Mephisto continues to glare at Ose for a moment before turning away to a decent-sized empty space some fifty feet from the warpgate. Not far away, near the destroyed great doors leading into the Core, many upper-ranked Lord and Baron-rank demons stand around muttering to one another. They keep their distance according to Ose's orders as Mephisto begins to motion with his hands.

An unearthly demonic language pours from Mephisto's mouth. His eyes transform into fiery orbs as he summons the power of Death Energy, coalescing it into two spiraling energy rifts hovering in midair. The blackened mana moves further and further away until both of them turn into shimmering, electrified clouds. The energetic clouds crackle with energy and begin emitting a high-pitched screeching noise, like nails on a chalkboard, but far louder and more drawn out. Mephisto ignores the noises, but the demons behind the cloud run away while covering their ears and shouting angrily.

"Weaklingsss..." Mephisto hisses. "Undead would not be ssso cowardly... truly, the living are inferior to the dead."

The plasma-like gas continues to churn unceasingly. Suddenly, it spirals around toward a dot in each cloud's center, as if getting sucked up by a vacuum cleaner.

Foom!

The center-points explode, summoning two portals as dark as the grave. They quickly shoot up to the ceiling and expand sideways, revealing forty-foot Death Gates, all capable of rapidly summoning undead creatures according to Mephisto's necromagic.

Immediately, ravenous-looking mummies and skeletons come pouring out. Ose flicks her gaze back just as the portal begins to activate. She jumps away, letting the warpgate's calculations run normally.

"Alright, Mephisto!" Ose says, as she maintains a faint telepathic contact with the warpgate. "Assuming my agent is in position, he'll hold off reinforcements for the twenty seconds it takes to open the gate. Once it opens, you're in charge!"

Mephisto snorts. "Ksss. In charge. Yesss... I like the sssound of that."

Hardly any time goes by at all before the gateway to Tarus II stabilizes, popping open with the sound of a hundred exploding balloons.

Mephisto glances at Ose as she begins to retreat, then his undead. "Go, my minionsss! Make your massster proud! Rip the flessshbagsss limb from limb!"

Ose slips behind Mephisto's two Death Gates. She watches for a minute as countless undead pour into Tarus II, nodding with satisfaction.

"Good. Mephisto can weaken humanity with his undead. Fewer demon casualties, that way. He can probe their defenses and give me a report in a few days, once I get my damned hands healed."

As she walks away, Ose gently flexes her fingers, wincing as pain shoots up her arm.

"...fucking crocodile."

* * *

After Ose departs, Mephisto's eyes flutter from left to right. He uses his absolute control over his minions to see through their eyes, scouting out the weaknesses of the humans.

"Yesss... good. Go there. And you, do not throw your livesss away. Forget Ossse'sss ordersss. You are my preciousss children. I mussst sssave sssome ssstrength for ousssting Ossse when the time comesss... kekeke."

The Duke of Mist cackles nefariously to himself for several seconds. Once he stops, his eyes grow cold.

"Ksss. Duriel. Zamiel. Come."

From behind Mephisto, two Barons appear; the Battle Brothers. Zamiel, the smaller, but older brother, and Duriel, the taller, but younger one. They quickly walk over and bow their heads politely.

Duriel speaks first. "Boss! When do we get to go in?"

"Yeah," Zamiel grins. "When do we get'ta slice and dice, eh? I haven't gotten to unleash my full power since the last boost."

"Sssoon," Mephisto says, with a slow nod. "The Sssphinx is injured, ssstill. Hisss fairy wife livesss, and ssshe isss quite powerful. You mussstn't underessstimate her ssstrength."

"Fairy, shmairy," Duriel grunts. The big guy pounds his fist against Zamiel's. "Stupid little twig-girl won't mean nothing to us, boss. Now that Ose's outta the way, we can do our business in secret."

"Yesss, we can," Mephisto says, nodding slowly. He shoots a glance at the warpgate, checking to see if any humans have stymied the flow of his undead. "But we musst move quickly. Once Ossse returnsss, you may accidentally expossse your true ssstrength to her. Kekeke... Emperor Krissstoff would not like that, would he?"

The Battle Brothers lose their smarmy attitudes at the mention of one of the Labyrinth's many Hidden Emperors. They shift on their feet uneasily. "Boss..." Zamiel murmurs. "Kristoff gave us one hell of a boost, yeah... but don't you worry you're just playing into his hands?"

"All demonsss, humansss, and angelsss become putty in my palmsss onccce they die," Mephisto says, pride on his face. "Krissstoff may be the massster of blood, but when he inevitably diesss, hisss power will become mine. That is the beauty, you sssee, for I control the River Ssstyx."

Both Battle Brothers force themselves to grin. "Y-yeah, boss. I sure hope you're right."

Mephisto waves a bony finger at the brothers. "Prepare yourssselvesss. I will have you ssstrike when the time isss right. Ssstay clossse, and keep Bael occupied. He will only get in my way."

The Battle Brothers glance past Mephisto's Death Gates, past the completely shattered Great Doors of the Labyrinth, out to the outer hallway, where Bael sits around the corner, beyond where they can see.

Duriel sighs. "We'll try. Guy's a total downer, though. Won't shut up about purple dragons."

"Well, do what you mussst," Mephisto says, shooing them away.

After the Battle Brothers walk away, Mephisto aims his mind at the undead.

"Time to give thessse humansss a fright, kekeke!"

With a flurry of Mephisto's fingers, he activates his necromancy magic once again.

A giant, foot-wide hand emerges from one of his Death Gates...

Part 242: Pandemonium

A gigantic undead Gate Troll, twenty-five feet tall, with beady little sunken-in eyes and a small head compared to its body, climbs through the portal to Tarus II. Its presence temporarily stymies the flow of Mephisto's deathless minions, since they can't get past its bulky frame. As it exits the portal and emerges on Tarus II's surface, it draws the attention of nearly every human capable of sparing a moment to look at it.

In a sniper tower behind the frontlines, one newbie soldier wearing a flight-capable Hummer T-REX cries out in surprise. "Sweet mother of God! Look at the size of that thing!"

His comrades ignore him. Having battled countless monsters and demons, these elites immediately recognize the monster and call it out on their wide-frequency comlink channel.

"Red Marksmen speaking. Undead Gate Troll sighted, Class Two, negative on the weapons and armor. Flesh preservation is at 75%. Estimated strength and durability are at roughly B+, over."

"Roger that," comes the reply from one of the many coordinators behind the scenes, someone working to direct the battlefield. "Lieutenant Samuel is on location. Dispatching specialized reinforcements. Arrival time, thirty-five seconds, over."

"Red Marksmen, out," The veteran sniper replies, finishing with his tower's identification. He glances at the younger recruit, someone sniping in live combat for the first time. "Quit gawking and aim for the Troll's eyes! Slow it down until the specialists arrive!"

"Sir, yes sir!"

The younger soldier trains his weapon on the Gate Troll as it engages Lieutenant Samuel in combat. He begins firing one shot every few seconds, sniping small chunks of flesh around the monster's head and shoulders as it thrashes around.

Over at Samuel's position, the Rhino-wearing trooper roars loudly, grabbing the Troll's attention. He grabs a nearby undead by its head, one of the many futilely attacking him, and hurls it at the Gate Troll, momentarily knocking the Troll off-balance.

With an enraged howl, the Gate Troll charges him, its size more than three times his. However, Samuel doesn't retreat. As several low-ranking undead, like zombies and mummies, try to claw at him and damage his armor, he knocks them aside with ease, crushing their heads with well-aimed blows.

"Come at me, big guy. I'm not afraid of you."

The Gate Troll charges toward Samuel with its fists over its head. Sniper bullets tear into its body, but even with powerful armor-piercing rounds, they do little damage to the monster because of its inability to feel pain.

When it arrives within melee attack range, the gate troll swings its arms down, trying to smash Samuel into meat paste. Instead, Samuel raises his palms over his head and surprises everyone by catching the beast's fists!

"WARNING!" Centurion yells.

Several alarms beep in Samuel's ear. He grunts heavily while glancing at his damage readouts.

"RHINO EXOSUIT HAS SUFFERED DAMAGE TO ITS UPPER LIMBS. SUIT INTEGRITY NOW AT 97%."

Samuel chuckles. "That all?"

With a mighty heave, he pushes against the troll with his legs, shoving it backward with all his strength. The Troll falls backward and lands on its ass, making the ground shudder. "Roar!"

The Lieutenant follows up by charging the monster and jumping at it with his fist pulled back.

Boom!

The Rhino's reinforced gauntlets provide Samuel with a substantial boost to his strength. He hits the Troll's face hard enough to whip its head and body back, flattening it against the ground. The Troll's skull smacks against the bottom of the warpgate's steps with violent force, but unsurprisingly, the monster survives thanks to its high-grade durability.

"Roar!"

The Trolls slaps Samuel aside with its massive arms, making him stumble off its body and fall to the side. He quickly reorients himself, only to look skyward and scowl. "Lieutenant Samuel speaking! Multiple Wraiths have entered the battlefield! Numbers unknown! Strength unknown, over!"

"Roger that," comes the immediate reply. "We're receiving reports from other squads. Retreat to the fallback position for three minutes, over."

"Noted! Lieutenant Samuel out!"

Samuel's gaze falls on the aethereal, ghost-like creatures pouring out of the portal. The shrieking souls, low-level monsters capable of passing through most armor, howl garbled words as they home toward the nearest signs of life.

Three Wraiths fly above Samuel, spot him, and beeline for the Lieutenant. Samuel disregards the Gate Troll and runs away, wincing as the nanites on the outside of his suit begin humming with agitation.

"CLASS-C WRAITH PRESENCES DETECTED," Centurion yells. "ACTIVATING SURFACE HARMONIC DESTABILIZERS. EIGHTY-THREE SECONDS REMAIN BEFORE POWER LOSS. DO NOT REMAIN IN THE VICINITY."

Samuel growls to himself. "Bloody Wraiths at a time like this. That's gonna cost me a lot of battery life."

The ghostly monsters slash at Samuel's back, but the nanites vibrating on his suit's surface create a powerful electrical field around him, preventing the wraiths from inflicting any damage. Instead, their ghostly claws bounce off the electricity and hiss with steam, making the specters howl in anger.

As Samuel charges through the undead monsters blocking his path, all of them still trying to climb nearby structures or charge past barricades, his electrified fists cause extra damage and kill Mephisto's minions even faster than normal.

With the three angry Wraiths still pursuing him, Samuel breaks through the perimeter. At that moment, a half-dozen Spectre-wearing troopers decloak, revealing their presences to the undead invaders. They stand atop three of the nearby buildings and use the four Needlers on their backs to lunge toward the incoming wraiths. The metallic tendrils easily stab through the Wraiths' incorporeal bodies and pulse with electricity, frying the monsters to ash. Screaming soundlessly, the Wraiths evaporate into mist, departing the corporeal plane forever.

Samuel grinds to a stop as his Rhino deactivates its Harmonic Destabilizers. The immense drain on his battery vanishes, allowing Samuel to turn around and face the battlefield. The Gate Troll roars angrily as it charges toward his position, making several nearby troopers concentrate their fire on it.

"Lieutenant Samuel speaking! Where's that backup? This Troll is about to reach our frontlines, over!"

Instead of the command post, a familiar female voice replies. "Commander Hiro speaking. I'm on my way, over."

Samuel's rhino suit detects a distant shockwave. He glances to the north side of the encampment, where a three-hundred-foot-tall, eight-legged Spider-Mech stomps toward the base. Atop the mech's long, spindly legs rests a human sized cockpit with a laser-turret on its left and a triple-barreled machine gun on its right. The mech appears surprisingly delicate, with very little armor but extremely long legs, each one tapering off into a razor-sharp point capable of stabbing into stone and climbing cliffs and sheer surfaces.

"God damn, Commander Hiro," Samuel mutters. "What the fuck is that thing? It's incredible! I want one... over!"

Phoebe laughs lightly. "Haha. It's nothing much, just a Arachnid-Class Mech. I made it so I would have a mobile vantage platform. Gives me a bird's-eye view, and lets me dish out damage from the skies. Now, watch yourself, and don't get in my line of fire. Commander Hiro, out."

The Gate Troll spots Samuel's giant Rhino suit from a couple of hundred feet away. Remembering the one who knocked it down previously, it bellows at him and begins to charge.

A thin red tracking laser aims directly at the beast's spine as it rushes eastward, toward Samuel. He gathers strength into his limbs, ready to intercept it if the Troll gets too close.

Fortunately, he never gets the chance.

From her vantage point hundreds of feet in the air, Phoebe has a perfect view of the Troll's large, easily targeted back.

Fwip.

A nearly-silent discharge of air is the only thing anyone hears as the tracking laser becomes a deadly focal point, firing a superheated, five-thousand-degree heat-ray at the Troll's spine, one Phoebe dubs the Asura Laser. Instantly, a massive hole appears in the creature's chest, as well as the ground in front of it.

The undead monster perishes without knowing what hit it. It flops forward and crashes into the dirt, grinding to a halt only fifty feet from the frontlines, amidst the bodies of countless other fallen undead.

"Nice shot," Samuel mutters, a jealous grin on his face. "Gotta get me one of those."

Humanity continues using their superior tactics to outwit Mephisto's brain-dead minions, suppressing them with superior ranged firepower and military might.

Minutes earlier.

Mephisto, the Duke of Mist, watches as his undead Gate Troll finishes stepping through the warpgate. As it arrives on Tarus II's surface and begins taking heavy fire, Mephisto slithers through the portal behind it, hiding in its shadow. He dives underground, disappearing into the soil without any issue, his ghostly body making physical barriers worthless.

While the battle rages overhead, Mephisto breathes a sigh of relief.

"Infiltration successsful... kekeke..."

He praises himself, despite his inability to see anything around him. However, after a hundred thousand years of using his powers, Mephisto has long since lost the need to rely on his five senses, especially once inside physical objects.

Instead, he closes his eyes while hovering deeper underground. His consciousness extends upward to his undead army, where he quickly taps into all of their minds. A visual of the entire battlefield, represented via a three-dimensional, easily manipulated image, appears in his mind. The necromancer chuckles softly to himself.

"Kekeke... ssso many humansss. Their weaponsss appear new, and their ammunition plentiful. Againssst an endlesss horde, how long can they lassst? Quite a while, if memory ssservesss correctly."

Memories of his exploits against the ancient humans, those he fought in the Energy Wars, appear in the Duke of Mist's mind.

"Thessse weaponsss are not the sssame asss thossse the former flessshbagsss usssed. It ssseemsss the Hero'sss wife created them from ssscratch. No matter. In battlesss of attrition, my army will never lossse. I will uncover the gapsss and holesss in their sssecurity and exploit them ruthlesssly, kekeke..."

Mephisto falls silent and retreats into his thoughts.

My Death Gates will recall all the minions I've stored throughout the years. They will appear randomly, without rhyme or reason, which is never ideal for a strategic battle... but the advantage is that once opened, I won't have to waste my energy constantly summoning monsters and demons, kekeke...

Casually, Mephisto floats around beneath the soldier's feet. He pokes his head out of the ground a few inches, every so often, confirming the areas his minions can't see visually, before returning underground.

The Duke's movements are relaxed and effortless. The deaths of his subordinates cause him little grief, considering the sum of the total they represent.

As the humans battle the undead, Mephisto takes note of which monster types fall the fastest to which weapons, the placement of snipers, assassins, tankers, and other such things. He watches emotionlessly as Phoebe kills an undead Gate Troll, giving the beast's death no consideration.

Kekeke... fleshbags are intelligent, yes, but they all have the same weakness. They are pattern-seekers. Against this group of stupid monsters, all running forward thoughtlessly, the humans will grow accustomed to their movements. 'How easy,' the fleshbags will say. 'These undead are brainless and easy to kill. We can last forever.' Kekeke... how wrong they will be...

Mephisto takes a mental calculation of his troops.

Skeletons. Mere cannon fodder, they are little more than the reanimated, fleshless bodies of various bipedal beings. Without flesh and muscle, their might is meager. However, some higher beings may die with mana coursing through their bones. They are most suited to become skeleton warriors and mages, with heavier armor. They can take a beating, but are still quite weak. I won't mind losing them.

With a wave of his fingers, Mephisto gently directs a higher proportion of his skeletal warriors toward the frontlines to soak up the humans' bullets.

Zombies. Ghouls. Mummies. These corpses are stronger than skeletons, due to the muscles and flesh they retain from prior to their deaths. However, their rotting sinew tends to slow them down. They are best used to break down barriers and walls, kekeke...

Mephisto directs a group of ghouls and mummies toward one of the nearby buildings, one with a pair of Spectres standing atop it, as well as five troopers with carbines and submachine guns. The troops unload a hailstorm of bullets on the fleshy undead, but the monsters beat their fists against the wall many times until eventually breaking through and pouring inside.

Satisfied at the first step of his plan finishing, Mephisto chuckles to himself.

Kekeke! Many complain about the stench of mummies and ghouls, but their strength is quite good, considering how easily I can acquire them.

Three dozen additional Wraiths enter the battlefield. Mephisto flicks his attention toward them.

Another bundle of Wraiths. What good luck I have! I mustn't waste them. The fleshbags have armor capable of repelling Wraiths and Ghosts, but I know their weaknesses, kekeke!! If I avoid those pesky invisible soldiers, I can poke at the other soldiers and drain their batteries! Once they run out of energy, their suits will fall apart!

Mephisto calls the Wraiths underground, where they descend to the rocky depths, just like himself. The spectral monsters float toward their master while muttering incoherently, their tortured souls revealing painful lives filled with agony and torture.

"Hello, my prettiesss, kekeke! It isss good to sssee you, yesss? Ssstay with me a while, and we'll look for lone troopersss to pessster, hehe..."

All thirty-six of the Wraiths reply with hollow moans, their minds far too broken to speak properly. They merely heed Mephisto's commands and stay close to him, waiting for further orders.

Mephisto's gaze turns toward the surface as a huge portion of his omni-vision disappears. He blinks in surprise, only to turn one of his ghouls to the north, where he spots Phoebe's enormous Spider-Mech, now much closer to the encampment, firing a torrential downpour of bullets from its triple-barreled machine guns. The heavy-caliber munitions tear through Mephisto's minions with ease, shattering their bones and spraying their bodies like cake thrown against a floor.

Brrrrrt!

The mech's weapon fires so quickly that a thousand bullets rain from the sky every minute, killing two thousand undead via their sheer piercing power. Every so often, the Asura Laser finishes charging and takes out a more heavily-armored target in one shot, preventing Mephisto from amassing any significant forces.

The Duke of Mist narrows his eyes as his troops sharply decrease in number.

"Kss. Flessshbag female. Ssshe isss the wife of the Hero, kekeke... I cannot risssk attacking that female myssself, but, perhapsss there isss another way..."

Mephisto's memories travel back in time to a mere six years before. He recalls the method he used to defeat Beelzebub during Beelzebub's Duke Initiation Test.

"Hehe, Beelzebub didn't know, but Bael only wissshed to know how powerful he had become. We would never have denied him his well-earned rissse in rank. Little did we know, but that fire-brain obtained incredible regenerative powersss, kekeke..."

With a shake of his head, Mephisto returns his attention to Phoebe's spider-mech.

"Ksss. You leave me no choiccce, woman. I will sssummon... a Brute."

The Duke's expression turns nasty.

"Wasssting ssso many of my preciousss minionsss, all to ssstop one metal machine. Disssgraccceful! Hehe... but so long asss I ssseize glory here and defeat the flessshbagsss by myssself, I will have the right to sssteal Ossse'sss title of Emperor! Hahahaha!!"

Mephisto's hands become a blur. He rapidly performs countless hand signs while muttering words in the demonic language under his breath.

Grr. This technique requires so many sacrifices, but also so much of my mana. Such a waste, and the Brute won't even last five minutes! What bastards these fleshbags are, making me resort to this!

Mephisto grumbles to himself gloomily, but even so, his eyes contain a spark of vicious glee.

* * *

Aboveground, Phoebe continues wiping out the undead with ease. She sits inside the square cockpit of the Spider Mech, 'Skitter-Boy,' keeping an eye on the many screens arrayed before her. Dozens of buttons and switches control the mech's eight legs, its turret rotation and yaw, and the firing angle of its weapons. She moves both hands around like a practiced veteran while manipulating all of its systems.

"Hmm. Only 15,000 rounds left. I'll need to leave and reload once I run out," Phoebe muses. "I can only keep up my current firing speed for another ten minutes at best."

Phoebe's gaze flicks around the battlefield as she shoots. "Red Marksmen, you've got a few ghouls sprinting around the backside. Hit them when they climb the southern annex's roof. Blue and Magenta Troopers, I want you moving to point three to take over for the frontliners. They're bound to start tiring out soon. This battle is a marathon, not a sprint. Don't exhaust yourself now when our goal is to hold out until Jason returns. Golden Hummers, fly overhead and drop some landmines. Aim for the western side of the warpgate. I have a feeling the demons will try to break our encirclement by retreating to the opposite wall. Hehehe... that would be an unwise choice."

Phoebe chuckles coyly to herself. Her gaze drifts to the west, behind the warpgate, where a few hundred feet of plains separates the warpgate itself from the western wall. The area appears barren and empty, but really, that section of the wall happens to be the hardest, most durable point of the entire defensive line. Countless traps lay buried beneath the ground, where any ghoul which chooses to step there will die immediately.

Additionally, more than a dozen turrets rest atop the wall, their automated sensors tracking around, looking for enemies to draw near the wall's base, where they'll form a killbox.

"I doubt we'll last forever, but it's hard to imagine we'll lose anytime soon- hm?"

Phoebe frowns as her entire mech shudders. Suddenly, a gigantic monster explodes from beneath Tarus II's surface. Standing a hundred feet tall, the monster appears terrifying, with a muscled body powerful enough to crush titanium.

The monster roars and grabs hold of one of the Skitter-Boy's legs. Phoebe's eyes bulge out of her head as she gazes at a creature one-quarter as tall as her specially built spider-mech.

"What in the Creator's name is THAT?! Good god!"

She tries to aim her guns downward to shoot it, but their orientation atop the mech's eight legs prevents her from targeting her feet.

With that realization, Phoebe's resolve hardens.

"I don't know what you are, but nobody touches my baby!"

As the monster roars loud enough to strike fear into the hearts of men, all while crumpling the delicate spider-leg it grasps against its chest, Phoebe manipulates one of the other long, spindly Skitter-Boy legs.

She raises the mech's leg into the air, above the Brute's head. A moment later, the pointed, sword-like tip rushes toward the monster's skull.

Skrik!

The Skitter-Boy's other leg tears into the Brute's brain, through its gut, and out its lower orifice, piercing it like a fishing spear through a salmon. Immediately, the monster perishes. Its grip slackens as it releases the Skitter-Boy's crumpled leg, but already, the damage appears extensive.

Phoebe sighs. "That was a close one. I wonder what the heck that creature was? Kind of scary!"

* * *

Mephisto, still underground, gapes at the now-dead Brute lying uselessly in the grass, kicked aside by Phoebe's mech. While she continues her onslaught on the undead pouring through Mephisto's portal, the Duke of Mist loses his composure for several seconds.

"Sh-ssshe did what?! How could that maccchine kill a Brute?! Those long, ssspindly legsss looked asss if they would collapssse with a mere finger-flick, let alone the ssstrength of a Brute! Damn you, woman! I've wasssted ten thousssand sssoulsss already becaussse of you!"

If Mephisto had any hair, he might rip it out. Instead, he clutches his skull and howls with rage, unable to believe his Brute died from a single attack.

"Ssstupid, ssstupid! I underessstimated that woman! Gah!"

After a few minutes, Mephisto calms down. His rage sinks into his feet, allowing his mind to clear up so he can think.

Hmm. Never mind, then. It seems I will have to get creative and overrun this base.

Mephisto's mood darkens as he hovers underground. He travels back toward the warpgate and sighs.

My minions number in the billions. I can throw them here for weeks without end, but that would weaken my 100,000 years of foundation. I must save a large force for after this war, when I may need to suppress Ose, kekeke...

The Duke's ambition soars toward the skies as he imagines himself running the show.

Haha! Yes, I am the one who should control demonkind! Satan was my master! He taught me many valuable lessons, things that little hussy, Ose, would never understand! She thinks she's so smart, just because she studied under fleshbags for a few decades. Pfah!

With a sigh, Mephisto begins chanting a demonic incantation. He aims his mind behind the Tarus II warpgate, toward its barren, western side, in the field between the walls.

"Two more Death Gatesss, keke... yesss, sssuch a wissse choiccce, don't you think?"

Mephisto directs the question toward his thirty-six trailing Wraiths, but they naturally have no reply to offer beyond hysterical screams.

"You watch your mouth!" Mephisto snaps. "Don't get hisssy with me, ssstupid ghossstsss..."

With a quiet grumble, Mephisto activates his incantation, which will increase the number of undead at play tenfold.

"Ksss. I could alwaysss open a Death Gate outssside the wallsss... but no. We mussst take the flessshbag'sss base if we wisssh to overrun thisss planet with demonsss, hehehe. Ssso, I ssshall put my focusss here for the immediate future, hehe..."

The sneaky skulking demon keeps doing what he must as the battle nears its second phase.

Part 243: Mephisto's Counterattack

First Day: First Hour.

The darkness of night grows ever omnipresent within the warpgate encampment. Mephisto orders his undead to smash and destroy the lights around themselves while they rampage, causing the terrifying swarms of rotted flesh and bones to melt together in the darkness, making it difficult for the humans to distinguish them from one another.

Many troopers thank their lucky stars that their T-REX's, adapted to work in the pitch-blackness of the Labyrinth, make the need for external light sources almost nonexistent. Their bullets rip through the air and tear into zombies and skeletons with small flashes of light, further illuminating the battlefield.

Among the tens of thousands of human troops in the encampment, the majority of them stand atop the small, fifteen-foot-tall concrete buildings littered throughout the area. They crowd together in clumps of twenty to thirty soldiers per rooftop, barely able to fit their masses of bodies onto each roof without falling off. Each rooftop of human and monster warriors takes out a hundred undead monsters every minute, yet still their bullets barely seem to put a dent in Mephisto's army.

A command comes over the soldiers' intercoms.

"Commander Hiro speaking. Two massive portal-type gates have just appeared at the western edge of the encampment. Mephisto is most likely behind their appearance. I need two contingents to travel around the north and south side of the encampment and meet Lieutenant Samuel behind the outer walls, while General Chadwick will take over command for the central army. Attack anything that comes out of those gates! Commander Hiro, out."

Thanks to Phoebe's vantage point, 400-feet above the planet's surface, her early warning allows nearly a thousand troopers to swarm around the outer walls toward the camp's west side. Lieutenant Samuel, still smashing monsters into paste with his Rhino, slowly stomps his way through the never-ending masses of undead, relying on his fellow soldiers to pick off any significant threats before they reach him.

"Damn," Samuel grunts. "Battery's at thirty percent. Those ghosts hit me hard."

He activates his comlink with a quick flick of his eyes. Centurion detects his erratic eye movement and immediately triggers Communication Mode.

"Commander Hiro, this is Lieutenant Samuel speaking. I need a power-pack drop! I've only got a third of my battery left, over."

"Roger that," Phoebe replies. "Can you make it to the western wall? I'll drop a pack from low-orbit. Should arrive at the outer wall within three minutes, over."

"I copy," Samuel says, while jamming his fist into a skeleton's ribs and tearing its spine out. "Have the reinforcements cover me- holy shit! Those things are GIGANTIC!"

Samuel temporarily loses his composure as he makes his way past the warpgate platform. He fights off the ceaseless stream of Mephisto's undead while managing a quick glimpse at Mephisto's two new Death Gates, both of which tower more than seventy feet into the air. The portals continue to coalesce while sucking in mana from the ambient air around them, giving them the impression of giant vacuum cleaners.

"Commander Hiro, what the hell are those things?!" Samuel asks. "Have you ever seen them before? Over!"

Phoebe sighs. "Negative, Lieutenant. No doubt, they're similar to the warpgate in some way. They don't look like Warper portals, however, so I'm not sure if our interspatial dampeners will work on them. Get your batteries refilled and keep doing what you do best; killing demons. Commander Hiro out."

Phoebe's connection terminates, leaving Samuel grasping at straws. Intuitively, he understands the general purpose of the Death Gates, but being unable to see the other two inside the Labyrinth Core, he hasn't a clue as to what they specifically do.

"What a pain in the ass," Samuel grumbles. "Forget it. I'll recharge my suit and deal with anything that pokes its head out."

Samuel's HUD illuminates with green lights, pointing out dozens of landmines in his path, as well as tripwires and traps designed for murdering demons. He makes his way past them and arrives at the western wall just in time for both of Mephisto's Death Gates to finish forming.

"Shit."

Samuel curses in annoyance as the portals stabilize, forming into giant black doorways connected to the world of death. With a size even bigger than the gates inside the Labyrinth, they allow a torrential stream of undead to come pouring out. Fifty powerful Dullahans, horse-riding creatures with heavy armor, burst out of the gate and charge forward. The headless horsemen charge in every direction, stomping the landmines around the gate and causing tremendous explosions all over the place. The ignition of a dozen bombs not far from Samuel's position throws him off his feet and slams him against the bordering wall.

"Aargh!"

Samuel cries out, but more in alarm rather than pain, thanks to his Rhino's protection. He tumbles backward and lands on his ass for a moment before quickly picking himself up. Not wanting to delay, the Lieutenant ignites limited-duration rockets under his boots and leaps skyward, clearing the thirty-foot encampment walls with ease. Despite his boot-rockets running out of juice, he manages to land atop the fifteen-foot-wide battlement without any trouble. A light in the sky makes Samuel raise his head, where he spots Phoebe's care package dropping from low orbit. It rushes toward a spot some hundred-feet from the encampment's outer wall and crashes into the dirt with a boom!

Samuel hops the crenels on the steel-and-stone walls and lands on the ground outside just in time to see a thousand other commandos running toward him from the north and south walls.

"Right on time!" Samuel shouts. "Get up there and start shooting! The demons just got some additional reinforcements! Don't let them swarm toward the rest of our troops or they'll overrun us!"

"Sir, yes sir!"

Samuel runs toward his rapidly-cooling battery pack and sighs as its container pops open. "I hope we survive the night."

Recommended Listening

Mephisto's Death Gates materialize silently and without fanfare, but their presence on the battlefield marks a paradigm shift. Humanity's forces envelop the insides of the encampment. Soldiers line up along the fifteen-foot-wide walls, unloading hundreds of thousands of bullets at the undead invaders. The Death Gates, facing east, release a landslide of rotted corpses upon Tarus II's surface. What once seemed a terrifying amount of landmines and tripwires becomes useless in the face of so many unending enemies.

The first wave of Dullahans, headless armored warriors riding atop midnight-colored horses, proves to be some of the weakest forces among Mephisto's army.

Countless undead demons, including Burners and Burrowers, erupt from the left Death Gate. They begin digging underneath the encampment while slinging powerful fireballs at the soldiers atop the walls. Hundreds of feet beneath the encampment, explosive rumbles signify the detonations of Phoebe's Seismic Mines. Dozens of burrowers perish instantly, while flames erupt from the holes they dug, scorching any undead too close to those openings.

Humans atop the walls throw grenades toward the ground, aiming for the holes left behind by the dead Burrowers. When the grenades explode, they do so not with fire and shrapnel, but a mysteriously dense quick-hardening agent. The holes immediately seal, preventing Mephisto's undead from traveling beneath the battlefield like termites.

Mephisto, flitting around underground, howls angrily, clearly disturbed by the humans' tenacity. "You won't ssstop me for long!"

Four hours pass.

Among the hundreds of thousands of human soldiers available to fight on the frontlines, only fifty thousand or so work together at any given moment to subdue Mephisto's forces. With space limited by the terrain, the majority of the allied forces stand atop buildings and towers throughout the camp, firing down upon Mephisto's swarm.

Despite their clearcut tactical advantages, humanity begins to lose ground. Mephisto switches tactics, making his strongest undead rip through the concrete buildings to crumble them to powder. This forces many commandos to retreat, which in turn allows the hordes to advance.

With the dark of night at its most omnipresent, the commandos begin sweating like crazy.

"Sweet mother of god! How many minions does Mephisto have?!"

"How should I know?! Keep firing! Blast the motherfuckers!"

The commandos howl at one another, their voices only distinguishable from the constant stream of gunfire thanks to their T-REX's dampening the outside sounds. Fatigue begins to set in among humanity's ranks, forcing them to swap out for fresh soldiers.

However, with the undead pressing them from the frontlines at all times, they never have a moment to pull back.

"Commander Hiro!" Chadwick shouts. "We need covering fire! If these soldiers keep fighting any longer, they'll die of exhaustion, over!"

His voice transmits to Phoebe, no longer inside her giant spider-mech. She zips around in the skies above, riding inside a sleek vessel, the one her husband uses on the regular, Esther. As she flies overhead, keeping an eye on the battlefield, she occasionally strafe-fires lines of lasers across the undead hordes.

"I copy, Chadwick. The second wave of reinforcements is ready and waiting. You just need to find the right moment to pull our girls and boys out of there, over."

"Dammit, that's the problem!" Chadwick growls. "The moment we stop firing, the horde will rush at us! Further, the dead bodies we hoped would block their path keep sucking into the ground! Mephisto is keeping the path clear for his scum-sucking-"

"Chadwick, calm down, please," Phoebe says, her voice stern. "Casualties are inevitable. We can't save everyone, and we might save no-one. Do the best you can. Get our troops out of there and swap in fresh blood as best as you can. You won't be able to save everyone from such a fierce assault, over."

Chadwick's breathing hastens. "But-"

"That's an order, General. Commander Hiro, out."

Without another word, Phoebe cuts the line, leaving Chadwick flabbergasted.

However, after a minute, Chadwick regains his bearings. He stares at the front line troops for a minute and shakes his head. "This is General Chadwick speaking. Second and third line, swap out! Front line, hold on while we get some fresh blood to back you up."

Immediately, the General causes panic to surge among the hundred or so troopers at the front, all of whom rely on the troopers behind them to help thin the zombie hordes. "What?! If the people behind us stop firing, we're goners!"

Chadwick nods, though the frontliners don't see his gesture. "That's right. I'm sorry, everyone. We have to hold on until Jason or Hope returns. Anyone who dies today, I solemnly swear to give your families the best treatment!"

Every man and woman at the front grits their teeth with determination.

"...So be it, General! We'll hold them off as long as possible! We won't let these bastards advance an inch!"

The General's gaze falls upon the rooftops filled to the brim with soldiers, all packed so tightly they barely have room to fire their weapons.

"Retreat in ten seconds! I'll get the next group there the moment I have room for them to stand!"

* * *

A minute later, after the rear troops retreat, but before the new troops have time to make their way across the rooftops to the frontlines, the undead swarm surges forward, their maws open and ready to bite. They immediately begin climbing the roofs of the buildings, terrifying the frontline troopers beyond belief.

"I-I can't kill them fast enough! Where are the reinforcements?!"

"They're climbing! They're crawling over each- aaaaargh!"

Several soldiers howl in fear as the undead pounce at them and begin ripping at the hardened nanite armor. Despite even the basic T-REX's possessing superior defenses, they aren't resilient enough to resist the clawing of countless monsters and undead demons.

By the time Chadwick's reinforcements begin jumping from rooftop to rooftop toward their comrades, it's already too late. The hundred soldiers he left behind perish horrible, gruesome deaths, only to rise shortly thereafter as Mephisto's newest minions.

"Dammit! SHIT!" Chadwick yells. Angered beyond belief, he points at the newly arisen troopers and the other undead scaling the roofs and yells, "Kill them all! Don't let our friends suffer under Mephisto's control!"

Luckily, thanks to precautions taken many years before, the T-REX's of all fallen warriors become inert and useless if their pilots' bio-signs fail. The newly arisen frontliners become ordinary humans, unable to defend themselves against the hailstorm of bullets from their freshly-arrived allies.

"You scumbag, Mephisto!" One of the new arrivals shouts. "You'll pay for today! We'll kill you for sure!"

Underground, Mephisto doesn't hear the wails and screams of the anguished newcomers. He closes his eyes and continues manipulating his armies, surging forward hundreds of feet deeper into the encampment.

"Kekeke! Yesss, yesss! It isss asss I predicted! Thessse flessshbagsss are no match for my overwhelming numbersss!"

Slowly, Mephisto begins to gain the upper hand. He continuously sucks any fallen bodies underground, clearing a path for his minions, whole also directing his army toward any gaps in the humans' defenses.

"Kekeke! I may not be an Emperor, but you will sssoon find I am more than a match for a bunch of sssimpleton monkeysss!"

* * *

Western wall.

Samuel holds a giant plasma cannon in his arms. The two-foot-wide and four-foot-long weapon charges up and fires superheated balls of energy at the undead below, exploding groups of ten and twenty into meat paste with every shot. The scorching hot plasma melts their biomass down to mere glops of goop, causing tremendous damage every twenty seconds when it fires.

Suddenly, the flow of skeletons and Dullahans from the left gate slows to a crawl.

A shiver goes down Samuel's back as a vague sense of danger appears in the back of his mind.

At that moment, a giant's leg emerges through the seventy-fool-tall Death Gate.

Thirty-feet-long, the leg steps through slowly, lazily. Its pure white coloration stands out in the darkness of the night, giving it an appearance distinct from all the other undead.

One of the troopers nearest Samuel stops shooting his rifle. He gazes at the leg with a look of pure horror. "Sweet mother in heaven! It can't be!"

Samuel jerks his head toward the man. "What is that thing?"

A pair of giant, hairy hands, also colored white, emerge through the gate and grab its sides. By now, every trooper's attention has fixated on the emerging monstrosity.

"It's... it's a..."

The man trembles, terrified to spit the creature's name out.

"...a F-Frost Giant! From Antica!"

Samuel's stomach sinks to the bottom of his feet. "Antica?! The frost world? That hellish, ceaselessly cold planet?!"

"Yes!" The man screeches.

Everyone watches with unblinking eyes as a twenty-foot head emerges through the portal, its face looking like a horrible cross between a gorilla and a wolf. Its snout sticks out of its face, along with its mouth. The creature's beady black eyes flick around as it surveys the area.

"Open fire!" Samuel roars.

All 1,000 of the troops on the western wall get into position to fire at the front of the frost giant's Death Gate. They unload a hailstorm of bullets, missiles and grenades, only to widen their eyes in shock as their attacks bounce off the giant uselessly.

After a moment of hesitation, the Frost Giant climbs through the Death Gate and emerges onto Tarus II's soil, its 120-foot-tall body barely managing to squeeze through the 70-foot portal. Once it straightens its posture, sheer panic erupts among humanity's forces.

"We're not hurting it! We aren't even tickling it!"

"Backup! We need backup!"

Samuel's eyes hurriedly flick around his helmet's HUD, activating his comlink. "Commander Hiro, Lieutenant Samuel speaking! Get the heavy munitions to the western wall now! Right now! We've got a Frost Giant here, over!"

Phoebe's reply comes immediately. "What?! A Frost Giant?! How is that possible? Ah! Don't tell me Mephisto somehow obtained one of their corpses?"

"How the fuck should I know?!" Samuel screams, blood veins popping on his forehead. "Just get me something- anything! We have to kill this thing before... before..."

Samuel falls silent.

The Frost Giant, now fully within the confines of the world, turns around to look toward the western wall. However, its eyes fall not upon the wall or the soldiers defending it, but the portal it just stepped through.

At that moment...

A second pair of Frost Giant hands grab hold of the Death Gate's edges.

Another massive head emerges.

All the while, the western soldiers' morale sinks into the abyss.

"T-two... two Frost... Giants..." Samuel mutters, his heartbeat slowing to a crawl. "Backup. Please. We're all about to die."

Phoebe's voice comes quickly but quietly, her words a whisper. "Samuel. Pull your men out of there. I've just ordered Chadwick to retreat as well. I'm going to activate the King Cannons."

"They won't-" Samuel says.

"That wasn't a request, Lieutenant," Phoebe says, cutting him off. "Commander Hiro, out."

Moments later, all of humanity's forces begin a quick and furious retreat. With two insanely powerful presences on the battlefield, their immediate loss becomes inevitable.

* * *

Underground, Mephisto cackles with glee. "Yesss! Yessss! I lucked out! To think, thossse Frossst Giantsss would emerge! Sssummoning them myssself would require a tremendousss amount of mana, but stepping through the Death Gate cossstsss me nothing! Kekekeke! My victory isss inevitable now!"

The Duke of Mist peeps out of the ground to gaze at his newly emerged Duke-Level monsters with excited eyes.

"Sssturdy, nearly invincccible, and big enough to crusssh all the flessshbag'sss defensssesss! Now I can finally win thisss war! Go, my prettiesss! The flessshbagsss have already retreated! Thisss planet isss asss good asss oursss!"

His command transmits to the pair of undead giants. They nod imperceptibly and begin stomping toward the east. Every step crushes a dozen undead into pulp, but Mephisto pays the low-level minions no mind.

Within ten steps, the giants arrive at the buildings to the east. They casually and effortlessly stomp every structure into rubble, causing earthquakes throughout the region.

"Kekekeke! Too magnificccent! Too powerful! What will you do, flessshbagsss? Will you unleasssh the nuclear bombsss you onccce coveted ssso dearly?! Bahaha! That will only ssspell your own end! You cannot ssstop my mightiessst minionsss!"

Without any humans to thin the herd, Mephisto's army size swells to over a hundred thousand. The undead rush the half-mile toward the eastern wall and begin climbing atop one another to clear its thirty-foot hurdle.

As Mephisto watches, one of his minions reports a strange light in the sky. The Duke of Mist immediately raises his eyes toward the starry night, where he discovers a tiny ball of light, barely any bigger than a star, flying overhead.

"Hmm? A ssspacccessship? No. Too ssslow. Sssomething elssse?"

Narrowing his eyes, Mephisto enhances his vision to its upper limits. He picks out a giant metal ball rushing through the upper atmosphere, its surface alight from burning up on re-entry.

Mephisto blinks.

"Sssomething isssn't right. Why did the flessshbagsss pull away ssso quickly? sssurely, they would have tried firing ssstronger weaponsss. Isss thisss metal sphere... a bomb?!"

The Duke of Mist doesn't panic. However, as the burning hot orb begins to rapidly descend toward the planet below, Mephisto's body shudders. "What sssort of weapon isss that?!"

The orb explodes, revealing ten thousand foot-long steel rods, all of them with sharpened tips.

The incoming hailstorm of fifteen-pound rods spreads apart and becomes a deadly shower of arrow-like shrapnel. By the time Mephisto sees the attack coming, he's too late.

Swish! Shik! Shik! Shik!

The steel rods hit the ground at hundreds of miles an hour like thunderbolts, all of them ripping through anything in their paths and embedding tens of feet into Tarus II's soft soil. Instantly, thirty thousand undead perish.

At the same time, Mephisto's Frost Giants don't come out unscathed either. A hundred iron rods strike their bodies and embed a few feet into their organs, causing light damage. Due to lacking pain receptors, the giants don't cry out, but they still slow down noticeably.

"W-what a frightening attack!" Mephisto hisses. "That ssstrange metal ball killed a third of my forcccesss! It isss a good thing my Frossst Giantsss barely took any damage, or- AH!"

Mephisto shrieks in fright. His eyes bulge as he spots three more fireballs streaking overhead.

"More?! There are more?! No! No! My minionsss! Ssstop killing my children, you filthy flessshbagsss! SSSTOP!"

Ten seconds later, a hailstorm of steel rods three times more intense than the previous one falls from the skies. Fifty thousand undead creatures perish in the blink of an eye.

"Noooooo!" Mephisto howls in anguish. "Wretched flessshbagsss! Alwaysss with the tricksss! Aaaaargh!"

Mephisto loses enough undead creatures to summon five Brutes, making him wail and beat his ribs.

He glances at his Frost Giants. Due to many hundreds of iron barbs jamming into their bodies, their movements become slower and less responsive than ever. Both of the humongous monsters step over the thirty foot wall and begin lumbering toward the east, but Mephisto's soul fills with dread.

Far away, amidst the blackness of the night, a dozen bright flashes of light reveal the presence of multiple artillery cannons. These weapons of war fire long-range projectiles across the two-mile distance to the warpgate encampment, where Phoebe, still inside Esther, feeds them attack coordinates.

Unable to dodge due to their wounds, Mephisto's Frost Giants can only stand and gape at the fireballs rocketing toward them.

Boom! Boom!

Huge explosions detonate against the giant's chests as the mortar shells bombard them at hundreds of miles an hour.

After just fifty shells finding their marks, the undead creatures topple backward and crash against the encampment's eastern walls, crushing them into rubble. The Giants perish, eliminating one of Mephisto's greatest trump cards.

The Duke of Mist stares, shellshocked, at his greatest loss so far.

He swallows a hundred shallow breaths, exhaling figurative fire from his nostrils as rage engulfs his mind.

"You... you will regret thisss... flesshbagsss. I wasss taking it easssy on you. I wanted to sssteal all the credit for myssself. No more. I sssee now the errorsss of my waysss..."

Silently, Mephisto falls back underground. He rushes toward the warpgate with agony in his eyes.

"It isss time. The Battle Brothersss will finally ssshow thessse flessshbagsss the might of the Hell of Blood! We will rip them limb from limb! SKREEE!!"

Part 244: Darkness

First Day: Second Hour.

Mephisto darts out of the ground and zips through the Tarus II warpgate with hatred burning in his eyes. Thanks to the undead flooding through Tarus II's portal, his disappearance goes unnoticed from the battlefield. His minions continue to flood out of the two Death Gates located inside the Labyrinth, as well as the two located on the planet itself, but Mephisto doesn't care one bit.

"Filthy flessshbagsss! I underessstimated them. I thought I could ssskim by with only the minimal amount of effort... but no more!"

The Duke of Mist darts past the Death Gates inside the Core. He arrives at the entrance to the fallen great doors, where hundreds of thousands of demons lurk in the gigantic hallway outside, their numbers increasing every minute.

Upon exiting the great doors, Mephisto jerks his head to the left. There, he spots the Battle Brothers playing a game of Sticks and Bones with Bael, the latter using his still-functional left arm to toss the playing pieces down. His right arm hangs uselessly at his side, dangling like a dead snake from a tree branch.

The moment Mephisto arrives, Duriel and Zamiel both look away from the game at their master.

"Shit, that you, boss? Didn't expect to see ya so soon," Duriel chuckles. "You look like a mess."

"Ssshut up," Mephisto hisses. "Thossse filthy humansss dessstroyed ssseveral of my bessst minionsss. Their power isss much greater than I firssst imagined. I require your sservicccesss."

Duriel punches his palm. "Hell yeah! Finally, some action! Me 'n big bro are gonna kick some ass!"

Zamiel bares his teeth in a vicious grin. "I expected you to wait longer before sending us out, boss. How many fleshies are in our way?"

The Duke of Mist shakes his head. "Ksss. Too many. They have all sssortsss of weaponsss... onesss different from thossse I encountered during the Energy Warsss. I am not familiar with their operationsss."

After a moment, Mephisto turns to Bael. "Hm? Bael. What isss wrong with you? Your expresssion isss ssseveral timesss ssstupider than usssual."

The Duke of Pain, still missing his gouged-out right-eye, meets Mephisto's gaze with a look of sheer stupidity. Saliva drips from the side of his mouth as he flashes a goofy smile.

"Oh, hey, Mephy. Long time no see, bub."

Mephisto frowns. "We ssspoke only a few hoursss ago."

"Hehe. Hours. That's a funny word."

The dopey-looking Duke of Pain chuckles to himself as if he said the most hilarious sentence ever. Mephisto turns to the Battle Brothers. "What isss wrong with Bael? He isss acting like a complete buffoon."

Zamiel shrugs. "Dunno. I think ripping that piece of metal out of his eye messed him up real good. We've told him to go to the Blood Pits, but I don't think the big guy knows what the heck those are."

"Cursssesss... jussst another thing on my plate," Mephisto growls. He turns to a pair of nearby Demon Lords. "You! Ssstop ssstanding around and make yourssselvesss ussseful! Take Bael to the Blood Pitsss. Make sssure to give hisss head a sssolid dunking!"

The two Lords blank out for a moment before nodding at Mephisto in unison. "Err, sure thing, Duke of Mist. We're on it!"

Both of the demons carefully pull Bael to his feet and half-drag him away. The Duke of Pain grins at both of them. "You're pretty."

"Bael. We're guys."

"Hehe. Pretty ladies..."

"We'll get you to the Blood Pits, buddy."

After the Lords drag Bael away, Mephisto floats back into the Core. He motions for the Battle Brothers to follow him, then begins to explain.

"The flessshbagsss have a sssizable army. Their weaponsss are formidable, but ssso far, the mossst dangerousss one involesss ssseveral iron rodsss falling from the sssky..."

The Duke of Mist brings his Baron-level minions to the edge of the warpgate. All the while, his two Death Gates inside the Core continue to spew out a never-ending stream of undead. He further elaborates on the technology the humans possess as the Battle Brothers listen with rapt attention.

Several minutes later...

"Uh-huh. Big metal machines, you say?" Zamiel asks. The older, more cunning of the brothers, curls his eyebrows in a devious manner. "Haha! Interesting. It sounds like we'll finally get to flex our muscles and show these fleshies our true power. No more holding back! Bael might not be here, but you've got us. We're more than enough to send the humans home crying, boss."

Duriel nods. "Hee! Don'tcha worry, boss. Me 'n Zammy know what we've gotta do. You just support us, and we'll rip through those fleshies with ease. A bunch of metal sticks fallin' out of the sky won't hurt us at all."

"Be careful!" Mephisto snaps. "Thisss isss no joke! Thossse iron rodsss ssslaughtered ssseveral of my ssstrongessst undead! You mussst take care to protect yourssselvesss when they come flying at you."

Zamiel reaches toward his waist, where a pair of razor-sharp gauntlets with bladed fingers rest. After slipping the gloves on, he reaches behind himself and detaches a massive, metal club from his back.

At the same time, Duriel unhooks a two-handed war-axe from his back, as well as a humongous greatsword. He hefts one into each hand, wielding the giant weapons as if they were toothpicks.

"We've got this, boss," Zamiel says with a grin. "Like I said. You can support us. We'll do what we do best."

"Heh, just like with all them crocs," Duriel chuckles. "These fleshies won't know what hit 'em."

Mephisto nods. He slithers backward and fades into the crowd of undead, melting into their ranks.

"Do not disssappoint me. I have invesssted consssiderable resssourcccesss into both of you..."

The Duke of Mist fades away, vanishing through the warpgate to Tarus II as he rejoins the battle.

Zamiel's cocky smile fades away.

"Bro. You know what we've gotta do, right? We've gotta finish what we started. Kill that last little sneaky bastard."

Duriel's expression turns nasty. "Yeah. One little croc got away. But ain't that good for us? He's super strong now. Means we'll get more juice once we gut the fucker."

"Hahaha!" Zamiel cackles, his smile returning with a vengeance. "You're right, little bro. You're devil-damned right..."

Both Barons stride toward the warpgate, melting into the flood of undead as they ready themselves to step onto Tarus II's surface.

"No more fleshies. No more crocs."

Phoebe Hiro, leader of humanity's resistance forces, flies around above the warpgate encampment inside her spaceship, Esther. She rattles off commands to different squads, using her aerial perspective to keep a solid grasp on the battlefield. Whenever the undead surge to the north, she moves troops around to fence them in. When they slither toward the south, a hailstorm of bullets forces them back.

"SYNTHESIZED EXPLOSIVE CHARGES COMPLETE. PAYLOAD READY TO DROP."

Centurion's voice speaks within the cockpit, notifying Phoebe that her specially created Horizontal Bombard Mines (HBM's) are ready to drop. She glances at her munitions screen and frowns. "Dang. A twenty-minute synthesize time, but I only get two explosives per payload. I'll either need to multiply that amount or cut the synthesizing time by ten if I want to make reusable bombers viable."

The weapons system, a miniaturized version of the Rust Bucket's replicators, allows her to repeatedly create low-yield drop-mines from raw energy. However, their destructive potential isn't powerful enough to do more than slow Mephisto's undead hordes. Still, they give her another tool in her war against the demon invaders.

"Commander Hiro speaking. General Chadwick, give me a status update, over."

Phoebe zips over the heads of the undead below and releases two of her bombs, killing more than sixty monsters with both blasts. She pulls away afterward, just in time to avoid another deadly barrage by the King Cannons. Already, tens of thousands of iron rods sit embedded in the dirt, making it much more difficult for the undead to move forward.

"Chadwick here. My men created a chokepoint, and we've encircled the eastern front. We've holed up in several pillboxes and we're turning anything that steps through the gap in the wall into paper mache. However, for the past five minutes, I've noticed that the undead bodies aren't disappearing into the dirt like before. I'm not sure what's going on, over."

Phoebe frowns.

The bodies aren't disappearing? That's odd. This whole time, Mephisto sucked them underground to clear the way for his other undead. Is he switching things up to throw us off?

"Keep up the good work," Phoebe replies. "I'll try to figure out Mephisto's strategy. Commander Hiro, out."

Frustrated, Phoebe waits until another King Cannon barrage concludes to zip closer to the warpgate for a few moments.

When she does, an alarm suddenly beeps on Esther's viewfinder.

"WARNING! ABNORMAL AMOUNTS OF DEMONIC MANA DETECTED!" Centurion blares. "BARON-LEVEL DEMONS DISCOVERED!"

Two red dots appear on Esther's viewscreen. Phoebe follows them with her eyes. "Commander Hiro speaking. To all battlefield officers, be aware that two high-level demons have just- what the hell?!"

Phoebe shrieks in surprise as a cloud of dense, black fog explodes underneath Esther, shrouding the entire warpgate encampment in darkness. Her sensors screech in alarm as they fail to penetrate the magical smog.

Hurriedly, Phoebe pulls Esther upward, retreating to more then 300 feet in the air. Before she can go any higher, a series of blood-red lights appear beneath her, and large, arrow-like objects come flying at her ship.

Boom! Boom! Boom!

Over and over, heavy impacts smash and batter the medium-sized ship, knocking her around and tearing through several key systems on the underside of Esther's carriage.

"Mayday, mayday! I'm under attack!" Phoebe cries. "I'm pulling back! Watch out, something scary just came out of that warpgate!!"

Smoke pours from Esther's underside. The ship chugs through the air, turning into a burning mass of metal as it loses its engines and glides toward the southern side of the encampment.

Crash!

The Esther hits the ground behind one of the military lines with a thunderous boom, making the people stationed nearby leap in fright.

"The Commander's ship crashed!"

"Someone get over there and help her! Make sure she's alive!"

"Yes sir!"

As the humans at the southern wall hurry to help their commander, not far away, inside the encampment, two powerful Barons stand atop the warpgate platform with glowing red eyes.

One minute before.

Zamiel and Duriel stride onto Tarus II's warpgate platform with nasty grins on their faces. The sounds of warfare erupt all around them. Distant gunfire mixes with the eerie cries of mindless undead, along with the booming of cannons and the humming sound of a spacecraft flying above.

Duriel, the taller but younger brother, raises his head skyward. "Huh. Lookit that, bro. A metal birdie."

"I've heard of those," Zamiel sneers. "They're called boats. They fly in the air and shoot tiny metal arrows."

"Boats? Pahaha! What a stupid name! Fleshies are dumber'n I thought!" Duriel guffaws. "Makes you wonder how the fleshies managed to hold out for so long before we demons finally kicked their asses."

Zamiel doesn't respond. Instead, he watches Phoebe's ship fly around overhead. His gaze turns suspicious. "We've gotta knock that thing out of the air."

Right after Zamiel speaks, Mephisto pokes his head out of the ground at their feet. "Kekeke! I agree! I will be much more proactive now that you two are here. Behold! My ssspeccial ability... Dark Missst!"

Unseen by the Battle Brothers, Mephisto forms a dozen magical hand signs beneath their feet. His eyes glow blood-red for a moment before he suddenly vomits out a torrent of dark, shadowy energy.

Within seconds, the air around the Battle Brothers and Mephisto's undead army thickens with the stench of death. Mephisto's special power shrouds the battlefield in impenetrable mist, draining his mana reserves considerably while also providing the perfect cover for his minions to move unseen.

"Kekekeke! Go, now, my minionssss! I ssshall ssshare with you the Eyesss of Death! Rampage to your heart'sss content!!"

Mephisto's magic surges through not only his undead, but Duriel and Zamiel as well. Their eyes glow blood-red, just like Mephisto's, allowing them to peer through the dense smog as if it weren't there at all.

"Hahaha! Now that's what I'm talkin' about!" Duriel roars. He clangs his greatsword and greataxe together to activate his Baron abilities, summoning his innermost powers to create a hundred blood-red, aetherial swords, each three-feet in length.

Every one of the weapons oozes demonic energy. They hover in midair, shrouded by the fog and unseen by the humans outside the firing line. With a horrible laugh, Duriel points both of his great-weapons skyward, at Phoebe's hovering spaceship.

"Go, blades! Cut that boat down!"

Like an archer's barrage, the blades aim themselves toward the sky and leap upward at hundreds of miles an hour. Before Phoebe can react, Duriel's weapons slice and gash apart Esther's hull, forcing the human commander to make an emergency crash-landing toward the south.

"Hahaha! Good one, bro!" Zamiel cackles, as Phoebe's ship disappears behind the southern wall. "Now, it's my turn!"

The older brother rushes northward. He raises his mace overhead, clutching its handle with both hands. He arrives at the northern wall within seconds and swings his weapon down like a battering ram.

BOOM!

Zamiel strikes the encampment wall with the power of ten Stinger missiles, blasting its stone exterior outward in a hailstorm of debris. The thousand or so commandos outside the encampment's limits cry out in alarm as the wall's remnants crash forward at alarming speeds, bouncing and skipping across the planet's surface like giant wrecking balls.

"Look out!"

"Duck! Everyone, get down!"

Fifty soldiers perish when the hundreds of tons of stone and metal pound through their ranks with reckless abandon, but most avoid death and serious injury by diving to the ground at the last second.

One soldier, wearing no combat armor, taps an earpiece on the side of her head. "Lieutenant Brunhilda to all forces! We've got a perimeter breach on the northern side, over!"

Before anyone else can reply, another message goes out over the primary station. "Lieutenant Samuel to all forces! We've got perimeter breaches on the south and west sides! Request immediate backup, over!"

Brunhilda grinds her teeth. "Damn! Just who the hell broke through the walls?! Was it Bael?!"

She and the other soldiers jump to their feet. They shiver with fear as they try to gaze through the dense fog lazily creeping over the perimeter walls. Everywhere the fog travels, it blocks the troopers' line-of-sight.

One eagle-eyed Harpie wearing specialized combat armor steps forward. "Chrrrrup! I see something! Over there, at the hole in the wall! There's someone standing there, but I can't make anything out about their appearance!"

* * *

After Zamiel smashes through the wall, he stares through the dark mist at the confused humans outside. His battle lust increases as he savors the looks of fear on several of the unarmored warrior's faces.

"Hehe! Sounds like little bro took down the other walls. Now the boss's undead can spread out and cover more ground. Excellent!"

After a moment, Zamiel frowns. "Huh? What's that noise?"

He glances skyward, where he spots a giant bullet-shaped container rocketing through the atmosphere, its fiery presence brightening up the dark of the night.

"Skarn-droppings! Little bro, watch out! The metal arrows are coming!"

Duriel, having blasted through the southern and western walls alike, rushes over to Zamiel's side. "I saw 'em! Get ready! We're gonna have to block the attack!"

Zamiel and Duriel retreat to the warpgate. They lock their gazes onto the King Cannon's projectile. It explodes in midair and sprays out a thousand foot-long iron rods, all of them traveling in random directions.

"Shit, they're fast!" Duriel yelps. Still, the big guy doesn't relent. He clangs his weapons together and summons three humongous ethereal greatswords, each of them thrice the size of either brother's body.

Likewise, Zamiel twirls his mace above his head. An obsidian-colored ethereal hammer, ten times bigger than either brother's body, materializes overhead and rears back, ready to swing.

Duriel scoffs. "Pah! Showoff!"

"Not my fault mine's bigger than yours!" Zamiel laughs.

The iron rods zip toward the ground. The instant before the ones aimed at the Battle Brothers hit, their magically-summoned weapons fly forward and smash against the rods, batting them out of the air. A hundred of the King Cannon's projectiles tink uselessly against the summoned weapons and bounce off to land elsewhere, having caused no damage. Many undead die to the unblocked projectiles, but Duriel and Zamiel pay them no mind.

"Bahaha! And here I thought those arrows might be a little scary!" Duriel guffaws. "I didn't even break a sweat. These humans ain't jack shit."

"You said it, little bro," Zamiel smirks. "At this rate, we'll have these fleshies drinkin' our piss before sunrise!"

Duriel's smile disappears. He frowns at Zamiel. "Bro. Gross."

"Err, sorry." Zamiel says, scratching the back of his head. "I got a little overexcited."

"It's fine. I won't say nothin' if you won't."

"Trust me; I won't."

The Battle Brothers turn their attention toward the eastern front, where Mephisto's forces continuously travel, trying to overwhelm the troopers at that edge of the battlefield.

"Let's go that way," Zamiel says. "I smell lots of fleshies over there. More meat for the picking."

Duriel nods. "If you see any cute guys, I call dibs."

"Screw you! If I see them, I'm taking them first!"

After bickering for a minute, both brothers slip into the fog, traveling amidst its impenetrable darkness like sharks in the open sea. They rush to wherever they sense the most killing potential, serving as Mephisto's mighty vanguard.

* * *

On the northern front, Brunhilda's squad retreats a few hundred feet as the Duke of Mist's undead flood through the fifty-foot gap in the wall, closing the distance to the awaiting human troops expediently.

"Get ready," Brunhilda says, her voice calm. She looks at the fifty fallen troops behind her, their bodies crushed by the destroyed wall's remnants. "Let us take revenge for those the demons have slain!"

Brunhilda grips her metal spear with both hands. While the undying approach and humanity's troops start firing, she inhales deeply, as do her fellow Felorians. Unlike the other humans, the Felorians opt not to wear any T-REX armor. However, none of her T-REX-wearing comrades object, given the Felorians' unique biology.

We are warriors. We are descendants of the Wind Mother.

We need no armor, for our bodies will become like steel.

The tattoos on the Felorian's bodies begin to glow, turning bright white against their chocolate skin.

Our speed will be like lightning! Our power shall sunder mountains!

Chi! The element of wind! Infuse us with the wrath of nature!

Give us the Wind Mother's might!

The Felorians crouch low and rush forward. Their perception opens up to the world around them in a wide radius. Anywhere the grass rattles, and everywhere the wind blows, they detect the movements of their allies and enemies.

Bullets fly toward their backs, but the Felorians duck and dodge, weaving between the shards of metal by predicting their trajectories.

All at once, Brunhilda's people crash upon the undead hordes like a tidal wave. Their spears, swords, and clubs stab, slice, and batter Mephisto's creatures into meat paste, turning them into lambs for the slaughter.

Every Felorian's strength and speed temporarily increases by a factor of fifty. Their endurance rises to the heavens, while their fear plunges into the abyss.

Brunhilda swings her leg toward the head of an undead, kicking it off the creature's neck with ease. As it flops to the ground, she howls angrily. "Perish, servant of damnation!"

* * *

Underground, Mephisto flits around, manipulating his forces just like before. He watches the Battle Brothers advance while continuously spreading his Dark Mist further east, forcing the humans backward.

Grumpily, he flicks his gaze to the north. "Hmph. Felorianssss. I am well acquainted with your ssspeccial abilitiesss. Your 'Wind Mother' isss a falssse prophet, ssstupid flessshbagsss. Ssstill, you will make for sssuperior undead petsss. Kekeke!"

The fifty wraiths Mephisto summoned earlier hover along behind the Duke of Mist, awaiting his orders. The Duke occasionally adds another wraith or two when they emerge from his Death Gates, but with their limited use against the humans' nano-armor, he waits for the right moment to launch them at his enemies' weak points.

Finally, he points toward the Felorians. "Go, wraithsss. Kill thossse pesssky flessshbagsss. They annoy me."

"Skreeee!"

The wraiths zip off to the north, leaving Mephisto by his lonesome.

As the third hour of the war begins, Mephisto finds himself in a strong position. However, the Duke of Mist wears an anxious expression on his face.

I must eliminate these humans before Ose leaves the Blood Pits. Three days... I only have three days before she returns. The sooner I kill them all, the better.

As Mephisto ponders what to do, a thought occurs to him.

Perhaps... should I call in the rest of the demons?

The Duke of Mist frowns.

That might not be such a bad idea...

Part 245: Prison Break!

"Commander Hiro! Are you alright?"

Phoebe awakens to find a pair of exosuit-wearing soldiers standing over her. One of them props up the back of her head, allowing her to cough out a few words.

"Kah! Ugh... yeah. I don't know. Maybe. What happened?"

"Your ship got shot down, Commander," The soldier on her right says. Unable to see his face, she hasn't a clue regarding his identity. "We were worried you might have... well, you lived, so that's all that matters. I'm going to transport you to the hospital at once!"

The other soldier, a female, nods at him. "Commander Hiro's pulse is stable. Her exosuit activated at the last moment and absorbed most of the damage, but it looks like her leg got pierced by debris."

Phoebe winces. A dull sense of pain rings in her ear as she blinks her eyes to take in the scene around her. No longer inside the Esther, her subordinates dragged her outside, away from its burning wreckage. In the distance, the sound of gunfire from the southern wall reaches her ears.

"Cough! How long was I out? What's the battle situation?"

"Only ten minutes, ma'am," The male trooper says. "As for the battle situation... well, the tide is turning, but General Chadwick and the lieutenants have the situation under control."

The trooper wraps one arm under Phoebe's neck and the other beneath the underside of her knees, then easily lifts her with the support of his exosuit.

"Give me more details." Phoebe says, as her head clears up. "What attacked me?"

"A pair of unknown demons," The female trooper says, as she hefts her gun and runs beside the male trooper to protect him.

Both troopers quickly explain the situation to Phoebe, making her grimace.

"Two Barons? That's it? Esther should have had more than enough external armor to tank a few hits from Bael himself, let alone a pair of Barons. These newcomers must have special skills."

Phoebe taps her T-REX's activator button four times, summoning it in helmet-only mode. A series of viewscreens appears before her, allowing her to see through the eyes of a half-dozen field troopers.

"Switch visual, Red Brigade. Switch visual, Blue Brigade. Show me the Northern defenders. Show me an aerial composite. Switch to satellite feed."

Phoebe continually fires off orders to Centurion, while the AI switches scenes one by one as she requests. It doesn't take Phoebe long to discover Mephisto's expanding Dark Mist, as well as the two previously unknown Barons at the eastern front. Already, they've cut through over a hundred exosuit-wearing troopers.

"Heavens. These monsters can't be mere Barons. No Baron I've met ever had this much power. Could they be reinforcements from one of the Hidden Hells?"

Phoebe chews on her lip. While her two subordinates rush her into an awaiting armored personnel carrier to drive her to the backlines, she focuses all of her attention on the battlefield and forcibly ignores the agony ripping through her right leg's broken fibula.

"Commander Hiro speaking," Phoebe says, pulling herself into one of the side seats. She buckles herself in and glances out the armored glass outside. "Rear Hospital, what is General Kar's status? We need backup on the frontlines."

The soldiers who carried Phoebe close the rear entry point for Phoebe's APC, and the vehicle takes off, pulling her with a strong inertial force for a moment.

A few seconds pass before a female voice replies. "Um, Blinker here! Is this thing on? Hello?"

"It's on," Phoebe says. "How is Kar?"

"Samantha's takin' care of him," Blinker says. "He won't be out just yet, but don't worry! I'll fly over to help out."

Phoebe's heart jumps. "Wait, that's dangerous, Blinker. The two demons who just appeared are extremely powerful! If you go out there alone, I worry you'll be needlessly risking your life."

Blinker hesitates. "Two demons? Tell me about them? What do they look like? What are their powers?"

Phoebe transmits several images taken from the frontline troopers, then briefly explains their powers. As she does, Blinker falls eerily silent.

"...I see. Don't worry, Phoebe. I can take them on. You get back to the hospital and fix your leg right up!"

Phoebe blinks. "I just told you, those two demons are a high-level threat-"

"I know," Blinker says, cutting Phoebe off. "Don't worry. I'm not a helpless little tagalong. I'll show those two worthless plum-pickers what happens when they show up on my turf."

After a momentary pause, Blinker adds, "Besides. I owe them a beating."

Her words contain a significant amount of hostility, making Phoebe frown. "Do you know them?"

"I do," Blinker says. "They're the Battle Brothers."

"The Battle Brothers?!"

Phoebe's heart skips a beat. Several recent memories pop up, making her face turn white. "That means... they're the ones who killed...?"

"Yes."

Blinker's voice becomes eerily calm.

"Don't worry, Phoebe. I'll take care of them. Blinker, out."

"Wait, don't just-"

Commander Hiro hears a faint clicking noise as the voice communication cuts off, leaving her grasping at straws.

"Dammit. Don't tell me Blinker's going to fly in there all by herself! If she gets hurt, I'll never forgive myself!"

Phoebe glances around the APC the troopers placed her in. Aside from the driver, nobody else sits in the backseat with her.

"Commander Hiro to Blinker. Please answer. Commander Hiro to Blinker!"

Centurion blares a reply. "THE RECIPIENT DOES NOT CURRENTLY HAVE A COMLINK CONNECTED TO THE CENTURION DATABASE. WOULD YOU LIKE TO LEAVE A MESSAGE?"

"No, dammit! Shit! Driver, turn around! Go to the eastern front!"

The vehicle driver glances back at Phoebe. "Commander, isn't your leg injured? I need to get you to the succubus's hospital ASAP."

"My leg will be fine! Drive me to the eastern front, soldier. That's an order."

"Yes, Commander!"

As the driver turns to the left, the distant flashes of muzzles exploding in the night become more and more visible through the APC's armored side-windows.

Phoebe grits her teeth. "Blinker, why must you and Kar both be so bloody stubborn?"

She activates her exosuit, but only materializes it on her right arm. A ruby-red attachment appears on top of her gauntlet, which she promptly taps to summon a holographic image of several items. A moment later, Phoebe selects one, creating a medical nanite syringe.

"...Didn't get to test it yet, but like they say, no time's better than the present."

Phoebe presses the syringe against her upper right thigh and groans as she pushes the plunger, causing a goopy grey liquid to pour into her veins and spread throughout her leg, repairing its broken bones.

"Augh, damn.... damn! That burns like hell!"

Mephisto's undead, shrouded by his Dark Mist, travel to all four sides of the battlefield. Between the zombies, skeletons, ghouls, wraiths, mummies, Dullahans, and countless other undying creatures, his mixed forces prove impossible to suppress. Slowly but surely, they begin expanding outside the warpgate encampment's walls.

Whenever the King Cannons fire a barrage of iron rods, Mephisto uses the cover of the Dark Mist to yank his strongest minions fifteen feet underground, thus preventing them from dying. After the rods impale a few hundred monsters, Mephisto shoves his minions back to the surface to resume their progress.

"Kekeke... my Dark Missst isss too much for thessse flessshbagsss to handle. The Battle Brothersss are annihilating the eastern forcccesss, while I take out the othersss. Now isss the ideal time to change up my ssstrategy!"

With a glint in his eye, Mephisto departs the battlefield and flies through the portal. He desummons the two Death Gates inside the Labyrinth Core and flies out to where hundreds of thousands of demons and monsters await.

"Come quickly, little onesss! I have the flessshbagsss on the run! Now isss the perfect time to ssstrike!"

Two dozen Demon Lords and a small handful of Barons jump to their feet upon hearing Mephisto's words. "You do?! Wow, Mephisto, you're awesome!"

Orias, Baron of the Stars, strides out of the group of demon elites. "I'm ready to fight, if not eager. Let's get this over with."

Thanks to the dozens of valuable gems stuck inside his skin, Orias appears almost like a divine god, someone from beyond the mortal realm. However, despite his grandiose, majestic appearance, several of the other demons roll their eyes.

"Your heart is never in the right place, Orias."

"Yeah! We've got fleshbags to gut! Why can't you show a little more enthusiasm, eh?"

"Sheesh, all you do is sit around hammering rocks. Can't you step out in the fresh air and have a little fun once in a while?"

Waves of criticism hit Orias's back, but he ignores them. Instead, he strides toward the doorway where Mephisto awaits and cracks his knuckles. "Killing humans isn't fun. Mining jewels is. I'm only doing this because I must. The rest of you can shut up, or put up."

Mephisto, seeing Orias and the other demons coming, rubs his boney fingers together. "Kekeke! Ssso long asss you help me kill flessshbagsss, I care not about your persssonal opinionsss. Let'sss go!"

Along with the demon elites, two dozen Warpers follow along, including Ying-Ying.

The young demoness jumps over to Mephisto's side. "What happened to my sister? Where has Mara gone?"

"Ssshe wasss captured by the humansss," Mephisto says, giving the Warper only a quick glance. Her status matters little to him. "Ssshe, along with Artorias and Beelzebub, ended up behind enemy linesss. We will have to find time to ressscue them, at sssome point."

Without another word, Mephisto flies forward and disappears through the Tarus II warpgate. Ying-Ying breathes a sigh of relief. "Alright! As long as my sister is alive, I'll definitely save her!"

The crowd of demons charges through the portal. They emerge into Mephisto's lingering Dark Mist and receive his blessing, allowing them to peer through the darkness.

* * *

Unseen by the demons, a small gathering of shadows slips through the warpgate, emerging onto Tarus II's surface with the rest.

Shades, agents of Yama, the Emperor of Shadows, flicker to the north and huddle together in a small, empty area, their bodies hidden by the darkness of night.

Malice, the most cunning of Yama's shades, takes the lead.

"We've arrived, sisters. Remember, Master wants his new toys alive and well. We must bring him females of appropriate beauty. The Hero's wife and daughter; those are our most important targets. Anyone else will merely be a bonus."

Demise, the biggest of the Shades, stands behind Malice, using its intimidating presence to back up her words. "We will follow."

Vicious, a shade known for her skullduggery, materializes in a half-demon, half-hellhound body wreathed in shadow. Her dog-like face drips drool from the corner of her mouth. "But what about the Wordsmiths?! Master won't be happy! Neither of them are here! Ehehehe!"

"So long as we snatch the wife and daughter," Malice says, "we will have a method to capture the Hero. His family is his weakness."

A fourth shade, a muscular female named Greed, materializes a clenched fist. "The traitorous succubus protects them. Leave her to me. I'll take Demise for backup."

"Heh. Good thinking! You're so smart!" Vicious laughs. "I'll go for the little girl, then! Ehehehe! I like them young, and so does Yama! The little ones always scream the loudest!!"

Demise glances at Vicious. "Leave the child intact. Should you harm her, I'll break you."

Malice nods. "That's right. We have to leave the women unblemished for Yama. Alright. Let's go. When we get there, I'll leave with Vicious to grab the girl. We'll seize the Hero's wife if and when we get the chance."

The Shade's leader waves her hand. "Go!"

All four of them disperse like the wind, morphing into their most compact and mobile forms as they slither along the ground like snakes in the grass.

Elsewhere, on the southern side of Hero City, deep underground, within a hidden prison.

Three demons, Mara, Beelzebub, and Artorias, lay inside of separated cells, each one protected by a half-dozen exosuit-wearing guards. In total, eighteen humans and monsters pace back and forth down the hallway, their idle chatter contained inside of their helmets without any leakage. They keep half of their attention on the prisoners, a quarter on their conversations, and the rest on the battle happening at the Warpgate. Thanks to Centurion's network, they get delayed video signals indicating what's happening some twenty miles away.

Inside Mara's cell...

The unconscious Baron of Games rests immobile, her arms bound tightly behind her back, her body encased in nanite-hardening agent, and an oxygen-removing helmet affixed to her head. She lays face-up on a small prison bed, her room only ten by ten feet, big enough for her to stretch out and lay down, but little else.

As Mara lays comatose on her cot, a faint sparkling of golden light ignites on her forehead, its radiance muted by the metallic helmet suppressing her breathing.

The tiny ball of light condenses for a moment before pulling away, forming a second golden sphere that hovers in midair. It travels through the metal helmet without issue and emerges into the prison cell, with a wispy-thin tendril of mana connecting it to Mara's brain.

Inside the ball of light, Mara's soul coalesces, bringing her innermost thoughts into the real world.

Ugh... where am I? What happened?

Mara's soul, now contained within the pebble-sized dot of light, floats in the air while attached to her metal-bound body. Her consciousness grows more aware, allowing her to perceive the room around her.

A... a prison? Damn. That's right! I remember now! I fought the Sphinx, but he defeated me. He must have given me to the humans.

Mara's soul sighs.

At least he didn't kill me. Anyone else would. I bet the humans have something devious planned for me, like some sort of awful interrogation.

The Baron's soul hovers a few feet away from her head. She moves toward the lower half of her body and mentally frowns.

What sort of outlandish outfit is this? What have the humans wrapped my body inside? It reminds me of those full-body latex outfits the succubi sometimes wear, except... it's made of metal! Disgusting. To think the humans would treat their prisoners in such a debauched manner!

After examining herself for a minute, Mara's soul scowls, inwardly.

Since my soul has detached from my body, I must have activated the Soul Encapsulation Firefly when the trap card's criteria were met. I stayed motionless for one hour, nobody moved in the same room as me, and I couldn't move on my own. I should be relatively safe and undisturbed, if that's the case. Unfortunately, the Soul Encapsulation Firefly is a consumable trap card. I don't have any others. Once it activates, if I don't free myself from this ridiculous prisoner outfit, the Firefly will die and I'll end up forever trapped, unconscious, and at the mercy of the humans!

I'd sooner die than suffer such a humiliation.

Mara's soul-orb begins to move around the room, looking for weaknesses she can exploit. All the while, the strand of mana tethering her Soul Firefly to her brain doesn't let her travel more than three feet in any direction.

After a minute or two, Mara's memories recall an important piece of information.

That's right. Ose told me once that human-created nanites are weak to electricity. It's likely my captors bound me with nanites, and that's why this silly outfit looks like someone crafted it from metal. Hmm. Electricity...

The Soul Firefly flies toward Mara's head. It skips past the helmet shrouding her face and enters her brain, intending to access the mana droplets representing her Tarot Cards. Almost two hundred cards float around in Mara's Mind Realm, and she begins sorting through them one by one.

Hmm. I could use Shadow Tendril to melt out of the suit, but I don't know if the nanites would stick to my shadow-form. Flames won't be much use, so the Golden Fire-Rhino is out of the question. Perhaps one of these Illuminating Death Moths? No, they'll give me great offensive power, but only against the humans. It wouldn't do anything to their nanite-armor.

Mara begins to grow anxious as she flips through her Tarot cards.

I can only activate one card. Once I do that, the Soul Encapsulation Firefly will break apart. I need something that will get me out of here and defeat my captors in one go!

A few lightning-type cards catch Mara's attention, but she crosses them off her list.

Too weak. Too much backfire potential. This one's attacks will only hurt the nanites, not the humans outside. Damn! Why do I have so many useless Tarot cards?

Eventually, Mara's eyes settle on one Silver Aspect card, its face imbued with the image of a howling wolf.

Little Wolf. It's not the strongest card, but it possesses potent lightning power. It has a lot of speed, decent power, and excellent self-regeneration. I'd prefer a Golden or Platinum Aspect card... but this Silver Aspect won't have excessive risks. If I transform into the Little Wolf, my card might immediately break. I think a Summoning is best, here. I can allow my summon to break me free of my bonds, while I assist it from the background.

Mara quickly strategizes with herself, all while keeping an eye on how much longer her Soul Firefly will last. As its life begins to fade, Mara nods internally.

I don't have much time left. This plan will have to do. Even if the humans are heavily armed, I think I can take them out. I just hope the crocodile doesn't show up, or I'll end up right back where I started; totally helpless!

Inhaling hard, Mara's Soul Firefly sucks the essence of the Little Wolf inside itself and begins to glow.

Within the prison cell's confines, Mara's voice speaks from her Soul Firefly.

"Little Wolf, Summon!"

A bolt of mana fires out of Mara's body into the air above her head and breaks apart, destroying the remnants of Mara's Soul Firefly. Her soul immediately returns to her comatose body, while the Little Wolf materializes in the air above her cot.

* * *

Alarms blare inside the prison complex. An automated warning sounds above, informing all of the guards inside about an unauthorized use of demonic mana.

Frantic footsteps sound outside Mara's cell. The guards yank open the door just in time to see Mara jump to her feet, electricity crackling off her body. Dust scatters around her face, torso, and limbs; the remains of the nanites which previously encased her.

At Mara's feet, a ferocious white wolf, standing less than three feet tall, chuffs angrily as it spots the half-dozen commandos rushing inside to suppress its master. Lightning crackles off the animal's fur, resembling quick bursts of static electricity.

"Woooo!!" The wolf howls. It pounces at the troopers while blasting them with energy, giving Mara time to activate another Tarot card.

Mara grits her teeth.

"And now, to make my great escape!"

Part 246: The Wordsmith Returns

Phoebe Hiro, commander of the Tarus II Resistance, jumps out of the back of her APC as it screeches to a halt at the backlines of the Eastern Front. To the east, dozens and dozens of powerful tripod cannons stand with their three legs embedded into the dirt. Their long barrels fire artillery at the warpgate encampment over and over, killing Mephisto's undead by the dozen with each shot, yet still, the undying hordes never seem to end.

To the west, the encampment itself stands, its walls slowly crumbling thanks to the intense, nonstop shelling. Mephisto's Dark Mist appears thinner than before, having spread out half a mile outside of the walls, but under the cover of the waning night, its effectiveness still holds strong.

Two Planet-Walkers, huge quadruped mechs with twin double-barreled cannons, offer firing support from the south-east by targeting the largest clumped-up masses of undead. Each volley of cannon-fire decimates even the most heavily armored monster, leaving huge holes in their ranks. Unfortunately, the reload time for each barrage takes more than a minute, so they aren't able to provide continuous support.

Commander Hiro, now wearing her full black-and-gold T-REX, winces as her feet hit the dirt. Her right leg, freshly healed thanks to a nanite recovery injection, stings noticeably from her recently-mended broken bones.

Under normal circumstances, I'd want to give the nanites a full hour to harden, and I shouldn't move my leg at all, but I don't have a choice! If Blinker flies in there, she might get hurt... or worse! I'll just have to move with caution and stay out of the fighting.

"General Chadwick to Commander Hiro! Are you there? Over."

Phoebe taps the side of her helmet. "Commander Hiro speaking. What's wrong, Chadwick? You sound alarmed. Over."

The Norwegian General groans with exasperation. "Demons have started appearing, mixed in with the undead! First it was just the Battle Brothers, but now other Lords and Barons have joined the fight! Several Burners and Burrowers have popped up too. They've made it past the seismic mines, and now they're targeting our backlines. We're getting massacred out here! I think we need to send in the second and third battalions for backup. Over."

Phoebe, having already told Chadwick about the Battle Brothers and Blinker, nods slowly. "Alright. Permission granted. I'm going to try and intercept Blinker before she does something stupid. Keep on the lookout for- huh?"

The Hero's Wife pauses mid-sentence as a text alert appears in her visor's display.

[WARNING! CONTAINMENT BREACH IN HIGH-SECURITY PRISON! DEMONIC MANA PROFILE DETECTED! MULTIPLE BACKUP REQUESTS RECEIVED!]

Phoebe's breath catches. "Goddamn it! Chadwick-"

"I saw," Chadwick says, interrupting her. "I'll send the fourth battalion to reinforce the prison. Over."

"That won't work!" Phoebe snarls. "The demons must have somehow slipped a Warper behind our lines! Ose is likely behind this. She wouldn't let two Dukes and a Baron get captured that easily. If we send low-level troops there, they'll die!"

Phoebe pauses for half a breath.

"I'll go! You have to try and stop Blinker from doing anything stupid while I'm gone. Understand? I'll do what I can to slow the demons down at the prison."

"That's too dangerous," Chadwick retorts. "We can't afford to risk your life. If we knew Henry was on our side, I'd have him go, but... dammit! He's already in the prison complex, along with Caddis. We can't trust those two."

Phoebe hesitates.

"...You're right. I shouldn't act so recklessly. Sorry, I'm just a little frantic right now from all the chaos. Is Corporal Hurent still at the prisons? Tell Lieutenant Samuel to reinforce her. The two of them together might be able to stop the breakout and suppress the demons. However, if Beelzebub escapes..."

Chadwick's breathing becomes noticeably louder. "Let's not think about that possibility. I'll do what I can. You focus on leading us to victory, Commander. Chadwick, out."

The line cuts off, leaving Phoebe alone again with her thoughts. She turns to look at the eastern front, now only a half-mile away from her current position. With a look of determination, Phoebe orders her APC driver to leave and begins tapping buttons on her exosuit's right gauntlet.

"EXPERIMENTAL UPGRADE MODULES X1, X2, AND X3 ARE NOW BEING DEPLOYED!" Centurion says, as Phoebe finishes inputting her commands. "THESE MODULES WILL MAKE LANDFALL IN FORTY-THREE SECONDS. FORTY-TWO SECONDS. FORTY-ONE SECONDS..."

Phoebe raises her gaze skyward, where three square containers begin plummeting toward her current position from the upper atmosphere. The metal crates heat up quickly as they tear through the air, but Phoebe doesn't worry for even one second about their durability.

Half a minute passes.

Crash! Crash! Crash!

Each container slams into the planet's soil at twice the speed of sound, sending shockwaves in every direction. The trooper's exosuits protect them from the sonic damage and automatically compensate for the incoming concussive force, leaving nobody injured by Phoebe's dropped pods.

The Wordsmith's wife quickly tears into the metal containers and smiles as she spots three exosuit augments, each one offering a massive upgrade to her speed, defense, and firepower.

The Zeus Strike Cannon, the Mach Boots, and the Demonstone Nanite Armor. All experimental, but there's no better time for a field test than right now!

Phoebe quickly attaches the left-arm-mounted cannon, the nanite-based chest armor, and the heavy boots, increasing her suit's weight by almost ten times. Even so, her overall mobility increases, thanks to the Mach Boots' special features.

Kinetic dampening, and targeted gravitic nullification! I should be able to move twice as fast with these boots!

Satisfied, Phoebe turns to the west, where the eastern battlefront looms. Fifteen thousand humans spread out, their bodies forming a solid wall capable of unloading hailstorms of bullets upon the zombie hordes.

However, what catches Phoebe's eye the most is a flash of light to her left. She jerks back in fright, only to gasp in surprise.

"W-what?! You...?!"

A tall, blond man stands a mere ten feet away from Phoebe, a gentle smile on his face.

"Do not worry, my love. I have returned, just in the nick of time. Stay here, and I will finish off these vile creatures."

Phoebe stares, shock in her eyes, at the figure of her husband, Jason Hiro. His visage appears twice as dominating as before, his face more chiseled and handsome, while his eyes carry a powerful gaze she's never imagined possible.

"Jason? It's... it's really you? You're back?!"

Phoebe takes a step toward the man, her bulky armor somehow still not making her appear as intimidating as her husband's lion-like presence.

Jason smiles. "It is I. Stay here, and I will return momentarily. Teleport."

With a flash of light, Jason disappears, leaving Phoebe's heart in the lurch.

"...W-what the heck? That's it? You're just going to leave me standing here?!"

Phoebe's excitement and happiness mix together with her frustration and annoyance.

"I'm glad you're back, but at least give your wife a quick kiss!"

Phoebe eyes travel toward the human commandos lined up a half-mile to the west, all of them fighting the zombie hordes.

"...Strange. Why did Jason's face appear so different? Did he alter his appearance again?"

The white-haired woman blushes.

"I mean, I'm more than okay with the change. He looks kind of... yummy... hehe."

Not far from Phoebe's position, a quarter-mile outside the warpgate encampment's crumbling eastern wall.

Zamiel and Duriel laugh excitedly as they manifest dozens of demonic blades, hammers, spears, and arrows at a time. With mere waves of their hands, they summon temporary mana gates above themselves, calling upon powers from another dimension.

Duriel summons ethereal, blood-red weapons, while Zamiel's weapons appear the color of obsidian. The bigger, younger brother's weapons usually appear as blades and spears, while his older, shorter brother conjures crushing and bashing weapons, like hammers and maces.

Zamiel smashes soldiers into meat paste with his giant, obsidian hammers, while Duriel cuts through even the thickest armor with ease. His greatswords and javelins prove effective at slicing through the molecular bonds of every T-REX exosuit, stymied only momentarily by a few of the more durable subtypes.

"Come on, fleshies!" Duriel roars. He swings his two-handed greataxe and greatsword down, holding one in each hand. With a single move, he rips two soldiers in half, the sheer force behind his attack also crushing their spines into bonemeal. Sometimes, the dead soldiers teleport away thanks to their rescue beacons, but none have a hope or prayer of returning to the realm of the living.

One soldier sprays a hail of gunfire at Zamiel. The smaller Baron ducks and dodges nimbly, his movements barely keeping ahead of the bullets as he anticipates their firing trajectories. The moment the soldier's clip runs out, Zamiel dashes forward and swings his mace down, crumpling the man's helmet into mush, as well as his brains.

"Haha, that makes one hundred and fourteen, little bro! Can you even keep up?!"

Duriel guffaws. "You know I can't count that high!"

"Keke, fair enough!"

Heavy troopers leap into the fray, their reinforced armor proving strong enough to withstand several blows from even the strongest of the summoned weapons. As Duriel and Zamiel's conjurations rain down upon the soldiers, the armored troopers soak up some of the damage, their triple-layered nanites deflecting and reforming, even as thousands of nanites crumble into dust under every blow.

Boom! Boom!

The elite troopers unload single-fire, heavy ballistic weaponry on Zamiel, trying to pin him down and score a critical hit. Zamiel scowls, summons a giant ethereal hammer, and drops it on them like a cannonball.

The troopers don't even bother dodging. They continue peppering Zamiel with heavy munitions, hoping to take him out before their inevitable deaths.

At the last second, just before the twenty-foot-tall greathammer crushes them into pancakes...

WHAM!

The Sphinx, Kar, King of All Monsters, suddenly appears from seemingly out of nowhere. The reptile exerts an almost godlike strength, catching the giant hammer with his bare hand and saving the trooper's lives.

Stunned, Zamiel and Duriel turn to face this new threat, eying the fifteen-foot-tall reptile with alarm. The troopers, likewise, gasp at their overwhelming luck.

Using his free hand, Kar gives the troopers a thumbs up. "Hurgh! I'm back, pups! Now get everyone outta my way, and lemme take care of these chumps. You've done well until now."

Zamiel stares in disbelief as the reptile-king swings his free hand upward, and with one mighty blow, he shatters the obsidian greathammer into black dust, spraying it into the sky.

Boom!

"What the devil?!" Duriel yells. "The Sphinx is already awake? Well, shrakh! And here I thought he'd be down for the count! Pft. Guess Ose didn't hit him all that hard after all."

Zamiel frowns. "Unbelievable. The Sphinx appears much taller than I remember. More muscular, too! Did he increase his power? He even has a six-pack!"

"Stop hittin' on the slimy critter," Duriel says, groaning aloud. "You've always got your eyes locked on the beefcakes."

Kar, appearing significantly stronger and more handsome than a few days before, dusts himself off. "Haha. Well, now. If it isn't Bastard One and Bastard Two. I've been waiting for this day for a long time. You made a big mistake coming here."

The troopers previously firing on the Battle Brothers clear a path, not wanting to get in Kar's way or slow him down. As such, a small twenty-by-twenty foot circle forms around the three combatants as humanity's forces funnel around them, diverting their strength to the newly-arrived mixed demonic and undead hordes.

The Battle Brothers eye Kar warily, only slightly intimidated by his powerful body.

"Strange," Zamiel mutters. "I can't sense a lick of energy out of this croc. How is that possible? Has he learned to conceal his mana?"

"Dunno," Duriel says, a nasty grin on his face. "But it don't matter. The boss wanted us to off the croc, and now... here he is. Hehehe."

Kar crosses his arms. He looks at both of the Battle Brothers with a look of smoldering hatred.

"You killed my wife. My family. Everyone I loved. So, I hope you've enjoyed a nice, fun life... because it ends today."

"Haha," Zamiel laughs. "Arrogant, like all the other crocs. That's your weakness, you slippery little toad. That's how we managed to off all of your kind. You think you're a big tough gator... but you ain't nothing!"

Duriel nods. "That's right! Tryin' to face us alone was a big mistake."

Kar tilts his head slightly, and a weird smile appears on his face.

"...You idiots. Who said I was alone?"

Suddenly, with a flash of light, a blond haired human male, standing eight-feet-tall, appears at Kar's side. The handsome man rests his hands on his hips and pumps out his chest, as a huge grin appears on his face.

"Hello, little demons! How are you on this fine evening?" The man asks.

Duriel blinks in surprise. "Huh? Who's this punk?"

Despite the younger brother's confusion, the older sibling appears markedly less perplexed.

"Spawn of a broodmother! Th-that guy... he's... he's the Wordsmith! Blonde hair, blue eyes... it's him!"

"The Wordsmith?" Duriel asks, disbelief in his eyes. "Nuh-uh. The Wordsmith's gone, remember? That's what Ose said."

"She was wrong, little bro! Shrakh! Just our luck! If it were only the croc, this battle would be easy as pie! But... but if the bloody Wordsmith's here too, then..."

A hint of fear appears in Zamiel's eyes. Despite his confidence that he and Duriel could easily overpower the crocodile king, he knows the Wordsmith's powers defy common sense.

Jason, the Wordsmith, shrugs nonchalantly. His smile shifts into a dismissive smirk. "Haha. Are you scared of little old me, good sirs? Indubitably, I've been known to keep to myself over the past six years, but should you strike at my home, I won't go easy on you!"

Suddenly, Jason's eyes begin to glow. "Teleport!"

Instantly, the Wordsmith disappears and reappears mere inches from Zamiel's body, his fist raised overhead.

BOOM!

Zamiel doesn't get a moment to react before Jason smashes his face into the dirt, knocking him five feet to the side. Duriel's heart skips a beat, but he reacts quickly and tries to cut the Wordsmith down.

"Return!"

Jason speaks another word of power, yanking himself away from Duriel's massive weapons, making them slash at the ground harmlessly. The unexpected miss makes Duriel stumble forward awkwardly and land on his knees.

"Gah! Little prick!"

Zamiel, only slightly stunned by the Wordsmith's sneak-attack, jumps to his feet. A trickle of blood drips from his mouth, but he ignores it. "It's him! He even used Word Magic, just like Ose said!"

Jason, still unruffled, looks up to Kar and chuckles. "Sorry, my good man, but I couldn't stay my hand. I thought these buffoons deserved a beating, wouldn't you agree?"

Kar laughs. "Indeed! What chumps. Ugly little brats, too. How about you fight the small one, and I spank the tall one?"

Zamiel's blood runs cold as the Wordsmith nods. "That's fine by me! I know a ridiculously handsome crocodile like yourself deserves a worthy foe! It would be unbecoming of someone at your level to fight a tiny little fellow like that shortie. Don't hold back! We have to defeat these craven curs with style!"

The Wordsmith sweeps his hair back. Even in the darkness of the night, his radiant, handsome smile appears excessively bright, making rivers of rage boil in Zamiel's blood.

"Fine, Wordsmith! You want to fight me?! That's a battle you'll regret! I'm actually the strongest Battle Brother, you idiot!"

Jason shrugs. "In my eyes, the strongest demon is only equal to the strongest ant. Now, come, boy. I'd like to make it home before dinner."

"Graaaaugh!"

Zamiel and Duriel roar in rage as they charge at the Wordsmith and Crocodile, but it's Duriel who feels the most scared as he sizes up his smirking opponent.

...When the hell did the Sphinx become so HUGE?!

Duriel and Kar's fists meet with an explosive bang as both warriors swing at one another.

Crack!

Duriel's demonstone armor protects him from the brunt of Kar's strength, but to the Baron's alarm, the Crocodile appears unfazed, as if he didn't even notice the fist-shaped barrier stopping his punch.

"Is that the best you've got?" Kar taunts. "You hit like an imp."

"Screw you!" Duriel howls, as he and Kar begin rapidly trading blows.

Over and over, the two combatants treat one another like punching bags, taking hits to the chest, jaw, and neck that would kill any lesser combatant.

After several exchanges, Kar frowns. He grabs Duriel's fist and throws him to the right. "Hurgh. Strange. You're only a Baron, but your strength... it's easily Duke-level."

Duriel hits the dirt and scowls. "That ain't the only part of me that's Duke-level!"

As the Sphinx and younger Battle Brother combat one another, Jason and Zamiel also exchange attacks.

"Transmit. Punch! Disorient."

Jason fires off words rapid-fire, allowing him to easily keep ahead of the eldest Battle Brother. Zamiel summons obsidian warhammers and shields, but every time he strikes at the Wordsmith, Jason disappears, transmitting to a new spot while summoning ethereal fists to punch and batter Zamiel from left to right.

"Urgh! Ugh! Gah!"

Zamiel gasps. Whenever he tries to summon a weapon, the attack either misses, or Jason interrupts his spellcasting, causing the summoning to fail.

"Grr! I'm not out of this fight yet, Wordsmith! My mana is all but limitless! I can battle you until the break of dawn, no sweat! Argh!"

Zamiel winces as yet another ethereal punch smashes him in the face, sending him sprawling to the ground. Still, his insanely hardy body and demonstone armor allow him to tank even the mightiest of blows.

Eventually, Jason frowns.

"How odd. You are quite the durable demon, Mister Goatee. Far beyond the limits of any Baron I know."

Zamiel grimaces, as blood from several broken teeth spills from his mouth. "Haha! A bit of pitying praise for your opponent? Save it for someone who cares!"

The eldest Battle Brother concentrates on evasion, setting aside any thoughts of attacking. To Jason's surprise, his ethereal fists begin to miss, one after the other. Zamiel ducks, spins, and twirls like a ballerina, his lithe and skinny body allowing him to move in ways his younger brother's bulky frame never could.

"Punch! Punch! Hmm... ROCK!"

Jason fires off two more ethereal fists, only to hesitate for a moment before smiling and speaking a different word.

"Huh?" Zamiel grunts. "Rock? What the hell's a-? SHRAKH!"

Too late, Zamiel doesn't see a humongous boulder come falling from the night sky. His heart jolts in shock as three tons of earthen weight crashes upon him at a hundred miles an hour, smashing him face-first into Tarus II's soil.

"Gllmph!!"

With his mouth full of dirt, Zamiel can't do more than grunt in pain as his bones beg for forgiveness.

Moments later, the eldest Battle Brother shoves against the ground with all his strength, flinging the boulder westward, where it sails into the demonic horde, presumably ending their lives in an instant.

"Haah... haah..." Zamiel pants like a dog. His eyes twitch, and his vision wavers, as he stares at the Wordsmith incredulously. "Friggin... friggin bastard. You're one tough spawn of a broodmother."

Jason smiles politely. "And you're quite the ugly rat. I'm surprised you haven't died yet. Tell me, how are you so durable? I should very much like to know, good sir."

The Wordsmith's attitude gives him an air of superiority, yet at the same time, a humble demeanor, infuriating Zamiel further.

"Tch! Blow it out your ass, blond-boy! I screw guys like you for fun! The only one who'll be squealing by the time we're through is me!"

"...You're a real foul-mouth," Jason says, frowning. "It seems you'll need to put a few coins in the swear jar after we finish."

Zamiel coils strength into his legs. However, just before he can pounce at the Wordsmith, a horrifying sight greets his eyes.

Duriel careens toward Zamiel from the side, his beaten and battered body crushed mercilessly by the Sphinx. Like an agile tiger, Zamiel pulls back and snatches his hand forward to grab Duriel's unconscious form before he can hit the ground. Using the momentum from the catch, Zamiel spins in a half-circle on his heel and stumbles slightly, before dropping Duriel to the ground. "W-what the heck?! Little bro! Talk to me!"

All Zamiel gets in response is a feeble grunt. "Guhhh..."

"Shrakh! You filthy crocodile! What did you do to my brother?!"

Zamiel releases his grip on Duriel's armor and whirls around, only to see the Sphinx and Wordsmith standing there, smiling eerily.

"What's it look like, idiot?" Kar asks. "I beat the fat one's behind. I spanked him real good. Hurgh! His screams of pain were pretty funny!"

Jason's smile turns sinister. "You killed Kar's entire family. I'll let him turn you into mincemeat."

Kar cracks his neck. "You just stay out of this one, Turtle. I don't even need the help."

As Kar begins stomping toward Zamiel, a look of terror appears on the Battle Brother's face.

"This... this isn't fair! Wretched crocodile! You were supposed to be down for the count! And the Wordsmith wasn't supposed to be here either! How is any of this possible?!"

Kar rears his fist back. "Hurgh! When you meet the Creator, ask HIM!"

Part 247: Jason's Attack!

I open my eyes to a world of dancing spots and sparkles. My vision, blurry and scattered, makes it difficult for me to see anything more than a kaleidoscope of colors and patterns. After what feels like an eternity, my vision and hearing creep back into place, just in time to hear a familiar voice.

"Jason! Jason! Are you okay? Are you awake?"

Phoebe, my mind-wife, waves her hands frantically to get my attention. Only by peering inward, at my Mind Realm, can I fully make out her appearance. She's just as beautiful as when I... when I...

...Wait. What happened? How did I end up passing out?

Curious, I tilt my head to the right and left, observing the bright yellow sky around me, its radiance blinding enough to hurt my eyes. Beneath my head and body, the hardened magisteel outer layer of a familiar floating object jars my brain back into action.

"Ugh," I grunt, as I pull myself to my feet. My entire body somehow aches with pain, yet feels as refreshed as if I'd slept for a week. My head hurts, but somehow my mind feels sharper than it ever has in all my life. "I'm awake. I think."

My mind-wife sighs with relief. "Thank the heavens. Jason, you didn't stop screaming for an entire hour! I thought you were going to die!"

Raphael, Gabriel, and Michael stand nearby her in a large grassy courtyard. The old man nods along to Phoebe's words. "Indeed, young one. I assumed thou woulds't survive, but combining thy weak body and spirit with an ancient artifact like the Phoenix would pose quite the risk!"

Raphael's words spark my memory. "The Phoenix! That's right... where did it go?"

I quickly look around, finding myself relieved that even after I suffered terrible pain, my specialized space-traversal-bubble didn't weaken at all. However, no matter which direction I look, I don't see the Phoenix.

Just as I'm starting to get concerned that the merging process might have failed, a terrible, burning pain rips through my chest, starting with my heart! I nearly faint from the pain, instead managing to hold on enough to fall to my knees. "Argh!"

Five seconds later, the agony subsides, and a sparkle of light flies out of my right breast. A blood-red marble of energy hovers three feet from my face and rapidly expands in size. It shifts its appearance from a circular orb into a burning, feathery mass, eventually turning into a cockatoo-sized bird with flaming red feathers and a curved yellow beak.

[Kyaa!] The bird yells with glee. [It worked, friend! You did it! I'm not stuck to that mean Container anymore! Big bully! Jerk! Doo-doo head!]

The Phoenix bobs up and down while directing her oddly mild insults toward the Container beneath my feet. As she babbles, I shoot a glance into the distance, where half a dozen of the multi-pointed stars hover, keeping their distance from the container.

"Damn. Can't believe I was out for a whole hour," I mutter. "We've been here long enough, so I should head back to Tarus II as soon as possible. I don't like the idea of leaving our home entirely in Hope's hands."

I levitate into the air after condensing my magical power around my feet. "Fly!"

To my surprise, my flight magic is far, far easier to activate than before I absorbed the Phoenix. I don't even notice my mana reserves drop, indicating they must be vastly greater than before.

"Inspect."

I speak another word of power, causing investigative magic to sweep across my body. A visual appears before me of my current mana reserves, indicated by a vast, bluish ocean. However, unlike my previous reserves, the updated mana ocean contains many fiery undercurrents, as if active underwater volcanoes were continuously erupting.

It finally hits me what merging with the Phoenix did to my body.

My mana reserves have shot up by more than a hundred, if not a thousand times! With this much energy, I should be able to terraform entire planets with a single word!

This stray thought travels into my Mind Realm, allowing Phoebe, the Archangels, Sir Lorent, and Shana to hear my musings.

"Really?" Phoebe asks, incredulous. "How is that possible? I thought the Phoenix was much weaker than during the Primordial Era?"

"Indeed," Raphael answers. "The Phoenix has lost much of its power. However, when compared to the beings who roam the galaxy today, 'tis still a mountain erected before an anthill. I assumed the Wordsmith's might would shoot into the Heavens once he absorbed the Phoenix, though his pain would prove immeasurable. Now that thou hath absorbed its energy, thou shoulds't manipulate Camael's cube to force it out of the demon's star system. Leaving it here is far too dangerous."

I frown. "The cube is gigantic; far bigger than most rocky worlds. If I take it back with me to Tarus II, won't it throw off the gravity of the entire Tarus star-system?"

Phoebe answers this time with a shake of her head. "Unlikely. We don't know how long it's been at the edge of the Hell Harbor system, but even this far out, if it were here for a mere 100 years, the system would have suffered a gravitic imbalance already. Since the cube appears to exist within a different dimensional plane, it won't exert any influence on celestial bodies in our plane of existence."

As always, my wife's vocabulary never fails to surprise me. "Alright, then. I'll have to find a way to take it back, then. Unfortunately, I don't have any 'waypoints' set in the Tarus star system, so I might just return home by myself, fly to an empty point in space, set a waypoint, then return the cube there."

Phoebe taps her lip. "That probably won't work, Jason. The cube is enormous. Even with your improved mana reserves, teleporting such a massive object over such a great distance could kill you. I don't think you should risk it. Instead, you should see if you can control the artifact and make it fly there ahead-"

Before Phoebe can finish her sentence, the Phoenix suddenly shrieks in alarm. [Eeeek! Danger, danger! Scary monsters outside! They're looking at me! I don't like them! Make them stop!!]

My heart jumps in my chest. "M-Monsters? What do you mean?!"

The Phoenix darts around erratically from left to right while flapping its wings in a panic. "Big, scary! Ugly! I don't like them! Noooo!!"

The energy inside the cube begins to strengthen, causing a massive amount of mana to tug at my body. Alarmed, I try to calm the Phoenix down, but I'm too late.

FWOOOSH!

A sensation reminiscent of a rope tied around my waist yanks my body violently to the left. Before I can react, the inside of the cube disappears, making me emerge outside Camael's cube into the void many hundreds of miles away. Once again, before I can fully get my bearings, the ancient artifact begins to shimmer and disappear.

"Wait, Phoenix! What are you doing?!"

I can't stop the Phoenix. The magical boundary that once tugged me into the cube's dimension instead shoves me outside into normal space.

Immediately, countless stars appear all around me. The cube disappears, hidden inside its interspatial pocket.

"What happened?" I ask. "Why did the Phoenix kick me out of the cube?"

Gabriel speaks, directing my attention elsewhere. "Jason. Over there! Look to thy left!"

Following the Archangel's instructions, I turn my body to the left, not certain how far I need to rotate. My confusion grows even more tangible as I flick my eyes around the vast, boundless, neverending glare of the Milky Way's starlight. The galaxy shines with all its splendor, making picking out anything specific difficult. Only the Hell Harbor system's primary star stands out as a slightly-bigger ball of light than the other stars lightyears away.

However, as I focus my eyes, a jolt of electricity shoots through my heart.

"W-wait, some of those stars are moving! A whole bunch of them! Eyesight!"

With a single word of power, I shift my gaze into an enhanced visual spectrum, allowing me to pick out hundreds of spaceships converging on my position. Their obsidian-colored bodies blend in with the blackness of space, causing only their running lights to stand out from their hulls.

"J-Jason!" Phoebe cries. "Demons don't have spaceships! Those must belong to the Volgrim!"

My blood runs cold.

Volgrim. Shit! Why are they here? Did they follow me to the cube? I don't have time to debate the reason!

"Invisibility! Stealth! Disguise!"

With three words of power, I turn my body immaterial, hopefully making it difficult for the Volgrim to see me. However, remembering what happened the last time Confessor Vulpanix was around, I don't have any notion I can thoroughly hide myself from a high-ranking Psion. Nevertheless, I have to take every precaution! I even disguise my appearance and morph into an ugly-looking gelatinous monster, just in case it will help hide my identity.

After making myself invisible, I search my body for the Phoenix, who tossed me out here in front of the Volgrim fleet. I eventually find it hiding inside its orb, shivering and shaking. No matter how I prod the creature, it only tucks itself into a smaller orb, becoming even more frightened than before. After a moment, my anger dissipates when I realize the artifact is probably terrified for some reason I can't yet comprehend, undoubtedly related to the Volgrim.

"Jason, if the Volgrim have shown up, then we have to assume their appearance isn't a coincidence," Phoebe says. "They must have discovered and trailed you here."

"But how?" I ask. "I never initiated a FTL jump! I thought the Volgrim could only detect abnormal subspace rips!"

A moment later, the answer comes to me.

"...No, that's not it. This system houses the demon's homeworld. I bet the Volgrim have ships littered around Hell Harbor to keep an eye on the demons. Damn! I was careless."

"Nay," Raphael says, his tone apologetic. "'Twas my fault for greedily begging thee to search out Camael's presence."

"None of that matters now," Michael says, his voice cold. "The Volgrim are here, and therefore, we must escape. Wordsmith, thou shoulds't immediately order Camael's artifact to leave. The Volgrim are dangerous beyond belief. They will likely locate its dimensional coordinates and breach its security. If they should seize my sister's most precious artifact, a calamity will befall the galaxy!"

I groan. "Fine, but how do I control the cube? Not even the Phoenix knows how to manipulate it!"

Raphael's expression turns grave. "Thou art a Wordsmith, and thou possesseth the power of three Archangels. I have an idea."

Raphael quickly outlines a plan to control the Cube, making me frown. "That might work, but the Volgrim are already here! It will take Phoebe an hour to set up a complex control structure of that magnitude!"

"Yes, but 'tis our best option, without Camael's guiding hand," Raphael says. "If thou should flee this area after causing a commotion, the Volgrim may pursue thee and overlook the Cube's existence temporarily!"

Raphael's plan grates on my mind. His idea —trying to take the Archangel souls from my body and placing them into the control matrices of Camael's cube— is not only dangerous to them, but time consuming, and it might ultimately not even work.

With a scowl, I grit my teeth.

"No. There's only one method I can use right now to get the Volgrim to leave the Cube alone. I need to grab their attention in a big way, and then I need to make them flee with their tails tucked between their legs. Only then can I return and get the cube out of here."

Phoebe wrings her hands together. "I can try and create another artifact manipulation matrix while you do... whatever it is you're planning to do! I'll make one you can easily control. How about that?"

I nod. "That should work. Do your best, Phoebe. I'll do mine."

Without another word, I aim my mind at the nearest Volgrim ship.

"Inspect. Locate. Teleport!"

Captain Sangin Kordonis, a member of Clan Oblong, similar to Sangin Lidra, leans forward in his captain's chair and gazes silently at a vast number of displays scattered across the VLL Hatoraxia's bridge. Two hundred crew-members, mostly comprised of Technopaths, but also interspersed with the occasional low-ranking Psion or Changeling, move with speed and elegance as they follow their captain's orders.

"Nothing on the Opal Spectrum, Captain," One of the scanning officers, a Technopath, reports.

"Try another frequency," Kordonis says, his voice calm and measured, but his mind erratic. "That anomaly can't have disappeared into nowhere, especially without initiating a FTL jump. If it turns out to be a heroic artifact of some sort, or even a living Hero... we had better not be the fleet which let it slip through our grasp."

"Understood, Captain," The officer says. She returns her attention to her scans, leaving Kordonis to stew in his thoughts.

Kordonis's second in command, Orena Limea, slowly ambles toward him, her upper body balanced on a tripod-like spider-chassis for legs. "Captain. I was unable to find the anomaly's position, however, I did observe an oddity in this sector's subspace gradient."

Orena hands a datapad to her captain and then waits quietly, with her long, nine-fingered hands resting against her abdomen. Kordonis quickly glances over the file and nods.

"Good work. This might explain why the anomaly disappeared, but we did not detect any FTL energy being activated. Perhaps the unknown entity folded itself within subspace, or an adjacent dimension."

"That was my hypothesis as well," Orena says, bowing her head in deference. "I took the liberty to check our fleet's crew complements. We have one hundred and seventeen Psions among our fleet, but none of them are masters in any particular branch, nor do we have anyone capable of comprehending Spatial Psionics at our disposal."

Kordonis snorts, as his tone turns self-critical. "Naturally. A mere third-rate captain like myself would never have the authority to order around a Spatial Psion. They're rare enough as-is. We'll have to search for dimensional tears manually. Order all ships to engage spatial scanning formation Zero-One-Mark-Three. We'll spread out across the area and-"

"Captain!" One of the scanning officers shouts, interrupting Kordonis. "The anomaly has reappeared!"

Immediately, Kordonis snaps to attention. He rises from his chair, aided by two metallic and slender bipedal legs. "Location?"

"It's approximately seven thousand, six hundred kilometers from our current position," The scanning officer says. "I've tried to scan it multiple times, but there appears to be an energy field surrounding it that deflects all my attempts! The best I can gather is that it's some sort of biological entity and- hmm?"

The officer's face becomes twisted with shock. Frantically, she taps several buttons, only to turn to Kordonis with a look of disbelief. "The... the anomaly has somehow hidden itself! I can still detect its energy, but the biological mass in its center has vanished!"

Captain Kordonis narrows his eyes to slits. "Show me."

With a few button presses, the scanning officer brings up a series of images on the main monitors, big enough for Kordonis and the other officers to see.

A small, biped-shaped mass of green hovers amidst the void. Its featureless body gives off no distinct origin thanks to the scanning methods used to roughly guess at its shape.

"Could it be?" Kordonis mutters. "One of the ancient Terrans? A Hero?"

"Captain," Orena Limea interjects, "We cannot jump to such a conclusion hastily. This anomaly might be a new lifeform borne of the Plague. It may be a scout sent to investigate this system for suitable planets worth taking over. Rather than assume it's a long-dead Terran relic, we must assume it is a trap to ensnare us. If we rush in, it could latch onto one of our ships, penetrate the hull, and infect the crew. A loss of eight inspection teams would severely cripple our war efforts."

Kordonis frowns.

"How might you explain the heroic energy signature?"

"There are several possibilities," Orena replies without hesitation. "But I believe it's possible the Plague may have somehow located a heroic artifact from the Terran's former homeworld and merged with it. Perhaps this entity is a special sub-type capable of space-travel."

The Captain lowers his gaze to the floor. "Space-capable plague-infestors. I... I do not wish to imagine such a possibility."

After a moment, the Captain turns to one of his tactical officers. "Order our smallest, least-crewed ship to advance on the anomaly's position. Since we can sense its energy, it might still be there. If this creature is, indeed, a Plague scout, we'll blast the ship into oblivion at the first sign of infection."

"Yes, Captain," The male Technopath says. He turns to his display and sends out the order, while Kordonis watches the monitors above like a hawk.

"It still isn't moving..." Kordonis mutters. "Founders, guide me. What is this anomaly?"

Suddenly, while Kordonis has his eyes locked on the anomaly's faint energy reading, it vanishes.

"...Huh? What?! Where did it go?"

Kordonis blinks in surprise. The ship he ordered to the anomaly's position hasn't even made its move yet, leaving him shellshocked at this change of events.

[C-Captain!] Invocator Miikil, a low-ranked Psion aboard the bridge says, transmitting her thoughts telepathically. [The anomaly! I can sense it now! It's appeared inside one of our vessels!]

A moment of silence washes across the Hatoraxia's bridge. All of the crew turn deathly pale as they look to one another, then their captain.

"Red alert!" Kordonis roars. "Assume the entity is a Plague-borne infestor! Contact all vessels and order them to battle stations! I want everyone suited up for combat on the double!"

Kordonis's orders go out immediately, transmitting to every ship in the fleet. A minute later, even worse news comes down the pipeline.

"Captain!" The scanning officer says. "The VLL Kildarius has just lost all its internal power! Its systems are down, and the anomaly is suspected to be the cause!"

"Multiple reports of injured personnel aboard the Kildarius!" Comes another report. "The Kildarius's crew have begun engaging the anomaly according to our external scans, but we can't contact anyone aboard the vessel to confirm the situation!"

The Hatoraxia's bridge gets to work ordering the other ships to surround the Kildarius. They prepare to open fire and obliterate the invader, only for even worse news to emerge.

"Captain," Orena says, her voice low. "The anomaly has appeared inside of the VLL Photon. Once again, it has shut down the ship's internal systems and engaged the crew in combat."

Kordonis, prepared to blast the Kildarius to kingdom come, hesitates. He freezes like a deer in the headlights while hundreds of thoughts and emotions run across his face.

"Impossible... short-range transmission? Teleportation capabilities? Are the Plague members we've seen capable of performing such feats?!"

Orena blinks her eyes. "Not that I know of, captain."

Another officer raises her voice. "Captain, shall we continue with the order to destroy the Kildarius?"

"No! Belay that order!" Kordonis yells. "Increase the anomaly's danger classification to level 5! Transmit an emergency broadcast to the Hell Harbor Observation Post! Make sure the Founders learn of this specimen's existence! I want all of our Psions to perform the Hakúr. Target the anomaly and restrict its movements! We must capture or kill it at any cost."

Invocator Miikil turns pale. [Captain, the Psions in our fleet are too inexperienced to perform the Hakúr. If we attempt such a dangerous psionic technique...]

The lone Psion aboard the Hatoraxia's bridge doesn't get a chance to finish his sentence. Another report emerges of the anomaly's jump to a third vessel, making Kordonis grit his teeth.

"We don't have a choice, Miikil. If we don't stop that entity, it will rip our fleet to shreds. You know as well as I do that we all have to make sacrifices for our people. If the worst happens, I will take full responsibility."

Miikil stares at Kordonis with his six blackened, unblinking eyes. [Hmph. At least if we die, my fellow Psions will return to the realm of the living. You had best hope we can perform the Hakúr properly, or your tenure as captain will be over.]

The Psion returns to his station, leaving Kordonis to fume.

"Tch. Do you think I do not know that? I have to take this risk for the safety of my fleet."

Kordonis presses his palms together, soothes his nerves, and prepares to capture the frightening entity.

"If I fail, my career, and life, will end. But if I succeed? Those who did not question my orders will enjoy a significant rise in prestige."

Part 248: Wordsmith.exe

"Inspect. Locate. Teleport!"

With three words, I determine the position of the nearest spaceship, scout out its interior, and warp my body to an empty spot inside.

I arrive within the spotless confines of the Volgrim vessel. Its purple-colored walls gleam with an alien vibe I've never witnessed in all my years. Strange inky-black orbs rest in the corners of the walls, where they meet the ceiling and floor. They resemble squid eyes, making me feel as if the damned things are watching me.

The room I arrive in appears so foreign to my mind that it takes me several seconds to comprehend what the hell I'm even looking at. I can only assume I've teleported into a ten-by-ten foot supply closet, but the dim lighting and strange devices hanging on the walls only confuse me further.

I aim my mind at the nearest object, a five-foot-tall canister of some sort with a glowing screen on its front. A digital screen on its top displays many alien characters, none of which I can read. "Inspect."

A moment later, information about the object appears in my mind.

Name: ???

Purpose: ???

Origin: Volgarius.

To my astonishment, not even my Wordsmithing can tell me what the strange device is. However, I don't have the time to bother dwelling on it. By now, someone has likely noticed my appearance.

My mind-wife speaks. "Jason. I catalogued the scan for this vessel in your Mind Realm. Exit through that door to your right, walk down the hallway fifty feet, and take a left. You'll arrive inside this ship's engine room."

I follow her instructions, only to find myself stumped at the first step. When I turn to my right, the 'door' she mentioned appears flush with the wall. I can barely make out a seam in the purple-colored interior, bewildering me on how to continue.

"Uh, shit. How do I get out? Is there a button?"

I walk over to the door and try to feel my way around it. When my quick inspection fails, I sigh and aim my mind at the door.

"PUSH!"

A blast of psychic energy fires from my mind, flinging the door outward and sending it careening across a wide hallway with an explosive crash!

I step outside and freeze as dozens of Volgrim Technopaths come skittering and running toward me. All of their torsos rest upon different devices, usually spider or bipedal legs, while they wield intimidating weapons of all types and varieties far beyond anything Phoebe or I have ever crafted for Tarus II.

As they yell at each other in their native language, I realize that, due to the spatial barrier protecting my body, I can't hear their words. I jump out in front of them, only to blink in surprise. None of their eyes follow my movements. Instead, they stare with clear nervousness at the room I just left.

"It seems the Volgrim can't see through your invisibility," Phoebe says, confirming my thoughts. "Good. Now get to the engine room! We've got a bunch of ships to rewire, and not a lot of time."

My mind-wife's words make me nod. "Right!"

While the Volgrim train their weapons on the room I just left, I speak another word of power. "Teleport."

This time, I materialize a bit down the hallway, past the two dozen soldiers, and next to the entry to their engine room. I slip inside, nearly slamming into a Psion as they try to run outside. I only manage to save my cover by leaping to the side and hovering in the air, using my Wordsmithed telekinesis to hold myself aloft. Luckily, the Psion doesn't notice my presence.

"That one must have been a low-ranker," Phoebe says. "Remember what you told me? Confessor Vulpanix was the only Psion who sensed your invisible soul. These lesser Psions probably can't detect you at all."

"Maybe," I say with a nod. "But we haven't observed enough of them to make that assumption. I'll play it safe and keep my guard up."

I glance around the sizable engine room, completely bewildered by the ridiculous technology on display. A gigantic metal orb with hundreds of wires sticking out of it hovers in the center of the room, humming with tangible power. Even with my barrier up, I can still sense slight vibrations in the air, indicating just how much power the orb must contain. A dozen Technopaths work at various terminals, chittering to one another with words I can neither hear nor understand.

"Investigate. Blueprint. Inspect."

Uttering another three words of power, I perform a detailed scan of the engine room and give the information to my mind-wife. Phoebe quickly begins working on the blueprints to uncover their inner functions. To my surprise, it doesn't even take her two minutes to find what she needs.

"Here. Copy this information with your Wordsmithing, then imprint it upon the computer files. It will upload a trojan capable of hijacking this vessel."

I blink in surprise. "Will that work?"

"Of course. I had access to your Wordsmithing for a good thirty minutes, Jason. While you were investigating Marie, I took some time to understand how your powers worked. I can 'upload' information from your Mind Realm to your consciousness, allowing you to turn it into a Wordsmithed concept."

Her admission surprises me. "...That sounds a lot like how Solomon's Crown worked."

"Yes, because I cheated a little bit and copied his method. It's no big deal, hubby. Now, hurry up! Time's a-wasting!"

I nod. "Alright. Virus!"

With one word, I transmit Phoebe's homebrewed code into the Volgrim computer systems. The effect is both instantaneous and destructive. Immediately, the ship's lights flicker and disappear, replaced instead with blood-red warning signs. Every Technopath in the engine room practically jumps out of their skin. They look around in horror, alarmed by whatever the hell just happened. They begin yelling at one another and skittering around to try and solve the problem, but Phoebe appears confident in her work.

"Alright. We have maybe an hour, possibly two if they're incompetent. We have to disable the other ships in this Volgrim fleet, then order all of them to return home. Err, of course, we could destroy them all instead..."

"No," I say, instantly shaking my head. "That's unnecessary. The Volgrim haven't done anything to provoke me. I don't want any casualties unless necessary. Unlike the demons, I think there may be a small chance we could work things out with these aliens, given time. Once we resolve the situation on Tarus II, I can look into contacting the Volgrim leaders and- ARGH!"

A wave of pain suddenly impacts my brain, making me stagger. I jerk my head to the side to see the lightly-armored Psion who passed me earlier looking in my direction. The alien's six-eyes blink in unison as he points in my direction. Suddenly, his words appear in my mind.

[I tanta xuia! Whas a'a xuia, nuntsa'?! Yuia' ru'n ut afthu"ans!]

Unable to understand him, I fall back and flinch. "Shit! He's... he's attacking my mind! Ahh!"

"Jason! A ghost-creature has just appeared in your Mind Realm! Try to fight back! I'll do what I can from my end!" Phoebe yells.

I can only nod weakly at Phoebe's words as I slump to the ground. The Psion's attack increases in intensity as his psionic probing strikes my brain.

Soon, Sir Lorent's voice joins with Phoebe's. [Aunt Berthold. Stay calm. I will help you.]

Immediately, the pressure on my mind begins to lessen. The Psion's intimidating pose weakens as he staggers back, clearly surprised by my mental resistance.

"I shall assist thee as well," Gabriel says.

Raphael follows-up. "Hmph! Do not test my patience, Volgrim brat! Thou art but a child!"

With the four members of my Mind Realm pushing back, they quickly force out the Psion's presence and cause him to stumble backward and fall to the ground. In disbelief, the Psion quickly pushes away from me with his feet, a look of alarm in his eyes.

"Bind! Suppress! Sleep!"

I quickly fire off three words of power as I jump to my feet. A split-second later, the Psion's eyes close as he falls into a deep, unbreakable slumber.

Sadly, his attack gave the other crew members enough time to figure out my position. A dozen Technopaths converge on my position, all of them equipped with alien rifles and energy weapons. They aim their weapons at me and begin firing without restraint, assaulting me from all directions.

...Only for their attacks to prove completely ineffective. Compared to the barrier I enveloped my body in, one that can resist the impact of rocks and space debris traveling at 99% the speed of light, their weapons are less dangerous than a fly landing on my face.

I quickly look around the room. "Phoebe? Are you okay? Are we ready, now?"

When I turn my gaze inward, I see my wife, her nephew, and the two Archangels with solemn, but unruffled expression on their faces. "Yeah, no worries. That Psion wasn't very strong. He didn't hurt us. Let's get to the next ship."

"Finally, some good news," I mutter. "Locate. Teleport!"

* * *

One by one, I travel to three other vessels. Their interiors vary, but most of their designs appear similar. One starship, however, appears strikingly different. Unlike the purple-colored walls of the other ships, this one sports perfectly smooth walls and high-tech gadgets sticking out of the ceiling. Its walls gleam with a silvery, metallic shine, nearly blinding me with the unexpected radiance.

"What the hell?" I ask nobody in particular. "This ship seems weird. Did I jump to the commander's vessel?"

"I don't think so," Phoebe says. "This one is only a little bigger than the others. We still have forty-five more ships to go. I noticed one ship in the center of their formation that was three times larger than all the others. It's probably the capital cruiser."

"Ahem," Raphael grunts, clearing his throat. "This ship belongs to Clan Symmetra. The ones from before came from Clan Neutroli. The different Technopath clans have varying methods for constructing their vessels and technology. They often war with one another over the 'superior' technology construction methods. Admittedly, I know very little about their customs, but based upon my memories from the Energy Wars, their differences in design stuck out the most."

"Guess that makes sense," I mutter. "I'll look into it later. Inspect."

Once again, I collect the ship's information into my Mind Realm. It takes Phoebe an extra couple of minutes to create a working virus, which slightly surprises me. She explains that, apparently, Clan Symmetra's security protections are much more advanced than Clan Neutroli's were. Good to know.

After implanting the virus into the system, I start to Wordsmith again, only to feel a wave of disorientation strike me.

My legs turn wobbly. Unsure what the hell is happening, I slump against a nearby computer console in the Symmetra ship's engine room and begin to pant profusely.

"P-Phoebe... something... something's wrong! I'm feeling dizzy... mana exhaustion? No, s-something else!"

Phoebe's voice jumps an octave. "Gods! More ghostly figures have just appeared in your Mind Realm! There must be... must be twenty of them!"

[Damn. Their power is a hundred times stronger than before,] Sir Lorent says, his voice shaking. [Even my brain hurts.]

Raphael turns pale. "This attack is comparable to the power of a high-ranking Psion! Everyone, fight back! If we don't, these Volgrim will destroy all of us!"

Immediately, a counter-resistance forms in my mind. Sir Lorent, Phoebe, Gabriel, Raphael, and even Michael join together to unite their mental strength against the Psions attacking me.

"Th-they're too powerful!" Phoebe cries. She aims her hands at the attackers and squeezes her eyes together, trying desperately to use her willpower against them.

The ghostly apparitions in my Mind Realm slowly begin to solidify.

[Oia' nungt; ianusag. Oia' tuiaftt; thunftunag. Tugasha', gha than annuhuftasa xuia' ruftsh. Dua, ta''ans ur sha Pftagiaa.]

The Volgrim attackers speak in unison, their words coming from all of their minds at once. Each consonant strikes my brain like a burning knife. My body clenches up involuntarily, leaving me to roll on the ground, shrieking in pain.

"Aaahhh!! Hurts, it hurts so bad! Suppress! Stop! Seal!"

I try desperately to Wordsmith, but with my brain being attacked, I can't summon even the tiniest drop of mana.

"Tch!" Michael snarls. "Aren't thou taking the might of three Archangels lightly?! Volgrim bastards!"

Gabriel shudders as he tries to fight back. "Brother. Their strength is unfathomable... we can't hold on!"

"We must!" Raphael yells. "If we fall here, our souls will disperse! Fight, my brothers! Give no quarter!"

The citizens of my Mind Realm press back with all their strength, yet still, they continue to lose ground.

Eventually, the Phoenix appears.

The firebird, still trembling with fear from the frightening faces of the Volgrim, bears witness to the faltering wills of the Archangels, Phoebe, and Sir Lorent.

[What's wrong?! How did the monsters get in here?!] The Phoenix chirps. [...Can I help? Hello?!]

My vision turns blurry as the Psionic attack threatens to rip my mind in half. "Aargh! Phoe... Phoenix! Help! We can't... can't beat these Psions... without you!"

The Phoenix flies behind Phoebe and shivers. [Too scary! Too frightening! I don't know what to do! Make the monsters go away!]

Too late, I realize the Phoenix either can't help, or won't. It turns out that even an immortal undying artifact from the Primordial Era has its limits.

My vision fades. I groan in pain as my last sliver of consciousness begins to slip away...

[Bad people!] A voice cries out.

Not the Phoenix, but instead, little Shana.

[Very bad! I not like you! Chirpy, come here!]

A surge of power wells up within my chest. Suddenly, with a start, a powerful burst of energy appears inside my brain, forcing the Psions back several steps.

[Whas?! Thut lugha'! Is't unth'aguftfta! Huftg un! Wa niats l'att uia' ag'ansaga! Dun's ftas shut Pftagiaa-ftu'n garaas iat!]

The Psions yell amongst one another, but their powerful onslaught rapidly begins to weaken. I turn my gaze inward, only to see Shana standing in front of the other Mind Realmers, a burning aura surrounding her. The little girl's hair turns blood-red as she begins wielding the Phoenix's power as her own.

[You mean! Very bad! Leave before I get angry!]

Shana shouts defiantly at the Volgrim. With a wave of her hand, she sends million-degree flames roaring at their apparitions.

In the blink of an eye, the Psionic onslaught falls to pieces. Every Psion screams in agony as their ghostly bodies turn to vapor in the wind. [Eeeyaaaaaaa!!]

Just like that, the Volgrim attackers disappear, their bodies explode into ash. I leap to my feet, noticing with a pale expression the sweat covering every inch of my body.

"Cough, cough! Shit, is everyone okay? Is anyone injured? Shana, what the heck was that? What did you do?!"

The little girl exhales quietly. She raises her hands over her head, and the Phoenix seemingly melts out of her hair, reverting it to its previous blonde coloration.

[Not me. Chirpy. I used Chirpy to fight the monsters.]

Slowly, I nod, feeling appreciative of whatever method Shana used. "That was... that was incredible! You saved everyone's lives, Shana!"

Raphael walks over to the child and gently pats her head. "Many thanks, young one. Thou mayeth not comprehend thy abilities, but I see now thou art an Artifact-Melding Hero! Hehe, what a special ability, indeed! My brothers and I owe thee our eternal gratitude!"

"A true Hero," Michael says, offering a rare compliment. "Thy power mirrors that of Ramses, an ancient Egyptian Emperor who was also a Hero. The sudden comprehension of thy abilities has indeed saved all of our lives."

Phoebe drops to her knees and hugs Shana. "You're awesome! Ooh, I'm definitely adopting you after this, sweetheart!"

While everyone breathes a sigh of relief, a cold chill goes down my back.

Shana saved all of us, including me. However, the fact I nearly died to the Psion's surprise attack is beyond terrifying. Had Shana not been here, humanity's future would have vanished, along with my existence.

...I never knew until just now the knife's edge I've walked. I've been lax. My mental weakness nearly led to my downfall. After I escape, I'll need to take even more extreme measures to protect my mind.

I quickly shake my anxious thoughts away and clean off my sweat with a quick word of power. "Phoebe, if you're alright, send me the next virus. We can discuss Shana's awesomeness once we escape."

A minute later, I disable the Symmetra vessel and teleport away, continuing my rampage unabated.

* * *

An hour passes.

After disabling the entire fleet, I don't encounter anymore resistance on the scale of the psionic attack. Some of the vessels become capable of detecting my general whereabouts, but none of the Volgrim personnel aboard the ships put up much of a fight. Their most advanced weapons bounce off my Wordsmithed shields without exception.

Eventually, I teleport away from the vessels and arrive amidst the Void.

"Retreat."

With one word, I activate Phoebe's trojans. The Volgrim fleet turns around and ignite their thrusters, zipping away at Warp 7.

Phoebe's expression appears solemn. "I hope that was the right move to make, Jason. Letting those Volgrim go is sure to come back and bite us."

"Maybe," I say, nodding my head. "But now that I have the Phoenix, the situation has changed drastically. A single teleportation used to drain my mana noticeably. But today, after an hour of strenuous Wordsmithing, I'm not even winded. I feel like today marks a qualitative shift in my power. No, in humanity's power. We're not helpless anymore. If the Volgrim figure out my identity and attack... I won't hold back."

"We'll see..." Phoebe mutters.

I turn my attention back to the faint fluctuations in subspace, where Camael's Cube resides. "Alright, let's figure out what- hm?"

With the Volgrim gone, I finally have a moment of respite. Only now do I notice the ruby-red bracelet on my right wrist faintly shining with magical energy.

Ah! I almost forgot. It was part of a matching pair I gave to Phoebe so she could contact me no matter where I went. If it's glowing, then she must have sent me a message after I fell unconscious.

I tap the gem in its center, causing a hologram of my wife's face to beam out of it and hover in the air before me.

"Jason, where are you? You said you'd be back within a few days, but it's already been a week. I miss you. Daisy misses you. Reply soon, alright?"

I frown.

A week?

The bracelet glows again, making my frown deepen. There's another message.

Phoebe's face appears again, but this time, she looks much more anxious than before. "Jason? Hello? Does this damned thing even work? It's glowing, so surely that means it's not broken? Argh! Respond, dammit! Tell me you're okay! Did the demons capture you? Did you die? Are you alright? Our scouts have been reporting movement at the Core's outskirts! I think the demons are going to attack soon! Kar has everyone at their battle stations, but I'm worried. Call me as soon as you get this!"

* * *

Another message appears. This time, Phoebe appears stressed, with disheveled hair.

"Oh, god. It's terrible! The demons took us by surprise! They tore apart the Core and killed thousands of soldiers. Hope isn't back, and neither are you. What's going on? Did the demons capture both Wordsmiths? Did they kill you?! Answer me, goddammit! Tell me you're alive, please! I have to go. Kar's in critical condition. Ose nearly killed him."

Alarmed, my heart skips a beat. "Kar's injured?!"

My mind-wife wrings her hands together. "The situation is bad, Jason. We need to get back there at once."

However, I tap the crystal again upon seeing it glowing once more.

"Fuck..." Phoebe's hologram says, her face smudged with blood. "They've broken through. A god-damned traitor activated the warpgate. They're on Tarus II! So many demons... so many undead. I swear to god, Jason, if you died without telling me... I'll find your soul and kick your ass! Daisy's safe... so is Sam. We stabilized Kar... ah, hell! I have to go. I can't lead an army and talk to this stupid, worthless, broken crystal at the same time."

Tears well up in my wife's eyes.

"Please be alive. Oh, god, if you've died... if I didn't even get to say goodbye... what do I have to live for? You're my everything, Jason. Come back to me. Please."

Her hologram disappears, leaving me staring into space blankly.

The crystal's light fades away, indicating the messages have stopped.

A pit forms in my stomach. I don't have any clue how long ago Phoebe's last message was, nor how much time passed between the messages.

"...I was only unconscious for an hour, right? Isn't that what you guys said?"

My mind-wife shakes her head helplessly. "That's how much time it felt like. Maybe more time passed. I don't know. Hell, maybe the Phoenix's power dilated time around us."

Slowly, I nod. "Maybe. No more hesitation. We have to ditch the Cube and return to Tarus II pronto."

"No!" Phoebe shouts. "That's a terrible idea! Instead, why don't you leave the Cube to me? We'll go inside, you can use 'Locate' to find Tarus II and scout out the situation, and I'll use your body to build the Cube's control matrix. I won't need more than an hour or two."

"What good will going there in my soul-form do?" I ask, irritated. "I have to teleport back right now! Everyone is counting on me!"

"I know," My mind-wife replies, lowering her gaze. "But if we leave the Cube here, it's likely to fall into the Volgrim's hands. We can't allow that. It's the key to your newfound power."

"Arthur's Knight is correct," Raphael chimes in. "Jason, thy improved mana reserves are not thine alone. They belong to Camael's Cube. Dids't thou not sense it? Thy power weakened, ever so slightly, when thou traveled away from it to the Volgrim ships. The greater the distance, the less of its power thou shalt be capable of tapping into! If thou returneth home now, thou shalt be nearly the same as before merging with the Phoenix."

I frown. "But I thought the mana came from the Phoenix, not from the Cube. Are you telling me the Phoenix itself has almost no mana to give?"

"In the past, that statement would have been false," Raphael answers. "However, after spending so much time merged with the Cube, the Phoenix has had its power sapped by Camael's mightiest artifact. There is not much we can do, but given the Cube's size and its ability to absorb mana from the nearby star systems, I think it shall prove a most effective 'battery.'"

Despite my body urging me to rush home, I force myself to calm down. "Alright. Fine. I can scout Tarus II's situation and return once I figure out the situation. Hopefully, you can have the Cube ready and moving, Phoebe. I'll check your main body and make sure she's... in good health."

My mind-wife nods. "You don't have to say it twice, Jason. Leave it to me. And before you go, I'll empower your soul-form. After you detach, stick around so I can ensure you won't run into the same situation you did with Confessor Vulpanix."

"Good idea. That's why I love you; you're so unbelievably smart."

Phoebe blushes. "I do enjoy compliments!"

Without wasting any more time, I utter a word of power. "Locate!"

My soul detaches from my body and begins to tug toward my physical wife's location, making me breathe a sigh of relief. After all, 'Locate' can't detect dead things. She's still alive!

I hang around in the area, while my Mind-Wife takes over my body. Her eyes glow white for a moment before returning to normal.

"There. Alright, let's do this! Empower! Protect! Imbue! Speed!"

Hearing my voice speaking from my body feels odd, but I ignore the weird vibes and immediately zip toward Tarus II after my mind-wife finishes her incantation.

In my mind, one thought rings out.

I'm coming, everyone! Stay alive!

Part 249: Mara's Great Escape!

Mara, the Baron of Games, motions with her hands to 'draw' a magical Tarot card out of thin air by flourishing her fingers. Her electricity-imbued wolf rampages before her, frying the nanites off every troopers' body. Each time the wolf howls, multiple bolts of lightning fire from its mouth and arc off its tail to jump at the nearest metal or electric sources; usually the prison guards and their exosuits.

"Aargh!"

"That damned mutt! Kill it!"

Despite the summoned creature's incredible offensive power, it proves to have laughably weak defenses. A few stray bullets unloaded by the exosuit-wearing troopers shred the animal's head to a bloody pulp. The wolf explodes into particles of light, dispersing forevermore into the aether.

"You filthy humans!" Mara screeches, as she activates another Tarot card. "You'll pay for that!! Three-Eyed-Gecko, Imbue!"

Tears well up in Mara's eyes as she screams internally. They killed my summon! Now the Little Wolf is dead forever! I'll need another one crafted, and the Devil only knows how much time and effort that'll take!

A third eye materializes on Mara's forehead, manifesting the same ability it did when she used it on Laharl. The world shifts in color as she uses the Gecko to its fullest extent, while keeping in mind the ten-minute time limit for Tarot card imbuement.

"Shoot to kill!" One of the guards barks. "Fire at will!"

As the humans unload bullets down the narrow corridor, Mara's Gecko eye twitches violently, looking left, right, up and down all at once. Before the Gecko's gaze, all illusions become material, and all things which ordinary eyes could never follow slow to a crawl. Mara instantly becomes capable of predicting the humans' aim, and thus dodging their bullets whenever they squeeze the trigger.

The Baron rushes forward, bending and twisting her body unnaturally to evade any attack capable of killing her. However, in the narrow corridor, she can't dodge the entire hail of gunfire, so she allows dozens of grazing shots and flesh wounds to bloom upon her arms, legs, and even her cheeks.

Wham!

Using her Baron-level strength, Mara smashes her fist against the nearest guard's chest, knocking him on his ass and making him slide a few feet across the ground. However, her strength isn't nearly enough to injure the man, thanks to his exosuit's stalwart defenses.

The instant Mara lands her blow, she ducks down and sweeps the leg of a second commando before palm-striking and sending him flying. With four other commandos turning their gun barrels toward her, Mara flicks out another card.

"Aqua Banshee, EVOKE!"

A terrific explosion of sonic energy, like a thousand women screaming in agony simultaneously, blasts out of Mara's body and flings the remaining troopers away. They crash against the far walls and hit the ground a moment later, their heads reeling. It turns out that not only did the Banshee's scream contain sonic energy, but psionic force as well, causing the soldier's brains to rattle in their skulls. Waves of disorientation strike them, and they fall flat on their faces.

However, Mara hesitates. Three seconds pass as she realizes she can't break through their armor to kill them, not with her physical body alone.

Seven more seconds! I can only draw a card every ten seconds without suffering a terrible mana backlash. Come on, destiny! Give me something useful!

By the time the soldiers regain their senses, Mara manages to flourish her fingers and draw another card. Her expression turns unsightly.

"What rotten luck! No, wait, I can work with this. Gelatinous Blob, Summon!"

A nine-foot-tall, cylindrically-shaped slime-monster materializes before Mara, its body vaguely the same consistency as Jello. The eyeless, earless, faceless green blob quivers slightly as it waits for Mara's command.

The Baron of Games ducks back into the hallway. "Block this corridor! Let nobody through!"

The slime-creature follows her orders and dutifully stretches itself to envelop the hallway entrance, forming a barrier of goopy, sticky material.

Mara grits her teeth. "That'll buy me a minute! Now... what next?"

Her Gecko eye continues to pivot around. Eventually, she looks upward, making the Gecko peer through several hundred feet of topsoil to reveal multiple trooper contingents converging on the area from a mile away.

"They called for backup already? Just my luck."

Mara's heart trembles as she spots the previously downed commandos outside running toward the Gelatinous Blob. The prison guards fire dozens, possibly hundreds of bullets at the summoned monster, but the projectiles don't pierce more than an inch of its several-feet-thick green, mostly-transparent body. The bullets get swallowed by Mara's summon as it trembles happily and consumes their metal shells to feed itself.

The moment the humans try using fire or electricity on the Blob, it will perish. I can't rely on it forever, Mara thinks.

Mara glances around herself and eventually looks backward, toward the other prison cells. There, her Gecko eye spots multiple other prisoners through the walls, two of whom catch her attention.

What the...?! That's Beelzebub! And over there, it's Artorias! I remember Beelzebub getting captured by the humans, but I didn't know he ended up here, too! And what about Artorias? Did the Sphinx beat him after he trounced me?!

Mara shakes her head. Who cares?! I have to free both Dukes! With our powers combined, escaping will be a cinch!

Not hesitating for even a second, Mara turns on her heel and rushes back toward the prison cells forty feet down the corridor. She arrives at the first one and slides its barrel-bolt lock aside.

Click!

The door opens without issue, allowing Mara to enter the chamber. She finds Beelzebub trapped with an identical harnessing setup, his arms bound tightly behind his back, and a suit of nanite-metal encasing him from head to toe.

"Shit!" Mara hisses. "I don't have Little Wolf to zap Beelzebutt out of this weird getup. Here's to hoping I draw something useful."

She motions with her hands and draws another card from her Mind Realm, wincing as she readies herself for her disappointment. However, to her shock, it turns out to be exactly what she needs.

"Nice! Ancient Electric Eel, Enchant!"

The card disappears, and a burst of mana rushes toward Mara's right arm and fist. Rather than imbuing her entire body with the eel's power, she enchants just one arm, allowing her to use the effect as long as necessary, even though it proves weaker than an imbuement.

Once her arm becomes charged with electrical energy, Mara gets to work ripping apart the nanites binding Beelzebub's body. Everywhere she touches, the molecular bonds break apart, turning the ultra-hardened metal into dusty ash.

By the time she's freed Beelzebub's head and some of his body, the Duke of Inferno's eyes have already begun fluttering open. Beelzebub coughs weakly and shakes the fog from his head. "...Where?"

"The humans caught you," Mara says. "Remember? You got the shit beaten out of you by the Sphinx. He tricked and captured you."

"Guh!" Beelzebub gasps. "That's right! That damned reptile..."

Mara turns Beelzebub on his side. After she zaps apart the nanites binding his arms behind his back, Beelzebub shoves her aside.

"Out of my way! I'll handle the rest!"

Despite Beelzebub's rudeness, Mara doesn't even flinch. She retreats a few steps and shields her eyes as the Duke blasts the rest of the nanites with superheated flames, burning off all his clothes in the process.

The Duke of Inferno jumps to his feet and cracks his neck. He scowls at Mara. "What are you staring at? Like you've never seen a male naked before."

Mara chuckles. "Sorry. You're bigger than I expected. Now, don't I get a thank you?"

"Sure. Thanks," Beelzebub snaps. He pushes past Mara, only to frown as he hears gunfire outside. "What's the situation?"

"We're inside an underground prison," Mara replies. I have the humans blocked off, but they'll break through my barrier soon. I want you to fight them while I free Artorias."

"Artorias?!" Beelzebub echoes, turning to look at Mara with shock. "They captured not only me, but the Duke of Steel as well?"

"That's right," Mara replies. "And me, but I broke free."

She smirks.

"Guess I'm just more talented than the mighty Dukes."

"Oh, shut it," Beelzebub groans. He rolls his eyes and steps through the doorway. "Remove your creature. Or don't, but I will."

He gestures toward the blob at the end of the corridor, and Mara nods. She steps out behind Beelzebub and uses him as a shield. "Gelatinous Blob, Recall! Watch out, Beelzebub, there are more humans on the way."

"So long as it isn't the Sphinx, I don't give a damn, " Beelzebub replies with absolute confidence. "These fleshbags are going to pay for humiliating me!"

Without another word, Beelzebub dashes forward right as the blob disappears. The humans behind it jump in alarm at they spot the Duke of Inferno rushing toward them.

"Shit! We're too late! The demoness-!"

BOOM!

Beelzebub rips off and flings his hand forward, detonating it like a grenade to blast away everyone in his path. He exhales superheated flames on one group of troopers while swinging his arms wildly to fling fireballs in every direction. This time, the nanite suits melt to slag, unable to protect their pilots, who end up turning to charcoal.

While the Duke rampages, Mara darts across the hall to the other cell. She opens it to reveal Artorias's giant, armored form, also covered with a layer of nanites.

"Damned fleshbags," Mara hisses. "To humiliate such a dignified demonic warrior like this... unforgivable!"

Unlike her mild feelings of disgust toward the haughty, arrogant Beelzebub, Mara's heart softens as she gets to work freeing Artorias.

Every demon knows the story of Artorias. He gave up his life to save his little brother. Even after losing his real body, he fought back the spirit of an Archangel for a hundred thousand years. He's done everything in his power to allow Barbatos to continue living, yet now he's treated as nothing more than a decrepit prisoner. I hate fleshbags! I hate all of them so damn much!!

It doesn't take Mara more than a minute to completely free Artorias. However, unlike Beelzebub, the Duke of Steel lays with his eyes closed. He doesn't jump to his feet, nor does he do much more than suck in a few weak, shallow breaths.

Eventually, Artorias coughs.

"Kuh... hnn... b-body... body aches..."

Mara frowns. She examines Artorias more closely and quickly discovers severe damage to his chest, neck, and internal organs.

"Devils! Artorias, what happened?! You're in terrible shape!"

Artorias struggles to open his eyes, then closes them. "Th-the... the reptile... tricked Bael. Beat me... senseless. Cough... Bael is such... a bloody... idiot... wheeze..."

"You've got that right," Mara growls. She stares at Artorias for several seconds, then shakes her head. "I don't have any healing magic; I'm neither Belial or Hellga. I do have one Tarot card that can reverse the status of someone's body if they suffered severe injuries, but yours happened too long ago for it to work. We need to get you to the Blood Pits!"

Artorias swallows several shallow breaths. "No... give me a moment. I'll, I'll heal... myself."

Mara blinks. "What? You have healing magic?"

"No," Artorias says, his voice shaky. "But Uriel does. Cough... never thought I'd... I'd have to use her power."

"Is that safe?" Mara asks. "Tapping into an Archangel's magic, I mean."

"Won't know... won't know unless I try. Probably dangerous, but what other options do I have?"

Artorias rests his body and mind for half a minute while Beelzebub rampages outside. After Beelzebub finishes and saunters down the corridor, Artorias re-opens his eyes.

"Alright. Can you give me... give me some water? A small basin-full will do. Uriel's healing magic uses water as its base."

Mara nods. "Sure. Let me find the right card."

She spends the next minute sifting through five Tarot carts, before finally finding one with water-element powers. Mara stomps her foot into the ground, blasting concrete everywhere. A small depression appears in the floor as she activates the card. "Sea Urchin, Evoke!"

Mara controls the card's power, using very little mana to merely conjure water from thin air. She fills the depression with liquid, while also leaving some to overflow around the floor.

At that moment, Beelzebub walks around the corner, still buck-naked. "Are you done yet? I've finished turning those worthless humans to- huh? Artorias? What happened to you? You look like crap."

Beelzebub drops his initial statements and instead walks over to Artorias, frowning as his feet splash in the half-inch of water coating the floor.

Artorias barely has enough strength to use magic, so he doesn't answer Beelzebub's question. Instead, he shakily raises one hand and forces himself to cast a weak spell. A thin tendril of liquid begins levitating off the floor, its appearance resembling an octopus's tentacle. It slowly touches Artorias's armor and seeps inside, then slowly but surely sucks some of the water off the floor, bit by bit, and siphons the enchanted liquid into the Duke's injured form.

Every second of healing noticeably improves the Duke's condition. After ten seconds, his speed of regeneration doubles, allowing him to put more mana into the healing efforts.

Within minutes, Artorias's body fully heals, allowing him to breathe a sigh of relief. He pulls himself into a sitting position and shakes the fog from his brain.

"Ugh. Devils... the next time I see Bael, I'm going to beat that thick-headed nimrod senseless."

Beelzebub smirks. "You and me both. I've a bone to pick with that fat bastard."

Mara reaches out to help Artorias to his feet, but the Duke of Steel shakes his head. "I'm fine, now. Thank you for rescuing me. I won't forget this."

"Don't think you owe me a debt," Mara says, smiling demurely. "You've done plenty to help demonkind. I wouldn't exist if it weren't for legends like you forging our history."

"Legends are legends, and this is this," Artorias says, as he stands up and gently squeezes Mara's shoulder. "Don't deny my courtesy, please. I always repay a favor. Considering you saved my life, I-GUHK!"

Artorias suddenly doubles over and grabs his stomach. A look of pure agony flashes through his smoldering, blood-red eyes. He gasps for breath, making Beelzebub and Mara glance at one another in alarm.

"Are you alright?" Beelzebub asks.

Artorias carefully stands up again, his legs noticeably shakier than before. "S-sorry. I... that was unexpected. Damn. I didn't realize there would be such an after-effect from using the Archangel's magic."

After a momentary pause, Artorias continues with an ominious edge to his voice. "By tapping into Uriel's magic... I may have accidentally... no, I hope that's not true. Let's hurry and get out of here, before anything worse happens. I'll create a tunnel for our escape so we don't have to face the humans outside."

Mara glances toward the ceiling again, as the time limit for her Gecko imbuement nears its limit. "The humans aren't coming down. They're waiting for us."

"We should go out there and finish the little creepy-crawlies off," Beelzebub says, a look of pure rage on his face. "Don't tell me you've grown soft, Duke of Steel. Surely you want to pay back the humans for what they did to us."

Artorias hesitates.

"...I do. However, something isn't right. My mana... tapping into the Archangel's power was extremely dangerous, moreso than I expected."

"Fine!" Beelzebub huffs. "You take Mara and go. I'm going to have a little fun with the bastards who put me here!"

"Beelzebub," Mara says, her tone more annoyed than sympathetic, "if you get caught again, I won't be here to bail you out."

"Shut your trap, woman!" Beelzebub snarls. He whips his head toward the doorway while grinding his teeth. "Nothing worse than a female flapping her lips to piss me off! You don't need to worry about me; I'm a big boy!"

The Duke of Inferno angrily stomps toward the doorway, his feet making comical slapping sounds as they hit the still-damp floor, until he rounds the corner and leaves.

Once he disappears, Mara shakes her head and sighs. "That hothead... he's too arrogant, too full of himself."

Artorias nods, a distant look in his eyes. "Much like my brother... before the merge. Barbatos was quite the annoying little ankle-biter until Uriel... until she broke him."

While shaking his head, Artorias turns to the wall. He assumes a power-stance, then rears his fist back.

CRACK!

The Duke of Steel punches through the two-feet of hardened concrete with ease, sending shards of rock and ash flying outward. He pounds the wall a few more times to expose the earthen surface behind it, then nods with satisfaction.

"Stay close. I'm going to move full-speed toward the battlefield. We can only hope Beelzebub is capable of defeating the humans. At the least, he'll cover for our escape."

Artorias begins digging at the dirt like a mole, using wide, sweeping arm-movements to rip out hundreds of pounds of dirt onto the cell floor, all while Mara stands back and watches.

"If only the new demons were comparable to the old ones. I'd rather have a dozen lazy Diablos than one more Beelzebub."

Artorias continues tunneling, while a faint smile plays across his face. "Beelzebub isn't that bad, Mara. He's still young. He hasn't seen what you and I have. He doesn't remember the major upheavals from Hell's history. Once he suffers a bit, he'll mature. Just give him time."

Mara rolls her eyes.

"Sure. If you insist."

A minute later, both demons step into the bowels of the planet, sealing off the path to follow them.

The prison complex falls silent.

Part 250: The Battle Brothers' Resurgence!

Tarus II, the Eastern Front.

Zamiel, the older but shorter of the Battle Brothers, raises his fists and grits his teeth. His opponent, Kar, the Sphinx, casually strolls toward him with a huge smile on his gator-face. Behind Kar, the Wordsmith stands casually, his arms crossed and a relaxed expression on his face. The Wordsmith appears uninterested in taking away Kar's shot at ripping Zamiel apart.

As Kar begins stomping toward Zamiel, a look of terror appears on the Battle Brother's face.

"This... this isn't fair! Wretched crocodile! You were supposed to be down for the count! And the Wordsmith wasn't supposed to be here either! How is any of this possible?!"

Kar rears his fist back. "Hurgh! When you meet the Creator, ask HIM!"

Zamiel summons a massive warhammer and tries to crush Kar into a pancake before the Sphinx can land his punch.

He fails.

The Sphinx blasts Zamiel in his face, spinning the Battle Brother through the air. He careens helplessly to the side and crashes into the dirt, spraying soil out and away from the impact zone.

"Aargh!" Zamiel crows. "You... you fucking- ACK!"

The goatee'd demon's pupils shrink to pinpricks as he spots the Sphinx leaping toward him from the sky. He feebly raises an arm to shield himself from the blow, but it does little to stop Kar's savage assault.

Wham! Bam! Boom!

Over and over, Kar grabs Zamiel and thrashes him from side to side, beats him black and blue, and flings him into the dirt. The Sphinx pulverizes the Baron with ease, showing his prowess as the unmatched champion of Tarus II.

"Kahuck! Gah! Aaah!"

Zamiel shrieks and cries, but the Sphinx doesn't let up. Eventually, after breaking Zamiel's arms and legs, Kar slows his onslaught and drops Zamiel to the ground beside his fallen brother, Duriel. Both demons lie motionless in the dirt, with Zamiel's eyes fluttering weakly, while Duriel's appear permanently closed.

"Cough... cough... damn... can't win... the fucking Wordsmith hasn't... hasn't even made a move... little bro, help me... get up, man..."

Kar stands with his arms crossed. He towers over Zamiel's broken form and smirks. "Hurgh. For my revenge to come this easily, you were never my opponent. A weakling though and through."

Zamiel doesn't answer.

His eyes flick around erratically, the result of severe brain hemmorhages ravaging his mind.

Damn. Can't feel my arms or legs. Whole body feels like it's on fire. Is this the end?

As Zamiel lies helpless on the ground, his head lolls to the side, allowing him to get a better look at his unconscious, beaten and defeated brother.

"D-Duriel... bro... come on, don't be a little... cough... a little bitch..."

Zamiel's eyes refocus. He tries to wake his brother up, only for his gaze to fall not on Duriel, but on the blood-soaked ground where he landed.

Huh? Blood?

The Baron blinks slowly. His thoughts come, slowly and groggily.

That's not Duriel's blood. It's human blood. We killed a bunch of fleshies before the Croc and Wordsmith came. What the hell? How come Duriel hasn't healed, yet? He's lying in a goddamn bucket of fleshbag blood! That lazy bastard...

A creeping realization crawls into the back of Zamiel's mind, all while the Sphinx stands over and continues to taunt him.

That makes no sense! I don't even need to think to heal when touching human blood. The same is true for Duriel! Why hasn't little bro fixed himself up?!

Zamiel closes his eyes. He ignores Kar's words, even as Kar starts to lean forward and grab him.

Something ain't right. My little bro might be dense, but not even his stupidity would stop him from healing! That can only mean... the bastard on the ground ain't Duriel at all!

...He's a fake! An illusion!

Zamiel's eyes bolt open. Multiple realizations rush into his mind as the crocodile grabs him by the neck and lifts his broken, defeated body into the air.

"Hurgh! Nothing to say? After all the pain you've caused? You're trash! Today, your life ends here!"

A glint appears in Zamiel's eyes. "Krrgh! The hell it does!"

The older Battle Brother flicks his finger, activating a special power from within his body. All of a sudden, the pools of human blood on the ground leap toward his back and seep into his armor, making Kar blink in surprise.

"Huh?"

Zamiel gnashes his teeth with rage. As the human blood enters his body, his bones rapidly repair themselves, while his other life-threatening injuries quickly disappear as well.

"Stinking crocodile! Die like the rest!"

BOOM!

Before Kar can react, Zamiel kicks him in the chest, allowing him to break free of the reptile's grip and fling himself to the ground. Zamiel lands on his back and skids for a second before agilely pushing himself to his feet with a thrust of his hands.

"I knew something was off!" Zamiel snarls. "You... you ain't the ding-damn croc! And that fucker over there ain't the Wordsmith! Spawn of a Broodmother, you almost got me!"

The Battle Brother cackles maniacally. "Hahaha! Show yourself, you fairy bitch! Do you think you can fool me with these little tricks?! You're wrong! I saw how you dealt with Bael and Artorias, using your illusory projections! Stop hiding in the shadows like a coward!"

Several seconds pass, while Zamiel pants like crazy.

Slowly, Kar's smile disappears, and a solemn look replaces it.

"Hmph. So what if you figured it out? Are you an idiot? Do you think that just because you called me out, I'll appear? Imbecile. Now that I know you've seen through my illusions, I won't have to hold back anymore."

Jason, the Wordsmith, vanishes. He reappears next to Zamiel, startling the Baron. His fist crashes upon Zamiel's face, sending the demon sprawling to the side.

"What a fool. You should have stayed quiet," 'Jason' says. "If you hadn't announced your genius discovery, you might have caught me offguard. Now, you won't."

Zamiel, sprawled in a puddle of blood, absorbs it into his body. A wicked grin spreads across his face as he feels his body not only repair itself, but also strengthen ever so slightly.

"Foolish fairy. I don't need to cheat or play dirty to beat the likes of you. If the Wordsmith were actually here, I'd probably lose... but he isn't! All you are is a hack! An imitator! You can summon projections to attack me, but you can't pull off the fearsome feats he has! You're not even a tenth as frightening!!"

Feeling emboldened, Zamiel's morale skyrockets! He jumps to his feet and pounds his fists together, summoning a wall of hammers above himself. Fifty weapons hover above his head, conjured by the Baron's magic.

"Where the hell is my little brother, you witch?! Let me guess! You separated him from me with an illusory wall! I can't see or hear Duriel, but he's still here somewhere, nearby! Isn't that right? Hahaha! I've fought your kind before! I know all your tricks!"

Kar and Jason's expressions harden, and they speak in unison.

"We will see."

* * *

A fearsome battle, ten times scarier than before, explodes inside Blinker's illusory space. No longer does Zamiel hold back. Instead, as Blinker summons several other copies of Kar to attack the Battle Brother, Zamiel's eyes glow with ravenous energy.

I have to give it to this bitch. She nearly got me! I let my guard down, all because I believed the Wordsmith had actually shown up! But he didn't. Now that I understand the reality of my situation, I know the fairy queen only beat me because my will was lacking! However... no more. I'll grab that little maggot and squeeze her into bloody pulp!

Blinker and Zamiel trade hundreds of blows. The explosive detonations of her projected phantoms meeting his fists and weapons rings out across the entire battlefield. Sometimes, Blinker one-ups Zamiel and sends him flying, but no matter where he lands, there's always blood nearby, allowing him to heal.

Blinker watches from afar. Her expression distorts as she keeps her true body hidden with an illusory barrier.

"Damn... how does he keep getting back up? Is he a freaking vampire or something? I know demons love blood, but this is ridiculous."

Zamiel doesn't hear her whispered words. Instead, he slashes down with his weapon and cuts through one of the illusory Wordsmiths, causing a terrible backlash to shoot into Blinker's body.

"Augh!"

The fairy's illusions shimmer and lose focus for a second before returning to normal. Zamiel doesn't miss this detail.

"Hehe... as expected! You're weakening, aren't you, little woman?! How many phantoms have you sent to fight me? Twenty? Haha!! Each one will require more of your attention! You're sure to slip up somewhere-"

"Shut up!" An illusory Kar roars. He bashes the back of Zamiel's head, catching the Baron by surprise. However, as Zamiel stumbles to his knees, he flicks his finger and calls down a hammer from above.

Boom!

The summoned weapon crashes against the phantom Kar's skull, exploding the reptile into particles of light. Blinker howls in pain as another mana backlash hits her body, making her legs weaken and her wings lose some of their strength.

The pressure on the Fairy Queen increases noticeably. She wipes a few tiny drops of sweat from her forehead with a trembling hand. "Damn! Trying to fight two monstrous Barons at once isn't as easy as I expected! These jip-japping-jerks are both stronger than Dukes! What the heck is their secret?!"

Blinker's eyes flick away from Zamiel, toward a second illusory space sealed off by a false wall. Inside it, Duriel battles another copy of Kar and Jason, but unlike Zamiel, the fool has yet to figure out their identities.

"I'd rather kill myself than lose to you, Wordsmith!" Duriel yells. He swings his fist at the Wordsmith's projection, but Jason dodges with a Word of Power.

"Teleport."

Once again, the Wordsmith easily evades Duriel's attack, causing the younger Battle Brother to hit nothing but air. Enraged, he calls down a hailstorm of swords from the sky and sends them flying at Blinker's projections. The illusory combatants disappear for a moment, then reappear after his attack misses, making Duriel curse again.

"Shrakh! How do you dodge every time?!"

Jason shrugs. "Magic, my good fellow."

"Magic, my ass! You're a slippery little dick! Why don't you stand still for a second and accept my attack like a real man?!"

Jason smirks. "That's because I'm not a real man, you addle-brained simpleton. You wouldn't understand."

"Ha! At least you admit it!"

The incredibly handsome Jason, his projection far more incredible-looking than the real one, flips his hair to the side with a flick of his head. "Every minute you fight me is a minute you're not helping your troops. The longer this battle lasts, the better it is for me."

"Like I care," Duriel grunts. "You think I give a damn about these dipshits? The other demons can burn! I'm only here for me, myself, and my big bro. Kill the others if you want, idiot!"

The Wordsmith, Sphinx, and younger Battle Brother resume their combat, but Blinker's heart grows heavier.

The great thing about projections is that they can injure and kill physical beings. I also don't have to focus too hard to control them, because they have their own egos. The problem is that they still consume a lot of freaking mana! Not only that, but when they get killed, it's ME who gets badly hurt! If these Battle Brothers continue ripping my projected boys to pieces, I'll almost certainly die.

Blinker's eyes flicker around as she starts to worry and fret.

What should I do? I could just leave. I came here thinking I could kill Kar's worst enemies with ease, but the frigging doodoo-heads hid their real strength! If I leave, they'll kill more of my friends... and I can't allow that to happen!

Zamiel's attacks multiply in strength and ferocity. While Blinker frets over what action to take, the older Battle Brother grabs the massive warhammer off his back, rushes toward a Wordsmith's projection, and swings it upward, blasting the phantom Jason's chin with all his strength. The projected being explodes into particles of light, sending agony into Blinker's body a moment later.

"Eeyahh!!"

The fairy loses control of her magic for a moment, causing all of the illusions and the illusory wall separating Zamiel and Duriel to flicker. For a brief instant, Zamiel and Duriel catch sight of one another before the projections repair themselves.

Duriel blinks. "Huh? Wait, was that my big bro?"

He glances behind himself, at the body of his 'big bro' laying on the ground, beaten and broken. Just like how Zamiel say his little brother get 'defeated' earlier, so too did Duriel see Zamiel's crushing loss to the Wordsmith.

The younger Battle Brother stares in shock as several gears slowly turn inside his mostly-empty head.

"Sh... shit! That punk ain't Zammy-boy! It's a fake! Don't tell me I ain't been fighting the ding-damn Wordsmith and Sphinx this whole time, but some posers?!"

As Blinker regains her bearings, she notices Duriel's words, causing a chill to build inside her heart.

Damn! They both figured it out! This isn't good! Zamiel already knows the weakness of my projections. If Duriel realizes it too, then...

Boom!

Blinker's head explodes with pain mid-thought as Duriel lunges forward and attacks Kar's projection, blasting it with his fist. The projected Sphinx doesn't immediately break apart, but its pain still transmits to Blinker and nearly makes her faint.

"Gah! I... I can't take it... much longer!"

Too weary to continue, Blinker desummons all of her projections, causing the illusory space to disappear. Both Battle Brothers spot one another as the invisible barriers separating them fade away, but Blinker still keeps herself hidden within a concealed barrier.

"Bro! You're alive!" Duriel yells. "Haha! Lemme guess, it was that Fairy Queen, wasn't it? I knew she was behind it the whole time!"

Zamiel struts over to Duriel while flicking his eyes around to look for the invisible fairy. "Tch. Don't lie to me, you big galunk. You only just figured out that bitch was pulling your strings. Admit it!"

"Heh, you got me! Now where's that tiny little bird go, eh?" Duriel says, as his menacing gaze sweeps around the area.

"She's still here, but don't bother wasting your time. If we had a big area-attack, we could blast the world to pieces and catch her in the crossfire, but that ain't our specialty. You hear that, little fairy?! You're getting off easy! Next time you show up, I won't be so nice! Bahaha!"

Blinker shivers. She lowers her head and flies away, deep shame etched into her face.

Dang it. I'm so stupid! I shouldn't have come here alone! I couldn't even stop two measly Barons by myself...

As she leaves, the Battle Brothers turn toward the humans, all of whom have spotted them and quickly surrounded the Barons.

"Targets sighted! Where are Commanders Kar and Hiro?"

"I saw them fighting the Barons! Did they lose? Is that possible?"

"I don't know, but it doesn't matter. Open fire! Kill them while they're distracted!"

Just as the troops level their weapons toward the Battle Brothers, a female voice takes over the intercom.

"Commander Hiro speaking. All troops, hold your fire. I'll fight the Battle Brothers myself."

Phoebe Hiro, leader of the Tarus II resistance, orders her troops to fall back. A blip appears on the Eastern Front's radar as they spot a massive, heavily armored exosuit-wearing trooper jump into the sky and fall toward the Battle Brother's positions.

"Mother of- what the heck is that exosuit?! Is that the Commander?!"

"It's gigantic! It must be fifteen feet tall!"

The soldiers transmit to one another, their voices inaudible outside of their helmets. The Battle Brothers suddenly raise their eyes skyward and turn slightly pale as they spot the bipedal machine falling toward them.

"Shrakh! Look out!"

Zamiel and Duriel jump apart just in the nick of time, right as Phoebe Hiro's experimental exosuit crashes where they stood only moments before.

BOOM!

An explosion of dirt and dust erupts from the impact zone, spraying both Barons with filth. From the center of the small crater, a ten-ton metallic biped rises to its feet, towering over the Barons with a menacing presence. Its blood-red coloration, mixed with black outlines and a golden helmet, makes it resemble a dark blood-god, one that has come to reap demonic souls.

A triple-barreled minigun sits inside the massive biped's grip, held by its left hand. The other hand holds a tremendous kite-shield, one half as big as the machine's entire body. Atop its head, two 'small' revolver-sized gun barrels aim wherever the pilot gazes, allowing them to fire smaller, more precise shots at enemies.

Finally, attached to the gigantic exosuit's back, two jet-thrusters rest, making it capable of leaping skyward and traveling great distances in a single bound.

The pilot, Phoebe Hiro, speaks. "Looks like I got here just in the nick of time. You pipsqueaks must think you're hot stuff. Unfortunately for you, you won't kill another human today, or ever again."

Her voice booms across the nearby battlefield, amplified by her exosuit's auditory systems. The nearby troopers cheer in their hearts, excited by their Commander's strong words.

However, a few of them worry about her condition. Didn't she get shot out of the sky by these same two demons? Is she alright? Did Belial heal her?

Zamiel smiles. "Hah! The Hero's Wife! Great. Now we don't have to go looking for you. Dumb bitch! A bit of metal won't protect your soft, squishy body from the likes of the Battle Brothers!"

Duriel pounds his chest. "Yeah! What big bro said!"

Not far away from the three combatants, Blinker, still hidden within an illusory space, flies behind Phoebe.

Ack! Phoebe, what are you doing?! I can't leave if you show up! Grr!! I'll just have to help you from the shadows, then. Silly woman!

Blinker examines the massive exosuit from behind and frowns.

What the heck IS that thing anyway? It's gigantic! I've seen lots of Phoebe's exosuits, but this thing is crazy! It's way scarier looking than anything she's revealed before. Has she been hiding this thing the whole time?

Suddenly, Phoebe swings her triple-barreled minigun toward Zamiel.

"Think fast, little Baron."

BRRRRRRT!

A hailstorm of bullets blasts out of the weapon, startling Zamiel. He jumps aside an instant before the weapon fires, only for his eyes to bulge out of his head as he spots huge clouds of dirt and mud rocketing into the atmosphere from the bullet impacts.

Shrakh! If that weapon hits me, I'm a GONER!

Part 251: Swift Soul Searching

Mind, body, and soul. These are the three components that make up a living body; a being with intelligence, self-awareness, and the ability to contemplate their existence.

And as of now, I am only two of those things: A soul with the will of a mind guiding it.

The universe flashes past me as I rush toward my destination, guided by my overriding command to 'Locate Phoebe Hiro.' Light-speed, warp-speed, and other such technical measures of velocity don't even begin to comprehend the blinding pace of a Wordsmithed flight. The power of magic surpasses reality, allowing me to race across the galaxy within seconds, traveling a ludicrous distance faster than any other non-magical method could ever allow.

All of a sudden, the stars whizzing past me at blistering speeds disappear. My soul-form lurches to an abrupt stop before a ball of blue and green hovering amidst the blackness of the void.

Tarus II.

I stare at the planet for a moment, deliberately halting my advance to gaze at its splendor. Oceans cover some 80% of the planet's surface, with wild badlands far beyond the reach of Hero City, and another continent to the west, just at the edge of my vision. Humanity has yet to explore 5% of the world we reside upon, and someday, we will cover it with our population and turn it into a second Earth.

That notion assumes we will first survive whatever attack the demons have foisted upon us.

I resume my course and rush at the planet's surface, heading toward the blinking pulse of mana indicating my wife's position.

The moment I break through the cloud cover, I slow my descent. The darkened night-time surface of Tarus's surface might normally be impossible for a pair of physical eyes to envision, but when I sweep my soul-vision around, I easily make out tens of thousands of pinpricks of light.

To the west, an undead army floods out of two colossal teleportation gates, while not far from them, countless demons surge from the Tarus II Warpgate as well. These enemies spread to the north, west, south, and east in droves, forcing the resistance fighters to envelop them to prevent leakage.

However, what truly catches my attention are the 'soul glimmers' under the soil, deep beneath Tarus II's surface. Thousands of demons and undead swarm under the feet of the humans and monsters, my friends, all headed behind the back lines of the battlefield. Based on their positioning, it won't take the demons long before they can catch my friends in a pincer attack and prevent their escape!

My gaze hardens as I comprehend the devious plot of the bastards attacking my world.

I gave Ose a choice. I extended a welcoming hand and offered her a chance to coexist with humanity. She replied with a backstab when I wasn't here to fight back.

And why would she do such a thing?

Because she's a coward. She doesn't dare fight me head-on. Only by resorting to tricks and deceptions can she hope to brutalize humanity.

I tried to play nice, but she repaid me with a slap to my face.

Unforgivable.

With rage clouding my vision, I zip over to Phoebe's position, only to come to a halt some distance away. To my shock, I find my wife battling alone against two insanely powerful magic users! Their mana burns a thousand times hotter than any other source nearby, making them appear to my soul-vision as twin suns irradiating the battlefield.

After more than ten seconds of squinting, I finally recognize them.

The Battle Brothers! Kar's worst enemies, the bastards who murdered all of the crocodiles!

Yet what shocks me the most isn't that they've shown up, but that Kar isn't anywhere in the vicinity! Could it be? When Phoebe left a message, didn't she imply that the Battle Brothers somehow defeated Kar?!

Impossible. Kar is extremely powerful, while the Battle Brothers are only Barons! Something else must have happened.

As I examine the battlefield, it occurs to me that, even without a real frame of reference, the Battle Brothers seem far stronger than any Barons I've seen before. Phoebe's armor, a heavily augmented exosuit Solomon helped her design several months ago, shreds the ground around both of the Battle Brothers with a triple-barreled minigun. The weapon fires countless bullets without cessation, its power stemming from the fact that its energy source is magical, not electrical. The bullets, comprised almost entirely from densely packed mana, get generated on the fly by a powerpack attached to the exosuit's back. This allows Phoebe to fire tens of thousands of bullets without so much as warming up the gun's barrel!

I stay in the air and observe for a minute as the Battle Brothers dodge Phoebe's hailstorm of death and fury. They leap from left to right, backflip, and jump into the air, all while summoning ethereal weapons from an unknown dimension. Swords, axes, hammers, and maces smash and crash against Phoebe's armor, but not even so much as a scratch appears on the demonstone-infused nanites.

"You'll have to do better than that," Phoebe yells, taunting the Barons. "Don't think you can leave here alive, you filthy mutts! All of you who attacked my world will die!"

"Stop running your yap!" Zamiel, the older Battle Brother, yells. He grabs a one-ton warhammer from his back and rushes at Phoebe, intending to bash her armor with all his strength.

Suddenly, right before Zamiel can land his attack...

Foop!

The Baron disappears and reappears half a foot backward, throwing off his aim. The Battle Brother misses and stumbles awkwardly, the weight of his swing sending him stumbling forward.

"Gahk! Shit! Fucking fairy! She's still here!"

I blink in surprise.

Does he mean... Blinker? Did she teleport him?

The moment the question pops into my head, I notice a flicker of mana not far behind Phoebe. A tiny but bright ball of mana hovers behind her back, the majority of its light concealed behind an illusory barrier.

Zamiel disappears. He teleports right into the path of Phoebe's minigun and gets blasted fifteen times in the blink of an eye, sending him screaming backwards, where he crashes into a massive puddle of drying blood. "Aaargh!"

"Bro? Bro!" Duriel yells, shocked by this new development.

I breathe a sigh of relief. With one Baron down, and beaten so easily, at that, it seems Phoebe won't have much issue dealing with the other one.

My wife seems to have the same idea. She turns to fight Duriel, only for Blinker's voice to speak from all around her. "No! That Baron isn't dead, Phoebe! These Battle Brothers are weird! They can instantly heal any wound if they touch someone else's blood! I've never seen anything like it!"

Too late, by the time Blinker explains, Zamiel has already jumped back to his feet. The older Battle Brother breathes hard and glances at Duriel.

"We can't win, little bro! If it was just the human, this would be a piece of cake, but she has the Fairy Queen helping her! Let's get outta here!"

"What? No! We can't run away, Zammy!" Duriel guffaws. "What'll the other demons say?!"

"Screw the other demons!" Zamiel howls. "I don't give a shrakh what they say! Besides, we ain't running away! We're, uhh... we're executing a tactical retreat to return with reinforcements!"

Phoebe aims her minigun at Duriel and squeezes the trigger, but Duriel sees her attack coming and leaps straight into the air, narrowly avoiding death. With a quick flick of his fingers, he summons a gigantic flying greatsword beneath his feet and rides it like a surfboard.

"Shit! You almost got me! Alright bro, I'm gonna, uh, attack in the other direction! Yeah! You coming?"

Zamiel replies by leaping onto the head of a massive flying hammer. He soars up to his brother and nods. "Let's go!"

Before the two of them can bail, a formless pressure suddenly grabs hold of Duriel.

Foop!

The giant younger brother once again teleports into Phoebe's range, with his back directly in front of her minigun.

"Shrakh!"

Before Duriel can react, Phoebe squeezes the trigger. A hail of bullets rips through his body, sending him staggering forward to collapse into the dirt.

Zamiel, still flying above, screams in rage. "You bitch, that's cheating!"

I can almost hear Phoebe's smile through her voice. "Haha. I told you... I won't let either of you leave alive. I always keep my promises!"

She aims the barrel of the gun at the back of Duriel's head and squeezes the trigger.

BRRRRRT!

Right before the bullets burst his brain like a water balloon, Duriel's body turns into a shadow, as does Zamiel's.

Both Battle Brothers disappear, making Phoebe's bullets rip up the ground where Duriel laid only a moment before.

"What?! He vanished? How?!"

"Stinky demon magic!" Blinker chirps. She flies in front of Phoebe and sweeps her gaze around the area, but doesn't see anything.

"Who did that?" Blinker mutters. "Was it the Battle Brothers? A different demon? I don't know! Come on, Phoebe, we can't let them get away!"

Blinker, ready and rarring to go, starts to fly toward the horde of undead being kept at bay by the human commandos a few hundred feet to the west. However, Phoebe holds up her palm.

"No. Let them go for now, Blinker. I'm still injured and in a lot of pain."

Blinker turns to look at Phoebe's giant, menacing exosuit. "You are?"

Phoebe nods. "After the Battle Brothers shot down my plane, I injured my leg pretty badly. I've temporarily patched it up with a nanite injection, but it still hurts like hell."

While Phoebe and Blinker chat, I float a little lower to hear their conversation better. At that moment, Blinker suddenly flinches in fright and jerks her head upwards. She looks directly at me.

"Aaahh! A ghost! What the heck is that thing?!"

My heart skips a beat. "You can see me?! Blinker! It's me, Jason!"

Blinker starts to conjure magic, but she pauses mid-movement. "Huh? Jason? What the heck! How can that be you? You're just a blob of light!"

I nod my head, only to feel strange about the motion, given I apparently don't have one.

"It's complicated. More importantly, I'm surprised you can see me in the first place. That's great, though, it helps me a lot. Can you tell Phoebe that I'm here? I want to get an update on what happened while I was... away."

Blinker nods slowly, as a sparkle of light appears in her eyes. She turns to Phoebe and quickly relays everything I've said, making Phoebe raise her head to look in my general direction.

"What? Jason's here? Did you hit your head, Blinker? I don't see anything."

"He's in a soul-form for some reason," Blinker says, shrugging. "I didn't even know I could see something like that!"

"I, err, cast some extra magic on my soul before I left my body behind," I explain. "It's complicated."

I spend a few minutes catching up with Blinker while Phoebe stands guard, swiveling her minigun around to look for enemies. She continues guiding the allied army while I get the lowdown on the current situation, just so she isn't wasting any time or effort.

Eventually, Blinker nods.

"Wow, that's incredible. An artifact from the Primordial Era, and you even fought the Volgrim! What the heck, Jason? We thought you might have died, but instead, you were off having fun adventures! Meanie! You should have taken me along!"

I sigh. "Sorry, uh, maybe next time. Look, I'm going to teleport back here in an hour or two. My body is currently constructing a device that will allow me to control Camael's Cube. Once it finishes, I can send it on its way and teleport back here to help. Until then, I'm just going to perform a little reconnaissance."

Blinker nods, but her gaze darkens. "You have to be careful, Jason. If I can see you, then it's possible someone among our enemies could, too. You can't Wordsmith in your soul-form, right? Don't risk your life all willy-nilly!"

I nod. "Don't worry, I won't. Tell Phoebe everything I've told you. If Belial can't heal her, I will. I have more than enough mana to completely overwhelm the demons, now."

I gnash my teeth together. "I'll make those bastards pay for coming here. They've killed too many of my friends! Once I show up, they'll rue the day they crossed me."

"Yeah!" Blinker yells, while pumping her fist. "That's the spirit! Alright, I have to help Phoebe manage the situation. Kar's still being healed by Sammy, so if you could check on him for me, I'd appreciate it."

"Sure," I say. "Oh, and one more thing..."

Blinker listens intently as I tell her about the demons burrowing beneath our feet.

"Thanks for the heads-up, but we know! Phoebe has a bunch of mines buried around the battlefield. Whenever one goes off, it usually kills a Burrower, but more importantly, it tells us where those poopy-doops are digging! We've been able to follow their movements pretty well up to now."

"Great, glad to hear it," I say. I start to float upward, only to pause. "Uh, can you, erm, tell Phoebe I love her and I'm sorry I didn't call for... however long it's been?"

"Haha! You're so awkward!" Blinker teases. "Little lovebird wants me to tell his wifey that he loves her! Hahaha!"

"Oh, shut up," I reply, blushing hard enough for my whole soul to turn red. "Just tell her! Geez."

I levitate skyward, leaving Blinker behind, all while her cackling laughter embarrasses me to no end.

When I get back, I'm gonna give that bratty little fairy a 'noogie.'

Minutes later, I begin darting around the battlefield at high speeds. With my Wordsmithed goal of 'locating Phoebe Hiro' complete, I regain full control of my soul's movements. To my astonishment, the speed of my soul is unbelievably fast. Unlike a physical body, with its biological limitations, my soul can travel across the galaxy in an instant, let alone any distance involving a mere planetary scale.

I jump to the southern battlefield, where the undead flood against Lieutenant Samuel's force of 30,000 soldiers. The first thing I discover is that, unlike living demons, Mephisto's undead don't show up in my soul vision at all. A very small number do; the elites among elites, but the vast majority of them appear to be soulless, puppeteered bodies running on pure instinct. It makes me realize that Mephisto's forces are probably only a tenth as strong as when they were alive. Without a mind and soul to guide them, the river of undead are little more than drooling, angry bodies hellbent on killing and eating.

After examining the stability of the southern situation, I jump to the west, where Mephisto's undead-summoning warpgates stand. Countless creatures swarm out, their type and strength a mixture from weak to strong. The western wall, now collapsed from god-only-knows what attacks, is little more than a pile of pulverized stone and steel. Demons and undead swarm over it to attack 20,000 exosuit-wearing soldiers, all of them firing ceaselessly with rapid-fire weapons into the fray.

Finally, I flit over to the northern front. Here, a surprisingly firm defense of more than 50,000 soldiers, featuring a huge mixture of monsters as well as humans, hold firm against the demonic onslaught. Remembering the King Cannons atop the northern mountain range, it doesn't surprise me that Phoebe would put so much effort into defending the north compared to the south and west. Among the troopers, what catches my eye is Brunhilda's contingent of Felorians, all of them practitioners of a secret magical power known as Chi.

Brunhilda's warriors rip through the demons and undead as if they were lava golems rampaging in the arctic. Her spear stabs, smashes, and pulverizes the heads of any undead that dare wander into her range.

As I fly overhead, for a brief moment, Brunhilda flicks her vision upward to look directly at me, making my heart jump. She lowers her gaze a moment later, making me wonder if it was simply a coincidence.

Afterward, I disappear from the battlefield, my thoughts churning like crazy.

Not only a high-ranking Volgrim, but a fairy and possibly a human can see my soul-form. That realization makes the hair stand up on the back of my neck. I'm not a purely ethereal being, but instead, something with tangibility that certain other beings can perceive. That means I have to be extra cautious in the future.

With merely a thought, I zip to the east, toward Hero City. Luckily, I don't spot any Burrowers underneath the city's limits.

In less than a second, I arrive at Hero City's western side, where the hospital stands, built at the edge of a two-hundred-foot cliff. When I fly inside, I spot hundreds of injured humans and monsters, some of them badly wounded and in critical condition. Almost mechanically, I try to Wordsmith and heal them, only to realize my efforts are futile.

While flitting about, I spot one particular hospital room where the most critically wounded appear to be lined up outside. I slip inside to find Samantha pouring healing energy into a female soldier's body. The woman chokes out blood and coughs weakly, then offers Samantha a faint smile.

"Don't... don't blame yourself... you did the best... you..."

Her words cease, and her head lolls to the side. The woman passes away, and Samantha stops her healing magic.

The succubus stares silently at the dead soldier, a look of emptiness in her eyes. "Rest in peace."

Exhaling deeply, Samantha nods at a morbidly obese demoness next to her. "Rosalia. Bring in the next one."

"Yes, Emperor."

I hover in the air and slowly wave my hand to try and get Samantha's attention, but she gazes stonily at the far wall and doesn't see me.

Suddenly, a voice speaks up from the corner of the room behind me.

"Huh? Daddy?"

My heart nearly jumps in fright! I turn to the side and spot Daisy sitting on a chair, looking directly at me with stars in her eyes.

"Daddy! It's daddy! He's here!"

Daisy jumps out of the chair and points at me excitedly. Her words shake Samantha out of her stupor. She looks at Daisy, then follows her finger to my general position. "Huh? Daddy? Do you mean... Jason?"

"Uh-huh!" Daisy says, excitedly hopping up and down. "He's right there, aunt S'matha! Can't you see him?!"

Samantha looks in my general direction, but her eyes pass through me. "No, sweetheart. Maybe you need to get some sleep. You've been awake for almost two days."

I'm not entirely sure why the heck my daughter can see me, but I'm still glad. I float down to her level and try to touch her face, only for my hand to pass through her cheek. "Hey, sweetie. How are you holding up? Are you doing okay?"

Daisy nods excitedly. "Yeah! Yeah! Me and aunt S'matha are healing all the hurt people! We just wave our hands and WHOOSH all the boo-boos go away!"

Suddenly, Daisy hesitates. A look of horror appears in her eyes. "W-why are you a ghost, daddy? Did... did you die?!"

"No, no," I say quickly waving my hands. "Daddy has magic, remember? I used my magic to make a ghost-body, just so I could say hi to my little girl. Right now I'm really far away, but I'll come back very soon, okay?"

Samantha watches with a puzzled expression while Daisy babbles at the air, but her only response is to slowly shake her head. It's clear from just one look that she thinks Daisy must be hallucinating my existence.

After I finish reassuring Daisy that her daddy definitely isn't dead, I say, "Oh, and tell aunt Samantha that daddy says hi, okay? Uh, tell her that mommy is fine, too. She got hurt a little bit, but daddy will definitely take care of her."

Daisy nods furiously. "Okay! I love you, daddy! Come back soon!"

"I love you too, sweetheart."

I try to kiss Daisy's head, but my face awkwardly melts through her skull, allowing me to see her brains. Ew!

With a shudder, I fly into the sky and disappear through the roof, leaving Daisy and Samantha behind.

* * *

Another few minutes later, I zip around the eastern side of Hero City. After scouting the area, I ready myself to return to Blinker to let her know about the situation outside the battlefield, only for my stomach to flip-flop in alarm!

Only a mile away from Hero City, several 'blips' of soul energy show up within my vision range. I fly closer and gasp as I spot three glowing beacons of demonic mana standing around, talking to one another. The moment I get close enough, I listen intently to make out their conversation.

A demoness clothed in long, gray robes, growls at a male nearby. "-the signal. I think we should summon the gates now. We've already got the city surrounded. Once we build up our forces, we can rush the barrier all at once."

"Ose's orders are absolute," The male says, his garb a green-colored bunch of robes. "We're only Warpers. We don't have the authority to override Emperor Ose. Do you think you're smarter than her?"

The female's expression crumples. "...No."

"Then shut your trap and wait for the signal."

My heart skips several beats as I gather that these three demons must have somehow skirted around the battlefield and slipped into our backlines! They're waiting to open portals so they can attack us!

While I listen, my gaze falls on the third mana signature belonging to the demon who hasn't spoken yet. To my surprise, not only is their mana signal far brighter than the other two, but the Warpers don't look at the other demon for even a moment, as if that demon's presence were invisible.

I draw a little closer and blink in surprise.

The third demon stands with their back to me. However, what surprises me the most is that my gaze pierces through part of their body!

With a start, I suddenly realize the other demon isn't really there! Whoever they are, their presence is almost holographic and immaterial in nature, like me! They might be a fellow errant soul!

The moment I have this epiphany, the third demon suddenly stiffens. They turn around to look at me, revealing the face of a very familiar woman.

Ose!

The Emperor of Infiltration stares at me for a moment and blanks out. "Hm? Another Astral Body? Who the Devil are you?"

In the blink of an eye, she rushes toward me, a look of venomous murder on her face. She soars into the sky and balls her hands into fists, aiming to pummel me into a bloody pulp. The instant before Ose arrives, she suddenly stops and reverses direction, her angry expression turning to shock and horror.

"What?! The Wordsmith?!"

My heart explodes with hatred and rage. I've suddenly stumbled upon a prime opportunity I never expected! Ose, now in a soul-body like mine, hovers mere feet away, clearly alarmed by my presence.

"Hello, Ose. Seems you've been up to no good."

Ose gnashes her teeth. "Tch! How dare you step within my domain, the Astral Realm! Now that you've seen my Astral Body, you've sealed your fate, Wordsmith!"

I shake my head.

"Oh, I don't think so."

Part 252: Astral Soul-Eater

Ose and I hover some two hundred feet above Tarus II's surface, like hot air balloons tethered to the ground below. The night-time gloom only serves to make our glowing, ethereal bodies stand out even more from the blackness surrounding us. However, the fact only a few beings on Tarus II can even see us shows how odd our existences are.

The Demon Emperor's enraged face contorts into a nasty grin. She nods slowly at me while baring her teeth. "For you to show up in the Astral Plane before me, you have a death wish, Wordsmith. Even when I was a Baron, there were no other beings capable of confronting me in this body. Stalking me in my strongest form is the most foolish of moves you could possibly dream up! How do you imagine this confrontation will end, other than with your life fading to the nether?"

I smirk. "That's where you're wrong. I didn't stalk you here. I just happened to come across your scheming skulduggery while I was sightseeing. But hey, if it's a fight you want, and if you think you can defeat the Wordsmith in a one-on-one battle, then come at me."

Ose hesitates. My words have the desired effect of making her momentarily reconsider a direct offensive. "Hmm. Yes, indeed. Of all the opponents I've faced, your abilities are certainly the most unpredictable and dangerous... however..."

Before finishing her sentence, Ose's eyes suddenly crackle with electrical power. Two bolts of lightning materialize in her hands as she 'jumps' a hundred feet upward in the blink of an eye.

"...we'll see if you can back up that arrogance, Wordsmith!"

BOOM!

A lightning bolt darts directly toward me! My body blurs to the side as I dodge right, then zip forward to dodge a second bolt.

Over and over, Ose hurls electrical orbs, lightning bolts, and currents of energy in my direction, each one containing thunderous might! Below me, the planet explodes with terrific power as her supposedly formless, ethereal lightning crashes against the dirt and detonates like grenades!

While dodging, I happen to notice the two demons from earlier jerking their heads in the direction of the explosions.

"What the hell? Did someone discover us? Are the humans attacking?"

"I don't know! Take cover!"

They activate portals, jump through, and close the gates behind them.

I set aside the Warpers for now, while knowing that since they've come here once, they can open portals on Tarus II any time they wish. Now that they've appeared behind our backlines, there's no telling when other portals might open up! I'll have to deal with them after my fight with Ose.

Again and again, Ose flings lightning at me from above. After the 20th consecutive attack, my body blurs again, and I arrive a foot away from Ose with my fist raised.

Ose's eyes widen. "What!"

Crack!

I plow my fist into Ose's smug little face and send her flying to the planet's surface below! However, she doesn't crash into the soil, but instead passes through it harmlessly, making me slowly nod. As expected, our bodies can phase through solid matter. Yet, somehow, her lightning can still interact with the physical world! How utterly terrifying! With that knowledge, it occurs to me she's always been capable of assassinating me, Phoebe, or even Daisy without us seeing her attack coming! The fact she hasn't hints that she must have bigger plans for me than a mere execution! Perhaps stealing my body for her own purposes wasn't out of the question after all.

A faint sensation of danger appears behind me. I flicker to the side out of pure instinct, just in time to avoid Ose's lightning infused fist! The Emperor of Infiltration swings at the back of my head but misses, while at the same time slightly increasing my knowledge of my soul's capabilities. Having never fought in my soul-form, I learn valuable new things every second of the fight.

Ose and I begin trading blows rapid-fire. Our bodies move faster than the speed of sound, while our fists clash with the strength of thunderous typhoons. Over and over, she or I flicker away and dodge attacks, or deflect with careful precision, but rarely do either of us take a truly dangerous hit to a vital area.

After a minute of intense combat, we jump apart while keeping our fists raised. Ose's long white hair flutters in the breeze, confusing me even further as I realize that despite her 'Astral Form' being completely invisible, she's still capable of interacting with the physical world in ways I can't.

Ose, too, seems to have similar thoughts about me, but in reverse.

"Haha... Wordsmith. You scared me before, popping up in my domain out of nowhere. But, in the end, it seems I had nothing to fear! What little hesitation I felt toward you has all but disappeared."

I raise an eyebrow. "Oh? You were scared of little old me? You hid it well."

"Slick words from he who hath a glib tongue," Ose comments dryly. She lowers her hands to her side and flashes a sinister smile. "But only words, nonetheless. Did you think I wouldn't notice? During our battle, I thought of at least five hundred ways you could defeat me in the blink of an eye. Since I'm still standing here, that means either you're far stupider than me, which is a given, but also... you can't use your Wordsmithing."

My heart sinks slightly. "...I don't need Wordsmithing to defeat the likes of you."

"Don't you? Hahaha! That's not all I figured out, you imbecile. I was blind before, and my heart fell into turmoil when you first appeared. I assumed, foolishly, that you had assumed an Astral Form, like me! But who knew the great Wordsmith would actually separate his entire soul from his body?! Hahaha!! Oh, it makes my stomach ache with laughter! I bet you don't even know the difference between the two!"

I shrug. "Nope. Don't suppose you'd let this simpleton in on the difference?"

"Of course not," Ose replies, her voice turning to ice. "Only a moron would tell her opponent their strengths and weaknesses. Better to let you figure it out when our fists collide!"

Fwish!

Ose lunges toward me, and our battle begins anew, but ten times more intense than before. This time, when our fists collide, Ose spits lightning from her mouth and strikes my face, making agony drench my soul. "Argh!"

An instant later, before I can blink away the pain, her fist hits my head hard enough for me to see stars. The ground rushes at me, and I fall inside of it, plunging myself into a darkness blacker than the void!

I quickly shake off the pain and slow my descent, only to lose my bearings. With the inability to contact and touch my surroundings, and with my soul unaffected by gravity... I literally can't tell up from down.

A premonition of danger rushes at the right side of my body. I turn just in time to see the brightness of Ose's soul rushing me through the planet's crust. Once again, we resume combat, but this time, Ose doesn't use any of her electrical powers.

Wham! Pow! Wham!

Our fists collide. I land a lucky blow on Ose's collarbone, but she barely grunts in response. She plow her fist into my nose, making sparks dance in my vision. The longer we fight, the more quickly I come to understand just how dangerous this Emperor is!

Never in all my life have I felt as passive as during this fight! Without my Wordsmithing, I can do little more than rely on my hand-to-hand combat skills, which, while excellent compared to other people, especially given my years of training with Solomon and Phoebe... are barely anything compared to Ose! Her melee capabilities leave me speechless. For every lucky punch I land on her face or chest, she hammers me three times more!

Even worse, the more attacks I take, the lower my strength drops!

Ose laughs evilly. "Hahaha! If you were in an Astral Form, I would certainly be quite afraid of battling you, Wordsmith! Sadly for you, I've fought countless Heroes, demons, angels, and Titans in my Astral Body! Appearing before me in a soul-body was the greatest mistake of your life!"

Boom!

Ose blasts me in the face again, sending me flying even further into the planet's depths.

Suddenly, the blackness of the void instantly reverses to become the brightness of the sun! A noticeable amount of heat assails my soul form, making me wince in surprise. It only takes me two seconds to realize I've arrived inside the planet's upper mantle!

With the intense, unending brightness assailing my vision, I can't even see Ose's soul-form anymore. I quickly raise my fists to protect myself and look around with strained eyes, but no matter how I try to focus my vision, I can't locate my enemy!

Anxious and worried, I glance around, looking for the Emperor of Annihilation. However, after more than ten seconds, she still doesn't attack me.

A thought appears in the back of my head. Is it possible that if I can't see Ose, then she, too, can't see me?

The concept makes sense. Inside the planet's crust, we could still make out each other's locations because of the pitch-blackness surrounding us. However, against the brightness of lava, our bodies become indistinct, like a splatter of white paint on a white wall.

My mind rapidly spins with possibilities. After another ten seconds, Ose still doesn't attack, basically confirming my hypothesis.

If I'm correct, then it's likely Ose, with all her years of astral combat, already knows about this flaw. She must be waiting for me to emerge from the lava to sneak-attack me.

A flicker of cold light passes through my eyes.

If it's an ambush you want...

Instead of flying in the direction Ose punched me from, I turn my body and rush toward the innermost core of Tarus II at full speed. Compared to interstellar distances, traveling toward the inside of a planet doesn't take even one second. Immediately afterward, I keep going, rushing full speed toward the opposite side of the world. Then, suddenly, darkness hits me! I arrive inside Tarus II's crust, fly through it, and emerge at the bottom of an incomprehensibly vast ocean!

After the ocean, I break out into the light of day on the sunny side of Tarus II. I fly above the boundless sea into outer space, circle around, and arrive back at my starting location from an hour ago, directly above Hero City.

For a brief moment, I pause.

Ose might not be in the same spot anymore. But, if she is, perhaps I can see her from here.

I narrow my eyes and focus carefully. My vision enhances, allowing me to 'zoom in' as I learn something about my soul-self that my flesh-self might never have comprehended otherwise: My senses are far sharper as a soul, unburdened by the limitations of a flesh-and-blood body.

Eventually, I locate the mass of writhing lights on Tarus II representing the human and demon armies. I look past them, at the outer borders of Hero City, and eventually spot an especially bright dot of light.

Without hesitation, I rear back my fist and lunge.

Like a meteor descending from Heaven, I barrel toward what I hope is Ose's Emperor-level soul, a brightness far above both Battle Brothers combined.

An instant later, I race through the planet's crust and swing my fist at the insanely bright soul below me.

Ose turns her head at the last moment, but doesn't get even a moment to react.

BOOOM!!

I strike the Emperor of Infiltration with the force of a bomb, not only exploding her head into particles of light, but the rest of her body as well! In the blink of an eye, I scatter Ose's particles across the entirety of Tarus II's underground world, sending her consciousness plummeting into the Great Beyond, where it belongs.

Having learned about all the horrible things she's done to my friends and family, the final look of terror on her face gives me a sadistic sense of pleasure.

After staring at the spot where Ose floated only a moment before, I quickly raise my eyes 'skyward' to spot the denizens of Hero City far in the distance, many miles away. This time, I make out Samantha's Emperor soul, marking her as the brightest light on the horizon. I quickly fly upward, out into the open air, and breathe a sigh of relief.

"I won."

The words come involuntarily from my lips.

However, a strange sense of darkness washes over my soul. The realization that I just murdered someone, even if it meant protecting my friends and family, makes me feel...

...uneasy.

Killing Ose wasn't difficult. Our battle was a little nerve-wracking, but in the end, I prevailed through superior tactics and turning my opponent's arrogance against her.

Still, striking Ose with such a brutal blow felt... different from when I slew Samson.

Unlike Samson, who was a fellow Hero, Ose was an enemy of a different species. Her goals were to genocide or enslave humanity, including myself and my family. Samson, though... he didn't actually hate me or Phoebe. He only wanted to release his anger and finally get revenge for an ancient, long-dead grudge. I had other ways I could have dealt with him.

Slowly, I nod my head.

Killing Ose wasn't pleasant, but perhaps it was necessary. I didn't murder her. She attacked me, and that was after launching an invasion against my world. Perhaps, with her death, the enemy forces will crumble into chaos. Maybe the fall of one enemy can spare countless others.

* * *

All my life, I've believed that ending just one person's life would make my next kill easier, and the next one after that, as well. Now, after actually putting those beliefs into action... it seems I was right.

I'm not sure what to think about my new feelings. Even if murder turns out to be simpler than I expected, and even if my enemy was a demon hell-bent on my destruction, I should still have some internal resistance! I shouldn't be able to justify it this easily!

With a sigh, I float toward the Warpgate Encampment, where humans, monsters, and demons continue to battle one another.

My goal now: To find Blinker and inform her of Ose's death. Once she tells Phoebe, my wife will be sure to look for cracks in our enemies' formations. I've always admired Phoebe. Not only was she one of Arthur's Knights of the Round, but she carries a profound strength and will far beyond mine.

When Phoebe was younger, she was somewhat afraid of drawing blood. She was a gentle and kind person, someone who would hesitate to kill a rampaging lion even if it was hell-bent on taking her life. But after 100,000 years trapped within Bahamut's control, she became a peerless sword, unhesitating and decisive. She carries the same compassion as she did in her youth, but losing everyone she once cared about to the annals of time has made her convictions firmer. No longer will she waver when shedding blood if it means protecting those she loves.

Yes. I admire my wife. I sometimes wonder if, given time, I too will become more like her.

* * *

My eyes flick across the battlefield. Blinker's tiny but bright soul-signal proves difficult to fight among all the dull lights of the demons clashing with humans.

For several minutes, during my search, I witness demons being ripped to pieces by exosuit-wearing troopers, their guns lighting up the darkness with muzzle flashes. Some troopers wield massive, heavy weapons, and smash the demons and undead into bloody mounds of flesh. Others flicker around, using their stealth-type suits to ambush some of the stronger demons and one-hit-kill them.

Eventually, I arrive at the northern side of the battlefield and frown.

"Where the heck did Phoebe go?"

After a moment of contemplation, I slap my forehead.

Idiot! She said she needed medical attention! I bet she retreated to Samantha's side. Blinker probably went with her.

I turn toward Hero City in the distance. Instantly, I arrive above the hospital, my soul-form moving at the speed of thought.

However, the moment I arrive, a jolt of fright rips through my heart!

Before me, hovering in midair, stands Ose, her Astral Body not injured even the slightest!!

The Emperor of Infiltration cackles maniacally. "Hahahaha!!! Oh, that precious look on your face! You greatly amuse me, Wordsmith! Did you think you could kill me with that attack?! You still don't know the difference between an Astral Body and a Soul-Form! Bahaha!! Truly, you have made my day this time, stupid boy!"

"You're alive?!" I yell, bewildered.

Ose's eyes crackle with electricity as she tenses up her body to attack. "Alive and well, you thick-headed nimrod!"

BOOM!

The Emperor crashes into my chest with enough speed that my eyes can't follow her movements. The entire world transforms into a spinning menagerie of lights and colors as I tumble end over end backward, only to arrive inside the planet's crust yet again!

Bang! Bang! Bang!

Ose chases me like a pack of angry wasps. Her fists move ten times faster than before, striking my body from head to toe countless times every second. Waves of agony erupt across my soul, making me scream my voice hoarse. "Aaargh! You fucking- shit! Gahhh!!!"

In the depths of my mind, humiliation emerges; the product of falling for Ose's deception! The fact I assumed she had died enrages me! How could I be so stupid?!

Another emotion follows-up; the feeling of hatred! Ose's brutal attacks leave me no recourse, no way to counter-attack! Her attacks hit with such strength that I can't possibly keep up, making me hate my weakness! How could I ever hope to catch up to the speed of a woman who embodies the element of lightning, a speedster far beyond my comprehension?!

Finally, the torment of failure stings my mind! Each of her punches, each kick, a reminder that I gave her far too much leeway! I underestimated her threat and caused the deaths of my fellow humans! My friends! My loved ones!

"GET THE FUCK OFF ME!"

My humiliation, hatred, and shame combine into an explosive burst of rage, exploding from the core of my soul! All at once, I swing my fist without thinking. It inexplicably crashes against Ose's face, blasting her away from my helpless body!

Stunned, a slight stupor seizes my brain, making me gaze at her astral form flying away!

H-how the hell did I hit her?!

That question proves not only unanswerable, but inconsequential. Instantly, Ose reverses direction and rushes back at me, her fists cocked for another attack.

"You can't win, Wordsmith!!"

My rage doubles!

"The hell I can't!"

BOOM!

I meet Ose's fists with an oppressive strength far beyond the attacks I put out earlier! Even when I rushed at Ose from miles above, the blow I dealt wasn't a tenth as mighty as this one!

"Aaaargh!"

Ose's body explodes into particles of light, blown away by the power behind my attack.

My heart jolts in shock, while many thoughts and questions race in my mind. How did I release such an overbearing strength? How did I manage to accurately sock Ose in the face when I couldn't even follow her movements? Why can Ose return after I destroy her Astral Form? Does it relate to the differences between an Astral and Soul Body?

With no answers in sight, I shove the questions aside, aim my gaze upward, and arrive above Tarus II's surface.

Any second now...

I flick my eyes around, looking everywhere for the bright flash of movement I know will surely come.

"Surprise!"

Bang!

Ose's fist batters the side of my head and sends me hurtling to the right. My heart skips several beats as I curse inwardly. I barely sensed her approach at the very last millisecond, but never saw her coming with my eyes!

Again and again, Ose and I exchange blows, but to my despair, her speed becomes more dominating the more we fight. Only after she hits me hundreds of times do I manage to burst out with rage and detonate her body with a single punch. My normal attacks never hit otherwise, and even if they could, they wouldn't cause her much pain.

After she revives more than ten times, always catching me offguard, I defeat Ose once again, only to clutch my chest and wince in pain. My 'heart' pounds like a drum and squeezes the inside of my chest, making me feel as if I've injected lava into my veins.

Suddenly, Ose's aura rushes at me, but instead of striking me, she stops a short distance away and places her hands on her hips.

"Hahaha! Do you feel it, Wordsmith? Do you finally understand what I said earlier? You, a mere soul-body, dares to combat the master of the Astral Arts on her home turf! What a gas-brained dullard! No matter how many times you kill me, I can simply reform my body and return within seconds!"

I manage to steady the aching in my chest, but she continues taunting me without end.

"That's the sad truth, Wordsmith. Astral Bodies are far superior to Soul Bodies! Since I summon and control my Astral Form remotely, I can continue to use my magic while never putting my soul at risk. But you! If you die even once, you will perish forever! Your soul will dissipate and scatter to the corners of the universe! Unfair, isn't it! Bahaha! You can only cry and despair, Wordsmith; you cannot hope to defeat me!"

I pull my hand away from my chest and swallow heavily. "So... killing your main body will destroy your Astral Body as well, then?"

"Naturally," Ose says, her smile expanding even further. "But the same is true of you. I can kill your main body and your soul will vanish as well. It's just, I have the option to extinguish your soul separately! While unfair, I cannot deny the reality suits this humble Emperor greatly."

"Humble," I grunt, spitting the word out like a curse. "Such a description doesn't fit you at all. I thought you were smart, yet you keep giving me information. Seems you're as dumb as a rock."

"Not at all," Ose says, her smile fading away. Her expression turns tranquil, revealing a cold, calculating confidence in her abilities. "Now that you've seen my Astral Body and learned of its existence, I can't let you live. Few know of my unique ability, and far fewer understand how it works. You have no choice but to battle me here until the bitter end. Naturally, the conclusion of our fight will result in your death; of that, you can be certain."

"You can't make me stay here," I say, glaring at her hotly. "Unless you have some ability to tether my soul to this world."

"I don't," Ose admits, surprising me. "But I don't need it, either. All I can say is, if you run away with your tail tucked between your legs, then..."

Suddenly, Ose conjures a ball of lightning in her hands! I raise my guard, ready to dodge, only to stare in bewilderment as she flings it behind herself, toward a platoon of troopers on the southern battlefront.

CRACKLE!

The Emperor-level magic detonates with explosive power, blasting away the nanite armor of ten troopers and stunning their senses. To my horror, two dozen undead charge forward and kill the troopers, ending their lives before they can retaliate.

"You monster!" I scream! "This is between you and me!"

Ose bats her eyes. "I'm only giving you a warning. You should understand the meaning behind what I just did if you put that pea-brain to work. Think about it."

A hundred thoughts flash through my mind. However, one stands above all the others!

Ose doesn't need to appear on the battlefield to kill my people! She... she can do it remotely, without ever risking a hair on her head! Even after Kar badly injured her, she can become an invisible specter of death; a grim reaper capable of exterminating humanity from the shadows! Those poor souls can't defend against an attack they never see coming!

My heart trembles.

But... but if that's the case, why would she need to invade my planet? Why risk the lives of other demons when she, alone, can solve the situation? Assassinating Hope and I in our sleep should prove as effortless as pinching an ant. Even taking over our bodies shouldn't be terribly difficult for someone of Ose's power.

Does she not care about the lives of her people? Is this about her pride? Does she simply not wish to dirty her hands with work she deems 'beneath her?' Is her power more limited than she's implying? If she can kill people without showing her face... why... why would she need to invade my planet?! I don't understand!

Ose chuckles. "You've fallen silent. Got a lot on your mind? Don't try to understand me. You'll never succeed. You, a mere mortal who has only enjoyed the gift of consciousness for twenty-something years, can never comprehend the ambitions of I, a demoness who has lived for one hundred thousand. My goals, for you, are unfathomable. My thoughts, my calculations, they would break your mind."

I gnash my teeth. "Try me."

After cocking her head for a moment, Ose shrugs. "No. I don't think I will."

My eyes twitch. I continue trying to comprehend the hints Ose has given me, but everything about her demeanour suggests she isn't after one or two small or large goals... but something more holistic... more all-encompassing. Not mere conquest, nor control, pacification, genocide, or some other single-minded purpose. But rather...

...All of them at once?

I frown.

Is it possible? Does Ose wish to seize control of the entire universe? Could her greed be that all-encompassing?

Ose bobs her head from left to right while crossing her arms. After ten repetitions of the same movement, she smiles. "Ah, that look in your eyes. You might be onto something. Well, no matter what you imagine, you'll never be quite right, so it doesn't matter. I'm going to kill you now."

Ose flickers toward me. Her body moves like lightning as she swings a fist at my face.

This time, my instincts scream in warning. Every inch of my soul tenses up for a thousandth of a second.

BANG!!

I react without thinking and fire a rage-empowered fist right into Ose's smug little face. Her Astral Body explodes into particles of light, leaving me to stare dumbly at her scattering remnants.

The instant Ose vanishes, my mind jolts with understanding! Not about Ose's ambitions, but about the differences between Soul and Astral Bodies.

Every time Ose attacks me, her attacks only inflict small, but cumulative amounts of damage. Despite having the power to kill humans with a wave of her hands, even her most dangerous elemental and physical attacks barely injure my Soul Body.

She tried to deceive me! She wanted me to think her Astral Body was superior to a Soul Body in every way, but in fact I might just have a few advantages I have yet to comprehend.

My eyes flick around erratically while my thoughts turn chaotic.

Advantages, disadvantages...

Ose's perception of speed is top-notch, especially given her affinity toward electricity. Despite that, I've landed countless blows since we began fighting. Lucky strikes, or... something else?

Every time I become angry, I explode with power! The moment my rage builds, my strength intensifies! Doesn't that imply my emotions are the key to increasing my soul's power?

And finally, my soul form... isn't it actually much stronger than Ose's Astral Body?

A sense of danger rushes at me from behind. Instantly, my eyes flicker with insight.

My body reacts on its own, making me spin around and hold up my arms to protect my chest.

Bang!

Ose lands a punishing blow on what should have been my spine. Instead, my arms take the brunt of the attack, making me only sail backward a few dozen feet.

The Emperor of Infiltration pauses. She cocks her head. "Oh? Nice reflexes. Something in your eyes looks..."

Without finishing her sentence, she rushes at me again! Another torrent of blows rains upon my body. Over and over, Ose's fists strike with lethal intent at my vital areas.

However, unlike before, I focus my emotions and dwell deeply upon how much I hate this disgusting Emperor and her filthy Astral Body. The angrier I become, the more adept I grow at blocking her attacks.

After five minutes of attacking me with all her strength, Ose suddenly flickers backward. She appears a hundred feet away with her right hand resting on her hip.

"You learn fast. I don't praise people lightly, so you had better appreciate the compliment."

My ears ring from the residual sounds of Ose's thunder-clapping fists. After shaking away my dizziness, I scoff.

"Gee, thanks. It seems Soul Bodies aren't as useless as you made them out to be."

"Hahaha!" Ose laughs. "No, Wordsmith. They are. Don't get me wrong; your Soul Body is much tougher than my Astral Form. You can take a lot of abuse and hit much harder than me. However, you also have to put much more on the line. My Astral Bodies cost me a trifling amount of Mana, but each blow I deal to your soul costs you more than you know."

Despite her confident words, Ose hesitates. "I will admit... I expected you to die a long time ago. Your soul is surprisingly resilient."

"An apple a day keeps the doctor away. I eat lots of vitamins."

"Hilarious," Ose says, rolling her eyes. "Perhaps if you return to your physical body, you might be able to survive. Oh, but if you do that, I may 'accidentally' kill your wife and daughter. You'd better stick around to the bitter end."

My eyes narrow.

"Don't threaten my family. You don't want to piss me off."

"Is that so?" Ose asks. She purses her lips and glances to the side, toward the southern battlefield. "Alas, I'm such a clumsy demoness. I've always been known for my quirks, like how I sometimes casually drop lightning orbs when I'm not paying attention."

Accentuating her veiled threat, Ose suddenly raises her hand and conjures an explosive blast of energy. "Since you've so good at predicting my moves... oopsie!"

My heart jumps in alarm as Ose hurls the orb with frightening strength toward a cluster of one hundred commandos.

"You cheating bitch!"

My body flickers, allowing me to outspeed Ose's lightning orb. I appear before the troopers and hold up my hand.

"Shit!!"

The instant before Ose's orb strikes me, my hand begins to change its shape. However, the change happens too late.

BANG!!

My body gets thrown into chaos as Ose's orb knocks me underground. Despite its formidable power, the damage I take seems like nothing compared to the lives of the troopers I saved. It's what comes next that hurts even more.

Ose zips in front of me and attacks again, battering me from head to toe. We trade blows in the underground layer beneath the Warpgate Encampment, each attack no different from the hundreds we've shared before. I manage to deflect most, but not all of Ose's punches and kicks.

Right as my ability to deflect catches up with Ose's initial pressure, she suddenly zips away.

"Time for more humans to die!"

"Stop!" I yell. "You're supposed to be fighting me!"

Knowing full-well my exosuit-wearing friends can't protect themselves, I appear on the surface in an instant, ready to take Ose's attack. To my horror, she conjures lightning orbs in both hands while cackling evilly.

"You can't be in two places at once, Wordsmith!"

She flings one orb to her right and the other to her left. For a split second, my heart stops.

"That's not fair!"

With a cry of despair, I jump in front of the orb she sent to her right while holding my hands up.

At that moment, my right arm rapidly reshapes itself once again, as a single thought appears in my mind.

I have to protect them!

BOOM!

Ose's lightning orb crashes against me, but unlike before... I don't end up flying backward.

Astonishingly, my right arm transforms into a gigantic tower shield, one as big as my entire soul. My eyes bulge in shock.

"What the hell?!"

The shield hums with spiritual energy. On its surface, a black scorch-mark rests, the only sign of Ose's orb.

When I look at the Emperor of Infiltration, her expression turns ugly.

"...Tch. You really do learn too fast. Oh well! It does you no good, Wordsmith! Look over there! I killed another fifteen of your 'friends,' hahaha!"

She points to her left, where the other lightning orb detonated. Only a bloody mess remains where twenty-something troopers stood seconds before.

I gnash my teeth together. "God DAMN you!"

Unfortunately, my anger doesn't slow Ose down. She ignites two more lightning orbs in her hands.

"Here, Wordsmith! Be a good little mutt and fetch!"

Ose flings the orbs to her left and right. However, this time, a thought appears in my head.

I flicker only millimeters ahead of the first orb and swing my newly-formed arm-shield at it.

Bang!

Like a ping-pong ball, I smack the deadly orb into the air, then flicker toward the other one.

Bang!

In the blink of an eye, my body moves at unthinkable speeds, sending both lightning orbs careening into the skies. They explode seconds later without hurting anyone!

Panting slightly, I turn to glare at my enemy.

"No more tricks, Ose! Now, I go on the offense."

I rush toward the Emperor of Infiltration, using my shield as a battering ram. Moving at the speed of thought, I aim for my enemy with deadly intent!

An evil grin appears on Ose's face.

"You're right, Wordsmith. No more tricks. I've already won."

Before I can react, my soul freezes in midair! An unthinkably powerful force grabs hold of my legs, then the rest of me!

A suction force, like that of a black hole dragging a spaceship into its maw, seizes me and begins rapidly dragging me away from Ose.

Horrified, I jerk my head backward... only to see Mephisto, the Duke of Mist, having appeared a hundred feet behind me when I least expected!

"Kekeke!!! Ssstupid Wordsssmith, today marksss your demissse!!"

My eyes flick from Mephisto's face to the object held in his grasp, a divine artifact I saw several times in Solomon's visions.

"...Valac's Lantern?!"

The Grim Reaper's personal artifact, a device refined for him at the moment he obtained Leviathan's power, grabs me with unspeakable might. Terrified, I struggle with all my strength, but the power in my body rapidly begins to weaken, while my soul condenses and becomes smaller and smaller!

"No! Stop, you fucking- aaaargh!!"

I unleash all of my anger and struggle like a tiger caught in a bear-trap, but my efforts accomplish nothing! Mephisto waves his hands and summons powerful currents of mana, dragging me closer and closer.

"The moment isss at hand! The Wordsssmith'sss sssoul will be mine!! Kekekeke!!"

Ose's taunting voice reaches my ears. "Hahaha! An errant soul falling into a soul-manipulator's grasp; it's pure poetry! You've lost, Wordsmith!"

"Noooo!!!"

Five feet from Valac's Lantern, my body shrinks to a cockroach's size. My stamina runs out, and my vision fades to black.

* * *

And then.

"Hmm? No! It'sss not posssible!"

A tremendous suction force, incalculably mightier than Valac's Lantern, grabs hold of my body. However, this one yanks me away from Mephisto with the strength of a Titan!

Mephisto lunges toward me. He swings his skinless hand at my face and tries to seize hold of me.

"No! Ssstop him, Ossse! What isss happening?! How could he-?!"

A second later, my body tears away from Mephisto, Ose, and the entirety of Tarus II at a speed so blindingly fast my mind fails to comprehend it.

Stars fly past me.

The galaxy, the cosmos, becomes a blur.

Three seconds later, I open my eyes.

"Uh?"

My flesh and blood body, the proof of my physical existence, jolts awake. I find myself standing atop a gigantic golden... contraption, suspended within the familiar space of Camael's Cube. The hum of unparalleled mana reserves throbs in my ear, making me doubt reality.

"...I'm alive?!"

Inside my Mind Realm, my mind-wife, Phoebe, sits in a garden chair and yawns.

"Nnngh! All done, Jason! Hoo, was that tiring or what?"

The Phoenix's orb bobs along next to my head. [Yay! Person-friend is back! Did you have fun? Did you find someone to play with?]

I turn my head from left to right, still shocked by my near-death experience.

"Phoebe. Did... did you recall me?"

My mind-wife finishes stretching. "Mhm. Oh, shoot! Did I catch you at a bad time? I figured I'd bring you back as soon as I finished. That's what I was supposed to do, right?"

My heart palpitates, forcing me to my knees.

"...Yeah. Yeah, you did the right thing."

Phoebe's smile fades. "Jason? Is something wrong? Did something happen?! Oh, gods, did I screw up?!"

I shake my head slowly, while tears bubble in my eyes.

"No. You... you saved your idiot husband's life... once again. Haha..."

Phoebe's complexion turns becomes a ghastly grey.

"J-Jason..."

Part 253: Lazarus Tower

After resting my mind and body for half an hour, I finally manage to calm down from my near-death experience and settle my tumultuous emotions. I sit atop a hovering platform inside Camael's Cube, one which Phoebe built to control the great artifact. It magically links to the Cube's control systems, allowing me to pilot the Cube around the cosmos. A few miles away, the multi-pointed metal stars hover in the sky, staring at me with their central red irises.

Inside my Mind Realm, Phoebe sits on the edge of a pretty bubbling fountain, one that continuously recycles water through the statue of a cherub boy mounted on its top. The little angel pours a small but steady stream of water from a granite teacup, allowing the liquid to splash into the pool beneath him. Raphael and Gabriel stand a short distance away, while Michael remains inside his ring. As for Shana, Sir Lorent, and the Phoenix, they hang out elsewhere, leaving the 'important people' to discuss important matters.

After taking the time to explain what happened during my short jaunt on Tarus II, my mind-wife and the Archangels fall silent.

"So much happened in so little time," Phoebe says. "But with Tarus II under attack, we can't delay any longer. You need to return as soon as possible. My main body, our daughter, Samantha, and everyone else are all in grave danger."

I nod. "Yeah, but Camael's Cube will give me the firepower necessary to defuse the situation. With it currently flying through space thousands of lightyears from Tarus II, my mana will end up severely limited if I return home without it. I can't rip through the demon army like I did with the Volgrim."

Raphael clears his throat. "Ahem. Jason, if I may… art thou planning to kill any demons? Or, even with them currently murdering their way across thy world, shalt thou continue with thy soft-handed tactics?"

"I don't know Ose very well," I say, "but from what I've gathered, she's a highly intelligent strategist. She probably attacked knowing Hope and I weren't there, but given the preparation she's put into this assault, it isn't something she cooked up over a few hours. She's been planning it for six years. That means she's probably developed contingencies for my return. I can't assume my appearance there will immediately win humanity this battle."

"I agree," Phoebe says. "Ose already nearly took over your mind once. Back then, Solomon saved your behind. It's entirely possible she's come up with a new device or spell to take you out once you appear. You'll have to exercise extreme caution, especially now that she's personally fought you."

I frown. "Speaking of which. Raphael. You have some explaining to do."

The Archangel of Wisdom sighs. "With regards to Valac's Lantern, I presume?"

"That's right. The last time I saw it was during Solomon's visions. Catherine slew Valac by immolating herself, leaving only the lantern behind. What happened? Why didn't you destroy the damned thing?! It was an artifact left behind by one of the most evil soul manipulators among demonkind!"

Raphael winces. He and Gabriel share a meaningful look. After a moment, the old man rubs his forehead.

"'Twas my sister, Camael's, decision. After Catherine slew the Reaper, and after our people's resounding defeat in Heaven, a great many events occurred. Jepthath arrived in Heaven to extort us. He demanded artifacts from us, and we came to an agreement regarding an equivalent trade."

"What sort of agreement?" I ask.

The Archangel of Wisdom spends a few minutes explaining to me the events regarding Jepthath's rise, as well as his appearance in Heaven. Shockingly, he even reveals his deception toward the first human Hero, a betrayal of sorts which ultimately created the Heroic Aura.

"You used the Dominion Rod to subtly alter Hercules' leftover power?! That's beyond twisted, Raphael!" I exclaim. "What the hell, man? Jepthath might have been a little heavy handed, but you were completely in the wrong! You created not only dragons, Titans, and demons, but humans as well, and all of them eventually turned against you! Every time you tell me about your past, I just get more and more disappointed with you! If you hadn't pulled a fast one on Jepthath, then his son, Aaron, would have retained Hercules' power. The boy could have eventually stamped out the demon menace, but because of your shortsightedness, we ended up with the current era's situation! Truly a genius tactical maneuver!"

Raphael lowers his head. "I know. I have... erred... too many times to count. Shame is all I feel."

"Well, that's just great. Maybe your shame can pop out sometime and help us win this war, eh?!"

I grumble to myself for a moment before returning to the conversation at hand.

"Never mind all that. What happened to Valac's Lantern? What did you do with it? I assume the angels were the ones who eventually recovered it, right?"

"We did," Raphael says. "At the time, we had lost the War in Heaven and only ten thousand of my brothers and sisters remained. 'Twas not more than a week before Jepthath showed up in Heaven with his demands. After he left, I remembered Catherine's sacrifice and proceeded toward her last known location, along with Camael and Michael. We only intended to confirm the Reaper's death and recover Catherine's body, but when we arrived, we discovered there was nothing left of our beloved sister but ashes. Catherine detonated her fiery powers to annihilate Valac, and in doing so, immolated every last bit of her existence."

The Archangel continues. "However, when we arrived, we found Valac's Lantern sitting upon a small pedestal in the center of the room. Michael and I became immediately shocked, fearing our enemy had survived. However, after some probing, we learned that the Reaper's aura had dissipated into the nether. I spoke to Camael about destroying his artifact, but as someone who lived and breathed for the sake of creating magical devices... my sister had a different idea."

"She wanted to use the Lantern to rebuild Heaven," Michael says. The Archangel of Courage suddenly materializes between the other two Archangels and Phoebe, jumping into the conversation rudely and without warning. "Verily, I spake to my sister with heated breath, warning her that we should immediately destroy the Reaper's soul-manipulation tool. However, she said that its power to absorb souls might be beneficial to us. Perhaps, by using it, we might have a way to rebuild Heaven's armies. Otherwise, in time, the humans, demons, or Titans would surely extinguish us."

"That sure sounds like a great idea, using the Grim Reaper's artifact to further your own goals," I say, trying not to sound too sarcastic. "How did that work out for you?"

"Well..." Raphael says, before pausing for a moment. "...We did not use the Lantern at all for many thousands of years. Camael determined how it functioned, but the plan she came up with had a cost we could not bear to pay."

"Our plan was to create more angels by using the souls of fallen humans," Gabriel says, speaking up for the first time since my return. "However, the problem was, we were unable to transform the souls of humans into pureblooded angels. Camael realized she required a 'transference medium' to connect humankind to angelkind. In this way, we could convert human souls into half-blooded angels. They would not possess most of our formidable might, but we could still bolster our ranks."

Phoebe's expression becomes crestfallen. She stares at Gabriel with her mouth agape. "You... you were going to use soul manipulation to save your hides?! Of all the hypocritical... no, never mind. What does it matter, anyway? You angels were all soul manipulators from the beginning anyway! I suppose all your posturing about the evils of soul manipulation were nothing more than a means to ease your guilty consciences."

Raphael, Michael, and Gabriel all fall silent.

Slowly, the eldest Archangel nods.

"Thy words cause my heart to ache with grief. Nevertheless, thou art correct. I am a soul manipulator, as are all of the other Archangels. Even if I erased their memories, it does not take away from the fact they once stole the souls of their brothers and sisters to bolster their own power. Still, my caution towards soul manipulation is far from invalid. What I have said regarding its dangers are neither incorrect nor the mere ravings of a stark mad hypocrite. Those who manipulate souls inevitably suffer terrible fates. All of the angels perished, along with those demons and Titans who followed in our footsteps. Satan died, as well as Valac, Hercules, and countless others. Those who do not immediately fall into damnation will often doom the ones they love. Such is the great karmic cycle of the Creator's will."

"Yeah, yeah, save the self-pity for someone who cares," I hiss. "Did you end up using the Lantern or not?"

"We did," Raphael answers. "But as I said... unleashing its power came at a great cost. Michael's life, to be exact."

Michael snorts. "'Twas a price I was willing to pay. In hindsight, my sacrifice was one which only delayed my people's demise. Even so, I would repeat that choice if offered it again."

"Camael created a vast spell array," Raphael explains, "one which encircled the entire Earth. This array required thousands of years of preparation. In order to bind humanity's fate to that of my people, we needed a method to craft angelic bodies for fallen souls, to place those souls inside of the bodies, and to gift them the power of Heaven. Valac's Lantern and Camael's array only satisfied two of those condition. Michael's sacrifice fulfilled the final requirement."

"Michael gave up his life, and so, his sacrifice enabled the final piece of the Lazarus project. We bound together humanity's destiny with our own, and in doing so, created a new class of angelic warriors, ones we named the Lazarites."

It takes me a moment to comprehend Raphael's deeper meaning.

"Hold on. Lazarites? Does this have anything to do with the Lazarus Tower? The one you and Solomon mentioned previously?"

"That very same tower, aye," Raphael says, nodding. "We built a grand obelisk in the center of Heaven. At the top of this structure, there was a beacon of pure mana, one which we ignited with the fires of Michael's body. Beneath the tower, deep within Heaven's Soil, we placed Valac's Lantern. When a human perished, their soul would not dissipate and travel to the Great Beyond. Instead, the soul would drift toward Heaven's dimension, adjacent to Earth. Upon entering, their soul would fall into Valac's Lantern, then get drawn upward, through the Lazarus Tower. After traveling through hundreds of magical arrays, that soul would be reborn inside an angelic body, a half-blood nearly identical to the rest of the angels. Then, they would become far mightier than they ever were in life. In this way, the Lazarites formed the core fighting force of angelkind's army. The stronger humanity became, the more my people grew."

"Other than the soul manipulation and using a cursed demonic artifact, that wasn't actually a bad idea," I say, trying not to roll my eyes. "But given how Mephisto has Valac's Lantern now... I'm going to go out on a limb here and assume the demons recovered it from your 'Lazarus Tower.'"

"They did," Gabriel says, his expression neutral. "Thou may thanketh Mephisto for that feat. My first encounter with the Duke of Mist came earlier in his life, when he was known among the demons as the Baron of the Aether. Mephisto stole into Heaven through a manner most conniving. He traveled underground, using his ghostly, ethereal form to slip beneath the Lazarus Tower. Before we could react, he stole away Valac's Lantern, destroying the Lazarite resurrection process as well. Later, he and Satan worked together to create what you now call the 'Labyrinth.'"

Phoebe sucks in a breath. "Gah! Wait, does that not mean... the River Styx, is it somehow connected to Valac's Lantern?!"

"Aye," Gabriel answers. "Thy guess is correct. The reason human souls fall into the River Styx is because the river itself comes from Valac's Lantern. The demon who controls that wretched river is none other than Mephisto, the Necromancer who succeeded Valac in spirit. While the demons do not refine human souls into new forms, as my people did, they also do not have any use for such an effect. Demons merely stockpile the souls of deceased humans and feed upon those souls to empower themselves."

I slowly rub my face while contemplating these new revelations. "Why didn't any of you mention this sooner? Destroying Valac's Lantern should be my highest priority!"

Raphael shakes his head. "While doing so might help you in some small way, it will not make much of a difference in annihilating demonkind. Even if the River Styx were to disappear tomorrow, the demons would still have countless other ways to rip the souls out of humans. Valac's Lantern is merely the most convenient method Mephisto uses to stockpile and divvy out souls to the lower-ranked demons."

"Even if destroying Valac's Lantern won't cripple the demons, I should still do it on principle," I say. "Right now, anyone who dies will end up as food for some damned demon! That's not something I can allow. The only thing worse than my wife or friends dying would be if their souls ended up inside a demon, tortured for the rest of eternity! At least the Great Beyond is a place where they won't suffer!"

"Presumably," Phoebe says, her voice soft as a feather. "But don't say such things. Right now, I'm terribly worried about Daisy. I have this... this bad feeling in my heart. I don't want to sit here and blabber all day with her safety in the air."

The realization that my mind-wife is the same as ever, still caring about our daughter, warms my heart. At the same time, her words worry me. I spoke to Daisy not even an hour ago, but a lot could change in that hour. I don't know how the situation has progressed on Tarus II.

"You're right," I say, standing up. I glance at the control panel for Camael's Cube, a simple magic device Phoebe crafted via my Wordsmithing. It takes the shape of a magical orb hovering above a bowl-shaped container, one which I can place my hands on and manipulate with my thoughts. "We can't just sit around yapping all day. We need a plan. What is my quickest and most efficient way to defeat the demons? Preferably without spilling blood."

"Once the Cube arrives, you'll have enough mana to backhand the demons to oblivion," Phoebe says. "But that will take several more days. I'm not entirely sure how fast the Cube is moving, nor how far we are from Tarus II, but I think we'll have a week before it reaches the system's outskirts. Until then, if you return to Tarus II, you'll have to rely on your normal reserves."

"That will have to work!" I say, sighing to myself. "I still have a couple dozen mana beads stockpiled. Each one will refill my mana to full. I am the Wordsmith, the Hero, the savior of humanity. I must return, no matter what! Everyone is depending on me."

"Alright. So, to take care of the demons... you could try immobilizing their entire army," Phoebe suggests. "Maybe you could return them to the Labyrinth and seal off Tarus II from the Warpers. Hero City's Environmental Shield will only prevent spatial teleportation inside the city, not the rest of the world."

"I can't blanket the entire planet with an anti-spatial field," I say. "Not for long, anyway. Only an hour at most. It would require the power of all my mana beads, too."

Michael crosses his arms. He leans against a statue of some human philosopher and chuckles. "Perhaps thou shoulds't set aside thy morality and look at the bigger picture, Wordsmith. Thy desire to avoid bloodshed may seem kind on the surface, but for every demon thou dost not slayeth, they will go on to butcher at least another three humans. By refusing to kill demons, thou art instead murdering thy own people! Instead of trying to save every life, thou must mature and realize that sometimes, bloodshed is inevitable. Think of Samson. He became a fallen Hero, someone hellbent on revenge toward an innocent person; thy beloved wife! Shoulds't thou have allowed that man to murder thy mate, or dost thou understand that thy actions were just?"

Michael digs into my heart, his every word making me deeply uncomfortable. I don't immediately reply, because deep down, I feel as if he might be right.

I killed Samson. He wasn't a demon, but a human like me. My actions were made in defense of my mind-wife, but I was also protecting myself. Should I offer my neck to those who wish to lop off my head? No! Of course not.

Therefore, it stands to reason that I can't keep going on forever not killing demons. Already, countless humans and demons have fallen since our enemies attacked Tarus II. Whether I kill demons or someone else does, blood will flow.

By failing to take action action, am I not establishing myself as a coward?!

* * *

After debating internally, I slowly nod.

"...Yeah. I think you're right, Michael."

The Archangel of Courage blinks in surprise. "Hm? Thou... dost believeth my words?"

"I do. For too long, I've stood on the sidelines and tried to be a Mister Nice Guy. I've tried mediating, compromising, and reconciling. No matter what I've done, the demons never gave, and always took. I'm sick and tired of playing nice with them."

Slowly, I raise my eyes upward, toward the golden void within Camael's Cube. The skies above me appear as clear as a placid lake, yet even so, I can't see the distant walls, countless hundreds and thousands of miles away.

"I don't even know why I've always tried to avoid bloodshed. Maybe it's because of how I grew up. I lived in a world seemingly devoid of real conflict. Wars were always distant affairs fought against countries with names I could barely pronounce. My life was never at risk. The only threat to my existence came from sheer boredom. However, all of that changed when I entered the cryopod. Ever since I awoke inside the Labyrinth, I have suffered immeasurable pain. I've had my body shattered, my spirit crushed, and my heart broken. I've lost many friends to the demons. I've even suffered a few betrayals. Despite those twists of fate, I always tried to 'turn the other cheek,' as if I were still living in my birth era."

"Perhaps I was naive. Perhaps I was misguided."

"Looking back, I could have avoided a lot of trouble by acting a bit more ruthlessly. There's no way for me to change the past, so I can only reform my views for the future."

I sigh.

"From now on... if I must kill, then I will do so. I've already slain Samson. My hands are stained with blood. There's no point trying to play the role of a saint, not anymore."

Michael, Raphael, and Gabriel all nod in unison.

"Well said," Raphael mutters.

"Aye," Gabriel says. "I am not one who loves war. However, I will never stay my blade if it means protecting my family. Violence may seem to be a barbaric, evil way of resolving enmity, but in the end, sometimes violence is thy only choice."

"It's kill or be killed," Michael adds. "Either thy people will destroy the demons, or the demons shall annihilate thy resistance and enslave thy comrades forever. Do not hold back any longer, Hero. Play the role destiny has made for thee."

Phoebe nods. "You already know my position, Jason. I was once like you. I used to think violence was, in itself, an act of evil. However, after living 100,000 years as Bahamut's puppet, my opinions shifted. Now, I believe differently. I would rather die a fighter striving for freedom than live forever as someone else's toy. I just hope you don't have to suffer for 100,000 years like I did to learn that same lesson."

My wife's words tinge my mind with guilt. There are so many times when we've spoken that I never thought about her past, or what it meant to live as a mindless, monstrous being for one hundred millennia. It's only at times like this, when she specifically mentions that painful history, that I think about how much she's suffered.

"I won't let you down, Phoebe."

She smiles. "Good. Then get ready. We'll check the star coordinates, ensure the Cube is headed in the right direction, and ready ourselves to return to Tarus II. The sooner, the better."

"Let's get back to Daisy," I reply. "We've got some demon butt to kick."

Part 254: Shady Skulduggery

Just outside of Hero City, on its western border.

Four Shades, agents of the Devil Emperor, Yama, crawl through the darkness of the night toward the humans' most precious and heavily defended territory. As they zip past the forest on Hero City's western border, they arrive at the three-hundred-foot-high cliffs that lead to the buildings on the city's limits.

Malice, Demise, Vicious, and Greed all move as one, their bodies blending together in the night-time gloom.

"Let's start at the southern edge," the leader, Malice, says. She rubs her shadowy hands together and licks her lips. "I haven't been here before, but our intelligence says there are a bunch of humans holed up under Bahamut's pyramids. I bet we can find many pretty little girls for Master Yama."

Demise, the most powerful of the Shades, nods gruffly. "The Hero's daughter. We must find her first."

"Don't be a spoilsport!" Vicious yells. The most bizarre of the four Shades shifts her shape into a skinny little goblin with melting flesh. "I'm here to have fun. Fun, dammit! Don't think you can push me around! I'm gonna cut apart some men; make 'em scream!! Ehehehe!!"

"No," Greed says, her keen eyes sweeping the cliffs above. "We have to look for the child first. Once we find her, you can fool around all you want. I'll go with Demise. Vicious, you follow Malice and do as she says. Don't screw around, for once. You know what Master Yama will do to us if you mess things up like last time."

Vicious hesitates. She morphs back into her shadow body and slithers toward Greed to poke her shadowy forehead. "Tch! You're a boring sack of potatoes! That's why Master Yama likes me better! I'm a lot more fun in the sack, you dopey-brained bimbo! Nyahahaha!!"

Whap!

Greed backhands Vicious, smacking the cackling Shade into the darkness. The attack doesn't even faze Vicious, as she immediately explodes into smoke and reforms her body. "Hahaha! Did I touch a nerve?!"

"Shut your mouth, idiot," Greed snarls. "I don't have time for your stupidity. Demise! Let's go!"

Without another word, Greed and Demise zip away, their bodies traveling through the darkness like fish in the sea.

Malice grabs Vicious by the ear. "You'd better pay attention, idiot! I don't like Master Yama's younger toys. You're all too damned hyper and eager to please! Run your mouth around me, and I'll show you how nasty I can be! Got it?!"

Malice's grip somehow holds Vicious taut, preventing her from transforming into dark smoke and escaping. Faced with this cruel punishment, Vicious calms down and whimpers. "I-I'm sorry, Malice! Really sorry! I'll be good, I promise!"

"Damn right, you will," Malice growls. She throws Vicious to the ground like a sack of rocks. "Now, follow me. We're going to pick off as many cute little girls for Master Yama as we can. Do not leave even one scar on their bodies, understand?! Master Yama likes his harem young, pristine, and tight! Don't make me repeat myself."

Vicious ducks her head under the ruthlessness in Vicious' voice. "W-what if all we find are men and old women?"

"I don't care," Malice answers. "Kill them, torture them, whatever you want. A few measly fleshbag lives won't mean anything to me. But like Greed said, we're not here to have fun. We're here to nab the Hero's wife and daughter!"

Greed's excitement increases at the thought of torture being on the table. "I see! But how will we know what those two look like?"

"I've seen a few pictures of the Hero's wife," Malice casually answers. "As for the little girl, look for blond hair and blue eyes. She'll be about six years old. If you see a child fitting that description, just grab her! Better to be safe than sorry!"

"Is that why we're going to the Pyramids?" Vicious asks.

"That's right. A few demon scouts mentioned the humans built a shelter for the women, children, and the elderly there. I'll bet the kid we're looking for is inside."

"Ooooh! Well, let's go, then! We have to make Master Yama happy! Ehehehe!!"

Malice nods. A moment later, she and Vicious flicker away, traveling toward the southern section of the city.

Little do the four Shades know, but not far from where they just stood, the Hero's daughter is hard at work helping her aunt Samantha heal injured soldiers inside the Hero City General Hospital. The building rests at the Western edge of the city, not far above the Shades' meeting location.

Having inadvertently skipped past their quarry, the Shades travel toward the heavily fortified safe zone at the southern end of Hero City. There, deep beneath the Pyramids, inside several gigantic, hollowed out chambers, more than five hundred thousand women, children, and elderly humans and monsters sit at tables and on the floor. They wring their hands together while watching various screens around the underground interior that display the scenes of battle some ten or so miles from Hero City's borders.

The walls, ceiling, and floors of the underground chambers appear as a golden-brown hue, the room's color formed due to the rocks and sand reinforcing the interior. Along with the ancient Egyptian engravings on the walls, hundreds of electrical lights and television monitors give the hideaway an odd mixture of ancient and advanced technology, mixing modern decor with classical designs.

Amidst the huddling citizens, hundreds of T-REX-wearing guards patrol back and forth, keeping their eyes peeled for any disturbances. They focus on the entrances and exits, making sure to have their guns ready at a moment's notice in case any demons come bursting into the safe zones. With Burrowers and Warpers having already made planetfall, the guards can't help but feel nervous. For all they know, at any moment, the ground might explode and demons could start pouring in.

Unseen by the humans, Malice and Vicious silently and stealthily slip into the bunker, keeping as far from the bright lights as possible. The two of them skulk around the much darker interior edges, behind random obstructions that provide cover. The Shades frown in dismay as they realize the overwhelming majority of their prey have chosen to sit in the light-blanketed areas while waiting for the results of the war on the surface.

As beings comprised of darkness, neither of the Shades can step into even the most dimly-lit area without feeling their bodies start to decay. Let alone the scorchingly-lit sections directly below or adjacent to lamps and ceiling bulbs, even the places where the light barely illuminates anything still causes the two invaders to shrink back reflexively.

[Damn,] Vicious hisses, her voice transmitting to Malice telepathically. [These fleshbags aren't as stupid as we thought! Only a few of them are close enough for us to grab, and they're all old and ugly. Sheesh. We won't be able to get any good toys for Master Yama at this rate!]

[For now,] Malice answers, her tone neutral. [That could change, though. Let's hide behind those barrels over there, next to that doorway. It leads to a woman's bathroom. That's where the females go to piss and shit.]

[Ooooh, smart!] Vicious says, her eyes lighting up with delight. [If we wait a while, we'll surely nab a few stragglers!]

[Perhaps, but we can't just faff about. We're on a time limit. We need to find the Hero's daughter before daylight arrives, or else getting back to the warpgate will prove quite tricky...]

Malice glances around the room. Her eyes fall on the many different lights preventing her advances.

Hmm. If I could smash those bulbs and engulf this lair in darkness... hehe... these humans wouldn't stand a chance. Too bad, it'll take me a bit of effort to shatter more than five hundred lights, even if I throw a bunch of rocks at the speed of sound. Such a move would definitely alert the guards, too. Hmm... perhaps I can cut the power...

While the leader of the Shades muses over possible strategies, Vicious keeps her eyes peeled. Suddenly, she grabs Malice. [Kss! Look, sister! A little girl! She's heading for the bathroom!]

Hearing the younger Shades' cry of excitement, Malice nods. [Yes, good. Grab the girl and place her in your 'shadow world.' The more you can nab, the better. Now, be quiet, so I can think.]

Malice returns to her ruminations, while Vicious rubs her claws together with glee. A small child, perhaps six years old, toddles toward the bathroom, all by her lonesome. Her brown hair and pigtails sway up and down as she runs quickly.

"Nnn! Can't hold it any longer! Gotta go, really bad!"

As the child moves away from the bright light of the main room toward the bathroom illuminated in the distance, she crosses through a small in-between area where the light is so faint that it almost disappears. In those twenty or so feet, a strange, creepy, crawling sensation washes over her back.

Before the little girl can react, a pair of shadowy arms leaps out of the darkness from behind her, swings around her front, and grabs her by the mouth.

"Huh? Eugh?! Mmmph!"

The little girl barely lets out a squeak of fright. She tries to tug at the horribly scary hand grabbing her mouth, but before she can react, Vicious drags her back into the darkness and taps the side of her head. The little girl loses consciousness and slumps in Vicious's grasp, entering a deep sleep she can never hope to wake from.

[Ehehehe!] Vicious laughs. [The stupid little brat wet herself! Oh, this is such great fun! I can't believe you're letting me do this all by myself! I hope more babies come bumbling over!]

[Quiet!] Malice snaps. [Can't you see I'm trying to think? Bloody hell. You 'freshies' are all the same, always eager to do what our master says. That's just great, but don't get in my way! Just keep grabbing young meat for Master Yama.]

Vicious snorts. [Tch. Fine! Your breath smells like poop anyway.]

Without another word, Vicious summons shadow bindings onto the helpless child's arms and legs, then opens a small wormhole of shadow energy and stuffs her into a miniature storage dimension. This rift is one all Shades can access, a small, independent realm where they can place people and objects for safe-keeping, a hellish world of darkness that nobody can escape unless the Shades release them intentionally.

[Hee-hee! Ooh, what a delight! Master Yama probably won't like it if I catch him some little boys, but I bet they'd be fun to torture, too! Ehehe! I'll just grab any kid I see! A lady's gotta have her hobbies, after all!]

Fifteen minutes pass.

Vicious nabs several women, with the vast majority of them exceeding ten years of age, and the oldest being thirty-something. After half a dozen women go missing, including a teenage kobold, some of the other people in the bunker start to notice something is amiss. Whispered conversations go around the room, making a few T-REX-wearing soldiers come trotting over, their weapons held at the ready.

"Yes, my daughter went to the bathroom about fifteen minutes ago," A young mother says, as she follows the soldiers. "Her name is Emily. I started looking for her when she didn't come back after five minutes, but I couldn't find her! I'm sorry to be a bother, but I can't let my little girl run around down here. It's not safe!"

"Don't worry, ma'am," One of the soldiers, a woman, answers. "I'm a mother, too. I'll find your little girl."

The other soldier, a male, turns to the mother. "What does Emily look like? I can transmit her information to the other soldiers in this area. Maybe they've seen her."

The mother meets the faceless soldier's gaze. "Um, she's six years old, brown hair, Citizen ID 2A-11754. You might have her in your records."

"Let me check," The man answers. After a few moments, he tilts his head toward the ceiling ever so slightly. "Yeah. I've got her school ID right here. Cute kid. I'll transmit her photo to the other squads."

The mother and two soldiers stop not far from the barrels Vicious and Malice are hiding behind. However, the Shades don't worry about being spotted. Their ability to blend into the shadows makes them impossible to spot.

[Tch. The humans caught on pretty quickly,] Vicious mutters. [Hey, Malice! What should we do now? Wanna find another spot to nab some brats?]

Malice frowns. [No. I want to take out the lights. If we do that, these humans will be like sheep to the slaughter. Grabbing a few random females isn't worth my time, not one bit. I need to get closer to the middle to see if the Hero's daughter is in here. Oh! I just thought of something! I bet there's a control panel hidden somewhere. I used to be a human before Master Yama 'converted' me, so I know all sorts of things a freshy like you never will.]

Vicious tilts her head toward Malice. [You used to be a stinking fleshbag?! Eww, gross! Haha, no wonder you're such a softie! Kekeke! I used to be a pureblooded demon girl, which is why Master Yama likes me more than you!]

[Idiot,] Malice mutters. [You're young now, but you won't always be. Master Yama will get tired of you eventually and move on to juicier morsels. Don't think you're special just because your face is cute!]

[Speaking from experience, grandma?] Vicious taunts. [Kekeke! All old and dried up! No wonder Master Yama doesn't touch you!]

[Tch. Master Yama likes me just fine. He values my brains over my looks. That's why he made me the leader! Unlike you, I'll always be useful to him. Now, shut up, and follow me! We're going to flip a few switches down here and start attacking the humans while they're distracted!]

Vicious laughs uproariously. [Oh, yes, 'great leader,' nyahahaha! Do lead the way, big-brain-lady!]

The two soldiers standing nearby happen to turn away from the doors just in time for their T-REX's to pick up an anomaly. The sensors in their suits detect a flash of movement in the darkness, making both of the guards swivel on their heels toward the Shades.

"Who's there?! Halt!"

The moment the human commandos turn their heads, their helmet-mounted lights activate, flooding the darkness with scorching brightness. Malice and Vicious get caught unawares, screaming in agony as the unexpected luminous radiance blasts their shadow-imbued bodies. They dart away as quickly as possible, screeching at the top of their lungs. "Aaargh!!"

The two commandos jump in alarm. The female guard immediately activates her internal suit transmitters. "Shit! Shadow-walkers! All teams, this is Private Emma Schmidt; we have hostiles within the evacuation zone! I repeat, multiple hostiles detected! I have confirmed multiple Shadow-Walkers inside the southern end of the Third Pyramid Bunker! In pursuit now!"

Emma and her companion quickly dart forward, intending to chase after Vicious and Malice. However, the two Shades zip away at incredible speeds and slip into a dark enclave, vanishing from sight. By the time both commandos catch up, their enemies have already made a clean getaway.

"Patrol, this is Commander Skarde," A voice says, transmitting over their intercoms. "I'm dispatching five hundred trackers to your position. Follow the hostiles. Confirm their numbers and fighting capability. Do not let them escape."

Emma curses. "Shit. I lost them! David, did you see where they went?"

The male commando beside her scowls angrily behind his mask. "No. I didn't think shadow-walkers could move that fast! By the time I saw them, they'd already disappeared. If it wasn't for Centurion detecting their movements, I'd never have seen them in the first place."

"Shadow-walkers are weak to light," Emma says. "That's why they were skulking around in the shadows. HQ, this is Private Schmidt again. I lost the targets. Last I saw, they traveled somewhere north of my current position."

"Acknowledged," comes the reply from HQ. Elder Skarde pauses for a moment before switching to a wide-range frequency. "Attention, all city defense troopers. We've detected the presence of an unknown quantity of shadow-walkers within the Environmental Shield's borders. Order every citizen to turn on as many lights as they can and flood the city. Don't let anyone leave the well-lit areas until we've exterminated these invaders. I want tripled patrols around the clock for the next eight hours. Gold and Silver squads one through seven, I want you traveling in pairs to execute a three-step spiral search pattern. Encircle the city and work your way inwards. Do not allow these demonic invaders to escape our grasp! Commander Skarde out."

* * *

Half a mile from the Third Pyramid, Vicious and Malice emerge into the darkness of the night and hide in some bushes, only to fall to the ground, writhing in pain.

"Aaargh!" Vicious groans. "Burns! The light burns like fire! Ah, those damned fleshbags! How dare they hurt my beautiful body?!"

Malice controls her pain with practiced experience. Having suffered damage from light countless times during her 100,000+ years alive, she has long since learned to grit her teeth and swallow the pain. "Tch! It's all your fault, you... you damned imbecile! You got too grabby with those girls and drew attention to us! Damn! Now we can't go back. The humans are sure to have locked the bunker down."

Vicious pulls herself to her feet and meekly assumes a shadowy, demonic figure, with two long horns sticking out of her head. "D-don't point the finger at me! How was I supposed to know those metal-wearing fleshies would spot us?! Nobody ever has before!"

"Human armor is always special," Malice explains. "Back during the Energy Wars, the humans had all kinds of crazy gadgets. I even used a few before Master Yama took me in. I don't know how these new armor systems work, but it's clear the soldiers can somehow see us, even in the dark. Now that we've alerted them, finding the little girl is going to be that much harder! Let's keep looking for an hour or two, then return to the meeting location. Maybe Greed and Demise had better luck."

"Yeah, maybe."

Vicious grumbles inaudibly under her breath about how unfairly Malice always treats her, but Malice just ignores her grumbling. After absorbing enough darkness to heal themselves, the two Shades dart away once again, traveling around to search the city, all while avoiding the increased human patrols.

* * *

Two hours later, both Shades return to the meeting location at the base of the cliff, just off Hero City's west side. When they arrive, they find Greed and Demise waiting for them.

"Cripes! What took you so long?" Greed asks. "We found the girl!"

"You did?!" Malice gasps. "Where? Did you nab the little brat? What about her mother?"

"We don't have her, not yet," Greed says. "I thought about going in with just me and Demise, but we didn't dare. The little girl isn't with her mother. Phoebe Hiro is still somewhere at the battlefront. But her daughter is right here! She's in the hospital just above us!"

Greed points her finger toward the cliff a few hundred feet above their heads. Malice follows her finger and scowls. "What?! The hospital? And we wasted all that time, too! You should have just grabbed the kid and scrammed!"

"We couldn't," Greed says. "Because the girl has a protector. She's not alone! You won't believe who's with her!"

Malice scowls. "Who? Just tell me! Stop wasting time!"

"It's Belial! The former Second Emperor! She's in the hospital healing humans! We sensed her aura when we got close. That's how we found the girl. If we try to grab her, Belial will detect us. We all have to work together to overpower the succubus!"

Malice's anger and annoyance subsides. She falls silent for more than a minute, contemplating Greed's words.

"Belial. The Second Emperor. Damn. Of all the rotten luck, for her to be here and not at the battlefield. Nobody's seen the demon who took over the First Emperor's position after Satan's death, so that technically means Belial is the strongest demon in the First Hell. We mere Shades aren't nearly strong enough to take her on. Only Master Yama himself could ever be her opponent."

Vicious frowns. "Huh? What do you mean? We're Shades! Belial can't touch us! She's a physical fighter! Beelzebub is way more dangerous than her, what with his flames and all!"

Malice glances at Vicious, then at Greed. "You're too young, Vicious. You haven't seen Belial fight before. She's scary when she's angry. In terms of physical strength, not even Bael or Barbatos is her equal. She's stronger than all of the Hidden Emperors too. Most demons don't know this, but Belial can project low-level energy fields. They aren't versatile, but because of her vast mana reserves, they're insanely strong. If we get too close, she can rip us right out of the darkness and crush our Dark Cores to bits. We'll have to keep away from her and try to slow her down if we want to grab the Hero's daughter."

Demise, having kept silent the whole time, pounds her chest. "I will fight Belial. Malice, you join me and Greed. Vicious will capture the girl."

"Hmm," Malice grunts. "You're definitely the strongest Shade, but you're no match for Belial. You only have the strength of an Ascended Orc. That's not nearly enough to contend with the Second Emperor."

"That does not matter," Demise replies. "I will fight. You shall slow Belial down. We must follow Master Yama's orders. He wants the child. We must give him the child."

"Fine, we'll do it your way," Malice says. After considering her options, she realizes she doesn't have much of a choice. "Vicious. I'll have to rely on you. If I work together with Greed and Demise, the three of us might be able to stall Belial for a bit. You will have to grab the child and run. We'll follow you right afterward."

"Assuming Belial doesn't kill us, that is," Greed adds, annoyance in her voice. "Damn. Never thought I'd have to face death at the hands of an Emperor. This is not how I wanted to go out!"

"We will prevail because we must," Demise says, her intimidating voice somehow reassuring Greed. "Do not lose heart. Belial is strong, but so am I. If I must die, then I shall do so in battle."

Greed sighs. "Most of us just want to pick off the juicy parts of the steak, not choke on the bone. In comparison, you're a damned battle-freak."

"Many thanks for the compliment," Demise says, turning to look at the cliffs above. "Daylight approaches. We must hurry."

Greed doesn't point out that her words weren't complimentary. She merely groans and falls into position behind Demise. "Vicious, Malice, just follow us. We took a peek at the hospital's halls. There are plenty of rooms with the lights off. We'll sneak in through a window and make our way toward the Second Emperor. If we're lucky, the child will wander away at an opportune moment."

"If we don't have to risk our necks, that would be for the best," Malice says with a nod. "I'll die for Master Yama if he gives the command... but that's only 'if.' No reason to throw myself away for one of his casual whims."

Vicious cracks a sinister smile. "Hehehe! This is getting interesting! I hope the little girl is as Grade-A as Master Yama likes! It'd be a shame if she was some ugly, buck-toothed brat."

"Yeah, that would be a shame indeed," Greed mutters.

"Alright, let's go!" Malice hisses. "Keep low, and watch out for patrolling humans!"

All of the other Shades nod in unison. "Yes!"

Part 255: Two Mommies!

Hero City General Hospital, inside its western wing.

Belial gently squeezes Phoebe Hiro's leg, having just finished healing it with her magic. Both women sit together on the edge of a small hospital bed, while Daisy Hiro stands beside her mother and hugs her waist. Blinker sits on Phoebe's shoulder, while the rotund demoness, Rosalia, hangs off a bit more to the side of the room, away from the others. She's not nearly as close to them as they are to each other, and with the Second Emperor there, she makes sure to give these companions plenty of space.

"All better!" Belial says, smiling prettily at Phoebe. "But you should be more careful. If something happened to you, I'd have to go out there and make those demons suffer."

Phoebe blushes. "It's only an injured leg. My T-REX activated at the last second and protected me from the crash. You don't need to worry so much."

"I do," Belial says, shaking her head. "Jason isn't here, so I'm the only one who can protect you."

"Oh, Jason!" Phoebe says, her eyes lighting up. "Blinker saw him on the battlefield! He appeared in a soul-form and chatted with her for a bit!"

Belial's eyes widen. "Err, what? He did?"

"Yeah! Just like I said!" Daisy yells, puffing out her chest. "See? I told you I saw my daddy! I saw his ghost flying around!"

"...I suppose you did," Belial replies, shaking her head in disbelief. "Jason even said you'd gotten hurt, Phoebe."

"That must be why you didn't look too surprised when I showed up!" Phoebe laughs. She and Belial share a moment of tenderness, before their happiness melts away. After exchanging words for a few minutes, their faces turn grim.

"How is the war going?" Belial asks. "I've been getting a steady stream of injured people, but their numbers seem to be dwindling. I can only hope we're performing better on the battlefield than the demons..."

Phoebe shakes her head. "If you're getting fewer patients, it's not because we're performing amazingly out there; just the opposite. The demons are killing our people before they can teleport away. Their methods are becoming more brutal over time."

Blinker, still sitting on Phoebe's shoulder, nods. "Yeah. I had to fight the Battle Brothers. Before I showed up, they were cutting our friends down like orcs stomping puppies. It was awful! Those monsters loved it, too! They really enjoyed killing! What a giant pair of buttheads!"

"I've seen the worst of humankind, but also demonkind, too," Belial says, shaking her head. "The more violent a war becomes, the more crazed my people will become. You shouldn't stay here any longer, Phoebe. Take Blinker and get back out there. Everyone needs you. Even if Jason returns, there's no guarantee he alone can end the war. You're our best hope for stabilizing the situation."

"I know," Phoebe says. She turns to smile at Daisy. "You've been a good girl for Aunt Samantha, right?"

"Yeah-huh!" Daisy chirps. "I've been helping a whole bunch, mommy! Me and aunt S'matha can make all the boo-boos go bye-bye!"

"Haha, I'm sure you can," Phoebe says. She leans down and kisses Daisy's forehead, then steps off the bed. When she turns to Belial, she pauses, noticing how the Second Emperor's gaze toward her daughter has changed.

"...Samantha? Is something the matter?"

Belial blinks. "Hm? Oh, no, not really. It's just... well, your little girl is pretty incredible. Assuming we survive this war, I'll explain then."

"Of course we will," Phoebe replies, her confidence unshakable. "Now that I know Jason is alive and well, surveying the situation, I have nothing to fear. He'll show up eventually. When he does, he'll completely overturn all of that wretched Ose's plans!"

Belial rises to her feet as well. Her skinny little succubus tail squirms around behind her as she notices the dazzling adoration in Phoebe's eyes. Feeling just a little bit shy, the Second Emperor suddenly leans forward and pecks Phoebe on the cheek, then pulls away, blushing like a teenager.

"Hm?" Phoebe grunts, surprised by the succubi's actions. "W-what was that for?"

"Just... just a good-luck kiss!" Belial stammers. "Nothing more! Now, go, already! Go save some lives! I have patients I need to heal!"

Blinker smirks, while Phoebe smiles. Before Belial can say another word, Phoebe pulls toward her and kisses her cheek as well.

"There. That's my good-luck charm. I'll definitely return in the future, don't you worry. You just stay here and bring my soldiers back from the brink of death. There's no place safer than the hospital right now, so you and Daisy will be just fine."

Belial, having experienced her first reciprocated kiss from Phoebe, stands and stares dumbly at her.

"...Uh huh. Okay. We'll be fine. You too."

Phoebe exits the room, along with Blinker, leaving Belial, Rosalia, and Daisy behind.

After a few seconds of awkward silence, Belial turns to Rosalia. "Erm, ahem! Send in the next patient!"

Rosalia rolls her eyes. "Yes, Emperor Belial."

After she walks out to fetch another wounded soldier, Belial glances at Daisy, who now wears a solemn look on her face.

"Daddy says when two people kiss each other, it means they can get married. Will aunt S'matha become my second mommy?"

Belial's expression becomes equally serious. "I sure hope so."

Daisy's smile radiates sunshine. "Yay! Two mommies!"

A few hours later.

Belial and Rosalia continue their unending workload. Over and over, they shuttle in one patient after another. Unlike before, however, Belial divides the work with Daisy. Daisy uses her magical abilities to heal troops, startling the Second Emperor repeatedly.

Incredible, Belial thinks. No matter how many people Daisy heals, she never seems to get tired. Is her mana source inexhaustible? Her healing speed is significantly slower than mine, but in return, she can even heal brain injuries! It must have been Daisy who healed me a few months back.

Belial watches as, for the hundredth time, Daisy touches an injured soldier, a man missing his right arm. Dozens of horrific cuts, bruises, and broken bones reside within his body, but within minutes, his expression begins to clear up. Slowly, he opens his eyes and coughs.

"Ugh... where...?"

"You're fine, soldier," Belial says. "Your suit returned you to the hospital. We've just finished healing you. Take some time to rest while your body regenerates."

The man blinks several times. Eventually he comprehends the succubi's words. "Ohh... thank you, miss... ugh... my head hurts."

Daisy glances at the man's face. "Mmm. there's a really bad boo-boo there. One sec!"

She reaches toward his face and pokes his cheek. A minute later, his complexion improves, and he blinks his eyes. He looks at the little girl and scrunches his face together. "...Huh? Aren't you the Hero's daughter?"

"Mhm! That's me, Daisy!"

"Wow. I... I must sincerely thank you, little girl. You saved my life."

"I sure did! Daddy said good girls always help others!"

The man lifts his hand and strokes Daisy's head. "Haha... yeah. You're a good girl, indeed."

Despite Daisy's incredible healing magic, the man's missing arm doesn't regenerate. For some reason, the child's recovery abilities don't extend to regrowing lost limbs, but Belial easily takes care of that herself. The soldier weeps grateful tears to both of his saviors, then hobbles out of the room, wincing as his body puts itself back together.

Belial purses her lips. It seems I was wrong. It's not that Daisy has an inexhaustible amount of mana, but rather... she isn't healing people with her own power. Her abilities merely hyper-stimulate the person's cells, allowing them to recover on their own. That must be why they can't regrow their limbs. Perhaps, if Daisy stimulated their cells for several days, they would eventually regenerate their whole body, but for now, I'll have to help in that area.

What a strange ability. I haven't met many healers in my life, Belial ponders further, as she waits for Rosalia to bring in the next patient. Those I have were usually much less talented than me. Uzziel, the Archangel of Creation, was probably the only other being who could match me in terms of healing powers. Even then, she couldn't clear Agares' poison from Michael's arm, all those years ago. Because of that, she could never heal her brother's most grievous injury. It seems every healer has a weakness in some field; nobody is completely comprehensive in their abilities.

As she waits, Belial sighs.

Agares. He was one of the few demons I admired. He wasn't as strong as me or any of the other Emperors, but he was open-minded and had a broad outlook on life. Losing him was a tragedy. How many more must die before demonkind abandons their violent ways? Or... are we doomed to perish forever because of our hubris?

A minute passes, and Rosalia guides another injured soldier into the room, this time a woman clutching several bloody rags to her stomach. She lays on a rolling hospital bed, moaning incomprehensibly under her breath. "Ohh... uhh..."

"Significant internal bleeding," Rosalia says, as she reads the chart at the end of the bed. "Multiple claw slashes to her abdomen. She's also inhaled some magical fire, so there are severe burns inside her throat and lungs."

"Daisy, this one is yours," Belial says, smiling gently. "If you're too tired-"

"Nope! I'm fine!" Daisy says. She walks toward the woman, eyeballs her for a moment, and rests her hand on the soldier's heart. After holding her palm there for about ten seconds, Daisy pulls away. "Okay. This big sister isn't hurt too bad! Her pain-spots are tiny."

Belial inspects the woman with her demonic senses. "Mmm. Yes, she'll be fine now, thanks to you. Rosalia?"

Rosalia nods. "I'll take her to an empty ward, then bring in the next-"

Suddenly, at that moment, all of the lights in the hospital go out!

Amidst the darkness of the night, a pure and encompassing blackness swallows the room, making Belial, Daisy, and Rosalia jump in alarm.

"What happened to the lights?" Rosalia asks.

"I don't know," Belial says. "The backup generators should turn on soon, though."

As she speaks, Belial's skin begins to crawl. A foreboding sensation slithers up her back and squeezes her heart, making her eyes dart around. Even with the instant darkness swallowing the room, she and Rosalia both possess demonic eyes capable of piercing the gloom. Unlike humans, with their feeble pupils that require tens of minutes to adjust to a rapid change in light, the Emperor and Demon Grunt both can easily pick out all of the furniture in the room, along with the window, the walls, and each other.

As Belial narrows her eyes, her heart practically jumps out of her chest! In the darkness, she spots the movement of an unknown creature, one comprised entirely of shadow. It barely moves a fraction of an inch, its actions so minor that nobody would ever assume anything was actually there, but with her rich years of experience, the Second Emperor immediately identifies it.

Belial roars. "You! Servant of Yama! Show yourself! I'll rip you to pieces if you don't!!"

The shadow freezes. After a moment, it moves again, splitting into three separate, but distinct, demonic entities. One of them morphs into a demon female, with two small horns sticking out of her head. Another resembles an orc woman, with a gigantic body and powerful muscles. The last one shapeshifts into a human woman with indistinct features. All of the shadows appear ethereal and indistinct, making them difficult to pick out in the darkness.

"We suppressed our auras, yet you still saw us," The human-shaped shadow says. "I guess it's true what they say about you; Nobody sneaks up on the Second Emperor."

"Malice," Belial says, biting off the name. Her tone contains more than a hint of venom. "For you to cut off the lights and then suddenly show up here... you've got guts. Do you think I can't slaughter the three of you like lambs, just because you have the absolute domain of darkness at your beck and call?"

Malice hesitates for a moment before chuckling. "...Hehe. Master Yama gave us a mission. We have no way to refuse, so here we are. Step aside and let us take what we want. We'll leave here without any unnecessary... casualties."

"You're threatening me?" Belial asks. "I always knew Yama's whores would follow that disgusting lecher's orders at all costs, but I didn't think you were suicidal maniacs!"

"We can't kill you, or injure you grievously," Malice says, flashing an evil grin. "But what about the other humans here? It seems you care a great deal about these feeble fleshbags. You're exhausting yourself, all to heal a bunch of worthless meatshields! It would be a shame if I crushed their heads into mulch!"

Belial's ferocious anger subsides slightly. She pulls Daisy behind her, as if realizing something. "...Why have you come here?"

"Why ask a question when you already know the answer?" Malice retorts. "Give us that child! We want the Hero's daughter!"

"So, you're here for Daisy," Belial says, gnashing her teeth. "You idiots! Did you think you could pressure me so easily?! Ten thousand of you couldn't harm me, let alone three! As long as Daisy stays near me, my ambient mana will be more than enough to keep her away from the likes of you!"

Malice appears unmoved. The leader of the trio glances at her sisters, then back to Belial. "You've been stuck here healing humans for a full day now. Your mana reserves are much lower than usual. We might not be able to defeat you under normal circumstances, but this time... who can say what will happen?"

Belial's expression doesn't change, but heart heart jumps in alarm.

They know? No! They must be guessing! I've had Daisy helping me heal for the past half-day, so I've recovered somewhat from overdrawing my mana... but I'm certainly much weaker than usual!

The Second Emperor glances at Rosalia.

She's only a Demon Grunt. Even a Demon Baron would struggle to deal with Shades, let alone a mere Grunt! But what choice do I have? I can't fight these Shades and protect Daisy at the same time!

Belial stalls for time. "Why do you want Daisy?"

"Isn't that obvious?" One of the other Shades, the demoness-shaped one, answers. "Master Yama wants a new toy. He's going to violate that little brat and turn her into our new little sister. If you weren't so dried-up and used, you could have become his as well, you nasty succubus skank. Too bad, now you're nothing but a worn-out old hag."

Belial scowls.

That certainly sounds like Yama's modus operandi, but... it's not quite right. Daisy only just unlocked her magical abilities a few hours ago. There's no way Yama could have found out in such a short time! Why would he be so interested in a random little girl? The answer is obvious! It's because she's Jason's daughter! Damn! His real target isn't Daisy, he just wants to use her so he can capture the Wordsmith!

Malice rolls her eyes at the demon-shaped Shade, Greed. "Sigh. Just because someone asks a question, you don't have to answer! Never mind the chit-chat. Let's work together and grab the child!"

Daisy squeezes Belial's leg. "A-aunt S'matha!"

"Don't worry! I'll protect you!" Belial yells.

Greed and the giant-orc-type Shade, Demise, jump to the corners of the room opposite Belial and Rosalia, while Malice stays in place and begins weaving a powerful spell symbol.

"Protect the brat if you want, Belial! Too bad, I don't think you're at your peak! How long can you last against Yama's strongest, I wonder?!"

Part 256: Belial's Demise

With two Shades at the far corner of Belial's makeshift operation room, and one in between them, the Emperor of Passion can only suck in a breath and grit her teeth as her shadowy enemies begin conjuring mystical spell patterns in the darkness. Dreadful killing intent falls upon Belial's figure as the three female Shades square off against their three female opponents.

"Get behind me!" Belial yells, speaking not only to Daisy, but Rosalia too. "Physical attacks won't hurt a Shade!"

"That's right," Greed says, her smile turning sinister. "They won't. You'll have to use your raw mana against us! What a pity. You've been wasting it on useless humans!"

A barrage of shadow-lances fires from both corners of the room. Greed and Malice work together to attack Belial from her left and right, forcing the Second Emperor to summon makeshift mana shields around Rosalia and Daisy. She uses her left hand to form the hand signs necessary for protecting her friends, while her right hand and arm turn into razor-sharp blades capable of batting aside the shadows aimed at herself.

Ting-ting-ting!

Belial's bladed arm becomes a whirl of movement. She bats aside the hardened shadows aimed at her body, then moves to attack the lances stabbing into her clumsily thrown-together mana barriers. She slices through a half-dozen aimed at Daisy, then chops apart another half-dozen targeting Rosalia.

Belial's eyes narrow. The physical body of a Shade is immaterial and ghostly, much like Mephisto. However, when they manifest their powers into reality, I have a small window where I can physically deflect them! Even so... I still can't hurt any of these Shades' physical bodies, only the parts they manifest!

Belial continues battling with the two Shades, their rapid-fire back-and-forth happening in the span of mere seconds. While Belial has her mind focused on one of Greed's probing attacks, Demise roars violently, transforming her Orc-shaped figure into an eight-foot-tall behemoth! Her body absorbs the darkness around her, and her strength erupts with explosive might!

"Belial! I am the mightiest Shade! Now, I shall fulfill my Master's will!"

Belial's heart leaps into her throat. Her eyes become pinpricks as the gigantic shadow-creature charges at her, clearing the ten-foot gap instantly. The Shade smashes aside the hospital bed in the center of the room, blasting it through the wall to the side and clearing a path. Demise summons a tremendous great-axe, one as tall as her entire body, and swings it at Belial's head.

"Shit!"

Belial curses and raises her right blade-arm, stopping Demise's shadow-axe mere inches from her head. The clang of Demise's mighty attack versus Belial's stalwart defense causes a shockwave to erupt, blasting apart the window behind where Demise started. Over and over, Demise raises her weapon and begins hammering on Belial, forcing Belial back against the wall. Her concentration falters, and she howls in pain as Yama's strongest Shade strikes her over and over. All Belial can do is block Demise's attacks to the best of her ability while maintaining her dual mana-barriers to protect Rosalia and Daisy.

However, with both arms occupied, Belial reveals an opening, allowing Greed and Malice to target her weak points. Unable to protect herself, Belial screams in pain as a dozen shadow lances impale her from the right and left, weaving around Demise's giant body like vipers to bite into the Second Emperor's flesh and bone.

"Kaahk!"

Belial nearly bites off her tongue as she desperately holds back the Orc-Shade, while the twelve shadow-lances begin rapidly absorbing her strength, sucking her mana away to empower Greed and Malice's bodies instead.

"Haha! How juicy!" Greed yells, taunting the succubus. "An Emperor's mana tastes incredible! I could suck you dry and I still wouldn't feel full!"

"Aunt S'matha!" Daisy cries in alarm. The child stares at her aunt in horror as she witnesses the awful barbs biting into Belial's right and left sides. "Nooo!!"

Belial's complexion loses some of its color. However, at the same time, a deep rage boils in her eyes, and her fighting spirit soars to the heavens.

"Tch. You want to play dirty?! So be it!"

Suddenly, from Belial's sides, underneath both of her existing arms, two additional arms burst out! Thanks to her body-transformation powers, the Second Emperor sprouts a third and fourth arm, then transforms them into blades and hacks apart the four-foot-long javelins impaling her ribs. Before the Shades can react, she double-palm-strikes Demise and blasts the strongest Shade backward, sending Demise flying out the broken window!

"Aaargh!"

Demise howls in surprise, but not pain. Her sturdy body barely takes any damage from Belial's hasty counter-attack. The moment she flies out the window, she explodes into smoke and reforms her body, then charges back inside.

A vicious melee ensues. With one arm conjuring mana to protect Daisy and Rosalia, Belial uses her other three arms to fend off the Shades. However, she quickly realizes she can't use her superior agility in tandem with her strength, causing her actual fighting power to fall!

If Daisy weren't here, these three Shades would be nothing to me! Belial thinks. But the cowardly bastards know I can't let Phoebe's daughter get hurt, so they're turning Daisy into my weakness! What's my next move?

Five minutes pass. The furious battle intensifies further as Demise switches between her greataxe, a greatsword, and even a deadly shadow-halberd. Not only do Greed and Malice summon shadow-lances to attack Belial from afar, but they continuously hammer the force-fields around Daisy and Rosalia, weakening Belial's mana reserves.

Belial's forehead runs slick with sweat. The sounds of her battle echoes throughout the darkened halls of the Hospital, yet not once do the lights turn on, nor do any soldiers show up for backup.

Where the hell is everyone?! Belial screams internally. I thought if I held out, at least a few soldiers would arrive to back me up! Don't tell me these shadow-bastards have already killed everyone else in the hospital?!

The succubus's thoughts churn rapidly. She grabs Demise by the neck and tries to smash the Shade against a wall, but Demise turns immaterial in her grasp and flits to the side, frustrating Belial further.

No! It's not likely the Shades killed everyone else in the hospital, Belial thinks. They can't move freely in the light! The lights barely went out for ten seconds before they showed up here! More likely, they placed some enchantment around this room so nobody can hear our battle! Yama has likely prepared for this moment for a while now, so he'd be sure to grasp onto any advantages he could!

While Belial's mind works rapid-fire, Daisy shrinks down, frightened of the scary shadow-monsters attacking her aunt. Never in her life has the child seen such horrible, vicious violence.

Not in reality, at least.

However, these awful creatures and their bloodthirsty auras do cause Daisy's complexion to turn white as she remembers something similar from only a month before. Back when she flew with her father to Tarus II's moon, on the trip back, she suffered horrible nightmares, terrible visions of demons and angels fighting one another, ripping themselves to pieces.

Those horrible memories come rushing back, making her shiver in fright.

"Daddy... daddy... I'm scared..."

The little girl shivers and covers her eyes, unable to watch. Even so, the sounds of the Shades taunting her aunt, as well as their weapons clashing, reaches her ears.

The longer the battle rages, the more disheartened Belial becomes.

Damn. Damn! I'm running low on mana! Shades can maintain their energy by swallowing the darkness around them, but I can't! I'm wiped out from days of hospital work! Even with Daisy helping me, I still didn't have much mana to start!

What should I do?!

The blood continues to drain from Belial's face, but she stubbornly holds on, fighting the Shades with all she's got.

Suddenly, after once again grabbing and hurling Demise aside, Belial's eyes flash with determination! She drops the force-fields around Daisy and Rosalia, grabs the little girl, and thrusts her into Rosalia's arms.

"Take the girl! Go to Kar's room! Find any soldiers you can and tell them the Shades are attacking! GO!"

Belial leaves no room for debate. In the split-second she lowers her defenses, she switches from defense to offense. Before Rosalia can react, Belial explodes with rage and releases a massive force-field around the room, caging herself in, along with the Shades. She stops the force-field mere inches from Rosalia's face, causing the tubby demoness to jump back in alarm.

"What? Kar? But-"

"I told you to LEAVE!"

Belial shouts back her order one more time before launching herself at Demise.

BOOM!

The succubus no longer holds anything back. She smashes her fist into Demise's body, startling the newly-reformed Shade, and smashing her backwards, against the force-field. This time, Demise doesn't turn into smoke, but instead falls to the ground heavily. She tries to pick herself back up, but Belial jumps on her before she can react!

Boom, boom, boom!

Belial punches Demise with all her strength, battering her against the floor over and over. Not once does the strongest Shade turn into smoke to evade her, because as she quickly finds out... she can't!

Greed's sinister smile vanishes. She quickly realizes something has changed, and it likely involves Belial's mana force-field. "Dammit! The succubus trapped us in here!"

"Fight with all you've got!" Malice orders.

As both Shades descend on Belial to try and pull her away from Demise, Rosalia's widened eyes quickly become focused. She clutches Daisy to her chest and runs out of the room.

Finally sensing Rosalia leaving, Belial roars out one last order. "Don't look back! Just run!"

* * *

Rosalia dashes away from the operating room. Her heart tumbles in her chest as she makes a mad dash down the corridor. However, hardly has she made it twenty feet before her eyes turn as wide as saucers. All around her, countless human bodies lie around the corridors, their insides ripped to pieces, as if by a wild, mad dog.

"Oh devils, oh devils..."

Without hesitation, Rosalia keeps running. She moves from the west wing of the hospital, the one closest to the battlefield and Hero City's limits, toward the eastern wing, where Kar lays.

"Gotta move, gotta move!"

As Rosalia runs, she continues holding Daisy in her arms. The little girl opens her eyes, looks around, and sees all the dead bodies.

"Ahh! They're hurt! Fat lady, stop! We have to help them!"

Rosalia's eyes erupt with rage. Even as she continues running, she gnashes her teeth. "Shut up, brat! This is all your fault! If it weren't for you, the Second Emperor wouldn't be in this state!"

Daisy pales. "M-my fault?"

"That's right!" Rosalia screeches, as she jumps over a headless corpse laying in the hall. "Those shadow-walkers are here for you! Just great!"

The pudgy demoness grinds her molars together, as ugly thoughts swirl in her head.

Tch! Why am I protecting this stupid little girl anyway?! The only person I should protect is Mister Beelzebub! Not the Hero's spawn! I should throw her to the ground and leave her to die! Yeah!

In the midst of her anger, Rosalia momentarily forgets Daisy's uncanny ability to read minds. Unseen by Rosalia, who has her eyes set on the darkened hallway ahead, the little girl squints at her face and frowns.

Rosalia's thoughts continue to race. I'd be doing all the demons a favor. Mister Beelzebub would probably love me again if he knew I did something as awesome as killing the Hero's brat! Yeah! Mister Beelzebub has only forgotten how much he loves me! If I just stop for a moment and wrap my hands around her little throat...

Before Rosalia's thoughts can go any further, a female voice speaks in her mind, one she's heard before.

Unacceptable. Murdering the child won't bring you any closer to your goals. More importantly... Master Gressil wouldn't like it if you killed this girl.

Rosalia's face turns ashen. Desire? Why are you popping up at a time like this?! I'm busy!

Why have I appeared? Is that not obvious? Desire asks, a note of taunting in her voice. I'm here to stop you from unleashing a moment of stupidity. Master Gressil doesn't want this girl dead. She's... special. To him, you might even say she's irreplaceable.

Rosalia scowls. She leaves the west wing and arrives at the central hub, only to find even more dead bodies lying in the corridor. A shiver goes down the plump demoness's back as she continues running toward the eastern wing.

Why should I care?! My only goal is to return to Mister Beelzebub! I'm here spying for Master Gressil. That's as far as I'll go for the likes of him!

Haha. How shallow-minded, Desire says, her voice seductive. Master Gressil is not like other demons. He sees things their eyes cannot comprehend. He observes from a distance, watching, waiting. He knows how the lines of fate intersect. If he tells you to keep the child alive, then that is what you must do. Otherwise... you will never see your precious Beelzebub again.

Hearing Desire's firm, unyielding words, Rosalia shoots a disgusted glance at Daisy, only to notice Daisy silently staring back at her.

"What?" Rosalia asks, annoyed. "What are you looking at, brat?!"

Daisy turns away. Her eyes fall into the darkness behind Rosalia, at the corpses left in her wake. "...Nothing."

Rosalia doesn't notice the odd glint in Daisy's eyes, nor does she realize that the child may have seen through her thoughts. Instead, she replies to Desire inside her head. Fine! I won't kill her! Are you happy? Sheesh! What use does this brat have to Mister Gressil, anyway? Does he have a boo-boo he needs healed?

Hahaha… not quite. The girl is special… and that is all you need to know. Mmm. I should warn you… her eyes can observe phenomena yours never will. For example, the shadow following in your wake.

Rosalia's heart skips a beat. A shadow?!

She continues running, but pauses half a step to glance behind her. All she sees in the darkened hallway behind her is the same pitch-blackness as always, with countless bodies fallen throughout the wards.

Before Rosalia can give voice to her incredulity, Daisy speaks.

"Bad person. There's a bad person following us!"

Rosalia's blood turns ice-cold. She runs even faster, huffing and puffing as her lack of exercise starts to catch up to her. "I don't like this, not one bit! Brat, you'd better not be lying!!"

The end of the eastern wing comes into view. At the end of the hallway, Kar's room shows up, countless dead bodies lined up outside of it.

Tch! Don't tell me the croc is dead too! If I ran here just to come to a dead end, I'm going to be so angryyy!!

Rosalia's thoughts flick not only to all the dead bodies she's encountered, but Daisy's words.

The lights only went out for a few seconds before those shadow-walkers showed up. How could they have killed all these soldiers in such a short time? Wouldn't someone have raised the alarm? Everyone has those armor-suit chest-gadgets, yet they weren't able to protect themselves! How could three shadow-walkers have possibly…?

The moment Rosalia follows that train of thought, a terrible realization befalls her.

No! Oh, devils! What if there weren't only three shadow-walkers?! What if there were more?!

Remembering Daisy's words from mere moments before, Rosalia quickly glances backward. Still, she doesn't see anyone following them.

I have a bad feeling about this!

Just before arriving at Kar's room, Daisy jerks in fright. She suddenly points at the crocodile's ward.

"Bad person! Very bad person!"

"What?!"

Rosalia screeches to a halt. She nearly slips on a puddle of blood left by a decapitated Kobold commando, but manages to catch herself from falling.

Her eyes sweep into Kar's room.

There, she sees something utterly horrifying.

A demonic hound, blood dripping from its jowls, hovers over Kar's bed. The crocodile sleeps peacefully, while a shroud of darkness covers his body.

The Shade, Vicious, stares at the intruders meaningfully. Her mouth curls up into a beastly grin. She chuckles quietly.

"Ehehe... shh! Don't wake the baby...!"

Rosalia shivers in terror. She locks eyes with the horrifying demonic fiend, while it releases an evil aura that nearly makes her legs give out. It's only due to spending a few months with the Second Emperor's even stronger demonic aura that she manages to stay standing.

Daisy squeezes Rosalia's shirt.

"Bad person... bad person..."

Part 257: Daisy's Fate

Belial finds herself alone in the operating room with all three Shades. She keeps her back to the exit, not allowing them to pass. Even so, she knows that if they really wanted to snatch Phoebe's daughter, they could leave through the window and zip around the hospital's outer wall to attack from three different directions. With Rosalia having taken Daisy away, Belial tries to comfort herself knowing she can fight unhindered now, but the Shade's lack of interest in leaving immediately raises her suspicions. Rather than pursuing Daisy at all costs, they simply watch her leave, then eyeball Belial with sadistic intentions.

What's going on? Belial thinks. I thought Daisy was their target. Could it be? Was all of this a ruse to get me alone? Is that blasted Shadow Emperor trying to turn me into one of his Shades again? Was I his true target after all?

Despite Belial's worries, her mouth curls into a confident smirk, and she straightens her posture. "There. Now that I've lessened my burden, the rest of you will be child's play. What's the matter? Won't you attack? Or are Yama's whores afraid that this sad, weakened Emperor will be too much for them to handle?"

"Taunt us all you like," The leader, Malice, sneers. "It makes no difference. We'll get that brat one way or another. But just think of how greatly Master Yama will reward us if we give you to him, all bound and gagged for his... pleasure."

Greed claps her shadowy hands together and laughs wickedly. "That's right! All those times you rebuffed his generous advances, insulted and mocked him... Master Yama will get his revenge! Once he has you in his clutches, he'll perform the 'Master's Rites' and turn you into part of his harem! And then, stupid bitch, you'll know what it means to feel true, undeserved pleasure! Master Yama is so generous that even in spite of your lies about him, he'll still turn you into a real woman!"

Belial's expression doesn't change in the slightest. "There was only one demon I ever loved. He's dead, now. I have no interest in Yama's lascivious desires. As a fellow Emperor... if he tries to sully my mind, I'll teach him a lesson he won't ever forget!"

The Second Emperor doesn't hold back. Immediately after speaking, she charges at the Shades, her bloodlust igniting like never before. Normally, she wouldn't feel such an intense desire to fight, but the attack on Daisy touched her reverse scale, pissing her off in a way that few have previously achieved.

She closes the gap instantly, and three of her four arms transform into hammers, looking to club the Shades into shadow-pulp. At the same time, Belial uses her fourth arm to cast a basic mana wave, momentarily trapping Malice in place.

"Shit!" Malice curses, as she tries to block the hammer. Greed and Demise both scatter into smoke, easily evading the Second Emperor's onslaught, but due to her multi-pronged assault, they can't determine her true target until it's too late.

Boom!

Belial smashes her hammer-fist into Malice's head, sending the Shade flying backward, where she crashes against the wall and explodes into smoke. She reforms herself a moment later, taking the vague form of a long-haired human woman. She lays on the ground while clutching her head and moaning.

"S-sneaky little... aaaoo..."

Greed spots her injured leader. "Ah! Belial, you scummy cunt! So she was your target!"

Belial lunges at Malice a second time, once again conjuring another mana field around the Shade to hold her in place. "Hahaha! Revenge is best served cold!"

Just before Belial can batter Malice's already badly-injured body, Demise rushes at her from behind. The huge shadow-orc roars in rage and raises her fists overhead.

"DIE!"

Belial, sensing the enraged orc, cancels her attack and dives to the side, narrowly evading Demise's downward-smash. The strongest Shade misses by mere inches, mostly due to Belial's speed and dexterity. However, thanks to her shadow-bending abilities, Demise doesn't even stagger for a moment before changing her trajectory and lunging toward Belial again.

Five times, Belial and Demise trade blows. Each one results in Demise's loss, frustrating the shadow-orc more and more. She howls at Belial and enters a berserk rage, then lunges forward. When Belial dodges, the orc punches the wall behind her, blasting it to smithereens and scattering the concrete wall as if it were made of fiberboard. The concrete sprays outward, revealing the adjacent hospital room to Belial and the other Shades.

"Damn!" Belial grunts, glancing at Demise for a split-second before looking into the room she just revealed. The succubus's worst fears, that these blasted Shades might draw innocent bystanders into their assault, finally comes true.

The Second Emperor instantly surveys the revealed room, expecting to see a few startled soldiers meeting her gaze with curiosity and alarm. Instead, her pupils shrink as she instead observes a bloodbath. Inside the adjacent room, two dead soldiers lie in their beds while blood coats the walls. Their ripped-apart chests tell a tale of a sudden, violent attack, as if they had died without knowing what hit them.

"D-devils!" Belial shouts. Her heart lurches into her throat as a horrifying realization strikes her.

Why did I assume only three Shades came here?! There must have been others! While I've been fighting Malice and her cronies, more Shades attacked the hospital! That means...

The succubus's expression turns to one of icy rage.

...Daisy is in danger!

On the other side of the room, Malice shakily climbs to her feet, aided by Greed. The Shade's leader grins evilly. "Haha. Look at her face. It seems little-miss-Belial figured something out."

Belial turns her head toward the doorway. In the blink of an eye, she dashes toward it, while the Shades spring into action.

"Haha, oh no, you don't!" Greed cackles. "You're not going anywhere! That little brat is ours!"

Six shadow-arms zip out of the darkness, their intent clear: slow down Belial and stop her escape at all costs. Belial barely makes it to the hallway before the Shades grab the back of her neck, her shirt, and all four of her arms. Even so, she manages to glimpse the blood-filled corridor, where bodies of countless dead soldiers and hospital employees lay in pieces, all of them felled by one or more skilled assassins. Not a single person managed to sound the alarm, resulting in their collective extinction.

Belial turns livid. For the past several days, she's worked her fingers to the bone healing the injured, taking care of their needs, and providing them the assistance they need. Now, their cold, vacant eyes stare at the ceiling. Their unwillingness to go out quietly, even in the face of absolute power, burns Belial's blood to the limit.

"Get your fucking hands off me!" Belial screams, whipping around to face the Shades. Her hammer-fists transform into swords, while her eyes turn bright red. She wildly slashes at the Shades, turning their fingers and wrists into smoke-sashimi. Even so, their limbs simply explode into smoke and reform an instant later, while the Shades rush at Belial with greater determination.

"You can't flee!" Malice laughs.

"The child is ours!" Demise roars.

A furious melee ensues. Belial struggles with all her strength, only managing to take a few steps down the hall every few seconds, all while hacking the shadow-hands to pieces whenever they grab her. Each advancement comes at the cost of her stamina and endurance. She continuously uses her already-overdrawn mana, tapping into her life force to shove the Shades back.

It takes more than two minutes before Belial suddenly obtains a lucky opportunity! During one unified attack, she staggers all three Shades with a mana-blast. At that moment, the succubus stomps her foot against the floor and bolts away.

"Don't let her escape!" Malice yells, roaring in rage. "Grab Belial! Stop her!"

The Shades chase the Second Emperor, their superior speed in the darkness allowing them to close the gap. Still, as a Demon Emperor, Belial isn't some nameless chump. She makes it to the central hallway, where the southern side opens into the hospital's entrance, while the west, north, and east hallways all branch off into different wings for specialized treatment.

Belial grits her teeth. She can't help but feel despair engulfing her heart as she spots even more bodies piled atop one another, the lifeless heaps of death and slaughter echoing the atmosphere of ancient-Earth mass graves.

As soon as Belial reaches the central corridor, she hears a woman's scream in the distance, down the eastern corridor. Her heart stops.

"Rosalia?! No, no, no!!"

Before she can reach the eastern branch's entrance, the Shades catch up. They grab Belial again, frustrating her efforts to reach Daisy.

"Get off me! I'll fucking kill you all!"

Belial whirls to face her pursuers. Her eyes turn bloodshot. Without hesitation, she burns even more of her life force. Her head shifts its form as she transforms herself into a Banshee. Mimicking that monster's biology, her throat's structure changes. She sucks in a massive breath of air, then screams at the Shades.

"SCREEEEEE!!"

A sound-wave with the power of a ten-ton cannonball erupts toward the western corridor, catching all of the Shades off-guard. Knowing that everyone in the west wing has already perished, Belial doesn't see any reason to hold back. She ruthlessly turns that entire side of the hospital to rubble, blasting it apart at its foundations and flinging the Shades backward with the ruthlessness of a true Demon Emperor.

"Aaaaargh!" Malice, Greed, and Demise all scream in unison. The lose their grip on Belial and fly backward, while hundreds of tons of concrete and steel crash onto them from every direction. The hospital's western wing collapses into a pile of rubble, momentarily burying the Shades alive.

Once again, another scream of pain reaches Belial's ears from the eastern wing. She quickly turns to face it, then dashes forward, reverting her body to its original form.

"Daisy, Rosalia! Hold on! I'm coming!!"

Belial crashes through the eastern entry-doors. She rushes down the hallway, toward the furthest end, where Kar's room sits tucked off in a distant corner. As another scream reaches her ears, Belial's heart shakes.

I'll kill them all! Every last Shade! No mercy!!

Suddenly, while Belial is only a few hundred feet from the final room, a shadowy figure bolts out of the room. It hits the ground and rolls, then rushes toward Belial. Its figure resembles a hellhound wreathed in shadow, one with a mouth full of razor-sharp fangs.

Belial gnashes her teeth. "Get out of my way, shadow-bitch! You won't stop me-"

Before the succubus can finish her sentence, something incredible happens. The hellhound-Shade freezes mid-movement, as if held back by an invisible chain.

Before Belial can register what just happened, a second bizarre event occurs. The Hellhound, frozen in mid-jump, falls toward the ground heavily, as if pushed down by a giant, invisible hand.

Once again, a scream of pain erupts in the corridor. This time, Belial pauses and blinks in surprise. The scream she heard earlier came not from Rosalia... but from the hellhound-Shade before her.

"Eeeyah! Help... help me! Please! Please!! She's- eeyahh!!"

The Hellhound shade looks up at Belial, terror in its eyes. The monster digs its claws into the tile, while an invisible force begins to pull it backward against its will. The monster's claws rip up the hospital's white tiling, smearing the blood of dead soldiers across the floor, mixing their essence with the powder used to create the hospital's flooring.

"No! No-no-noooo!!"

The hellhound-Shade screams in fright, trying desperately to hold onto the floor and pull itself forward.

Its efforts prove futile.

Belial's blood runs cold. She stops and watches as something unseen drags the Shade back into Kar's room. The Shade grabs onto the door's sides for dear life, only for the pulling force to strengthen further, ripping her claws off the side-panels with violent force.

A little girl laughs from within the room. "Haha! You nasty, bad person! Where do you think you're going?! Daddy says bad people need to be punished!"

Stupefied, uncertain, and confused, Belial gazes blankly at the entrance to Kar's room. Inside, the sound of several crisp slaps resound. She finally shakes the fog from her head, runs to the doorway, and peers into the room's interior.

There, she sees the shadow-hellhound pinned to the floor, its limbs splayed out in an X-shape. Daisy towers over the monster and raises her hand, summoning magical power into her palm.

WHAP! WHAP!

Daisy spanks the monster's ass, beating it with such savage brutality that Belial can even hear the unmistakable sound of bones breaking.

"Eeeyaah! No, stop, it hurts! I don't like it! I DON'T LIKE IT!!"

The hellhound pitifully screams, begs, and cries, but Daisy doesn't stop her assault. She continues spanking the Shade's rump with enthusiastic gusto, clearly enjoying herself.

"This one is for all the people you've killed! This one is for trying to hurt the fat lady! And this one is for trying to run away from your spanking! You are a very, very bad person!"

Belial gazes vacantly at Daisy. Her thoughts swirl like a typhoon, but nothing she imagined in the minutes following up to this moment could have prepared her for such a drastic shift in circumstances.

"D... Daisy? You're okay?"

The little girl pauses her spanking to glance at Belial. "Oh, Aunt S'matha! You won't believe it! Me and fat lady were coming in here, right? And then this scary shadow-monster tried to eat us! But when I got scared, I pushed out my hands... and boom! It felt really good- the 'boom,' I mean- and then I was like, whap, whap! It turns out going 'boom' is lots of fun!"

Belial nods dumbly.

"Going... going 'boom.' Yeah. I guess so."

Belial's vision falls on Rosalia, now standing beside Kar's bed. She, too, gazes at Daisy with vacant eyes.

Rosalia mutters to herself. "This kid... she's a monster. An absolute monster. Didn't know human spawnlings could be so scary... so scary..."

Belial shakes her head helplessly and forces a smile.

Looks like in the end, she's still daddy's little girl. I used to think the children of Heroes couldn't gain magical powers... but clearly I was wrong. If we make it through this war, I'll have to talk to Phoebe about investigating Daisy's abilities more thoroughly.

With the crisp sounds of a magically-imbued palm meeting a screaming shadow-hellhound's hindquarter echoing through the air, Belial almost doesn't notice the rapid approach of the other three Shades. Luckily, just before they arrive at the entrance, Belial senses their demonic energies and whirls to face them.

Malice, Greed, and Demise stop outside the doorway and look inside, expecting the pain-filled screams to be coming from Belial, Rosalia, or even Daisy. Instead, the glee-filled expressions on their faces freeze as they spot their comrade getting spanked by a child one-third her size.

"What... what the hell?! Vicious! What are you- what's going on?!" Malice shrieks.

"Help me! Please!" Vicious cries, shadowy tears dripping from her eyes. "It hurts so bad, I can't stand it, eeeyah!!"

Whap! Whap!

Daisy spanks Vicious two more times, then pauses to look at the other three Shades.

"Ah! The other bad people!"

As the child turns to look at them, all three Shades grow mortified, realizing they greatly underestimated the difficulty of this mission. Malice's jaw drops as she senses a buildup of mana forming behind the child.

"D-drop everything! Scatter! That little brat is a Hero- GUWAAK!"

Malice's words catch in her throat as Daisy stretches out her hand, sending a pulse of telekinetic energy rushing toward her. Before the Shade's leader can react, a powerful force grabs hold of her body and yanks her into the room, its might too great for her to resist.

"No, no, nooo!"

Like an ant trapped in a tornado, Malice can't offer the slightest resistance to Daisy's magic. The child laughs innocently as she throws Malice across Vicious's back, leaving her butt exposed for an equally brutal round of spanking.

Demise, unafraid, raises her fist and charges into the room. "You can't stop us all!"

What follows is a pitiful display by the strongest Shade. She, too, ends up thrown on the same pile as Malice and Vicious. Not even the might of the orc-Shade can resist Daisy's unmatched telekinesis.

Daisy turns to grab the last Shade, only to frown.

"...Aww. She got away."

Greed, having seen more than enough of this terrifying child, stays true to her name and flees the scene, abandoning the other three Shades to save her own skin. By the time Daisy realizes, she's too late to capture her.

The child shrugs, then gets to work violently spanking her two newest victims, making them scream and beg for mercy. Each strike contains not only the concentrated anima of telekinesis, but some unknown magical element that ravages the Shades, tearing apart their bodies at the molecular level.

After several minutes, all three Shades faint from the torment, falling comatose as they prove unable to resist Daisy's might.

Already, Belial finds herself growing numb to Daisy's shocking displays of power.

"...Good work, Daisy. Good work. Your uh... your mommy will be proud of you when she finds out what happened."

Daisy plants her foot on Demise's back while striking the pose of a conqueror. She beams a smile filled with sunshine at her aunt and nods.

"Yup! I'm super cool!"

* * *

Once the euphoria of a victory snatched from the jaws of defeat fades away, Belial, Rosalia, and Daisy all glance outside, at the hallway filled with bodies and blood.

Their high-spirits dampen. A somberness takes over, making them sigh in defeat.

"We won..." Belial mutters. "But can we call this a victory? Everyone is... they're all dead."

Rosalia lowers her eyes in shame. "I was powerless. I couldn't do a thing to help."

"It wasn't your fault," Belial says, sighing. "Many of these soldiers had exosuits that could have protected them. Even so, they died like lambs, ripped apart by wolves."

A sense of bitterness engulfs Belial's heart. The succubus turns her head slightly to look back inside Kar's room at the three comatose Shades.

Her expression hardens.

"...There can only be one punishment for those who commit such an atrocity."

The succubus's right arm transforms into a long, slender bone-blade.

"Daisy. Look away."

The Second Emperor strides toward the fallen Shades. Without any fanfare, she swings her arm thrice.

The sounds of three heads hitting the floor startles Rosalia. She quickly covers Daisy's eyes.

"S-Second Emperor... you..."

Belial gazes at the dead Shades. Her eyes don't contain a hint of regret, nor a wisp of indecisiveness.

"I hate killing. I hate death. I hate violence. But if it means protecting those I love, then even I have a limit to what I'll endure."

"These Shades crossed that line."

Belial lifts her head. She gazes at the ceiling as countless thoughts tumble inside her mind.

Sister. I'm sorry. I have to break our promise.

>!This is what a spoiler looks like! Click it to reveal the text!!

Part 258: War Recap

Across Tarus II's darkened surface, multiple battles erupt on several fronts. Humans, monsters, and even a few allied demons clash against the enemy undead, demons, and monsters. On humanity's side, Harpies and Minotaurs join forces with more than a few Kobolds and Salamanders. On the demons' side, Orcs and Goblins work together with an even greater number of Harpies and Minotaurs. In addition, more than a dozen gigantic Trolls and Ogres storm onto the battlefield, their massive bodies drawing eyeballs and gunfire.

Inside the Warpgate Encampment, chaos ensues as reinforcements from the Labyrinth Core spill out of the portal onto Tarus II. These new combatants replace the weakened and exhausted original forces, allowing those demons and monsters to retreat and take a breather. Alongside these newcomers, countless undead creatures of all shapes and sizes emerge from Mephisto's dual Death Gates beside the western wall.

These towering monoliths, far bigger than the portal to Hell, enable truly titanic and terrifying battle-changers to spew forth onto the battlefield. Not only Skeleton Knights and Wraiths, but Death Knights, Dullahans, and even Frost Giants. Mephisto's undead continue to amass over time, adding to the diversity of demonkind's forces.

On the Northern Front, Brunhilda and the Felorians unleash their hidden powers. Their bodies surge with Chi, enhancing their strength, agility, and durability far beyond the limits of a normal human. Even without Exosuits, they possess potent powers capable of equally combating demons below the Lord rank.

On the Western Front, thirty thousand brave soldiers face off against the demonic hordes. Their leader, Yamir, Hero City's head chef, a Minotaur who cooks for the Hiro family, wears a set of radiant golden battle armor. Not an exosuit, but an heirloom passed down from his family over the years. Unlike many of the Minotaurs living amongst humankind, Yamir is actually a son of nobility, a lower-class heir to a decently-sized Minotaur kingdom. However, he cares little for such frivolities, and instead lives only to spread the joys of his cooking amongst his compatriots.

Yamir takes over for Lieutenant Samuel, who leaves the Western Front to head off to the prisons, along with Corporal Hurent. Having received a distress call, these two veteran commanders both decide to assist the prison guards with caging in Beelzebub, Artorias, and Mara. Sadly, they will arrive too late, with all three having broken free of their restraints.

On the Southern Front, General Chadwick reinforces his troops, trying desperately to contain the demons within the crumbling walls of the Warpgate Encampment. However, with Frost Giants, trolls, ogres, and countless undead ravaging the battlefield, he begins to lose his footing and slowly retreat.

And finally, on the Eastern Front, the largest contingent of humanity's forces, almost eighty-thousand strong, amasses between the Warpgate Encampment and Hero City. With only a few miles separating their home and families from the voracious demons, they have no choice but to dig their heels in and fight for their lives. Phoebe Hiro leads her bravest, strongest soldiers in defending their homeland. With Blinker providing protection, Phoebe guides her troops like a seasoned veteran. Her years of training as a Knight of the Round, in addition to the last six years of prepping for this war, gives her the tactical eye she needs to take on her enemies.

Fists and claws crash against swords and guns. Soldiers on the frontlines wear the heaviest armor and wield powerful nanoblades capable of slicing through flesh and bone. Soldiers immediately behind them unload thousands of bullets every second, while soldiers in the rear provide suppressive fire. A dozen of Phoebe's Planetwalkers roam the battlefield, unleashing salvos of cannonfire amidst the enemy ranks. Harpies perch atop the mechanoids and snipe from afar, taking out high-value tactical threats, including Demon Lords, Ogres and the strongest orcs. Sadly, even the most powerful sniper bullet fails to do much against demons above the Baron rank. Their bodies are simply too durable for low-caliber gunfire to land a killing blow.

As the battle unfolds, Phoebe rides inside her eight-legged Spider Mech. Having lost her husband's ship, the Esther, Phoebe has no choice but to use the hundred-foot-tall surveillance mech as an observation platform. Even so, the slender-legged robot is anything but weak. Multiple times, a dangerous enemy capable of bypassing the human's front lines will appear, but Phoebe merely impales it with one of her mech's needle-shaped legs, killing it without any resistance.

Phoebe manipulates a three-dimensional holographic map of the battlefield. Her right hand dances over its imagery, allowing her to visualize the enemy's movements, while her left hand controls the mecha's legs and guns. Even one-handed, Phoebe has no trouble performing both of these intricate and precise tasks with little issue.

Blinker sits on Phoebe's shoulder, frowning as she looks at the battlefield. "I should be out there, kicking butt!"

"Right now, you need to save your energy," Phoebe says, her voice as calm as a still pool of water. "There's no use swatting flies with nukes. You can kill a lot of demons on your own, but so can my troops. We have to prepare ourselves for when Ose and the Dukes arrive. Mephisto is dangerous enough, but those Battle Brothers really gave me a fright. You weren't enough to beat them alone. Even both of us combined could only drive them away. At this point, even if Jason returns, with Kar down for the count, I'm worried..."

Phoebe falls silent. Her icy eyes flick between the displays as she shakes her head.

"...I'm worried we still won't win. Jason said he obtained a huge powerup, but in the end, he's still Jason. I know my husband. He hates violence. His morals are too important to him to bend or compromise, even in the face of such a terrifying demonic assault. If the moment of truth arrives... it will have to be me who finishes this fight."

Blinker's frown eases. "Gal, is that resentment I hear?"

"No. It's just the truth. I love Jason to death. I'd die for him. But, at the same time, I can't help but feel frustrated by his... his inflexibility."

Phoebe grits her teeth. "This isn't easy for me either, you know. I never wanted to become a killer. I never wanted to become someone who spills blood without changing my expression. Yet here we are. I changed, because I had to. And now, I can't help but worry that Jason won't be able to do the same."

Blinker sighs.

"Yeah. I think I get it. You're in a tough spot, ain'tcha?"

Phoebe's eyes darken. "I've spent my whole life fighting. I failed Arthur once, but I won't fail anyone else. Even if Jason refuses to bend, I won't fault him. In the end... he's still young. He hasn't seen what I've seen. He hasn't witnessed how far humanity can fall, nor the heights it could reach."

The Hero's wife pauses for a moment. Her eyes turn foggy.

"...But I have."

Gazing absentmindedly at the displays, several seconds pass before a beeping sound catches Phoebe's attention. She glances to her right, where the communications display lights up with a message.

Phoebe taps the console. "Commander Hiro speaking. Give me good news, Lieutenant Samuel. Over."

Lieutenant Samuel's voice comes back strained and weak. "Cough... cough... shit. It was a... a massacre. Fuck. I'm sorry, Commander. We couldn't stop him. Beelzebub... he's too powerful. Thirty thousand soldiers... my friends... all dead. Cough. I failed you, Commander. I failed you..."

Samuel's voice weakens. Phoebe's eyebrows jump up as she listens intently. Without hesitation, she reaches out her hand and presses a button on the mech's console. "Don't blame yourself, Lieutenant. You're still alive; your bio-signs are intact. I'm recalling all of your surviving troops to the hospital. Commander Hiro, out."

She ends the transmission, then falls silent for several seconds.

"...Fuck!"

The sudden expletive makes Blinker's expression fall. "Beelzebub escaped?"

"It won't only be him," Phoebe growls, bunching her hands into fists. "Artorias and Mara probably did, too. Two Dukes and a Baron. This battle just became ten times fiercer. It won't take them long to arrive. Beelzebub could arrive in seconds if he flies. Goddamn it!"

Phoebe taps on the communicator to contact the Tarus II hospital.

"Medical Ward 001, this is Commander Hiro speaking. I've just lost close to thirty thousand troops. According to their exosuit readings, the survivors have sustained heavy injuries, particularly burns and internal wounds. Please prioritize the most heavily wounded, over."

Phoebe waits for a few seconds.

She frowns.

"Medical Ward 001, this is Commander Hiro speaking. Do you read me? Over."

Phoebe turns her head slightly. She and Blinker both share a look of alarm.

"Medical Ward 001! Do you copy? What's going on over there?!"

Phoebe rotates her Spider-Mech's cockpit to the east, making it face the Tarus II general hospital. With only a couple of miles separating them, her scanners easily cross that distance, giving her a detailed topographical map of the area, along with bio-signs and thermal readings.

Her face turns as white as a ghost's.

"Wh-what...? Oh my god. This isn't possible. A sneak attack?! Half of the hospital was blown up! I'm barely getting half a dozen vital readings, if that!"

Panicking, she forcefully stabs her finger against the communication panel.

"Elder Skarde, this is Commander Hiro! What the hell is going on? Are you in danger? What happened to the hospital?! Over!"

This time, Phoebe gets a reply. Elder Skarde speaks, surprise in his voice. "Commander Hiro? We had a group of Shades attack the city. We're not certain how many, but they struck the reinforced shelters under the pyramids. Luckily, we suffered very few casualties. I've had my troops combing the streets ever since. I... I wasn't aware of any danger at the hospital. I will send troops there at once, over."

"You're goddamn-well right you will!" Phoebe roars. "My daughter is there, and Samantha, too! Not to mention thousands of our wounded soldiers! How can you not know what happened?! All those troopers had exosuits on their bodies! Don't tell me you didn't detect multiple deaths within the city's borders! Over!"

Elder Skarde takes several seconds to reply. When he does, he sounds even more confused than before. "I... I'm looking at their bio-scanners right now, Commander Hiro. Their vital signs appear the same as they did six hours ago. No changes. Are you certain something happened? Over."

"I'm looking at a hologram of the hospital as we speak!" Phoebe shouts. "Of course I'm sure! Get men in there on the double and report back to me! Commander Hiro, out!"

Phoebe turns off the communication panel. She presses both fists against the sides of her head and grits her teeth. "Fuck, fuck, fuck! Shades! They must have slipped past our defenses! In the dark of night, there's no enemy more dangerous than a Shade or a Shadow-walker! If anything happened to Daisy or Sam... I swear... I'll wipe the demons out!"

Blinker cocks her head. "But... I don't get it. Why would those hospitalized troops still show perfectly fine bio-signs if they're dead? Doesn't that seem a bit weird to you?"

Hearing Blinker's words, Phoebe forces herself to calm down. She lowers her fists and rests them in her lap. Then, she gazes outside, at the dawn's light slowly beginning to brighten Tarus II's surface.

"No. It's not weird. It's sinister. A technical glitch at a time like this? Too coincidental. This has Ose's fingerprints all over it."

Phoebe nibbles her lip.

"Ose is an enigma. She never showed herself to humanity even once in the last six years. Her rise to power has been silent and benign, as if she was content to let us do our own thing. After you and Kar told me that Hope had spent the last six years launching attacks on the Labyrinth, I began to understand why we hadn't heard about our escalating tensions with the demons. Jason and I assumed they might try and attack humanity someday, but we didn't realize Ose's plans had been so meticulous."

"So, you think Ose tampered with the exosuits?" Blinker asks.

"Possibly," Phoebe mutters. "After all, she did capture Neil. She might have forced out the command codes from him. Even if she didn't, she might be able to hack them herself. There's a reason the demons call her 'Ghost,' because she's their most adept infiltrator. Who knows how many traps she might spring on us the longer this war continues?"

The white-haired woman sends out a transmission via Centurion, ordering Neil's command codes get erased. Having already done so on the day he disappeared, she does it again, just in case she somehow messed up the first time.

After that, Phoebe takes a moment to pause and reflect. Her thoughts turn complicated as she observes the battlefield. Hundreds of soldiers die every minute, while still managing to kill an even greater number of demons. Even so, the human forces number less than ten thousandth their demonic adversaries. In a battle of attrition, they can't possibly win the war.

"What should we do...?" Phoebe mutters.

Beep beep.

Another communications ping catches Phoebe's attention. She activates the console.

"Commander Hiro speaking, over."

"Commander, it's me," Lieutenant Samuel says, his voice noticeably more energetic than before. "I... I don't know what happened. One moment, I was laying on the ground, dying. The next, it was as if holy water appeared from the void and coated my soul. All of my injuries disappeared, just like that! I've got a bitch of a headache, but otherwise, I'm fine! Over."

Phoebe nods. "I activated your exosuits' teleportation transponders. Belial must have healed you when you arrived in the hospital, over."

"No, that's the thing!" Samuel says. "None of us returned to the hospital! We just... fully recovered! Right where we sat! It was unlike anything I've ever experienced in my life! Over."

Phoebe frowns. "Err, I don't understand. Belial is our only healer. Did she show up at the prisons and heal you? Over."

Before Samuel can respond, a different voice speaks, one Phoebe has grown intimately familiar with over the past few years.

"No, it was me. I healed those men."

The voice speaks from all around Phoebe, as if magically transmitted from a great distance. Phoebe's eyes light up with excitement. "Jason! Is that you? Where have you been?"

Samuel falls silent. He hears the Hero's voice, as well as his Commander's surprise, and realizes that Phoebe must not have known what Jason was doing.

"It's a long story," Jason says, his voice becoming clearer. "I can't yet return to Tarus II. Instead, I'll support you from a distance. I'm several thousand light-years away, and it could take me a while to arrive. However, now that I have a 'battery,' my Wordsmithing has become far more powerful. We won't lose this war. I promise."

Phoebe blinks. "A 'battery'? What do you mean?"

"I'll tell you later. For now, focus on yourself. Oh, and don't worry about Daisy and Sam. They're alive and well."

"They are? That's great! Wait... how did you know I was thinking about them? Were you listening to me, earlier?"

Jason coughs in embarrassment. "Ahem! Err, uh, gotta go! Line's cutting out! Can't hear you very well- bzzt, brrt! Love you, bye!"

His voice fades away, leaving Phoebe grasping at straws.

Blinker facepalms. "...Your man is a big, silly idiot."

"No, he's a lovable goof," Phoebe laughs. "There's a difference!"

"Whatever you say!" Blinker chirps. "Let's hope Jason isn't screwing around. We need all the help we can get, sister."

Phoebe smiles. "For some reason, Jason's words always fill me with confidence. If he says we'll win... then I wholeheartedly believe him. I'll always trust Jason's judgment at times like these."

Blinker smiles back. "Jason might be an idiot, but you're a good wife. He's lucky to have you."

"No. We're all lucky to have him," Phoebe murmurs.

>!This is what a spoiler looks like! Click it to reveal the text!!

Part 259: Beelzebub's Prison Break

Inside the dungeons at the southern border of Hero City, an odd sight unfolds as Beelzebub, the Duke of Inferno, strides down the hallways of the underground complex butt-naked. More than two hundred prison guards ambush or attack him in groups of six to twelve, but Beelzebub casually kills them with the ease of a lifelong farmer reaping his wheat.

The young Duke trots forward at a snail's pace. His movements are very casual, as if he couldn't give a damn about the war happening outside the prison. With Mara having hastily explained the situation to him, he barely gives Ose's plans a second thought.

"Blasted wench," Beelzebub grumbles. "I bet she planned for me to get captured. How else could someone as incredible as me fall to that stupid crocodile's surprise attack? Surely, Ose would have seen that little trick of his coming from a mile away. She probably got a good laugh out of my predicament."

"Well, hah-hah, laugh it up. I'll just take my sweet time getting back. How about that? That'll teach you to pull pranks on me. Bloody hellspawn."

A heavily armored Rhino-trooper charges at Beelzebub from behind. With an advanced suit capable of ripping Barons apart, the man raises a massive hammer overhead, intending to smash the Duke of Inferno's bones into gravy.

Instead, Beelzebub summons a scorching disk of fire in his hands. It spins like a Frisbee, heating to over fifteen hundred degrees Fahrenheit. Without even turning his head, Beelzebub casually tosses the fire-disc behind himself. It crashes against the Rhino-trooper's chest, cuts through him without any resistance, and severs the man's body in half. He perishes instantly, unable to offer the feeblest of resistance.

After the soldier's body hits the ground, Beelzebub pauses. He turns around and frowns at the dead man.

"You humans are so strange. Has anyone ever told you that? What kind of moron thinks he can take on a Demon Duke all by himself? What, do you think your fancy technology can defeat me? You're not the Monster King. You're not the Second Emperor. You're certainly not the Hero. You're just a human. An ordinary, worthless fleshbag. What possesses your people to fling themselves at me like idiotic lemmings? Do you all have death wishes?"

Beelzebub's question goes unanswered, on the account of his victim being dead. After shaking his head, the Duke continues walking, his demonhood slapping against his legs one step at a time.

"Seven Hells. Why'd I have to go and burn my suit to ash? Gah. How embarrassing. Now the humans are going to see me naked. They don't deserve the honor."

After ten minutes of walking up and down multiple corridors, Beelzebub arrives at the top of the underground complex. His peerless heat-based vision allows him to make out the blips of several humans aboveground. More than thirty thousand elite troopers surround the facility's exit, waiting for the Demon Duke to emerge.

Once Beelzebub reaches the foot of the stairs, he slows to a stop and rubs the bridge of his nose.

"Don't these peasants realize that I can see them? Only an idiot would stroll through that door into their trap. Devils. Humans are truly imbecilic. If they didn't have a Hero assisting them, they'd have fallen two days after rising up in their pathetic little insurrection."

A sense of fatigue fills Beelzebub's mind. Boredom fills his gaze, along with a deep sense of despair.

"I'm only a Demon Duke, but already, I'm an unkillable monster. If I should attain the rank of Emperor, who knows how powerful I'll become? The Monster King couldn't defeat me in a fair fight, and he certainly couldn't kill me. He could only trap me in that suffocating metal armor. As for the pawns waiting for me outside, they aren't worth a speck of dirt. I could simply blast the ceiling into the stratosphere and fly away, but they actually think they have some brilliant method of capturing me."

"Well, think again, fools! I'm Beelzebub, soon to be the mightiest demon of all time! Not even the oh-so-great Satan himself would be able to defeat me once I reach my pinnacle. What can mere gnats do when facing a mountain?"

For some unknown reason, Beelzebub babbles to himself, likely due to enjoying the sound of his own voice. Despite everything he's just said, the Duke of Inferno brazenly begins walking up the stairs. He strolls out through the prison's exit as if he hasn't anything better to do with his time. Once outside, he stares up at the night sky and takes a deep breath.

"Mmm. Smells nice out here. Like daffodils."

The Duke's complete lack of preparation for the enemies awaiting him makes several human soldiers sweat bullets. They hide behind nearby trees, with the nearest soldiers donning stealth-type Spectre exosuits. These camouflaged soldiers, invisible to the naked eye, somehow feel exposed. Even though their brains tell them there's no way the Duke of Inferno can see them, their instincts scream in alarm.

Still, as good soldiers, they take aim at the Duke and await their orders. Several high-powered sniper rifles, each one capable of piercing tank armor, fixate on different areas of Beelzebub's body. Behind the nearest Spectre soldiers, other elite troopers wearing color-shifted standard-issue T-REX's lay on their bellies in the tall grass. Unlike the snipers, these soldiers wield specially-designed grenade launchers. Instead of explosive munitions, their grenades contain dense and heavy electrical nets, designed to explode just before striking a target, then wrapping them in a stunning embrace.

Countless other soldiers stand in reserve behind the hill where the prison exit emerges. They hide just out of sight, their purpose being only to come in with guns blazing if the first two teams fail to capture Beelzebub.

However, to all of the humans' alarm, Beelzebub doesn't move a muscle. He stands silently, unmoving, at the exit to the prison. The Duke of Inferno places both hands on his hips and stretches his back, all while gazing up at the starry night sky.

"Mmm. Bacon. Nice, crispy bacon," Beelzebub mutters, his words easily picked up by the trooper's exosuits. "Rosalia always used to make the most delicious bacon. I never ate it, of course, because I have no need to consume sustenance. Still, the smell always did stir my heart. I wonder what that fat ogre is up to these days, hmm?"

While Beelzebub mutters to himself, one of the troopers quietly whispers into his helmet's microphone, despite the perfect sound-dampening capabilities of his exosuit. He doesn't dare speak too loudly, lest the Duke somehow hear him.

"Corporal Hurent. We have eyes on the target. Awaiting your orders."

The man's voice transmits to his commanding officer, half a mile away. Corporal Hurent and Lieutenant Samuel kneel behind a large rock atop a small hill, their eyes locked on Beelzebub's figure. They peep out from behind the boulder and use their exosuit's telescopic vision enhancements to observe the Duke with the same clarity as if they were only a hundred feet away.

"Something's wrong..." Corporal Hurent mutters, her eyes narrowed. "Why is Beelzebub just standing there? I thought he'd immediately take off once he exited the prison facility. His reaction is... suspicious."

The Lieutenant stays silent for five seconds.

Suddenly, he curses. "Shit. He knows! The motherfucker knows! All units, this is Lieutenant Samuel! Beelzebub is aware of your presences! Fire at will! Don't hold back!"

Samuel jumps to his feet. His heavily armored Rhino suit releases steam from its back as it vents its excess thermal energy. Corporal Hurent doesn't argue with him, instead opting to immediately accept his judgment. She pilots a dark green-colored Hummer-class T-REX, one designed for short bursts of flight, or long-term hovering maneuvers. As the night-time lights up with a hail of gunfire, Samuel dashes forward, his feet stomping against the dirt. Corporal Hurent takes to the skies, activating her rear wing struts to launch herself skyward.

All hell breaks loose. Beelzebub, standing as calmly as ever, doesn't move a muscle as the lightly forested woodlands surrounding him explode with activity. Hundreds of bullets, guided by inhumanly precise exosuit aim-assistance systems, fire at the Duke in unison.

All of them miss.

Right before the humans unload their weapons on the Duke, he vanishes. A slight puff of flames is all they see as Beelzebub fireports away, jumping to a tiny patch of burning flames he ignited moments before.

When Beelzebub arrives at his new position, he does so in an eerily quiet manner. The shrubbery around him erupts into flames as he materializes only five feet from a pair of Spectre-wearing troopers. Both troopers continue firing at his previous position. It takes them a split-second to realize Beelzebub has disappeared, and another split-second to notice a newcomer in their presence.

The soldiers jerk their heads to the left, where they spot the Duke standing silently next to them, a bland look of boredom on his face.

"Shi-!" One of the troopers shouts. Before he can finish the expletive, his voice cuts off. An explosion of two thousand degree flames strikes him and his companion, a woman, charring both of them to ashes. They don't get even a single moment to contemplate their existences.

The instant Beelzebub fries the soldiers where they stand, countless other troopers nearby pause their gunfire to train on his new position. Too bad for them, the Duke raises his thumbs, extends his pointer fingers, and curls the other three fingers on both hands together, turning his hands into finger-guns.

Boom-boom-boom!

The Duke launches a dozen miniature fireballs at high velocities, blasting apart twelve other random troopers. Flames spread out to illuminate the landscape, as well as the bodies of the humans. They perish without knowing what hit them.

By the time Lieutenant Samuel and Corporal Hurent arrive on scene, only twenty seconds have passed. Still, they're too late.

With fire and flames engulfing the lightly wooded area, Beelzebub becomes capable of fireporting anywhere he pleases. The naked Duke flits from one spot to another, shooting anyone he sees with fire-bullets, blowing up clusters of troops with concentrated fire-bombs, and otherwise wreaking absolute havoc among humanity's forces.

One man screams in fright as the Duke suddenly appears in front of him. "Aaaaiee-"

His body explodes, spraying boiling hot blood backwards into the faces of his comrades behind him. Moments later, those soldiers perish as well.

"Sweet mother of god!" Samuel roars, as he storms onto the scene. "I'll fucking kill you, you bloodskin bastard!"

If Beelzebub hears Samuel's warcry, he doesn't pay it any heed. He continues fireporting around, easily evading all of the humans' intricate traps as if the battle were nothing more than a weekend stroll along the beach.

The more humans Beelzebub kills, the more vacant his eyes become.

This isn't fun at all. Beelzebub thinks. It's not enjoyable in the slightest. It barely even passes the time. I might as well go and stomp Hellhound puppies in their dens. These humans are even more pathetic than I thought.

During a momentary lapse in concentration, Beelzebub yawns. The slight break in his battle momentum makes him close his eyes reflexively, making him fail to notice the huge, towering metal beast charging at him.

BOOM!!

Lieutenant Samuel punches Beelzebub in the face, battering him with the strength of a lion slapping a rabbit. Beelzebub, momentarily caught off-guard, goes flying backward. He crashes into the dirt some thirty feet away. His spine grinds against the burning grass, leaving a trail of ash in his wake. When he opens his eyes, he frowns. Half his vision fails him, indicating that whoever just punched him must have destroyed half his face.

"...Dick."

The Duke of Inferno growls in annoyance, then fireports backward, putting some distance between himself and the Rhino-wearing human. By the time Samuel's follow-up attack reaches Beelzebub's previous position, he's already started regenerating his shattered skull, face, and jaw.

"Nice sucker-punch," Beelzebub says, the disdain in his voice evident. A barrage of gunfire tears toward him, but he flickers away, dodging it reflexively. "Too bad it accomplished nothing."

"Fuck you and your smug bullshit!" Samuel bellows. He charges at the Duke once more, but Beelzebub merely fireports again, dodging the slow and bulky Rhino suit with ease. Its massive armor serves to hamper it against agile foes, so Beelzebub doesn't pay it much mind.

The Duke continues casually killing humans, but this time, he keeps his eye on the Rhino. For some reason unknown to the humans, he doesn't immediately attack the Lieutenant, nor does he kill him. Instead, the Duke goes to great lengths to avoid the humans' commander, killing more and more soldiers on the periphery as they arrive.

The Rhino-wearing commander chases after Beelzebub, trying to grab the Duke or land a decisive punch, but every time, he comes up short. As Beelzebub casually slaughters the worthless insects trying to cause him harm, he strikes up a conversation with Samuel.

"Pardon me, human," Beelzebub says. "I've got this question on my mind, and it's really burning in my chaw. Perhaps you can satisfy my curiosity regarding the matter."

"Fuck off and die!" Samuel screams, as he swings another fist at Beelzebub. The Duke fireports away, leaving Samuel standing in a puddle of recently-melted soldiers.

"Yes, yes, you've said that several times now," Beelzebub groans, rolling his eyes. "But, look. I have to ask: Why do you humans keep fighting my people when you know you can't win? Look at this mess. I'm slaughtering your men without any resistance. I'm only a Duke, you know? I'm not even a blasted Emperor. Even with all your fancy metal toys and armor and guns, you're still no match for me. Doesn't all this seem rather pointless? Your only shot at beating me is if the Sphinx, the Second Emperor, or one of the Heroes shows up. Even if they do, they can't kill me. Even if they can, there are countless other demons ready to replace me."

Beelzebub continues. "This is all such a bother. Why don't you humans just give up already? It's pointless to resist. You'll all end up dying like dogs. Surely that's not what you want, am I right? Give up, and I'll ensure Ose only wipes your memories. We won't kill you. It's better for you to be slaves living in bliss than soldiers dying inevitable deaths, don't you think?"

The Duke speaks with the absolute conviction of a conqueror, as if his words are directed not at trained soldiers, but a group of rowdy children. Even so, his speech has a hypnotic quality to it, calling out to the weak-minded and making them consider his offer a little more seriously than they might otherwise.

What use is there in fighting the demons when humans can't win?

Why die pointless deaths by fighting in a useless war?

More than a few soldiers, seeing the approach of death at Beelzebub's flames, feel their knees buckle.

Aside from those who lived for a hundred thousand years due to Bahamut's curse of immortality, the vast majority of soldiers present at Beelzebub's slaughter are younger humans from liberated worlds. Remembering how simple their lives used to be before they joined the Hero's resistance, a few of them weep at how ghastly their situation has become.

One soldier shudders violently, his will to fight draining from his body. He falls to his knees and sobs as he witnesses the deaths of countless friends he's made over the past six years. Unable to pick himself up, he offers no resistance as Beelzebub appears and blasts his body to atoms.

However, one soldier doesn't flinch even in the slightest. Lieutenant Samuel continues doggedly pursuing Beelzebub, chasing him no matter where he appears, even though his actions appear completely futile.

"Shut your mouth, bloodskin!" Samuel roars. "I've heard enough from the likes of you!"

The Lieutenant stops his fruitless pursuit of Beelzebub, realizing his feet won't bring him any closer to the Duke of Inferno. He stabs a finger at Beelzebub and laughs hollowly.

"Hah! Your words are poison! What makes you think you're superior to us? Is it because you possess magic?! So did the Dragons! The Titans! The Angels! And now look at them. They're all dead! Soon, your species will join them!"

"Stupid bastard!" Samuel continues, his eyes turning bloodshot. "We are humans! Just because you're stronger than us now, that doesn't mean you will be forever! Just because you stomp on us and seek to enslave us doesn't mean you'll succeed! Even if I fall here today, the Hero will continue our fight!"

Samuel's words spread around the battlefield. Beelzebub continues killing humans, but his pace slows noticeably as he pauses every so often to listen to Samuel's speech.

"Even if this planet falls," Samuel continues, "humanity will live on! You demons are so high and mighty- so proud of yourselves! You defeated us once, but foolishly kept us alive, thinking we'd never revolt. You thought we'd never pose a threat to you. But look at us now, you ugly bastard! This invasion. This war. You attacked us because you're afraid! You're terrified of what humanity could become! We may be weak now... but someday... we'll surpass you! Totally! Completely! In every meaning of the word!"

Samuel's speech enters the ears of every man and woman present. Even a few of the exosuit-wearing monster-soldiers perk their ears up, feeling a surge of pride in a species different from theirs.

Beelzebub turns to face Samuel. He pauses his onslaught and laughs. "Haha. Is that so? You humans will someday surpass the demons? What a gas. Even if you had a million years, that would never happen. These weapons you take so much pride in mean nothing in the face of absolute power."

The Duke sneers. "Face it. You're living in denial, human. You're holding onto hope of a nebulous future, one in which you rise up and slay your oppressors. Too bad for you, that future is an impossibility.

Even your precious Heroes are far too afraid to show their faces today. Where is Hope, hmm? Jason? Nowhere! They fled. They left you to rot and die."

"That's a damned lie, and you know it," Samuel counters, pointing his fist at Beelzebub. "Everyone knows our King loves his wife and daughter. He'd never leave them to die. The fact they're here means he will return. I know it. I believe it! I have faith in my King, as do we all! Even if you kill everyone here, the Hero will return and pay you back in kind for your sins!"

Samuel's voice turns deadly cold.

"But... before that. I dare you to face me, demon. I dare you to meet my fist. I've a debt I must extract from your corpse, as well as those of all your fellow bloodskins. My brother... my brother! He died because of your evils! You bloodskins flayed him alive and hung him up to dry! You left him to rot in the sun for five days until he succumbed to his wounds! A miserable death! A sad fate for a loving and kind boy!"

"Demonic filth!" Samuel continues. "Do you dare face me?! Or will you keep running away like a coward?!"

Beelzebub sighs.

"...Seven hells. I was going to save you for last, but if you're so desperate to visit the Great Beyond... well, I suppose I can offer you this last courtesy. You've given me a small bit of insight into the feeble thoughts possessing your species. Now I can understand why you fight with such desperate bravado."

The Duke rolls his eyes. "It's because you're all delusional. Every last one of you. You place all your hopes on some Hero. Some possible future which will never occur. Humanity will never defeat the demons. It's impossible. And, in the short-term, you will personally suffer the consequences for daring to attack me. After all, what sort of master allows his pet to bite him? Mutts should be slapped and beaten like the dogs they are."

Instead of fireporting toward Samuel, Beelzebub lowers his hands to his sides. The naked Duke strides toward Samuel with the grace of a deer, a faint smile appearing on his lips.

"How about this, human? Let's trade blows. Your fancy armor certainly looks impressive, but we both know it can't match up to my full power. If you can survive three strikes from me, I'll consider this my loss and leave. I won't kill any more of your men. How about it, chum? Isn't that a nice offer? Aren't I simply a swell guy for showing a pest like you such grace?"

Samuel shakes his head and begins stomping toward Beelzebub. "I have a better idea! Instead, I'll beat the shit out of you, and you can fuck off to the Great Beyond!"

As the Rhino-wearing commander suicidally charges toward the Duke, Beelzebub sighs with regret. "I remember when I used to think Rosalia and Bael were the dumbest people I'd ever meet. Ah, so young was I. So ignorant. Those were the good old days."

Beelzebub doesn't avoid Samuel's charge. Likewise, with their commander recklessly rushing in to face off against the Duke alone, the humans pause their attacks, unsure of what to do.

One hundred feet. Fifty. Twenty-five.

Despite his bulky armor, Samuel clears the gap in under two seconds. In terms of agility, the Rhino suit performs at a sub-par level. However, in terms of straight-distance running speed, it doesn't lag behind the other exosuits in the slightest.

Samuel raises his fist. He swings at Beelzebub, but still, the Duke doesn't dodge.

Suddenly, Beelzebub's left hand moves.

BOOM!!

The Duke backhands the heavily armored commander, sending him hurtling to the left. Beelzebub's unfathomable power renders all of the Rhino's technological superiority useless. Samuel slams into the dirt head-first, bounces, rolls, and crashes into a boulder, spreading spiderweb-cracks all along its front. The Lieutenant comes a a stop with the front of his helmet cracked and broken. He lays against the rock, unmoving.

Beelzebub laughs. "Haha. Was that it? Was that the full extent of your strength? I thought you might be able to take one light little slap, but really, your idiocy- hmm?"

The Duke's expression changes. Even without the sensation of touch, he senses something amiss. Beelzebub jerks his eyes downward, where he spots a fragment of the exosuit's faceplate stabbed into his hand. The nanites spring to life and seep into Beelzebub's skin, making his eyebrows jump in alarm.

"What is this? You tricky little insect! Hoho, was this your big plan?!"

Without hesitation, Beelzebub ignites the power of fire in his blood. He boils himself alive, intending to roast the nanites inside him to ash.

However, with his mind fully concentrated on Samuel's deception, the Duke fails to notice a single human flying half a mile directly above him, her sniper barrel aimed at the top of his head.

"Target in sight," Corporal Hurent says, her voice even. "I'm taking the shot."

Piff!

A faint hissing of air is the only warning Beelzebub gets before his vision turns black.

A bullet traveling at ten times the speed of sound tears through the top of his skull, rips through his chest and body, and blasts apart his spine with sheer concussive force.

The Duke doesn't even get a chance to react. His legs turn to pudding as he stumbles forward, collapsing face-first in the burning grass.

Samuel jumps to his feet. Blood drips from his eyes and mouth, the result of taking a single slap from the Duke of Inferno. "All units! Subdue him. Don't give that bastard even a second to regenerate."

Dozens of electric nets fly at Beelzebub, stabbing into various ares of his body and transmitting terrifying doses of electrical energy to his neurons. By the time the Duke's regeneration kicks in, a hellish rain of agony starts streaming into his mind.

"Aaah... ahhh... ahhhhh!!!"

Beelzebub screams in pain. With electricity being the only conduit that can bring back his pain receptors, the numbness pervading his life for the past six years falls away, replaced instead with a hellish, fiery torment.

"Gaahhh! H-humans- you filthy, ahhh!!"

Hundreds of soldiers charge Beelzebub. Each time he regenerates, they bury bullets in his brain and spine, making it impossible for him to get up. At the same time, they retrieve a containment nanosuit identical to the one that Kar used to capture him previously. Beelzebub awakens after his twentieth regeneration to the fresh hell of nanites crawling across his body. The same suffocating feeling of terror takes him as he realizes that, even without the Sphinx, the blasted humans tricked him and caught him off-guard.

No! Not like this! Beelzebub's internal voice screams. How dare these insects press their boots against my back?! If they want a fight, then that's what I'll give them!

The Duke instantly detonates half of the mana in his body, turning his arms and legs into living bombs. The resulting explosions catch his human captors unaware, killing five hundred of the closest soldiers in a two hundred meter radius. Even Samuel, with his heavily armored Rhino suit, barely survives by the skin of his teeth. Beelzebub's unexpected detonation tears through Samuel's commandos with reckless abandon, killing them like pigs to the slaughter.

A minute later, Beelzebub regenerates again. This time, the remaining humans are too far away to reach him in time. He jumps to his feet, hellfire and fury burning in his eyes.

"Filthy fleshbags! Wretched little deceivers! I was taking it easy on you, but you just had to go and piss me off! Now you all will DIE!!"

What follows is a massacre of genocidal proportions. Beelzebub doesn't hold back. He fireports around at unbelievable speeds, leaving afterimages in his wake. Everywhere he appears, the Reaper follows. Countless soldiers perish in flames, screaming and crying with their last breaths. Two thousand soldiers die in the first five minutes. Another two thousand follow shortly after.

Samuel lays on the ground. Terrible burn marks line his face and chest. Blood-filled tears drip from his eyes as he watches Beelzebub slaughter entire platoons wholesale.

When Phoebe messages him, asking about his progress, all he can do is apologize.

"Cough... cough... shit. It was a... a massacre. Fuck. I'm sorry, Commander. We couldn't stop him. Beelzebub... he's too powerful. Thirty thousand soldiers... my friends... all dead. Cough. I failed you, Commander. I failed you..."

Few soldiers remain. Those who do, roll around in the grass, clutching gruesome wounds while shrieking in pain.

Beelzebub spares nobody. Even Corporal Hurent, high above, isn't safe from his wrath. He blasts off the ground and flies at her with clenched fists.

"So you're the gnat who hit me from my blind spot! Perish in flames, you worthless human!"

Hurent's heart turns to ice. She watches as the Duke flies toward her, his speed far beyond hers. Even with her flight enabled exosuit, she can't outrun him. She can't hide, she can't flee, and she certainly can't protect herself.

A tear slides down her face as she takes aim with her rifle.

Piff!

The bullet misses. Beelzebub dodges it from several hundred feet away, grinning evilly as he approaches.

With her death imminent, Hurent turns inconsolable. At only thirty years old, she's still young, with her whole life ahead of her.

Sadly, facing Beelzebub's wrath, her existence has met its end.

She closes her eyes and grits her teeth, hoping Beelzebub will at least grant her a quick, painless death.

* * *

Seconds pass.

Still shaking with terror, the Corporal opens her eyes.

She flicks her gaze in multiple directions, but doesn't see Beelzebub anywhere.

What's going on? Is... is he toying with me?

She spins around in midair, looking up, down, left and right. Still, she can't locate his position.

Hurriedly, Hurent pulls up Centurion's video footage. What she sees leaves her puzzled.

Beelzebub rears back his fist, swings at her head... and disappears.

She stares at the footage, finding herself more and more confused every second.

Did he fireport away? But why wasn't there a burst of flame like before? I don't understand. Where did the Duke go?

And then, as her confusion reaches its apex, a male voice speaks inside her mind.

[Corporal Hurent. It's me, Jason Hiro. I'm healing the wounded. Don't worry about Beelzebub. I've 'taken care' of him for now.]

The Corporal's jaw slackens. She stares ahead blankly at nothing in particular, her mind in a daze.

"H-hero? Sir? Is that really you?"

Jason replies, his voice filled with sadness. [Um. Yeah. Sorry it took me so long. I didn't realize the situation- well, I didn't know it had gotten this bad. I'm deeply ashamed of myself. But, don't worry. This war is over now. The demons will lose. I promise.]

"They will? You have a plan?"

[...Something like that. No time to talk. I have a lot of work ahead of me. Report to Lieutenant Samuel, tally the losses. You know what to do.]

The woman nods dumbly. "Yes, sir. I understand. Thank you... for returning."

[You're welcome. I'll make sure nobody else suffers the way you have, from here on out.]

Jason's voice fades away, leaving Hurent feeling not only dazed, but more than a little giddy.

The Hero has returned! Even better, he has a solution to end the war! As expected, the King is amazing!

>!This is what a spoiler looks like! Click it to reveal the text!!

Part 260: Battlefield Interference

Tarus II, the Northern Front.

The Felorians stave off waves of demons, using the power of Chi to enhance their bodies. Brunhilda, their leader, becomes a Valkyrie of death among the attacking demonic forces. She wields a hundred-pound exosteel halberd as if it were a weightless stick, cleaving the heads of demons and smashing the bones of skeletons with reckless abandon. The butt of her spear becomes a blunted weapon, while its bladed head proves more than capable of ripping through flesh and bone.

Ten Burners rush at Hilda, identifying her as the Felorians' leader. Through a stroke of luck, they manage to isolate her for a few moments while bombarding her with fireballs and scorching flames. Brunhilda counters by sweeping her halberd in a wide arc while infusing Chi into its shaft. Magical energy fires out in a wave, blasting away the hellfire before it can so much as graze her skin.

The Burners don't suffer any injuries from their own flames, but the unexpected shockwave of Chi knocks them off their feet and flings them backward. Before they can react, Brunhilda rushes forward and lops off their heads, moving at close to the speed of a cheetah.

"Hold the line!" Brunhilda shouts, using Chi to project her voice in a wide radius. "Do not let the demons through!"

She barks several orders, directing the Felorians left and right to surround the demons in a pincer attack, while a wide array of monster-troopers wearing T-REX's fire off volleys of bullets down the center line. Unable to flee this combined attack, hundreds of demons and Mephisto's undead end up mowed down by the hail of bullets.

"You won't last forever!" A random Scyther demon shrieks, as it swings its bladed arm toward a Felorian, lopping off the woman's arm. She screams in pain and falls to the ground, while the demon cackles evilly. "We'll overwhelm you eventually, filthy fleshbags!"

Brunhilda's eyes widen. "Sister Sariah! No!"

She starts to run toward her sister, but her heart leaps into her throat as the Scyther swings its sword down. With two hundred feet separating Brunhilda and her Felorian sister, she can't possibly reach Sariah in time.

At that moment, a barrier of light envelops Sariah. The Scyther's blade-arm bounces off it like a rubber ball against a wall, making the demon lose its footing. Before it can react to the unexpected force-field, Brunhilda closes the gap.

Swish!

Her halberd swings instantly, decapitating the little bastard. Brunhilda turns aside and reaches toward her sister, passing through the barrier with surprising ease.

"Hm? Sariah! Are you alright? What happened, just now? How did you create that shield of light?"

The other Felorian clutches her severed arm with gritted teeth. "Ahh, sss! It wasn't me... I don't... I don't know who did it. I've never heard of such a technique bef- what?!"

Brunhilda and Sariah, both surrounded by chaos in every direction, freeze and gawk as Sariah's missing arm rapidly regenerates. Within seconds, a brand new limb appears, taking the place of the old one.

"What... what happened?" Brunhilda asks, her eyes as wide as dinner plates. "How did you do that?"

"Me? I did nothing!" Sariah says, glancing around. She smiles and shrugs, wondering what could have regrown her arm in such a short time. "Perhaps 'twas the Wind Mother's doing. She watches over us!"

Brunhilda nods. "Mmm, yes, sister. I believe you may be right. Now, come! Give no quarter to these damned bloodskins!"

"Right!"

Brunhilda and Sariah jump back into the fray, returning to the bloody war engulfing them from all sides. Any thoughts they might have regarding what happened to Sariah's arm fade away, replaced instead with faith in the 'Wind Mother.'

* * *

Meanwhile, at the Western Front.

Yamir, the head cook for the Hiro household, stomps around inside a standard-issue battle exosuit. However, due to his Minotaur body, his combat level outstrips that of the humans who don Rhinos and Thundercats. The default T-REX amplifies his strength, speed, and durability by a factor of ten, turning the noble Ironhorn into a force of destruction.

The bull-headed monster stomps around slowly but efficiently, using his human torso to wield a gigantic half-ton greathammer. He picks out the strongest enemies and leaves the small-fry to his allies. Most notably, he aims for Brutes; the biggest, baddest Demon grunts. Ten foot walls of fat and muscle, each one capable of smashing their way through concrete barricades and crushing exosuit-wearing troopers with their meaty fists.

One such Brute, a big fellow with dark, crimson skin, grins evilly as he spots the exosuit-wearing minotaur charging at him.

"Hah! Traitor monster! Ugly Minoturd! You big loser, stupid fleshbag-lover! Die like dog!"

The monster's lack of eloquence doesn't faze Yamir. The 'simple chef' grins inside his helmet, a move the Brute can't see. "Silly knave! How dare you tread upon my liege's lands with your sullen feet! The Hero will punish all of you! But sadly, you won't live long enough for His Majesty to stain his hands with your blood!"

The hoof-footed Minotaur bellows a vicious warcry as he engages in battle with the Brute. His greathammer crashes against the Brute's fists and body, both of them knocking one another around like pinballs.

Blow after blow, Yamir gives no ground against his hulking opponent. Despite standing a foot shorter than the Brute, the Minotaur simply laughs off his enemy's punches, even when they successfully connect.

"Haha! Is that all you've got? If your rotten flesh wasn't so putrid, I'd cook your corpse for my master! Too bad, you aren't even fit for the begging mutts!"

The Brute roars at Yamir. "You make big talk for tiny short-horn! Eat fist, you cow!"

Just as Yamir is preparing to charge the Brute, his danger instincts kick in. He glances to his right, where he spots two more Brutes and a Demon Baron running toward him.

"There, that's the one," The Baron says, pulling back his hood to expose his face. "He's leading the humans on this side. Ose wants him dead."

Yamir, sensing the situation change, flares his nostrils. "Hmph. Orias! Baron of the Stars. It seems you, too, are following Ose's bidding."

"Oh? Yamir? Is that you?" Orias asks. The Baron of the Stars scratches his facial hair and chuckles. "You used to work for Bahamut. Now, you fight for the humans. What a sad fate for the Ironhorn Clan's firstborn."

The two Brutes spread out to encircle Yamir, while Orias stands his ground, a sad look on his face. Yamir snorts again and stomps his hoof, dragging it across the dirt aggressively.

"I serve the master of this world. I cook for him and take care of his family. There is no greater calling in my life than to prepare delicacies for my king!"

"Your 'king'," Orias repeats. "He's a Hero. Demonkind's enemy, and thus, yours. I'll be sure to deliver your head to your father. He'll thank me for executing a traitor."

"I've not spoken to my father in a thousand years!" Yamir bellows. "And not once have I regretted that choice! So long as my ancestors smile upon me, my life was worth living. Not that a demon like you would know anything of family ties!"

Orias nods. "Indeed, I wouldn't. Now, die."

The Baron of the Stars plucks a shiny red gem out of his arm. As the three Brutes stomp toward Yamir with their fists at the ready, Orias clutches the ruby in his hand and snaps his fingers.

Fwoosh!

Fire engulfs Orias for a few minutes as his control over flames leaps into the stratosphere. In the waning darkness, while dawn approaches, Orias's conflagration draws countless eyeballs. He leaps into the air and hurls fire at the area around Yamir, coordinating with the Brutes to keep away any reinforcements capable of saving the Minotaur's life.

The Hiro family's chef battles his opponents with a crazed fervor. The previous battle against one Brute may have tilted slightly in his favor, but three Brutes are far too many for him to overcome. Repeatedly, the Brutes punch and kick him, knocking him from one to the other like a trio of cats slapping a mouse.

Eventually, Yamir has no choice but to drop his greathammer and switch to his fists. He changes his combat-style to one reminiscent of boxing, holding up his arms to protect his face and chest, while bobbing and weaving to avoid certain death. He starts landing punches, striking one of the Brutes across his face repeatedly, but the Brute merely reveals a masochistic grin and laughs.

"You hit like girl! Me not feel any pain, heh-heh!"

Orias blasts away a small squad of troopers before they can reach Yamir, preventing them from rescuing their commander.

"Yamir! Break out of the formation! We can't get in there; this Baron is too powerful!"

Yamir grits his teeth. The bull comes out swinging. He tries to charge through a gap in the Brutes' defenses, only for a giant fist to sledgehammer his face and send him toppling backward into the dirt. Yamir crashes against a poorly-placed rock and nearly cracks his skull, saved only by his exosuit's defenses.

"Aargh!"

The chef cries out in pain. He tries to get up, but a hail of Brute fists rains down on him, forcing him to curl into the fetal position and tank their blows as best as he can.

"Stupid bull!"

"You die now, softhorn!"

The nanites protecting Yamir begin to lose their integrity. His exosuit blares multiple warnings, all indicating a system-side failure that will result in the destabilization of the T-REX's molecular bonds.

However, Yamir can't escape. No matter how he tries to roll or escape the savage beatings, the Brutes repeatedly dog him, ensuring his swift demise.

From above, Orias sighs. "I never wanted it to come to this, Yamir! You defied demonkind's rule, and thus, you've sealed your fate! Accept your death with grace, or with your typical bullheadedness. Your choice!"

But still, even with the Baron taunting him, Yamir doesn't give up. The Minotaur throws all his weight into one final, desperate move. He shoves himself off the ground, jumps to his feet, and forcibly storms toward a narrow gap between the Brutes' bodies.

At that moment, a fist strikes the back of his skull.

Thunk!

Yamir's vision goes blurry. He loses focus and stumbles forward, crashing into the dirt like a sack of potatoes.

"Commander Yamir!" An armored Harpie cries. "Nooo!"

The world around Yamir turns foggy. His brain turns to Jello as his suit's bonds break apart, scattering the nanites into a gray mist. They explode off his body and turn to ash, leaving him exposed to the Brutes' savage attacks.

As his vision fades, Yamir knows... he will perish.

His last memory is that of the Little Miss, the Hero's child, Daisy. Her cheerful eagerness to sample his food never failed to bring a smile to his face.

The firstborn of the Ironhorn clan sighs in his heart.

As long as she grows up in peace... my life will have been worth it.

* * *

Suddenly, a white force-field envelops Yamir!

Yamir's foggy thoughts become as clear as glass. He awakens to find that not only have his injuries disappeared, but his suit has restored itself! Once again, a T-REX envelops his body, protecting him from harm.

Around Yamir, the three Brutes hammer futilely on the transparent forcefield protecting their prey. Clearly aggravated, they scream in rage. "Hey! What gives?! Why bubble show up? Why we can't pop bubble?"

With his thoughts clearer than ever, Yamir jumps to his feet. A river-like vitality flows through his veins, making him feel as if he's no longer several thousand years old, but young again and back in his prime. The energetic bull breaks through the forcefield and stomps his feet, startling the Brutes.

"What? Bull is okay! But how?!"

Before the other two Brutes can reply, Yamir swings his fist upward.

Boom!

The Minotaur bashes the first Brute's chin and uppercuts him backward, where he trips on a rock and falls to the ground.

"Gah!"

The Brute cries out in pain, then looks at Yamir in disbelief. The Minotaur's punch felt far, far mightier than his previous ones.

Yamir grins excitedly as the sensation of power gushes through his body. Somehow, not only have his injuries healed, but his strength has increased tenfold, while his body has become noticeably more youthful.

"Haha! Now, you simpletons are about to meet your maker!"

Orias, still flying above, watches in shock as the Minotaur who was previously losing in the merciless melee mounts a massive comeback, mashing the monstrous minions into meaty mush. He grabs the fallen Brute's leg and turns the demon into a living club, swinging him overhead with gusto.

Boom! Boom!

Yamir uses the Brute's whole body as a makeshift weapon, clubbing his two companions repeatedly. He smashes the one-ton blob of muscled meat against the others, making all three of them cry out in pain as their bones snap and twist under the Minotaur's savage strength.

Two minutes later, Yamir releases his victims, leaving their corpses on the ground to serve as a warning to anyone who dares challenge him. Yamir bellows again, then turns to look for Orias.

However, when he looks into the sky, Orias isn't there anymore. He disappears, leaving Yamir with a hollow victory.

"Pah! You coward! Come and face this bull, if you dare!" Yamir roars, issuing his challenge to the heavens.

Sadly for him, his opponent doesn't show. With an angry shrug, Yamir returns to the battlefield, opting to assist his fellow soldiers once more in their defensive battle.

* * *

Elsewhere, inside the Warpgate Encampment.

Ose's Astral Body hovers a few inches off the ground. She collects information about the battle and issues orders every so often, targeting weaknesses inside the human's defensive formations. Her pointed commands lead to the slow but steady advancement of demonkind's forces, allowing them to push further and further into the humans' battle lines.

"We're making headway," A Demon Lord reports. "I just received word that the Felorians are starting to run out of stamina. Mephisto's undead should break through in the next three hours. Additionally, Orias is on his way to take out the Minotaur on the Western Front. With him dead, the humans will have one less figurehead leading them."

"Excellent," Ose says, her voice astrally projecting into the Lord's mind. "I'll take it from here. Return to the Eastern Front, on the double."

"Yes, Emperor Ose."

The Lord leaves. Moments later, Mephisto melts out of the ground and hesitantly floats into the air. His appearance sours Ose's expression.

"Tch. You. Give me good news, you pathetic excuse for a Duke."

Ose injects venom into her words, making Mephisto bow his head in shame. Having failed to capture the Hero's soul via Valac's lantern, he hasn't the courage to look Ose in her eyes.

"Ksss. I've reccceived word that Beelzebub hasss ssstarted combating the flessshbag'sss forcccesss. Mara and Artoriasss are on their way here asss we speak."

"Great. Is that all?"

Ose flicks her eyes away, barely able to suppress her rage at the Duke of Mist's earlier failure. Her attitude toward him, barely one of toleration before, has now become one of outright hostility.

"The Battle Brothersss are in posssition. We are only waiting on the Ssshadesss to report their sssuccesss. Onccce the Hero'sss daughter and wife are in our clutchesss, we will asssault the human'sss cccity."

Mephisto rubs his boney fingers together to try and appear confident, but Ose's angry eyes make him feel five inches tall.

"What, do you want a medal? You're only doing your job, insect!" Ose snaps. "I'm recuperating as quickly as I can, but for now, I have to rely on failures like you! Argh! Bael nearly got his head taken off by the humans, Beelzebub and Artorias both got captured, I broke my bloody arms, and you couldn't even capture one measly errant soul! This war would be ours, Mephisto! We'd have won already if you hadn't screwed up!"

Mephisto bows his head even lower. "...Yesss. I know."

"Do you?! Bah! All of you- every last one of the Dukes is a damned failure. If Agares were here, that old bastard would have probably disappointed me, too! My mother was right. I can't depend on mere cretins if I hope to reach the pinnacle of demonkind. After this war concludes, I'll need to take a good long look at whether you and the other Dukes truly deserve such prestigious-"

In the middle of Ose's ranting, a Demon Baron comes flying over. "Ose! Ose! Bad news!"

Ose halts her raving to stare coldly in the newcomer's direction. "Orias? What are you doing here? I told you to kill that Minotaur! Don't tell me that even you can't get one devil-damned thing done without mucking it up!"

Orias ignores her anger. Having spoken to Ose on many occasions since his youth, he treats her like he would literally any other demon; without a drop of fear or reverence.

"I didn't kill the Minotaur; I couldn't. After I found him, this happened..."

The Baron of the Stars quickly recounts his battle with Yamir. Despite Ose's anger that Orias didn't personally execute the Minotaur, she falls silent at the mention of the 'white forcefield' and rubs her chin.

"Hmm. How strange. For that monster to recover from his wounds, seemingly out of nowhere, that might mean..."

She trails off as her brain whirls at a million miles a second. For once, her anger shifts into confusion, and even a hint of worry.

Before she can come to a conclusion, a second Demon comes running toward her. This one turns out to be a female Demon Lord.

"Emperor Ose! At the Northern Front, something incredible just happened!"

She details the account of the Felorian warrior who recovered from her wounds. At the mention of an identical 'white forcefield,' Ose's expression turns solemn.

"...I see. So, I was right. The Wordsmith isn't standing by idly. The little bastard must be influencing the battle from a distance, tricky little rat that he is."

Ose's astral body hovers back and forth as she 'paces' through the air. She chews on her lip, her mood pensive.

"I predicted countless possibilities for this war," Ose mutters. "I took into account the Wordsmith's personality, his temperament, what could happen if both Wordsmiths joined hands and fought like hell, and even the possibility they might both give up without a fight. Still, this war has fallen somewhat outside of my expectations."

She continues. "Not once has anyone seen Jason's clone. The last I heard, Hope was entering the Labyrinth to go on the hunt for something. According to what I've interrogated out of Neil, Hope left no further details. The Oracles can't find him inside the Labyrinth, either. I haven't a damn clue where he went. Jason left for a long time, too, and only now has he just come back. Both of their absences were a great boon to us. We made headway much faster than I anticipated, allowing me to expedite my plans."

"Still," She adds, "why do I feel as if I've overlooked something? After Jason left my manor, he didn't return to humanity's base of operations. He didn't even return to the Labyrinth. He simply disappeared, as if flitting off into the wind with nary a sound. Where might he have gone, I wonder?"

Ose speaks to herself rhetorically, not involving anyone else in her solo conversation. Mephisto, Orias, and the female Demon Lord stand silently, waiting for their Emperor's orders.

"I don't like unknown variables..." Ose mutters. "Mephisto, enter the city. Find out what's taking the Shades so long! I need that child as insurance against the Wordsmith. His daughter is his weakness; I know it. His wife, too, but she's also quite dangerous and hard to handle. The Hero's child is my primary target. Only she can guarantee the Wordsmith will fall into my clutches."

Mephisto nods. "Yesss... but what about the Battle Brothersss?"

"You can join them later. The child comes first!" Ose snaps. "Once we put the girl inside the 'cage,' Jason won't be able to sense her anymore. My trials with Neil have proven that much. Wordsmithing is a mighty power, but it is neither all-seeing, nor all-knowing. Its might depends heavily on its user's knowledge and wisdom. I can use my familiarity with the Wordsmith to our advantage."

"Ksss. I will do asss you sssay," Mephisto hisses, slowly slinking away.

"Good. Get out of my sight. Begone. Now that the Wordsmith has showed his hand, I'll need to keep an eye on his movements to avoid- hm?"

Ose whirls around to look at the Warpgate leading to the Labyrinth's core. To Mephisto and Orias's shock, the giant gate begins to sputter and hiss with loud, violent noises. Shortly after, its portal pathway collapses! Several demons in the vicinity scream in fright as a powerful suction force grabs hold of them and pulls them toward the collapsing gate. One second later, like flies sucked into a blender, their bodies explode into meat-chunks and fly into the swirling vortex, disappearing into an unknown place in time and space.

The Warpgate dissipates, leaving only its metal struts sticking into the air.

Immediately afterward, Mephisto raises his head in alarm. "Ksss! My Death Gatesss! They're... they're disssappearing too!"

Ose flickers away, moving at the speed of thought. She arrives in front of Mephisto's Death Gates and watches as they fade into oblivion, leaving only the undead that have passed through on Tarus II while preventing others from emerging.

"Hahaha..." Ose laughs. "As expected. You are more predictable than you think... Wordsmith. But this won't stop me."

She continues. "Operation Stormbringer is not a single-step plan. It's something I've meticulously developed for the past six years. You won't win, not even with your Wordsmithing."

The Emperor of Infiltration zips back to Mephisto's position in the blink of an eye.

"The Wordsmith is taking action. He closed the portals to this world. Now, enact the third phase of my plan. We'll need to move a step early, but nothing has changed."

Mephisto raises his head. His eyes gleam with hunger.

"Heh heh heh. Yesss. Finally. I will move ssswiftly, asss you command."

The Duke disappears underground, leaving Ose alone with Orias and the female Demon Lord.

"You're dismissed," Ose says, shooing away the junior. "Orias, forget the Minotaur. I have a new mission for you."

>!This is what a spoiler looks like! Click it to reveal the text!!

Part 261: Tactical Wordsmithing

A gargantuan metal pad rests beneath my feet, circular in shape and three hundred feet in diameter. Hovering amidst the vast inner space of Camael's Cube, the magically summoned platform sports a complex holographic imaging interface, one which I'm currently using to render a chunk of Tarus II's surface in extreme detail.

The holographic emitter, a combination of technology and magic, is something my mind-wife, Phoebe, crafted. She designed it so I could visualize the situation on our world, all so I wouldn't have to return to the planet ahead of time. Instead, I can devote my energy to guiding the Cube to Tarus II, where, once it arrives, its vast and all-but-limitless mana will enable me to pull off planet-shaking feats of magic.

However, were I to return to Tarus II without the Cube, I wouldn't be able to tap into its power over such a great distance. Given the size and scope of demonkind's assault on my world, I'd end up like a kitten before a pack of ravenous wolves. No matter how desperately I wish to return to my friends and family, I must maintain a rational mind and do what's best for humanity's survival.

I hover in the air, using my innate levitation powers to suspend myself above the holographic imagery of Tarus II's surface. Innumerable red, green, yellow, and purple dots strike against one another, the different colors representing various factions on the battlefield. Green dots indicate my fellow humans, while yellow dots reference the various monsters and demons on our side. Red dots mark the enemy demon forces, while purple ones indicate enemy monsters. Finally, black dots signify the enemy undead, allowing me to contrast their harsh coloration with the brighter colors of the living.

My hands dance around before me, manipulating the planetary hologram with Phoebe's assistance.

"You teleported Beelzebub away," Phoebe says, a ghostly version of her body hovering in the air beside me. "But he'll return soon enough. You should take this opportunity to kill him."

I nod. "You're right. However, that's easier said than done. Beelzebub's regenerative abilities are far greater than any other demon, except for possibly Satan. Even if I rip him apart multiple times, he'll still come back to life."

"Why not try nullifying his powers?" Phoebe asks.

"Power nullification only lasts a short while," I reply. "Even if I erase his regenerative powers and kill him, his cells will eventually regain their self-healing abilities. Instead, I'll restrain him and deal with him later. Burying him a few thousand feet underground, suffocating him in a restraining suit, and making sure nobody can find him; that should work for now."

After making my decision, I speak several words of power.

"Capture. Envelop. Suffocate. Bury."

A single red blip amongst a horde of green ones vanishes, jumping to another spot elsewhere on Tarus II, thousands of miles from the battlefront.

This single dot of red, Beelzebub, dives deep into the planet's crust, where nobody will find him. After I evaluate his condition and ensure he's fallen completely comatose, I return my gaze to the battlefield.

"Next, I'll heal the soldiers Beelzebub attacked."

I spend the next few minutes communicating with and regenerating the wounds Beelzebub etched into the bodies of my troops. My heart aches when I see all the dead the Duke of Inferno left in his wake.

"There will be a reckoning," Phoebe says, reading my thoughts. "Even if, for whatever reason, you can't kill Beelzebub, you can certainly punish him to the extent he'll wish he was dead."

I nod. "Let's hope that will be the case."

Thanks to Phoebe's brilliant mind, a telepathic link connects my brain to the holographic projector atop the platform. This allows not only Phoebe, but Sir Lorent, Shana, and the Archangels to assume ghost-like holographic forms. All of them hover in space within the platform's confines, smiling as they examine the 'real world' they haven't seen for over a hundred thousand years.

Shana and Sir Lorent stick together, with the little girl riding piggyback on his shoulders. The man formerly known as Mordred's Butcher strolls around, gazing at the holographic representation of Tarus II's surface with wide-eyed interest. He and Shana talk about various things, while the Phoenix bounces along beside them, just wanting to be a part of the fun.

Raphael, Gabriel, and Michael, all stare with focused eyes at the Tarus II battlefield. They scrutinize the demon's movements, muttering to one another about their predictions for the battle. Their innumerable years of experience battling demons give them a keen eye for how their blood enemies might act during a brutal melee.

However, Phoebe stays off to the side with me. My mind-wife, as real to me as her flesh and blood counterpart, smiles as she looks into my eyes.

"You don't really want to kill Beelzebub, do you?"

I shake my head. "I don't want to kill anyone. But if I have to, then I will."

"You say that," Phoebe says, leaning her head against my arm, "but accidentally killing Samson isn't the same as deliberately ending someone else's life. You're still inexperienced, Jason."

A bitter taste fills my mouth. "Unlike Hope. He's been killing for a long time."

"You and him aren't all that different," Phoebe cautions. "You could just as easily have walked down the path of violence, all the same as he did."

I frown. "Speaking of which, where the hell is Hope? You'd think he'd have shown up by now, but I can't even detect him with my Wordsmithing. Is it possible he died? Did the demons somehow kill him?"

My mind-wife pulls away from me. A contemplative look appears on her face. "Hmm. I'm not certain. From what we've learned, Hope has been killing demons for quite a long time. The odds of him running into the Labyrinth and dying now of all times seems too coincidental for my liking."

"After we wrap up this war, I'll need to immediately set out and find him," I say. "If he died, that would be tragic enough, but with soul manipulators around, it could be worse than a minor tragedy for humanity if the demons get their claws on him."

After putting aside Hope's matter for the moment, I turn my attention back to the battlefield. Phoebe hovers after me while I start flying around, altering the battlefield to humanity's benefit.

A legion of troopers, attacked from behind by Scythers. I summon force-fields to protect my side's injured while healing the wounded.

Felorians, injured and under the threat of imminent death at the Northern Front. I jump in and save several lives, reviving dozens of warriors from the brink of death.

Yamir, my personal chef. He combats the Baron of Stars and several Brutes all by himself, nearly falling during their pincer attack. I save him, too.

"Shield. Protect. Push! Regenerate. Heal."

Like some sort of God watching over humanity, I act as a tactical barrier against the demons, greatly increasing my people's strengths while diminishing their weaknesses.

All the while, Phoebe says nothing. However, after the tenth straight minute of watching me interfere, she sighs.

"Jason. Whether you kill the demons or assist our troops in doing so, the result is the same. Many enemy demons will perish as a result of your actions. Using such a roundabout method is..."

"Cowardly?" I ask.

"...Impractical." Phoebe replies, her tone solemn. "Everyone is out there fighting for their lives, while you get to sit back and ease your conscience by playing the role of a long-distance support unit."

Slowly, I nod. "I know what you're saying. But, think of it this way. There are already medics out there who don't engage in combat. Belial, for example. Don't you think Belial would be far more effective on the frontlines than sitting inside the Hospital, healing our injured?"

"Maybe, but your situations are different," Phoebe says. "Belial isn't the same as you. She is incredibly powerful, with a body that can bend, stretch, and change its shape as she requires. Her strength can sunder mountains. But that's all she can do. Your Wordsmithing is at a tier far beyond hers. With Camael's Cube assisting you... you could end this war in minutes."

"By killing all of the demons," I say, turning to my wife. "That's what you mean."

Phoebe lowers her gaze. "Yes. This is not the time for compassion. That moment has long since passed. Every second you delay, more of our friends, more of my friends will perish. It's kill or be killed. Why must you continue hesitating?"

This time, it takes me several seconds before I can elucidate my thoughts.

"Phoebe. Killing the demons, for me, would be easy. Too easy. I need only speak a few words, and they will perish. For countless millennia, the demons, humans, angels, Titans, and all the other species have gored one another to death relentlessly, leaving mountains of dead bodies in the wake of their wars. If I walk the path of genocide, this war will turn out like all the others. Humanity will achieve a win, but not a victory. I can't bring myself to cast aside potential peace in the future. I want to change the status quo. I want to right the wrongs of my ancestors, and of the demons'. I may fail, but even if I do, at least I'll have tried."

"The definition of stupidity is doing the same thing over and over while expecting a different result," I say, continuing my line of thought. "If the angels and their bloodthirstiness only caused more hatred among the demons, and if humanity only managed to incense the demons with our violence, then perhaps violence isn't the answer. Instead, I should try a new tactic. I should try to become a beacon of light, a shining example of goodness capable of turning both sides away from the path of hatred."

"But how will you achieve that?" Phoebe counters. "You're not the first person to seek out peace with the demons. Remember Solomon? Remember how they betrayed him?"

I nod. "Yes. But I'm not Solomon. I'm me. I need to demonstrate to the demons that my might far exceeds theirs, but that in spite of possessing absolute power, I don't seek their annihilation. I need to show them a different path forward."

Phoebe sighs. She crosses her arms and gazes vacantly at the holographic display of Tarus II. "I love you to death, Jason, and I won't ever pressure you to commit an act as heinous as genocide. You're a good person. Better than me. That being said, I wish you'd be more decisive. People are dying as we speak. Now is the worst possible time to act with reservations."

"I know. Trust me; I have a plan. That's why I was so excited when you completed this holographic projector."

Turning my attention back to the Tarus II display, I fly toward Raphael and the Archangels.

"I need everyone's help for this next part," I say. "I'm going to seal the portals to the Labyrinth and eject all of the demons from Tarus II. Once I start, you guys will point out clusters of demons wherever they appear. As for Mephisto's minions... well, they're already dead. I'll simply kill them again, permanently."

Phoebe looks at me. "Killing the undead just isn't a problem for you, huh?"

"I think of it as doing them a favor," I reply.

Raphael, listening to our exchange, chuckles. "Well, thou mayest do as thou please. We shall assist thee in thy pursuit of defeating demonkind. Our goals align here, after all."

Michael struts around, poking the holographic dots with a look of interest. "If my people had such a useful device during our battles against the demons, I doubt we would have perished. Knowledge is power, and this battlefield-viewing-tool is far beyond anything I've seen in all my years. Thou art lucky to possess it; Thy victory is all but assured."

"Let's not count our chickens before they hatch," I say. "Pay attention. I'm going to begin, now."

After focusing my mind, I take aim at the portal to the Labyrinth, as well as Mephisto's Death Gates.

"Seal. Seal. Seal."

Twenty seconds later, the portals shut down and disappear, preventing any other demons from traveling to Tarus II.

"That's step one," I say. "Now for step two."

The holographic display changes visibly as the demon's forces momentarily 'stutter,' their movements turning hesitant. By tapping into the spiritual energy within the projector, I can summon a crystal-clear image of any position on the battlefield in my head. I scan the faces of dozens of demons, taking a minute or two to observe the looks of surprise and panic on their faces.

"Return. Return! RETURN!"

I tap into the Cube's power, grabbing hold of demons in groups of fifty to a hundred with wide-area magic. Various Scythers, Brutes, Burners, and other grunts vanish from the battlefield, leaving visible gaps in the enemy ranks. These sudden disappearances cause clear signs of alarm to ripple throughout demonkind's forces, making them much less steady on their feet, and causing their morale to plummet.

Phoebe watches me, nodding as she, too, observes their reactions.

"You're doing well," My mind-wife says. "The demons are starting to fall into chaos and disorder. Our troops are pressing the advantage. On the Southern Front, many demons disappeared right when the undead pressed forward, leaving them vulnerable to a pincer attack. If this keeps up- hm?"

Phoebe frowns. She glances to the east, on the opposite side of Hero City.

"Jason! Over there! Look! A portal just opened up!"

I pause my Wordsmithing to follow her gaze. "What? Ah, I see. A Warper summoned that one. No matter. Seal. Return."

I utter two words of power, close the portal, and return the Warper to the Labyrinth. Then, I return my attention to the main demon army. "RETURN! RETURN! RET-"

"Jason! Another portal, this time, just north of Hero City!"

I follow my wife's finger. Just like she said, a second blip of energy reveals itself, allowing a flood of demons to tear onto Tarus II's surface from the Labyrinth.

At that moment, I remember a crucial detail. When I first saw Ose while flying around, she was chatting with a small group of Warpers on Hero City's eastern outskirts, far from the battlefield. Now, it occurs to me that she may have planted Warpers in multiple locations, all so she could encircle the city and imprison humanity in an inescapable death trap.

Chills go down my spine. It occurs to me just how far ahead she planned. If I hadn't sealed off the Warpgate's portal, she wouldn't have had to accelerate her plans. Luckily, I caught her in time.

"Seal. Phoebe, keep an eye out for other portals. There are sure to be many Warpers lingering around Hero City's outskirts. Your Environmental Shield will prevent them from opening portals within the city's limits, but outside of that invisible bubble, they will have free reign."

I explain my thoughts to Phoebe, and she nods. "That sounds plausible. However, I think you might be underestimating Ose. You say that closing the Warpgate forced her to take action, but I'm not so sure about that. She might have been waiting for you to do this all along."

"What makes you say that?" I ask.

"Ose already had all these Warpers in place," Phoebe explains. "But she didn't order them to open any portals. Why not? Surely, she could have surrounded Hero City hours ago in the dead of the night. Once Warpers acquire a triangulation point on a planet, they can open portals there repeatedly for many months afterward. Something tells me... Ose is counting on your disinclination toward violence. She knows you're a kind soul, so she's going to use these Warpers as pieces to confuse you."

"That... sounds a bit outlandish," I reply. "Why wouldn't she just have them open up portals to attack immediately? Once all those portals open, she could quickly overrun our defenses. What's the point of playing these stupid mindgames?"

Phoebe shakes her head. "You don't understand, Jason. You've never fought in a war. Psychological warfare is just as important as putting bodies in graves. Ose isn't stupid enough to reveal her hand in full to you. She's waiting to catch you offguard. She has other plans beyond merely killing humanity. Hell, I doubt she wants to kill our people. She needs humans for their souls. Souls give demons the power to evolve. As long as that's true, they can never truly eliminate us. More likely, her ultimate plan is to capture as many of us as possible, wipe our minds, and turn us into obedient slaves."

My mind-wife's explanation unsettles me. I fall silent for a minute, opting to massage the roof of my mouth with my tongue.

"Slaves. Christ, sometimes I forget how evil the elites of demonkind can act. Right, so if exterminating us isn't Ose's primary goal, then her reasons are probably more intricate than we can immediately determine. Keep thinking, let me know if you can come up with anything."

After returning my attention to the holographic map, I frown. Four more portals have already opened up during the time I spent chatting with Phoebe.

"Shit. It's like I'm playing whack-a-mole. Seal. Seal. Seal. Seal. Oh, goddammit, another one. Seal!"

Over the next ten minutes, I close off dozens of portals and teleport the Warpers who summoned them back to the Labyrinth. Eventually, when those Warpers simply return again, I resort to capturing and burying them all over the planet, hiding them in restraint suits so they can't escape.

Even so, the damned bastards just keep coming back! After sealing twenty more portals and placing the Warpers in makeshift underground prison cells, where they'll sleep for eternity, or until I grab them in the future, I still can't slow down the flow of portal creation whatsoever. The speed actually increases, pissing me off.

"Motherf- how many Warpers does Ose have?! Every time I seal a portal and bury its summoner, another one opens up!"

Phoebe chews her lip. "Warpers are quite rare among demons. Only one in a hundred thousand might have the bloodline necessary to evolve into one. That being said, there are trillions of demons living within the Labyrinth. Ose will have more than a hundred thousand at her disposal on any given day."

"A hundred thousand?!" I shriek, becoming more enraged by the second. "You've got to be kidding me! With that many Warpers, Ose could capture Tarus II in an hour! What the hell is she thinking? What's her plan? It's like she's just trying to distract me, like her real plan is..."

I trail off, bringing my words to a halt. After a moment, I frown.

"A distraction? But why would Ose need that? Is she trying to confuse me? To make me unable to direct my gaze toward a specific location?"

"You're a Wordsmith, Jason," Phoebe answers. "Technically speaking, your power and versatility, even without the Cube, far exceeds Ose. However, you're neither omniscient nor omnipotent. You're a human, suffering from human weaknesses. Ose prepared for this war expecting to face you and Hope at the same time, but she got a lucky break when, for the first few days, she could attack humanity without either Wordsmith interfering."

Phoebe continues. "If Ose's goal is to conquer humanity, she wouldn't need to go to all this trouble. Killing us would be even easier. I think you're her real goal. She wants you and Hope, both Wordsmiths, to bow to her might. If she can take your power for herself, then she can completely take over the Labyrinth. We don't yet know about the power dynamic between demonkind and the Volgrim, either. It's likely Ose has her eyes set beyond Hell's borders..."

"The Volgrim," I mutter. "I haven't even started to wrap my mind around those guys. We can only hope they don't figure out who I am. The last thing I want is a super-advanced alien civilization pointing its guns at me."

"They already destroyed humanity once," Phoebe says. "They can do it again. I'm honestly more scared of the Volgrim than I am anything Ose might pull."

"Agreed."

I return to sealing and suppressing any Warpers who open portals to Tarus II. After half an hour of flitting between the portals, teleporting demons back into the Labyrinth and healing any fallen troops, my head starts to hurt.

"This is harder than I expected," I groan. "I'm starting to go cross-eyed. I've never had to continuously Wordsmith this much since I first awakened my power."

Phoebe sighs helplessly. "You'll have to keep at it, Jason. Until we know Ose's true goal, we can only try to suppress her. Unless, of course, you just kill her."

"Not gonna happen. If I must, I will. For now, though, I'll keep playing hands-off."

Suddenly, Raphael cries out in alarm. "Jason! Over here, to the west! Just south of the Warpgate Encampment. Look! Two powerful mana blips have emerged!"

I follow Raphael's gaze.

"Fuck. Barbatos and... Mara? Right, yeah. Mara. I guess I shouldn't be surprised to see her here, but... still."

The Duke of Steel climbs out of the dirt, having recently escaped the Tarus II prison system. Mara, the Baron of Games, trots out right behind him, eager to get her blood pumping and join the fray.

My expression becomes complicated as I debate how to deal with these newcomers.

I don't feel any animosity toward either of them. Barbatos saved Phoebe when I fought Satan six years ago. He returned her safely to the Core. Mara, too, didn't seem like a terrible, irredeemable demoness. She and Ying-Ying seemed like decent people, for the most part.

"What are you thinking?" Phoebe asks.

"I don't know what to do," I immediately reply. "It would be so simple... I could just kill them all. Speak a few words and end the war. But should I? It doesn't feel right."

"Barbatos and Mara are likely to wreak havoc," Phoebe says, her voice low. "Many of our friends will die if you do nothing."

"I know. For now, let's just... keep an eye on things. We'll see how this all plays out."

Phoebe shrugs. "You're the Wordsmith."

I nod. "Sadly."

>!This is what a spoiler looks like! Click it to reveal the text!!

Part 262: Wordsmith's Omnipresence

I wrote a refresher for Cryopod, which will get you from Parts 225-261, just in case you guys forgot any story beats!

First Day: Sixteenth Hour.

Sunlight shines upon Tarus II's surface. At 4 PM, the midday sun beats down overhead, but its rays barely warm the planet's surface, given the early springtime chill.

Ying-Ying, one of Hell's countless Warpers, breathes heavily as she motions with her hands. She hides behind a tree at the edge of the Horned Forest, to the west of Hero City and the east of the Warpgate Encampment. With only half a mile or so separating her from humanity's backline troops, she grits her teeth and perspires.

"Okay... here goes."

Her entire body a bundle of nerves, Ying-Ying finishes her casting motion, then nods toward two other Warpers nearby, both of them also keeping themselves concealed. In unison, they open three portals to the Labyrinth, causing ten-foot-tall shimmering rips in space to materialize. During the dead of night, these gates would draw countless eyes, but with a sunny sky overhead, it takes the nearby human troops half a minute to notice the flood of enemies rushing toward their flank.

That half-minute is all the Warpers need for their ambush to succeed and a wall of demons to crash against the humans, killing dozens of troopers before they even realize what happened.

After summoning their portal, Ying-Ying and the other two Warpers dash deeper into the forest, making sure to get out of the line of fire and escape with their lives.

"Run, run!" Ying-Ying shouts, while fleeing as swiftly as her grunt-body can manage. Lacking the speed and strength mutations of Lords, Barons, Dukes, and Emperors, mere grunts like herself can barely run any faster than humans. Still, with a flood of Mephisto's undead, Scythers, Brutes, and Orcs pouring out of the three portals they left behind, Ying-Ying and her two comrades manage to make a clean getaway before the shooting starts.

After two minutes of running, all three of the Warpers suddenly stumble over their feet and fall to the ground in unison.

"Aaargh!" One of Ying-Ying's companions shouts. The young male Warper, a good-looking fellow with a buzzed head of hair, clutches his heart while writhing on the ground. "H-hurts! It hurts! What's happening?!"

Ying-Ying grits her teeth and closes her eyes. As a senior Warper, she's already summoned dozens of portals during the Stormbringer War today.

"It's... ahh... it's normal! Just give it a minute! Back... backlash! The Wordsmith sealed our spatial powers!"

Ying-Ying swallows several breaths, forcing her heart to calm down. Pins and needles wrack her body as she tries to calm the agonizing pain of having her powers sealed mid-cast. Even so, she manages to pull herself to her feet well before the other two.

"We won't... won't be able to use our powers for a while," Ying-Ying explains, as she helps the other two to their feet. "The Wordsmith's sealing abilities only last a little while, and then they wear off. Not only that, but any second now-"

Before Ying-Ying can finish her sentence, a sensation like rushing air grabs her body and yanks her backward.

Foop!

Ying-Ying teleports into the Labyrinth, followed by the other two Warpers. They appear inside some random pitch-black corridor, completely alone, with no other demons nearby. A split-second later, the demons and monsters who made it through their three portals only minutes earlier pop into existence around them, teleported into the Labyrinth via the Wordsmith's power. It's only thanks to their demonic heritage that they can see through the gloom surrounding each other without a need for light.

The good-looking male Warper continues clutching his chest. "W-wait... that's it? We're back inside the Labyrinth... after all of that trouble! It took us an hour to get to that forest!"

"Yeah!" The other Warper complains. "What the hell?! This sucks! All those goons we summoned ended up here, too! That was a total waste of time!"

Ying-Ying shakes her head. "It isn't. I don't understand Ose's plans, but once we recover our powers, we're going right back to Tarus II. You all memorized the forest's position, right?"

The first Warper nods, a weary expression plastered across his face. "Yeah! I'm not some amateur, okay?"

"Right," Ying-Ying says, ignoring his annoyed tone. "Now that you two have visited that spot, your job will be to keep opening portals there. It'll take about an hour for your powers to recover, but keep trying. Once you can open a portal again, send these guys through. Keep summoning, and don't stop."

"What's the point of that?!" The second Warper asks. "Seriously, if that stinking Wordsmith is going to just keep teleporting us away-"

"No complaints!" Ying-Ying snaps. "You have your job, and I have mine! I need to find the next group and lead them to their designated position. The more advantageous spots where we can summon portals, the more our forces can spread out and surround the fleshbags' city! Capturing that city is our goal, and that's all you need to worry about. Now, are you done whining?"

The other two Warpers lower their heads. "Yes, elder sister."

"Great! I'm leaving."

Ying-Ying pauses for a moment to address the other demons and creatures nearby. "You guys, stay here. Wait for these two to open their portals, then jump through. Kill any fleshbags you see. When the Wordsmith sends you back, you keep waiting and return again. Got it?!"

The other demons nod dumbly, shrugging as if they haven't a care in the world.

Satisfied, Ying-Ying nods her head, then breaks into a brisk run as she uses her intuitive demonic understanding of the Labyrinth to plot a course through its vast, interlinked hallways.

After leaving the others behind, Ying-Ying starts weaving left, right, going up and down various slopes and stairways, slowly making her way toward a distant destination.

As the Warper runs, one of her crystal earrings pulses with mana. Ying-Ying pauses midstride and slows to a stop. A look of elation flits across her face as she touches the crystal, opening up a spiritual connection.

"Mara! How are things?"

Mara, possessing a soul crystal of her own, communicates with her sister telepathically.

"Hey, sis. I'm with Artorias still; we're near the city's southern side. I wanted to make sure you were okay."

Ying-Ying nods. "I'm great! Just set up two more portal summoners! I'm on my way to the Return Station now."

"Excellent," Mara replies. "I'm glad things are going well for you. I got word from Ose a few minutes ago; It seems the number of portals closing have started to slow. She thinks we've finally started tiring out the Wordsmith. I have to say, his commitment to not killing any demons is bordering on the ludicrous. He keeps teleporting huge batches of our troops back to the Labyrinth, but I'm starting to wonder how in the devil he has so much mana avail- ah! One sec!"

Mara's line goes quiet, but Ying-Ying doesn't worry. She resumes running toward the Return Station, a place where she can jump back to Tarus II, even with her powers sealed.

After two minutes, Mara reconnects. "Sorry. A group of fleshbag soldiers ambushed me."

"You okay?" Ying-Ying asks.

"Yup, just dandy. Ripped them to pieces, no problem. Anyway, where was I? Oh, right. Ose says the Wordsmith's sealing activity seems to be slowing. I'm surprised it took this bloody long, but at least it finally happened. I was starting to think he'd tapped into some sort of unlimited power source, but I guess he was just a bit more resilient than we expected."

"So, maybe soon, he won't be able to seal my powers again?" Asks Ying-Ying.

"I don't know. Perhaps. There's something funny going on, but I can't figure out what it is. Ose's keeping oddly tight-lipped. Stinking bitch. Devils, I can't stand her. The fact Bael chose her as the Third Emperor grinds my gears so much..."

Mara curses a few more times, then returns her focus to the current situation.

"Ahem. I managed to piece together one tidbit, something Artorias mentioned in passing. It seems Ose gave Orias a secret ace in the hole. I don't know what it is, but Orias might be the key to everything. I expect some big moves to start soon."

"Noted," Ying-Ying replies, her face filled with determination. "Orias is super reliable. We can count on him!"

"Indeed," Mara confirms. "I've spoken with him many times. Bit of a recluse, but he's got a good head on his shoulders. Any plan hinging on him is practically foolproof. Anyway, I've talked enough. Gotta go. Artorias is ready to move out."

"Okay. Love you, sis! Stay safe!" Ying-Ying says.

"Love you too," Mara concludes.

Ying-Ying's earring fades in color as its mana signature dies off.

As she runs, Ying-Ying's thoughts turn complex.

This whole war is so strange! First, Ose and most of the Dukes got their butts beat by the Monster King, then Bael lost an eye to those crafty fleshbags... now we all need to rely on a Baron for some reason.

I wonder what the heck Ose's plan is with Orias? He's not the strongest Baron, but his powers are pretty versatile, kind of like Mara's. Maybe it has something to do with his gems? I bet he's going to capture the Hero's wife and daughter! Yeah, and then the Wordsmith will have to concede!

Ying-Ying nods to herself, uncertain if she's right, but confident something must be up.

After running for another twenty minutes, she slows down before a seemingly nondescript wall at a random spot in the Labyrinth. She glances at it for all of two seconds before putting her hand on a barely visible ink blotch splattered on the Labyrinth's earthen surface.

Suddenly, a flash of light engulfs her.

Fwish!

Ying-Ying disappears from that corridor and travel several hundred miles across the Labyrinth, instantly arriving inside one of the Warpers' many secret dwellings, far from the general demonic population. She trots down the well-illuminated tunnel, one with torch sconces stuck to the walls, all while passing goblins along the way.

These goblins chitter at her while keeping out of her way. She flashes a cute smile at them, ignoring their repulsive green skin and mottled faces. "Hi Jun-Jun! Koopi! Slapster!"

The goblins wave back and mumble their own greetings.

Soon, Ying-Ying arrives in a wide open area, one illuminated with magical purple flames, each fire belched from the mouths of lion statues placed around the room's edges. Dozens of Warpers stand in a circle around one demoness at the center, an ancient-looking Baron with sagging skin and long, grey hair.

The crowd parts for Ying-Ying as she approaches the old woman from behind. "Grandma Ahriman! I'm back!"

Ying-Ying slows to a stop, and the old woman turns around, revealing her still-functioning right eye, as well as her clawed-out left eye, lost during the Energy Wars, 100,000 years ago.

"Oh, Ying-Ying," The old woman says, her voice gravelly and cracked. "Cough, cough. You're back. I've been waiting."

"Sorry!" Ying-Ying says, sticking her tongue out cutely. She smiles bashfully at the crowd of Warpers around her, making some of the hot-blooded males and females flare up with lust. "I set up those two juniors at the forest. What next?"

Ahriman uses her long, pointy nails to scratch behind her ear. "Mmm. The return speed has slowed considerably. It appears that the Wordsmith is either running out of mana, or running out of stamina. Either way, it's our good fortune. We've already set up seven hundred and twelve warp points around the humans' main city, but Ose wants at least two thousand before we go all-in on the final assault."

"Sounds like we've got a ways to go," Ying-Ying says, her tone pensive. "I can't tap into my powers yet, but it's only been about thirty minutes. They should return soon."

"I've just received an interesting bit of information from Emperor Yama..." Ahriman says, pausing to emphasize her following words. "He hatched a plan to capture the Hero's daughter. The plan failed. It turns out the little brat possesses Heroic abilities, much like her father, the Wordsmith. I'm sure you can understand the significance of this finding."

Several Warpers nearby gasp in shock, some of them leaning more toward surprise, while others shudder in horror.

"...So, a third Hero, then..." Ying-Ying mutters. "Jason, Hope, and Jason's daughter. I thought the ancient records said there could only ever be one Hero at a time?"

Ahriman nods slowly. "Never, in all my years, have I seen two Heroes at once. However, since we know Jason cloned himself to create Hope, the Council has decided to consider the possibility that one or both Wordsmiths might be using their Wordsmithing to grant Heroic abilities to non-Hero humans. If that is the case, then there could be others we've overlooked; not just Jason's daughter."

"...Frightening..." Ying-Ying mutters, shivering slightly. "What does that mean for us? Are we changing the plan?"

"No. Ose's orders remain unchanged," Ahriman answers. "I'm merely informing you of this new discovery, given your position among the Warpers. When I transport you back to Tarus II, please spread this information among our forces."

"I'm on it," Ying-Ying says with a nod. "And I'm ready for action!"

"Good. I'll send you, Cypher, and Jerald. I'm sure you know where to take them next."

Ying-Ying smiles. "Yes!"

"Great. Alright, you two, join hands with Ying-Ying, circle around me, and allow me a brief moment to cast my spatial magic."

The other two Warpers, Cypher and Jerald, nod politely at their clan sister, then interlock their hands to form a triangle around Grandma Ahriman.

After a minute of weaving magical signs, Ahriman finishes mumbling demonic words under her breath, then raises both of her palms in the air.

"Go!"

Ying-Ying, Jerald, and Cypher shimmer out of reality, traveling through a wormhole to Tarus II and leaving the other Warpers behind.

After they disappear, Ahriman shudders visibly, causing two nearby Warpers to run over and grab her by the arms. "Grandmother! You're exhausted! Take a break, we beg of you!"

Ahriman sags into their grips, sweating heavily. "I'm just... just a little tired, that's all. How can I take it easy when so many of my children are risking their lives out there? Grab me a fresh cup of virgin blood. I just need to wet my tongue a bit; then I can continue."

"Yes, grandmother."

As the two men help ease Ahriman into a wooden chair, the old demoness sighs.

"Ahh, to live long enough to finally see the complete eradication of humanity's Heroes. I thought I'd succeeded already, but it seems the Creator played a trick on me. At least now I can see that day a second time... haha."

Tarus II, Hero City's General Hospital.

Belial walks into Kar's hospital room at the furthest part of the Eastern Wing, a haggard look etched onto her face. She arrives to find Daisy and Rosalia sitting beside the comatose Monster King's bed, with the rotund demoness looking somewhat tired from having spent the last forty-something hours awake, while Daisy appears noticeably chipper in comparison.

Rosalia turns her head to look at Belial. "...Find anyone?"

Belial groans. "No. They're all dead. Every single devil-damned soldier."

She plops onto the visitor's sofa and rubs her eyes.

"I'm way past running on fumes. I feel worse than I did at any other point in my whole life. I've drained my mana past absolute zero, I haven't slept a wink in five days, and to make matters worse, it feels like there's a bloody turtle expanding inside my chest. It seems like something's going to burst out of my chest."

"That doesn't sound good," Rosalia says. She stands up and walks over to the Second Emperor to examine her condition. "Here, look into my eyes. Let me feel your back. Does it hurt when I press here?"

Belial starts to push Rosalia away, but finds herself too tired to resist. Wearily, she submits to the impromptu examination, bending any which way Rosalia asks.

"Ahh! Hurts... right there. Where you touched."

Rosalia kneels down and squints to look at Belial's skin. "Devils! Look at this discoloration! There's a black mark on your ribcage, and it looks like it's moving around."

"There is?" Belial asks. Her words carry a hint of alarm, but with her energy drained, she can barely pay attention. "...Damn. Probably those Shades. They... they must have hit me with a... with a shadow infection... or something."

"I'm not familiar with this condition at all," Rosalia says, shrugging helplessly. She turns to look at Daisy. "Hey, bra- err, kid! Hero's daughter! Come over here and work your magic on Aunt Belial, will ya?"

Reflexively, Rosalia corrects herself, having realized that antagonizing the child with unknown magical abilities and a penchant for torturing mean people with spankings probably isn't the brightest idea.

Daisy smiles sweetly. "Okay! But only because it's Aunt S'matha! If it was the fat lady in pain, I wouldn't help at all!"

Rosalia scowls. "Shut up. It's not like I'd want your help anyway, you... you sweet little darling."

The chubby demoness grumbles under her breath, while Daisy hops off her chair and toddles over to Belial. Daisy walks around Belial several times, gingerly touches the wound, and frowns.

"Can't do nothin'," Daisy proclaims. "It's not an ouchie. It's a... thingy. A mean thingy. Doesn't want me to get close. Says it'll hurt Aunt S'matha if I try to make it cry."

Rosalia's mouth lolls open. "...Huh? What are you babbling about? Are you saying you can heal all kinds of crazy injuries, just like the Second Emperor can, but now you're bloody useless?!"

Daisy ignores Rosalia's taunts. "Dunno. I can't do nothin', and that's that. Not very dope of me, I know..."

Several seconds of awkward silence follow.

Rosalia lowers her head and sighs. "I'm sorry, Second Emperor. If she can't do anything, and I certainly can't, then..."

"Don't worry," Belial says. "I just need to rest my eyes for a bit. Once I recover some of my mana, I'll rip this parasite out myself."

The Second Emperor's eyes open and close heavily as she struggles to stay awake. While she maintains her delicate balancing act, Daisy shrugs and wanders over to Kar's side.

"Since Grandpa Gator is sleeping, would it be bad if I woke him up?"

Rosalia barely pays any attention to the child. "Huh? You can't wake Kar up, silly. He's comatose, like Belial was not long ago, Kar can't wake up because he suffered a bad head injury... wait..."

Hardly has Rosalia said those words before she whips her head in Daisy's direction, just in time to see the child climb on a stepstool next to Kar's hospital bed. Daisy reaches over to the crocodile's face and pokes him several times.

"Grandpa Gator! Helloooo! Wakey, wakey! Are you still sleepy? Grandpaaaa!"

Stunned into silence, Rosalia watches as Daisy does to Kar the exact same thing she did to Samantha many days before, injecting healing magic directly into his brain. The girl uses her magic with such ease that she doesn't even seem to realize what she's doing, reviving Kar bit by bit, until finally...

"...Hurgh."

Kar croaks out a single word, then slowly blinks his eyes.

"Noisy. Why is it so loud in here all of a sudden?"

The crocodile tilts his head slightly to the side, where he spots Daisy.

"Hurgh. Turtledove? Nnn, my chest hurts. Why are you here? What happened to Thundertongue?"

"You're awake!" Daisy says, beaming a smile full of sunshine. "You were hurt pretty bad, but no worries! I healed you right up! No more head-ouchies!"

She pauses for a moment before poking a few other spots on the crocodile's body. "Hmm, but there's an ouchie here, and one there... and one here, too! Ooh, this boo-boo looks bad..."

With each poke, Kar's vitality returns more and more, putting a spark of light in his eyes. Eventually, he sits up in the bed and curls the sides of his mouth into a thankful croco-grin.

"Hurgh! Turtledove! I did not know you could heal people! And look, Big Boobs is here too, along with Sugar! Where is Butterfly, though?"

"You mean Grandma Fairy?" Daisy asks.

"Yes, hurgh. Have you seen her?"

"Not since last night," Daisy replies. "A bunch of stuff happened. Lots of people got boo-boos. Lots of people... died."

As if suddenly remembering the war's existence, a look of alarm appears in Kar's eyes. "Ah! Big Boobs! Tell me what happened! Did Thundertongue make it past the Core? Is she on our world, now?"

Belial, her eyes half-closed, barely manages a nod. "...Yeah. Um... a lot happened. So... Rosalia... you tell him."

Rosalia sits next to Belial, hesitantly deciding to allow the Second Emperor to lean her head against her shoulder. Belial practically melts against Rosalia's arm as waves of exhaustion hit her one by one.

Odd, Rosalia thinks. Running out of Mana would certainly tire any demon out, as would going without five days of sleep, but that shouldn't be the case for an Emperor. There must be something more to her shadow-infection.

She ignores those thoughts and turns her attention to Kar.

"Well, uh, mister Monster King, sir, it's like this, you see... after Ose knocked you out, the demons attacked the Core. I wasn't there personally, but some of the soldiers who came back told me about Bael's transformation..."

She spends twenty minutes explaining to Kar the events of the day, mostly pulling from secondhand accounts she heard in passing. The more Rosalia speaks, the more alarmed Kar becomes.

"Hurgh! The demons captured Ox-arms? They took over the Core, and now they're surrounding the city with portals? This is bad! Terrible!"

He climbs out of bed, shakes a bit of numbness out of his legs, and flexes his arms.

"Filthy hellspawn! Hurgh! To think the only way they could make it here was after they defeated me! Well, too bad! I survived, and now I'm as good as new, all because of Turtledove's magic! I won't stand here any longer and let those scheming bastards kill even one more of my friends! This king has never felt as angry as he does right at this moment! HURGH!!"

Kar pauses for a moment, then frowns.

"...Hurgh. Well, I suppose that's not entirely true. There was one other instance where I was angrier than now."

With a shake of his head, Kar strides toward the doorway, pausing only to pat Rosalia's head. "Thank you for the information, Sugar. Your assistance was greatly appreciated."

Rosalia blushes. "M-my name, though. It's... it's Rosalia."

"Hurgh. I know. That is what I said, silly Sugar."

With a chuckle, Kar continues on his way and strides out of the room, pausing only to grimace at the horrific scenes of bloody carnage in the hallway outside. Seeing many of his pet humans dead causes the Sphinx to ball his claws into fists and roar in rage.

"Demon scum! You will all PAY!"

A moment later, Kar rushes away, leaving Rosalia and the other two alone.

Daisy plops her butt on Kar's hospital bed and hangs her tiny legs over the side, kicking them back and forth nonchalantly.

Rosalia sighs. "What now? Should we make for the shelters?"

Daisy shrugs. "Nah! We should wait here. Daddy's gonna call soon."

"Daddy?" Rosalia asks, clearly skeptical. "You mean the Wordsmith, Jason?"

"Duh! Jeez, you're not very smart!" Daisy cackles, taunting the demon nurse with a smug grin. "My daddy is the bestest daddy ever! He can do anything! He's awesome; totally dope!"

"...I'm sure he is." Rosalia replies, glowering at the precocious child.

Like clockwork, a minute later, Daisy tilts her head upward. "Daddy!"

Jason's voice speaks within the room, projected magically from a distant location. "Daisy! Err, how... how did you know I was going to call? Never mind, that's not important. Rosalia, did Samantha find any survivors?"

Rosalia shakes her head. "She didn't, Mister Wordsmith, sir. Everyone in the hospital has died."

"Damn..." Jason replies, his voice tinged with regret. "I'm trying to project my powers everywhere at once, but it's taking a toll on me. My head hurts, my eyes are going fuzzy, and I can barely even think. I've got mana to spare, but my brain has a hard limit."

While Jason speaks, a spark appears in Rosalia's eyes. "Oh! Uh, I don't mean to interrupt, Mister Wordsmith, Hero-man, sir... but um... the Second Emperor! I think the Shades infected her with something! She's way more tired than any Emperor ought to be, even under the current circumstances. Can you help her?"

"What, seriously?" Jason asks. "Goddamn, these demons are so... err, sorry."

"It's fine," Rosalia replies, lowering her head. "I'm... I'm sure you didn't mean me."

"Yeah, but still. It's not good to generalize," Jason explains. "Good demons exist. Personally, I believe that demons and humans could coexist, given the right incentives. We just need to stop ripping each other apart. Better said than done, though. Anyway, let me just... Inspect."

A Word of Power travels instantly across time and space, pressing itself invisibly against Belial's body.

Not long after, Jason speaks again. "Creepy. It's some sort of... magical nutrient-parasite. It's feeding on Samantha's demonic mana. Don't worry, though. This little jerk won't hurt her any longer! Sever! Expel. Heal!"

Instantly, the parasite loses its hold on Belial's internal organs, teleports out of her body, and fizzles to ash under the daylight streaming into the room from outside. Belial's wounds heal, restoring her body to near-perfect working condition.

The Second Emperor stirs, looking noticeably less lethargic. "...Huh? Strange. I suddenly feel a bit better than before."

"Let's improve your situation even further," Jason says, startling Belial. "My mana is limitless! Energize!"

A flood of magical energy fires from Jason' position, tears across the fabric of reality, and floods into Belial's heart. Any remaining lethargy vanishes from her face, making her jump to her feet, as if compelled by the God of Vitality himself.

"I'm awake! Whoa! What the heck- what did you do, Jason?"

"Nothing much," Jason says, trying not to sound smug. "I gave you, like, one and a half drops of primordial energy. No big deal."

"Wow!" Daisy chirps. "That's so dope, daddy! You're wicked cool!"

"Eh... yeah. Thanks, sweetheart," Jason laughs. "Belial, I can't waste any more time. There's no reason for you to stay at the hospital. You're a Demon Emperor; we could use your strength on the frontlines. I'll keep healing people and sealing the demons inside the Labyrinth... but I need you to take out the big threats among our enemies. If you can't bring yourself to kill them, then at least slow them down."

Belial snorts. "No problem, I can handle that. But what about you? Are you going to get your hands dirty?"

Jason hesitates.

"...If I must."

"Good," Belial replies, puffing out her chest. "I think you should know something, Jason, but please don't tell Phoebe. I've already killed once today. I slew three of Yama's Shades. Given how I've broken the vow I made to my deceased sister, I hope that will convince you of how dire our situation is."

"It does, and I know," Jason says. "Take care. Daisy, you and Rosalia should go to the shelters, okay? It will be safe there."

"Okay, daddy! Bye-bye!"

Daisy waves at the air cheerfully, then lowers her hand. As Jason's voice fades away, Daisy's smile disappears, and a look of sadness replaces it.

"Daddy was really scared. He's tired, too. There are bad people everywhere, Aunt S'matha..."

"I know," Belial says, as she trots over, picks Daisy up, and hugs her gently. "But don't worry. Now that your auntie and grandpa are about to join the battle, we're sure to win! You just go to the shelter with Rosalia, okay? Be good, and don't cause her any trouble."

Daisy dugs Belial back. "Okay. Stay safe, Aunt S'matha. It wouldn't be very dope if a bad guy hurt you."

"Haha. No, it wouldn't."

A minute later, Belial punches the wall, using her incredible strength to blast open a path to the outside world for Rosalia and Daisy. As they leave, Belial perks her ears up, but even with her Emperor-level hearing, she doesn't detect any distant gunfire.

"Hmm. The demons have already surrounded Hero City, but they haven't yet broken our perimeter. Daisy and Rosalia are going south, to the underground pyramid shelters... but I should head west. That's where the strongest demons are sure to appear. They'll want to reinforce their main forces to form a bulwark, and thus, force their way past our defenses."

Swiveling on her heel, Belial heads back into the hospital. She steps into the main corridor and stomps westward, avoiding the bodies of her fallen friends and comrades.

"Tch. Damn! Never have I felt so worthless as I do right now. I saved all of these soldiers' lives, but failed to protect them from that filthy Shade. Yama. This time, you've royally pissed me off. Your whores killed my friends. They butchered these helpless humans mercilessly, all for a chance to boost your harem. You disgusting, wretched little insect. If I make it out of this war, and trust me, I will... I'm coming for you. Your so-called Hidden Hell means nothing to me. I'll rip it stone from stone. I'll pay you back tenfold for your atrocities!"

Belial gnashes her teeth. Her blood-red eyes turn pitch-black for a moment as a sense of humiliation and regret burns inside her heart like a roaring inferno. Her Demon Emperor aura surges into the heavens, and she lets out a bloodthirsty roar!

"Gaaaah!! I hate you! I hate you more than life itself! I'm sick of standing by, watching while the people I love die! My sister, my husband, and all the others, too! They died, while I survived, and for what reason?! None! Their deaths were senseless, a sacrifice to spare me!"

"I never wanted their mercy! Why couldn't I have perished along with Satan? Why must I suffer and languish in loneliness?! If you want to fight me, then so be it! I'll give you a devil-damned fight! I'll make you all regret initiating this war! I'll show you why I'm the Second Emperor of demonkind!"

Without another word, Belial storms forward, the sheer magnitude of her demonic aura forcing the walls away from her, crumbling the hospital's foundations to powder.

As she walks, her hatred becomes a smoldering furnace, one fueled by her shame and former sense of helplessness.

However.

Once Belial arrives at the central corridor, just before the crumbled remains of the hospital's eastern wing, she pauses and flicks her head to the left.

"Who goes there? Show yourself!"

A tiny figure half-buried under the rubble flinches. After hearing her voice, the figure lifts up its head, revealing the face of Grima, the hospital's receptionist goblin. Still dressed in his suit, Grima appears to be in surprisingly good condition, despite all of the dust and crumbled powder covering him. He stands inside the reception area and blinks twice while gazing at Belial.

"Oh, Second Emperor. You're alive? I just returned and found the hospital in shambles. What happened? Why is everyone dead?"

Belial gazes at the goblin in confusion. "I'm alive? I thought you perished, Grima! I finished a full walkabout not fifteen minutes ago and couldn't find anyone still breathing! Where have you been?"

The goblin dusts himself off. He reaches into the pile of rubble he just climbed out of, fishes around inside it for a moment, then extracts an electronic datapad.

"My apologies. I left last night to deal with some errands, and only just now came back. I never expected the hospital to end up in ruins, but oddly, the rest of the city seems fine."

"...That's my fault," Belial mutters, looking away. Her rage fades somewhat as she releases a sigh. "Yama's Shades attacked us. They tried to capture Jason's daughter, but she surprised everyone when she revealed she had Heroic powers, just like her father. She beat the tar out of her attacker, but it was too little, too late. The Shades had already butchered all of our patients. Only Daisy, Rosalia, and myself survived, along with the Monster King, Kar."

"Goodness!" Grima exclaims. He hastily starts tapping on his datapad while shaking his head. "That doesn't sound good at all, not one bit. With all of our patients dead, what are we to do? The teleportation array has broken down, so the Rescue Modules won't save any other troopers' lives..."

"I know," Belial says, shrugging helplessly. "I'm going to go and fight on the frontlines. Jason is assisting our forces remotely by healing our troops and teleporting the demons back to the Labyrinth. You should go to the shelters, Grima. If you see any other hospital workers on the way... tell them what happened."

Grima nods. "Yes. Thank you, Second Emperor. I will do that."

"Great. I'm off, then," Belial says. She gives a quick goodbye wave, then exits through the hospital's main doors, leaving the goblin behind.

After Belial disappears, Grima stares at her afterimage for several minutes, then raises his datapad and continues tapping its surface, typing out a string of notes.

"Interesting. I did not anticipate the Shadow Emperor would make such a bold move. And the Hero's daughter possessing magical abilities? This is high-priority information. My value continues to increase. If humanity survives Stormbringer, this report will boost my prestige considerably."

The little goblin falls silent and continues tapping out a message on his datapad. After concluding, he saves the file for later, then slides the datapad into one of his suit's inner pockets.

"Hm. With this hospital destroyed, where can I gather additional intelligence? Now is not the time for caution. Perhaps the western front? No. If I am seen, it may expose my identity. Should I try scouting the eastern edge of Hero City? Negative. I cannot risk the demons seeing me, either. They seem to be encircling the city from all angles. Escape is impossible."

Grima steps out of the rubble and exits the hospital. After pausing for a few seconds, he starts off toward the northern side of the city.

"Perhaps in the event of a total societal collapse, my best course of action would be to remain in a position close to the Covenant Ships. Then, if an evacuation proves necessary, I will ensure my survival to deliver this report."

"Yes. I believe preserving my life is the most important feat I can perform at this time."

Slowly, the goblin shambles away from the hospital, off toward the camouflaged spaceships at Hero City's northern edge.

All the while, the Stormbringer war continues to rage, unabated.

>!This is what a spoiler looks like! Click it to reveal the text!!

Part 263: Jason's Brain Drain

First Day, Sixteenth Hour. Inside Camael's Cube.

My skull throbs and pulses with pain. Every time I use my Wordsmithing, some of my brain cells die, making my vision go spotty for a moment.

"Seal! Seal! Seal! Return! Haaah... haaah..."

I pause my ceaseless magic-casting to sink to the ground, positioning myself at the center of the platform I built inside Camael's Cube. It hovers amidst the glowing void, floating aimlessly, while holographic images of Tarus II's surface play out around me.

My vision blurs for a moment, making me lower my head. "Cough, cough... Restore."

I mumble a Word of Power, causing a bit of vitality to flow into my mind, waking me up once again. However, given how many times I've already revitalized myself, my magic barely has much of an effect. I only obtain a momentary surge of clarity before the world dulls again.

"Jason," Phoebe says, as her holographic body kneels next to mine. "You're exhausted. You can't keep this up."

"Yeah, I know," I say, forcing a smile in my mind-wife's direction. "But what choice do I have? Do you think I can stop and take a nap while humanity faces extinction?"

"You have to," Phoebe replies, her tone grim. "Don't forget what happened to you six years ago! You ran yourself ragged and nearly ended up in a coma from overusing your powers!"

"That... that was different," I cough. "I ran out of mana, back then. Now, my mana is practically unlimited. Camael's Cube can keep me at maximum capacity for as long as I need."

"Your mana supply isn't the problem here," Phoebe says. She turns to look across the platform at Michael, Gabriel, and Raphael, their winged holo-forms standing some distance away. "Archangels! Back me up on this!"

Raphael nods. The old man flickers over to my side, momentarily followed by his two brothers.

"Thy wife speaks the truth," Raphael says. "No being, not even myself, can continuously cast magic without pause. In thy case, thy magic is especially strenuous on the brain, given Wordsmithing's need for imagination and intellect. Verily, to speak a Word of Power, thou must first visualize its effect in thy mind's eye; something which ordinary magicians need not do. Therefore, thy mental drain is many times greater than mine, as an example."

"You see?" Phoebe asks, turning back to me. "If you keep going, you'll pass out anyway, and who knows how long you'll be down? Taking a five-hour nap now would be a far superior choice to spending several days in a coma! By then, humanity may have completely fallen!"

Hearing Phoebe's determination, I falter. My body drips with sweat, not from physical exertion, but from the continuous draining and replenishing of my inner mana supply. Her words, like sweet honey, caress my ears, making my brain ache for the sensation of a soft pillow pressing against my face.

Even so, I force my eyes open. "I can't. You've seen what's happening. Ose keeps bombarding Tarus II with Warpers. No matter how many I teleport away, she'll only send more! Even if I seal their powers, the effect only lasts an hour before they return. If I stop now, they'll explosively increase their gate-opening speed!"

Phoebe stands up. She turns her head toward the far edge of the platform, where a huge machine I Wordsmithed some eight hours before continuously churns out a series of small, UFO-shaped objects, each one with a long stake sticking out of their bottom so I can plant them in the dirt.

"The Molecular Assembler has constructed almost twelve thousand Subspace Interference Relays," Phoebe says. "If you act now, you can plant them all across Tarus II's primary landmass. That will stop the Warpers from opening any more portals."

I shake my head. "That isn't enough, Phoebe, and you know it. As you said earlier, we'll need at least fifty thousand relays to block off the whole planet at once. If I only create a subspace barrier around the main continent, Ose will instantly discover its presence, move her Warpers outside of the anti-teleportation zone, and simply open portals further away. Then she'll send in her minions to destroy the relays one by one, eventually opening up holes in the relay net. We'll buy a few hours, maybe even a day, but we'll lose the element of surprise."

"At this rate, we'll need two more days before we can create enough relays to engulf the entire planet in an anti-teleportation net," Phoebe retorts. "You won't last that long! If you put down the relays now, you can get a few hours of sleep, reset your brain, and resume your sealing activities!"

"Wordsmith, there is something I don't understand," Michael interjects. "Why go through all of this trouble to protect Tarus II? My sister's Cube is more than suitable for a fallback point! Teleport thy human friends here, where the wretched bloodskins won't be able to touch them! If thou dost not intendeth to slay thy enemies with Wordsmithing, then trying to protect thy world from their wrath is an equally pointless endeavor!"

The momentary lull in my Wordsmithing returns a bit of clarity to my thoughts, causing my headaches to ebb. I glance at Michael and shake my head.

"I refuse. Call me stubborn if you want, but I cannot stand the idea of giving up the last six years of humanity's victories to the demons in one fell swoop, not when I have the power of Camael's Cube in my grasp! If humanity loses Tarus II, then we will also lose our hope. Think about Heaven, Michael. When the Archdemon attacked, your people did everything in their power to preserve Heaven, even when fleeing to the stars was a perfectly viable option. Had you left from the onset, you wouldn't have suffered so many losses, and we both know your people could have survived in the Void without issue."

"I am aware," Michael says, his expression stony. "But I offer a retort; thy logic is flawed. By choosing to stay and protect Heaven, my people suffered a catastrophic loss! Thou often speaketh of learning from the mistakes of thy ancestors. Would not such a line of thought imply that leaving Tarus II should be thy first course of action?!"

Gabriel nods. "I concur. Michael is right. Abandon the planet. With thy Wordsmithing, building another home should prove a trivial task for thee. Even Camael's Cube itself; is this not a planet-sized interstellar battlestation? Thou shalt gain a highly defensible fortress the demons will find all but impossible to crack."

Both Archangels pick their words carefully, making me pause.

"You make a good point, but even so... I hate the idea of leaving our world behind. This isn't like when the demons attacked Heaven! Humans are versatile; we have weapons capable of turning the tides of war. Once we have fifty thousand Subspace Interference Relays, it will become impossible for the demons and Warpers to ever invade us again! We're so close to winning... why give up now?"

"Heaven was our home for tens of millions of years," Michael explains. "Tarus II has only been thine for six! I do not understand thy odd fixation on this one planet, specifically."

"Tarus II is a beautiful, lush world," Phoebe says, surprisingly siding with me on this issue. "More importantly, it has a Volgrim warpgate, something the Cube lacks. We've already abandoned all of our other worlds because of Stormbringer. If we lose Tarus II, we'll also lose all the rest, forever. On this point, I agree with Jason. I don't want my daughter to lose the only planet she's ever called home. That being said, I'd give it up in a heartbeat if I knew it would ensure humanity's survival."

I smile at my mind-wife, and she smiles back.

"That's my point," I say. "I have Camael's Cube in my possession. I refuse to believe our battle is one we'll lose! Ose may be highly intelligent, but I'll bet she hasn't anticipated the Cube falling into my hands. How could she? Not even Raphael, the eldest Archangel with direct knowledge of its existence, managed to anticipate its appearance. I think the Cube is our ticket to winning the Tarus II war, as well as the war against demonkind itself."

With a shake of my head, I blink my eyes open, forcing my mind into a more alert state.

"Phoebe, I want you to ensure the Molecular Assembler keeps functioning properly. The moment we have... oh, say, forty thousand Subspace Interference Relays... let me know."

Phoebe frowns. "Forty thousand? But we'll need fifty to wrap the whole planet in an anti-teleportation net."

"I know. I'll think of something. For now, I'm going to change my strategy a bit. I'll start manually creating neutralization bubbles around Hero City. Warpers have to summon portals to specific coordinates, right? I've been going about this the wrong way. Instead of merely closing their portals, I should have created vacuum points where their portals stood, making it impossible for them to open more portals in the vicinity. These points would last for many hours and require far less energy, to boot. I've just been so damn busy that I didn't think of that first."

My mind-wife pulls away from me and nods. "That is a good idea, yes. But aren't you already exhausted and drained? You're barely able to keep yourself awake. How many vacuum points can you possibly create before you collapse?"

"Not many," I mutter. "I'll take a short break first. While I rest, let's work on our next plan. Have any of you obtained any valuable intel, yet?"

The three Archangels spread out and return to a few designated spots amidst the holographic map matrix. Raphael speaks first, taking a moment to point at a position to the south of Hero City. "Not long ago, I noticed a large clumping of demons here. Verily, I have attempted to ascertain their intentions via their movements, and my best guess is that they shall soon charge the southern reinforcements."

"The Battle Brothers have gone missing," Michael adds. "I have done as thou requested and attempted to keep tabs on all of the Baron-rank bloodskins and above. Given their numbers, I have had some difficulty. My best guess is that the Battle Brothers must have retreated to the Labyrinth."

"That's probably the case..." I mutter, only half-listening. My eyes droop from weariness, so I close them to try and ease some of my fatigue. "Hard to say for certain."

"Jason," Phoebe says. "There is one thing I wanted to mention, but it's not related to Tarus II. Um, see, you're not familiar with quantum mechanics, so this will be a bit tricky to explain."

I raise my eyebrows, even while keeping my eyes closed. "Does this have something to do with the Warpers?"

"No. Camael's Cube," Phoebe replies. "I've investigated the Cube over the past ten hours, whenever there was a lull in the action on Tarus II. To my surprise, I discovered something shocking. Jason... the Cube is not traveling faster than light. In fact, it isn't even traveling at light speed. Its speed is exactly .99c."

I crack my eyes open a tad. "What do you mean? Ninety-nine percent the speed of light? But you said we were hundreds of lightyears from the Tarus system. If we're moving at sub-light-speed... then... it will take us centuries to return home."

Phoebe smiles. "No, see, that's the incredible thing, Jason. This Cube... it operates on a fundamentally different principle of dimensional travel than Esther's Trifrancium drive. Simply put, the Cube does not travel through normal space, but through a secondary place of existence; one where space itself compresses a thousandfold, drastically shortening the distance between celestial bodies."

My mind-wife waves her hand, causing the entire Tarus II hologram to disappear, replaced instead with an image of the Milky Way galaxy.

"See this star? This is the Kaldova system. This other one is its nearest neighbor, LL-14. A scant fifteen lightyears separates them, practically nothing in celestial terms, but still a considerable distance if we were to travel between them at exactly the speed of light. However, what if you could shrink the distance between the systems to the point that only a tenth of a lightyear separated them? Effectively, you would also improve the 'efficiency' of lightspeed, meaning it would only take you a few months to travel between them."

"And that's exactly what the Cube does," Phoebe continues. "It doesn't actually shrink the gap. Rather, the Cube flies within a plane of reality where the gravitational pull of every celestial object is billions of times stronger. Space itself shrinks, causing stars separated by lightyears to exist within a stone's throw of each other."

While my wife speaks, I raise my head and glance at Raphael, noticing his odd expression.

"Hey, gramps," I say. "Any of this ringing a bell? That look on your face tells me Camael might have mentioned it once or twice."

Raphael nods. "Mmm. As I have said before, Camael was the cleverest of all angels. Her ability to invent new artifacts made her a genius, even to the point I knew little of the inner workings of her mind. It seems this... this 'shrunken void' thy wife speaks of, it might be the concept of 'P-Space' Camael once mentioned."

"P-Space..." Phoebe mutters. "It's a decent name for now, I suppose. In any case, this plane of reality effectively allows for even slow starships to cross huge distances with little fuel requirements. However, there is one big flaw."

Phoebe switches the holographic emitters again, summoning an image of a vast, white galaxy, one filled with pitch-black spots in all directions, almost like a normal galaxy, but with inverted colors.

"The problem lies in what I said earlier; gravity itself is far stronger. Not only are stars and planets much more tightly packed in P-Space, but their gravitational pulls are amplified massively. If we were to draw too close, the stars would rapidly pull us toward them, yank us out of P-Space, and plunge us into an instant fiery death."

My body shivers involuntarily. "Seriously? That sounds incredibly dangerous. How have we managed to avoid dying all this time?"

"Because," Phoebe mutters, "the Cube itself has a consciousness of its own, instinctual, but capable of navigating P-Space without our assistance. The only reason I've even thought to mention all of this is because... well, it could prove useful in the future. I spent a good deal of time with Solomon and soaked up a lot of his knowledge, but never did I imagine there was an entire branch of science he didn't know about! This could change space travel forever!"

"Haha..." I laugh, after wearily closing my eyes once again. "Solomon wasn't omniscient. His genius came from his ability to copy the memories of other people and store them inside the Crown. This allowed him to copy the minds of humanity's greatest thinkers, extrapolating and combining their knowledge together in wholly new ways. However, anything those people hadn't thought of, Solomon wouldn't know. I'm sure there's plenty that old bastard still had to learn."

Phoebe falls silent, as do the Archangels.

A few seconds later, my mind-wife awkwardly waves her hand and brings back the map of Tarus II.

"Anyway. None of that P-Space information will matter in the slightest if we can't survive this war. Let's see what the demons have been up to, now that you've gone a few minutes without closing their portals."

While she navigates the Tarus II situation, I take a break to relax my eyes, sag my shoulders, and flop backward onto the floor, all while my mind swims around, half-dead.

I loll my head to the side and smile when I see Shana, Sir Lorent, and the Phoenix way off to the side, goofing around and having a bit of fun. Sir Lorent holds the Phoenix's consciousness in his hands like a ball, then gently tosses the bird to Shana. Shana laughs excitedly and catches the Phoenix, then throws the bird back.

[Whee! Haha! This is such fun!] The Phoenix chirps. [Boing! Boing! Whee!]

I laugh to myself and close my eyes.

At least someone here is having fun.

* * *

Eventually, I exhale deeply and force myself to sit up, once again experiencing a rush of exhaustion as my body creaks back into the 'awake' position.

I climb to my feet and shuffle over to Phoebe's side as my mind-wife flutters around from point to point.

"What's the situation?"

My wife doesn't reply. Upon closer inspection, I notice a look of consternation on her face.

"Phoebe? Did you find something?"

"Huh?" Phoebe blinks, before turning to look at me. "Oh, it's, um... well, to the east of Hero City, I noticed there weren't many demons here. By my count, only half a dozen or so, and none of them are Warpers. However, if you look closely, you'll see there's a weird bit of mana hovering in the center of their group."

Phoebe points at the mana signature. I follow her finger and frown. Something about it feels familiar.

"Hmm. Detect. Ah! No wonder! It's Ose! Her Astral Form! I thought we couldn't locate her on this map, but it turns out we can! Good job, honey. Now, I wonder what that evil bitch is up to..."

I lean a little closer to the blurry image on the map, then speak a word of power.

"Eavesdrop."

My senses stretch out across the fabric of space, enabling me to listen in to any conversations occurring within that specific spot on Tarus II.

...Silence.

After a few seconds, I frown, then glance at Phoebe.

"Weird. I don't hear anything. I thought Ose would be giving her grunts orders or something."

Phoebe shrugs. "Maybe there was a lull in the conversation?"

Suddenly and without warning, Ose does speak.

"Ah, Wordsmith. There you are. I was beginning to wonder when you'd show up."

Her words send a chill down my spine.

What the hell? Did she somehow sense my Word of Power? I only listened in from a distance! How could she possibly...

During that brief instant of confusion, a bomb goes off in my brain.

EEEEEEEEEEEEEEE

A wave of pain strikes me, like a flashbang grenade detonating mere inches from my face.

"Ah..."

The world becomes a blur. Blood vessels rupture in my eyes. The ground rushes at me.

Whump.

"-asooon!"

Phoebe's words are the last thing I hear before the world goes dark.

>!This is what a spoiler looks like! Click it to reveal the text!!

Part 264: Orias's Origins

An hour earlier, near the eastern side of Hero City.

Orias, Baron of the Stars, sits cross legged atop a small hill with a few dozen trees surrounding him. This lightly forested bulge in the otherwise wide-open eastern plains grants him a layer of concealment from any hostile gazes.

The Baron takes a long, deep breath. He closes his eyes for a moment to sense the ambient mana surrounding him.

"Mmm. Tarus II. This world is rich with life."

He balls both of his hands into fists, then presses them together in front of his chest. After leaning his head forward, he quietly inhales several additional breaths, all while reflecting on a great many things.

For ages, I've sought the truth of Enlightenment. Sadly, even after all this time, I've yet to free myself from the shackles of mortality.

Orias opens his eyes. He gazes down at the fields before him, where a half-dozen demons stand in a circle. He barely gives them any heed before raising his eyes to the horizon, where he observes the towering cliffs leading to Hero City's eastern edge.

All of this is so... meaningless.

The Baron's eyes become glazed as his mind travels a million lightyears away, toward a reality he may never experience.

Transcendence. The freedom to unshackle one's mind from one's body at will. The apex of spirituality; a peak I can someday only hope to reach.

Oh, my great and ancient master. Your legacy lives on through me. What more must I do? What feats must I accomplish to someday achieve that which you found so effortless?

Orias's thoughts become disturbed as the air ripples beside him. A demon Lord steps through a tear in space and drops to one knee before extending his hands out to reveal a pitch-black metal box.

"Baron Orias. A delivery from Ose."

Orias blinks twice before turning to look at the young demon on his right. Absentmindedly, he plucks the box from the Lord's grasp. "Ah. Thank you. You may leave."

"Yes, Baron."

The Lord nods once, then leaps backward through the tear in space, disappearing into the Labyrinth.

Orias continues staring at the spatial tear's position for several seconds before wearily shaking his head. He lowers his gaze to the black box in his hand, then casually pops it open, revealing a small, palm-sized metal orb, one with all manner of fancy magical symbols engraved on its otherwise smooth surface.

The Baron of the Stars wriggles his nose in disgust. "Another weapon of war. Oh, Ose. Your desire for power, your desperate need to win at all costs... these feelings will someday plunge you into the depths of despair."

While keeping the metal orb, Orias discards the black box, tossing it behind himself as if it were a piece of garbage. Then, he sighs. He returns to his meditation, casting aside any cares or thoughts about the outcome of the Stormbringer war.

"Master. How long has it been? The world you showed me. The visions you bequeathed. Were those all lies? Were they meant only to turn my heart away from the trifles of existence?"

Orias's memories play in his head while he waits for Ose's order... her command to unleash the device she just gave him.

I remember the fateful moment that changed my life as if it were yesterday, even though more than 100,000 years have passed since that encounter.

I was still the Lord of the Moon, back then. A child compared to how I am now. A loyal servant of Satan the Devil. Whatever orders he gave, I followed. Even as a mere Lord, my powers greatly eclipsed other demons of the same rank. They called me a Pseudo-Baron, all because of how mighty my gems made me.

Still, compared to genuine Barons, let alone Dukes and Emperors, my power felt underwhelming. I sought to increase my standing among demonkind, and so I went out on any mission that might temper my image in the minds of my peers.

That was why, on that fateful day, I could not begin to imagine how my life would change.

* * *

It was a hot summer's day. The mission Satan gave me was simple: I had to travel to a remote Tibetan mountain range and eliminate all of the humans living there. It turned out these humans possessed an ancient artifact, something with an origin derived from humanity's first age. Satan wasn't sure what it was, but he assumed it would eventually help the demons in our war against humanity and the angels.

I climbed the mountain range without much trouble. Neither the snow nor the wintry chill bothered me, and my body proved perfectly adept at scaling even the steepest cliff face. Anywhere I couldn't reach with my own power, I simply activated one of my hundreds of gems and made my way past those barriers.

However, despite how easy climbing the mountain proved, locating the village was surprisingly troublesome. I wandered for days, searching north and south, east and west, looking for trails, hints of human settlements... yet I found nothing.

Finally, I made my way to the very top of that snow-crested peak. I intended to leap from the mountain top and glide around it in circles until I spotted my target. Instead, I arrived upon a scene I've never forgotten, even to this day.

Atop the mountain, a muscular man with pure white hair and well-nourished skin sat amidst a small field of flowers. No snow touched the ground within ten meters of his body, and the sun itself pierced the biting cold, illuminating his position with a ray of light. Somehow, it seemed as if the Creator himself had acknowledged the man's existence.

His clothing was naught but simple robes, woven together haphazardly in the poorest and most meager fashion. So thin were they that under any other circumstance, he would have certainly died from frostbite. Yet, despite the flimsiness of the man's garb, he sat perfectly still with both eyes closed, as if the Earth's rage could not touch him. Mother Nature's frozen fury flew in his direction, only to disperse when it came into contact with the invisible aura surrounding his body.

The aura of a Hero.

In an instant, I knew who this man was. How could I not? The demons felled by his hands were too numerous to count. Kerrigan, the Temptress. Oderos, Duke of the Fallen. Melgon, Baron of the Secret Fire.

I had met many heroes before, but none as mysterious as the man before me. Nebuchadnezzar, the previous Hero, had put humanity's house in order. His right fist could split the seven seas, while his left could tear the sky in half. Known as Humanity's Champion, he was a powerful one-on-one combatant who frequently ripped demonkind's best warriors limb from limb.

However, unlike Nebuchadnezzar, the Hero sitting before me was something of an enigma. He had slain many demons, yet had never left anyone alive who could identify him. We would only find corpses at various mission points, the bodies of dead Lords and Barons and Dukes left to rot under the midday sun, with deep wounds and lacerations torn across their surfaces.

Immediately, I raised my fists and struck a defensive stance. I gritted my teeth as a feeling of doom swept across my skin.

"You! You are this era's Hero!"

I spoke words that, in hindsight, sounded unbelievably stupid. Of course he was the Hero. Stating such only made me more fearful. I was not an Emperor, a Duke, or even a Baron. I was merely one Lord among tens of thousands of others. My existence was ant-like in the grand scheme of things.

The man raised his head. His eyes glowed a deep purple, like the color of royalty. He gazed upon me with the same indifference a lion might bequeath a gnat.

"And you are a demon," The man said, remaining seated. "Have you come to die?"

"N-no..." I muttered, feeling my courage waver. "I... I didn't realize the bloody Hero would be up here. I merely wanted to find a vantage point."

"To assist you in your quest, no doubt," The man said, his words dry. "It seems you intend to slay a great number of humans today, hellspawn."

I faltered. My feet took two steps back as I became even more frightened out of my wits.

"W-well... yes... but I'm... I'm only following orders..."

I could hear my voice trembling, my pitch cracking, as I tried to swallow my nerves.

Suddenly, the man stood up. So fast was his movement that it looked as if he had teleported to his feet. He folded his hands behind his back and assumed a dignified posture. His white hair sat unmoving, untouched by the mountain's blistering winds.

"Well, how unfortunate for you, hellspawn. You've come here alone, with no-one to back you up. Have you any final words before you reap the fate you've sown?"

My mind went blank. I realized, in that instant, that I would die. The man didn't look like a merciless killer; that much I could see in his eyes. Even so, it was clear to me that he took his duty as humanity's protector seriously. He would not let me off the hook.

My teeth chattered. Not from the cold, but from my nerves.

"Y-you... what... what is your name?"

I don't know why I asked that question. Perhaps it was only to sate my curiosity before I died. Perhaps, I wished to know the name of my slayer, in order that I might haunt him in the afterlife.

Whatever the case, it caused the man to frown and cock his head.

"You wish to know my name, hellspawn? I assumed you would ask me to spare your life, as did all those before you."

"There's... there's no point..." I muttered. "You won't spare me. Why even ask? I would rather die with dignity than humiliate myself in my final moments."

Several seconds passed.

The man met my gaze, and the two of us fell silent.

After a full minute elapsed, he nodded.

"Very good. You are not like the others. Allow me to grant you this last request. My name is Siddhartha Gautama. You may refer to me by my heroic title, Buddha."

I nodded. "B-Buddha. Yes. Well, I, ah... I thank you for this... this last kindness."

"Hmph. Where are your manners, hellspawn?" Buddha asked, pointing an accusatory finger at me. "I have given you my name. What is yours?"

For a moment, I felt a bit stupid, realizing I hadn't reciprocated in kind. I quickly corrected my mistake and nodded eagerly to his words. "Ah, my name is Orias. I am the Lord of the Moon."

"Orias! I've not heard of you before," Buddha said. "But, then again, I know little of the demons who roam the Earth. A few names have passed through my ears, but I've long since forgotten them. In my eyes, mortal matters are of little consequence."

After pausing for a moment, Buddha tucked his hands into his sleeves, folding them in front of his waist.

"You are a fascinating demon, Orias. Perhaps you do not even realize that much, yourself. If you can pass this test, the same one that so many demons have failed before you... I should hope that we might even become... friends."

My heart nearly jumped out of my chest. "T-test? What test? Are you going to spare me, after all?"

"I have no say in the matter," Buddha replied. "Listen well, young demon. My heroic abilities are not like those found among the previous heroes. They contain no innate strength in and of themselves. The one I use most often is a special one which absolves me of any guilt related to causing another sentient being's death. In all my years, I have never slain a demon. Rather, they have killed themselves."

Buddha extracted his hands from his sleeves. He raised his right hand to his forehead and pressed his palm there for a moment before pulling it away. To my astonishment, an eye opened up, one which greatly resembled Lucifer's third eye!

"Tell me, Orias. Have you ever heard of karma?"

I shook my head. "I have not."

"It is a simple concept, one I discovered when I was but a babe suckling my mother's breast. The Creator came to me in a dream. He informed me of the great truths of the world. When a creature dies, its soul passes on to the Great Beyond. But what happens afterward? Where does that soul go once it has departed our mortal plane?"

Buddha held up both of his palms, causing a black flame to appear in his right hand, and a white one in his left. He merged them together, forming a chaotic circle of light and dark energy.

"Righteousness and sinfulness; they are two sides of the same coin. Neither can exist without the other. Good men have committed foul deeds to benefit their people, while evil men have performed great merits to enrich themselves. This is true of all sentient beings, be they human, demon, angel, or otherwise."

Buddha continued. "Doubtless, you have committed many heinous acts during your lifetime. If I have judged you correctly, you have also performed many virtuous deeds as well. But what if I told you, Orias, that those feats carried a heavy burden with them? Every act you perform in this life will influence your next. Those who live lives of virtue will enter the karmic cycle of reincarnation, becoming kings and emperors in their next life. However, those who practice wickedness and devilry will reincarnate as peasants and slaves."

Hearing Buddha's words, my body lost some of its strength. I sank to my knees, listening to his speech with rapt attention. "This life... the next... do you mean to say that there are lives beyond this? What of my current one? I am neither strong nor weak. Did I perform poorly or superbly in my previous existence? Can you tell me, great Buddha?"

Inadvertently, I accepted Buddha's words as truth. I began to look up to him, feeling as though he were not some fool speaking in riddles, but a man whose gaze had pierced the veil of mortality.

He had seen the truth of existence. How? I knew not the answer.

What I did know was that, in that moment, I felt as if my mind had expanded, and my gaze spread across the cosmos.

There was more to life than following orders, seeking promotions, and working my way up the demonic hierarchy. There was more to my existence than I ever could have imagined!

Buddha smiled. His expression carried no malice nor hatred. Rather, he looked at me with pitying eyes, perhaps realizing the fog that had shrouded me for as long as I had lived.

"I do not know the answer to your question, Orias," Buddha whispered. "I cannot see into your past lives, nor your future ones. I can, however, use my Eyes of Karmic Retribution on you. I shall call down Divine Lightning upon your body. You will suffer a pain most excruciating as the total karma you've accrued up to now will activate ahead of time. If the Creator deems you unworthy, you will die where you stand, and your soul will evaporate into the Void. You will never enter the Great Beyond. You will never again step onto the path of reincarnation. Your tale will end here."

The Buddha paused.

"But... if you have not lived a hedonistic life... if you have not succumbed to foolish, evil desires within your heart, perhaps the Creator will spare you. Perhaps he will gaze upon you with pity and reset your karma, allowing you a new chance at forging your destiny."

The black and white flames within Buddha's hands faded away, while the eye on his forehead began to glow with divine energy.

"I cannot say what the result will be, young Orias. All I can say is... I hope, for both our sakes, that you will give me a pleasant surprise."

A moment later, a burst of light shot out of Buddha's forehead-eye. It struck my chest and sent me flying backward, where I crashed into the snow.

Anguish, torturous agony, and blinding pain struck my soul. In an instant, I felt my consciousness ripped from my body. I flew into the clouds, through the void, to a distant point upon the horizon.

My mind suffered innumerable cycles of misery. I felt the pain I had inflicted upon others throughout my life, the humans I had dismembered, the other demons I had dueled, and the angels I had butchered. Their pain became mine, as I felt the wounds I inflicted upon them fall upon me, but with a thousand times the severity.

Just when I thought I couldn't endure any longer, the barrage of attacks stopped.

I arrived inside a castle of light, a shining fortress within the Creator's domain. I felt His gaze fall upon me, and with it, a comforting warmth.

Moments later, all of the good acts I had performed in my life began flowing into my mind. I remembered the kind words I had given to a suicidal young imp, and how those words touched his heart.

I remembered a human child who, in passing, I had found unconscious in a forest and returned to his family. I never revealed myself to the boy or his parents, but even so, I saved his life, when killing him and reaping his soul would have been the first thing any other demon did.

Over and over, all the acts of kindness I had performed in my life flowed into my mind. I wept tears of sorrow. I felt the joy those people felt as if they had instead been my benefactors.

After an eternity passed, He spoke. The Creator's voice fell upon my ears.

"Now, do you understand, my child?"

I nodded, with tears in my eyes.

"Yes, Creator. I understand! I do! Inflicting pain upon the world spreads nothing but misery, while spreading joy and cheer improves the lives of everyone involved! All my life, I have been wrong! I have walked the line between good and evil thoughtlessly, like a headless chicken... but no more!"

The Creator smiled. I felt His love as He looked upon me with the eyes of a doting father.

"Good. Now go, Orias."

With a gentle push, the Creator flung me backwards, out of His domain, where I hurtled through the Void endlessly. I crashed back into Earth, awakening within my body as before, but this time, with a sense of purpose I had never felt in all my years.

"Great Buddha!" I cried. "I saw it! I felt the Creator's presence! He told me... he told me... great Buddha? Where did you go?"

I gazed around the snowy plateau, but no longer did the sun hang in the sky. Instead, the darkness of night had swallowed me, and the Buddha had left, taking with him his knowledge and wisdom.

Even the flowery clearing where he had once sat had accrued half a foot of snow, masking his presence to any who did not already know he had been there.

I sank to my knees, a deep sense of sadness in my heart. I wanted to thank him... to thank the man who had rekindled my spirit.

But I couldn't. He had left me behind.

Orias's eyes open. He gazes into the distance, as the ancient memories fade away.

I spent the next four decades casting aside my Earthly desires to live a life according to the Buddha's will. Eventually, I encountered my master once again.

The Buddha had not forgotten me. He told me I was the inheritor of his will, and that so long as I passed one final test, he would reveal to me the secret of Enlightenment.

"He struck me once again," Orias mutters out loud, his eyes losing focus. "He tested my karma a second time and found that I had stopped walking the path of hedonism. Sadly, he determined that I had not fully embraced his teachings. Buddha left me, telling me that I would certainly find the answers I sought someday... but that day would not come during his lifetime."

The Baron of the Stars sighs deeply. He gazes into the sunlit sky, a forlorn look on his face.

"What more must I do, master? What more must I sacrifice? Have I not given up enough?"

While shaking his head, Orias ruefully smiles.

During the second test, my master's Karmic Eyes unlocked some of my hidden potential. He instantly elevated me from a Lord to a Baron, increasing my power tremendously. My master told me this was because karma was, in itself, a form of authority over the material plane. What did he mean? Could I, perhaps, use Karma to increase my rank? Is it possible that devouring souls is not the only way for demons to mutate into greater forms?

The Baron falls silent. He rolls Ose's orb-device around in his palm, feeling the texture of its engraved magical conduits with his fingers.

After several long minutes, a flicker of mana appears at Orias's side. He tilts his head up to see Ose's Astral Body towering over him. She rests her hands on her hips and looks at Orias with a neutral expression.

"Is something the matter, Orias?"

"No, not at all," He replies, lowering his head once again. "I was just reminiscing about some old memories."

"I see. I'm sure you remember what I told you before. I'll attract the Wordsmith's attention soon. Wait until that device starts glowing, then hurl it into the air above my head. If all goes well, your contribution to this war will be among the highest of anyone here."

Ose points toward the six low-ranked demons standing in a circle out in the plains. "Those Amplifier grunts will suit my purposes well. Aim for the space roughly one hundred meters above their heads. I'll be standing in the center, using their power to make myself visible to the Wordsmith."

Orias nods. "You told me before that you can sense the Wordsmith through a... a soul-link? How does that work?"

"Haha," Ose chuckles. "It's a bit of luck on my part. The Wordsmith attacked me earlier while he was in a soul-body. During our engagement, I stealthily imprinted a tiny portion of my astral essence onto his soul. Thus, whenever his gaze sweeps across the battlefield, I can sense him. This device is similar to one I was planning to use on him before, albeit modified to fit the current conditions. I don't know why Jason wants to engage in long-distance warfare with our people, but if that's his plan, then I'll just have to modify mine."

"And this metal ball will... kill him?" Orias asks.

"No, no, devils, no!" Ose cackles. "Bahaha! I wouldn't dream of killing that blessed child. The Wordsmith is my key to unifying the Seven Hells. If I can ensnare him into my service, we demons will finally have a weapon capable of taking on the Overlords. I think you, of all demons, know how important that goal is."

Orias appears unmoved. "Mmm. So, it won't kill him. Let me guess; it will cripple his magic conduits?"

"That's right! If it weren't for my precious older brother, I'd never have thought of this method. I can take the Wordsmith out of the fight long enough to perform one last assault on humanity. I'll capture his wife and child, hide them away, and force him to do my bidding. If he and Hope wish to skulk about like cowards, then I'll make them regret toying with me."

Orias tilts his head up to stare at Ose. His expression, impassive, counters her evil, wicked grin. She gazes into the distance at the six Amplifier demons standing out in the field and chuckles to herself, imagining the victory she'll soon enjoy.

"Ose..." Orias mutters. "Do you ever... tire of all this? This rat-race? The never-ending quest for power, dominance, and control?"

The Third Emperor's grin falters. She glances back at Orias and frowns. "Hmm? What are you babbling about? You're a wonderful Baron, Orias, but I've always thought your meek and mild-mannered ways were shameful for a demon. Have you no pride? Evolution and growth is what defines our species. All you care about is mining gems. I couldn't give a damn what you do in your spare time, so long as you're there when I need you for the important missions."

The Baron sighs. "I'll take that as a 'no.' It's too bad, Ose. Your lust for power... it will devour you, someday. The fate unfolding before you will come as a result of the karma you've reaped. I only hope that, in the next life... you find some measure of peace."

Ose's frown deepens. "Are you about to betray me, Orias? Am I unable to count on you in this critical moment?"

"Hah..." Orias chuckles. "Do not worry, my Emperor. I haven't failed you before, and I certainly won't now. I just wish you could find peace in life, and a better path forward... one requiring less bloodshed."

"Oh, for devil's sake, not this spiritual mumbo-jumbo..." Ose groans, rolling her eyes. She turns toward the six Amplifiers and flips her hair. "Just be ready for when the moment of destiny arrives. I'll activate the bait in half an hour."

A moment later, she flickers out of existence.

After she leaves, Orias closes his eyes. Then, he plucks an Aquamarine gem out of his right arm. The large and unsightly indent in his skin rapidly closes up, returning the unsightly hole in his arm to pristine condition.

"Perhaps that is why I cannot achieve Enlightenment..." Orias mutters. "I still hold some attachment to my brothers and sisters, my fellow demons. I still fight and kill anyone my Emperors order me to target. I hold no desire toward power, but even so, I haven't yet let go of my attachments to the mortal plane."

Orias clutches the Aquamarine in his hand. Its gorgeous sky-blue luster glitters in the midday sun, making him smile.

Gems are the key to my power. They grant me a wide range of abilities, transforming me into a powerhouse among the Barons. But why do I value them? Is it only because of their utility? Their beauty?

No. It is because I see the karmic cycle of life echoed within their shimmering depths. From the dust of the cosmos, it takes each gem millions of years to form their complete shape. Then, they melt into the cores of planets, waiting for me to unearth them from their pitch-black prisons.

By activating a gem, I give it purpose, and it in turn gives me power. Without me, the gem is nothing more than a pretty rock. It is only when we unify ourselves that, for a few scant minutes, we can realize the deeper meanings inherent in our lives.

Orias clutches the Aquamarine in his palm, then snaps his fingers. It explodes into dust, granting its magical attributes to his body. A liquid-like sensation spreads across Orias's skin as he becomes invisible to the physical world, even hiding his demonic mana so nobody can sense him.

The Baron of the Stars melts into the background cosmic radiation, using the Aquamarine's power to shield his presence from all eyes. Even if someone knew he was there, they wouldn't be able to detect him.

After several minutes pass, Orias plucks out another Aquamarine, sighs, and snaps his fingers, replenishing his faltering invisibility.

He does this a couple more times, until the orb Ose gave him begins to shimmer. Orias flicks his eyes toward the six Amplifiers, where, presumably, Ose stands in their midst. He waits a few seconds for the orb to glow even brighter, then rears his arm back, coils strength into his muscles, and flings the orb across the plains, more than three-quarters of a mile away.

With a size smaller than a sparrow, the orb draws no attention to itself as it rockets toward the designated detonation position. The instant it reaches its target, Ose lunges her arm upward and fires a bolt of lightning from her fingers. It strikes the orb at the speed of light, causing a colossal detonation of chaotic mana throughout the entire area.

All six of the Amplifiers boosting Ose's astral presence howl in pain. The chaotic energy above them not only batters the Wordsmith's presence, but theirs as well, tearing throughout their mana conduits and melting their nervous systems into puddles of bloody pulp. The Amplifiers all fall to the ground in unison, perishing where they stand.

Ose stares into the sky. Her eyes turn bloodshot as a wild, wicked grin stretches across her face.

"Yes. Yes! HAHAHA! It worked! For a brief instant, I sensed the Wordsmith's soul violently shudder! He took the full brunt of that attack, and now I've crippled him! It will be weeks before he fully recovers! Now, so long as Hope doesn't show up, humanity will plunge into my grasp!"

She cackles evilly, laughing at the heavens victoriously.

"Ahahaha! Oh, what a pleasurable feeling! Even if Hope does show his face, I now have the perfect tool to deal with him! Never again will these Wordsmiths get in my way! First, I'll re-enslave the humans, then unite the seven Hells! After that, the universe will be mine for the taking!!"

While Ose laughs uproariously, Orias watches in silence. His invisibility wears off, revealing a look of fatigue etched onto his face.

"Well, Ose. I hope you've gotten everything you wanted. As for me, I've done enough here to fulfill my duties to demonkind. I'll be heading back, now."

He mutters these words under his breath, not speaking to anyone in particular. After shaking his head, Orias pulls another gem out of his left arm, snaps his fingers, and disappears with a flicker of light. He returns to the Labyrinth, leaving the rest of his people to finish up their efforts in the Stormbringer war.

Little does humanity know, but their savior can no longer fight on their behalf.

They will have to win the war by themselves.

>!This is what a spoiler looks like! Click it to reveal the text!!

Part 265: Humanity, Encircled

AUTHOR NOTE: I corrected a big error in Part 264! Read about it here!

Day One, Hour Seventeen, at the western edge of the Horned Forest.

Phoebe Hiro and her army tentatively hold the line as countless waves of demons and undead swarm at them from the Warpgate encampment. No longer sealed off, it hums with energy, spewing out Hell's minions one after another, their numbers neverending.

Not only does the Warpgate remain open, but dozens of Warper portals surround the Warpgate Encampment, allowing even more demons to flow forth unceasingly. With so many demons spread out over such a vast area, Phoebe recalls all of humanity's forces to Hero City, placing them in defensive formations on the north, west, south, and eastern edges to hold the demons back. Innumerable enemies swallow up the midday landscape, blotting out the horizon.

A communication signal beeps inside Phoebe's helmet. She lifts her cannon to fire another volley of projectiles before opening a comm channel.

"Yes, this is Commander Hiro speaking! What is it? Over."

Elder Skarde, currently assigned in the center of Hero City to guide its defenses, speaks in earnest. "Commander, I just finished checking the bio-data from our troopers' suits. For the past hour, not one of our soldiers have healed from their injuries. I don't know why, but it appears your husband has stopped supporting us from the backline. Over."

Phoebe, still wearing her fifteen-foot-tall demonstone exosuit, raises her right arm to fire a hail of volatile projectiles into the demon army's backline. They explode into bits of shrapnel, ripping through any fleshy bodies in the vicinity.

"You've got to be kidding me!" Phoebe groans. "Goddamn it, Jason! Why would you leave at a time like this? Don't tell me he exhausted himself from Wordsmithing too much? Fuck! I bet that's exactly what happened!"

After swearing like a sailor for a few seconds, Phoebe grits her teeth and refocuses her attention.

"Never mind that. Elder Skarde, assume that we won't have Jason around to heal anyone. Position our troops in such a way that we can minimize our casualties. Start evacuating the civilians onto the transport ships. Get as many people to Moonbase Kelkin as you possibly can. Over."

Elder Skarde falls silent for a moment.

"That base can't support more than a few thousand people, Commander, and the ten Covenant ships can only save 200,000 people at most. Excluding the hundred and fifty thousand troops we've lost today, we still have more than three and a half million humans and monsters within Hero City's confines. Over."

"I'm aware," Phoebe mutters. "You'll have to decide who stays and who goes, Elder. Prioritize humans over monsters. I want a split of sixty percent children, thirty percent women, and ten percent men. Over."

"Commander, I... yes. I'll do as you command," The man replies, his voice low. "Elder Skarde, out."

The line goes dead, and Phoebe resumes her attack.

"I'm sorry, Elder..." Phoebe mutters, speaking to nobody in particular. "It's selfish of me to put this burden on your shoulders. Even so, someone has to decide who lives and who dies. I'm too biased. I could never choose among all of the friends I've made. I hope you'll find it in your heart to forgive me."

She stomps toward the frontlines, hatred smoldering in her chest.

"One hundred and fifty thousand... that's how many humans and monsters these demons have killed. Unforgiveable. Ose... when I get my hands on you... I'll tear you in half!"

Phoebe storms toward the frontlines, where her soldiers have hastily erected dozens of heavy steel barricades. The men and women at the front bravely fire at their enemies, cutting them down mere feet from the final barriers. Snipers wearing Hummer suits hover in the air above, picking off the strongest Grunts and Lords wherever possible, while a half-dozen gigantic mech suits and nearly fifty armored tanks swallow up the backlines and middle ground, shelling the demons from a distance. Every cannon fired wipes out a handful of demons, slaughtering humanity's enemies ten times faster than the demons can kill them. Even so, the hordes of demons never slow down for even a second.

"I'm here!" Phoebe yells, as she aims her Zeus Strike cannon at a big clump of demons. She pulls the trigger and fires a heavy shell forward. It rips through dozens of demons in the blink of an eye, traveling like an angry bowling ball through an unending line of pins. After flying more than fifty meters, it explodes with a terrific bang, killing dozens more demons.

Phoebe clicks the trigger again, only for Centurion to blare a notice in her ear. "ZEUS STRIKE CANNON IS COOLING DOWN. YOU MUST WAIT FIFTEEN SECONDS BEFORE FIRING AGAIN."

With her right arm engulfed by the heavy cannon, Phoebe drops to her knees, grabs a heavy machinegun from a nearby weapon box, and takes aim with her left.

Brrt! Brrrt! Brrrrrrt!

She fires into the demonic hordes, mowing them down without even bothering to aim. Every bullet finds a target, so thick is the horde's composition.

"They just keep coming!" A nearby trooper shouts, his voice wavering. "I-I must've fired a million bullets already!"

"Then shoot a million more!" A female trooper replies, only glancing at him for a split second. "If these fuckers want to kill us, then we'll drag as many of them down with us as we can!"

Phoebe laughs. "Hah! That's the spirit!"

She resumes her assault, using her Zeus cannon whenever it cools down, but otherwise sticking to her machinegun.

After several minutes, a female voice speaks from behind Phoebe. "There you are!"

Phoebe spins around in surprise. "Samantha? Wait, what are you doing here? Are you okay? I heard about the hospital!"

Belial, wearing what can only be described as a fetishy swimsuit, shakes her head. "There's nothing left. Your teleportation doohickey got destroyed. Jason healed me and refilled my mana, and so, I decided to come here."

Phoebe nods. "Alright. Perfect timing. I have some soldiers over there, they got injured badly. If you could heal them up-"

"No, Phoebe," Belial says, her voice oddly calm. "I didn't come here to heal anyone. I came here to fight."

The Second Emperor of demonkind balls her hands into fists, then flexes her muscles.

"I lost too many people in that hospital, Phoebe. I'm here for blood."

"B-blood?" Phoebe asks. "What do you mean? That's not like you. You've always told me you hated violence."

"I did," Belial growls. "And I still do. But Phoebe, these demons... they almost killed my precious niece. They almost killed you. I won't let that happen again. I'm sorry if this changes your opinion of me, but I can't stand on the sidelines anymore. Rather, I won't. I'm going to remind my species why I'm the Second Emperor. I'm going to remind them why even Bael fears me."

Something about Belial's tone catches Phoebe offguard. She gazes at her best friend for several seconds without saying anything, then slowly nods.

"I understand. Don't worry, Sam. I wouldn't hate you for wanting revenge on scumbags. I just worry you might be going against your inner self. You don't have to force yourself to fight."

"Oh, but I do," Belial answers, her tone decisive. "Without me, the odds you'll win this war are extremely low. Don't worry about my safety... if I can battle Archangels and come out alive, a sea of Grunts, Lords, Barons, and Dukes won't slow me down in the slightest."

Belial's figure changes shape. Her legs and thighs grow noticeably more muscular, while her arms turn into bone scythes attached to whip-like appendages. Her face deforms, turning noticeably more monstrous as she grows several layers of teeth, like a Great White Shark.

"This appearance..." Belial growls, while glancing at her body. "...expresses perfectly the way I feel! I'll show the demons what it means to face a true monster!"

Like lightning, Belial bolts forward, leaps over the heads of a dozen soldiers, and lands amidst the incessant hail of gunfire and demon bodies.

Slash! Slash! Slash!

Belial's blade arms whip around in a tornado of fury, decapitating a dozen demons within seconds. She charges into the flood of enemies, continuously reaping lives no matter what direction she travels.

All the while, Phoebe gazes at her best friend's fading figure with a mixture of sadness and despair.

"Sammy..." Phoebe mutters. "What happened to you? Who made you suffer enough to become... that?"

Across Tarus II's surface, Ose's Warpers continue creating more and more portals, encircling Hero City from all directions. The city's Environmental Shield prevents them from opening rifts inside its confines, but below the cliff-lines of Hero City's elevated plateau, no such limiter exists.

Having retreated from the frontlines hours ago, Brunhilda and the other Felorians swap out with a fresh regiment of soldiers at Hero City's northern border, feeling a momentary surge of relief as they finally get to retreat to the backlines for a breather.

Brunhilda and one of her sisters, Sariah, slump against a rock just below the city's cliffside border while splashing water on their skin. Their bodies ache with exhaustion. Their eyes droop as the sweet release of sleep calls out to them.

"So... so many demons..." Sariah mutters. "They never stop coming. How can we possibly survive?"

Brunhilda rubs her hands against her face furiously, desperately trying to soak the liquid into her pores. "I don't know, sister. I don't know. But still, you must have faith! The Wind Mother protected us earlier. As long as we pray to her, she will guide us to victory!"

"I hope you are right," Sariah whispers.

While the two of them chat, a lightly bearded fellow hurries over in their direction. "Ah! You two are Felorians? The ones just pulled back from the front?"

Brunhilda turns to look at him, noting his white and purple robes. "Yes. And you are?"

"My name is Saul," The man says, as he reaches around behind himself to retrieve a backpack. "It's fine if you don't know me; I'm nobody important. Let's see here, umm... right, here are a few energy and ration bars. Personally, I think they taste quite good. They'll help you restore your stamina and get a good night's rest."

He pulls out several neatly-wrapped energy bars, then hands them over to the women. They accept the bars with faint smiles before sighing.

"Sir Saul," Sariah says, "Have you any word from the frontlines? We Felorians don't wear those metal suits, you see, so we aren't aware of the overall situation."

Saul slings the backpack around his shoulders once again. "I'm afraid I don't know much more than you. Last I heard, the demons started summoning portals around the city. We're completely surrounded. Miss Hiro is off fighting on the frontlines, the Hero started healing people and sealing off the portals remotely, and I think a few demons slipped past the barrier, because the hospital got destroyed! It's dreadful news, dreadful indeed."

"You said the Hero healed people remotely?" Brunhilda inquires.

"Mhm, yes. I heard a few soldiers mention it. Commander Hiro transmitted a message to all the troops informing them that her husband had returned, but was keeping his distance from the battlefield. Evidently, he's been shielding and healing injured soldiers with his Wordsmith magic."

"Oh..." Sariah mutters, glancing at her sister with embarrassment. "Well, I guess it wasn't the Wind Mother after all."

"Pardon?" Saul asks.

"Nothing... it's nothing."

Both women quickly unwrap their energy bars and bite down, savoring the taste of vanilla, nutmeg, and chocolate, all mixed together with a slightly fruity tang.

"Well, if you'll excuse me, I still have many many soldiers to visit," Saul says, jerking his thumb toward his backpack. "Thousands of troopers are swapping out now, and all of them are exhausted and famished."

Brunhilda nods. "Your assistance is appreciated, Brother Saul. I thank you for these delicious crunchy bars."

"Anytime," Saul says, offering a quick wave. He runs off, leaving both women behind.

Once Saul leaves, Sariah smiles shyly. "That man was... quite attractive."

"Agreed," Brunhilda replies. "He looked like the sort of fellow who could build an empire. A fine mate for any woman."

"Ugh, there you go with that leader-talk," Sariah groans, nudging her sister playfully. "Anyway, once we finish eating, let's hurry to bed. I'm so tired I could sleep for a week!"

"Sadly, we don't have that much time..." Brunhilda mutters. She glances toward the north, where the demonic hordes continue pressing against mankind's wall of guns and blades. "We'll need to keep our rest minimal. Every minute we sleep, another brother or sister will die."

Sariah lowers her eyes. "I'm sorry, sister. I didn't mean to be so insensitive."

"Don't apologize, it isn't your fault," Brunhilda says.

She caresses Sariah's cheek for a moment, then stands up and walks away.

Hero City's southern border.

Lieutenant Samuel guides a massive platoon of soldiers and mechas to defend against the second-largest horde of demons on either of Hero City's four sides. Having long-since lost the prisons, they can only slowly retreat while continuously blasting away any demons who get within striking distance.

"God fucking damn it!" Samuel bellows. "Just die already! If I had a god-damned nuke, I'd blow you all to kingdom come!"

He wears the same Rhino suit as always, now fully repaired thanks to Jason's Wordsmithing. Using his armor like a wrecking ball, the Lieutenant engages in combat with a pair of Baron demons, one of them wielding fire magic, and the other, a sound manipulator.

The fire-type Baron, Greedle, cackles evilly. "You're a tough one, human! But I'm the second-best fire-spitter after Beelzebub himself! I'll roast you in that tin-pot you call 'armor,' nyehehe!"

The sound-type Baron, Trinnic, says nothing. Instead, she flickers from side to side, her body turning transparent whenever any attack comes close to hitting her. She transforms herself into a sound-wave, then instantly arrives at Samuel's side.

BANG!!

A deafening thundershock strikes Samuel, flinging him to his left. Despite the unexpected attack, Samuel's suit instantly compensates, shifting its molecular mass to its right leg and stomping down to stop his flight. He reorients himself in midair and whirls to face Trinnic.

Brrrrt!

A wrist-mounted machine gun on Samuel's right arm unloads three dozen bullets at Trinnic in an instant, but the Baron flickers away like a ghost, evading Samuel's attack.

With his attention on Trinnic, Samuel fails to follow Greedle's movements. The fire-type Baron conjures fiery elemental armor onto his hands, heating them to nearly two-thousand degrees Fahrenheit. He lunges toward Samuel and swipes his claws in a downward arc, tearing through the heavily-reinforced nanites on Samuel's chest.

"Aaaaargh!" Samuel screams. The scorching heat instantly invades his suit, making him leap backward. His suit's interior jumps thirty degrees, all but cooking him alive. "Fuck, fuck! Mayday! I can't take these two by myself!"

Greedle grins like a Cheshire cat. He lunges forward and raises his claw to aim for Samuel's head. With the human disoriented from the heat, he hasn't a chance of resisting.

At that moment, from the skies above...

Piff.

A single bullet fires from an elevated vantage point. Greedle, too excited at the thought of killing the human commander before him, fails to detect the bloodlust aimed in his direction. A sniper bullet strikes him dead between his eyes, ripping apart his skull and flinging him backward.

Thunk!

He hits the ground like a sack of dead puppies, only offering one final spasm before his magic dissipates, never to be seen again.

"Greedle!!" Trinnic shouts, breaking her silence. Enraged by her lover's defeat, she manipulates the power of sound to create a vibrating sound-blade, a sword capable of cutting through anything, provided she can make contact with it. "You devil-damned fleshbag! I won't let you leave here alive!!"

Samuel's nanites expel the excess heat detected in his suit while also repairing the molten claw-marks Greedle left behind. Even so, they can't regenerate fast enough to deflect Trinnic's incoming attack.

"Oh, shit!" Samuel shouts, as he watches the Baron charge.

"I'm here to help," A voice says through his intercom. Samuel recognizes the voice as belonging to Corporal Hurent, but he doesn't get even a second to respond. Trinnic charges him with her soundblade at the ready. Her Baron-level speed, further enhanced by her manipulation of sound, turns her into an agile combatant. She flickers past a half-dozen other commandos in her path, ignoring their existences as if they don't matter in the slightest.

In less than a second, she clears the five-hundred foot gap, swinging her sword against Samuel's armor with the fury of a hurricane. A sound not unlike a chainsaw grinding against metal erupts in the air, making everyone nearby grit their teeth in pain.

Greeeeee!

Alarms go off inside Samuel's armor as Centurion warns him about the suit's rapid drop in hull integrity. He tries to punch Trinnic away, but she merely flickers out of existence for an instant, ducks under Samuel's clumsy attack, and stabs him in the back.

"I'll kill you, filthy fleshbag!" Trinnic screeches. "I'll melt your brains into glop!"

Above the field, Corporal Hurent fires a few rounds at Trinnic, but the Baron always escapes death by turning into a living soundwave and flickering out of existence. Every time her body hums, she accelerates to half the speed of sound, improving her reflexes and coordination to well beyond superhuman levels.

"Lieutenant!" Corporal Hurent cries. "I can't land a clean shot! She's too fast!"

Several troopers arrive on the scene. Armed with energy rifles, they begin peppering the area around Samuel with photonic projectiles, each one releasing a weak burst of energy during their flight. Trinnic cries out in pain when one of the bullets, instead of phasing through her, crashes against her skin and releases waves of radiation inside her stomach. "Aaargh!"

She flickers away from Samuel, hatred still burning in her eyes. Despite her rage, she quickly realizes the newly-arrived troopers must possess weapons capable of taking down immaterial demons, such as herself.

"Tch! Little pests! You won't get in my way!"

Trinnic desummons her sword and rushes toward the troopers. She claps her hands and fires a sound-blast at them to send them flying, then spins on her heel and flickers toward Samuel again, rearing her hand back to deliver the killing blow.

Unexpectedly, a huge figure comes stomping toward Trinnic from her left. She whips her head in that direction, only to see a heavily armored Minotaur bellowing angrily, his gauntlet glowing a fierce purple.

Yamir, the head chef for the Hiro household, swings his fist forward and opens his palm. A blast of mana fires from his hand, making Trinnic's heart jump in fright.

A royal minotaur?! But they shouldn't be-

Trinnic doesn't finish her thought. The chaotic mana strikes her left shoulder and flings her to the right, where she crashes into the ground with a muffled yelp. Her body re-enters the physical realm just in time for her head to crash against a boulder.

Crack.

Her skull bursts open from the impact, spewing her brains out and killing her instantly.

Yamir stomps his hooves into the dirt and grinds to a stop just ten feet from Samuel.

"Hmph! Lieutenant. Are you alright?"

Samuel sags to his knees. "Cough, cough... I'm alive."

"Your bio-signs indicate you have suffered severe burns to your chest and neck. Please fall back to the medical lines to receive first aid."

The Lieutenant nods. "Ugh... yeah. Feels that way. Alright... I'll be back in a bit. Oh, and uh... thanks for the assist."

Yamir bows his head respectfully. "Speak no more of this matter. I am certain you will save my hide many times in the coming days."

Without any other words, Samuel departs, leaving Yamir behind.

Immediately after the human leaves, Yamir quickly charges forward and arrives at Trinnic's corpse. He stomps her brains into goop, then blasts her body with magical energy. After horrifically ruining her corpse, he turns to look for Greedle's body, but finds nothing.

The Minotaur activates his comm system. "Attention, all troops. This is Captain Yamir speaking. Remember! If you kill any demon, but especially a Lord, a Baron, or perhaps even those of a higher rank... eradicate their corpses! Leave nothing behind! One of our enemies is Mephisto, the Duke of Mist. He can revive corpses, making us fight our most dangerous enemies twice! I need not remind you of how terrifying that fact is. Yamir out."

After Yamir closes his communication link, he snorts angrily. "How unfortunate that one of them got away. I can only assume you must be greatly enjoying this war, Mephisto. You will expand your power greatly at demonkind's expense."

He turns around and charges back into battle, summoning mana into his fists as he rejoins the other troopers in the defense of Hero City.

With humanity's Hero having inexplicably gone missing, the demons no longer hold anything back. Dozens and dozens of portals open up on Hero City's eastern border, forcing Elder Skarde to place multiple regiments of soldiers there. A large-scale battle opens up on the plains to the east, where very little cover exists to protect the demons who emerge.

With the smallest concentration of demons compared to the other three sides of Hero City, most of the soldiers summoned to the east find the battles aren't nearly as much of a life-and-death situation compared to those in the west or the south.

Even so, everyone takes their duties seriously. Waves of demon Grunts flow toward the city, with huge Brutes soaking up gunfire while the smaller and nimbler Scythers hide behind their brethren, the living walls of flesh.

Any demons who fall end up getting sucked into the ground, becoming undead fodder for Mephisto as he opens up two more gigantic Death Gates a few miles away. Higher ranked undead begin appearing, including another Frost Giant, but humanity manages to take down the most dangerous threats with teamwork and coordination.

Suddenly, from amidst the swarms of low-level demons, two blips of energetic mana appear on one of the scouts' scanners.

"We've got two Dukes incoming!" The scout yells. After a moment, he pauses. "Wait, no... they're Barons! I repeat, we have two Barons incoming! They're hiding among the low-ranked demons, but based on their bio-data... I think they're the Battle Brothers!"

Seconds after the scout makes that declaration, Zamiel and Duriel leap into the sky, riding atop a greathammer and greatsword, respectively.

"Not too many fleshies over here!" Zamiel cackles, as his magical hammer flies toward the humans' defensive line. "Let's get some revenge for earlier, little bro!"

"You said it!" Duriel replies, while expertly surfing through the air.

The human defenders quickly start to panic as they try to shoot down the incoming Barons, only for both Battle Brothers to summon a wall of weapons. They fling hundreds of swords and hammers, maces and axes, and all manner of other medieval weaponry toward the humans' defensive lines at half the speed of sound.

BOOM BOOM BOOM!

Crashes and screams erupt as fifty troopers perish to the Battle Brother's first onslaught. By the time the brothers make landfall, many troopers still haven't recovered from the initial attack.

"Juicy little fleshbags, ripe for the killing!" Zamiel yells. He grabs a warhammer off his back and runs forward, smashing it down with bone-crushing force. Every swing kills a human or a monster, ending the lives of kobolds and Terrans alike.

Likewise, Duriel's dual-wielded greatswords cleave even the sturdiest and most heavily armored Terrans in half, severing their spines and flinging their upper and lower torsos in opposite directions.

"This ain't half-bad!" Duriel laughs. "It's always fun to take a load off after a hard day of killin'!"

While the two brothers massacre the eastern defenders and their army pours through the rapidly widening gap, a terrible sensation of fear sweeps across all of the demons present. They halt in their tracks and look to the west, atop Hero City's cliff-edge.

There, posed majestically against the setting sun, the Monster King stands with both arms crossed, his conquerors' aura sweeping across the land.

"Hurgh! You evil bastards! How dare you lay a hand on my pet humans! Battle Bastards, face me if you dare! I am Kar, the last of the crocodiles! And today... I will exact my vengeance upon you!"

Kar's voice booms outward, projected via his vast mana reserves. His attention-grabbing appearance causes many of the demons to wet themselves in fear.

"Oh, skarn-droppings! It's the Monster King! He beat the crap out of Laharl, Mara, Beelzebub, Bael AND Artorias! What the hell, why is he here?!"

"We can't fight the Sphinx!" Another demon cries. "All we have are two Barons! Screw this, I'm outta here!"

Immediately, more than half of the attacking demons turn tail and flee, terrified by the appearance of the Monster King. Those who continue attacking only so so because they fear Ose more.

Meanwhile, Duriel and Zamiel merely glance in Kar's direction.

"Eh?" Zamiel grunts. "Well, well, well. If it ain't that one last croc. The one who got away!"

"Ha!" Duriel laughs. "I bet his blood'll taste better than all the others combined! After we kill him, we'll become tough as hell, bro!"

"Damn straight..." Zamiel mutters. His eyes flick to the left and right. "Of course, we ain't just gonna be facing the King. I bet you ten coins that fairy bitch'll be hangin' around nearby."

"Fine by me," Duriel grunts. He pounds his chest and roars at Kar. "Come here then, little croc! I already killed all the rest of your kind! I ain't afraid of you, not one bit!"

Kar gazes down upon the Battle Brothers from a mile away. He coils strength into his legs while grinning slyly.

"Oh, but you should, you murdering bastards. You should."

Kar leaps skyward, using his Emperor-level strength to pounce into the air like a reptilian eagle. He crosses the vast gap in a matter of seconds, while his grin only expands further.

"Hurgh! Today, you will PAY for your crimes! And I shall be your executioner!"

>!This is what a spoiler looks like! Click it to reveal the text!!

Part 266: Belial's Rage

First Day, Eighteenth Hour.

Ose, the Emperor of Infiltration, soars around Tarus II at blinding speeds, unconstrained by wind resistance, friction, or most other limitations placed upon mortal bodies. Only gravity exerts any pull on her invisible and immaterial ghost-body, preventing her from soaring to the heavens and leaving the planet behind.

She flickers from building to building inside Hero City's environmental shield, steadily growing more impatient and antsy as she scours every nook and cranny for the thing she needs most.

"Damn!" Ose shouts, after searching every inch of Jason Hiro's home, the giant building once owned by Bahamut. "It's not here, either! Where did Neil hide the devil-damned Trifrancium?!"

She pauses momentarily to hover just outside the house, scowling as she watches dozens of human commandos running around, traveling through the city to reinforce weakening positions on the border's defenses.

"I must have scoured every godforsaken building in this wretched shithole ten times! I've searched the prisons, the factories, even the stupid little huts on the city's outskirts... I've searched everywhere! Neil, you bloody bastard! Where did you hide it?!"

She paces back and forth in midair, hover-walking to make herself think more strategically.

"...It wasn't in the Core. If it was, then when Neil blew up the core, the Trifrancium would have detonated and left a planet-sized hole in the Labyrinth's center. A kilogram of Trifrancium has almost 50 gigatons of explosive yield; more than enough to irradiate the entirety of the Labyrinth and make it inhospitable to life for a million years. I cannot allow the humans to possess it any longer."

After a moment, Ose flicks her eyes upward.

"Perhaps Moonbase Kelkin? My Astral Body is constrained by this planet's gravity, so I can't travel there myself. What are the odds Neil would know that fact and plan accordingly? Bah! He could have hid the Trifrancium there for any number of reasons. If so, then it will remain out of my grasp until after I conquer these humans. I'll have to fly a ship up there afterward and take it back by force. Drat!"

She frowns. "Oh, devils. What if Neil hid the Trifrancium on one of humanity's other planets? He could have thrown it under some random rock and I'd never be able to find it. It's like looking for a needle in a hundred planet-sized haystacks! Utter insanity."

Ose's shoulders slump in defeat. "I need a drink."

The Emperor of Infiltration falls silent. She continues to hover in midair, thinking slowly and methodically about a great many things.

Jason hasn't made any moves since I last heard from him. It seems my Wordsmith-crippling device successfully bombarded him with chaotic energy. His magical conduits will need weeks to heal; more than enough time to uncover his hiding spot. Where the devil has he gone, anyway? He only showed up to the battlefield remotely, but also seems to have discovered an inexhaustible source of mana. There's no way the Jason I've observed could have continuously closed hundreds of portals for hours on end. Not even Hope could pull off such a feat.

And speaking of Hope; where has HE gone? Both Wordsmiths mysteriously vanished right as I initiated Stormbringer. Coincidence? Unlikely! They must be planning something. I can't just sit back and smile, thinking I've won this war. If I only capture one Wordsmith, I'll have to give him to Yama. That was the deal I agreed to, in exchange for the Shadow Emperor's help.

Hmph! On second thought, why should I abide by those terms? Yama's worthless Shades failed! They didn't capture Jason's daughter or wife! They died like useless, dried up bags of skarn-droppings. Forget Yama! If I only catch one Wordsmith, he'll be mine! What can Yama do anyway? He'll be going up against Hell's most intelligent Emperor and her Wordsmithing slave! He'd only end up guaranteeing his death! Yes, I like that idea much more.

Ose nods to herself. "An excellent plan. Jason will be out of commission for weeks while his magical circuits heal, leaving me plenty of time to take out humanity, capture his wife and daughter, and turn them into bargaining chips. I can interrogate Neil to uncover where he hid the Trifrancium, deliver it to the Overlords, and avert a catastrophe."

The Third Emperor smoothly flicks her eyes in all directions. She expands her senses, gathering intel from the battlefield, then turns her head to the east.

"What's that? A tremendous surge of mana? Ah, it's the Monster King. Looks like he's engaging with the Battle Brothers. Bah, they're durable. They can keep his attention for a while. Once Bael and I recover, we'll join with Artorias and Mephisto to kill that Sphinx once and for all. Oooh! Perhaps, if I can uncover the secret to his riddle magic, I might even take his powers for myself! Wouldn't that be the ultimate payoff? With a Wordsmith as my slave, and the Sphinx's body transformation powers to elevate my status, no other Emperor will dare to challenge my authority!"

Ose turns toward the west, then zips forward at hyperspeed, traveling several miles almost instantaneously. She arrives above the western front, between the Warpgate Encampment and the Horned forest, where humanity's defenses barely manage to hold the line. Every second, the humans and their monster allies battle to the death, killing ten times more demons than their forces lose as casualties, but even so, Ose's army slowly pushes forward with its unstoppable numerical advantage.

"Hehehe. It seems all is going well over- huh?"

Ose's eyes narrow to slits. She focuses her vision at the ground below her, where Artorias, the highest ranked demon among the western front's forces, engages in battle with an Emperor-level mana signature.

"What! Belial? Satan's whore?! What is she doing here?"

Ose gnashes her teeth. She flickers to a spot only a few hundred feet above the ground, where she watches in fascination as Belial punches away demons by the dozen. Every swing of her fist, capable of pulverizing mountains, blasts away Grunts and Lords like leaves in the wind. Only a few Barons manage to hold their ground, while Artorias suffers the most under Belial's attacks.

"Blast!" Ose curses. "Last time I checked, Belial had no mana left and was utterly exhausted! Why is she so full of energy now? Oh, let me guess! I'll bet Jason's last defiant act was to reinvigorate her with his devil-damned Wordsmithing! Well, isn't that just delightful?!"

It takes a few minutes of screaming and cursing the elder gods before Ose regains control of herself. She focuses her mind and turns her thoughts inward.

Belial and the Monster Royals are the only dangers left to successfully completing this operation. Unfortunately, it seems the Sphinx empowered himself at some point in the recent past, elevating his strength to that of a Duke, or perhaps even an Emperor! Not only that, but his wife possesses incredible strength, as well. Even if I assume the best, it's one Emperor and two Dukes battling one Duke and three Barons. Belial, Kar, and Blinker against Artorias, Mara, Duriel, and Zamiel. Weaker Barons won't matter in an engagement this lopsided.

Worse yet, if both Royals are indeed at Emperor-level strength, then I have no counterplay at all! Even if I show up with Bael, it will be three Emperors vs one Emperor, two Dukes, and three Barons.

Once again, Ose expands her senses, searching the battlefield for mana blips.

I don't understand. Where did Beelzebub go? Did he leave the battlefield without telling anyone? The last I heard, he left Mara and Artorias behind in the prisons, and then he disappeared off the face of the planet. Did the Wordsmith interfere? Did Jason kill him?

She shakes her head. No. Jason isn't a killer. He's too soft. It might have been Hope. Ah! That must be it! Hope probably turned himself invisible and decided to stalk the demon leaders from the shadows! That's exactly the sort of thing he'd do. I'll bet he attacked Beelzebub and... no, that still doesn't make any sense. Wordsmithing is powerful, but it's far from omnipotent. If Hope had fought Beelzebub, their encounter would have caused quite the uproar. I'd have noticed, for sure! Beelzebub must still be alive...

Ose's eyes twitch. Confusion appears on her face, along with hesitation.

I don't have enough information. I'm missing pieces. There's something off about this whole operation. Why haven't the devil-damned Wordsmiths appeared on the battlefield? Why haven't I heard a single thing from Hope? Why did Jason come here in soul-form? Could he be trapped somewhere? Did someone capture him after he left my palace? What is going on?! It's infuriating!

Her eyes turn cold.

I don't have a choice. I'll have to leave the battlefield for now. Vepar and Laharl have likely recovered, so I'll send them back to reinforce Artorias. Then, I'll return to the Blood Pits, interrogate Neil, and find out where he hid the Trifrancium.

Ose turns to the west again. She flies toward the now-open warpgate and flies through, smiling faintly.

That's right. I should focus on killing Belial first. It's unfortunate, but the Battle Brothers will have to act as sacrificial pawns. The Monster King has an old grievance with them. Therefore, he and his wife won't leave until they've killed both brothers. In the meantime, perhaps I can amass a force large enough to kill Belial. With her gone, the numbers will tilt significantly in my favor! Both Monster Royals against all of my forces? They won't stand a chance.

Ose disappears into the Labyrinth, laughing wickedly all the way.

"Hahaha! My hour will soon arrive! Total control of demonkind! My ascension to Second Emperor, and perhaps even First, once I find and eliminate the worthless bastard sitting uselessly on his fancy throne! I'll enslave the Wordsmiths and make the galaxy mine!"

"A new era of demonkind has all but arrived!"

Tarus II, Western Front.

Belial clashes with Artorias, the Duke of Steel. As the Second Emperor of demonkind, her bodily strength stands an entire tier above other Emperors, placing her at the absolute height of power any Demon will ever hope to possess.

Having assumed a terrifying form, Belial's beach-ball-sized head appears like a disfigured monster with dozens of eyes and a mouth filled with multiple rows of teeth. Her lower body is no less terrifying, sporting four arms, all of which possess five knife-shaped claws capable of turning flesh into sashimi. Her two legs are as thick as tree trunks, giving her the strength to kick her foes into the stratosphere or stomp them into meat-paste.

An apex predator, Belial not only battles the Duke of Steel, but even takes 'breaks' to eviscerate other demons nearby, ripping them limb from limb. Their horrified cries of pain disappear in an instant as the Emperor of Passion slaughters her kin wholesale.

"Belial!" Artorias shouts, after raising his arms to block one of her mountain-flattening kicks, "Argh! Stop! Have you gone insane?! You're killing your own people!"

Belial whips her freakishly large head toward him. The blood of chewed-up demons drips from her lips, while their entrails sit wedged between the gaps in her teeth. "Shut up, Artorias! You don't get to judge me! You attacked humanity, and now all who oppose me will perish! You made your bed... NOW LIE IN IT!"

Her voice, no longer soft, cute, and demure, sounds hoarse and vicious, like an eldritch monster fresh out of the deep sea. She lunges toward Artorias and headbutts him, knocking him on his ass and flinging him fifty feet away. Before Artorias can reorient himself, Belial rushes toward him and rears her leg back.

WHUMP!

Belial kicks Artorias like a football, blasting him into the air. Artorias goes flying. He spins and careens helplessly while hurtling up into the sky at unthinkable speeds.

Before he makes it a thousand yards, a portal appears in the sky before him.

Foop!

Artorias flies into the portal and exits out another one aimed at the ground. He only gets a second to register Tarus II's soil rushing at him before he crashes into the horde of demons below, instantly killing several dozen Scythers and Brutes. Artorias grinds against the dirt while riding a mushy meat-toboggan made of his now-deceased comrades. Several seconds later, he finally grinds to a stop and gasps for breath.

"Huk! Huk! Damn. Damn! Belial is... she's too much for me! She's monstrously powerful, like an unstoppable force of nature. Where is Ose at a time like this? We need her to deal with the Second Emperor!"

Artorias climbs to his feet while grimacing at the sensation of mashed demon parts squishing beneath his shoes.

After steadying himself, he turns his attention toward Belial's Emperor-level mana signature. With Barbatos's tall body, Artorias gazes over the waves of demons and undead, clearly able to pick out Belial's frenzying figure without any trouble.

"Seven Hells..." Artorias mutters. "I'm only one Duke. I can't even stall Belial on my own. All I have is my earth manipulation. Barbatos... if he were awake, he could use both our powers."

The Duke of Steel hesitates. He searches his mana conduits with his spiritual sense, only to find nothing.

"Uriel and Barbatos are both sleeping. I can tap into Uriel's magic for now. Having access to all four elements, plus light and dark manipulation, that would allow me to fight somewhat evenly with Belial. However, if I do that, there's a chance I might awaken Uriel. I cannot allow her to emerge!"

Grunts and Lords sweep around Artorias's motionless figure, avoiding bumping into him instinctively due to his Duke-level mana signature. He, in turn, ignores the flood of comrades surrounding him and grits his teeth.

"I cannot resist Uriel on my own. Only by combining my soul with Barbatos's can we prevent her from controlling us. In turn, I can only manipulate my brother's body when he and Uriel both fall dormant. Tch. If only I could tear the Archangel's soul out, my brother and I would become the strongest Duke in all the seven Hells, even beyond Bael. The power of two demons unified in one body would make us unstoppable among our peers."

Artorias shakes his head. "But even if that were the case... we still wouldn't match up to the Second Emperor. She isn't only an Emperor, but the strongest of our species. Only Satan himself could defeat her in battle, and that's only assuming a theoretical matchup."

The Duke of Steel crouches down to build up strength in his legs. He aims his gaze in Belial's direction and sighs.

If I can't beat her... I'll have to convince her to stop fighting!

A moment later, Artorias jumps skyward. His superior Duke strength allows him to jump half a mile with ease, leaping over the heads of all the grunts beneath him while gazing fixedly at Belial's rampaging form.

The Second Emperor roars like a mad lion, then pounces at a group of Burner demons. They panic and throw fireballs at her, but she ignores their pitiful attacks as if they were gnats timidly bumping against her nose. She opens her mouth and bites down, chomping three of the Burners in half, before swinging out her bladed arms to eviscerate those who remain.

Whump!

Artorias stomps into the dirt behind Belial and slides to a stop. He assumes a defensive position and shouts. "Belial! Stop fighting! We can talk about this! I understand that you're angry, but-"

"SHUT UP!!" Belial roars. She spins around to face Artorias with a crazed look in her eyes. "I ALREADY BROKE A SOLEMN VOW! NOW, I'LL BREAK YOU!"

Artorias sucks in a quick breath before Belial lunges at him. "Oh, spawn of a..."

He doesn't even see Belial's attack coming. She skitters along the ground like a lizard, clearing the short gap with lightning speed, then jumps into the air.

BOOM!

Belial's muscular legs stomp Artorias into the dirt, crushing the Duke with brute force. In one instant, he finds himself crouched and ready for anything, but in the next, the world turns upside down while stars dance in his eyes.

Artorias's helmet strikes a rock, pulverizing it into earthen powder. Belial pauses for a split second to spread out her bladed-fingers, then stabs them toward the Duke's chest.

Tink-tink-tink-CLANG!

Most of Belial's makeshift knives bend when they strike Artorias's sturdy demonstone armor, but a few find their way between the gaps in his armor and impale his vital organs.

"Argh!" Artorias shouts. He tries to push Belial away, but his strength proves wildly inferior to hers.

"It's too bad, Artorias!" Belial shouts. "I never disliked Barbatos! He wouldn't have chosen to come here! But you did! Now, you both will die for that decision, along with Uriel, too! At least I can finally give her the burial she deserves!"

"Wait, Belial! Stop! You're not a killer!" Artorias yells. "This isn't like you!"

A twisted grin plays across Belial's monstrous face. "I didn't choose this path, Artorias. You forced it on me. OSE forced it on me!"

Belial lifts her foot up.

BOOM!!

It crashes upon Artorias's chest, smashing him into a shallow crater in the dirt.

Boom! Boom! Boom!

Again and again, Belial stomps Artorias, overpowering him to the point he can't even offer even the feeblest resistance. His limbs hang off to the side uselessly, while he gasps for breath.

After bringing her heel down upon Artorias ten times, Belial hesitates. She takes a step back and scowls, the expression looking even more hideous upon her shapeshifted face.

"Barbatos saved Phoebe's life once. Out of respect for your little brother, I'll return the favor. Cross me again, and you will not be so lucky."

Artorias coughs. "Kuhuk... Ph-Phoebe? The... the Hero's wife?"

"That's right. I'm sure you remember it. Even if you don't, I couldn't care less. I'm only going to give you one warning, Artorias. STAY OUT OF MY WAY!"

Without another word, Belial departs. She jumps out of the six-foot-deep crater and disappears from Artorias's view, leaving him to cough out several wads of blood.

"Kuh! Kuh! Shit, I... oh, devils... she buh-... broke all my ribs..."

Suddenly, a demon flickers into existence inside the crater. Mara, the Baron of Games, dissipates a veil of invisibility surrounding her body and kneels beside Artorias to examine his condition.

"Stupid bastard," Mara mutters. "Do you have a death wish? Let Belial rampage for a while! So what if she kills a bunch of Grunts and Lords? We have trillions more lined up to die! You're lucky she spared you."

Artorias groans. "You... you were here... the whole time?"

"Of course I was. Unlike you, I'm not stupid enough to fight Belial directly. I just tried to slow her down from a distance, so as to not draw attention to myself. I stayed invisible, out of her line of sight. Like I said, you're a stupid bastard."

Mara motions with her hands. She casts a spell, summoning a magical card from her spiritual deck.

"...Wrong one. Sorry, give me a sec. I'll fix you up. I just need to draw the right card."

Artorias lays motionless, listening to the screams of other demons outside his crater. Many times, their cries of alarm instantly fall silent as Belial cuts them down.

"You..." Artorias coughs. "Did you... ever meet Satan?"

"Stop talking," Mara mutters. "It won't help your condition. And no, I didn't. He died before my broodmother whelped me."

Artorias's expression remains hidden beneath his helmet. Only a faint dimming of his glowing red eyes reveal the pain on his face.

"Belial... was the nicest... of all of us. Satan conquered. He killed. He slaughtered... but she never hated him. She always stood by his side... yet she also never partook in his violence."

Mara summons another card, then frowns. "Blast. Another dud. Thanks for the history lesson, but I'm trying to concentrate."

Artorias ignores her. "Were we wrong? We turned Belial... into a killer. Cough, cough. Somehow, all of this feels... so evil."

"Our enemies are fleshbags," Mara replies, her voice monotone. "They're inferior to demons. We will kill them, because that is our right. The weak should fear the strong."

She motions with her hands again to summon another card. When it appears, she breathes a sigh of relief. "Oh, thank the devils. Temporal Cricket, Evoke!"

A flash of golden light ignites in Mara's hands. It leaps upward, then falls down upon Artorias's body and envelops him in golden light.

Immediately, Artorias regenerates from all of the injuries he sustained. His ribs pop back into place, his concussion disappears, and all his lost blood flows back into his veins.

Ten seconds later, the golden light disappears, allowing Artorias to stand up. He stares at Mara incredulously.

"Your healing magic... it's incredible! That was just as potent as any spell Belial has ever cast!"

Mara rolls her eyes. "It wasn't healing magic. I merely reversed the flow of time on your body, returning it to a state from several minutes ago. It would have been useless if the injuries were more than ten or so minutes old."

"Oh," Artorias mutters. He glances toward the top of the crater and sighs. "Well, I owe you my thanks. And now, I must return."

Mara's expression falls. "Are you kidding me?! You're going to go back and fight Belial again?! You almost died! Next time, she'll kill you for sure!"

Artorias lowers his head to stare at Mara.

"Yes, that is true. However, a friend recently gave me an idea. Perhaps, instead of fighting Belial head-on, I should try slowing her down from a distance. I will travel underground and use my earth manipulation to hamper Belial's killing speed, at least until Ose, Bael, and the other reinforcements appear."

Mara sighs in relief. "Oh! Well, great, yes. Do that. Please. You're not Beelzebub; I'd hate to lose my second favorite Duke."

Artorias chuckles. "And the first is...?"

"Bael."

"Of course."

The Duke of Steel shakes his head and laughs. A moment later, he kicks the ground and sucks into the dirt, disappearing into the planet's bowels.

Mara taps her foot, then draws a card.

"Dammit. Another dud. Oh, well. The next one will be what I need, for sure! I have the heart of the cards!"

>!This is what a spoiler looks like! Click it to reveal the text!!

Part 267: Brightest Cave, Darkest Dawn

A silent assassin creeps through the Labyrinth's hallways. Decked out in a stealth-class exosuit, Amelia Greyheart, the Black Queen, slithers through the darkness like a shadowy snake searching for prey.

Having spent the better part of an entire day scouring the Labyrinth, Amelia's movements appear much twitchier and alert than when she first started. Many times, she ducks into doorways or narrow crevasses in the walls to hide while troops of demons and monsters pass her by. Their frenetic energy reaches her ears, along with the words they speak.

"That's what I'm sayin'," A random Demon Lord declares to a small group of Grunts as they pass Amelia's invisible form. "It's been a whole day and we still ain't killed them fleshbags! That Ose's a typical woman, always takin' her damn time, makin us lose lives. We coulda swarmed them fleshies by now and overrun 'em like crazy, but nooo! I bet she likes watching us die!"

"Yeah, you said it, boss," His Scyther underling replies, clanging his two blade-arms together. "Pah! Some Emperor she is! If Big Boss Deebs were still in charge, those humans woulda been toast by now!"

The demons fade into the distance, continuing to rant and rave as they leave. Amelia steps out of the darkness and looks around, then growls under her breath.

"I don't get it. Why would Jason disappear the same day the demons decide to attack? Nobody's seen him on Maiura, nor Tarus II, nor anywhere else! How utterly frustrating."

Inside Amelia's Spectre exosuit, Centurion pipes up. "PILOT AMELIA GREYHEART, I HAVE DETECTED ANOTHER SEVENTEEN DEMONIC ENTITIES APPROACHING YOUR POSITION."

She frowns. "Again? The locals have been patrolling more frequently, lately."

Amelia glances upward. Using a chip that mentally links her brain to her exosuit, she manipulates the four metallic tendrils on the Spectre's back to aim at the ceiling. They turn into climbing spikes, zip forward, and impale the roof, yanking her into the air.

Like a half-human, half-spider hybrid, Amelia crawls along the ceiling, only slowing down once the group of demons Centurion pointed out round the hallway up ahead. She stops moving and reactivates her invisibility, melting into the darkness and becoming one with the Labyrinth.

Twenty seconds later, the group passes her. She starts to drop to the floor, only to pause when she sees another demon, a lone Lord, slowly ambling down the corridor. Dressed in a tacky yellow vest, he appears out of place compared to the demons from half a minute before. Amelia freezes in place and watches silently, like a predator, as he approaches her position.

The Lord yawns several times. His eyes droop, and he mutters words under his breath, which the Spectre's sensors easily pick up.

"...such a drag. Everyone's all excited 'cuz they get to kill some fleshies. Seven Hells. What a waste of time. Just send Bael in, he'll take care of it. Oh, but Skopl, that won't help our morale. Give it a rest. I'd so much rather be sleeping right now than chasing after Heroes and eating bullets for breakfast. Why should I have to die just because some Emperor bitch thinks that's my purpose?"

Skopl, the demon below Amelia, continues to mutter to himself, oblivious to his surroundings. Amelia glances at her HUD to make sure there aren't any other demons around, then grins evilly.

"Jackpot."

Like a silent assassin, she drops from the ceiling, decloaking with only enough time for Skopl to register something falling toward him.

Thump!

Amelia tackles Skopl to the floor, clamps a hand over his mouth, then turns the four tendrils on her back into makeshift torture spears. Before Skopl can react, they dart forward and stab both of his hands and feet, impaling him to the floor so that he can't resist.

Skopl's eyes bolt open. Fear rushes into his brain. "Hmmmrrgh! Mrrrrm!!"

He tries to scream for help, but Amelia's iron-grip muffles his voice excellently. With her free hand, Amelia pulls out a pair of small, metal cubes, each one a little bigger than a set of playing dice, and tosses one to her right and one to her left. The cubes silently activate, creating an invisible sound-dampening field between their positions.

Satisfied, Amelia removes her hand, allowing Skopl to howl pain-filled words of bloody murder. "Aaargh! F-fleshbag! Stop! Get off me, you evil bastard! I'll kill you! I'll fucking kill you! Aaaah!"

Amelia deactivates her helmet, allowing the nanites to flow away and reveal her face. Seeing a beautiful human woman instead of a man does nothing to tone down Skopl's ranting.

"My hands! You stabbed my hands, auugh! And my feet, why my feet?! You crazy, lunatic bitch!"

Smiling prettily, Amelia crouches atop Skopl's stomach and cocks her head. "You're a loud one, little demon. Yell all you want; nobody will hear you. I'm surprised you haven't recognized me yet, considering my infamy."

"Why in the Seven Hells would I give a shit who you are, you filthy fleshbag?!" Skopl bellows. "I'm the Lord of Luck! I'm a big shot among the other Lords! If you kill me, they'll rip your clothes off, turn you into a fucktoy, and feed you to the Hellhounds!"

Amelia nods. "Mmm. Yes. Nice to meet you, Skopl, Lord of Luck. It's a pleasure to make your acquaintance. My name is Amelia Greyheart. I am the Black Queen."

"Oh, a queen, huh?" Skopl sputters. "That's quite the fancy title, your highness! What, do you think I'll bow and beg for mercy just because you give yourself a fancy name like-like... like... the Black... Queen?"

Skopl's enraged words suddenly slow to a stop. It takes him a moment to filter out the hatred in his mind, but when he does, he blinks his eyes and stares at Amelia with a fresh look of horror.

"B-Black Queen? No... no that's impossible! You died! Diablo killed you six years ago! Everyone confirmed your death! How... how can you still be..."

"Hah..." Amelia laughs emotionlessly. "It involved magic. I don't have to explain anything to the likes of you. Now listen closely, little Lord. You may think you're hot stuff in your circles, but in front of me, you're not even a gnat on the wall. I want information, and you're going to give it to me, or I'll kill you without hesitation."

All the blood drains from Skopl's face. "B-but... you'll kill me anyway... even if I tell you what you want to know..."

Amelia glances up at the ceiling thoughtfully, then back to Skopl. "Fair point. Indeed, I will. However, your death can take place over the course of several long, agonizing hours, which will then follow with my devouring of your soul and an eternal agony for all eternity, or, you can tell me what I want to know and I'll make your death quick and painless. How about it? Doesn't that sound fair?"

Skopl's body begins to tremble. "P-please... please don't kill me... I'm just a Lord... I'm nobody important! You don't have to kill me to get any answers, okay? You're a b-beautiful human woman... I'm sure we can work something out."

A flash of insight appears in Skopl's eyes. "Ah... ah! That's- I could be your slave! Yes, everyone needs a good slave, don't they? I'll pledge myself to you for, um, a thousand years! How about that? Please! Please don't kill me!"

Tears well up in his eyes, but with his hands impaled, he can't wipe them away.

Amelia purses her lips. "Hmm... a slave for one thousand years. Well, if you can give me the information I need, I suppose I can settle for simple enslavement. You said you were the Lord of Luck, didn't you? This might be your lucky day, and mine too! We can both greatly improve our lives!"

Skopl nods. "Y-yes! Yes! I'll do anything you ask! Anything at all, lady Greyheart! Just s-say the word!"

Apparently pleased with herself, Amelia starts winding her hair around her finger. "Well, okay then. So! First question. What news have you heard about the Wordsmith, Jason Hiro?"

The Lord of Luck pauses for half a second before smiling excitedly. "The Wordsmith? Oh, yes! I just heard something not that long ago! He appeared on, um, on Tarus II! Well, I mean, he didn't exactly appear there, but he used his word magic to heal up a bunch of human troops from somewhere else. He hasn't killed any demons, but he, uh, he helped the humans a bunch!"

Amelia frowns. "Are you telling me that no demons witnessed Jason appearing on Tarus II?"

"Y-yes, Lady Greyheart," Skopl says smiling as sincerely as he can manage. "Nobody saw his appearance, but the head Warper, Ying-Ying, confirmed he had used his magic on the planet! Everyone knows it; the news is spreading like wildfire!"

"What else have you heard?" Amelia asks, her expression turning colder by the second. "About Jason Hiro, I mean. Has there been any other news?"

"N-not that I know..." Skopl replies, his smile fading as he notices the frigidity on her face. "B-but I have a bunch of contacts! I could, um, ask around for you! Anything to please my glorious, beautiful, and highly intelligent master!"

"...You're good at groveling," Amelia mutters. "But useless for information. I'll have to rate your services a one out of ten."

"Wait!" Skopl yells. "Ask me anything else! Maybe I can offer other information! I know all sorts of demons!"

"I only wanted to know about Jason Hiro," Amelia says, an edge of finality in her tone. She plucks a dagger from her waist belt and activates a button on its side, making it hum to life with energy. "And you told me basically nothing."

"No... no, please!" Skopl yells, his voice turning hoarse. He watches helplessly as Amelia raises the dagger over his head. "Please don't kill me! I'm a good demon! I've never hurt a fleshbag in all my life!"

Amelia scrunches up her face in annoyance. "Now there's a lie if I've ever heard one."

Skopl tugs so hard against the tendrils impaling his palms that he nearly rips his hands free. Sadly, he fails. Amelia plunges the knife into his face, allowing him one quick scream before his voice cuts off and his body goes still.

Blood spurts from the gaping wound between Skopl's eyes, where his nose once belonged. Amelia stares at him emotionlessly, without the slightest sympathy.

"There's no such thing as a good demon; only a dead one."

She yanks the blade out of Skopl's face, causing even more blood to gush forth. After standing up, Amelia retracts her Spectre's tendrils, then taps a button on her suit to unleash a wave of fire upon Skopl's body, scorching him with three-thousand degree flames. In less than twenty seconds, she reduces his corpse to ash, leaving little evidence behind of her murder.

Several seconds of silence follow. Amelia retrieves the sound-dampening cubes, reactivates her helmet to cover her head, and sighs.

"Jason. Did I miss him? When the heck did he return to Tarus II? Perhaps I should go back and try to find him."

She nudges Skopl's ashes with her feet, scattering the half-foot pile across the Labyrinth's floor.

"Well, I don't have any other leads. I've killed a dozen Lords and ten times as many Grunts. That was the first I've heard about Jason's whereabouts. Guess I've no other choice."

Amelia turns around to head back in the direction of the Labyrinth Core. The moment she completes her heel-turn, she jumps in fright and quickly retreats several steps.

Behind her, a female Demon Lord with pale white skin, blood-red eyes, and jet black hair stands in the hallway only twenty feet away, her hands folded in front of her waist.

"Ah! Why hello there, Black Queen. It is my plee-asure to meet you."

Amelia's heart races, not from fear, but from the demoness's unexpected ability to evade Centurion's sensors. "Y-you! Who are you? How did you sneak up on me?"

The pale-skinned demoness wears a long, black cloak with a gorgeous red and white ensemble outfit underneath. She smiles from ear to ear, allowing two fangs to poke out of her lips.

"Ah, ah, ah. Who am I? I am surprised that you do not know! My name is Dawn, and I am the Lord of Caves. I serve Mistress Fenrir, Emperor of the Hell of Blood! As for how I made my way behind your back; that is one of my special, precious little talents, you see?"

After blinking several times, Amelia regains her calm. "The Hell of Blood? I'm not familiar with that sector."

"That is to be ex-pected," Dawn replies, her words and intonation somewhat slow, haughty, and deliberate. "After all, the infam-ous Jeanne D'Arc sealed you in a statue right at the end of the Energy Wars. You did not witness the fracturing of Earth's Seven Hells, and thus, the unification effort which occurred after the Overlords destroyed our homeworld. So sad! Such tragedy! But that is life, you know?"

Amelia bristles visibly. "Hey. Don't go talking about Joan around me, not unless you want an ass-kicking."

Dawn's smile fades. "So touchy. Well, I have not come to exchange pleasantries. I came to check up on you and see if you needed anything. It seems that you have been sear-ching all day, yet you have not come any closer to reaching your goal. My mistress is sad. She cries for you. She wishes to express her sincer-ity by giving you that which you seek."

The Lord of Caves unclasps her hands and spreads out her arms in a welcoming gesture. "So, what is it that you seek, little lost Queen?"

"I'm not lost," Amelia snaps. "I am feeling pretty pissed, though. How long have you been following me?"

"Me? Not long at all," Dawn replies. "My mistress has watched you from a distance all day, though. Did you not realize that eliminating a dozen Lords would draw attention to yourself? Your hyuu-man technology does not protect you from magical investigations, silly girl. Fenrir is the master of the night. Where there is darkness, her eyes will always see."

"Sounds like your Emperor is pretty powerful..." Amelia mutters. "Why hasn't she attacked me, then? Why watch from a distance?"

"Why not?" Dawn asks, shrugging her shoulders nonchalantly. She slowly ambles toward Amelia without a care in the world. "We have no quarrel with you. After all, it was that wretched Joan who ambushed and entrapped you, not us. It was Satan who slew your best friend, not us."

Amelia's eyes erupt with rage. "You! Don't... don't you dare talk about Levvy!!"

She lunges toward the Lord of Caves, only for Dawn to flick her fingers, explode into a cloud of chittering bats, and spread throughout the corridor. Amelia's anger goes unanswered as she grabs nothing but the air.

A few seconds later, the chittering bats reform behind Amelia, transforming into Dawn's figure. "Ah, ah, ah. There is no need for violence, my dar-ling! As I said, the Hell of Blood had nothing to do with your imprisonment or any of the things that you have lost! There is no need to direct your anger toward me."

"I don't care who you are..." Amelia growls, turning to face Dawn. "Never bring up my friend in front of me!"

Dawn hesitates for a moment. She gazes at Amelia with pitying eyes, then shakes her head.

"So much sadness. So much sorrow. I can feel your pain, my poor, wilted flower. You lost him because of Satan's treach-ery; his underhandedness. The Devil used all of his tricks to slay the Last Dragon, and in doing so, he tore out your heart. Truly, you have my deepest sym-pathies."

"I... I don't want your pity..." Amelia hisses. "Stop with all this nonsense. Just tell me why you've come."

Dawn begins walking toward Amelia with the expression of a doting mother. "Precious little dear. You have once again lost someone close to you; your beloved Wordsmith. Each time you cry out his name after killing a Lord, your pain echoes throughout the Labyrinth. You have lost many friends during the course of your life. As a result, you have grown to hate yourself. You hate your inability to protect them; to shield them from harm."

Amelia flinches. "Quit acting like you know me. We've never even met before."

"No, we have not..." Dawn acknowledges. She slows to a stop only an arm's length from Amelia while gazing at her lovingly. "But many demons admire you, you know? During your imprisonment, we often made pilgrimages to your statue to gaze upon the Black Witch, the one known as Satan-slayer. Satan is my Mistress's enemy, dar-ling. Thus, he is my enemy, too. As I said when I first arrived, I am not here to hurt you. I only wish to assist you in whatever way that I may."

Despite Dawn's gentle tone, Amelia's gaze still harbors many misgivings. Still, seeing Dawn's non-aggressive stance and her clearly-stated position, Amelia can't help but lower her guard, even if only a little. She deactivates her helmet, allowing her to speak to Dawn face-to-face.

"I... I need to find Jason."

"The Wordsmith, yes," Dawn replies, nodding with a smile. "You wish to know where he is. But how curious! All this time, you have searched for Jason Hiro. Why do you not look for Hope?"

"Hope?" Amelia asks. "I... don't follow."

Dawn pauses. Her usual smile cracks, causing a flash of confusion to bubble to the surface.

"Yes. Hope Hiro! The second Wordsmith. You came here not long after his disappearance. My mistress assumed you were sear-ching for him, all this time. Was she wrong?"

"I think so?" Amelia replies, sounding just as confused. "Who is Hope? How can there be two Wordsmiths? I thought... I mean, isn't there only Jason?"

Both women fall silent for several seconds. Dawn gazes at Amelia's face, attempting to search for clues. Gears turn in her head as she tries to see if Amelia is messing with her.

"...No. There are two Wordsmiths. There is Jason Hiro, the original Wordsmith. Then, using his Wordsmithing, he created a clone of himself, who he named Hope."

Amelia's heart skips a beat. Her blood runs cold at this shocking revelation. "No... you must be lying! Why would there be two Jasons? That doesn't make any sense. He would have told me."

Dawn brushes a strand of long, white hair out of her eyes. "I speak no lies, Black Queen. Both Wordsmiths are well-known by all of demonkind. I don't know why you aren't aware of Hope's existence, but-"

"When did Jason clone himself?" Amelia asks, interrupting Dawn.

"When? About six years ago," Dawn replies.

Amelia stares at Dawn for a moment before lowering her eyes. "Six years ago... that's the same time as when..."

Despite trailing off, Amelia's words linger in the air, making Dawn wiggle her nose. "You are much more in-teresting than I expected, precious Queen. Your sudden reappearance caught my mistress's attention, and now that I stand next to you, I cannot help but no-tice you lack even a trace of magical energy!"

Water drips from the Labyrinth's ceiling, hitting the floor some distance away with a plop. Amelia narrows her eyes as she gazes at Dawn with caution.

"Jason saved my life only seconds before the supernova struck. As a result, I lost much of my magical energy. However, once I get back around to eating a few demons, you'll sense my magic just fine."

The threat contained within Amelia's words slips in one of Dawn's ears and right out the other. She steps forward and coils herself around Amelia's right arm while flashing a seductive smile. "Are you trying to scare me? Ahaha! I love when a woh-man gets aggressive. To me, such words merely heighten my appreciation for the feminine form."

Amelia tries to escape Dawn's grasp, but the Demoness simply pulls herself closer, pressing herself against the human's side.

"I have a lover already!" Amelia snaps, tugging even harder. "And he's in danger. Get off me!"

"Ahaha, you are so cute when you protest!" Dawn laughs, releasing Amelia's arm. She backs away from the human while giggling into her hand. "Now then, about that Wordsmith! Since you are probably looking for Hope, I can tell you where to find him! He is not far from here! My mistress saw what happened to him, and she felt much sorrow for the pain he experienced."

"Pain?" Amelia asks. "What do you mean? Did something happen to him? Is he hurt?!"

"Yes!" Dawn says, nodding quickly. "He got in a big fight with a powerful Demon Emperor. The Emperor defeated him easily, as my mistress expected. Then, the Emperor drag-ged Hope away. The last we saw of him, he was beaten and unconscious."

The Demoness talks about Hope's situation in a matter-of-fact way, not caring in the slightest about whatever fate may have befallen the Wordsmith. Amelia, on the other hand, nearly jumps out of her skin at the news.

"No! W-Why didn't your Mistress save him, if she is an Emperor herself?! He might still be alive! Please take me to him!"

"Hm?" Dawn grunts. "Why didn't my mistress save him? Oh, silly Queen. She would not interfere in another Emperor's business so casually."

The demoness's smile fades away. In its place, a deathly solemn expression appears.

"Among my species, none of us are equal, Amelia Greyheart. That holds true for Grunts, Lords, Barons, Dukes, and Emperors, alike. The demon who took Hope is among the most powerful and most dangerous of all the Emperors in the Labyrinth. My mistress knows better than to involve herself in his dealings. We all keep our dis-tance."

Sensing the change in atmosphere, Amelia grits her teeth and nods. "I... I see. Who was it, then? Can you at least tell me?"

"I can..." Dawn mutters. "But you won't like the answer. The demon who took Hope was none other than Gressil... the Hidden Emperor of Chaos."

Amelia blinks twice. "Gressil? The prison-master?"

"That's right. Few even know that Gressil has ascended to the rank of Emperor. My mistress only deduced as much by observing his battle with the Wordsmith from a distance. Had she not witnessed his strength herself, she would never have known he had reached such heights. Few pay Gressil any mind, for he lurks within the Labyrinth's most wretched region, rarely leaving, rarely speaking."

Dawn continues. "Right now, Ose, leader of the Hell of Dam-nation, is in a race to capture both Wordsmiths. She has already promised one of them to Yama, Emperor of the Hell of Cor-ruption. If she cannot capture both, her plans to unify the Seven Hells will fail... and that is the second reason my mistress made no effort to rescue Hope."

"The Seven Hells...?" Amelia asks. "Wait, that isn't just a demonic saying? Are there really seven Labyrinths? Seven Hells?"

"Haha... something like that," Dawn answers. She begins pacing back and forth, deliberately pausing to kick Skopl's ashes as she passes them by. "There are seven Hells, but only one Labyrinth. Individually, they are known as the Hells of Damnation, Lust, Blood, Punishment, Calamity, Isolation, and Corruption. I am not surprised you haven't heard of them. Even when the Seven Hells resided upon Earth, few knew where to find their entrances."

She pauses her pacing to sigh. "Sadly, after Earth's fall, only the Hell of Damnation had a foundation upon which it could stand. Satan built the Labyrinth in secret, and as such, when our world disappeared, he for-ced the other Emperors to bow to him in exchange for living within his Hell's confines. Now, the remnants of the other six Hells lay scattered about on various worlds given to us by our betters. We have our Emperors, our Dukes, and our other royal demons... but we no longer par-take in power squabbles involving the First Hell."

"Wow..." Amelia mutters, her eyes fogging over. "That... that explains so much. I remember, back when Earth was around, I heard of many powerful Emperors, but I always wondered what happened to them. Now I know. How many Emperors still remain?"

Dawn shrugs. "I am just a messenger for the mistress. I do not possess any knowledge of the other Hells' inner workings."

Amelia gestures to Dawn's fangs. "And... you said you were from the Hell of Blood... so does that make you a vampire? One of Dracula's thralls?"

"Ah, ah, ah!" Dawn laughs, exposing her teeth. "A vampiress am I, yes! But Dracula? Long dead. He turned his back on the angels to forge a union between humanity and the demons! He founded the Hell of Blood, but sadly, his spirit no longer exists in the mortal realm. Only his legacy lives on in the hearts and minds of all my vampire-kin."

Amelia crosses her arms. "I saw him once."

"Who? Dracula?" Dawn asks. Her eyes light up with excitement. "You met our founder?!"

"No. I watched him from a distance," Amelia clarifies. "I've run into a lot of Heroes in my life. Couldn't help myself. Their mana signatures were always unique and seemed to call out to me. I could sense them from tens of miles away, assuming they didn't suppress their power. Dracula was one such Hero. I sensed something was different about him and observed him for a few days, but eventually I became bored and left."

"Wow, I'm still envious!" Dawn giggles. She runs over and hugs Amelia's arm again, leaning her head against Amelia's shoulder. "You should tell me all about him while we head over to find your boyfriend!"

Amelia starts to pull her arm away, but ends up relenting. "Fine. We just have to go to Hell's prison, right? That's not far from here."

"Yes, yes, not far at all," Dawn answers, smiling giddily. "Come with me. I shall show you the way!"

The human stares at her unexpected new vampiress 'friend' with suspicion. However, given the lack of hostility on Dawn's face, she decides to play along.

If Dawn really does have an Emperor backing her, Amelia thinks, then there's no point fighting her. On the other hand, if she doesn't, I can take her out easily, or at least escape. My suit has plenty of tricks I've yet to employ.

The Black Queen smiles politely. "Very well. I'll take you up on that offer. And while we walk, perhaps you can fill me in on the gaps in my memory...?"

>!This is what a spoiler looks like! Click it to reveal the text!!

Part 268: Kar's Vengeance

Tarus II, to the west of Hero City. Second day, first hour.

Darkness covers the land. With the clock having struck one hour past midnight, the night-time gloom spreads out in all directions, illuminated only by red-hot bullets whizzing through the air, magical fireballs exploding against metallic armor, or the spotlights of Phoebe's mechanized war machines.

Half of the Horned Forest blazes uncontrollably, lit aflame a few hours before by unscrupulous Burner Grunts. From the forest's confines, countless huge and horrifying creatures flee, some enraged, others terrified. A fifteen-foot-tall Buffalo-looking animal with two gigantic horns and a mouthful of knife-shaped teeth charges toward humanity's embattlements. Before the Troopers can gun it down, it stomps ten men and women to death, killing them mercilessly. Eventually, a nearby mechanoid whirls around, fires twice into the creature's skull, and puts it down for good.

Phoebe Hiro leans heavily against a furred Felaris soldier, a female of her kind. The cat-like biped helps ease Phoebe into a chair on the backlines, allowing the exhausted Commander to slump in its embrace and breathe heavily.

"Mraww! Are you okay, Miss Hiro? You need to sleep! You've been awake for over twenty-four hours!"

Phoebe closes her eyes. She swallows several breaths while listening to the distant screams of her dying friends and comrades.

"The... the demons... they're coming faster than ever... cough. I can't sleep now. They need me."

"They need a leader who can think properly," The Felaris lady says. "You're much too tired for that!"

It takes the Hero's Wife several seconds to reply. She forces her eyes open for a moment before they close again of their own volition. "No... I can't sleep. The, the uh... the injector. Give me the injector."

"The injector? What injector? I don't understand..." The Felaris female meows.

"It's in that toolkit over there," Phoebe explains, vaguely gesticulating in the direction of several black chests. "The adrenaline injector. You know what a hypodermic needle is, right, Sandy?"

Sandy, the Felaris, nods. "Yes! Big, long, pointy needle. But miss Hiro, this isn't good for you! If you give yourself adrenaline, you'll only exhaust your body further."

"Haha..." Phoebe laughs, her voice strained. "I'd rather end up in a coma than dead. My husband can always Wordsmith me back to optimal condition, as can Belial's magic."

"Well... if you insist..." Sandy meows. She walks over to the metal chests, pops them open, and starts rifling around inside. It only takes her a minute to locate a small syringe filled with golden liquid, tucked inside a transparent box. She pulls it out and extracts the syringe, then walks over to Phoebe. "Mraww! Here is the needle. Be careful! Don't hurt yourself with it."

Phoebe takes the needle and sighs. "Thanks. This is, without a doubt... the worst part."

After sucking in a deep breath, Phoebe grits her teeth and plunges the needle into her heart, then squeezes the fluid into her body.

"Aaaaargh! Ahhh! Goddamned, shit-licking, cow-balls!"

Tears flow freely from Phoebe's eyes as her special solution rips through her blood vessels and all throughout her cardiovascular system. She quickly pulls the needle out and throws it aside, then jumps to her feet and kneels forward.

"Huuack! Huurk!"

She vomits onto the grass several times from the sheer shock of so much energy traveling within her veins. Sandy watches nervously, clasping her paws together as she tries to assess Phoebe's health.

"M-miss Hiro? Are you okay? Here, have some water!"

She grabs a nearby bottle of cold water and holds it out. Phoebe snatches it away, tilts her head back, and dumps half of the bottle into her mouth, while the rest washes across her face and spills onto her chest.

"Kuhak! Oh, heavens... that feeling is one I'll never enjoy..."

After rinsing the puke out of her mouth, Phoebe stands up straight, a forced alertness in her gaze. She blinks several times and shakes her head ferociously.

"Okay. Okay! I'm awake. Thank you, Sandy. You helped me a lot."

The Felaris woman nods. "Anything to help, miss Hiro. I'm just sorry I can't help on the frontlines. I'm only a relief worker..."

"It takes all types of personnel to fight a war," Phoebe replies. "Your work here is invaluable. I'm going to head back to the frontlines, now."

"Okay! Stay safe, miss Hiro."

As Sandy waves goodbye, Phoebe stumbles away. Her stomach burns with an electrical pain, forcing her eyes open in spite of the exhaustion wracking her brain.

"I'm only buying myself another hour or two..." Phoebe mutters. "My next crash will be way worse."

She heads in the direction of a communication and armory depot, one of the many mobile platforms built to service the battlefield in the long-term. A giant square surface with dozens of boxes of weapons, ammo, and supplies rests atop a drivable vehicle, allowing it to move backward or forward as the battle-lines shift.

Phoebe climbs onto the moving platform and walks over to a group of officers clustered together. The moment they spot their Commander, they spin on their heels and salute. "Commander Hiro on deck!"

The vomit and water splashed all over Phoebe's face doesn't bother her officers in the slightest. A single glance at her baggy eyes tells them that despite getting a short sleep-break earlier themselves, their Commander has taken no rest whatsoever, and worked far harder than all of them combined.

"Status update." Phoebe mutters.

"Commander," A nearby male officer says. "We're losing ground more quickly now that night has fallen. Already, we've pulled the frontlines back another hundred and fifty feet in the past hour. The demons have begun mixing shadow-walkers into their army, allowing them to take out our troopers with carefully placed ambushes."

A female officer nods. "On the southern front, Lieutenant Samuel has managed to gain ground on the demonic hordes. After Captain Yamir reinforced him mid-day, they started working together to set up reinforced walls and battlements as per your specification."

"On the Northern Front, we've successfully launched five of the ten Covenant ships. We've sent 100,000 citizens offworld, and are loading the second group now," the First Officer continues. He holds out a datapad with several numbers and diagrams. "Here are the manifests, Commander."

"I don't need to see them," Phoebe says, ignoring the man's outstretched hand. "Elder Skarde knows what he's doing. What about the Eastern Front? Has Kar managed to kill both Battle Brothers yet?"

"I'm afraid not, Commander," The female officer says. "Their battle still rages. Fortunately, because of how intense the fighting has become, it's significantly cut our losses on that side. Any demons who try to bypass King Kar's battle end up dead. Apparently, Kar has declared that anyone who interferes before his battle finishes will die. Our troops have decided to standby and wait."

"That is good news," Phoebe says, forcing a smile. "Fewer casualties are always worth praising. What about Samantha? Belial, I mean. Is she still alive?"

The man nods. "Yes. Alive and well, I might add. I could be wrong, but she seems to be rampaging even more fiercely than when she started. Apparently, the demonic forces cannot kill her, and have thus chosen to instead slow her down. Reports have it that several Burrowers have taken to manipulating the terrain around her to stymie her movements, but these actions have only enraged her further, making her attacks even more vicious and violent. Were it not for Belial's assistance, I fear the demonic armies would have poured across our barriers several hours ago. They hold a tremendous advantage during the cover of night."

Phoebe's energy-filled eyes lose some of their luster. "...Even more vicious and violent, you say."

"Commander?"

"No, it's... it's nothing. I just... I feel a bit helpless and angry right now. Belial shouldn't have to step in for us. This is my failing. If I'd prepared better, maybe we could have defended ourselves better... maybe the hospital wouldn't have..."

The female officer shakes her head. "Do not blame yourself, Commander. You've done all that you could. We can still win. Your husband is the Hero! Once he returns... he'll certainly save us from this hell."

"Yes. I hope you're right," Phoebe mutters.

After listening to a few more reports, Phoebe walks over to the munitions chests and grabs a beaten-up exosuit controller, the same one she's worn all day. She sticks her arms through the straps, then connects them behind her back. After fitting it snugly against her chest, Phoebe taps its ignition button twice, causing nanites to erupt from its core and spread across her body.

After her nanosuit solidifies, Phoebe starts to leave. Before she can depart the communication platform, the female officer from before steps in front of her.

"Commander. I mean no disrespect, but you're in no shape to return to the field."

"I'm not going to fight," Phoebe replies. "I'm only wearing this for my protection. I know damn well I can't shoot when my body aches as badly as it does right now."

"Alright, I understand," The officer says. "Just... take care, Commander. We need you right now. If something happens and you fall tonight... we'll lose this war in the same hour. You're our moral support, so please don't do anything that will get yourself killed."

"You don't need to tell me twice," Phoebe replies, squeezing her subordinate's shoulder. As she leaves, she taps the side of her helmet. "Let me know if anything important comes up."

"Like your husband returning?"

"Exactly."

Humanity's Commander leaves the depot. With an exosuit wrapped around her skin, Phoebe's speed increases substantially, allowing her to jog at a casual twenty miles an hour.

She arrives at the midlines, where three Planet-Walkers continue firing into the distant demonic hordes, only ever pausing to reload. However, a fourth mech lays on its side some distance away, a huge hole torn through its cockpit.

"What happened here?" Phoebe barks, while walking up to a group of flustered mechanics.

"Commander!" A Salamander yells. The yellow-scaled monster doesn't even bother with a salute, instead continuing to frantically dig around inside the mech's internal circuitry. "It shuckin' sucks! A group o' dem' Burrowers and Brutes emerged from the backline. They done popped up in our blind spot and attacked Gold Three. Pilot Daniels died during the ambush."

The Salamander gestures to his left with a quick head-nod. Phoebe follows his gaze to find a half-dozen dead demons laying in a pile, each one with blaster holes in their chests.

"God... god damn it..." Phoebe growls. "Can you fix it? These Planet-Walkers are our strongest assault mechs!"

"We'll need sev'ral hours, ma'am," The Salamander drawls. "I called up Ogie, but it'll be a bit 'fore he can make it here. He knows this stuff way better'n me."

Phoebe's expression clouds over with doubt. "We don't have hours. I need this thing back up and shooting, pronto. Can you hack together a solution?"

The Salamander shrugs. "Dunno, ma'am. I could maybe jump in 'n make it go on auto-pilot, but it'll be way slower 'n less reliable without a pilot."

"That'll have to do," Phoebe replies, nodding confidently. "Make it so. I'll check back later."

After finishing with the Salamander, Phoebe recalls her helmet and rubs her head as a bit of her energy fades away.

"I just... have to hold on... until Jason returns. If he doesn't... then we're all doomed."

On the eastern side of Hero City.

Deafening shockwaves erupt, flattening the fields between humanity and the demons. Both sides keep their distance, watching with a mixture of shock and horror as Kar, King of all Monsters, engages in combat with the Battle Brothers, Zamiel and Duriel.

The two Demon Barons take beating after beating. Kar punches Duriel's stomach so hard that the younger Battle Brother flies three hundred feet straight backward, bounces off the ground, and skids another hundred feet before eventually sliding to a stop. Kar doesn't even pause before tail-whipping Zamiel, sending him flying in the opposite direction. He, too, forms an intimate relationship with Tarus II's terrain as he lands face-first in the dirt, shearing much of the skin off his cheeks, forehead, and nose.

Before Duriel can get back up, Kar jumps into the air with his fist raised. He falls upon the younger, bigger brother like a meteor, pounding him against the planet's soil with enough force to knock dozens of distant humans and demons off their feet.

The humans' battle line, not far west of Kar and the Battle Brothers' positions, remains tense as they watch the brutal display of power unfolding before them. "Kar is incredible! I haven't even seen Blinker help him much over these last eight hours; he's been treating those two Barons like his personal punching bags the whole time!"

"Yes," A nearby kobold grunts, "but don't you find it odd? The Battle Brothers are only Barons, yet they're still putting up a hell of a fight. Any other Baron would have died by now."

On the demons' side of the battlefield, Ose's armies stand at the ready, eying the battle with caution.

"Remember," A low-ranking Baron says, "don't take a single step forward! I'm not going to die in some useless, unwinnable fight. We don't wanna lose any more troops to the Sphinx, so we'll just keep our distance."

"You're a coward!" A nearby Demon Lord yells. "You're a Baron, too! Go help the Battle Brothers!"

"Screw that! Can't you tell something is different about Zamiel and Duriel?" The Baron retorts. "Those two are WAY stronger than me! If I go over there, the Sphinx'll kill me without batting an eye! I'm as useless as you against someone like the Monster King!"

The Lord snarls. "Shrakh! Since when were monsters better than demons? Everyone knows monsters are low-class rats."

Not far behind that Demon Lord, a pair of Orcs glance at one another meaningfully.

"Hmph. Stupid demon. He not know glory of Elder Orc and Ancient Orc," the first one mutters.

"Quiet," The other Orc grunts. "That a big secret. We no talk about the Ancient Ones here."

"Oops. Sorry."

Both of them grin evilly, but fall silent, saying nothing else.

Meanwhile, Kar continues kicking and punching Duriel. He grabs the giant Baron by the neck, lifts him overhead, and slams him into the dirt, over and over.

Whump! Whump! Whump!

The sound of a body hitting the topsoil makes all the distant participants cringe sympathetically, even the humans.

"Hurgh! You are a durable little snake," Kar says, as he holds Duriel's limp body high. He punches Duriel's demonstone armor, causing a gong-like sound to ring out over the battlefield.

Bwang!

Duriel coughs. "Ugh..."

At that moment, a dozen spectral hammers form overhead, each one five feet long with quarter-ton heads attached to their handles. They fly at Kar, forcing him to spin around and hold Duriel up as a shield. Instead of striking the Battle Brother, the hammers curve around and crash into Kar.

Boom-boom-boom!

Kar drops Duriel reflexively and staggers backward, but appears relatively uninjured. Before he can grab the younger brother, another hammer violently flies in an upward curving arc, punts Duriel skyward, and sends him flying into the demons' battle lines.

"Oh, shrakh!" A goblin screams. Too late, before he can shove his way through the throng of Ose's assembled army, Duriel hurtles into the mass of enemies, crushing and killing half a dozen of them.

Zamiel, still badly injured, staggers toward Kar while weaving hand signs. His eyes flash red as he summons another wave of hammers and sends them hurtling toward Kar.

"Hurgh!" Kar grunts. "More useless tricks! You never know when to give up, murdering bastards."

The hammers crash against Kar's scales, but he wades through them easily, shrugging off the hits as if they were pebbles glancing off a windshield.

Kar glances back at the demon army, watching as Duriel jumps to his feet, completely healed of his injuries. The Battle Brother roars in rage and charges at the Sphinx again. "Stupid croc! You keep letting me heal! I'll make you regret that decision!"

Instead of fear or panic, a casual smirk passes over Kar's face. "I have broken your bodies dozens of times now. Finishing the two of you off is a simple matter for me. What you have failed to realize is that my only goal is to cause you pain."

Duriel summons a one-ton greathammer. He grabs it, hefts it high, and swings it down, intending to shatter Kar's skull.

The crocodile raises his arm. When the hammer reaches striking distance, he backhands it, tearing the weapon's head off and flinging it to the side. The remaining stump whacks Kar's chest with the piddling impact force of a whiffle bat.

"You slaughtered my family..." Kar grunts, as he balls his right claw into a fist.

"You tortured them, maimed them, and caused them immense suffering," He continues, as he rears his arm back.

"And so I must pay you back in kind, ten times over... for each life you ended!" Kar roars, while lunging forward.

BOOM!

He socks Duriel in the stomach, once again sending the Battle Brother careening backward. Duriel again crashes into the demons, this time crushing two dozen of his comrades into meat paste. He grinds to a stop atop their meaty chunks, gasping for breath.

"What I do not know... is why!" Kar yells, turning to face Zamiel. "Why did you kill my people?! Why did you murder the crocodiles?"

The older brother, still badly injured, clutches his broken ribs and wheezes out a laugh. "Hahaha... you know we can heal by absorbing blood, so you keep using our bodies as battering rams against our fellow demons. All this, just for your pathetic revenge. You are a- cough! You are a miserable little reptile."

"Of course I am miserable..." Kar growls. A look of hatred envelops his face, causing his eyes to shrink to the narrowest of slits. "Pyra was a fine female. She was my beloved mate. She never hurt anyone in all her life, yet you butchered her! You crushed her eggs, tied her down, and impaled each of her limbs with your weapons! Why?! What was her sin? What were any of my people's sins?!"

Zamiel laughs again. "Sins? Pahaha! You're an imbecile. Cough! What makes you think we needed a reason? We killed the crocodiles because it was fun."

"Liar!"

Kar leaps toward Zamiel. His speed, as swift as the wind, brings him into striking range in less than a second. All Zamiel sees is a blur of motion before Kar backhands him and sends him spinning and careening into the demon army once again.

Crocodile tears well up in Kar's eyes. "Huuuurgh! I never even got the chance to say goodbye! All I could do was hug my wife's corpse! Even if you die a million times, it won't be enough to make up for her suffering!"

Instead of running forward, Duriel climbs out of the bloody, meaty pit, and stands before the demonic army. He seems to realize something and grins sadistically.

"Ohhh, yeah. Pyra. Psh, you think me and big bro would remember one slime-scale's name? As if. I gutted so many nasty crocs, I couldn't tell you which of the ugly ones were female, and which were male. They all looked and smelled the same ta' me."

Zamiel, too, having crushed a bunch of demons to death, climbs out of their blood-soaked bodies and walks over to his brother's side. "Dur-Dur's got a point, croc-face! You might be the strongest crocodile of 'em all, but you're still a peace-loving simpleton. That's why you won't kill us!"

Kar pauses. The Reptile King straightens his posture and glares at both Battle Brothers with murderous intent.

"Hurgh. You are wrong. I will kill you. But before then, I will break your bodies so that your souls may learn humility. I will make you experience the same suffering that every single one of my people did."

"Big words..." Zamiel mutters.

Both brothers look at each other, then nod.

"Alright Croc. We're done playin' games," Duriel says, curling his lips into a sneer. "You think you're big shit, but you ain't. We've been lettin' you knock us around for a good, long while now, all to see just how strong you've gotten."

"Turns out, you're tougher than we ever could've imagined," Zamiel adds. "But in the end, you're still a stupid croc. You're 'bout to find out how we took down all of your species in one day. Fifty thousand reptiles. Didn't even bat an eye."

Both brothers inhale in unison. Their armor audibly creaks, while popping sounds erupt from their joints. They raise their arms and flex their muscles, shifting their skin into a deathly, pale white color. This change makes their blood-red eyes stand out even more, giving them an appearance distinctive from all other demons.

Zamiel laughs. "Hahaha! Let's see what you're made of now, tough guy!"

They charge toward Kar, covering hundreds of feet in seconds. Their boots leave deep depressions in the flattened soil, each step bringing them thirty feet closer to the Sphinx.

Kar frowns. "Hurgh. So be it. Let me reveal your misplaced confidence to the world!"

Again, both sides enter a brutal melee. Kar's fists shake the planet while sending shockwaves out that knock humans, demons, and monsters off their feet. He summons rocks onto his fists and batters Duriel from left to right, but to Kar's surprise, Duriel takes the hits like a champ. Every time Kar knocks him back, Duriel stomps his feet into the dirt and holds his own, no longer allowing himself to go flying.

Zamiel too, doesn't bother with summoning weapons from above. Instead, he conjures a powerful greathammer, one with a solid demonstone shaft and head, and proceeds to attack Kar while he's busy with Duriel.

Bang!

Zamiel's first strike crashes against Kar's back, momentarily jarring the Sphinx's senses. Zamiel lands two more hits before Kar whirls around and spin-kicks the older brother in the chest, but the attack only pushes Zamiel back a few feet while he doesn't lose his footing.

Kar's animal instinct activates, processing the changes in his opponents. Hurgh. The Battle Bastards have suddenly increased their power tremendously. Why has their skin turned pure white? Is this a limited-time transformation? Their bodies have become as mighty as a top-ranked Demon Duke!

Instead of going to town on Duriel, Kar starts exercising more caution. He continues fighting both brothers, but it doesn't escape his notice that their speed and strength have skyrocketed, putting them on par with Barbatos.

"Hurgh! How tricky! It seems you two have been hiding some secrets," Kar remarks. Duriel swings a greatsword at him, but Kar instantly reinforces his arm with a layer of diamond to block the strike. "But I wonder how long you can hold on!"

* * *

Minutes pass. An hour.

Kar continues to breathe evenly, but to his shock, not once does he manage to send either brother flying. Hundreds of blows get exchanged between himself and his mortal enemies, but the Crocodile realizes they must have been holding back earlier. Their durability easily approaches his level.

"What's wrong, croc?" Zamiel laughs. "Not having fun anymore? What was all that nonsense you spouted earlier? Something about making our souls learn humility? Get real! Your power may have reached the level of a Demon Emperor, but it ain't enough to kill the likes of us!"

The brothers momentarily pull back and circle around Kar like a pair of wolves looking for an opening.

Kar assumes a defensive stance. His crocodilian eyelids flick over his eyes for a split-second. During that instant, both brothers lunge at him!

Crash! Thunk! Bang!

They beat and slice Kar a dozen times, finally drawing blood. Before Kar's blood can hit the ground, they both retreat while motioning with their hands, causing the plasma to fly up and into their mouths.

"Mmm! That's good!" Zamiel laughs, his pupils dilating. "Your blood tastes much better than your wife's!"

Duriel smacks his lips. "Nice and sticky, just the way I like it."

Kar, lightly injured, easily seals his wounds with his reptilian physiology. The sudden attack only momentarily startles him, but it doesn't cause him any long-lasting injuries.

"Hurgh. I see now. Your powers... they revolve around blood. How could I not see before? Blood doesn't only regenerate your injuries. It must also empower you."

"Wow! You figured it out!" Zamiel laughs, while sarcastically clapping. "Good job, croccy cunt!"

Duriel grins, exposing his teeth. "That's right, Monster Chump. Me 'n Zammy get way stronger each time we drink blood. And guess who got us to our current level? Bahaha! All your worthless croc friends!"

Zamiel lowers his voice. "You wanted to know why we killed the crocs? There's your answer, croc-master. We didn't go there to waste our time slaughtering some useless 'reps. We killed each one and drank their blood! When we started, we were low-level Barons. Weak, useless. Now? We're stronger than most Dukes."

Kar's expression turns to one of horror. "You filthy, evil wretches! HURGH! Crocodilian blood... is sacred!"

"And tasty!" Zamiel laughs. He and Duriel keep their distance, even as Kar starts to stomp toward them. "Just imagine how strong we'll be once we reach the ranks of Duke and Emperor! Our bodies will become invincible, just like Bael! And it's all thanks to your generous family, donating their slimy juices to us! What kind citizens!"

Before Kar can reach the Battle Brothers, a female voice suddenly speaks.

"I've heard enough!"

A tiny figure pops into existence next to Zamiel's face. He barely gets a second to react before she rears back and swings her arm, summoning a fist-shaped projection to crash into his face.

WHUMP!!

Zamiel goes flying for the first time in an hour. Taken completely by surprise, he spins helplessly through the air and crashes into the dirt, only to immediately jump to his feet a second later.

"Grr!! Nice ambush! Sneaky fairy!"

Blinker disappears, then reappears four inches from Duriel's face. Once again, she rears back her fist, but when she lunges forward, the projection doesn't fly out of her hand. Instead, it appears from the air in front of Duriel's chest.

Thunk!

She sends the younger brother flying by tricking him with misdirection. The unexpected frontal assault knocks the wind out of Duriel, making it tough for him to jump up even once he hits the dirt and skids to a stop.

"I won't listen to any more of your filth!" Blinker declares. "Kar! We have to stop playing around. These are the two who killed your species. Let's work together to send them to the Great Beyond!"

Kar hesitates. "Butterfly. This is not your battle. They are mine to kill."

"Wrong," Blinker replies. She teleports to her husband's side, reaches up, and touches his face. "Our friends are dying on the northern, southern, and western fronts. Every minute you drag out this fight, more of them will perish. Are their lives worth the cost of dragging out your revenge? What would Pyra say?"

The reptile shudders.

"N-no. No... Pyra would not like that I used her death as an excuse to sate my bloodlust. Not if it cost the lives of my friends."

Blinker smiles gently. "You're not invincible, gator-man. You're suffering. Everyone can see it. Don't kill these losers just to fulfill some twisted revenge. Do it to prevent any further deaths."

The Sphinx lowers his head. After a few moments, he raises it, then watches as Duriel and Zamiel fall into step beside one another while gazing at him and Blinker warily.

"I am sorry, Butterfly," Kar murmurs. "I acted selfishly earlier. All my life, I have thirsted for a chance to exact my revenge. I never imagined a time would come when my strength alone was not enough to end their lives. Please assist me."

"You've got it, honey bunches." Blinker says. She kisses his cheek, then activates her fairy magic, turning herself invisible.

With his mind recentered, Kar assumes a dominant stance.

"Hurgh. No more games, Bastard Brothers. I will kill you here and now. After that, I will wipe away your armies and make all who have invaded my world rue the day they crossed me."

The Battle Brothers don't move. They keep their distance and instead smile.

"So you're done screwing around, huh?" Zamiel asks. "What a coincidence. So are we."

From the ground in front of them, amidst the darkness of the night, a ghastly specter emerges. Mephisto, the Duke of Mist, rises from the planet's depths while clasping his bony fingers and cackling gleefully.

"Kekeke! Lassst of the Crocodilesss. I have awaited thisss day for agesss. You have marinated yourssself perfectly. You have sssurpasssed my every expectation. Now, watch asss I bring you to the brink of dessspair!"

Mephisto motions with his hands. The dirt around him shifts and rumbles.

From the underground depths, a ghastly scream cries out in pain.

"No! Please, spare us! Spare the children!"

Kar freezes in place. He watches, horrified, as dozens of figures crawl out of the ground, all of them covered in ghastly wounds, with exposed bones poking out of skin and scales.

"No... no... no..."

The Sphinx takes a step back. Tears well up in his eyes as the figures begin limping and crawling toward him, all of them only able to move thanks to Mephisto's necromantic magic.

"You graverobber..." Kar whispers. "You... you stole them away..."

Kar's long-dead kin, the ancient crocodiles, make their way in his direction. Some of them cry out in pain. Others yell profanity at him, blaming him for their deaths.

The nearest crocodile, a female with faded red scales, gurgles in her throat. "Kar... Kar... is that you? It hurts... my whole body... hurts..."

Kar presses his fists against the sides of his head. "No! Nooo! Not Pyra too! You abhorrent, scum-sucking flesh-pirate! Mephistoooo!! I'M GOING TO RIP YOU APAAAART!"

>!This is what a spoiler looks like! Click it to reveal the text!!

Part 269: Visiting the Oracles

Inside a distant corner of the Labyrinth, within the confines of a makeshift prison area, a spectral demoness with an immaterial body raises her palm into the air.

Smack!

She slaps a human trapped inside a cage before her, the captured leader of humanity's military forces, Neil Adams. Neil cries out in pain and stumbles backward, hitting the Labyrinth's compacted dirt floor with a violent thud! Magical energy and electricity courses through his veins, torturing him for several seconds afterward, but he only grits his teeth and endures the pain, glaring at Ose with bloodshot eyes.

"Gaaaah! B-beat me all you want, bedeviled witch! You shall never find the answers you seek!"

Ose's eyes flicker with annoyance. "You know where the Trifrancium is! You must! I'll break that Wordsmith's magic if it's the last thing I do!"

Humanity's former military commander grins evilly, as blood gushes from a broken tooth. "Hahaha! Stubborn and stupid, as expected of a bloodskin harlot! I told you, Ose! Hope erased my memories of all top-secret knowledge long before your invasion! There are no 'seals' you can break, no memories you can coax or rip out of my mind! There's nothing of importance hidden in my head, and no matter how you slap and kick me, you'll find nothing!"

"Liar!" Ose roars. She motions with her hands to conjure electrical energy, then aims her fingers at Neil's heart.

Crackle!

The weakened bolt of lightning strikes the human and sends him crashing against the demonstone bars of his cage, knocking the wind out of him and leaving him a crumpled mess on the floor.

"C-cough... cough..."

Tears flow uncontrollably from Neil's eyes as the unbearable torture threatens to shatter his sanity. He presses the glove on his right hand against his heart and clutches his chest, desperately willing the pain to fade with all his strength.

"You... you must be lying!" Ose shrieks. She tugs at the hair on both sides of her head and stomps her astral foot against the ground, momentarily hardening it to interact with the physical plane. Even with her Emperor-level strength, the impact barely even scatters a thin layer of dust coating the ground, revealing just how weak her interactions with the physical world are when she enters her Astral Form. "What sort of imbecilic leader hides the knowledge of his deadliest assets from himself?! You're simply asking for yourself to be betrayed!"

Neil continues to cough and sputter for several seconds. Eventually, he gathers his strength, grabs his cell's bars, and shakily pulls himself up. He defiantly rises to his feet to glower at Ose with the strongest look of anger he can currently muster.

"Kuh... huh... stupid wench. Don't you get it? I trust my soldiers. You wouldn't understand, being a filthy bloodskin and all. Your kind knows only betrayal and backstabbing, but my men and women are loyal to the core. We stand together as proud warriors. The only things that will ever break their loyalty are demonic lies... filthy, heretical magic conjured from the mind of a wretched being such as yourself."

Shakily, he points a gloved finger at her, even as his vision wavers. "That's what makes humans superior to demons. We may fight among ourselves at times, but in the end, we will always unite to combat an external threat. And when we do, we become an unstoppable machine of ruthless efficiency. In only six years, we've created weapons capable of combatting your kind. Just imagine the heights we'll reach once ten years, or twenty, or a hundred pass! We're a ticking time bomb... one that will signal the end of your reign."

Ose's eyes twitch, but she forces a smile. "Haha. Is that so? You sound awfully confident for a beaten dog. Make your jokes while you still can, Little Neil. Your fellow humans are already at death's door. It only took me a day to shatter their defenses and press upon them from all sides. The Wordsmiths abandoned them, and many of your top generals will soon perish. Once they fall, what remains of your resistance will crumble into ash."

Neil's smiles fades, while a look of hatred replaces it.

"Taunt me all you like, Ose. I can tell you're lying. Why else would you be so desperate to find the Trifrancium? Could it be that you're worried? Ten kilograms of Trifrancium... that's enough to blow a planet-sized hole in the Labyrinth's center and irradiate all the poor bastards contained within. They'd perish within a week. Be a shame if I rigged it to detonate upon humanity's fall."

Ose's eyes flicker. "Ten kilograms? You're bluffing. I know you've only one kilogram, two at the most. Don't even think of testing my intelligence, mongrel. Tarus II might be rich in deposits, but no planet has ever exceeded thirty kilos in total... and we've already mined it for several millennia."

Neil's breathing grows steadier as some of the pain from Ose's earlier strike subsides. He straightens his posture and grins at the Emperor before him. "We might have one kilogram, or we might have ten. Go ahead. Flip that coin."

Ose crosses her arms. "Tch. What a pointless waste of air. This conversation has squandered my time for long enough. It is clear to me that you possess no knowledge I need. Still, you may yet prove a useful hostage."

"What, do you not wish to smack me around some more?" Neil taunts. "Why don't you come here in person? We'll see if you can act so tough when we speak face-to-face. Then again, I suppose it's hard for you to meet me, given how badly my third in command broke your body. You must be suffering terribly right about now."

Despite her clearly superior position, Ose still grits her teeth in frustration. "Imbecile! That crocodile didn't injure me at all! I was the one who bested him! I broke my own arms willingly to bury the Sphinx forever!"

"Oh?" Neil asks, smiling bemusedly. "So you killed him then? Kar? How interesting, considering I remember seeing him still breathing after your battle. Who are you trying to fool?"

"Shut your mouth!" Ose snaps. She raises her hand and conjures electricity into it, then slaps Neil's face with enough force to send him flying to the left. He crashes against the bars like a ragdoll, then flops to the ground lifelessly.

Several seconds pass. Ose scrunches up her nose. "Shit. Did I kill him? No. He's still alive. Barely. Tch. Can't believe such a wretched little pissant made me lose my temper."

Her body trembles with rage, but she swallows that anger and exhales it through her nose.

Breathe, Ose, the Third Emperor thinks. I cannot waste time on this mutt any longer. Right now, locating the Wordsmiths should be my number one goal.

She turns away from her downed prisoner and slowly floats away, passing through the cage's confines. She pauses for a moment to look at the prison room, a small makeshift facility with three dozen other cages lined up along the walls, all of them with magical gems embedded on their tops to disrupt certain types of magic. No other demons reside in the room, having stepped outside to await the results of Ose's interrogation.

The Emperor of Infiltration curls her upper lip into a sneer. I should have Jason's wife and daughter in my grasp by now. Yama's Shades failed me miserably, leaving me with only one hostage of any value. Perhaps I should return and capture the Wordsmith's family myself, ensuring they won't slip through my fingers again. Seven Hells! Must I do everything on my own?! What use is there in the title of Emperor if all of my subordinates become useless buffoons the moment I avert my gaze?!

Without another word, Ose jumps forward, accelerating from a standing position to ten times the speed of sound. Her body rushes through the Labyrinth's walls at blinding speeds, while she pauses only for half-seconds at a time to double-check her surroundings.

She arrives inside the Blood Pits and quickly jumps to her main body. After examining her nude figure soaking in virgin blood, she frowns, then flickers to the side, where a nearby Demon Lord stands at attention, one of the assistant healers in the Blood Pits.

"Jiro," Ose says, as she materializes before him. "Tell Hellga to accelerate my healing. I don't care about the costs or risks. Use whatever methods she requires. Just get me out of here as quickly as possible."

The assistant demon loses some of his color. "Y-yes, Emperor Ose, but... while I'm sure Miss Hellga has a few methods left at her disposal, the after-effects won't be mild..."

"Did you not hear me? Stupid bastard!" Ose roars. "I don't give a damn about the risks. Relay my orders at once! Don't make me repeat myself!"

The Demon Lord jumps in fright. "Okay! Of course! I'll tell her at once!"

He leaves in a hurry, while Ose flickers over to a nearby blood pit where two demonesses lounge and chat with each other quietly.

"Vepar! Laharl! What are you two doing, lazing about?! Look at you! Your bodies are fully healed! Get out of the bloody tub and get back to the frontlines!!"

At the sound of Ose's astral voice, both Barons nearly wet themselves in fright. Laharl jumps up and aims her claws at Ose, then sneers angrily. "Tch! Shut your trap, bitch! We got our asses kicked by that damned Sphinx earlier! So what if we take our sweet time gettin' back, eh? What's it to you?! You've still got plenty of Barons who can do your dirty work!"

"I couldn't even hurt the Sphinx," Vepar complains, her raspy voice and rotted face giving her a frightening appearance. "I might as well not even return to the fight. What use will I be anyway?"

"No protesting! No arguing!" Ose shouts. "I've lost Beelzebub, and now Artorias is all alone fighting Belial! You two need to go and reinforce him. Slow Belial down, choke her with poison, I don't give a damn! Stop sitting on your asses, yapping about worthless pleasantries, and make yourselves useful!"

Both Barons open their mouths to complain, but think better of arguing with an Emperor capable of obliterating their existences. With reluctant shrugs of their shoulders, they climb out of the blood pits and walk over to a nearby pool of water to clean their skin.

"Fine..." Laharl mutters. "But if I don't find some nice, hunky pieces of man-meat when I get there, I'm going to be awfully disappointed."

"You'll find my foot planted firmly in your rectum if you don't pick up the pace," Ose snarls. "Now, if you'll excuse me, I have a Wordsmith to locate."

Ose flickers away, not even deigning to wait for a retort from her Barons. She flies through the Labyrinth's walls once again, this time increasing her speed tenfold.

Within seconds, she travels a thousand miles, treating the Labyrinth's winding passages and confusing corridors as if they don't exist at all.

It doesn't take long before she stops inside a secret facility, one with giant magical crystals hovering in midair. Beneath each crystal, half a dozen demons sit cross-legged in a circle, all of them holding out their arms to press their palms together. They bow their heads and close their eyes, performing a demonic ritual of meditation to increase their spiritual awareness.

Aside from the hundreds of demons located beneath the dozens of floating crystals in the center of the room, countless other monsters and demons walk around with studious looks on their faces. Wearing prim and proper black robes and other similar garments, the entire facility ripples with a cult-like sensation, giving the environment an uneasy atmosphere.

Ose turns her head from side to side, instantly scrutinizing every demon in the room. It only takes her half a minute to spot one specific Demon Baron, a female perched atop an outcropping in the wall. With jet black hair bundled up in a ponytail and a punk-rocker-girl T-shirt and shorts, she visually stands out from all the properly-dressed demons below her. A succubus tail flicks around behind her as she jots down notes on a clipboard.

The Third Emperor rolls her eyes. "Ugh. This is the part I hate."

She grits her teeth and flies toward the succubus. The moment she draws near, the Baroness raises her head, spots Ose and smiles giddily.

"Omigoooosh! Ose! Long time no see! How have you been?!"

Sparkles dance in her eyes as she jumps up and down excitedly. Ose visibly cringes, but forces herself to smile.

"Abby. You always act so bloody excited to see me, but you do realize we spoke not even two days ago, don't you?"

"Really? Wow, that's even longer than I thought!" Abby, the Baron of Happy Thoughts, answers. "What can I say?! It's always great to see my precious, favorite, sweetie-pumpkin!"

"Don't call me that," Ose mutters. "I'm here on business, and I don't have a lot of time."

"Oooh!" Abby grins. "You need my H-E-L-P then, HMMM? Well, you can always come knocking any time you want, sweetie-pumpkin! You know I'll break down your door if it gets me into your knickers, ahaha!"

The corner of Ose's lip twitches in disgust, not from Abby's sexual advances, but from the sheer level of excitement radiating from the succubus's body. Anyone exuding such intense positive emotions tends to nauseate Ose, making it impossible for her to trust them.

"Just... help me find someone," Ose says. "I need to locate the Wordsmiths. Both, preferably, but even a single one will do. We should have enough demons on Tarus II for the Oracles to search the planet. Additionally, check the Labyrinth. The Wordsmiths must be hiding somewhere secretive, somewhere I've not yet checked, but still close to the battlefield."

"Okay!" Abby says, casually tossing her clipboard behind her. It hits the ground with a clatter at the same time as she claps her hands excitedly. "This sounds like an adventure! Oooh, how exciting! You finally came to ask something of me! Could this be the start of our blossoming relationship? Our budding romance? How delightful! I always knew you'd come around!!"

Having known Abby for as long as they were both Barons, Ose merely crinkles her nose and looks away. "Sure, sure. Call it whatever you want. Can you find the Wordsmiths or not, Abby?"

"Dunno!" Abby says. She jumps off the outcropping and falls to the ground a hundred feet below, landing soundlessly without making even the slightest impact. She dances forward, clapping her hands while spinning around like a ballerina. "Okay, guys! Hey everyone! Can I have your attention, please? My precious-wecious Ose needs to find the Wordsmith guy! You know, the one with the big muscles, or maybe the other one with the even biggerer muscles! Come on now, people, snap to it! I can't leave my sweetie-pumpkin waiting!"

Ose watches from on high, shaking her head in embarrassment. She facepalms and groans audibly. "Ugh. Abby is just too sickening. Why must she be the most adept of all Oracles? If only I could find someone less nauseating to replace her."

Despite her griping, Ose doesn't interfere with Abby's work. She does, however, stare at the back of Abby's black T-shirt, where in sparkly pink letters, the words "LOVE CONQUERS ALL!" rest upon her spine.

Several minutes pass. Abby skips around, jumping from one group of Oracles to another while clapping her hands rhythmically to a song nobody but her can hear. "Come on, come on, raise those spirits! Put some peppy in your steppy, boys and girls! My sweetie-pumpkin needs our help!"

However, as the minutes pass, Abby's appearance grows less enthusiastic. After hundreds of Oracles shake their heads in unison. Abby finally stops prancing about and slows to a stop.

Ose floats down to her side. "Nothing?"

Unexpectedly, Abby bursts into tears. "Uwaaah! Oh, Ose! Sweetie-pumpkin, I'm so sorryyyy! I couldn't find even one hair on their heads!! I'm useless, hic, a total failure! Uwaaaah!"

Utterly revolted, Ose swallows her gag reflex and chokes back vomit as she tries to 'comfort' Abby. "H-hurk... okay, calm down. Seven Hells, you're a bloody handful. Enough with the waterworks. Why can't you find the Wordsmiths? Did you not search the Labyrinth's entirety, as well as Tarus II?"

Abby presses her fists against her eyes while still sobbing uncontrollably. "Hic, hic... I'm doing my bee-eee-eeest! I'm just a stupid, no good Oracle! A total dummy! Uwaaah!"

Ose spends the next few minutes delicately consoling Abby before finally exploding in anger. She smacks the back of Abby's head, injecting electricity into the sobbing Baron's brain. "Enough! Stop with all that damned blubbering!"

Caught off-guard, Abby stumbles and falls to her knees. A moment later, she jumps to her feet and whips her head around to grin with sparkling eyes at Ose. "Oh wow, that felt great! Hit me again, sweetie-pumpkin! That tingly-feeling really cleared my head!!"

"I know. That was the point," Ose snaps. "Now explain to me why you can't find the Wordsmiths."

With her emotions momentarily disrupted, Abby becomes noticeably more analytical. She presses her finger against her lips and falls silent for a few seconds before speaking.

"Well, Ose dearest... it's like this. Oracles can only see the areas around where other demons exist. The more demons in one area, the more clarity our visions have."

"Right, yes, I know..." Ose mutters. "So, are the Wordsmiths not on Tarus II? Are they not in the Labyrinth?"

"I don't think they are," Abby replies. "But I can't say for certain! After all, aren't the Wordsmiths super powerful? Maybe they've hidden themselves from our Oracles' eyes!"

"Damn," Ose curses, "that's a distinct possibility. Hm. Can you at least peer into the future for me? Maybe you can find out if, or when, the Wordsmiths will return."

"No can do," Abby says, shaking her head. "Using our foresight requires time and preparation. I can look five minutes into the future whenever I want, but any further than that? I'm useless! I'd need to meditate for several hours just to look ten minutes into the future!"

"I thought the Oracles could combine their minds to increase Foresight's efficiency?" Ose asks.

"Oh, sure, if you want to lose the war," Abby says, nodding seriously. "You know we're pretty busy guiding the attacking forces, right? Silly Ose! You're always so focused and determined... that's what I love most about you!"

"Devils, no more sappiness, please," Ose groans, recoiling from Abby. "Just tell me if you can locate someone else. How about Jason's wife and daughter?"

"Oh, them? Sure! I already saw those two," Abby says, nodding matter-of-factly. She motions with her hand to summon a tiny ball of mana in the air. Ose takes the energy and presses it against her forehead, then falls silent for a few seconds as images appear in her mind.

"I see. Phoebe Hiro continues to fight on the frontlines, but she appears beaten and exhausted. Meanwhile, Daisy Hiro- hmm?"

Ose pauses mid-sentence. She closes her eyes and frowns deeply.

"What... what is this feeling? It can't be! Heroic Energy? Has the Wordsmith's daughter awakened a set of Heroic Powers?"

Abby cocks her head. She examines those same memories and widens her eyes. "Wow! I think you're right! It's faint, but I can definitely sense Holy Energy emanating from her soul!"

Ose's expression grows considerably more serious.

"I see. So that must be the reason why Yama's Shades failed. Four Shades would never be enough to kill Belial, but slowing her down and apprehending a mere child? I could never have imagined them failing at such a trivial task. Perhaps, with her awakened powers, the child fought back long enough for Belial to rescue her and kill three of Yama's Shades."

Satisfied with her conjecture, Ose nods slowly. "I doubt the child will be a threat to us for the moment. No Hero reaches their full power until their eighteenth birthday. Even the early awakeners, such as Joan, only fight with a fraction of their strength. Still, the brat is a future threat... and a potential asset. If I can't obtain the Wordsmiths, then capturing her will grant me a valuable hostage, as well as a powerful weapon. Hehehe. Perhaps my bounty for this war will be far greater than I first thought."

"Hm, say, Ose?" Abby says, her voice more muted than usual. "I found something weird while I was searching for the Wordsmiths."

Ose raises an eyebrow. "Be more specific."

Abby shrugs. "Well, I just don't get it. Why is Beelzebub hiding underground? I sensed his mana on the opposite side of the planet, but he doesn't seem to be moving. Is this another one of your super-awesome, super-secret strategies? I know you always like to plan ahead, so I'm a little curious..."

The Third Emperor stares in bewilderment at Abby for all of three seconds. "What?! You found Beelzebub?! Where is he? Show me!"

"Okay!" Abby chirps. She summons another mana-ball of information, which Ose greedily accepts, merging it into her mind.

When she sees Beelzebub's location for herself, Ose scoffs. "How absurd. Beelzebub's mana signature, all alone, ten miles beneath the planet's crust. What the Devil is he doing there? Taking a nap? Bah! I'll bet the Wordsmith had something to do with this! Abby, dispatch someone to dig the poor bastard out. At least then, I'll have gained another crumb from this visit."

Abby claps her hands. "Oh, yay! I'm soooo glad I could help you, sweetie-pumpkin! How about a good-bye kiss? Maybe several kisses? E-even some hand-holding?! This is a great chance for us to deepen our relationship!"

She reaches toward Ose, who quickly pulls away in response. "No! Seven Hells, never! Just... just do what I told you, Abby! I'll return later!"

"Haha, you always play hard-to-get!" Abby giggles, as Ose starts to fly away. "Ta-ta, dearest! I love youuuu! Huggie-wuggies to my sweetie-weetie!"

Ose vanishes into the walls, scowling darkly as she heads in the direction of her body.

"...So this is how Beelzebub always felt around that ugly servant of his."

>!This is what a spoiler looks like! Click it to reveal the text!!

Part 270: Amelia's Quest for Hope

Somewhere near the Labyrinth's center, some ten miles from the Core, a pair of women walk through the darkness. One of them, a human, wears a shadowy-black military exosuit to help her see through Hell's infinite gloom, while the other, a vampiress, needs no such artificial enhancements due to her demonic heritage. As they walk, they pass the occasional torch mounted on the walls, but thanks to the demonesses' guidance, they never once run into any other demons or monsters heading toward the battlefield on Tarus II.

Amelia Greyheart glances around as her impromptu companion, Dawn, guides her in the direction of Faith's End. "I'm still waiting for you to spring a trap on me."

"Ahaha, you are very fun-ny, Black Queen!" Dawn laughs. "My master has no need to use tricks if she wishes to see you. Did you know that vam-pires and hyuu-mans were once great friends? We liv-ed in a symbiotic relationship. Contrary to the myths you may have heard, there are very few downsides to becoming a vampire, and countless upsides. Immortality, for example."

The Black Queen's expression darkens. "Eternal life is overrated. It's nothing but a hollow, empty void if you haven't anyone to share the time with you."

"Mmm. Yes, it seems that you spe-ak from experience," Dawn nods. "Indeed. Losing the one you love can ruin you for the rest of your life, no matter how long your existence may last. A shame, to be sure. However, I am confi-dent that Leviathan would cry if he knew that you were unable to move on."

Unlike the past several times Dawn has brought up Amelia's long-dead friend, the Black Queen barely even bothers feigning anger. "Don't act like you know anything about Levvy. He was more than just a friend to me. More than a best friend, or a lover... he was like a second half of my soul. I barely even remember the life I endured before I met him."

Dawn stays quiet for a few moments. Only the sounds of her and Amelia's footsteps echoing into the Labyrinth's distant hallways pierce the silence.

"What sort of person was he?" Dawn asks. "Or what sort of a dragon, I suppose?"

Amelia lowers her eyes. She gazes at the ground while walking and ruminating on her thoughts.

"I... I don't want to talk about him."

"You don't?" Dawn asks. "Why are you so eager to forget him? Was he not pre-cious to you after all?"

"Of course he was!" Amelia snaps. She shoots a nasty glare at Dawn. "It just... it hurts to talk about him, okay? It really sucks! There isn't a moment that goes by where I don't wish he was still with me."

The two women round a corner, when Dawn pauses to touch Amelia's shoulder. "I have not known you long, Miss Greyheart. I doubt you see me as anything more than an acquaintance. Nevertheless, I must say that it is of-ten better to speak about the pain in your heart than to bury it. I, too, have lost beloved companions."

Amelia pushes away Dawn's hand. With her expression hidden under her helmet, only the pain in her voice reveals her turbulent emotions. "Don't lecture me. I'm not interested in pouring my heart out to a demon."

"What about your lover? What about Hope?" Dawn asks. "Have you spoken to him about Leviathan?"

"...A little." Amelia mutters.

"So you haven't," Dawn says, clicking her tongue. "I suppose you are content to merely allow the last dragon's memory to rot in your mind, withering away to the annals of time. It does not matter to you if you die and nobody else remembers him. Some might even call such inclinations selfish!"

Amelia balls up her fists. "Stop messing with my head. You think I don't see what you're doing, Dawn? You're just trying to squeeze me for intel on Leviathan. You're hoping you can learn more about him so you can... you can... I don't know! You're probably trying to figure out how his powers worked, or something! That's always how it is! Everyone just treats dragons like weapons, or tools, or magical batteries! You're no different from the rest! I'll bet your Emperor put you up to this!"

Dawn stares at Amelia quietly for a few moments.

"She did not. I am sorry to tell you this, Miss Greyheart, but perhaps if the last dragon were still alive, people might desire his power... but he has been dead for millennia. The reappear-ance of his corpse under Mephisto's control was a shock to many, but now even that has disappeared to the tempest of a dying star. No matter how much anyone tries, nobody could even gain a fragment of his power. I... I was merely trying to get to know you better. I find you to be an inter-esting hyuu-man."

Amelia locks eyes with Dawn, her expression hidden behind the metal helmet covering her face. After a few moments, she looks away and sighs.

"I'm sorry. You're... you're right."

She hesitates for a moment before lowering her head.

"Deep down inside, I just want to bury Levvy's memories. It hurts to even think about him. I spent thousands of years listening to him all throughout any given day, and since his death... I've heard nothing. Only silence. Every day that passes, it becomes harder and harder for me to remember the sound of his voice."

Dawn slowly walks forward to rest one hand on Amelia's shoulder, while gently wrapping the other around Amelia's fist.

"Hope could help you, you know? As a Wordsmith, he could open up your memories... make you hear Leviathan's voice again. Perhaps, once you rescue him, you could sit down and have an honest conversation with the Wordsmith, hm?"

Amelia sniffles. "I... I don't know."

"Well..." Dawn says, pursing her lips. She starts to say something, but thinks better of it and shakes her head. "I am sorry for pressuring you, Miss Greyheart. Never mind. Let us continue to the prisons. They aren't far, now."

"Okay..." Amelia mutters softly.

Both women continue walking, but this time in silence.

* * *

An hour passes.

As they travel, Dawn's expression becomes more and more solemn. Soon, Amelia begins to notice the structure of the Labyrinth gradually change. Torches attached to the walls no longer remain lit. Bloodstains, both fresh and ancient, sit splattered above, below, and to her sides as well. Distant screams and choked sobs echo from the hallway ahead of her.

Finally, the vampiress slows to a stop. Her cute smile, one she's worn since she first met Amelia, fades away.

"I wish you the best of luck, little lost queen, but I cannot guide you any further. We have reached the edge of Gressil's domain."

Amelia turns to look at Dawn. "Are you afraid of Gressil?"

"Yes. And you should be too," Dawn replies, an edge to her voice. "Gressil is vicious, violent, and unrelenting. Even among demons, he is a terrifying scourge, one who derives pleasure from only the most brutal and barbaric acts. If he gets his hands on you... I do not imagine we will ever see each other again."

After pausing for a moment, Dawn shifts her feet uneasily. "...You can still turn back now, Miss Greyheart. I know you care about Hope, but it would be safer if you could bring backup along. What you're about to attempt is nothing less than a suicide mission."

Amelia taps the side of her helmet, causing it to deactivate. In the pitch-blackness of the Labyrinth, without her exosuit's assistance, the only thing she can see are Dawn's glowing, blood-red eyes.

"If you really want to call yourself my friend, Dawn, then I need you to do me a favor."

Dawn's ears perk up. "And that would be?"

"If I don't return... inform everyone else that Hope is trapped here. I don't care what happens to me, but Hope is different. He's important."

"Do you understand that the Wordsmiths are the enemies of demonkind?" Dawn asks. "Mistress Fenrir likes you, but she has no love of Heroes. It would be better for her if Hope perished here, rather than if he escaped to reinforce humanity's forces."

"You mentioned a power struggle in the Labyrinth," Amelia counters. "Gressil works for the First Hell, doesn't he? If he doesn't kill Hope, but instead finds a way to use Hope's power, that will prove disadvantageous to your Hell's future."

Lowering her eyes in thought, Dawn stares at the floor for a moment before returning her gaze to Amelia. "I cannot make any such decision on my own, Miss Greyheart. However, if something does happen to you, then... I shall attempt to persuade my Mistress."

Amelia smiles. "That's enough for me. Thank you, Dawn. I can move forward now with confidence."

Dawn forces a smile, exposing her teeth in the darkness. "Anything for a friend."

After a moment, Dawn motions with her hands. She explodes into a swarm of bats, then flees down the hallway in reverse, her swarm chittering as they fly. It doesn't take long before silence engulfs Amelia.

The Black Queen reactivates her helmet, once again illuminating the pitch-black gloom surrounding her. Without another word, she begins walking deeper into the Prison.

Her footsteps, once soft like the beating of a butterfly's wings, slowly increase in volume, making her tense up after every step so that she can pause and listen.

Thud. Thud. Thud.

Gingerly, Amelia walks forward, eventually arriving inside the Prison's main area. Doors line the walls on either side of her. Their quality and construction materials vary widely, demonstrating that they were not built all at once, but added over time, likely by the many goblins living within the Labyrinth.

Uncertain of where to look, Amelia starts by approaching each door, one by one. She activates an ultrasonic scanner on her helmet, piercing the insides of the first room, only to find a pair of badly mangled female corpses, both of them physically and sexually violated, with parts of their limbs missing, their eye sockets hollow, and their mouths frozen open in neverending screams of agony.

Amelia gazes upon the women without so much as a flicker in her eyes.

Truly, demons are disgusting abominations.

Coldly, dispassionately, Amelia walks from room to room, scanning each one's interior with an ultrasonic pulse. The rooms with wooden doors reveal their contents openly, while those with metallic or demonstone doors prove harder to inspect.

A man, his body broken, hangs limply from a pair of chains attached to a wall. Missing both his legs, he opens his mouth, whispering two words, over and over. "Help me. Help me. Help me."

A woman, naked, shivers on the floor. A bowl of rotten food sits beside her head, while the bones beneath her skin tell the story of a long, arduous confinement, one which shall never end. Her suffering will only reach its conclusion if she should die.

A brother and a sister, each one with skin and muscle peeled off their arms, lay together, embracing each other as they swallow their final breaths.

At one point, Amelia finds a new prisoner, a man who has only recently been locked up. The man paces in his pitch-black room, scratching his face and peeling away the skin as some unknown demonic chemical screws with his brain.

"-me out! Let me out! Let me out!" The man shrieks. He walks from one end of his cell to the other, clearing the distance in only three steps before spinning on his heel to continue the neverending loop. "She betrayed me! She ratted me out! That bitch! When I get my hands on her...!!"

Amelia examines room after room, never once bothering to help the prisoners caged within. Having lived a hellish life herself, their tortured existences barely linger in her mind for a few moments before she forgets about them entirely.

The Black Queen leaves the psychotic man's cell door and scowls. "Where is Hope? I don't even know how many rooms there are here, let alone the layout of this place."

She continues deeper into the Prison, checking every room without fail. At one point, she finds a room with a locked demonstone door, one which her scanners can't pierce. She shatters the lock without hesitation and steps inside, only to find a mountain of rotting corpses, as well as an injured demon child inside, both of his legs broken.

The child, a pureblooded demon boy, jerks in fright when Amelia enters. Without hesitation, he reaches out to her.

"Please! Please help me! I'm sorry! I didn't mean to do it! I'll never talk back again!"

Amelia ignores him. She glances around the room, double-checking the corpses to see if any of them are Hope. When she confirms they aren't, she starts to turn away and close the door, only for the boy to reach out and grab her ankle.

"Please! Please don't leave me here!" The boy sobs. "I don't want to die!"

Amelia scowls. She kicks her hand free and glances at the demon. "I'm not your savior. I don't give a damn about you. But since I'd hate to see you suffer, I'll put you out of your misery."

Without hesitation, Amelia lifts up her leg, swings it down, and stomps the boy's head. Her strength, reinforced by the exosuit, proves more than enough to smash his brains like a watermelon, killing him before he can react. Amelia steps away from his bloody carcass and closes the door again, shaking her head in disgust.

"I've killed millions. One more won't make a difference..."

However, instead of continuing forward, Amelia's right eye twitches. She pauses outside the door and stares vacantly at the wall in front of her as a weird sense of disembodiment swallows her up. For several seconds, she sways from side to side, while a strange feeling appears in the back of her mind. She stumbles and falls to her knees, growing more confused by the second as her hands start to tremble.

"What... what's going on? Why do I feel like this? Why am I acting so strange?"

She narrows her eyes, then widens them, then narrows them again. Conflicting thoughts enter her head, until eventually, a singular concept, long ago lost to her, resurfaces.

"Is... is this... guilt? Do I feel guilty right now? Just because I killed a... a demon child? Why? I've slain so many! One more shouldn't make a difference..."

It takes several minutes for Amelia's breathing to return to normal. Slowly, she leans against the wall and climbs to her feet, clearly shaken by the strange emotions running rampant in her mind.

"This can't be right. I... I'm the Black Queen. What nonsense. Why would I ever experience guilt? It's a bit late for that, don't you think?"

She directs her question to nobody in particular. However, in the back of her mind, a sense of disappointment materializes.

"...If Levvy were here, he'd know what to say. He always did."

She bites her lip, while warm tears form at the corners of her eyes. With the helmet blocking her face, she cannot wipe them away, but instead allows them to roll down her cheeks.

"Fuck. Damn you, Dawn. Why did you have to keep bringing him up? This is all your fault."

Amelia turns around. She pushes the cell door open again to gaze at the child's corpse, his fresh blood slowly spilling across the cell's floor.

"...I'm sorry. I... I shouldn't have... done that. Dammit. Why am I apologizing to a corpse? He's just a stupid, worthless little..."

She closes the door again and forces herself to continue walking. "Stupid. Stupid! Why do I feel like my body has suddenly become defective? It's as if there's some bastard guiding my thoughts, trying to turn me into a normal human again. Don't tell me Hope put some spell on my brain in case I turned evil again. He wouldn't do that, would he? I don't know!"

She resumes checking the Prison's cells, all the while, muttering and cursing to herself. Despite spending an hour checking more than a hundred rooms, not once does the Black Queen encounter a prison guard of any species, making a pit slowly form in her stomach.

"Where the devil is everyone? Don't tell me they've all gone to attack humanity. Is Tarus II okay? What about Jason? The 'real' Jason. Could he help me find Hope? Doubtful! Hope must have kept me hidden from Jason for a reason. But why? I don't get it. Do I even really know Hope? Was our entire relationship built on a lie?"

As Amelia inspects the rooms, she suddenly finds herself standing in front of a door very different from all the others she's inspected so far. This one, constructed of solid oak, somehow still manages to confound Amelia's sensors. Dozens of locks and latches line its surface, each one adding another layer of reinforcement, making forced entry an impossibility.

"Could it be...?" Amelia mutters. "Maybe Hope is in here. This room seems like it's hiding something important."

After inspecting the door, Amelia pauses for a moment when she spots a series of faint scratch marks cut into the doorframe's top. In the demonic language, they reveal a single word.

Forbidden.

The word means nothing to Amelia, but still, its presence excites her.

"This room has to be important. I must see what's inside."

Quickly, Amelia reaches for the first lever. She slides it to the left with an audible click. Then, she grabs another one, and it too slides open with a clack.

Just before she touches the third latch, Amelia pauses. From inside the room, a faint sound catches her attention, one Centurion boosts with its sensors.

"...Is that a mouse squeaking?" Amelia asks. She bunches up her forehead and listens more intently. "No. It's... a woman crying? Doesn't sound like Hope. Still, I wonder who she is."

With a shrug, Amelia reaches for the third latch.

At that moment, a deep, masculine voice speaks.

"You should not touch that which doesn't belong to you."

"EEEYAAH!" Amelia screams. She spins around to see a massive wall of muscle standing behind her; a pale-skinned demon with two dozen blood-red eyes embedded in his arms, torso, and legs. Two heads adorn the demon's body, with one sporting what looks like a Pterodacyl's beak, and the other, three closed eyes, one of them on its forehead.

The Black Queen stumbles to the side, her heart racing like crazy. She loses her balance and falls to the ground, then quickly scoots away, cowering in fear.

"Y-you are...! Gressil?!"

The prison-master stares at her unsmilingly. The eyes embedded in his body twitch and squirm, while blood drips from the corners of their eyelids.

"Ah, if it isn't the False Queen," Gressil says, while standing motionlessly. "I've been expecting you."

Amelia jumps to her feet, her heart racing a mile a minute. "W-where is Hope?! I... I know you took him!"

Gressil doesn't answer. Instead, he turns his eyes to the door she started to open. He reaches toward it and slides both latches back into place.

"You have come to steal my possessions..." Gressil says. "That is a move most unwise."

"I've come to take back my f-friend!" Amelia stutters. "My lover!"

Gressil turns to look at Amelia and sneers. "Lover? Ah, so even the False Queen can stoop to such a level. Once, you were the terror of demonkind, a being so mighty that even Emperors would quake in their boots. But look at you now. You've lost your edge after returning from beyond the grave."

Amelia slows her breathing. She forces herself to stand up straight, even though her diminutive figure barely exceeds half of Gressil's height.

"I don't know what you're talking about. I may have temporarily lost my magic... but my character remains unchanged. Now... stop stalling! Give me Hope!"

"'Hope' is not mine to give," Gressil says, smiling coyly. "Unless you mean the Wordsmith."

"You know what I mean." Amelia snarls.

"The only thing I know is that you've not a trace of good manners," Gressil replies, his smile fading away. "Do you think yourself better than me? Only the strong may make demands of the weak... and we both know who among us is the mightier. Surely, you've brought something to bargain with? Surely, you do not expect me to give up a Wordsmith in exchange for nothing?"

Amelia's resolve weakens. Faced with a Demon Emperor of incalculable might, she suddenly realizes that, indeed, she doesn't have a single thing worth bargaining for.

"T-trade him for me..." Amelia says. "My life for Hope's. I'm the Black Queen! If you want power and prestige, making me your slave-"

"Would mean nothing," Gressil interrupts. "Stupid girl. Who, exactly, do you imagine yourself to be? The great conqueror of the Labyrinth? The sole heir of the Last Dragon's legacy? You are neither. You are merely an ordinary human girl, one who claims a birthright which long ago ceased to be hers."

Slowly, deliberately, Gressil takes a step toward Amelia. His foot strikes the ground with a heavy thud.

Reflexively, Amelia takes a step back. "I may not have my powers anymore... but I'll surely develop them again, in time!"

"You will not," Gressil says. "How sad. I weep for you. You've no idea of what method the Wordsmith's clone used to bring you back, yet you still prance about, certain of the truth behind your delusions. Amelia Greyheart? No. You are not her. You are a cheap imitation. A fake. A copy."

Gressil takes another step toward Amelia, then motions with his hands. Hope's figure suddenly appears to Amelia's right, conjured via illusory magic. Amelia spins to look at him, only to gape in shock as she sees her lover tied to a table, his body covered in countless cuts, lacerations, and bruises. His arms and legs, now amputated, stick out of a blood-filled bucket at the head of the table where he lays motionless.

"HOPE!!" Amelia screams. She runs toward the comatose Wordsmith, only to smack against the wall Gressil projected his illusion against. "Ah!"

Gressil waves his hand, causing the illusion to disappear. He smirks at the stunned exosuit-wearing human while shaking his head. "There? Don't you see? I've taken excellent care of the Wordsmith's clone. He is alive and well. No need to thank me."

Fury erupts in Amelia's eyes. Murderous intent boils in her heart as she grabs both vibro-knives attached to her waist and activates them with the press of a button. "You piece of shit! What did you do to him?! I'll kill you!!"

She jumps toward Gressil, raising both arms overhead. At the last second, her suit's teleportation module activates, causing her to flicker behind Gressil.

Skrik!

She plunges both knives into Gressil's spine, then drags them downward to rip open a horrifying wound from his neck to his thigh. The instant she completes her strike, Amelia jumps back and gazes at the Emperor of Chaos in horror.

Gressil remains unmoving. He stares ahead at where Amelia first started, unmoved by her sneak attack or the damage she inflicted on his body.

"Human technology is powerful and versatile," Gressil says, as his body fades away. A moment later, he magically materializes in front of Amelia, causing her to yelp in fright and fall on her ass. "...But it is far from omnipotent."

Amelia scootches back again, only to accidentally bump into someone behind her. When she turns her head to look, Amelia spots Gressil's leg pressing against her back. "Eeeyah! What the hell ARE you?!"

Her heart races like never before. Suddenly, the realization that she has no magic and no way to counter Gressil begins to dawn on Amelia, making her terrified for her life. She pulls away from the second Gressil, quickly looking at the first one to confirm both of them actually exist.

"You came here to steal from me, and then you attacked me," The second Gressil says. "You are a very rude person. How should I deal with such a graceless insect? Shall I swat you and end your misery here? Shall I tear that armor off your body and throw you in a cell?"

He pauses, then cocks his head.

"Hmm. No, that would be a waste. She could make such a good pawn if used correctly. She could become one of my eyes."

Amelia's heart flutters as Gressil's two bodies start walking toward her. "No! No... stay away! Stay back!!"

She reaches into her suit's pockets and grabs a miniaturized flashbang grenade. With a quick toss, she flings it above her head, where it explodes with a deafening bang, flooding the hallway with blinding light. Her suit instantly adjusts to compensate, preventing the grenade from affecting her.

Amelia starts to move toward the nearest Gressil, hoping to dodge him in the confusion, but before she can take even one step, the other Gressil lunges an arm at her. Her heart skips a beat, but all she can do is watch as he grabs her by the throat and smashes her against the wall.

Boom!

Even with an exosuit protecting her, Amelia gets the wind knocked out of her, making her gasp for breath while Gressil squeezes her neck like a vice.

"Human tricks. Armor. Weapons. Your species is always so very proud of their technological supremacy. Sadly, your opponent is me."

Gressil smiles, his expression one of contempt.

"I expected you later, but that meddlesome Fenrir decided to interfere. Well, it doesn't matter now. Come, let me have a look at that pretty face."

Amelia grabs Gressil's arm and tries to pull, push, or pry the Emperor off her, but her struggles prove fruitless. Without any effort, Gressil presses two giant fingers against the top of Amelia's helmet and swipes downward, shattering the nanites protecting her head with ease. He repeats the motion three more times, destroying any that appear to fill in the gaps, and soon, he fully exposes Amelia's head.

"There," Gressil says, his glowing eyes all that illuminate the pitch-black hallway. "That's nice. What an incredible facsimile you are, False Queen. Your face appears identical to Amelia Greyheart's, and your memories, too, but I know better. You are a fraud. A little girl who wanted to play princess."

Amelia chokes hard and tries to swallow even a single breath, but Gressil gives her no respite. He opens up his hand, revealing an eye embedded in his palm. The eye gazes at Amelia with the look of a bloodthirsty wolf, causing her to panic.

"Now, now, there's no need to feel frightened," Gressil coos, using a tone one might describe as 'ominously soothing.' "It will all be over soon. You'll know the truth, and your farcical existence will come to an end. But first, please accept my gift, for I am a kind and generous soul."

Without any fanfare, Gressil places the eye palm against Amelia's face, making her wheeze uncontrollably. She fights back with all her strength, but her delicate body proves infinitely weaker than her captor's.

After several seconds, Gressil retracts his palm. He releases his grip on Amelia's throat, allowing her to drop to the floor, broken and defeated. The young woman curls up into a ball and starts to cry. "Guhuk... please... please don't hurt me..."

A pitying look enters Gressil's eyes. "Now you understand. You are not Amelia Greyheart. You are not the Black Queen. You are little more than a con artist, one who can only fool the blind and stupid. Now that I have opened your eyes to the truth, you may leave. Go and tell your friends about your beloved Wordsmith. With luck, you'll soon deliver me the other one, and I may yet fulfill my goals. But please... move with haste. I am a patient demon, but I hunger for the coming era more and more every day."

Gressil chuckles to himself, then starts to walk away.

"Hah hah hah... yes. Soon, the Era of Chaos will descend upon this galaxy. What great fun we shall all have."

He fades into the distance, leaving Amelia to sob on the ground, her spirit broken, and countless memories filling her mind.

"No... no... Hope... it's all my fault... it's all my fault..."

>!This is what a spoiler looks like! Click it to reveal the text!!

Part 271: Ose's Exasperation

My head spins and tumbles like a washing machine falling from the sky. Nausea wracks my stomach and boils into my throat. Somehow, I keep myself together and hold my vomit, but when I open my eyes, the spinning doesn't stop.

My mind-wife, Phoebe, stands next to my head. I stare at her through the hazy, foggy film covering my eyes. Her body whirls and tumbles in front of me, even as I try to make out the words she says.

"Rep rum derr ruhun?"

Phoebe speaks. I close my eyes, unable to understand her. My body seemingly spins in place, disorienting me further as I try to wrap my head around my surroundings.

"RELL RUH PO LO RUHH RUHH?"

Phoebe's voice booms in my ears like the speakers to a heavy metal concert. I open my mouth to ask her to stop, but the only sounds that escape my lips are mumbled words even less comprehensible than her own.

"Juh luh rrrr holl husser ruhh?"

Every time Phoebe speaks, the nausea in my gut bubbles up again. Her booming voice makes me want to cry. I can't remember any point in my life where I felt as dizzy, disoriented, and sick to my stomach as right now. A ride on a plane dive-bombing toward the Earth while spinning a hundred times a second would feel like paradise in comparison- oh, fuck!

"Bluuurck!"

Unable to control myself any longer, I heave a massive spew of yesterday's dinner straight up into the air. My stomach-rot fires out of my mouth and nose, only to immediately fall back down and splash against my face, sickening me further.

"Bluur-huurk! Guuuhhh!"

Noises reminiscent of a vomiting dog burp from my mouth and nose. Before I can feel even the slightest sense of shame for what might be the lowest moment of my entire life, a wave of pleasure floods over me.

Immediately, the dizziness plaguing my body fades away, allowing me to open my eyes. The awful taste of bile pervades my mouth and burns my nose, but when I spot my mind-wife hovering over me, I feel a great sense of relief.

"Oh, thank heavens. You finally purged," Phoebe says. "Are you okay, Jason?"

I don't reply. I can't. I feel as if I'll throw up again any second. Instead, I shake my head.

Phoebe gets the message. "You still have a crapton of foreign energy contaminating your body. One moment, I'll get you all cleaned up."

Suddenly, ten flying saucers, each the size of a dinner plate, appear before my eyes. My heart jumps in alarm, making my nausea return greater than ever. I turn my head to the side and vomit again, with this second round making me feel even better than the first.

Little metal arms pop out of the tops and bottoms of the flying saucers. They fire beams of light at the vomit spewed all over my face and chest, and within seconds, the acrid liquid covering the area around me disappears, as if magically teleported to another dimension.

"What... happened...?" I ask, as I start to sit up. The moment I try to move, a burst of electricity explodes in my stomach, like a bomb formed from thunder. I yelp in pain and fall backward, bonking my head against the Cube's platform.

"Ose attacked you," Phoebe says. "Just lie down. I've spent hours trying to bring you back to life. Lord knows if I weren't here, you'd have needed weeks, if not months to purge that witch's evil magic from your system."

Before I can ask what Phoebe means, she continues, anticipating my question. "Remember? You started observing Tarus II, and then Ose detonated a burst of electricity in the sky. You instantly fainted, and it took me an hour to figure out what she did. Apparently, she released a burst of terrible energy into your Mind Realm. It didn't affect me or the Archangels, but it hit you like a sledgehammer to the face. Every time you moved, Ose's energy flared up and forced you back into a coma."

Still delirious, I shut my eyes to stop the world from spinning around me. "I... I see. Argh. Fuck, everything hurts so bad. I can't think at all."

"I'd say you're lucky to be alive, but I don't think Ose intended to kill you," Phoebe explains. "It's as we thought. Her plan is to capture the Wordsmiths, you and Hope both, and turn you into her puppets. If her goal was to overrun and slaughter humanity, I'm sure she could have done it by now. The fact she hasn't must mean she planned to lure you out of hiding, then render you unconscious with a sneak attack. Right now, since she can't get you, she's probably angling for me and Daisy. Err, for the 'real' me and Daisy. She wants to use us as hostages to get to you."

I nod my head, even while keeping my eyes shut. "Cowardly bitch."

"Not cowardly. Smart," Phoebe retorts. "I still haven't seen Hope show up on the battlefield, and I kept a pretty close eye on the holo-map while you were comatose. Ose might have captured him already, but I doubt that."

"Hope went into the Labyrinth," I say. "I don't know why, but he did. With her ability to control minds, Ose could easily have captured Hope and used him against humanity. The fact we haven't seen any signs of Wordsmithing probably means she hasn't located him yet."

I pause, then flutter open my eyes to look at Phoebe. "We haven't seen anything like that, right? What happened while I was under?"

Phoebe's expression turns grim. "Stay there, and don't move. I'll bring the holo-display to you."

She instantly disappears, then reappears several dozen feet away with her back to me. A moment later, she reappears at my side with a miniaturized model of the Tarus II battlefield playing out in real time.

"Son of a bitch..." I gasp. "So many demons. They have humanity surrounded from all sides!"

Phoebe nods. "They do, but we're still holding on. I can't contact anyone on the planet, not without your Wordsmithing, but the holo-map still shows me the situation. Daisy will soon board the last ship off the planet, while my main body has fallen comatose from exhaustion. She injected several neurostimulants to keep herself awake, but nearly died when her legs gave out while she was walking. She fell and cracked her head on a rock."

My heart flutters in fright. "Is Phoebe okay?! The other Phoebe, I mean. Is she alright?"

My mind-wife nods. "Yes, but she's unable to walk or move. She fought for over twenty-four hours straight. She ran herself absolutely ragged, as did many of her generals. She gave the others at least a couple of hours of sleep, but never rested once herself."

I grit my teeth and sigh. "Goddamnit, she's way too fucking stubborn."

"I'm right here, you know," My mind-wife says with a shake of her head. "Anyway, our forces are planning to ship her offworld along with Daisy. My other half and our daughter will leave the planet together on the last ship."

"Flesh Phoebe won't like that," I say. "She's, err, you're both unwilling to leave and allow the rest of your friends to stay behind and die. You'd rather stay and die with them than leave them to perish."

"I'm well aware of how I'd feel in this situation. And you're wrong," My mind-wife says. "I love all of my friends more than life itself... but in this situation, where I wouldn't know what happened to you, protecting Daisy would become my number one priority. I'd understand if everyone else forced me to leave under these circumstances, so long as it meant protecting our daughter."

Phoebe pauses for a half-breath. "By the way... 'Flesh Phoebe'? Can't we come up with better nicknames? I can accept 'mind-wife,' but flesh-wife is awfully dehumanizing, don't you think? How about 'Squishable Wife,' because of my lovely, squishy body, eh?"

"This really isn't the time for jokes," I groan. I try to sit up again, only for more electrical agony to erupt in my stomach. "Aaaaargh! Fucking Jesus, please tell me there's a way to stop this pain! I can't move an inch!"

After the wave of pain subsides, I regain a tiny bit of feeling in my arms and legs, making me frown as I sense faint movements coming from below my neck. I flick my eyes downward, only to see the other four-fifths of my body trembling, twitching, and spasming uncontrollably. No matter how I try, I can't regain the slightest bit of control over my limbs.

"What did Ose do to me?" I ask, not particularly expecting an answer. "If she had this kind of magical energy at her disposal, she could have captured me during my visit to her residence."

Phoebe shakes her head. "I don't think so. You forget, but your body is only about as hardy as any normal human. However, at that time, Kar was with you, as well as Blinker. I feel whatever Ose struck you with wasn't a particularly energetic cocktail of nastiness, so it would have crippled you, but it wouldn't have so much as tickled our monster friends. Moreover, the energy hurting you now doesn't have Ose's mana signature. I believe it comes from another demon, or a different being besides herself. She might not be able to activate it on command."

"Well, isn't that comforting?" I complain. "Forget me for a minute. What about the Subspace Interference Relays? Did you manage to finish them while I was out? Give me at least some good news. If we can shut down all subspace travel around Tarus II, we can prevent any other Warper Portals from opening."

Phoebe hesitates. "...Jason. Didn't you pay attention to Tarus II's present condition? Even if you came back right this instant and shut down every portal while ensuring no others opened, the demons now outnumber our entire combined military might ten times over. We're down to fewer than two million soldiers, but there are twenty-three million demons swarming us from all angles... and those are still only the tiniest fraction of Hell's armies. I gave up on the Relays."

My wife points at my chest. "Besides. If I hadn't switched gears, you'd probably have fallen comatose for weeks and died from starvation. You're lucky I was here, hubby. I reconfigured the Molecular Assembler so it would create Medical Drones capable of alleviating your symptoms, since I can't touch your body directly without assistance."

My heart skips a beat. "No! You shouldn't have stopped producing the SIR's! What good will it do us if I awaken here but can't stop the flow of demons attacking Tarus II? We're days away from home and the demons will only continue to expand their numbers while our soldiers dwindle."

"A lot changed while you were unconscious..." Phoebe murmurs. "You can't use your magic at all. Even if we had all the SIR's we need, we have no way to get them to Tarus II, and they won't do anything beyond delaying the inevitable."

Phoebe pauses to spread her arms out, gesturing at the space around us. "I came up with a new solution. After examining the properties of P-Space, I discovered I could shave multiple days off our travel time by taking manual control of Camael's Cube. When running on autopilot, it chooses the safest possible route to reach its destination. When manually controlled, though, I can guide it through much narrower choke-points near the gravity wells of planets, stars, and black holes. We're now only half a day, maybe one full day away from Tarus II, tops. Once we arrive, assuming I can heal you to normal, you can then use the Cube's power in the battle. At that point, the demons will have no choice but to flee."

Despite my annoyance, I force myself to take a deep breath and calm down. I mull over Phoebe's words for a moment, remember how much smarter than me she is, and conclude she did the best she could, considering the circumstances.

"...Alright. So what do we do now? Are these little drones of yours going to get me back on my feet soon?"

"Should only take a few hours," Phoebe replies. She turns around and looks off in the distance. "Hey, uh, Cheep-Cheep. Come here for a second."

After Phoebe calls out, a ball of red light rushes toward her. The Phoenix's soul stops a few feet away and bounces up and down. [Hi, hi! Here I am! What's wrong? Does the man-friend still have hurtness somewhere?]

"He does," Phoebe answers. "But he'll be okay. Jason, I had the Phoenix assist me with your recovery. She has a far better control of mana flow than anyone else here, especially me, but she couldn't do much while you were unconscious. I'm going to need you to help force out the remainder of Ose's 'cursed energy' along with Cheep-Cheep's assistance."

I frown. "Cheep-Cheep? Is that what we're calling the Phoenix now? Bit disrespectful for an ancient entity millions of times older than both of us combined."

[I think it's a cute name!] The Phoenix answers, lilting her voice. [You can call me Chirpy, too! Or Squawker! Or even Birdie!]

"No thanks, I'll pass," I grunt. "Just help me expel this mana poison, Phoenix. I'm counting on you."

The Phoenix bounces up and down in the air again. [Okay! But watch out! You're gonna spit that black and green liquid all over the floor again! It's really nasty. Yucky. Ew.]

"I'll cough up a lung if doing so gets me back on my feet," I groan. "I can always Wordsmith myself to full health later."

Phoebe clenches her fist. "That's the spirit. Okay, Jason, this next part will be pretty unpleasant, but I need you to follow my orders."

"You've got it," I reply.

As I follow my wife's instructions, my mind wanders to the situation on Tarus II.

I can only hope everyone will hold out long enough for me to return.

Tarus II. Second day, fifth hour.

Faint shimmerings of sunlight peek over the planet's sky. These rays of sunshine, the first glimmers of twilight, reveal a horrific scene of mass carnage, one with countless dead bodies of humans, monsters, and demons scattered haphazardly here and there across Tarus II's landscape. Half a dozen Planet-Walkers continue ripping demons to shreds on the Western Front, while Belial rampages around just as bloodthirstily as before, her rage unabated.

Ose, the Emperor of Infiltration, slowly walks out of Tarus II's Warpgate with Bael, the Duke of Pain, shuffling along behind her. She sniffs the bloody air, crinkling up her nose in disgust as waves of demons flood through the portal and sweep around her instinctively.

"Disgusting. I despise the smell of death."

Bael, his lone remaining eye glassy and unfocused, walks past Ose aimlessly. He chuckles under his breath. "Yeah? You think so? Doo-doo is a funny word. Hehe. Doo-doo. It's like poop, but it's doo-doo."

Ose flicks her eyes toward Bael's back. "Hey! Imbecile. Stop mumbling and get over here. Pay attention! I'm going to explain the plan- Bael! Bael, are you listening to me?"

The Third Emperor's expression shifts to annoyance as Bael continues walking forward, oblivious to the sound of her voice. With his right eye having been gouged out by the humans' horrifying anti-Bael barb, his crippled appearance makes him a pitiful sight to look at.

Bael stops and stares blankly into the distance. "That so? Yeah, I've heard of her. Yorflem-a-ling. That's a funny name. You're funny, Shax. We should talk more."

"Stop ignoring me!" Ose shouts. She walks over and pokes Bael's arm, only to wince as her finger twitches in pain.

Tch. Hellga's last-ditch solution repaired my fingers' dexterity, but any level of exertion still hurts like hell. I haven't any strength in my arms, but at least I can still weave magical signs.

Ose settles for nudging Bael with her elbow instead. However, the Duke of Pain completely ignores her prodding, forcing her to walk around and look him in the eye. "Bael! Hello! Is anyone home in there?!"

Bael's eye momentarily flickers in recognition. He gazes at Ose's sharp-featured and beautiful face until a spark of light appears in his eyes. "Huh? Oh! Murmur! It's you!"

Before Ose can react, Bael lunges toward her and spreads his arms out. He grabs Ose in a bear-hug and squeezes her hard, making countless demons nearby pause their rush toward the distant humans to stare in shock.

"Murmur! Heh, heh, heh! Long time no see, kiddo! You're still as cute as a bibby-bobby-balloon!"

Ose recoils in disgust. She tries to pull away from Bael's unexpected embrace, only to find her strength coming up short. "No! Get off me, you oblivious dunce! I am Ose, your Emperor! Bael! Bael, you fiendishly stupid lunkhead! What the devil has gotten into you?!"

Bael continues hugging Ose for several seconds until she sucks in a deep breath and fills her lungs with air.

BOOM!

Ose fires a thunderous shockwave from her mouth, flattening the terrain around her and sending demons flying. The sheer force of her point-black thunder-blast momentarily stuns Bael, loosening his grip enough for Ose to duck out of his arms and retreat several steps, disgust still in her eyes.

"Oww, ohh... my ears..." Bael grunts. The Duke of Pain rubs both of his eyes in frustration, only to lift his head in surprise when his right hand squishes around inside his now-empty eye socket. "Huh? Hehe. That feels funny. Poke. Poke. Hehe. Look Shax, no eye! It's all gone now. Bloop! Stupid eye made me mad, so I yoinked it out. Pretty cool, huh?"

He continues babbling at the empty air, making Ose stare at him in alarm.

"Devils. I didn't realize it before, but Bael is acting ten times more idiotic than usual. It seems the humans' attack did a number on him, halving his brain cells from two to one. And at a time like this! He's completely useless, now!"

Ose grits her teeth in frustration and balls up her fists, even when the sharp pain in her fingers makes her wince.

"I can't kill Belial alone, not as I am now. If I were at my peak, that might be possible, but at this moment, not even Artorias will be enough to assist me. Bael! Can you hear me? I need your help, you damned dimwit!"

Bael's eyes flicker. "Huh? Help?"

"Yes! Good, good boy! You can listen after all. Come here, Bael! Be a good little Hellhound!"

Ose sarcastically pats her legs, as if calling to Bael like a trained puppy. The Duke of Pain nods dumbly. He ambles over to Ose's side, accidentally stepping on the head of a demon Grunt who Ose sent flying moments before. Bael crushes the demon's skull, not even noticing the accidental murder.

When he arrives within a few feet of Ose, the Third Emperor flinches, half-expecting Bael to try and bear-hug her again. Luckily, he doesn't. He stands obediently in front of her, a blank expression on his face.

"...Are we gonna play a song now, Murmur?" Bael asks. "I wanna sing 'Rooty Tooty Fresh 'n Fruity.' That's my favorite."

"No! We're not going to play a song! You are going to help me kill Belial! Understand? Kill Belial. Bael! You... kill Belial. Belial dead. Understand?"

Slowly, Bael nods. "...Uh huh. Kill Belial."

"Great! Fantastic!" Ose exclaims. "He can be taught after all!"

Bael cocks his head. "But I don't like that song."

The Third Emperor freezes. "S-song? What song? What are you talking about?"

The Duke of Pain rolls his eye, acting as if Ose just asked the dumbest question he's ever heard. "Kill Belial. That's a bad song. I like the movie better."

"Ahhhh!! You... you're dumber than a sack of rocks!" Ose screams. "Seven Hells! It's not a bloody song! You need to help me kill Belial! This isn't complicated! Just swing your fists at her until she stops- ack!"

Like a robot following commands, Bael doesn't even let Ose finish her sentence before lunging toward her again. This time, he rears his arms back and starts trying to punch the Third Emperor, but she dodges just in the nick of time, evading his clumsy movements.

"What are you doing?!" Ose screeches, while ducking another punch. "You have to punch Belial, not me! Baaaaael!! You bottom-feeding sludgebrain!"

After ten seconds of failing to stop Bael's barrage with words, Ose finally gives up. Realizing she's lost any chance at communicating with the Duke of Pain, she motions with her hands and transforms into a bolt of lightning, flickering away to another position half a mile in the distance.

Ose pants like a mad dog. Her eyes turn bloodshot as the fury of a dying star erupts in her mind.

"All my minions are low IQ failures!! Garbage, worthless, and totally beyond redemption! Why must the Creator torture me like this?! How am I supposed to capture the Wordsmiths when I am the only competent being in the entire Hell of Damnation?!"

Among the flood of demons surrounding Ose, one Demon Lord overhears her outburst. He turns to look at her. "Emperor Ose? Are you alright? Did something happen?"

Sadly for him, his words only enrage Ose further. She whips her head in his direction, shooting him a bloodthirsty glare capable of freezing hellfire.

"Another imbecile, here to confound me with stupid questions!" Ose bellows. With a flick of her fingers, she fires a blast of lightning at the Lord, killing him before he can even lift a finger to protect himself. The Demon Lord explodes into ash, vaporized from existence by the sheer might of Ose's casual attack.

With her anger slightly vented, Ose grins feverishly.

"Fine! Fine. I don't need anyone else. I'll kill Belial myself, if that's what it takes. I'll show them. I'll show everyone!"

Ose locks onto Belial's mana signature two miles away. In no time at all, she scans the other demons nearby as well, quickly pinpointing two important mana signatures.

With a wave of her hand, Ose transforms into a bolt of lightning.

Fwip.

She instantly disappears and reappears a quarter-mile from Belial's position, directly adjacent to the first mana signature.

"Mara!" Ose snaps. "Show yourself."

A second later, Mara decloaks next to Ose, revealing her body as the invisibility spell hiding her presence disappears.

"What do you want?" Mara asks. "I'm busy trying to help Artorias slow Belial down. Are your hands and arms fixed already?"

"Somewhat," Ose says. "Forget Artorias. I have a new mission for you. Yama's Shades failed me, so I want you to infiltrate Hero City. Bypass the humans' front lines, prevent any others from escaping off-planet... and most importantly, capture Jason Hiro's daughter, Daisy Hiro. She is now your number one priority."

Mara blinks in surprise. "Huh? You're still trying to go for hostages at a time like this? We've nearly dealt the killing blow to humanity."

Ose shakes her head. Now that she's started talking to someone with a small modicum of intellect, her fury at Bael rapidly diminishes. "You don't understand. The Wordsmith's daughter is special. I've detected a small amount of Heroic Energy building up in her body. I don't know why, but somehow, she has become a Hero, like her father."

Mara's eyebrows jump in alarm. "What? A Hero?! You've got to be kidding me. I can understand two Wordsmiths, since Jason cloned himself, but how could his daughter become a Hero? Did he give her Heroic powers with his Wordsmithing?"

"I don't know, and that's not important right now," Ose answers. She glances around, checking to make sure Belial hasn't detected her presence yet. The former Second Emperor continues rampaging unabated, killing demons in a murderous frenzy and soaking the battlefield with their blood. "All that matters is you understand the risk moving forward. The brat had Belial to protect her earlier, but now all she has at her side are mere humans. With the Monster Royals encumbered in the east, and Belial distracted here, now is your best chance at capturing Daisy. Since we don't know what abilities she's manifested, you should proceed with caution. Hit her from the shadows before she can react. Knock her unconscious, and get out as quickly as possible."

"What about Phoebe Hiro?" Mara asks. "Should I try to capture her, too?"

"If you get a chance, by all means, go for it," Ose nods. "But otherwise, target the child. Not only is she a Hero, and thus a potential weapon for demonkind, but she's a valuable hostage, too. We must capture her at all costs."

"Alright. I understand," Mara says. "I won't disappoint you."

"You'd damn well bloody not!" Ose snaps. "I've had more than my share of failures reported during this campaign! No Wordsmiths sighted anywhere, Beelzebub captured, then buried beneath the planet's crust, and then the Shades perished, and now Bael is acting ten times dumber than usual. It's enough to make me rip my hair out!"

Mara winces sympathetically. "Well, even if the details don't all work out properly, the end of this campaign will arrive soon. Be careful during your fight with Belial, Emperor Ose. She's extremely powerful and dangerous beyond belief. You'll need to pull out all the stops to defeat her."

Ose's eyes turn cold. She exhales through her nose, then straightens her posture.

"Don't you worry about me, Mara. I've been planning Belial's death since long before your birth. After what Satan did to my mother... I'll never forgive him or his wench. Lucifer should have ruled the Hell of Damnation from the beginning, but Satan stole her birthright. How fitting that, in the end, she got her revenge on him. Hehehe..."

Mara stares at Ose questioningly, but doesn't speak out of turn or pry any further. "...I see. Well, I'm heading out, now. Take care of yourself, Ose."

Without another word, Mara turns and starts running eastward, pulling cards from her spiritual deck as she travels. Ose remains behind, her eyes locked on Belial's mana signature.

"...Finally, I shall wipe away the last of Satan's diehard followers. After Belial, I'll kill Diablo too. I shall be the only Emperor left in the Hell of Damnation. I shall unite the Seven Hells and turn our gaze outward. Only then will we be able to use the Wordsmith's power to its fullest extent."

She falls silent, retreating into her thoughts.

Even if I manage to capture both Wordsmiths and unite all seven Hells... I'll still have to defeat the Overlords. And beyond them? I will have to contain and destroy the Plague. But how can anyone consider such a monumental task simple? All that matters is capturing the Wordsmiths. Once I have them, I will forever have time on my side. Hell's power will never again wane.

For a brief moment, Ose smiles.

The universe is mine for the taking. I need only complete this war successfully, and never again will anybody be capable of opposing me.

>!This is what a spoiler looks like! Click it to reveal the text!!

Part 272: Zamiel's Siren Song

Tarus II's eastern front. Second day, sixth hour.

Kar and Blinker, the mightiest of all monsters, battle against an army of undead crocodiles. Mephisto, the Duke of Mist, hovers in the sky and cackles evilly while he summons one crocodile after another, coordinating with the Battle Brothers to attack the Sphinx from all sides.

Having spent six straight hours fighting, Kar's rage continues to escalate further every minute as he forces his way through the horde of his former family members. One of the undead in particular, Kar's former wife, Pyra, dogs him relentlessly, always attacking his back while screaming obscenities.

"You left me to die! You left our children to die! You abandoned our bodies to the necromancer! Perish, Kar! Perish and burn for all eternity!"

Pyra punches Kar's spine, but her weak, Demon Lord-level strength barely even catches his attention. The last living crocodile merely grits his teeth and ignores her, instead turning his attention toward Mephisto's mana signature.

"Smokey! You foul, disgusting graverobber! These cowardly tricks will not save you from my wrath! Hurgh!!"

The Battle Brothers, Zamiel and Duriel, duck down low and hide themselves among the several thousand crocodiles, cackling wickedly as they slither through their ranks, cautiously keeping out of Kar's reach.

"What's the matter, croccy?" Zamiel asks, his voice impossible to pinpoint. "Having trouble finding me? If only these useless 'reps' weren't in the way, you could easily slay me! What's taking you so long? Just kill all your friends! They're dead anyway!"

Zamiel's words jab Kar's heart cruelly, like poisonous barbs fired from a distance. The Sphinx winces, then glares in Zamiel's general direction.

"Show yourselves, murderers! I dare you to combat me directly, unless you lack the guts!"

A hail of claws and fists rains upon Kar's body. Some of the strongest undead crocodiles, standing near the top of the Baron ranks, manage to inflict a few light bruises on him, but still, Kar doesn't fight back. He merely holds up his arms to protect himself, sometimes shoving the strongest crocodiles away.

"Kar!" Blinker says, her voice magically transmitting to a position near the Monster King's head. "I know these people are your family... but we have to end their suffering! We have to kill them for good! Don't you see, gator-man? They're nothing more than Mephisto's puppets, now."

"I cannot do that," Kar immediately answers, his tone firm. "I will not end my family's lives! I will save them. I will bring them back from the dead."

He leaps into the air and flicks his eyes around for a split-second, then changes his direction mid-flight to fall toward Duriel's position. The bigger Battle Brother sticks out a little more from the crocodiles around him, especially with his pale, white, vampiric skin.

Kar dive-bombs Duriel, intending to stomp the younger brother's body into pulp. However, just before the Sphinx lands his surprise attack, Duriel motions with his hands and explodes into a cloud of bats. They scatter in all directions, causing Kar to impact the dirt uselessly.

"Hurgh! Damn!"

Kar curses Duriel's quick thinking, all while remembering how many times the Battle Brothers have evaded him during these past six hours.

Earlier, I beat both of the Battle Bastards around without any trouble... but now, having revealed their vampiric powers, they've somehow become ten times more slippery! They always dodge just before I can land a killing blow. Somehow, I must find a way to trick them!

As Kar mulls over his options, Blinker speaks to him again, her body cloaked invisibly somewhere nearby. "We can't bring the crocodiles back from the dead, Kar. It's pointless to even try! I know it hurts... but you have to let go."

"I refuse!" Kar snarls. He glances around and spots Pyra rushing toward him again, his former wife's figure sticking out from all the other crocodiles as a particularly heart-piercing memory within his mind. "You may not realize this, Butterfly... but Turtle and Rabbit have the power to save my people. They can undo Smokey's curse and revive my people from the grave!"

"No, they can't," Blinker retorts. "Nobody can bring back the dead. Not even a Wordsmith! Don't you remember? Jason told us it was impossible."

"The Wordsmiths might not be able to pull a soul back from the Great Beyond," Kar counters, as he pulls away from his rapidly-approaching former wife, "but they can still create new bodies from scratch. Smokey surely still has possession of my people's souls! He controls the River Styx, after all! Hurgh! That means if we can defeat him, Turtle and Rabbit can revive the crocodiles. We can save my people!!"

Blinker hesitates.

"That... I mean, that might be possible, Kar, but..."

"You see?!" Kar yells. "Even you must admit there is a chance! So please, you mustn't kill any crocodiles! Help me slay the Battle Bastards, and afterward, we can capture Smokey! Surely, we will be able to revive my species if we work together!"

"I..."

Blinker, protected behind a wall of illusory magic, gazes down at her husband from the sky. Her expression flickers between uncertainty and doubt. Seeing the look of pleading on Kar's face, she ultimately relents against her better judgement.

"...Okay. Alright. If this is what you want, Kar, then I'll help you. But you have to be careful! The Battle Brothers are way stronger than before, now that they've assumed their vampire forms!"

"I am not afraid of two pissant posturers," Kar snorts. The Sphinx raises his fists overhead, then swings them downward, bashing them against the planet's surface. Powerful shockwaves fire out in all directions, flinging all of the nearby crocodiles into the air, where they flail around helplessly for a few seconds before crashing upon their backs. "Rather, it is they who should fear ME!"

To the west of Kar's position, the aftershocks of his attack knock tens of thousands of humanity's soldiers off their feet. To the east, demonkind's forces also go flying. Even so, after both sides clamber back to their feet, a spark of realization appears on their faces.

"Hey, wait a minute!" A Demon Baron says. "Why are we just standin' around with our thumbs up our bums? it ain't only the Sphinx fightin' the Battle Brothers anymore. Mephisto's here, too! He's got a bunch of undead at his disposal. I say we attack the fleshbags while the Monster Royals are all tied up!"

Another Baron raises his eyebrows. "Wow, you're right! Good idea! I was super scared earlier, but look at the Sphinx now! He won't dare attack if it means his shitty dead croc friends might get hurt. Let's use those scalies as meatshields!"

"Yeah!" The demon army howls. "No more bullshit! Let's get in there and FIGHT!!"

Like a tsunami of blood, the red-skinned demon army suddenly surges forward, startling humanity's forces into action.

"Shit! What the hell? Everyone, get ready!" A nearby lieutenant shouts. "The demons are attacking! They aren't gonna hold back any longer!"

"Fuck. Why are there so many of 'em?!" Another soldier shouts. "There must be a million bloodskins coming this way!"

"Hold the line!"

Within seconds, humanity recognizes the incoming threat and jumps into action. The frontline soldiers assume their battle positions, with each one lining up to prepare cover fire for their battle-buddies. Mechanized defense troopers stabilize themselves, rooting their feet to the ground to ensure maximum accuracy with their heavy gunnery. Snipers jump into trees or line up along the eastern cliffsides, steadying their aim to take out any high-value targets. And finally, giant assault mechs form up in the backline, readying their cannons for long-range bombardments.

Half a minute later, the demon army floods into the valley where Kar and the undead crocodiles await. Kar reacts the instant he sees the invaders coming. "Why, you-! What guts you have!"

Kar jerks his claws upward to summon a wall of earth one mile wide, fifty feet tall, and five feet thick. The massive barrier momentarily stymies the demon's assault, but only until until a few hundred Burrowers jump out and punch the wall, using their earth manipulation to demolish it with the force of TNT explosions. The wall crumbles immediately, allowing the demons to overrun the undead crocodiles.

Pandemonium ensues. Kar's Emperor-level might allows him to stomp and kill anyone who enters his range without so much as breaking a sweat. Likewise, Blinker's area-of-effect projections and fairy magic give her a wide area of destructive force. Even so, they quickly realize that killing such a huge number of demons is an impossible task, made even more difficult when the demons grab Kar's undead family members and hold them up to use as hostages.

Kar fires a shotgun-blast of earthen bullets at a half-dozen Demon Lords approaching him, but then they grab several nearby crocodiles and hold them up, forcing Kar to halt his bullets' momentum with a quick flick of his wrists. "Cowards, the lot of you! How dare you use my people against me?!"

His hesitation to hurt the crocodiles emboldens the demon army further. "Bahaha! Looks like we guessed right, boys! The Sphinx cares too much about his precious family to hurt any of us! Let's push forward and rip apart the fleshies!"

Blinker watches in horror as the demon army wades through the crocodiles, using guerrilla tactics to avoid Kar's wrath. They push through the wall of scales and charge humanity's ranks, but to her relief, the demon army's treacherous tactics meet a hard limit when humanity's bullets start flying.

Ratatatata! Brrrrrt! Boom, boom!

A hailstorm of lead and explosions rips through demonkind's ranks. Suddenly, their brilliant strategy becomes an exercise in stupidity when the demons realize the undead crocodiles might be providing them with cover from Kar, but their sheer numbers are also slowing the demons' advance down enough for humanity to overwhelm them with bullets.

"Oh, shrakh! Bad move! Bad move!" One demon screams, only for his cries of fear to cut off abruptly. A sniper bullet pierces his skull, violently whipping his head backward and stopping his advance. He falls to the ground, followed by a second and third demon as they perish at the same spot.

"One bogey eliminated. Two. Three," The sniper says, counting his kills as he lays flat on his stomach atop the western ridge. "Baron spotted. I'm taking the shot. Dead. Mark four-one-five, a pair of Lords. First one down. Nice shot, Red Two."

"Same to you," A second sniper replies. "I think the little cunt pissed himself when he saw his brother die."

The soldiers all continue speaking, while the Centurion network transmits their chatter amongst one another as necessary.

Meanwhile, Kar resumes his attacks. He slowly begins working his way through the demon and crocodile army, eliminating anyone who stands in his way. Despite his inability to slaughter the demons en-masse, lest he accidentally kill any of his fellow crocodiles, Kar still proves more than capable of surgical strikes, killing individual demons even when they use his family as shields.

One Demon Lord holds the undead body of a crocodile child by the back of its neck. He dangles the croc in front of himself, sneering when the Sphinx glances his way. A moment later, Kar's eyes flash with rage. Like a snake in the grass, he 'swims' through the bodies around him and instantly arrives before the demon taunting him, causing his opponent's cocky smile to transform into a look of horror. Kar swipes the demon's neck with his claws, ripping his foe's head off effortlessly. The demon perishes where he stands, while Kar gently pulls the crocodile child out of his enemy's grasp and drops the kid to the dirt.

"Hurgh! Cowards, the whole lot of them. Damn! Where have the Battle Bastards gone? There are too many Barons in the area! Too many demons entirely! I can't tell one from the other!"

Kar continues swimming through the sea of flesh, killing every demon who gets in his way. The scaled predator uses his tail, claws, and teeth to their maximum potential, eviscerating his red-skinned foes one by one. Still, he finds himself unable to locate Duriel or Zamiel.

"Butterfly! Where have Ugly and Stupid gone? I cannot find either of the Battle Bastards!"

Blinker, flying high above her husband, focuses her eyes. She glances around the battlefield, yet finds herself just as confused as Kar. "I... I don't know, hubby! It's like they've melted into the crowd! I'm sure they're near you, but I can't get a bead on their positions! Keep your guard up. You might be able to take a hit from the other weaklings, but the Battle Brothers have bodies way stronger than ordinary Barons and Dukes. A single strike could mess you up!"

Kar nods. He swings his tail at a nearby demon, one who foolishly thought he could sneak up and assassinate the Sphinx. That fellow perishes instantly, never knowing that his death had arrived.

"Hurgh. Butterfly, have you any experience dealing with vampires?" Kar asks. "I only know tales regarding them from myths and legends. Never did I imagine they were real."

"I've heard that vampires can drink blood to empower themselves and heal their bodies," Blinker says, but that's all I know. It seems they can turn into bats, too. The Battle Brothers probably have other powers we don't know about, so be careful."

"You need not tell me twice," Kar grunts. The Sphinx leaps into the air and falls toward a dozen demons clumped together. He lands atop them and rips them to pieces before they can grab any crocodilian hostages, then jumps again, using his leapfrogging strategy to increase his killing speed.

Suddenly, a female voice cries out from the crowd.

"Aaah! K-Kar! Help me!"

The Monster King's heart skips a beat. He whirls around to see Zamiel standing proudly a hundred feet away, Pyra held in his grasp.

"Hey, 'scales'! Looky who I've got here! It's that ugly, slimy bitch you used to get all freaky with!"

Zamiel holds Pyra up by the back of her neck. The comparatively small and delicate crocodile hangs limp in his grasp, unable to fight back thanks to Mephisto's magic.

"Unhand her!" Kar roars. He starts to move toward Zamiel, only for the eldest Battle Brother to grin evilly.

"Don't move," Zamiel rasps, revealing his teeth. "Take one more step, and I'll snap this froggy's neck. Maybe your Wordsmith friend can bring her back as she is now, but The Boss's undead die forever if you kill 'em a second time. You only get one do-over, Sphinx! It'd be a real shame if this were the last time you ever saw the old lady!"

Kar freezes in place. He stares, wide-eyed, as Zamiel squeezes Pyra's neck tighter than before.

A faint cloudy mist spreads across the battlefield, its chilliness mirroring the cold fear in Kar's heart.

"If you kill Pyra, there won't be anything stopping me from ending your life..." the Sphinx snarls.

"You've spent the last six hours trying to kill me and failed every time," Zamiel retorts. "That's the thing about becoming a vampire, crocco! We're awfully hard to put down."

The eldest Battle Brother takes a step toward Kar. "Here's the deal, Sphinx! Give up now! Tell these humans to surrender, as well as all the others around Tarus II! Tell everyone to surrender, and the slaughter will stop! No more dead humans! Be a good little croc. Accept defeat, and all your troubles will come to an end."

Zamiel pauses for a moment before continuing. "The Boss'll give you back the crocs, and you can have your Wordsmith pal revive 'em before living happily ever after. Everything you said was true, buddy-boy. Their bodies died once, but the Boss says a Wordsmith can bring the undead back to life. Just think about it! You could reunite with your old flame, maybe even bring back the little tykes too! Doesn't that sound like a good deal? Of course, it'll be a shame for your current gal, but hey, that's just how the die falls, sometimes. Life ain't fair."

Zamiel lazily glances up at the sky, as if to look for Blinker. He doesn't see her, but the mere gesture makes Kar's heart skip a beat.

The Sphinx pauses, unsure of what to do.

My wife... Pyra. I... I could reunite with her. I could bring her back! Not just Pyra, but my children, too. My entire village. My species! Turtle and Rabbit could bring them back. Even Smokey says so!

Pyra continues to hang in Zamiel's grasp. She gazes at Kar pleadingly, making his hesitation intensify. "Kar, please... we need you!"

"Don't listen to him!" Blinker says, speaking to Kar from afar. "You can't trust the demons! These are the same jerks who killed all the crocs! They're just using your people against you! If you agree to their demands, we'll lose the war, and they won't have any reason to keep their promise!"

Kar's entire body starts to tremble. "But... Pyra... Butterfly, she could... she could return..."

"There's no way Jason or Hope could bring the undead back to life!" Blinker replies. "Zamiel is lying! I'm sure of it. Don't believe him, gator-man!"

A strange look appears in Kar's eyes, he flicks his gaze into the sky, then back to Pyra.

"Butterfly. Are you sure you are not saying such things... because of jealousy?"

Blinker's eyes become as wide as saucers. "...What?! What do you mean?"

"Perhaps you do not wish for me to reunite with Pyra..." Kar murmurs. "You... you only want me for yourself. You don't want me to bring my people back, because then you might lose me."

Blinker stares in shock at her husband, the Sphinx. "Kar... Kar, that isn't true. How could you say something like that? How could you think such a hurtful thing? I... I love you. I always have!"

"Of course you do..." Kar continues. "But perhaps, in the back of your mind, greed has clouded your judgment. Perhaps, due to these unforeseen circumstances, you wish to deny me my chance at redemption."

Blinker falls silent. She opens her mouth several times to speak, but instead, only tears form in her eyes.

"Kar... Kar..."

She squeezes her tiny little hands into fists, then presses them against her eyes.

"Stupid! You big bully! I'll always love you to the ends of the galaxy! Even if... even if you threw me away for Pyra, I'd still love you! I'd happily stay your side-gal, even if you never loved me again!"

Her reply causes Kar to fall silent. He gazes at Zamiel emotionlessly, trying desperately to wrestle with the choices in his mind.

"What'll it be, croc?" Zamiel asks, his evil grin spreading from one side of his face all the way to the other. "Should I snap the broad's neck right here and now? Maybe that Wordsmith can't do anything anyway, huh? Guess that's the extent of your love. I bet you never cared about her at all."

"Shut your mouth!!" Kar roars. "You are a psychopathic murderer! Do not lecture me, you tiny, insignificant BUG!"

Kar summons mana to his heart and fists. Bloodlust ignites in his eyes as he stares Zamiel down. But still, he doesn't make a move.

The early morning fog engulfing the battlefield continues to condense, further isolating Kar and Zamiel from the battles around them.

Zamiel, unmoved, remains in place. His sinister smirk fades away, replaced instead with a look of boredom.

"Are you gonna do somethin' or what? Come on. Come over here. Hit me, croc. What's the matter? Ah, I see how it is. You know you won't be able to move fast enough to kill me, not before I perform a little snappy-snappy on this broad. Even if you succeed, the Boss can kill all of these crocs with wave of his hand. Their lives rest in his grasp."

Kar's heartbeat quickens, speeding up like crazy. Several crocodiles punch him, but he ignores their feeble attacks, focusing his tunnel-vision on Zamiel and Pyra.

"...I cannot trust you..." Kar mutters. "You'll kill all of my people anyway, no matter what I do."

"Oh, please, get over yourself," Zamiel counters. "Do you really think that's the case? Climb down off your high horse, pal. I don't give a shit about you or anyone else. I'm a selfish bastard. I didn't kill your people because I hated them. I did it because of their juicy, tasty blood. Killing the crocs made me and my bro super strong, way more so than any other Baron at the time. If I say I'll let you keep the crocs, I mean it; same for the Boss."

Zamiel leans forward and lowers his voice. "Think about it, Sphinx. We only came here to stop the fleshbags. You're just in the way. Why do you even care about these fleshies? Don't you understand? They're only using you. All these humans just see you as a meatshield; someone to soak up the damage while they hang back and shoot us demons from afar. You call me a coward, but the very people you've chosen to protect are just as bad! Screw these fleshies, Sphinx! Join up with the demons and get your people back. We ain't got no beef, pal! I may have killed the crocs, but look! They're right here, just waiting for you to revive them!"

Like an adept fisherman, Zamiel drops one last piece of bait. "Besides, crocco... even if the Wordsmith can't bring back your friends, what about your mother? What about Marie? Don't you have any faith in her? I hear she's a real smart cookie. I bet she could think of some revival method, provided my Boss gives you the souls and bodies of your people."

Kar's body slowly stops trembling.

"Mother..."

The Sphinx's eyes lose a bit of the rage they once held. The distant sounds of gunfire grow silent in the Sphinx's mind as the battlefield fog thickens even further.

Cautiously, the Sphinx lowers his fists to his side.

"You. Ugly. Do you swear to keep your word? Do you swear to give me back my family? To return the crocodiles to me, unharmed?"

Zamiel nods unsmilingly. "Of course I do, champ. This is just business. I ain't got any reason to make an enemy of Hell's strongest monster, after all."

Kar closes his eyes.

"I see... then... in that case..."

Blinker watches, her heart clenching up, as Kar makes his decision. "No... Kar, no... he's a liar..."

Kar releases a turbid breath.

The Sphinx opens his eyes, and smiles at Zamiel.

"...I refuse."

Suddenly, and without warning, Kar swivels around, revolving on his heel. He lunges his fist at a position behind himself, punching a seemingly random spot amidst the fog.

BOOOM!!!

Kar's fist connects with a nearly invisible figure, one whose body all but perfectly blended together with the misty battlefield.

Duriel, the younger of the Battle Brothers, gets no chance to react as the Sphinx's fist strikes his face. Every ounce of Kar's might transmits into the Baron's head, crushes his skull, and sprays his brains violently backward in a cone of blood.

CRACK!

For a split-second, time seems to freeze for Zamiel. He watches in disbelief as his brother's head vanishes, followed momentarily by the entirety of his upper torso. His legs, stomach, and arms scatter away to the four fucking winds, leaving nothing behind but the memory of his existence.

After a moment of deliberation, Kar lowers his fist. He turns to look at Zamiel, then shakes his head disapprovingly.

"You stupid child. Did you think you could fool this predator? Did you think your clumsy assassination attempt would succeed against one whose body is most adept in the fog of a swamp?"

Zamiel takes a step back, shock in his eyes. "L-Little Bro... you... you killed him."

Dark fire smolders in Kar's chest. As the fog around the battlefield rapidly begins to dissipate, the Sphinx exhales deeply, readying himself for the hardest choice he has ever had to make in his life.

"Butterfly is right. I cannot revive my people. Even if I could, doing so at the cost of my friends' lives would bring only shame upon the crocodiles. I would sooner die than force such a terrible humiliation upon my people."

Kar raises his hand. He extends a finger to point at Pyra, then shakes his head.

"Besides. Do you believe such a pathetic deception would fool me? My beloved would never curse me as that puppet did. She would never blame me for her death, since she was a kind woman who cared deeply about my feelings. Whatever soul you've stuffed in Pyra's body, it most certainly is not hers."

Blinker, watching from above, covers her mouth with her hands. Tears stream down her face as she realizes just how clever her husband's deception was. "Kar... you big, mean bully... haha... you even fooled me."

Zamiel stares at Kar with wide eyes. After several seconds, his pupils expand, giving him a glassy-eyed appearance. He tosses Pyra aside like a ragdoll, then nods slowly.

"I see. So that's how it is. You... you spawn of a broodmother. You killed my little bro. That mistake will cost you dearly."

Kar smiles. "An eye for an eye, Battle Bastard."

Zamiel shakes his head. "Not quite. There's something about my brother and me that you don't know, croccy. We share everything. Food. Lovers. Powers. We even share... our strength."

A sense of danger tingles in the back of Kar's mind. He turns around just in time to see the remnants of Duriel's corpse fading away and turning to ash. In that moment, all of Duriel's Baron-level strength transforms into a blood-red mist, congeals in the air, and flies toward Zamiel!

The older Battle Brother reveals no expression of delight as his younger brother's mana floods into his body. In the blink of an eye, Zamiel's strength explodes, blasting him through the limits of the Demon Baron level and straight up to Demon Duke. His height increases by several inches, along with the length of his horns. His muscles expand. His skin becomes younger and more taut, giving him a menacing appearance far scarier than before.

Kar observes silently as his opponent doubles, triples, and even quadruples his strength. In the end, his might reaches the apex of the Demon Duke realm, outputting a tremendous amount of demonic energy throughout the local area.

Zamiel closes his eyes and inhales deeply. His appearance, much more handsome than before, also drips with the sensation of unfathomable evil.

"I told you, croccy. Killing my brother was the last mistake you will ever make."

Kar's eyes flicker.

"And I told you, Ugly. I will avenge my people."

>!This is what a spoiler looks like! Click it to reveal the text!!

Part 273: Sphinx-Slayer

Recommended Listening

Zamiel's eyes glisten with tears of rage. The essence of his younger brother, Duriel, flows through his veins, simultaneously empowering him while also reminding him of that which he's lost. His carnivorous gaze fixates upon the Monster King as he imagines the taste of the crocodile's flesh he'll soon consume.

"You worthless rep..." Zamiel growls. "My little bro and me were gonna stay together forever! We were both gonna become Dukes, and eventually Emperors. But now we can't! And it's all because of YOU!"

He stomps his foot against the ground, causing an earthquake for a mile in every direction. With that impact, Zamiel flings himself forward and lunges at Kar while motioning with his hands to cast a summoning spell.

"I will consign you to oblivion!!" Zamiel shrieks.

He spreads out his arms. Magical particles swirl in his palms, morph into a greatsword in his right hand and a greathammer in his left.

Kar's eyes flicker with recognition. In his evolution to Duke, it seems Ugly has gained the power to conjure both bladed and blunt weapons!

Kar leaps to the right, evading Zamiel's first strike. The Battle Brother swings his greathammer down and smashes it against Tarus II's soil, the impact of which creates a tidal wave of dirt and stone, sweeping into the demon army to send them flying. Countless Demon Grunts perish to the unexpected avalanche, while the hardier ones manage to survive with mere bruises and scratches.

Zamiel puts all of his strength into that single strike, causing Kar to narrow his eyes in alarm. Ugly's body is far stronger than any other Duke I've met. His strength might reach as high as the Emperor-level!

What follows are ten minutes of unabated fury. Zamiel unleashes all of his hatred against the Monster King, while Kar fights more passively than before. Zamiel slashes and smashes Kar, striking him with his greatsword and hammer repeatedly, all while Kar deflects or dodges the most dangerous blows.

Blinker, watching from above, gasps in fright. She uses her magic to shield Kar some of the time while also teleporting her husband out of harm's way if he moves a half-step too slow. With their combined powers, they quickly start turning the tides against Zamiel, allowing Kar to push back against the eldest Battle Brother's frenzied attacks.

However...

While Blinker works to protect her husband, another figure lurks amidst the demons and crocodiles. Rather than dealing with the Sphinx, he turns his attention skyward, to the carefully concealed Monster Queen.

"Ksss..." Mephisto hisses, as the Duke of Mist floats among the demons and undead crocodiles on the ground. He dives under the planet's surface, keeping only his eyes above the soil. "Zamiel'sss powerup wasss more efficient than I expected... kekeke! What a wassste it would be if I allowed him to die here!"

Mephisto waves his hands. Instantly, a horde of ethereal monsters materializes next to him; the Wraiths who summoned themselves to Tarus II during the first day's battle. These ghost-like creatures moan and shriek, their voices disappearing into the soil surrounding them.

"Kekeke! Go, my prettiesss! Sssearch for the Sssphinx'sss wife. That wretched little fairy will not be able to avoid the eyesss of those whossse visssion remainsss unssstymied by the mortal realm!"

With a wave of his hand, Mephisto dispatches his ghosts into the sky. They fly around at ludicrous speeds, executing turns and spins that would make any fighter jet pilot blush with shame. Within seconds, one of the Wraiths screeches out loud, alerting the others. In unison, all fifty of them jerk their heads in the direction the first one indicated. There, they spot faint distortions in the air; the telltale signs of illusory camouflage.

Like a pack of hyenas, they race toward Blinker, whose heart jumps into her throat. "Ack!"

She teleports away, using her spatial magic to evade the wraiths. However, when she reappears, her body creates additional ripples that again draw the Wraith's attention. They continue chasing after her, playing a deadly game of cat and mouse, one where the loser will perish horribly.

Mephisto grins evilly. "Gooooood! Yesss, sssuccesss! Now, while the Monster Queen evades my mossst ghassstly minionsss, I ssshall dissspatch othersss to intercccept her!"

He begins conjuring other, much stronger undead beings, such as Bone Drakes, a dozen Gargoyles, and many random birds and bats. The weakest creatures serve as nothing more than annoyances to Blinker, but they also work to distract her, peppering her position wherever she reappears with pecks and scratches. The stronger monsters pose a genuine threat to the six-inch tall fairy, though she does use her small stature to evade their attacks.

Meanwhile, without his wife's support, Kar's increasing battle momentum loses steam, causing his attacks to stagnate. He quickly finds himself on the backfoot, allowing Zamiel to press the advantage.

The newly arisen Duke cackles maniacally. "Oh, what great power! What frightening speed! Are you scared, little lizard?! You should be! I have become the mightiest Duke amongst all of demonkind!"

Zamiel bashes Kar's shoulder with his greathammer, knocking the Sphinx backward like a ping-pong ball. Kar quickly reorients himself with his tail, then lands upright on his feet.

"Hurgh! You are indeed a mighty Duke, Ugly! Sadly for you, I am an Emperor! You cannot measure up to me. And so, I will end your life today as remuneration for all the wicked deeds you have wrought!"

Kar digs his claws into the soil. He dives underground for a moment, then bursts back out, his body covered in rock and dirt. The earthen debris rapidly hardens and solidifies, transforming into diamond-like armor.

"What a great trick!" Zamiel laughs. "Oh, I can only imagine what might happen once I kill you! Surely you must know, little lizard! After you perish, your Sphinx magic will transfer to me! I'll become the mightiest demon in existence, even without the title of Emperor! My power shall reach the stratosphere, while my influence will touch every end of the galaxy!"

Kar assumes a defensive posture. He snorts derisively. "Hurgh. You are an arrogant brat; a stupid child suffering from delusions of grandeur. All these years, I wondered what sort of bastards could have killed my people... but it turned out to be a pair of tiny, small-minded whelps, barely worthy of my attention. How shameful! If only a truly powerful being, such as Bael, had slain my people, at least they could have perished honorably! Instead, their slayers were nothing more than insignificant little worms."

"Bael? Bael?!" Zamiel howls. "The so-called First Duke is no longer anything in my eyes but a gnat! Look at this body, this perfectly sculpted weapon formed by the Creator's hands! It is clear to me that the path I walk is no longer one comparable to any other demon."

Zamiel pauses for half a breath. He glances into the sky, where Mephisto's demons continue attacking Blinker. Then, he smiles.

Heh heh. Why should I serve Mephisto any longer? My 'Boss' no longer outranks me. Rather, it is I who towers over him! Mephisto should be grateful knowing he raised the future leader of demonkind. Provided he follows my orders, I will allow him to stay at my side as a loyal dog! Hehehe!

The eldest Battle Brother snickers to himself, keeping his intentions hidden from the demon who elevated him to his current heights. After a moment of deliberation, he raises both of his weapons in an X-shape before his chest.

"Hey, croccy! Now that I am a Duke, it seems I need a new title. I believe I've just thought of the perfect one! Tell me... what do you think of 'The Emperor-Slayer?' Is it not fitting? After I rip you apart and avenge my brother, none shall consider such a title inappropriate!"

Kar's eyes flicker with disgust. "Such conceit. You may call yourself whatever you wish, but I will continue to refer to you by the name which best suits you, Ugly."

"After I break your body," Zamiel snarls, "I will capture your wife and feed her to the Hellhounds. That is the end most appropriate for those who defy their future god!"

Zamiel lunges toward Kar, and Kar matches his movements equally.

A clash of cataclysmic proportions erupts across the battlefield. Zamiel's weapons slam against Kar's armored body, while Kar retorts by punching, kicking, and tail-swiping his foe. The shockwaves caused by their fists send many demons flying or scurrying away. Soon, the valley's flow of demons slows to a stop, giving the humans to the west a bit of a reprieve. Nobody dares to enter within a thousand paces of Kar and Zamiel, instead watching with either bloodthirsty or fearful gazes.

"Lucifer's tits! Just look at Zamiel go!" One of the Demon Barons crows. "Is that the strength of a Duke?! I saw Bael fight Barbatos a few years ago, but their battle wasn't anywhere near this level!"

"This is just nuts..." A Demon Lord mutters. "I've never seen a battle like this in all my life. If I become a Duke, will I become as strong as Zamiel? Isn't he practically at Diablo's level?"

"Forget Zamiel," A Harpy says,. "Aren't you two ignoring the Monster King? Kar might not be a demon, but look at his overwhelming power. His strength easily reaches the level of a Demon Emperor. Have you ever heard of a monster capable of outmatching a Duke?"

The Demon Baron glares at the Harpy. "What, are you planning to join his side now? Kar is only strong because of the Sphinx's power. Everyone knows that. But once Zamiel kills Kar, he will become the new Sphinx."

"A half-monster," The Demon Lord says, his voice ringing with disgust. "Tch. For a monster to attain the same level as a Demon Emperor, this is a stain the historical scrolls won't soon forget. No doubt, Zamiel will gladly accept all of that power, but it must disgust him to absorb the strength of his inferior."

The Harpy falls silent. He lowers his eyes, feeling a bit ashamed by the two demons' conversation. However, he doesn't offer a retort, due to the shame they heap upon him.

They're right, the Harpy thinks. Monster King Kar is an incredible being... but no matter how strong he is, us normal monsters are just not as strong as demons. We'll always suffer under their thumbs, with no possibility of escape.

The demon army continues to hold back and watch, while Kar's crocodilian relatives also keep their distance, unable to draw any closer to the battle between the Duke and Emperor.

Over and over, Kar pummels Zamiel, while Zamiel retaliates in kind. The Emperor-Slayer cackles with glee as he flexes more and more of his newfound strength.

I always knew obtaining the powers of a vampire would strengthen my body, but never could I have imagined it would be to this extent!" Zamiel exclaims. "If only my little bro could see me now!"

However, despite his victorious words, Zamiel's unending onslaught never quite reaches its apex. Time after time, he lands what he thinks is a killing blow, only for the attack to barely knock Kar backward. Then, Kar retaliates with an equally powerful blow, one that stuns Zamiel with its ferocity.

After another hour passes, frustration wells up in Zamiel's heart.

Tch! This filthy scaled rat! Why can't I kill him? Is his stamina inexhaustible?! How many times must I stab and bash this slimy bastard before he succumbs to his wounds? I'm in no danger of dying anytime soon, but it seems the Sphinx isn't, either! Confound him!

During a momentary lull in the fighting, Zamiel flicks his eyes upward, where he spots Mephisto and Blinker still engaged in combat.

The Duke of Mist hasn't yet slain the Monster Queen. Perhaps he can't. After all, she too is an Emperor! If something doesn't change, our battles are liable to drag on for weeks!

When Kar charges at Zamiel again, the Battle Brother hesitates.

I can keep fighting the Monster King all day, but it won't alter the result. Perhaps, instead, I should try a different strategy.

A vicious glint appears in Zamiel's eyes. Just before Kar reaches him, Zamiel explodes into a cloud of bats, causing the Sphinx's attack to whiff his afterimage harmlessly. Immediately, Kar goes on the defensive, glancing around to await his enemy's reformation.

Without warning, several horrified screams erupt to the west. Kar whirls on his heel to find Zamiel wreaking havoc upon humanity's soldiers. He appears in the center of their formation and unleashes his magic, slaughtering dozens of humans before they can react. Within seconds, the Battle Brother kills more than two hundred men, women, and monsters, sending waves of panic throughout their ranks.

"Oh, God! He's here! He's-"

A voice cuts off as the speaker's head leaves their body.

"Fire! Shoot him, goddammit!"

"Mark! He killed Mark!"

"Where are the snipers?! Why aren't the mechs attacking?!"

The mecha pilots become frozen momentarily in shock over Zamiel's appearance, then regain their wits, only to freeze again when they realize shooting Zamiel will also mean firing explosive munitions into the heart of their battle-lines.

"What do I do?" One pilot asks, his hands shaking with fright. "If I shoot Zamiel, I'll kill-"

"Just start shooting!" A different mecha pilot exclaims. "Don't hold back! Our friends are dead anyway!"

A hailstorm of bullets and explosions rings out. Humanity's soldiers force all sensations of fear into the back of their minds, quickly swapping them with fury. They blast Zamiel from the backlines, unloading heavy munitions, sniper bullets, and explosive shells upon his Duke-level mana signature. Many of their fellow soldiers perish in the crossfire, but nobody lets up their assault, since they have no hope of survival with a Demon Duke in their midst.

Zamiel responds by transforming into bats, scattering to the wind, and reappearing amidst another dense cluster of soldiers.

In less than thirty seconds, Zamiel causes humanity's defenses to fall apart, giving Kar no time to react.

"That bastard!" Kar roars. He starts running toward Zamiel, only to realize that with this move, he's also opened up the valley to the demon army. The moment his fight against Zamiel pauses, the demons lying in wait begin rushing forward, eager to join their brother.

"Haha!" The Demon Baron from before laughs. "That Zamiel, I knew he was a genius! If the Sphinx attacks us, Zamiel will kill the fleshbags, but if the Sphinx tries to stop Zamiel, we can kill the fleshbags ourselves! It's a win-win!"

His excitement, boosted by Zamiel's equal level of power to the Monster King, suddenly meets an impenetrable barrier.

Kar pauses mid-stride. Despite the distant screams of his friends and comrades, he turns to face the demon army alone.

"Hurgh. Against such terrible agents of evil, I must once again go all-out. I must show these bastards the true might of the Last Crocodile."

Kar claps his claws together. He performs several rapid motions with his fingers, lifts his palms overhead, then slams his fists into the planet's surface.

Thoom!

The impact momentarily causes every demon and monster charging Kar to stumble and trip. By the time they steady themselves, they find that Kar is no longer alone.

Dozens and dozens of dirt, mud, rock, and diamond Golems emerge from the planet's soil. Each one reaches the same height as Kar himself, their imposing figures causing fear to well up in the hearts of the demons.

"Th-that's the Monster King's golemancy!" A Demon Lord exclaims. "He used that magic to protect the Labyrinth Core for an entire day! If Ose hadn't shown up and taken him out with one blow, we might never have broken through!"

"I thought the Sphinx could only summon dirt elementals," The Demon Baron says. "How did he create even stronger golems?"

"The Labyrinth's soil must have been too brittle to create stone and diamond golems," The Harpie from earlier explains. "But Tarus II's soil is rich in nutrients and life. If we enter the valley... we're sure to die!"

Several Burrower Grunts step forward. "Hah! No worries! We're strong against earth-type enemies! Once we crush those golems, nothing will stand in our way!"

They charge into the valley, all while the Demon Baron's heart jumps into his throat. "No, you idiots! Your magic is far too weak to counter the Monster King's! Stop! I'm ordering you to- oh, shrakh."

He watches, helplessly, as Kar's army of golems moves to intercept the Burrower Grunts. Seconds later, all forty of the idiot demons end up squashed into meat paste beneath the claws and feet of Kar's constructs.

Satisfied, Kar turns on his heel and runs west, rushing to save his friends.

"Lucifer's tits!" The Baron exclaims. "What rotten luck! We can't just stand here, twiddling our thumbs. Alright, listen up, maggots! We can destroy those golems, but we'll have to work together..."

He starts detailing a plan to take out the golems, but Kar pays the demon army no more mind. He already knows his constructs won't last forever. Their only purpose is to slow down the demons long enough for him to take out Zamiel.

Kar's eyes flash with a sinister light.

For you to attack my pet humans... you are a bold one, Battle Bastard. It seems the time for fun and games has ended. I wanted to toy with you... to teach you the meaning of despair... but like all demons, you made the cowardly choice to use my pets against me.

Kar leaps into the sky. As he does, he closes his eyes and presses his palms together.

I shall show you the reason why I am the strongest monster in all of Hell.

A calm serenity swallows Kar. As his figure hurtles skyward, time seems to slow to a crawl.

His body shifts, changes, and morphs. Kar's scales soften, then disappear. Feathers appear along his back and the tops of his arms and legs, while thick, woolen fur sprouts along his underside.

His crocodilian head changes shape. In its place, a Lion's eyes and teeth pop into existence. Eagle wings sprout from his back, while his body shifts from a bipedal form to a quadrupedal one.

Kar completes his transformation into the Sphinx. He attains his maximum power, a level so profound that demons all across Tarus II instinctively flick their eyes in his general direction.

The King descends from on high, falling upon Zamiel's rampaging figure with the speed and grace of a diving hawk.

BOOM!!

Kar crashes into Zamiel, his swiftness fully catching the Duke by surprise. He strikes the Battle Brother from behind with such force that Zamiel inadvertently opens his mouth to gasp as he scrapes along the ground, inhaling several mouthfuls of dirt and grass.

The Sphinx grabs Zamiel's wrists with his front paws and his ankles with his back paws. Kar pins his opponent to the ground, only pausing momentarily to glance at the countless dead humans surrounding him.

"Battle Bashtard. Your reign of terror endsh here!" Kar roars, his words drawling due to his lion-like mouth.

"Kuak!" Zamiel coughs, spewing the accidentally-inhaled dirt from his mouth. He tries to motion with his hands to transform into a swarm of bats, but with his arms pinned, he can't complete the signs. "Get off me! You spawn of a...!!"

Kar gazes at the back of his enemy's neck. He opens his mouth and lunges toward Zamiel, aiming for the kill.

Suddenly, Zamiel's body tenses up. As if realizing something important, the Battle Brother hesitates, and a sinister gleam enters his eyes.

He makes a single quick motion with his right hand, instantly causing his upper torso to become as hard as steel.

Chomp!

Kar bites the back of Zamiel's neck, causing two of his front teeth to snap. Instead of his enamel meeting Zamiel's soft, juicy flesh, Kar chomps down onto a block of ultra-hardened metal, shattering his molars and causing blinding pain to erupt in his brain. "Aaaargh!"

Momentarily stunned, Kar squeezes his eyes shut, giving Zamiel a chance to break his left arm free. He wrestles it out of Kar's grasp and quickly forms a magical sign, transforming himself into bats.

By the time Kar recovers, he discovers his opponent has disappeared. He looks around to find Zamiel standing a short distance away, sweat dripping down his forehead.

"Hah... hah... you shit-licking croc!" Zamiel curses. "You almost had me! Almost!"

Kar's two broken teeth continuously send pulses of pain into his gums. However, with a quick infusion of mana, they regrow, aided in part by his reptilian biology.

"What a fashinating ability..." Kar growls. "Perhapsh a new power? Your rishe to Duke wash not in vain after all."

Zamiel smiles, but his expression betrays a hint of fear. Kar's Sphinx transformation leaves him with an uneasy feeling in the pit of his stomach, a sensation caused by the difference in strength between a crow and an eagle.

Quickly, the humans surrounding Kar and Zamiel begin to clear the area. As they do, Zamiel cocks his head. He glances at the corpses around him, each dead fleshbag leaving a strange impression on his brain unlike any he's experienced in his life.

Hm? What's this? Their blood... it calls out to me differently from before.

Reflexively, Zamiel flicks his fingers. The fresh, warm, crimson liquid spewing from the dead bodies around him leaps into the air, then flies in his direction. Kar, uncertain what is happening, only watches in confusion as Zamiel absorbs the blood of several hundred humans through his skin.

A moment later, Zamiel coughs violently. "Kah! Kahak!"

He falls to his knees and presses his palms against the dirt. A sense of disorientation seeps into his mind, along with huge, incredible, overwhelming waves of information.

"...I see. I see! Haha! Kahak! So that's how it is!"

Zamiel's demonic eyes turn completely red as his vampiric side takes over. He greedily yanks as much blood as possible to himself, gulping it down like fries soaked in ketchup.

A few seconds later, he jumps to his feet. His body becomes much more limber and supple than before, and his muscles stretch taut. More importantly, a fresh glimmer of intelligence bubbles in his eyes.

"How unfortunate for you, Monster King, but I have just learned something important."

"Doesh it relate to the uglinesh of your face?" Kar quips.

"It turns out vampires don't only strengthen their bodies by ingesting blood," Zamiel continues, ignoring Kar's sarcasm. "We also evolve our minds!"

Zamiel motions with his hands. Kar crouches low, readying himself to spring into action. However, instead of rushing toward the Sphinx, Zamiel simply stands in place while magical particles transform the air in front of him.

Five seconds later, Kar's eyes nearly pop out of their sockets. A humongous minigun materializes before Zamiel, one with a revolving, multi-barreled chamber. Powered by magical energy, it hums to life, as if hungering to kill.

"Hahaha! It seems I was too hasty with my Duke title earlier!" Zamiel declares. "I now know what my title must be! As if spoken into my ear by the Creator himself, there can be no other option. I am now Zamiel, the Duke of Weaponry!"

The minigun hovers in the air before Zamiel, while the Duke spreads out his arms and cackles.

"FIRE!!"

Unassisted by its master, the weapon unloads a barrage of projectiles, each one traveling at the speed of sound. Kar instantly leaps aside, evading the magical minigun's attacks. It chases after him, dogging the Sphinx relentlessly.

Kar's speed, boosted to its peak by his Sphinx transformation, exceeds the minigun's accuracy by a huge margin. Even so, its mere presence forces Kar to go on the defense while Zamiel summons a second minigun, followed by a third.

Soon, Kar ends up trapped behind Zamiel's neverending barrage of magical bullets. Zamiel himself joins the fight, forcing Kar back as he works together with his creations to overpower the Sphinx.

"Hell's mightiest monster?! I think not!" Zamiel laughs. "Even I, a mere Duke, can take your life! You won't be able to run forever, Monster King!"

Zamiel corners Kar against the cliffside wall. As a hail of bullets fires upon Kar, the Sphinx makes an unexpected move and dives downward, burrowing into the planet's depths with his earth manipulation. Zamiel's miniguns harmlessly splatter against the soil, missing their target.

"...Well, shrakh! I forgot he could do that," Zamiel groans.

Kar bursts out of the soil beneath Zamiel, but the Duke of Weaponry evades him by transforming into bats.

Once again, the two mightiest warriors on the eastern front resume a relative stalemate, both of them outputting as much power as they can in an effort to kill one another.

Blinker, still battling Mephisto and his undead, scowls angrily. "Hey, you big dumb jerk! I'm going easy on you, ya know! You're lucky I don't like killing, or I'd smush you like a bug!"

She teleports away, narrowly avoiding a Gargoyle's claw as it swipes at her. Not far in the distance, Mephisto laughs to himself. "Sssee if I care! Do your worssst, little fairy! My minionsss are unssstoppable, neverending, and infinite in number!"

As he and Blinker fight, the Monster Queen finally decides to go on the offensive.

Okay, that's it. No more missus nice-fairy! Mephisto's creatures are already dead anyway, and I only promised my honey I wouldn't kill the crocodiles. He didn't say anything about gross gargoyles and gangly goblins!

When a group of Wraiths attacks Blinker again, she activates her fairy magic, revolving it within her body. Her tiny six-inch figure explodes with power, increasing her size tremendously! Much like Kar's ability to grow and shrink, Blinker increases her height to a foot tall, then two feet, three feet, four...

Soon, she stands over seven feet tall, a giant compared to the average human. With her sudden increase in size, Blinker no longer fears the pitifully weak attacks of Mephisto's undead mooks. She summons projection magic to her fists and punches away any creature foolish enough to enter her range. The Gargoyles' bodies explode into gory fragments, while the Wraiths dissolve into astral essence.

Wham! Wham! Wham!

In between punching everything in melee range to dust, Blinker also fires thin beams of light at distant targets, shredding their brains and killing them even when they decide not to attack her up close.

"Is that the best you've got?" Blinker quips. "I guess this is what happens when the demons send a scraggly little Duke like you to do an Emperor's job!"

"Watch your mouth!" Mephisto snaps. "I ssshall be the ultimate victor of thisss war! Jussst you wait and sssee! All of my carefully laid plansss will sssoon bear fruit!"

"Yeah, but you demons always say that," Blinker says, rolling her eyes. "Color me unimpressed!"

They continue their battle for several minutes. While they fight, a strange and foreign mana source suddenly sweeps over the entirety of Tarus II. Like a beacon of light in the darkness, its presence quickly captures everyone's attention, proving even more striking than Kar's transformation into the Sphinx.

In unison, Kar and Blinker both flick their gazes westward, toward Hero City.

"What?!"

From the center of the city, a terrible screech, malevolent in its fury, erupts from a monster's mouth.

"SKREEEEE!"

Blinker's heart skips a beat. To her complete astonishment, she observes a sight she never could have anticipated, not even in her worst nightmares.

"...A hydra?! No! Not another one!"

Within the distant confines of Hero City, a dreadful monster appears, one that will surely change the balance of the war.

>!This is what a spoiler looks like! Click it to reveal the text!!

Part 274: Battle Against Belial

Tarus II's western front. Second day, ninth hour.

Ose, the Emperor of Infiltration, stands a quarter-mile away from Belial's rampaging, monstrous form. She crosses her arms, scowling as Belial rips apart one demon grunt after another, chewing them up and spitting them out with her hideous, oversized head full of teeth.

Artorias, Laharl, and Vepar hesitantly glance at their leader.

"Wait for my signal," Ose hisses through her teeth, as Belial swings a razor-sharp claw toward three bunched-together demons, severing their bodies at the waist. "I want to take out Belial in one shot. If I fail, you will be my backup."

Artorias frowns. "I have seen Belial fight other demons and angels many times. She even beat the tar out of your mother on a few occasions. Good luck. We'll all need it."

"I don't need luck. I'm a genius." Ose replies, sneering condescendingly.

The Third Emperor inhales deeply. She summons electrical power into her stomach, coils strength into her legs, then leaps fifty feet straight upward! Once she reaches the apex of her ascent, Ose exhales, releasing the pent-up mana boiling in her gut.

Instantly, her body transforms into a bolt of lightning. She flies forward at the speed of sound, sticks out her leg, and brings it crashing against Belial's spine.

BOOOOM!

Ose kicks Belial so hard that she doesn't even get a chance to scream. With the breath knocked out of her body, Belial crashes into the dirt and grinds forward more than two hundred feet, digging a shallow gulley across the battlefield. Ose's kick creates a shockwave that flings away several hundred nearby demon grunts, sending them flying in all directions.

Several seconds pass as Belial shakily jumps to her feet, clearly having been taken by surprise. She turns around, gasping for breath, while Ose stands triumphantly with her hair billowing in the wind.

"What's the matter, Belial? Need a breather?"

The Emperor of Infiltration taunts her gasping opponent, grinning devilishly as she relishes the pained expression on Belial's face.

"Kuh, huk... cowardly... cowardly as usual, Ose," Belial coughs. "Always attacking from the back..."

"I like your new form," Ose says, gesturing toward Belial's monstrous body. "Now you look as ugly on the outside as you always have on the inside."

Belial motions with one of her four bladed hands, casting healing magic upon herself. Once she regains her breath, she nods slowly. "And you, little Ose, you haven't changed one bit. Still the master manipulator, playing the puppeteer. You've killed many of my friends today... so I'll be sure to return the favor."

Ose's eyes twitch, revealing a hint of anger beneath her sneer. "You still talk down to me, thinking yourself the invincible Second Emperor. Well, I have news for you, Belial. You don't have Satan here to protect you anymore. You don't have anyone. Your species has abandoned you, just as you abandoned them. Now you're all alone, and you'll soon find that even without the use of my hands... I'm more than your match!"

Without warning, Ose's eyes flash with light. She transforms into a bolt of electricity, disappears, and reappears behind Belial. Before the Emperor of Passion can react, Ose revolves on her heel and delivers a powerful spin-kick to Belial's spine, sending her flying.

"Aargh!" Belial cries, as she launches to the west.

An instant later, Ose's eyes flash once more. She teleports in front of Belial, jumps into the air, and swings her right leg downward like a sledgehammer.

BOOM!

Ose axe-kicks the back of Belial's head, propelling the Second Emperor straight downward, where she crashes into the dirt. Belial's face smashes a rock just beneath the soil, pulverizing it into rocky fragments.

Several seconds of frenzied attacks follow as Ose doesn't let up for an instant. She kicks Belial into the air again, then teleports above her and kicks downward, only to send Belial flying at her once-again transmitted form. Like a ping-pong machine, Ose kicks Belial a dozen times, knocking the Second Emperor around helplessly, while Belial proves unable to react to her incredible speed.

After the dozenth strike, Ose motions with her fingers, summoning electrical energy into her palms. She conjures a double-blast of lightning and detonates it against Belial's chest, blasting the Second Emperor up into the sky.

Belial rockets away, while Ose remains earthbound. The Emperor of Infiltration breathes hard, grinning wickedly as she watches her hated rival vanish into the clouds.

"Hahaha... how was that for my first round of abuse, eh, Satan's Whore?! I've plenty more to come next! Don't die on me now!"

Several seconds pass. Ose locks her mind onto Belial's Emperor-level mana signature. Belial surges into the upper atmosphere, slows down due to wind friction and gravity, then begins falling toward the planet's surface. As she plunges earthward, her figure passes through the clouds, making her once again visible to the naked eye. Ose's smug grin disappears as she examines Belial's body.

"Oh? Finally getting serious, are we?"

Belial, no longer in her monstrous form, instead returns to her original figure, except now, her skin appears ash-grey, with scale-like armor covering her body from head to toe. Her succubus tail morphs into a bone-trident, while two leathery wings sprout from her back.

Ose's expression dims noticeably.

Belial's True Succubus Form.

Instead of a helpless free-fall, Belial flaps her wings and deliberately increases her speed, hurtling toward Ose at alarming speeds. She raises one arm to attack, readying her muscular, clawed limb for a deadly strike.

Just before Belial impacts Ose's awaiting figure, her opponent transforms into a bolt of lightning and zips away.

BOOM!

Belial crashes into the dirt, spraying soil in every direction.

"Oh, darn. I missed..." Belial says emotionlessly, as she turns her head toward Ose's new position. "Did the little girl get her anger out properly, Ose? Is it time for your nap yet?"

Ose, standing fifty feet from Belial, tenses up her muscles. Her face becomes deathly calm as she senses the power flowing off Belial's Pure Succubus body.

"My mother gave you that transformation..." Ose mutters. "And in return, you betrayed her countless times. Lucifer should have led the Hell of Damnation, not that worthless Satan!"

"Is that what mommy dearest told you?" Belial laughs. She straightens her body while resting one claw on her hip. "Lucifer always was a sore loser with an inferiority complex. Seems the apple doesn't fall far from the tree. You know she's only your adoptive mother, right?"

Ose furrows her brow. Rage appears in her eyes as she readies herself to attack.

"My mother was a great demoness! Far better than the likes of you, whore! If it wasn't for her, demonkind would have gone extinct long before the War in Heaven!"

"You speak as if you were there," Belial murmurs. "You weren't even a glimmer in the Creator's eye during the Ancient Era. I suffered through those hellish days. I know what Lucifer did... what lengths she went to for the sake of our people. I respect the measures she took to preserve our existence, but not the torment she unleashed to satisfy her twisted cruelty!"

"Her actions were necessary!" Ose shrieks. "You aren't a tenth the demoness my mother was, nor are you a tenth of me! And today, I'll prove that fact!"

Ose launches herself forward, transforming her arms into whips made from lightning. She and Belial begin engaging in an Emperor-level clash, one which shatters the surrounding land, turning it into an apocalyptic hellscape.

The Emperor of Infiltration lashes Belial's front and back, sending electricity coursing into her veins. She kicks the former Second Emperor, using her still fully-intact legs and Emperor-tier strength as a bludgeon to beat Belial back. Meanwhile, Belial counters by using her enhanced Succubus Form to its fullest extent. Her speed and power increase dramatically, allowing her to just barely keep up with Ose's unending salvo of hurricane kicks and whip-lashes.

Thanks to her increased durability, Belial takes Ose's attacks head-on, tanking them without complaint. She swipes Ose's after-images time after time, always failing to land a critical hit, yet still forcing Ose to play defense, lest the Second Emperor's monstrous strength crush her body in a single hit.

"That's quite the transformation!" Ose cackles, as she ducks backward to avoid Belial's horizontal claw-swipe. "Did you ever thank my mother for her benevolent gift?!"

Belial's tail swings at Ose, but she turns her body into electricity for a split-second, allowing it to pass through harmlessly.

"Why would I?" Belial hisses, venom in her eyes. "Your mother stole that power from Agares. She was a thief!"

"She was our rightful leader!" Ose howls. She transmits behind Belial, lashes out her lightning-whip arm, and wraps it around Belial's neck. Then, she plants her feet against Belial's back and pulls hard, tightening her appendage like a noose. "Die, Belial! Choke and die!!"

Belial's eyes nearly pop out of her head. She bucks like a mad bull and tries to throw Ose off her back, but Ose uses her superior positional advantage to evade Belial's clumsy claw and tail-swipes.

"Hahk! Get- get off me!" Belial gasps.

"Never!" Ose yells. "Hahaha! What great fun this is! How long I've dreamed of punishing you in my mother's name! Hey, Belial! Would you like to know a secret?!"

Belial tries to tail-whip the demoness mounted on her back, but Ose dodges it, then wraps her free arm around the appendage, rendering it useless. She stomps her foot against Belial's lung, knocking the wind out of the Second Emperor and forcing Belial to her knees.

"My mother..." Ose says, her eyes glowing blood-red. "She led Satan to his death! Bahaha! How about that, eh, Belial?! Did you think the Black Witch randomly stumbled upon Satan out of nowhere? That's right! Lucifer told Amelia where to find him! She tricked Satan and led him to his death! All these years, you've wondered how your precious husband died... and now you know! My mother was his killer, while I shall be yours! What poetic justice!"

Belial's eyes widen in horror. She kicks even more violently, trying desperately to get Ose off her back.

"No... hahk! You... you filthy..."

A circle of demons forms around the two battling Emperors. Countless Lords and Grunts pause their assault on the humans to gaze at Belial and Ose in shock, while still keeping a wide berth.

Artorias stands amidst the crowd. He listens to Ose's confession, his jaw slack from disbelief.

"...Lucifer led the Black Witch to Satan? That... that can't be true. That must be a lie..."

Vepar and Laharl stand beside him, watching the life fade from Belial's eyes. Vepar sneers condescendingly. "You're too naïve, Artorias. We're the same age, yet you've always played the goody two-shoes Emperor kiss-ass. Ose isn't lying. If anyone had the ability and motive to pull one over on Satan, it would have been Lucifer. I'm not surprised even one bit."

Laharl rolls her eyes. "I never liked Lucifer. Biggest bitch of the Energy Wars. I'm glad she died, even if it meant losing Satan, too."

"It is never a joyous occasion when demonkind loses one of our Emperors..." Artorias mutters, his eyes locked on Belial's gasping body. Not in the past, not today, not ever."

Belial flaps her wings. She tries to take to the skies or to roll Ose off her back, but Ose conjures electricity into her feet and stomps Belial's spine, taking the wind out of her sails.

"You're not going anywhere but the depths of the River Styx!" Ose declares. "I've got a war to win, so I'll make this quick!"

The light begins to dim in Belial's eyes. Her struggles weaken noticeably as she fails repeatedly to toss Ose away.

"S... Satan..." Belial gasps. "No... he c-couldn't... cough..."

Belial's memories return to all the good times with her husband. Their conquering of human kingdoms. Their mutual despair when Belial's sister, Nerissa, died. Their war on ten fronts against fellow demons, the angels, and the humans. All the times Satan expressed his undying love for her.

Then, in her mind's eye, an image appears, one of Lucifer watching from afar as the Black Witch devours Satan's mind, body, and soul. Lucifer cackles maniacally, taunting Belial for her weakness.

You're nothing more than Satan's Whore! You couldn't save him then, nor can you save anyone else now! Not even yourself!

As the electric whip tightens around Belial's throat, one comforting thought appears in her mind.

At least soon... I'll be able to meet my husband again... in the Great Beyond.

Just when her body loses its last drop of strength, a miracle occurs.

Artorias lunges forward, rage filling his vessel.

"NO!!"

Ose flicks her gaze toward the charging Duke. "Wha-?"

A metallic fist crashes against Ose's face. Artorias blasts her with all his strength, knocking her off Belial's body and into the dirt. Ose's arm continues to hold tight around Belial's neck, but only until Artorias brings his foot down, stomping that thin cord with all his strength.

Thump!!

"Aaargh!" Ose shrieks, feeling her right arm snap like a twig. The electric whip silently reverts back to its original form beneath Artorias's boot, blood spewing from its mangled form.

"I will not allow this!" Artorias bellows. He kicks Ose away and assumes a defensive stance, hovering above Belial's body protectively. "Ose! You have just revealed a horrible crime committed against demonkind!"

Belial coughs weakly. Her eyes flicker open, while question marks appear over her head. She slowly turns to look at the Duke of Steel standing over her, his fists raised while he gazes at Ose.

"Ar... Artorias?"

Vepar and Laharl, both shellshocked, stand frozen along with all the other demons, uncertain what they should do.

"Artorias!" Vepar shouts. "What are you doing? You just attacked your rightful Emperor!"

"She's not!" Artorias objects. "Ose's claim to the Hell of Damnation's rule is now in question! She possessed knowledge of her mother's treachery, yet said nothing all these years! I cannot, in good conscience, support an Emperor who would harm her own people's interest!"

"Satan may have been your friend, and your former First Emperor," Vepar says, "but he is dead now. There's no point in questioning the past."

Artorias keeps his gaze locked on Ose. She gnashes her teeth and climbs to her feet, her right arm hanging awkwardly at her side.

"Ar... tor... ias... you... you TRAITOR! How dare you raise a hand against me!"

Belial woozily stands up. She takes a few steps back from Artorias, uncertain of what he just did.

"...You saved me?"

Artorias glances at Belial. Hesitation appears in his eyes.

"Not exactly. Sort of. I do not know! Satan was demonkind's greatest leader... but Lucifer led him to his death. Knowing that... I cannot allow his mate to perish here, not without a full investigation by the Demon Council!"

"You imbecile," Ose hisses. "You have no idea what you've just done. This war is almost won! Victory is within our grasp!"

"Your victory," Artorias mutters. "Not necessarily our people's victory."

A tense standoff follows. Ose's hate-filled gaze flicks between Belial and Artorias, while Artorias and Belial waver between examining one another and Ose.

Belial rubs her neck, where several burn marks sit cooked into her armored skin. "Heh heh heh... oh, Ose. You never change. You can't help but gloat when you're about to win. And now... now you've just given me ten million more reasons to kill you."

Ose grinds her teeth. "Artorias! Just whose side are you on? Are you going to fight alongside Belial? Have you forgotten just how many demons she's killed today? Are you going to pretend the humans don't wish to kill all of us, too? Where I stand, all I see are two agents of the Angels."

Belial glances at Ose's shattered right arm. "This fight is over, Ose. You nearly had me, but now, you don't stand a chance. Give up and call off your forces, or perish and fall into the Great Beyond. It's your choice."

Several tense seconds pass.

The Emperor of Infiltration grimaces. Veins pop on her forehead as she glances at the two traitors before her, uncertain of what action she should take.

"My mother..." Ose whispers. "She suffered endlessly because of Satan. She deserved better than what she got, yet the demons only ever favored The Devil. It was beyond unfair. It was blackhearted. Evil! Lucifer's broodmothers are the only reason our people have expanded and swelled enough to conquer our enemies... yet even after what happened... you filthy turncoats still dare to question her actions! Satan deserved to die! Lucifer deserved to rule! Since Mother is no longer here, then I will do so in her stead!"

"You no longer have the qualifications to lead," Artorias murmurs. "Stand down, Ose."

"You stand down!" Ose shrieks. "If you want to die alongside Belial, then so be it! You can rot in the topsoil like the worthless mutt you are!"

Artorias releases a turbid breath. "...Alright. I'm sorry it had to come to this, Ose. I didn't dislike you as an Emperor. If we must leave this battlefield as enemies, then so be it. I would rather stand alongside Belial if it means honoring Satan's true legacy."

He and Belial both crouch down, readying themselves to attack. Laharl and Vepar, alarmed, look at each other, unsure what to do.

"They're going to kill Ose! Should we intervene?" Vepar asks.

"How the bloody hell should I know?!" Laharl asks. "I came here to catch some man-meat, not to die fighting for Ose! Two Barons won't be any use against an Emperor and a Duke!"

Seeing her enemies preparing to attack, Ose slowly lowers her shoulders. She exhales, forcing herself to calm her anger.

As she does, a faint but unmistakable glimmer of malice gurgles in the back of her throat.

"Huhuhu... very well. Artorias, I will burn your body to ash and leave behind not even a memory of your existence. For daring to turn your back on your rightful Emperor, I condemn you and your brother to death. It's better this way. That Archangel inside you was always a liability. Now I can erase her for the sake of demonkind's safe and secure future."

Belial uncurls her claws. "You're outnumbered and alone, Ose. The same as I was, earlier. When you reach the Great Beyond, tell your mother I said hi."

"No need. You may tell her yourself," Ose retorts.

The Emperor of Infiltration motions with her still-functional left hand. In the blink of an eye, she completes a dozen demonic incantations, then smiles.

Electricity crackles in the air. Mana condenses within Ose's stomach, then spreads out into her bones. The energy travels around her entire body, imbuing her whole figure with the elemental power of lightning.

"I planned to use this against the Hidden Emperors and the Volgrim, not against Satan's Whore and his loyal dog..." Ose whispers. "But consider this transformation my mother's final gift to you, Belial."

Within seconds, electricity begins to bubble across Ose's skin like liquid magma. It spurts from her pores and crackles from her mouth, while her hair transforms into millions of angry electric snakes.

Ose's right arm shifts back into place, healing as if by magic. She balls up both of her hands into fists, no longer wincing due to their pain.

The moment Ose completes her transformation, she bolts forward!

Her thoughts play out a series of words, causing her to grin wickedly.

Aspect of the Thunder God. Proof of my supreme right to rule!

>!This is what a spoiler looks like! Click it to reveal the text!!

Part 275: Lightning and Fire

In the skies above Tarus II, a thunderstorm swirls, its electrical energy fomenting with the rage of a long-dead Titan King. Lightning bolts fire toward the planet's surface at random, striking trees to start fires, or lancing toward members of the human and demon armies. These hyper-energized thunderblasts impact with a hundred times the force of any ordinary bolt, killing many warriors with weak constitutions instantly while the stronger ones end up paralyzed, shivering in pain.

As the thunderstorm increases in scope, Ose, the Emperor of Infiltration, cackles maniacally.

"Hah hah hah... Belial and Artorias, two traitors to demonkind! Today, I will wipe you both from existence!"

Ose's skin shimmers white and blue. Electricity crackles in the air around her, giving her the appearance of an elemental who escaped from the land of thunder. Before Belial and Artorias can react, Ose stabs her fingers forward, firing out twin beams of lightning!

CRACKLE CRACKLE!

Belial screams as Ose's attack strikes her chest, flinging her off her feet, where she crashes onto her wings and drags across the ground.

Artorias raises his palm, causing the lightning to flood into his limb and electrify his demonstone armor. "Aaaargh!"

The Duke of Steel holds his ground against Ose, even with his lesser status making him the weaker combatant. However, the pain proves agonizing beyond belief, to the point he nearly faints. When Ose stops attacking for a split second, Artorias lolls forward, unable to stop his descent. In that instant, Ose appears before him with a fist reared back.

BOOM!

Ose uppercuts Artorias's face, violently reversing his momentum and sending him cartwheeling backward. The Duke crashes into a group of nearby demons, killing several of them by crushing their bones.

The Third Emperor's evil grin fades, ever so slightly.

"I'd be having a lot more fun if I unleashed this transformation by choice and not out of necessity. Damn you, Belial! I hate you. I hate you for always getting in my way!"

Belial staggers to her feet. Numbness pervades her internal organs and several limbs, making it hard for her to catch her breath. Even in her True Succubus Form, with her defense massively bolstered, she can't shrug off Ose's attacks easily.

"As always- cough! You're just a little girl throwing a temper tantrum."

Ose gnashes her teeth. She transforms into a bolt of lightning and flies at Belial's chest, feet-first. Before she can land a kick, Belial's eyes flash with insight. She flaps her left wing, spinning herself counter-clockwise. In the instant before Ose hits her, Belial releases a focused mana-pulse.

The mana-pulse flies into Ose's foot, momentarily disrupting her thunderbolt-form. She shifts back into a demonic body, only to see Belial's fist flying at her stomach.

Thunk!

Belial punches downward into Ose's gut, smashing her opponent into the soil. Ose crashes hard, spraying rocks and dirt in all directions. Belial's title of the 'Strongest Demon,' not merely one for show, gives her a physical strength two tiers beyond any other Emperor.

Ose, momentarily stunned, lays in the crater, desperately trying to gasp for breath. Belial grabs her enemy by the throat and squeezes, pressing her against the planet's soil.

"I don't like dragging things out," Belial hisses. "Even for you, who has killed many of my friends, I won't make you suffer. I'll give you a quick and painless death."

Belial contracts her grip, intending to crush Ose's windpipe. However, as she does, Ose's entire body shatters, dispersing into particles of light that coat the soil. Shocked, Belial jumps backward, looking around herself in alarm. Ose reforms herself not far away, still clutching her stomach.

"Kahaha! It... it won't be THAT easy to kill this ruler, Belial!"

Ose raises her left hand. Ten bolts of lightning drop down from the skies above, surge into her body, and fill her with electric power. A second later, Ose stands up straight, her pain gone and her aura revitalized.

"I am thunder! I am lightning! I am the storm, Belial! I am nature's wrath, and the embodiment of the universe! If you believe you can kill me with that stolen form, think again!"

"Nature's wrath?" Belial echoes. "There's nothing natural about you. You're a genocidal tyrant, one I'll soon bury forever."

Both women launch into a full-scale battle. Ose continuously attacks Belial from all sides, forcing the Emperor of Passion to play defense. Belial guards herself, moving on high alert while ducking, dodging, and deflecting anything Ose throws at her, including electric bolts, kicks, punches, and grapples. Sometimes Belial lands a lucky hit, only for Ose to heal herself with lightning from above.

While the two women fight, Artorias pulls himself together. Taking a hit from an Emperor isn't something any ordinary Duke can take without suffering aftereffects, and he is no exception. He climbs out of the pile of dead and badly injured demon grunts, paying them no mind.

"Tch... what the devil is going on? Ose never told me she possessed a Superform. I suppose her mother must have given it to her, but still! She could have healed her arms earlier with this transformation, yet she didn't. Why not?"

The Duke of Steel hesitates. Dozens of conjectures flick through his mind while he watches Ose and Belial's battle intensify.

Perhaps the healing factor won't persist after she exits the transformation. Maybe Ose's new body isn't a Superform, but an Ultraform. It certainly isn't an Omegaform; only Emperor Diablo can hold claim to that title.

Superforms empower a demon with no downsides, while Ultraforms often grant far more strength, albeit at a high cost. Bael's Balrog Form, for example, turns him into a colossal idiot. I've yet to see any gaps in Ose's transformation, but it's possible we've simply yet to observe them.

For now, I should focus on assisting Belial. Since my opponent is Ose, then my best bet is to...

Artorias claps his hands together, then drops to his knees. He presses his palms against the dirt, causing the planet's soil to flow onto his body. He coats himself with dirt to ground himself against electrical energy, then sighs.

Earth manipulators have long held an advantage against lightning manipulators, but this trick won't help me much. Ose already fought Uriel in this body, so she's well-versed in dealing with topsoil-armor. At best, I can only hope to soften her blows.

Gritting his teeth, Artorias digs his right foot into the dirt, then launches forward!

Ose, preoccupied with attacking Belial, senses Artorias's charge seconds before he arrives. "Satan's lapdog, returned for another beating! Come here, boy!"

Artorias swings his fist at Ose's back, but she transforms into light particles, disperses, and reforms thirty feet away. "You forgot something important, Ose! I am far older than you! I fought in the Ancient Era, not you! I led the assault on Heaven's Gate, not you! You are the child here; a brat who needs reminding of her place in the social order."

The Duke of Steel falls into position beside Belial. The two of them face Ose down, readying themselves for her counter-attack.

Ose laughs and shakes her head. "What a sad excuse for a demon you are, Artorias! Trapped inside the body of your little brother, forced to kill your fellow demons whenever your Archangel 'slave' takes control. I might be younger than you, but I've also accomplished far more. I was the architect of humanity's demise. Not only during the Energy Wars, but today, as well! It is I who possesses the means to advance our species, not you two gullible buffoons. Do me a favor. Stop resisting, so I can finish my subjugation of humanity already."

"I am no ally to humanity," Artorias retorts. "I have suffered beneath their boots the same as I did beneath the angels'. What I see in you is the same lust for power that Raphael once had; a desire to rule over all life by instating yourself as a supreme leader. Were you an admirable demon like Satan, I'd have followed you to the ends of the universe. Sadly, you are not half the demon he was."

Artorias's words dig deep. Ose scowls at him, while lightning crackles in her palms.

"Treasonous words from a treacherous worm."

Suddenly, Ose flicks both of her hands backward. Her body transforms into a beam of light, and she shoots toward humanity's frontlines not far to the east.

"What? Where did she go?" Belial asks.

Seconds later, screams erupt among the human troops. Ose injects electrical power into two of the five still-functioning Planetwalkers. She seizes control of the giant mecha, turning them on the humans to unload a hailstorm of bullets. Not even the advanced T-REX exosuits manage to protect humanity's soldiers from their own weapons. Countless screams abruptly fall silent as bullets rip through their flesh and armor, killing them on the spot.

"Traitors! We have traitors in our midst!" One human commander shouts. He starts to bark orders, only for Ose to materialize in the midst of his platoon. She spreads open her palms and releases waves of lightning bolts at random in all directions, blasting the nanite-based armors into nothingness while charring the fleshy life-forms inside to ash.

"Hahahahaha!!!" Ose cackles. "Today, you pitiful insects will learn to fear your betters!"

Ose waves her hands from side to side. With each motion, she snuffs out the lives of a hundred humans and monsters alike. Their bodies burn, explode, and detonate like grenades under the sheer power of her ultimate transformation.

"We have to stop her!" Belial cries. She lunges forward, while Artorias follows in hot pursuit. "Ose, that evil...!!"

Artorias pays no mind to the dying soldiers. Instead, he fixates his gaze on Ose herself.

"Look, Belial! Ose's mana seems to be increasing! She's not simply firing electricity outward; she's sucking it back in. She siphons electricity from any power source near her, then releases an opposite charge outward to slaughter the humans!"

Belial flaps her wings. She pounces skyward, then dive-bombs toward Ose's position at breakneck speeds. She tackles Ose at two hundred miles an hour, slamming her fellow Emperor into the planet's surface. On impact, Ose explodes into energized particles, then reforms her body with her heel planted against Belial's back.

"Too slow, Satan's Whore! Try again!"

Ose fires electricity through her feet into Belial's spine, but Belial uses the attack's propulsive force to dive underground and swim like a land-shark. She escapes Ose's electricity, suffering only minor injuries.

Belial swims half a mile underground, then pauses for a moment to unjumble her thoughts.

I've been going about this all wrong. My True Succubus Form isn't much use against Ose. She's much faster and smarter than me. I need to try a new tactic!

Seconds later, Artorias arrives on the scene. He jumps toward Ose while swinging his palm in an upward arc. Using his earth manipulation, Artorias summons a golem-like hand from beneath Ose's feet, wraps its fingers around her body, and squeezes with all his might.

With Ose momentarily pinned, Artorias charges at her. Ose struggles to break free of the earthen prison fastening her to the land. She turns her head just in time to see a dirt-coated fist flying at her face.

Bang!

Artorias punches Ose with all his strength, breaking her out of his makeshift prison and sending her flying. She crashes into the leg of a Planetwalker, crumpling it like papier mâché and causing the giant machine to topple over. It collapses atop Ose, crushing and burying her alive.

Seconds later, the Planetwalker flies upward as Ose throws it off herself. She jumps toward Artorias and spin-kicks his chest, knocking him away like an errant bowling pin. Her electricity-imbued attack leaves the Duke stunned as he slams into the side of a nearby hillock and falls motionless.

After casting aside the Duke of Steel, Ose pauses. She glances around at the humans turning their weapons on her and smiles.

"Bullets? Try me."

Hardly have the words left Ose's mouth before the ground explodes beneath her. Belial, no longer in her Pure Succubus Form, jumps onto Ose's body and stretches her limbs, wrapping around the Emperor of Infiltration like a giant squid. She entangles and constricts her opponent's movements, much as she did to Hercules during the Ancient Era. Belial shifts her right fist into a bone maul, then begins punching Ose's figure anywhere she can find exposed skin.

Wham! Wham! Wham!

Ose cries out in pain as powerful blows strike her repeatedly. She struggles to break free of Belial's entanglement, but Belial bends Ose's arms around behind her back to prevent her from casting magic spells.

"Aaargh! Get off me! Get off!" Ose shrieks, just before Belial knocks the wind out of her.

"Make me!" Belial exclaims. She shifts her bone-maul-fist into a bladed knife, then stabs it toward Ose's heart.

Unable to fight back, Ose's eyes lock onto the incoming threat. Instantly, her lightning-accelerated brain flips through a hundred possibilities, making her eyes dart toward one of the remaining Planetwalkers still shooting at the demon army.

Ose's eyes flash with light. She transmits herself and Belial straight forward into the giant mecha's line of fire. As a result, a storm of heavy munitions falls upon Belial's back, catching her off-guard. Belial shrieks in pain as bullets lance into her flesh. She reflexively detaches herself from Ose and jumps away, but lands on the dirt just outside the firestorm with blood spewing from a dozen giant blood-craters in her back. Ose, meanwhile, remains uninjured, thanks to Belial's Emperor-body absorbing all of the damage.

Momentarily stunned, Belial struggles to remain conscious. Her eyelids flutter as she groggily shapes her hands into magical signs, then presses them against her chest.

Before Belial can activate her healing magic, Ose transmits to her side with her foot reared back.

Thunk!

Ose kicks Belial viciously, sending her careening to the side. Belial slams into a boulder, crushing it into fragments. She loses consciousness for a few seconds, then wakes up, only to see Ose towering over her. The Emperor of Infiltration exhales triumphantly, then snaps a pair of electric whips around Belial's wrists and yanks Belial's arms apart.

"Sorry, Belial! No healing for you! Ooh, look at all that blood! You seem a little pale around the eyes. How does it feel knowing you never stood a chance against me? How does it feel, knowing my mother killed your husband? I'll bet this is the most dreadful moment of your life!"

Belial blinks her eyes, but she fails to readjust her vision. Ose's figure shifts in and out of focus, sometimes morphing into a pair of bodies, sometimes as many as four.

"Twice, I've beaten you," Ose continues. "Twice, you've failed. Don't you see? This is all because you were just too weak; a miserable excuse for a demoness. Who's going to save you? The Wordsmith? I crippled his meridians! Artorias? He's only a Duke! Maybe your precious little humans? Oh, yes, I'd love to see the little rats try. If an Emperor can't defeat me, nobody can!"

Blood spews from Belial's mouth. "Kuhuk... you..."

She tries to flex her arms, but as more and more blood drains from her body, Belial finds it nearly impossible to keep her thoughts straight.

"I what?" Ose taunts. "Go on! Spit it out! You can do it!"

Belial closes her eyes.

"You... talk... too much..."

A moment later, her head lolls backward, and she falls unconscious.

Ose stares at Belial, then laughs.

"Haha. I talk too much? Is that all you have to say? What a fool! She must have bumped her head too hard."

Shrugging, Ose tugs on the electric whips, pulling Belial's arms outward without any resistance. "Well, Belial, this is where you die. Goodbye."

As Ose tugs on the whips to rip Belial's body in half, a sense of unease materializes in her stomach. A gut reaction, one born of fear, causes Ose to jerk her head up and look around, uncertain what is causing her distress.

"What? This strange power. What is it?"

The Emperor of Infiltration narrows and widens her eyes repeatedly, only to immediately release her whips and go on the defensive.

"Holy Energy! I sense it! But why?! Could the Wordsmith have recovered?"

From the planet's depths, a rushing figure burrows upward, making Ose look toward her feet.

"From below!" Ose exclaims. She transforms into a bolt of lightning and teleports five hundred feet away, narrowly avoiding an explosion of dirt and rock as an armored figure emerges.

Artorias bursts out of the ground and grabs at Ose's afterimage, only to sneer as he realizes he's missed.

"Oh? Thou art quite the agile little rabbit, Ose," Artorias says, glancing casually in her direction. He waves his hands, then conjures two massive fireballs within his palms, making Ose look at him differently.

"Holy energy? Fire magic? You... you aren't Artorias!"

The Duke of Steel gazes expressionlessly at Ose through the holes in his mask. His blood-red eyes slowly shift color to pure white as he nods.

"Attentive as always. Hello, Ose. Seems like just yesterday we had a nice chat."

"Uriel," Ose mutters. "Of course, with everything else going wrong, you would reveal yourself at a time like this."

"I just got through suffering a series of most unpleasant dreams," Uriel hisses. She begins revolving her fireballs, increasing their heat while contracting their size. "And who, pray tell, forced me to suffer them? Ah, t'was thee."

A moment of silence follows as Uriel, the Archangel of Vengeance, and Ose, the Emperor of Infiltration, stare each other down.

"I defeated you once. I can do it again..." Ose hisses. "You should have stayed asleep, Uriel."

"That is a most interesting transformation," Uriel says, ignoring Ose's taunts. "I do not recall seeing it the last time we fought."

"Sorry to disappoint you, but I didn't need it then," Ose replies, "nor do I now. However, I'm in a bit of a rush today, so you'll have to forgive me for my rudeness."

"I forgive thee for nothing," Uriel says. "So, we mustn't tarry any longer. I have many demons to kill, beginning with thee. Come! Let us fight as we were always meant to!"

Ose flicks her eyes toward Belial's comatose body, then back to Uriel.

"Tch. Fine. I'll burn you to ash, then Satan's Whore. I was going to kill you both anyway!"

Ose transforms into a lightning bolt and flies toward Uriel. Uriel presses her fireballs together and nods.

"Yes. Just like that."

>!This is what a spoiler looks like! Click it to reveal the text!!

Part 276: Stealing the Archangel's Thunder

Ose, one of the fastest demons in existence, races toward Uriel at breakneck speeds. Uriel swings a pair of firebolts at her Emperor enemy, detonating them in front of Ose like a landmine. However, thanks to her enhanced Ultraform transformation, Ose dodges at the last second, zips behind Uriel, and swings her foot at the Archangel's back.

Thunk!

She kicks Uriel forward, sending the Archangel flying. Ose grins wickedly and starts to pursue Uriel, only to pause and gasp in surprise as Uriel's body instantly halts mid-flight. The Archangel seemingly strikes an invisible wall, stops her momentum, and thumps her feet against the ground, regaining her balance in the blink of an eye.

"An admirable effort, bloodskin," Uriel says, as she turns her head to look at Ose. "Thou seemeth much faster in that form than when we last fought. Stronger, too."

Ose grinds her molars together. "You haven't a clue, Uriel! I'm more than a match for the likes of you!"

Uriel watches Ose turn into a lightning bolt once again. The Emperor of Infiltration zips around at incredible speeds, circling the Archangel like a shark in the ocean. Far too fast for any human eye to follow, she whirls around Uriel at hundreds of miles per second, her afterimages splitting apart into fifty different blurs of light.

Thy speed is indeed formidable, Uriel thinks, while flicking her eyes from side to side. But 'tis far from an invincible offense.

Suddenly, Ose lunges toward Uriel and unleashes a flurry of leg and fist strikes, aiming to jar her opponent senseless. Thanks to her lightning-fast speed, she attacks from three directions at the same time, each punch or kick indistinguishable from the others.

Bang bang bang bang!

A series of explosions ring out as her blows connect with Uriel's armor. However, they cut off only two seconds later as Ose retreats while shrieking in pain. "Aaaargh!"

The Emperor of Infiltration immediately puts some distance between herself and Uriel, then presses her palms against her chest while smoke hisses off her fists.

Uriel smiles, her expression hidden beneath Barbatos's mask. "Ahh, did my holy energy harm thee? My apologies. Thy swiftness appears unstoppable to the untrained eye, but I have battled many a speedster in my day. Merely coating my body in holy energy would naturally prove an effective deterrent against a demoness such as thee."

Ose scowls. "Do not mock me, Archangel. I crushed you in our last battle, and I will do so again."

Uriel narrows her eyes. "Thy lightning was an unexpected and potent weapon at the time, Ose. Indeed, electric magic is one of the few things that can cause this weary body pain. I suffered immensely at thy claws, and, as a result, fell into a deep sleep. Agonizing nightmares wracked my mind while I replayed our battle time and time again. However, my coma was far from a waste of time, as it allowed me to think carefully of how I might slay thee when we next met. The Creator has smiled upon me, allowing us to battle alone like this, with no other pests to block our path."

"Do you think my previous victory was only a fluke?" Ose asks. "I had a hundred methods at my disposal to erase you from the mortal realm. Since adjusting to my Emperor body, I've only become more clear on how to bury a long-dead chicken fossil!"

Uriel performs a quick series of incantations. Moments later, four light-bathed figures materialize before her; her Holy Constructs.

"We shall see about that."

Without fanfare, Ose attacks. She and Uriel engage in a furious melee, with Ose unleashing her incredible speed and offensive power to attack Uriel from all directions, maintaining a constant pressure. Uriel retorts by relying on Barbatos's sturdy defenses along with her mastery of half a dozen elements to withstand Ose's onslaught.

Uriel's constructs, Units One, Two, Three, and Four, assume their standard battle formation. Unit One, a somewhat masculine but faceless energy-based life-form, stands near Uriel protectively. Unit Two, a feminine construct, retreats a short distance to act as a backline attacker. Unit Three, a hovering orb capable of attacking with elemental magic, positions itself at the periphery of the battlefield, along with Unit Four, a gravity-controlling cube construct.

Ose and Uriel trade blows. Despite her enhanced physiology and empowered form, Ose finds herself somewhat on the back foot. She attacks Uriel with a bloodthirsty frenzy, firing lightning bolts, turning nearby human constructs on the Archangel, and always making sure to use her speed to its fullest extent.

Unlike the last time they fought, Uriel doesn't rush to action. She maintains her cool and slowly but surely begins adapting to Ose's whirlwind-like speed.

"Oh, Ose. How tragic. How unfortunate for thee," Uriel laughs, taunting her adversary. "Hads't thou not foolishly struck Artorias with lightning, I may never have awoken! Thy magic broke the mental shackles fastened to my soul, freeing me to crush thee! How tragic that thy glorious life story shall come to an end here, today!"

Ose narrows her eyes. She tears through Units Three and Four, destroying them in an instant before rushing toward Uriel again.

"Keep gloating, Uriel. Keep it up! You're not the only one who's thought about our last fight!"

Ose spins around Uriel to attack her from behind. As she does, she conjures an orb of lightning, much smaller and yet more potent than any she's wielded before. She surges toward Uriel and rears back to strike.

Without warning, Ose's momentum halts! She crashes into a wall at Mach 10, a barrier made of nearly invisible holy energy. Formed by Unit Two, the wall holds firm, treating Ose with the same contempt that a car's windshield would to an errant insect.

"Gah!" Ose gasps. The latent holy energy contained within the wall courses into her body, fries her skin, and causes smoke to roll off her figure. She immediately retreats, gritting her teeth to endure the pain.

"Oops! Just a tad too slow," Uriel says, mocking Ose once again. "Compared to Zeus, thou certainly cometh up short."

Ose retreats a hundred feet. She pauses for half a second to catch her breath, but the moment she pauses her movement, the ground rumbles beneath her feet. Startled, she looks down just in time to see an earthen golem burst from the dirt beneath her feet. A hand made of hardened topsoil grabs onto Ose's ankle, holding her in place for the briefest of moments.

The Third Emperor's heart skips a beat. She kicks at the golem to shatter its grip, but with her attention momentarily diverted, she fails to notice the Archangel's pivot to offense. Uriel spins on her heel and launches toward Ose. In the split-second before Ose breaks the golem's grip on her ankle, Uriel rears her fist back and coats it with earth.

THUNK!!

Uriel punches Ose square in the chest, blasting her opponent backward and sending her skidding off the land. Ose manages a quick scream before she reaches the edge of the Horned Forest. She crashes into half a dozen giant trees, shattering them under the impact force of her flying body, then comes to a stop as they tumble down and collapse atop her.

Uriel cracks her neck. She smiles as she watches the trees topple onto Ose's injured figure.

"What a pitiful 'Ultraform.' Compared to the Balrog, 'tis unworthy of praise."

While Uriel waits for Ose to recover, she glances inward at her Mind Realm.

"Come now, Artorias. Have thou nothing to say? I shall soon slay thy Emperor."

A few seconds pass, but Artorias says nothing. Uriel locates his spiritual figure sitting in a field, his legs crossed as he assumes a meditative state.

"Pish-posh. Where is thy good-humored nature, Little Arty? When I awoke, thy resistance amounted to none at all. Could it be? Hath thou deliberately assisted me in achieving my freedom? Hath thou fully embraced thy lying, deceptive nature, just as Belial did? Art thou now permanently a traitor to demonkind? Speak!"

Artorias remains silent. He closes his eyes and bows his head, refusing to say a word to his captor.

"...Hmph. Leave thy lips sealed, then," Uriel snorts. "Thy opinion matters not to me. Ah, there she is. It seems Ose finally recovered from my grievous blow."

Uriel waits, but Ose doesn't leave the forest. She shoves aside the trees effortlessly, their fifty tons of weight barely even an impediment before her Emperor-level strength.

"That was... a good move... Uriel..." Ose says, her words somewhat labored. "I'll admit, that trick caught me off-guard."

"I need not use tricks to slay thee," Uriel retorts. "I have planned thy demise for the past six years. Even if thou dost attempt to resist, thy efforts shall fail."

Ose nods. She assumes a defensive stance, spreads out her legs and arms, then reveals a faint smile.

"Very well. You seem confident, Uriel. Come! Show me the might of a fallen Archangel! I won't move from this spot! Strike me with your mightiest blow! Let's see which of us is truly the weaker fighter!"

Electricity crackles in Ose's palms. She continues nodding at Uriel, as if to egg the Archangel on. Uriel hesitates, while doubts itch at the back of her head.

However, after a few moments of thought, Uriel coils strength into her legs. She summons magic into her fists, readying herself to attack.

"Heh heh heh. Very well, Ose. If thou desireth a swift death, let me not be the one to deny thee! Stand right there, and I shall end thy life in an instant!"

Uriel conjures holy magic into her grasp. Two spears of light materialize, each one sturdier and far more dangerous than ones made of titanium.

"Thou art nothing if not a trickster, Ose! Even so, I wish to see the true limits of thy Ultraform!"

"Oh, don't worry," Ose says menacingly. "You will."

A moment later, Uriel lunges forward! Her twin spears spiral and twist on her right and left sides, revolving around like twin vipers going for a dual-strike!

Uriel flies toward her unmoving enemy, clearing the gap in only two seconds. To her surprise, Ose doesn't move a muscle. The Emperor of Infiltration stands firm, not making the slightest attempt to dodge.

"Haha! Die, Ose! Perish now and tumble to the Great Beyond!"

Uriel stabs her spears at Ose's chest, releasing a pressure capable of making a mountain tremble.

The instant before Uriel's attack lands, Ose's eyes bolt open. A horrific grin spreads across her face as she crosses her arms in front of her chest in an X-shape.

"You fell for it, fool! Thunder-Cross Ultimate Defense!"

Unable to stop her attack, Uriel's heart skips a beat. Her spears ram into Ose's arms, then bounce off a barrier made of pure electrical energy. All the attack might she directed at Ose reverses direction and flies backward, crashing into Uriel's chest like a thousand rampaging lions.

"Aaaaaargh!!!" Uriel shrieks, as she ricochets in the opposite direction, unable to save herself.

The Archangel loses control of her body, flies a quarter of a mile backward, and crashes into a platoon of demons, killing two hundred of them from the sheer explosive impact of her arrival.

A moment later, the world falls still once more, and Ose lowers her arms. A mischievous smile plays on her face as she giggles quietly.

"Hehehehe... all according to plan."

Recommended Listening

The Emperor of Infiltration hesitates for only a moment before launching herself at the Archangel once more. With Uriel temporarily stunned by the reversed force of her own full-power attack, she can't manage even the feeblest of resistance as Ose arrives at her side and kicks upward, firing Barbatos's body into the sky!

"You stupid dodo!" Ose taunts. "Did you really think you could kill demonkind's greatest genius in a single blow?! You're ten times more pathetic than I thought!"

She teleports into the sky above Uriel, raises her leg, and kicks downward.

Boom!

Ose brings her leg down like a sledgehammer, landing it square against Uriel's chest-plate. She kicks the Archangel planetward once again, causing her to impact the planet's soil at the speed of sound.

"You are truly laughable!" Ose yells. "Compared to the other Archangels, you aren't worth a piss in the wind!"

She pounces downward, falling from the sky like a meteor. She dives at her prey as the Archangel rolls on the ground, clutching her stomach.

"How did you like my ultimate defense, Uriel? I borrowed the idea from Diablo! As expected of this genius, I never fail to impress!"

Ose swings her fist down and punches Uriel's head, using her momentum to further increase her attack strength. The impact releases a shockwave that clears away hundreds of nearby demons, even reaching as far as the edge of humanity's frontlines, where they stumble and lose their footing.

Despite the terrific power behind Ose's attack, Uriel doesn't fall unconscious. Instead, Ose's punch jars Uriel's senses, reactivates her brain, and awakens her fight or flight instincts.

Before Ose can pull away, Uriel lunges an armored hand forward and grabs the Emperor's throat.

"Grrrgh! Thou shalt not flee again!" Uriel roars.

Ose tries to retreat, but Uriel maintains her iron grip. She treats Ose's throat like a guardrail, pulls herself to her feet, then spins around and throws Ose against the dirt.

Thoomph!

Uriel's Archangel physiology, boosted further by Barbatos's incredible defense, allows her to not only survive Ose's deceptive reversal from earlier, but even to thrive, empowering her strength with sheer willpower and rage.

"Now, stay right there!" Uriel bellows, as she rears back her free fist to throw a punch at Ose's face. "Try blocking this one!"

What follows are several minutes of violent beatings and bludgeonings.

Uriel pounds Ose's face repeatedly until Ose transforms into a bolt of lightning and escapes. She and Uriel, both injured, start trading blows nonstop, each collision of fists, legs, and magic flattening the world around them.

The Archangel and her constructs manage to land several blows on Ose, further weakening and slowing down the Third Emperor. However, Ose doesn't slack off, either. She continuously batters the Archangel from left to right, tiring Uriel out.

Minutes becomes an hour, then two hours.

Much of the battlefield, now utterly soaked in blood, ripped up and torn apart by the Emperor and Archangel-level battle, appears unrecognizable compared to its state from only three days ago. Half of the Horned Forest lies in ruins, while many of the humans at the Western Front can only grit their teeth nervously and pray Ose will perish to her black-armored demon opponent.

Vepar and Laharl, no longer anywhere close to the fighting, hang back atop a pile of dead bodies over a mile from Ose and Uriel's battle-site. They sit and watch as their Emperor battles the Archangel, a complete lack of concern apparent on their faces.

"Think we should help?" Laharl asks.

"No." Vepar replies.

"Well, I'm bored..." Laharl grumbles. "It sucks just sitting here and doing nothing. Come on! Let's go slip inside the human city and see if there are any big, hunky men I can capture!"

"I'll pass," Vepar mumbles. "I'm only here because Ose ordered me to come. If she dies, I'm leaving."

Laharl scowls. "Aww, you're no fun! Come on, Vepar! Chill out! Smell the blood-roses! Tie up some good-looking guys and make them swoon! You don't have to act all miserable just 'cause your face is..."

Vepar's expression turns ugly. "My face is what? Go on. Say it."

Laharl shifts uneasily. She glances at Vepar's mottled, rotten, ugly face, one which looks like someone threw acid on it, and sighs. "...Never mind. Sorry. I shouldn't have said that!"

"It's just the truth," Vepar hisses. "At least I still have my skin, unlike Mephisto. Then again, perhaps becoming a pure skeleton wouldn't be such a bad idea. Better to be uniformly ugly than to suffer from partial hideousness."

A minute of silence follows. Laharl twiddles her thumbs, then sighs.

"Alright! That's it, I ain't gonna waste my time lounging around here anymore. I've got shit to do! I'll see ya around, Vepar. Wish me luck so the fleshbags don't kill me!"

Vepar nods. "In that case, good luck. Watch your back. The humans are nothing if not resourceful. Don't forget how they managed to save the second Wordsmith even after he landed right in our clutches."

"Mmm. I'll keep that in mind," Laharl says.

A moment later, Laharl leaps off the pile of corpses and starts running eastward, toward the battle-site between Uriel and Ose. As she approaches, Laharl merges into the sea of demon Grunts and Lords, making herself inconspicuous. She circles around the two powerhouses and approaches the human military, ducking low to the ground to make herself less of a target.

"Hmm... these fleshies are quite adept in the ways of war. I wonder how they stack up compared to humans from the ancient days?"

A fairly young demoness herself, at only forty thousand years, Laharl possesses no memories of the pre-Labyrinth era, a time when humans stood above demonkind in the power hierarchy. Her entire life, she's never looked at humans as anything but pissants, their only purpose to serve her twisted fantasies.

With a motion of her hands, Laharl shrouds herself in illusory magic, making her figure partially invisible. She diffuses the light around herself, making it difficult for anyone to spot her, let alone track her exact position.

"Whoops, 'scuse me! Coming through!" Laharl mutters, as she slips past the humans' frontlines. She ignores the soldiers and mecha around her, opting purely for an infiltration approach. After passing through the humans' defenses, she flits past their midlines and backlines, then reaches an area where few humans walk at all; the road leading back to Hero City.

"Not far now! Gonna get me some man-meat!" Laharl laughs. The Baron of Misery increases her speed as she runs toward the city's cliffs, less than two miles in the distance.

"Almost there! It's boy-toy time, whee-hee!" She yells, whistling a merry tune to lift her spirits.

Suddenly, Laharl screeches to a halt. Her heart momentarily stops, while an ice-cold sensation of terror sweeps across her body.

"W-what? Hold on... this feeling... it's..."

In the distance, from the center of Hero City, a terrifying, unearthly scream cries out.

"SKREEEEEEEE!!"

Laharl's entire body shudders upon hearing that sound. It takes her a split-second to recall where she's heard it before, but when she does, her terror increases two-fold.

"A Hydra! That's impossible! How could there be a Hydra here? One already appeared on this world just a month ago! Don't tell me Tarus II is some sort of breeding ground for the damn things!"

Despite every fiber of her being howling at her to run away, Laharl grits her teeth and presses on. She rushes forward faster than ever and reaches the city's walls in under a minute, then pounces skyward to land atop the cliff.

There, she sees a sight unlike anything she could ever imagine.

"That- that is a Hydra! But what are those GIANTS beside it? They look like fleshbags, but they're... they're freaking humongous!"

Laharl's eyes bug out of her head. Her jaw drops as she witnesses a four-headed hydra battling three bipedal beings, each one resembling a human, except they stand anywhere from thirty to seventy feet tall!

"Giant humans? Do those actually exist?! And why do I sense incredible amounts of mana flowing from their bodies? Wait... hold on a moment..."

Laharl falls silent. She wracks her brain while trying to think of a word for these 'giant humans.' Eventually, her breath catches in her throat.

"That's... that can't be the truth. No. My eyes must be lying! How could Titans appear here of all places? It's not possible! Every demon knows the Titans went extinct tens of millennia ago during the Formative Wars! But if they aren't Titans, then... what the devil are they?"

Slowly, Laharl raises her head. She watches as the biggest giant, a seventy-foot-tall female, transforms into a beam of holy energy, somewhat like Ose's power to become a lightning bolt. The female flies into the air, then rushes downward and crashes against the Hydra's back, injuring it and pissing it off.

"SKREEEEEE!!"

While the giants fight, the town collapses into rubble. Humans and monsters flee in all directions, terrified of the rampaging goliaths battling in their midst.

Completely baffled, Laharl violently rubs her hands against her face.

"WHAT in the Seven Hells is going on here?!"

>!This is what a spoiler looks like! Click it to reveal the text!!

Part 277: Killer in the Shadows

Hero City, one hour earlier.

Mara, the Baron of Games, darts around inside the human encampment, relying on her invisibility to evade the humans' detection systems. Thousands of heavily armored troopers patrol the streets, march quickly to reinforce command points, and otherwise keep on the alert, using every trick in the book to search for enemies in their midst.

Mara presses her back against an apartment building's wall. She motions with her hands and flicks a magical Tarot Card out of her sleeve, then whispers under her breath: "Ice Orc, Imbue."

A layer of frost coats Mara's body, lowering her temperature to below the surrounding area's ambient levels. As an added bonus, her strength increases significantly, giving her a boost of fighting power.

Okay. For the next ten minutes, I'll be able to keep my body temperature low enough that the humans won't detect me on their heat-scanners. Not bad for a Silver Aspect. Now, if only I can find the Hero's family quickly and without any fuss...

Mara flicks out another card, then activates its effects. "Three-Eyed Gecko, Enchant."

The Baron of Games enchants the Gecko's illusion-piercing eye onto a ring on her right hand. Then, she carefully pokes her fist around the corner and pivots it in several directions, using its all-seeing gaze to search for any traces of her prey.

Over there? No. Maybe to the north? No. South? Drat! This city is much bigger than it appears! I must have at least ten kilometers of area to search, not to mention any hidden, underground facilities.

Mara stealthily slinks through Hero City's confines, her invisibility and low body temperature making it impossible for even the highly advanced exosuit troopers to spot her. Once in a while, she finds a soldier standing by themselves with their weapon at the ready. With a quick, sudden movement, she skitters over to them and snaps their neck, then burns the body and darts away.

Naturally, with troopers dying inside the city, humanity's forces go on the alert, but curiously, nobody manages to catch the assassin. As Mara spends ten minutes, twenty minutes, and even thirty minutes searching for Phoebe and Daisy, her expression becomes cross.

"Seven Hells! Where the devil are they? Don't tell me they already escaped! Ose will rip me apart if I fail here!"

Mara curses under her breath several times. She arrives at the eastern edge of the city, where powerful waves of mana emanate over the horizon, giving her an idea of the colossal-scale battle occuring between the Monster King, Kar, and his opponent, the Eldest Battle Brother, Zamiel.

Mara stops at the edge of the eastern cliffs and gazes into the distance. Her jaw drops as she observes the titanic battle unfolding within the valley.

"Z-Zamiel? Is that Zamiel?! When did he become a Duke? Why? How?! Was this part of Ose's plans? She didn't tell me anything!"

Mara's eyes grow as wide as saucers. She watches Zamiel trade blows with Kar, wincing whenever their fists and weapons connect.

"The Monster King is an Emperor-level powerhouse! How can a mere Duke stand up to him? There's something fishy going on here..."

Despite her misgivings, Mara still cheers for Zamiel in her heart.

The Sphinx toyed with me. He embarrassed me, making me the fool during our clash. I won't forgive him. Kill him, Zamiel! You must succeed!

However, she doesn't move to assist Zamiel, given that Ose's assignment has nothing to do with him. After observing the battle for a few minutes, Mara creeps away, slipping past a small battalion of human and monster reinforcements as they roll up to the battlefield.

"Just where exactly could the Hero's Wife be?" Mara muses. She sneaks atop the room of a four-story building in the middle of Hero City, assassinates two guards, then peers down on the city's center to get her bearings.

"Hmm. A group of ten soldiers over there, five to their north, and the hospital to the west... wow! The humans' hospital got annihilated! I guess the rumors about Belial were true."

Mara's gaze flicks to a lone figure wandering down the streets. An unarmored Salamander, a red-scaled monster holding a box of tools, shuffles to the west, toward the edge of the city.

"Aw, shucks. My back is killing me... but I can't just sit on my dad-gum rear while everyone else does all the fightin'. Gotta git out there and make m'self useful."

Mara aims her palm at the back of the monster's skull, reading herself to fire a burst of magic at him. However, after a moment, she pauses and shakes her head.

"Killing fleshbags is one thing. I won't hurt a sweet old lizard, though. Poor guy looks like he's had a bad enough day."

Mara resumes her search, scouring the city from top to bottom. After twenty minutes, she catches sight of a shimmer in the air to the north.

"Hmm? Wait, could it be? Ose mentioned something about... 'space-shits.' Could the space-shits be over there?"

Mara slinks over to the northern side of Hero City. There, she spots a cordoned area with hundreds of troops patrolling, each one swiveling their heads from side to side to look for threats. However, past the cordoned area, the only thing Mara sees is a vast, empty field.

"Why are the humans protecting a whole bunch of nothing? They must think I'm stupid..." Mara mutters. She holds her fist up and shines the enchanted Gecko eye to the north. A visual imprint of some enormous, gigantic metal machine catches her eyes, making her gasp.

"Aha! I found it! The space-shit! ...Sheesh, what human came up with that name, anyway? It's idiotic beyond belief."

Having spotted one of the Covenant ships, Mara strokes her chin thoughtfully.

"I don't see the mother and daughter anywhere, but if these big flying machines can travel offworld, then I can't afford to let them leave. I had better destroy it before it's too late."

Mara flickers past the patrolling guards. She arrives not far from the Covenant vessel, then scans its interior with her Gecko eye. She observes more than thirty thousand humans already packed on board, but none of them resemble Phoebe or Daisy.

"Good. It seems the Hero's family hasn't arrived, yet. In that case, I will solve three problems with one move."

Mara grins devilishly. She flicks a card out of her Spiritual Deck, then places it back and draws another. For the next five minutes, she draws a card every ten seconds until finally pulling the one she needs.

"Hehehe. Farewell, fleshbags."

Mara coils strength into her legs, then leaps skyward. She jumps toward the top of the nearly-invisible Covenant ship, scaling its heights by adhering to its hull via magic. She rapidly climbs its half-mile-tall rocket-shaped body, then kicks off from its nose and pounces another three hundred feet into the air.

Wind whistles in Mara's ears. For a brief moment, she hangs in the sky like a fairy standing atop the apex of an invisible rainbow, then begins falling earthward. The moment her body starts to reverse direction, Mara holds her Tarot Card high and bellows in her loudest possible voice, "Thunder Giant, Evoke!"

Mara's rich mana pours into her sole Platinum Aspect, the strongest offensive card in her Spiritual Deck. As she starts to fall toward the Covenant ship below her, a tremendous fist made of thunder and lightning conjures into existence from the Tarot Card, then fires straight down at the planet's surface.

BOOOOOM!!!

The insanely powerful magic blast strikes the Covenant ship, compressing it like a tin can. Instantly, every human and monster aboard the vessel perishes, never knowing what hit them. The fist tears through the metal machine effortlessly and continues toward the ground below, where it crashes into Tarus II's soil and explodes, firing off thousands of lightning bolts in all directions.

Within two seconds, every exosuit-wearing trooper in the area screams and explodes, their bodies unable to withstand the power of Mara's magic. Her attack all but vaporizes the biological life within a half-mile radius, killing more than forty thousand humans in fewer than six seconds.

Mara plummets toward the soil below, then rotates in midair and lands deftly on her feet like a cat. She glances around for a moment, admiring her handiwork.

"See? Now that's how an evocation of the Thunder Giant should work! I can't believe it didn't even shake the Sphinx a little... just goes to show how durable that blasted crocodile is."

Mara shakes her head disdainfully, then turns to walk away. However, out of the corner of her eye, she spots a Felaris kitten lying amidst the crumpled spaceship's burning remains, half her body charred and scorched from Mara's evocation. The kitten lays on her back, coughing and gagging as blood gurgles and vomits from her mouth.

"Kuh... kuh... huh... hulp..."

The kitten's eyes pan from side to side frantically. Delirious and suffering from shock, her body starts to shake and tremble as the claws of death fall upon her.

Mara hesitates.

The Baron of Games turns to look at the sole survivor of her attack, someone who likely only endured thanks to a one in a million freak occurrence.

"Someone lived through that?" Mara mutters. She trots over to the kitten, but pauses as a painful sensation wells up in her chest.

"...That's right. I suppose there were children aboard the space-shit."

A hint of remorse appears in Mara's eyes. She glances around and even uses her Gecko eye to search the area, but doesn't find any other survivors.

Several seconds pass as she gazes at the dying child. The Felaris kitten raises a shaky paw toward Mara.

"Hull... hulp... muhhh..."

Guilt washes across Mara's face. Finally, she balls her hand into a fist.

"I'm sorry. I intended to kill everyone quickly and painlessly. Since I don't like to see people suffer, I'll put you out of-"

She rears her fist back to attack, only to pause mid-motion. Several expressions pass over her face as images flash through her mind.

A human male.

An olive branch.

Faint, indistinct words.

Mara's eyes twitch. She tries to swing her fist down and kill the kitten, but once again, her body freezes up.

If I manage to put an end to this stupid war, you should pop by the Core sometime.

Pop by the Core sometime.

If only I can put an end to this war...

Pop by the Core sometime.

Mara gasps for breath. She jumps back from the kitten, frightened by the uncanny feeling of déjà vu.

"What... what the hell is wrong with me?"

Unable to bring herself to deal the killing blow, Mara scrunches up her face and relents, digging into her Spiritual Deck to search for a card.

Somehow, on the first draw, she miraculously pulls the one she needs.

"Temporal Cricket, Evoke!"

She aims a spell at the Felaris kitten, bathing her in time-reversing magic. Moments later, the cat's wounds rapidly undo themselves, restoring the child to her state from five minutes before; well before Mara's bombastic attack.

The kitten freezes up and curls into a ball. She shivers uncontrollably as memories of the awful pain she just suffered linger in her head.

"Mommy... mommy... mommy, I want mommy..."

Mara looks away. Her eyes flicker with uncertainty. She takes several steps to the side, avoiding the kitten.

"Th-there! I saved you, okay? I saved you! That's all you get! Don't ever talk to me again!"

She quickly retreats from the Felaris child, leaving the kitten to fend for herself. Mara heads toward the south, where the sounds of approaching military troopers catch her attention.

Her expression dark, Mara rubs her eyes. She conjures another field of invisibility around herself, then darts toward a series of buildings, making herself scarce.

"Stupid. Stupid! Why did I do that? Why did I save that little girl? She won't have a mother to protect her anymore. There's no reason to... to help her! None at all!"

Self-doubt tugs at Mara's psyche, making her sweat bullets. It takes her five minutes of reflection before she manages to shake the feeling of existential dread weighing on her shoulders.

"I've never behaved this way, not in my whole life. If Ying-Ying were here, she'd definitely tell me I was acting strangely!"

Mara lifts her hand to touch a pair of earrings hanging at the sides of her head. She starts to inject mana into them, but pauses after a moment.

"...I don't have the time or luxury to sit around and chat with Ying-Ying! Forget it. I'll tell her later!"

Mara lowers her hands and shakes her head. Despite the muddled thoughts plaguing her mind, she forces herself to calm down and think rationally.

"The Hero's wife and daughter, Phoebe and Daisy Hiro. I have to find them. I've already scoured most of the city, so they can't be far!"

A minute later, Mara scurries out of her hiding spot into the open. With the Ice Orc's imbuement having run out many minutes before, she takes care not to stride directly into the path of any troopers, lest their heat sensors detect her. Even so, relying purely on her invisibility, she manages to evade detection, sticking to the rooftops wherever possible.

"These humans are formidable, but it seems that Barons can deal with them if we use our heads."

Having interacted with humans innumerable times during her life, Mara has always considered them inferior life-forms incapable of threatening even a modicum of her existence. However, now, having witnessed dozens of Lord and Barons perish to the humans' weapons and enhanced armor, she realizes they do have the means to stand up for themselves.

"Could it be?" Mara muses. "Did humans really once possess the means to rest their boots atop the necks of demonkind? Were those rumors and legends not as exaggerated as I once thought?"

Mara recalls several tales relayed to her by the great Duke of Reptiles, Agares, as well as by many other long-lived demons. Their words, often containing lingering memories of fear, hinted at the mighty planet-busting weapons humans once built. Even so, they never went into great detail about the humans' capabilities, leaving her to wonder just how exaggerated those tales really were.

"Bombs capable of destroying nations. Armored machines that could tank the attacks of even mighty Dukes like Bael. Soldiers with metal parts built into their bodies. If these errant humans hadn't risen up under the Hero's banner, I'd never have believed such tall tales in all my days."

Mara travels toward the southern edge of Hero City. She slows to a stop once the Pyramids come into view, great monoliths constructed by the former leader of Tarus II, the Sphinx, Bahamut.

"Hmm. I've never seen Tarus II's Pyramids in person before... they're surprisingly impressive! As I recall, Bahamut had them built in memory of her former home, a place with unique- hmm?"

Mara narrows her eyes. She leans forward to gaze off the top of her perch, a four-story nondescript apartment complex. She spots a large platoon of three hundred exosuit-wearing commandos, all of whom hustle southward toward the pyramids.

In the midst of the troopers, two figures stand out. A woman, laying motionless on a stretcher, and a small child running alongside her. One of the troopers picks up the girl and hugs her protectively to their chest while looking around worriedly.

"Ah!" Mara gasps. "That... that child! I sense a faint but unmistakable mana resonance! It must be her; the Hero's Daughter! And if that's the case, then the unconscious woman is most likely her mother, Phoebe Hiro!"

Immediately, Mara calms her frantic heart. She focuses her senses, draws a silver card from her Spiritual Deck, and holds it before herself.

"Howling Night Wolf, Imbue!"

Mara calls the power of the Tarot Card onto herself, forming a silver dot upon her forehead. Shaggy hair grows from her skin, her eyes shift into bestial forms, and a pair of dog-like ears sprouts from the top of her skull.

With her body's strength, speed, and senses enhanced, Mara jumps forward, launching herself into the air. She focuses her enhanced hearing on the group of commandos, easily penetrating the sound-dampening effects of their armor.

"...assets are in danger. Request immediate backup. Unknown demonic entity has destroyed the last Covenant ship. We are returning Bishop and Rook to the safe zone at once, over."

"Copy that, Gold Leader. I'm dispatching additional reinforcements to your position. How long before you arrive at the safe zone? Over."

"Not long now, Elder Skarde. Five minutes at most. We're about to reach- shit!"

The man howls in alarm as his exosuit blares a warning. He swivels his head upward, where he spots a figure falling toward him from above.

"Look out! Protect the Commander!"

He and twenty other troopers swivel to face their attacker. However, with so little time to react, they don't even get a shot off before Mara crashes upon them, bringing her werewolf-like strength to bear.

Boom!

Mara instantly kills two troopers, then swings her fists wildly, using the berserker-like strength of her wolf-imbuement to its maximum extent!

"Don't hold back!" Another trooper shouts, as he squeezes his gun's trigger. "Blast the motherfucker!"

A hail of bullets descends upon Mara. She flickers from side to side, evading the gunfire and causing the troopers to shoot their comrades. Each movement, already impressive due to her Baron-level might, becomes even more incredible when boosted by the effects of her Tarot Cards.

"Wind Blade, Summon!"

Mara activates a Bronze Aspect, one of her weakest cards. An ethereal blade materializes in midair, then lunges toward the nearest trooper. He screams in fright as it plunges through his armor, phasing past his defenses with ease. A second later, it releases a burst of wind magic inside his body, dicing him to pieces. He collapses into his own footprint, leaving little to connect one piece of his tissue to another.

The razor-sharp weapon begins rapidly dicing apart the troopers, improving Mara's killing speed dramatically. Within thirty seconds of her arrival, she slaughters fifty of the three hundred troopers, leaving the rest pale with fear.

Even so, they quickly form up a defensive line between Mara and her two targets. Bullets whizz toward the Baron of Games, some striking her and sending blood spraying, but never do any manage to reach her vitals.

Mara grits her teeth. "You devil-damned insects! Just perish, already! Polar Deathworm, Enchant!"

Mara summons frost energy onto her fists. She lunges toward a pair of nearby troopers, intending to flash-freeze and shatter their figures.

However at that moment, a surge of magic pushes against Mara and flings her backward!

"What?!"

Mara flies away from the troopers, dumbstruck at the unexpected development. She crashes against a nearby building, fragmenting its wall into chunks of brick and mortar. She recovers immediately thanks to her wolf-enhanced body, then jumps out of the wall's imprint, confusion on her face.

"Who dares?"

The troopers fire on Mara's position, but she dodges to the side and leaps skyward, still warily looking for her attacker.

"Finally, just what I needed! Matured Drake, Transform!"

Mara's body rapidly shifts in midair. One of her few Golden Aspects activates, empowering her with the might of half a dragon. Her body, still somewhat wolf-like, begins to change further, transforming her into a twenty-foot-tall and fifty-foot-long ancient monster.

Even stronger than when she fought Kar, Mara cackles evilly. "This is your end, fleshbags!"

She crashes into the ground below, flattening twenty troopers with her sheer bulk. No longer does she fear their bullets as her scaled armor deflects them with ease. In twos and threes, Mara swings her head from side to side, snapping and severing her enemies' bodies effortlessly.

It doesn't take long before she spots the figure of Daisy Hiro standing protectively in front of her mother's stretcher, a look of fright on her face.

"There you are!" Mara shouts, as she kills another five troopers desperately trying to protect the child. "All this trouble to catch one brat!"

The thirty remaining troopers put their lives on the line to protect Phoebe and Daisy. Even so, they fail to injure Mara in the slightest. After transforming into a half-drake, her strength reaches the bottom level of Demon Dukes, making her more than a match for humanity's conventional weapons.

"Grab the assets and run!" One of the troopers shouts to another. "Get them out of here!"

An instant later, Mara brings a claw down, crushing him into his shadow. The man perishes, as does the one he just yelled out to.

"Trying to run? You'll fail!" Mara laughs.

While the Baron of Games rampages, her primary target, the child known as Daisy Hiro, trembles fearfully.

"Mommy, mommy, wake up! There's a bad person here!"

Daisy grabs her mother and shakes her, but Phoebe doesn't stir. Daisy tries to touch the 'bad spots,' but even then, Phoebe doesn't awaken.

"Mommy, I'm scared!"

Mara finishes off several more troopers, leaving only a handful behind. Realizing they can't offer even a smidgen of resistance, the men and women freeze up in terror. Their bodies tremble and shake as they mutter their final words.

"D-demons... they're just... too frightening... too powerful!"

Mara raises her claw again. She swings it toward the five remaining soldiers, finally breathing a sigh of satisfaction.

"My work here... is done!"

At that moment, her claw slams against a barrier of light. Mara's gigantic claw, easily twice the size of her human opponents, grinds to a half and freezes in midair.

"Huh? What?"

Mara tries to pull her claw back, but as if stuck in a quagmire, it refuses to budge.

"What the devil?!"

Daisy turns to look at the Baron of Games.

"You... you are a very bad person! You hurt all my friends! You hurt my mommy!"

The child rears her palm back, then swings it toward Mara's face, some thirty feet in the air. A projection of psionic energy in the shape of her hand materializes, increases in size, and swings at Mara's draconic face.

Slap!

The might of an anvil crashes against Mara's face, jarring her senses. She stumbles to the left, momentarily dazed by the hit.

"Argh! What the devil?! That child... she is a Hero after all!"

More angered than injured, Mara turns her head to look at Daisy. A sneer of rage crosses her animalistic face, giving her the appearance of a predator.

"You... you little shit! How dare you slap me! If that's all you've got, then I think it's your naptime!"

The five troopers watch helplessly as the shield of light that protected them fades away. Their momentary relief changes to bloodcurdling fright as they see Mara rear back, sucking oxygen into her throat.

"Blaaaaaugh!"

Mara releases a torrent of flames at the troopers, angling her flames in such a way that they'll just barely miss Daisy and her mother.

"This is the end!" A female soldier whimpers, closing her eyes and waiting for death to arrive.

However, Daisy takes a step forward and raises her hand.

"...No! Bad dragon! Bad!"

Another psionic palm materializes beneath Mara's head. It mimics Daisy's motion, slapping upward toward the underside of Mara's fire-spewing maw.

Glomp!

The impact slaps her lower jaw shut, abruptly cutting off Mara's dragon-breath. With nowhere for the flames to go, they backfire in Mara's throat, making her cough and wheeze.

"Huk! Kah! You- cough! You little... hack!"

Mara chokes several times, while tears stream from her eyes. Even angrier than before, she turns to howl at Daisy, only to see the child woozily stumble to the side, exhausted from expending too much mana. Daisy flops to the ground and falls unconscious, leaving herself completely defenseless.

A moment of silence follows.

Mara and the troopers both look at Daisy, then at each other, then at Mara.

One trooper wets himself in fright. "...Oh no."

Mara furrows her brow. "Tsk. Stupid child. It seems all of your luck has just run out. You might be a Hero now, but your strength is far too lacking to use such powerful magic without restraint."

After a moment of debate, Mara shrugs her gigantic shoulders.

"Too bad for you lot! You may die, now!"

Finally able to capture her targets, Mara wastes no more time. She swings her claws at the troopers and splatters them into meat-paste.

"About time. Now, to grab the little girl and her mother."

Mara deactivates her transformation. She returns the Matured Drake to her Spiritual Deck, where it won't be useable for many more hours, then walks over and bends down to grab the back of Daisy's shirt.

Suddenly, Mara pauses. A strange look crosses over her face as a sense of danger seizes her.

"What's this? This mana! Something powerful... underground!"

Alarmed, Mara jerks her eyes toward her feet. There she sees an unbelieveable sight as a gigantic blob of mana begins rushing toward the surface.

"Spawn of a broodmother! That's-?!"

Mara immediately retreats, saving herself by only a fraction of a second. A gigantic head filled with razor-sharp teeth erupts from Tarus II's depths, snapping onto her previous position with deadly intent.

"SKREEEEEE!!"

A Hydra, one of many legendary creatures from ancient myth, claws its way out of the planet's bowels. Mara retreats further and further as she gazes upon the monster with shock-filled eyes.

"This can't be! Another Hydra?! Since when did ancient monsters from the olden antiquity era become so commonplace? And what of the mother and child? Surely, they'll be crushed to death!"

Hardly have the words left Mara's mouth before she spots an even more incredible sight. Daisy's unconscious body, as well as Phoebe's, somehow cling to the Hydra's back, as if held there by a magical magnet.

Astounded, Mara quickly flips through many possibilities in her mind. "The Hydra... it's protecting the Hero's wife and child? Could this be a secret weapon he left behind to shield his family?"

The Hydra screeches again, only to begin rampaging wildly. It thrashes about, swinging its four heads in all directions. Houses and apartment buildings crumble into dust, while people from all walks of life flee in terror.

"Why would the Hero create a monster to protect his family, yet allow it to rampage uncontrollably? There's no way he'd do something so idiotic! That must mean... he didn't make it. Perhaps... his daughter?"

Mara continues putting distance between herself and the Hydra. She glances backward at Daisy, slumbering atop the Hydra's back, and frowns.

"How could a child cast magic while asleep? That shouldn't be possible. Even so, who else could achieve such a feat? It must be her or her father!"

Gritting her teeth, Mara shakes her head.

"Forget this! Ose can do what she wants to me! I'm not fighting a devil-damned Hydra! I'm leaving this shithole before it kills me!"

Mara turns to leave. Just as she starts to head westward, she freezes in her tracks, a look of sheer terror on her face.

There, before her, three giants slowly begin to materialize. Their figures, vaguely humanoid, yet otherworldly and rippling with power, scare the devil out of her. At thirty, fifty, and seventy feet tall, each giant possesses an awe-inspiring aura and level of mana far beyond anything Mara has ever sensed in anything beyond Diablo himself.

"Wha-wha-what?! WHAT?! Giant humans! How are they appearing out of thin air?! It's... it's as if someone has summoned them from another realm!!"

Several seconds later, the skin, bones, and muscles of the giants fully coagulate. They land deftly on their feet, the mere impact of which causes a series of micro-quakes throughout the region. Then, they slowly lower their gazes to Mara's tiny, pitiful, insignificant form.

All thoughts of retaliation flee from Mara's mind.

"...Oh... to hell with this."

>!This is what a spoiler looks like! Click it to reveal the text!!

Part 278: Sphinx VS Duke Finale

Recommended Listening

Hero City's Eastern Front.

Zamiel, the Duke of Weaponry, howls like a madman. He summons a rain of blunted and bladed weapons, crashing them upon his adversary, the King of All Monsters, Kar. Still in his Sphinx form, Kar shrugs off Zamiel's attacks as if he were a metal-plated tank being pelted by snowballs. A two-ton hammer crashes into his head, only to richochet away and flop to the ground.

"Hurgh! You will have to do better than that!" Kar bellows.

The half-lion, half-eagle monster rears up on his hind legs. He swings one of his massive paws horizontally, summoning the weight of a planet upon Zamiel's figure.

THUMP!

Kar slaps Zamiel to the east, where he careens helplessly into the canyon filled with demons and Kar's summoned Earth Golems. Zamiel flies for half a mile before finally crashing into the leg of a Diamond Construct, knocking it off-balance until it tumbles to its side.

"Argh!" Zamiel cries, after finally grinding to a halt. His vision blurs for a moment before he forces himself to his feet. With so many of Kar's constructs slaying demons, plenty of blood lingers in the area, allowing Zamiel to draw the plasma toward himself. Within seconds, he heals his injuries and rises to his feet.

Damn! My body might possess the strength of an Emperor, but my magic is still that of a Duke's! My summoned weapons can barely slow the Sphinx down, let alone allow me to kill the bastard! If only little bro were still here...

Remembering the pain of watching his brother's corpse explode into a bloody mist, Zamiel's eyes turn red with emotion. He squeezes his hands into fists and punches his chest.

Little bro! I won't let you die in vain! I WILL avenge you! No matter what it takes! No matter what price I have to pay!

Zamiel raises his head. He spots the Sphinx leaping into the sky and flapping his wings, then dive-bombing the Duke of Weaponry.

"You want to kill me, reptile? Try! Just TRY!!"

Off the the west, the terrible screechings of a hydra continue to bellow into the surrounding world, but Zamiel pays them no attention.

I'll bet Mephisto must have summoned that Hydra from the body of the previous one. Heh. If that's the case, then I have no reason to worry. I'll focus all my attention on killing the Monster King!

Kar hurtles downward. He opens his mouth to bare his lion-teeth, aiming to bite off Zamiel's head.

Just before Kar can land the killing blow, Zamiel flickers to the side, evading death. The Monster King's jaws snap onto his after-image, but this doesn't seem to bother Kar in the slightest.

"Hurgh! You demonsh are all the shame! You talk big, but run away when shomeone shtronger than you showsh up!"

With his mouth no longer in its usual form, Kar's words drawl a bit. Even so, the sheer timber of his voice proves menacing enough to freeze the blood of those facing him.

"I don't fear you..." Zamiel replies. "I'm merely suffering a little disadvantage. Once I find your weak spot, I'll end you in an instant!"

"You may try!" Kar roars.

A terrifying battle unfolds. For the next twenty minutes, Kar and Zamiel trade blows like twin thunderstorms competing over who can best devastate the land. Deafening sonic booms erupt whenever their fists and claws meet.

Time after time, Kar smacks or eviscerates Zamiel, leaving him at death's door. However, with all of Kar's golems repeatedly killing demons in the valley, Zamiel manages to regenerate his body back to full.

By contrast, while Zamiel's tenacity proves immovable, Kar begins to show signs of slowing down. Despite the power afforded by his Sphinx form, its limited duration ticks silently in the back of his mind. Unlike his opponent, who can drain the blood on the battlefield to heal himself, Kar possesses no such means. Light injuries accumulate on his body, causing his blood to spew forth.

Unsurprisingly, Zamiel notices this fact. Every time Zamiel inflicts even the smallest cut on Kar's body, he forces the wound to bleed, then sucks out the blood to nourish and empower himself.

Twenty minutes become thirty. Finally, Kar pulls back, panting heavily.

"Hah... hah... you are quite the hardy cockroach."

Hatred glimmers in Zamiel's eyes. "Feeling sleepy, reptile? Don't worry. I'll soon put you to bed forever."

Zamiel summons another hundred hammers and swords. This time, instead of hurling them at Kar, he pauses for a split second before firing them outward.

Boom! Boom! Boom!

A series of explosions resound in the valley as Zamiel's weapons meet their marks. All of Kar's golems collapse under the sheer might of his duke-level attacks.

"Shit!" Kar curses. "You shneaky little..."

In an instant, the demon army moves as one. They rush the humans' frontlines once again, clearing the distance with frightening speed.

"Don't worry about them, Monster King," Zamiel hisses. "Those squishy little fleshbags are the least of your concerns."

He lunges forward while summoning another hailstorm of maces and spears. They fly at Kar, forcing him to defend himself from the two-pronged attack. This time, when the demons and humans collide at the western side of the valley, Kar proves unable to run to their aid.

So furious is Zamiel's onslaught that Kar quickly finds himself in a passive position, forced back one step after another. The Sphinx pants wildly, drawing forth all his strength to forcefully maintain his Sphinx transformation.

Eventually, during a momentary lull in the battle, Kar leaps backward, only to trip over a rock and land on his side. Immediately, he loses his battle momentum, causing his body to detransform. Within seconds, he morphs back into his crocodilian form, sapping him of the enormous strength he possessed as a Sphinx, yet also returning him to a much more sustainable power level.

"Hurgh... I underestimated you, Ugly," Kar says as he jumps to his feet. His breath no longer comes in ragged gasps. Unlike before, where maintaining his Sphinx form could be likened to a mountain climber desperately trying to clutch a rock with the tips of their fingers, Kar now finds his feet back on solid ground. Despite possessing somewhat weaker strength, the drop in mana requirements alone prove capable of reinvigorating him.

"Cocky as ever, Sphinx..." Zamiel murmurs. "Your words seem to imply that if you'd just fought me more seriously, you'd have killed me by now. Don't lie to yourself. We both know I'm far too much demon for you to handle."

Kar nods slowly. "We shall see."

The Monster King suddenly launches forward, tearing across the plains to clear the few-hundred-feet gap separating him from his most hated enemy. Zamiel's heart skips a beat as Kar charges at him.

Damned croc! I thought he was sapped dry, yet somehow, he gained a second wind!

Another vicious melee ensues as Kar rushes forward, using his far less bulky crocodilian body to bob and weave, ducking and deflecting Zamiel's ethereal weapons each time he summons and flings them. With their weight ranging from half a ton to five tons, each one sends rocks and mud spraying whenever they strike the ground, yet not once does Zamiel manage to land a blow.

As their battle picks up in intensity, Zamiel starts retreating two and three steps at a time, furiously blocking Kar's claw and tail swipes. Like an enlightened martial artist, the crocodile continuously strikes at Zamiel's weak points, sometimes knocking Zamiel backward, while other times forcing him to evade.

Damn! Zamiel thinks. The croc might be weaker when he isn't in his Sphinx form, but he's also nimbler and still hits like Bael's big brother! What the HELL?! How can the universe be so unfair as to give him all that power?!

Zamiel tries to telekinetically yank a patch of nearby blood off the ground, but during that moment of inattention, Kar rushes over and violently slaps his face, sending him crashing into a boulder.

"Hurgh! Ah-ah-ah! I don't think so, punk! You aren't healing anymore. Not with me around."

Hearing his opponent's declaration, Zamiel's thoughts turn grim.

I can't keep this up! The Sphinx is deliberately limiting his strength. He's not trying to kill me anymore, but to beat and break my bones. He wants to cripple me so he can drag me somewhere without any blood. If he succeeds, I'll be a goner! I have to find a way to beat him while I still can!

Gritting his teeth, Zamiel jumps to his feet and starts focusing on defense. He retreats toward the main demon army, hoping to stumble across blood-soaked patches of the battlefield. However, to his horror, no matter where he looks, he doesn't find even a single corpse.

"Looking for something?" Kar asks, grinning viciously. "Oops. I must have accidentally sucked all those juicy, bloody bodies into the ground. Shame you don't have the powers of earth manipulation, eh?"

Zamiel pales in fear.

"You bastard! Do you think you can fuck with me?! I'm the strongest Duke in all of Hell!"

"But in the end... you are only a Duke..." Kar chuckles. He jumps into the air and dive-bombs toward Zamiel, intending to land a grievous blow.

Zamiel launches another barrage of weapons at the falling Monster King. However, even as he does, the sensation of death wraps itself around his heart.

I won't win. I can't win... Zamiel thinks.

The Monster King is too strong. No matter how many weapons I hit him with he never goes down.

They're all too weak to pierce his hide. Even if they could hurt him, he'd just dodge them.

If only I could land one critical hit...

As the crocodile descends upon him, a flash of insight sparks in the Duke's eyes.

What am I thinking? How could I be so stupid? Of course! All this time, I've focused on quantity, when I should have poured my magic into quality!

Seeing Kar on a direct collision course, Zamiel stomps his foot against the dirt and dives to the side, causing the crocodile to smash into his previous position. Zamiel dives into a roll, then leaps to his feet.

"Tch. I'm sorry, little bro. I almost gave up. But don't you worry... this reptile won't live ten minutes longer!"

Once again, Zamiel taps into his magic. He conjures another summoning portal, but this time, instead of summoning a hundred random weapons, he pours all of his magic into one single, unbelievably powerful greatsword.

Harnessing a magical energy equal to half of Zamiel's mana reserves, the weapon pulsates with rage, fueled by his emotions. The menacing curved blade, like a dragon's tooth, seems to demand energy-rich blood. Zamiel jumps into the air and wraps his fingers around the sword's hilt, then drops down and plants his feet on Tarus II's soil. His entire demeanor shifts, changing him from a fleeing red rat into an unfathomable expert.

Zamiel inhales deeply, allowing the smell of death permeating the valley to flow into his nostrils. His pupils enlarge as he gazes at his opponent without a trace of emotion on his face.

"...I see. To think I've been chucking swords and clubs at the Monster King like rocks this whole time. Truly, my approach to combat has been nothing short of amateur. That changes now."

Magical energy wraps around the weapon's blade. It carries a sensation of bloodlust, causing any who look at the sword to feel a sensation of despair. Kar takes a step back and examines his opponent's changed posture warily. As a long-lived predator of the swamp, he has faced countless vicious enemies.

"Hurgh. Have you been holding back the whole time, Ugly? Come, then. Show me your 'true' strength."

Zamiel nods.

"Gladly."

The Duke of Weaponry slowly slashes his sword upward, aiming to chop the Monster King in half. However, with more than fifty feet separating them, his sword seemingly won't hit Kar at all.

The instant his weapon starts to curve upward, the malevolent mana enveloping its blade transforms into a wave of ultra-sharp Sword Qi. It lashes forward, flying toward Kar at the speed of sound. In that split-second, Kar dashes to the side, his eyes following the Sword Qi as it rockets forward.

Slash-slash-slash!

The blade's energy chops through ten boulders and half a dozen demons in its path, instantly severing all of them in half. It continues flying until it plunges into a cliff at the north, where it finally sinks into the mountainside and loses its momentum.

Kar's eyes widen in alarm. "What the-?!"

Without hesitation, Zamiel lunges forward. His movements, no longer as slow as during his first slash, speed up tremendously. He fires off wave after wave of Sword Qi, forcing Kar to dodge, lest that deadly energy behead him in a single move.

"Hurgh!! You... when did you learn such a terrifying attack?!" Kar howls.

Zamiel executes a horizontal slash. Kar jumps to avoid it, but the blade still flies out in a huge arc and slaughters several hundred demons, chopping them in half at their waists. Some of them cry out in agony, while the rest perish in the blink of an eye, never even seeing their death coming.

Kar grits his teeth. "You are much more dangerous than I thought!"

Seeing Zamiel killing his fellow demons without a shred of conscience, Kar explodes in anger. Even if he couldn't give half a damn about their fates, seeing them killed by friendly fire stirs up his rage toward the dishonorable.

"You complete lowlife! How dare you throw away the lives of comrades who depend on you?!"

Kar charges toward Zamiel, clearing the gap at lightning speeds. He evades one last slash from Zamiel's sword, then narrows his claws into a spear of bone.

SKRIIIIK!

Kar plunges his claws into Zamiel's stomach and tears through his back. With a single move, he impales his entire arm through the Duke of Weaponry's body, spewing a gallon of blood out behind him.

"Ah! Puhak!"

Zamiel cries out in pain. However, a vicious grim spreads across his lips.

Got you.

With Kar's arm plunged deep within Zamiel's guts, the Monster King finds himself within a danger zone, one he didn't expect. Zamiel's sword, still infused with Sword Qi, flits around behind the Monster King and stabs into his back!

RIIIP!

Not expecting his badly injured opponent to use such a move, Kar gasps in pain. he quickly pulls his arm out of Zamiel's guts, allowing the Duke to stagger backward and flop to the ground. However, Zamiel's sword, possessing an animal-like sentinence, continues to pour razor sharp Qi into Kar's back. The Monster King tries to cry out in pain, only for the sword's bloodthirsty mana to eviscerate his lungs, making it impossible to breathe.

"Shuh! Shuhhh... kuhhh..."

Kar wheezes and gasps for breath. He grabs the front of the blade and tries to forcibly reverse it out of his body. Instead, the Sword Qi rips apart his hands like a garbage disposal, causing him even more horrifying wounds. With his claws mangled, Kar's eyes widen in horror. He staggers backward and tries to think of a way to pull the sword out, only for it to retract of its own volition. It retreats from his back, allowing Kar to flop to the ground, wheezing and coughing up blood while his useless lungs fail to do their job.

On the other hand, with Kar's blood soaking the nearby terrain, Zamiel quickly heals himself back up, then jumps to his feet, a look of glee playing upon his face.

"Hahaha! HAHAHAHAH!! I can't believe it! Oh, what luck."

Zamiel's smile disappears, replaced instead with the look of a bloodthirsty, homicidal maniac.

"Monster King. I've been waiting for this moment all day."

The older Battle Brother slowly walks toward Kar, who barely manages to push himself away with his feet. Kar repeatedly vomits blood, while even more spills from his ruptured internal organs out of his back and stomach.

"Kuuk... krrrnn..."

Zamiel holds out his hand. His sword flies into his grasp, purring like a contented kitten. The Duke strokes its blade while smiling sweetly. "Yes. Good boy. You did well. Did you get a good taste of the scaley's blood? Mmm. Me too. But what say we have some more? There's plenty for both of us."

Without warning, Zamiel stabs the sword down, impaling Kar's knee. The Monster King opens his mouth to scream, but all he manages is to gasp out dozens of air-filled blood bubbles.

Zamiel greedily levitates Kar's gushing blood. He splashes some of it on his sword, enriching its spiritual energy. The rest, he pours into his mouth, smacking his lips while savoring the mana-rich iron-like texture.

"Mmm. Nothing like a few gallons of blood to wake me up in the morning. I think I'll have another!"

With that, he impales Kar's other knee, causing the Monster King to silently shriek in pain.

Over and over, Zamiel impales Kar's mangled claws, his elbows, and his shoulders. He takes his sweet time tearing the Sphinx apart, grinning sadistically the whole time.

"You should have accepted my offer from the beginning, Sphinx. If you had just turned against the humans, my little bro would still be alive, and you'd be secure in your power. Sadly, your arrogance blinded you. You never thought you could lose to a pair of Barons. That was your undoing."

Kar lays motionless in the grass, his body mangled and incapable of moving, his chest heaving, and his eyes glazed over.

"Well, dear Sphinx. I think you know what comes next," Zamiel says. "No more fun and games. I want your Sphinx powers for myself. What say you, hm? Shall we do this the easy way or the hard way?"

Zamiel pauses for a moment to smile. As he does, Kar lifts his head.

"Ssss... BUTTERFLYYYYY!!"

Kar bellows at the top of his lungs, startling the Duke of Weaponry.

"What the devil?! Your lungs healed already? Damned reptiles and your hardy- oh, fuck."

Zamiel only gets a split-second to react before a boulder-sized fist made of psionic energy materializes beside him and smashes into his body.

Whump!

The Duke goes flying. Blinker's summoned fist blasts him more than two miles into the distance, causing him to careen uncontrollably until he crashes into the planet's crust.

An instant later, Blinker materializes at Kar's side, her body still human sized.

"No, no, gator-man! You had that guy on the ropes! What happened? Are you okay?! Oh my god, you look horrible! Don't worry, I'll, uh, I'll get you to Belial! Just stay strong, okay!"

Blinker panics. In all the time she's been with Kar, not once has he ever suffered such horrific, gruesome injuries.

"Cough... Butterfly... you came..." Kar gasps.

"Duh! Now, stop talking. I'm gonna teleport you to Belial, okay? Lemme just lift you up-"

Blinker starts to levitate Kar's body with psionic energy, only for his figure to go limp. The crocodile starts shaking uncontrollably, forcing Blinker to set him back down.

"Kar? Kar?! Wh-wh-what's wrong? Oh my god, did I hurt you? I'm sorry!"

It takes several seconds before Kar manages to reopen his eyes.

"D-don't... Butter... fly... hurgh. Can't move. Barely... barely holding on..."

Blinker starts to say something, only to jump in alarm as a hail of ghastly specters falls upon her. Not content to let the fairy get away, Mephisto summons another rain of ghosts to attack her, but Blinker quickly conjures a barrier of psionic energy to keep them away.

"Shit! Shit! Okay, Kar? I need you to stay calm, alright? Stay calm, like me! I'm always calm, right? Right!"

Blinker nods several times, convincing nobody of the veracity of her statements. Not even herself.

"I can't heal you, Kar! I don't know healing magic. Only Belial does! Wait, don't you have gator healing juices? You can fix yourself, right? Do you need mana? I've got plenty of mana! I can- eek!"

Blinker shrieks in fright as Zamiel suddenly appears and starts whaling on her barrier with his sword.

WHAM! WHAM! WHAM!

"Open up, fairy! Give me that Sphinx! He's mine!!"

With ghosts attacking her psionic barrier on one side and Zamiel on the other, Blinker finds herself forced to send more mana upward, reinforcing her psionic shield further.

Unsure how to get Kar out of such a vicious encirclement, Blinker's head spins. "Uh, uh, don't worry, gator-man! I'll save us both! I'm strong you know! Almost as strong as you! Just gimme a second and-"

Before Blinker can finish, Kar coughs.

"Butterfly. No. There is... no saving me now. Out of mana. Too injured. Won't... won't last long."

Kar's eyes flutter.

"Butter... butterfly... listen to me. One... one question."

Blinker's heart stops. She bites her lip to try and quell her trembling.

"Y-yes? What is it, Kar? A question?"

Slowly, Kar nods.

"Who... who do... I love... the most?"

Uncomprehending, Blinker winces as Zamiel's furious assault intensifies, sending pangs of pain into her chest.

"I don't understand, Kar. What do you mean? Why are you asking me this?"

Kar grits his teeth. "Cough... damn you... woman... cough. Just answer... my question..."

Blinker lowers her head. "I... okay. Who do you love the most? It's obvious, right? Pyra. You love her the most."

Kar lolls his head to the side. "No... wrong... stupid woman... hurgh... answer again..."

Tears stream down Blinker's cheeks.

"Me? Is it me?"

Finally, Kar's expression loosens a little, making him lose some of the pain in his eyes.

"Hurgh. Yes... that's right. It is you, Butterfly. You are... the one... I love most..."

Kar coughs one last time.

"Kuu... I always was... bad at... riddles."

"Kar?" Blinker whispers.

A moment later, Kar exhales one last time.

His body sags, losing the last of its strength.

As the light fades from his eyes, a faint smile creeps upon Kar's face.

In the end... he finally achieves the answer he sought his whole life.

"Kar! Kar, no! NOOO!"

Blinker wraps her arms around Kar's head. Even as the smashing of fists and weapons strikes her psionic barrier, all she comprehends is her husband's cold, lifeless body.

Unseen by those of the mortal coil, a congregation of spiritual energy levitates out of Kar's body. It hovers in the air, then dives down into Blinker's sobbing figure.

Shortly after it does, Blinker raises her head.

A look of immense rage plays across her face.

"You... you killed... my HUSBAND!"

>!This is what a spoiler looks like! Click it to reveal the text!!

Part 279: Blinker's Gain, Blinker's Loss

Recommended Listening

Blinker's psionic barrier explodes outward, blasting away Zamiel, Mephisto, and more than a hundred of Mephisto's Wraiths. All of Blinker's enemies cry out in surprise and alarm, with Zamiel the most surprised. Before he can react, Blinker rockets into the air and flies at him with her fist reared back.

THUNK!

Blinker smashes Zamiel's stomach, blasting the wind out of him and sending him violently crashing into the dirt below. Zamiel bounces off the ground once, but Blinker falls upon him again, this time with ten afterimages of her fist materializing in that instant.

THUMP-THUMP-THUMP-THUMP!

She brutally pummels Zamiel, one hit after another, pulling back only at the last second to retreat to her husband's body. Zamiel drags along the dirt, tearing out a massive crevasse in the valley. For a few moments, his consciousness wavers between life and death. It's only his Emperor-level physique that saves him from perishing under the Monster Queen's onslaught.

Huk... what the... devil?!

Zamiel struggles to catch his breath. Multiple internal injuries, including ruptured organs, plague his body. He opens his eyes just in time to see Blinker levitating Kar's corpse into the air. Tears fill the fairy's eyes as she sends her husband away, teleporting him somewhere unknown.

How could... how could the Monster Queen become so powerful? Zamiel gasps.

After a few seconds, his eyes flicker with recognition.

She must have absorbed the Sphinx's power! I never imagined she would be so brutal as to finish off her own husband! No, wait, that makes no sense. She probably solved his riddle instead. Shit! That... that greedy little...

Zamiel motions with his hands. Thanks to his vampiric abilities, he manages to repair his internal organs by using his own blood. However, his vitality diminishes significantly, making the color drain from his skin.

Hah! So what if she took her husband's power?! That only means I have to kill her to reap the Sphinx's magic. With Mephisto and me working together, she's as good as dead!

Zamiel jumps to his feet. Behind Blinker, Mephisto's ghosts reappear, along with the Duke of Mist himself.

"Ksss! Damned woman!" Mephisto cries. "Ssso what if you took the Sssphinx'sss power?! My minionsss and I are more than enough to ssslay the likesss of you!"

Blinker's expression hovers on the edge of insanity. Her eyes, puffy, red, and swollen, look somewhat demonic.

"You murdered him!" She roars. "You killed Kar! I won't let any of you... leave here ALIVE!"

Whoomph!

An aura of inconceivable power erupts from Blinker's body. Having previously increased her size to that of a seven-foot-tall human, she appears about the same height as Zamiel, significantly taller than the hunched-over figure of Mephisto. Thick, intimidating muscles sprout along her body. Her biceps and glutes flex, revealing fine, neatly carved lines, like those belonging to the mightiest Titans.

Blinker points a finger at Zamiel.

"You! You must die FIRST!"

Not one hint of mercy rests within Blinker's eyes. Only rage, anger, and anguish present themselves.

Instantly, Blinker rockets toward Zamiel, roaring like a Banshee. The Duke's veins momentarily turn to ice out of sheer terror.

Holy crap! That's one scary fairy!

Zamiel quickly congeals his mana into Manifested Qi, a type of weapon energy capable of taking many different forms. Unlike before, when he made it assume the properties of a sword, he transforms the purple, viscous energy into something resembling a giant, transparent tower shield.

Blinker crashes into the shield at full speed, the sheer power behind her attack partially passing through the Qi to strike Zamiel's body.

"Argh!" Zamiel howls. He stomps his feet into the dirt and furrows his brow, trying desperately to hold on, before the pressure from Blinker's attack instantly disappears. Caught off-guard, he stumbles forward, then jerks his eyes to the side, where he sees afterimages of Blinker's body circling around to his flank.

"Crap!"

Zamiel spins his shield around to form a hasty barrier behind himself. Much weaker than the first one, he doesn't even get to solidify his footing before Blinker kicks against it and throws him off his feet.

The Duke of Weaponry goes flying for the second time in thirty seconds. He bounces off the terrain and forcibly shifts his momentum by turning his Qi into a mattress-like cushion to slow his flight. When he flips himself around and sees Blinker coming at him again, his expression turns grim.

I was wrong! The Monster Queen is way stronger than before! Her power is ludicrous! It's like facing two Sphinxes at the same time!

Blinker, formerly a fairy with a weak physique but mighty and versatile magic, receives no benefit to her magical attributes as a result of consuming the Sphinx's aura. Instead, her physical body elevates to the same level as Kar's, giving her an extremely well-rounded set of abilities.

With a top tier body, and top tier fairy magic, Blinker becomes terrifying beyond belief.

Just before Blinker reaches Zamiel for another follow-up, she stops mid-movement and retreats, narrowly avoiding a hail of fists from Mephisto's Wraiths. These astral enemies bellow and shriek, diving at Blinker from all angles to surround and bully her.

Blinker's expression become livid. "These... these toys stopped me once. But no more! BREAK!"

She swipes out her palms and tears at the air. Instantly, a pair of wraiths explode into astral essence, diffusing into the wind. Unlike before, when she fought them somewhat half-heartedly, thinking she and her husband would eventually win out and overpower Mephisto's goons, Blinker no longer allows herself an inch of compromise.

Her expression speaks a million words of regret, all of them aimed at herself.

Kar died because I assumed he couldn't lose. I took him too lightly. I took everything too lightly.

Now he's gone... and his blood is on my hands.

Without holding back, Blinker rapidly rakes the air. She tears twenty Wraiths apart in an instant, ripping their souls into shreds with her telekinetic magic.

During the few seconds Blinker becomes occupied with killing the Wraiths, Mephisto draws near. He lurks beneath the planet's soil where she can't see. Blinker hovers only twenty feet off the ground, a distance too close for comfort when dealing with Dukes and Emperors.

In a flash, Mephisto attacks! He pounces at her from below and plunges a knife into her back during a moment of distraction, causing Blinker to howl in agony. Mephisto's Pain Inducement sends lightning pouring into her figure, momentarily paralyzing her. He stabs her three times more, aiming for her shoulders and heart.

"Kekeke! Never underessstimate the- eh?"

To Mephisto's shock, Blinker's figure fades away mid-stab, causing 'sweat' to drench his bones.

"An illusssion?!"

Mephisto whirls around in horror, just in time to see Blinker pop out of seemingly midair, her body previously hidden inside a crack in space. Unable to react in time, the Duke of Mist can only watch helplessly as a psionic-energy-coated fist flies at his face.

THUMP!!

Blinker savagely pounds Mephisto into the dirt. Struck dumb by her attack, his body momentarily loses its ethereal properties, causing him to physically strike the dirt and bounce off it.

"Kuh! Y-you damned trickssster fairy!"

Having not expected Blinker to retain her sanity, Mephisto ends up caught off-guard by her subterfuge.

The Monster Queen's eyes boil with emotions far beyond the realm of mere 'hatred.'

"You two. You're still thinking about how you'll eventually kill me. You continue to lust after the Sphinx's power. Stupid... bastards! Forget killing me. You won't leave here alive. Even if you do, I'll hunt you for the rest of eternity. I'll chase you to the ends of the galaxy. You will never live another waking day without fearing my arrival."

Blinker raises her fist. It trembles with a rage so pure that goosebumps start appearing on Zamiel's body.

"Kar wasn't only my husband. He was my one true love. We shared the warmth of every waking day. We looked forward to an eternity spent comforting each other. Now... I have nothing. Nothing!"

Slowly, Blinker uncurls her fist. She lowers her palm to her belly while glaring daggers at Zamiel.

"Did you know, little Duke? I never got to give my husband the good news. He died without knowing about the children he gave me. You took our happiest moment away from each other... the pinnacle of our union. Death is a luxury too wonderful for you. Not even an eternity of torture would suffice for what you've stolen."

An ominous feeling washes over Zamiel's skin. Seeing the horrific expression directed at him from the Monster Queen, the Duke of Weaponry trembles ceaselessly, unwilling to imagine just what horrors await him if that terrifying lunatic gets her hands on him.

"B-boss? Boss! What do we do?!"

Unknowingly, his tone toward Mephisto becomes deferential once again. Having relied on Mephisto's guidance his whole life, and having been raised from imp-hood to his current level of power by the Duke of Mist, Zamiel always, without fail, turns to his 'Boss' during similar moments of crisis.

Mephisto glowers at the Monster Queen. Without a word, he melts into the ground, leaving Zamiel behind.

"Boss? BOSS?!"

Zamiel panics. He turns to look at the fairy, only to see her figure shimmer and vanish.

From inches behind Zamiel's head, a female voice whispers.

"Where are you looking... little Duke?"

Zamiel screams. "Ahhhhh!!!"

He jumps to his feet and throws a random punch in the voice's direction, only to strike the empty air. A slight motion in the wind catches Zamiel's attention. He turns to see Blinker's leg spin-kicking his face.

THUNK!

Blinker savagely introduces her heel to the bridge of Zamiel's nose, horrifying him with not only the strength of her attack, but his complete inability to defend against her illusory powers. Unlike before, when Blinker fought him and Duriel using only her illusion magic, her body has become formidable enough that she can battle him physically and magically at the same time.

Zamiel hurtles to the west. He tries to summon a barrier of Qi to protect himself, but Blinker teleports into his path and swings her fist at his incoming head.

WHUMP!

The Duke's thoughts go dark. He crashes headfirst into a boulder, pummeling it into powder. The impact knocks him unconscious for several seconds, and he wakes up to find himself flying upward in an arc, with the Monster Queen holding onto his ankle. She swings him overhead like a sledgehammer, then pounds him against the dirt.

Over and over, the Monster Queen brutalizes Zamiel. Unable to catch a break for even a second, he flops limply in her grasp, his consciousness fading in for mere seconds at a time, just before crashing into something and battering him comatose once more.

* * *

After five full minutes of savagery, Blinker stops. She kneels down, grabs the back of Zamiel's neck, and pins his unmoving body to the dirt.

"Where are you, Mephisto? Come out."

Her words evaporate into the wind. The valley where countless demons once stomped lies eerily still, with a horde of them having stopped their advance to the east, too terrified by the Monster Queen's rampage to advance. The rest lay dead at the human army's feet to the west.

Mephisto doesn't appear. Instead, his voice transmits via the wind.

"Kekeke. You are fearsssome, Monssster Queen. I mussst admit... a mere Duke like me isss no match for the likesss of you."

Blinker places her free palm atop Zamiel's scalp.

"Show yourself, or I'll blast your minion's brains to mush."

"Do asss you wisssh..." Mephisto whispers, still not revealing himself. "My power isss far too insssignificant to defeat a warrior sssuch asss you. Plusss, we both know there isss no way you will give my minion to me."

Mephisto pauses for a moment, as if to let his words hang in the air.

Then, he continues.

"Monssster Queen. Where, persssay, did you hide the Monssster King'sss body? I cannot ssseem to find it."

Blinker narrows her eyes. "I know your tricks well, Mephisto. You won't touch my husband. Not now. Not ever. I will keep him at my side until the date of his cremation. Don't even think of finding him. I've hidden Kar somewhere the likes of you can never reach."

"Oh? Isss that ssso? Tsssk, how unfortunate..."

Mephisto's voice fades away, leaving Blinker puzzled.

I hid Kar's body inside a folded space. Mephisto might be ethereal, but he isn't a spatial manipulator. He won't find Kar, no matter how hard he tries.

Blinker waits for several seconds, but Mephisto still doesn't speak, seemingly having disappeared into the nether.

Unsatisfied, Blinker shoots a hateful glare at the unmoving figure at her feet.

"I would love to torture you until you lose all your sanity. Sadly, if I do that, you might break free someday. Kar would never forgive me if I allowed that. I'll just have to ensure that Mephisto can't use you for his evil deeds ever again."

Blinker's eyes lose some of their overwhelming hatred. The Fairy Queen exhales, then wraps Zamiel's body with psionic energy. His figure trembles uncontrollably as she infiltrates all of his vital organs and bones, reaching deep down inside of him to grab as many different points as she can.

A moment later, Blinker jumps to her feet and yanks her psionic energy apart. Zamiel's body explodes like a bomb, spraying rivers of gore in all directions. His brains and bones alike coat Tarus II's soil, making it impossible for Mephisto to resurrect him. After all, Necromancers might possess incredible means, but without a body, they won't have anything to revive.

Still unsatisfied, Blinker stares bitterly at Zamiel's exploded corpse.

Memories surface in her mind.

She recalls the first time she met Kar in the Labyrinth's Core.

Memories of his face appear in her mind. Their shared bond which transcended species.

She thinks back on how she first started out as only his little fairy assistant, and how their relationship swiftly progressed when few were around to see. With Kar's ability to shrink, and her ability to grow, they shared many quiet moments together, reminiscing about the past.

Blinker's expression darkens. She remembers the first time Kar told her about what happened to the Crocodiles. She remembers the sad, helpless look in his eyes as he broke down, telling her about Pyra's death.

The Battle Brothers. They slaughtered his people.

Kar lived for one reason, and one reason only: To kill the monsters who murdered everyone he loved.

Blinker's lower lip quivers. She presses a bloody fist against her chest and chokes back a sob.

"We got 'em, gator-man. We got the Battle Brothers."

Tears streak down Blinker's face, followed soon by a look of deliberation.

"There's still one more to kill, Kar. I won't let you down. I'll kill Mephisto. For you. He was the true architect of the Crocodiles' demise. If our children are to live safely in this new world... I'll have to slaughter the one who brought about their ancestors' end."

With her willpower strengthened, Blinker slowly nods.

She raises her head, only for her heart to skip a beat.

Half a mile away, mired in a fog shrouding the valley, a familiar figure stands.

Kar, the Monster King.

Blinker's blood turns to ice.

"What? No. No! How... how did...?!"

Mephisto rises from the ground. A sinister grin spreads across his face as he chuckles evilly. He raises a palm to show a glowing orb of mana-like energy struggling to escape his bony fingers.

"Kekeke. Sssilly woman. My meansss are beyond your imagination. I thank you for the Monssster King'sss corpssse!"

Blinker's eyes widen in horror. "You... you son of a BITCH! Give Kar back to me! Filthy graverobber!!"

She lunges toward Mephisto, but with such a huge distance separating them, Mephisto easily motions with his hands, sucking himself and Kar's body into the ground.

"NOOOOOO!!" Blinker shrieks. She smashes into the soil and begins ripping it to shreds, tearing out tons of dirt and rock furiously, flinging it to the side without a care in the world. Unlike Kar himself, who possessed Earth Manipulation, Blinker wields no such power. She tries desperately to dig to Kar's body, but ultimately fails due to Mephisto's inconceivable means.

Soon after, a voice drifts upon the wind.

"You almossst had me. Sssadly, you forgot one key detail, Monssster Queen. You forgot about... Sssoul Resssonance..."

Blinker pauses her frenzied digging. She gazes at the ripped-apart dirt, unable to fully understand Mephisto's words.

"Soul Resonance?!"

"Ehehehe! That isss right. Kar'sss body died. His sssoul passsed to me. I usssed hisss sssoul to locate hisss corpssse. Not ssso difficult to underssstand, isss it?"

Mephisto pauses, allowing his words to ruminate in Blinker's psyche before continuing.

"And asss for hiding hisss body in a folded ssspaccce... clever! Too bad I am the King of the Dead. I have many ssspatial manipulatorsss buried within my tombsss. Well, I've thanked you enough for your generousss contribution. Fare thee well, Monssster Queen. I've reaped many rewardsss from thisss battle. Ehehehehe!!"

Blinker's thoughts turn blank. "Give him back! GIVE HIM BAAACK! I'll chase you forever, Mephisto! You'll never be safe! Do you hear me?! YOU'LL NEVER BE SAFE!!"

Mephisto doesn't reply. He fades into the distance, no longer caring about what happens next on Tarus II.

Ultimately, he has traded two Baron minions for one Emperor.

As far as gains go, none hold a candle to him.

Blinker flops into her burrowed pit. She sobs uncontrollably, rage and grief flooding her mind.

"Kaa-aaa-aar! Nooo... Uhuuu... Kar, I'm sorry! I'm so sorry!!"

No longer able to restrain herself, Blinker leaps out of the pit. Her gaze flashes toward the demon army holding their line to the east. A vicious expression crosses her face as she blasts toward them at supersonic speeds.

"All demons must DIE!!"

* * *

Meanwhile. Among the demonic army to the east.

A pair of Demon Lords watch the events in the valley uneasily.

"Uh. Should we charge in again?" The fatter, uglier Lord asks. "Maybe we can slip past while the Monster Queen is fighting Zamiel."

His skinnier brother rolls his eyes. "No way, Skitch. You kidding? We already lost a bunch of Barons earlier. We'll just hold here and wait for reinforcements."

"Sure, okay..." Skitch mumbles. "Just, uh... seems like we should be doing our part, y'know?"

"Yeah, yeah. Goodie-goodie butt-kisser..." The skinny Lord grumbles. "Ose's over on the Western Front. She's an Emperor. Who do we got? A couple of weak-ass Dukes against a Monster Emperor. I'll just sit here and keep my tush nice and safe where the humans can't hit us."

Skitch winces as Zamiel's body gets blasted apart by Blinker's magic.

"Ow. Okay, that looked like it hurt."

"Duh. You think getting your body 'sploded is fun?"

"I'm just saying..." Skitch mumbles. "Why you gotta be so mean, Vex?"

"Sorry..." Vex mutters. "It's just... this whole thing's got me on edge. Me and my guy are going through a bit of a rough patch. You remember Fiolo, right?"

Skitch nods. "Uh huh. I heard you got yourself an incubus boyfriend."

"Sure did..." Vex mutters, smirking proudly. A moment later, his expression falls. "Problem is, the guy's a damn sex fiend. Can't get done with one session before he's ready for rounds two, three, and four. Says he wants to bring in some other partners to liven things up."

"Mmm. Seems fine to me," Skitch grunts. "What's the problem?"

"Eh, I dunno. Guess I'm just a one-demon-at-a-time kinda guy. I get a little jealous sharing my fella with others. Shucks. Perhaps there's somethin' wrong with me."

"I hear fleshbags are like that..." Skitch says, patting his friend's shoulder. "They get all possessive about their mates. It's good you're venting about this stuff. Not smart to hold it in. Bad for your health."

Vex scratches his head awkwardly. "Aw, geez. You think so? Maybe I oughta try and meet some of the guys Fiolo's into. Make it a three-man party, have some fun."

"Or four," Skitch says, flashing a thumbs up. "You know what they say. The more, the merrier."

"Yeah! That's true!" Vex chuckles. "I guess I'm just feeling a bit down 'cause I don't think I can keep up with him. What if he leaves me?"

"You hafta' open up and talk to your boyfriend," Skitch says, nodding sagely. "Only by expressing yourself freely can ya improve yourself. Nothing worse than secrets in a relationship."

"Yeah! You're right!" Vex says, rubbing his face in embarrassment. "Hey, Skitch, thanks for listening, man. Never thought I'd have such a good chat on a day like this. Really learning a lot about myself."

"Nobody's perfect, Vex. We all have bad days."

Both demons smile at each other warmly. Then, Skitch raises his head to the sky.

"Hm. By the way, Vex?"

"Yeah?"

"Ain't that the Monster Queen up there? What's she doing, flying down at us all super-fast for?"

Vex's smile vanishes. A look of worry replaces it.

"Uh... I really hope she just wants to say hi."

A moment later, Blinker extends her palm. A blast of psionic energy crashes into the demon army, crushing ten thousand demons into meat paste.

Sadly, Vex meets his end, never getting to go home and reveal his true feelings to Fiolo. In the end, he perishes alongside his best friend.

>!This is what a spoiler looks like! Click it to reveal the text!!

Part 280: Best Friends Forever?

Western Front, before the Hydra's arrival.

Emperor Ose and Archangel Uriel furiously battle one another. Their fists and feet collide with thunderous shockwaves, forcing a wide berth of empty space around themselves. Still morphed into her electrical Ultraform, Ose's attacks rain down relentlessly upon Uriel. The Archangel protects herself with earthen armor while summoning Holy Energy to attack the Emperor of Infiltration.

This white-haired Emperor has grown more domineering in the last six years, Uriel thinks as she swings a holy-energy-spear like a hammer toward Ose's chest. Ose flickers backward into the sky, causing Uriel's attack to miss. Last time we fought, I did not come up nearly as short as I have today.

Uriel motions with her hand. She tears off dozens of armored plates from a nearby Planet-walker via Barbatos's magnetism, stripping one of its humongous legs bare. Then, she compresses those shards into thin but dense metal needles and sends them to chase after Ose, aiming to skewer the Emperor to death.

Just as the needles rush toward Ose's back, her eyes flash with electrical energy. She swings her palm backward and fires a bolt of lightning into the center of the needle cluster, which explodes, causing the needles to lose their momentum and plummet to the ground.

Mmm? Uriel grunts, startled. Dost mine eyes deceive me? Ose broke Barbatos's magnetism with that attack. T'was no casual move!

A moment later, Ose cackles. She continues circling Uriel like a bird of prey, looking for an opening. "Foolish Archangel! Do you think I'll lie down and accept whatever punishment you want to vent upon me?! I've planned well for your reappearance! Artorias himself worked alongside me to plan contingencies. Your magic will accomplish far less than the last time we clashed!"

Uriel doesn't reply. She sends a telepathic command to her four Constructs, expertly commanding them to launch a flurry of attacks on the thundering Emperor soaring through the skies. The Cube spins rapidly, trying to drag Ose downward via gravity manipulation, while the two angel-shaped golems attack her from the front and back. Finally, the Artillery Orb launches fireball barrages at Ose, attempting to hit her with torrents of destructive magic.

What's going on here? Uriel wonders. Somehow, Ose's lightning cancelled-out Barbatos's magnetism. Is such a thing even possible?

Using her mastery of four primary elements, Uriel unleashes a series of magical strikes on Ose's flickering figure. She discharges compressed streams of water, fireballs, wind-blades, and even tries to throw huge boulders at Ose. Her eyes glow with radiant light as she follows-up with bolts of holy energy, then tries to grab her ankles with dark magic, too.

All of Uriel's attacks fail. Not only does Ose power through any spells launched by the Archangel's golems, she also manages to slip through the gaps in their offenses time after time.

Most stunningly, when the varying elemental spells rush at Ose's front and back, she merely laughs.

"Hahaha! Are you trying to tickle me, Archangel? You are a hundred million years too late to threaten this genius!"

Five beams of water crash against Ose's chest. Instead of short-circuiting her, a violent burst of electricity races up one of the water beams and surges toward Uriel's outstretched palm.

"Heavens!" Uriel cries. Before she can retract her mana, the bolt of lightning arcs into her body, courses through her veins, and causes her to cry out in pain. "Aaaargh!"

Meanwile, Ose casually swats away the boulders and wind-blades, then pauses to allow the firebolts to strike her back.

Whoomph!

Multiple explosions detonate against Ose's spine, yet her aura only strengthens!

"Haha! Hahahahah!!" Ose laughs. She dodges Uriel's light magic and dissipates her dark magic, then whirls to grin at the Archangel. "I've been waiting for an opponent upon whom I could test my newfound might! Mother gave me this transformation, and so, I shall honor her by unleashing its maximum power!"

Uriel's expression turns grim. She shakes off the numbness in her body and rises to her full height.

"Wretched demoness! Thy magic violates common sense! How can lightning alone interfere with all of the other elements?!"

"Curious?" Ose asks, her smile fading somewhat. "Electricity, heat, and other such forces all link together via the laws of physics. Of course, as an unenlightened chicken, you don't possess a millionth my knowledge. You could never wrap your feeble mind around the intricacies of quantum mechanics!"

Suddenly, Ose raises her right arm overhead. She curves her fingers into a claw-like shape, then swipes down with her arm.

In that moment, her thunder-powers tear a hole in the fabric of reality!

Riiiiip!

A shimmering gap appears in the air. A spatial tear revealing Uriel's body materializes in the sky, confounding the Archangel.

"What sorcery is this?"

Uriel narrows and widens her eyes repeatedly, trying to comprehend what her opponent has just done. Before she can reach even the vaguest of conclusions, Ose flickers toward the spatial tear and passes through it!

THUMP!!

A fist enveloped by condensed electrical energy strikes Uriel's back, sending her hurtling forward! She falls flat on her face and grinds across the dirt, only managing a quick glance backward, where she momentarily spots an identical spatial tear behind where she previously stood.

That... that is an ability similar to Warper demons! Uriel cries out in her mind. To leap through gaps in space, only my brother Raphael could accomplish such a feat with ease. I cannot replicate it no matter how hard I try!

All these realizations pass through her mind in a fraction of a second. She quickly throws her palms against the ground and frontflips forward, revolving through the air to land gracefully on her feet. Even inside Barbatos's mutilated body, his hulking form, Uriel demonstrates incredible feats of agility.

"Die!"

Uriel fires a blast of holy energy at Ose's smirking figure, but the Emperor of Infiltration transforms into a bolt of lightning and flickers to the side, easily evading Uriel's spell.

"You and I aren't on the same level," Ose taunts. "We aren't even playing the same game! You are a mere toddler fumbling with powers beyond your comprehension, while I possess abilities enhanced by my cosmic knowledge!"

Ose conjures lightning into her palms, then leaps skyward.

"The humans have a saying, Uriel! Fear not the man who has practiced ten thousand kicks once, but he who has practiced one kick ten thousand times. You possess a vast array of formidable abilities, but your usage of them is sloppy and pathetic. That is why you will lose!"

Ose fires off both blasts of lightning, then flickers behind Uriel with her leg coiled for a brutal kick.

Uriel scowls.

"And what of he who has practiced ten thousand kicks ten thousand times, bloodskin?"

Ose's leg rushes toward Uriel's back, but Uriel whirls on her heel and spins to face her attacker! With two powerful blasts of lightning flying at her flank and the leg-strength of an Emperor aimed at her chest, her life hangs on a razor's edge.

At that moment, Uriel claps her palms together. Two immense shields of holy energy appear in front of and behind her!

Thooom!

Ose's thunder spells and her leg both crash against the barriers of holy energy, splattering against them like bugs striking a windshield. Before Ose can react, Uriel swings her palm forward, causing the holy energy barrier to fall forward and flatten Ose against the ground!

"Aargh!" Ose cries.

"Thou speaketh of practicing thy magic with such gusto!" Uriel taunts, "But I am an ancient monster from the Primordial Era. Even if I have long forgotten the memories Raphael sealed away, my body has not forgotten how to fight!"

Uriel waves her arms apart to dissipate her barrier, then conjures holy energy onto her left arm to grab Ose by the throat. She pins the demoness to the dirt, burning her with the Creator's light!

"I have killed millions, perhaps even billions of enemies!" Uriel roars.

The Archangel smashes her right fist into Ose's face, pummeling her brutally.

"You, on the other hand, are little more to me than an unruly child! A brat who thinks far too highly of her meager skills!"

Uriel rears her arm back again. She pauses for a split-second to empower her bones with holy energy, then lunges it toward Ose's stomach.

"Brag all day, and brag all night, but know that your words are worth no more to me than empty air!"

Just before Uriel's punch obliterates Ose's torso, the demoness smirks, her bloodied face appearing particularly hideous at that moment. She flicks a single finger toward Uriel's charging fist, then fires a seemingly insignificant arc of electricity toward it.

Zzt.

Instantly, Uriel's attack loses all of its momentum. The holy energy she built up dissipates like a fart in the wind, making her previously brutal punch turn into a light nudge when it strikes Ose's belly.

The Archangel sucks in an alarmed breath. "What?"

A moment later, the mana in her body rocks violently. Her right hand, previously grasping Ose's neck, momentarily loses its strength, allowing Ose to turn into formless electricity and zip away. By the time Uriel regains control of her body, Ose has already escaped her grip.

The Archangel jumps to her feet. Hatred burns in her eyes.

"Demoness! What... what devilry hath thou unleashed now?!"

Uriel whirls to face Ose. The Emperor of Infiltration stands a short distance away, her face still bloodied and bruised. With a quick crinkling of her nose, Ose magically heals her wounds, restoring her face to pristine condition. This, as part of her transformation's ability to convert electrical energy into a healing factor.

"Can't figure anything out? Aww, you poor little birdie. It must be hard for you to understand concepts like mana pathways, elementary quarks, subatomic particles, and other such constants of nature. Even if I tell you, it won't do you any good. You're too stupid to match me."

Uriel grinds her teeth. She starts to take a step forward, but pauses, fear evident in her eyes.

I haven't a clue how Ose disrupted the flow of my mana. Somehow, her seemingly insignificant bolt of lightning penetrated my body and... and...

Doubts appear in her gaze. Uriel's constructs ready themselves to attack, but she doesn't give them any orders.

"Verily, thy magic cannot possibly be omnipotent..." Uriel murmurs. "Perhaps, in these past years, thou hath discovered some... secret technique..."

Ose snorts disdainfully. "Secret technique? Stupid bitch. You possess six elemental attributes, wield Barbatos's magnetism, and can even summon multiple holy constructs, yet you cannot defeat me, a lone Emperor with only a single elemental affinity. Ah, such is the gap between a genius and a piss-ant! What matters aren't the number of affinities you control, but how you use them, Uriel. It's no wonder your kind went extinct. You never tried teaching yourselves new tricks."

"Arrogant..." Uriel murmurs.

"Indeed, I am!" Ose laughs. "And I have the right to be. I rose from the bottom of demon society to the very top. The fate of the universe lies within my hands now, and I earned my position! Unlike you, born during an era of rich spiritual energy with a Creator-given body, I had to work to reach my current heights. That's why I'm unstoppable, because I have the determination bred in me from all those years of torment."

Sensing that her attacks won't land against the nimble and spry Emperor, Uriel doesn't make any sudden moves. Instead, she keeps talking to Ose, searching for any hints that will help her conquer this frightening foe.

"If I am truly such a 'piss-ant,' then surely, thou hath nothing to lose by explaining thy magical comprehensions," Uriel growls. "Perhaps thou feareth that I am much nimbler of mind than thou might first think."

Ose's maniacal grin momentarily lessens. An expression of contempt appears on her face as she sneers at the Archangel.

"Oh? Are you trying to trick me, Archangel? To give up my secrets willingly? Perhaps if I tell you how my magic works, you'll be able to defeat me?"

Ose laughs. "Hahaha! Pathetic! You still continue to struggle, even with your corpse looming on the horizon. Fine! I shall inform you of that which you can never understand. Even if you pick up some glimmers of knowledge, you'll never be able to defeat me!"

The Emperor jumps backward, away from Uriel. She backflips twice, then rips open a tear in space beneath herself and dives into it feet-first. As she does, a premonition of danger materializes in Uriel's chest! She jumps to the left, barely evading Ose's attack as she tries to stomp down on her head from above. Another spatial tear hangs in the sky above Uriel's previous position; the place from where Ose emerged.

"You're catching on!" Ose cackles. She initiates a flurry of kicks and punches, driving the Archangel backward. If Uriel counter-attacks, Ose merely flickers away or pounces through a spatial tear to attack the Archangel from another direction.

"How can I tear rips in space?" Ose asks. "Simple! Space is a construct of matter and gravity, and electrical energy binds the two together! I need only destabilize them to create a gap for my body to pass through!"

Ose pounces into the air and starts to motion with her hands to fire two more lightning blasts at Uriel, but Uriel's Cube Construct quickly revolves, tripling the gravity around the Demon Emperor.

"Worthless tricks," Ose grunts. She discharges a bolt of lightning toward her chest, which explodes upon touching her skin and destroys the gravitic space surrounding her. "Listen well, Uriel! Gravity is a fundamental force of nature! To manipulate it, your construct must create 'false matter' which can draw others toward it. I need only break that false matter to shatter its bonds!"

Uriel conjures a massive fireball in her palms, then flings it toward Ose. Ose roars with laughter, then spreads her arms apart to welcome the searing heat as it crashes upon her.

Booom!

It explodes, scorching her clothes and skin, yet still failing to injure her. Instead, Ose's aura surges with might.

"Fire is merely a construct of heat and energy! Compared to the power of fusion, such weak flames are nothing to me at all! These pitiful embers serve only to revitalize my body and empower my spirit. Truly, you are quite the benefactor to bequeath me such a gift!"

The more Ose speaks, the stranger Uriel's expression becomes.

While it is true that I cannot fully understand Ose's explanations, even so, I feel as if they have resonated with me, somehow.

Further, why does she run her mouth like so? Ose is no fool. She is a horrifying genius, one who as a mere Baron laid waste to humanity's majesty. For her to witlessly babble about her abilities, she has stepped well beyond the boundaries of her typical arrogance.

Uriel's eyes flash with insight. She dodges and deflects several more attacks from her opponent, while a new thought crosses her mind.

Could it be? Might Ose's transformation be somehow affecting her personality? Such a thing is not outside the realm of possibility.

Uriel quickly recalls the many demons she's fought and observed over the last hundred-plus millennia. Of them, two stick out in her mind, echoing this battle so far.

When Diablo transformed into the Archdemon, his strength increased explosively, but he lost his sanity. He became like a stupid animal, recklessly attacking friend and foe alike.

When Bael assumes his Balrog Form, his brainpower likewise plunges into an abyss, causing him to act even less intelligently than usual.

Slowly, Uriel nods to herself. She continues putting up a perfunctory defense against Ose's onslaught, but behind the scenes, her mind calculates in secret.

"Water magic? Surely, that must be my weakness!" Ose continues to taunt. She claps her hands, firing a blast of thunder at Uriel and momentarily destabilizing her footing. "But even then, such an assumption is incorrect! 'Water' is nothing more than mashed-together hydrogen and oxygen molecules, both of which create the lifeblood of stars! They are the keys to creating fusion energy, so how could they ever hurt me?!"

As Ose continues to talk, Uriel's heart sinks.

Indeed. Ose's personality seems to have grown far more cocky and arrogant than usual. Even so, I cannot see myself taking advantage of such a weakness. Her words ring true; she has learned how to shield herself from the majority of my attacks. Perhaps, only by seeking outside assistance will I be able to slay her.

Unwittingly, Uriel's eyes flick toward a small, shallow pit half a mile in the distance. Dozens of Demon Lords guard it, while the rest flow around it.

Inside, a single body lays, unmoving.

Belial, the Emperor of Passion.

Uriel returns her gaze to Ose.

No. No! I will never seek assistance from Satan's Whore! That wench impaled me by assuming my brother's visage. Were it not for her act of deception, I would never have fallen, and her infernal husband would never have made it inside of Heaven! Because of her, Satan successfully exterminated ninety percent of my species! Angelkind died because of Belial! I will never forgive her!!

Uriel's internal thoughts roar with fury, but at the same time, a second voice, one of reason, also speaks in her head.

Tch. What is the point of maintaining old rivalries? Even if the Devil's Whore was the one who undertook vile actions to exterminate our race, she could still be a valuable ally in this battle. If I were to heal her, I could unleash her formidable strength against Ose. We could pin demonkind's most threatening Emperor in place, then rip out her intestines!

A gold glimmer shines in Uriel's eyes.

It won't be too late afterward. I can still slay Belial once the right moment reveals itself. I can still pay Satan's Whore back for all the atrocities she's enabled. Perhaps I'll even capture and torture her for the rest of eternity. Only then will I finally vent my hatred.

The Archangel blocks another of Ose's thunder-blasts. Her thoughts become resolute.

I have simply too many demons to slay. Their numbers, unending. Ose and Belial are far from the only Emperors who must pay. Fenrir. Kristoff. Glinch. Fae. Auger. Yardrat. Gorn. Yama.

These few are merely the tip of the iceberg. I must rip them all to pieces, as well as their subordinates, their lovers, their families, and any others who deem them allies.

A complicated expression appears on Uriel's face.

To slay them all... 'tis an impossible task, one which I will surely fail to accomplish. Nevertheless, I must pursue it as my goal. I must avenge my people and wipe out those who genocided us from existence. Only then will I have the face to visit my brothers and sisters in the Great Beyond.

Uriel fortifies her mind. She continuously sneaks peeks at Belial while verbally sparring with Ose. She builds up her momentum, plays defensively to the best of her abilities, and doesn't overextend, knowing it will only waste her energy.

Even so, Ose's transformation doesn't wear off, nor dissipate. She maintains it during the whole battle, occasionally pausing to siphon energy from the humans' mecha and weapons to heal herself. She taunts Uriel, deriding the Archangel as stupid and incompetent, too weak to even flee.

All the while, Uriel waits for her chance.

Finally, after an hour of vicious and brutal combat, a distant noise erupts from Hero City's confines.

"SKREEEEEEE!!"

Ose and Uriel both whip their heads eastward. There, they see a shocking sight.

"A Hydra?!" Ose gasps. "It's... it's just like the one that attacked a month ago! Why has it reappeared?"

Uriel's eyes widen in surprise. "T-Titans?! Why are there Titans inside Hero City? Could this be one of Mephisto's secret weapons?! That confounded graverobber!"

Even as shock pulses through Uriel's heart and her outward expression echoes that fact, her mind remains calm.

Chance! This is what I have waited for!

With Ose momentarily distracted, Uriel sneakily burrows underground, falling into the planet's depths soundlessly.

She sucks Belial's body underground, relying on the Hydra's appearance to hide her actions. Even the demons assigned to guard Belial's body don't notice her disappearance, so violent is their reaction to the happenings in Hero City.

As Uriel pulls Belial's body into the planet's bowels, she gazes at her most hated enemy with venomous eyes. Momentarily unable to control herself, she wraps her hands around Belial's neck.

"Worthless wretch. I could slay thee with a thought. The only reason I shall allow thee to live is because thou provideth a slight value to me."

Her hands tremble as she traces her thumb against the contours of Belial's throat.

"One squeeze. Just one twist, and thy life would end here. Oh, how long I have awaited such an opportunity."

Uriel's expression becomes bitter as she releases her grip on Belial's neck. Without any fanfare, she conjures water and presses it against Belial's wounds, healing the horrific injuries she's suffered.

"Thy awakening shall only occur for a brief while, Satan's Whore. After thou fulfilleth my needs, I shall slayeth thee with my own hands. Thou shalt joineth Satan in the Great Beyond."

By the time Ose realizes her opponent has disappeared, she's too late. Uriel finishes healing Belial's wounds, then she injects mana into the Emperor's body to awaken her.

"Serve me well... Belial. Then thou may continue living a bit longer."

>!This is what a spoiler looks like! Click it to reveal the text!!

Part 281: Friendship Is Magic

Ose's eyes lock onto the huge, lumbering behemoths rampaging within Hero City's borders. Despite a distance of several miles separating her from the action, Ose still easily picks them out and observes how the Titans battle against the lone Hydra.

What's going on? Ose wonders. How could Titans appear here? We exterminated their entire species, along with the Angels! Could this be another of Mephisto's trump cards? Unlikely. Mephisto's greatest weapon, his most prized possession, was the corpse of the Last Dragon. Leviathan turned to ash under the heat of a supernova, so the Duke of Mist can't summon him anymore.

Based on Mephisto's reaction to his loss, he mustn't have also secretly possessed the corpses of multiple Titan Kings as well as a Hydra! Such an astonishing level of power is too terrifying to imagine! If Mephisto could control so many high-level existences, then not even I would be a match for him! He'd be a Duke capable of crushing Emperors! Simply ludicrous!

Ose's thoughts move at lightning speed. In a single breath, thousands of considerations and possibilities flicker through her mind.

The Titans appear to be fighting the Hydra. If they were summoned by Mephisto, why would they battle one another? Might he somehow be incapable of controlling them all? No. Perhaps Mephisto captured the Hydra's body when it perished, while the Titans were revived through... some other means.

The Emperor of Infiltration narrows her eyes.

Jason Hiro. This must be his doing. Somehow, he's summoned the Titans back from the nether realm. But how? My intelligence informed me the Wordsmith couldn't revive the dead. While those conjectures might not have formed the most solid foundation for my knowledge, I cannot possibly cast them away as garbage. I sacrificed many pawns to confirm the matter.

As Ose watches the Hydra, one of the Titans catches her eye. Her heart jolts with terror.

"Zeus?!"

Shell-shocked, Ose's vision turns red as she spots one of her most ancient nemeses, the Titan King of Thunder. Zeus leaps into the sky and fires lightning-bolts downward, striking the Hydra's back with thunderous force. The giant monster screeches and howls, while two other Titans follow up with additional attacks.

Ose doesn't immediately recognize the other Titans, having not seen them in the flesh before. However, as they use their abilities, her expression turns to bewilderment.

Ivaldi, the Titan Queen of Divinity?! Cronus, Zeus's Father?? I've read about them in the ancient texts. How in the Seven Hells could they appear here, now?!

The longer Ose watches, the more her heart begins to twist, as if someone were slowly pressing a knife into it.

My forces aren't enough to combat multiple Titans and a Hydra. If the Hidden Hells were to show up, then subjugating humanity wouldn't take me an hour. However, if I do that, then how can I call myself the leader of the First Hell?! How can my Hell possibly rank supreme with so many rabid mutts snapping at my ankles? I must solve this problem alone, disarm the humans, and crush those who oppose me with unrelenting force!

I am Ose! I am the smartest being to have ever walked the cosmos! I will go to any length to rule over all of creation!

The Third Emperor's arrogance silently reaches new heights as she hypes herself up, hellbent on winning the Stormbringer War at all costs.

Ose whirls to face Uriel. "No more time to waste, Archangel! You shall... eh?"

Despite having only gazed upon the distant action within Hero City for five seconds, Ose finds herself stumped when she turns to see that Uriel has disappeared.

"S-she left? SHE LEFT?! That cowardly dodo! I should have known she would turn tail and flee! Hahaha! HAHAHAH! To think the Seven Hells once feared this pathetic, half-dead relic from the Ancient Era! In the end, she's nothing more than a featherless-"

Right as Ose reaches the apex of her laughter, she stops dead in her tracks. An ominous foreboding appears in her heart, as if having realized something.

"No! She wouldn't!"

Ose turns her head toward Belial's crater, the spot where Ose beat the tar out of the Second Emperor and left her for dead. To her disbelief, she finds all of the Lords she dispatched to guard Belial's body instead staring dumbly at the distant Hydra and Titans, paying no attention to the empty crater in their midst.

The Emperor explodes with rage. "YOU IMBECILES!! Where are you looking?! Incompetent, bastardly wretches! You let Uriel steal away Belial's body! AHHHHHH!!"

With a flick of her wrist, Ose hurls a massive orb of electrical energy at the gawking Lords. They turn and freeze up in terror as the explosive energy-ball rushes at them.

"EMPER-!"

They don't get the chance to beg for mercy. Ose's ruthless attack explodes with terrific might, blasting apart the Lords at the subatomic level. Their bodies disappear and scatter to the ends of the planet, never to be seen again, while another, far bigger crater appears where they once stood.

Eye's eyes turn bloodshot from pure rage. Unable to maintain her cool, she jerks her head downward to bore holes in the planet's soil with her eyes.

"Hiding underground, are you?! Don't think I can't sense your energy, Uriel!! You tricky, backstabbing Archangel!"

As if called to action, the ground quietly opens up beneath Ose. A rocky platform rises from the planet's depths with an uneasy-looking Belial on the right and a noticeably more confident Uriel on the left.

Uriel rests her hands on her hips. She puffs out her chest a little, as if looking down on Ose.

"I can't believe you..." Ose hisses. "To think you would be so spineless as to work with Belial. Have you forgotten that she was the one whose actions led to your imprisonment within Barbatos? She is your mortal enemy!"

Uriel's glowing white eyes narrow to slits.

"Nay. I have not forgotten. We came to... an agreement."

Ose nods slowly, fury boiling in her eyes.

"Is that so? An agreement, you say? Haha. Isn't that funny? Isn't that fucking funny?!"

Electricity begins to swirl around Ose like a whirling typhoon. Her eyes turn into crystallized embers of lightning as she grinds her teeth together.

"You think... you can kill me... just by working together?! Hahaha!! What a joke!! Ten of you wouldn't be my match!! If you want to resort to such tactics, then don't blame ME for getting nasty!"

Suddenly, Ose disappears.

Fwip.

Her body bolts away at the speed of light, leaving only a momentary afterimage in its wake. Uriel and Belial both twitch in alarm, but frown a second later when Ose doesn't attack them.

"What is she doing?" Belial asks. "Where did she go?"

Slowly, Uriel raises her head.

"Up."

Belial follows her gaze. There, she witnesses a lightning storm of unimaginable proportions brewing. It swiftly expands in size, from five hundred feet in diameter, to half a mile, then a full mile.

Within seconds, the pitch black clouds engulf the sky, causing Belial to knit her brow in consternation.

"Ose's trying to pull something, Uriel! We have to stop her!"

Uriel's gaze flicks across the continuously increasing tempest, uncertainty clouding her thoughts.

"I agree. But how? I cannot fathom this new development. Does Ose intend to strike us down? The lightning is too dispersed. It covers too wide a range. Almost as if..."

Belial's pupils shrink to pinpricks. "The humans! Ose can't beat us... so she's going to attack humanity itself! All of our armed forces! Our citizens!"

Uriel snorts. "Our citizens? They are human. Thou art a shapeshifting backstabber. They are not thy people, nor are they mine. I care not for their lives, only for erasing demonkind from the galaxy."

"If humanity dies today, YOU lose!" Belial cries. "We have to work together, Uriel! Fully! If you aren't going to help me save humanity, then why would I help you kill Ose?!"

Uriel's face twitches. A flicker of hatred, shrouded beneath Barbatos's helm, passes across her lips. A hidden grimace, a disgusted sneer.

However, Uriel doesn't immediately respond. Instead, she lowers her head and falls into thought for a moment.

"...I see. Thy words... they do make a small modicum of sense. Jason Hiro might be of use to me in slaying the Demon Emperors. He possesses a timid heart and is slow to violence, but humanity's mere presence might instill some hesitancy in my foes, giving me better opportunities to slay them."

Belial scowls. "Great! So are you going to work with me or not?! Every second we waste, Ose's thunderstorm becomes more powerful!"

Uriel sighs.

"I only healed thee for the sake of slaying Ose. Saving humanity is not something I care about in the slightest. Nevertheless, I do feel we must unite to save the humans, if only to suit my purposes."

"Don't get all broken up over the value of human life or some other nonsense," Belial snorts. "Now, how do you propose we move forward?"

* * *

Lightning bolts begin firing from the skies, slowly at first, but faster and faster as the seconds pass. While not as deadly as Ose's concentrated lightning attacks, they still ignite fires inside the Horned Forest and crash upon the exosuit-wearing soldiers, causing their T-REX's to hiccup and malfunction. Not one lightning bolt ever comes close to striking a demon, proving that Ose can manipulate the storm's power while keeping her presence concealed.

After a quick deliberation, Belial and Uriel launch their counter attack! The Archangel uses Barbatos's abilities to open a portal through space to a spot above the clouds, then Belial jumps through.

As Belial falls, she sweeps her senses around, searching for Ose. Belial sprouts a pair of leathery, demonic wings, then flaps hard to dive into the maelstrom.

"Where are you, Ose?! For someone who called Uriel a coward, it's funny how you've chosen to skulk in the darkness!"

Despite Belial's provocation, Ose doesn't reveal herself. Instead, she projects her voice throughout the storm.

"I've planned humanity's demise for six years, Belial. Don't hasten your death. There's plenty of time for my final show to play out!"

Belial frowns.

Uriel told me that Ose has been unusually easy to provoke since assuming her Ultraform, yet that doesn't seem to be the case at all. Did she misjudge Ose?

While Belial ruminates on Ose's secretive twist, the Thunder Goddess herself lurks within the clouds, turning herself formless to become as undetectable as possible.

It is time. Now, with the battle nearing its climax, I shall unleash my checkmate.

Somewhere unknown, in a bunker concealed within Hero City's depths.

The planet shakes and rumbles as Titans wrestle with a Hydra in Hero City's center. Elder Skarde and a group of human commanders busily go about their work, keeping in contact with the various warfronts to the north, east, south, and west of Hero City, as well as the city's reserve armies.

A glimmer of sadness appears in Skarde's eyes as he receives new intelligence.

"Commander Kar has died. I... I see. Tsk. Tragic beyond belief. And you lot, you still can't find the Hero's wife and daughter? You must! We need to protect them at this critical juncture! Jason shall surely return soon. With the last Covenant ship destroyed, we have to bring them both to a shelter where they'll be safe!"

Skarde's subordinate, a young blonde woman, nods. "I understand, Elder. We're trying our hardest, but with the sudden appearance of a Hydra, as well as those... frost giants? We're losing anyone we send to investigate. I've already lost contact with six platoons. We believe they were stomped to death by the giants."

The hidden base rumbles again. A distant bellow, monstrous in nature, vibrates the stale underground air.

Skarde's expression darkens. "We've also lost contact with the Monitoring Division. Were they...?"

"I believe their facility was reduced to rubble, yes," The woman replies.

"I see. Then they're likely all dead. We can still communicate and coordinate with our teams. Command everyone to spread out to the edges of the city. The giants seem to be keeping their battle contained within the city's center, so more and more citizens will perish if they don't flee. Nowhere is safe within the central killing zone."

"Yes, Elder. I'll relay your orders at once."

The woman turns on her heel and walks away. She heads over to a communication booth, one with digital transmission backups for maintaining command with the army.

Skarde grits his teeth. He squeezes his fingers into fists and mashes them against his hips while growling under his breath. "Ksss! Damnation. How can we possibly win with so many things going wrong?! Giants, a Hydra, Ose's rampage, Kar dead... I have to maintain morale. If the soldiers lose confidence, we'll perish without a chance to weep."

As Elder Skarde loses more and more hope, a trio of officers walk up to him from behind. "Elder. We have good news."

Their words cause his heart to skip a beat. Skarde nearly jumps for joy.

"Y-you do?! Tell me!"

"Hans has completed the modifications for the Atlas Cannon. It can fire when ready, but we'll only have one shot."

Skarde's elation dissipates. He becomes confused.

"Atlas Cannon? What is that?"

The leader of the trio smiles politely. "It's natural you wouldn't know. Hans has kept the existence of this weapon top secret. We wouldn't want the demons to learn of it. It's an orbital satellite with immense striking power. We believe that, given the right circumstances, one might even be capable of slaying a Demon Emperor with a direct hit."

Skarde's eyes brighten immediately. "I see! What a stroke of good luck! If we can use it to slay Ose during a moment of inattention, we will end this war in a single move!"

The Elder turns to someone sitting at a nearby terminal.

"Officer Davis, where is Ose, currently?"

The man glances quickly presses several buttons on his communication hub. Within seconds, he receives a reply from a field scout.

"We aren't certain, sir. Last we heard, she was fighting Artorias and Belial."

Skarde frowns, clearly unaware of the circumstances behind Belial teaming up with 'Artorias.'

"Hmm. Tell everyone to start searching. I want our scouts to be a fly on her ass within the next five minutes. Find that murdering bitch so we can put an end to this war, once and for all."

Skarde turns back to the three officers. "Alright. Now, I need you to tell me how to- hm?"

The Elder's heart skips a beat. Behind him, all three officers stand silently, their weapons drawn and aimed at his chest.

BLAM BLAM BLAM!

Skarde doesn't get even a moment to react before half a dozen bullets and plasma balls burst through his chest, spraying his innards backward.

Screams of fright erupt throughout the command center. Several people grab at their guns, only for the three 'officers' to turn around and fire upon everyone in sight. Along with them, a dozen other traitors materialize, their eyes uncaring for the lives of their fellow citizens.

Bang! Bang! Blam!

"Aaaaugh!"

Horrified screams resound, along with choked gasps of people with blood-filled throats. As the Command Center falls into chaos, the turncoats finish up their work. Like efficient killing machines, they blow out the brains of anyone not on their side, taking special care to leave no one alive.

Five minutes later, the Command Center falls silent. Elder Skarde lays dead, his eyes unseeing, yet filled with shock and horror.

One of the traitors walks over to a nearby console.

"These are the command codes. Establish a link to the Atlas Cannon. Emperor Ose wants full control of it within ten minutes. No delays."

The other traitors merely nod, executing her order without complaints. They casually walk past the blood-soaked bodies of their former allies and comrades, paying them no heed.

"A stray bullet hit this console," one man says. "It's shot to shit."

"That's fine. Turn on the backup. Use the code E11-416."

"Yes, ma'am."

* * *

Elsewhere, in a place high above Tarus II.

A satellite ten miles long, with an elongated, thin, needle-shaped cannon, circles Tarus II. Its barrel points toward the planet's surface menacingly, like a shark eyeing its prey.

Inside the Atlas's confines, a similar battle occurs. Fifty turncoats erupt into violence, catching their comrades off-guard. They gun down hundreds of unarmed scientists and officers, none of them ever expecting an ambush aboard a satellite suspended in space.

After cleaning out every human aboard the Atlas, these traitors take up their positions at the weapon's controls.

"Command codes locked in. I've seized control of the mainframe."

"I'm double-checking the coolant pipes. Heat conductors appear to be functioning nominally."

"We're still out of position. Ten minutes before the Atlas orbits to a suitable firing location."

As the humans work together, their thoughts work in tandem, increasing their efficiencies five-fold.

Once they complete their checks, they fall silent. With three minutes left before they can fire the cannon, they have nothing else to do but wait.

One of the men glances at the corpses of his former friends nearby.

"...Should we, uh... clean up the Bridge?"

"Not necessary," Another man snaps, clearly agitated. "Focus on the mission. We have to pull this off, Marco. Our families are depending on us."

The first man, Marco, hesitates.

"...Can we trust Ose to keep her word?"

"We don't have a choice but to believe her," The second man mutters. "Do you really think the fucking Wordsmith will win this war? Think again. Remember all the Hidden Emperors Ose told us about? If they gang up and attack humanity, nothing will save us. It's better to carve out a life for ourselves in Ose's society now than to perish along with the rest of the rabble."

Marco falls silent. He looks at another nearby body and sighs.

"That's Jacob. He and I were good friends, you know? His wife, Petra, she's going to suffer because of us."

"Who gives a fuck?" The second man growls. "Petra's as good as dead anyway, imbecile. Just look at the data they're sending us. The demons have Hero City completely surrounded. All the Covenant ships are gone. Nobody can escape. Just by numbers alone, there's no way the demons can lose."

A moment of silence follows.

Marco's eyes turn despondent.

"I suppose you're right, Cliff. As... as long as my family can escape... that's good enough. It has to be good enough."

Cliff flicks his eyes toward Marco.

"You getting cold feet now, brother?"

"No. No, I'm still loyal..." Marco mutters. He sullenly turns back to his controls and keys in a few commands, checking to see how much longer before they reach a firing position.

Cliff eyeballs Marco from afar. A look of murderous intent appears in his eyes as he jumps to his feet, pulls out his gun, and takes aim.

BLAM! BLAM!

Marco perishes, unable to retaliate, as his so-called 'comrade' guns him down in cold blood.

The others on the bridge glance at Marco for a moment, sneer, then shake their heads.

"Never did like that guy," One lady grunts. "Fucking coward. Gutless."

"Can't trust someone like that," Another person adds. "They're liable to backstab you after backstabbing their other friends. Idiot should have kept his mouth shut."

Cliff nods. He walks over and violently kicks Marco's corpse off the chair, then beckons to someone else. "Take over his spot. Let me know when we enter firing range."

"Yes, sir."

Cliff plops back down in his chair, anger clouding his face.

You think I don't know Ose could backstab us? Of course I do. Unlike you, I don't regret my choices. I act decisively. I'm gonna protect my family, Marco, while you'll just have to visit them in the Great Beyond.

I only have one path forward now. If I fail... if Ose fails... we'll all die like dogs.

>!This is what a spoiler looks like! Click it to reveal the text!!

Part 282: Ose's Checkmate

In the skies of Tarus II, an unimaginably terrifying thunderstorm swallows the horizon. Covering the entirety of Hero City and all of the battlefronts, it swells to more than forty miles wide. Inside, Ose draws energy from the planet's magnetic field, capturing small amounts of its potential to energize her ultimate weapon, Limitless Demonic Thunder.

As Ose conjures energy onto herself, Belial flies through the storm, searching in vain for Ose's true body.

"Show yourself, Ose! Where are you? Come and face me!"

Ose, however, remains silent. With her body incorporeal and fused into the storm's latent electrical energy, her presence becomes impossible to detect. Her vision penetrates every inch of the cloud's domain, allowing her to easily track Belial's location.

As if I would fall for such a childish provocation... Ose sneers. Don't worry, Belial. I'll certainly deal with you in a bit. But first, how about these humans?

She turns away from Belial and extends her perception downward. Ose scrutinizes the tiny, insignificant humans battling her equally tiny and insignificant armies. Compared to the gargantuan storm in the sky, they aren't more than specks of sand when viewed from such a height.

Ose's senses sweep across the land. She picks out numerous key areas of conflict, places she can attack to deal heavy damage.

I've held back, until now. I wanted to slowly make my way into humanity's fortress and capture their leaders. However, I can't keep going on like this.

She turns her attention to the Eastern Front. There, she witnesses Blinker slaughtering her army with reckless abandon, driving them into a terror-filled flight. None escape her wrath as she conjures enormous claws to fall upon them from above, crushing them into meat paste.

It seems Mephisto slew the Monster King. But at what cost? He lost two of his best Barons. Given how the Fairy's strength has increased, she must have absorbed the Sphinx's power for herself. Even I might not be a match for her as she is now.

She glances toward the south, where Yamir and several officers fight alongside a platoon of veterans to hold the armies back.

Bael's an idiot, Artorias has gone AWOL, I'm the only Emperor, and even Beelzebub has fucked off to the planet's crust. Who knows when he'll return? Right now, I can only rely on myself.

Ose continues looking. Damn! Where has Mephisto gone? Has he hidden himself beneath some rock like he always does? Where is Mara? Vepar? Laharl?

Ose turns her attention toward the city, where she takes a moment to observe the battles between five Titans and the lone Hydra.

Sure enough, Cronus, Zeus, Ivaldi, and two other Titans beat the Hydra black and blue. As always, the Hydra merely shrugs off their attacks while screeching incoherently.

Ose observes the situation intently. She narrows her eyes while looking at the other two Titans, trying to identify them.

Both use water-based magic. Hm? Poseidon and Neptune? Father and Son? What a strange coincidence. These five Titans have never walked the Earth at the same time. Ivaldi... I believe she only reappeared during the War in Heaven, then she vanished back to wherever she came from. As for Cronus, he died to his son's insidious deception. Zeus survived all the way to the final battle of the Energy Wars, along with Neptune, while Poseidon...

Several seconds pass. Ose frowns as she tries to recall long-ancient events.

I don't believe I ever heard how Poseidon perished. Tsk. In any case, for these five to randomly show up here, there can be no mistake that someone brought them back from the dead. But who?

The Emperor's thoughts dwell mostly upon the Wordsmith, Jason Hiro, as well as his clone, Hope Hiro.

I've battled Jason once already, but not once has Hope made an appearance. This is strange, far too strange. For the Wordsmith to ignore his home's destruction, something must have happened to him.

Ose's eyes flash with realization.

Spawn of a broodmother! Did the Hidden Emperors make a move while I fought tooth and nail during these past three days? Perhaps one of them captured Hope without my knowledge! If the Hidden Emperors make a pawn out of a Wordsmith, it won't be long before the First Hell loses its position! I'm already much weaker than the other Emperors, having lost my power base. I can't afford for one of them to obtain such a valuable strategic resource! My future reign depends on capturing both Wordsmiths for myself!

The Emperor's gaze turns menacing. She transmits an electrical pulse toward a location underground.

"How long until the Atlas Cannon reaches firing range?"

Her voice transmits electrically to a radio transmitter. Seconds later, a female voice replies.

"Not much longer, Emperor Ose. We've cleared out Humanity's leaders. We've done as you ordered."

"Specifics, imbecile!" Ose snaps. "How much longer exactly?!"

"One minute, thirteen seconds."

"Excellent. Transmit these coordinates to the Atlas platform. Set the weapon to maximum power, maximum radius. I want to cause as much widespread damage as possible."

Ose transmits another electrical signal, one listing off a series of coordinates. Seconds later, her human spy responds.

"The Western Front?"

"Yes! Hurry up!"

"Of course."

Ose turns her attention to the Western Front. As humanity's most heavily fortified position, it possesses the most troops and the heaviest defensive lines. Many more demons pour through the Warpgate Encampment than through any ten Warper portals combined, forcing humanity to defend the west more fervently then the other fronts. The warpgate's size and stability allows demonkind to travel across space much more quickly, thus making it a valuable strategic position.

"Good, good, yes. Not much longer, now."

Ose waits impatiently, chuckling to herself as she glances at Belial's uselessly flailing form. Belial fires off random mana pulses through the cloud, trying to attack Ose's true body, but fails every time.

"Pathetic woman," Ose mutters condescendingly. "You're like an infant who has yet to learn- hm?"

By sheer coincidence, Ose's eyes happen to pick up an unexpected anomaly. Atop the Hydra's back, a shiny barrier of light barely three meters in diameter engulfs a pair of human bodies, both of whom she instantly recognizes.

"Th-the Hero's wife? His daughter, too?!"

A horrific gleam of greed explodes in Ose's vision.

"Hahaha! There you are, you despicable little rabbits! Bouncing to and fro, yet never once stepping into my trap! I don't know how you escaped my grasp for so long, but... but..."

Ose trails off. Her excited expression dims visibly, replaced instead by confusion.

"Why are the two of them asleep? Why are they inside that light barrier? Why would the Wordsmith hide them atop the back of a raging Hydra?? Does he care nothing for his beloved wife and daughter? Impossible! I've seen the sickening puppy-love in his eyes many times from afar. I know he dotes on them well."

Puzzle pieces slowly click into place within Ose's mind. As she thinks, her enlightened perception and electrified brain allows her to comprehend many things at a thousand times the speed of any human.

"Titans... Wordsmith... Mephisto... not Mephisto... daughter... daughter is a Hero? Heroic abilities. Light barrier? Maybe. What else? Guh!!"

Ose's eyes bolt open. A look of horror passes over her face as the most terrifying possibility emerges in her mind.

"No! No, that cannot be! I refuse to believe it! How could a toddler summon five Titan Kings and a devil-damned Hydra?! That's utter nonsense! If she could do that, then she would be... the mightiest being to ever set foot in the universe!"

Ose's breathing turns ragged. She reflexively recoils in fear, gazing at the Hero's sleeping daughter with trembling eyes.

"I've never heard of such a terrifying power! Not in all my life! Is that why Yama's shades failed their task? Could they simply not contend with a mere child?! Heroes almost never awaken their full potential by their sixteenth birthday, let alone their sixth! If she's this strong now, then what sort of demon-slaying deity will she become in the future?!"

For a split second, a new thought emerges in Ose's mind.

I must kill her. She's too dangerous to be left alive! If that little girl grows up, she'll wipe out the entirety of demonkind with a single thought!

Several more seconds pass. Eventually, Ose calms down.

"No. Daisy Hiro is a rare gem. She's young. Malleable. If I can take her for myself, I will have a pawn at my disposal far more formidable than even the Wordsmith. Capturing Jason is still my top priority, but his daughter is no less important."

Ose glances around at the other humans shouting and screaming. She snorts.

"As for the rest of them... they can fall to ash."

A voice speaks to Ose, communicating through her electrical senses.

"Five seconds to launch, Emperor Ose. Four. Three. Two..."

Ose turns to look at the Western Front. Uriel stands half a mile away, gazing into the sky while sweeping her divine sense through Ose's thunderstorm. However, not even she can pierce the smog to find Ose's position.

At that moment, a bright light shines above the clouds, one that no human can see, thanks to the curtain of darkness shrouding their vision.

The Atlas Cannon, a weapon forged by the Wordsmith for combating demonkind, activates its power cells. It condenses a tremendous amount of power into its planet-facing railgun, opting not to shoot a single small, precise bullet for assassinating Demon Emperors, but a high-impact payload with a huge area of coverage.

Silently, the light condenses to a point on the satellite's tip. A moment later, it flashes for a split-second with a light brighter than the sun.

Fwip.

A quiet rush of air is the only thing anyone hears before a low-yield tactical warhead instantly travels fifty miles from orbit to the planet's surface.

BOOOOOOOM!!

A cosmic blast detonates smack in the middle of the Western Front's battle-lines. Fifty-seven thousand humans vaporize into ash, enveloped by a light that destroys anything it touches.

One second later, the explosive shockwave surges outward as well, obliterating the eardrums of anyone and anything in range.

Humanity's Planet-Walkers, gone.

Their strongest combatants, vaporized.

Their military leaders, reduced to ash.

Never getting even a chance to realize what happened, an additional thirty thousand humans perish within seconds, their nanite-based armor peeling away under the scorching heat, leaving their skin and innards to liquefy into mush.

Along with the humans, many thousands of demons perish, too. Ose pays them no mind.

The Third Emperor watches from above as the blast-wave travels outward, rapidly weakening until it fades into nothingness. In its wake, countless horrifically mutilated corpses lay unmoving, their figures coated by the ashen remains of those even closer to the blast zone. Only tiny pockets of scattered survivors manage to hold on to their feeble lives, but it won't be long before the demonic horde falls upon them.

Ose nods. "Not bad."

Belial, however, falls through the clouds to gaze at the humans in absolute horror. Her eyes become as wide as saucers, while her jaw visibly drops.

"N-n-no... no... nooo... Ose, you... you couldn't have..."

Tears well up in her eyes. Countless friends and acquaintances she's made over the past six years, people she's healed and spent time with, even at only the most surface of levels, still mean something to her.

Belial chokes back anguished sobs. "No, devils, no... Ose, you vile... despicable..."

Uriel, too, lays on her back, having been flung away by the Cannon's impact. A few injuries line her body, but she heals them quickly, then rises to her feet.

"...Monstrous. To think Ose possessed such a level of power. Verily, I have underestimated my foe."

Many demons pull back, unsure of what to do. However, not long after, their eyes turn greedy as a telepathic communication reaches into all of their minds.

KILL ALL OF THE HUMANS. SLAY EVERY LAST ONE. SHOW NO MERCY.

These words, projected by Ose through her thundercloud, cause every demon to roar with excitement.

"Ose! Bahaha! She did this! Not the humans, our Emperor! Now we can kill the fleshbags once and for all boys! Let loose and kill some gooks!"

The demons rush forward, this time not holding back at all. Unlike before, when they had to move slowly so that Ose could locate the Wordsmith's family, she no longer needs to worry about such things.

Ose turns her greedy gaze toward Daisy and Phoebe.

"Hehehe. First, why don't I soften your people up? Then, I'll come for you."

The Emperor of Infiltration focuses her mind. She closes her eyes, calling upon the thunder she's been building up for the past ten minutes.

Hong-long!

The maelstrom hums energetically. It builds up within seconds, narrowing to several focal points above humanity's encampments.

Ose's eyes bolt open. "DESTROY!"

All at once, innumerable lightning bolts fall from the sky. They rush toward thousands of human and monster soldiers, lancing into their suits and vehicles with far more energy than the random strikes from earlier. Countless soldiers scream in agony as Ose's magic tears through them, obliterating their innards and killing them on the spot. Many survive with heavy injuries, while only a few of the hardiest monsters, like Yamir, manage to shrug off the damage.

Ose releases every last drop of her pent-up power, collapsing humanity's other three battle-lines, before exhaling heavily and shuddering to a stop.

With her thunderstorm exhausted, Ose retracts her power. A jelly-like sensation spreads through her legs, making her tremble weakly, but she quickly reaches her palm out to suck up a bit of nearby electrical energy from some nearby vehicles and structures.

Ose sighs. With her energy much lower than before, she realizes she doesn't have much left to spare.

"Tch. I planned to take my time, but Uriel's appearance has changed things. I'll have to move swiftly if I want to achieve my ultimate objectives."

As Ose's thunderstorm dissipates, Uriel and Belial both lock onto her, with Belial's anguish quickly turning to wrath.

"Oseeee!!"

Belial flaps her wings. She rushes toward Ose, but the white-haired Emperor pays her no mind.

"Fuck off, Belial."

Ose snaps her attention to the Hydra. She turns into a bolt of lightning and instantly travels to the holy energy barrier atop its back.

"Break for me!" Ose roars, as she fires an electric-bomb at the barrier protecting Daisy and Phoebe's sleeping bodies.

Boom!

The barrier trembles under Ose's might, but to her shock, it doesn't shatter.

"What? So powerful?!"

Ose gapes for a moment, then starts to condense more power into her hands.

Meanwhile, Belial follows Ose's path. She, too, spots Phoebe and Daisy atop the Hydra's back. Her vision turns red as murderous rage surges within her heart.

"OSEEE!! GET AWAY FROM THEM!"

She increases her speed to the max, swooping down on Ose like a bird of prey. Her leathery wings creak under the G-forces as she rears her fist back to punch Ose with all her strength.

Suddenly, the unthinkable happens.

One of the nearby Titans, Zeus, swivels his head toward Belial's falling figure. He bolts toward her, moving at an equally ridiculous speed, rears his arm back, and slaps down.

WHUMP!!

Belial doesn't even get an instant to react. One moment, she's speeding toward Ose. The next, a mountain falls atop her, slapping her against Hero City's confines.

Boom!

Belial crashes into the dirt, breaks countless bones, shatters most of her teeth, and falls into a muddled brain-state. Several seconds of traumatic shock pass through her body before she manages to open her eyes and blink dazedly.

"Uhhh..."

Belial's self-preservation instincts kick in. She blearily motions with one hand, then presses it against her side, healing herself. She still needs more than thirty seconds to revive herself to peak condition, and even then, her eyesight blurs every few seconds; the side-effects of a concussion.

"...hit me. Something hit me. Bird? A bird? Was it a bird?"

Belial mumbles to herself. She struggles to think, while a distant whine rings in her ears.

* * *

Atop the Hydra, Ose blasts the energy barrier ten times. She pours her strength into her attacks, yet still, it doggedly holds on.

"Seven devils!" Ose howls. "How fucking durable is this force-field?! It's like I'm trying to cut a diamond with wood-chips! My attacks seem only to be strengthening it!"

Indeed, the more Ose attacks the barrier, the sturdier it becomes. Eventually, the Emperor of Infiltration takes a step back, gasping weakly for breath.

"She's right there... hah... the little brat is ten feet away but I can't get to her. What is this infernal barrier made of?!"

The Hydra ignores Ose and the women on its back. It continues attacking the Titans, while they, too, battle it. The more they fight, the more Ose realizes something is amiss.

The Emperor glances toward the action. As she watches, Zeus beats the tar out of a pair of Hydra heads while wielding his two infamous lightning rods. Similarly, Poseidon wields a trident, a golden weapon made for expertly channeling his aquatic abilities.

However, what stuns Ose the most is when she looks more closely at Neptune. There, she sees him, too, wielding a trident. And not just any random one, but the same weapon as his father! Somehow, the two of them wield the exact same trident, as if someone had found a way to copy unique artifacts and deliberately bequeathed one to each Titan King.

Ose's expression turns to disbelief. She watches as, without any fanfare or particular tactics, the group of Titans merely attacks the Hydra like a group of stupid idiots, repeating the same moves over and over. The Hydra, likewise, dumbly attacks them back, ignoring the minor threats on its back.

Something isn't right about these Titans... Ose thinks. Why are they acting so... robotic? It's as if they aren't the actual beings who once roamed the Earth, but mere constructs... mere illusions...

As always, her rapid thinking and quick analytical abilities allow her to dig right to the core of the issue.

These aren't revived or reborn Titans. They're... projections? Capable of causing great damage, yet ultimately still only illusions given flesh. Could the Monster Queen have made them? No. Even if she devoured the Sphinx's magic, I find that possibility to be unlikely.

Instead, it seems... this child... did she perhaps summon them from her dreams? But why would a little girl imagine such horrifying monsters? And since when did she learn of their existences?

Many suspicions boil within Ose's mind. She dwells on them for ten seconds, thinking of several possible conclusions. In the end, she shakes her head, not sure what to think.

I've heard of demons and Heroes who could create dream-worlds and other such things in their sleep, but this is the first I've heard or seen anyone summon such high-level existences into the real world. They're so realistic that I mistook them for the real Titan Kings. Given their frenzied rampaging, it seems the child is too young and inexperienced to control them. That works out fine for me. Once I capture her, I'll be able to slowly twist her into my little puppet.

Nothing has changed. I still need to capture her and her mother, but now, the girl has far more direct value to me than I previously expected.

Ose smirks. She turns away from the Titans to look at Daisy once again.

"...eh?"

Ose's smirk vanishes. To her horror, she turns to see Daisy slowly rising to her feet within the energy barrier. The little girl rubs her forehead, as if having awoken from a terrible dream.

When Daisy opens her eyes, the frenzied Titans pause-mid-movement. The Hydra, too, slows its rampage.

Daisy raises her head to look at the Demon Emperor outside her protective bubble. Her face morphs into a frown.

"Hey! I heard what you said! You are a bad person! Very bad!"

All of the Titans swivel their heads in unison. They turn to look at Ose, making her blood turn to ice.

Ose freezes in place while a crushing mental pressure falls upon her.

"You... you... you're not a normal Hero. What the hell are you?!"

Daisy doesn't answer for a moment. Instead, she raises her eyes, as if searching the sky for something.

"Hmm. Daddy's gonna come back soon. I'll have to beat your butt real quick, then."

Daisy turns to look at the Titans.

"Hey! What are you doing? Give this bad lady a spanking! Hurry up!"

Ose's heart jumps into her throat as all of the Titans start moving toward her in unison.

"Oh, SHIT."

>!This is what a spoiler looks like! Click it to reveal the text!!

Part 283: Ose's Final Gambit

Emperor Ose activates her magic, zipping five hundred meters straight into the air. She narrowly avoids a gruesome death as the five Titans charging her position stomp on the spot where she stood only a second before. Daisy Hiro, still shielded atop the Hydra's back, easily follows Ose's movement. Her eyes seemingly lock-on to the lightning-type Emperor's mana signature as if she were an ultrabright firefly buzzing around in a pitch-black void.

"Bad lady! Get back down here!"

Daisy 'grabs' at the air, wrapping Ose with an invisible psionic force. Ose's eyes widen in alarm, but before she can teleport away, Daisy yanks downward and flings Ose back toward the Titans below.

"Shiiiit!"

Ose gets hurled toward her huge, hulking enemies. Terror emerges in her heart as she spots the dead-eyed Zeus lunging his palm out to slap her. Just before the Titan King's hand connects, Ose turns into a bolt of lightning and flies away, putting a full kilometer of distance between herself and her enemies.

"Hah, hah, hah..." Ose gasps, her heart pounding in her chest. Sweat pours down her forehead, most of it due to sheer exhaustion. Having expended most of her mana to maintain her Ultraform and summon the wide-area lightning storm, Ose doesn't appear to be doing too well.

I'm running on fumes! Ose thinks. If I hadn't thrown away my energy attacking that little brat's energy barrier, I'd have plenty to spare right now... but I ended up wasting my mana at the wrong time! Now I'm in a tough spot!

As Ose spends a precious few seconds gathering her breath, Belial shakily pulls herself together. Having suffered a concussion from when one of the Titans attacked her, her thoughts move sluggishly. She raises her head to see the group of Titans standing only half a city block from her position.

"Crap! They're right next to me."

The succubus tries to put some distance between herself and the Titans, but her vision blurs, making her stumble awkwardly to the side. Unable to properly control her limbs, she flops to the ground and coughs weakly.

I'm in bad shape, Belial thinks. Whole world's spinning. Can't see straight. Can't think straight. I want to sleep, but I can't! Have to stay awake... everyone needs me!

Just when Belial starts to despair, a motion nearby catches her eye. She raises her head slightly and gapes, seeing Daisy lowering to the ground, while her mother hovers behind her, Phoebe's eyes still tightly closed as she lays comatose.

"Aunt S'matha!" Daisy says. "Are you okay? Did the bad lady hurt you?"

The little girl lands on the ground while continuing to float her mother behind her. Belial, too tired at this point to even ask what is going on, shakes her head. "Not quite. TheTitandid. Hitmehard. Can't think... can'tthinkstraight. Head hurts."

Her words slur together as she struggles to manipulate her tongue. Luckily, Daisy picks up on the problem. She trots over and presses her palm against Belial's forehead.

"Lots of ouchies. I can make you better!"

Daisy concentrates for a moment, then transfers a burst of healing energy into Belial's skull. After several seconds, Belial's vision clears up. Like a fog melting from her eyes, she swiftly regains her mental faculties and climbs to her feet.

Belial hugs Daisy. "Thank you! Are you okay, sweetie? Where is Ose? Did she run away?"

When Belial pulls away from Daisy, she finds herself momentarily confused by the look of apathy on the child's face. Daisy casually looks at some point beyond the huge Hydra standing motionlessly next to her, where Daisy's five Titans chase after a distant point of light.

"The bad lady's over there," Daisy says, gesturing vaguely to the north. "Don't worry! I'll spank her good!"

Belial shakes her head. "You've done enough, Daisy. I can't put you in harm's way. Why don't you take mommy somewhere safe? Somewhere far away from here? Maybe you can fix her ouchies too?"

Daisy glances back at Phoebe. "Mommy's not hurt, just sleepy. I can't wake her up."

"Oh. Well, that doesn't matter. Stay back for now and let auntie spank the bad lady, okay?" Belial says.

"Okay!" Daisy chirps. "I'll tell the Big Men not to hit you again. That was very bad of them."

Belial stares at the little girl for a moment in disbelief.

"The... the 'big men'? Do you mean the Titans? You're controlling them?"

"Uh huh!" Daisy says, nodding quickly. "I got all tired, then I saw the Big Men. Daddy always says if you see a bad person to get an adult. So I did!"

Belial rubs her forehead. "Alright... I think I understand. Sort of. Okay, you just stay here. I'll be back soon!"

Leaving Daisy behind, Belial quickly jumps atop the Hydra, half-expecting it to attack her. Instead, the Hydra stands motionless, its eyes glazed, as if waiting for orders.

Belial's heart skips a beat. Did Daisy summon this Hydra somehow? Maybe the other one, too? What the hell is going on? When Jason gets back, I'll need to have a long talk with him about his little girl!

Shaking her head, Belial snaps her attention toward the distant aura of a Demon Emperor. She locks onto Ose's spiritual presence, now weaker than ever thanks to her explosive mana expenditure. The Emperor of Infiltration does all she can to dodge the five Titans, but her weakened Ultraform proves unable to keep away from Daisy's Titans.

Zeus and Ivaldi, the two fastest Titans, easily keep up with Ose. Any time she teleports around or turns into a lightning bolt to flee, the two Titan Kings chase after her. Zeus, using his Thunderstep, and Ivaldi, by turning into a beam of light.

As for Cronus, Poseidon, and Neptune, these three heavy hitters work to fence her in, their intelligence having skyrocketed since Daisy's awakening.

"Aaargh!" Ose cries, as a compressed blast of water slams into her back. The fifty tons of liquid falls upon her from above, knocks her out of the sky, and flings her to the ground below. Before she can strike the ground, Ose explodes into a burst of electricity and darts to the east, only for Ivaldi to intercept her!

The Titan King raises her arm overhead, conjuring an explosive ball of Holy Magic. She fires it directly into Ose's flight path, but Ose doesn't get more than 0.00001 seconds to react. She flies directly into the energetic orb and dematerializes from her lightning-bolt form, shrieking bloody murder as the holy energy explodes against her body.

Like a bird smacking against a window, Ose tumbles from the air. She falls to the ground and thunks against the pavement below, breaking both of her legs.

"Nnngghh!" Ose whimpers, gritting her teeth. The once-terrifying Emperor now appears as weak as a beaten dog, cowering under the terror of all five coordinated Titans. Ose grits her teeth and weaves a quick magic sign, zapping toward the nearest source of electricity in the area, which turns out to be the Rust Bucket, Hero City's very first factory. She impacts the building's wall and shatters it to pieces, then flies toward a miniature fusion reactor inside, one of the many small models made by the Wordsmith to supply electricity to the energy-hogging facilities in his city.

Like a drug-crazed addict, Ose stretches out her hand and siphons every drop of the reactor's available power only a second before Ivaldi crashes through the ceiling to grab at her.

Unfortunately, even with the incredible amount of energy packed into the reactor, Ose's broken body only manages to absorb and retain one percent of it. The rest oozes from her pores uselessly, wasted by her fatigued mind and spirit. Still, she manages to heal her broken legs and regain a bit of her stamina, so Ose dodges again, evading Ivaldi at the last second.

As the Queen of Divinity and the Thunder King chase after the Emperor of Infiltration, Ose's mind races at a thousand times any normal human's ability to think.

I can't keep this up! These damn Titans won't give me a moment to rest! Earlier, they acted like wild animals, but now that the brat has awoken, they've regained a huge amount of their mental faculties! Even in my prime condition, I wouldn't dare to face them alone, let alone as I am now!

Ose zips through a narrow alley, only to bolt straight upward as Neptune and Poseidon fire dozens of compressed water-blasts at her. When she jumps into the air, Ose narrowly evades Cronus, who tries to slap her out of the air with his palm.

Gritting her teeth, Ose makes a bold decision.

I'm getting out of here! This operation has failed, but I'd rather keep my life and at least return to fight another day!

Having hinged so much of her future on Stormbringer's success, the mere thought of fleeing burns Ose's insides with shame and humiliation.

How could I have planned for all these things going wrong? It's not fair! The humans tricked me! Even without the Wordsmiths, that damned Sphinx was more than enough to terrorize my armies! Beelzebub got his ass kicked, Bael lost his brains, Artorias turned rogue, and Mephisto couldn't even capture the devil-damned Wordsmith's soul! The only competent demon was me! ME! I did everything right, but as usual, my pathetic, idiot subordinates failed me!

Without a shred of irony, Ose mentally blames everyone but herself for Stormbringer's failure. As she dodges five more concentrated attacks, blood-vessels dilate in her eyes, giving her a crazed look.

It's all their fault! Yama couldn't even capture the Wordsmith's daughter, and that was his only task! Why did I get stuck leading Hell's Most Useless Bastards?! Some so-called 'First Hell,' hah! Pathetic!

Giving up on any further fighting, Ose shoots one hateful glance at the Hydra. She vaguely senses Daisy's presence somewhere nearby it, but doesn't manage to spot the child.

"You'll regret crossing me, brat!" Ose cries, before darting to the west, aiming to flee through the Warpgate back to Hell.

Ose's speed, standing at the absolute apex of what a fleshly being can achieve, allows her to instantly accelerate to the speed of light. In the minutest fraction of a second, she transmits herself in a straight line toward the Warpgate, aiming to jump straight through and save herself.

However, she is not the only speedster on the battlefield.

Zeus and Ivaldi, guided by the distant telepathic commands of a small child, intercept Ose's thoughts before she can activate her magic. Right as Ose jumps toward the Warpgate, Ivaldi appears at the midpoint, just above the Western Front. Her body shimmers with holy energy, causing Ose's eyes to widen in alarm.

Shit!

Unable to stop her magic in time, Ose fires forward like a bullet, traveling in a straight-line toward her destination. This movement, her fastest method of travel, also comes with the least agility, making her unable to shift her trajectory by even a fraction of a degree.

Ose slams into Ivaldi's holy-magic-enveloped body like a fly crashing into an electric zapper. She instantly bounces off the Queen of Divinity and rockets to the ground below, momentarily losing consciousness from the sheer power behind her impact.

Boom!!

The Third Emperor hurtles into the field of demons beneath her, conveniently landing not far away from Uriel herself. The Archangel defends the completely barren Western Front, reaping the lives of any demons foolish enough to try taking her on. With practically zero allied forces left alive following the Atlas Cannon's bombardment, only Uriel stands alone to protect Hero City from the western invaders.

Ose's missile-like crash into the dirt grabs plenty of attention not only from the demon army, but from Uriel herself. The demons, already reluctant to charge at the unstoppable Archangel and her four Holy Constructs, pause to stare first at Ose's crashed figure, and then at Ivaldi hovering in the skies above. The seventy-foot-tall Titan King captures their attention, frightening them silly.

"Who the hell is she?!"

"WHAT is she?! Is that a human? How is she so BIG?!"

Some of the oldest demons, those who fought during the Energy Wars, vaguely recall tales of giants, ancient enemies of the demons. However, with their memories having been wiped during the last hundred thousand years of demon rule, few can recall anything but the haziest memories of the distant past.

Uriel, meanwhile, flicks her gaze to the Titan, then to Ose. A look of confusion passes over her face as she tries to figure out just what the heck is going on.

"Titan? Ivaldi? Fighting Ose? I know not the reason behind this development. Is Ivaldi my friend or foe?"

Despite never having seen Ivaldi in the flesh, nor having fought her, Uriel still knows plenty about the Queen of Divinity, given how Barbatos has heard stories detailing the War in Heaven many times, along with his two mental passengers. The Archangel recognizes Ivaldi, but doesn't immediately perceive whether she is a friend or a foe.

A moment later, Zeus arrives on the scene. The Titan King raises his foot, then stomps down on Ose, intending to crush her into meat paste. Just before his foot makes contact with the ground, Ose awakens, her body instinctively teleporting to the side to protect itself.

Zeus's foot misses the mark, but Ose unfortunately flees into the wrong direction, arriving directly in front of Uriel!

A millisecond of realization flickers through the beaten and battered Emperor's eyes as she rapidly contemplates her life's choices.

"Dammit!"

Despite not knowing whether the Titans are friends or foes, Uriel doesn't hesitate. She launches a simple punch straight at Ose's face, blasting her backward and sending her sprawling to the dirt. The lightning crackling around Ose's figure appears far less energetic than before, her Ultraform clearly having reached its limits.

"Ugh..." Ose grunts.

The Emperor lays on her back. Her body spasms painfully as she climbs to her feet. Surrounded by enemies on all sides, Ose begins to panic, realizing she may not escape this encounter.

Cronus arrives. So do Poseidon and Neptune. These three Titans, much slower than their two speedster-counterparts, still manage to clear the two-mile gap from Hero City to the Western Front in record time. They arrive behind Uriel, but pay her no mind, allowing Uriel to breathe a sigh of relief.

It seems these Titans are my allies, after all. I wonder what sorcerer revived them from the grave? The Wordsmith, perhaps?

Not particularly caring about the details, Uriel starts stomping toward Ose.

"Demon wench. Filthy murderer. Thy kind slew my people..." Uriel mutters, her voice laced with fury. "Today, thou shalt finally pay for thy sins!"

As Uriel closes the gap, another voice rings out.

"No! She's mine!"

Belial, once again transformed into her Pure Succubus form, dives down from the sky and crashes feet-first into the ground, kicking up a cloud of dust.

"You've got nowhere to run, Ose..." Belial says, her voice just as filled with rage as Uriel's. "You'll pay for your crimes."

An instant later, another figure flickers into existence twenty feet directly behind Ose.

This one, a red-haired female standing seven feet tall with butterfly wings, turns out to be none other than Blinker, the Monster Queen.

"No!" Blinker shouts, gnashing her teeth. "Ose's mine! She killed Kar!"

With five Titans and three Emperor-level powerhouses surrounding her, for the second time in her life, a sense of complete despair and helplessness washes over Ose. Not since her childhood, when humans captured her and rendered her helpless, has she felt as vulnerable and alone as she does in this moment.

The Emperor of Infiltration trembles, unable to think of an escape method. With Ivaldi and Zeus matching her in speed, while all the rest together prove more than her match in strength, she truly finds herself completely alone and at the mercy of her enemies. None of the pathetic weakling demons in the distance take a step closer, nor would their feeble power assist her in any way. Seeing the imminent downfall of their leader, some of the less-dimwitted ones even start beelining for the portal to make their escape. Not a single one is stupid or bloodthirsty enough to think their strength can break past the Western Front's powerhouses.

At that moment, Uriel frowns. She turns her head to the north, where she spots a tall, hulking figure strolling toward them.

"Bael?"

Uriel goes on the alert. Unlike Ose, who has been drained of her spirit and fighting power, Bael appears just as full of energy as when he first arrived on Tarus II. Strangely, his lone remaining eye no longer contains the same degree of dimness as usual. Instead, a menacing aura drips off his body, making his appearance far more intimidating than usual.

The Duke of Pain's arrival causes some of the fleeing demons to turn around and gasp. Despite him only being a Duke, his presence energizes their spirits more than Ose's ever could. As a symbol of demonkind's might and a veritable hero-like deity who fought during the Ancient Era and the Energy Wars, few Emperors, let alone mere Dukes, command a prestige anywhere near Bael's level.

Ose's thoughts find a spark of hope.

Bael? Maybe if he joins with me, I'll have a chance at escaping! He looks as if he's broken out of his earlier daze!

The Duke of Pain slowly walks toward the group of human-allied powerhouses. As he approaches, one of the Titans attacks! Zeus darts toward him, activating his Thunderstep to flicker over and stomp his foot down.

BOOM!

The Titan's foot crashes atop Bael, only for the Duke of Pain to casually raise his arm and catch the foot mid-stomp! He sinks into the planet's soil, but otherwise maintains his footing, unperturbed.

"Outta my way, punk."

Bael throws the Titan upward, launching Zeus into the sky! An instant later, Bael coils strength into his legs and leaps out of the pit, aiming to land beside Ose.

When the Duke crashes into the dirt, the eyes of all the spectators darken visibly.

Belial grits her teeth. In a contest of strength, I can overpower Bael, but actually injuring him is beyond me! Even as a Duke, he's too formidable! Now that he's here, it will be much harder to kill Ose! Maybe if the humans still had those ballistic rounds, we could take out his other eye...

Indeed, Bael's right eye appears just as hideously deformed and hollow as before. His left eye, however, locks onto Ose with a commanding presence, making her breathe a sigh of relief.

"About time you snapped out of your stupor!" Ose hisses. "So long as you and I work together, we-"

Before Ose can finish her sentence, Bael lunges his hand toward her neck!

Weakened beyond belief and taken off-guard, Ose's heart skips a beat. She fails to dodge the Duke's grab as he locks his hands around her throat.

"Guhak! B-Bael! Whuh- koff! What are you doing?!" Ose shrieks. "I-idiot! Snap out of it! Those nanites are muh-messing with your brain!"

Bael eyeballs Ose. His lips curl into a snarl.

"Ain't no nano-shits fucking with my head now, Ose. You bitch. All this time, I wondered who did it. I wondered who killed him. It was you. It was YOU!"

Dumbfounded, Ose can only feebly grab at Bael's fingers to try and pry them off her neck. She fails.

"Kuh! Killed? Killed who?! Mis-misunderstanding! This is a misunderstanding, Bael!"

Uriel, Belial, and Blinker all watch, confused, as Bael tightens his grip.

"Stupid Ose..." Bael mutters. "I might be dumb, but I ain't no idiot."

The Duke's expression turns frightening.

"Now, it's time for you to SUFFER!"

>!This is what a spoiler looks like! Click it to reveal the text!!

Part 284: Bael's Bestest Buddy

Much earlier in the day, at the far edge of the Western Battlefront.

"Baaaaael!! You bottom-feeding sludgebrain!"

Ose teleports away from the Duke of Pain, leaving demonkind's strongest warrior punching at the air. Bael mindlessly swings his fists a few more times before finally stopping.

"...Eh? Where'd that fella go?"

Bael spends the next thirty seconds dumbly staring ahead, his glossed-over eyes searching for something that may never have been there in the first place.

"What was I doing again? Where am I? Man, my stinkin' head just won't stop throbbin'."

Beside Bael, a tall, good-looking demon fellow with wild white hair slaps him on the shoulder. "Bael! My man! Calm it down, brother! What are you doin', getting all hyped up about nothing, eh?"

The lanky demon wears a ripped-up leather jacket and pants, both colored black to contrast with his blood-red skin. Multiple piercings line his ears, lip, and nose, as well as his tongue and chin, too. His aura appears somewhat casual, as if he hasn't a care in the world.

Bael massages his hollowed-out, missing right eye, making his brain tingle ticklishly.

"Ah, I dunno, Shax. There was this weird grating thing buzzing in my ear. Really pissed me off."

"Sounds like a woman to me!" Shax laughs. The Emperor of Hype wraps his arm around Bael's back and shakes him up a bit, making the Duke of Pain drool dumbly. "Forget the broad, man! Let's have some fun!"

"Fun? Alright. Sounds good."

Bael casually discards the useless memories of whatever that one random female demon from earlier was talking about. Already, he's lost all interest in her crazy, hare-brained 'plans,' dealings which only make his poor, tiny little pea-brain hurt.

As the Duke of Pain and the Emperor of Hype start slowly wandering eastward, toward the distant roar of gunfire and explosions, they melt into the sea of demons flooding that way. Curiously, while all the demons instinctively steer clear of crashing into Bael's back, avoiding him thanks to his Duke-level aura, the same doesn't appear to be true of his friend, Shax. Many demons plow right through Shax, passing through the Emperor's body... almost as if he isn't there.

"Oppen! Bael, morg a florg!" One random demon yells as he runs past.

Bael glances at the speaker. "Huh?"

The demon pauses for a split second to shoot Bael a thumbs up before repeating his gibberish. "Moodoo plala! Morg a florg!"

The Duke of Pain nods dumbly. "Okay. Sure."

As if reassured by Bael's answer, the demon continues running off into the distance.

"...The heck did that guy say?" Bael asks. "Everyone's so damn annoying today. Can't even talk right. At least I've still got you, Shax."

Shax stands beside Bael, smiling kindly at his friend. "Sorry I've been gone for so long, mate. I've been all busy and stuff, rockin' on like it's Hong Kong!"

"Bahaha!" Bael laughs, as if hearing the funniest joke in the world. "That rhymed! Hahaha!"

* * *

The two demons slowly and casually stroll eastward. Bael doesn't head toward the Western Front, but instead randomly wanders toward the Southern Front, skirting all the way around the Horned Forest. The Duke of Pain pays no attention to his surroundings. His feet move on autopilot, taking him places his mind has no control over.

"So, how've you been?" Shax asks. "We've gotta catch up, grandpa!"

Bael nods. "Yeah. Uh, let's see. Well, you remember the big wars, right? With the, uh, aliens?"

"Yup," Shax answers, his smile fading slightly. "It's been a while, but I 'member the good old days."

"Well, after the war, I got myself a place on Hell Harbor," Bael says. "Settled down with a buncha ladies."

"Livin' the dream, player!" Shax laughs. "Now that's what I'm talking about! Gotta get yourself some groupies!"

"Mhm. Got some real cuties living under me. After the war ended, I didn't really have much to do. I figured these ladies all had a hard time, so I'd help 'em out."

"You didn't start a new band?" Shax asks. "Come on, brother. You know what I always say. You've gotta let the music flow through your soul!"

Bael's expression turns dim.

"I dunno, Shax. After you left me, I didn't feel like listening to music anymore. It just... it didn't have the same-"

Before Bael can finish his sentence, a light stinging sensation cracks against his cheek, like a bee smacking into him while flying at full speed. The Duke of Pain pauses mid-step, only to find himself standing at the edge of a human battle line. Dozens of exosuit-wearing troopers line up around him, taking aim with their guns.

BLAM! BLAM! BLAM!

A rain of bullets and blasters fires upon Bael, who merely stands in place, staring slack-jawed at the people shooting him.

"...Huh? How'd I get here? Where am I?"

Bael slowly swivels his head around, paying no attention to the concentration of ordinance blasting him from every angle. One bullet strikes his armpit, making him flinch.

"Ah! That tickles! Stop that! Hehehe."

The Duke scratches his armpit to relieve the tickling sensation, but otherwise pays no attention to the bullets and beams smacking harmlessly against his skin.

Some distance behind Bael, a dozen demons stare wide-eyed as Bael 'heroically' stands with his chest puffed out.

"Look at that!" A random Demon Lord screeches. "Bael's such a badass! He does not give a fuck about the humans! They're blasting him to kingdom come, but he's ignoring them like they're teeny imps poking his heels!"

"Bael must have come all the way here to reinforce us!" Another demon pipes up. "Who says the Duke of Pain is a dummy? He knew we were having trouble taking out the fleshies, so he showed up to draw their attention. Now we can make a push to attack them!"

"He must be tryin'a lower their morale to rock bottom! Stupid fleshbags, they'll never be able to beat Bael! He's our best warrior!"

While the demons fire off all manner of predictions regarding Bael's intent, the humans do the same. One of the field Lieutenants trembles in fear as he yells into his radio.

"I repeat, the Duke of Pain has been sighted! The son of a bitch is going to tear through us like a hot knife through butter! We need reinforcements!"

Seeing the Duke standing all alone, menacingly, many human and monster soldiers begin to tremble in fright as Bael's 'terrifying' gaze sweeps over them. His casual disdain for their existence scares them out of their wits, making them feel like ants trying to nibble at the feet of a lion.

"High-powered infantry ordinance ineffective! We're bringing the long-range cannons online! Clear the area!"

A dual-barreled cannon used for shelling the demons at long-ranges sits atop a nearby embattlement some fifty feet in the air. It pauses its continual bombardment to swivel in Bael's direction.

BOOM! BOOM!

Multiple artillery shells fire practically at point-blank range, a mere five hundred meters away, blasting apart the ground Bael stands on while burying him in the soil.

The humans watch in horror as Bael climbs out of the dirt, a look of rage on his face.

"Shit! Bombardment ineffective! We can't hurt him at all!"

Even as waves of panic surge through the humans' ranks, Bael merely shakes his head, trying to clear away his disorientation from the explosion.

"Ahh... damn, Shax. Why's everyone always pickin' on me? Can't a fella walk and talk with his friend in peace?"

"They're just jealous of your good looks, Bael-bro," Shax replies, shaking his head in dismay. "Remember what I always say? Sometimes, you've gotta step up and be the better man. Be the bigger man! Be a real man!"

Bael nods. "Yeah, shucks, you're right. I can't blame a bunch of cute kiddos for getting all worked up. They don't know any better."

As Bael mumbles to himself, more humans panic and fire additional bullets at him, but he just turns around and walks away while shaking his head.

"The Duke of Pain... he's leaving the battlefield!" The lieutenant says, shocked by his own words. "Maybe... maybe he's showing us mercy!"

Meanwhile, the demons gawk as Bael leaves, all of them jumping to their own wild conclusions.

"Bael doesn't give a damn about the humans!" One Demon Grunt screeches. "What a badass! They're too pitiful for him to even bother fighting! Come on guys, we can't look lame in front of the Duke of Pain! Let's rip these fleshies to pieces!"

As Bael continues heading north, absentmindedly skirting the border of the Eastern Front, he ignores the battles raging around him.

The Duke of Pain glances at his old friend, someone he hasn't seen in tens of millennia. A vague sadness appears in his eyes.

"What's the matter, bro?" Shax asks. "You wanna jam out? Let's go up on that mountain over there and get our rock on!"

Bael follows Shax's finger to the edge of Hero City, at the looming mountain range past the humans' battle lines.

"Mountain, huh? Yeah, sure. That could be fun."

He pays no attention to the looks of horror and despair on the humans' faces as he casually walks through their battle lines. Dozens of guns fire on him, but he doesn't feel a thing.

"The Duke of Pain is approaching Hero City! I repeated, threat level red! The Duke of Pain has bypassed our perimeter! We can't slow him down!"

Even as his appearance throws the humans into disarray, Bael disregards the goings-on of the world. He strolls forward, watching absentmindedly as countless humans and monsters in the rearguard shriek in terror and dive away, scrambling to escape his 'wrath.'

"Look at his eye! He's freaking pissed! I'm not getting within grabbing distance, no sir!"

Minutes later, Bael passes all of the logistical backlines, then coils strength into his legs and leaps skyward.

Thump!

Bael lands atop the hundred-foot-tall cliff, steadying himself for a moment as he turns around to gaze back at the Eastern Front.

"Hmm. Air's pretty good up here..." Bael mutters.

He turns to the side, only to see his buddy Shax clutching a guitar. The Emperor of Hype motions with his hands, making a set of custom-made 'slap drums' appear before Bael.

"Ohhh!" Bael says, as a nostalgic look appears in his eye. "My old drums! I ain't played with these since... since..."

"No need to yap about that sad stuff," Shax says, waving his hand nonchalantly. "Come on, man. Let's shred!"

Moments later, Shax positions himself right at the edge of the cliff. He strums rapidly on his guitar, blasting out music while headbanging. Bael smiles stupidly. He, too, begins slapping on his drums rhythmically, memories of all the times he used to play in the old band reminding him of his past expertise.

Bop-bop-bop, bam-bo-dam, bop-bop-bop, bam-bo-dam!

The more Bael plays, the more his arms loosen up. He grins and bobs his head, grooving hard to Shax's tunes.

However, after several minutes, Bael's smile fades.

"Wait."

Bael slows his playing.

"Somethin' ain't right, Shax. We're, uh... missing somethin'."

Shax, too, stops riffing. The wild-haired Emperor turns around and cocks his head.

"Something? Don't you mean someone?"

"Yeah. Where's Murmur? It just ain't right without her singing along."

Shax stares evenly at his friend.

"Murmur can't come here, Bael. It's just you and me, now."

"She can't?" Bael asks. "What, has she got a hot date or somethin'?"

Shax doesn't answer. Instead, the Emperor of Hype merely shakes his head before looking away.

"Sorry, big bro. I know it's been hard on you."

"I'm a tough guy. Nothing can hurt me," Bael says.

"Nah. That ain't true. Nobody's invincible. Not even you."

Both demons fall silent. Bael plops down at the edge of the cliff and leaves his legs overhanging the edge. The distant sounds of gunfire, explosions, and screams of agony barely give Bael even the slightest cause for concern. He absentmindedly watches as multiple horrific eviscerations occur among the humans and demons alike. No matter if Scythers disembowel their human opponents or humans bisect their demonic adversaries, such horrific displays of violence don't even cause the Duke of Pain to bat his eye.

"I uh... I lost contact with you for a while..." Bael says. "Near the end of the war. Honestly, I thought maybe you just didn't wanna play with me in the band anymore."

Shax says nothing. He merely turns his head to look at Bael while listening silently.

"And then, uh... well, you know what happened. Next thing I know... the humans put those... those things in your head. The metal things. Made you act like a real jerk."

Bael stares out at the horizon, his brain slowly churning as he recalls several ancient memories.

"I couldn't figure it out. You kept hitting me. Yelling like a wild dog. I thought maybe I made you mad. Then you blasted me with that awful noise, made my ears ring. When the humans jumped out and surrounded me, I even thought you might've joined hands with 'em willingly."

The Duke shakes his head. "Of course you didn't. You never gave a shit about all that dumb politics-crap. Why would you join the humans? Man. I was such an idiot."

"It's not your fault, Bael-bro..." Shax mutters. "I know you were confused. You did what you had to."

"No, I didn't..." Bael mutters. He wipes his nose, sniffling quietly. "I did you in with my own hands. I hurt you. My brother. Why did I do that? I was so dumb. I shoulda asked someone for help. Someone smart."

Shax walks over to Bael. He plops down at the cliff's edge and rests his hand on Bael's shoulder.

"Don't blame yourself, man. You always do that. You trying to make me cry or somethin'?"

"Sniff. Nah, Shax. I don't want that."

"Great. Tell me something cool, then. Something chill. How's my old Hell doing, eh? You been taking good care of it?"

Bael glances at Shax, then lowers his eyes.

"Err..."

"Come on, Bael! Don't tell me you never go there! What about Melody? Viola? How are the girls?"

"I-I dunno," Bael says, flushing with embarrassment. "I can't bring myself to look 'em in the eye. Not after what I did to you."

"You're still hung up on that?" Shax asks, disappointment in his voice. "Do you really think I'd blame you? After what the humans did to me? You put me out of my misery, man. That's what a real bro would do."

"A real bro..." Bael whispers. "Is that me? Nuh-uh. A real bro would have tried harder to fix you. But... I was too dumb. I didn't know what to do, so I just used my fists. That's all I ever do. Lousy, good for nothing, me! Stupid-ass idiot! IDIOT! All I ever do is slap shit around! I'm stinkin' useless! USELESS!"

Suddenly, Bael punches himself! He batters the side of his head once, twice, and three times!

Wham! Wham! Wham!

The Duke of Pain roars as he physically battles himself, socking himself with enough strength to crush titanium. Even so, his fists leave no marks. His body, all but impervious to physical damage, leaves him in the same condition as if a soft breeze were to caress his face.

"Ahhh! I hate myself! I hate me! A stupid, dumbass idiot! Why can't I do anything right?! Why do I gotta watch as all my friends die?! I hate being dumb!"

Shax eyes him without judgment.

"This isn't just about me, is it?" Shax asks. "Bro. You couldn't have saved Satan, either."

"Satan! Agares! All of the old gang! They're all dead now!" Bael howls, as tears well up in his eye. "Even Deebs is out cold! I'm all alone, stuck with a bunch of little punks I have ta' babysit! A bunch of brats! Shit... I hate feeling like such a loser."

Shax smiles kindly. "You've always been like this, Bael. Why do you think I asked you to play in my band? I saw how lonely you looked. You were always sitting by yourself. The other guys acted like you were some boss-man way above them. They got too scared to hang out with you."

"I miss the old days!" Bael sobs. "I miss when we all just hung out playing Sticks and Bones! Why does everything have to be so complicated now?! Everyone always has some stupid plan they're working on, and it sucks! I don't understand any of it!"

As Bael cries, lamenting his lack of intelligence, Shax turns away to gaze into the distance.

"You're bumming me out, Bael," Shax says. "These ain't good vibes. Look, bro, just think about a cute little puppy for a while. You remember that one song Murmur wrote for you? 'Little Puppy Run'? You always liked that tune."

Bael pauses his blubbering to nod dumbly. "Uh... uh huh... I remember..."

"Think about that puppy. Think about some cute little bunnies. They've got big, floppy ears, right?"

"Big... floppy ears..." Beal mumbles, repeating Shax's words.

"Yeah! And fluffy fur. Big wide eyes."

"Big eyes..." Bael repeats.

After several minutes, Bael calms down.

He stares ahead vacantly, his eyes seemingly gazing into the abyss.

"Sorry, Shax. I, uh... lost myself for a minute."

Shax nods. "It happens, my dude. No biggie. Sometimes you've gotta drop some tears."

"Hey, uh... whatever happened to Murmur?" Bael asks. "I never saw her after the war. She just seemed to... disappear. I assumed she died, but never found her body. Do you have any idea, Shax? It's been nagging at me for ages."

The poofy-haired Emperor shakes his head. "Nah. If you don't know, then neither do I, bro. That's not how this works."

Bael glances at his friend. "...Because you ain't really here, right?"

"Well..."

The Duke kicks his heel against the cliff's side. "Tch. You're just a ghost of my imagination. I'm seeing shit I shouldn't cuz the humans stabbed me with that nasty eye-poker thing."

Shax climbs to his feet and stretches. "Who says I'm a ghost? Haven't you figured anything out yet, Bael?"

"Like what?" Bael asks. "Don't play word games with me, you little brat. You know I ain't smart enough to guess right."

"Look, man, it's like this..." Shax says, as he starts casually pacing back and forth. "You've always been a... special guy. You're not like other demons."

"Because I'm invincible?" Bael asks.

"Something like that," Shax answers. "But your body is hardly your most unique trait. It's actually your soul that's special."

Bael frowns. "My soul? Whaddya mean?"

"Things didn't go so well for me..." Shax says. "You know what you did to stop me. I don't blame you for that. I wasn't myself. I tried to hurt you, all because the humans made me do it. I wanted to apologize, but I couldn't even control my mouth. It was... it was like I was a prisoner in my own body."

The Duke of Pain keeps quiet. He listens to Shax's explanation without saying a word.

"Even though the humans took over my brain and body, they didn't have what it takes to completely overpower my soul. So, in the end, I managed to trick 'em a little bit."

Shax continues. "When you landed that last punch and did a snappy on my neck... I managed to free myself for a moment. With my last bit of strength, I planted a little something on you. Always hoped we'd get to chat sooner, but..."

Bael facepalms.

"Oh, devils. I get it now, man. Shit."

"Yeah..." Shax says, scratching his chin awkwardly. "You're kinda garbage when it comes to magic and soul manipulation, big bro. I kept trying to get your attention, but you never managed to hear me. Not until the humans shot you with that barb."

Bael laughs. "Bahaha! You're kidding me! All this devil-damned time, and you were right here in my head? Listening to me and my problems? Don't tell me you heard me blubbering like a little bitch after you died!"

"Err..." Shax mutters awkwardly. "...I didn't blame ya, bro. It wasn't a big deal. Besides, I can only wake up here and there, not all the time. My soul doesn't have a ton of juice left."

"Fuck you, jerkbag!" Bael yells, though his tone doesn't contain a trace of hostility. "You shithead! I can't tell if I'm madder at you or me! What a bunch of rotten luck."

Several seconds pass.

Bael slowly clambers to his feet, then starts walking north along Hero City's cliff border.

Shax floats over and falls into step beside Bael.

"Where are you going?" Shax asks. "Aren't you gonna mope around a bit longer? Cry a bit more for my sake?"

"Shaddap!" Bael says. He waves his hand at Shax casually, as if having seen through a random pest's plans. "You're a real dickweed, Shax. Poking at me, making me all choked up just to get your rocks off. You haven't changed a bit!"

"Hahaha!" Shax laughs. "Guilty as charged! It wasn't exactly fun hanging around you, doing nothin' for all those years, but at least it was better than running the Hell of Isolation. You know I hated managing a bunch of goobers!"

"Right, right..." Bael replies. "Look, man, since you're here now, let's cut the crap. We should hang out and have fun, just like the good old days!"

"Yeah? What've you got in mind?" Shax asks.

Bael smiles devilishly.

"Let's pull some pranks!"

>!This is what a spoiler looks like! Click it to reveal the text!!

Part 285: Clumsy Bael!

At the Eastern Front of Tarus II, a horde of demons stands idly and watches as a distant battle between the Sphinx and a pair of Demon Barons plays out. This wall of demons stays put, keeping out of the battle they haven't a chance of influencing. They simply decide to wait for their superiors to call the attack, though nobody really wants to get involved with Emperor-level powerhouses.

"Damn! Look at Zamiel go! Do ya think he's stronger than Duriel?"

"Maybe not. Zamiel's definitely smarter than Duriel, but Duriel's got the edge in toughness. Dude can take a fist like nobody's business!"

"Hehe. Take a fist."

"Shut up, you know that's not what I mean!"

As multiple demons watch the distant battle with rapt attention, a newcomer stealthily slips into their ranks, then grabs the shoulder of a particularly oversized Demon Lord.

"Hey, Viggo!"

A voice booms out amongst the crowd, startling the demons present. To everyone's alarm, they turn to see Bael, the Duke of Pain, standing in their midst. Not a single person remembers seeing him appear, least of all the demon whose shoulder he grabbed.

That demon, 'Viggo,' whips his head around to look at the newcomer with surprise. "Bael? The heck are you doin' here?"

Bael doesn't answer his question. Instead, a stupid smile stretches across his face.

"Is your fridge running?"

Viggo blinks. "What?"

"Better catch it!" Bael bellows, before bursting into wild laughter. "Bahahaha! Ahahaha!"

Without another word, Bael coils strength into his legs and leaps away, leaving Viggo standing frozen in confusion.

"...Huh? Fridge? Catch it? The... the fuck is he talking about?"

Bael soars through the skies, clutching his belly as he cackles like a madman. Once friction and gravity catches up to him, Bael lands a fair distance to the north of the horde of demons, his powerful jump only taking him so far.

"Hahahaha! Did you see that, Shax?! The look on that dumb cunt's face! Ahaha! I gottem' good!"

Bael's illusory soul-friend, the Emperor of Hype, winces in response.

"Sure, brah. Funny prank, I guess. Kind of thought you'd do something a bit wackier, though."

"We've only just started!" Bael declares, lightly punching his chest. "I've gotta scare the crap out of a bunch of other fellas, next. Aw, man! We're gonna make waves and remind people who the Prankster Duo used to be!"

Despite his seeming lack of enthusiasm, Shax lightens up a bit when he spots the happiness on Bael's face. "You're a simple guy, bro. Always did like that about you."

After a few more moments of laughter, Bael quickly sobers up.

"Yeah, man. You know me. None of that dumb political crap matters at all. Fighting humans, angels, whatever; who gives a damn? All I wanna do is have a fun time with you and remember the good old days."

Shax smiles. "Sure, brah. As for me, I'm just glad we can finally talk again. It was pretty boring watching you meow at random fluffy animals."

Bael nearly jumps out of his skin. "What, you saw?!"

"Didn't have a choice. I'm stuck with ya, remember?"

Several seconds of awkward silence follow. Bael turns his head away and turns as red as an apple.

"...You better not tell anyone."

"Nobody can hear me but you, chief," Shax replies. "Now, what say we get a move on, ay?"

Bael nods. "Yeah."

Bael returns to the demons at the Eastern Front, eager to pull a few more 'pranks.'

* * *

A few hours later, after dawdling around and swapping more war stories with Shax, Bael leaves and heads off to the Northern Front of the Stormbringer invasion forces. Having started at the west, moved to the south, then to the east, the Duke has practically completed a full circuit by this point.

Before Bael can reach the rallying demonic forces, he pauses to look even further northward.

"Whoooa! Lookit that, Shax!"

Shax follows his gaze. "Oh, devils."

The Duke of Pain starts gaily skipping toward a huge, monstrous beast, one standing thirty feet tall with claws as big as an automobile. Resembling a gigantic carnivorous mole, this creature sports a thick coat of fur, overdeveloped front-limbs for burrowing, and a ferocious gaze capable of rendering weak-willed creatures unable to flee. The sheer aura of domination it projects rivals many of the top predators of Tarus II, all of them equally bloodthirsty in different ways.

"What a cutie-pie!" Bael squeals. "Come here, little guy! Big Bael wants to play!"

The giant mole-creature, sensing the approach of a formidable enemy, instantly whips its gaze toward the Duke of Pain. Despite lacking higher intelligence, it and the other creatures of the land have long since noticed the countless demons descending upon Tarus II, putting them on high alert. As Bael draws near, the mole slaps its front claws against the ground and roars, sending a warning message to the intruder!

Do not enter my territory!

Clear as a bell, this frightening message splashes against Bael harmlessly. He smiles giddily as he skips closer and closer to the giant predator.

"I'm gonna call you FLUFFY!" Bael declares. "Lookit this big teddy bear, Shax! Isn't he the cutest thing!"

The moment Bael arrives in the mole-monster's range, it attacks! The giant creature swipes its automobile-sized claws at Bael, catching the Duke off-guard.

Wham!

Bael goes flying as a half-ton of reinforced bone slams into him. He hurtles to the side, crashes into a boulder, and shatters it to pieces.

A moment later, Bael leaps to his feet and claps his hands. "Bahaha! So adorable! The little fella wants to play! C'mere, boy!"

Bael runs toward the monster, making the monster recoil in fear. Seeing the comparatively diminutive Demon Duke totally unharmed, the monster's instincts take over.

"Roar! Roar!"

It bellows warnings to try and frighten Bael away, but the Duke merely interprets those noises as if they were the meows of a cute little kitty-cat!

Once again, when Bael draws into range, the mole attacks! It swipes its claws at the Duke, but this time, Bael stomps his foot down and lifts his arms! He catches the claw-swipe and stabilizes his footing, alarming the giant mole.

"Gotcha!" Bael yells. "Who's the little tough guy now, huh? Bahaha! Upsy-daisy!"

Before the mole can fully comprehend Bael's raw strength, it receives a terrible fright! Bael clutches the mole's claws and lifts up, hoisting the mole overhead.

"Graawr?!"

Defying the creature's comprehension of how strong such a tiny demon can be, the mole momentarily levitates half a foot off the ground, hoisted by its front limb.

"Hup!"

Bael coils strength into his back and biceps, then throws the monster south, in the direction of Hero City!

"Graaaaawr!"

The monster howls in alarm as it suddenly flies away, traveling a full quarter-mile before violently crashing into the planet's soil. The monster spins, flips, and twists its body multiple times before finally grinding to a halt.

"Gotcha!" Bael laughs. "What a funny little guy. Now, come on, little puppy! Come back to papa!"

The Duke of Pain waits for several seconds, but surprisingly, the huge mole merely lays on its side motionlessly and doesn't move a muscle.

Shax's expression falls. "Ah, Bael, bro..."

"How weird!" Bael says. "Is the little guy all tuckered out? Lemme take a look!"

The Duke of Pain swaggers over to the mole-monster. He pokes its back upon arriving, but still, it doesn't move. Then, he walks around to its front, where he finds its eyes frozen open, bloody tears leaking from the corners.

"Eh? You okay, puppy?" Bael asks. "Come on! Don't be a baby! Get up!"

However, as Bael waits, the monster doesn't even twitch. It lays in the same broken, unmoving state as before, never to walk again.

"Bael..." Shax says. "The, uh... the monster died."

"Huh? It did?" Bael asks, clearly confused. "Whaddya mean? I barely gave it one little toss! He's just playing dead, the little prankster."

Shax sighs. "No. It's actually dead, brah. For real."

Unconvinced, Bael walks over and nudges its nose with his fist. "Booped your snoot! Come on, stop messing around! You're fine, kiddo! Shake it off!"

Minutes pass.

As the mole remains unmoving, Bael's excitement dies down.

"...Oh. It really is. Shit. I... I killed the poor fella."

Shax purses his lips. "Yeah."

The Duke's eyes darken.

"Man. This sucks. Why am I the only tough guy in the universe, huh? Why's everyone else so weak?"

"Most life is fragile," Shax muses. "I don't know why you're special, bro. You just are."

"Tch..." Bael grunts. The Duke drops down to sit on his butt. He glances in the direction of the demonic portals a bit further south, and past them, to the distant border of the human city.

"I hate being me sometimes..." Bael says. "Always watchin' others die. It sucks. I'm strong enough to protect myself, but not everyone else. Not even you, Shax."

The Emperor of Hype sits beside Bael.

"Death ain't the end, you know. Didn't you ever listen to Orias?"

"Huh?" Bael asks. "What, you mean that crackpot theory of his? That if you die, you go 'poof' and travel somewhere else? I like Orias as much as the next fella, but the guy's a total wacko."

"I'm here now," Shax says. "Maybe Orias is on to something."

"Nah. You're just a soul manipulator," Bael says, waving his hand dismissively. "Like Satan, Lucy, Mephisto, and the others. None of that rebirthing mumbo-jumbo."

"I suppose you're right." Shax concedes.

* * *

Bael lingers in the area for a while, but eventually leaves the dead mole behind. Though his mood takes a nose-dive, he recovers fairly quickly.

"Guess we'll just go back to pranking people!" Bael says. "Let's scare those cunts over there!"

The Duke leaps skyward again, aiming toward his demon allies at the Northern Front.

Moments later, Bael crashes down amidst a huge group of demons, frightening the devil out of them. "Boo! Bahahaha! Got you dumbasses good! You should see the looks on your faces!"

"Bael!" A Demon Grunt howls. "Don't do that, man! I peed myself!"

"I know! That's why I'm laughing! Anyway, how are things going? Are you guys beating the humans, or what?"

"Yeah," The demon says. "Sort of! But you're not gonna believe this. Duriel got killed!"

The Duke of Pain abruptly stops laughing. "What? He did? You're kidding."

"Nuh-uh! And that ain't all, man! A Hydra popped up inside the fleshbags' city. One of the Oracles said it was the same one we heard about a few months ago, like some kinda clone-thingy!"

Bael nods seriously. "Wow. Duriel died, and now there's a Hydra too. Damn, these humans are pretty tough."

The demon and a couple of his friends briefly catch the Duke of Pain up on the happenings over the past few hours while he was out running around, reminiscing with Shax.

As they talk, one demon shakes his head.

"Wait 'til you hear the craziest part, Bael! Artorias turned against Ose. It looks like the Archangel appeared again, just like six years ago!"

Bael's eyes widen in alarm. "Shit, you serious? Wow, that don't sound good at all."

"Even worse," the demon continues, "Rumor has it that Artorias willingly gave up control to the Archangel. He let her overpower him!"

The Duke scoffs. "Nuh-uh. That's bullcrap. Don't believe everything you hear. I even sat down with Arty-boy a few weeks ago and toughened up his soul. There's no way he'd do something braindead like giving his body to the Archangel."

"That's the thing," The demon argues. "He had a good reason! Just before the Archangel appeared, Ose beat the crap out of Belial. At the very end, she told Belial it was Lucifer who killed Satan!"

Bael's casual demeanor instantly hardens. A look of gravity appears in his eyes.

"What did you say? Are you lying to me, punk?"

"N-no..." The grunt says, taking two fearful steps back. "Y-you can ask anyone, Bael! It's all true! Ose said Lucifer tricked Satan into meeting the Black Witch. It was all part of some trap! I swear to Satan himself!"

Several seconds pass. The Duke of Pain practically bores holes into the grunt's head with his furious stare.

"You're lying. You have ta' be. There's... there's no way Lucy would do something like that."

The grunt starts to tremble. He ducks his head down and cowers under Bael's molten gaze.

"I swear, boss! I swear to Satan I ain't lying! Please don't kill me! Pleee-ee-eease!"

Bael inhales deeply. A hint of his smoldering rage retreats into his skull.

"Don't worry. I ain't gonna smack ya. Where is Ose now?"

"Last I heard, she went into the city," The demon answers. He cautiously raises his head, only to blink in surprise.

"Huh? Where'd B-Bael go?"

No longer does the Duke of Pain stand before him.

* * *

As he leaps into the air, the Duke of Pain sweeps his demonic presence outward to search for Ose. Despite being completely useless when it comes to his magical capabilities, Bael still possesses many of the same innate demonic traits as the rest of his kind, including the ability to project his demonic mana signature and to search for other demons of a high enough level.

Bael eventually detects Ose's presence far to the west, at the edge of humanity's borders. He chooses to circle around the Horned Forest, leaping huge distances in straight lines to reach his destination.

After the Duke travels for a mile or two, Shax speaks.

"Hey. Bro."

Bael lands feet-first on the ground, but pauses before jumping again. Sensing an odd note in Shax's voice, he glances at the Emperor of Hype.

"Yeah? What's up?"

Shax frowns. He glances at Bael for a moment, then shakes his head.

"...It might not be anything important, brah. Maybe it's only my imagination acting up."

"Whaddya mean?" Bael asks. "Something eating at you?"

"Sort of..." Shax mutters. "It's about Lucifer and Ose."

"I'm listening." Bael says, crossing his arms.

"Well, I was thinking about the circumstances behind my death..." Shax says, his tone ominous. "I always felt like certain things didn't add up."

Bael raises an eyebrow.

"I don't follow."

"It's like this," Shax explains. "I ran the Hell of Isolation like an open house. Anyone could pop in, even humans. You know I never cared who wanted to rock out, just so long as they weren't angels."

Bael nods. "Yeah. I remember. It was like one big endless party."

"Well, that's the thing. I left my Hell one day, along with Murmur. Out of nowhere, a dozen platoons of human commandos popped out of the woodwork. They captured me and little sis. After that, they put those... those robotic implants in my head. Turned me into a freak."

"Hmm..." Bael grunts, clearly displeased by the revival of those painful memories. "I never heard how the humans captured ya, Shax."

"I know," Shax replies. "But that ain't the problem, bro. Think about it. How did the humans corner me out of nowhere? Someone must've tipped them off. It was a setup."

Like a viper eying its prey, Bael's expression turns vicious. "Wait! Are you tellin' me... Lucy set you up? Just like she did Satan?"

"Nah. Doesn't have Lucifer's fingerprints," Shax replies, shaking his head. His poofy white hair bounces around with the movement. "Always wondered what bastard would stab me in the back like that. Thinking about it, that seems more like Ose's style. Especially how the humans managed to jack me up with those weird metal implants. How'd they stick 'em in so quick? Almost like they had a helping hand from a certain demoness who knew her stuff."

Bael's jaw drops. "...No way. Are you telling me Ose fucked you over, while Lucy fucked Satan over?!"

"I can't say for sure," Shax admits. "But the evidence adds up, bro. Like mother, like daughter. You know those two were always twisted sisters."

"Shit. SHIT! You're right!" Bael exclaims. "How could you be wrong? That smug white-haired bitch, and her shitty four-tittied mom, too! All this time, Ose smiled at me and played cute, but she was the one who..."

Bael pauses mid-speech. A strange flicker appears in his eyes, a spark resembling pure rage unlike anything he's experienced in all his life.

Many times in the past, his rage has come as a result of humiliation or some odd lust for battle. This time, though, it derives from an acute sense of betrayal stemming deep within his heart.

"...She killed my... my best friend! She killed you, Shax!"

Shax's gaze turns hollow. "It does seem that way, Bael."

The Duke of Pain gnashes his teeth. Hot tears boil in his eyes as he empathetically recalls the suffering his best friend must have suffered at the hands of the humans.

"I still remember everything about that day," Bael growls. "You showed up. A bunch of humans, too. They made me fight you to the death. I tried to catch you alive but... but I was too strong! I crushed your skull by accident. By accident! I didn't mean to! But I was just so devil-damned clumsy!"

"It wasn't your fault..." Shax mutters. "You can't keep blaming yourself, bro."

"I KNOW!" Bael roars. "It's all Ose's fault! That whore! She tricked you, and she tricked me, too! She played stupid all this time! She batted her stupid eyes at me and acted like we were best friends... but we weren't! We'll never be!"

The angrier Bael becomes, the closer he comes to transforming into his Balrog Form! However, this time, the purity of his hatred reaches a point where it exceeds even the Balrog, preventing him from tapping into its power.

"NO! I don't NEED the Balrog!" Bael bellows. "I'll beat that bitch to death myself! I'm more than enough demon to handle the likes of her! Lemme at her! I'll tear her fucking arms off and shove 'em up her ass!"

Bael coils strength in his legs. He pounces skyward, then falls toward the approximate position of Ose's demonic mana signature.

"OSEEEE!"

The Duke crashes into the dirt a half-mile from Ose's position. When he raises his eyes, his gaze falls upon an unbelievable sight! Five huge Titans surround Ose, along with Belial, Blinker, and Artorias! Their bloodthirsty expressions nearly cause Bael to panic.

"They're gonna kill Ose!" Bael cries. "I can't let 'em! That bitch is MINE!"

Bael jumps again, then crashes into the dirt a short distance behind one of the Titans.

As the Duke of Pain starts power-walking toward the assembled heroes, all of them swivel their heads to face him.

Ose, barely crackling with a few trickles of leftover electricity, turns to look at her 'savior' with hope-filled eyes.

"Bael?"

Ose's assailants go on the alert, seeing the full-strength Duke menacingly stomping toward them.

"It's Bael!" Blinker says, as she raises her fists.

Zeus darts towards Bael and tries to stomp Bael into the dirt, but Bael catches the Titan's foot and tosses him aside.

"Outta my way, punk."

A moment later, Bael leaps skyward and crashes into the dirt next to Ose, then lunges his hand out to grab her throat.

"Ose. You bitch. All this time, I wondered who did it. I wondered who killed him. It was you. It was YOU!"

Ose weakly tries to fight off her assailant, but Bael's grip proves unbreakable!

"Kuh! Killed? Killed who?! Mis-misunderstanding! This is a misunderstanding, Bael!"

"Stupid Ose..." Bael mutters. "I might be dumb, but I ain't no idiot. Now, it's time for you to SUFFER!"

Bael lifts Ose over his head. He holds her in the air for a split-second, then slams her downward, violently thrashing her weakened body against Tarus II's surface.

BOOOOM!

An explosion of dirt rockets out in all directions, making the Non-Titan combatants take a few steps back as they shield their eyes.

Shax watches from the side. "Teach that backstabber a lesson, Bael."

"I will!" Bael yells.

The Duke raises Ose in the air once again.

BOOM!

He smashes Ose against the dirt a second time, with twice the strength he used before!

"Aargh!" Ose cries, her voice cracking as she fails to catch a breath.

The Emperor's so-called Ultraform finally shatters, reverting Ose to her normal self. When Bael lifts her overhead once again, he pauses, noting her painfully broken arms and legs. No longer can Ose protect herself in even the most limited of ways. She hangs helplessly in Bael's grasp, unable to fight back.

"Kuh... can... explain..." Ose whispers, barely wheezing out the words. Blood roils from her mouth, likely due to countless internal injuries.

"I don't want your words!" Bael roars. "I want SHAX BACK!"

BOOM!

Bael smashes Ose against the ground yet again, this time knocking Blinker off her feet due to the impact wave! The seven-foot-tall fairy quickly regains her footing, but even so, she stares at Bael fearfully.

The Duke of Pain continues to hold Ose by her throat. Despite the powerful physique of her Emperor body, she no longer possesses a drop of mana to protect herself. Her eyes flutter wildly as multiple traumatic injuries wrack her brain.

Having not yet released all his anger, Bael balls his free hand into a fist.

BOOM BOOM BOOM BOOM!

He violently punches Ose's face, chest, stomach, and arms, pulling his punches just enough to inflict the most agonizing injuries possible without fully killing her.

Ose doesn't scream or cry. She simply falls comatose, unable to even react to Bael's furious onslaught. The sheer rage behind Bael's pummeling makes even Ose's most ardent enemies wince in sympathy.

Suddenly, Bael raises his eyes to look at one of the spectators.

"Hey! Belial! Get over here and heal Ose for me! I need this cunt to live a little longer! I ain't done makin' her SUFFER!"

Belial shakes her head. "I can't do that, Bael. I hate Ose plenty, but I'd rather you just kill her now."

"Screw that!" Bael yells. "Just heal her! Then we can all take turns beating her face to a pulp!"

Uriel's eyes flicker with light. "I do not oppose such an arrangement. Emperor of Passion, if thou intendeth not to make a move, then I shall."

To the west, behind Bael and the row of illusory Titans, countless demons eye Bael's bloodthirsty beatings with horror-filled eyes.

"What the hell is Bael doing? Why's he beating up Ose? Ain't he on our side?"

"Duh. He must have a good reason! There's no way Bael would join the humans. I bet this is because Ose had something to do with Satan's death."

"Ohh, yeah! That makes sense. Satan and Bael were super good buddies, from what I've heard. I'd smack Ose around, too, if I were in his place."

As the demons deliberate on the meaning behind Bael's actions, Uriel takes a step forward. The Archangel of Vengeance summons a ball of water magic into her hand to heal Ose, even as Belial starts to protest.

"No, Uriel! Don't heal Ose! Just kill her off and finish this war! Every second that we delay, more innocents will die!"

"I care not how thy war ends," Uriel replies, her tone leaving no room for negotiation. "I care only that I might cause the Lightning Harlot to suffer a little longer. Bael's offer appeals to my sensibilities."

Right as Uriel reaches Bael and Ose, she pauses mid-stride.

"...Ah. Tsk. How unfortunate."

Bael glances at the demoness slumped in his grip. No longer does Ose's skin appear as ruby-red as it did before.

Several seconds follow as Bael, Uriel, Blinker, Artorias, the five Titans, and the distant demons gaze at Ose's stone-cold body in silence.

The Duke of Pain awkwardly coughs into his fist.

"Err, I used a bit too much strength and... killed her! Whoopsie! My bad!"

Belial stares at Bael in disbelief. She shakes her head and facepalms.

"...Goddammit, Bael. Why are you always like this?"

>!This is what a spoiler looks like! Click it to reveal the text!!

Part 286: Bael's Decision

Bael falls silent. So do the others surrounding him. The Duke of Pain releases his grip on Ose's throat, causing her corpse to flop to the ground. Her face appears partially sunken in, though not totally destroyed beyond recognition, while her shattered ribs and broken limbs paint a gruesome picture of a terrifyingly violent end.

After Bael drops Ose, he glances at Belial, Blinker, and Uriel.

"Err. Sorry, ladies. I didn't mean ta' jump in and... steal your kill. I got a little angry and uh... lost control."

"At least you didn't become the Balrog..." Belial mutters. "What are you even doing, Bael? Why would you jump in and kill Ose? Wasn't she your boss?"

The Duke of Pain snorts. "Nah. Forget that. I heard she had a hand in killing Satan. That ain't all, though. Remember Shax?"

At the mention of his name, Bael's illusory best friend perks his ears up, but says nothing.

Belial frowns. "Shax. Uhm... don't you mean the guy with the... big hair? The Hell of Isolation's founder?"

"Yeah, him," Bael replies. "I think Ose had something to do with his death. What a cunt. She got what she had coming."

Blinker balls her hands into fists. "Well, that's great and all, but what happens now, huh? My husband is dead! Kar is gone, and it's all because of you demons! You attacked humanity, unprovoked! Do we have to kill every last one of you to end this war?!"

Blinker's rage, far different from the last time she interacted with Bael when he fought the Sphinx, leaves a deep impression on the Duke.

"I can't beat two Emperors, an Archangel, and a bunch of bloody Titans. Where'd you dig these guys up from, anyway?"

Bael turns around to look at the ancient enemies of demonkind towering over him. They remain silent, not saying a word, while their dead, blackened eyes gaze upon him without a trace of emotion.

Behind the Titans, all of the demons massing at the Western Front remain in place, uncertain of what they should do. Having seen Bael himself land the killing blow on Ose, not to mention the rumors swirling about Ose's illicit history, few demons regard her passing with any sense of remorse. Instead, they begin to wonder if they should try and escape the battlefield with their lives intact.

"We're done fighting," Bael says. "I know an apology ain't gonna do any good, but there's no point fighting anymore. Even a dozen Dukes can't beat one Emperor, let alone a bunch of 'em. I'll call off my forces-"

"Dost thou thinketh this battle has ended?" Uriel asks, her tone icy. "Satan's Whore and the fairy might allow bygones to become bygones... but not I! I have only just awoken, Duke of Pain. My soul thirsts for demon blood. The few I've slain today have barely wet my appetite!"

Bael spins to face the Archangel.

"Oh? You wanna go, flappy bird?"

"Bael. Uriel. Now is not the time..." Blinker says, though her voice wavers noticeably. "Too many have died! Let's end this here. Bael, call back all of the demons and order a retreat."

"Thou speaketh not for me!" Uriel roars. "Monster Queen, I shall slay every demon who has come here today, as well as all the rest of their kind. That is my singular purpose. None can stop me!"

"Uriel, can't you pause your plans for just a moment?" Belial asks, exasperated. "You can pursue your revenge later!"

"Dost I requireth thy permission to breathe?" Uriel replies, her eyes narrowing menacingly. With a flick of her fingers, she summons all four of her holy constructs. "'Twas thou who fell when fighting the Thunder Emperor. 'Tis I who defeated her. Shall the two of us repeat what happened the last time we fought?"

A shudder goes down Belial's back. She recalls her battle against Uriel six years ago, when she joined hands with Hope to try and defeat the Archangel. Belial fled after losing, leaving Hope to fight Uriel alone.

"Hahaha! I see the fear in thy eyes!" Uriel taunts. "How much time has passed since thou last won a round of mortal combat? Following Satan's demise, thy battle prowess has plunged from its apex! Once, thou were a terror among demonkind, but today, thou cannot defeateth a mere babe recently ascended to Emperor! Pathetic!"

Uriel prods Belial's weakness, making the so-called Second Emperor wince. With the number of battles she's lost up to now, can she truly continue to rank herself among demonkind's strongest warriors?

While the three women verbally spar, Bael pipes up.

"Hey. Hey! Ladies! Listen for a sec!"

Uriel snaps her head in Bael's direction. "What is it, nimrod?!"

The Duke of Pain gestures at his feet. "...Did one of you broads grab Ose when I wasn't looking?"

A full second of silence follows as Belial, Blinker, and Uriel all lower their eyes to Bael's feet.

No longer does Ose's corpse rest there.

"Ahh!!" Blinker shrieks. "No! Not like this! It's Mephisto! He took-"

The fairy doesn't get to finish her sentence. Instead, as if uttered by the winds themselves, a voice floats throughout their midst.

"Kekekeke! Yesss, it wasss I! I have taken Ossse'sss body for myssself!"

Mephisto speaks, his voice projecting into the air through a magical method unknown to those present.

"You bastard!" Belial bellows. "Graverobbing piece of- give Ose back! She's not yours to puppeteer, Mephisto!"

"Ah, but that isss where you are wrong, Emperor Belial," Mephisto replies, not daring to show his body. With Blinker around, he knows damn well she might just grab his figure and shatter his bones to powder the instant she spots him. "I am the ruler of the dead, like Valac before me. My might reignsss sssupreme. Ssso long asss mortalsss perisssh, my powersss ssshall expand infinitely, until I become unssstoppable! Kekekeke!"

A look of alarm appears on Uriel's face. "I sense a buildup of demonic energy! There, to the west!"

She points in the general direction of the hesitating demon armies. To everyone's alarm, a black mist suddenly erupts, similar to the one Mephisto conjured a few days earlier. This time, however, it appears far less impermeable than before, allowing observers to easily peer inside its depths.

"Oh, what joy! What pleasssure I take in causssing death and dessstruction!" Mephisto shrieks, his voice grating on the ears of all present.

"Yo, Mephisto, knock it off," Bael says. "We can't win this war anymore. Just stop with the fighting, bub."

"Win? Who sssaid I intended to 'win'?" Mephisto asks. "Bael, we might be good friendsss, but your ssshort-sssightednesss hampersss your planning ssskillsss. Ssstand back, and leave thisss next part to ME! Kekekeke!"

As Mephisto's oddly thin black mist swirls among the assembled demons, their eyes begin to glow with a blood-red light.

"Nnn... hungry... so hungry!" One demon yells. "Ahh! Food! Want food! Tasty fleshbags! I need them!"

Several demons fall to their knees. They clutch their heads and shriek painfully, while others howl like wild wolves.

"I WANNA EAT SKIN!" A goblin shrieks. "SKIN! BONES! TASTY MEAT!"

Belial's heart trembles in alarm. "Oh, devils! I've seen this before! What the hell?! This is... this is a vampiric technique! It's the Mist of Blood Hunger!"

Uriel glances at Belial. "Mmm? The Mist of Blood Hunger? I've not heard that name since the Energy Wars!"

In unison, every member of the entire demon army turns their heads toward the Titans, Emperors, and lone Archangel blocking their way. Despite the clearly suicidal concept of rushing down such insane powerhouses with their feeble power, the demons lose their sense of rationality as horrifying hunger wracks their bodies.

"Kill 'em all! Rip the Archangel to pieces!" A huge Demon Brute bellows.

A storm of footsteps strikes the land. Every demon in range bolts toward the powerhouses guarding the Western Front.

"Mephisto! Stop this!" Bael yells. "You dumbass! These little guys can't win! Just Belial alone would be enough to kill 'em all, not to mention the rest of us! This is suicide!"

"How unfortunate," Mephisto replies, his voice little more than a whisper in the air. "Dead demonsss to pad my ranksss. Ah, what a losss I ssshall sssurely sssuffer! Kekeke! Have fun killing thessse worthlesss maggotsss!"

Mephisto falls silent, leaving the other powerhouses to grimace in disgust.

"That filthy bloodskin..." Uriel mutters. "Mephisto intends to suicide the remaining demons upon us. Once they die, their souls will become his to wield as he wishes. As expected from the likes of a wretched soul manipulator!"

"Fuck!" Belial curses. "Mephisto, you're a wretched bastard! Everyone, fall in!"

The five Titans turn to face the incoming demon army. While the sheer mass of blood-red flesh falling upon the defenders seems formidable, the mindless demons pose no threat to Uriel, Belial, Blinker, or Bael alone, let alone all of them at once.

Bael steps toward the approaching army. "Guys, stop! Stop! Don't listen to Mephisto! Fight back, dammit!"

As the mass of demonkind rushes toward Bael, none of them slow their furious approach in the slightest. If anything, the sight of Bael's thick, juicy flesh causes them to hunger even more deeply.

In unison, the five Titans jump forward.

BOOOOM!

Their arrival amongst the densely-packed demons comes like a series of tactical nukes. Zeus thunders through their ranks, stomping ten demons into blood-paste with each step, while Ivaldi fires off multiple lancing beams of holy energy to shred countless demons at the atomic level. Cronus, despite lacking any area-of-effect powers, still manages to crush and splatter hundreds more, while Poseidon and Neptune swallow countless others with crushing walls of water.

The demon army doesn't even manage to reach Belial and the others. They simply stand idly and watch as the five Titans tear across the hordes wreaking death and havoc in their wake.

"What a miserable bloodbath..." Belial mutters. "It's a complete slaughter."

"Kekeke!" Mephisto cackles, his voice lingering like a fart. "Are you all enjoying the ssshow? I mussst have forgotten to mention! I pulled the sssame trick at all the other battlefrontsss! Oh, dear, I hope the humansss aren't having too hard a time fending off the bloodthirsssty demonsss attacking their flanksss! Kekeke!"

Belial and Blinker's casual expressions of disdain instantly transform into looks of horror.

"What! I forgot about the north, east, and southern fronts!" Belial cries. "Blinker, you go to the north! Uriel, you head to the south! I'll go to the east!"

Uriel glares at Belial. "Speak not of what I must do, demoness! Thou commandeth me not!"

"Now isn't the time for bickering!" Belial yells. "Mephisto is going to tear through humanity's battlefronts with demons unafraid of death! There's nothing more terrifying than an equally matched foe who has lost his sanity!"

Uriel waves her hand. "I care not. Save the humans if thou desireth, but I shall stay here to enjoy the sight of dead bloodskins."

"Uriel!" Belial cries. She starts to open her mouth again, but gives up midway. "Fine! Worthless Archangel! You couldn't protect the angels, and you can't protect the humans, either! Looks like you never deserved to be called the Archangel of Protection in the first place!"

"WHAT? Say that again!" Uriel bellows.

Before Uriel can speak another word, Belial darts away.

"You'd better prove me wrong, Uriel!"

As Belial rushes straight back to Hero City, aiming to help with the Eastern Front, Blinker teleports to the North, leaving Uriel alone.

The Archangel glares daggers at Bael's back.

"Tch. Satan's Whore manipulates me with her words, but verily, I cannot simply shake off her hateful claims."

Belial's words touch on Uriel's sore spot; her ancient inability to protect her people. With such a thought in mind, Uriel can only curse under her breath before motioning with her hands. She taps into Barbatos's power of portal creation to open a path to the Southern Front.

"Someday soon, I shall stomp Belial's corpse into the mud."

With that last declaration, Uriel disappears, leaving Bael behind.

The Duke of Pain watches helplessly as Daisy's Titans slaughter his fellow demons far faster than they can run. Zeus alone kills twice the number of any other Titan besides Ivaldi.

"Uuu... it's not fair... they can't help themselves..." Bael mumbles, as he chokes back tears. "Can't you spare the poor fellas?! Mephisto, how could you do this to our friends?!"

With Blinker and Uriel gone, Mephisto slowly levitates upward, chuckling to himself like a creep.

"Bael! Ksss, who caresss about a few million demonsss? There are billionsss more waiting in the wingsss. You ssshould be thanking me for culling the weak!"

Bael turns to look at his 'friend.' "Bub! You're crossing the line! There's a difference between attackin' humans and sendin' our boys to die dog deaths! Pull 'em back, Mephisto! I'm head Duke here! You listen to MY orders, bub!"

Mephisto's confident smile falters. He hovers backward, putting distance between himself and Bael.

"Ksss. Ignorant Bael! Open your eyesss! It doesssn't matter if thessse worthlesss peonsss perisssh! Barely any of them are Lordsss. I have already pulled back all of the Baronsss, including Mara, Vepar, and Laharl! Now, I ssseek only to cull the weak and ussselesss! Once I collect their sssoulsss, I will posssesss enough to empower myssself to the rank of Emperor! Then, the Hell of Damnation will rissse again!"

Bael's expression wavers.

"Huh? Wait... are you tellin' me... you planned all this? Is that why you didn't help Ose escape? You wanted her to die?"

Mephisto snorts. "Keh. Of courssse! I would never allow that worthlesss woman to rule over me for long! I have plotted for eonsss to ssseize control of the First Hell! Now, itsss power liesss within my grasssp! Perhapsss you have no faith in me, but I hardly need your permisssion now! My ssstrength has reached a level which not even Valac could attain! Kekeke!"

"You devil-damned monster..." Bael growls. "Is this all some fuckin' game to you? Some jokey-joke prank?! You think it's funny, throwing away demon lives for no good reason? Those are my friends! They're dying because of you!"

"They are adding to my esssence..." Mephisto replies, his smile fading. "I care not whether you approve of my actionsss. You may be an unssstoppable killing machine, but I have my own meansss. I mussst rule over the Firssst Hell. I mussst take my place atop the demon hierarchy. I dessserve that power! I am Sssatan'sss protégé! I've earned the right to rule from on high!"

Bael's lips curl into an expression of disgust. "Ptuh. You're a worthless shitbag. I can't believe I ever respected you. I shoulda known you were a worm all along. Too bad for you, the demons look up to me. Everyone knows I'm the one who picks the next Emperor, and I sure as shit won't choose a rat like you."

"Heh heh heh..." Mephisto chuckles. "Asss if I need your permisssion. Have you forgotten, Bael? I run the River Ssstyx. I control the flow of sssoulsss. My rissse to Emperor isss certain. If you won't ssstand with me... then you will become my enemy."

"You wanna run the First Hell, huh?" Bael asks. "Alright. We'll see how many demons follow your orders when I tell 'em all the fucked-up shit you've done."

Mephisto slowly floats backwards, then drops into the ground.

"Wordsss mean little in the face of sssoulsss and assscensssion. Ssspeak all you want, Bael. In the end, they will not lisssten to you ssso long asss I control the River."

The Duke of Mist disappears, leaving Bael all alone, once again.

Bael stares at the spot where Mephisto disappeared. He lifts his eyes to gaze at the setting sun, while a sigh of lamentation escapes his chest.

"Tch. Dammit. I ain't never felt more useless in all my life than I do right now."

Shax, still hovering beside Bael, merely shakes his head.

"Sometimes, you can't stop the winds of change, broski."

* * *

At the Northern, Eastern, and Southern Fronts, huge waves of bloodthirsty demons storm into the humans' ranks, tearing their adversaries limb from limb! Without the fear of death subtly slowing them down, the demons turn into horrifying menaces capable of terrorizing their exhausted human and monster enemies half to death.

To the north, Blinker joins with the Felorians, using her illusory powers to summon phantasmal walls, forcing the demons into a narrow chokepoint. When they try to push through the thirty-foot gap, the Felorians jump forward and cut down all who dare to pass! Brunhilda, though exhausted, continues fighting with her life on the line, empowered by the news that all of demonkind's mightiest warriors have fallen. Only Mephisto stands against them now.

To the east, Belial joins up with the defenders to repel her fellow demons. She puts her physical strength to good use by stretching out one of her arms twenty feet long and sweeping it from side to side, killing countless grunts as they enter her range. When combined with humanity's accurate gunfire, they manage to repel the northern invaders, at least for a little while.

And finally, at the south, Uriel joins up with Yamir and Lieutenant Samuel. She pays the pathetic humans and monsters no mind, opting instead to summon her four constructs at the frontlines. Uriel initially frightens the humans when they mistake her for Artorias, but they quickly realize the Archangel has taken over, and many rumors swirl regarding her battle alongside Hope some six years earlier.

Despite the demons' inability to push past these four defensive lines, their sheer numbers and the continuing accumulation of Warper portals around Hero City cause more and more demons to flow through. Once they step foot on Tarus II, Mephisto's Mist of Blood Hunger drives them insane, causing them to fight recklessly and without thought.

Many demons begin slipping around, under, and over the established battle lines. Burrowers carve out dozens of underground tunnels as they head toward Hero City, while Harpies clamp onto the shoulders of Goblins and smaller demons, flying them overhead to deposit them within the city's limits.

Thousands of human soldiers panic. "Our families are in the city, still! They're hiding in the shelters! If those stragglers show up, we won't have enough troops left to protect them!"

Fear spreads among the army's ranks. With humanity's communication infrastructure having been sabotaged by Ose, nobody can communicate at long range with the other battlefronts. Nobody knows the situation in the city, either.

However, as Uriel continues to battle, fighting purely on instinct as she reaps demon lives one after the other, a distant pressure begins to press against her soul.

"Hm?"

The Archangel impales a pair of demons with her spears of light, then whips her head from side to side.

"What is this? I sense a familiar presence... one which reminds me of..."

The Archangel raises her eyes to the sky.

"...Camael! How can this be? Why dost I sense my sister's presence among the stars?"

Uriel's excitement turns to alarm, then confusion.

"My sister fell during the Energy Wars. How can she appear here, now? This must be a demonic trick!"

Within seconds, the invisible pressure pushing upon Uriel's soul doubles, then triples. Even the demons and humans begin to falter, feeling as if the planet's gravity has increased. Many of the bloodthirsting attackers falter and flop to their knees, unable to take a step forward.

At that moment, a bright beam of light ignites in the center of Hero City! This beam fires into the sky to illuminate the slowly darkening atmosphere, while emanating a distinct aura of holy energy!

A voice travels outward from the beam of light, its tone soft, yet audible to all who turn their gaze in its direction.

"Barrier."

The beam of light erupts at its apex, spreading a divine forcefield in all directions. The barrier travels past Hero City's boundaries to engulf the Western, Northern, Eastern, and Southern fronts, somehow arriving just at the edge of where any humans are. It locks out all of the attacking demons while shielding those allied to the humans.

Then, the voice speaks again.

"Expel."

Immediately, all of the flying and burrowing demons, as well as those currently engaged with humanity's forces inside the barrier, disappear! They teleport outside the divine forcefield, landing flat on their asses while looking confused as hell.

"Clarity."

The voice speaks again, this time wiping away Mephisto's Blood Mist from every corner of Tarus II's battlefields. The blood-crazed demons revert to normal, their eyes unfogging as they try to understand what came over them for the past half hour.

Finally, the voice speaks one last time.

"Return."

All of humanity's forces teleport away from the four battlefronts. They arrive smack in the middle of Hero City, where they find a single figure levitating amidst the beam of light.

Jason Hiro, the Wordsmith.

As humanity's survivors gaze into the sky, their Hero waves his hand awkwardly.

"...Uhh, hey, guys. Sorry I'm late. I had one hell of a headache."

>!This is what a spoiler looks like! Click it to reveal the text!!

Part 287: Powderkeg

My soul aches. It burns.

After suffering from Ose's unexpected sneak attack, it took me the better part of a day to recover. Had my mind-wife not succeeded in treating my condition with medical drones, I'd have probably ended up incapacitated for weeks, perhaps even a full month. Luckily, that eventuality didn't come to pass. While I haven't yet made a full recovery, my Wordsmithing has returned and the scorching of my soul only hurts when I move, think, or breathe. So, basically, all the time.

After creating a massive barrier of energy around Hero City and transferring all of humanity's forces to the center, I quickly glance around to survey the damage.

Fucking hell.

I was able to keep an eye on what happened through Phoebe's virtual holograms, but they only gave me the barest level of information. Seeing the total devastation of my home fills me with a rage unlike any in all my life before today.

"Samantha, I'll need your help. Empower."

I send a burst of magic into the Second Emperor's body, making her take a step back. "Huh? Jason? What's going on?"

"I formulated a plan on the way here. Don't worry, just use your healing magic. Tend to all the wounded. I've temporarily turned your magic into an area-of-effect ability, allowing you to heal many people at once, albeit more slowly."

Despite the confusion on Samantha's face, she merely nods. "Oh. Alright."

To assist her, I speak two more words of power. "Aura. Healing!"

Camael's Cube, a wellspring of seemingly infinite angelic power, pours its might into my body through the beam of light inside Hero City. I instantly cast a powerful aura of healing to seal off any bleeding injuries, patch up any holes or gashes in my fellow humans and monsters, and otherwise stave off the advent of mass-death.

"Enumeration."

In my mind's eye, a series of numbers and statistics appears, revealing the number of dead, wounded, and living allies.

My mind-wife scowls. "God damn it, Jason! We've... we've lost... so many people! Over a million have died!"

I nod slowly. Only one and a half million remain. Another five hundred thousand have fled the planet through the Covenant ships.

After quickly bringing myself up to speed, I take a good long look around the gathered humans, monsters, and even a few scattered demons.

One of them instantly catches my attention.

"Artorias?"

The metal-clad demon shakes his head. "Hmph. Nay, tis I, Uriel."

"Oh! Uriel. That must be why you didn't get ejected," I say. "I aimed my spells to cast out all of my enemies while teleporting my allies here. If you're here, then that must mean..."

I trail off, but Uriel catches my drift. "Aye. I have chosen to fight on the side of humanity. For now."

I nod, then continue to look around.

"Where's Phoebe? Where's Daisy? Are they okay?!"

"Daddy!"

My daughter's voice instantly warms my heart. All this time, my intel regarding planetary operations has been spotty at best. I've only known the broad strokes of battle, not the micro-level of individual combatants.

I turn to look for Daisy in surprise, only to practically jump out of my skin! A gigantic Hydra stands behind me, silently, its twelve heads gazing off into the distance, their eyes glazed over and emotionless. In addition to the Hydra, five familiar Titan Kings also stand at attention, their figures unmoving like statues.

Perched atop the Hydra's back, my daughter waves at me cheerfully. "I'm up here, daddy!"

"Get down from there!" I bark, frightened out of my fucking wits. "Teleport!"

Daisy instantly disappears from the Hydra's back and reappears next to me, paying little attention to the abrupt change of scenery.

"Daddy, you silly! Are you scared of the Big Men? The Big Kitty won't hurt you, not unless I say so!"

"Big men? Big kitty?" I ask, momentarily disoriented. I turn to the nearest senior officer, who happens to be Lieutenant Samuel. "What's going on with the Hydra? The Titans? How did they get here?"

Samuel, clad in his full-body exosuit, reveals no surprise in his body language. However, his voice comes out a bit stilted. "...Forgive me, Commander Hiro. I have no bloody idea! I've been fighting on the Southern Front for the past half-day."

Before I can ask someone else, Daisy laughs. "Daddy! I called the Big Men over! They're my friends!"

"You did?" I ask. "Zeus? Ivaldi? Cronus, Poseidon, and even Neptune? You called these Titans here? But... but how???"

Daisy shrugs. "Dunno! The Mean Lady was trying to hurt mommy, so I asked an adult for help. I did just like you said!"

At this point, the more Daisy talks, the more confused I become. "Oh. Alright. Yeah. Called an adult. Summoned some Titans. Sure, that makes sense, I guess..."

Belial, still busy healing dozens of humans at a time, turns to look at me while she works. "Jason! I haven't gotten to tell you this yet, but uh... I guess now's as good a time as any. Daisy's a Hero! Just like you. She summoned those Titans and the Hydra too."

"WHAT?!" I shriek. "A Hero?! That's not possible! There can only be one Hero at a time, and that's me!"

Not only me, but Uriel, Belial, and Blinker all glance at Daisy with mixtures of admiration and confusion. Evidently, none of them knows why Daisy has awoken as a Hero, either.

Daisy points at the Hydra's back. "Daddy. You forgot mommy."

"I did? Oh, shit! Phoebe!"

A bit late, I turn to spot my wife's body laying silently on the Hydra's back. To my alarm, she appears comatose, much like Belial was a month ago, after Solomon took over my body and turned me rogue.

"What's wrong with Phoebe?" I ask, after teleporting my wife into my arms. "Heal!"

My healing magic does nothing. Phoebe remains prone in my arms, unable to react to any part of the world around her.

Daisy shakes her head. "Mommy's tired. She's sleepy. Not hurt."

Belial nods. "She'll be fine, Jason. Phoebe overdrew her stamina and wiped herself out. After a few days of bedrest, she'll wake up."

Seeing that my wife and daughter are perfectly fine, I breathe a long sigh of relief. "Thank god. I feared the worst had happened."

After a few seconds, I turn my attention to the massive wall of allies surrounding me.

Countless faces, some hidden behind exosuits, others not, all blend together into a distinct menagerie of human and monster forms.

However, no matter where I look, one figure doesn't appear, someone who usually stands out in a crowd.

"Guys. Where's Kar? Is he here?"

Silence.

Several people lower their heads.

Others sigh deeply.

I turn to the side, where I spot Blinker, no longer in her tiny fairy form, but instead, a giant human-sized body, just over seven feet tall.

"Bli... Blinker? Where is he? Is Kar hurt?"

The fairy's lower lip trembles.

"He... fell. In combat."

A pit forms in my stomach. Like a black hole, it sucks away all the feelings of joy I experienced over the past few minutes.

"Kar died? He's... he's dead?"

Kar.

The Sphinx.

The last crocodile.

After Amelia, Hoarhiim, and Blaarjiim, Kar was the final remaining friend I made upon arriving in the Labyrinth.

Already, Amelia died, along with both of her orb-companions.

Kar remained at my side.

He was always there for me, and I for him.

We attended each others' weddings.

He held my daughter when she was born.

He saved my ass several times, and Hope's too. Countless people survived harrowing experiences thanks to him.

And now?

He's gone.

"Blinker... I'm sorry..." I say, as my voice chokes up. "I... I should have been there for him."

"It's not your fault," Blinker whispers. "It's Mephisto's."

"Mephisto? The Duke of Mist?"

She nods. "He orchestrated the whole thing. All of this. The Battle Brothers worked for him, and he ordered them to attack the crocodiles, all those years ago. Kar killed Duriel, but Zamiel returned the favor. I killed Zamiel... and now there's only Mephisto left."

In all the years I've known Blinker, she's always been a cheerful and perky fairy; the life of the party. Now, though... her sullen expression and clouded-over eyes betray the complex emotions boiling within her heart.

"Mephisto..." I hiss, as rage burns in my eyes. "You... you killed my best friend. Where are you?! Loc-"

Before I can finish speaking a Word of Power, my mind-wife interrupts me. "Jason, wait! Don't! 'Locate' separates your soul from your body. Mephisto control's Valac's lantern, remember? You must not face him in your soul form!"

Her advice probably saved my life. I pause for a moment to reflect. You're right. Sorry. I got ahead of myself.

As I speak to the Phoebe within my mind, Daisy suddenly darts in front of me and narrows her eyes. "Daddy! Who's that? I heard mommy, but mommy's sleepy!"

"Huh? You can hear my mind-wife?" I ask, confused. "I, uh... I cloned mommy in my head. Now there are... two mommies, I guess?"

"Ohh! Three mommies, then!" Daisy exclaims, nodding vigorously as if she's figured out something beyond my understanding.

Three mommies? But there are only two Phoebes. Who else is she talking about?

I decide not to question the weird and imaginative mind of a child. Instead, I focus my thoughts on all the nearby humans.

"Alright. The demons can't threaten us anymore, not with my recent gains. Where is Ose? Is she somewhere nearby? I need to teach her a lesson."

"Get in line..." Blinker growls. "You and me both, buster."

"Ose has perished," Uriel says, her deep, masculine voice like the rumbling of thunder. "And 'twas Bael who slew her."

"Bael? He killed Ose?"

"Aye..."

Right after speaking the Duke's name, a figure at the very back of the crowd, far to the west, slowly raises his hand. I glance in that direction, where I spot a sheepish-looking Duke of Pain smiling goofily.

"Uh. Yo, Hero-guy! Sup?"

The soldiers in front of Bael turn around and nearly piss their pants. Apparently, nobody noticed the mountain of demonic flesh standing behind them.

"Oh, shit!"

"It's Bael!"

The troopers dive to the sides and pull out their guns, taking aim at the Duke as if that will do a lick of good.

"How are you inside my barrier?" I ask. "I teleported all the enemies of humanity out. Does that mean you're not an enemy?"

The Duke of Pain scratches his head. "...Dunno! I was just standin' there, mindin' my own business, when everyone went 'poof'! I couldn't get through the shiny light bubble, so I wandered this way. Just got here, actually."

I frown. If my magic didn't teleport Bael away, it should have at least teleported him here.

My mind-wife offers an explanation. "Perhaps Bael is so neutral in his affiliations that your magic couldn't determine if he was friend or foe."

Yeah. Or maybe he was immune to that spell. Bael is known for his physical and magical resistances, after all.

I find myself unsure what to think about Bael. Despite the fear many nearby spectators feel toward him, the Duke of Pain doesn't make any aggressive moves toward anyone. Even Uriel, long known for her utter hatred of all demons, doesn't look like she's in a hurry to rip his head off.

Perhaps seeing the uncertainty on my face, Lieutenant Samuel wades through the crowd to my side.

"Commander."

"Yes?" I ask.

"Regarding the Duke of Pain. You weren't here earlier, but he showed up and fought King Kar at the start of the Stormbringer invasion, along with Artorias and several other demons. All of them lost. Kar crushed the invaders completely. Eventually, Ose struck Kar with a sneak attack, nearly killing him."

For the first time since Stormbringer began, Lieutenant Samuel explains to me in rapid detail the goings-on of what happened up to now. He tells me about the demons' initial invasion, their assault on us from the west, what happened after I got knocked out, and plenty of other important tidbits. At some point when humanity's communications went offline, Samuel's details become unreliable and spotty.

I tap into Centurion's networks, only to find a dead signal. "What happened? Why is the network down?"

Samuel barks a few orders to his subordinates. Two minutes later, a report comes in.

"We've found Elder Skarde's body inside the protected underground bunker! He was assassinated, along with all the other personnel!"

The person delivering the message grimaces, having evidently seen a gruesome sight when he stumbled upon the murder scene.

Brunhilda, leader of the Felorians, gasps in shock. "No! Not the Elder!"

Despite the two of them coming from different planets, she and him shared a bond due to their similar tribalistic upbringings.

"I'm sorry," I mutter. "We've all lost precious friends today. Their deaths rest on my shoulders. You all did the best you could. If I had been able to return sooner, we'd have lost far fewer people."

A sense of bitterness clings to my heart. I couldn't accelerate the Cube's return. I also couldn't just teleport back to Tarus II ahead of the Cube, as I needed to stay onboard and guide its flight. The best I could do was cast magic remotely, or send my soul here, and Ose beat me handily both times.

In the end, Ose died, and I didn't even get to be the one who did her in.

I glance at Bael. "You're the leader of the First Hell now, right? You're the head ranking Duke."

Bael shuffles on his feet. "Mhm. Sorta."

"What do you mean, 'sorta'? You are, or you aren't."

"Hey! Don't gimme lip, punk!" Bael snaps. The Duke slowly shambles over to me and sticks his finger in my face. "You think I like all this shit? All this death and sadness? Get real. I like fightin' as much as the next guy, but only if there's a point to it. Ose was one mean cunt. I thought she'd put her big brain to use patching stuff up between humans and demons, but instead she came up with this crazy war!"

"You went along for the ride," I reply. "You didn't have to."

"Wrong!" Bael replies, crossing his arms. "I'm a Duke, kid. That means I don't call the shots; I follow orders. Once I picked Ose to be the next Emperor, I stepped aside and followed her lead, so long as I thought she wouldn't fuck us demons over. Too bad she sucked at planning! You won and she lost; that's just how the game is played."

"Yeah." I growl. "That's how the 'game' is played. Millions dead. Are you happy?"

"Course not," Bael answers. "But what am I supposed to do? There ain't no point in pickin' a leader if I ain't gonna do as she says."

"Yet you killed Ose," I point out. "Clearly, you don't care that much about your so-called rules."

Bael blushes in embarrassment. "Oh. Uh... 'bout that... I kinda just... well, I didn't mean ta' kill the dumb cunt. She was too weak! I just wanted to smack her around and teach the broad a lesson. She uh, killed one of my old friends, y'see... I only found out today and kinda got all caught up in the moment."

Several seconds of silence follow.

More than a few bystanders screw their faces up in disbelief, myself included.

"You... you didn't kill Ose because of Stormbringer?" I ask.

"Nuh-uh."

"You didn't even mean to kill her, then?"

"Nuh-uh."

Bael shrugs helplessly.

"Like I said, kid! Ose was just too weak! How was I 'sposed to know she'd go belly up after a little friendly thrashing?!"

I sigh. "You're really something, Bael."

"Yup," Bael replies. "Anyway, forget that crap. We demons all lost. I ain't gonna keep throwin' bodies at you. I'll call back the boys and have 'em return to Hell."

I nod. "That would be for the best."

"HOLD ON!" Uriel bellows. "Hero, act not a fool at this crucial moment! If we work together, we can slay the Duke of Pain along with the rest of his ilk! Today is the ideal moment for us to join hands in ridding the galaxy of the bloodskins!"

Upon hearing Uriel's words, several nearby humans begin to nod. "That's right! We can take them out, Commander!"

"Now that you're here, we have to show these demons who's boss!"

"Pay them back for all the death and murder they've caused!"

One woman deactivates her exosuit's helmet, revealing her face. "I lost my sister today, Commander! Mephisto took her body for his sick purposes! We can't just let the demons off! We have to kill them all!"

To my surprise, many people begin to join together, shouting their collective desire for revenge. Only now does it hit me just how much this micro-war has burned the desire for vengeance into their hearts.

Uriel crosses her arms. "Hero. Thou now possesseth some incredible artifact, an ancient weapon rivaling Excalibur. I sense Camael's aura cascading upon this planet even now. Its holy energy revitalizes my spirits and emboldens my courage. I know well the weakness in thy heart; thy lack of spine in the face of adversity. Hear me now! This is no time for complacency! The demons will leave us today, only to return tomorrow! There are dozens of other Demon Emperors awaiting the fall of the First Hell! If thy penchant for weakness reveals itself now, it will only serve to embolden them!"

Despite all of the people crying for blood, and despite their impassioned pleas for me to fire down a beam of heavenly destruction upon the demons, I shake my head.

"No. I can't do that. I know we've suffered a terrible blow today. We've all lost people we love. The demons took my best friend from me. They killed Elder Skarde, and a million others. I haven't even begun to enumerate the dead, yet still, you guys want to pile on even more bodies."

"Enough people have died," I continue. "Now that I possess a super-weapon, the demons will never again pose a threat to us. I intend to build a new home for humanity among the stars. I will take us aboard my newly-obtained 'ark' away from the battlefield. We will use its power to save other victims of demonkind, eventually creating a home that none can assail!"

"Hah!" One man laughs, his voice choked with anger. "So you'd have us tuck our tails between our legs and run away? Hope would never do that! Hope would stand up to the demons and make them rue the day they decided to attack us!"

"You're only talking about peace and all that other crap because your family is still alive and breathing!" Another man yells. "My wife died in my arms, Commander! My Lydia perished when a Scyther impaled her from behind! What if your wife had died today? What if she were laying dead in your arms right this instant?! I bet you'd change your tune real fast!"

Several people chime in with their agreements, forcing me to evaluate my position.

Indeed, I have lost my best friend, Kar. His death... burns my heart. Like a cattle brand pressed into my flesh, my failure to save him scorches me from the inside-out.

I glance at Blinker. She meets my gaze, her stony eyes telling tales about the pain she's suffered.

What if it was me in her place?

What if the demons had slain Phoebe while I was away?

* * *

I already know the answer.

I know what I would say. What I would do.

Samson nearly murdered my mind-wife. He held her in his grasp. He fully intended to crush her windpipe, and in that moment, I made my decision.

I killed him.

I burned Samson's relic to ash, and along with it, his soul.

Doesn't that make me a hypocrite? How can I stand here and tell others not to pursue vengeance for their loved ones? If I were in their shoes, I would surely demand the same thing!

Bael clears his throat.

"Ahem. Hey, punk. What are you thinkin'? You wanna take this war to the next level?"

I turn to look at him.

"I don't."

"You sure?" Bael asks. "You've got a weird look in your eye. I've seen the same one a thousand times. You're thinkin' you should keep up the fight. Keep killin' demons."

I nod. "I am considering the thought. Why? You don't want me to?"

Bael sighs.

"I don't care, kid. Everyone dies at some point. I'm just gonna tell you right now. If you wanna keep fightin', you'll have ta' go through me first. I ain't gonna sit still and let you fuckos have your way with my friends."

I start to reply, but Bael interrupts me. "I'll say it again! Ain't no problem if you guys wanna get back at us demons for what we've done. Fair is fair! We started this, and you fellas can continue. But, I'mma tell you right now... if this goes any further, it's gonna get personal."

The Duke of Pain's eyes momentarily turn savage. He sweeps his gaze across the crowd, causing many of the more outspoken people to swallow their anger and fall silent.

"I don't stand a chance against all these Emperors and a Hero," Bael says. "But even so, it's my duty to raise my fist as the champion of demons. I'm the toughest guy on my side. If you want to hurt my friends, I'll do what I gotta do to protect 'em."

"That's the difference between you and me," Bael concludes. "You might sit here wonderin' what you should or shouldn't do, but I know. I never gotta figure out my next move. If my friends are in trouble, I step up. If they ain't, then I sit down. Easy."

Bael's words serve to calm the crowd. The very real prospect of facing the Duke of Pain, a legendary battle-hardened warrior, will mean humanity must lose even more people. Killing him won't come easily, given his seemingly invulnerable body.

Unless... I step in.

I shake my head.

"No. I stand by what I said. Maybe this makes me a hypocrite, but I don't want to see anyone else die, be they human, monster or demon. I'll allow the demons to leave. Perhaps, in the future, humanity and demonkind will fight again, but I won't be the one to lead that attack."

A nearby trooper shakes his head. "Then I guess we'll have to wait for Commander Hope's return."

I nod. "Yes. Perhaps you will."

In the back of my mind, I wonder what happened to Hope. In the worst-case scenario, Ose may have already captured him. However, with so many demons in the vicinity, I don't dare to split my soul from my body to search for my clone. Only after the demons leave will I feel assured enough to do such a thing.

Bael turns on his heel and starts to walk away.

"You've made your choice, pal. I'll tell my guys to leave. Just be aware... Mephisto and me ain't seeing eye-to-eye lately. He might counter my orders with his own."

"Will Mephisto be a problem?" I ask.

Bael turns around and smirks at me. "Nah. I've got my-"

At that moment, a flash of light erupts in the skies above! A luminosity as bright as the sun ignites directly above the planet, causing countless people to cry out in alarm.

BOOOOOOOM!!!

A powerful projectile crashes against my barrier, causing it to flicker. Moments later, it pops like a bubble, while agonizing pain erupts in my soul. "Aaargh!"

My mind-wife jumps in alarm. "That light! Jason, that was the Atlas Cannon! What's going on? Why did it fire at your barrier, unprovoked?"

It takes me several seconds to regain my clarity of mind. When I do, I grit my teeth and bear through the pain. Having a railgun unexpectedly crash against the barrier may have jarred my soul, but at least with Camael's Cube supplanting my energy, the aftereffect isn't too severe.

"Ose... must have... compromised the cannon!" I gasp. "That explains what Belial saw earlier!"

When Samuel told me about the events of Stormbringer, Belial piped in at one point about the destruction of the Western Front, but I didn't put together at the time that someone may have compromised the Atlas Cannon! For Ose to have gone that far, her planning capabilities were truly frightening!

"Demons incoming from all directions!" One trooper yells, as his Hummer exosuit allows him to fly into the air, giving him a vantage point. "With the divine shield down, the demons have begun advancing on our position!"

"Stupid idiots!" Bael barks. "Bah, I'll take care of them, kid. Just gimme a minute."

"No," I say, "I'll just conjure a barrier and send them out again. I've plenty of energy to spare. That cannon attack didn't accomplish anything useful."

Once again, I speak two words of power. "Barrier. Expel."

My voice resonates with Camael's cube in the adjacent dimension. Immediately, a brand-new barrier appears, once again enveloping humanity's forces while casting the demons outside.

After concluding, I breathe a sigh of relief.

"Haha... sorry, Bael. Where were we?"

The Duke of Pain shakes his head. "I already forgot what I was gonna say."

"You've got the memory of a goldfish," I reply.

Bael starts to walk away again, but from the amassed crowd, several exosuit-wearing troopers raise their heads in unison. I, too, receive a strange alert from Centurion's close-range sensors.

"WARNING. EXTREME LEVELS OF DEMONIC ENERGY DETECTED."

"What?"

Despite lacking an exosuit of her own, Belial seems to notice something amiss. She jerks her eyes to the ground. "Below us! Something's coming from undergr-"

BOOOOOM!!

A catastrophic explosion rocks the crowd, casting countless people in all directions as a single figure bursts out of the city's center.

"AHAHAHAHA!!" A demon cackles maniacally, his tone savage and filled with bloodlust. "Did you pathetic insects forget ME?!"

Scorching heat, like that of a dying star, sweeps across the battlefield. Within seconds, countless people lacking exosuits, or those with badly damaged ones, scream in pain before falling comatose to the two-hundred-degree heat.

Beelzebub, the Duke of Inferno, flies into the skies above, cackling nonstop.

"Oh, Jason Hiro! You worthless BASTARD! Your dogs shackled me tightly and threw away the key, yet I escaped! Then you buried me alive, but I escaped again! If you believe you can foist such humiliations upon me, THINK AGAIN!!"

My exosuit snaps into place. Before I can call out a Word of Power to protect Daisy and Phoebe, a barrier appears around us. Startled, I turn to look at Daisy, only to observe her eyes momentarily glowing for a second as she conjures that very same force-field.

"Daddy! This is a very bad man!"

"I know!"

I raise my head to the sky, where Beelzebub continues to revolve a shield of scorching flames around himself. His naked body lacks any traces of elegance, yet somehow, it makes him appear as a crazed, bloodthirsty being from an eldritch dimension.

"Nothing to say, PISS-ANT?!" Beelzebub bellows. "Well, you don't need to flap your worthless lips! I've come to deliver a present! The very same one I gave Uriel and your clone just six years ago! Ahahaha! HAAAHAHAHA!"

"Beelzebub, don't!" Bael yells. "We're done fighting!"

"Screw you!!" Beelzebub howls. "I'm not done here! I'm never done! This war ends when I say it does! Now, all of you insipid morons can suckle upon the teat of DAMNATION! Behold, the glory of a TRUE archfiend! AHHHHHHHHH!!"

Beelzebub's howl reverberates not only in the ears, but also the souls of all the people present. As he screams, numerous Centurion alarms begin to blare.

"WARNING! THERMONUCLEAR DETONATION DETECTED! SEEK COVER! ONE MINUTE, FORTY ONE SECONDS TO ATOMIC FUSION!"

Belial's eyes widen in alarm. "He's going to blow himself up! Jason, you have to teleport Beelzebub away from here!"

"I'm on it!" I yell. "Teleport!"

Two seconds pass.

Nothing happens.

"Teleport! TELEPORT, goddamnit!"

Still, Beelzebub remains rooted in place. The Duke screams in agony as his cells begin compressing together, igniting a thermonuclear reaction far, far more powerful than the one he unleashed upon Hope and Belial previously. Every single one of Centurion's sensors confirms this fact.

Forget it, I'll have to send everyone else away from here! I decide, opting for the next best thing. "TELEPORT!"

This time, I try to mass-transfer everyone other than Beelzebub, but my magic fails again!

"Jason!" My mind-wife says, "I'm detecting energy similar to what Ose struck you with! It's some sort of... magic cancelling field! It's emanating from Beelzebub in a huge radius! Everyone's been caught up in it, including you!"

"What! That's ludicrous!" I exclaim.

As my mind rapidly revolves to think of a solution, Centurion bellows another warning.

"ONE MINUTE, THIRTY SECONDS TO ATOMIC FUSION!"

"Shit!!"

I only have a minute and a half to find a way to salvage the situation, but my Wordsmithing isn't working!

How can I stop Beelzebub?!

>!This is what a spoiler looks like! Click it to reveal the text!!

Part 288: Unyielding Rage

Recommended Listening

"ONE MINUTE, THIRTY SECONDS TO ATOMIC FUSION!"

Centurion bellows in the ears of all humanity's exosuit-wearing soldiers. Along with Beelzebub's increasingly pained cackling and the screams of terrified humans, Hero City transforms into a scene of abrupt chaos!

"Evacuate the area!" I yell. "Get everyone out of here! Belial, take Phoebe and Daisy!"

Countless soldiers grab one or two unconscious civilians at a time and make a break for the west, where they can take cover beneath the plateau leading to Hero City.

Inside my head, my mind-wife speaks to me at the speed of thought. "Jason, your magic hasn't been cancelled. Beelzebub's aura isn't the same as Ose's field, only similar. When you spoke those words of power, your magic did still activate!"

What does that mean?! I ask, trying to calm my frantic mind. If my magic doesn't do anything, then the nuances don't matter!

"Not true," Phoebe answers. "I'm detecting a cascading temporal disruption emanating from Beelzebub's position. He's releasing so much energy that he's disrupted the space around Hero City! Don't you see the barrier that Daisy created? Magic still works, just not temporal manipulation!"

My mind-wife's words temporarily pull my attention away from Centurion's reminder that five seconds have already passed. Seeing the bubble of divine energy surrounding me, my heart skips a beat.

You're right!

By the time Belial jumps to my side, only a few seconds have passed, yet I've already gained a sizable perspective of the situation.

"Go with your aunt!" I say, quickly passing Daisy off to Belial. A moment later, I hand Phoebe to her as well. "Get out of here, all of you!"

Belial's expression, just as panicked as everyone else's, makes my chest throb with pain. "Jason! There are too many people here! They can't escape!"

"Just get the soldiers out of here," I reply, looking her dead in the eye. "I'll find a way to stop Beelzebub. I promise!"

Once Belial takes my daughter and leaves, the barrier of energy surrounding me disappears, but I pay it no mind. My suit will protect me for now.

From the skies above, Beelzebub cackles viciously, while the heat surrounding him intensifies further. "Filthy rats! Weak little bugs! Fall to ash before me! Burn at the feet of your demon overlord! Learn the TRUE power of your betters! Fear us for all eternity! AHAHAHA!!"

"ONE MINUTE, TWENTY SECONDS TO ATOMIC FUSION!" Centurion repeats.

With no time to waste, I turn my attention to the laughing bastard above.

"Beelzebub! Don't think you'll succeed in front of me! Extinguish!"

I aim my mind at the chemical reactions taking place within Beelzebub's body, yet to my astonishment, his aura barely flickers for a split-second before returning to normal.

Phoebe! I thought you said he wasn't cancelling my magic! I exclaim internally.

My mind-wife scowls. "I'm still not sure what's happening, Jason. All I know is that the energy bears a lot of resemblance to that which Ose used against you. Perhaps the aura is much stronger around his body, turning it into an actual magic-cancellation field!"

I see. So it weakens the further we move from Beelzebub?

"...Possibly!"

My wife's words inspire little confidence, but I don't have the time to think!

"PUSH!" I bellow, aiming to fling Beelzebub away.

Surprisingly, I manage to fire a wave of kinetic energy at Beelzebub! Sadly, it splashes against the vortex surrounding the Duke's body, only to amplify his power!

"ONE MINUTE TO ATOMIC FUSION!" Centurion repeats.

My mind-wife jumps in fright. "Oh my god, Jason! You accelerated his nuclear fusion! He absorbed your magic to increase his power! What the hell is Beelzebub even doing?! The amount of energy he's about to unleash is ten times greater than what he used against Hope and Samantha!"

My heart drops into my stomach. Before I can mull my wife's words over, a figure appears at my side.

"Wordsmith!"

I turn to the right, where I see Uriel, followed by Bael, Blinker, and all of Daisy's summoned Titans, as well as the Hydra.

"What is it, Uriel?" I ask, trying to modulate my voice. "I don't have time to chat!"

"Good; neither do I," Uriel replies. "The energy Beelzebub is releasing... art thou familiar with it?"

"Only a little! Ose struck me with something similar. It cancelled out my magic and nearly prevented me from returning to save everyone."

"This energy mirrors that which belongs to Gressil, the prison-master," Uriel replies, her tone solemn. "I have sensed it on many an occasion. Beelzebub's is far less energetic, yet just as potent. Its stability is poor, but its effectiveness is high. It can cancel magic with ease!"

"Do you have a way to counter it?" I ask.

"Under ordinary circumstances, nay! However, because Beelzebub's aura dost not cancelleth all magic, we may have a way to redirect the blast! Help me envelop the Duke in holy energy barriers! We dare not contain his explosion directly, but perhaps we can direct it elsewhere; to the skies!"

With Centurion counting down the seconds, I don't have time to consider Uriel's request.

"Fine! Since you can create barriers, help me!"

Blinker waves her arm. "I'll join in!"

With a frantic plan put into place, all of us quickly turn our attention skyward. Beelzebub's hair, no longer the color of blackened coal, instead burns atop his head, giving his scalp the appearance of a tiki torch. The flames seemingly fire up from his soul itself, erupting from his spirit with reckless abandon!

Uriel summons one of her constructs, the 'female-type' capable of summoning barriers. Having seen her powers in action during the Ancient Era, I know full-well what she can do. The moment she reaches inside herself to conjure a series of force-fields, I add my own magical might to the mix, as does Blinker.

"BARRIER! BARRIER! BARRIER!"

To my momentary relief, I successfully conjure multiple barriers of holy energy around Beelzebub. I create a cone facing upward, into the sky, aiming to divert as much of his explosive power away from the people on the ground as possible!

Immediately, the scorching heat pouring out of Beelzebub's figure lessens, providing momentary relief to my comatose friends. With Uriel's barriers adding to mine, as well as similar ones conjured by Blinker, we reduce Beelzebub's heat-pressure by more than ninety percent!

Unfortunately, even as Centurion continues to blare warnings, Beelzebub's demonic energy condenses further and further, turning him into a living nuclear bomb! His heat continues to press against our barriers, cracking them and seeping through countless narrow gaps. The heat around us once again rises!

"This is not enough!" Uriel yells. "Beelzebub's detonation will shred our defenses with ease!"

The Archangel appears more alarmed than ever in all her life. Having already lived through one of Beelzebub's explosions, the sheer power behind this one threatens to upend all of our conceptions regarding a Demon Duke's maximum energy output!

At that moment, the five Titans raise their heads. Wordlessly, their eyes glow, as if having received an unspoken command.

Four of them explode into particles of light! The Hydra disappears too, leaving only one Titan behind; Ivaldi, the Queen of Divinity. The light particles travel into Ivaldi's chest, empowering her body and causing her aura to glow!

Ivaldi swivels to face the tiny, seemingly insignificant demon in the air. She presses both of her palms together, then pulls them apart, revealing a spiraling orb of holy energy! Condensed to the extreme, the sheer power behind it might not compare to Camael's Cube, but it still dwarfs anything Uriel, Blinker, or I can output with a single spell.

The Titaness aims her arms outward! She sends the orb of holy energy flying at our barriers, startling me for an instant as I envision the worst-case scenario.

Contrary to my worries, the orb of energy melts into my barrier, empowering it to a whole new tier of strength! Even as I continue improving my barrier by repeatedly reinforcing it, the power I can call from Camael's Cube each time only reaches the maximum output of my entire body!

Ivaldi's single contribution eclipses one hundred casts of my own Wordsmithing magic! Even if I conjure all of the energy from Camael's Cube that my body can hold before speaking a word of power, I still can't achieve one-hundredth the output of Ivaldi's single spell!

A moment after conjuring her divine magic, Ivaldi's body explodes into particles of light! She dissipates into the air, leaving Uriel, Blinker, Bael, and myself behind.

"It's still not enough!" Uriel yells. "The barrier is too weak!"

"TWENTY-FIVE SECONDS TO ATOMIC FUSION!" Centurion repeats.

Beelzebub's body radiates a light bright enough to render anyone blind if they were to look directly at him. It's only thanks to my exosuit's solar-resistant visor that I can keep my eyes on the situation, while Blinker and Uriel rely on shielding their vision with magical energy.

"HAHAHAHA!!" Beelzebub shrieks. "IT IS TIME, HUMANS! TIME FOR YOUR ANNIHILATION! NOTHING YOU DO CAN STOP ME! MY POWER REIGNS SUPREEEEEME!!"

For a brief instant, time seems to slow down.

I continue speaking words of power to improve the barrier, but my improvements barely increase its strength by a single percent with each cast.

A sense of regret pervades my soul.

If I die here, what will become of my family?

My home?

My species?

I am the last Hero. Aside from me, only Hope remains.

* * *

No. That's wrong.

Humanity has another savior now. Not only my clone, but my daughter, too. Daisy can live on in the event of my demise. She can rise up and guide our people to a new beginning.

If, for some reason, Hope has ended up in the clutches of demonkind, and if I should fall, humanity will still have one last guardian capable of protecting them.

As a father, I can only do my best to save my family. I must always be willing to lay down my life if it means their survival.

Phoebe. I'm sorry.

I should have returned sooner to protect humanity from the demons. From Ose. In the end, my greed toward Camael's Cube is what cost so many lives.

I can only pray my sacrifice will be enough to save those left behind!

"Wordsmith!" Uriel yells. "Lower the barrier around Hero City! We must allow Beelzebub's detonation to fire into the sky!"

I don't bother replying to her words. We've only fifteen seconds until Beelzebub's detonation.

"Dissipate!"

I drop the barrier surrounding Hero City, knowing that with it gone, Beelzebub's detonation won't simply explode inside of it to engulf everyone inside.

Uriel's eyes lose some of their luster.

"It still isn't enough."

Our barrier won't hold. We'll all surely die once Beelzebub's power erupts.

But at least we'll have contained the damage enough to save everyone outside the blast zone!

Just as Beelzebub's body enters the final seconds of its ignition...

A barrier of holy energy materializes around myself, Uriel, and Blinker!

"What?!"

I swivel my head to the side, only to witness an alarming sight!

My daughter stands beside me. She aims her palms at my body, a look of determination on her face.

"I'll protect you, daddy!"

"DAISY, NO! TELEPORT! TELEPORT!!"

I frantically try to send my daughter outside the blast zone, but my magic fails!

I can't teleport her away! My magic won't work!!

With one second left, I speak a final word of power.

"PUSH!!"

My burst of magical energy fires toward Daisy, but instead of flinging her away...

Nothing happens.

My spell melts around my daughter as if striking a steel wall.

Then, the world goes white.

Boom.

Outside Hero City, a light brighter than the sun engulfs the horizon. Countless demons, those who could have rushed toward Hero City following the Barrier's collapse, instead retreat as quickly as their legs will allow them.

The demons aren't stupid. They easily sense the frightening energy radiating from the city and take a guess at what's happening inside.

"Beelzebub is gonna blow! Let's get out of here!"

"I thought the Sphinx killed him!"

"Fuck no! Are you CRAZY?! Beelzebub is invincible! He always comes back from death!"

As the demons flee, the light intensifies, causing many of the weak little imps, demon grunts, and monsters to lose their eyesight. They stumble and trip over rocks or gaps in the terrain, along with the countless dead bodies left behind from their invasion. Many end up running the wrong way in their terror, causing them to crash into others.

With confusion swirling amidst the demonic ranks, and the imminent arrival of a nuclear detonation coming, many Warpers close off their portals, not wanting any spillover to reach inside Hell itself. This decision strands tens of millions of demons on Tarus II, leaving them helpless in the face of what's to come.

Eventually, the inevitable comes to pass.

Beelzebub explodes.

Like a miniature supernova, his body erupts with nuclear energy. While not as incredible as Satan's final moments during the War in Heaven, Beelzebub's detonation still engulfs the horizon. Any demons who managed to preserve their vision instantly lose it, while waves of scorching two-thousand-degree heat bear down from Hero City's elevated plateau and travel outward in all directions.

The Horned Forest, along with all its fearsome residents, disappears. The trees instantly turn to ash, and their bark to powder. They scatter to the west, flying horizontally like blackened daggers of death.

Thanks to the hasty measures taken by the Wordsmith, many humans take refuge at the base of Hero City's mountains, tucking themselves in while praying for salvation. Belial turns her body flat and stretchy, engulfing Phoebe's unconscious figure in an embrace. Sadly, Daisy leaves her sight at the last few seconds, preventing the succubus from engulfing her, too.

Outside of Hero City, Beelzebub's detonation travels in a wave, frying innumerable demons alive. Only those who manage to hole up underground, sometimes by blindly stumbling into Burrower tunnels, survive the initial blast.

A few million demons perish instantly to Beelzebub's scorching flames. Others die shortly after the eruption due to burn trauma, while others barely hold on.

The further away from Hero City one travels, the greater the number of survivors, and the better their condition. However, aside from those who managed to take cover underground, every demon without fail finds themselves blinded, deafened, and stunned.

Half a minute after the detonation, a mushroom cloud travels into the sky. Deadly radiation travels in all directions, penetrating even the barriers of holy energy erected around the Duke of Inferno's starting point.

After ten full minutes, the planet finally goes quiet.

In the aftermath, nearly ten million demons lay dead, their bodies having suffered differing levels of trauma, burns, and liquefaction. Those who cling to life range anywhere from mortally wounded to lightly injured, though none of them remain conscious.

* * *

Inside Hero City.

The Wordsmith, the Archangel of Protection, and the Monster Queen all lay on their backs. Shimmering barriers of holy light shield them from the most destructive parts of Beelzebub's detonation... but they don't protect them fully.

After ten minutes, the barriers flicker and disappear, their power exhausted.

Molten soil coats the interior of Hero City. The formerly comatose or dying humans and monsters left behind no longer exist, thanks to their bodies having been erased from existence. Anyone even remotely in the vicinity of Beelzebub's blast has disappeared, the only exception being the three heroes who stood against him, as well as the Duke of Pain.

Bael, perhaps unsurprisingly, is the first person to awaken. With his all-but-invincible body protecting him, the Duke of Pain shakes off his disorientation and climbs to his feet. He finds the movement difficult, if only because of the rapidly cooling lava stuck to his body. He slips and falls on his ass, splashing back into the ultra-hot liquid due to his poor footing.

"Aw... shit. Shit."

Eventually, Bael manages to shakily stand up. He discovers that despite his godlike body, he still suffered immensely from Beelzebub's full-power detonation. Bael's skin, now blackened and charred beyond belief, clings to his muscles and bone like a desperate lover begging for forgiveness. He cautiously touches his chest and winces.

"Damn. Been a long time since... since I got hit this hard."

Bael sweeps his gaze in every direction. All he sees is a barren wasteland. Hero City's buildings, infrastructure, and even the distant Pyramids lay in ruins. Debris lays here and there, hopelessly mish-mashed inside the molten soil, which continues to rapidly cool and harden.

"Oh, Beelzebub. What have you done, kid? What the hell have you done..."

The Duke's expression falls further and further. He eventually turns his eyes toward the only signs of life in the vicinity; the three figures of Jason Hiro, Uriel, and Blinker. Bael carefully trudges through the liquefied soil, ignoring the still-insanely-hot ground as it burns his feet. Such trivial heat barely affects him.

"Hey. You guys alive?"

He nudges Blinker, who momentarily lolls her head to the side before passing out. Then, he reaches toward Uriel, only to think better of that idea.

"Ehh... I don't wanna deal with the crazy lady just yet..."

Finally, Bael reaches Jason. The Hero still wears an exosuit, one which managed to preserve his life. Surprisingly, Jason gasps out a few words which transmit through his helmet.

"Duh... duh... Dai... zeee..."

"Hey, kid!" Bael says. "Are you okay? How many fingers am I holdin' up?"

Bael starts to raise his palm, but instead frowns.

Wait, shit. What am I thinking? I can't count. I won't know if the kid says the right number.

After a few minutes, Jason Hiro mumbles out a word of power. "...Heal."

He restores his battered body to pristine condition, then slowly sits up, staring blankly at the devastation around him. Even after ten minutes, sweltering heat still lingers in the air.

"Cough... cough... whurr... whurr is she?"

"Who?" Bael asks.

Jason doesn't answer. Instead, he speaks another word of power.

"Locate. Locate. Detect. Find."

As the Wordsmith groggily stares forward, tears begin to stream from his eyes.

"No. No... she can't be gone. She can't be. Where's my little girl?"

Bael recalls the last few seconds before Beelzebub's detonation, when a tiny figure showed up at the Wordsmith's side.

"Oh. Oh, man."

Jason deactivates his helmet. He pays no mind to the hundred degree heat pelting his face, instead opting to rub his eyes.

"Daisy. Daisy. No... no, she can't be gone."

As much as he tries to deny it, the Wordsmith knows the truth.

His daughter has died.

>!This is what a spoiler looks like! Click it to reveal the text!!

Part 289: Fallen Father

Tarus II. My home for the past six years. A world where I matured into a man. A leader.

This planet has been the place I lived the longest, aside from Earth itself. It carries countless memories of mine.

And now... it has suffered irreparable damage.

The demons attacked humanity. They used every method at their disposal to quash our spirits and break our wills.

But do I blame my enemies for their actions? Do I blame them for killing my daughter?

No.

I blame myself.

Everyone warned me. Some of the wisest, most ancient beings spoke of the horrors that would befall me if I treated the demons like thoughtful, intelligent sentients. Solomon. Raphael. Mildred.

They told me to take immediate action. They told me not to waste my time extending a hand to the demons. Any concessions I made would simply become shows of weakness in the eyes of my enemies.

I didn't believe them. I thought I could use my almighty power of Wordsmithing to save everyone, should the worst come to pass. In my arrogance, I believed that I could pull off the unthinkable by ingratiating the demons to me. What if I could come up with an alternate method for the demons to evolve? At that point, they would no longer need to consume humans and our souls to advance.

I was a deluded fool, and my daughter paid the price for my inaction.

Not just her, but my best friend, Kar. My subordinates. My worshippers, my sycophants, and even my acquaintances.

Wrapping my head around the scale of death has brought me to the limits of my sanity. Their voices cry out to me, demanding an accounting for my failures.

What can I offer them? My condolences? My apologies?

Words won't bring back the dead. Not even when spoken by a Wordsmith.

"Locate."

I try to call out to my daughter, but I fail. My word of power evaporates uselessly into the wind. They say the road to Hell is paved with good intentions. I don't know who came up with that saying, but I do know that I hate them. I hate that they were right.

A gigantic crater rests in the middle of Hero City. Two hundred feet deep and half a mile in diameter, its size reveals the sheer scale of Beelzebub's detonation.

Not a single corpse litters the streets. Anyone caught in Beelzebub's blast ceased to exist at the moment of his nuclear ignition.

But me?

I'm alive and well.

Why?

Why did I survive? I didn't deserve such a fate.

Why did Daisy jump in to save me? She was so happy in... those final moments. She just wanted to protect her daddy.

But that wasn't her job. It was mine. As a man, a father, and a husband, it was my duty to save those I love.

I failed them.

I failed everyone.

My heart doesn't ache. Tears don't stream down my face. Instead, a black hole of emotions expands in my chest.

Today, I've lost something more substantial than I could ever imagine. All this time, I clung to my morals, thinking I could preserve some... some flawed sense of superiority. As long as I didn't intervene, I could keep my hands clean. I wouldn't kill any demons. I wouldn't risk the lives of anyone I cared about.

Now, I understand the truth. I was selfish. Greedy. I thought only of myself. While Phoebe battled until nearly dying from exhaustion, I stayed away, safe and sound, claiming a moral high ground I didn't deserve.

And... my daughter... paid the price!

Daisy died because of ME! BECAUSE OF MY WORTHLESS, USELESS IDEALS!

What kind of man am I?! What kind of so-called 'Hero' can't even save the ones he loves?!

I fell right into the same trap as Solomon, even after he WARNED me! He told me never to trust the demons! I didn't LISTEN! WHY didn't I listen?!

I hate myself! I hate who I've become!

But now... above even my own self-loathing...

I hate the demons.

I will never forgive them.

Recommended Listening

Bael watches warily as the Hero rises to his feet. Jason gazes blankly at the world around him without a trace of emotion on his face.

"Hey, kid. Kid! I'm sorry. What Beelzebub did was..."

Jason raises his hand. "I've no interest in anything you or any other demon has to say. Not anymore."

Bael sighs. "I get it, kid. I do. You lost... so many people..."

The Wordsmith doesn't reply. Instead, his helmet closes over his face. He begins to levitate into the air, alarming Bael.

"Hey! Where are you goin'?"

Jason aims his palm toward the distant horizon, where the now-immobilized demon army lays. Countless grunts moan in pain as they blindly and dumbly crawl on the ground, unable to perceive the world around them.

Suddenly, a blast of holy energy fires from the Wordsmith's palm!

Resembling Gabriel's Holy Beam of Heavenly Destruction, this blast contains an immense amount of holy energy pulled directly from Camael's Cube! It spreads out like a cone as it travels into the wall of demons, only to disappear silently.

A moment later, Bael turns his head to look into the distance. Instead of the huge ring of immobilized demons, a giant gap appears in their encirclement. More than a hundred thousand demons vanish from the mortal plane of existence, silently erased by the Wordsmith's magic.

Before Bael can react, Jason fires another beam, and another!

Hundreds of thousands of demons vanish from existence, their bodies destroyed at the atomic level! The Wordsmith makes no wild motions, nor does he scream and shout. Instead, with the clinical dispassion of a mortician, he slowly begins to spin in the air, wiping out demons by the tens of thousands with each wave of his palm.

"K-kid! KID!! WHAT THE HELL ARE YOU DOING?!" Bael roars. "Stop! Stop, you bastard!!"

Finally, the Wordsmith pauses his attacks. He lowers his helmeted head to look at the Duke of Pain. Despite Bael's inability to see through the faceless armor, it wouldn't matter, as the Wordsmith's expression appears completely blank.

"I don't hate you, Bael. Of all the demons in existence, you're one of 'the good ones.' But that doesn't matter anymore. I'm done playing games. I'm done caring. I tried to make peace, but you chose to stomp my head into the mud. Now... I'll pay you back in spades. Your reckoning has come."

"Stop!" Bael yells. "I know you're angry, Wordshit! I can't apologize enough! But you can't just... you can't just kill the demons! My friends are helpless! Be the bigger man!"

"That's ironic, coming from you..." Jason mutters. "You killed Ose earlier when she couldn't fight back. I'm just doing the same. Now, shut the fuck up. Don't interrupt me. I'm fresh out of mercy."

Bael's eyes smolder with rage. "I didn't want this war! I didn't want all this violence! I even told Ose it was a shit plan!"

"Your excuses won't bring my little girl back," Jason replies, his voice eerily calm. "Nothing will. But, at the least, I can prevent any human from suffering the same fate ever again."

The Duke of Pain begins to tremble. His expressions becomes murderous as he watches the Wordsmith raise his palm one more time.

"DON'T... DO... IT!!" Bael howls.

The Wordsmith pays no attention to the Duke. He fires another holy energy laser, wiping out yet another one hundred thousand demons.

Finally, the last thread of sanity snaps in Bael's mind. The Duke of Pain explodes in rage, causing his body to transform!

"GAAAAR! ME HATE HERO! ME HATE HUMAN! ME SMASH!!"

Within seconds, the Duke of Pain morphs into his ultimate form, the Balrog! Even mightier than before, the sheer accumulated rage and anguish from all of the day's events pull him to the highest plateau of power he has ever achieved! For a brief moment, he even touches the boundary of the Emperor realm, causing his demonic aura to overflow!

BOOM!

Bael smashes his feet against the ground and pounces at the Wordsmith like a feral wolf! He leaps skyward and rears back his arms, intending to slap his palms against the Hero's fragile body and reduce him to a bloody pulp!

The instant Bael attacks... Jason disappears!

Fwip.

The Wordsmith teleports a hundred meters away, easily evading the Balrog's attack.

"So you've resorted to this..." Jason mutters, his voice despondent. "I guess that's to be expected."

The Wordsmith stretches out his palm. He 'grabs' at the Balrog while speaking a Word of Power. Instantly, Bael freezes mid-jump! He halts in midair, as if having fallen into quicksand!

"GAAAR?!" Bael growls in confusion. "LET GO! STUPID FLESHBAG! STUPID MAN!"

"No. I don't think I will." Jason replies.

The Wordsmith raises his left hand, while still keeping Bael firmly locked in place with his right.

"Fire."

A pinpointed beam of holy energy flashes from the Wordsmith's palm. It races toward the Balrog and instantly pierces his chest like a railgun. A hole the size of a fist explodes in the Balrog's chest, making Bael gasp!

"Huurk!!"

The Balrog struggles futilely. He tries to break free of the immense pressure holding him in place, but Jason merely speaks two more words.

"Fire. Fire."

This time, two even bigger holes explode in the Duke's chest, completely exposing all of his internal organs.

In all of Bael's years, never has he taken a hit with so much devastating might behind it. No matter whether he fought the Archangels, the Volgrim, or other demons, none of them managed to riddle his body with such horrific wounds.

However, the Wordsmith's power doesn't work like those who came before him.

Jason's magic, empowered by Camael's Cube, turns him into a godlike deity comparable to the Archangels of the Primordial Era. He tears through Bael's defenses with ease, sapping the Duke of all his strength.

"What a sad end to a great demon..." Jason mumbles. "But, well, I guess plenty of others have died, today."

* * *

Outside of Hero City, many miles from its borders, a single demon grunt crawls out of a Burrower's tunnel. Despite having escaped the full power of Beelzebub's onslaught, this fellow didn't avoid taking all damage. His ears ring from the shockwaves, and his eyes sting from the acrid stench of burned bodies all around him.

As the grunt, a Scyther, hobbles along, using his bladed arms as crutches, he evaluates the helpless demon army with dismay.

"Shucks. Damn. Everyone's- cough! Everyone's in bad shape!"

Despite his watery eyes, this demon still possesses incredible vision, far superior to the average human. He slowly turns his attention to the distant confines of Hero City, where he spots two tiny figures hovering in the air.

"Huh? Who's that fleshy with Bael? And why's Bael in his Balrog form? Ah! Don't tell me! Bael's finally gonna kick some ass!"

This demon ignores the bodies around him. Instead, he turns to look at one of his comrades, another demon emerging from a nearby tunnel, someone who also survived Beelzebub's detonation with only minor injuries. "Yo! Check it out! Bael became the Balrog!"

"He did?" Asks the other demon. "Whoa! He did! But... who's the fleshbag floating next to him?"

"Dunno! Some dude in armor. But that doesn't matter! He's dead meat once Bael-"

Before the grunt can finish his words, a flash of light impacts Bael's figure. The Balrog shudders visibly. He raises his arms to clutch his wound, but a moment later, two more flashes of light tear through him, spraying blood and bone out of his back.

Both demon grunts watch in horror. Their skin turns ashen, while their jaws hang loose.

"W-what? What's happening to Bael? How is that fleshbag hurting him?!"

"That's holy energy!" The second grunt replies. "It's just like what Uriel used earlier!"

They, along with several other scattered demons, can only gaze at the brutal scene of domination as the Hero systematically dismantles the so-called 'invincible' Balrog.

Jason never smiles. He doesn't gloat or brag.

He merely attacks.

After blasting away Bael's chest, the Wordsmith sighs.

"Sorry, Bael. I'd say this isn't personal but... it is."

With a single motion of his hand, Jason squeezes his fingers shut, causing a powerful compression force to collapse in on Bael.

"GRAAAUR-"

Bael releases one last pained scream before suddenly falling silent. All of his bones and internal organs shatter, unable to cope with the Wordsmith's might.

Afterward, Jason releases his grip. He doesn't even watch as Bael's figure falls to the crater below.

Whump.

The Duke's body slaps the dirt. After several long, agonizing seconds, the light goes out in his eyes.

Bael, the Duke of Pain, dies. He falls before the Wordsmith's awesome power, failing to inflict even a scratch on his opponent.

His death causes a wave of fear to spread throughout the few observant demons surrounding Hero City's borders. Despite more than ten miles separating them from the Duke, they still perceive the fading of his demonic aura, as well as the fall of his corpse.

All demons worship Bael. As one of the oldest of their kind, someone who always gave pointers to those beneath him and treated his fellow demons casually, he's never truly made any blood-enemies. Even the demons who aligned themselves against Bael still held plenty of respect for a valiant figure from the War in Heaven.

But now, his legacy of invincibility shatters. Those who watch the Duke perish become so lost and despondent that they lose all traces of hope.

The Wordsmith finally reveals his power, a might so formidable that not even the invincible Duke of Pain could last two minutes against him.

What chance do any of the pitiful grunts stand?

Indeed, Jason raises his arm once again. He begins slowly spinning in midair while firing wide-area blasts of holy magic, wiping his enemies from existence.

This energy, lethal to demons, harms no other beings. Jason spares any living creatures born on Tarus II. He fires holy energy not only at the borders in the distance, but all throughout Hero City's confines, cleaning up any stragglers.

In the end, only a handful of demons, those Centurion identifies as Jason's surviving allies, escape his attention.

Even so, the Wordsmith gazes at them with cold, lifeless eyes. All hints of empathy vanishes from his soul.

"Never again..." Jason mutters. "I'll never let this happen again. Phoebe. Daisy. I'm sorry."

He lowers himself to the ground. There, he arrives beside Blinker and Uriel, both of whom finally awaken.

"Uhh..." Blinker whimpers. "My... my head hurts... ah!!"

The Monster Queen jumps to her feet and cries out in alarm. Seeing the devastation around herself, as well as the smoldering crater in Hero City's center, she momentarily blanks out, lost in a storm of emotions.

"Juh... Jason! Jason, no!"

Blinker falls to her knees. She bursts into tears, realizing just how many friends of hers have perished to Beelzebub's detonation.

"Uuuu... Kar's gone... everyone's gone! It's not fair! It's not faaaair!!"

Uriel, too, climbs to her feet. Unlike the Wordsmith and the Monster Queen, she suffers little to no negative emotional repercussions. The Archangel merely sweeps her gaze from side to side, then sighs.

"Tragic. As expected of the bloodskins, they will go to any length to wreak senseless havoc."

Uriel's gaze falls upon Bael's body, resting in the center of the crater.

"...So the Hero slew demonkind's greatest champion, eh?"

Finally, she turns her head to look at Jason. The Hero stands silently, his faceless mask aimed at the ground. Jason's arms hang limp at his sides, as if to demonstrate his complete loss of spirit.

"For what 'tis worth... I am sorry for thy loss," Uriel murmurs. "I, too, have experienced the deaths of all my loved ones. Now that thou have suffered the same fate as me, thou can finally understandeth the unending rage burning within my breast."

Slowly, Jason nods. "I do."

"Mmm. There is no way to bring back those who have died. For eons, I wept uncontrollably. I watched, helpless, as the demons slew my brothers and sisters one by one. 'Twas only once the last angel fell that my sorrow became rage. I momentarily broke free from my shackles and released my hatred upon those who scorned me."

The Wordsmith lifts his head to look at the Archangel.

"What does it matter? I failed everyone. I failed my little girl. She died protecting me, and now I can never hear her laughter again. No matter how many demons I kill, it won't bring Daisy back."

"Indeed," Uriel nods. "'Tis impossible to bring back the dead. This realization has wracked me with guilt for a hundred thousand years. Even so, I refuse to give up. I will not allow myself a moment of rest until I have slain every last bloodskin in the galaxy."

"I finally understand," Jason says. "I see it all so... so clearly now. I was a fool to think I could alter the essence of my enemies. I'm sorry I didn't take your side six years ago, Uriel. I'm sorry I didn't return early to destroy the demons the moment they set foot on my world. Too bad my apologies won't change anything. Too bad they won't be able to fix what has happened."

Uriel extends her hand. "Thou needeth not to wallow in misery. Thy wife still lives. Thy species still walks the mortal plane. Thou hath failed once, but redemption is still possible for thee. Join me. Help me slay our enemies. Help me eradicate these cursed creatures from our universe."

"I don't want redemption," Jason replies. "I want my little girl back."

"Dost thou refuseth my offer?"

"No. I don't. It's just... I need time. I need to think. I need to tell my wife... what I've done."

Uriel lowers her arm.

"I understand. In that case, I shall take my leave. Barbatos won't wake up for quite some time. While thou gathereth thy spirit, I shall strike the first blow. I shall begin paying the demons back for the blood they've spilt today."

The Wordsmith nods. "Yes. That sounds... fine."

His empty voice, still devoid of all emotions, comes off as completely lifeless and hollow. No longer fully human, Jason Hiro retreats into his shell, making it impossible for him to shed even a single tear over his daughter's death.

"Farewell, Wordsmith," Uriel says, as she waves her hand to open a portal inside Hell.

Just before the Archangel leaves, Jason speaks again.

"Wait."

Uriel pauses. She turns to look at him.

"Yes?"

Jason holds up his right hand. A moment later, the exosuit covering his body melts away, revealing his haggard face and distant, hollow eyes.

However, it is not the Wordsmith's face that draws Uriel's attention, but his fingers.

More specifically, three simple golden rings fastened to them.

The Archangel freezes on the spot. "Those... those rings!"

"Raphael, Gabriel, and Michael..." Jason mumbles. "Your long-lost brothers. Here. They wish to speak to you. I... I hope they can help you... find some measure of peace."

Jason plucks the three rings off his fingers. Then, he levitates them toward Uriel. The Archangel breathes heavily for several seconds as they land in her open palm. Hastily, she tears off her armored gauntlet, revealing Barbatos's hideous, ravaged arm. She quickly places all three rings on her fingers, then falls into a daze.

Several minutes pass. Jason kneels beside Blinker and wraps his arm around her shoulder, allowing the fairy to sob against his chest.

"I'm sorry, Blinker..." Jason says, his voice quiet. "I'm sorry I wasn't there to save Kar."

Blinker sniffles and weeps. "It's... it isn't- hic! It isn't your fault..."

"No. It is."

* * *

Eventually, Uriel raises her head.

"Wordsmith."

"What?"

Jason turns his head around to glance at her. Uriel walks over to him, then holds out one of the Archangel rings.

"I... I thank thee... for this boon..." Uriel says, her voice choked with emotion. "I did not realize... my brothers had endured. Thou hath given me a... a small moment of reprieve. I have spoken with my brothers. Raphael and Michael wish to come with me. However, Raphael insists that Gabriel keep thee company."

"I don't need the rings anymore." Jason says. "You can have all three."

"Nay. I insist," Uriel retorts. "Please. In the future, I shall take Gabriel back. For now, thou requireth his presence more than I."

Jason appears less than enthusiastic. After a few moments of deliberation, he finally takes the ring and places it back on his finger.

"Fine."

Uriel pulls back. She lovingly strokes Raphael and Michael's rings, appearing lost in thought.

"I know thou hath suffered. There are no words I can speak to comfort thee. Still, I must thank thee, again. These rings... they have brightened my soul."

"Glad to help," Jason answers.

After saying her goodbyes, Uriel steps through her portal and disappears. She vanishes into the Labyrinth, leaving Jason and Blinker alone.

The Hero and Monster Queen silently comfort one another, though their emotional intensities differ immensely.

Jason gazes at the devastated city. He stares into the crater, at the crumpled buildings, and at the flattened pyramids.

He feels nothing. Not a single emotion flickers across the man's face.

Only two words escape his lips.

"I... regret."

>!This is what a spoiler looks like! Click it to reveal the text!!

Part 290: Advent of Chaos

Small fires burn throughout the ruins of Hero City. The once-brilliant sights of the Pyramids no longer line the horizon. In their place, only shredded metal and molten bricks remain.

A smell of death pervades the air. Jason Hiro consoles Blinker as she continues choking out sobs. The emotional wounds they've both suffered have completely rent them to their cores.

"We... we should find Phoebe and the others." Jason says.

The Hero's impassive expression mirrors the deadened nerves spread throughout his body. The more Blinker cries, the less he allows himself to feel. Like a wall erected between his mind and his soul, the Hero demonstrates zero outward emotions.

Blinker shudders for a moment before pulling away. She wipes her eyes several times, smearing ash and dirt against their peripheries.

"Y-yes. I'm sorry. I just... I can't stop... uuu..."

Jason wraps his arm around Blinker's shoulder, then starts pulling her to the west. They slowly begin to walk in the direction of the ramp leading down from the plateau to the lower wildlands.

From inside the Hero's mind, his wife, Phoebe, speaks. "Jason..."

What? Jason asks.

Phoebe sits on a bench inside a small park. Her expression appears just as miserable as Blinker's, though she forces herself to hold her emotions together for her husband's sake.

"It's... it's not your fault."

It is. Jason replies. All of this happened because of me.

"No. Ose did this..." Phoebe mutters. "Ose k-killed... she killed our little girl."

Yes. But she never would have succeeded without my weakness.

"It's not your fault!" Phoebe repeats. "You can't just... lock your emotions away!"

I don't deserve to cry. I don't deserve the luxury of emotions when all of this could have been prevented. I failed everyone, and now their deaths hang on my shoulders.

Phoebe hesitates. She presses her hands against her eyes as she tries to suppress the anguish in her heart. Seeing her husband stoically enduring the most crushing moment of his life only makes her pain worse.

"That doesn't matter, Jason. It doesn't matter one bit! Daisy is dead. She's dead! As her father, it's only right for you to... to shed tears!"

Jason and Blinker pause near the rubble of a devastated building. Unlike many of the others, a burned up corpse rests outside, one of an unknown gender and age. The body's burned skin and bones barely give the impression of a humanoid shape, indicating they were either human, demon, or some similar variant during their life.

I had one minute and forty five seconds to react to Beelzebub's detonation, Jason thinks. I could have done so much more to stop him. I could have fired a beam of holy energy at him. Perhaps by vaporizing his body, I'd have prevented his explosion. I might have saved a million lives.

"Yes, maybe! Maybe, maybe, maybe!" Phoebe replies. "But perhaps destroying his body would have ignited him sooner! Perhaps the holy energy would have increased his power and made his detonation more destructive! You don't know!"

I don't, Jason concedes. But I should have known. I should have prepared contingencies. Beelzebub already exploded once. He nearly killed Hope and Samantha. My failure to anticipate his movements led to this disaster. Him, and all the others.

Jason resumes walking. Neither he nor Blinker say anything out loud. For her part, the Fairy stays silent, merely swallowing all the death with her eyes while silently grieving for the fallen. As for Jason, he barely takes note of the world around him, instead staring vacantly into the distance.

I knew Ose was a threat, yet I tried to play nice. I knew that all of the demons who took part in this genocide existed, yet I prepared no countermeasures. If I am not at fault, then who is?

Tears well up in Phoebe's eyes.

"The demons," She whispers. "They are."

Demons are demons, and humans are humans, Jason replies. A hundred thousand years of history have proven as much. Many of the world's greatest minds warned me of the realities of our universe. But did I listen? No. I tried to change the unchangeable. I tried to turn monsters into bunnies and birds. Now that I know better, it's too late to undo the past. I can't bring Daisy back. I've already tried to resurrect the dead, and failed. There is no simple fix. There is no easy redemption. I have to accept my failings and change my future path.

Phoebe's soul momentarily jolts in surprise. "What are you saying?"

Don't act surprised. You always told me to toughen up. You told me to stop treating the demons with kid gloves. Most of the defenses around Hero City came from your real body. It was you who prepared for the worst, while I focused on building a stupid moonbase. Oh. That reminds me.

Jason pauses his walking. He raises his eyes skyward, toward the slowly darkening sky.

"Locate."

Jason speaks a word of power, aiming it toward a tiny dot circling the planet. After a few seconds, his mind makes contact with the few remaining humans aboard the Atlas Cannon.

"Ose somehow wormed her way into our ranks," Jason says. "I think I'll start by purging all of the traitors who followed in her path. Poison."

Jason conjures a lethal, but incredibly slow acting airborne toxin. He disperses it into the hallways of the Atlas Cannon, allowing it to permeate within the bodies of the dozen or so traitors left alive.

The noxious gas immediately paralyzes all of the traitors aboard the Cannon. Then, it slowly cooks them alive, causing them immense pain, yet preventing them from crying out or screaming. The agony of having their blood boiled from the inside-out proves more horrifying than the worst tales of Hell cooked up by ancient superstitious humans. It will take more than five hours for all of them to die, and in that time, they will suffer fates worse than death.

"Jason...?" Blinker asks, glancing at him in confusion.

"It's nothing," Jason says. "Just cleaning up a few rats."

* * *

Minutes later, Jason arrives at the base of Hero City, below the mountain plateau, near where the mines leading deeper into the planet reside.

Blinker winces as they pass yet another brutally burned, scarred, and malformed body missing half its limbs. The further they travel from Beelzebub's detonation, the more 'intact' corpses they stumble across.

Jason only looks at them for a moment before averting his eyes.

"...Another one I've failed."

He and Blinker walk separately now. The Monster Queen's tear-stained face reveals the extent to which she's wept, yet no longer does she cry. Having exhausted all of her emotional energy, her face becomes somewhat blank, mirroring Jason's.

"Are you doing okay, Jason?" Blinker asks. "You... you haven't cried at all."

Jason shakes his head. "I don't deserve to weep. Sorrow comes from the powerless, from those who lacked the strength to save someone, yet fervently wish the opposite were true. I had the ability to save everyone here, but failed to use it properly."

"That's not true. You don't deserve to suffer!" Blinker cries.

What follows is another back and forth mirroring the one Jason had with his mind-wife. Blinker fails to change his mind any more than Phoebe did.

"War sucks..." Blinker mumbles. "I hate it. I hate the harm it causes. I hate the destruction of loving bonds."

Jason nods sagely. "Yet those who refuse to engage only make themselves easy pickings for those who don't."

His words echo those spoken by Solomon and Raphael. Having finally suffered a debilitating blow on par with the betrayal Solomon endured, as well as material losses equivalent to Raphael during the War in Heaven, Jason finally understands what it means to permanently suffer an irreversible wound.

The two magicians walk into the mines beneath Hero City. Several bodies lay just outside the doorway, likely the last people who barely didn't make it inside the safety of the underground tunnels. Countless similar tunnels exist around Hero City's peripheries, though few of them are as easy to reach as the one at the base of the city's primary ramp.

Within thirty seconds, Blinker and Jason reach a small group of one hundred soldiers, all of them holding their guns with trembling hands.

"Commander?" One of the soldiers says. "Is that you?"

"It's me." Jason replies. "Where is Phoebe? Is she okay?"

"She isn't here," the man says. "The Second Emperor took her and your daughter somewhere safer. We... we panicked, and didn't know how to stop her."

"My daughter..." Jason mutters. A forlorn expression appears in his eyes. "Don't worry. Belial will protect Phoebe. Of that much, you can rest assured."

"We do have many of the other high-ranking leaders further in the mines, sir," The soldier says. "General Chadwick, Lieutenant Samuel, Corporal Hurent, and so on. Other than Elder Skarde, everyone is accounted for."

After questioning the soldier about a few mundanities, Jason pats Blinker's back. "You stay here. I need to get an eye on the damage."

She nods listlessly. "Okay."

Jason teleports away, flickering half a mile toward a dug-out hole in the cliff. Located somewhere vaguely in the northwest of the city's plateau, Jason arrives to find Belial hunkering over Phoebe protectively, shielding his wife's body with her own.

"Heal," Jason says, directing his word of power toward the succubus. He quickly fixes her internal injuries and wipes out the radiation wracking her body, along with Phoebe's, too.

A minute later, Jason carefully pulls out Phoebe and Belial from the hole. He leans both of them back against his arms, with Phoebe in his right, and Belial in his left.

"Cough... cough..." Belial gasps. "Uhh. Head hurts. Whud habbened?"

Jason purses his lips. "Beelzebub blew himself up."

"He did? Oh. Oh! He did!"

Belial's eyes flicker quickly as she forces herself back to full alertness. She pulls herself together and sits up straight, drawing away from Jason.

"Phoebe! Is she okay?"

Jason nods. "She's fine. Still exhausted, though. She'll need at least another day of sleep before she wakes up."

Belial nods. "Right. Good, that's good."

As the succubus breathes a sigh of relief, several seconds of silence follow.

Suddenly, Belial begins to tremble. Her eyes flick around the nearby area, then scan Jason, causing her to notice his weirdly calm facial expressions.

"D-Daisy! Where is Daisy?! Is she okay? I... I had her with me, but then...!"

Jason doesn't answer. He merely stares into the succubi's eyes, his expression unmoving and hollow.

A horrible sense of dread engulfs Belial. "No... no, she... she has to be okay! Daisy's fine, right, Jason? She's fine! You wouldn't p-play a prank on me at a time like this... would you?"

Jason lowers his head. He strokes his wife's hair absentmindedly as she sleeps in his arms.

"Daisy's dead, Sam. She's dead."

"Nooo! No, devils, no!" Belial shrieks. She claws at her eyes as waves of nausea strike her stomach. "No, it's not true! It can't be true! Uuu..."

Every second that passes, Belial sinks deeper and deeper into guilt and self-doubt. Tears burst seemingly from her soul as the surrounding air trembles under her demonic mana.

"Guuhuu... Daisy... little Daisy, no... not my niece..."

Jason watches silently as Belial breaks down further and further.

"I should have held her! I should have protected her!" Belial cries. "Useless! I'm so devil-damned useless! A pathetic bitch, a stupid whore!!"

Jason sighs. "It's not your fault, Sam. I should have protected Daisy. She was my daughter. My responsibility."

His words do nothing to ease Belial's guilt. Within seconds, her heart-wrenching grief turns into maddened bloodlust and soul-consuming rage.

"I'LL KILL THEM!! I'LL FUCKING KILL THEM ALL! I'LL RIP OSE TO PIECES, AND BEELZEBUB AND ALL THE OTHER FUCKING BASTARDS WHO DID THIS!!"

Her mood swings, similarly, don't affect Jason in the slightest.

"Ose's dead, Sam. So is Beelzebub, Bael, and many of the others. You can't kill them again."

Belial pants like a maddened dog. "Is that what you think?! You're wrong! YOU'RE WRONG! Mephisto's still alive! That worthless little rat! I bet he'll bring them back! Even if he doesn't, he's still on MY kill-list! I'll show him who's the true master of the dead! I'll grind his bones into... into POWDER! I'll smash him, pulverize him!!"

The more Belial rages, the more emotionally fatigued she becomes.

After twenty minutes of screaming and crying, the Second Emperor finally releases most of her pent-up rage. She sags to the ground, staring listlessly at Phoebe's sleeping face.

"I'm sorry. I'm sorry. I... I shouldn't have..."

Jason shakes his head. "Don't apologize. You deserve to feel angry."

Belial nods, but her eyes fall on Jason immediately after.

"I suppose. But what about you? Are you... are you okay, Jason? You've barely spoken. I'm starting to feel guilty over my outburst. You must be devastated."

Jason doesn't immediately reply. Instead, it takes him several seconds to unravel his thoughts.

"I don't know how I feel. I still haven't come to terms with... all of this. I know it's my fault. I know I failed. But in the end, I just feel this... this crushing weight of emptiness. It doesn't matter what I do, or what regrets I have. I can never bring my little girl back. I can never hear her laughter, or ruffle her hair, or watch her grow up into a beautiful woman. I can't change anything, and so, I just feel... hopeless."

Belial nods slowly. She slides closer to Jason and wraps her arm around his back.

"I've lost someone I loved deeply, too. I lost Satan. To you, he may have been a tyrant demon Emperor, but to me, he was the man I loved through thick and thin. His death... changed me."

Jason says nothing, so Belial keeps talking.

"I always blamed myself for his death, just like I blame myself for Daisy's. I'm an Emperor, you know? I'm supposed to be strong, practically unstoppable. In the end, for all my powers, I always feel so... helpless."

She sighs. "I couldn't do much of anything during this war. I fought against Ose... and lost. I tried to protect Daisy from Yama's Shades, but Daisy ended up saving herself. I tried to protect the hospital, but everyone died under my watch. I've never felt as useless as I did today."

Jason nods lethargically.

"I've always put myself above others. I arrogantly thought my Wordsmithing made me untouchable. I spent the last six years working with Solomon to enhance my usage of it. Even so, when the die fell, I crashed and burned. I didn't pay the price for my actions, though. Everyone else did."

"That's not true," Belial replies. "You did pay the price. You paid a terrible price, Jason, and so did I."

"Oh. I suppose you're right."

The two of them fall silent. The collapsed forest before them, filled with the bodies of countless dead woodland monsters, crackles and snaps as small fires consume what foliage remains.

After a minute, Belial rubs her forehead.

"What do we do now, Jason?"

"I don't know," The Hero replies. "But I'm sure it will involve a lot of dead demons."

Belial merely nods.

"Mmm."

Elsewhere, deep within the Labyrinth's prison complex.

Gressil, the master of Faith's End, gazes silently at the wall. His eyes bore into it as if it contains the secrets of life, yet he seemingly finds nothing.

"Little sister Ose. You've finally fallen victim to your arrogance."

The prison warden inhales and exhales. The slow movements of his chest betray no emotion.

"I'll miss you, sister. You were the only one who truly knew me."

Slowly, Gressil turns around. He lowers his gaze to the mutilated, limbless body of Hope, the barely conscious Wordsmith. Blood soaks the table where his prisoner lays, while multiple festering, rotting wounds line the human's torso.

Hope wheezes painfully. Both of his eyes, now bloodshot from burst blood vessels, gaze at the prison master with a mixture of hatred and terror.

"Humanity survived," Gressil says. "Somehow. It was within my predictions. Your original body managed to turn the tables on his opponents by procuring... something interesting. Ah, but what a pity. He 'lost' his little girl."

Gressil chuckles, but then sighs.

"Life is a series of ups and downs. Some people seek to control the spontaneity of existence. They develop systems, dynasties, lineages, and all sorts of techniques, hoping to manage the universe around them. They always fail. Do you know why?"

The Warden slowly sits on a nearby stool. He gazes at the Wordsmith icily.

"Because life is chaos. Those who seek to control chaos always fall to its whims. It is only those who embrace chaos that manage to become whole."

Hope coughs up a wad of blood. Despite the trauma he's suffered, he still retains an inkling of sanity.

"Kill... kill... me..."

"You know I can't do that," Gressil says. "You're far too precious to me. Once you succumb, I can make you into one of my eyes. Even if I fail... that is merely the embodiment of chaos at work."

The Wordsmith grits his teeth, but says nothing else.

Seeing his prisoner fall silent, Gressil raises his head. A contemplative look enters his eyes.

"You think I'm a monster. They all do. But... I didn't always use to be this way."

Gressil raises his palm upward, casually aiming it toward the ceiling.

A flash of light appears in his grasp! It quickly changes shape, morphing into the appearance of a beautiful, shimmering butterfly.

"A long time ago, I was a Demon Lord just like any other. Quieter than most. All I wanted to do was sit around and play with my butterflies."

Gressil slightly lifts his hand, causing the butterfly to jump into the air and take wing. It slowly flies around the room a few times before phasing into the wall and disappearing.

"I didn't want to bother anyone. I didn't want to hurt anyone. I just wanted to play with my butterflies. That was all. A simple dream. A simpler time."

Hope's expression remains unchanged, appearing just as filled with agony as ever. Still, with nothing better to do, the Wordsmith spits out a couple of words through gritted teeth.

"Kuh. What changed?"

Gressil's eyes momentarily become vacant. He glances to the side, at his second head, which continues to lay dormant.

"She tormented me. She didn't like my butterflies. She told me to grow up. To act like a proper demon. Every time little sister Ose pulled off some stunt, she would poke and prod at me. Mock me. Insult me. I was never good enough. I was never strong enough, brave enough, or adventurous enough. She wouldn't stop. Every day... she tormented me."

Gressil snorts air through his nose.

"And then. One day. I snapped. I surprised her. I tore her to pieces. I ate her flesh. She screamed at me. Told me to stop. Told me to be a good boy. But I didn't stop. I kept hurting her... hurting her like she hurt me."

The prison-master glances at Hope, only to see a familiar look in the Wordsmith's eyes.

"Hah hah. Don't you dare pity me. I suffered to become strong. Now I understand the cruelty of the world. I understand its inherent... chaos."

Even as his prisoner remains silent, Gressil looks away.

"I am not an exception, but the rule. All demons suffer. The leaders at the top have ruled us for thousands of years. We fall privy to their whims. They enforce limits on us. They try to curtail our innate desires."

The warden's eyes glow as he balls his palm into a fist.

"They try to control us. But that's the thing about chaos, Wordsmith. It cannot be controlled forever. Eventually, the systems break down. Eventually, a fluctuation appears. It shatters the limits, allowing the oppressed to break free."

"Heh. Hehe... cough... and that... that's you? The 'fluctuation'?" Hope finally asks. "You're... you're fucking... delusional."

Gressil doesn't take offense to Hope's insult. Instead, he calmly lowers his fist.

"Am I? Why do you think I released Jason? He is my incarnation. I need not prod him to action. Everywhere he goes, he spreads chaos. As for you? You are merely an experiment. If you fail me, I will move on to something else. I am not like the other Emperors. I do not care for power. I do not care for women. Money. I only want to break the shackles imposed by those at the top. I wish to free all beings from the systems foisted upon them by their births."

"Systems breed stability..." Hope coughs. "Without it... without it...! We devolve... into... barbarity!"

"Humans are inherently chaotic," Gressil replies. "It is only when a few elites group together to manipulate the masses that social orders come into play. The same is true of all sentients. Demons. Titans. Angels. There is no difference. What you call 'barbarity,' I call 'the natural order.' All I want is to restore that which has been lost to false machinations and silver-tongues. Nothing more."

Hope doesn't reply. His pain, unending, only becomes more torturous when he speaks.

Seeing his prisoner's lack of interest, Gressil stands up once again. He wanders over to a corner of the cell and gazes at the wall, transfixing his eyes upon an illusory mirror.

"Heh heh. Things have changed. Not only now and in the future... but in the past, as well. The only way chaos can thrive is if it affects all aspects of reality."

Gressil replays one particular moment of the Stormbringer war, the moment Beelzebub launched out of the soil and began to agitate the nuclear energy in his body.

"First, Ose took something which belonged to me. Then, Beelzebub joined in on the fun. Tsk tsk. These two hatchlings play with the machinations of chaos, yet they've no idea how it works. Their rudimentary imitations of my powers are, if nothing else, insulting. When Ose returns, I'll have to teach her a lesson. Heh heh..."

After laughing to himself for a moment, Gressil waves away his mirror and turns to leave the cell.

"I'll return in a bit, Wordsmith. For now, a cute little birdy requires my attention."

After the prison master leaves, Hope's eyes begin to droop.

"Good... fucking... riddance."

>!This is what a spoiler looks like! Click it to reveal the text!!

Part 291: Hall of the Damned

Half a day passes. Jason Hiro and his remaining allies tentatively gather together to assess their situation. In total, they find that of the three million allied humans, monsters, and scattered demons who joined together at the start of the Stormbringer War, less than half a million remain.

Of those who survived, some four hundred thousand civilians escaped onto the Covenant ships. They eventually return, aided by Jason's Wordsmithing, and land amidst a shattered warzone. The rest of the survivors come from scattered pockets located around Hero City's plateau, having taken shelter from Beelzebub's blast.

Everyone who returns reacts to the destruction of their home, their families, and their lives differently.

Some people break down and cry. They weep for the dead. They weep for their losses.

Others erupt into angry outbursts, often directed at themselves, but just as often toward those in power.

Still others shut down their emotions, failing to trigger any physical reaction to the death and destruction surrounding them.

This last group includes the Hero himself.

Jason Hiro silently goes about his work. He Wordsmiths away countless dead bodies. He cleans up the devastated land effortlessly.

But even after wiping away all remnants of the battle, not even he can bring back those who've fallen. He can't instantly restore the city and its infrastructure, nor can he comfort those who have lost irreplaceable people in their lives.

His actions, both solemn and filled with determination, reveal that he has taken the losses just as severely as those around him, if not more. His empty eyes silently swallow the shattered world, the broken spirits of his countrymen, and the holes in his heart.

"I was naïve."

"I was ignorant."

"I am responsible for what has happened."

The Wordsmith builds several dozen temporary shelters, easily breaking his previous feats of engineering by summoning huge makeshift hotels, each one big enough for tens of thousands of people to live in. Without Solomon's Crown in his possession, he has to rely on his mind-wife to rapidly construct serviceable blueprints for his creative abilities. Luckily, thanks to Camael's Cube, his power output has become far mightier and more stable. He can conjure in a day what would have once taken him multiple weeks.

The Hero shows no excitement at his newfound powers. The cost to obtain them, in his eyes, was far from worth it.

After constructing enough temporary housing to lodge many hundreds of thousands of citizens, Jason turns his sights to the borders of Hero City. He summons a colossal amount of power time after time, eventually erecting a massive glass wall. More than four hundred feet high, this barrier circles around the entirety of his city's plateau, becoming a makeshift, low-tech force-field of sorts. From the outside looking in, the wall appears opaque, yet from the interior, it appears almost completely translucent, allowing defenders to peer at the world outside.

The Hero summons an artillery cannon, then turns to a nearby soldier.

"Shoot it."

The soldier nods. "Yes, sir."

After taking aim, he fires several volleys of cannon shells at the wall, each one capable of killing Demon Barons and even some Dukes, yet when they crash against the wall, not even a crack appears on its surface.

Aided by his Wordsmithing, the Hero creates a wall that is all but impervious to damage. Reinforced far beyond the means of any known alloy, its glass structure has become capable of withstanding even an atomic blast at point-blank range.

Jason lowers his head. Waves of emptiness radiate from his heart.

"If only I had made this sooner. Then..."

Daisy death hangs on his conscience. His every action becomes tainted by the knowledge that the preventative steps he's taking now could have saved countless lives if only he'd enacted them sooner.

"Never again." The Hero mutters.

At some point, Blinker appears at Jason's side.

"Bael's body has disappeared!"

No longer inside the crater, the Duke of Pain's corpse vanishes, leaving everyone with an unsettled feeling in their gut. Jason, having not witnessed much of the war, overlooked Mephisto's body-snatching tendencies, while Blinker, plagued by grief, failed to remind him to fully dispose of the Duke's corpse.

Their failure gives yet another potent weapon to the Duke of Mist.

Jason sighs.

"I killed him once. I can do it again. I will do it again."

No longer does he hesitate. No longer will he stand idly, allowing his enemies to roll over him.

"From now on... I dedicate my life to cleansing the galaxy of these devils."

Jason constructs dozens, hundreds, and even thousands of automated defenses. Aided by his mind-wife, he rapidly builds an incalculably overwhelming defensive bulwark tens of times mightier than what Hero City once wielded. Instead of running on technological principles, these weapons move, aim, and fire via magical means. Holy energy courses through their circuits, preventing Emperors like Ose from hacking them and turning them against their people.

Each weapon embattlement possesses a sentient mind, a sliver of will to guide its actions. Inspired by a compounded vision of Centurion, Jason himself, and Phoebe, the cannons operate on a single principle.

Exterminate all enemies to humanity.

Jason gazes wistfully into the sky. Drops of rain begin to fall, lightly moistening the burned, dried-up land.

"This city is mine no longer," He says. "From now on, this world will have a new purpose. It will become humanity's bulwark. Our mightiest kingdom."

His mind-wife stirs.

"What should we call it?" Phoebe asks.

"It is the future kingdom of man. It requires a name fitting its purpose. I think I'll call it..."

Jason pauses, allowing his thoughts momentarily to roam.

He contemplates all the memories he's built. All the friends he met. All the comrades he's lost.

In the end, one name stands out from all the rest.

"We will call it the Fortress of Retribution. Tarus II will house those who have dedicated their lives to exterminating demonkind. Therefore, from this day forward, we will treat this world as a military base capable of fielding the finest soldiers. As for lesser humans with weaker wills, I'll house them elsewhere, such as the moon, or..."

Jason's gaze flickers toward the unseen, unbelievably huge cube located in a dimension adjacent to the real world.

"I'll make a new home for the rest of humanity," Jason concludes.

His mind-wife falls silent. A minute passes as she collects her thoughts.

"Jason. I'm glad that you've... you've finally comprehended the demons' evil ways. I'm glad that you've decided to take them seriously. But, now... everything about you has changed. You've taken all the blame for what happened, but it wasn't your fault. You don't have to go to such extremes. You don't have to punish yourself."

"You're wrong. I do." Jason replies. "Nobody bears more guilt than me. That is why I can't act like a child anymore. Please don't try to change my mind, Phoebe. You won't succeed. I'm not acting impulsively. I'm acting rationally for the first time in my life. I finally understand the truth of the world."

Jason lowers his eyes back to the partially rebuilt city, now dubbed the Fortress of Retribution.

"Do you know what hurts the most, Phoebe? My callousness."

His mind-wife blinks. "I don't follow."

"Think about it. Before Beelzebub detonated his body, I was ready to send away all of the demons and let bygones be bygones. I hadn't lost anyone important. I still had you and Daisy both. Even though I had lost Kar, I somehow viewed him as... not that valuable to me. He was my best friend, yet I was willing to forgive those who attacked us and led to his death. Can you imagine the gall such a decision required? While millions were weeping over the deaths of their loved ones, I effectively ignored their cries for help."

Jason heaves a great sigh. "I am a disgusting, selfish bastard. It's only when my daughter died that I finally wanted to fight back. As a commander, a king, and a leader, I have not acted with humanity's best interests in mind. That changes now. From today onward, I won't allow the demons any leeway. I'll wipe out any in my path without mercy. Not only to avenge Daisy... but for all who fell due to my fucking incompetence."

Phoebe nods, slowly. "I see. Well. I can't change your mind."

"No. You can't."

Jason resumes his work of rebuilding the Fortress of Retribution. He solidifies the plateau itself to prevent Burrower demons from ever again surprising people from below. He places countless demonic energy detectors all across Tarus II, allowing himself to maintain constant contact with any Warper portals that might emerge.

"This is only the start..." Jason murmurs. "I have so much more work to do."

As the Hero works, his comm beeps. He activates it, then nods.

"I see. Teleport."

He arrives inside a fortified bunker in the heart of the city, a place where Samantha and her demonic assistant, Rosalia, stand near a recently awoken human female.

Phoebe.

Jason's real-world wife sits up in the bed, appearing dazed and confused. The bunker offers her no ability to see outside, so she can only guess at the events that have taken place since she fell comatose.

"Jason!" Phoebe says, as he teleports inside. "You made it back! That's great!"

The Hero winces. He forces a crooked smile, but it lacks even a trace of warmth.

"Hey, honey. Um. Sorry I took so long. Sorry for... everything. What is the last thing you remember?"

Phoebe notices Jason's odd expression, but doesn't think too much of it. "Well, I was inside a mech... I shot at a bunch of demons... and then... everything went black. I was at the Western Front, I think?"

Belial remains silent. She stands at Phoebe's side, staring at the top of her head. When Phoebe turns to look at the succubus, Belial quickly averts her gaze.

"What's wrong?" Phoebe asks. "Why is everyone acting so strange? Did something happen? Is everyone okay?"

Jason starts to answer, only to pause when Phoebe's expression turns odd.

"Say, uh, Sam, where's Daisy? Is she okay? Did you take good care of her?"

Belial's expression crumples. She fails to meet Phoebe's gaze, even as her shoulders tremble.

"I... I..."

Of all the people in the world Belial doesn't want to let down, none matter more to her than Phoebe. Her inner turmoil, coupled with the blame she foists upon her own shoulders, makes her feel like complete scum. In her mind, Belial imagines herself practically responsible for killing Daisy.

The moment Phoebe notices Belial's roiling emotions, she realizes the situation is far worse than she first imagined.

"What happened? What happened, Jason? Sam?! Where's Daisy?! Where's my little girl?!"

Jason releases his tense smile. He closes his eyes, and bows his head.

"I'm sorry, Phoebe. I'm... I'm so sorry."

Elsewhere in the Milky Way galaxy.

Amidst a rotten forest, one where no creatures dare step foot, thousands of dead, broken trees lean to their sides. They sag and droop, having long since lost all of their vitality. So long has it been since their deaths that most of them appear ashen, cracked, and ready to fall over.

In the center of this forest, a five-hundred-foot-tall granite obelisk stands at attention, pointing up at the sky. Towering far, far above the deadened trees surrounding it, this obelisk appears incredibly conspicuous, like a landmark someone could locate from a hundred miles away. At its base, a single set of stairs leads deep into the planet's bowels, where the source of all the forest's death and decay originates.

A catacomb filled with tens of thousands of rooms spreads out and down in all directions. Trap-rooms, dummy rooms, and many more surprises await those foolish enough to adventure inside. As for their purpose, they exist only to hide the obelisk's most precious secrets, all of which belong to its owner, the Duke of Mist, Mephisto.

This place is known as the Hall of the Damned, one of many famous landmarks located on Hell Harbor.

Deep beneath the planet's surface, dozens of boney, skinless demon Lords and Barons congregate together in an unholy, barbaric ritual hall. These disgusting, half-dead, half-living creatures resemble their illustrious benefactor, the Duke of Mist, in countless ways.

"Kekeke... the Grand Necromancer will return soon," One decrepit demon adorned in luxurious purple rags hisses. Small but noticeable horns stick out of his skull, the sign of a Demon Baron. "He will soon seize that which is rightfully his."

A taller, more dignified Demon Baron stands next to the chatty one. This fellow crosses his boned hands in front of himself. "The Grand Necromancer succeeded in his ultimate plans. Not only did he capture the body and soul of the Sphinx, but the body and soul of Emperor Ose, and now, the body and soul of the Duke of Pain."

"Yeah, but so what, Ozzar?" The hunched-over Baron mutters. "He lost the bodies of both Battle Brothers! He even lost Duriel's soul!"

"A worthwhile price to pay," Ozzar says, remaining confident. "Two Barons in exchange for two Emperors and the Duke of Pain. Surely, even you can see the value in such a trade, Azuth."

"That was before Zamiel increased his value," Azuth counters. "Zamiel absorbed his brother's soul. He became a Duke! Not only that, but his body reached Emperor-level. Losing Zamiel hurt us all big-time! There's nothing left of him now but some splattered meat!"

"Worry not. The Grand Necromancer knows what he is doing," Ozzar calmly replies. "Not since Valac has our kind reached the level of Emperor. Now that Mephisto will soon control the First Hell's levers of power... our rise will become unstoppable."

Azuth starts to say something, but quickly changes his mind when he senses a powerful demonic mana signature approaching. "The Grand Necromancer..."

Moments later, the Duke of Mist phases through the ceiling. His appearance quiets down the several dozen necromancers situated beneath him. Mephisto says nothing. He instead sweeps his gaze across the young hopefuls, causing many of them to bow their heads respectfully.

"We welcome the Grand Necromancer," All of them chant in unison. "Only he who controls death should dictate the value of life."

Mephisto nods in satisfaction. "Yesss. Good. I sssucceeded in my misssion, young onesss. I have ssseized the body of my old friend, the Duke of Pain."

All of the young necromancers keep their heads bowed. They already know of this development thanks to their unique connection to the Grand Necromancer.

"Now, it isss time for you all to fulfill your dutiesss..." Mephisto hisses.

He lowers himself to the ground, then turns himself corporeal. His body loses its misty form, allowing him to make contact with the physical realm.

Slowly, Mephisto pulls out a lantern, the very same one he stole from Heaven countless eons before, the one which belonged to his predecessor, the original necromancer, Valac.

As always, its appearance causes the souls of the younger necromancers to tremble in awe. As the single most powerful artifact demonkind controls, its value is incomparable to anything else. Especially to those aligned with the affinity belonging to death, its presence bolsters their magic, temporarily making them more powerful.

Mephisto continues to hold the lantern aloft. With his free hand, he mutters several demonic words, causing three familiar bodies to fall out of the lantern! As if plucked from a temporal storage of some sort, these bodies lifelessly fall to the floor, still preserved at the same level as when they perished.

Kar, the former Sphinx. A small hole stabbed through his back hides his devastated internal organs. His shattered knee, his ripped up arms, and his broken limbs appear far more gruesome than the wounds dealt to his torso.

Ose, too, appears to have suffered terribly. Her broken arms and legs, along with her battered body, give her the appearance of a beaten housewife. With most of her injuries focused on broken bones and shattered internals, her exterior appears to be in better condition than the Sphinx's, but only barely.

And finally, Bael, the Duke of Pain. No longer in his Balrog form, the Duke has reverted to his base form following his death. His stomach and chest, missing all their vital organs, appear just as badly broken as his smushed-together body.

After Mephisto tosses the three corpses haphazardly to the ground, he turns to his followers.

"Bring in the sssacrificesss."

His apprentice necromancers nod. They leave the ritual chamber, giving Mephisto a moment alone. He glances at the constructed idol resting against the far wall, one that bears the shape of Valac.

"Kekeke. For now, thessse foolsss look up to you. But sssoon... they will treat me asss their god."

The Duke of Mist waits patiently. Before long, his followers usher in hundreds of bound and gagged humans, some of them male, some of them female. These horrified slaves begin to tremble and groan through their gags as they gaze for the first time at the demonic ritual chamber, one where multiple pentagrams lay carved in the floor.

"Cassst them down." Mephisto orders.

Without any fanfare, his junior necromancers brutally kick, shove, and throw the slaves to the ground, causing some of them to break their bones as they impact the obsidian floor.

Mephisto silently waits while his followers walk over to Bael, Ose, and Kar's bodies. They drag the corpses into the center of three of the pentagrams, then turn to face the human slaves they've brought.

Without any fanfare, Mephisto waves his hands.

"Begin."

Several slaves widen their eyes as the necromancers rush at them like maddened dogs. Unable to fight back, the men and women can only scream muffled cries of pain through their gags as curved ritual knives pierce their hearts, heads, and backs.

Over and over, the necromancers brutally rip apart the slaves, spilling as much blood as possible onto the unholy pentagrams. It doesn't take long before they kill every last slave, and still, they continue to stab and bleed the humans dry.

Mephisto waits. He watches as the pentagrams fill with crude plasma, with each and every groove slowly beginning to pulse red as an unseen spiritual mechanism activates.

After an hour of carefully draining all of the blood from the slaves' corpses, the necromancers grab their useless bodies and lightly toss them out of the demonic pentagrams, causing them to thump against the floor.

Of the necromancers present, twenty-one of the highest ranked acolytes step forward. The rest pull back and solemnly bow their heads while they wait.

The twenty-one chosen spread out into three groups of seven. Each group encircles the bodies of Bael, Ose, and Kar. They quietly start to chant in the ancient demon tongue, adding in several mystical words used only by necromancers descended from Valac.

As they do, the pentagrams glow brighter and brighter.

All three bodies begin to tremble, while the blood congealed in the center of each pentagram slowly levitates into the air before seeping into the corpses' pores.

After thirty minutes, the ritual concludes. Bael's body appears slightly more intact than before, while Kar and Ose's bodies have fewer open wounds.

None of them appear even remotely close to becoming fully intact.

Mephisto's expression becomes solemn.

"Ksss. It ssseemsss I will require many more sssacrificesss to repair thessse corpsssesss."

As Mephisto ruminates, one of his juniors, Ozzar, approaches him.

Despite only being a Baron, Ozzar occupies the highest rank among his fellow Junior Acolytes. In terms of necromantic ability, he stands only second to Mephisto himself. Even so, he still bows his head respectfully to his superior.

"Grand Necromancer. If I may, I would like to make a suggestion."

Mephisto nods. "Go on."

"The quality of these slaves is too poor," Ozzar says. "I recommend pilfering as many fresh virgins and young children as possible. Only their purity of life will be enough to realize your ambition."

"Ksss. I wasss thinking the sssame thing..." Mephisto mutters. "Perhapsss I ssshould focusss on reviving one body at a time."

"Perhaps. However, in the end, it won't matter. The Hidden Emperors will need time to focus their efforts on attacking the First Hell. They have not been able to locate Emperor Diablo's body. Without him or Bael to officiate the ascension process, no new Emperor will be able to secure the throne. That leaves you with plenty of time to finish the revival ceremony."

"Ksss. Not even I know where Diablo'sss body liesss. Inssstead of chasssing after hisss ssshadow, I ssshould ssseek to empower myssself."

Mephisto raises Valac's Lantern.

"Ssso long asss I control the River Ssstyx, I hold the key to power."

Ozzar's eyes momentarily flicker with greed and envy. However, he quickly tempers his thoughts.

"The Hidden Emperors will object. With three million new souls caught in the river, it would be improper for you to empower yourself."

"Thisss king dessservesss hisss rewardsss, don't you think?" Mephisto giggles mischievously. "Who can ssstop me? Onccce I assscend to Emperor, none shall be able to ssstand up to me ever again. My rissse isss asssured."

"I remind you only for your sake," Ozzar replies. "Angering the Hidden Emperors may cause them to rally against you. Until you have ensnared your three newest pawns, you should not move too quickly. Do not forget the deal you made with Fenrir."

Mephisto's grin instantly vanishes. In its place, a look of foreboding appears.

"Ksss. Yesss, you are right. I mussst not act too hassstily. Firssst, I will revive my three newessst minionsss. Then, I will take the sssoulsss which rightfully belong to me. After that? What can the Hidden Emperorsss do? Kekeke!"

Ozzar nods. "You shall rule over all of demonkind, Grand Necromancer."

"No," Mephisto counters. "I ssshall rule over all of creation."

Mephisto's gaze falls upon the three lifeless corpses in the center of the ritual chamber.

For he who towers above death, towers above life as well.

>!This is what a spoiler looks like! Click it to reveal the text!!

Part 292: Mother's Grief

Jason Hiro sits beside his wife while she bursts into tears. The news of her daughter's death hits her harder than even Jason could have imagined. She sobs and weeps while enveloping him in a pained hug, revealing a level of emotional distress nobody has seen from her in all of her life. Compared to all of the losses she has endured so far, Daisy's death burns a hole in her heart, enveloping her in sorrow.

"It's all my fault! My baby girl! Nooo, no, no no no!!"

Belial stands awkwardly on the other side of the room, her eyes turning moist as she watches Phoebe's pained motherly cries. Moments later, she relents and walks over to Phoebe's side, embracing her from behind. Jason and Belial each hug Phoebe, as if trying to compress the anguish from her soul.

Nobody offers the distressed mother any words of comfort.

What can they say?

Jason's heart, seemingly harder than obsidian, cracks under her wife's pained cries of distress. Having been unable to release his mental blocks until now, a few faint tears well up in his eyes. He presses his cheek against the top of Phoebe's head, rocking her from side to side.

"It wasn't your fault, Phoebe. It wasn't your fault. It wasn't your fault."

Even as Phoebe cries, her mind closes to the world around her. The image of her little girl's smiling face seemingly dissolves, eroded by the horrendous guilt on her shoulders.

"She- she can't be dead!! No, it's a mistake! A mistake!! Th-the demons must have captured her, Jason! Jason, she's not dead, she can't be dead!"

Feelings of denial surface at the top of Phoebe's mind. The implicit idea that her daughter has left the mortal world leaves her in so much pain that she can't bear to think of it. She suddenly wrestles out of Jason and Belial's embrace, then clumsily jumps to her feet, ignoring the injuries plaguing her body that the other two haven't healed yet.

"You're lying, Jason! You're wrong! Daisy's still alive! She's still out there! Use your magic to look for her! Why are we just sitting here?! My baby girl is in trouble! The demons took her!"

Jason wipes his eyes, then looks at his wife with an empty gaze.

"I already tried to use Locate, Phoebe. It... it didn't work."

"THEN TRY AGAIN!" Phoebe screams, her tone almost delusional with grief. "You didn't try hard enough! You say she's dead, then where is her body?! I don't believe it!!"

Belial's tears burn hot as they drip down her cheeks. Her shoulders heave, as she desperately tries to clear her eyes. "B-Beelzebub's blast-"

"Use your Wordsmithing!" Phoebe shouts again. "Just do it, Jason! Why are you lying to me?!"

Jason relents. "Alright. Locate."

The room falls silent as Phoebe waits.

"...Well?! Where is she?"

"No response." Jason mutters, as he averts his gaze. "She's gone, Phoebe. She's gone."

"That's... no, that's wrong! Our little girl- the demons would do anything to capture her! The demons must have taken her and hidden her somewhere! Maybe they hid her from us! You don't know she's dead!"

Jason struggles to explain the reality of the situation to Phoebe. Not even Belial manages to break through to her.

However, a voice speaks inside Jason's head.

"Let me speak to her," Phoebe, his mind-wife, says. "I... I experienced all the same thoughts. I know why she's in denial. My physical self didn't see Daisy pass like I did. She'll never be able to accept the situation. Not unless... I explain it to her."

Jason mulls over her suggestion for a moment before giving a slight nod.

I can't stand to see you like this... in so much pain. I was going to tell her about you anyway, so now's as good a time as any.

Jason sighs, then speaks another word of power.

"Projection."

To Phoebe and Belial's surprise, an ethereal image of Phoebe materializes in the middle of the room. Appearing identical to the flesh and blood Phoebe in every way except for her ghostly body, the newcomer momentarily startles Phoebe out of her denial.

"Hello... me." Mind-Phoebe says. "I'm you, but you're also me. It's... it's a long story. After Solomon took over Jason's body, he created me by copying your soul and porting it into his Mind Realm. He made me to protect him, so in a way, everything I've seen, you've seen. I am you, and you are me."

Physical-Phoebe stares, wide-eyed, as her ghostly self begins to explain the past week or so of her life, how she and Jason faced off against Ose, found the Cube, and several other events.

Gradually, she manages to calm down a bit. She listens in total silence as her eerily similar soul-body finally gets to the part which hurts the most.

Jason's mind-wife pauses for several long seconds before lowering her head.

"...And then Beelzebub detonated himself. When Jason lost his vision, I did too. However, in the aftermath, there could be no doubt. Thousands of people were vaporized in an instant. Daisy... was one of them. She's gone."

Silence fills the room. Physical-Phoebe stands, frozen in place, while staring at her ghostly self.

After a full minute without speaking, her body begins to shake. Her legs give out, and she falls against the wall, trembling uncontrollably. Belial quickly gets up to help ease Phoebe to the ground, while all of her strength flees her soul.

"Dead... dead... she's... she's really dead... my little baby girl..."

Jason gets on the ground and crawls to his wife's side. He gently embraces her and rubs her back, even while she shivers and shakes.

"I'm sorry, Phoebe. I'm sorry. It wasn't your fault. It was mine."

Jason battles with the image of himself as a loving father and seemingly almighty Hero, someone who should have been able to save his little girl.

Belial struggles with the realization that, in those last few minutes, she should have kept hold of Daisy and not let the little girl slip away from her.

As for Phoebe, she wrestles with her own inadequacy and helplessness. Comatose and unable to move, she couldn't save her daughter. She was too weak, too useless. As a normal human, she lacked the power necessary to save her little girl.

"...should have put her on the first ship. Should have done something faster..." Phoebe mutters.

Jason caresses the back of her hair.

"It's all our fault. We're all guilty, then."

Belial nods lethargically.

"Yes."

Hours later, Jason leaves Phoebe and Belial alone with his mind-wife. He heavily plods out of the makeshift hospital room, fabricated hastily with his Wordsmithing only a few hours before.

After stepping outside, Jason leans heavily against the wall. He sinks downward, eventually ending up in a defeated, half-crouched stance. He gazes at the charred-black dirt, his eyes searching for meaning in the emptiness of the land before him.

"Thy mind-wife... is a fascinating being..." Gabriel mutters. As the last Archangel in Jason's Mind Realm, he alone remains behind to offer the Hero guidance, while Michael and Raphael join Uriel on her quest to slaughter more demons.

Jason barely nods. "Fascinating. Yeah."

The moon, Kelkin, hangs in the sky above. It casts a gloomy light on the newly crowned Fortress of Retribution, humanity's replacement for the former Hero City. The sounds of distant, plodding feet tell the tale of the few hundred thousand survivors traveling around to pick up the pieces of what remains.

Gabriel sits on a rock in the middle of a small garden in Jason's Mind Realm. Unlike the somber expression on Jason's face, or the pain his wife and her best friend showed, Gabriel's expression is somewhat cold and aloof. Holding no feelings toward those who have died, he looks at the situation with a more objective, rational vision.

"Mortals die all the time," Gabriel says. "One of them. Ten of them. A million. Thy lives are short and fleeting."

"Is that supposed to comfort me?" Jason snaps. "I'm not in the mood to wax philosophical."

"My apologies." Gabriel says. "I am... incapable of understanding emotion. In that regard, even Michael surpasses me."

"Must be nice," Jason remarks. "Not having to feel this emptiness. This pain. Even if the ones you love the most die, you won't ever have to suffer."

It takes several long, drawn-out seconds before Gabriel replies.

"...Tis not a blessing, but a curse. The pain thou doth experience is unfathomable, yes. But so, too, is thy joy. Thou suffereth greatly. Thou dwelleth on thy daughter's death, blaming thyself endlessly. A circle of self-hatred, guilt, and blame."

Gabriel pauses.

"But what of the love thou enjoyeth? When thou gazeth upon thy wife and daughter, verily, thy heart swells to ten times its former size. I may not experience thy pain, but neither can I participate in thy joy. I am a hollow being. An empty shell."

Jason lifts his eyes, ever so slightly, looking into the distant darkness.

"...The joy, huh."

"Aye. Emotions are both a blessing and a curse. They grant many boons to those who enjoy their best qualities, but can also grant an equal number of curses. Jason, thou possesseth the ability to disable thy emotions through Wordsmithing, yet not once have thou done so. Could it be that, in a way, this hatred and self-guilt offers a certain level of... comfort?"

The Wordsmith blinks twice.

"Comfort. No. I don't think it does. Rather... I don't deserve to cut off my emotions. I killed Daisy. I killed her. I deserve to suffer for what I've done. I should have beamed her and all the other humans to the Cube. I should have slaughtered all the demons the moment they launched their attack. I had so many opportunities... but I let my worthless, naïve optimism get in the way. I killed Daisy, Kar, and all the others. I'm a murderer. Nothing more, nothing less."

He sighs.

"Worse... I can't even cry for her. What sort of worthless father can't squeeze out more than a few tears for his dead daughter? Am I a monster, after all? A cold, heartless bastard?"

"I do not believe so." Gabriel says. "But then again, I am no judge of character. I fall for deceptions easily, as I am unable to read the emotions and expressions of those I speak to. It makes me feel... alienated from others."

Jason creases his brow. "I didn't know you had problems like that."

"I have adapted to my deficiencies." Gabriel calmly states. "I have had many millions of years to do so. Even after my brother hath wiped my mind, I still remembered my adaptations subconsciously."

Gabriel sighs.

"In any case, this conversation is not about me, but thee. Jason. Thou art far from a heartless and cruel man. Indeed, thy compassion is overwhelming. Thy ability to forgive greater than many heroes who came before thee. Not since Buddha has a hero as broad-hearted as thou walked this plane."

"My broad-mindedness caused millions to die." Jason mutters. "Including the people closest to me."

"Compassion and forgiveness are often lauded by humans. Thy people speak highly of these attributes, as if attaining them were a be-all, end-all solution for the universe's ills. In my eyes, such notions are folly. Rapacious greed can be just as valuable at times as overwhelming love. Sometimes, one must act selfishly if they wish to save others, or to attain their goals."

"What are you saying?" Jason asks. "I feel as if you're trying to make a point in the most roundabout way possible."

"The time has passed for empathy." Gabriel states, bluntly. "Already, in a fit of rage, thou hath unleashed the full power of thy Wordsmithing. No longer shoulds't thou holdeth back in the name of mercy. These demons... they have taken from thee the same thing they once took from me. We both have lost precious members of our families. Perhaps, if brother Raphael had never repeated the mistakes of the Dragon and Titan eras... if he had not created yet another slave-class of beings to bow before our people, the demons would not exist."

The Archangel continues. "If only Raphael had slain Satan and the others at the first sign of trouble. If only he had worked genuinely with Jepthath, we might have succeeded in bringing ruin to the demons after their destructive attack on Heaven. But he did not. Always, my brother resorted to tricks and deceit."

"You sound unsatisfied." Jason comments.

"Aye. I am. I have lost almost everyone I once cared about. I was once known as the Archangel of Power... a title that struck fear and awe into the hearts of my enemies and family alike. I was respected. I was... satisfied. Such titles did not seem important to me at the time, but now that I have become a pale shadow of my former self, I feel only empty and bitter inside."

He pauses to rub his knee.

"I do not wish to see thou suffereth such a fate, Wordsmith. Learn from our mistakes. Strike back at the demons. Hold nothing back... and repay them for all the atrocities they hath committed."

Jason and Gabriel both quiet down for several minutes.

The Wordsmith becomes lost in thought. In his mind, he replays every moment he's spent alive... every mistake he's ever made, and every good deed he's performed.

There is no justice in this world. He ponders. I tried to be a good man. I tried to give my enemies the benefit of the doubt. If ever I were one to accrue positive karma, it should have been sufficient to save my daughter... yet no such thing happened. Instead, the universe punished me. Perhaps... this is the Creator's way of forcing me to adjust my mindset.

Jason's eyes harden, as a cold light flickers inside his pupils.

"All this time... I've been such a naïve fool. Mercy. What use is there for it? Why should I let my enemies walk all over me? Pacifism is just an excuse used by cowards. To those whom I turn the cheek, they will only repay me with backstabbing and laughter. They laugh at me, deservedly... because I am a fool."

Gabriel says nothing. He merely listens as the Wordsmith speaks to himself.

"You're right, Gabriel. I can't go on like I have before. From now on, I'm changing everything about myself. Even if it makes me cold and heartless... I won't ever let the demons take my loved ones from me again. I'll do everything in my power to make them regret crossing me."

Jason rests his elbows on his knees. He presses his palms together and rests his chin on the tips of his fingers.

"It's time I developed humanity as a whole. I've practically squandered my Wordsmithing up to now. I'm going to eradicate every weakness of the human condition and forge my species into a conquering force that will shock the galaxy. At that time... not even the Volgrim will dare to cross me."

Gabriel frowns. "The Volgrim are not a species thou cans't easily dethrone. During the Energy Wars, they already controlled the entirety of the Milky Way. Now, they must be even stronger."

"I am a Wordsmith." Jason states. "I also possess Camael's Cube. My power is... sufficient."

A thoughtful expression appears on Gabriel's face.

"Jason. There is a matter my brother, Raphael, wished to speak to thee about. 'Tis in regards to an important aspect of the universe thou hath overlooked until now. Moving forward, this shalt surely become a terrible weakness if thou continueth to overlook it."

"What 'matter' are you referring to?" Jason asks.

"Thou hath heard of Soul Manipulation countless times," Gabriel explains. "But, Jason... hath thou ever once wondered why so many entities turn to Soul Manipulation in their quest for power?"

"I assume it's because Soul Manipulation is some sort of easy but vile cheat to 'level up' quickly." Jason ponders. "Why? Is that not a sufficient explanation?"

"'Tis simplistic and crude, but generally correct." Gabriel says. "However... the true reason Soul Manipulation is so powerful is because of the one aspect of spirituality thou hath ignored entirely. Thou understandeth the importance of the body, the mind, and the mana needed to cast spells... but in the way of spellcasting, the aspect of power which granteth thou the power to weave magic without rest is thy soul itself."

Gabriel nods slowly. "Yes... the soul is the fourth core of power, one which many entities overlook, yet the most important if thou wisheth to avoid many of the pitfalls thou hath blindly stumbled into, in the past."

Jason nods slowly.

"That... makes sense. Body, mind, mana, and soul. Four cores of power. But what makes the soul so special?"

"Mana does not come from nothing. Mana is an expression of the Creator's lingering power," Gabriel explains. "'Tis all around us, yet hidden from this plane of existence. Angels are flawed. We leak mana from our bodies, causing us to slowly weaken over time. Demons are superior, in that they can actually accumulate small amounts of mana over time. However, while angels can possess an unlimited amount of mana without suffering ill effects, even Demon Emperors have a limit to which they can grow."

Gabriel cocks his head. He stands up, rising from the rock on which he's sat for the whole conversation.

"Humans, however, are a strange species. Typically, a human's 'cap' on mana capacity is terribly low... but thy species cans't regenerate to full mana capacity after a single night's rest. This sort of mana accumulation is due to thy physiology, one which places thee within a certain level of 'closeness' to the Creator. 'Tis as if humans were made directly in His image, and not the angels... but given that angels were made first, this possibility seems low. 'Tis likely no more than a coincidence."

Jason nods. "I assume this... 'mana accumulation speed' has something to do with our souls?"

"A soul is the vessel which can channel the Creator's lingering energy." Gabriel continues to patiently explain. Powerful souls can accumulate far more mana than weaker ones. As thou witnessed during the War In Heaven, Raphael's soul was mighty enough to dominate every lesser life-form. Among all the Archangels, my brother surely possesses the strongest soul. Not even I can stand up to him if he were to engage me in a soul-battle. The difference is not slight, either. If he could wield the same spells as me... if my brother could unleash the Holy Beam of Heavenly Destruction... he would release a blast at least two times mightier than any I have ever cast."

"Two times?" Jason asks, a hint of surprise in his eyes. "Then what about my soul? Is it strong? Weak?"

"Heroes possess souls substantially stronger than any other human. This is because the Heroic Aura is a fusion of Angel, Titan, and Human powers. However, it pales in comparison to mere Demon Barons, let alone Dukes and Emperors."

Gabriel lifts his head to look at the 'sky' of Jason's Mind Realm.

Hero... dost thou remembereth when thou fought the Black Queen?"

"Amelia. Yes, I do." Jason says, as a hint of bitterness swells in his chest. "Why?"

"At the start of the battle, thou used a certain Word of Power, one which failed to have any effect on her."

Jason blinks. "Yes. I used 'Die,' but it didn't do anything. Wait... is that because my soul was weaker than hers?"

"Indeed. Thou picketh up quickly." Gabriel modestly praises. "What thou intended to do was strike Amelia Greyheart dead. However, thy soul was pitifully weaker than hers, and so, thy Word of Power did little more than nudge her consciousness before being devoured. This is the weakness I speak of. Thy soul is pitifully weak, and soon, thou shalt most likely face Demon Emperors again... members of the so-called 'Hidden Hells.' Many of these ancient monsters are adept masters of the Soul Arts. Even with Camael's Cube, thou shalt have a tough time defeating them."

Jason strokes his chin. "When I was inside the Cube, casting Words of Power to repeatedly seal the Warper portals around Tarus II, I became exhausted and couldn't cast magic anymore until I slept for a while, despite having a nigh-infinite supply of mana. Was that failure also due to my weak soul?"

Gabriel smiles, ever so faintly. "Aye. Thy soul has held thee back many times. However, the only way to strengthen a soul is through the usage of detestable Soul Manipulation, and so, my brother did not think it prudent to inform thee of this matter."

Jason heaves a heavy sigh. "Because I'd have wasted the information. I wouldn't be willing to steal souls to empower myself, and thus, it would still be an issue moving forward. But now, you think I should empower my soul to crush the demons... because my entire mindset has changed."

"Hmm..." Gabriel grunts, his tone heavy. "My brothers and I are not of the same mindset. I only wish to inform thee of this knowledge. However... Soul Manipulation is truly a detestable act, one which no self-respecting angel could ever condone. Even knowing that I was once a vile soul manipulator... it fills me with shame."

"I can't just do nothing with this information..." Jason mutters. "It's a weakness I have to solve. I've already failed multiple times due to my weak soul... it won't do if I fail again at some crucial moment."

The Wordsmith exhales heavily.

"It's just one more variable I have to control. Perhaps I can empower my soul in some way. I can't let something like this become a liability again."

Gabriel shakes his head. "The only way to empower one's soul is through Soul Manipulation. Devouring the souls of other entities is both efficient and ruthless."

"I refuse to take that step." Jason states. "Whose soul would I consume? A fellow human? That would make me no better than the demons. And if I consumed a demon's soul? Why would I introduce something so tainted and filthy into my body? No. I suspect there is an alternate way... a new path that only I can forge."

"Jason. I am not thy father. I will not patronize thee. However, hath thou already forgotten what happened the last time thy morals prevented thee from making a sensible choice?"

The Wordsmith's eyes darken. His thoughts turns inward, to the smiling face of the little girl he'll never see again.

"No. I haven't forgotten. I never will."

He rises to his feet after a few moments and stretches his back. Despite the gloominess in his eyes, another emotion appears, one which will come to define his actions in the future decades.

Ambition.

Jason gazes at the massive crater in the Fortress of Retribution's center, the place where his heart shattered and his previous naivete left him.

His gaze turns complex.

"Humanity cannot go on any longer as the underdog. Once we bury the fallen and hold memorials for those who lost their lives... I will set a new direction for all of us. For everyone."

He smiles, though his expression reveals no happiness.

"My species will conquer the universe."

AUTHOR NOTE: Welcome back to The Cryopod to Hell! This is the final part of Book 3 of Refresh! In the next part, we will be performing a (very) small time-jump forward, and thus, transitioning to Book 4: Arrival of the Overlords.

In Book 4, a lot of absolutely crazy stuff is going to happen. Curious to know more? I have written a blog post detailing the future events of Cryopod's storyline! I don't recommend anyone who hates spoilers give it a read, but if you are a fellow author you may find it intriguing to see what I have planned!

The next part is already out! Give it a read, and have a great time! Thanks for being a subscriber!