came under attack.

At the same time as Fae successfully raises the first Duke to the rank of Emperor since the Hell and Humanity Alliance formed, a different Emperor begrudgingly enters the Body Booster facility, where he finds a dark-skinned human male waiting for him.

"Emperor Kristoff." The man says, appraising him carefully. "I have 250 Merit Tokens with your name on them."

The Emperor of Thirst glances at the man before him. "It's my third time boosting a human. What's your name?"

"Lieutenant Samuel." The man answers. "I've been saving up my tokens for a while now. I'm looking forward to this."

Samuel exposes a white, toothy smile. Despite his hatred of demons, the thought that he can exchange a mere 250 Merit Tokens for a powerup from a Demon Emperor fills him with a sense of indescribable satisfaction. Of course, he could also exchange only 100 tokens for a Duke-level powerup, or 50 from a Baron, or even 10 from a Lord, but why would he do that? Those boosts might make him relatively strong, but compared to the power a single Emperor can give him, a power which he might someday use to exact his revenge, he would much rather obtain a truly legendary amount of strength.

"Are you sure you can handle what I'm offering?" Kristoff asks. "That other woman... Corporal Hurent... she suffered some injuries and had to pay a visit to the hospital to fix herself up. Something about her bones not being able to handle the swelling of her muscles."

"No pain, no gain." Samuel replies, his voice calm. "Do you want my tokens, or not?"

Kristoff snorts. "Obtaining strength similar to mine for a few measly tokens. Without the Wordsmith, you humans would never be able to obtain such a boon, not even if you poured all of your blood and organs onto the dirt."

"Strength is only a means to an end." Samuel says. "That's the problem with you demons. You pursue strength just for the sake of ruling with an iron fist. But I'm not like you. I pursue my own goals. I actually have a reason for my existence."

Kristoff doesn't miss the gleam of hatred in Samuel's eyes.

"Let me guess. You lost someone important because of my people. And now, in a delicious twist of irony, your chance of obtaining vengeance comes by borrowing the powers of your enemies. Fate is full of all sorts of surprises."

Samuel remains quiet. He gestures to the two power-exchange pods.

"We done bullshitting? Let's get this over with. I can't stand jabbering with demons."

"Suit yourself." Kristoff replies. The polite and elegant-looking Emperor steps into the pod on the left, while Samuel enters the one on the right.

Not long after, they both step out, with Kristoff looking half-dead, while Samuel appears exactly the opposite. He grins viciously and pumps his muscles, bellowing at the sky.

"It's Samuel's time to shine!" The Lieutenant roars, before storming out of the building past a crowd of gleeful onlookers.

After he leaves, Kristoff sighs. The Emperor of Thirst glances at his own Merit Token reserves, which have finally reached 1,000 points, but only feels a sense of gloominess in his heart.

"...Oh, Fenrir. How I miss you."

Part 365: Organizational Directives (Part 1)

Inside the newly erected operational coordination structure known as Elysium, located just half a mile north of the Lazarus Tower on Tarus II.

More than a dozen of humanity's leaders and allies sit at a long, wide table. Among them are mostly humans, several monsters, and only a couple of demons. Notably, not a single member of the newly added Hidden Emperor Alliance, anyone from the Hell of Lust, or the Hell of Isolation sits among their ranks. In fact, none of the Archangels sit on this council either, though their reasons for not showing up have more to do with their own disinterest in the matter than any explicit exclusion by the humans.

Executive Commander Jason Hiro sits at the head of the table. On his right hand side sits the Development Executive, Phoebe Hiro, followed by the Magical Specialist, Fiona Hiro, the Health and Safety Administrator, Belial, and the newly promoted Duke of Locusts, Kiari, who is also the Agricultural Administrator. On his left sits the minotaur chef and Food Distribution Administrator, Yamir, as well as the Array Specialist, Blinker, temporarily human sized so she doesn't have to sit on anyone's shoulder.

On the opposite side of the table sits the Military Force Commander, Neil Adams. On his right hand side sits the Energy Production Overseer, Hope Hiro, the Exotic Weaponry Administrator, Hans Wagner, and General Magnus Chadwick, in charge of personnel recruitment and assignment. On Neil's left sits the T-REX Administrator, Lieutenant Samuel Baker, as well as the Power Glove Administrator, Corporal Linda Hurent and the Felorian, Brunhilda, who guides humanity's troops in military exercises.

Despite the fact that Hope and Jason possess the same powers, due to certain reasons, Hope finds himself not seated directly opposite Jason, which causes his stomach to clench up in anger. Even so, he must admit that compared to Neil's contributions, especially of late, he is simply not as essential to humanity's future growth as his original self.

Jason taps a button on his end of the table, which pops up a huge wireframe hologram of the entire Fortress of Retribution, as well as the crystal wall and the outskirts surrounding the rapidly improving city.

"Thank you all for coming today." Jason begins. "It's been two weeks since we signed the ceasefire with demonkind. So far, they have not reneged on their promises, even once. In fact, the more time that passes, the more they become integrated with our well-being. This is all due to the efforts of every person here, as well as all of your subordinates."

While Jason talks, Hope snorts coldly in his heart.

Sure. The demons are our allies, for now. But how can good things last forever?

Unaware of his clone's thoughts, Jason continues. "I want to extend a special thanks to Neil for his brilliant idea to use Merit Tokens. This currency has essentially caused these once-haughty Demon Emperors to throw themselves at our feet, begging for whatever we can give them. The pricing for various commodities has also drastically tilted the scales in our favor, allowing humanity's expansion to explode upwards."

Several people at the table nod and smile, directing their looks of appreciation to Neil, who continues to sit idly, a shallow smile of his own barely visible.

"It was a simple matter." Neil says, casually waving his hand. "The 'war-time provisions' the Volgrim extended to us gave me the idea to use our own currency. As for the pricing, that was a simple matter, too. For every one subordinate the Seven Hells empower, they will have to empower two of ours. And for every Wordsmith Blessing they redeem, they will need to uplift at least four of our people. These tradeoffs put us in a splendid position of bargaining power."

Neil pauses.

"Although, I do find the current ratios to be only... barely acceptable. I've been thinking we should increase the ratios of Tokens to tilt a little more in our favor. Each time the Emperors uplift one of their own to the rank of Duke, they gain another powerful chess piece they can use against us."

Jason frowns. "That isn't the deal we agreed upon. Right now, we're already outpacing the Seven Hells' growth by a factor of three. For every day that passes where our people get to trade for tokens, we will uplift two to four subordinates for every one of theirs. There's no need to act greedily."

"I don't know about that." Lieutenant Samuel interjects. "Ain't you heard? Some demon from the Hell of Punishment just got uplifted to the rank of Emperor. That's one more of them lurkin' in the shadows who could someday attack us. It's only been two weeks, but already the Seven Hells have added twelve Dukes and one Emperor to their numbers. Doesn't that worry you, just a little bit?"

"We don't have to adjust the token costs." Hope says. "We could simply... tweak the ratio of power the Belial Booster gives out. If we lower the ratio by ten percent, it will effectively cost the Seven Hells one subordinate per ten uses. And for our people, we can raise the ratio back to normal. They'll never notice."

Belial shoots a look of disgust at Neil, Hope, and Samuel. "You three! The Seven Hells are our allies now! And even if you don't trust a few of those Hells, the Hells of Lust and Isolation are most assuredly on our side. What sort of sincerity would we be showing them if we acted so underhandedly behind their backs? Do you really think these old monsters can't figure out they're being slowly ripped off? The damage such an arrangement would do to our reputation is incalculable!"

Neil doesn't take offense to Belial's words. He calmly strums his fingers on the table while gazing at her with placid eyes.

"Of course I know the Demon Emperors aren't stupid." Neil says. "But right now, while the alliance is still young, this is the perfect time to change and tweak a few minor matters. If we wait a few months, or a year, these token ratios will solidify in the minds of everyone and become far more difficult to change without causing a public uproar. As for adjusting the power ratio of the Belial Booster, I think we can lower it by one or two percent, a little at a time, over the course of several weeks. The effect will be the same, and much less noticeable. As long as it benefits humanity, and the Emperors are unlikely to learn of it, I don't see why that would be a bad idea."

He pauses to gaze at Belial meaningfully. "That is... unless someone were to inform her compatriots of this matter. But surely, your loyalties would not be so questionable as-"

"Neil. Knock it off." Jason interrupts, a hint of anger in his voice. "Stop with the mind-games. We're not tweaking token costs, and we're not going to fuck over the Emperors willy-nilly. Period. Your line of thinking is exactly why trust has always broken down between the demons and other species. Right now, we occupy a position of absolute political power. But if we abuse that power, we'll only engender hatred and disgust. I refuse to act so vilely, on the basis that it will poison the well in the long-term."

Neil raises his eyebrows. He leans back in his seat and holds up his palms. "Of course. Of course... anything the Executive Commander says, I obey. I am merely a servant of humanity, in the end."

Jason doesn't retort, but inwardly, he sighs.

We are not as unified as we appear on the surface.

Deciding to change the subject, Jason points to several positions on the holomap.

"Phoebe. Tell us how the construction efforts are going."

His wife nods. As the Development Executive in charge of housing and infrastructure, her purview is both broad and narrow at the same time. While she personally oversees humanity's expansion efforts, zoning, and building regulations, she also works on other top-secret projects in her free time, all of which she determines on her own. She doesn't consult with anyone, not even Jason, on what to develop next. For his part, the Wordsmith is perfectly fine with allowing his wife to manage this aspect of humanity.

"Rebuilding is proceeding faster than expected." Phoebe says. "Already, we've completed housing for thirty percent of the populace. The rest are currently living in tents, but thanks to the rapid improvements made by our engineers, we've managed to drastically speed up our construction speeds."

Hope snorts. "Yeah. About that. I've been speaking to people on the ground. There are a lot of folks dissatisfied with those who are getting access to the first available houses. Jason, Phoebe, why aren't we prioritizing the humans who fought during Stormbringer? All those people fought and bled for our cause, yet it seems you've chosen to equally divide the available housing among the refugees you teleported to Tarus II, our new demon 'friends' and others who actually helped attack Tarus II! Why are you giving priority housing access to our former enemies, the ones with blood on their hands? Or the people who only just recently got rescued by us? They didn't suffer like the rest of our people did!"

Brunhilda, a Felorian who helped fight back demons at the northern side of the Warpgate Outpost during the Stormbringer War, nods along to Hope's words. "I must acknowledge the Energy Overseer's comments. So far, not one Felorian has received access to housing. Every day, we work hard to help construct places for our people to live, yet we feel slighted due to this arrangement. It seems the Hell of Lust has already received access to a pair of premium apartment complexes outside the Crystal Barrier, yet my soldiers still sleep in tents. Executive Commander, how is this fair to those of us who bravely fought and bled on the frontlines?"

Jason sighs. "In due time, every person will receive housing. I haven't intentionally slighted anyone, so I'm sorry if you haven't received your first dormitory yet. For now though, I'm trying to arrange things so all the groups get access at the same time. If I were to prioritize Stormbringer Survivors first, that would send a bad message to our newest allies, don't you think?"

"They have to work to earn their keep!" Brunhilda protests. "Why should my people toil and slave away, yet not get even a single measly room? Have you forgotten that more than 20,000 Felorians died during the Stormbringer Attack?!"

"I'll... I'll try to balance the scales more fairly in the future." Jason mutters, while rubbing his forehead. "We should only need a couple of months to finish building housing for everyone on Tarus II."

"Ah, I see." Neil says, feeling slightly delighted at getting the chance to rib Jason's weakness. "So the Felorians need only sleep in the tents for two months while slaving away on behalf of the newest members of our so-called 'alliance.' Yes, that certainly seems fair. Such wisdom from the Wordsmith, how can I compare?"

"At least Jason and Phoebe get to sleep in a nice, cushy room every night." Hope adds. "It's good to see that you know how to take care of yourselves."

Fiona, in her ghost-like form, smacks her lips. "You must be so concerned for the welfare of others, Hope. Have you given up that mansion on Maiura yet? Let's not be hypocritical. The fact is, not everyone can be given housing instantly. It won't take long for us to get that housing, and the weather will be quite fine for a few months. By the time winter arrives, all our allies will be living decently, while we will also be upgrading even more housing to give everyone a life of luxury."

She pauses.

"How about this? We can open up all new housing to anyone willing to pay Merit Tokens. People can offer bids based on the quality of said housing. We'll offer discounts for veterans of the Stormbringer War, and nobody will be allowed to bid if they already own a house or a room of their own. The goal is to get all our people housed first, and then we can worry about giving out seconds to those who need it, such as large families. We'll also open up a Housing Swap option, so people dissatisfied with their living arrangements can trade with others for something better."

The room goes quiet for a moment.

"That sounds acceptable to me." Corporal Hurent says. As the T-REX Administrator, she speaks to countless people and monsters every day, getting a clear view of the overall situation. "Neil already gave a starting bonus of 100 Merit Tokens to the survivors of Stormbringer. That will give them a huge leg up in obtaining housing first. This can be said to be a 'soft' policy that only somewhat favors Stormbringer's survivors a bit, but it seems fair to me."

Brunhilda slowly nods. "I possess 373 Merit Tokens, myself. I am planning to visit a Body Booster soon. As for my subordinates, most of them have already passed 200. If housing becomes purchasable through these tokens, then they will have a decisive advantage over the slaves and other newcomers who have less 'teeth' in our situation. That is all I ask as a concession."

Seeing that Jason has managed to successfully block his needling, Neil Adams doesn't press the issue of housing anymore.

"What about the Lazarus Tower?" Neil asks. "Are you going to activate it, soon?"

"Not yet." Jason answers. "The souls inside are perfectly preserved. They won't deteriorate or suffer. Right now, I want to spend the next few months building enough houses to satisfy everyone on Tarus II. After that, once we've built even more, we can begin reviving people."

"On that note." Fiona says, lightly waving her hand. "I spent a lot of time talking to Raphael about how we should go about reviving our fallen friends. Unfortunately, the cost is quite burdensome. If we were to resurrect them as Lazarites, angels similar to Cassiel, they would certainly possess incredible fighting power and all-but-undying bodies, to say nothing of their spiritual abilities and wings for flying. However, we would need a vast amount of 'Human Mana,' which we currently spend on the Bodily Rejuvenation Depots. I have made an executive decision that all reborn humans will reform inside their original earthly vessels. They will revive as humans, not Lazarites."

Jason nods. "I approved this measure. Reviving them as ordinary humans will cut down on our Human Mana expenditure. Right now, the 'Cube' is beginning to run low. I need to save a portion of its Primordial Energy for emergencies. We never know when the Volgrim or Kolvaxians will attack. Supposedly, the Volgrim are our allies, but we cannot be sure this will remain the case forever."

Unspoken is the fact that while a 'drop' of Primordial Energy possesses more value than 'ten gallons' of Human Mana, Jason has no choice but to continue using up the Cube's limited reserves if he wants to rapidly advance humanity's strength.

The Wordsmith quietly sighs. I need to find a way to replenish the Cube's mana reserves. Perhaps, if I could obtain Excalibur, I might be able to use it as a battery, rapidly refilling the Cube... but I'm not sure if that would work, and I don't know how I can obtain it from the Volgrim without starting a bloody war, anyway.

"It's better to have them revive as humans, anyway." Neil says, surprising Jason by agreeing with him. "Our goal should be to reach for the stars with our own strength, not by borrowing the power of long-dead old fossils. The angels had their time, but ultimately, they all perished. Cassiel is the last living angel, but even she is only a half-blood. Let her retain her special status, and let our people come back as fully and 100% themselves. That is for the best."

After Neil finishes speaking, most of the people in the room nod along to his words.

"I agree." Brunhilda says. "We are humans. We should not strive to change our bodies to pursue the powers of other species. The Body Boosters are the limit of what any of us should accept, and those amount to only a strengthening of our natural physiques."

"Let demons and monsters and angels be themselves. Let humans be humans." General Chadwick adds.

For a brief moment, Jason feels oddly uncomfortable with the acknowledgement of everyone around him. Especially when he notices a strange look in the eyes of Belial, Kiari, Yamir, and Blinker. These demons and monsters visibly shift in their seats, feeling somewhat sidelined by the words of their 'allies.'

"Let's not get carried away." Jason retorts. "If I had unlimited mana, I would absolutely turn all the people inside the Lazarus Tower into Lazarites. Who would willingly turn down a superior undying body? Regardless, it's not possible, so we'll move on. Corporal Hurent! Give me good news. Are the Power Gloves ready for distribution?"

The reminder of a hot new weapon agitates everyone in the room. Corporal Hurent glances across the table toward Hans Wagner, the Exotic Weaponry Administrator.

"I've worked with Mister Hans for the past few weeks, and we've made great strides." The Corporal says, smiling broadly. "Our plan to use the Belial Boosters and Body Boosters to conduct deep scans of all the demons and other people has given us excellent data to work with. Hans?"

She hands the floor over to the German scientist, who sits up a little straighter in response.

"Yes! Zees has been quite a fruitful endeavor!" Hans says. "I have already downloaded more zan two hundred demon powers into zee Centurion database. While we cannot separate zee powers from zee acquired DNA, we can certainly copy zem wholesale. If we wish to unleash an army of Samanthas unto zee world, we shall do so with ease!"

Having long since been informed of the true purpose of the Belial Boosters and Body Boosters, Belial doesn't appear concerned about people duplicating her powers.

"That's all well and good," Belial says, "but don't forget that humans are magically inferior to other species. Even if you strengthen your bodies, your magical capabilities will not allow you to unleash even one percent of any random Emperor's powers. As for vague abilities like my transformation powers, the Power Gloves will expose your identity, so it's useless."

"Even if we can only mimic a fraction of a demon's power," Neil responds, "we can make up for most of the difference through sheer numbers. We can also experiment with their abilities to learn how they work, thus giving us an advantage if they ever turn on us."

"We still have a big problem on our hands." Belial interjects. "I hope nobody has forgotten about the Changelings. We don't have any way to identify them. Before we worry about infiltrating the Volgrim with our inferior abilities, we should worry about them infiltrating us. They already have hundreds of thousands of years worth of practice. They are far beyond us in this capability."

She pauses to glance at each individual person sitting at the table.

"Any of you, including me, could be a Changeling. Never forget that. They might be capable of mimicking my Emperor aura. They can grow horns. They can change their voices, grow their hair, and do anything else of that sort. They could knock out Corporal Hurent while she's on duty and swap her with a body double. Never underestimate them. We need a counter strategy, and soon."

"I'm working on that!" Blinker chirps. "My Magical Arrays can be quite useful for this sort of thing! The fact the Changelings can't mimic magical abilities means they have at least one major deficiency they don't excel in. Oh, and that reminds me! I've decided I'm not going to go back to Miss Becker's laboratory to have my children. I'll have them here, on Tarus II! And since I'll be here, I called up some friends of mine to come help me with arrays!"

"You called up some friends?" Phoebe repeats. "What do you mean, Blinker? Other fairies?"

"Mhm!" Blinker says. "I have a whoooole big extended family. We fairies don't reproduce all that much, but we live forever and we're hard to kill, so there's more of them scattered about the Seven Hells than you would expect. Anyway, two of my sisters are coming, along with a bunch of their friends. We'll work together to develop useful arrays."

Blinker glances at Jason.

"Which also reminds me! I finished that, ahem, top secret thing you wanted."

The Wordsmith smiles. "Thanks, Blinker. I'll put it to good use."

Their cryptic conversation causes Hope and Neil to both frown.

What 'top secret thing'? Hope wonders. Is Jason up to his usual shenanigans?

Seeing as a temporary lull occurs in the meeting, Hope speaks up.

"I have something else to say. I keep checking with the Hidden Emperors, and it's become clear to me that they are all incapable of hunting down Mephisto and Yama. As such, I am going to head into the Labyrinth to find and kill these menaces. If possible, I also intend to rescue Kar's body and soul, then bring him back. It seems that, while we were rebuilding Tarus II, Mephisto sneaked into Hell Harbor and rescued all of his necromancer minions... we absolutely cannot allow him to exist in peace."

"Hope is right." Neil says, quickly voicing his opinion. "The Necromancer King may not be able to automatically collect human souls anymore, but he can still strike from the shadows and kill people in secret. He has become an Emperor now, too, so he's sure to target other Emperors, if not their Dukes. We can't let him start building an undead army without restraint."

Jason frowns. The coordination between Hope and Neil clearly shows they planned this move out, but he can't figure out why they would need to act so aggressively.

"...You want to go into the Labyrinth?" Jason asks. "Alone?"

"That's right," Hope says, puffing out his chest. "Alone. And I'm not looking for permission. I'm just being courteous and telling you where I'll be going. It's not like I've had much to do on Tarus II."

"You've been a great help in the construction efforts. I've had a lot more free time to focus on building specialized facilities while you expanded our energy production capabilities." Jason points out. "And what about... you know... Gressil? If you go into the Labyrinth, he might capture you. I don't want to see that happen."

"I'm taking every precaution this time." Hope says, coolly. "Rest assured. If Gressil comes for me, I'll evade him with ease."

Jason chews his lip. "Well. Alright. If you say so... but why don't you take Arthur with you? I explicitly designed him to counter Gressil."

"There's no need for that." Hope says. He starts to say something else, but pauses for a moment.

After a few seconds of silence, Hope knits his brow, then nods.

"...Actually, yeah. You might have a point, Jason. I'll take Arthur along. Better to be safe than sorry."

Jason relaxes, ever so slightly. "Alright. Stay safe while you're in there. When do you plan to leave?"

His clone smiles, then stands up.

"Right now. Take care, everyone. I'll return soon enough."

Slightly stunned, Jason simply watches as Hope turns and walks out of the room, a feeling of unease in his stomach.

Why do I feel like Hope has some ulterior motive? Jason wonders.

As for Hope, he leaves the building and strolls outside into the bright, summer sunshine. The Wordsmith inhales deeply, feeling excited for what is soon to come.

Neil and I have worked everything out. Hope thinks. Forget Mephisto and Yama. They're not important. I need to meet up with Solomon, Arthur, and Jepthath. Then, I can use them to uncover the location where the Volgrim have hidden Excalibur and the Dominion Rod. If my luck is excellent, I can also try to snag Solomon's Crown.

Hope pauses to survey the world of Tarus II.

This planet should be mine. Jason isn't worthy of ruling over it. While I'm gone, he can develop it for me. I'll come back in a few months and take him down. Then, humanity can truly ascend under my leadership. No more demons, angels, or monsters... except for the ones who fully submit.

Humanity will rise to conquer the galaxy!

Part 366: Organizational Directives (Part 2)

After Hope leaves the room, the remaining members of humanity's leadership fall silent for a short period before continuing with their previous discussion. For his part, Jason wonders what Hope is up to, but he also has so much on his mind that he can't pay Hope's actions too much thought.

"We're going to start ramping up production of all sorts of services quickly." Jason begins. "First, we have to catch up on housing for all our people, including the humans, monsters, and demons. Once we've caught up and built plenty of extra, we'll start reviving our fallen friends and family through the Lazarus Tower. After that, we'll switch to full time military drills and training. Corporal Hurent, Professor Wagner, tell me how things are going on your end."

As the Power Glove Administrator, Corporal Hurent finds herself placed in the center of the next big revolution in human society. Not only will these futuristic gadgets increase humanity's wartime potential by a ludicrous level, but they will also allow for a significant improvement in inter-species communication, as members of any species will be able to transform into other species at will.

Linda Hurent sits up in her chair. "Reporting, sir. We've already completed nearly 100,000 standard-issue Power Gloves for our army. Professor Wagner is still adding biological scans to the Centurion Database over time, but we've lagged behind in pair-matching DNA sequences to suitable candidates. Myself for instance, it seems I don't match up well with Troll and Orc DNA."

Hans Wagner slightly raises his hand. "Indeed! But we could make up zee difference if we had a few hundred technically inclined volunteers! Zere is simply too much data for my small team to sift through, so if anyone here knows any smart, strapping young minds, we will put zem to good use!"

Jason remains silent, allowing Phoebe to speak up. "I can think of about twenty or so relatively qualified people for the task. I'll pass your requests on to them."

"Twenty is barely zee minimum we need..." Hans grumbles. "But... I suppose for now, it is good enough."

"I worked with Miss Blinker on creating a few Training Arrays," Corporal Hurent adds. "We can place a few of our people inside these arrays, locking them in a small dimensional space where others will not be able to spy on their progress and easily uncover the secrets of the Power Glove's inner workings. Additionally, if they unleash any crazy, devastating attacks, it won't hurt the planet. We can relegate the leftover energy to the vacuum of space."

Jason smiles. "I'm glad to hear we're on track for our targets, so far. Miss Brunhilda, once we start putting our soldiers through detailed training measures, I'll expect you to handle duty assignments and manage those who are most in need of learning how the Power Gloves work. As one of the most magically-attuned humans here, I expect you to start training with the Power Gloves early. Have you already paid a visit to a Body Booster?"

Brunhilda nods. "I have, Wordsmith. I received a boost from the Emperor of the Void. Yardrat's bodily strength was not particularly noteworthy. He only brought me to about half of my 'bodily limit.' I will need to find another relatively weak Emperor to bring me the rest of the way."

Belial pipes up. "Do be careful about that, Miss Brunhilda. I've had too many overly eager people showing up at the hospital with overloaded bodies. If you go past your limits, even by just a percent or two, you will suffer worse than you can imagine."

"Pain means my body is growing stronger." Brunhilda simply replies, closing her eyes and paying Belial's warning no mind. "I seek the apex of combat potential. I will stop at nothing to reach it."

"Let's talk about the Volgrim." Jason says, casually changing the subject. "Sangin Kordonis has been pestering me a couple of times every day, hinting that the Volgrim Founders wish to meet with me. Once Tarus II reaches a certain level of stability, I'll have to leave for a while to visit them. Currently, we are allied with the Volgrim, but make no mistake. They are opportunistic, and so are we. If the Volgrim had a choice, they would exterminate our future potential without batting an eye. We are as much their ally as their enemy. They will not feel comfortable, watching our species rapidly grow stronger while theirs weakens."

Jason pauses to suck in a shallow breath.

"We are not training our military to fight demons, anymore. Instead, we are readying ourselves to join the true War. The War which seems neverending. For 80,000 years now, the Volgrim have battled the Kolvaxians tooth and nail, and they've reached a tipping point where they will soon lose. We must ready our people to join in these battles. Everything we've done is all leading up to fighting a horrifying enemy which can exterminate entire planets in a single day. The Kolvaxians are not an enemy we can afford to take lightly."

"Now, then..." Jason concludes. "Assuming we manage to defeat the Kolvaxians, it is very likely the Volgrim will turn on us. How will we prepare counter-measures to deal with them?"

Immediately, Neil sits up straighter. "We cannot rely on Tarus II as humanity's home-world. Our enemies may not unleash their 'Neutron Bombs' upon us, but then again, perhaps they might. We should spread our population out to different planets. Maiura, for instance."

"All planets share the same weakness." Phoebe says. "They rest at a fixed location, a solar system which has long been mapped out by the Volgrim. I propose we should develop space-living accommodations capable of housing our people and fleeing the galaxy. We know the Volgrim have created half a dozen moon-sized stations capable of traveling at post-relativistic speeds. If we lose the War, they will escape the Milky Way and flee to other galaxies. We should have that option available for ourselves."

"I've already considered that much." Jason answers. "Right now, my number one priority is to make the Cube livable. I've actually been working with Blinker on some... options. We'll have more to say about that in the future."

When Jason mentions the Monster Queen, Neil's eyes light up subtly with recognition.

These must be the 'special arrangements' Jason mentioned earlier, involving Blinker. Interesting.

"For now," Jason continues, "we have another, more readily available and essential option. Spaceships! We need to start developing warp-capable spacecraft as soon as possible. The Volgrim war fleets possess a billion times the firepower we can make even with all my avenues of power running at full force, so our goal shouldn't be firepower, but resilience. We need ships capable of long-term, if not indefinite survival capabilities even in the darkest depths of space, out past the Milky Way's confines. If the War should come to an end tomorrow and we are the losers, at least some core of our people should be able to escape on spacecraft similar to the Covenant ships from before."

"Zee Covenant fleet is insufficient to meet our needs." Hans Wagner states. "Zey only were intended to last a few years in space, at most. Zey were our last-ditch escape efforts to evade zee demons. Zey are not appropriate for a colony of people to survive indefinitely. We must build new ships from scratch!"

"Phoebe. Fiona. Either of you want to tackle that task?" Jason asks.

"I'm pretty busy right now." Phoebe answers. "But I can try and squeeze in some design work in my free time."

"Don't worry, I can handle it." Fiona says, smiling sweetly. "Most of my efforts right now are being spent helping Jason design Exotic Technology, like the Body Boosters. But that will come to an end soon. Throwing in some casual starship design won't be a problem. We are going to need advanced ship-building facilities on Kelkin, though."

"We'll work that out in due time." Jason answers, casually waving his hand. "Let's see. What other measures should we discuss?"

Yamir, the Minotaur in charge of Food Safety and Distribution, raises his head. "Ahem! It has come to my attention that someone has recently sabotaged a small amount of nutrient supplements our soldiers use during field operations. We are not certain who would do this, but most people suspect the demons are at fault. It has caused a number of minor brawls to break out among our soldiers and some of the mid-ranking demonic newcomers."

Jason frowns. "Food sabotage? Did they poison the nutrients?"

"There was some 'incidental spillage,' yes," Yamir says, calmly enunciating his words through the movements of his hands. "But actually, a warehouse caught fire seemingly out of nowhere. Witnesses reported seeing a pair of small, humanoid figures flee the scene. We weren't sure if they were demon imps or goblins."

"That is strange..." Jason murmurs. "Could the Hidden Emperors be fomenting their people to instigate small amounts of crime? Or... might these be the actions of Changelings?"

Phoebe's eyes flick to Neil for a moment, but any thoughts she might have, she keeps them quiet.

If Neil notices her eye movements, he doesn't say anything about them. "Changelings seem the most likely suspects, but we have no evidence they walk among us. If you and the Monster Queen can come up with a way to detect Changelings, that will assist us in finding the culprits greatly."

Jason nods. "I'll see what I can do. Uncovering the Volgrim's moles should be my number one priority."

Kiari, the newly evolved Duke of Locusts, bashfully raises her hand.

"U-um, if, if you all don't mind..." She says, timidly lowering her hand. "Well, my b-bugs could help out. I can have them... k-keep an eye on the food?"

"We don't really want pests in our supplies." Jason says, smiling kindly at Kiari. "But thank you for your idea. I'll place cameras around the storage warehouses. Right, that reminds me, Kiari. Have your, um, pets been useful in maintaining the fields?"

Kiari flinches as every person at the table turns to look at her. Despite being a relatively pretty demoness with some accomplishments on her belt, she's also a shy girl, unaccustomed to attention from others.

"Well, um, I've been taking care of the p-pests in the fields. I moved them away. My Gardeners can fertilize the soil, so that's been h-helping the crop yields..."

"Good to hear." Jason says, nodding. "While I can certainly produce an infinite amount of food, it's always best if humanity can be self-sufficient without my assistance."

Jason and the other leaders continue talking for quite a while, but eventually, their discussion winds down.

"Alright. You all know our goals." Jason says. "General Chadwick, I'll leave the personnel assignment to you. Please work with Miss Brunhilda to assign the most relevant personnel to Power Glove training. Lieutenant Samuel, the T-REX's are still core to our defensive warfare doctrine. Make sure we have enough for every single citizen, plus a reserve in case of malfunctions."

After making a few more cursory statements, Jason rises from his seat.

"Alright, enough horsing around. Meeting adjourned. Everyone, I'll see you all again in two weeks."

Jason gets up to leave, along with his physical and spiritual wife. Yamir joins him, as do Belial and Blinker and Kiari.

Similarly, the other half of the table leaves, becoming part of their own little 'clique.'

One hour later.

Corporal Hurent eases into a booth at one of the local restaurants, a place located inside the heart of the Fortress of Retribution, known as the Fiery Hot Wings. This restaurant, while owned by Yamir, is actually managed by a few of his apprentice monsters, including a Harpie, a Goblin, and most surprisingly, an Orc.

That Orc walks over to Corporal Hurent's table, his body decorated in a simple but noble black and white uniform.

"Hello, Corporal." The orc grunts. "What're ya having?"

"Give me a few minutes," She says. "I'm waiting on a friend. I'll take a lemonade in the meantime."

The orc gruffly nods. "Got it."

He walks away, heading toward another table.

Linda Hurent rubs her chest and collarbone, wincing as she struggles to breathe. For a few minutes, she simply sits in place, sipping her lemonade.

Eventually, a large, dark-skinned man walks through the door. Samuel Baker turns to look at her and smiles.

"Hey, there you are, Linda. Sitting off in the corner."

He walks over and plunks down in the booth opposite her, groaning reflexively. "Ugh. Shit, my damn joints have been creaking like crazy ever since I got Boosted by the demon."

Linda nods sympathetically. "I'm sure you heard. I received a Booster from Emperor Gorn. It exceeded my body's limits by more than five percent. I was crying for hours. Thankfully, Samantha managed to leak out some of the energy, dropping me to my bare minimum, but my- cough! My friggin' clavicle feels like it's about to break. Might need to drain some more."

Samuel clicks his tongue. "I warned you! I told you to get a Boost from one of the weaker Emperors, but you insisted on Gorn. Me, personally, I got a Boost from Emperor Kristoff. My body is at about eighty percent saturation. I might get another Boost from a Baron to top off the rest."

As humans, Samuel and Linda can only receive so much power within their bones, marrow, veins, and brain before their bodies explode. Too little, and they won't reach their maximum potential. Too much, and their bodies will buckle and break as their bones fail to regulate the strength coursing through them, causing immense pain and in the worst case, death.

Linda grimaces. "Easy for you to say. I just barely managed to obtain 250 tokens while busting my butt. No way could I waste a good portion of my potential going for a weak Emperor. The sooner I max out my strength, the faster I can obtain even more Merit Tokens!"

"That's easy to say." Samuel retorts. "But if your bones start snapping and popping, you'll be in for a world of hurt."

While they're talking, the orc waiter returns with a pair of menus. They quickly order some random spicy food, then return to their conversation.

"So, are you excited for the housing swap?" Linda probes. "I hear you're currently living in a little hovel off the beaten path. Might be a good chance for you to move closer to the city center."

Samuel snorts. "I have to jog to work every day. That's not a bad thing, Linda. Some of us like getting in a little light exercise before we start our duty shifts."

"Oh, you!" Corporal Hurent snorts. "You must be the bastard who keeps calling me Lazy Linda behind my back! Now everyone's saying it!"

Samuel raises his palms innocently. "Wasn't me. Must have been some other good-looking guy."

"You ass!"

Linda and Samuel mockingly tease one another, then dig into their food when it arrives.

"Say," Samuel says, in between bites of some spicy meat, vaguely similar to chicken. "What's a fellow gotta do to get his hands on a Power Glove early?"

"Oh? You're interested in those?" Linda asks. "I thought you'd be repulsed at the thought of turning into another species. Especially a demon."

"All the better to get to know my enemies." Samuel replies. "I haven't had time to take a compatibility test yet, though. Not sure which species I'll be best able to morph into."

"Drop by after we finish here." Linda suggests. "I'll run you through the scanner doohickey."

After a brief pause, Samuel nods. "Alright."

He and Linda finish their food, then pay a full Merit Token, leaving the difference as a tip for their waiter.

Together, they stroll out into the comfortable, well-built new inner city infrastructure. Not far away, they spot the Lazarus Tower, rising into the sky. Its spire-like tip glows with magical energy at the tip, drawing anyone's attention who looks at it.

"Not much longer." Linda mutters. "We'll finally get to see all the people who fell during Stormbringer."

"No." Samuel mutters, his voice turning icy. "Not all of them. Don't forget, the demons devoured many souls to empower themselves right after Stormbringer. Mephisto probably anchored plenty of human souls to undead bodies. We can't recover them."

Linda's expression turns wistful. "Yeah. You're right."

The two of them continue walking. Samuel's expression darkens as he glances around, spotting more than a few Demon Grunts and even a Lord walking around.

"Can't fucking believe this shit." Samuel mutters, keeping his voice low. "We have to just accept these demons as our friends now. One little peace treaty, and that's it? Tell me you ain't just gonna fall in line, Linda. These bastards murdered millions and permanently devoured their souls. Now we have to play pretend friends with 'em, like they ain't never hurt a motherfucker in their lives."

Linda's shoulders sag. "There are good demons, Samuel. Samantha, for example. Plenty of demons fought alongside us, like Kiari..."

"So what if there are a few good ones?" Samuel snaps back. "What are these so-called 'good ones,' one percent of one percent? Every single demon who ain't an imp reached their level by devouring the souls of helpless humans. Hell, they'll even eat other demons, that's how barbaric they are. They've whipped and beaten us, killed us, stomped us into the mud... not one of them is innocent."

Samuel's eyes flick upward, to the moon hovering in the midday sky.

"Demons killed my brother. I'll never forgive them. Once we settle this Kolvaxian War, there will be a reckoning, Linda. Just you wait and see. Many of us aren't content with washing the dirty water under the bridge. I only hope that when the time comes, you'll be on the right side of history."

Linda nods slowly. "I understand. I'll have to think about what I'll do if... if that time comes."

"It's not a matter of 'if,' but 'when.'" Samuel concludes.

He and Linda fall silent as they walk toward a large warehouse on the western edge of the plateau. When they step inside, they're greeted with the smell of freshly hewn wood and metal, as well as the sight of many thousands of crates full of Power Gloves, ready and waiting to be distributed to deserving soldiers.

Shortly after they enter, Linda points at a long line of more than one hundred soldiers stretching outside.

"That's the line to get tested for Power Glove compatibility." She says. "But luckily, I'm here. We'll jump ahead of the others."

"Good." Samuel says with a grunt. "I ain't got time to spare."

Linda leads the Lieutenant over to an alcove built into the wall, with a metal platform and a series of scanning lasers capable of deep penetration into his tissue and bones.

Samuel steps inside, Linda activates the scanners, and the two of them fall silent.

Over the course of the next thirty minutes, dozens of scans take place, mapping out not only the strength of his skin, bones, and organs, but his genome, his temporal displacement ratio, and even his magical affinity and mana load-bearing capability.

Some time later, the scanners deactivate, and Samuel exhales.

"Christ. That took long enough. So what's the verdict?"

As he steps out of the alcove and starts to walk toward Corporal Hurent, her expression changes. A look of disbelief crosses her eyes, followed by a scheming, shit-eating grin.

"Pfft. Pfffft! HAHAHA! Oh, Samuel! Ahahaha! You won't believe this..."

Samuel's smile turns cross. He glowers at Linda, behind her computer. "What is it? Goddammit. Don't tell me... my compatibility is highest with demons?!"

"Oh, that WOULD be pretty ironic!" Linda snorts, trying not to burst into tears laughing. "But no, it's even funnier than that!"

She slowly and deliberately turns the monitor to face Samuel. When he sees the data on the screen, his expression turns downright hideous.

"Dammit! Are you kidding me? Is this some kind of sick joke?!"

"It's not!!" Linda protests, while clutching her stomach. "You have a perfect compatibility rating with... fairy biology! You're gonna be a pretty princess, Samuel! AHAHAHA!!"

Samuel gruffly kicks a nearby crate. "Fuck! This is some bullshit! I thought I'd be compatible with orcs, or trolls, not a goddamn fairy!"

"I can't wait to see you with your cute little pretty-boy wings!" Linda howls with laughter, while Samuel storms away. "Come back, buttercup! Don't you want to try on a Power Glove?! It'll be great!"

As Samuel storms out the door, he fires off two final words.

"...Piss off!"

Part 367: Sinner's Revelation

In the basement of a cabin, tucked away near the northern edge of the Fortress of Retribution.

The former Duke of Inferno, Beelzebub, now a pale-skinned, dead-eyed human, lays face-up on a large but simple bed. His arms rest above his head, chained to the bedpost in the same position they've been for several weeks. A sense of emptiness lingers in his heart. The undecorated bedroom is both basic and boring, with only a single light on the ceiling, barely illuminating the darkness. No sunlight streams into the basement. The sounds of the outside world, if any, are muffled beyond comprehension.

As Beelzebub lays there, very few thoughts bubble up in his mind. He listlessly stares at the ceiling with a vague, disoriented look.

His pride, his unshakable spirit, and his sense of superiority were once his most front-and-center attributes. Even a little torture wouldn't have shaken him.

But that was in the past. That was before his final detonation and rebirth. That was before he lost everything which made him a mighty demon.

Now, he feels only despair. He has become a shell of a person.

All alone in that dark room, he weakly licks his dry, cracked lips. His stomach grumbles in protest. It's been a full day since he ate any food or drank any water. As a Demon Duke, he never needed to consume sustenance to survive. But now, having lost all his magical powers, he has become as weak and frail as an old man... an old human.

In the world above him, a soft thump stirs his thoughts. His eyes slowly trace along the ceiling as a series of footsteps walk along the cottage's upper levels. Before long, the hatch leading down into the basement flies open, and a cheerful voice sounds out.

"Mister Beelzebuuuub! I'm back! Teehee!"

Beelzebub doesn't reply. Even if he had the energy, he now lacks the will. Words will never save him from this wretched, vicious monster in demon flesh. The tormenter of his body and mind.

Rosalia stomps down the stairs and arrives at the bottom, turning to look at him with that same, undying sparkle in her eyes.

"You're awake! Oh goody! Sorry it took me so long to get back today, but work at the hospital was CRAZY! There was a collapse at this construction site, so I had to rush over and help pull a bunch of pathetic humans out of the rubble, and you know how humans are, so these whiny little fleshbags were begging and pleading for help, and then my coworker Kiki was all... 'Oh Rosalia, you have to show more compassion to these poor humans,' but I was like..."

Beelzebub doesn't bother listening to anything Rosalia says. After all, not only is the screechy tone of her voice annoying to the point of drilling into his ears, but she never has anything interesting to say. He has also long grown tired of arguing with her, begging to be released, or exchanging any dialogue that would cause her to think he cares.

The corpulent demoness continues bouncing her stomach while she strolls around the room, regaling Beelzebub about her day. After a while, she turns to look at him.

"...so what do you think? Hm? Mister Beelzebub? Helloooo~!"

She frowns, then walks over and waves her hand in front of his dull, glazed-over eyes.

"Are you actually napping? Wakey-wakey! Rise and shine!"

When Beelzebub doesn't react at all to her movements, a look of annoyance flashes across Rosalia's face.

Slap!

She backhands him, knocking his face to the side. This elicits a dull groan from Beelzebub, who finally 'awakens' to her words. He finally looks at her with a vague, emotionless stare.

"..Ros...alia..."

"Oh, my goodness! You weren't listening at ALL, were you?" Rosalia protests. "Now I have to start ALL over again! Sheesh!"

Beelzebub coughs. "Th... thir... sty..."

"Hm? Aww, does wittle Beelzebub need some wa-wa~?" Rosalia asks, clearly delighted at him asking for her help. "I'll get some for you! Heehee!"

As she stomps away, shaking her butt while half-dancing, Beelzebub's eyes once again become empty.

She walks back shortly after with a cup full of icy-cold water.

"Here you go, Mister Beelzebub! Sippy-sip time!"

She forcibly pulls Beelzebub's mouth open, then pours a small amount of water in at a time, delightfully enjoying the sight of his complete reliance on her every whim.

"Isn't this great?! We're having so much fun!" Rosalia chirps.

After Beelzebub finally licks his lips and regains some liquid in his body, he coughs weakly, then looks at Rosalia out of the corner of his eye.

"Ro... Rosalia... I'm sorry."

She waves her hand. "It's no problem! You know me, I LOVE helping you eat and drink! It really brings us together!"

Several seconds pass. Beelzebub lowers his eyes again, gazing at the ceiling despondently.

"No. I mean... I'm sorry. For how I treated you. I always insulted you. I was... a terrible demon. I deserve everything you've done to me."

For a brief moment, the room goes quiet. Rosalia cocks her head and frowns.

"Hmm. What do you mean? You're acting like I'm torturing you, Mister Beelzebub. But I'm not! I sing to you, I feed you, and I even tell you all sorts of funny stories!"

She glances at his chained wrists, both of which are pinned above his head to the bed-boards.

"Oh, and the handcuffs are just so you don't run away again! I wouldn't want that SLUT, that WHORE, Ose, to steal you away! That SKANK is always doing whatever she wants, hmph!"

Rosalia pauses.

"Ohhh, that's right! I almost forgot! Mister Beelzebub, did you know? Ose got killed! That's right, that stupid bitch got beheaded by the Wordsmith, and now she's dead! Not just dead, but twice-dead! SUPER dead! She's so dead, she'll never be able to slut it up with you again! Hahahaha!"

Laughing maniacally the whole time, Rosalia walks away from the bed to rifle around through her purse, while Beelzebub's heart drops into the soles of his feet.

"D...dead? Ose is dead?" Beelzebub asks.

"Mhm! She'll never bother you again, Mister Beelzebub! Now it's just you and me, ehehe! Isn't that great?!"

Rosalia continues gleefully celebrating Ose's death. As for Beelzebub, he feels a different emotion, deep within his heart.

Loss.

While he couldn't truly have fallen in love with Ose, the two of them did have a few romantic moments, and they did enjoy physical intertwinement. In the end, she used him as a tool against humanity and sent him to the frontlines. This caused Beelzebub to resent her.

But after losing his powers and falling into a near-catatonic stupor for well over a month, Beelzebub's negative feelings toward Ose have long since faded away.

He merely stares forward, at the cream-colored ceiling, while feelings of apathy mix with remorse.

After spending a frightful amount of time locked in this hellish basement with the woman who only uses him for her own emotional desires, Beelzebub has finally experienced a fraction of the pain others endured as a result of his actions.

It was his choice to treat others like dirt which caused Rosalia to resent him and ultimately capture and lock him away from the world.

It was his choice to fly into a rage and detonate his body which caused him to rebirth as a weak, powerless human.

And now, as he lays on that bed, feeling a sense of hollow despair, another emotion also appears.

Acceptance.

For the first time in his life, Beelzebub accepts his lack of power. He accepts that his choices have caused others great pain, and, through a cycle of Karma, have caused him to experience that same pain as well.

What if he had treated the humans, monsters, and demons of the world better?

What if he had acted more kindly toward those around him?

Perhaps now, he would not be in his current situation.

As Beelzebub thinks these thoughts, his eyes stray across the ceiling toward a bug crawling on the walls. This insect vaguely resembles a cockroach, but also appears to be a blue-colored variant native to Tarus II's ecosystem. It crawls around in slow, meandering circles, ultimately drawing his attention due to being the only moving, non-Rosalia thing in the room.

"Alright! I'm gonna take a shower!" Rosalia chirps. "I'll be back in a bit, Mister Beelzebub!"

He doesn't answer. After Rosalia stomps up the stairs and slams the basement hatch closed, Beelzebub simply stares at the blue cockroach on the wall, watching it for no particular reason beyond his boredom and lack of any greater purpose in life.

While Rosalia sings to herself in the shower, Beelzebub continues to lay motionless, a quiet swelling of emotion in his chest.

All my pain is my own fault. I'm trapped here because I deserve to be. Who would rescue me? And why would I deserve their help? I've made so many enemies... even the people who care about me only do so for selfish reasons. I have no friends. No comrades. Only people who hate me and wish for my death.

A single tear slides down Beelzebub's cheek.

I deserve to suffer.

A mile or two to the north of Rosalia's house, the newly crowned Duke of Locusts, Kiari, works excitedly to help her human friends. With another big apartment complex getting built just outside the Fortress of Retribution's confines, it's all-hands-on-deck to install electrical outlets, plumb water through the interior, and fill in the walls and ceiling with insulation before eventually closing them up.

Kiari's most significant ability after becoming a Duke is the ability to enlarge her bugs to ludicrous sizes. Despite always having been able to speak to and control insects, arachnids, and other such creepy-crawlies, her 'cute little pets' typically were too small and weak to help en-masse with certain types of tasks.

But now, thanks to her Duke-level power, she can ride to work atop a massive flying bee-like insect, something resembling a neon green wasp with a spotted body.

Kiari eagerly rushes into the building, followed by an army of foot-tall and ten-foot-long centipedes racing after her, forcing the humans around her to step aside.

"Alright pretty babies!" Kiari chirps cutely. "Get 'buzzy'! We have to finish building this thingy!"

Her army of crawlers divide and conquer, grabbing into tools with their dextrous mandibles to fill in walls, smooth out floors, and otherwise do any task a human might do. Despite Kiari's relative lack of intelligence regarding human technology, she has built enough houses and apartments to know how to follow building construction guides.

At the same time as Kiari's swarm gets to work, the humans outside stand aside, shivering at the sight of so many horrifyingly huge bugs swarming all over the structure.

Linda Hurent rubs her arms and shivers. "Ugh. I love Kiari to death... but damn, her bugs just make me feel so icky inside, you know?"

Another construction worker beside her, a succubus from the Hell of Lust, shrugs lightly. "Bugs. I don't think they're that scary when they're big. I hate when a swarm of tiny little ones crawl on me, but when they're bigger, they're easier targets. I can smash 'em if they get too close."

Linda shudders. "Yuck. Don't tell Kiari what I said, alright? She gets really sad if people say anything mean about her... pets."

"I didn't hear anything." The demoness answers with a shrug.

Before long, Kiari's army of giant centipedes swaps out for giant ants, which are even more efficient and dexterous at construction. This swarm rapidly finishes the job, causing all the nearby bystanders to cheer and clap.

"Wow! Way to go, Kiari!"

"So fast! She can do the final tasks in a fraction of the time! That means all the rest of us get our Merit Tokens that much faster!"

"Kiari is so pretty! I love her full, black hair!"

That last comment comes from a random incubus in the audience, though nobody faults him for his words. He is, after all, a literal sex demon.

After Kiari finishes, she shrinks her bugs down and disperses them, sending them off into the woods to leave the nearly-finished building clean and empty for the inspection crews.

Kiari flies down to the waiting crowd of people atop her giant bumblebee. When she lands, she shrinks it and lets it sit on her shoulder, while cheerfully walking over to Corporal Hurent and waving.

"Heyyy Linda! Sorry to swoop in and take over all the finishing stuff!"

The Corporal waves her hand flippantly. "It's totally fine, Kiari. Thanks for all your hard work!"

She and Kiari go in for a deep hug. After Kiari hugs Linda, she also hugs some of the other people nearby, especially all the demons. When the incubus from before gives her a wink, she winks back.

"I'll have to rest a while to restore my mana." Kiari says, while reaching behind her head to pin her hair into a ponytail. "This is already my third apartment complex today."

"We estimated two days to finish the work without you." Linda says. "So, you cut our completion time down to a fraction of the original estimation. Thanks for that. Are you excited to try out the new Power Gloves? I'll start distributing them to the general public next week!"

Kiari shrugs. "Ehh, I don't know, Linda. I'm not really interested in playing around with human stuff. I just want to help all my friends get into houses as quick as possible. You should see how many mothers and fathers have to sleep in tents with their children. It's really sad..."

The succubus beside Linda taps her chin. "What about the demons without homes?"

"We'll survive!" Kiari says without hesitation. "We demons are tough as heck. We don't need to eat or drink. We pretty much don't even have to sleep, either. We have to make sure we stand up for our cute little human friends and help them out!"

"You're such a kind-hearted girl," Linda praises. "Sometimes I forget you're... how old?"

"Seventeen thousand years." Kiari says, not even batting an eye.

"Right..." Linda coughs. "Seventeen... thousand... good grief, I hope I look as good as you at that age!"

The three ladies laugh in response. Not long after, Kiari waves goodbye. She heads south again, riding atop her bumblebee to get back to the city center of the Fortress of Retribution.

"Hmm... after spending all my mana on work, I'm kinda tired..." Kiari grumbles to herself. "Maybe I should stop by Yamir's restaurant to get some grub! ...Hmm?"

Kiari pauses her flight. She receives a telepathic message from her bugs in the region, all part of their daily reports if they find or discover anything useful. As a secret spy for the Wordsmith, Kiari's true goal is to try and see if she can uncover the identities of any Changelings, but so far, they have either been extremely careful, or don't even exist.

"What's this? You say there's an old man chained up in a basement?" Kiari cries out. "Oh my gosh! That's awful! Who would do such a thing?! That poor fellow!"

Her heart bleeds at the thought of a precious human friend suffering under the boot of some malicious person. Kiari's heart quickly bubbles with anger as she directs her attention to a cottage hidden in some dense shrubbery underneath the plateau outcropping belonging to Tarus II's capitol city.

"Wait a minute. I recognize that house. Isn't that... isn't that where Rosalia lives?"

As a nurse working directly under Belial, Rosalia has garnered a minor amount of renown among the many humans, monsters, and demons living and working on Tarus II. It doesn't take Kiari's Duke-level mind more than a second to recall that Rosalia lives out in this area.

"How could Rosalia chain an old man to a bed, though? She's such a nice person. There must be a mistake!"

Kiari lands a short distance from the house. She hides in the shrubbery and sends in a few bugs to scout the perimeter. Before long, one of her flying pets locates an open window and flies inside.

Using a direct link to that bug, Kiari scouts the house's interior. She discovers a hatch in the floor, one which leads down into the basement, but which is also covered with a rug.

"How strange... how very strange..." Kiari mumbles. "I can't imagine Rosalia doing something like this. Do I have the wrong house? No... there's someone showering right now. It's her! But why would she... why would she..."

Not knowing who the old man is, Kiari can only hesitantly wonder if, perhaps, Rosalia maybe has stranger 'tastes' than the average demoness. After all, plenty of succubi and incubi engage in 'fun play' using handcuffs and other such devices.

"I shouldn't jump to conclusions..." Kiari mutters. "Maybe they're just being weird together. It's not my place to judge others... but just to be sure, I should try and ask that old man if he needs any help."

After making her decision, Kiari hesitates. Not wanting to barge in and cause any misunderstandings, she instead opts to move stealthily and stay hidden. She moves to a hidden spot more than a mile away, surveying the cottage with her bugs. After a while, Rosalia exits the shower. She heads into the basement and talks to the old man, but Kiari's bugs lack effective ways to listen in on conversations, and as such, she can only take haphazard guesses as to the contents of their discussion.

However, Kiari can peer through the eyes of her bugs. In doing so, she picks up plenty of contextual clues about Rosalia and the old man's relationship.

"...She seems to have a fondness for him, but his eyes are empty, despondent. He definitely looks like a prisoner she's holding in secret. Perhaps she doesn't want him to escape? But why do this sort of thing to a random old man? I just don't understand..."

Kiari doesn't recognize Beelzebub's face, especially without his demonic horns and skin coloration, to say nothing of his aged appearance, looking almost fifty years old. He appears very different from the proud Duke who detonated his body above the skies of Tarus II.

An entire night passes. Rosalia goes to sleep, then wakes up, eats her food, and leaves with a skip in her step. She heads back to the hospital district to return to work, finally leaving the house unattended.

Once Rosalia leaves, Kiari makes her move.

She steals into the house, opens the basement hatch, and climbs down inside. Upon stepping downstairs, she finally comes face-to-face with the poor old man chained to the bed.

For his part, Beelzebub quickly recognizes that Kiari is not Rosalia. His heart skips a beat when he sees an unfamiliar Duke creeping into the basement. Uncertain of her motivations, his stomach clenches, but he decides any fate would be better than his current one.

"Help... help me..." Beelzebub coughs. "Please... great Duke... please help me..."

Kiari's heart also skips a beat.

"Old man! Are you okay? Is Rosalia holding you prisoner down here?"

Still unsure of what Kiari's motivations are, Beelzebub slowly nods his head.

"Yes... I... I was kidnapped... that woman chained me here... but who are you? Why are you...?"

"I'm Kiari, the Duke of Locusts!" Kiari chirps. She walks over to the side of the bed and frowns when she sees the deep red marks on Beelzebub's wrists, a sign that the handcuffs haven't been removed even once, potentially leading to gangrene in the future. "Um. And you are...?"

Faced with the question of his identity, Beelzebub tenses up.

Lying would be an easy path. He quickly recognizes a youthful naivete in Kiari's intentions. As a lofty Duke, she could have easily barged in and shoved Rosalia aside, yet she carefully considered the situation and made moves to try and not offend anyone.

If he wanted to, he could easily falsify his name. He could call himself 'Robert' or some other generic human name. No doubt, Kiari would believe him.

It becomes immediately apparent to Beelzebub that lying would be the safest way out of his predicament.

Yet... when the moment comes, he pauses.

The former Duke of Inferno gazes up at the woman seconds from freeing him.

For the first time in his life, he feels a vague sense of... guilt.

Yes, guilt.

Always, he has lied, bragged, and insulted others. His haughty attitude led to the collapse of his pride and the loss of his powers.

In the end, it was his dishonesty that caused his ruin.

During these brief moments of hesitation, Beelzebub even recalls the words he exchanged with his Creator.

"My name..." Beelzebub croaks, pausing just a moment longer.

"It's... it's Beelzebub."

"I am Beelzebub. The sinner who hurt this world."

Part 368: Beelzebub's Guilt

"I am Beelzebub. The sinner who hurt this world."

After speaking these words, the former Duke of Inferno falls silent and gazes at Kiari meaningfully, waiting for her reaction.

However, aside from a brief pause, the Duke of Locusts doesn't give Beelzebub's reply much more than a slightly awkward glance.

"Ah... hahaha. Oh, geez. This poor old guy..." Kiari mutters to herself, reaching for Beelzebub's handcuffs. She pinches her fingers and easily shatters the steel bindings, breaking them with her Duke-level strength. "Just what the heck has Rosalia been telling him?"

Beelzebub blinks. "You don't believe me? I am Beelzebub. The Duke of Inferno."

Kiari forces a smile. "Right! Yes, of course I believe you, grandpa! You're Beelzebub, totally! Now come here, ease on up... your body is so frail!"

She quickly but gently lowers Beelzebub's arms, making him groan in pain due to his stagnant blood flow and the rapid movement of long-dormant muscles. He grimaces painfully while she bends his arm around, trying to restore a small amount of blood flow.

"Dammit, woman! I'm- aargh! I'm not lying! I am Beelzebub! I'm not a human! I've just lost my powers and... and changed my appearance, too!"

"Of course, of course." Kiari says, clearly not believing a word this strange old man has said since her arrival. Inwardly, she double-checks his appearance again, then shakes her head. This poor fellow! I can't believe Rosalia has been holding him down here and brainwashing him! Is she obsessed with Beelzebub or something? Maybe he was her demonic idol? It's so weird she would treat a random human like this!

No matter how much Beelzebub protests and tries to explain his 'evidence,' Kiari just nods along, trying to humor his 'dementia' or his 'brainwashed thoughts.' She clearly doesn't put any stock into his words, but keeps moving quickly to try and get him out of the basement before Rosalia returns.

Kiari brings along Beelzebub's handcuffs. Once she takes him outside and mounts him on her flying bumblebee, she disposes of the cuffs somewhere secret, leaving behind no evidence for Rosalia to uncover Beelzebub's escape methods.

"Come along with me, old man." Kiari says, seating Beelzebub in front of her. His arms hang uselessly at his sides, without a speck of sensation in them, like dead appendages. "I'll take you back to my house. It's a bit of a flight from here, perhaps 5 miles, on the west side of the Fortress of Retribution. Can you tell me how long Rosalia had you captive?"

As her bumblebee flies through the air, Kiari questions Beelzebub several times about his captivity, trying to uncover his 'true identity,' but surprisingly, all his timelines line up with around the same time as when the 'actual Beelzebub' detonated his body and might have reappeared.

Whenever he answers Kiari's questions, she pauses for a moment, wondering if, perhaps, this strange old man is actually Beelzebub. Might his story be true?

But always, she shakes her head.

Clearly, he's just a normal old man. Not only does he not have horns, but his skin is pale white, and his ears are human-shaped. The only logical truth must be that Rosalia kidnapped a random old man shortly after Stormbringer and put him in her dungeon, trying to brainwash him into accepting a false identity.

Kiari continuously shakes her head, sighing as they race toward her house.

What a sad story! I can't believe the sweet, lovable Rosalia would have such a hideous side! I'll need to gather evidence, then approach the Wordsmith to punish her! Hmm... but maybe I shouldn't bug him about a matter this minor. I'll just monitor her with my bugs to see what she does next!

Resolving herself to take care of Rosalia's situation 'quietly,' Kiari soon arrives at a small garden not far from the western side of the Fortress of Retribution. Like Rosalia's isolated cottage, a small log cabin resides in this place, several hundred yards from other buildings. This residence is one of the few places that survived Beelzebub's detonation, and its existence is slightly special compared to all the newly built dwellings. As such, its owner obtained a small, private property for themselves where others cannot live.

Kiari lands at the edge of the garden and glances around, checking to see if anyone witnessed her arrival. Luckily, they didn't. She helps Beelzebub off her bumblebee, then leads him toward her cabin.

"Honey!" Kiari lightly shouts. "I'm back! And I brought... a friend!"

After a few moments, the door to the log cabin opens, and a human male steps out. "Mmm? You've returned? I wasn't expecting you for a couple hours, sweetheart."

This man wears a set of folded white robes, with a large red sash thrown over his shoulders. His thick black hair and well-trimmed beard give him an earnest, scholarly appearance.

As for his identity, he turns out to be none other than Saul, King Solomon's last living blood relative. As the nephew of the Knowledge-Seeker, Saul has long grown tired of ostentatious displays of wealth, and instead prefers to keep to himself, living away from other people.

Saul walks over to Kiari and pulls her in for a gentle kiss. Then, he turns to look Beelzebub up and down. Immediately, he spots the inflammation on Beelzebub's wrist, his haggard appearance, and his sickly-looking skin.

"Good heavens! Is this old man alright?"

"He could use some food and rest." Kiari says, a pang of sympathy in her voice. "Let's pull out the guest futon for him, honey. I'll explain the situation to you once we're inside, away from prying eyes."

Saul notices a faint bit of fierceness in his girlfriend's eyes. "Mmm. Alright, we'll do it that way, then."

A half-hour later, Saul and Kiari sit together on their couch, while Beelzebub flops back in a surprisingly comfortable leather loafing chair. Kiari details the situation to her husband. He frowns, examines Beelzebub more carefully than before, but ultimately lightens his expression and chuckles.

"Haha... goodness. Such a dark tale! To think one of the hospital's assistants would be performing such deeds in secret. And this old man claims to be Beelzebub?"

"He does." Kiari says, glancing at Beelzebub. "But as you can see, he's clearly a human. Does he look anything like Beelzebub to you?"

"I wouldn't know." Saul says, shrugging. "I never saw the fellow. But, come now, the story makes no sense. Clearly, Rosalia has deluded this poor man into believing her crazy web of lies. We cannot allow this farce to continue. Let's just call him... Robert. We'll keep him here for now, and you can watch him until he recovers from his injuries. Considering his appearance, he could use a visit to the Bodily Rejuvenation Depot. I'll put up the Merit Tokens so he can get his youth back. Then, we can take legal action against Rosalia."

"Legal action?" Kiari asks, batting her eyes. "What's that?"

Saul chuckles softly, then kisses his girlfriend's cheek. "Sorry, love. Sometimes I forget you're not familiar with all these silly human rituals. Miss Phoebe set up a war-crime prosecution department where anyone responsible for misdeeds during Stormbringer can be taken, detained, and ultimately punished. As for what punishment they'll receive, it can range anywhere from temporary indentured servitude to... death! I heard the Hidden Emperors have already rounded up more than fifty thousand participants of the Stormbringer Attack to receive their punishment."

Kiari's expression turns cold. "Good. Those monsters killed far too many of our friends. My brood-sister and I came to Tarus II together, but she died during Stormbringer. I don't even know if Mephisto has her soul or not, or if he revived her as one of his undead... tsk. Anyone involved with Stormbringer should be punished until they beg for mercy!"

Beelzebub lays back in his chair with his eyes closed. Fatigue wracks his mind, but still, he listens to Kiari and Saul's exchange. The raw emotions in his savior's voice cause a certain, inexplicable pain to pierce his stomach.

Unknowingly, Beelzebub's faint feelings of guilt deepen in that moment.

But, even so, he says nothing, allowing them to talk as they wish.

"Robert. Robert, are you awake?" Saul asks.

Beelzebub groans. He opens his eyes and tilts his head head forward. "Nnn. Are you speaking to me?"

"Yes, we've decided to call you Robert for now." Saul explains. "That Beelzebub nonsense is clearly something Rosalia told you, but I'd rather not risk your life on hoping nobody believes it. Believe me, not one person on Tarus II likes Beelzebub, and plenty of people would rip that worthless piece of trash a new cavity if they thought he survived Stormbringer. So, do yourself a favor, and just go by 'Robert.' You don't want some dull-headed Minotaur to believe you and start tearing your arms off, do you?"

Beelzebub frowns. "That is my name, though. I am Beelzebub. I won't run from the truth any longer."

Saul stares at the beaten old man with a look of empathy. He sighs and shakes his head.

"Aiya... this fellow. Maybe I can talk to one of my friends about him. We must have a psychiatrist available somewhere in the city. It seems the conditioning runs deep."

Kiari weakly smiles at Beelzebub. "Robert, please. You shouldn't keep calling yourself... that name. You know, a lot of good people died because of Beelzebub. No matter what Rosalia told you, you have to fight those thoughts. Do you really want people to think you're an awful, vicious monster who kills children and the elderly? Because if anyone ever believes you, they'll murder you without hesitation."

Facing Kiari's kindly words, Beelzebub hesitates. He stares into her eyes for a few moments, then lowers his gaze.

"Well... alright. Robert. My name is... Robert."

"Yes, yes, good!" Kiari laughs, clapping her hands. "It's such a nice name, too. Honey, why don't you make us some supper? It's a little early to eat, but I'm sure Robert is absolutely starving!"

Beelzebub's stomach growls, making him wince.

"I... I suppose I could stand to eat something. Thank you, miss... Kiari."

Saul smiles kindly at Beelzebub. He gives his girlfriend another loving kiss, then gets up and heads into the kitchen.

After he leaves, Kiari stares at his back dreamily.

"Mmm. Saul and I haven't been together long." Kiari says, absentmindedly. "When I first joined the human colonies a few years ago, I met Saul while wandering around the plateau. Him and I chatted a bit, and I thought he was rather handsome for a human, but I still had a lot of hostile feelings toward 'fleshbags.' Less so than other demons, but they were still there. Then I met Miss Belial over in the hospital district. Ah, but she calls herself Samantha. Make sure you remember that if you meet her, Robert. Anyway, then I met Samantha, and she started introducing me to some of her friends."

Kiari explains some of her early days spent among the humans, while Beelzebub lays back and listens, saying nothing. His thoughts wander here and there, with no particular rhyme or rhythm.

"...And then Stormbringer started. I was only a Lord at the time, and my bugs weren't very helpful in combat. So instead, I used them to help ferry wounded people off the frontlines. After that wretched Beelzebub blew himself up, he killed more than a million people, and I spent the next several days frantically trying to dig bodies out of the rubble with my bugs. There were several times when I broke down crying. I felt so ashamed, as a demon, because of Beelzebub's actions. I thought for sure that his detonation would make everyone hate me, and in truth, I even began to hate myself."

Kiari sighs.

"There were even times when I... I thought I didn't deserve to live anymore. I thought all demons should just go extinct. Plenty of people even said as much, only saying that I was 'one of the good ones' when I was within earshot. Even so, I felt like they were just trying not to hurt my feelings."

"Maybe they thought... that you would attack them too." Beelzebub mutters. "Like Beelzebub did."

Kiari nods, while gazing through the window to look outside. "Yes. I did feel that way. But then I saw Saul again, and for the first time, he showed me true compassion. We talked. We laughed. He told me my feelings were valid, but that he didn't look at me as a faceless demon. He believed that all individuals could make a choice. What Beelzebub did was evil, but his actions didn't reflect on me. As long as I lived a good, honest life, I could hold my chin high. And that was when I fell head over heels for him."

The moment she finishes her sentence, Kiari's face flushes cutely. "Erm. Don't tell him I said that! He probably knows, but I can't just admit I have such silly, childish thoughts. I'm supposed to be thousands of years older than Saul, but I always feel like he's much wiser than me."

Beelzebub nods slowly. "Saul does seem to have a... broad-minded view of the world."

After a few moments of quiet, Beelzebub glances at Kiari.

"...You said you were a Lord during the Stormbringer War? But you're clearly a Duke now. How did that happen? Hasn't it only been a few weeks?"

It takes Kiari a few moments to register Beelzebub's question. Lost in her loving thoughts regarding Saul, she eventually pulls herself back to the conversation and nods. "Mhm. After Jason Hiro killed Ose and subdued all the Hidden Emperors, he made them sign a peace treaty. Now, all of the demons are actively working together with him to rebuild human society. He's placed several 'special structures' down, one of which is called the Belial Booster. It can allow demons to rapidly evolve through the ranks! As such, after a couple of sessions, I was able to transform from a Lord to a Duke."

In just a few short sentences, Kiari hits Beelzebub with multiple bombshells, making him blink repeatedly while his jaw hangs ajar.

Jason subdued all the Hidden Emperors? He united all the Hells in a peace treaty? And now there exists a device that can elevate demons through the ranks?

It doesn't take much for Beelzebub to accept these statements as fact. After all, Jason did meet up with Beelzebub and Ose in secret. There, he informed them he could make a device capable of replacing souls with raw mana.

At the time, Beelzebub was very interested in this device. After the meeting, Ose told him the Wordsmith was lying and planted doubts in his mind.

The former Duke of Inferno lowers his eyes to the floor, a faint feeling of dismay in his heart.

...So it was true. The Wordsmith could do as he claimed, and it ended up being Ose who lied to me.

Despite all his quandaries, Beelzebub has always fancied himself something of a revolutionary. Having suffered the misery of several thousand years living as an imp, he ultimate managed to raise himself to the rank of Lord with Master Agares' help. Even so, he always thought demon society was rotten and crooked. He wanted to upend the old order and give all demons a shot at equality, allowing them to rise more quickly through the ranks without being suppressed by the old powers.

Beelzebub chuckles wryly. "He really did it after all..."

"Hmm?" Kiari asks. "What was that?"

The pale old man blinks twice, then shakes his head. "Oh. It's nothing. Don't mind me. Just some... old memories."

Not long after, Saul invites both of them to the dinner table. Kiari helps him to his chair, but when he arrives, Beelzebub finds that he still can't move his arms.

"Oh, don't worry about that." Kiari says. "Here, I'll help you eat, Robert. Tomorrow, I'll take you to the hospital district so we can get your arms fixed."

Beelzebub shivers. "No! I can't go there! I can't."

After an awkward pause, Kiari realizes what she said. "Ah, right. Rosalia works there. Hmm... but your arms are in bad condition. I'll ask Samantha if she can come see you."

Beelzebub stares at Kiari for several long seconds.

Inside his head, he thinks to himself, Kiari and Saul never met me when I was a Duke, but Belial did. She'll definitely recognize me. I won't escape judgment then.

However, contrary to his former self, this thought... doesn't bother Beelzebub as much as it probably should.

...Maybe that's for the better. The war is over. Demonkind got its revolution. There was a peace treaty instated. I don't have my powers anymore... so I'm a useless shell of a demon. I might as well... accept my fate.

While Kiari moves her chair to sit beside Beelzebub, his thoughts continue to wander for a moment.

"Mmm. If Samantha can come here to heal me, that would be best. We should keep this a private matter. It'll be less... messy... that way."

"Don't worry!" Kiari says, as if reading Beelzebub's mind. "I won't tell her anything about you and Rosalia. I still need to gather evidence, after all. Just make sure you don't tell her any of that nonsense about you being Beelzebub. You don't understand how much she HATES Beelzebub. She used to be such a kind woman, and would never hurt anyone, but during the war, she snapped and went berserk. Samantha killed tens of thousands of her fellow demons, ripping them to pieces! It was really brutal and scary, and it made everyone feel terrible, just watching her. Afterward, she had to bury her emotions because she was so busy healing injured and irradiated people."

"Just tragic all-around." Saul adds, while taking a bite of his rice and chicken soup. "Few people suffered as much trauma as Samantha. Well, except for maybe the Wordsmith."

Beelzebub frowns. "What do you mean?"

While Kiari dips a spoon into Beelzebub's soup in preparation to feed him, Saul sighs heavily. He shakes his head and pauses his eating, as if sick to his stomach.

"Well, you see... Beelzebub's detonation... during that event, Jason tried to protect everyone. He set up a huge force-field to contain the blast. But in the moments before the explosion, his little girl showed up and... tsk."

Kiari's expression grows solemn.

"...Poor little Daisy. Everyone loved her so much. She used to run around in the hospital, cheering up the sick soldiers. But now she's... she's dead."

"She wasn't just the Wordsmith's daughter." Saul mutters. "She was everyone's daughter. We all loved her. His loss was our loss, too."

Beelzebub nods. He swallows heavily, while lowering his eyes.

"I... I see."

Kiari regains her clarity of mind. She dips a spoon in Beelzebub's soup, then lifts it to his mouth.

"Well, never mind all that. Let's try and keep the dreary talk down at the dinner table. Robert, say 'ahh!'"

Beelzebub looks at the spoon, a heavy feeling in his heart.

"...ahh."

Part 369: His True Identity

On the western side of the Fortress of Retribution's plateau, a brand new hospital, reconstructed from the ground-up after the attack by Yama during Stormbringer, glimmers like a breath of fresh air. While it was once a fairly simple and utilitarian square brick structure in the past, now it is a heavily reinforced crystalline building with plenty of greenery built into it to make it feel warm, cheerful, and refreshing.

With anti-Shade defenses built into its innate structure, the Healing Center erases the old, ugly utilitarian aesthetic of the former Hero City to make way for something resembling a greenhouse, or an arboretum. Sunlight shines through the ceiling to stimulate thousands of plants growing along the hospital's walls, adding plenty of color to the place. Flower buds bloom year-round, and plenty of people come and sit inside the hospital to meditate or engage with others.

Despite the fact that human society has quickly reached a high level of safety and peace, the hospital's staff still have plenty of work to do when it comes to healing those who are sick and injured. Infrequent construction accidents can sometimes cause people's limbs to get crushed, broken, or otherwise mutilated, but with the best healer in the Seven Hells available, these wounds typically don't prove troublesome.

Additionally, many people end up overtaxing their bones and internal organs through the usage of Body Boosters. Besides Belial herself, plenty of hospital staff, including Doctor Fathy and Rosalia, learn how to treat these cases by venting away the excess mana and healing the injured.

Most surprisingly, thanks to the swift empowerment of demons through the Belial Booster, a few new demons, primarily from the Hell of Lust, gain healing abilities only a bit inferior to those possessed by Belial herself! Two incubi and one other succubi join the hospital, all of them extremely talented at healing, but each with their own specialties.

For the first time in well over 100,000 years, a demon skilled at healing brain injuries appears, making up for Belial's weakness. This fellow, an incubi going by the name of Leeroy, the Duke of Restoration, possesses the power to return people's lost memories, repair damage caused by dementia, and otherwise alleviate pain that would otherwise traumatize them while they wait for a doctor specialized in handling other injuries.

Leeroy quickly becomes popular at the Healing Center, not only due to his strong healing abilities, but his gentle and kind bedside manner. The thin, waifish fellow also possesses a unique trait in that he is not an ordinary demon, but a Satyr! As a member of a rare demonic sub-species with greyish skin, blue eyes, and horns which jut six inches out of his head and spiral downward, he draws plenty of glances from men and women alike. His good looks only make him that much more appealing to all his patients.

"Doctor Leeroy," Says one of his assistants, a Demon Lord who recently joined the hospital. "We have a man who was rushed in. A stray brick fell from three stories up and struck his hard-hat. It broke through the metal and knocked him unconscious."

Doctor Leeroy wears a black labcoat, as do the other high-ranking officials of the hospital, including Belial, while their assistants wear white. His slender nose, thin body, and longer-than-usual fingers give him the appearance of a dainty, scholar-like demon boy.

"Thank you, Shelley. I'll go and see him right away."

Leeroy glides through the Healing Center's halls, casually eying the pretty flowers growing on the walls. A small army of groundskeepers maintain the shrubbery, trimming their leaves, watering them, and otherwise ensuring they don't grow into places they shouldn't.

He arrives inside a trauma room where he finds Emperor Belial standing beside a human man as he lays on a hospital bed. No obvious wounds appear on his body, not even his head, thanks to Belial's quick work.

"Leeroy." Belial says with a nod. "He had some internal bleeding which I managed to stop, but approximately forty percent of his neurons in these three areas have suffered extensive damage."

She gestures to an X-ray of the man's skull.

"Here, here, and here. It's simple blunt force trauma. And if you look at the base of his skull, you can see his head suffered whiplash from the impact, which injured..."

She quickly explains the situation to Leeroy, who smiles and nods.

"I see. This should be a simple matter to solve. I'll take it from here, Doctor Samantha."

Not long after, Leeroy directs his healing energy into the man's skull and brain. It takes him much more time, over two hours in total, to repair all the damage and ensure no long-term effects. Unlike bodily injuries, which Belial can restore fairly quickly, brain injuries are extremely complex and not even Leeroy can instantly solve them with a wave of his hand.

Once he finishes, Belial comes back into the room. She and Leeroy help the man up, and he spends several minutes thanking them profusely for saving his life. As a newly arrived refugee from Hell, the man has never encountered such amazing things as the human-built technology and infrastructure on Tarus II. To him, the world is even more magical than actual magic performed by demons.

"Thank you, thank you, Miss Samantha!" The man exclaims. "You truly saved my hiney! This former slave is in your debt!"

"Don't thank me," Belial laughs. "I only took care of some minor flesh and bone trauma. It was Leeroy here who truly brought you back to the world of the living!"

The man quickly thanks Leeroy too. Some time later, he leaves, and Samantha and Leeroy find themselves in a rare lull without any patients to attend.

"Great work." Belial says, gently resting her hand on Leeroy's shoulder. "I'm always amazed at how skillfully you manage to heal people. When it comes to a brain, you are truly the master, and I'm not even an apprentice."

"Haha, thank you, Samantha." Leeroy says. "But I think your all-encompassing healing is even better. I am truly envious that you only have one weakness when it comes to patching people up. If it's not brain-related, I'm useless!"

After the two of them finish chatting, Leeroy departs to hang out in the lobby. As for Belial, she heads to the restroom to clean up her face. She turns on the sink and washes away her sweat and grime with warm water, continuously marveling at the human invention which brings water from a distant location to the hospital.

While a simple matter for most humans to understand, the complex systems of gravity, water pressure, and other such things seem like alien technology to demons. In all the Hells, only a few human-built residences on Hell Harbor hold any sort of indoor plumbing. Were it not for people like Benjamin Brown possessing knowledge of Old Humanity's ways, the demons would have entirely lost that art a hundred thousand years ago, when Earth fell.

After Belial finishes freshening up, she turns to leave the bathroom, only to pause in her tracks when she sees someone at the doorway, awkwardly standing and staring at her.

"Mmm? Kiari! How are you?"

The Duke of Locusts shuffles on her feet and smiles at Belial, clearly not wanting to bug her, or at least, that's how it first seems.

"Hey, Samantha. I don't want to be a bother, but um... I picked up an old man recently and... his situation is a little... sensitive. I was wondering if you could come with me to my place? His arms have really bad injuries, and I need your help to fix them."

"You can't bring him here?" Belial asks.

"I can... but I shouldn't." Kiari says. "You'll understand when you see him."

Seeing the strange look on Kiari's face, Belial raises an eyebrow, but doesn't retort.

"Well, alright. I shouldn't have any patients for an hour or two since all the construction workers are going on break. Let's head to your place. I haven't talked to Saul since before Stormbringer."

Belial starts to walk to the door, but before she can reach it, Kiari blushes.

"Um, eh, can you change our appearances before we go?"

"Huh?" Belial says. "Change our... are you hiding something from someone, Kiari?"

"Just... please, Sammy?" Kiari says, not answering the Emperor of Passion's question.

After a moment, Belial sighs. "Fine, fine. You're sure acting strange, though."

Belial changes her appearance and dampens her Emperor aura. At the same time, she casts a bit of illusion magic on Kiari. The two of them turn into random male demons and stroll out the front door, with no bystanders bothering to pay attention to them.

These days, even Phoebe cannot possibly remember the names and faces of all the humans on Tarus II, let alone the demons, monsters, and other sorts. Most people are grossly inferior to her in the facial recognition department, too.

After Belial and Kiari leave the hospital behind them, the higher-ranking of the two glances at her friend doubtfully.

"So. What's with all the secrecy? This isn't like you."

Kiari laughs awkwardly. "Ahaha... um, it's complicated. You know Rosalia?"

"Of course. She was one of the first demons to step foot on Tarus II." Belial says. "She had a bit of an attitude at first, but she's improved a lot in the past few months. Why?"

"Well... it's like this."

Saul's home is surprisingly close to the Healing Center. With both places being on the western side of the Fortress of Retribution, all the two women need to do is drop off the plateau and walk half a mile to Saul's log cabin.

As they walk, Kiari explains her uncovering of Beelzebub to Belial. However, she only states that Rosalia was holding an old man in her basement, not anything to do with Beelzebub's claimed identity. Not only does she not believe he's even Beelzebub in the first place, but she also wants to see Belial's reaction to 'Robert' without priming her to look for similarities to the former Duke of Inferno.

"That's... that's so strange!" Belial exclaims, as they near Saul and Kiari's cabin. "You wouldn't expect Rosalia to capture some random old man. What kind of psycho is she?! Is that why you wanted to hide your identity? Were you afraid of her?"

"Oh, I'm not afraid of her, since she's only a Grunt..." Kiari says, pausing to shift her eyebrows. "It's more that, ahh... I'm not sure about something. Before you jump down Rosalia's throat, just know the situation might be a little complicated. I'm hoping your eyes prove my fears wrong!"

Once again, Belial stares at Kiari with confusion in her gaze. "You are acting so odd today."

"Ahaha... I have my reasons." Kiari mumbles. "You'll understand soon."

The Duke of Locusts leads her fellow Emperor up to the cabin's front door. Upon seeing his girlfriend outside, Saul opens the door and smiles. "Honey, you're back already. And hello, Samantha!"

"Hi, Saul. Long time, no see." Belial says, reaching over to give him a light hug. "Where's the patient?"

"Right this way." Saul says, leading Belial into his living room.

They step into the somewhat dark room, where only the midday sunlight illuminates the interior. Unlike all the fancy apartments and other complexes being built around the city, Saul's log cabin is relatively old fashioned, with no electricity, only running water. At night, he usually illuminates the interior by lighting a fire in his fireplace, or through hanging lanterns.

Even so, and even if it were pitch-black in the dead of night, Belial's demonic vision would prove astoundingly perceptive. She easily makes out the figure of a frail, haggard-looking old man. Visible marks on his wrists give her an indication of how Rosalia handcuffed him in her basement. At the same time, Belial also pays attention to his malnourished body. He looks ancient, in human terms. Perhaps seventy or eighty years old.

"This is... Robert." Kiari says, glancing at Belial from the corner of her eye. She keeps watch for the succubus's reaction, waiting to see if she notices anything. "We're hoping you can fix up his arms. Right now, he can't move them at all."

"Sure, sure." Belial says, sitting down in a chair just two feet in front of the man. She casually examines him, but surprisingly, she doesn't have even a faint impression of this random old man. While Belial might not be the best at remembering people's names or faces, to lack even a single impression of someone leaves her at a loss.

"So, Robert?" She asks, reaching out to take hold of his arm. "How are you feeling, besides the arm thing? Are you hurting anywhere else in your body?"

As Belial talks, she periodically glances at her patient's face. For some reason, the more she looks at him, the more she does, in fact, get a faint sense of recognition from him. However, that sensation is so muted that she finds herself dismissing the thought as being a figment of her imagination.

Beelzebub, for his part, quietly stares at the Emperor of Passion. Several strange feelings well up in his chest. Remembering the times Belial absolutely thrashed him and beat his ass, the fact she can look at him with such tender, loving eyes makes him feel even more distant and ambivalent toward his past.

"No." Beelzebub says, his voice quiet. "No pain anywhere else. Not physically, anyway."

When Beelzebub speaks, Belial's expression changes. Her previously faint glimmer of recognition deepens, ever so slightly.

Hm? This voice. It's so... familiar. Where have I heard it before?

She continues to hold Beelzebub's palm, but stops short of injecting her mana into his injuries. She lifts her eyes to stare at his face even more deeply, but his wrinkled, sagging skin makes his identity difficult to place.

"Say..." Belial mutters. "Do I... know you?"

Behind Belial, Kiari's heart skips a beat. She glances between Belial and Beelzebub, trying to remain calm, but Belial's question causes her stomach to drop into her shoes.

Beelzebub gazes at Belial, unafraid.

"I don't know. Do you?"

The more he speaks, the more that strange, eerie feeling grabs hold of Belial's heart. She turns to look at Kiari, only to see a look of worry on the Duke of Locust's face.

"...Kiari?" Belial asks.

However, Kiari says nothing. She merely stares at Belial with determination, waiting to see if she will say those words that Kiari doesn't want to hear.

Not only Kiari, but even Saul appears unwell. His skin pales when he sees Belial recognizing this old man.

Could it be?

Was the old man telling the truth?

Is he actually, somehow... Beelzebub?!

Several seconds pass. Beelzebub watches Belial's expression shift repeatedly, along with the other two in the room. He chuckles wryly in his heart, then slowly shakes his head.

"Former Second Emperor." Beelzebub mutters. "I'm hurt. To think you still haven't fully figured out who I am. Well, let me clear up your doubts. I am exactly who you think I am."

Every word that Beelzebub utters drills into Belial's ears, making her heart rate increase dramatically.

"No... it... it can't be..." She whispers, squinting to look at him even more carefully.

All at once, a name pops into Belial's head. Her eyes widen as she mentally traces the contours of Beelzebub's face. She transposes Beelzebub's youthful self onto this old man, and sucks in a deep breath.

"You're...!"

"That's right." He says, finally chuckling out loud, his laughter lacking any humor. "I am Beelzebub. No longer a demon. Just a weak, useless old man. A human."

Belial quickly retracts her grip on Beelzebub's wrist. She recoils from him, turning to look at Kiari and Saul with horror in her eyes.

"He's Beelzebub!" Belial exclaims. "You knew this?!"

Kiari's knees start to shake. She opens her mouth to speak, but words fail to come out.

"He told us his identity." Saul states, his gaze cold. "But the story was too outlandish. We didn't believe him. We brought you here, hoping you would show us the truth. And now... you have."

All of Saul's previous kindness to Beelzebub, his trusting words of comfort, come roaring back to slap him in the face. As he gazes at the kindly old 'Robert' he was chatting with amicably not even twenty minutes before, Saul's stomach churns in a sickly manner, making him want to vomit.

"Beelzebub!" Samantha roars, swiveling to look at the former Duke of Inferno with hatred that could melt steel. "So you were alive after all! You murdering piece of shit! You sick, disgusting excuse for a demon!!"

Beelzebub faces Belial calmly. He closes his eyes and bows his head slightly.

"Mmm. Yes. You're exactly right. I survived, and by a twist of fate, the Creator put me in a human body. He ripped away my powers and left me a hollow shell. So, go ahead. Kill me. It's what I deserve, and I've made my peace."

Belial jumps up from her seat. With a casual flick of the wrist, she hurls it backward, where it nearly blasts through the cabin's wall into the outdoors. Her chest heaves dramatically as new, unbridled waves of rage surge in her mind, making her want to rip Beelzebub to pieces!

"You think you can die so easily?!" Belial shouts. "Oh, I don't think so! Bastard! Murdering BASTARD! You killed my niece! You took Daisy from me!!"

Beelzebub says nothing. He keeps his eyes closed, quietly awaiting Belial's final judgment.

"Wait." Saul says, turning to face Belial. "Don't do anything rash, Belial. He's only a human now. He has no power. A casual sneeze from you could kill him with nothing left. We need to take this to the Wordsmith. Jason will absolutely deal with him in the most brutal manner you can imagine."

"Hahaha. Hahaha!" Belial laughs cruelly, a savage light in her eyes. "Oh, yes, he certainly will. To think this is why Rosalia kidnapped him. She must have recognized Beelzebub from the very beginning! What a delightful fate! How excellent! Chained up in a basement and tortured for weeks! Frankly, it's too good for the likes of him! She should get a commendation for her deeds!"

Beelzebub finally opens his eyes.

"If you're going to torture me, or whatever... go ahead. Do whatever makes you happy, Belial. I'm too weak to resist. You can peel me apart, heal my wounds, and repeat the process until my mind breaks. I never thought of you as the type... but war changes everyone."

He shakes his head.

"I think... it may have even changed me."

Seeing Beelzebub's complete and utter lack of fear, a different sort of miserable pain swells in Belial's heart.

She wants to see him beg for mercy. To scream out in pain and plead for his life.

Belial wants Beelzebub to suffer a thousand times the misery he unleashed on Tarus II's populace!

However, his indifferent attitude makes Belial grit her teeth. The reaction she wants doesn't come, leaving her deeply frustrated.

"So you want to act tough?" Belial hisses. "Good. Very good. I won't hurt you here, Beelzebub. A million people died because of you. Your suffering deserves to be put on display for all to see. There's a war crime tribunal coming soon... and you will become the protagonist of those proceedings."

The former Second Emperor balls her hands into fists. She struggles with the urge to unleash a brutal punch and instantly kill Beelzebub right then and there. However, seeing him so utterly powerless, so helpless, gives her a different sort of satisfaction.

"Haha. It really is a cruel twist of fate that you've become a powerless human. Not even your arms work, and I certainly won't bother fixing them! I think I'll leave you just the way you are."

Imagining the fate Beelzebub will soon face, Kiari's expression sinks. As a kind-hearted person, she doesn't like to see others in pain.

In Kiari's eyes, one of the kindest people she's known has always been Belial. Hearing the succubus utter such vicious words delivers a mental blow to the Duke of Locusts, darkening her thoughts and casting a pall over her face.

Not long after, Belial leads Beelzebub outside of the log cabin. She turns to look at Kiari.

"Thank you for bringing him to me. I'll make sure justice is served to this scumbag, Kiari."

Kiari nods.

"Okay. Bye, Samantha. See you... later."

"Mmm."

Part 370: Emperor Gorn's Dao

At the 'Horned Maître,' located inside the Fortress of Retribution, a stone's throw from the Lazarus Tower.

Jason Hiro sits inside a private booth at the largest restaurant on Tarus II. Owned by his family's chef, Yamir, this place is mostly managed by Yamir's extended bloodline, those minotaurs who have immigrated from Hell in the last week or two. Yamir himself spends most of his time doing what he loves; cooking in the back and managing the kitchen staff. As for the restaurant's other activities, he only plays an auxiliary role.

The Horned Maître, a five-story restaurant with progressively fancier meals and accommodations on each of the higher-level floors, allows for its patrons to spend currency lavishly, assuming they have the Merit Tokens to afford its exclusive and exquisite dining options.

On the first floor, more than six hundred people can sit amidst the hundred-or-so relatively common-looking tables and chairs. For a single Merit Token, each member in a family or a friend group can partake in some of the best cooking in all of Tarus II's civilized space.

On the second floor, that number drops to three hundred people. A few extra, slightly more exclusive meals get added to the menu, but all of them cost two Merit Tokens.

On the third floor, the number of people who can be seated halves, while the costs double.

And so on, up to the fifth floor, where a mere forty people can sit and partake in the most scrumptious and refined food in all of human society. At this level, every meal costs sixteen Merit Tokens per person. This unbelievably extravagant price is, in truth, a sinkhole for those with no thoughts for saving money, or those who want to impress their friend circles.

Additionally, at the fifth floor, every dining area is actually a sealed, private booth where people can discuss business under the cover of magical fairy formations. These formations not only isolate noise, but spiritual senses and visual perception, preventing outsiders from listening in or observing any potentially illicit conversations.

Of course, the Wordsmith's fairy allies are an exception. They record every conversation for administrative and security purposes.

Inside one of the eight private booths, with seats for four guests, just two people sit.

Jason Hiro, and Emperor Gorn.

The reanimated, partially undead Demon Emperor leans back in his chair and meets the Wordsmith's eyes with an even gaze.

"I'm not surprised you were able to amass a thousand Merit Points in just two weeks." Jason says, while leaning forward and casually resting his hands and elbows on the table. "Only that you aren't spending them on your Hell's minions or a Body Booster."

"Heh. The affairs of my Hell have never mattered much to me." Gorn says, calmly clasping his hands in his lap. "Only my own strength does. Serena manages the Hell of Calamity's miscellaneous affairs, while Crow stands as its enforcement and muscle. As for me, I only pursue my great 'Dao.'"

"I'm not familiar with that term." Jason says. "What is a Dao?"

"It is a term which originates from human society." Gorn explains. "Chinese philosophy, to be exact. It later spread throughout the whole of the eastern world. A person's Dao is their 'way.' It is the path they seek in their life. Many people absentmindedly waffle through reality with no clear goal in mind. As for me, I know who I am and what I want."

Jason eyes the Emperor of Many Faces up and down. "Power."

"Yes. I seek power." Gorn says, exposing a toothy smile. "You're quick on the uptake. Those Body Booster facilities of yours can only raise someone to the strength of their donor, at a maximum. Since I am already one of the most powerful demons in existence, I can't get much benefit from them. Only through one of your fancy... Words of Power... can I reach new heights."

Jason nods slowly. "I can provide you with any sort of permanent 'buff' you can imagine. Be aware though, that if you ever turn against humanity, I can rip them away in an instant. These will only benefit you in struggles against the other demons."

Gorn doesn't immediately respond. Instead he slides one of his hands out from under the table, rests his palm on the table's surface, and quietly strums his fingers, as if lost in thought.

"...You humans are so clever." Gorn muses. "I hope you don't think my people are fools. We can easily see what you're doing. You're manipulating us with these Merit Tokens. While your species extracts the power of our mana, you also neutralize us as threats to your order. Over time, the weakest demons will grow attached to your more 'fair' and 'partial' way of elevating them through the ranks. No more need to hunt and beg and save for Soul Beads. As for us leaders, we can obtain small but seemingly infinite benefits through your Words of Power. But in the end, you can revoke these benefits if we turn against you."

Jason smiles. "It's always nice talking to a smart person. Saves time on explaining things."

"Right." Gorn says. "And that's the genius part. We can see exactly what you're doing. We can see how, in the long run, humanity will easily fly past us in terms of your overall strength. And yet... we cannot fight back. We're powerless except for giving up our lives in a futile, final battle, or simply accepting that you've beaten us."

"Do you deserve any better?" Jason asks. "I know demonkind's origins. You truly were trampled upon by the angels and Titans. Your history is a sorrowful one. Even so, you had the option to right the past wrongs, but didn't. What I've done is extend a hand of mercy that, frankly, you don't deserve."

Gorn's expression grows distant.

"Indeed. We don't."

The man and demon both fall silent as one of the minotaur waiters at the Horned Maître delivers their meal, including a delicious-smelling seafood entree from Tarus II's nearby sea reserves. Jason presses his knife against the creature's abdomen, and it splits open, revealing a rice-like texture inside, with all sorts of vegetables native to the planet. At the same time, Gorn's dish also appears delicious, though somewhat different, as he goes for a bunch of crunchy fried eggs taken from the exotic Seven Winged Hellbirds from a nearby mountain.

The two men eat in silence for a few minutes. Once they have consumed a suitable amount of Yamir's personally cooked delicacies, they pause their eating to resume their conversation.

"So." Jason says. "Have you decided what your Word of Power will be?"

"A thousand Merit Tokens..." Gorn chuckles. "I haven't decided. But I hope that for this price, you can enlighten me by answering some questions. I'm curious as to what effects you can reproduce through your Wordsmithing."

"Before you came here, didn't someone give you a small book filled with descriptions of the spells I'm willing to cast?" Jason asks.

"Of course. But that tome was so dry and boring." Gorn chuckles. "Let's start with 'Invincibility.' This effect seems as if it is able to turn any individual into the Duke of Pain, and yet it costs you practically no mana. How can there be such a good thing in this world?"

"That Word of Power will, indeed, make you unkillable by anything or anyone." Jason says. "But the effect has many, many downsides."

He pauses.

"Consider what it actually does. It renders your skin immune to the sensation of pain. It makes your body impossible to penetrate by any bullet or object traveling at any velocity. Put simply, you will lose your sense of touch."

Gorn raises an eyebrow. "That does seem to be the way it worked for Bael."

"Next," Jason says, "Consider all the other ways you could die. Old age, for instance. For a demon, this won't be a problem. But what about a sonic blast blowing out your eardrums? What about suffocation or drowning to death? Thus, this Word of Power will dull your hearing considerably, weaken your sight, and render you unable to taste food or sniff the roses. To become invincible, you must give up all the pleasures and luxuries of life. Even sex won't be possible."

"Hahaha." Gorn dryly laughs. "That reminds me of an old human story about a man and his younger brother. The man studied his whole life, never smoked, never drank, never partook in raucous sex with women, and did everything he could to extend his life. Meanwhile, his younger brother did exactly the opposite and died at the young age of just forty. On his deathbed, the older brother realized that while he had extended his life to twice that of his sibling, he had never truly enjoyed himself, and thus he had wasted all of his years."

"Mmm. You understand my point, then." Jason says, taking another bite of his food. "What other 'Words' pique your interest?"

Gorn eyes the human for several long seconds.

"...I want to become a Demon Deity." He finally says.

"A what?" Jason asks.

"A Demon Deity. It is the next level above Demon Emperor. Now that I know it exists, I have grown restless, of late. I wish to reach that forbidden level. I wish to experience the power beyond what I currently possess."

Seeing the look of confusion in Jason's eyes, Gorn explains to him the process Emperor Wolfram underwent during the battle against the Cherubiim.

"...and for a brief moment, for just one short hour, he broke past the barrier which had stopped every Emperor before him." Gorn says, sighing with irreverence. "Of course, if I have to die to touch that boundary, then I would rather not. But... then again... perhaps experiencing that sensation would be worth the quick death afterward. I have already lived as an Emperor for 100,000 years. Even if I die while becoming a Demon Deity, that would still be the glorious and most euphoric moment of my life. It would allow me to go even further in my Dao."

Gorn eyes Jason Hiro, waiting for a reply. To his surprise, the Wordsmith doesn't immediately refuse his request. However, he does appear lost in thought.

"The level beyond Emperor..." Jason mutters. "And you say it's always been inaccessible to demons? Before Wolfram?"

"It has, yes." Gorn answers. "I cannot list how many souls I've consumed. Demons require ten souls to advance to a Grunt, one hundred to become a Lord, one thousand to become a Baron, one hundred thousand to become a Duke, and one million to become an Emperor. Yet no matter how many I've consumed afterward, I never felt my power reach a level that seemed as if it would 'break through' the barrier. It has always felt as if there was an invisible ceiling preventing me from attaining further heights."

Jason glowers at the Demon Emperor before him. His tone turns cold. "Don't just casually speak about consuming souls in front of me, Gorn. Lest you forget, those were people you devoured. Humans. Men and women. Mothers and fathers. Children. I don't hear a drop of regret in your voice either, except for regret that you didn't eat enough people. And frankly, it churns my fucking stomach."

Gorn shakes his head. "Let's not play games, Wordsmith. Do you really expect me to pretend I've become a changed demon? I am who I am. Two weeks is not enough time to shift my mentality, especially given how I have lived for 100,000 years already. To me, humans are still weak, pathetic little creatures. And if you think I am unique in that regard, you're in for a rude awakening when you have more private chats with the other Emperors."

The Emperor of Many Faces chuckles disapprovingly. "Hehehe. We'll play your game, Wordsmith. We'll dance for you like puppets. We'll scrimp for your Merit Tokens and beg for your gifts, because ultimately, it fulfills our own selfish desires. But, at least for old dogs like me, don't ever expect us to change our thoughts. As far as I am concerned, you are one incredible human living amidst a sea of piss and shit. The rest of your kind can't hope to stack up to the demons. Only by extracting our powers for yourselves can you become comparable, and since this inherently relies on our existence, you therefore will have to become half-demon to achieve anything."

Jason smiles.

"All Emperors think like this, yes?"

"We do." Gorn answers.

"That's too bad." Jason continues. "Because that line of thinking... is wrong."

"Oh? How, exactly?" Gorn asks.

The Wordsmith ponders for a moment before responding.

"You demons are stagnant, just like the Volgrim. But in many ways, your stagnancy goes much, much further. Not only can you only evolve to the rank of Emperor at most, but you never personally evolve. Your thoughts stay the same your whole lives. Your powers reach a plateau, but never change. Your civilization either remains fixed in place, or it even regresses."

He continues. "Contrast with humanity. We are always evolving. Breaking through the barriers which holds us back. Elevating our capabilities, and our line of thinking. Do you really believe we need to borrow demonkind's power to 'ascend' to your level? I am only using your Dukes and Emperors as a shortcut. If all the demons died off tomorrow, I could achieve similar results by using technology. On the other hand, if humanity vanished, the demons would quickly lose all their momentum. You would kill each other, yet never come close to replacing the souls lost through said killings. You would self-immolate, reducing yourselves to a fraction of your current population."

The Wordsmith leans back in his chair.

"You speak of demon superiority as if it were a known fact, but you're delusional if you truly think that's the case. Your bodies might be strong, and your magical abilities mighty, but in the end, the only way you could defeat humanity was through suppression by a superior population and draconic thought-policing."

He smirks deeply, shaking his head at Gorn's naivete.

"Enough chit-chat. I have things to do after this. Let's finish our food. In the meantime, you should hurry up and decide which Word of Power you want invoked on your behalf. As for that matter of becoming a Demon Deity, it lays outside my abilities."

Finding himself suppressed by the Wordsmith's argument, Gorn can only offer a few feeble retorts before ultimately giving up.

Half an hour later, Gorn makes his choice. Jason imbues him with a Word of Power and sends him on his way.

"An interesting choice." Jason mutters to himself, before getting up, paying his food bill, and leaving the restaurant.

As the progenitor of humanity, he and his wife can print Merit Tokens as needed for their expenses. He casually tosses out thirty-two tokens to Yamir's cooks, all of whom give him a hearty thumbs-up as thanks for his patronage.

Not long after, Jason heads away from the restaurant. Hardly has he walked fifty steps before he spots Phoebe bouncing toward him from an adjacent street.

"Jason. Jason!" Phoebe says, slightly breathless. "There you are. Were you at the Horned Maître again?"

"Mhm." Jason says, giving his wife a kiss. "I had to deal with Emperor Gorn. He exchanged a thousand points for a Word of- is something the matter?"

Jason pauses his explanation of the day's events when he notices an impatient look on Phoebe's face.

"Forget all that," Phoebe says, waving her hand. "You won't believe this. I just met up with Samantha. She showed me something incredible!"

Phoebe suddenly glances around, then activates her T-REX. Before Jason can react, she presses his T-REX's activator twice, engulfing him in nanites.

After they both seal up from the outside world, Phoebe opens up a private channel.

"Jason. Beelzebub... is alive!"

"What?!" Jason exclaims, his heart dropping into the soles of his feet. "He is? Where is he?! What happened? Is anyone hurt?!"

"No, no, it's not like that." Phoebe says. "You see, Kiari stumbled upon him, over at this cottage on the north side of the city..."

Phoebe spends the next few minutes explaining to her husband all the details regarding Beelzebub's capture and rescue.

"You said he's... a human?" Jason asks, unconvinced. "How is that possible?"

"It's true. I saw him myself." Phoebe says. "He was difficult to recognize. No boisterous aura. No demonic powers. Pale skin, human ears, and no demon horns. Without a doubt, he is completely and utterly human."

Jason's eyes flash with hatred. "Good. That means he'll be easy to kill. Where is he now?"

Phoebe frowns, though Jason doesn't see her expression through her helmet.

"You're not going to talk to or hurt Beelzebub, Jason." Phoebe states, giving him a clear and direct order. "He needs to stand trial for his crimes during the War Tribunal, along with all the other perpetrators of Stormbringer. In fact, I want you to stay away from him until we reach that day."

"What?!" Jason scoffs. "Why are you acting so unreasonable, Phoebe? He killed Daisy. He murdered our little girl! Not to mention a million other people! What use is there in a fucking tribunal? He's the guiltiest of guilty!"

"Don't argue with me on this." Phoebe says. "You're not in a good headspace when it comes to Beelzebub, Jason. You need to stay away from him. And, even more importantly, killing him would be the most selfish thing you have ever done. He didn't just take away our little girl, but the children and mothers and fathers of countless others. They all deserve to have a go at him on the big stage."

Jason opens his mouth to retort several times, but continually finds himself at a loss.

Eventually, he says, "Phoebe. I want to have a few words with him. Just a few words..."

"You can grill him all you want once the Tribunal arrives." Phoebe answers. "I'm taking charge here, Jason, and that's final. In fact, it would be better if you saved up your rage and hatred for that day. If you let it all out now, you won't have nearly as much at hand for all the others who have suffered. You have to give a strong voice to their outrage when we put Beelzebub on full display for them to see."

Her argument finally convinces Jason.

"Well. Alright. I guess I can do that. When are we holding the Tribunal, anyway?"

"After we resurrect everyone who fell during Stormbringer." Phoebe answers. "And we'll revive them once we have enough housing built. I don't want any of those victims sleeping on the streets or in tents. They deserve better."

"That could take a few months." Jason points out.

"It will take a few months." Phoebe replies. "But don't expect to twiddle your thumbs the whole time. The Volgrim are going to expect you to make a 'diplomatic visit' at some point. I imagine that will happen sooner, rather than later. While you're dealing with them, I can hold down the fort."

Jason rubs his chin. "Mmm. Not to mention they've slowed down their delivery of Wartime Provisions. The Volgrim are deliberately making a power play, but I don't think they know the full situation on our planet."

"You never know. They might, actually," Phoebe retorts. "We still don't know if there are any Changelings here. We'll have to keep our eyes peeled."

"Changelings..." Jason says, his gaze darkening. "Alright, I'll worry about Beelzebub later. If he doesn't have powers, then he's no threat. You are certain he's powerless though, right? Because if you're not..."

"I'm certain." Phoebe answers. "And just to be sure, I put a mana-stifling band around his neck. Does that make you feel better?"

"It does." Jason says, smiling. He deactivates his T-REX, and Phoebe does the same.

For a few minutes, they kiss and hug each other, right in the middle of the street, while others walk around them and chuckle.

Not long after, they pull apart and Jason sighs.

"Oh, right. Fiona helped me build the first Beauty Booster today. Can you do me a favor and contact some of the Hell of Lust's succubi to take the first shifts? We'll hold the grand opening tomorrow."

"The Beauty Booster, huh?" Phoebe says, batting her eyes. "Maybe I should pay it a visit."

"No need. You're already perfect," Jason says, grinning.

"Are you sure? I seem to recall a certain Wordsmith subtly making my boobs bigger." Phoebe snarks.

"Uh, Fiona told you?" Jason asks.

"Nope. But you did, just now!" Phoebe laughs, while lightly socking his arm. "Anyway, what sort of pricing are we looking at for this new Merit Token sink?"

The Wordsmith hems and haws.

"Hmm. Well, it doesn't need to be too pricey. The fact someone can go there several times means a lot of... physically imperfect people will probably go for multiple visits. I'll leave the pricing up to you, but let's cap it at, say, fifty tokens?"

"Will do, love." Phoebe says, kissing Jason one last time. "I'll see you tonight."

"You too, honey." Jason replies.

The two of them split off to do their own thing.

After they depart, Jason reactivates his T-REX.

"Beelzebub. Tsk. I'll deal with you later. Now, my next goal should be... managing these pesky Volgrim..."

Part 371: Inferno's Imprisonment

On the southern side of the Fortress of Retribution, in an undeveloped area where only military personnel patrol, a half-dozen soldiers in exosuits stomp along in unison. Before them walks an old man with two ruined arms, but even with his limbs unable to be used, they still hang behind his back, handcuffed and useless.

This man is none other than Beelzebub.

The former Duke of Inferno silently walks to the prison, with the six escorts behind him keeping their weapons trained on him, just in case, as per their orders from Phoebe Hiro.

Surprisingly, none of them know Beelzebub's true identity. For her part, Phoebe only informed them that this old man, Robert, was a traitor to humanity and should be taken to his prison cell post-haste.

And so, after several miles of relentless walking, Beelzebub arrives at a familiar entrance to an underground prison complex, the very same one he previously escaped, thanks to Mara's help.

When last he left, he slaughtered dozens of human troopers, burning them to ash with his Duke-level demonic powers. But now, he has become so weak that even an ordinary human teenager could beat him up.

Such a sad reversal of circumstances causes him to lightly sigh.

"Prisoner entry request." Says one of the soldiers behind Beelzebub to a guard at the prison's entrance. "Here are his details."

A few minutes later, Beelzebub gets escorted inside. After going through multiple magical and technological searches, including an incredibly humiliating 'cavity search,' his captors don't find anything suspicious hidden on him. They lead him into the cell block areas, which he discovers have been upgraded and expanded in the past several weeks.

No longer do a mere two hundred cells await him. Instead, more than ten million cells lead deep, deep into the underground complex. Thanks to the assistance of countless Goblin immigrants brought from the Seven Hells, more than a thousand stories of levels extend deep into the underground space, while their width and length also stretch out tens of times further than before as well.

When Beelzebub arrives in the cell blocks on the first floor, he becomes momentarily astonished at the sheer volume of prisoners being held within the Wordsmith's dungeons. With four people to each cell, not a single bed on the first floor remains open. Instead, the guards lead Beelzebub to an elevator, one which they take all the way down to the one thousandth floor at the very bottom... the VIP holding area.

Here, fewer than a dozen or so prisoners sit inside their cells, quiet and contemplative looks on their faces. Unlike the somewhat loud and raucous first floor, the bottom-most floor is one where hardly anyone lives. As a result, its prisoners are much quieter, barely whispering to each other in quiet tones.

"You've got some real shitty luck." One of the guards gruffly says to Beelzebub. "Only the scummiest pieces of shit get put on this floor. Hell, we haven't even put anyone in the hundred floors above you. Putting you down here is basically saying you won't ever see the light of day again. I can only imagine what some old man did to deserve such a fate."

Another guard beside him snorts. "Maybe it's better we don't know. We might kill the geezer ourselves if we found out."

"Right you are."

The two guards fall silent. They lead Beelzebub to a cell where another man already sits inside, a young human male with brown hair and a common appearance. He wears a basic orange jumpsuit, the same as Beelzebub.

"Guess who gets a friend." The first guard says to the prisoner inside the cell. "Hope you haven't been too lonely in here, Private Henry. Since your old boss made it back alive, maybe Neil will throw you a bone and spare your life. But considering how you left him to die... I wouldn't count on it."

The young man in the cell, Henry, barely lifts his head to glance at the old man being led into his cell before lowering his gaze again. He sits on the edge of his bed, absentmindedly kicking his legs to pass the time.

The guards unchain Beelzebub's wrists, then snort coldly at him when they see his arms can't move a muscle.

"Eating-time is gonna be a bitch, grandpa. But don't worry. We'll put a straw in your applesauce so you don't starve to death. You need to stay alive until the trial, after all."

Beelzebub merely grunts. "Mmm."

After he enters the cell, the guards close the gate and lock it tightly, then turn and leave.

A minute passes.

Beelzebub quietly glances around the cell before wandering to a bed on the opposite side of the room as the young human male.

"So." Henry says, his tone neither warm nor cold, but mostly indifferent. "What are you in for?"

Beelzebub's shoulders lightly slump forward as he glances at the human across from him. For a brief time, he hesitates.

Finally, he answers.

"...Murder. Genocide, to be exact."

Henry blinks. He raises his eyes to scrutinize Beelzebub a little more carefully.

"Name?"

"Robert." Beelzebub immediately answers. "That's what they call me, anyway."

"And just who is 'they?'" Henry asks.

"The people who rescued me." Beelzebub replies. "Any other stupid questions?"

The young man eyes Beelzebub carefully, but he doesn't see through the former Duke's identity. With a shake of his head, he returns to looking at the floor.

"No need to be so hostile. You and me are going to be in here for a long time. That is, unless we get executed. Which, honestly, that might happen. This floor is only for the most 'special' of humanity's traitors and enemies, after all."

"Executed." Beelzebub repeats. "Yes. That will probably be my fate. And you?"

"Hmm..." Henry muses. "I don't know. What I did was... they probably won't execute me. But does it matter? Is death any less preferable to living inside these walls where the sun will never shine?"

"You're quite the talkative human." Beelzebub remarks.

"You say that like you're not a human yourself!" Henry lightly laughs. "Got dementia, Robert?"

Beelzebub doesn't answer.

For several long, awkward minutes, he remains silent. Ultimately, he turns around and lays down on his cot, grimacing at the bed's hardness. Unable to use his arms, he can only wriggle around with his waist to try and reorient both his limbs.

After Beelzebub finally gets 'comfortable,' he sighs. "I can't see why you would be down here with me. No matter how you look at it, my crimes must certainly be more heinous than yours. We don't belong in the same cell block, let alone the same cell."

"I didn't actually do anything that directly harmed humanity as a whole." Henry says, shaking his head. "It was more a... matter of principle. I allowed myself to get led around by a demoness. I fed her information without thinking of the consequences."

"Well. That was pretty stupid of you." Beelzebub snorts.

"Yeah..." Henry murmurs, his voice low. "I thought I loved her. I thought she loved me. But in the end, her words were nothing more than sweet little lies. She manipulated me... turned me against my people. Hell, she turned me against my own ideals. My own heart. I betrayed everyone around me, as well as myself. If I had just stuck to my principles, she never could have toyed around with me. I feel ashamed for what I did."

"I had a woman do something similar to me as well." Beelzebub muses. "I really thought I loved her. Maybe I did. Maybe I didn't. She's dead now, so... I'll never truly find out."

"Haha!" Henry laughs. "It's funny you mention that. Yes, the demoness I'm talking about... well, I found out she died recently, too. All my struggle to be with her, and in the end, she never was who she said she was..."

Henry exhales deeply.

"Miss Oshina. She seemed so kind and loving, like a white-clad fairy in a delicate dress. But in the end, she turned out to be a vicious, evil, manipulative demoness. And not just any demoness, but the supreme enemy of humanity... Emperor Ose."

Beelzebub's heart skips a beat.

"Emperor Ose?" He asks, turning his head to look at Henry. "It was her?"

Henry mistakes Beelzebub's surprise for shock that Henry would be duped by humanity's worst enemy. "Exactly. You see? That's why I'm down here. I let that manipulative woman control me to the point I sacrificed my own commander's life. I even believed her lies when she told me the Wordsmiths were colluding with demonkind. In fairness to myself, I believed that Oshina was a human woman... not the supreme leader of demonkind. I wouldn't have followed her if I knew otherwise."

"It's fortunate that Commander Neil survived." Henry continues, oblivious to the varied expressions on Beelzebub's face. "Ose deceived me, but in the end, I didn't manage to cause any true harm. Still, if I had wholeheartedly helped Neil escape the Core's explosion, who knows how many more people he would have been able to save during the Stormbringer Attack? Without his presence, our people lacked a crucial leader during the initial battles. I still indirectly cost humanity countless lives."

He eventually stops talking, as does Beelzebub.

The former Duke of Inferno shifts his eyes to the ceiling. He gazes upward, lost in thought.

Ose lied to this human boy. She lied to me, as well. Deceived me. She used me as a tool for her own gain... and I foolishly blundered along to her wishes like an imbecile. Now I'm a cripple with nothing left of my former glory.

The demon-turned-human snorts bitterly.

I don't even get a decent end to my life. Ultimately, I'll just die like a caged dog. That is how my legacy will conclude.

A sense of unwillingness wells up within Beelzebub's heart.

If only I could change the past. If only I could see through Ose's lies. I would have pushed her to accept the Wordsmith's treaty... then demonkind and humanity wouldn't have suffered such grievous blows.

With Henry finally falling silent, a momentary lull opens up in the conversation.

Beelzebub tilts his head on his pillow to look at the young man again.

"...Thank you." He says.

"Hm? For what?" Henry asks.

"You've given me a lot to think about." Beelzebub cryptically says, not explaining any further. "Maybe I'll even be able to die without regrets."

"Come on, gramps..." Henry says, laughing wryly. "You can't die now. Humanity has so many tools and ways for you to live on. Besides, you're the first person I've gotten to sit down and chat with in weeks! If you die, won't I be left all alone down here?"

Beelzebub lightly shakes his head.

"My living or dying is not for me to decide."

Elsewhere, deep inside the Labyrinth.

Hope Hiro finally arrives at the entrance to the El-Dorado room. Following in his footsteps is none other than Jason's black hole construct, the one shaped in King Arthur's image.

The two of them quickly step inside the room filled with overflowing treasure, gold, and gems. Weapons and armor of a medieval variety litter the floor in huge heaps and mounds. Brilliant magical lights illuminate the room's interior, making Hope wince as he steps out of the Labyrinth's pitch-black hallways into the divinity of the Three Kings.

"I have returned." Hope says, as he sweeps his gaze across the statues of Solomon, King Arthur, and Jepthath. "Awaken."

After uttering a Word of Power, Hope senses the rousing of the Three King's spirits. However, while Arthur and Jepthath quickly bring themselves back to the world of wakefulness, Solomon does not. Due to his merging with his Crown, his spirit no longer resides inside his statue.

"Young man." Jepthath says, his tone neither warm nor cold. "Wordsmith. I feared the worst when you left but did not return. That evil specter which lurked outside this holy room... were you able to handle it?"

Hope's lips tremble. "I... was not. He was a Demon Emperor. And not just any, but a frighteningly powerful one named Gressil."

Hope spends several minutes explaining to Jepthath and Arthur what happened, including his capture and torment by Gressil.

By the end of his speech, Jepthath's aura has grown much more fiery.

"Good. Good! So this Gressil is another bastard in the vein of the ancient Emperors I once slew! This king does not fear a challenge, only that the ones he strikes down will not prove worthy! The suffering that you have endured, young Wordsmith, we will return ten thousand times over!"

Arthur's reaction is much more subdued. "Mmm. Even among the worst demons I've known, Gressil stands out for his cruelty and malice. He inflicts agony and suffering without hesitation. He revels in the pain of others. He is a stain upon creation which must be expunged."

"I agree." Hope murmurs. "But save that talk for later. I came here for a different reason. I need your help, Arthur. Jepthath. I need to find your divine artifacts."

"Excalibur and the Dominion Rod?" Jepthath asks. "And what happened to Solomon's Crown? Don't tell me that child left you, after leaving your original body too."

"Gressil plucked Solomon's Crown off my head, it seems." Hope explains. "And now, it has ended up in the hands of the Volgrim. Just like both of your artifacts. Therefore, I must travel to the Volgrim's core worlds in search of all three artifacts. Only then will I possess the capital to contend with Jason for control of humanity."

Hope gestures to the black hole construct behind him.

"Arthur. By coincidence, Jason happened to craft an incredibly powerful body, one which resembles you. Would you like to possess it and travel with me to the Volgrim's worlds?"

Expecting a rapid and resounding 'yes!', Hope frowns when Arthur doesn't immediately reply.

"Mmm. The appearance is a perfect facsimile... but the soul aura... tsk. There is no resemblance. I will not be able to merge and manipulate that cute little puppet."

Arthur's words carry a hint of melancholy.

"Not that it matters." Arthur continues. "You must remember, Hope. I am not truly Arthur. I am merely a wisp of soul separated from my core soul using Solomon's profound means. The same is true of Jepthath. Our original souls continue to reside in our artifacts. If you try to forcefully extract us from these specially-crafted statues, I fear that we will dissipate in an instant!"

Hope deeply frowns. "Does... does that mean I came here in vain?"

"Perhaps not." Jepthath says. "You wish to seek out the locations of our artifacts, yes? We do not know where they reside. However, we can place our spiritual impressions inside of you, embedding them within your soul. Though your mana manipulation skills are as weak and clumsy as an infant's, even you will be able to sense the presence of our original souls, assuming you draw within a certain distance of them."

"How close will I have to be?" Hope asks.

"It is difficult to guess." Jepthath mutters. "This may seem obvious now that I am saying it, but perhaps you have overlooked this point. I have never stepped foot on another world's soil, and neither has Arthur-boy. Perhaps you will need to be on the same planet as our artifacts, but perhaps you will be able to sense them from farther away. I have no frame of reference, and thus, I cannot say."

Arthur chuckles. "Jepthath speaks truth. Hope, are you not worried? Traveling to a world dominated by the Volgrim... you cannot simply stumble in with your naïve understanding of worldly matters. Or have you forgotten? Among the Volgrim are members of the Psions. They can read minds and peer into the core of the universe. Even if you disguise yourself as a Volgrim, or hide within a spatial rift, do you think these old monsters won't be able to uncover your identity?"

"Haha..." Arthur laughs dryly. "You intend to go and seek out three precious treasures, yet you fail to understand just how frightening your enemies are. I only know of the Volgrim through the actions of Excalibur's inheritors, yet I can say with absolute confidence that they are ten times more terrifying than you can possibly imagine. In a battle against a Ninth Order Psion, such as the Second Founder... even I am not certain I could win."

The more Arthur speaks, the more wary Hope becomes.

"I can only imagine how difficult such a journey would be. But I have no choice! I must seek out the three artifacts. Jason has obtained the power of some unknown, almighty, ancient divine artifact. His power has exploded since he seized it. If I want to challenge him for the right of leading humanity, I need to have sufficient capital."

For a brief moment, nobody speaks.

Then, the blood-red eyes on Jepthath's statue glimmer.

"Isn't this a simple matter to solve?" Jepthath asks. "Just kill Jason. You are a Wordsmith. You have a billion different methods you can use. Jason would never be able to prepare for all of them. Once he is dead, you will become the de facto head of humanity."

"I don't want to take that route." Hope says, his expression gloomy. "I'm not like Jason. I'm not a murderer! I only kill demons... not humans. And besides... if I killed Jason, Phoebe would be..."

A pang of pain flares up in Hope's chest as he imagines the face of the wife he lost, due to Jason's idiotic and thoughtless cloning process.

Phoebe was Hope's woman. They loved each other. Then, one day, she simply wasn't. He had done nothing wrong. He had only cloned himself, but in the end, he turned out to be the clone.

"It wasn't fair..." Hope says, his voice low. "It wasn't."

"Hmph." Jepthath snorts. "In my era, I slew countless demons. But I was not a soft man. I killed humans, too. Disrespectful ones. Ones who slighted my reign or implied they could do better. This is the true way of a king! Even Arthur, he..."

Jepthath's soul energy shifts from Hope to Arthur's statue.

"Speak not of that matter." Arthur icily says. "It was my sin. It was the Greatest Sin. I failed as a Hero on that day."

Hope's eyebrows shoot up.

"What did you do?" Hope asks.

"I will not speak of this matter." Arthur replies. "I will never speak of it. Not to you, nor to anyone else."

With Arthur closing off the conversation, Hope doesn't bother prodding further. After all, it isn't why he came to the El Dorado room in the first place.

"Regarding your impressions of your artifacts," Hope says, "I have to request that you two assist me. If I obtain your artifacts, I will bring them here so that you can merge back into them, as Solomon did with his crown."

"That is a simple enough task." Jepthath says. "I already said I would, and so, I shall. Arthur?"

Arthur, the Greatest Sinner, nods along to Jepthath's words. "I will pass on my impression, as well. Remember, Wordsmith. The stronger the tremors in your soul, the closer you will have drawn to our artifacts. But do not act greedily. The Volgrim are fearsome. They toppled Earth's military might with a wave of their hand. The only reason they struggle now is due to the Threat within the Milky Way. Even so, it will only take one high-ranking Psion to send you scurrying like a rat back into the shadows."

"I'm confident in my abilities." Hope says with a smile. "Let's do this."

"Very well."

A minute later, both Kings flare up their auras for a brief moment before dying back down.

"It is done." Jepthath remarks.

Hope taps the side of his head, then his stomach and heart. He frowns.

"I don't feel any different."

"Unless you draw within the required distance of our artifacts, you won't." Arthur says. "Soul Pressing is a painless process. It is not dissimilar to writing a few words on the back of your hand. Given your mortal-level of soul and mana manipulation, it's not odd you wouldn't sense any changes."

"Why is my mana manipulation so poor, anyway?" Hope asks, slightly exasperated. "A Demon Emperor could blast me full force with their aura and I wouldn't feel a thing."

"Your abilities are broad. You are a generalist." Arthur explains. "Jepthath and I, however, were both specialists. Our abilities were more narrow, but also more explosive and powerful. There is no such thing as a perfect power-set, only a perfect Hero. If you can master your abilities, I've no doubt you will inevitably surpass the two of us."

"We look forward to your future success." Jepthath says. "As for that construct of yours... a pity we cannot use it. Perhaps, when you obtain our original souls, they might have a better chance of success."

"I'll keep that in mind." Hope says. "Thank you, Arthur, Jepthath. I will return sooner or later."

"Hmph. Indeed, you will." Arthur says.

Without another word, Hope turns on his heel and strides out of the room. The black hole construct follows behind him, and minutes later, he vanishes completely.

Both kings remain quiet for a time.

"I hate that I must linger on..." Arthur murmurs. "But there is a certain comfort in seeing the rise of a younger generation."

"That boy is the inheritor of my will." Jepthath states, his tone firm. "He will slay the demons. He must slay them. Only when every last bloodskin has fallen will I allow myself to rest."

Arthur sighs. "That rage... that hatred... it will destroy you, brother."

Jepthath chuckles.

"Heh, heh, heh... it already has, Arthur."

Part 372: Death and Shadows

Inside the unique space nestled within the Milky Way, that special existence known as Hell, countless demons and monsters reside in its interior, calling it their home.

Hell refers to the supermassive, ever-expanding three-dimensional Labyrinth shaped vaguely like a cube. With a relative size tens of times greater than that of Earth, the Labyrinth offers its denizens an incomprehensible amount of living space. Trillions of demons and monsters dig out or otherwise burrow into the blackened hallways of the eternal Labyrinth.

At four of the Labyrinth's eight corners, singular Warp Gates exist, capable of transferring demons not only to Hell Harbor and the Labyrinth Core itself, but the tens of thousands of other worlds in the Milky Way.

But, at the other four corners, no such gates exist.

The further one deviates from the zones of life near the Warpgates, the deeper they travel into the Dead Zones.

These so-called Dead Zones are not exactly places rich with death energy, but rather, places the Labyrinth's myriad species haven't bothered to colonize. Traveling across all of Hell can take ages for low-level existences. And since high level existences, such as Gorgons, Trolls, or Overlord Orcs, will often require the services of slaves and low-level existences, they won't bother to make their nests and shrines and altars too far from the transfer zones of the Warpgates.

In fact, among the demons and monsters, it is a well-known fact that only the most pitiful and pathetic existences will eke out their worthless lives in the four Dead Zones.

But, at the same time, these Dead Zones offer a perfect refuge for an unexpected type of life-form...

A demon who must avoid being seen at all costs.

Mephisto, formerly the Duke of Mist, but now the Emperor of Legions, stakes out a claim on a small and carefully hidden patch of land somewhere in the south-eastern Dead Zone.

After much preparation and investigation, Mephisto spends a full week placing down soul isolation barriers, mana suppressing barriers, and other such enchantments to hide his existence, as well as those belonging to his necromantic servants.

The Emperor of Legions quietly finishes the final bit of work in solidifying a safe zone for those who follow the call of the dead. Once he completes his work, he cannot help but exhale a sigh of relief.

"Kss... The Wordsssmith'sss sssensssesss are formidable... but I know well the limitsss of his reach. If he findsss me, he will ssslay me. But if he doesss not? Kekeke..."

More than a little tired due to his diligent efforts, Mephisto slumps backward, plopping down on a throne made of bone. Inside this inner chamber of a small palace hewn into the Labyrinth's halls, dark blue flames light up candelabras on the walls, giving every inch of his 'royal chamber' a sickening, ghostly hue.

Inside Mephisto's palace, fewer than two hundred necromancers and their twenty thousand minions join him, with each of them digging out their own rooms to reside within. The vast arrays Mephisto placed down might not compare to those crafted by fairies, but they can still offer him a certain level of concealment and protection.

Ozzar, the Baron of Leprosy, slithers out of the shadows into his master's barely illuminated room.

"Great Emperor, now that we have completed the construction of our... temporary accommodations... to what matters should we attend next?"

Mephisto's expression turns gloomy when he hears his subordinate's words.

"Ksss. In truth, I am not fully cccertain. I can travel unssseen and unhindered within the Labyrinth. But, the ressst of you cannot. Anywhere we go, the other Emperorsss will attack usss on sssight. The Wordsssmith'sss machinationsss are not to be underessstimated. He has already ssseized hold of their weaknesssesss by usssing 'Merit Pointsss' to turn them into hisss ssservantsss."

"If only we could make use of those points ourselves." Ozzar grumbles. "But Master, this setback is only temporary. Your glory towers above all the other peasants aspiring to become the future leader of demonkind. That Wordsmith acts like a lion, but in truth, he is quite soft and lovable, yes? He spared the other Emperors, showing his weak, human side. In time, if you avoid his gaze, he may even forget you exist!"

"If only that wasss the cassse..." Mephisto growls, unwilling to believe Ozzar's fantasies. "Isss the Wordsssmith sssoft? Yesss. But forgetful? No."

Mephisto rises from his throne. He strokes his chin, grinding his boney fingers against the pointed tip of his skinless jaw, creating a wretched sound like nails on a chalkboard.

"What to do next... I believe the anssswer isss sssimple. I mussst firssst intimidate the other Emperorsss. It will not take them much effort to deduccce my location. There are only ssso many placesss I can hide, after all. But sssinccce I can hide from the Wordsssmith by turning my body and sssoul ethereal, I can sssilently sssneak attack thossse who would plunge their daggersss into my back!"

"A brilliant ploy, Master Mephisto." Ozzar grovels, bending over at the waist while looking up at his master's back. "You can sneak up on the other Emperors and instantly kill them when their awareness is lowest. And with the Belial Booster and Body Boosters draining their strength, there are certain to be times when they're at their weakest!"

A flicker of light flashes through Mephisto's eyes. "Yesss. True..."

"Each Emperor you kill will only add to your magnificence!" Ozzar exclaims. His black and red robes crackle as he stands up, a shudder of excitement flickering through his bones. "Once you force them to bow to you in death, you will also reap the rewards of any deals they've made with the Wordsmith!"

"Excccellent obssservationsss." Mephisto muses. "In which cassse, I ssshould not russsh to ssstrike them down. Let usss wait a month or two. They will reap the benefitsss of the Belial Boossster and the other Wordsssmith facccilitiesss. In the meantime, I can look for sssuitable Dukesss to-"

Mephisto suddenly pauses.

The Emperor of Legions frowns deeply. His head flicks toward a dark corner of the room. Immediately, he turns his body ethereal, exploding into mist and becoming impossible to see or detect.

"Who goesss there?!" Mephisto roars.

A few seconds pass, before a deep, dark voice whispers from the shadows.

"Come now, Mephisto. Did you think those elementary enchantments would keep the likes of us out of your business?"

A shadow melts out of the darkness, exposing a huge, cruel-looking demonic face.

Yama, the Emperor of Shadows, casually reveals himself.

Sensing no particular malice in Yama's appearance, Mephisto slowly materializes once more, but he keeps a wary eye on the intruder.

"For what reassson have you come, Emperor of Ssshadowsss?"

Yama chuckles. "Hehe. Isn't it obvious? We are in the same boat as you. The Wordsmith has declared that any Emperors who chance upon our existence should eliminate us at once. Of course, we have already long made many enemies and grown used to hiding in the Labyrinth's shadows. We even created our own secret Domain, a place where we can hide our forces without others finding them. Compared to our home, your shabby little hut isn't worth a piss in the wind."

"Come to gloat, have you?" Mephisto asks, also chuckling under his breath. "I didn't think you were the type."

"Not to gloat. To make a deal." Yama mutters. "You and us, we are both enemies of demonkind. But we both know that if the Wordsmiths were to disappear, so too would our chains. Killing just one of them won't solve our problems. Only killing both will. But neither of us possess the ability to rip them apart."

Mephisto stands up a little straighter.

"You... wisssh to propossse... an allianccce?"

"Naturally." Yama replies. "But there is a problem. We have not told many people of this matter, but we swear it is true... a certain demon recently came back from the dead. His revival caused us to suffer a terrible loss. We can no longer corrupt fresh young flowers to join our ranks."

"A cccertain demon?" Mephisto asks, as a strange look colors his face. "Who wasss it?"

"Satan the Devil." Yama answers. "And as to how he managed to return from death for a second time... the one who summoned him turned out to be... Bael!"

"Bael? He brought back the Devil?!" Mephisto gasps. "Nonssenssse! Bael isss no necromancccer! And even if he wasss, Sssatan has already suffered a True Death. Hisss body and sssoul ssscattered to assshesss. They passsed through the Great Beyond'sss bubble, and can never again return to the mortal realm!"

"We know that what we are saying sounds like an impossibility, but we swear in the name of the Seven Hells that we speak the truth!" Yama proclaims. He conjures a blackened palm of shadow and places it upon his chest. "Further, we believe that Bael can even revive other great figures of the past from death! He brought back Emperor Shax during the battle against the Archangels, and caused us to suffer another great loss!"

Hearing this incredible news, Mephisto can only stare at Yama with a mixture of disbelief and incredulity.

If Yama is telling the truth, then the news would prove worldshaking.

But if he is lying, it would be the most unbelievable and bald-faced lie Mephisto has ever heard in all his years!

The fact nobody would dare to utter such an idiotic lie proves to Mephisto that Yama must be telling the truth!

Mephisto turns his head to the side. He falls deep into thought, unsure of what to do.

"Listen to us." Yama says, slithering a little closer to Mephisto. "Satan wasn't simply brought back from the Great Beyond. He also possessed all of his original powers. That ancient Soul Contract, the one he claimed he had long ago erased... he used it on us to make us never again corrupt a female into our Harem! If Bael can summon other figures from demonkind's past, who knows how powerful he will become?"

Mephisto grimaces. "I have no control over Bael. He ssshould be my undead ssslave, but he isssn't. He sssomehow broke free due to hisss ssspecccial sssoul. More importantly, how and why did he manifessst thisss new power? Everyone knowsss Bael and magic are incompatible! They are like oil and water. They cannot coexissst!"

"Perhaps that was true before, but it isn't now." Yama retorts. "In any case, Bael isn't our main concern. You have to make a decision. Will you ally with us? We must work together if we are to kill the Wordsmith and seize control of the Seven Hells! Since we are riding the same boat, there is no need to speak of 'sincerity.' So, what do you say, Mephisto?"

Yama draws in even closer to Mephisto. A gleam appears in his eye.

"Do we have a deal?"

Elsewhere in the Labyrinth.

A demoness sits on a random rock in a hallway not far from the Oracle Hive, the place where Demon Oracles work to gather intelligence for the Seven Hells. This demoness wears an armless T-shirt that exposes her midriff, her cute, tight little booty shorts, and knee-high black leather boots.

Her identity? Abby, the Baron of Happy Thoughts.

However, contrary to her demonic title, a truly sad expression rests on her face. She sits numbly in the same spot she has sat for well over a week, staring blankly at the floor. While the Oracles around her continue going about their business, some of the longer-lived ones shoot curious glances at her before shaking their heads.

"Abby's still in that same spot, huh?" One Oracle asks another.

"Yup. Ever since Ose died... tsk."

"I don't get it. Ose seemed like such an ice queen. Were the two of them close?"

"You wouldn't think so. Ose never liked Abby. But in truth, they were both Barons and both worked together on a lot of occasions. Abby even fought alongside Ose during the Energy Wars. She picked up a certain knowledge of human culture, just like Ose did. Hell, I heard she even sang in Bael's band."

"Damn. I guess Ose's death must have really... hit her hard? Someone should go and cheer her up."

The older Oracle shakes his head. "There's no point in trying. Abby always had a huge crush on Ose. Now that Ose's experienced Two Deaths, she'll never walk the mortal coil again. For matters like this, you just have to give our older sister some time and space."

"Mmm. I'll leave her alone, then."

The discussions continue among the many different Oracles, with the longer-lived ones explaining or giving hints to the less-knowledgeable ones.

One day, Abby sighs deeper than she ever has before. A shudder goes through her bones as she finally resolves herself.

"...She's really gone." Abby mumbles. "Man. I didn't think... I mean... I promised Ose if she died... but I didn't think she'd really just..."

Abby recalls that conversation she had with Ose, six years earlier, shortly after her ascension to Emperor. When the Wordsmith first appeared, and Ose realized a great calamity might someday befall all of demonkind if the Hero wasn't handled properly.

"We were so close." Abby says, her voice imperceptible. "But I couldn't save her. That evil, evil Wordsmith... he murdered her. She was always so misunderstood. She was a victim! And he actually just... he's such a monster..."

Abby shakily climbs off the rock. Her legs tremble slightly, more from emotion than any mortal failing, like hunger. As a demon, she can exist in perpetuity without consuming food or water.

Compared to the emotional loss of the demoness she loved most, no amount of physical pain has ever cut Abby's soul so deeply.

"I promised Ose." She mutters. "I promised her. And friends... we keep our promises."

Slowly, Abby shuffles out of the Oracle Hive. She begins walking toward an unknown destination, somewhere very, very far from her current location, a place hidden deep within the furthest recesses of Hell.

Despite Abby's rank of Baron, and her speed usually being more than enough to travel halfway across Hell in just a few days, she takes her time walking the whole way, mostly so her thoughts can whirl around in her head.

Abby passes thousands of other demons, many of whom recognize her. When they call out or say hello, she doesn't even hear their words, so numb is her heart.

Three weeks pass.

Eventually, Abby arrives inside a simple, nondescript hallway somewhere in the northern reaches of the Labyrinth. This hallway appears completely ordinary, like any other for hundreds of miles around it. Not a soul stirs in the area for a thousand miles in any direction.

Abby glances at a simple ring on her finger. Its diamond gem glows bright white, like the color of lightning, and the closer she holds her hand to the wall, the brighter its glow becomes.

The Baron of Happy Thoughts sighs.

"Ose... why couldn't it have been me who died? How am I ever supposed to smile again... without you?"

A few moments quietly pass. Abby eventually clenches her hand into a fist, lifts up her ring, and begins drawing a series of demonic runes on the wall.

It takes her a full hour to draw more than two hundred of these demonic runes, all while pouring her mana into the ring. When she finishes, she exhales deeply, her face flushing with blood.

"Open."

With a single word, Abby activates those demonic runes. A vertical crack splits the wall in half, and both halves begin to slide to the left and right, revealing a hidden inner chamber.

Abby's mood dims visibly as she watches the room reveal itself, allowing her to enter.

In her mind, Ose's words replay.

If I perish, that will mean the Wordsmiths have won. Even so, there is always a chance for demonkind to regain its momentum. Travel to the designated place and use this code. All will be revealed to you at that point.

When the doors open and Abby walks into the room, she cocks her head slightly, glancing quizzically at the hidden chamber's contents.

Inside, a demonic pentagram drawn on the floor in blood immediately captures her attention. To Abby's surprise, the aura emanating from the blood is painfully familiar, as it belongs to a familiar Emperor-level powerhouse.

"Ose..." Abby mutters.

Just as Abby recognizes the demonic blood's origin, a movement in the back left corner of the room makes her jump in surprise!

She whirls to the left, only to see a skinless, metal robot step out of a previously unimportant-looking alcove. The metallic robot stomps its feet against the floor. Its two blood-red irises lock onto Abby with mechanical indifference, while its frightening facial features make it look like a machine designed to destroy all biological life.

"What the hell?!" Abby exclaims, tripping over her own feet as she sees the 'metal monster' take a step toward her. "Aaaah!"

She falls backward and lands on her butt, quickly shoving herself backward across the floor until she presses against a wall.

"S-stay away! Eeeyaah!" Abby cries.

"Demonic life form designated 'Abby.'" The robot says. "My designation is the Automated Demon Assistant Mechanoid. You may call me ADAM for short."

ADAM pauses, perhaps sensing Abby's fear.

"I have been awaiting your arrival. According to Master Ose's specifications, if you were to come, that would indicate her life had expired. Should I take this as confirmation that Master Ose no longer exists in this world?"

Abby's eyes go up and down the metal machine's head, body, and legs. She gazes at its contours, and its frightening face, looking like a truly hellish demon from some ancient story told to frighten human children. When contrasted with its gruff but otherwise polite tone, she simply cannot resolve these wild differences in her head.

"I... yes... Ose... dead..." Abby says, her voice shaking. "Don't... don't come any closer! What the hell are you?!"

"As I said before." ADAM patiently repeats. "I was placed here by Master Ose in case demonkind should suffer a great loss, or the event of her death. I am a reprogrammed Protectorate, a machine that once belonged to the Volgrim. Now, I am your assistant, and hopefully the salvation of demonkind."

ADAM stares at Abby with its blood-red, lifeless eyes.

"Do you require any assistance in standing?"

Abby immediately shoots to her feet. She continues to press her back against the wall, while shaking her head.

"N-no! No help needed! I'm fine! Don't touch me!"

"I am fully aware of the prejudice toward technology that all demons feel." ADAM states. "Your feelings of fear do not offend me. I am incapable of feeling offense. However, if you remain like this, I will not be able to demonstrate to you my Master's grand plan for saving demonkind. Will you be able to calm your nerves and restore your mind to a state of serenity?"

For several minutes, neither Abby nor ADAM moves. Abby closes her eyes. She inhales and exhales deeply, while forcibly trying to control her fear. Like all demons, she is not only ignorant to technology, but terrified of it, especially when it suddenly 'springs' upon her out of nowhere.

Still, ADAM's simple movements, calm voice, and lack of hostility eventually manage to pacify her.

"O...okay. What are you... going to show me?" Abby asks.

Adam immediately nods. The robot gestures toward the demonic pentagram drawn on the floor in blood.

"This is a spatial transfer pentagram." ADAM explains. "Master Ose drew it with her own blood. She coded its effects to only function for a small handful of demons, with you being one of them. In truth, Master Ose did not trust most people, but she did trust you. She believed that if demonkind were to face a calamity, you would carry out her wishes. Now, you need only step on this pentagram and activate it with your mana. It will automatically transfer us to the... 'Facility.'"

Abby frowns. "Facility? What is that? Some sort of secret base?"

ADAM's unblinking eyes gaze into Abby's.

"Affirmative."

With Ose's death hanging on Abby's conscience, in truth, she would do anything for the woman she loved. The Baron of Happy Thoughts feels a warmth bubble in her heart at the realization that despite how Ose treated her somewhat coldly, in fact, she didn't hate her like she always said she did.

"Ose... she really did care..." Abby mumbles.

Without delay, Abby steps onto the spatial transfer mechanism. At the same time, so does ADAM.

"I will join you. The Facility contains extreme amounts of high technology. For the average demon, it will be an overwhelming experience. Please do not be frightened by whatever you see. I assure you, nothing there is designed to deliberately harm you."

As Abby pours her mana into the pentagram, she frowns.

"Wait, what do you mean, 'deliberately?'"

Fwoosh!

The Pentagram illuminates with a blood-red light, and the sensation of space tearing swallows Abby and ADAM whole!

A moment later, both of them vanish, transported elsewhere in the galaxy to a secret place nobody alive has ever seen before…

Part 373: Garden of Eden

The space around the Baron of Happy Thoughts contracts and shrinks, stretching her perception of reality. A feeling of suction swallows her brain, momentarily making her black out.

An unknown amount of time later, Abby's eyes open. She finds herself in a brightly lit area, with spots dancing in her vision. ADAM stands beside her, its metallic arm lightly holding her up by the back of her shirt.

"Apologies. The spatial transfer array was improperly aligned. You encountered a higher than expected amount of distortion during the transfer. Are you injured?"

Abby blinks twice. She glances around, completely unable to wrap her head around the strange place she's arrived in.

A huge, metal box.

That is Abby's first impression, due to the steel walls, ceiling, and floor surrounding her.

She immediately feels as if she has teleported into a giant aluminum box, but as she orients herself, she finds that she has arrived atop a hovering platform some two hundred feet in the air, suspended inside a gigantic hangar of incomprehensible size. Below her, thousands of mechanized drones and robots mill about, all of them performing work on strangely shaped 'things' which she can only reluctantly recognize as spaceships.

Indeed, despite her casual ignorance of technology, Abby has observed spaceships before. During the Energy Wars, not only did she encounter numerous Volgrim ships, but even the humans made significant technological progress during that time.

But the ships below Abby appear completely different. As if carved from rock, she finds herself surprised by the exterior layer of blackened demonstone coating their surface. Some of the ships look like two long tubes with an orb in between them. Others look like rectangular cubes with heavy engines mounted on the back, as well as weapons of an unknown nature on their tops and sides. The majority of the ships look like they could fit crews of a dozen or so people comfortably, but the bigger ones seem tailor-made for crews of more than a hundred, or even a thousand!

All of the robots and drones busily attend to these hundreds of craft, maintaining them or even building new ones. Abby quickly spots a few works in progress; ships lacking their outer shell that show their exposed innards.

"I'm... I'm fine." Abby says, slightly dazed. "Where is this? Where are we?"

"This facility is known as The Garden of Eden." ADAM states. "It is a long-kept secret which Master Ose never spoke to anyone about. This facility was intended to be her weapon against the Volgrim Empire. In her final years, she changed her priority to that of surviving the Plague, as well as posing a threat to humanity. You will tell me the manner in which she died."

Instead of requesting information, ADAM forcefully orders Abby to describe Ose's final moments. Abby stands up a little straighter and swats ADAM's hand off the back of her shirt.

"Fine, fine. Don't touch me! I'll tell you what I know."

Abby briefly details the circumstances behind Ose's death. She tells ADAM about the Wordsmith's execution of Ose through his Arthur-puppet, and the other events ADAM is unaware of, including humanity's newest demon-enthralling gadgets.

"You did not witness Master Ose's death yourself?" ADAM asks.

"No. I heard about it through the Oracle network, though." Abby mumbles, averting her eyes. "She's gone. The only woman I ever liked..."

"Death is not always the end." ADAM states. "Master Ose anticipated that someone might kill her. Even after obtaining full control of Bael's body, she made preparations in the event of her untimely demise."

"Preparations?" Abby repeats. "Do you mean this facility? What is it? What is the point of this place?"

ADAM takes two steps forward, arriving at the edge of the hovering platform. Before the robot, a digital console springs into existence, projected holographically through a lens on his hand. ADAM manipulates the holographic controls, causing the platform to zip forward, traveling at a breezy 50 kilometers an hour above the hangar floor.

As the two of them fly, Abby's eyes can't help but notice just how many robots there are swarming all over the Garden of Eden. Despite being labeled a 'garden,' there isn't a single inch of greenery anywhere in the entire facility, not that she can see, anyway.

"The Garden of Eden is demonkind's final refuge." ADAM states. "Following the end of the Energy Wars, the angels and Titans were killed. Humanity was defeated. But although demonkind ultimately prevailed over all of their old rivals, they could not contend with a fraction of the Volgrim's power. At that point, Master Ose was only a Baron, and she remained as such, all the way up to her Emperor ascension six years ago."

ADAM continues. "Even so, Master Ose was a genius savant. Unlike all her compatriots, she was talented in the art of creating technology. She alone possessed the foresight to craft contingency plans which might someday preserve demonkind's power."

As ADAM speaks, he gestures to Abby's right, in the opposite direction of her current gaze. Abby follows his finger. The platform flies around the corner of the facility's wall, travels down a short but tall and wide shipping corridor, and ultimately arrives inside a different branch of the Garden of Eden.

Inside, Abby sees something that shocks her to her core.

A supermassive spaceship, more than ten kilometers in diameter, shaped like a huge sphere with one hundred metal legs attached to its base, sits alone in this secondary hangar bay. Resembling a strange, alien creature made of demonstone, the ship seemingly slumbers in place, allowing the horde of robots to swarm around it and maintain its systems. Even when not in use, there are plenty of things that require attending to, so the ship must always stay maintained.

"This is EVE." ADAM states. "EVE 001, to be precise. There are seven EVEs in total, one for each of the Seven Hells. Master Ose built them as a final place for demonkind to assemble, should a great crisis befall them. They are self-sustaining exoships with perfectly recirculating internal systems. In total, five hundred thousand demons may live comfortably inside of them."

"In truth," ADAM continues, "these Ark-class vessels, if used, would indicate a great defeat. Only if demonkind completely falls to humanity should they be utilized."

"Incredible!" Abby gasps. "Oh, Ose! I can't believe you thought this far ahead! She's so amazing, just like I always said she was!"

"Demonkind is not the only species to create Ark-ships." ADAM states. "The Volgrim have also done so. Furthermore, the Wordsmith created several miniature ships called Covenant ships. All of them have similar functions. The core difference between EVE and other Ark ships is its power source."

Adam pauses to look at Abby.

"EVE's inner power cells are energized through mana. Not electricity. This allows them to possess an inexhaustible amount of power, so long as there are demons rich in mana to release their energy into EVE's cores."

"A mana-powered ship?" Abby asks, her expression thoughtful. "If anyone could invent such a thing, it would certainly be Ose..."

ADAM continues piloting the platform across the hangar. The robot eventually pulls up to a docking platform, where it and Abby both get off and continue walking until they reach the central control facility. They enter a series of white-painted hallways, leaving behind the mechanoid-like atmosphere of the spaceship hangars for the more 'livable space' in the facility's interior. As they walk, they pass dozens of other robots similar to ADAM, though many of these machines have different limbs for different functions, such as maintenance and manipulation. Not one machine even glances at Abby. To them, she doesn't even exist.

"Say... where are we, anyway?" Abby asks. "We can't still be in the Labyrinth, can we?"

"The Garden of Eden's location is a closely guarded secret." ADAM explains. "You are not authorized to know where we have traveled. We are deep beneath a planet's crust, where even the Volgrim's most powerful sensors will not penetrate easily. Beyond this information, I will not speak further."

"Oh. Alright." Abby says, slightly dazed by that realization. "We traveled all the way across the galaxy to the inside of a planet. Ose's teleportation thingy is... so cool!"

"Your enthusiasm is noted, if not appreciated." ADAM intones. "Now, take a look. We have arrived."

ADAM stops before a door leading into a seemingly random room. Several doors line the hallway, and the door ADAM chooses doesn't appear all that important. However, outside this one are several highly advanced scanners and analyzers, all of them dedicated to proving the identity of anyone seeking entry into the room.

Barring the path is a sturdy looking steel door with hexagonal lines criss-crossing its outer surface. The honeycomb structure gives the door added resilience in the event of an attempted forced entry, not that Abby would bother with such a thing.

"What's inside here?" Abby asks, batting her eyes at the creepy robot.

"A specially developed artifact, created personally by Master Ose. This artifact was originally intended to be a trump card used against the Volgrim, until the Wordsmith's emergence six years ago destroyed the need for it."

ADAM's fingers rapidly type a hundred digits into the keypad, its fingers moving far too fast for Abby to follow them. After uploading several bits of information related to its own identity, ADAM turns to Abby while holding out a transparent glass slide in the palm of its metallic hand.

"Baron of Happy Thoughts. Saliva."

Abby stares at him blankly.

"P-pardon?"

"Please deposit your saliva onto this slide. Your DNA is required to gain entry to this room."

Adam calmly states his order, ignoring the look of embarrassment on Abby's face.

"Why the heck would you need my saliva?" Abby asks.

"For DNA scanning purposes." ADAM replies.

"I... have no idea what that means."

ADAM spends the next several minutes explaining to the technologically illiterate demoness what DNA is and why he needs it, but she still scratches her head, eventually resorting to thinking the giant robot must be fucking with her.

"If you wish to see Master Ose's artifact, you must deposit a small amount of saliva onto this slide. No exceptions." ADAM finally states, drawing a hard line.

Abby wiggles her feet and rubs her hand together, feeling gross about the situation, but eventually relents and daintily drools on the slide, grimacing at the robot as she does.

"Ptoo! There! Are you happy?! That's soooo gross!"

"I experience no emotions as a result of your compliance." ADAM states, before turning and placing the saliva-covered slide on a DNA scanner.

Moments later, a red light above the door blinks before turning green. With a loud hiss, the reinforced door opens up, revealing a dark room inside.

As Abby looks into the room, a wave of powerful demonic mana wafts out, slightly startling her, but also making her pupils dilate with excitement.

"Ohmygosh! OH! MY! GOSH!! What the heck?! I can feel Ose's energy! Is she in here? Did she freaking clone herself or something?! That's SO exactly what Ose would do!"

Before ADAM can reply, Abby bounces excitedly into the dark inner room, and her eyes quickly adjust. However, instead of chancing upon a cloned body of Ose, or some other thing resembling such, she instead finds herself in a demonic armory with dozens of demonstone weapons mounted on the walls. Swords, sabers, polearms, spears, staves, axes, hammers, the list goes on and on. The room's walls are also coated in demonstone, absorbing the light cast by the minimal overhead bulbs and giving the room an ominous feeling.

At the back of the room, a pitch-black set of demonstone armor stands at attention, fastened to the wall. Spikes jut out of its shoulders. Its fully enclosed helmet gives Abby the impression someone could be lurking inside, ready to pounce at her and strike! Resembling a medieval demon lord's platemail, this set of armor possesses a fearsome aura. Lightning crackles off of it, causing the hair to stand up on her head. And, at the same time, Abby realizes Ose's aura seems to be emanating... from the armor's core!

ADAM walks up behind Abby. The robot's eyes contain neither reverence nor interest, only mild indifference.

"This is the Matriarch's Armor." ADAM says. "Master Ose created it before obtaining Bael's body. She spent more than twelve thousand years pouring her energy into it, and even a wisp of her soul. This armor can function autonomously at five percent efficiency, but in the hands of her original body, it can display a fearsome power, increasing her combat strength threefold. She originally crafted the Matriarch's Armor in the hopes it would allow her to fight on equal footing against the High Psions. However, she was unable to test that hypothesis, and now, it remains here."

A burst of excitement goes up Abby's spine. "You said Ose put a sliver of her soul in it?! Then doesn't that mean she's still alive?! We have to bring her back! We have to revive her!!"

Abby starts hopping up and down giddily, the agony of Ose's death instantly vanishing from her mind, replaced instead with thoughts of bringing her beloved back to life. However, ADAM remains unmoved.

"Master Ose's soul is permanently bound to the Matriarch Armor. Only by reattaching to her original body can she regain her autonomy and 'resurrect.' However, after her first death, and the swapping of souls and bodies with the Duke of Pain, Master Ose expressed to me that she could no longer forcibly take back her original body. Bael's soul is too powerful. Too resilient. However, if he were to wear this armor... he would be capable of interfacing with it. Therefore, the reason Master Ose wished for you to someday travel here was for this purpose."

Abby turns around to look at ADAM. "Wait, I don't understand. What purpose, exactly?"

"Bael is demonkind's final option, if the worst should occur." ADAM states. "If you are able to convince him to don the Matriarch's Armor, Master Ose can continue using his body -her original body- as an avatar. While she will not be able to fully resurrect, she will be able to speak through him and continue moving along her plans for the Garden of Eden."

Abby frowns. "Forget Bael! What about me?! Can't I just get in the armor? I wanna talk to my precious-wecious Ose!! She should be all mine! Let me give it a try!"

ADAM's gaze turns cross. "Master Ose stated that you would act possessively toward her. It seems her psychological analysis was correct. If you wish, you may attempt to don the Matriarch Armor. However, your soul will not be able to interface with Master Ose's remnant soul. You will fail. Only the Duke of Pain can do so, and that is because his body possesses a connection to Master Ose's soul sliver."

Abby huffs. "Well, I won't know unless I try! Here I go!!"

Without waiting for ADAM's permission, Abby grabs the helmet and puts it on. She begins pulling the gauntlets, boots, and chestplate off the wall, donning them one after the other. To her surprise, the armor actually changes its size to accommodate her smaller frame. The chestplate opens up and wraps around her, engulfing her in its wretched, evil aura.

After a few minutes, Abby finishes. She spreads out her demonic sense and quickly finds a solidified pentagram drawn in blood in the suit's interior, pressing against the back of her neck. In it, the sensation of a soul laying dormant grabs her attention.

"Ose! Ose, it's me, Abby! It's your bestest-best friend in the whole wide world! Come on, don't be shy! I can feel you in there! Wakey-wakey, eggs and bakey!~"

Abby prods Ose's soul dozens of times. She whispers sweet nothings to her, all in a sickeningly, aggravatingly syrupy tone.

However, no matter what Abby says, Ose's soul doesn't respond.

After thirty minutes, Abby's spirits deflate like a punctured balloon. She stares at ADAM in front of her with a look of defeat.

"This... she really can't hear me? There has to be a way we can talk..."

"You misunderstand the Matriarch Armor's purpose." ADAM states. "It is not a vehicle for Master Ose's revival. At the very least, it was never intended to be. Her soul sliver only exists to grant the armor a certain degree of remote autonomy. Bringing her original body into the armor can be said to be a loophole, a minor way of returning her brilliant mind to life. And now, Baron of Happy Thoughts, I must entrust this mission to you. You will bring the Duke of Pain here so that we can place him inside the Matriarch Armor. Only then can Master Ose's final plans for demonkind's survival become active at a moment's notice."

Feeling more than a little dismal, Abby simply nods. She begins pulling off pieces of the Matriarch's Armor, then places them back onto the mounts on the wall. Not long after, she fully extricates herself and gazes gloomily at them.

"It's so unfair..." Abby mutters. "Why couldn't it have been me? If only Ose body-swapped with me, everything would have been perfect. Then we could have hugged, and kissed, and-"

"We will now return to the spatial transfer glyph." ADAM interrupts, not bothering with Abby's whining. "The sooner you complete your mission, the better. Do you know the Duke of Pain's current location?"

ADAM leads Abby out of the Matriarch's Armory, closing the door behind them. Once they leave, Abby shrugs.

"I don't know. He probably went to Tarus II. That's where everyone goes, these days. Bunch of fleshbag bootlickers. All the Emperors are eager to kiss the Wordsmith's butt if it means they can scrounge up some benefits."

"I understand the general concept of the 'Belial Booster.'" Adam says. "However, the truth is, such a device was never necessary for demonkind to thrive. If the Volgrim did not exist, your species could have easily bred humans en-masse and slaughtered them by the billions for the sake of reaping their souls. The population limits enforced on humanity by the Volgrim were as much a limit on humanity as they were a limit on demonkind."

ADAM glances at Abby. "If demonkind were to leave the Milky Way and escape the pull of the Volgrim, your species could simply breed humans en-masse. Would that not solve your internal political problems?"

Abby's heart skips a beat. Her eyes shine with light.

"You're... you're right. I never thought about that. I always did find it weird we had so few human souls. We should have had billions of them, but we barely had millions, and we always spread them around the lower-ranked demons. We pretty much never used them to advance Barons, Dukes, or Emperors..."

"The reasons for doing so were myriad and diverse." ADAM states. "If one Hell were to suddenly gain an additional Duke or Emperor, the others would become outraged. As a result, the safest way to keep the balance and not risk a revolt was by maintaining the status quo. Prior to the Stormbringer War, Beelzebub was one of the very few demons to rapidly advance through the ranks."

"Beelze-chump!" Abby snorts. "That ugly hothead! Ew! He was always eying my precious Ose, but she'd never give HIM the time of day! Ose only loved ME and nobody else! I should have been the one to advance to the rank of Duke, then me and my Ose could have been together forever!"

If ADAM could sigh, he most certainly would, especially when faced with Abby's relentless barrage of Ose-loving word-vomit.

"Noted. You are indeed exactly the demoness that Master Ose described."

"Damn right!" Abby exclaims. "And don't you worry! I'll drag that Bael here, kicking and screaming if I must! He'll definitely bring back my Ose, for real!"

"I hope to hear of your eventual success." ADAM states.

Part 374: Gorn's Seclusion

At the outskirt of Tarus II's Warpgate Encampment.

Not long after finishing his business with the Wordsmith, Emperor Gorn confidently swaggers his way out of the city, passing the numerous humans that have begun to spring up in houses, duplexes, and large apartment complexes. The further west he goes, the smaller the population, before ultimately reaching a half-mile zone without any structures, in between the Fortress of Retribution and the Warpgate Encampment.

When Gorn reaches the encampment, a few monster guards at the gate, namely a pair of Harpies, quickly scan his body for any strange paraphernalia before waving him through. Gorn reaches the Warpgate itself only a few minutes later, and ultimately passes through to the Labyrinth Core, where he finds himself amidst a bustling hub of activity. No longer is the Core merely a place for humans and their allies to meet up, but it has actually become ten times more densely packed with demons as well.

Newly rebuilt, the Core features multiple levels for people to conduct their business. It functions not only as a transfer between worlds through its seven Warpgates, but also a trading hub for all the different species to congregate.

On the bottom-most level, the computers responsible for calculating Warpgate transfer coordinates have been rebuilt from the ground up by Phoebe Hiro, allowing for the gates to deactivate and reactivate two times faster than they did prior to Stormbringer. While it may have taken ten or twenty minutes to calculate Warpgate coordinates in the past, now it typically only takes five to ten.

The level above the computer center is the primary level, where people enter and exit the Warpgates. Instead of a bowl-like formation, the entire Core has been remade to feature as flat of ground as possible; extra useful for transferring vehicles and supplies between worlds.

As for the third, fourth, and fifth levels, these mostly consist of demons, humans, and monsters waiting for their gates to open next. Only by collectively contributing Merit Tokens can any group accelerate the speed of their gate transfer opening up. Even for Gorn, a lauded Emperor of the demons, he cannot demand for a gate to his homeworld to be opened before those of other people, unless he contributes a substantial number of his own Merit Tokens.

Sadly, this cannot be helped. With only seven Warpgates but billions of potential people needing to travel to hundreds of different locations and worlds, the Core must be put on a strictly limited and regulated rotation of worlds to maintain order.

When Gorn steps through the Tarus II Warpgate, the central of the seven which always remains active and connected to Tarus II, he inhales deeply.

A smug smile flashes across Gorn's face as he dwells on the truly fortuitous encounter he just enjoyed.

"Hehehe... Wordsmith. You have helped me more than you know."

Gorn turns to an Orc stationed near the Tarus II Warpgate.

"Where is the group for Diabolus?" Gorn asks.

The Orc turns to evaluate him, and immediately snaps to attention when he spots Gorn's Emperor-level horns.

"Urgh. Diabolus group. Third Level. East Wing."

Gorn nods. "Very good."

He ignores the orc's presence and wades into the crowd before him, more than two hundred thousand people all mashed together with only a few feet between them at any given spot. Not only does Gorn pass humans, but goblins scurrying beneath his feet, minotaurs towering above his head, and even other demons who glance at him in surprise when they sense his aura passing them by. Even with humanity and demonkind technically united, Emperors are still rarely seen, and hardly any low-level demon Grunts will ever witness a living Emperor in the flesh.

Gorn rides an elevator to the third level. He walks to a seating arrangement where more than twenty-thousand demons from his Hell of Calamity await their turn to travel home.

Among these demons are also a smaller group of Orcs. Gorn raises an eyebrow when he spots one of the orcs, an older male of notable origin.

"Shorath, fourth son of Maltus, the First Ancient." Gorn says, taking a seat in the waiting area beside that tall, imposing Orc. "Quite some time has passed since I last saw you. Your aura has grown substantially more imposing over these last few millennia."

The muscular orc, a cunning-looking male with a thick black beard and hair worn in dreadlocks, turns to look at Gorn with mild respect. "Emperor Gorn. It is my lucky day to meet you here. I have just returned from a great hunt! The beasts on Tarus II are quite fearsome. I encountered a twelve-eyed creature with vicious mandibles that nearly rent me in half. My third cousin actually died to its maw, the poor sod!"

Speaking of death so casually, Shorath doesn't seem to care at all that one of a thousand cousins perished. In time, a thousand more will spawn, and at least half of them won't survive to their hundredth year alive. To him, the loss of one insignificant cousin means nothing.

"This generation is too weak." Gorn comments, turning his eyes to the far wall, where expected wait times update on huge monitors live for each of the Warpgates. He spots the next opening of the Diabolus gate, scheduled for just two hours in the future, and smiles. "I do hope you were able to enjoy a good laugh at his expense."

"Indeed!" Shorath chuckles. "Ultimately, I smote that creature with my father's ancestral club. Ah, have you heard? The Zhurm's Guard Selection will soon occur, just three months from now. I intend to compete and win the right to serve at my Zhurm's side! It will earn my lineage great honor."

"Oh? Maybe I'll pop over and watch." Gorn idly replies. "Though, I might be too busy. Hehehe... I happen to have acquired quite the useful gift from the Wordsmith. All of my problems will soon fade away."

"What sort of gift?" Shorath inquires.

"The kind that costs a thousand Merit Tokens." Gorn replies, a sly smile twitching at the edges of his mouth.

"You paid for a Word of Power? How extravagant!" Shorath says, clearly unimpressed. "The cost to performance ratio just isn't worth it. I looked up the two hundred Words of Power he offered. None of them are all that impressive! Compared to making two Dukes into Emperors, you have suffered a loss."

"The only power a person can rely on in this world is his own strength..." Gorn mutters. "Minions and underlings might make my Hell more formidable, but the more Emperors there are in the Hell of Calamity, the more competitors I'll have. I would much prefer to strengthen myself until I become unstoppable. Then I won't need the little peasants..."

"Your ambitions sure are impressive." Shorath praises, in a somewhat sarcastic manner. "I hope you can bear the cost."

"I will pay any price to attain power." Gorn concludes, leaving no more room for discussion. "If you ever reach the apex of your species... you will understand."

Shorath chuckles. "To become the Zhurm... it is what any self respecting orc would want. But doing so is harder than ascending from Hell to Heaven! I have countless years before I can match up to the great Ashura..."

The two of them fall silent for a while, before ultimately returning to more banal topics.

Two hours pass. A voice transmits over the loudspeaker.

"Attention, all entities in the waiting areas. Gate Five will open for transfer to Diabolus in three minutes. It will remain open for twenty minutes. Please begin shuttling to the transfer position now."

Gorn stands up.

"Finally."

He, Shorath, and all the other demons and orcs transferring to Diabolus move to the second level. By the time they arrive, the Warpgate has already transitioned, allowing them to smoothly pass through to their homeworld of Diabolus.

After walking through the Warpgate and arriving on Diabolus, Gorn pauses when he senses the aura of a Duke nearby.

"Ah, Mara." Gorn says, flashing a toothy smile at her. "On your way back to Tarus II?"

The Duke of Collection pauses before stepping through. "I am. Hmm? Your aura seems a little... different."

As a high level demoness, Mara notices a faint fluctuation in Gorn's demonic aura.

"Does it? That might be due to my recent visit with the Wordsmith." Gorn chuckles. "If you can save up a thousand points, I believe the effects will be quite... pleasing."

"What Word of Power did you exchange for?" Mara asks, eyeing Gorn curiously.

"Haha." Gorn chuckles, without elaborating. "I take my leave."

Invisible question marks pop up over Mara's head as Gorn walks away, but ultimately, his business is none of her business. She passes through the Warpgate to the Core, while Gorn continues traveling forward.

After walking half a mile from the Diabolus Warpgate complex, Gorn lifts his eyes to the blood red sky, soaked in fire. On this planet, 38C (100F) temperatures are normal, while on the hottest days, the planet's heat can easily reach 65.5C (150F). No human would dare come here, nor would any of the lesser monster species. But for orcs and the hardiest demons, the planet's sweltering temperatures don't bother them in the least. For Gorn, anything cooler than Diabolus's average heat is almost like a wintery chill.

"Mmm. Smells like death is in the air." Gorn randomly remarks.

The Hell of Calamity's mightiest Emperor reaches up and grabs hold of his face. He begins to pull on it, and immediately, a mystical scene takes place as his bearded, mature, and intimidating visage peels away. A flurry of light and darkness explodes around him, shrouding his appearance, while he pulls out another mask from his Mind Realm. This mask, surprisingly, exudes a mixture of a holy and divine energy, but mixed with something bloody and vile. A single eye, like that of a cyclops, sits above its nose. Its color is a mixture of pale white with blood-red streaks coloring its entire surface.

"It's been a while since I donned 'Bloody Tear,'" Gorn chuckles. "If only I could still use Vermillion... but that damned Mephisto... tsk."

Gorn places Bloody Tear onto his face, and another explosion of light and shadow erupts, continuing to shroud his body and make it impossible for observers to see his 'true form.' A few moments later, Gorn stands tall as a six-armed angel of death, something resembling a monstrous version of demonkind's former enemies. Six blood-red wings sprout from his back, and his singular eye sweeps around, as if searching for prey.

Bloody Tear. A solid investigative-type mask, but one lacking in power. Compared to Vermillion, a mask based on propelling the power of fire to its peak, Bloody Tear is more of a mask designed for speed and scouting. Its singular eye contains visual acuity that can not only pick out a coin on the ground from fifty miles in the air, but can even peer through half a mile of dirt and debris to gaze inside of mountains and buildings.

In the past, Gorn used Bloody Tear to hunt down angels, humans, and other dissidents. But that was during the Energy Wars. These days, he only uses it if he requires the power of flight.

"Tsk. With Vermillion gone, I'll need to craft a new Face." Gorn growls. "Bloody Tear is too old and unwieldy. My crafting prowess has grown by leaps and bounds since the Energy Wars."

With a shake of his head, Gorn leaps into the air and spreads his six bloody wings. He takes to the skies, causing countless demons to gaze up at him with awe in their eyes.

"Look! That's Emperor Gorn!"

"His aura is so powerful! He must be the strongest demon alive today!"

"Yeah... well, now that Ose's gone, anyway."

"Shut up, idiot! Do you want him to come down here and kill you?! Gorn could murder you with a flap of those wings!"

Despite these demons whispering under their breath, even though Gorn is two thousand feet above the planet's surface, he easily picks out the sounds of individual conversations thanks to Bloody Tear's unique spying capabilities.

"...Hmm. Perhaps this old face does still have some use." Gorn muses, ignoring the blabbering weaklings.

Gorn races across the sky. In less than an hour, he arrives at a demonic temple built into the side of a mountain. Carved from demonstone and granite, this temple is actually Gorn's palace, his home for the last 100,000 years. The first thing a casual observer might notice is the temple's Oriental origins, with its many pagodas sprinkled around the mountainside, its high levels of Feng Shui, and even its curved rooftops, allowing the occasional molten rainfall to drizzle off the sides of every structure.

On Diabolus, not a single green plant grows anywhere. Instead, fire-type plants and wildlife abound, such as Phoenix Parasol Trees or Inflamed Yang Beetles. These creatures thrive in the heat, bolstered by the rich demonic mana that has accumulated near populous areas for the past 100,000 years. Even in Gorn's personal palace, colorful red and yellow shrubbery line the walls, livening up the decor and increasing the heat indoors further. To enter Gorn's palace, only the strongest demons and monsters would even be able to step foot there, let alone live there for extended periods of time.

Gorn drops to the ground. His vicious and evil angel visage draws the attention of several guards posted around his living quarters, but they immediately identify him and bow respectfully.

"Oh, Gorn, darling." Says a Demon Duke inside Gorn's quarters. "You returned later than I expected."

This Duke, a female named Mai Sho, lays back on a silk couch woven with red and yellow fibers. Her long, pink legs stick out of her Chinese-styled dress, exposing her thighs and calves in a sensually arousing way. As one of Gorn's many concubines, she holds a high position in his harem.

Gorn strides into the inner chamber. His singular eye sweeps across not only her, but a half dozen other Dukes and Barons, some of them male, some of them female, all part of his harem.

"That new Warpgate time system added an extra hour to my wait." Gorn simply says. "Is Serena here?"

"Lady Serena is currently working with the survivors from the Hell of Isolation." Mai Sho says. She lifts a long, slender smoking pipe to her cherry-red lips and inhales from it. "I imagine she will return later tonight."

"Mmm. I am going to go into seclusion for a few months." Gorn says. "During that time, unless you receive a notice exceeding the fifth level, don't bother me with it. Serena and Crow will be in charge."

A handsome male Baron wearing a tight-fitting corset sits on a chair not far from Mai Sho, his legs crossed. He lifts his chin, a look of surprise on his face. "Gorn, dearest, you're going into seclusion? At a critical time like this? Whatever for, love?"

Gorn doesn't immediately answer. He pauses for a moment to glance at the dozen or so members of his harem present before shaking his head.

"I am going to mold new faces. Thanks to the Wordsmith, I have made tremendous gains. Even he will not be able to fathom the tool he has given me. I estimate my speed will increase by... a hundredfold!"

Several demons gasp in surprise.

"A hundredfold?" Mai Sho asks, sitting up a little straighter. "How is that possible? The shortest time you've ever taken to craft a face was seventy years. Are you saying you might be able to make a new face in only seven months?!"

"I will not know until I try." Gorn says. "But... I feel quite confident in my chances."

"If you succeed, you will surely obtain even greater gains than merely a few new faces!" The male Baron from before exclaims. "Best of wishes to you, love! I will meditate for your good luck!"

Gorn nods. "I would like to try and visit the Zhurm's Guard Selection in three months. Inform me when that day arrives. If I choose not to go... it will be for a very good reason."

Without any further fanfare, Gorn steps through the doors of his private chamber, passes through that room into a secluded meditation chamber, and slams the door shut.

A fifty-ton boulder blocks the doorway, sealing Gorn inside where nobody will be able to easily bother him. With a flick of his wrist, Gorn activates the chamber's internal lights, bathing himself in a blood-red glow.

A huge mirror takes up one of the walls, reaching from the floor to the ceiling. In the center of the chamber sits a mat made of soft but heat resistant fibers, suitable for one to sit on for extended periods of time. And, most importantly, a series of magical tools sit attached to the far wall, all of them exuding various amounts of demonic energy. These tools are Gorn's primary means of molding 'faces,' and as such, are the most precious things he owns. If he were to lose them, he could remake them, but he would need to expend a great deal of time and effort.

The Emperor of Many Faces stands in the center of the room for a full hour. He stares at his reflection in the mirror, the image of the one-eyed, six-armed and six-winged angel. For a long while, he simply gazes at himself.

Then, he reaches up and grabs hold of his face.

With a light tug, Gorn pulls away his Bloody Tear mask. A wave of light and dark energy spirals around him, shrouding him from the senses of anyone who might want to look at him. Even if he looks into the mirror, he won't be able to see himself amidst the cloud of black and gold smoke.

But after ten seconds, the smoke fades away.

Gorn doesn't don a new face.

Instead, he steels his stomach and waits for the smoke to clear.

When it finally fades away, Gorn's true body appears.

He gazes at himself with empty eyes.

His sickly brown skin does not look like the vibrant hue many dark-skinned humans might have, but rather, like the color of dried-out demon blood. Old, rotten, and fetid.

His scrawny arms and short stature make him appear to be at most five feet tall. He resembles a sickly human more than the frightening Emperor who rules over one of the most powerful Hells. His hairless body and wrinkled face even make him look like a cross between a lanky teenager and a half-dead old man.

Without a doubt, when not wearing one of his masks, Gorn does not appear intimidating or powerful in the slightest.

The Emperor of Many Faces gazes at his shriveled, scrawny, weak and pathetic little body with a look of disgust.

"Why must this be me...?" He asks, in a voice that cracks, as if he were suffering from early puberty. "Why must I falsify myself to earn the slightest respect?"

Slowly, Gorn sits down on the mat, cross-legged. He continues to stare at himself for a while before sighing deeply.

"The last face I molded was the Emerald Devil... but that was thirteen hundred years ago. I haven't had much drive for quite a long time. But that all changes... now! Thanks to the Wordsmith, I finally have the capability to change my lot in life. I can move forward with my great experiment..."

Gorn inhales deeply. He closes his eyes and meditates for an hour, then stands up and walks to his wall of tools. He pushes a button on that wall, and it splits down the middle, sliding open to reveal another room hidden just a bit deeper. Inside, the room appears entirely empty, except for rows upon rows of 'racks' attached to the walls. These racks are custom-made to fit Gorn's masks, allowing him to slot them onto the walls for easy viewing.

Gorn reaches inside his Mind Realm. He begins pulling out masks, one after the other, and placing them on the walls.

"Vermillion. The Desirable One. Bloody Tear. The False Idol. Mother's Embrace. Sleeping Viper. Tiger God. South Sea's Sunderer..."

One by one, Gorn places masks on the walls. He lines them up in order of importance, taking the time to calm his mind and dwell on all the past feats he's accomplished with these masks.

In total, Gorn possesses more than two thousand faces! Each of them is a frightening artifact capable of not only granting him incredible powers, but also blending into target populaces, mixing with other species unseen, hiding his aura and body, and even boosting his capabilities when crafting new ones.

But among these masks, the most precious is undoubtedly the second one he placed down...

The Desirable One.

This is the face he wears every day, any time he steps out in public. Almost never does he take off The Desirable One. In fact, the only times he historically will do so is during periods of seclusion, when he intends to craft a new face.

Gorn finishes placing all of his 2,398 masks on the walls. It takes him several hours, but this does not feel to him like work. Instead, it is more of a ritual he must perform in order to sharpen his frame of mind.

He inhales and exhales deeply, allowing Diabolus's heat to wash over his skin. With the door closed, the room reaches a sweltering temperature that would soon boil water.

But Gorn pays this mild heat no attention.

Instead, a smile traces upon his lips.

"Wordsmith. I must thank you. That Word of Power you granted me... Perception. It will change everything. I have spent 100,000 years trying to find the limits of my powers, but now, thanks to you, I can accelerate my scale by an unfathomable amount. Are 'faces' truly my only limit? I think not. I can craft even more incredible things... but it is you who ultimately will grant me the push I need to unlock my full potential."

His smile deepens, becoming more and more sinister by the second.

"That First Emperor... so scary. He hides his identity for reasons unknown. But I do not fear him. My masks can copy anyone. They can counter anything. The First Emperor does not frighten me. Only the fear that I might never reach the pinnacle of power keeps me up at night. But I need no longer worry about such things. You have granted me a terrific boon, indeed... hehehe!"

As Gorn laughs to himself, he plucks one of the faces off the wall and dons it, transforming into an Orc of refined majesty and intellect.

"Today, the Dire Blacksmith will begin his work! In just a few months, I will create a mask that can shake the cosmos and rattle the heavens! I wonder what looks the others will give me when they discover my new limits?"

"Heh heh heh..."

Part 375: Lorent's Golden Garden

Tarus II, near the city center.

Just a short walk to the south-west of the Lazarus Tower, one of the Fortress of Retribution's most popular resting spots provides a relaxing environment where any person who wishes can come and sit, easing their mind and letting them take a load off after a hard day of work. This place is a huge, open park known as the Golden Garden, where thousands of beautiful and exotic plants collected from thirty-plus paradise-class planets have been planted and maintained by the people in charge of it.

Benches sit scattered, to and fro, amidst more than ten carefully cultivated walking paths made of soft and loosely compacted dirt. In some spots within the city's largest park, flowers are arranged to form rainbows of color, while in others the colors are deliberately placed to create chaotic and random arrangements.

In addition, seemingly ancient and long-lived trees with pink and yellow flowers dot the perimeter, forming a natural enclosure that cuts off the sound of the city by reflecting any noises outside the garden. Dedicated sprinkler systems provide the trees and flowers and other assorted plants with the water and nutrients they need, while a hundred groundskeepers trim and maintain the plants.

While the Golden Garden might appear ancient, in truth, it isn't even a week old. Thanks to the Wordsmith's magic, the trees and flowers have been rapidly and artificially aged to create the park, which would have otherwise required a hundred years of careful planting and cultivation.

However, once they've already been formed, maintaining them takes considerably less effort.

The head of the Golden Garden turns out to be none other than Sir Lorent, Phoebe Hiro's nephew. Despite technically being only a spiritual life-form, thanks to specially created soul-enhancer devices that enable him to take a solid form, he and Shana, and even Fiona can enter and exit the Golden Garden, becoming fully corporeal and capable of interacting with solid matter. It's only when they exit the park that their bodies return to incorporeality, making them act like ghosts that can pass through walls.

On this particular day, Sir Lorent Berthold and Shana, having becoming close over the past month or two, sit together in the park with a pair of easels before them. Since their daily tasks have already been completed, neither of them needs to do any work for the rest of the day, and as such, they don't have much to do.

The southern section of the park is a very special place where many works of art now sit, some of them depicting battles of the Arthurian Era, while others look like doodles made by children. In fact, they are doodles made by children, with Shana being just one of the kids hanging out with Mordred's Butcher while he works.

Not only does Shana sit beside him, but half a dozen other kids, all of them with their own paintbrushes and easels. They watch Lorent's hands with gasps of ooh's and ahh's, laughing when he splashes paint on their noses or adds images of butterflies and birds to his scenic vistas.

"Mister Lorent! I finished!" Says a young boy nearby, just seven years old. He quickly pulls his painting off the easel and holds it in his arms proudly. While the image is a relatively simple drawing of stick-men and a house, Lorent doesn't stint on his praise.

"Very good, Will." Lorent says, pointing at the top of the painting. "Your clouds look better than ever! The way you mixed the blue and white truly makes them appear vivid and lifelike!"

"Thanks!" Will says, a cheesy grin on his face. "I'll draw them better-er next time!"

Sir Lorent smiles kindly. In his heart, a faint sense of satisfaction swells with pride.

This is the life I've always wanted to live. Compared to following Mordred's orders or suffering silently within that white void for an eternity... this life truly does feel like bliss.

After a moment of contemplation, Lorent returns to his painting. Before him sits an incredibly realistic depiction of Alexander the Great, a Hero Lorent has always admired. Drawn in a statue-like pose, Lorent vividly depicts Alexander's heterochromatic eyes, with one being blue, and the other yellow. Alexander stabs his sword at the sky, and his mouth hangs open, as if shouting a fearful warcry to intimidate his enemies.

On Lorent's left, Shana draws a beautiful garden not unlike the Golden Garden she currently sits in. Despite looking and acting like a child, lacking any sort of adult vocabulary, Shana's true intelligence is actually quite high. Having been locked in her artifact for 100,000 years, she was never able to grow up and mature, socially, but her mind is neither empty nor devoid of thought. Within an astoundingly short period of time, she has already become quite adept at drawing her thoughts out with images, if not words.

"What a beautiful garden." Lorent comments, patting Shana's head. "Those roses are so pretty, I feel as if they will soon jump out of the painting and start swaying in the breeze."

"Me paint like daddy!" Shana says, smiling at Lorent. "Daddy good painter!"

Seeing her heartfelt gaze of admiration, a pang of emotion tugs at Lorent's sensibilities. He squeezes her shoulder affectionately.

"And what a good little daughter I have."

The two of them have spent large amounts of time together, and as such, not long ago, they informally started referring to one another as father and daughter. For Lorent, whose family have long, long ago perished to the annals of time, Shana is just about the closest he might ever have to a child. And considering their shared history of isolation within their artifacts, they can truly relate to each other on an emotional level. As for Shana, she was an orphan from birth, and as such, never knew the love of a mother or father.

Shana leans her head against Lorent's side while continuing to paint, and as for Lorent, he keeps his hand on her shoulder, using his other free hand to paint.

Time passes. Some of the kids finish their painting and leave, while others get called away by their parents. Even when some of the children leave, others come to take their place. The Golden Gardens can't be called the most popular place for kids to play, but among humanity's members, there really aren't that many children still alive. Those who do exist were the few lucky survivors of Stormbringer, those who escaped and later returned on the Covenant ships, and perhaps half a million rescued from the Seven Hells during Jason's teleportation incident.

In total, of the sixty-something million humans in the galaxy, perhaps only two or three million of them are children.

But once the time comes to revive the fallen through the Lazarus Tower, those numbers will inflate substantially.

Just as Lorent is about to finish his painting of Alexander the Great's statue, a figure approaches him, catching his attention.

"Ah, Aunt Phoebe!" Lorent says, a smile spreading across his face. "How good to see you."

"Hi Fee-bee!" Shana says, not adding anything else, but waving cutely at her.

Phoebe Hiro walks toward Lorent, but doesn't say anything. She sits down on a bench across from him and sighs.

"Ohh..."

Lorent frowns. He pulls his hand away from Shana, sets the easel aside, and takes a more careful look at his aunt.

"Are you alright?" Lorent asks, noticing her somewhat pale expression.

Phoebe rests her face in her hands and rocks from side to side. "I... feel a bit nauseous."

"Hmm. You've been working yourself too hard, auntie." Lorent says, walking over to sit beside her. He gently rubs Phoebe's back. "Why don't I help you to the hospital? Samantha can check you out."

Phoebe groans. "No. That's not... necessary. You won't be able to help me once we leave the garden, anyway. I have a splitting headache. I just need to sit for a bit and collect myself."

"Hmm... alright, then." Lorent says. He turns to one of the boys near him. "William, go and fetch Miss Doris. Tell her Phoebe needs help getting to the hospital."

"Okay!" Says the little boy.

William runs off to fetch one of the groundskeepers, while Lorent keeps his aunt company.

"You should take the rest of the day off." Lorent says. "I know you're in a rush to build houses and homes not only for the people on Tarus II, but also those from the Lazarus Tower. Even so, if you faint from exhaustion, you'll cause quite a fright. Don't make me tattle on you to the Wordsmith."

"Jason's a big softy." Phoebe says, laughing wryly. "Haha... he'll melt like putty if I stand my ground."

"I'm sure he will." Lorent concludes.

A few minutes later, Doris shows up and helps Phoebe to her feet. The two of them leave the Golden Garden, while Lorent remains behind.

"She'll be fine..." Lorent says, more to ease his own tension than to allay anyone else's concerns.

Lorent returns to his painting. Not long after, he finishes the depiction of Alexander the Great, then picks up the painting and walks over to a designated empty space a few hundred feet away, right in the middle of a smattering of flowers and vines.

"Look, look!" The kids exclaim. "Lorent's gonna do it again! He's gonna do it!"

Lorent holds up the painting. He frowns deeply, concentrates his mind, and begins to focus his magical energy onto the painting held firmly in his hands.

Weng!

The painting hums and shivers, like a dog excited to snap up a treat. It glows with power, and Alexander's statue becomes blurry and indistinct.

Moments later...

Whoomph!

The paper becomes pure white, and Alexander's statue vanishes. It reappears not far from Lorent, right atop the designated platform!

Standing twenty feet tall, Alexander's commanding visage materializes in reality, his sword stabbed at the sky, as if defying the will of the heavens!

"Whoooooaaa!" William shouts. "So COOL! I wanna be like that guy when I grow up!!"

"Alexander the Great." Lorent says. "He was a Hero, like me, Shana, and the Wordsmith. He was our predecessor, a mighty warrior whose eyes could manipulate time and gravity. Legends say Alexander the Great smote dead two of the Demon Emperors of his era, as well as nearly two dozen Dukes. He died young, though, ultimately slain by Satan the Devil. Now, nothing remains of his soul in this world. As for the Gordian Knot, none know of where it disappeared."

Shining admiration appears in the eyes of all the children. Even Shana appears a little entranced.

However, not long after, Shana shakes her head.

"He empty."

Lorent glances down at her. "Hmm? Empty?"

"Yeah. He empty. Nothing there."

"That's because this is only a statue." Lorent chuckles. "My painting ability isn't all that useful. All I can do is conjure inanimate objects. It would be quite impressive if I could bring a fallen Hero back to reality, haha."

He pats her shoulder, then returns to the bench where he was sitting before, as do all the children behind him.

"Alright, kids. I think I'll take some requests now. What do you want me to paint next?"

Phoebe sits inside a private room with Belial, both of them on a couch together, comfortingly close.

"...And you're sure that's what it is?" Phoebe asks.

"I'm sure." Belial says, smiling sweetly. "When will you tell Jason?"

"Later tonight." Phoebe says. "Well... I still have things to do. Tell Doctor Leeroy I said thank-you for the help with my headache. It means a lot."

Belial leans over and kisses Phoebe's cheek. "I'll let him know. Take care."

Phoebe leaves the hospital, a strange feeling swelling in her heart. She heads to the east side of the city, in the general direction of her house. After passing the Lazarus Tower, she pauses to look at the one and only church in the entirety of the Fortress of Retribution.

Built just two days after the capitulation of the Hidden Emperors, the beautiful structure stands amidst an ocean of smaller homes and a small park, with an isolation formation placed over it to protect the privacy of its occupants. From outside the barrier, nobody can see those living inside, nor whatever activities they might be up to. All they can see is the building itself and all the parts of its glorious, gold-crested structure towering over the nearby homes.

With a beautiful golden cross placed atop its steeple, and stained glass windows that shimmer under the light of the midday sun, the church is actually the residence of not only the four Archangels, but Cassiel, too.

Few people know of Cassiel's identity. Aside from the soldiers who helped rescue her from Faith's End, nobody else has seen her in person, though this is almost entirely due to her staying indoors and never coming out in the light of day. The demons, especially, don't know of Cassiel's identity. Not that any of them would try and snoop on the church. After hearing rumors of the dreadful might of the Cherubiim, not even the gutsiest demon, let alone any of the Hidden Emperors, would attempt to intrude on the Archangel's privacy.

As such, Cassiel lives a comfortable life, one without any misery or strife. Simple, basic, and lacking all flair...

But at the same time, she also gets to live with her fellow angels. While what remains of angelkind is naught but four scattered Archangel souls and one single Lazarite, they still occupy a position of considerable power in the human-demon alliance. Any of Raphael's words could change the situation, if he so desired.

Phoebe pauses to look at the church. After a moment of consideration, she changes her mind from heading home to heading into the church.

A minute later, she passes through the isolation barrier and steps into the church's confines. With three levels of living space, the church is not so much a congregation point for pious people as it is the designated living space for angelkind's remnants. As such, the interior is peaceful and quiet, with barely any noise to hear at all.

When Phoebe arrives inside, she pauses, spotting Cassiel sitting in front of a large piano placed against the eastern wall. Light streams through the stained glass windows, falling onto her body and warming her skin. The Lazarite doesn't play the piano, but instead merely stares at it, as if in a long, drawn-out daze.

"Hello, Cassiel..." Phoebe says, but before she can say anything further, Cassiel jumps in fright, startled by Phoebe's words. The Lazarite stumbles off her chair and scurries backward, her heart racing while she gazes at Phoebe in terror. The halo above her head dims and flickers, affected by her scrambled emotions.

Only after a few moments does she recognize the person who spoke. Still, she remains curled up on the ground, unable to take her eyes off Phoebe's figure.

"S-sorry..." Phoebe whispers, wincing at Cassiel's reaction. "I... didn't mean to startle you. Is Raphael here? I'm... I'm looking for him. I need to talk to him."

Cassiel's chest rises and falls. She inhales and exhales, struggling to slow her racing heart, while the halo above her head slowly brightens again. After a few moments, she shakily pulls herself to her feet, sits back at the piano and glances at Phoebe from the corner of her eye.

"Th..."

Cassiel starts to say something, but hesitates.

"...Third..."

Having uttered just one word, she turns away, unable to say anything else.

"Third floor? Okay. Thank you, Cassiel. I... appreciate your help." Phoebe says, while forcing a smile.

Feeling a little awkward and slightly ashamed of herself for having scared the Lazarite, Phoebe turns and walks toward the spiral staircase at the northern side of the building. She makes her way up past the second floor to the third, the one closest to the roof.

Each of the three floors is a dedicated living space for the Archangels. Typically, Cassiel, Soleil, and Uriel share the first floor, while Michael and Gabriel share the second. Raphael alone lives on the third floor, though he isn't always there, typically taking to the skies to observe humankind from above. With his abilities, hiding from those around him is a simple matter, and as such, he often works as a secret spy for humanity.

"Raphael?" Phoebe says, as she walks up the stairs. "Are you home?"

When Phoebe reaches the top of the stairs, she finds herself stepping out of the confines of a mere building into the interior of a self-contained world. Raphael's illusory powers allow him to create a miniature replication of Heaven, with scenic vistas including Heaven's primary locales, its mountains, its forests, and even its greatest cities. She blinks in surprise as every one of her senses tells her she is no longer on Tarus II, but has traveled back in time to the apex of angelkind's Ancient Era rule.

"Incredible..." Phoebe murmurs.

"Beautiful, isn't it?" Asks Raphael, sitting atop a mountain plateau 'far' in the distance. Despite speaking normally, his words reach her with ease. The tens of miles separating them seem comfortingly close, as if he were sitting just a stone's throw away. Phoebe can even make out the individual hairs on his beard, proving that his illusion does have its limits.

"Come. Take a seat." Raphael says, gesturing to a spot beside himself.

A moment later, Phoebe's body flickers. She teleports beside Raphael, drawn to him through his spatial powers.

"Oh!" Phoebe exclaims, slightly startled. "I... this isn't what I was expecting."

"Verily, I like to come here on many an occasion." Raphael says, his tone wistful. "Seeing the remnants of my civilization brings both comfort and pain to my heart. And what of thyself? Dost thou also partake in the vicissitudes of melancholy? The memory of years long past?"

Phoebe blinks. "I... I don't know. Maybe?"

"Hmm. Perhaps this scenery does not bring forth any memories to thee, but what if I were to change the view?"

Raphael holds up his hand. With a swirl of his wrist, the illusion shifts, transforming from an image of Heaven to that of the ancient city of Camelot. Phoebe's heart tightens as she and Raphael travel to the top of a church smack in Camelot's center, with the hustling and bustling city beneath them.

Mothers and children travel here and there, purchasing grain and wheat for their daily bread. Fathers walk the streets, either as guards and soldiers, or minstrels and priests. Shopkeepers shout out their wares, trying to reel in the affluent customers, while birds sit atop roofs and chirp at each other, looking for food the humans may have dropped. There are even dogs that run about, pet and fed by Camelot's many citizens.

"Camelot..." Phoebe whispers.

"'Twas thy home, and thou doth not lacketh any love for it. I, too, came to visit this city on many an occasion." Raphael says. "Arthur was one of my proudest children. The mightiest Hero. A figure who could force demons to their knees simply by using his divine aura. And his city, 'twas centuries more advanced than those that came after it. Camelot's fall was a tragic affair, indeed. A shining jewel of humanity, lost to greed and decadence."

Raphael turns his head to give Phoebe a sidelong glance.

"So, young one. Why hath thou come to visit me on this merry day? Surely, thou art not the nostalgic sort, a person who likes to layabout with old fogies like me."

Phoebe shakes her head, causing her white hair to tickle her nape.

"No. It's not that. I actually had some questions to ask you, Raphael."

"Questions." Raphael repeats. "I don't lack free time, so by all means, ask away. I shall clarify any doubts which might dwell within thy mind."

"Alright." Phoebe nods. "It's about the... Heroic Aura. You helped make it, yes? Do you know how it works?"

"The Heroic Aura?" Raphael asks, raising an eyebrow. "Indeed, I do. 'Twas intended to be a weapon of great power against demonkind. Not tied to any human's bloodline, so that humanity could not rise up against angelkind too easily and strike us down. After all, in those days, we feared the first Hero, Jepthath, as much as we feared the demons."

He continues. "The Heroic Aura was made to seek out the most worthy human of each generation. When each Hero died, the Aura would scour the Earth for the next heir and transfer inside their soul. Thus, it would always ensure that within one to two decades of any Hero's passing, a worthy successor would arise!"

Phoebe chews her lip. "Why did it choose Jason?"

"Pardon?" Raphael asks.

"Jason. Why did the Heroic Aura choose him? Was he the most worthy human of his generation? Did the Aura know he would enter cryostasis?"

"Ah. Thy doubts art understandable." Raphael says, patting Phoebe's back. "The Heroic Aura neither is nor ever was omniscient. It entered the bodies of many a young man or woman, ones who might not grow up to be figures of legend. Just take little Shana, for instance. She died at the tender young age of just seven years old. If the Aura were omniscient, why would it choose her?"

"That makes sense." Phoebe says. "But... in all the time you ruled the Archangels, did you ever hear of the Aura entering a new Hero before the current one had died?"

"I did not." Raphael answers. "This question... thou seemeth to be thinking of thy daughter, Daisy."

Phoebe nods. "Daisy had Heroic powers, Raphael. Shortly before she... well, Samantha confirmed she was able to heal soldiers in the hospital. Further, Daisy's healing abilities seemed even more intense than Samantha's. Additionally, when the demons attacked, Daisy apparently summoned the ghosts of the Hydra and Titans. These powers... have you ever heard of a child hero possessing such incredible might? And, more importantly..."

Raphael nods. "Jason is still alive. Not just Jason, but Hope, too. How coulds't thy daughter possess heroic powers when two living Heroes still walked the cosmos... these are the doubts thou wisheth to clarify, yes?"

"Yes." Phoebe nods.

"Mmm..."

Raphael falls silent for a few minutes.

"...I have given this matter much thought." Raphael murmurs. "The Heroic Aura chose Jason for a reason. Like his predecessors, he is this era's Chosen One. However, I have never heard of a Hero bearing a child who also possessed Heroic attributes. For Daisy to do so... something must have changed in how the Heroic Aura functioned."

Phoebe licks her lips. "Could this at all be related to Hope's existence? Since Jason cloned himself, that would mean there are now two Heroes living at the same time. Has that ever happened before?"

"Two heroes at the same time?" Raphael repeats. "Indeed. There were three such instances of such a thing occurring. All of them occurred as a result of twins being borne of the same womb. These three Hero Duologies were not particularly resplendent moments in the Aura's history. The three pairs ultimately made only a minor impact on the world before fading into the annals of history. But, there was one interesting tidbit..."

"What do you mean?" Phoebe asks.

"Mmm. When twins are born with the Heroic Aura... shoulds't one of them die, both shalt die. Their lives become linked. In this way, the Heroic Aura remains a singular entity."

Raphael sighs.

"I cannot say for certain... but perhaps if Jason were to die, so too would Hope. And if Hope were to die, so too would Jason. However! The fact thy daughter hath perished, yet neither of the Wordsmiths have, makes my theories difficult to reconcile!"

"The Heroic Aura has changed." Raphael says, his tone solemn. "But in what manner, I cannot say. 'Tis a self-regulating entity. I no longer hold any control over how it evolves."

Phoebe nods. "I... understand. Thank you, Raphael. That's all I wanted to ask about."

"Anytime, anytime." Raphael smiles, while dispelling Camelot's illusion. "If any quandaries shoulds't befuddle thee, come to me and I shalt do my best to help ease thy worries."

Phoebe bows her head. "You are truly a respectable man."

The two of them say their goodbyes. As Phoebe heads back downstairs and waves farewell to Cassiel, she steps outside just in time to run into a familiar man.

"Hmm? Buddha?"

Phoebe stops just outside the church's doors when she sees the familiar face of Makoto Ueda. The Japanese man nods at her and smiles.

"Ahh, Miss Hiro. How good to see you. Excuse me. I have brought flowers for the Daughter of Heaven."

He holds up a beautiful bouquet of roses in his hand, to which Phoebe smiles back.

"How lovely! I'm sure she'll enjoy them."

After the two of them exchange pleasantries, Buddha heads inside the church, and Phoebe leaves.

"I'm... so tired." Phoebe sighs. "I need some rest."

Part 376: Marching Toward the Future

After saying farewell to Phoebe, Buddha walks toward the entrance of the Archangel's church, their current home. The structure, while just as new as all the others on Tarus II, exudes a certain majesty that causes any who look at it to feel a momentary sense of awe.

Except for Buddha.

As a reincarnator, Buddha has lived more than a hundred lives. He has seen through the beauty of the world, as well as its ugliness. Despite being positioned on the 'side' of humanity and the angels, he does not hold any special reverence for the Creator's children.

"A lovely church." Buddha muses, before pushing the church's doors open.

With Phoebe having just left, the sound of the doors being opened a second time causes the lone angel inside, Cassiel, to turn her head toward the entrance. Expecting Phoebe to return due to forgetting something, Cassiel instead blinks in surprise when a random Japanese man walks inside.

The man appears to be in his forties, or perhaps even his fifties. A calm and peaceful aura of serenity surrounds him, making him appear small and harmless. As he enters, he takes off his straw hat and holds up a bouquet of roses, smiling faintly.

"Hello, Cassiel. That is what they call you now, isn't it? I thought I would pay my respects. Though, I am not certain if you will remember me."

As the man approaches, Cassiel stiffens. She slides a little on the piano bench, pulling away from Makoto Ueda as he walks toward her. However, Makoto changes direction to walk to a window on the opposite side of the room as the Lazarite. Spotting an empty ornamental vase, he picks it up and walks over to a nearby sink. The interior of the church's ground level is neither excessively regal, nor overly practical. Rather, it is a mixture of holiness with a few modern amenities.

Buddha does not look in Cassiel's general direction, but instead, places some dirt in the bottom of the vase, adds a small amount of water, and unwraps the roses before placing them inside.

"Lovely, aren't they?" He asks rhetorically. "Roses are beautiful, yet their thorns can hurt if one were to grasp them too firmly. Similarly, beauty can lead to covetousness, greed, and pain. You have suffered greatly, these past hundred millennia. I am sorry that you had to endure such awful torment."

The hunched-over old man wanders back to the window and places the flowers in front of the sunlight shining through. He smiles gently, then turns to face Cassiel again.

"Daughter of Heaven. We have spoken many times in the past. While this is my first time appearing before you in this body, perhaps you can still recognize an old friend?"

Cassiel's expression shifts, ever so slightly. Her heartbeat quickens.

She stares at the man for several long moments.

After a full minute, she swallows heavily.

"G-Gau...ta...ma?"

Her voice shakes and cracks, belying her shattered sense of confidence, but Buddha doesn't fault her.

"So you do still remember. That warms my heart. Indeed, I am Gautama Buddha. I recently revived due to a series of interesting karmic coincidences, and now, I have come to give my greetings."

Buddha bows slightly in greeting, then walks over to Cassiel's side. While she does flinch slightly, she doesn't try to run away, and instead remains sitting, watching him with her crystal clear eyes.

Buddha calmly sits down beside Cassiel. Instead of making eye contact with her, he places his gaze on the piano, noticing the empty sheet music holder on its top.

"Ah. How unfortunate. A piano, but it has no music. Is this not a small tragedy? This instrument has but one purpose, yet it is unable to fulfill its destiny. As I recall, you are quite the accomplished pianist, yet you do not appear interested in playing a melody. If so, may I have the honor?"

Cassiel stares at the side of Buddha's head, examining his profile. After a few moments, she nods, then turns to face the piano, just like him.

The Lazarite and reincarnator both fall silent. Buddha begins to play a song on the piano, one of Beethoven's symphonies, the very first one. Under the flow of his fingers, a soft and melodious tune flows out, lacking any pomp or circumstance.

For ten full minutes, neither Buddha nor Cassiel says anything. They merely listen while his fingers rhythmically play through the first half of the piece.

At some point, after reaching a crescendo, Buddha smiles.

"Do you remember? You and I used to talk about all sorts of things, back in the old days. Before the Energy Wars, and before humanity properly matured. You were only a hundred years old, just a small child compared to me. Still insecure, and trying to find your place among the angels. Back then, you were such a chatty little dove. You always had something to say, while I was the quiet old man filled with melancholy."

Buddha's fingers continue to dance across the keys, but he slows his pace.

"Look at how things have changed. Now, it is me who talks, while you sit silently. I suppose this is the cycle of karma at play, yes? The past affects the future. Cause and effect. Causality..."

Several more minutes pass. Buddha and Cassiel remain silent. Finally, he concludes Beethoven's First Symphony and leans to the side stretching and popping his back.

"Mmm. A beautiful song. But not as lovely as I imagine your voice might be. Is there something you want to say, Cassiel? I am always here, if you wish to discuss the... unspeakable tragedies you have suffered."

Cassiel continues to say nothing. However, a flicker passes over her eyes, a haze that doesn't simply come and go. She knits her brow, glances at Buddha, then averts her eyes.

"I..."

Cassiel whispers a single syllable, but falls silent again.

Buddha closes his eyes. He inhales and exhales.

"The wound... runs deep. Your pain is not something even I can fathom. In my many lives, I have lost family and friends. I have perished in fires, earthquakes, and avalanches. My fellow man has brought about my end through iron and steel and has hunted me down, claiming I was a witch. I have lived in captivity as a slave, in decadence as a king, and have even been tortured by crusaders during an inquisition. Yet, I still cannot pretend to know your pain."

Buddha's gaze hardens, ever so slightly.

"Nevertheless... if there is one thing I know, it is that pain and trauma are not merely permanent afflictions one must passively suffer. They are an opportunity! A chance to grow. Through pain, one can comprehend and expand their limits. Though the eyes of your oppressor may have burned themselves into your mind, that can instead become your drive. By treating your pain as a tempering opportunity, you can overcome the past and push toward a brighter future!"

Buddha touches the piano before him.

"Can a deaf man appreciate the sounds of music? Some would say 'no,' yet Beethoven became a renowned musician whose legacy lasted for millennia. It is only when you lose or lack something that you fully appreciate what you still have left."

"Now that you have suffered, the blisses of life surely seem inconsequential." Buddha continues. "Compared to your pain and fear, how can you ever feel happiness again? You must harbor these thoughts, all day long. Am I right, Daughter of Heaven?"

Cassiel bows her head. Her dainty hands ball into fists, and she nods along to Buddha's words.

"How... how can... I... be... happy again?" Cassiel whispers, her voice soft and wracked with sorrow.

"Happiness is not a state of mind. It is a pursuit that one can devote themselves to, either in full or in part." Buddha answers. "Some people never pursue happiness. Some are content to search out pain, or rage, or hatred. Many demons live like this. So do many humans, and more than a few angels have, as well. Let me ask you this, Cassiel... is it truly 'happiness' that you seek, or something else?"

He turns his head slightly to look at her.

"Was the Blood Reaper ever a truly happy woman? From what I remember, it was not peace and love that you sought, but a higher calling. It was the end of demonkind. The extinction of humanity and the angels' perpetual enemies. In short... what you sought was a purpose. And a purpose... hehe."

He shakes his head while chuckling.

"A purpose does not require any particular emotion. You have lost your purpose, but it is not yet impossible for you to recover it. Much as the karma of your past sent you into a dungeon, so too can the karma of that dungeon send you soaring into the skies. You merely need to accept your pain, let it flow through you, and step back onto the path you once walked. It is not so difficult."

Cassiel quietly listens to Buddha's guidance. When he finishes speaking, she heavily blinks her large, limpid eyes.

"Let... it... flow..."

The Lazarite opens her fists. She stares at her palms, as if trying to divine her future through her fingerprint lines.

"What if... I'm not... good enough? I failed once. I can't... I'll fail again..."

Buddha's expression becomes heavy. He gently places his palm on the back of Cassiel's neck and gives her a light squeeze. Despite him being a man, she doesn't recoil from his touch, showing her deep trust in him.

"You don't think highly enough of yourself, little one. You are worthy. You always have been. Even now, you walk in that woman's shadow, afraid you will never measure up... and while her legacy is ironclad, lasting even to this very day, you are not inferior to her. I have divined the causality of the coming times. When the Great Shattering occurs, you can create a big splash, but only if you are able to push past your trauma and become whole again. Neither I nor anyone else can solve these problems for you. You must do so yourself."

Buddha slowly retracts his hand, but he pauses to touch Cassiel's cheek. Smiling, he lowers his arm and folds his fingers through hers, enveloping her palm in his.

"You are delicate, like that vase from before. You might break if someone throws you to the floor. But you are also strong. You retain your spirit, but fear to let it flourish. Of the people living in this universe, you have the potential to rise above all of them. You can become a goddess of death, or a goddess of life, but in the end, that choice remains yours."

Cassiel's eyes flick to Buddha's hand, still clasping hers. She brings her other hand over to rest atop his, and faintly smiles.

"I... I see. I thought... I thought I could never... be whole... again. Maybe I'm not... not a failure... after all."

"Hahaha..." Buddha chuckles. "It is only through failure that one's worldview can reach the apex. Now that you know what you can lose, you will never again let it cloud your thoughts. Isn't that so?"

Cassiel nods. "Yes."

With a nod, Buddha pulls his hand away. He stands up and reaches into his pocket, then pulls a small necklace out of his robes.

"I have a gift for you, Cassiel. If you ever wish to step outside this church, you'll draw the attention of countless demon eyes. However, if you happen to wear this relic, well..."

Cassiel's heart skips a beat when she sees the necklace. She stands up, a look of shock on her face as she looks at Buddha.

"My... my... locket!"

"Indeed, it is." Buddha says. "Camael's artifacts are not the sorts of items one can permanently lose, certainly not by accident. I followed your path of Karma and stumbled upon it... and now I'll return it to you."

He reaches out and places the locket in Cassiel's palm, tracing his fingers across hers before pulling away.

"You know how it works. When the time is right, I hope you will put that artifact to good use."

Buddha turns and walks away.

Just as he is about to push open the church's doors, Cassiel calls out from behind him.

"Master... Buddha... thank you!"

He smiles back at her.

"You are very welcome, little one."

Jason Hiro hovers in the sky, levitating through the use of wings he grew via a Word of Power. As his angelic wings flap, he finishes some miscellaneous business, communicating with several of humanity's leaders and sighing deeply.

"Yes. I already confirmed the time. It'll happen in a few days. Unarin insisted. I'll talk to Phoebe about who will be in charge while I'm gone. Okay. Yeah, thanks. Jason out."

The Wordsmith groans. He glances at the waning sun and checks his T-REX's internal clock.

"Almost nine PM. It's about time to call it a day. If anyone else wants to pester me... fuck 'em."

A moment later, he speaks a Word of Power. "Teleport."

He travels to the east side of the Fortress of Retribution, arriving at a large mansion near the edge of town. Not only do Jason and Phoebe live here, but so do more than a hundred children, all of them orphans rescued from various places. Some of their parents may have died during Stormbringer, but the majority of them were child slaves beamed out of the Seven Hells to Tarus II.

In addition, one other person lives at the mansion, his identity being the Minotaur, Yamir. As a renowned chef, his ability to cater child-friendly food en-masse makes him quite popular with all the orphans.

As for Jason and Phoebe, they find a small amount of comfort in taking care of children after losing their own daughter. Not only can they give the kids a place to live, play, and sleep, but they can satisfy their own maternal and paternal instincts, as well.

"The Word Man is back!" One of the girls shouts, drawing the attention of the others.

"Word Man! Word Man!" Chant the other children as Jason steps inside.

Feeling a little helpless, Jason chuckles. "Is Phoebe back yet, kids?"

"Uh-huh! Miss Hiro is helping Yamir make the food!" Says one of the older boys. "It should be done, real soon!"

"Great." Jason says, ruffling the kid's hair.

Not long after, Jason sits down with his wife and Yamir in the house's huge dining area, where three long tables filled with scrumptious kid-friendly food awaits. Robotic butlers made by Phoebe serve the food and clean up, and everyone takes some time to talk and unwind after a long, hard day of work.

Later, as night falls, Jason and Phoebe go upstairs to their master bedroom. After closing and locking the door, they both sigh deeply. Jason plops face-first on the bed, defeat etched into his face.

"Every day, Phoebe... every day. I just don't know if I'm cut out for this 'leader' business. I'm only twenty-four years old. I barely feel like I've gotten a grasp on 'adult stuff,' let alone managing a whole planet of people."

Phoebe undresses, taking off her brown leather armor and other clothes to slip into dark red lingerie and a bathrobe. She sits on the opposite edge of the bed, listening to Jason with a faint smile on her face.

"That's not true. You're one hundred thousand and twenty-four years old, husband."

"The... the hundred thousand doesn't count." Jason retorts, turning to stick his tongue out at her.

"If you say so."

Phoebe's smile fades away. A much more vague expression, lacking any emotion, takes its place.

Jason doesn't miss this detail. Having been married to Phoebe for more than six years, he's already learned to pick up on her moods.

"How did your day go, hun? Honey? Phoebe?"

Jason repeats his words, until Phoebe snaps out of what seems to be a daze.

"Oh! Uh... it was... it was... fine."

"Fine?" He asks, frowning even deeper. He rolls onto the bed and lays on his side, facing her. Even so, she continues sitting at the edge of the bed, with her back facing him.

"Come on. Is something eating at you? You wanna talk about it?" Jason asks.

Phoebe goes quiet.

Several seconds pass, with only the sounds of her breathing and his permeating the air.

"I..." Phoebe says, her words hesitant. "I... talked to Samantha today. I was feeling a little nauseous, but wasn't sure why, and..."

Jason lifts up his head and rests his face against his palm by crooking his arm into a 'V' shape.

"Yeah?"

Phoebe's voice catches. She turns to look at Jason, but in that moment, tears well up in her eyes. Before Jason can react, she suddenly buries her face in her palms and chokes back sobs!

"I'm... I'm pregnant!" Phoebe cries, wailing painfully. Her words tear at Jason's chest, making him quickly sit up. He pulls closer to her, visibly shocked.

"Phoebe! You're pregnant? But... but that's good news! It's great news! Why are you crying...? I don't understand..."

He crawls behind her on the bed and wraps his arms around his sobbing wife. Her previous statement and her tears make him feel a rush of indescribable emotions. The Wordsmith momentarily can't even decide if he should be happy or sad.

"I don't deserve it!" Phoebe cries. "Hic... I don't deserve it... what kind of mother am I... just... just terrible...!!"

Jason embraces Phoebe from behind, his emotions turbulent. He rubs her arms and leans his chin on her shoulder, trying to console her.

"It's good news, Phoebe. Not bad. You're not a terrible mother. You can't say things like that..."

"I couldn't save Daisy!" Phoebe sobs. "I don't deserve a child! I don't deserve anything!"

"That's not true. I love you, and so does everyone else. Daisy might be gone... but... her death was never your fault. It was mine, if anyone's." Jason says, his expression turning cloudy.

"While you were off-planet, hic... I was in a coma! I should have been awake to protect Daisy! How can I have another child?! I should just... abort it!"

"Phoebe!" Jason exclaims, more than a little shocked. "How could you say that? Of all the people I know, you wouldn't ever be the sort..."

Tears and snot continue to stream down Phoebe's face. She pulls away her hands to wipe at her eyes furiously. "If I'm just going to kill my kids, I might as well do it now! There's... there's no p-point in going on with a charade, Jason! There's no god-damned point!"

Phoebe's tears of sorrow shift quickly, far faster than even Jason can anticipate. They quickly turn to tears of rage and self-loathing.

"One dead child! Two! What does it even matter?! I'm a failure of a mother anyway! I shouldn't ever have another one, not ever!"

Pulling away from her husband's embrace, Phoebe stands up and walks to the other side of the room. She paces back and forth, visibly agitated, while her chest heaves with frustration.

Jason stares at her gloomily. He lowers his gaze and shakes his head.

"If you insist on an abortion, I won't stop you. It would break my heart, and I know it would break yours, but I come from a relatively progressive time, so I'm a bit understanding on this issue. Even so, Phoebe... is that really what you want? Is that what Daisy would want? She asked us to give her a little brother too many times to count. If Daisy knew you wanted to... kill her sibling... what would she say?"

Phoebe slows to a stop in front of a body-sized mirror. She rubs her stomach slowly, feeling much of her anger disperse. Staring at herself in the mirror, feelings of remorse once again return, but this time, much more mildly than before.

"I... I don't know. I don't know, Jason. I just feel... like... I always fail. I failed Arthur. I failed Daisy. I can't do anything right. What is the point in even trying?"

Jason gets up and walks over to his wife. He hugs her from behind and rocks back and forth, ever so gently.

"I've failed a lot of times too, Phoebe. A lot of times. Like... like a lot of times. Holy crap, so many times. But... if there's one thing I've learned, it's that picking myself up after a failure always makes me a little bit stronger, smarter, or perhaps even a little wiser. As long as there is life, there is hope. What happened to Daisy was... yeah. But we can't stay stuck in the past forever. She wouldn't want that. If I were to die, I wouldn't want you to give up, either. It's not right."

Phoebe turns around to look in Jason's eyes. "If you died? No, Jason, no... you can't say things like that. If I lost you, what would I even do? How could I possibly go on?"

"I feel the same about you." Jason says, gazing into her eyes. "But if we have another child, we'll always have a pillar. Something to live for. Don't you see? This is the Creator giving us a second chance. I don't want to throw that away."

Phoebe looks down at her belly.

"...Samantha said I'm about one month pregnant. That means... even before Stormbringer..."

Jason sucks in a breath. "Such timing... this can't be a simple coincidence. Don't you see, Phoebe? We have to keep it. No matter whether it's a boy or a girl, we'll love him or her, just as we did for Daisy. We'll try again, and this time... we'll do things right."

Phoebe steels her expression. She nods at Jason, while a look of determination embeds itself on her face. After wiping away the last of her tears, she forces a smile.

"I'm sorry. I... lost myself for a moment, Jason. I'm so glad I married you. You've given me nothing but happiness."

"I don't deserve a wife as good as you." Jason replies. "Every day with you, even those days when the demons are trying to kill us, are pure bliss. I love you, Phoebe."

"I love you too, Jason." Phoebe whispers.

After reconciling their hearts, the man and woman come together, kissing one another passionately. They pull each other close and embrace, feeling their heartbeats intertwine.

"No regrets." Jason says. "Never. Remember that, Phoebe."

She nods. "I will. Always."

Part 377: Desire Unleashed

After consoling his wife, the Wordsmith finally helps her stabilize her thoughts. The overwhelming release of emotions brings Phoebe to the end of her mental rope, and eventually, she falls asleep, along with him.

The next morning, both of them wake up, feeling more refreshed than ever.

Jason summons two cups of coffee through his Wordsmithing. He and Phoebe sit together on the balcony terrace outside their room, soaking in the early morning sunshine rays.

"I meant to tell you last night, but I got distracted," Jason says at one point. "Yesterday, someone contacted me through the intelligence bureau. Guess who it was?"

Phoebe sips her coffee. She stays quiet for a moment, contemplating his question.

"...Marie Becker?"

The Wordsmith chuckles. "Sometimes I wonder about you, honey. Are you sure you're not a Hero with mind-reading powers? Yeah, it was Marie. Not just her, though. I also received a communication from our 'pal' Sangin Kordonis. It seems Volgrimkind's Number One wants to meet me."

Phoebe's eyebrows shoot up. "...Unarin?"

"Yup." Jason says. "I don't know exactly what he wants to talk about. However, Kordonis made it very clear... Unarin wants to bring me up to speed on some 'important secrets.' I think he wants to deepen the relationship between humanity and his people."

"Only because he's getting his butt whooped." Phoebe snarks.

The Wordsmith hesitates.

"Yeah... but let's not act as if that's a good thing, Phoebe. If the Volgrim's battle-lines were to suddenly collapse, humanity would be... well, fucked. Royally fucked. We don't know a damn thing about the Kolvaxians. You heard what happened to Sharmur. The demons aren't exactly weak, and their entire planet got overrun in a single day. Do you really think we're all that much stronger than any of the Hidden Hells?"

Phoebe chews her lips. "No. I suppose not. I'm worried for you though, Jason. This Unarin... he might, I don't know. He might try to mind control you, or infect you with a poison, or do something else to get a firm hold on you. To the Volgrim, our T-REX's aren't much of anything at all. They're primitive little nano-buckets of bolts. How can you ensure your safety?"

"I'm still thinking about that." Jason says, rubbing his chin. "But either way, I'm not worried. No matter what, humanity will have Hope. And I can always bluff Unarin with the threat of making more clones."

"You need the Crown to do that." Phoebe points out. "Without Solomon's Crown, your clones will just end up as empty flesh-vessels. You said so yourself, six years ago."

"Unarin doesn't know that." Jason retorts.

"Unarin has mind reading gods at his side." Phoebe states, directing a wry smile at her husband. "Do you have any idea the feats a seventh, eighth, or ninth level Psion can accomplish? Perhaps they might even be able to remotely download the contents of your brain without you knowing."

Jason's expression shifts to one of grim realization.

"Shit. That might be true. But if so, how can I possibly protect my knowledge?"

"Well, you've already found that Fiona and the rest can create a powerful barrier around your Mind Realm." Phoebe postulates. "Following that, maybe you need to deliberately erect sturdy mana defenses. Psions will need to force their way inside, alerting you to their intrusion, at the very least."

"Mmm. Sangin Kordonis had a Psion on his ship." Jason recalls. "Low-level, if Samantha's guess was correct. I could sense her tickling my Mind Realm, but she wasn't able to pierce it. As for how strong a high-level Psion would be, I can't imagine."

Phoebe leans back in her chair. She and Jason both fall silent, allowing the sounds of distant birds and nature to drift into their ears. Overhead, some wispy clouds drift into view. Phoebe gazes blankly at them, her mind drifting off elsewhere.

"Fiona is the spiritual expert, not me." Phoebe finally says. "Consult with her. I might be able to stick some sort of tech device into your head to help ward off the Psions, but it also might end up becoming a weakness. You can't underestimate these Technopaths, either. They can interface with technology remotely."

Jason nods. "It sure is nice having two genius wives. Maybe I should make a few more, huh?"

Phoebe snorts. "If you need another wife, I'm sure I can find a taker. What about Samantha? I'm sure she'd loooove to bed a Hero. You'd make for a good notch on her belt."

Feeling slightly offput by his wife's fierce counterattack, Jason simply chuckles. "No need for that. She's way more into you than me, honey. Try not to stick your tongue down her throat while I'm gone."

"I make no promises." Phoebe replies, solemnly raising a hand. "I might get up into all sorts of tomfoolery without you here to keep me in check."

"Yeah, I don't doubt that for a minute!" Jason laughs.

Not long after, Jason and Phoebe walk downstairs, eat some breakfast, and head off to deal with their duties.

As they leave, they give each other a long, loving kiss.

"See you later," Jason says. "Love you!"

"Love you too!" Phoebe says.

After Phoebe disappears down one of the city's main streets, Jason activates his T-REX to look at his day's itinerary.

"Hmm. I'll probably head off to deal with Unarin... tomorrow! As for Marie Becker, she can wait until I return."

Past the northern edge of the Fortress of Retribution, inside a small cottage located in the woods...

A demoness sits on a stool in the middle of the house's living area. This demoness, a portly woman named Rosalia, rocks back and forth while blood vessels in her eyes threaten to burst.

"...him from me... took him from me... that skank! How dare Belial! How dare she?!"

Recalling the conversation she had the day before, the top of Rosalia's head threatens to explode with rage.

Belial came to her while she was on shift at the hospital. Her tone was warm. Friendly, even.

She told Rosalia that 'someone' had found Beelzebub in Rosalia's basement, by chance. But how could such a random thing happen?! No doubt, Belial was snooping on her subordinate and stumbled across Beelzebub.

Belial then went on to thank Rosalia for torturing Beelzebub, since he deserved no better. Now, however, he would have to be put into custody until the day of the Stormbringer Tribunal. On that day, he would most likely face execution for his crimes.

"If it weren't for you holding him all this time, he might have escaped! Whatever means you used to deduce his identity, you've truly done humanity a big favor, Rosalia!" Belial had happily proclaimed.

"What favor? WHAT FAVOR?!" Rosalia roars at the ceiling. "That skanky, no-good, fat-tittied bitch! She took my Beelzebub from me! He's mine! MINE!"

Rosalia stands up and kicks her foot backward, sending the stool rocketing away. It crashes against the wall and explodes into splinters, with some of the smaller ones bouncing off her back.

She paces back and forth, seething like never in her life.

"Always, always it's some skinny slut who wants to take him from me! First, Ose! Now, Belial! RRRRRGH! How am I going to get him back?!"

As Rosalia paces, a voice speaks inside her head.

I warned you, Rosalia. I told you that you couldn't hold back if you wished to receive what was rightfully yours.

Rosalia hesitates. She frowns.

"Desire..."

I'm still here. Haven't gone anywhere. I have been watching you, though. Laughing at your naivete. Do you still not get it? Beelzebub doesn't want you. He never has and never will. At least, not as you are, now... a fat slobbish, unlikable woman. Dull-headed and stupid. It's only natural he'd prefer the company of a tight little succubi...

"Shut up!" Rosalia snarls. "Mister Beelzebub... loves me! If it wasn't for that skank forcibly removing him-"

Pish-posh. Lie to yourself and lie to everyone else, but you can't lie to me. I am Desire. I am your Desire. I know what it is you want. But how can you get the things you want without expending effort? Follow my lead, and you will take whatever you please.

The corpulent demoness pauses to stare at a full-body mirror. So fat is she that she can't even see the sides of her body unless she takes several steps back.

Rosalia frowns. She touches her lumps of fat, and her expression turns gloomy.

"It will take forever to shed this weight. And what's the point, anyway? Mister Beelzebub is a Duke... I'm barely even a Grunt..."

Ah, now you're being honest with yourself. Desire says. You acknowledge that your appearance is a limitation to attaining your desires. As for how to solve that limitation, isn't the solution obvious? You need only... evolve!

"Evolve?" Rosalia repeats, taken aback. "You mean... to the rank of Lord?"

Lord. Baron. Duke. Emperor. All of these things are within reach. You need only possess the proper mindset to seize them. What is the fundamental requirement for evolving to the next rank?

"Souls." Rosalia says. "Well, I could try the Wordsmith's method, too. If I can just get some Merit Tokens, I can visit the Belial Booster... yuck! Why would I want to use HER booster? Why is it named after that slut, anyway?! I'll never go that route!"

Hehehe... Desire chuckles. Indeed, you should avoid it. Using the Wordsmith's systems will only empower him. And besides... why go against the grain? Why not use an ancient, tried and tested method of advancement? Souls are even more readily available and plentiful than ever. You need only... consume them.

Rosalia's frown deepens.

"That's... no, that's not right. Demons have lost our access to humanity's souls. They're all inside that Lazarus Tower now. How can I possibly obtain any now? Don't tell me you think I'm capable of breaking in and eating them right from the source?!"

Of course not. Why would I ask you to do such a pointless thing which will surely result in your death? No, I think you've overlooked another way you can obtain souls for yourself. And that way... is through the old fashioned method.

"I... don't follow." Rosalia says.

You really are a useless fat idiot. Desire snarks. Consuming souls directly, Rosalia! Directly from the source! Is it not obvious?

"Huh?!" Rosalia exclaims, visibly shocked. "You want me to eat humans and consume their souls directly? But... how?! Even if a demon kills a human, their soul will instantly get sucked into the River Styx! Well, I guess it's the Lazarus Tower now, but you know what I mean!"

True... most demons are incapable of doing this. Desire says, her tone filled with disdain. But you forget... my Master is a demon of great means. Through me, you can harness a unique ability. All of those who accept his 'worms' can do this. It is a simple matter. When you kill a human, I will lock onto their soul and forcibly drag it into your body for you to devour! Simple and clean.

Rosalia blinks several times, suffering multiple mental shocks as a result of Desire's explanations.

"So I can eat human souls? I can... become a Lord, a Baron, and even a Duke?!"

It is a simple matter. Desire states. However! All of humanity now lives on this one, singular world. To become a Lord, you will need to consume 100 souls. To become a Baron, you will need an additional 1,000 souls. To become a Duke, you will require 100,000 souls! And to become an Emperor? One million souls! In total you will require 1,101,100 souls to reach the highest rank among your species. To do so quickly will be impossible. But if you take your time and move with caution, I promise... your rise will be inevitable!

Rosalia's expression becomes more determined as she listens to Desire's counsel.

"The humans have eyes everywhere. Even finding and killing a hundred people will be super tough! Plus, how will I hide the bodies? Don't you think this task is harder than it was at any point in the past?"

Becoming powerful is never easy. There are no free lunches. When it comes to the bodies, don't you worry. I can assist you with that. Listen to me, follow my commands, and I promise you will achieve great things, little Rosalia.

Rosalia nods slowly. Her eyes become focused as she looks in the mirror, imagining a reborn version of herself, enchanting and beautiful enough for even Beelzebub to take notice.

"I can't save Mister Beelzebub the way I am. Alright! It's settled, then. If the me of today can't do anything, perhaps the me of tomorrow can! I'll chase my Desire and become someone everyone envies! I'll make myself beautiful, Beelzebub my man, and the filthy humans my cattle!"

Good... so long as you follow my guidance, you will receive everything you deserve. Desire says, giggling sinisterly to herself.

Phoebe Hiro walks around the city, talking to dozens of people over the course of several hours. As humanity's chief inventor, as well as Tarus II's Development Executive, countless activities and request demand her attention, yanking her around with reckless abandon.

At some point, it reaches lunchtime. Phoebe drags herself over to a food stand to grab a bite to eat. After piling some beef, cheese, and other sloppy fast food onto a plate, she wanders over to a nearby fountain and sits down.

This fountain is part of a town square with several benches lining the perimeter, along with some bushes and flowers. Despite only two weeks having passed since Beelzebub's detonation, Jason's Wordsmithing has allowed the trees and foliage to grow back far faster than expected, bringing nature to the masses.

As Phoebe sits on the edge of the fountain and starts to dig into her food, she glances to the side and spots a few other people sitting on its edge. The sound of bubbling water always draws people hoping to escape the hustle and bustle of their daily workload, so seeing other people doesn't seem out of the ordinary.

Rather, a familiar face draws Phoebe's gaze, making her blink twice.

"Hmm? Amelia?"

Hope Hiro's fiancé, Amelia, also known as Annette, dryly munches on some carrots, her expression one of disgust.

Phoebe hesitates, but ultimately relents. She stands up, walks over to Amelia, and smiles.

"Um, hey, Annette! How are you? Mind if I sit here?"

Annette glances up at her in surprise. "Phoebe? Sure, sure. I don't mind."

Her tone, while a little gruff, isn't completely unfriendly. Phoebe bites the bullet and sits down next to her, forcing a smile.

"I'm still never sure whether to call you Annette or Amelia." Phoebe says. "Which would you prefer?"

"Doesn't matter." Annette says, chomping down onto one of the carrots. The loud crunch seems to sicken her, so she slows her chewing to a more slow and deliberate speed. "I used to be able to eat food. Ever since Hope assimilated Amelia's memories into me, I've had the damnedest time. My body requires food. I feel hunger. But it all tastes disgusting. I can't tell the difference between vomit and celery anymore."

With half a bite of meat in her mouth, Phoebe chokes on her food.

"Ack! Um, what a... vivid description."

"Oh. Sorry." Amelia says, glancing at Phoebe's plate. "I'm surprised you can even eat meat. I thought you were some hippie-dippy vegan."

"Vegan?" Phoebe repeats. "No, no. I like meat just fine. Where did you ever get such an idea?"

"You're such a prissy do-gooder." Amelia says. "You're always chatting with people and playing miss-nice-lady. I figured eating animals would be impossible for you."

Phoebe snorts. "Well, you don't know me very well. I love meat. I do feel bad for you, though, Annette. What with your... condition."

"I'll survive." Amelia says, taking another bite of her carrot. "Though, I'm having trouble in... other ways. My problems with food are nothing by comparison."

"What sorts of problems?" Phoebe asks, her ears perking up. "Can I help?"

Amelia falls silent.

Several seconds pass as she lifelessly chews the orange mush, rolling it around her mouth before stifling her gag reflex to swallow it.

"I don't know who I am anymore." Amelia finally says. "Am I Debra's sister, Annette? Or am I the Black Queen, Amelia Greyheart? I have both of their memories. But the sheer difference in quantity isn't something I can avoid. Amelia lived to be tens of thousands of years old, and that's not counting the time she spent in that statue. As for Annette, she barely existed for a hundred years, if we exclude the time spent as Bahamut's enchanted servants."

She pauses.

"I look like Amelia. I have more of her memories in me. And she definitely died on Polaris, no doubt about that. But I was also Annette originally. Those are my... my 'pure' memories. But are they really me, now? Do I even want to 'be' Annette anymore?"

Phoebe listens quietly, slowly taking bites from her beef and cheese plate while Amelia talks.

"I never liked being Annette." Amelia continues. "I was so boring. I was a nobody. Then my sister introduced me to 'Jason,' who was actually Hope. We hit it off. He was having so many problems, and I wanted to be there for him. He kept saying how I reminded him of this other woman, and ultimately I suggested making me look like her, but it wasn't enough. I could see it was eating him up. Then I went through a total transformation, replaced Annette's memories with Amelia's, and now, six years later... I barely even feel like Debra's sister anymore."

She heaves a deep sigh, finally setting the carrots on her lap, unable to take another bite.

"I don't know who I am anymore. I don't know what to do."

Having listened the whole time, Phoebe slowly nods.

"You're having an identity crisis. I can't blame you. You feel like you're Amelia, but instinctively, you know you aren't her. Amelia died, Annette. She's been gone for six years."

Phoebe cocks her head and smiles.

"But even so, what really makes a person a person? Hmm? Bael and Ose swapped their bodies. Does that make them any less their original selves? Even Buddha has returned to the realm of the living. He's possessed Makoto Ueda's body... but does that mean Makoto is dead? I don't think so."

Before Phoebe can continue, Amelia interjects. "Wait, you said Buddha is alive? Buddha? As in... Siddhartha Gautama? The Hero who pacified two Demon Emperors in his prime?"

Phoebe nods slowly. "You weren't aware?"

"...I wasn't." Amelia says, looking annoyed. "I've met him before, you know. Rather, Amelia did. I did? Amelia did. One of us did, anyway. I met him back in Ancient Rome. He had reincarnated into the body of some noble and immediately noticed my presence. He said some mumbo jumbo about Karma, and the next thing I knew, he summoned a freaking lightning bolt to strike my head. Nearly killed me, the bloody bastard!"

Amelia grinds her teeth as she talks. "What a prick. Never liked those self-righteous types like him or Arthur. Anyway, uh... what were we talking about?"

"Your identity." Phoebe says slowly. "Who you really are."

"Right. That." Amelia grumbles. "Never mind. It's too heavy of a topic. I don't wanna talk about it anymore. Actually, since you're here, I had this idea I wanted to run past you for a while now..."

"What sort of idea?" Phoebe asks.

Amelia gestures vaguely to a small platoon of T-REX-wearing soldiers walking past.

"The Black Queen has fought in a lot of battles. Like... like a LOT of battles. I have all her memories. I know what peak human fighting capability looks like. Your soldiers have good equipment, but their training is terrible."

"Training so many soldiers while also trying to rebuild after Stormbringer is... kind of difficult." Phoebe says.

Amelia nods. "I know. Plus, doing a bunch of combat training is pretty tough on the body. BUT! What if there was another way?"

"Another way?" Phoebe says, raising an eyebrow. "What sort of way?"

"That's simple." Amelia declares. "...virtual training! If you let me help you, we can make a magical artifact that allows humans, monsters, and demons to fight one another in a virtual environment. I had the privilege of using Caesar's artifact once. It allowed all of his soldiers to train their bodies and minds even past the brink of death, turning them into unstoppable, battle-hardened warriors. With my help, you can make a relic that mimics the effect of his Colosseum, allowing millions of people to become much more powerful on the field of battle!"

"That's... a useful concept." Phoebe says. "I have been working with Blinker on something else, though... so maybe you can talk to her and Fiona about your idea. I happen to be swinging over to see them after this... want to join me?"

After a few moments of consideration, Amelia bobs her head up and down. "This... alright! I'm still a human, you know. I want to see humanity thrive. While Hope and Jason are off doing their thing, we ladies have to do our part too, right?"

Phoebe smiles. "Right you are. And we can't let the men get big heads, thinking we're dragging them down. Frankly, if it weren't for me, I think Jason would forget how to tie his shoes!"

Amelia laughs. She and Phoebe throw away their leftovers, and as they leave, the former Black Queen gives the white-haired Wordsmith's wife a long look.

"You know, Phoebe... you're really not that bad after all."

"Gee, thanks."

Part 378: Cube World

It doesn't take long for Phoebe and Amelia to travel away from the Fortress of Retribution's upper plateau. They leave through the western ramp, then make their way past all the newly constructed houses and apartment complexes, wandering through surprisingly tidy little neighborhoods with lots of other people also walking the streets. Already, a simple mass transit system has taken hold, thanks to a few dozen buses built earlier in the week.

Even with buses available, space on them is hard to come by. With tens of millions of people in the city, every bus is always packed as they ferry people from the city center to any of the other four cardinal directions. Once reaching their destinations, they can depart and travel on foot anywhere else they need to go.

Still, the two women take the scenic route. It takes them about an hour to reach the northern military base, where they finally encounter a large, heavily fortified base built out of demonstone and Wordsmith-fortified exosteel. Even if a nuclear bomb were to detonate, this particular base would survive the explosion, along with up to five million citizens. Its underground areas, having been hollowed out and reinforced by goblins, offer plenty of room, if not comfort, for people to huddle down in the event of another Beelzebub-type emergency.

When Phoebe arrives at the walls surrounding the military base, she flashes her ID to one of the guards. They allow her in, but one of the guards gazes with muted hostility at Amelia.

After they enter, Amelia glances backward, then reorients her gaze to the front.

"Problem?" Phoebe asks.

"You didn't notice?" Amelia asks.

"Notice what?"

"...Nothing."

Amelia shakes her head, slightly dismayed. Invisible question marks pop up over Phoebe's head, but she doesn't press the issue.

They head deeper into the compound, traveling past two-story buildings, warehouses, and ammunition depots on their left and right. As they walk, Phoebe and Amelia pass by hundreds of troopers, all of them decked out in active T-REXs. Some of the soldiers swivel their heads in the women's general direction, but upon seeing Phoebe, or perhaps even Amelia, they look away a moment later.

"Excuse me," Phoebe says to a passing trooper. "Where is Fiona?"

"Miss Hiro!" The man says, snapping to attention with a brisk salute. "Miss Fiona is presently working with Lady Blinker on that... special array. The one you-"

"That one. I understand." Phoebe says, nodding along to his words. "Thank you."

"Anytime, ma'am."

The man continues on with his day, while Amelia shoots a curious glance at Phoebe.

"What's this about a 'formation'?"

"Well. Blinker is a fairy." Phoebe says. "Fairies specialize in 'formation magic.' As such, we have her working on all sorts of top secret projects."

"Should I have access?" Amelia asks.

"If I say you can see something, you can see it." Phoebe answers, lightly patting the former Black Queen's shoulder. "No worries."

"Alright. If you say so..."

Phoebe leads Amelia into one of the base's central facilities, a convex dome painted black like the night, with blacked-out windows made from two-foot-thick exoglass. Impossible to see inside, but very easy to see outside, the dome is the base's most important structure.

After they step inside, Amelia finds herself amidst more than thirty desks with computers and laptops whirring quietly. Two hundred high-level personnel mill about in the well-lit interior, as blue lights above shine down, giving everything and everyone a sapphire-like hue.

At the center of the room, there is a circular staircase that goes downwards, into the depths of the facility's secret underground area. As Phoebe leads Amelia toward it, several of the personnel, those not wearing exosuits, shoot sidelong glances at Amelia.

Their expressions are anything but pleasant.

Amelia fidgets with her fingers as she descends the staircase. With Phoebe in front, leading the way, she doesn't notice the look of discomfort on Amelia's face.

"...Maybe I shouldn't be down here." Amelia repeats. "Phoebe, don't you feel like... like the people here are looking at me funny?"

Phoebe glances backward. "Huh? They are?"

She continues walking, but a thoughtful expression plays on her face.

"I guess that makes sense. I mean... you are the Black Queen. At the very least, you look like her. Amelia never was popular among the humans, especially the survivors of the worlds she... ravaged. Some of them are here with us now. They probably have talked about you to the others... so you'll have quite a bad reputation."

Amelia nods glumly. "Yeah. That makes sense."

After descending a hundred feet into the planet's depths, the spiral staircase opens up into a wide hallway with a few doors on each wall, and further up the hallway, multiple corridors branch off to the right and left. Faint sounds trickle into Phoebe and Amelia's ears from the distance, but as for what they could be, Amelia has no idea.

As if guided by a beacon, Phoebe beelines toward those distant sounds. She walks up the corridor, passing by several humans in military uniform, but none of them wearing currently active T-REX's. One thing Amelia can't help but notice is the complete absence of any monsters or demons in this region. Only humans travel around in this restricted zone.

The floors, made of stained black granite, shine and gleam as if polished only ten minutes before. The cream-colored walls appear to be made of reinforced dirt, but also strains of marble put in with random patterns to liven up the decor.

As they walk, Phoebe and Amelia pass a large mural on the wall, one emblazoned with Jason and Hope's visages. The two men strike heroic poses, gazing off into the sunset, as if looking forward to a bright future for all of their friends and family.

To the right of their faces, large words sit emboldened on the walls, a declaration of intent sure to burn into the minds of any who lay their eyes on them.

HUMANITY WILL REIGN SUPREME!

Phoebe pauses as she walks past the mural. She glowers at those words for a moment before shaking her head and continuing forward.

"...Problem?" Amelia asks.

"Not exactly. Well, sort of." Phoebe answers, her tone unusually gruff. "That 'slogan' wasn't there yesterday. Neil's doing, no doubt..."

"It's a good slogan, though. Isn't it?" Amelia asks.

"It's not the goal Jason is pursuing." Phoebe explains. "Jason wants to forgive the old grievances and mend old wounds. In his ideal future, all of the species can live together, seeking mutual benefits without conflict. But this slogan... tsk. It reeks of Neil's human-first attitude. He's always hinting that monsters and demons must come second and third to humans..."

"And you disagree?" Amelia prompts.

"I'm a human." Phoebe says, turning her head to look at Amelia while the two of them walk. "Obviously, if I have to pick between my species or the others, I'll pick humanity's survival every time. But I have many friends among the monsters and demons. I understand Neil's point of view, but Jason is my husband, and I'll always support him. If he wants to make a utopia where all the species live together in harmony, then I'll damn well do what I can to make it happen."

"Are you going to have that slogan blotted out, then?" Amelia asks.

"If only things were that simple." Phoebe says through gritted teeth. "Jason is popular. But so is Neil. So is Hope. Most of the civilian populace favors Jason. Especially the huge numbers of recently rescued slaves from the Seven Hells. But the military favors Neil. Publicly, they will always speak out in favor of Jason's orders. But in private... tsk. Let's just say there are a lot of bitter and angry soldiers who aren't keen about playing house with the demons."

"Can you blame them?" Amelia asks. "Beelzebub... he killed a lot of people. He wasn't the only demon murderer during Stormbringer, either. The hatred for demonkind runs deep."

Phoebe stops walking. She halts abruptly and swivels to face Amelia.

"Of course I can't blame them! How could I?! There are days when my own hatred is so overwhelming, and so all-consuming, I can barely control myself! The demons MURDERED my little girl! They killed Kar! They killed millions of innocent men, women, and children too! It's not like I can just smile and grit my teeth with no consequences.

Every goddamn day, I see things that remind me of all the people I've lost. And I know that if I think these thoughts, then so do all the others who survived Stormbringer..."

Phoebe sucks in a huge breath. Her chest heaves with frustration as she fights back tears.

"That slogan isn't just a bunch of words on a wall. It's an idea! And frankly, it's an idea that would tempt any Stormbringer survivor. If Jason wasn't so stubborn with his ideals, I'd have surely broken down and joined Neil's side, and without hesitation! But for Jason's sake, I have to try and be better, every single day! I have to remember what we're fighting for, and that hatred only begets more hatred."

Amelia's expression becomes solemn. She listens patiently with her hands folded in front of her waist while Phoebe rants. When the Hero's wife finishes, Amelia slowly nods.

"It's been... hard on you."

Phoebe's shoulders sag. A deep weariness momentarily takes over her mind, making her close her eyes and sigh in exasperation.

"It has. Every day is a struggle... you're actually... the first person I've told about all of this."

Amelia leans against the wall behind her. "You haven't told Jason? I thought you didn't keep anything from each other."

"We don't. I'm not exactly hiding anything... I'm just... I don't want to put too much on his plate. Ever since Daisy's death, he's become more steeled and resolute, but I can hear the words he doesn't say out loud. He blames himself for what happened to her. If I were to unload on him, he'd feel so guilty, he'd insist on taking over all the work. And if he did, I'd feel so incredibly guilty myself..."

"Hope and I don't talk all that much." Amelia says, lowering her eyes to the floor. She traces a circle on the smooth granite with her toe. "Especially not since his return. He's always gone, off doing something. Now he's in Hell, looking for a couple of Demon Emperors. I wish I could talk to him, but he's just not available."

Phoebe chuckles. "We women have our own problems."

"Yeah. We do." Amelia replies, a smile playing on the corner of her lips.

"Well. Let's keep going. I still have a lot to show you." Phoebe says, gesturing forward. "We're almost there."

Amelia nods. She falls into place beside Phoebe, and the two of them walk toward a large pair of steel doors. The distant sounds become more audible the closer they draw, until Amelia can finally make out the sounds of combat.

Phoebe pushes open the doors. Immediately, Amelia freezes on the spot, visibly bewildered.

"What the hell? Did we step into a parallel universe?"

"Not quite." Phoebe says, smiling at Amelia. "But something like that."

A large ramp descends downward into a huge underground jungle. The sounds of gunfire and shouting ring out, and through the dense underbrush, Amelia can just barely make out distant movements of human soldiers.

The underground space is vast, far bigger than Amelia can comprehend. At a glance, it appears to be a self-contained world, and even sunlight streams down from the 'sky' above.

That detail makes Amelia blink her eyes in confusion.

Wait, sky? Why would there be a sky underground? And why does it appear so vivid and realistic? Did we walk through a warpgate to another world?

Gunfire rings out in the foliage. The roar of a primal beast causes the trees and plant-life to shake, even making Amelia flinch.

"Where the heck are we?" Amelia asks, directing her attention to Phoebe.

"This is a Special Training Zone." Phoebe answers. "It's one of many. As for where we are... you might not believe me, even if I told you."

"Try me." Amelia says.

The Wordsmith's wife looks at Amelia and chuckles. "We're inside... a cube!"

"A cube?"

"Yes. Jason discovered a super-massive, ultra powerful artifact belonging to an ancient Archangel. Camael, to be exact. The Cube's existence is top-secret. Only humanity's leaders know about it. When we stepped through the doorway, we traveled across space to enter the Cube's confines. As for this jungle before us... it's real. The Cube is bigger than you can imagine. You could fit Tarus II's entire surface area inside of it... ten thousand times over. It's so enormous, you can't possibly wrap your head around its size."

"I... I had no idea humanity had obtained such a potent artifact." Amelia says in amazement. "And right now, we're not even on Tarus II anymore?"

"That's right." Phoebe smiles. "Not only that, but this inner space is... special. You probably can't tell, but there's a time enchantment active. Three minutes in here is only one minute back in the Milky Way's temporal timeline. This allows our soldiers to train three times faster than the monsters and demons on Tarus II."

Phoebe gazes into the jungle. "It's humanity's secret weapon."

"Then... do these soldiers know they aren't on Tarus II anymore?" Amelia asks.

"No. As a famous Hero once said, before you can deceive your enemies, you must first deceive yourself. The soldiers here only believe this is a special underground space. As for the sounds we heard while we approached this place, those were... fake. We have special recordings that play sounds heard inside of here out in the hallways to give the illusion that this training zone lays beneath Tarus II's surface. No doubt, some of the clever soldiers have realized something is 'off,' but they won't be able to easily uncover this training area's secrets."

Phoebe gestures behind herself, at the doorway she and Amelia just walked through. Amelia follows her gaze, and finds that the entrance and exit to this area appear completely normal. She can still see the hallway outside, and nothing looks to be out of the ordinary.

"But... how can anyone look at a jungle this huge and a sky like that, but not think they've traveled to another world?" Amelia asks.

"Fairy magic." Phoebe says. "That's what we tell all the soldiers we bring here. Officially, this training area is an illusory formation created by Blinker. That's why the sky appears so real and the creatures our soldiers fight are so lifelike. Of course, Blinker could create a training area with similar attributes, but the size wouldn't be at this level."

"What about the other training zones?" Amelia asks.

"We have several environments to choose from. This is a jungle, but there's also an urban environment, a shattered-urban environment for simulating bombed-out areas, a world of fire, an aquatic biome... and we'll be adding more soon."

Seeing the look of disbelief on Amelia's face, Phoebe wryly smiles. "If you think these environments take up a lot of the Cube's space, let me tell you... we haven't even used up a millionth of a percent of its interior! The Cube is humanity's refuge, should the worst come to pass. Over time, we'll be converting it into a place where humans can live and thrive, outside of the Volgrim's grasp."

Amelia frowns. "You say it's for humans... but what about monsters and demons?"

"Well..."

Phoebe's expression becomes downcast.

"...Right now, they're not in the cards. Neil has a lot of pull with this operation. Outwardly, he only wants to build military training depots, but soon he'll be creating living spaces that rival or are even superior to those on Tarus II. I don't doubt he wants to secretly divert people to live in the Cube. With the time differential, humans will reproduce and expand our numbers three times faster than in the outer universe."

"That is indeed... a little sinister." Amelia says. "Why not talk him out of it, then?"

Phoebe hesitates. "Well... that's because... I don't exactly disagree with him."

"Mmm. His idea does have a lot of merits..." Amelia says slowly, a frown playing upon her face. "There are only sixty-three million humans in existence. All of them are on Tarus II. If a plague were to strike, or another mass extinction event, or god-forbid a Beelzebub-event, humanity could go extinct. It wouldn't be smart to put all your eggs in one basket."

That's right." Phoebe nods. "If we were to put ten million humans in the Cube, it would only take six years for babies to grow up and reach the age of eighteen. Then they could have children. And those children would have children. For every one generation that grows up and reproduces on Tarus II, three would grow up on the Cube. As you can imagine, with humans also no longer dying of old age, our population would explode. We would make a numerical resurgence at a speed that might shock you."

Amelia glances out at the underground jungle.

"And it all starts with this training area..." She mutters. "But I do have a question. You said before that Blinker was involved. If this place isn't an illusion, then what does she... do?"

"Oh. That's easy." Phoebe laughs. "Her work is actually quite simple, at least on the surface. See the doorway behind us? That's all Blinker."

"I don't follow." Amelia says.

Phoebe walks back to the doorway at the top of the ramp. She steps inside and outside of it, walking back and forth while smiling at Amelia.

"See how seamless the transition is? In truth, traveling from normal space to a time-accelerated temporality would put a tremendous burden on the body. However, Blinker laid a formation at the entrance that perfectly bridges the gap from 1x Temporality to 3x Temporality. The further you travel into the jungle, the faster your state of existence will become. Likewise, if you draw back toward the doorway, your existence will slow down, merging back into ordinary-space. Also, to travel from a planet to the Cube, located in another dimension tens of thousands of miles distant from Tarus II... I'm sure you can imagine the difficulty of setting up such a spatial transfer."

Amelia nods. "Even when walking through the Warpgates, my body shudders a little. The transition isn't nearly as smooth as walking through this doorway..."

"We call that 'Spatial Shock.'" Phoebe explains. "It's just like Temporal Shock, but for space instead of time. Blinker's formations bridge that gap."

Phoebe clears her throat. "Anyway. Now that we've gotten all the technical stuff out of the way, let's actually get down to the reason I brought you here. Blinker should be here, in this jungle. When she isn't setting up fancy-shmancy spatial-temporal doorways to extradimensional vacation and training areas, she's usually here, helping to train our troops."

The Wordsmith's wife pauses for a moment. Her smile fades.

"As for why Blinker works so diligently, I'm sure you can fathom the reason. Her husband was killed by the demons. She gets along fine with Samantha and a few others... but realistically, she's more on Neil's side than Jason's. She wants humanity to become more powerful, that way she can beat the hell out of Mephisto and recover Kar's body and soul. There's still a chance we might be able to save him, after all."

"Do you think she'll be interested in my idea?" Amelia asks. "For an inter-species training simulator, I mean."

"Oh, I don't doubt she will." Phoebe nods. "One big constraint we face with these Cube-biomes is that the losses and injuries are... realistic. Too much so. If you die in the jungle, you're dead for good. It's great for our elites, but a bit too much for the newer recruits or the mentally unsteady. Your idea would allow us to craft training sims where people's lives aren't on the line and they can fight to the death. Further, if we can incorporate spirituality into the sims..."

Phoebe's gaze deepens as she gazes out at the jungle.

"...I'm excited for the potential. Humanity needs a leg up. Our enemies are ancient, entrenched, and willing to murder us if we slip up even in the slightest. Things are going well lately, but how long will that last?"

"Do you believe Jason can make a utopia where all the species peacefully coexist?" Amelia asks.

"If I'm being honest? I don't." Phoebe answers, turning back to the other woman. "But even if I don't think it can happen, that doesn't mean I don't want to try to make it happen."

"And yet you still quietly support Neil's projects." Amelia says, nodding slowly. "You're... hedging your bets? Just in case?"

"Yeah. I can't take a risk involving my entire species." Phoebe says bitterly. "Especially not now that I'm... pregnant. My baby's future depends on humanity's survival. I've already lost one child. I can't bear to lose another."

"You're pregnant?" Amelia asks. "Well... congratulations?"

"Thanks. I haven't told anyone but you, Jason, and Samantha. I hope you'll keep it quiet for now."

"No problem. I won't tell a soul." Amelia says, smiling sweetly. "Now, regarding Blinker. Can you take me to see her?"

Phoebe nods. "Sure. Just follow me."

"Alright."

Part 379: Foundational Formation Contemplation

Phoebe and Amelia continue heading down into the jungle training world. Once they reach the bottom of the entry ramp and stand amidst the trees and plants, Amelia can't help but feel like the independent world is indeed incredibly lifelike. The smells of damp moss and rainfall mix with the chirping of birds and other sounds of strange and exotic insect life. As for the distant soldiers, their voices are slightly harder to hear than at the top of the ramp, due to all the underbrush blotting out the local sounds.

Phoebe reaches into her pocket and pulls out a tiny handheld communicator. She lifts it to her mouth, holds a trigger on the side, and says, "Phoebe Hiro to Blinker."

Moments later, Blinker replies. "Hey, Phoebe! Are you here?"

"I'm at the entrance. Where are you?"

"I'm with Fiona. Just head to this position..."

Blinker tells Phoebe where to walk, and she nods. After putting away the communicator, she guides Amelia toward a spot deep in the jungle.

"Are we in any danger?" Amelia asks, after hearing the sound of a frightening monster roar less than half a kilometer in the distance.

"We're fine. When people come here, Blinker's formation puts a temporary spell on them that makes them invisible to the wildlife. Only if they're here to train will they intentionally disable it, or if they attack a creature it will disable automatically."

"That's good to hear." Amelia says, glancing in the direction of the previous roar. "As a reminder, I don't actually have any of Amelia's magical powers, so..."

She trails off, but leaves her meaning clear for the world to understand.

Before long, the two women arrive at a large and conspicuous bunker in the forest. Like a blackhead on a snow-white face, the obsidian-colored steel sticks out from the greenery and foliage around it like a sore thumb. At only fifty feet in diameter, it's quite small, but Phoebe explains that it also has an underground resting area for recruits to eat and sleep after their training. Indeed, several officers and cadets linger in the area, their weapons held at the ready in case the local wildlife approaches the bunker.

As soon as they show up, Fiona pops out of the ground and levitates upward, her soul-form easily passing through the terrain without issue. Likewise, Blinker flies down from the sky and lands on Phoebe's shoulder.

"Hi Phoebe! Hey Amelia!" Blinker says. "What brings you to my neck of the woods?"

"Hello, Amelia." Fiona says, faintly smiling while also directing a nod toward her physical self.

"I was talking to Amelia earlier," Phoebe explains, "and she had an interesting idea for another type of training sim that might interest you two."

"Oh? Do tell." Fiona says, fully directing her attention at Amelia.

"It's like this." Amelia explains. "I've been thinking of a way to send people's minds and souls into a training environment that perfectly recreates their abilities, both physical and magical. This would allow humans and demons to engage in virtual wars without suffering any bloodshed. The problem is, I don't have the ability to make such a system. Maybe you two can help me?"

Fiona widens her eyes in surprise. "A virtual battlefield? That's quite an innovative idea. I can see more uses for it than simply training soldiers, too."

"Hmm... I don't have the skills to make a formation like that... but my fairy friends are going to arrive on Tarus II pretty soon. If we can get a talented Orc artificer on board, we can probably combine our efforts and make an artifact that does something similar!"

Fiona nods. "Blinker, you told me before that the Fairy Queen is the best formation master of all the fairies. Will she be coming along?"

"Nope." Blinker says. "But her daughter is! Fairy Queen Fae does not tend to leave the Fairy Realm ever, unless necessary. You have to remember that a lot of species want to capture fairies and... do bad things to us. She stays there as a deterrent to those bad people."

"That's unfortunate." Fiona says, frowning. "Maybe we should invite the fairies to Tarus II. I didn't realize your people suffered such hardships."

"It's like that for mermaids and succubi too." Blinker says, throwing her hands up helplessly. "Beauty is a curse. I'm lucky I found such a good guy like Kar... too bad that's a once in a lifetime thing..."

At the mention of Kar's name, the mood becomes momentarily somber. Perhaps sensing she's created an uncomfortable atmosphere, Blinker quickly coughs and changes subjects.

"Err, ahem! Regarding the Fairy Queen, I should probably mention that there isn't strictly one of them. There are actually several Fairy Queens. I'm even considered one, due to inheriting the Sphinx's power. Fairy Queen Fae is just the highest ranking one, so if you do ever encounter her, make sure you don't act as if she's the only one who matters. You might offend the others!"

"Why would there be multiple queens?" Phoebe asks. "Doesn't that seem a little odd?"

"Silly girl!" Blinker laughs. "That's like asking why there are multiple Demon Emperors. 'Fairy Queen' is a title reserved for the most powerful fairies. It's not a title of nobility or birthright, but of strength! Since fairies specialize in illusions, temporal and spatial magic, and formations, Fae is considered the strongest in two of those categories! She's a formation master, and an expert in illusions. Her fighting prowess isn't too high, but when she's bunkered inside her formations, she's untouchable."

"Formation magic sounds pretty incredible." Amelia muses. "How does it work?"

Blinker glances around the jungle.

"Mmm. It's a bit hard to explain... I should just do a demonstration instead. But this place isn't good, let's head back to Tarus II!"

"Alright." Amelia says.

Amelia, Phoebe, Fiona, and Blinker all exit the jungle, allowing the sounds of roaring monsters and animals to fade into the distance. After they leave through the door back to Tarus II, Amelia glances at Fiona.

"I thought you couldn't leave Tarus II's confines? How are you able to travel to the Cube Worlds?"

Fiona turns to Amelia while they walk. "Well, on Tarus II, I require special 'anchors' to maintain my soul-form while away from Jason's Mind Realm. However, the Cube is different. Jason bound his soul to the Cube through the Phoenix, so I can travel there independently. It's a bit complicated, but you probably get the gist."

"Mmm. I guess that makes sense." Amelia replies.

The group of four leaves the military complex entirely and travels toward the northern edge of the city's limits, where few developments exist. After stepping into a lightly wooded area, a place where Beelzebub's explosion didn't actually reach, Blinker finds a clearing in the middle, away from prying eyes.

"Okay! So, this is my Intro To Beginner Formations!" Blinker says, directing her words at Amelia. "Fiona already knows how this works, but you and Phoebe haven't seen me do it before. Check this out."

Blinker closes her eyes. She inhales deeply, then begins turning her head around while keeping her eyes shut. She points her head in several directions, left and right, up and down, forward and backward, all while sitting on Phoebe's shoulder.

"The first step. I have to sense all of the spiritual energy in the surroundings. Usually, beginner fairies will use external mana sources, like mana stones, to set up a formation, but I'm way beyond that. I can use the environment's mana to create one. It's a bit tricky, and it limits what types of formation I can make, but the upside is I don't have to constantly put fresh mana stones into the formation every few days."

Blinker opens her eyes.

"We're on a planet teeming with life. That means a 'life' formation, or a 'wood formation' is the best type to put down. But if we were above a metal deposit, or some precious stone, we could put down a formation of those types. If we were near lava or fire, a heat-type formation would work too. The same is true of lightning, water, and all the other elements."

Blinker points at the grass in the clearing.

"I'm not going to go all out with this formation. I'll just do something simple! I'll make a 'healing formation'!"

Phoebe raises an eyebrow. "You can make something like that? Won't that put Samantha out of work?"

"No, no, silly." Blinker chuckles. "Formations aren't that incredible. Healing formations can certainly allow people to regenerate limbs and their entire body, but the amount of mana required would be bonkers! An environment-type formation like this can, at best, speed up the body's natural healing abilities a little. I already put one over the hospital, but I doubt anyone has even noticed."

"I didn't notice, sorry." Phoebe says with a shake of her head.

"The effects are pretty mild." Blinker explains. "Your blood will clot faster. Your body's natural healing will work more effectively. Oh, and if you get sick, you'll get over it a lot faster too. But healing from cuts or burns, the formation won't help there. Anyway!"

Blinker holds up her finger. She flies off Phoebe's shoulder to the center of the clearing, where she levitates, her wings flapping like a butterfly.

"Most fairies will start by using all sorts of exotic materials and supplements to create formations. For example, if you want to make a fire-type formation, you'd need fiery materials. When you add in stuff like mana stones, these formations can become quite formidable... and expensive! Most high-level fairies don't use external materials for the average formation, though. We consider them crutches. In my case, I'll use my own mana to do all the work!"

"I see." Amelia says. "So you could make extremely strong formations with external items, but they wouldn't be self sustaining and they're expensive to maintain. On the other hand, making a natural formation will align its element to the environment, making it self-sustaining, albeit weaker than a resource-based one."

Blinker nods. "That's right. And for the record, the formations I created to connect the Cube and Tarus II spatially and temporally are resource-based. I have to feed them goodies every week or they'll fall apart. Very inconvenient!"

She shakes her head, then resumes her work. After a few moments, Blinker summons three balls of light above her finger. They spiral around like moons orbiting a planet, before each firing out into different directions, where they land on the ground.

Weng!

A chime sounds out when they land, as if produced by the ringing of a bell in the air.

"The first step for a Natural Healing Formation is to place three Synergizing Beads." Blinker explains. "They help align and regulate the formation in a triangle formation. I've spaced each of them out to exactly ten meters from one another, so this will be a fairly tiny formation. But there's an advantage in doing this! Large formations can cover a bigger area, but require more natural energy and have smaller effects. Mini formations are more 'concentrated' and thus can produce better results. If a sick person were to sit inside this completed formation, they'd get over their illness two times faster than if they recuperated inside the formation I made around the hospital."

"That makes sense." Phoebe says with a nod.

After placing the first three orbs of light, Blinker summons nine more orbs, and these change color to green and brown, with the central one being red. Half of them become a square enveloping the triangle of previous beads, while the other half become a diamond resting on the edges of the square formation's lines. Finally, the red bead goes directly in the center of all the previous beads, shining with a bright red light as Blinker places it down, before eventually fading away.

Next, Blinker starts drawing lines between all of the different beads she's placed. However, she doesn't draw a symmetrical pattern, but instead one that vaguely resembles a five-fingered hand with its palm facing upward.

"After placing the Synergizing Beads and Elemental Stabilization Beads, we next draw Symbol Lines. Every formation is different, and the intent behind the lines matters as much as the shape the lines take. In fact, I'd personally say the intent matters way more! I could draw a fist, or a bird, or anything else, and so long as I have images of 'healing' in my mind, the formation will work pretty well. But if the Symbol Lines more closely align with my mental intent, the formation will exert much more strength."

Phoebe raises an eyebrow. "Huh... that sounds a lot like Wordsmithing."

"Pardon?" Blinker asks.

"Well. Jason always says intent is at least half of what makes his Words of Power function. 'Fireball' can mean any sort of flaming ball of fire, but its shape and power will vastly differ based on what image he shapes in his head. It can be small and fast, big and powerful, or even tiny and concentrated, like a railgun round."

Blinker nods slowly. "Hmm. Yeah, I can see the similarities."

After a few moments, she returns her attention to the formation.

"Usually, you wouldn't want to lose your concentration while creating a formation. That will mess up the intent and make it function poorly. The strength could drop by half or more. But luckily, I'm sort of a BIG expert, and this formation is pretty simple, so that's no problem. Now that we've placed the different Beads and drawn the Symbol Lines, we just need to coalesce the terrain's energy, align all the elements in the area, disperse any harmful elements, remove any imperfections, and stabilize the final product..."

Blinker's hands dance in the air, casting out even more beads, drawing more lines, and stacking all sorts of mystical effects onto her newly created formation.

"...Success!" She declares. "The formation is all donezo! If you want, you can cut your finger a little, step inside the formation, and watch it heal. This formation ended up reaching the level of 'Excellent' but it didn't quite reach 'Perfection.' All formations have different tiers of power and effectiveness, ranging from Mediocre to Passable, Effective, Superb, Excellent, and Perfection. I can usually make low-level formations like this one reach the level of Perfection, but my mind wandered a little during the process, so I screwed up."

"Pardon my ignorance," Amelia says, "but these formations seem pretty simple to make. It barely even took you five minutes."

Blinker chuckles. "Well, it's not THAT easy. I spent several millennia learning how to make formations, and mostly spent time on illusions. A tiny one like this is simple, no problem at all. But I spent two whole days working on the one at the hospital! In the end, it reached the level of Superb, so it only boosts a person's innate healing ability by maybe forty percent or so. As for the formations linking Tarus II to the Cube... yikes! I felt like I was going to die. If Fairy Queen Fae were to see them, she'd probably ridicule my shoddy skills. The best one is only Effective, but the worst is Mediocre. You can tell the difference by how your body 'jolts' when traveling to the aquatic biome versus the jungle."

Phoebe nods. "The jungle one is like walking through an open doorway. Direct and simple. But the aquatic biome always makes my head hurt for a few minutes."

"That's because the aquatic biome was way different compared to Tarus II's environment. Trying to synergize the two was a big pain in my butt!" Blinker complains. "It works, but I'll have to consult the other fairies and see if they can improve or even redo the formation from scratch. I'm super untalented with the elements of water and fire."

Amelia bobs her head along to Blinker's words. "So, does that mean my idea for a soul battlefield is impossible to achieve? For you, at least?"

"Yeah... it's a bit beyond my capabilities. But if Fae's daughter is half as good as her mother, don't you worry! We'll think of something. I can see a hundred uses for this sort of fighting simulator!"

"A hundred uses?" Amelia says, confused. "I don't understand. What other uses do you mean?"

"Think about it." Blinker explains. "We're talking about an arena where people can fight to the death without suffering any negative consequences. It won't be limited to humans, so that means demons and monsters can join in. Don't most people love watching big, bloody fights? You could settle disputes by having people beat the heck out of each other! You could set up a special fighting arena championship once a month, letting people duke it out for prizes!"

Phoebe grins. "Blinker's right. This virtual area has a heaping of uses beyond just training our troops. We can also slowly turn it into a camaraderie generator, where humans and other species work together to clear challenges, thus building trust between one another. If nothing else, I'm sure Jason will be excited to hear about it."

"Oh! I hadn't even thought of that." Amelia says, her eyes flashing with insight. "If it can be that useful for all of you, I'd be super happy."

"This is just what we needed to get people acquainted with the upcoming Power Gloves." Fiona says, shaking her fist in front of her chest. "I was worried about how they'd be able to go all-out and train their powers, but with a Soul Simulator, we can give them practical training in real-time."

Blinker flies over to Amelia and lands her feet on her shoulder. She reaches over and pats Amelia's cheek with her tiny hand.

"Great contribution, Amelia! Don't you worry. I'll make sure people start changing their minds about you, pronto!"

The four women turn to walk away. As they start to leave, Amelia jerks her thumb over her shoulder, toward the healing formation.

"Uh, are you going to leave that behind?"

"Of course!" Blinker chirps. "It's not hurting anything. Maybe an injured animal will wander into it and get its wounds healed. Undoing the formation would take some effort, and I'm feeling lazy, so I won't bother."

Blinker continues. "Besides, formations aren't exclusively a 'fairy thing.' They appear all over in nature. Fairies simply decoded how formations work and turned them into one of our core abilities."

"You did?" Phoebe asks, bewildered. "Wait, do you mean magical formations can naturally occur? But... but how?"

"I can answer that." Fiona says, taking a small bit of delight in being able to lord some knowledge over her physical self. "Mana exists everywhere in nature. And wherever mana appears, it has a chance to create basic formations. Life itself shifts from chaos to order, and from order to chaos. When things become orderly, formations can appear, gently assisting the life-forms within their confines in some small way. However, natural formations made by the cosmos are generally much weaker and harder to detect than those made by fairies."

"Order to chaos, and chaos to order..." Phoebe repeats. A frown stretches across her face.

"Hm? Something wrong?" Fiona asks.

"No. No, I just... had this strange moment of Deja Vu." Phoebe says, waving her hand through the air. "It's probably nothing."

Amelia glances at Phoebe. For some reason, the mention of 'chaos' stirs a thought in the back of her mind, but it swiftly vanishes, as if silenced by an external force.

"Huh... how odd." Amelia murmurs to herself. "I wonder what that was..."

Part 380: Jason's Departure

Two days later.

Five weeks after Stormbringer, and a little over two after Ose's death, humanity's intelligence bureau receives a communication from the Volgrim.

Sangin Kordonis has arrived.

As the designated ambassador for human-Volgrim relations, he has been tasked with bringing the Wordsmith to Volgarius, where the First Founder will finally speak to him in person. As the two leaders of their species, both people hold positions of power, but Unarin's strength wildly exceeds Jason's, making him the higher-status individual. As such, it's simply not appropriate for him to travel to Jason.

Even so, the Wordsmith doesn't feel humiliated at being placed below Unarin. As a Wordsmith, he's fully confident in his abilities, and believes that given time, humanity will far exceed any accomplishments the Volgrim have ever achieved. For the moment though, his forces are indeed far inferior to even Volgrimkind's weakest auxiliary armies, let alone the ones stationed on their capital world.

Jason, Phoebe, Fiona, and Neil all stand at the southern side of the Fortress of Retribution, some distance from the prisons, outside the crystal dome that covers the city. Before them, a huge landing pad sits, created by Jason just ten minutes earlier, formed out of concrete and steel.

Behind humanity's leaders, fifty thousand soldiers stand at attention in five rows of ten thousand each. They form up behind the Wordsmith, granting him an impressive and awe-inspiring retinue. To Jason's right, a small army of demons stands, while on his left, an army of monsters also stands.

The clouds part, and a giant ship half a kilometer in length slowly descends. The utilitarian, boxy-looking vessel sports two wavy wings stretching out of its sides, each one equipped with double-barreled photon cannons for ship-to-surface combat. The front of the ship narrows to a point, making it look like a rectangular, winged javelin capable of piercing through other vessels should it choose to execute a ramming maneuver. The fact it possesses stealth modules only adds to its lethality.

As a stealth and combat-type frigate, the VLL Hatoraxia is considered by many Volgrim to be a well-equipped, bog-standard vessel used by elites of all the different sub-species. With only a few unique modifications added to it, it wouldn't stand out compared to others of the same class, but it still possesses enough firepower to wipe humanity's existence off the face of Tarus II.

In that respect, it commands fear from all who gaze upon its subtle black exterior.

Humanity's elites, as well as countless monsters and demons, stare with grim expressions at the descending starship. Its massive size and sleek, formidable appearance reminds them of the might the Volgrim possess. Even the cockiest Demon Emperors realize that before a mere frigate of the Volgrim Empire, their combined strength simply isn't even worth a sneeze.

The Hatoraxia's landing struts clank against the landing pad, and its thrusters blow up a small storm of dust. A minute later, its side opens up and a ramp extends downward. Sangin Kordonis and his Psion comrade, Invocator Miikil, walk toward the awaiting human elites.

"Greetings to all of you." Sangin says, appearing much more calm and regal than the last time he met with Jason. "I offer well-wishes to your species on behalf of the great and glorious Five Founders."

Having recently dedicated a certain amount of time to the study of humanity, Kordonis has observed many of their mannerisms from old holodisks. Now that he has mentally prepared himself for what the Wordsmith can do, he doesn't allow himself to get flustered before humanity's people. After all, as a high and mighty Volgrim representative, he must project power before the mud-dwellers, lest they forget the strength of their 'betters.'

Jason casually walks toward Kordonis and extends his fist forward. "It's good to see you again, Sangin Kordonis. Is it fine if I just call you Kordonis? I'm not much for formality."

Kordonis nods. "You may."

He glances at Jason's extended fist, then hesitates for a moment before extending his own arm. However, instead of a hand, his limb tapers off into five long, stringy tentacles. He balls them up into a shape somewhat resembling a fist, and presses them against Jason's fist.

"I was under the impression most humans preferred to 'shake hands' as part of your formal greeting." Kordonis says, retracting his arm afterward. "However, I have learned that some of the... less refined among your people, prefer to perform the ritual of a 'fist bump.' I came prepared."

Kordonis's mouth-tendrils quiver as he speaks, carefully enunciating his words to be loud and audible for everyone to hear him.

"I'm not big on formalities." Jason says. "I treat everyone casually and as an equal. Too much rigidity in social structures makes the titles and positions of power more desirable than actually performing good and worthy deeds to earn those titles."

"A fair assessment." Kordonis nods. He turns his attention away from Jason. "Ah. And you must be the female mating partner of the Wordsmith, Phoebe Hiro. Although... I am confused as to why there are two of you, and why the second one appears to be a holographic entity."

"I'm Phoebe Hiro." Phoebe says. "This is Fiona. She's my... twin sister. Due to a series of odd events, she's now only a soul-form."

Fiona puffs out her chest. "I'm also married to Jason, though. It's complicated."

Kordonis nods sagely. "Of course. I have read that powerful warriors among the humans often take multiple female partners as their mates. It is a sign of virility and proof you will bear many descendants."

Jason, Phoebe, and Fiona all exchange brief, awkward glances before coughing into their fists.

"Yeah. Something like that." Jason says, quickly changing the subject. "Has your war situation changed recently?"

"The War is neverending." Kordonis says. "Once it began, not one cycle has passed wherein the Volgrim were not slowly losing ground. The Kolvaxians are an enemy more frightening than you can possibly imagine."

He glances in the direction of several demon leaders, among them being Emperor Melody.

"As for what happened to the world of Sharmur, First Founder Unarin expresses his sincerest condolences, and has offered to help locate a new habitable world suitable for the Hell of Isolation to reside upon."

"That ain't necessary." Melody says, waving her hand. "For now, we're going to stay on Tarus II with our friends from the Hell of Lust. We'll help the humans rebuild."

With a nod, Kordonis directs his attention back to the Wordsmith.

"The attack on Sharmur was not an isolated incident. In the last twenty-three rotational cycles, eleven worlds inhabited by my people have fallen. Billions have perished to the alien menace. Unarin is... anxious to become acquainted with you in person, Wordsmith. Have you completed all of your preparations?"

Jason nods. "I'm going to bring a few retainers with me on the trip, but otherwise, while I'm gone, Phoebe and Neil Adams will be in charge of humanity's matters."

"We have plenty of room aboard our ship for your comrades to stay." Kordonis says, his voice slow and soothing. "We would like to return to Volgarius in haste. Time is of the essence, so that you can begin assisting us in investigating and repelling the Plague. Uncovering its weakness, as well as its origins, is our top priority."

"I understand." Jason says with a nod. "I'll join you on the ship shortly."

Kordonis bows slightly as a form of deference. Turning around, he heads back up the Hatoraxia's ramp with Miikil, and they vanish into its interior.

Jason turns to the throng of humans, demons, and monsters behind him.

"Everyone. I will return soon. In the meantime, please continue rebuilding without me. Phoebe will hold the Stormbringer Tribunal in my stead. Before then, she will take care to revive all of our fallen people through the Lazarus Tower. I hope to hear good news upon my return. Stay safe... and don't get into any fights. If I come back and find out anyone crossed a line they shouldn't have... there will be hell to pay."

Jason kisses Phoebe goodbye. Fiona steps inside his Mind Realm, as do Shana and Lorent. With Jason leaving, they won't be able to maintain contact with the soul pylons that enable their materialized bodies to become visible, and they would only be able to stay on the Cube. Not only that, but Jason seeks as much protection from the Psions as possible, so he chooses to bring the three of them along... just in case.

Before heading onto the Hatoraxia, Jason pauses when he sees Uriel approaching him. She holds out her hand, face-up.

"Wordsmith. These Volgrim, verily they art deceitful and treacherous. Trust none of them. My brother has asked if he might join thee on thy journey."

Jason glances at the ring in Uriel's outstretched palm. He plucks it from her grasp.

"Raphael? Sure. I'll feel a lot safer if I have a master of the soul arts like him reinforcing my Mind Realm."

"Excellent." Uriel says, her voice somewhat growly. "Consult with him often. I believe the First Founder may attempt to deceive thee upon many an occasion. He is far less scrupulous than he acts."

"Noted." Jason says. "If you happen to see Hope, let him know where I've gone. Maybe he'll return soon, having successfully killed or captured Mephisto and Yama."

"Those two bastards art tricky like chameleons." Uriel observes. "Uncovering their hiding location shalt prove difficult, indeed."

Without any further words, Jason nods and turns to the Hatoraxia. Behind him, a few different humans and monsters follow along. Among them is, surprisingly, none other than Yamir, as well as Lieutenant Samuel. With work soon to complete on the Power Gloves, Samuel's job of coordinating T-REX handouts is temporarily less necessary than before, so he joins the team as Jason's muscle.

In addition to the monster chef and the human lieutenant, a demoness joins their ranks. Serena, the Emperor of Soul Whispers. While Jason originally felt it was a bit odd to have a former enemy join him, he changed his mind due to the fact that her combat strength wasn't especially high, and because she suggested she might be able to help him with defending his mind from high-ranking Psions.

As the group reaches the bottom of the ramp, Emperor Serena turns to the Wordsmith. Her sightless eyes fixate on the general direction of his face, and she speaks in a quiet, whispery voice.

"Emperor Gorn wishes to thank you for your Word of Power. You have opened his mind to the greater truths of the Dao."

"It was nothing." Jason says, casually waving his hand. "Happy to help."

"Mmm. Gorn is my lover, you see. His pleasure is also mine." Serena says. "You are a good man, Jason Hiro."

"Thanks. Uh, you too." Jason says, cringing awkwardly at his words. "I mean... never mind."

The party of ten people boards the ship. As the entry ramp closes behind them, Lieutenant Samuel glances around at the bright and shiny steel interior, along with the glowing power conduits on the walls, the soft white lighting along the ceiling, and the other futuristic designs that stand far apart from humanity.

"Well. Ain't this some fancy shit?"

Hope Hiro travels across the Labyrinth. With his abilities, he could travel to and from the El Dorado Room in under a minute, but he conserves his mana, taking the long and hard route instead. Arthur's construct follows behind him, suppressing its aura so as to not alarm any enemies, while the two of them practice their stealth skills.

It only takes Hope a day or two to secretly return to the Core. He stows away Arthur's construct by turning it into a compact soul-form, then placing it within his Mind Realm via a Word of Power.

"Storage."

After putting the black hole construct away, Hope turns himself invisible and ethereal. He saunters back into the Core, completely unseen and undetected by a single entity. Not even the mighty Demon Emperors notice him when he passes them on the sly.

Hope listens to the chatter of the people around him. He quickly gets up to speed on the happenings that have taken place, then nods to himself.

It should be about that time. Jason will be departing Tarus II. Since I don't know where Volgarius is or how to reach it, I'll have to stow away!

Hope silently follows Jason around, like a specter in the night. He coldly watches his main body while standing not far from him. Creepily, Jason walks right past Hope, never once realizing his clone could reach out and murder him with a twist of his wrist, let alone a Word of Power.

It would be so easy. Hope thinks. I could kill Jason and he wouldn't be able to retaliate. Hell, I could take his place. I could get Phoebe back. I could get everything I deserve! But I won't do that. It wouldn't be right, and I'm not a murderer like him. So I'll bide my time. I'll win over humanity with my own efforts, just you wait and see, Jason...

With a shake of his head, Hope pushes those thoughts into his stomach. He continues following Jason until the Volgrim ambassadors arrive. After the Hatoraxia lands, and while Jason exchanges pleasantries, Hope scans the entire ship with his Wordsmithing. He locates dozens of viable hiding places, then teleports inside, concealing himself in a secret corner on a lower deck.

The Wordsmith's clone extends his spiritual senses around, identifying and marking every Volgrim on the ship. Without any of them knowing, he copies their memories and places them inside his Mind Realm to be dealt with later.

If only I had a Fiona of my own. Hope muses. She could go through and sort all these memories for me. Oh, well. I have time. I'll just have to do it myself.

Hope dives into the stored memories of the Volgrim and begins sifting through them. Despite there only being a few hundred crew-members aboard the Hatoraxia, each of them possesses at least tens of thousands of years worth of memories, and some have a hundred thousand, a million, or more!

Among the Volgrim, a five million year old is still a junior even when placed beside a five thousand year old junior. To their species, seniority comes from results, not age.

As such, Hope find that even among the older-lived ones, their knowledge base doesn't include any useful or classified information. Not one of them knows where Excalibur is located, nor the Dominion Rod or even that these artifacts exist!

However, as Hope browses through one crew-member's memories, his blood turns cold.

In his mind's eye, a scene plays out.

A scene of horror that Technopath officer personally experienced... and one he will never forget for the rest of his life.

The world of Kavos, forty-six thousand years ago.

I was a young initiate at the time. Five thousand years old. I was still inexperienced in matters of second-order technology, but I was working my way toward mastering it so I could someday reach the first-order. I wanted to become a great inventor, a creator of technology on par with the leaders of the Great Clans.

At that time, I was only a simple field technician. The War had been raging for well over fifty thousand years, but I never thought it would reach me. I simply repaired the ships that came back from the frontlines. I did my part, and I was rewarded for my efforts.

It was a simple life, but I was a Volgrim with grand aspirations.

Technician 71145, that was my worker designation. I had no merits, so my name was never used, at least not by my superiors. Sometimes, I envied the simpler life-forms, those who were allowed to possess their own identity from birth. But I was not like them.

Relatives. Friends. Family. These terms were not ones I connected with.

I was a vat-born servant of the Five Founders. I was created to enhance their military strength and push back against the Plague.

But then, one day, it came for me. For all of us.

All of the vat-born on Kavos. We lived with a shroud of clouds covering our skies. Not literal clouds, but figurative ones, borne from our worry we might never climb the ranks to achieve greatness… worry that we might meet our end before our fated day arrived.

It was an ordinary day like any other. I was repairing the engine core of a B-Legion Crimson Interceptor when the alarm rang in my hangar bay. I raised my head, confused. Had a fire broken out? Was I in any danger?

The transmission array activated, and words streamed into my neural cortex feed.

The Plague has made landfall on the world of Kavos. All personnel must evacuate and report to their designated star-post for decontamination and inspections. Failure to clear contamination will result in your biological expungement.

My blood froze. My body seized up. Terror swept through my veins.

It all happened so fast. Before I knew what was happening, hundreds of people swarmed into my hangar. They clambered for any available ship. They stuffed themselves onto vessels to the point it exceeded their weight capacity and they could not take off.

As for me, I made a split-second decision. I jumped into the interceptor I was repairing and took flight, ignoring any potential engine issues that might arise.

I lifted off, and as I flew toward the hangar's exit point, I began to hear screams.

Terrified, I looked down. I saw the writhing mass tearing into the crowd.

Green skin. Mottled eyes. Mucus covering every inch of its body. It was a Plagueborn. It grabbed anyone within range and bit onto them, ripping out chunks of their flesh before throwing them back to the floor.

It did not hunger. It did not consume for the sake of pursuing nutrients.

It merely... assimilated.

Even a hundred feet in the air, I could clearly see what that creature's true intention was. It was neither mindless, nor intelligent. It attacked anything that drew too close, but its strikes were also targeted and precise.

It came with a goal... and that realization frightened me.

I ignited my boosters and raced out of the hangar. Not ten micro-time-units later, a torrent of Plagueborn surged toward that hangar from outside, pursuing the Volgrim who had fled to it in the hopes of saving themselves.

As my gaze swept into the distance, I saw for myself the truth of the matter. Flames burned, and smoke rose into the sky. In less than a day, all of our lives crumbled to nothing.

A world of twenty billion loyal Volgrim... and I was one of only two hundred thousand who survived.

I no longer seek glory, or fame, or fortune. I seek only the survival of my species.

These juniors, they still hope that we might defeat the Plague. But I have long lost my hope. The Plague is invincible. It is a wave of devastation which no wall can block.

I must do what I can to save even a sliver of my people... but I fear that in the end, all my efforts will come to nothing.

As Hope pulls back from that Technopath's memories, he shivers involuntarily. He imagines himself in their place, fighting for his very survival against a monstrous, primal, animalistic enemy. In his heart, he isn't sure what his courage would amount to if he didn't possess the powers of a Wordsmith.

Kavos. Hope thinks, shaking his head. A tragic loss. Just like Sharmur and the rest. I have to ensure I possess enough power to protect humanity! It's not about my personal ambitions, or possessing a title of power... it's about the survival of my species!

He remembers all the discussions he and Neil have had over the years. The talks of humans versus demons. Which species is better. Why humans deserve their rise to glory...

But it's only now, when he sees the personal recollections of this random Technopath, a single survivor of an atrocity among hundreds of thousands of others, a speck of a speck... that he realizes he hasn't been broad-minded enough.

It's about survival. The right to exist. Not about supremacy, or conquering the weak. There is no joy in genocide. There are no winners. It only spreads hatred and pain.

He sits in the corner of that dark room and ponders quietly to himself, as the Hatoraxia's engines hum to life and it lifts off Tarus II's surface.

When did I change? When did I stop thinking like Jason and become so cold, so callous? Is it true that demons are the enemy? They've committed atrocities... but they aren't entirely a sterile, unfeeling species. Not like the Plague.

The Plague is humanity's true enemy. The demons are... evil. But they can be cowed. Threatened. Coerced into acting morally. At least on a temporary basis.

But the Kolvaxians are different. They exist only to consume and conquer. If all of our species don't unite to stop them, what will be left of us? We'll simply become a horde of mindless, rampaging zombies.

Hope glances to the side, where he gazes out of a window into space. Already, the Hatoraxia has reached orbit, and from his position, Hope can barely make out the fading image of Tarus II. As the Hatoraxia pulls away, the planet's cloaking field seals up, hiding Tarus II from view. It disappears, leaving behind a seemingly empty void in space.

If the Kolvaxians succeed, Tarus II will fall. Humanity will fall. It will be as if we never existed at all...

Part 381: The Psionic Laws

As the Hatoraxia lifts off Tarus II's surface, Jason and his soldiers stand idly for ten or so minutes, watching out a nearby window while their homeworld fades into the distance. Even Jason, a man who has gone to space many times in the past six years, feels a sinking sensation in his stomach as the distance between him and Phoebe lengthens.

Hopefully I won't be gone too long. Jason thinks.

He turns to look at all of the soldiers behind him, then subtly clears his throat.

All of his men, as well as Emperor Serena, reach behind their heads and press a button on a device concealed beneath their skin. These gadgets, a countermeasure made by Phoebe, create mental interference in their thoughts and memories, with the intent of making it difficult or impossible for Psions to extract the knowledge of anyone in Jason's party.

Of course, the Psions might be able to hack the devices, hence why Blinker added tiny formations to them with magical effects that will cause any hacker to throw up their hands in defeat. Without a solid background in technology and magic, nobody should be able to rip into Jason's thoughts or intrude in secret. At least, not in theory.

Once the Hatoraxia clears the gravity wells of Tarus II and its moons, Sangin Kordonis descends from the Bridge, along with Invocator Miikil, to greet their guests.

"Humanity's delegates." Kordonis says, as his heavy titanium legs clank against the metal decks. "We have a two-week journey ahead of us as we travel to Volgarius. Why don't you join me in the leisure hall? I will have someone prepare appropriate sustenance for your species."

"That's fine." Jason says, as he and the others begin following Kordonis out of the entry bay. "How far is Volgarius from here? And can we reach it faster?"

"Volgarius is roughly 12,000 light-cycles from our position." Kordonis explains. "Tarus's star system is located in the southern region of the Milky Way, while Volgarius is located within the south-eastern region, somewhat close to the Galactic Core. The Hatoraxia can only travel at Warp 7 safely, while Warp 8 will breach its safe operating limits."

At this point, Invocator Miikil speaks up. [Regarding your former homeworld of Earth, it is located within the south-western region.]

"Allow me to introduce my peer." Kordonis says, after walking into the Leisure Hall. "Invocator Miikil is a young Psion of the 5th Tier. Her powers are neither extraordinary nor sub-par. She is a talented individual who will surely someday rise to great heights."

[Captain Kordonis flatters me.] Miikil transmits telepathically. [I am neither talented nor impressive compared to any other Psion. Countless peers of mine who are younger and swifter of mind have already reached the 6th Tier.]

"She exaggerates. Invocator Miikil is one of the fastest to reach the 5th Tier of power in the past 100,000 cycles. Few can compare to her, especially given she is not a Specialist, but a Generalist."

Kordonis gestures to a simple steel table with comfortable but basic chairs arranged around it. He plods to the opposite side and takes a seat, along with Miikil, while the humans, monsters, and Emperor Serena sit opposite them.

Jason and the rest take their seats. The Wordsmith smiles cordially at Kordonis. "Forgive me, but I'm a little ignorant of Psion ranks. I don't follow what all these different 'tiers' mean."

[It is only natural a mud-dwell- ah, it is only natural a non-Volgrim like you would not understand the intricacies of our wartime capabilities and systems of measurement.] Miikil says, displaying the proud and haughty air of a young Psion elite. Still, she corrects herself after almost uttering a casual slur toward the ship's respected guests.

"This knowledge cannot be considered confidential or classified information." Kordonis says, shooting a quick glance at his subordinate to remind her to be polite. "Psions are masters of telekinesis. Their ability to use psionic powers will typically increase with time, practice, and understanding. Unlike demons, their powers are not limited to a handful of abilities, but can increase infinitely and without limit, so long as they are capable enough to grasp the highest laws of Psionics."

He continues. "There are nine tiers of psionic potential. Within these tiers, there are also smaller grades, though most Psions do not bother speaking about them. Two 3rd Tier Psions can have significantly different fighting capabilities based on the knowledge they've comprehended. The older and wiser a Psion is, the more progress they are likely to have made."

"Nine tiers." Jason repeats. "Since Miikil is a 5th Tier, she should be right in the middle of the pack?"

The Wordsmith's eyes light up with interest. His knowledge of Volgrim society is shallow, far too shallow, to the extent he really cannot grasp just how much power they control. How can he ever hope to break their chokehold on the Milky Way if he does not know the limits of their strength?

At the same time, Kordonis and Miikil recognize the Wordsmith's ambitions. Even so, they know in their hearts that the Five Founders, and in particular the Second Founder, are invincible existences. No matter how much the Wordsmith barks, he cannot ever think of truly defeating Volgrimkind. If he does, he will fall to the Kolvaxians. And if he defeats the Kolvaxians, the Volgrim will be free to turn their full military might upon him and humanity, returning them back to their primitive origins.

Kordonis subtly shakes his head. He's so pitiful. The Wordsmith dreams of ascending to glory, but he is a tiny fish in a great ocean. He can never defeat the monsters swimming around him, no matter how he struggles. A minuscule existence.

"While the 5th Tier may be the middle of the nine tiers, it is far from middling in power." Kordonis explains. "Let me tell you what the differences are in the tiers so you can... better grasp the power Volgrimkind harnesses, which will also inform you on the power the Kolvaxians control."

Kordonis launches into an explanation of each tier without waiting for Jason's reply.

"All Psions start out in the 1st Tier, Initiator! There are many titles a Psion can earn. Among them are military titles and civilian titles. From the moment they are spawned, every Psion possesses a minimum level of psionic potential. Even the weakest and most infirm can levitate small objects around themselves. At the peak of the first tier, Psions can fling objects with great strength and lift as much as a ton of mass, even with great difficulty."

"At the 2nd Tier, a Psion's power increases significantly. Being able to lift multiple tons is just one aspect of their development. Harnessing the power of Primal Psionics at a basic level is required for all 1st Tier Psions, but the 2nd Tier is where they can begin branching out into different fields of Psionics."

Jason holds up his palm. "Primal Psionics? Other fields of psionics?"

Miikil interjects. [Primal Psionics is the most elementary branch of psionic power, one involving raw telekinetic power. Lifting and tearing the physical realm. Levitating oneself. Flight. All Psions possess at least a basic knowledge of Primal Psionics, for it is the foundation upon which all Psionic abilities are built. At the highest levels, Primal Psions can crush planets, compress tens of tons of matter into marble-sized beads, and tear apart their opponents with raw telekinetic strength.]

She continues. [As for the other branches of Psionics, they are too numerous to mention in great detail. Body Enhancers focus on mastering their physical forms. By harnessing their psionic potential, they can increase their thinking speed, their strength, and their bodily durability. At the highest echelons, even Capital-Class Starship Cannons will only be capable of inflicting light injuries upon them.]

"There are also Energy Manipulators, Liquid Manipulators, Spatial Psions, Temporal Psions, and many other branches." Kordonis explains. "At the 2nd Tier, most Psions will begin building upon their foundational knowledge to learn what branches of Psionics they are best suited to learn. Miikil, for instance, is a Gaseous and Liquid Invocator, with smaller achievements in several other branches. When it comes to her mastery of fire and lightning, or space and time, her abilities are not much to speak of."

[In a cloud of toxic or corrosive fumes, I am within my element.] Miikil states with absolute confidence. [I can transform a simple body of water into a weapon capable of threatening Harbinger-Class starships. I can even break down hardened exosteel into its elementary particles, deteriorating the atomic bonds between this ship's deckplates.]

Jason nods slowly. "How much stronger are you, a 5th Tier Psion, compared to a 2nd Tier?"

"I will continue with my previous explanation." Kordonis says. "At the 3rd Tier, most Psions have already begun to master their chosen ability types. The first four tiers of Psionic Power are considered not too impressive in the Volgrim Empire. They are only allowed to work as civilians, researchers, or other low-level administrative assistants. In Miikil's case, she was assigned to study hostile worlds with toxic fumes for the sake of future potential expansion efforts, on behalf of the Founders."

[Things change for us Psions when we achieve the 5th Tier.] Miikil says, once again feeling a certain level of smug pride at showing off to the pitiful mud-dwellers. [The 1st and 2nd Tiers are for low level world construction Psions. They use their abilities to directly assist the Founders in building new settlements. The 3rd Tier is where most Psions become capable of flattening weaker indigenous populations. The 4th Tier is where most Psions will become the heads of their own small little worlds, or will begin to receive classified tasks of the civilian rank. While 4th Tier Psions can certainly battle and defeat most Demon Dukes, they are still not a match for Demon Emperors.]

Miikil flicks her eyes in Emperor Serena's direction, but the blind woman stares blankly into the distance, as if this conversation has nothing to do with her.

[The 5th Tier is a demarcation point. It is the level where Psions become far, far more powerful than any mere indigenous population.]

Emperor Serena slowly blinks. "That's right. Jason, you were not around for the Energy Wars, so you may not be aware. Of the Psions who attacked Earth, ninety-nine percent of them were of the 5th Tier. Only a small minority were of the 6th Tier, and not once did any higher tiered Psions bother showing up. Even so… they were more than capable of flattening our militaries."

Lieutenant Samuel frowns. "Wait, hold up a minute. You're telling me… Earth was only some kind of… whetstone? It was just a place where you guys sent your grunts to temper themselves?!"

Miikil tilts her chin up haughtily. [That is correct. Earth was never the slightest threat to the glory of the Volgrim Empire. Humanity's mightiest weapons were no more alarming to us than… the toy guns one of your children might play with.]

Kordonis shoots a glance at Miikil, then frowns.

"There is no need to act antagonistically toward our guests, junior. I am sure the Wordsmith is wise enough to roughly fathom Volgrimkind's superior might."

[Of course.] Miikil 'apologizes.' [I spoke too flippantly. Please forgive my crude mannerisms.]

Despite the two Volgrim's 'contrite' attitudes, Jason easily deduces that this is merely another method they use to brag and lord their power over the feeble mud-dwellers.

However, he doesn't bother with chastising or correcting them. In his heart of hearts, he begins to feel a certain amount of suppression and wariness toward their Empire.

Even if the Volgrim are exaggerating a bit, it can't be by too much. Serena stated that they never even bothered dispatching 7th, 8th, or 9th Tier Psions during the Energy Wars. If so, that means we really were only facing their basic armies. Not even their elites!

His thoughts turn grim.

Even if the Volgrim are being suppressed by the Kolvaxians, their military might is unfathomable! I honestly don't know how I would hold up against an 8th or 9th Tier Psion.

As if sensing Jason's thoughts, Kordonis chuckles. "The higher the rank in Psionics, the fewer the number of Psions that exist. To date, only a few thousand 7th Tier Psions walk the mortal realm, and only six 8th Tier Psions."

Kordonis states these 'small' numbers of planet-destroyer and galaxy-level threats as if they were a weakness, but his words only serve to make everyone on Jason's side of the table feel even more stifled.

Humanity couldn't beat a fraction of Volgrimkind's 7th Tier Psions during the Energy Wars, and even if we did, there are still half a dozen 8th Tier Psions above them!

However, as he thinks these things, Miikil sighs deeply, exhaling through her nostrils.

[Of course... even among Psions, there is only a single 9th Tier member of our species. The revered Second Founder, Dosena. She is an invincible existence. Among Psions, she is our goddess. Profaning her name will bring forth a calamity upon anyone who dares to do so. Even the other Founders would never dare to speak ill of her. Among the entirety of Volgrimkind, if there is a reverse-scale one must never touch, it is insulting the Highest Psion.]

Hearing the deep respect in Miikil's voice, Jason presses his teeth together.

"How... how powerful is the Second Founder, exactly?"

"Nobody knows." Kordonis states, his tone distant. "The last time she fought in a serious battle was during the Seven Great Wars of myth. Nobody on this ship was alive back then. None of us are qualified to know the details. All we know is what was taught to us during our upbringing. Under the combined assault of thirty Sentinels, Founder Dosena fought for a hundred rotational cycles straight, allowing Founder Unarin to activate the Gatekeeper Protocol. In that era, there were five other 9th Tier Psions. All of them fell in that battle, leaving her as the lone survivor."

"I've heard about your Great Wars." Jason says, recalling Unarin's broadcast, which Marie Becker secretly gave him. "I'm not entirely sure what a Sentinel is, but I understand it's some sort of killer robot."

"Details of the past are murky, locked within the minds of the survivors." Kordonis says. "Even if I did know, I would not tell you without permission from the Founders, as our history is considered classified knowledge. Details about the Sentinels are difficult to come by."

[The Seven Great Wars were devastating to the ranks of Psion-kind.] Miikil states. [We once had six 9th Tier Psions leading our people. Now, we have only one. While this is true, one fact is for certain… Founder Dosena was more powerful than all five of her peers combined. After all these millions of years, she has likely reached a level none can fathom. There are even rumors she may someday touch upon the 10th Tier.]

"I don't understand." Jason says. "Why not raise some of the 8th Tier Psions to the 9th? Why is Dosena the only one to reach the 9th after all this time?"

[I am not qualified to know the matters of high-level Psions.] Miikil states, shaking her head. [If I had to hazard a guess, I would assume it is due to flaws within the foundations of our current 8th Tier Psions. To advance in a tier, one must possess knowledge and power befitting its standard classifications. There are many methods of advancing, but the requirements become far stricter at the highest levels.]

[For example, to become a 2nd Tier Psion, one can opt to have two masteries that reach the second level of Psionics. However, this would mean one must have three levels of mastery for the 3rd Tier, or four levels for the 4th Tier. In my case, I possess only two masteries of the fifth level, with those being Liquid and Gaseous Manipulation. This is far from enough to qualify me as a 5th Tier Psion, but I also amassed significant accolades to earn myself a promotion, and my mastery of several other fields has reached a moderate to acceptable range. In truth, my potential is likely capped at the 7th Tier, but I may reach the 8th with plenty of time and hard work.]

"So… that means you will never reach the 9th Tier?" Jason asks.

[Indeed.] Miikil answers, lowering her head in shame. [The same is true of countless other aspiring Psions. Not only must one work diligently to understand and comprehend the Psionic Laws, but they must temper their bodies and minds, while not neglecting their fundamentals. If one is half-hearted in their efforts, they may reach the 5th or 6th Tier, yet fail to progress any further for the rest of eternity.]

"That's too bad." Jason says, though his expression betrays his exact opposite thoughts. After all, having the Volgrim advance slowly is certainly better than having them advance quickly.

Jason turns his attention away from the topic of Psions.

"Thank you for informing me about these matters of which I was unaware. At least now, I'll sound like less of an oaf when I talk to the Founders."

"It is a small matter." Kordonis replies, waving his finger-tendrils casually. "In fact, Founder Unarin gave me strict commands to ensure I debriefed you on our illustrious Empire. Since you are from a backwater world and lacking in knowledge, it is only appropriate for me to inform you of the basics, the low-level knowledge all Volgrim already know."

Jason's eye twitches. "Yeah. Thanks... a lot."

As the Wordsmith and his comrades continue conversing with the Volgrim delegates, the Hatoraxia jumps to Warp 7. Nobody even notices the faint shift in the air as the ship smoothly enters Hyperspace.

"So, you're a Technopath." Jason says to Kordonis. "Can you tell me anything about your species? Sub-species, rather. I know you have clans or whatever, but that's about the extent of my knowledge."

Kordonis nods. "My full name is Sangin Kordonis. I hail from Clan Oblong. Perhaps you may know of my clan's leader, Sangin Lidra."

Jason's eye twitches a second time as he recalls his encounter inside Marie Becker's underground facility, when the Volgrim inspection team arrived. "I... know of her."

"The many Technopath clans possess subtle differences a rimworlder like you will not easily notice." Kordonis explains. "But the biggest difference comes in each clan's distinct design philosophy."

"Design philosophy?" Jason repeats. "Like how you build things?"

"Correct." Kordonis nods. "Take this starship we currently reside upon. The VLL Hatoraxia is a standard-issue Assault and Stealth Frigate-Class vessel for Oblong's captains. Unlike our direct competitor, Clan Symmetra, we Oblongers prefer to design simple and basic ships and weapons that work well for the lowest cost. We do not add flashy decorations or adornments. We do not attempt to turn our ships into sleek predators of war."

"Why not?" Jason asks, visibly confused. "Don't you want your ships to look good? Presentation is quite useful, since it can perform a variety of purposes."

"Everything has a cost!" Kordonis declares, his voice filling with righteous indignation. "Unlike those foolish Symmetrians, we Oblongers do not waste the Empire's valuable and limited resources. Our ships are tough, durable, and functional. Their square and boxy exteriors may appear unimpressive, but they are much easier to repair. We do not outfit our ships and technology with individualized components, but instead attempt to build them from standardized parts as much as possible."

"Further," Kordonis continues, "Clan Symmetra goes to great lengths to ensure their ships are symmetrically designed, as their clan name would imply. If there is a crew quarter on one side of the ship, there will be another on the opposite side. This is a foolish way to design technology! Those ignorant bastards actually put their ship reactors right in the central nexus, a place where if a catastrophe were to occur, the entire ship would detonate and kill all its loyal Volgrim soldiers. Such irresponsible behavior is why we must never stop until we have brought their design philosophy to ruin!"

Kordonis's passionate and unexpected outburst takes Jason and the others by surprise. Seeing the fervor in his eyes, Jason realizes this previously placid and somewhat milquetoast captain isn't as calm and steady as he appears. He, too, holds certain ideals close to his heart, and will fight to uphold them, even if they seem a little silly to others.

"Mmm. I value practicality myself!" Lieutenant Samuel says, chuckling under his breath. "You don't need weapons to look fancy. You need them to kill! What good is a pretty-looking ship if it ends up weaker than its opponent? You should maximize crew safety and efficiency, not idle, vapid bullshit."

Kordonis turns to evaluate Jason's subordinate with a gleam of happiness in his eyes. "Precisely! That is exactly the sort of thought a wise man should have. What is your name? I will make sure you receive excellent treatment while you are aboard my vessel."

"It's Samuel." The man answers. "No need to treat me any differently from the others. I'm just here to do my job."

"Excellent. Most excellent!" Kordonis laughs. He turns his attention back to Jason. "It is always good to meet a mud-dweller who knows their head from their feet! You have brought along a most excellent subordinate, Wordsmith."

Jason stifles the urge to roll his eyes.

"Gee. Thanks, Kordonis."

Part 382: Kordonis's Secrets

Jason and his comrades raise their eyebrows in surprise as several crew-members of the Hatoraxia walk into the Leisure Hall. While presently, only the Captain and Jason's men are inside, ordinarily this room will have as many as one or two hundred Volgrim inside. Therefore, it currently feels quite empty, with only one of the long and wide tables having anyone sat down.

These crew-members aren't there to fraternize, though. Instead, they bring with them more than twenty plates of food. They place the food down on humanity's side of the table, while placing nothing on Kordonis's side.

After uncovering the dishes, fragrant smells drift into the air. In an instant, Jason and the rest of his soldiers evaluate their contents, raising their eyebrows even higher.

"American, Greek, Turkish, Indonesian, Chinese, and even Japanese cooking." Jason mutters out loud. "These dishes all seem to be..."

"That is right." Kordonis says, spreading his arms a little to show his magnanimity. "These are all authentic dishes modeled just like the ones you would have found on Earth."

Jason eyes the many varieties of pork, chicken, rice, and pasta. His gaze sweeps across seafood, Mexican dishes like burritos and tamales, and most importantly, hamburgers.

So many hamburgers.

An entire plate of high-class hamburgers. At least thirty of them.

"Authentic Earth food." Jason says, tilting his eyes in Kordonis's direction. "Given how Earth is... extinct... how are you able to make all of this?"

"Isn't it obvious?" Kordonis asks. "Replicators. Our replicators are capable of creating any sort of exotic cuisine you can imagine. Of course, we Volgrim do not typically need to consume edible nutrition more than once every several cycles, but we may engage in recreational consumption for the sake of pleasure."

Samuel clears his throat. "Ahem. Well, shit, don't mind if I do. Boss, pass me two of those burgers. Sally, spoon me some of that Italian Fettuccini."

Jason nods quietly. He and the others start passing out food, filling their plates, and eating whatever suits their fancy.

However, Jason himself doesn't eat anything. He realizes in an instant the true purpose behind this meal.

We've barely even left orbit and the Volgrim are already feeding us? Furthermore, they aren't eating anything themselves. It might seem slight... but this is a power move on their part. They're trying to insinuate that our need to 'consume nutrients' makes us lower than them. If I refuse their 'generous offer,' I'll surely sound petty. But if I dig in while they don't, I'll seem like a stupid monkey eating scraps while they lord over me from the other end of the table.

As such, Jason opts to eat nothing himself, allowing his men to do so instead. Of course, he's not the only person to ignore the food. Emperor Serena also continues sitting quietly, like a dignified princess oblivious to the rabble of the commoners.

"You are not hungry?" Kordonis asks, his tone 'innocent.'

Jason gestures to the giant minotaur beside him. "I brought along my personal chef, Yamir. He always makes my food. I only ate an hour ago, so I'm fine. I'm much more interested in learning more about your Technopath clans, as well as the other Volgrim subspecies."

Kordonis realizes the Wordsmith has seen through his ploy, but he doesn't bother pressing the issue. After all, in the end, it's merely a minor psychological trick, and nothing worth making a big fuss over.

While Jason's people loudly munch on burgers and slurp down pasta, Kordonis continues with his discussion.

"The Technopath clans are not limited to only Oblong and Symmetra. No, tens of thousands of them exist in the Volgrim Empire. Some large, and some small. The bigger clans often contract low-priority work to the smaller ones. Even this ship has some elements from the design work Oblong contracted to Clan Corona, which installed microscopic biological entity scanners in all of the different entry and transfer points throughout the Hatoraxia. That way, our people would not accidentally introduce foreign pathogens to our crew, causing a viral outbreak."

"I didn't notice anything when I entered." Jason remarks. "Were we scanned?"

"That's right. Clan Oblong has its own anti-pathogen scanners, but our pale in comparison to Clan Corona's. A lot of smaller clans can carve out their own niche by focusing on lower-tiered technology and raising it to a higher level. Clan Oblong is more of a 'greater picture' clan than a 'small details' clan."

He continues. "There is also Clan Kokorat, which is another of the bigger clans. They actually maintain the Warpgate infrastructure, but they are not its original creators. And thank the Founders, for that clan is a bunch of worthless, addle-brained idiots! They should never be allowed near technology!"

"Oh? What's their problem?" Jason probes further.

"We Oblongers place a high focus on low-cost overhead development, with additional focus put on utilitarianism in our technology. But Kokorat is filled with fools who take a similar premise much too far! They always cut corners and leave all sorts of faults in their vessels. As the saying goes, 'Live in a Kokorat ship, die in a Kokorat ship!' Everything they make is a walking time bomb. They are a disgrace to the Founders!"

At this point, Miikil speaks up. [They are able to create and build technology much faster than the other clans. Therefore, they do still have an important use to our glorious Empire. Most of the newest and freshest recruits ride to the border battlefields on Kokorat vessels. Better to lose them in an accident than a more elite fighting force.]

Kordonis turns his attention to Miikil and harrumphs. "Better not to lose anyone to an accident! Those damned koko-rats have probably killed more loyal Volgrim soldiers than the Plague has!"

He mutters several curses under his breath before turning back to the Wordsmith.

"Anyway. There are too many Technopath clans for me to mention them all. Clan Dyna is one you should remember, though. They hold the highest access to classified military technology and information. They have developed many forms of classified technology that I won't be able to see no matter how high I rise in Oblong's hierarchy. Despite their prestige, they are actually only a mid-sized clan with fewer members than Kokorat, Symmetra, and Oblong. Even so, they have gained access to many keys of power. Founder Cuanali is the one who originally created Clan Dyna, countless eons ago!"

Miikil closes all six of her eyes. [It is said that Clan Dyna is a clan so ancient that they even existed during the Great Wars. They are most likely the clan which helped create the Sentinels, machines which wiped out 99% of all Volgrim in the galaxy.]

"That's right." Kordonis nods. "So if you encounter a member of Dyna, even a seemingly low-level officer, keep any criticisms locked within your primitive throat! You never know what sort of tragedy might befall you, even if you are Founder Unarin's personal guest."

Jason nods. As the Wordsmith, he couldn't give less of a shit about this Clan Dyna or whatever. But the same can't be said for his soldiers.

"You hear that?" Jason asks, rhetorically. "Make sure you keep your noses clean while we're on Volgarius."

Samuel and the rest nod in between bites of food. "Yes, sir."

"There is plenty more worth mentioning about the Technopath clans," Kordonis continues, "but those can be shelved for later. Are you familiar with the other Volgrim subspecies?"

Jason shrugs. "I know they're called the Ascended, Changelings, and... Volgrimites?"

"Dolgrimites." Kordonis corrects him. "They are the most elusive of all the subspecies. While their population does number a few billion, they confine themselves almost entirely to the former homeworld of Volgrimkind, Grimvolas. They have not participated in the war against the Kolvaxians. Even the Fifth Founder, Cinculu, does not show himself in public events. I've yet to actually exchange any words with a Dolgrimite, and I'm tens of thousands of cycles old."

"I don't get it." Jason says. "Why are the Dolgrimites such recluses?"

[There are many conflicting stated reasons and theories.] Miikil answers. [The most logical and compelling reason is that they believe all of the calamities the Volgrim have suffered came as a result of our own hubris. We created the Sentinels. We expanded too aggressively and ended up in a war with Earth. And now they even blame our current predicament with the Kolvaxians on our expansionary greed.]

Kordonis snorts. [The Dolgrimites are powerful. Each individual wields tremendous physical strength. I don't know how they would stack up to humanity's Heroes, or Demon Emperors, Archangels, and the like... but if they did come up short, it wouldn't be by much. Personally, most Volgrim don't like them. We Technopaths, especially. The Dolgrimites are a bunch of primitive savages, not unlike- err, I'm sure you can understand my meaning. They swear off technology in all its forms and instead try to commune with 'nature' and their 'highest god'."

[They are a bunch of religious fanatics.] Miikil states. [You're unlikely to ever encounter a Dolgrimite. But if you do, steer clear of them. You wouldn't want to enrage them with an accidental slight against their sensibilities.]

"I see. And what about the Changelings?" Jason asks, as a glint flickers in his eye. "I imagine I'll run into them during our foray."

Kordonis's expression shifts imperceptibly. Indeed, Founder Unarin has gone to great lengths to remove all the Changelings from the Hatoraxia's crew so that the humans won't be able to obtain any DNA or useful information from them. After all, they can't say for certain if the Wordsmith will be capable of identifying the Volgrim's hidden agents on Tarus II, but giving Jason any sort of access to Changelings might shift the balance in his favor.

As such, Kordonis hesitates for a moment, not certain of what he should say.

"The Changelings are... a busy species." Kordonis says. "They are always hard at work, performing scientific research. Especially with regards to the Kolvaxians."

"And they can shift their bodies." Jason says. "I'm very interested in learning how such a procedure works. Do you think you could fill me in on the more... subtle details?"

Kordonis's eye twitches.

"Haha... I do not have access to such information, unfortunately. As this is a military ship, we do not typically bring Changelings along with us."

"Oh. Is that so?" Jason asks, his voice lilting inquisitively. "That's funny. I could have sworn when I teleported aboard the Hatoraxia the first time that I saw a few Changelings among your crew?"

Lieutenant Samuel pauses his chewing to glance between the Wordsmith and the Hatoraxia's Captain with interest, but says nothing.

Kordonis forces a neutral expression, but a gloomy shadow appears under his eyes. "Those were mere junior officers we were transporting to Volgarius from a remote outpost. Generally, the Hatoraxia does not carry any Changelings in its crew complement."

"Too bad." Jason says, leaning back a little in his chair. "And here I was hoping to meet a few of them. I have a professional interest in their body shifting techniques, as you can imagine. Because of my good friend, Emperor Belial."

Kordonis's face loses a bit of its color. "Of course. Because of Belial."

The Wordsmith flashes a sickeningly sweet smile, having gotten his message across. "Perhaps I'll be able to meet a few of these Changelings on Volgarius."

"Yes. Perhaps." Kordonis says slowly, forcing a smile of his own. "Ah, and what of the Ascended? Have you heard of them, Wordsmith?"

Despite Kordonis's blatant attempt to change the topic, Jason doesn't question his motivations, and instead lets him off easily.

"The Ascended. All I know is that Unarin is one. What can you tell me about them?"
